House of Commons Debates

FIRST SESSION—TENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 23, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON moved :

That the following Bills from the Senate be placed upon the order paper amongst Private Bills for the second reading this day :

Bill (No. 177) respecting certain patents of D. T. Owens.

Bill (No. 178) respecting the Canada Central Railway Company.

Bill (No. 129) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Bill (No. 182) respecting the Sterling Bank of Canada.

Bill (No. 183) respecting a certain patent of the Metal Volatilization Company.

Bill (No. 185) for the relief of Isaac Pitblado.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. In regard to that motion, it is a departure from what is the usual procedure of the House. I could understand that there might be a necessity for it if the session were about at an end, but with the budget speech not yet made it seems to me that there ought to be plenty of time to deal with these Bills in the usual way. I am not going to object to it, but if we start upon some irregular course it is afterwards referred to as a precedent and quoted as a justification for continuing an irregular course.

Mr. SPEAKER. If there is any objection to the motion, these Bills will have to stand and take the usual course.

Motion withdrawn.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the Tenth General Election.—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery the certificate of the election and return of the Hon. Chas. S. Hyman for the electoral district of London, Ontario.

APPOINTMENTS TO CIVIL SERVICE SINCE 1896.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. I would like to inquire about the motion which was passed on the 13th March asking for a return of the number of permanent appointments made to the civil service since 1896. I have no word of it yet, and it seems to me that it is something that could be made out very easily in a week or ten days if there were any desire to hurry it up. It seems that the delay is needlessly long.

JUDICIAL VACANCIES, PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) if it is convenient for him to give the information as to which I inquired in regard to the vacancies on the judicial bench in the different provinces. The reason why I ask the question to-day is that some correspondence has been placed in my hands in regard to one of these vacancies, and I would like to discuss the subject at some early date.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, I have had prepared, in answer to the suggestion of my hon. and learned friend (Mr. R. L. Borden), a memorandum showing the vacancies in the courts of the different provinces, and also the vacancy in the Supreme Court, as follows :

Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Justice Killam, resigned, 6th February, 1905 ; Mr. Justice Idington, promoted, 10th February, 1905.

Ontario.

Chancery Division, Supreme Court of Judicature.—Mr. Justice Ferguson, died, 31st May, 1904 ; Mr. Justice Magee, appointed, 25th June, 1904.

Exchequer Division.—Mr. Justice Idington, removed to Supreme Court of Canada, 10th February, 1905 ; Mr. Justice Clute, appointed, 10th February, 1905 ; Chief Justiceship established by 3 Edward VII, chapter 27 ; no appointment made yet.

Quebec.

Court of King's Bench.—Mr. Justice Wurtele, died, 24th April, 1904; Mr. Justice Trenholme, appointed, 4th May, 1904.

Superior Court.—Chief Justice Casault, pensioned, 30th September, 1904; Chief Justice Routhier, appointed 30th September, 1904; Mr. Justice Routhier, promoted, 30th September, 1904; Mr. Justice Pelletier, appointed, 30th September, 1904; Mr. Justice Trenholme, promoted, 4th May, 1904; Mr. Justice Dunlop, appointed, 5th May, 1904; Mr. Justice White, retired, 16th November, 1904; Mr. Justice Hutchinson, appointed, 16th November, 1904; Mr. Justice Choquette, appointed Senator, 30th September, 1904; Mr. Justice Malouin, appointed, 7th January, 1905; Mr. Justice Desmarais, died, 18th May, 1904; Mr. Justice Cooke, appointed, 16th November, 1904.

Nova Scotia.

Chief Justice Macdonald, pensioned, 19th August, 1904; Mr. Justice Weatherbe, appointed, 13th January, 1905; Mr. Justice Henry, pensioned, 10th February, 1904; Mr. Justice Fraser, appointed, 10th February, 1904; Mr. Justice Weatherbe, promoted, 13th January, 1905; Mr. Justice Longley, appointed, June, 1905; Mr. Justice Ritchie, died, 5th June, 1905; Mr. Justice Russell, appointed, 30th October, 1904.

Manitoba.

Mr. Justice Bain, died, 12th May, 1905; no appointment yet.

British Columbia.

Mr. Justice Drake, pensioned, 14th August, 1904; Mr. Justice Morrison, appointed, 28th September, 1905.

HALF-BREED SCRIP—APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE MEYERS TO INVESTIGATE.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. I want to ask about that Order in Council appointing Judge Meyers to make some investigation into the scrip matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I can bring it down on Monday.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the Minister of the Interior if I may shortly expect another instalment of the final issue of the scrip papers; also if he knows whether any patents on account of this scrip are now issuing from his department, or have issued since the return was brought down which showed that three scrips had been located on land in the Northwest. I understood from my hon. friend that orders had been issued not to locate any more.

Mr. OLIVER. Orders have been issued that no more locations were to be accepted or patents issued until the investigation of the department had been held. I will be able to lay the instructions on the table on Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. And the balance of the papers?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot promise the balance, but I will promise a further instalment.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that I have not received any supplementary return to that Gamebridge inspector's return, that the minister was going to look into it. Are there any more?

Mr. EMMERSON. I asked the deputy to have a second search made and he informed me that there were no letters; if there had been they are certainly not filed with the department.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 12, distribution of seats.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I gave a copy last evening to the Prime Minister of a further amendment which I propose to move. For the present I will not speak upon it as my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) who is leaving this afternoon desires to make some observations. The amendment is as follows:

That section 12 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

12. (1) Until the said legislature otherwise provides the legislative assembly shall be composed of twenty-five members to be elected to represent the electoral divisions hereinafter defined.

(2). The expression 'federal electoral district' where used in this section means an electoral district as established by and under the provisions of 3 Edward VII., chapter 60.

(3) (a) The federal electoral district of Alberta shall be divided into five electoral divisions, each of which shall return one member.

(b) That portion of the federal electoral district of Calgary comprised within the limits of the province of Alberta shall be divided into six electoral divisions, each of which shall return one member.

(c) That portion of the federal electoral district of Strathcona comprised within the limits of the province of Alberta shall be divided into six electoral divisions, each of which shall return one member.

(d) That portion of the federal electoral district of Edmonton comprised within the limits of the province of Alberta shall be divided into six electoral divisions, each of which shall return one member.

(e) That portion of the provisional district of Assiniboia included within the limits of the province of Alberta and not included in any of the federal electoral districts above mentioned shall return one member.

(f) That portion of the unorganized territory of Athabaska which lies west of the 4th meridian shall return one member.

(4) Where under the foregoing provisions any federal electoral district is to be divided into more than one provincial electoral division such division shall be made by a board of commissioners consisting of at least three persons resident in the said province and being judges of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories, who shall for that purpose be appointed by letters patent under the great seal immediately after the coming into force of this Act, and who shall divide each of such federal electoral districts into the number of electoral divisions in this Act assigned to it.

The letters patent appointing the commissioners shall require the commissioners, in making the divisions, to have due regard to the distribution of population, the public convenience, the existing local divisions and such other considerations as appear to them best calculated to do substantial justice.

In case of the death or resignation or refusal of any one or more of such commissioners to act, a successor or successors shall in like manner be appointed ; and in the event of there being no resident judge or judges available any judge or judges of the said Supreme Court may be appointed such successor or successors.

Within a time to be limited by the said letters patent the commissioners shall complete such divisions and report the same to the Lieutenant Governor of the said province, setting forth in such report the boundaries of the electoral divisions to which such report refers, and the ranges, townships and sections comprised therein, and shall assign an appropriate designation to each electoral division. Upon receipt by the Lieutenant Governor of the said province of the report of the commissioners completing the divisions aforesaid, the respective territories described as constituting the respective electoral divisions into which the said federal electoral districts shall have been divided as aforesaid, shall become and be electoral divisions of the said province as if the same had been so set apart and established as such by this Act.

The commissioners shall also within the said time limited forward a duplicate of their said report to the Secretary of State.

The said report and the said duplicate thereof shall be signed by the commissioners, or in case of a disagreement, by a majority of them, and the report of the majority of the commissioners shall be the report of the commissioners.

The said report shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and in the official gazette of the said province forthwith after the receipt thereof.

The commissioners may frame rules and orders for regulating the conduct of their proceedings and generally for carrying into effect the provisions thereof.

The letters patent appointing said commissioners shall confer upon them the power of summoning witnesses before them and of requiring such witnesses to give evidence on oath, oral or in writing, or on solemn affirmation (if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters) and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners may deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to inquire, and the commissioners shall have the same power and authority to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories in civil cases.

Mr. AMES. I desire very briefly to lay before the House the reason we have thought it desirable to offer to the government the suggestions that are contained in this amendment. We think these suggestions are very fair, and I place them before the government in the hope that the government may accept them. Since I spoke on Tuesday night the figures have been handed down on both sides. We have each made our independent calculations and a comparison between these calculations is now rendered possible. It is in consequence easy for us to arrive at what may be the basis of our calculation. If the First Minister will be good enough to follow me for just a moment I think I can make clear the purpose of this amendment. The calculations that were made by the government as to the number of votes polled on the 3rd of November last for the eleven constituencies south of Red Deer, gives 10,566 votes polled ; the calculations which the opposition made from the same sources of information but by independent action, gives the number of votes polled in these eleven southern constituencies as 10,701. The discrepancy between the two is but 135 votes; the government gives 135 less votes in these southern constituencies than the opposition make out—regarding Red Deer as neutral and therefore omitted. In this calculation at least both sides are practically in agreement. As to the eleven northern constituencies, the government figures give 9,553 votes and the opposition figures give 9,259. The government figures give 294 to the north in excess of what the figures give. We are prepared to accept the government figures in the case of Red Deer, namely 843 as the number of votes polled in that constituency. The total number of votes polled in the twenty-three constituencies according to the government figures is 20,962, while the total number polled according to the opposition figures is 20,663, a difference of about 300. Probably both calculations are slightly in error, because it has been an exceedingly difficult task to take out the electors range by range and section by section and put them on the proper side of the line. We may agree I think upon admitting in a general way that the eleven southern constituencies polled 10,600 votes and the eleven northern constituencies 9,400 or 20,000 in all with Red Deer omitted. That is the mean between the estimate of the government and the estimate of the opposition, and it is so near to either of these that it is practically safe for calculation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You are speaking of the votes polled?

Mr. AMES. Yes. There were then 20,000 votes polled in twenty-two costituencies which would give a quota of 900, which quota I think will be accepted by both sides of the House. As to the eleven southern constituencies the figures given by the government and the figures given by the opposition are almost agreed. The southern constituencies cast 10,600 votes and they should therefore be entitled not to eleven representatives but to twelve representatives. The eleven northern constituencies cast 9,400 votes and they should not be entitled to eleven representatives but only to a little over ten. There is one representative too few in the southern constituencies on the basis of the number of votes polled; the south instead of having eleven should have twelve representatives.

Now let us take the names on the voters' lists. In the southern constituencies, according to the government estimate there were 15,895 and according to the estimate of the opposition there were 15,567. Here, the government admit 328 more names on the list than the opposition claim. In the northern constituencies the government's estimate of names on the lists is 12,863 and the estimate of the opposition is 13,345, Red Deer omitted. Here again the opposition have accorded to the eleven northern constituencies 482 more names than the government claim, so that our estimate in this respect is more favourable to the contention of the government than is their own estimate. If in the first place it was legitimate that we should divide the error between the two, it is legitimate we should divide the error again in the second place, and consequently we strike a mean between the calculation of the opposition and the calculation of the government, although we would prefer to argue it out on the government figures as being far more favourable to us. The government give a total number of names upon the voters lists as 29,950. It will be noticed that the opposition make it 30,104, a difference of 154. We may then agree that 30,000 or fifty more than the government make it and 100 less than the opposition make it, is about fair. We shall say that there are 30,000 names upon the lists. If you take the 15,700 that are found in the eleven southern constituencies and the 13,100 in the eleven northern constituencies, and if you add 1,200 in Red Deer it would give you a total of 30,000. Now 30,000 divided by twenty-three will give you the quota for twenty-three constituencies at 1,300. Both sides are prepared to accept that as fair.

Now, divide the 15,700 names on the list in the 11 southern constituencies by 1,300, and you will find that they are entitled to 12 representatives and a little more instead of 11; and divide the 13,100 names on the list in the 11 northern constituencies, and you will find that they are entitled to 10 representatives and 100 votes over. So that by taking the names on the list we see that the 11 southern constituencies have one member too few, and the 11 northern constituencies have one too many, that is, leaving aside for the time being Peace River and Athabaska. No attempt has been made to refute the estimate of population made by the Medicine Hat 'Times' from information obtained from a great many reliable sources. By that estimate 97,263 people live below Red Deer and 70,021 live above, and there are 5,569 people in Red Deer, making a total of 172,853. If you establish your mean at 7,470, you will find that the 11 southern constituencies are entitled to nearly 13 representatives and the 11 northern constituencies to less than 10. Therefore, if you strike a mean of calculation between the figures of the government and the figures of the opposition, it will probably be more nearly correct than the figures of either side. You find that the 11 southern constituencies, by all these three tests, should have 12 representatives; it has therefore at least one representative too few. On the other hand, if you take the 7 constituencies north of the north Saskatchewan river, and examine them on the government figures, you will find that that is where the over-representation lies. According to those figures, there are in those 7 constituencies 6,502 names on the list, allowing to Peace River and Athabaska 600 names, and that there were 5,085 votes cast, allowing to Peace River and Athabaska, 450. So that you have for each of these seven constituencies an average of 930 names on the list and 726 votes cast. Now, we have already seen that 1,300 is the average number of names on the list and 900 the average number of votes cast; so that it is evident that the portion of country that is over-represented is the portion north of the North Saskatchewan river. Now, if it be demonstrated beyond peradventure that the southern section is at least one member under-represented and the northern section at least one member over-represented, it should be easy to transfer one member from the north to the south, and thus put an end to this interminable discussion, and satisfy all sides. Before I sit down, I wish to point out that you are not justified, according to our contention, in giving two members to Athabaska. We have never in the course of this debate urged that Athabaska should be unrepresented. We have never asked that a single man in that country should be deprived of the privilege to vote. All we have asked is that a certain amount of equality should prevail. We claim that two representatives for Athabaska are altogether too much. We are willing to admit that it should have one representative, and we think one is quite sufficient. Let me show you why and how we think one is sufficient. In the delimitation the government schedule provides for the constituency of St. Albert, which is 90 miles wide by 250 miles long.

The government are satisfied with that constituency ; they consider that one representative can look after it. Extend northward for 90 miles the boundary line between St. Albert and Sturgeon to a point, and from that point draw a line at right angles westward to the limit of the constituency, and you form in Athabaska another constituency exactly the same size as St. Albert. I want to demonstrate that it is possible to constitute in that southwestern corner of Athabaska a constituency exactly the same size as St. Albert, which will contain practically all the population, all the interests and all the wealth that exist in that country at the present time. I would be glad to send over to the hon. minister a map which will show him exactly what we propose. A little while ago there was a return brought down to this House stating that there was only one monthly post office service in that country, and giving all the points at which it touched. If you follow that route, you will find that it leaves Athabaska Landing, goes to the Lesser Slave lake settlement, then to Peace River Landing, Spirit river and Dunvegan, and that the entire route falls within the area I have described. Moreover, it is the only section of the country where there are any mail routes and any transportation. The Peace River valley will lie entirely within that constituency. Further than that, the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific will lie entirely within it. There is practically nothing outside of that area. Consequently, my contention is simply this, that if you create north of the old Alberta line a constituency of the same size as St. Albert, you can include therein everything worth including in the southwestern part of the present territory of Athabaska. What would be left if you did that ? There would be nothing left except a few scattered people, not sufficiently numerous to be organized. The right hon. Prime Minister the other day, when I referred as a precedent to the addition of Ashnanipi to the county of Saguenay, stated that there were no people there. According to the last census, Ashnanipi in 1901 had 161 whites. According to the same census all Athabaska had only 243 whites, and yet we are only dealing with the half of Athabaska. The probability is that it contains no more whites than Ashnanipi. Yet there has never been a question of organizing Ashnanipi, and nobody has felt that there was any grievance in consequence. My contention is that you can carve out one constituency in southwestern Athabaska that will serve the whole purpose and give representation to all the interests concerned. Now, the amendment is a very simple matter. It takes the tract of land which it is proposed to constitute into the province of Alberta ; it finds that it contains the Dominion districts of Alberta, Calgary, Strathcona and Edmonton, plus Medicine Hat, and a section of Athabaska. You will see by the map that the old constituency of Alberta does not reach the 4th meridian ; it is a trifle smaller than the others. If we add Medicine Hat, however, it is more populous than the Edmonton constituencies. On this calculation, according to the government figures, Alberta and Medicine Hat together have 6,736 names on the list, Calgary, 7,951 ; Strathcona, 8,786, and Edmonton, 6,744. You will find that this will practically even up the representation as between the north and the south. Again, if you take the number of votes cast, you will find that Alberta and Medicine Hat together had 4,632, Calgary, 5,577 ; Strathcona, 5,923 and Edmonton, 5,105. This would give one more constituency in the south than we are contending for, and it would leave one constituency in the extreme north which is ample for all the interests that are affected. This plan would fall in very readily with the well known and recognized divisions in that section of the country. Everybody has grown familiar with the boundaries of Alberta, Calgary, Strathcona and Edmonton. Moreover, the government in doing their business with the people, recognize these four places, because the Lethbridge Land Agency looks after the province of Alberta, the Medicine Hat and Calgary agency looks after the Calgary constituency, and the Red Deer agency looks after the Strathcona constituency, and the Edmonton agency looks after the constituency of Edmonton. The boundaries of the land agencies are exactly the same as the parliamentary divisions to which the people are accustomed, and they will naturally fall in line with the suggested number of representatives in each of these four divisions, and then we would have them delimitated by means of an impartial commission. That is our proposition. We care not as a matter of fact who does the delimiting, but we think that a commission could do it better than any one else. The principle we are fighting for is the establishment of a just number of representatives for each of the recognized sections of the country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the House is familiar with the figures and the arguments which the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Ames) has just repeated, though I do not blame him for repeating them again. But I do not think that his figures have anything to do with the contention he has advanced to-day. The object of my hon. friend has been to show that there are more people in the 11 constituencies south of Red Deer than north of it. I do not dispute that fact, and I think I was the first to give the figures showing that according to the votes registered at the last election, there are more people in the south than in the north. But I have already stated to the House that these figures were not the only figures we had in our mind. There were other sources of information which had also to be taken into consideration, but which the hon. gentleman has ignored. He has not said a word about the population shown by the census of 1901, though that is one of the sources of information which we have placed before the House. Now, if it is true that the figures he has placed before the House show that there are more people in the south than in the north, it is equally true that according to the figures of the census of 1901 there are more people in the north than in the south. I have already placed these figures before the House. But I will do so again. The figures show that in 23 constituencies in the old district of Athabaska there were, in 1901, 69,441 people. Now, take off the constituency of Red Deer which, for the purpose of comparison, we have eliminated, and which has been eliminated by the hon. gentleman, this constituency containing 2,009 being eliminated, would leave 67,432. Dividing that population by 22 constituencies, and it gives you a little more than 3,000 for each one. If we apply that unit or average to the 11 constituencies north of Red Deer you have about 10 members, and if you apply the same process to the 11 constituencies south you would have something like 12 members. The population of the 11 constituencies north of Red Deer was 36,398, while the population of the 12 constituencies south was 31,000. Therefore, if you divide by the unit of 3,000 the 11 constituencies south of Red Deer that will give you about 10, and if you apply the same calculation to the 11 constituencies north of Red Deer that will give you more than 12. Therefore, if, on the other hand, his figures tell one story, on the other hand our figures tell another story. Therefore, it seems to me that under the circumstances we must come to the conclusion that there are more people in the north than in the south. The census shows that, the post office shows that, the school districts show that; therefore it seems to me the case is fairly made out. I do not think that even the argument of my hon. friend, if applied to the amendment of the leader of the opposition can have any bearing upon the discussion. The hon. gentleman has proposed a new method of disposing of the question. My opinion is that the best way we can dispose of it is to take the constituencies one by one and see whether they can be improved or not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman seems to miss absolutely the main point of the remarks of my hon. friend from St. Antoine division, Montreal (Mr. Ames). There has been a disposition in dealing with the delimitation of those constituencies to regard what was formerly the unorganized district of Athabaska as separated in some way from the new province of Alberta. It is absolutely fallacious to look at the question from that standpoint. The unorganized territory is a part of the new province of Alberta, and in delimiting the ridings of that province it must be so regarded. We will start with that as a first proposition. What is the information before the House at present as to the population of that district? It is proposed by the measure which the government has introduced, by the schedules which they have brought down, to give two members to what was formerly that unorganized territory; one-twelfth of the representation of the whole province is by this measure assigned to what was formerly an unorganized district. So far as I am aware, it did not have any representation in parliament or in the legislature. One-twelfth of the whole representation of a province of 250,000 is to be given to what was formerly an unorganized territory, having upon an outside and undoubtedly an exaggerated estimate a population of only 5,000, and hitherto without representation either in the Dominion parliament or in the legislature of the Territories. Well, there must be some ground for that measure, we must find some substantial reason for it. This is a part of the new province of Alberta, and is entitled to just the same consideration, no less and no more, than any other portion of that province. Its people are as much entitled to representation, they are no more entitled and no less entitled than the people of any other part of the province of Alberta.

Now, the right hon. gentleman refers to the census of 1901. It is idle for him to refer to the census of 1901. If, for one moment, we assumed that Bill is to be framed on the basis of that census, it is perfectly plain that the people in the unorganized territory would not be entitled to two representatives, because there were then in that district only 1,710 whites and half-breeds together, or about 342 votes. Proceeding on the basis of the census of 1901, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is absolutely out of court, so far as this unorganized territory is concerned. But we have not been going on the basis of the census of 1901. In every other portion of the Bill—in fixing the revenue, in fixing the per capita allowance, in everything outside of section 12—we proceed on other information than that of the census. The information brought down by the government, on which they proceed, was a statement made up showing the estimated population as in January last, and what it is expected to be on July 1st next. Therefore, we might as well dismiss the census of 1901, though, if we stood by that census, there would be absolutely no warrant whatever for assigning to the new territory the representation which is assigned to it by this Bill. The population of the province was 70,000, according to the census of 1901, and the population of the unorganized territory was 1,710. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) sees at once that there would not be a shadow of argument, on the basis of the census of 1901, for giving that unorganized territory even one representative.

Now, if we depart from the census of 1901 what have we ? We have two guides which have been invoked in this committee—one is the number of votes polled at the general election of November last, and the other the number of votes upon the lists prepared for that general election. For reasons which I stated in this committee, yesterday, and which I need not repeat now, it is obvious, I should suppose, to every hon. gentleman in this House that the list of electors, and not the number of votes, cast is the better guide as to the actual population. I should not think there could be any argument on the other side. So many considerations affect the proportion of votes cast, out of the total number of votes on the list, that it seems idle for any man to be put to the trouble of arguing that the list of voters is a better guide to population than the number of votes actually polled. But even this guide of the number of names on the list fails us so far as the unorganized district is concerned, for the reason that those who are supposed to live in this unorganized territory did not vote at the general election—no lists were made up and no polls were held. This is as I understand it. Now, what evidence or information have we before this committee which will be as reasonably sufficient for the unorganized portion of the territory, as the list of voters made up in November last is for the organized part? I stated yesterday, and I repeat it to-day, that we have no information sufficient for that purpose. Therefore, I argued yesterday, and I do not to-day depart in the slightest from the stand I then took, that it would be a proper thing, a reasonable and fair thing, for the government to leave the estimating of that population and the fixing of the representation to be accorded to the new territory to some tribunal which should have the power and duty of investigating that question and coming to a conclusion upon proper information. But let us go a step further and see what is the highest estimate which has been made by the Prime Minister or his Minister of the Interior as to the population of this unorganized territory. I asked that yesterday: I asked first, what was the estimate of the population of this unorganized territory to which one-twelfth of the whole representation of the province is to be given, and, second, upon what evidence which could be considered as such by this House is that estimate made. The highest estimate that I have heard was that made by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), who said that it was believed that in this unorganized territory there is a population of about 5,000 souls. I do not believe that there is any information before the House, or in the possession of the Minister of the Interior, to justify us in accepting that conclusion. For my part, I do not accept it,—not casting any reflection upon the hon. gentleman, but simply for the reason that I do not think he has information that should reasonably lead him to that conclusion. But even if we accept that conclusion, where do we find ourselves ? Where does the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) find himself? He proposes, in a population of 250,000 souls, to establish a legislature of 25 members. And he proposes to allot two of these members to a portion of territory hitherto unrepresented which at the very highest estimate, contains only 5,000 people. Does he realize what he does in this matter ? Can he for one moment suggest that there is anything fair, or reasonable, or even decent, in proceeding on that basis? Two hundred and fifty thousand people are supposed to be in this territory on July 1st next. According to the very highest estimate given by any hon. gentleman on the other side, only 5,000 will be in the unorganized territory. And to thse 5,000 one-fiftieth of the whole, he proposes to give one-twelfth of the whole representation of the province. And for what reason, pray ? Is it on account of expected further development ? Will the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Interior or any other hon. member for one moment say, that there is likely to be greater development in that unorganized territory, within the next three or four years, for which this delimitation will stand, than in the vicinity of Edmonton or Calgary, or in any of the organized districts of the province? It is idle to speculate about that. But if speculation must be indulged in, I, for one, believe that the development, the increase of population will proceed at a much more rapid rate in the organized portions of the territory in those portions that are easily accessible to railways, than in any portion that cannot have these advantages. Perhaps that has not struck my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in the way I put it. But when he realizes that 5,000 souls is the utmost claim—a claim made on absolutely insufficient and unsatisfactory evidence—as to the population of this unorganized territory, and when he realizes that the entire population of the province is supposed to be 250,000 people, can he with any pretense of justice, with any claim of right and fairness, give to the 245,000 people in the organized territories twenty three members and to the 5,000 people in the unorganized territory two members in the legislature?

It seems to me that any such suggestion will be recognized to the full by the right hon. gentleman as one to which he cannot commit himself, as one which his sense of justice will not accept, as one which he will be inclined to modify, and I venture to think that this suggestion which we have made is one which the right hon. gentleman ought to accept. My hon. friend from St. Antoine has spoken the amendment which I have moved. Let us consider that amendment for a moment in one or two aspects; but before doing so let me remark that the Minister of the Interior yesterday was very free with a challenge to have the territorial legislature called and to accept their verdict as to what the delimitations should be. The hon. Minister of the Interior need not have asked for the calling of the legislature nor need he have professed his willingness to accept what they should say on the subject because this legislature only two years ago made a certain delimitation both of this province and of the adjoining province of Saskatchewan, and the only answer to the argument based upon that delimitation is the suggestion that the delimitation then made was absolutely unfair. As far as I have heard of any proceedings with regard thereto, claims of unfairness came particularly from a portion of the Territories which is not included in these unorganized districts, and could not be so included. They came from a portion of the riding which I think is to the south rather than to the north. If we are to go by the opinion and views of the legislature of the Northwest Territories, we have their latest pronouncement in a delimitation of those constituencies which is absolutely out of agreement with that proposed by the administration to-day. When we come down to the action of our own parliament in 1903, four constituencies were established which are practically in the new province of Alberta. I shall point out in a moment to what extent that is not correct. They are the electoral districts of Alberta, Calgary, Strathcona and Edmonton. The division then made was made with the assent of the members of the Northwest Territories representing the administration. It was one which they themselves proposed. It was submitted to the senators for the Territories, as I think there were no members from the Territories on the Conservative side. The senators from the Territories had some knowledge of local conditions and they regarded the division as fairly satisfactory on both sides. At all events the delimitation was proposed by the administration and its supporters, and we must assume they were fair divisions. I have not heard any evidence or statement that the conditions of development and progress of population have been materially different in any of these constituencies from what they are in the others. I shall assume until I hear evidence to the contrary that they are practically the same. I think the claim has been made by some of my hon. friends on this side of the House that the development has been rather greater in the southern than in the northern riding, but I am content to regard the progress as approximately the same. You have the electoral districts of Strathcona, Alberta, Calgary and Edmonton. You have besides included in the new province of Alberta a portion of the provisional district of Assiniboia. This is included within the province of Alberta although not within the electoral district of Alberta, and there seems to be substantial agreement on both sides of the House that this shall be entitled in the legislature to one member. Now if you give to that portion of the new province of Alberta one member—I am referring to what is called in the schedule the electoral division of Medicine Hat—and if you assign to that portion of Alberta which formed part of the unorganized district of Athabasca, you are certainly doing full justice to the supposed 5,000 people in the district. If you give to them one member surely you have discharged your full duty to them, for you have given them much greater representation that you are giving to the electors in the proposed electoral division of Medicine Hat; you are giving them their full rights according to the statement of the Minister of the Interior. If you adopted our distribution so far you would dispose of two of the twenty-five seats which are proposed. You have then twenty-three seats remaining. You have four federal electoral districts, which were established in 1903 by the consent and to the satisfaction of every person. Looking at those four ridings you find that in one of them—I will not go into the figures—the federal electoral district of Alberta, there is a smaller number of voters on the list and a smaller number of votes polled than in any of the others, a difference sufficiently great to be taken into consideration. You have twenty-three members to allot. Allot six of those to the electoral district of Calgary, six to Strathcona, six to Edmonton and five to the federal district of Alberta in the south, which as I have said before has a smaller electoral list and polls a smaller number of votes. It seems to me you would then be doing substantial justice even upon the statements of the Minister of the Interior and upon the Prime Minister himself to the unorganized territory in the north, and I believe upon the whole you would be doing probably substantial justice to all parts of the province. You would thus remove the sense of injustice which otherwise will prevail: I have no part in any controversy about the capitals. That, it seems to me, is a matter to be settled by the people themselves. I do not take into consideration any such interests, but I think as a member of this House I am justified and I am in duty bound to raise my voice against any such proposal as that submitted by the administration which will give to 5,000 people in an unorganized and undeveloped portion of a new province four times the voice in the new legislature which is possessed by the same number of inhabitants in any other part of the province. Take for example the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton. I do not know what the population of Calgary is supposed to be at the present time.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. 9,175 according to Waghorne Guide of February, 1905.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Roughly speaking 10,000 people.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. More than that now. You have the city of Calgary entitled to be represented by one member in the legislature and have at the outside estimate—an estimate that I do not believe to be correct, that I believe to be beyond the mark—a population of 5,000 in the north sending two representatives. Two thousand five hundred in the north send one representative to the legislature of the new province, and 10,000 people in the city of Calgary send one representative to the legislature of the new province. I am only using the city of Calgary for comparison. The same illustration would be true of Edmonton, Strathcona, High River and a great many constituencies which are delimited in this schedule and once more I ask my right hon. friend to take this view of the situation into his calm consideration and to say whether, having regard to the sense of justice which he must possess, he can deem it right to adopt a delimitation which brings about the results to which I have just referred.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, while I am afraid the House is not to be congratulated on the fact that the debate on this question is being continued——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) will pardon me I intended to move an amendment. I do not think I need read it. I have already handed a copy to 'Hansard' and handed a copy also to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, so that I will content myself by handing it to the clerk.

Mr. OLIVER. While the House has rather to be sympathized with for having to listen to a continuation of this debate and to a repetition of statements and figures which are more or less open to discussion it is to be congratulated on the change of tone which has taken place since Tuesday last. I think the moderate presentation of the amendment which has been placed before the House is in very favourable contrast to the very immoderate presentation and support of the amendment placed before the House on Tuesday last. It will be observed that our friends who are opposing the distribution are climbing down at the rate of about one a day. When they proposed their amendment on Tuesday last they claimed an inequality of distribution as between 15 and 10, and now the inequality claimed by the amendment placed before the committee is an inequality of one. A climb down of four in four days debate, is not bad and we hope that the present day's debate will result in a climb down to the natural and proper level which is contained in the Bill. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, in reply to myself last night, rejected the instance that I had given of differences in the populations of different constituencies in the east on the ground that these differences arose or were occasioned by reason of limitations, not connected with population, such as county boundaries and other matters. I certainly agree that that is the case and I find no fault with it. It is a condition which prevails all over the Dominion, which has always prevailed and, I presume, must always prevail if the community of interests and the well being of the people are to be considered as well as their mere numbers in the distribution of constituencies. If there ever was a case in which the original delimitation equal to county boundaries should be considered it is this case in which we are including the western part of the district of Athabaska in the new province of Alberta. South of the line of Athabaska the new province has been under territorial organization for some twenty or twenty-five or possibly thirty years. It has been represented in this House for some 18 years. It has a complete system of provincial government, of organization, of everything that goes with provincial government and organization as far as local conditions are concerned. As has been said by my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, the country north of that line has had no representative in either House. It has been an entirely unorganized territory. Judging by comparison with conditions in these eastern provinces, conditions where everybody admits must be submitted to and observed, except, I believe, the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) who objects to them entirely, if ever there was a condition which should be observed in setting apart constituencies it is that condition when we are bringing into a new province, an hitherto unorganized district of greater area than the rest of the new province. Surely, that is a condition which is worthy of special consideration. Surely it relieves us from the necessity of making our distribution by forming a checkerboard and dropping it down upon the country. If ever there was a time when special conditions demanded special consideration it is at the time of the introduction of the district of Athabaska into the new province of Alberta. Is there a disparity of population? My hon friend, the leader of the opposition, does not accept the statement which I have placed before the House as the best information I could give at the time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said that I did not think there was sufficient information to justify the hon. minister in coming to that conclusion, but that I had no doubt he had come to that conclusion. I went on to say then that even if he accepted it there was no justification for giving that district two members.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no dispute between the hon. gentleman and myself. I placed the statement before the House. It was the best I could present under the circumstances as to the population of the district and if the hon. gentleman will do me the honour to accept that statement, even for the purpose of argument he will find, taking the very extreme cases which he did take and which he is entitled to take as a matter of pleading before the House in regard to a case and comparing the estimated population of Athabaska with the estimated population of Calgary, that the representation will stand as four to one as between Athabaska and the city of Calgary. These are the two extreme cases. But, we find in the province of Quebec, not as between an urban and a rural constituency, but as between two urban constituencies, the constituencies of Quebec West and Maisonneuve, that the difference is as six and a half is to one. Now, I presume there were special reasons which governed in that case, because we were through a redistribution in this House not very long ago, and why, if six and a half electors in Maisonneuve are only equal to one in Quebec West, should it be such an outrage and such an unheard of thing that four electors in Calgary should be equal to one in Athabaska in voting power, especially when you consider that that one in Athabaska represents the interests of a territory half as large as all the rest of Alberta.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you extended it up to the North Pole it would be ten times as large.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely, and if the responsibility for the administration of that territory up to the North Pole rested upon the provincial legislature, that fact would have to be taken into consideration in the distribution of seats, but it does not. The argument that is made on the other side of the House is based entirely upon the assumption that population is the only consideration. These gentlemen opposite may look to the history of parliamentary representation in Canada and in every province of Canada, and they will not find a case in which that priciple has been adhered to in fact.

Mr. HAGGART. What are taken into consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. Population is one thing and there are many others. But there is one universal principle and it is that a purely rural population, a population of producers creating wealth in the country is always given a greater share in the government of the country than an equal number of consumers.

Mr. HAGGART. That is so in no place.

Mr. OLIVER. In every place. On what other grounds are the cities of our country so unjustly treated by comparison of population in being under-represented compared with the rural constituencies ?

Mr. LAKE. If that be so, how is it that Prince Albert city is to be given one representative for 769 registered voters, and Souris a country district is to be given one member for 3,346 registered voters ?

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose that will have to be accounted for on much the same principle as hon. gentlemen opposite will have to account for the vast discrepancy between the division of Quebec West and the division of Maisonneuve. There are conditions with which I am not familiar there and elsewhere to account for that. I am not calling into question these conditions, I am stating that there is no departure from principle in establishing corresponding conditions to some extent in this new country.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell me where in Great Britain or any other colony except Canada, the rural population as a matter of principle is given larger representation than the urban population?

Mr. OLIVER. Last night I gave to the House instances of this, selected from the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. HAGGART. I excepted the Dominion of Canada from my question.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not familiar with the principle of representation in other countries. it is enough for me to know what has always been the rule in this country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know where in Canada that principle has ever been applied to a city of the size of Calgary or Edmonton.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad the hon. gentleman drew my attention to that, but I think we would get along in this debate very much more amicably if there were not so many interruptions, because these interruptions are apt to be met with rather short answers. My reply is that in every place in Canada the number of votes per constituency either for Dominion or provincial purposes is necessarily larger than it is in the Northwest under present conditions. Taking the proportion of votes in these cities to the total vote of the constituencies, the position is exactly the same under the peculiar circumstances of the west as it is in the rest of the Dominion under its circumstances. Let me ask my hon. friend if the case of Calgary is parallel to that of the city of Toronto. I will not say how fair my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) was in making that suggestion, but the difference between the population of Toronto and the population of the different constituencies in the Northwest is a sufficient answer; there is no comparison. In the one case there is a centralized population, in the other case there is a rural population, and the rule does not depend upon the size of the place but upon the peculiar circumstances and upon the proportion of the total vote of the constituencies. The rule has always been applied throughout the provinces of the Dominion, and it is being applied in the Northwest now, and it would be improper if it were not so applied. As to the district of Athabaska, as to the votes in that district, as to the rights of pioneers to be over-represented if they are over-represented ; every man in an outlying locality in a new country counts not only for his individual self as does a man in a large city, but that pioneer is the centre of attraction, to trade and population and civilization and development, and it is upon the word of that man that the tendency of trade and population and civilization depends. If we are to have development in that district of Athabaska ; if we are to have roads built and the conveniences of civilization so that there may be greater development, upon whose word are we to depend but upon the word of the men scattered here and there over that territory. Is it going to be said that the men in these districts who are the pioneers of development, progress and advancement, are not to be represented because there are not so many of them as there are in other constituencies?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the premises of which you are proceeding, there are very few of these pioneers ; there were 5,000 of them, but only about 342 voters were there in 1901.

Mr. OLIVER. We will admit there are very few.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very few pioneers.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not exactly catch the point, but I should say that in a territory as large as Athabaska, if there are 5,000 people scattered all over that territory they are all pioneers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then every one in the Northwest is a pioneer?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think the residents of the cities of Edmonton or Calgary for instance could properly claim to be pioneers at the present day. Where people are living in the midst of all the advantages of civilization as are the people of the urban cities in the Northwest, with all due deference to the people of Regina, Prince Albert, Edmonton, Calgary or Moosejaw, I do not think that taking man for man, each individual in each of these cities is of as great value to the state, or that his advice towards the development of the country is as valuable as that of the man who by reason of his distant location is the centre of attraction for settlement and development. He is the point from which must necessarily radiate the information that is necessary to the well-being and advancement of the country. A pioneer, on every ground, is entitled to greater representation in the legislature than is a man of any other class, if we are looking to the development of our country, as I hope we all are.

My hon. friend from St. Antoine made the suggestion that if a part of the district of Athabaska as large as the district of St. Albert was set apart, that would cover practically all the population of the district of Athabaska. In the first place, that idea has no bearing on the question. The population of the electoral division of St. Albert is largely contained in one part of that electoral division ; but the population of the district of Athabaska is not contained in one particular part of it, but is scattered along the two great rivers. There are no conditions in the district of St. Albert parallel in any degree to those in the district of Athabaska. Therefore when my hon. friend asks us to make a similar district in Athabaska, he simply ignores all the facts and conditions which are essential to making a satisfactory distribution.

Mr. LALOR. In the minister's estimate of 5,000 inhabitants in Athabaska, what proportions are Indians, half-breeds and whites?

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian population of the district of Athabaska, according to the treaty—and I am credibly informed that it has not increased to any great degree since —was 735.

Mr. LALOR. When was that treaty made ?

Mr. OLIVER. In 1899 or 1900. In the district of Peace River the Indian population was 955. So that there are about 1,700 Indians in the two districts.

Mr. LALOR. Have you an estimate of the other portions of the population at the same time ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I get the other portions of the population from the census of 1901.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman's estimate of the Indian population is the same as we have obtained from the census in 1901 ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The Indian population remains at about what it was ; that of the half-breeds has increased. My estimate of the total population in Athabaska is 5,000 whites and half-breeds, exclusive of Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. On what basis do you make that estimate ?

Mr. OLIVER. On information given to me by gentlemen from that country who are well informed in regard to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister said yesterday that he would be able to give us to-day the number of pupils attending the schools in this district.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On inquiry in the Department of the Interior, I am informed that the returns made to the Lieutenant Governor in regard to the schools of Athabaska are not sent to Ottawa, but a telegram has been sent to the Lieutenant Governor at Regina asking him to have an abstract of the returns sent here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it includes Indian schools, we would like to have a distinction made between the whites, the half-breeds and the Indians.

Mr. LALOR. According to the census of 1901 Athabaska has a population of 3,096 Roman Catholics, 264 Anglicans, 23 Presbyterians and 2 Methodists.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to this question of Indians, it might be well to point out that the Indian population is included in the census in all parts of the country, and it may be of interest to our friends of the opposition to be informed that the Indian population of Alberta is not confined to either the district of Athabaska or the district of Edmonton. I asked from the Census Department a statement of the number of Indians in each of the electoral divisions of the country, and the figures are as follows: Medicine Hat, 107; Cardston, 1; Lethbridge, 7; Macleod, 1,738; Pincher, 2; Gleichen, 974; Calgary City, 4; Banff, 861; Innisfail, 6; Red Deer, 2; Vermilion, 57; Ponoka, 369; Wetaskiwin, 222; Leduc, 2; Strathcona, 2; Stony Plain, 520; Edmonton City, 28; Saskatchewan, 275; Sturgeon, 379; St. Albert, 201; Peace River, 955; and Athabaska, 735; a total of 7,447, of which 3,702 are south of that mysterious dividing line, township 38, and 3,745 north of it. There are just as many Indians in the southern country as there are in the north, including the district of Athabaska; so that perhaps we may get over our difficulties without discussing the Indian question any more. I want to draw attention to the rather peculiar position taken by the hon. leader of the opposition in his presentation of his case. He made the plea that because there was uncertainty in regard to the population of the district of Athabaska, therefore the delimitation of the constituencies should be left to a commission of judges; but he does not propose to leave the representation of Athabaska to any commission of judges. He proposes that this House shall define the representation of Athabaska. He only calls in his commission of judges later on and for other purposes. Now, it seems to me that if he is not going to refer to this commission of judges the representation of the district of Athabaska, about which we will admit that neither he nor I know very much——

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. minister serious in what he is stating now?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, quite serious.

Mr. FOSTER. If I am not interrupting too much, I might point out that yesterday and the day before we were discussing the appointment of a commission. The ground we took was that it would be fair to appoint a commission of judges and have them delimit the whole province. The House discussed that proposal and last night the government voted it down. A proposition was made to-day by the hon. gentleman from St. Antoine division, Montreal. You voted down the commission, you refused to grant it, you are stiff necked and obstinate, and will not do the thing that is right. If you will not do the thing that is right and refer the question to a commission of judges, perhaps you would take our proposition as to a delimitation and see if you cannot get somewhere near what is a fair, reasonable and just distribution. That is the way we argue, and I do not see any inconsistency in that. I am thoroughly consistent. If I want a commission of judges and try to get you to accept it, and you will not, then I say: If you won't do the whole thing that is right, will you do anything that is right? Here is a plan which I think would be more fair and just than yours; will you adopt that instead of yours? There is no inconsistency in that, I think. What does my hon. friend think about it?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not quite follow the hon. gentleman's argument. As I read the amendment of the leader of the opposition, he asks that this House declare that the district of Athabaska shall have one member in the provincial house, and he goes on in his amendment to say that certain delimitations in other parts of the province shall be made by a commission of judges. I say that if he is prepared to take the verdict of this House in regard to the district of Athabaska of which neither he nor I are very well informed, he will surely take the judgment of this House in regard to the delimitation of the rest of the province in regard to which he and we are very well informed. At any rate, his first contention that we should have a commission of judges because we do not know what the population of Athabaska is, and afterwards that we should not submit to the commission of judges the question of the representation of Athabaska, seem to me illogical and lacking consecutiveness.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is obvious that the two amendments were not the same, if they were, I could not move them. I moved the second, as the member for North Toronto said, because the first was voted down.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not making a comparison between the two amendments, I am discussing the position taken by the hon. gentleman himself and the effect of the amendment. Now, in regard to that part of his proposal that the present Dominion constituencies shall be taken as a definite basis for the subdivisions of the new province, I have only this to say, that the Dominion constituencies are delimited for purposes entirely different, having no connection near or remote with the purposes for which the local constituencies are delimited. While it might be a reasonable proposition to make the Dominion constituencies accord with those of the local, it is not a reasonable proposition to make the local constituencies necessarily correspond with those of the Dominion constituencies. The Dominion constituencies are delimited only for the purpose of electing members to this House, it makes little difference where the dividing lines are, as every one from the Northwest knows very well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why ?

Mr. OLIVER. Because the local government has to deal with matters closely affecting the people, such as the school districts, the statute labour organization, and particularly the building of roads. The roads above everything else are important as leading from settlements to centres of trade. There is the greatest community of interest between certain settlements and certain centres of trade, and it is highly necessary that that community of interest should be observed in the distribution of the local constituencies, otherwise grievous injury is done. That fact has always been recognized. I will make my meaning clear by giving a case that existed some years ago. A large part of the trade of Edmonton is done with Athabaska Landing, over a road 100 miles in length. The local district of St. Albert intervened between Edmonton and Athabaska Landing. Every interest of Edmonton and every interest of Athabaska Landing was in the up-keep of that road. the St. Albert electoral district being entirely agricultural, the different settlements in that district had no interest in keeping up that great road from Edmonton to Athabaska Landing. Now this became so great a hardship that at the redistribution made in 1892 the local government took cognizance of the fact, and cut and carved the different constituencies in a way that looked like a gerrymander on the map, but it was in reality conserving the interests of the respective peoples and trading points. Now what was the case there is the case all over the Northwest Territories, and it is for that reason we desire to be careful, in setting apart particular constituencies, that we throw together people who have a community of interest. Under the system that has been followed in the Northwest the local representative has the most to say in relation to road improvements, and it is possible, if you link together two centres of business which are in rivalry, to have the business withdrawn from one and given to the other by the improvement of roads leading to the one and away from the other. While this may seem to be a matter of detail and of small importance to hon. gentlemen who are not acquainted with the circumstances, it means everything to the people out there; and we cannot afford to have their interest disregarded in this very important matter merely for the purpose of gratifying a whim of hon. gentlemen opposite in favour of absolute equality in the population of the constituencies. We are desirous of equalizing that distribution as much as possible, but we are more desirous of giving the people that community of interest which will tend to their wellbeing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there not the same general community of interest recognized in the federal divisions of 1903?

Mr. OLIVER. Merely the community of contiguity, there was no other to be recognized. This Dominion has nothing to do with local matters which so intimately concern the people.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman forgets that the Dominion government is retaining control of the lands; surely that is a business that closely concerns every individual in that country.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely. But that has nothing to do with the business relation between town and country, between settlement and settlement. That is the business of the local government. Let me diverge from the line for a moment to say that in the province of Ontario, and possibly, in the eastern provinces generally, these matters are dealt with by municipal organizations ; but in the Northwest they are dealt with by the local government. Hence the great importance of the division being made along these lines. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not take the last census as the basis for distribution in the old part of the province of Alberta, but,—except the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) himself, every one of them has insisted on taking that census as a basis in the district of Athabaska.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What other evidence have you ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what other evidence the hon. gentleman has.

Mr. LAKE. I denied last night taking that census as a basis.

Mr. OLIVER. I would say that if the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) has no other evidence as in regard to the district of Athabaska that is not the fault of the people of Athabaska ; they ought not to suffer because no means have been taken to find out what the population of the district is or what their rights are. But, if hon. gentlemen opposite insist on taking the census as the basis of calculation in regard to the district of Athabaska they must, in all fairness take it as a basis in the district of Alberta. They must do one or the other, if they are going to be fair. If they take the census as a basis, then, it is clear that there are from 6,000 to 9,000 more people north of township 38 than there are south of township 38. And if they take one member away from Athabaska, they will have to give one to the northern part of Strathcona or Edmonton, if they want to be fair,—but I think that is the last thing they do want to be. If they will not take the census as a basis in the old part of the province, then I submit that they have no right to take it as a basis for Athabaska ; and, if they estimate a fair increase of population in the older part of the province, they are equally bound to estimate a fair increase in this vast new territory.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the hon. minister see that the census is the one and only basis we have for Athabaska, while it is one of several we have for the other portion of the province.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, why should we be obliged to omit the only evidence we have with regard to Athabaska ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am giving hon. gentlemen oppposite their choice—take one or the other, but not one for one part of the country and the other for the other part of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. But does not the minister see that for one part of the country we have nothing else, and in the other part of the country we have ?

Mr. OLIVER. But if they are willing to stand on that in one part of the country why not in the other part ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) is referring to me or not. But, in case he may be, I think it only fair to say that I made no such argument.

Mr. OLIVER. I was speaking of the general argument.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, I wish the hon. gentleman would except me. I said I thought his estimate of the population of Athabaska very much exaggerated and express the belief that he could not support it with evidence. But, for the sake of argument, I accepted it and made my remarks on that basis.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. minister will kindly except me also, as I did not use that argument.

Mr. OLIVER. I will take the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) word for it certainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If you except one, you will have to except all.

Mr. OLIVER. I will certainly except the two leaders. I think it would be well if all their followers got up and repudiated their argument in the same way.

Mr. LAKE. I have already done so. While I am on my feet, I would ask the hon. minister to repeat his estimate of the population of the two constituencies.

Mr. OLIVER. Of the district of Athabaska ?

Mr. LAKE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I estimated 5,000 whites and half-breeds, and the census gives about 1,500 Indians—a total of about 6,500, as a mere estimate. The Indians are entitled to be considered in such an estimate as well as the Indians of Macleod or elsewhere.

Mr. LAKE. I think the sensus gives 3,716 Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. In the western part of the district of Athabaska ?

Mr. LAKE. No, in Athabaska.

Mr. OLIVER. I will accept that estimate of the Indians if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) desires it.

Mr. LAKE. I did not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) was referring to only half of Athabaska.

Mr. OLIVER. I referred to the part to be taken into the district of Alberta. Well, I was saying that if hon. gentlemen opposite will withdraw from that position——

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. If the hon. minister has the figures, would he state the number of half-breeds in the two districts of Athabaska and Peace River ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the half-breeds as distinct from the whites. The distinction I drew was between voters and non-voters,—between whites and half-breeds on the one side and Indians on the other.

Mr. LAKE. How many half-breeds and Indians does he calculate in the eastern and how many in the western part of Athabaska?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not made that calculation. I was pointing out that the two leaders of hon. gentlemen opposite did not take the position to which I have referred, and if hon. gentlemen behind them will repudiate it, we will be in a fair way to come to an agreement. Because, as I have shown, taking the figures of the leader of the opposition, taking his argument, if he accepts my estimate of 5,000 whites and half-breeds of Athabaska, it will be manifest that there is no such disparity in representation as would cause the rejection of the proposition to give two members in the local House to this territory ;—quite the contrary. When we see the difference existing as between a city constituency in the province of Quebec, to say nothing about the difference between city and rural constituencies which prevail all over the Dominion ; if we accept the estimate of 6,500 population for the district of Athabaska ; when we consider the peculiar circumstance of that territory attached to the rest of the province ;—when we take all the things into consideration I am satisfied that the House and the country will justify the proportion of representation that is proposed to be accorded to that territory, and will say that anything less than that would be a rank injustice not only to the people of the district of Athabaska—that would be the smallest part of the consideration—but would be very much against the wellbeing of the whole new province and against the wellbeing of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the hon. minister estimate the population of the whole province of Alberta on the 1st July next ?

Mr. OLIVER. The estimate that has been given is 250,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way will it affect the wellbeing of the people of Alberta to give only one member to 5,000 people, when the average for the whole province is one member for 10,000 people ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry, I thought I had made myself clear. I said and I say again that the development and improvement and the granting to the new district of Athabaska, in its different parts, the advantages of civilization under provincial government, is a matter of the very greatest importance to the whole of the province of Alberta, and that the geographical conditions being as they are it is an absolute physical impossibility for one representative to represent the divergent interests of the two sections of that great country while it is to the interest of every part of the province of Alberta and of this whole Dominion of Canada to have both sections adequately represented in the new legislature.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the diverse interests?

Mr. OLIVER. The diverse interests are the interests which lie along the Athabaska river and along the Peace river, the Peace River being an agricultural country looking to agricultural development, the Athabaska, being a fur-bearing country and looking to development in the matter of timber and minerals. Surely there could not be a greater diversity of interests than between these two rivers, and their distance apart and their general geographical conditions are such that no one representative could do justice to them.

Our friends have read returns, receipts of railways and of post offices, and the increase in business in the southern part of the country. Where does that increased business come from ? What has swollen the receipts of the railways at Calgary ? Is it because there are 12,000 people in Calgary as against 5,000 a few years ago ? Nobody will contend that. Is it because there are 10,000 people there instead of 5,000, that there are greater customs returns or that there are more letters received or that there is a large increase in the number of wholesale houses. Everybody knows that the increase of business in a centre of trade such as Calgary or Edmonton is not because of an increased population in those places, but because of an increase of population in the far-outlying places. It is due to the increase in the district of Athabaska, as much as to any other cause that the cities of Edmonton and Calgary are growing as they are growing and that the receipts of the railroads are swelling as they are swelling. There is no other conclusion to be reached and I say that in this day and generation, in this country of Canada, where so much depends upon the development of a new country and where without any serious increase of population we have had our trade and revenues doubled within a few years by reason of the development of new country, and not by increase of population, I cannot understand how the position can be taken that it is not in every one's interest to see that those who are developing the new country shall have every opportunity to do so to advantage.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand the minister to say that Calgary has progressed and grown mainly because of development that has taken place in the outlying district of Athabaska ?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say mainly. I said partly.

Mr. FOSTER. But what is the proportion ? Will the hon. gentleman come down a little from his airy generalizations to particulars ? Will he give us particulars of the trade that flows into Calgary from all portions of the country around Calgary and what proportion of trade it is that flows in from the Peace River and the Athabaska, by figures or anything else?

Mr. OLIVER. I want to be civil in conducting this discussion, but I certainly find it very difficult when I am asked questions that are——

Mr. FOSTER. Difficult to answer.

Mr. OLIVER—absurd on the face of them, which I am not expected to answer, which the member in asking knew I could not by any possibility answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say I had a glimmering suspicion that he could not answer them, but the pertinence of my inquiry was that if the hon. gentleman formed a general conclusion upon such a thing and gave it to the House, I supposed he had some data on which to form that conclusion. The statement he made here was that Calgary and Edmonton, take Calgary for instance, had largely progressed and grown rich, not because the population was larger in Calgary, but because of the development in the Peace River and Athabaska River districts. If he wants to clinch an argument with that would he give inquiring minds on both sides some little inkling as to what currents rush in and out of Calgary greater than those that come in and out from the ranching country that surrounds it and from a thousand and one other different sources of trade within 200 miles of Calgary. Just a few illustrations would do.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course my hon. friend excels at asking questions——

Mr. FOSTER. I am bound to say my hon. friend does not excel at answering them.

Mr. OLIVER. This happens to be one that can be answered.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, let us have it.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose my hon. friend will admit that the trade of the Athabaska region to Calgary is carried over the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and I presume that the fact that the Calgary and Edmonton Railway is now, to the best of my information, running two passenger trains a day where it used to run two trains a week, is some evidence that there is some business doing outside of a distance of 200 miles from Calgary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does that suffice you ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a clincher.

Mr. OLIVER. That the freight traffic over the road which was also done by two trains a week, not so many years ago——

Mr. FOSTER. Go back a little further when there were no trains a week.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely ; at that time there was very little trade or settlement in the Athabaska district, but my hon. friend will find that the increase in trade and traffic over the Calgary and Edmonton Railway lines, out of which trade and traffic I think the hon. gentleman himself will not deny that the greatet part of Calgary's growth has come, that a fair proportion of that comes from the trade and traffic resulting from the increased settlement and development in the Athabaska and Peace River districts. There is no other way for trade to go from Athabaska and Peace River to Calgary. There is no doubt that the trade of Calgary in that direction has increased immensely, and if my hon. friend is as fair and reasonable in putting this and that together in this case as he frequently is, he will admit that there is evidence that Calgary was benefited very greatly by the growth of the Peace River and Athabaska districts ; that the growth of the Peace River and Athabaska has not been because of the growth of Calgary, but that the growth of Calgary has been because of the growth of Peace River and Athabaska, amongst other portions of the country surrounding Calgary.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad my hon. friend has taken his own advice of a few moments ago and climbed down some. He now claims for Calgary a proportionate part of its business due to whatever trade and business has been developed in the Calgary, Peace River and Athabaska districts. I quite agree with that, but ten minutes ago he was arguing that the increase of these two districts was the greatest factor in the progress of Calgary. He said it was not the population of Calgary that increased Calgary's growth and development and richness, but it was the population and development of the Athabaska district. He said that while at one time there were two trains per week running north there are now two trains per day or more, and that proves it. Proves what ? Proves that there is a proportional amount of increase of trade between Calgary and Peace River and Athabaska. It proves nothing of the kind. It proves that in a certain period of time the country between Calgary and Edmonton has developed, that where you at one time had one man purchasing commodities, sending them out and bringing them in, you have now twenty or thirty and that where you had towns with a very few people only in them you have now a series of towns. Proportionately I agree with him, but proportionally to a larger extent that the same number of people within ten miles or within fifty miles of Calgary would cause the trade of Calgary to develop and the population of Calgary to grow. What did you do there for the last ten years, for the last five years even ? What population have you had in Athabaska and Peace River ? A population, which to-day, Indians, half-breeds and whites, is estimated liberally by my hon. friend, not on any better information than that a friend of his who knows pretty well that country came down here and told him so, at 5,000. We will not cavil at that ; we will say it is 5,000. Five years ago it was not that. There has been an increase from that time on. A large proportion of this population is Indian, another proportion is half-breeds, and another proportion is whites. I do not know the exact relationship as to the numbers of whites and half-breeds. My hon. friend does not give us that. But I take this as a fact. Then my hon. friend will admit that the amount of stuff that has been consumed in the northern portion of that country by that population within the last five years has, man for man, taken out of Calgary very much less than the same number of people within ten miles, within twenty miles, within fifty miles or even within one hundred miles of Calgary would consume. The white population is not there to make a prosperous city. They are not large consumers. No class of people in the world are less consumers in a lavish or generous way of imported goods or of the manufactured goods of this country than these same pioneers who are in that far off land. The food that they eat is what they want to get. A large proportion they get in the country and do not get from Calgary. All the clothes they wear they do not buy. They hunt for them to a certain extent. They do not wear the same fine raiment that the hon. Minister of the Interior wears, and in which he sports himself in these more civilized and social parts of the Dominion.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes they do.

Mr. FOSTER. Their costs and charges are not so high. Consequently my hon. friend, if he will just look at it calmly, will climb down a little farther still from that astonishing assertion of his that Calgary's great growth within the last five or six years was due to the fact that Athabaska and Peace River existed, and to the fact that there were some 500 or 800 people in that part of the country.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask the hon. gentleman what he thinks the people out there do wear ?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I suppose they are clothed much the same as John the Baptist was, and perhaps they eat the same food.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. They wear the same clothes that we do.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not locusts and wild honey that they eat ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. They do not wear skins of beasts ; they wear the same clothes as we do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We all wear the skins of beasts in winter time.

Mr. FOSTER. Most of us are in the skins of animals.

Mr. OLIVER. Most of them do not wear skins of animals in that country.

Mr. LALOR. Could the hon. minister inform the committee as to the area of wheat land under cultivation, the number of bushels raised and the number of grist mills in the district of Athabaska ?

Mr. OLIVER. In the proposed new district of Athabaska I am not sure that there are any mills although I think there is one. In the Peace River district, as I have already stated, there is a roller process 50 barrel mill and one stone mill. I cannot give the capacity of this but it is at Peace River crossing. There is one mill owned by the Roman Catholic mission at Peace River River crossing. There is one mill owned by the Roman Catholic mission at Vermilion. There are four mills in the Peace River part of the country. I do not suppose that the two mission mills are of any large account, but the other two mills are of very good capacity and very great usefulness.

Mr. LALOR. May I ask the hon. minister the area of the wheat land in cultivation and the number of bushels raised in that district ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not that information under my hand. I have a lot of information I could give, but it is not absolutely authoritative. It is only current report.

Mr. GALLIHER. The theory advanced by some hon. gentlemen who have discussed this question from the other side of the House is along the line that representation should be according to population or as nearly so as possible. That might obtain in an old settled country, but I submit it does not obtain in new countries such as portions of this new province of Alberta. We have to take into consideration conditions as they exist. We have to look to the future in regard to the probable increase of population. I will quote to the committee from the census of 1901 of the province of British Columbia to show the conditions which existed there in regard to representation in different local electoral districts. The distribution of seats to which I propose to refer was one made by the provincial government of British Columbia itself and is the one which obtained at the time the census was taken in 1901. I will give the population of some of the rural districts then and compare one with the other, and we will see that even in a distribution of seats made by a province for the purposes of its own provincial legislation the populations do not agree to any extent. We will take, for instance, the rural riding of Nanaimo North. We find that the population, according to the census of 1901, was 1,439. Take the adjoining rural district of Nanaimo South ; we find there a population of 5,146, almost five times as large. Again, we will take the district of Lillooet East ; we find the population of only 789. In Lillooet West immediately adjoining it we find a population of 3,196, and mark you, in each of these ridings that I have mentioned they have the same representation, namely, one member. We will go farther and we will find that in the district of Kootenay East, north riding there is a population of 1,938 with one representative, and in Kootenay East south riding a population of 6,508 with one representative. We will also find that the district of Kootenay West, Revelstoke riding, with a population at that time of 3,003, and Kootenay West, Rossland riding, with a population of 14,603, and one representative given to each. Therefore, where the province itself had the fixing of the electoral districts the province did not adhere to any approximate basis. We find that one district represented by over 14,000 population has but one representative and another district with 3,000 population has one representative. We find that one district of 789 has one representative and that another and adjoining district with 3,196 has but one representative. If we are to go upon the principle that you must have approximately the same number of people to the same number of representatives, it would be a very dangerous principle and a very difficult one to adhere to in new countries such as the Northwest Territories and British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the hon. gentleman think ; is it that we should pass a resolution of censure on the legislature of British Columbia ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I would not attempt in this parliament to censure the legislature of British Columbia ; they have been doing very well considering.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I desire to refer just for a moment to one or two statements of the Minister of the Interior ; and, first, with regard to his observation that the opposition were apparently coming down one seat a day. I submit that no such interpretation can be placed upon our action. At the outset we proved beyond contradiction—by simply calling attention to the map of the local seats as distributed by the Northwest legislature in 1902—that there were nine seats given to the southern portion and six seats given to the northern portion. We showed by simply pointing to the map that that distribution by the local legislature was a fair one, and we stated that it had been decreed by a non-partisan government after all localities in the country had been represented and had had an opportunity of stating their views. We showed that in that distribution there were at that time three local seats, or only a part of three seats, north of the northern limit of railway construction, and we show that under this proposed distribution to-day there are now eight seats north of the northern limit of railway construction. We showed that in the southern country, under the distribution of 1902, there were eight seats south of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we show that to-day these eight have only been increased to nine. We have therefore proven very clearly indeed that if the local distribution of 1902 was fair, this proposed distribution is manifestly unfair. The suggestion has been made on the other side that the local distribution was unfair, and in answer we have pointed out that no complaint has ever been made in the local assembly against it ; and if there had been complaint, there is no doubt that gentlemen opposite would have been informed of it. In order to justify the division which the government now proposes, they must proceed upon the assumption that all the development has been in the northern part of the country, and that the southern part has been at a standstill, or has just sufficiently developed to entitle it to only one additional new seat. We have proven our assertion that there is undue representation given under this proposal to one section of the country, and that there has been discrimination against another part of the country. When gentlemen opposite contended that the local division of constituencies was unfair, we proceeded to show that their own division of constituencies for federal purposes in 1903 was also unfair. We showed from the vote polled and from the number of voters on the list that there was discrimination against a certain section of that country. We asked and we hoped that the government would accept our evidence as to the justness of the position we took, but the government have refused to do so. Then in order that there may be no dispute about the figures, the proposition which we now make in this amendment is so manifestly reasonable that I do not see how any person can oppose it. We tell the government that we will take their own distribution of 1903. Let me say that when that redistribution was made in this House all the members from that part of the country were supporters of the Liberal government. Notwithstanding that, we assume that when the division was made in 1903 this government gave fair and equal representation to the different sections of the country. We have the facts here to prove that there has been a greater influx of population into the southern portion than there has been into the northern portion for the last three years, but we do not insist upon that ; we simply adopt the decision of the government in 1903, and ask them to give these different sections of the country the same proportionate representation that was given then, and have it divided up by a commission of judges, giving five to Alberta, one to the portion of East Assiniboia which is taken into Alberta, and which has 1,650 names on the voters' list ; six to Calgary, six to Strathcona, six to Edmonton. Then we say there will be one left which you can place in Athabaska, and which is giving Athabaska very generous treatment. An attempt has been made to charge this side of the House with a desire to prevent a certain section of that country being represented at all. That is not a fact, and in order to demonstrate that it is not a fact, I may say that I had an alternative schedule prepared, and in that schedule I proposed that Athabaska should get one representative along with the northern section of Alberta. We do not desire that any portion of that country should not have representation, but we do desire that no section of the country shall have undue representation to the detriment of another section. That is our position. We are taking the division made by this government itself, and we merely suggest that these four ridings be divided up into local constituencies so as to prevent the friction which will arise between different localities, such as that which I pointed out to the First Minister the other day where a flourishing town in the northern part of that country was placed on the dividing line of two constituencies. But we did not suggest that this should be done by a commission with any idea of getting any unfair advantage, because, of the three justices of the Supreme Court in the province of Alberta who were suggested, two were appointed by the present administration and one by a Conservative administration. But this subdivision can be made by a committee of the House just as well, if the government consider that they would be shirking their responsibility by handing that work over to a commission of judges. If you fix the number of seats that each section of the country is entitled to, it does not matter to us whether the division is made by a committee of the House or by a commission of judges; but we say, let there be no difference between the different sections of the country in regard to the quota of representation.

Now, let us follow up the argument of the hon. Minister of the Interior as to the pioneers who should be entitled to representation. I have tried to get from him, for the purpose of making a comparison, the number of half-breeds in the Peace River and Athabaska local constituencies; because in the whole district of Athabaska, only half of which is being taken into the province of Alberta, there was, according to the census of 1901, a total population of 6,615 of whom 3,716 were Indians. The figures given us to-day of the number of Indians in Athabaska and Peace River show: In Athabaska 735, and in Peace River 955, a total of 1,690. If we take 1,690 from the total Indian population, it will be found that there are 2,026 Indians in the eastern section of Athabaska, which is getting no separate representation at all. The object of my question was to find out the number of half-breeds in the proposed two new constituencies, to enable me to show that there were still a number left in the eastern section, which is in the province of Saskatchewan and is not getting any separate representation. I think that disposes of the hon. gentleman's pioneer argument; because if the section of Athabaska which is in the province of Alberta is entitled to special representation by reason of there being some pioneers in it, then the section which is in the province of Saskatchewan would be entitled to special representation upon the same ground. With regard to the suggestion that Athabaska is contributing largely to the increase of wealth and development in the southern parts of Alberta, it has been pointed out twice from the hon. gentleman's own figures, that the receipts for passengers and tonnage on the Canadian Pacific Railway show a greater increase in the neighbourhood of Macleod for the years 1902-3 than they do in the northern part of the province. We claim that there should not be two representatives given to Athabaska because the present conditions do not demand it. I have endeavoured to show that if we take the white population of Athabaska of 241 white people and assume that seventy per cent of that is in the portion included in the province of Alberta, it would amount to a total of 160. The population of the whole province is said to have increased two and one-third times, so that if we multiply 160 by $2\frac{1}{3}$, we get a total white population at present of 400 in that portion of Athabaska. I had further pointed out, as an indication of the population there, that up to two or three months ago there was only one post office in the whole district, and that the revenue from that office in the year 1904 was only $60. That, I think, is a fair indication that the districts is not entitled to two representatives.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I have followed with some interest the discussion that has taken place in the House on this question, and I must admit that the more I hear the so-called explanations of the Minister of the Interior and some of his colleagues in the government the more mystified I become. At one time the hon. gentlemen are taking as a foundation for their distribution of seats the population as shown by the census of 1901; at another time it is the estimated population; at another time it is the post offices, the homestead entries, and so on; and when driven from one point, they take up another. I must say that the accusation made by the hon. Minister of the Interior against members on this side of the House of wishing to apply the census of 1901 in one part of the province and not in another, is entirely without foundation. I have yet to hear an hon. member on this side of the House base an argument on that ground. The Prime Minister, in introducing this question, stated that he had taken into consideration existing conditions, population and geographical conditions. In regard to existing conditions, he applies the principle only in part. Where it can be applied without detriment to the object the Minister of the Interior has in view, he applies it, and where it can be applied detrimentally to that object he fails to apply it. It has not been shown up to the present time that north of township 38 there is any constituency in which the existing conditions remain undisturbed. It is only in the southern constituencies that they have been left intact. There cannot be produced a single instance north of township 38 in which existing conditions have been adhered to in this redistribution. That would lend colour to the argument that it has been the effort of the government, and especially of the Minister of the Interior who has looked after that part of the country, to give a preponderating influence to the country north of township 38.

Again they took their position in regard to population. The Prime Minister to-day told the hon. member for St. Antoine division, Montreal (Mr. Ames), that, although his figures might be perfectly accurate, they were not according to the census of 1901, but that according to that census there was a greater population north of township 38 than there was south of it. But we know that the census of 1901 does not afford a proper basis of estimate. This is stated by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) himself, who says, at page 8002 of 'Hansard':

> For the province of Alberta the census was taken in 1901, and therefore had become an unreliable basis of information, because there has been since a large increase of population. It was therefore thought better to take as a basis the actual vote polled on the 3rd of November last.

Well, if you take the actual votes polled, what does it show? Take even the government's figures and you find that 11 southern constituencies polled in November 3rd last 10,556 votes, while 11 northern constituencies polled only 9,553 votes. This omits the constituency of Red Deer, which is partly in the north and partly in the south. So, taking the basis proposed by the Minister of the Interior himself, you find that this redistribution gives more representatives to the north than it is entitled to. But if you take the figures prepared by the opposition the disproportion is even greater. And there is probably greater accuracy in the figures prepared by the members of the opposition than in those presented by the government, which were prepared, not by the Prime Minister or by any member of the government, but by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who, probably, did not take one-half the trouble in compiling them that was taken by hon. gentlemen on this side in preparing their figures. According to the figures prepared by members of the opposition the 11 southern constituencies polled 10,701 votes and the 11 northern constituencies 9,259. And the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) also admitted this in regard to the census of 1901:

> I think that my hon. friend——

Speaking of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—

> —is in error in suggesting, as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has already said, that reliance was placed on the number of post offices or anything except the actual number of votes polled. Because this is the actual basis of distribution.

I have shown that more votes were polled in the south than in the north.

Some hon. gentlemen opposite say that they take the number of voters on the list. Well, what does this prove, according to the government's own figures? In the district south of township 38 there were 15,895 names on the list and in the northern district 12,863—Red Deer omitted in both cases. These are the government's own figures, and they show that there is absolutely no reason for giving the preponderating representation to the district north of township 38.

As another means of estimating the population, speakers on behalf of the government take the homestead entries, the post office districts, the school districts and the local improvement districts. Well, as to homestead entries, it has been shown by the member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) that more entries have been made, and therefore there has been a larger influx of population, south of township 38 than north of it. The homestead entries in the three years since the census was taken number 9,941 north of township 38 and 13,028 south of township 38; that is, 43 per cent for the north and 57 per cent for the south.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I think the hon. member (Mr. W. J. Roche) will find those figures incorrect, as no homestead entries were allowed from the Battleford land agency.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I referred to the map published by the Department of the Interior up to 1st of January, 1905—that is not the date of compilation, but on that map is shown all the townships for which there are printed surveys up to 1st January, 1905. I passed the map over to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Peter Talbot). It will show that there are very few townships for which plans have been printed in the land office at Battleford which go west of the 4th meridian. And if he would look at the map, he will see that his calculation is manifestly unfair. Further, I would point out that part of the district which is west of the 4th meridian in the land office district lies south of 38, but the greater part is north of 38.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. The settled portion is north of 38, certainly. In the vicinity of Lloydminster every available quarter section for many miles is taken up. And there has been a large number of entries made in the Battleford office for land in the constituency of Strathcona.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. It was possible for the Minister of the Interior to have had here every entry in that district, showing where it was. That is the sort of evidence that should be before this House to enable us to determine this matter. Why is it not here?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The figures quoted, I believe, are from a return moved for in the regular way in this House and supplied by officers of the government. The figures of land sales support those of homestead entries—about 54 per cent south of township 38 and 46 per cent north of township 38. In the calculation made by the Minister of the Interior, based upon homestead entries, he estimated five to the family. On this basis, it will be seen that there is an excess of people south of township 38 over those north of that township.

Multiply that number by five and it means that 15,435 more people have gone in south of that township than to the north. The Prime Minister also takes the post office as an indication. To show the absurdity of that contention it is only necessary to quote the district of Athabaska in which there was only one post office up to the 1st of February, 1905, and where they only had twelve mail deliveries during the whole year. This district that had twelve monthly services and one post office up to the 1st February last, is one of the arguments why they are giving more representation to the north than to the south, and they want to give two representatives to that whole district of Athabaska that has only one post office in it. That shows how absurd their contention is, to say nothing at all of the political pull that the member supporting the government has in securing a post office for the district he represents. The same way with the school districts that have been referred to, and the local improvement societies, which are perfectly optional with the settlers, they can establish them or not. Now the district of Athabaska is being given two members, and why ? The Prime Minister explains why. In his speech, on page 8006, he says :

> The distances are too great, the difficulties of communication are too serious, and therefore these people would have to remain practically unrepresented.

Well there is nothing at all in that argument. They would not have to go unrepresented if they were associated with another riding in the north, they would be equally represented. By enlarging the riding some it would allow these people to be represented just as well as many other constituencies are to-day being represented by members who are now sitting in this House. The Prime Minister goes on :

> They could not have the advantage of seeing their member and their member could not see them, and for these reasons we have thought it would not only not be right, but it would not be just and fair that these people should not have the advantage of representation.

Why, I venture to say that there are many members in this House who are representing constituencies so extensive in size that they have never seen portions of them. From 1896 to 1900 I myself had the honour of representing a very large constituency territorially ; it extended some 250 or 300 miles north of where I resided, and up to this time I have never seen hundreds of those settlers who reside in the Lake Winnipegosis district, I could not cover the whole region in the time allowed for the campaign. Still, I did business for these people, they were willing to have me represent them, and elected me as their representative on each occasion. They did not complain much until they were cut off, owing to an increase in the population of the province. As I said before, it is unnecessary to divest these people of representation simply because we refuse to acquiesce in the wish of the government to give them two representatives for that sparsely settled district. And when it is shown what a small population there is in that district, what does the government fall back upon ? They do not defend themselves on the ground that there is a sufficient population, but they say : Look at that very large district, look at the area, 300 square miles, or something of that character. If they are going to apply that argument to the portion of Athabaska within the new province of Alberta, should they not apply it to that portion that remains in the new province of Saskatchewan ? Are you going to deny representation to that portion within the new province of Saskatchewan ? Certainly not. Is it not just as deserving of representation as that portion retained in the province of Alberta ? Still, where there were only 241 white people in the whole district in 1901, according to the census, they are giving two representatives, defending themselves on the ground that the territory is so large the members could not see their constituents. Now we have at the present time six members for the territorial assembly according to the redistribution made in this House in 1903. There are six members of the local territorial assembly north of township 38, and there are nine south of that line. Now why is this proportion disturbed ? Not because there has been a greater influx of population north, because there has not been ; and if there has not been a greater influx north of township 38, why then has this proportion been disturbed? And yet, owing to the fact that there are only six seats north and nine south, we should have a larger number given to the south. The population has gone in since the redistribution was made by this government, and notwithstanding this large population that is in the south in excess of that in the north, they are giving only two of an increase to the south while they are giving seven to the north.

Now we have no means of knowing the number of votes that were polled in Athabaska at the last election, we only know that by the census there were only 241 white people in that district, and we have no means of estimating the present population. The only grounds upon which an estimate can be made is that given by the Minister of the Interior who says that some man in that district told him so. Seriously, can he, as a minister of the Crown, come forward in parliament and state there are 5,000 people at the present time in the district of Athabaska, on the mere fact that some man told him so, who may be a political supporter of his, and who wished to furnish him with an argument in order to bolster up his scheme. Hon. gentlemen on that side have taken the ground that if Mr. Haultain and the territorial members were not in accord with this redistribution, he should have summoned the territorial assembly and made a protest. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he is serious in making such an assertion. What encouragement has the premier of the Territories had in the past to call a special session of the legislature, to put the country to the expense of having seven by-elections, to go through the farce of approving or disapproving anything when this government would not be guided by their decision ? When that government unanimously sent down here a draft Bill asking for the retention of their public domain, was this government guided by the decision of the Territories in that respect ? And if they were not, how could we expect them to be guided in regard to the distribution of seats ? I think the Minister of the Interior himself would be the first to take the stump against the local government to try to impress upon the people what a useless waste of public money it was to put the country to the expense of holding seven by-elections and calling a special session of the legislature to pass upon something which lay entirely in the discretion of this government.

I would ask the hon. gentlemen, do they object to the judges deciding this matter ? If they are confident of the justice of their cause, why should they object to getting a judicial redistribution, the very means that they themselves proposed in 1899? Why should they object to handing over this case, if it is so just and fair as they pretend, to three judges of the Supreme Court of the Territories, two of whom have been appointed by this government since they came into power ? I should say that if they felt convinced they had a good case they would not at all object to referring it to these judges for a decision, men who would be entirely independent of political influence, or even if they did not refer it to the judges, then, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggests it might be referred to any other tribunal whose decision could be relied on by both political parties, in whom both political parties would have confidence. If that were done the commissioners, whoever they might be, would be on the ground, they would be acquainted with the country, they would have the advice and opinion of the local members which we have not at present, and they could hear the evidence of any witnesses they wished to hear and so could decide that question much more competently than it could be decided by the members of this House.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought we might have the advantage of hearing from the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in regard to the suggestion which I made in the afternoon, as to the figures which I then mentioned and which were admitted by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) this afternoon. I pointed out to the right hon. Prime Minister at that time that out of an estimated population of 250,000 there are only 5,000 in this part of the province to which two members are to be allotted under the Bill. I must confess that I do not see how that position can be defended. The Minister of the Interior made some rather lengthy remarks, and if I may be permitted to say so, without intending any disrespect, he treated the subject from a very trivial and rather unworthy standpoint. It is idle for any hon. gentleman to assert that the welfare of the province of Alberta requires that 245,000 people shall be represented by 23 members in the legislative assembly, and that 5,000 at the outside, taking what I believe to be a very extravagant estimate, must be represented by two members. That is an argument which it is not necessary for us to meet or controvert. It answers itself. No possible reason can be suggested in support of that assertion. There are no physical difficulties, there are no difficulties or conditions of any kind, which make it necessary or expedient or proper, or right, or fair, or honest, to adopt any such measure of representation as that which is proposed. If there be any such, surely we have the right to know what they are. I have not heard of any and certainly the Minister of the Interior has not even suggested remotely any reason which would weigh in the slightest degree to that end. There is no expectation of greater development in that district than in the other districts. There is a population admitted by us for the purpose of argument, although we conceive that the estimate of the minister as to the population in that district is absurdly extravagant ; but, yet, taking it for the moment as being fair and reliable, it is an estimate which does not at all justify any such distribution as that which has been proposed. Further, we could offset against the estimate of the hon. minister—an estimate based upon hearsay information derived from persons whom we do not know, whom we have not seen, the exact details of which we have not before us—other estimates, estimates which have been published in reliable and respectable journals in the west, and which may be presumed to be founded on information quite as good as that which has been acted upon by the hon. Minister of the Interior. If we are to act upon estimates of that character we shall be led into all sorts of conjectures. However, putting aside that consideration for the moment and accepting the estimate which has been made by the Minister of the Interior, for the purpose of argument, although believing it to be an estimate which is not supported, we have the result which I pointed out to the right hon. gentleman, and I must confess that I think the situation is one which demands grave consideration at his hands. I have not heard and I cannot conceive of any reasons which would enable one to say that a distribution of that kind has even the most remote semblance of fairness—245,000 people to elect 23 representatives; 5,000 to elect 2. The Minister of the Interior has referred to the development of industries. Surely no one who knows anything of the province of Alberta will suggest that there is any greater wealth, or any more industries in this district than in other districts. I am not suggesting that these things should be very much taken into consideration, but they were suggested this afternoon by the Minister of the Interior in his remarks. The basis of population must be the ultimate basis upon which to proceed, having regard, of course to certain other conditions to which we are willing to give weight if necessary. He speaks of community of interest. Even assuming that the district referred to has a community of interest distinct from the remainder of the province of Alberta we are not in any way seeking to invade the principle which he invokes because our only suggestion is that this particular district in Alberta shall be entitled to one member, although, according to the information as to the population of the province that is before us it has only one-half of the population which would entitle it to a member—25 members to be elected to the legislative assembly by 250,000 people; an average of 10,000. The government suggest that 5,000 people in this district shall have two members. We suggest one member, which is just double the representation which the population of that district would be entitled to under the estimate which has been presented to this House by the government. Under these conditions, how is it possible to ask the committee to give two members to that district instead of one. I trust the right hon. gentleman will adopt what has been suggested by us, and modify the schedule accordingly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We are now in the fourth day of this debate, and after giving as fair and impartial consideration as I could to the matter, the conclusion at which I have arrived is that the only point as to which anything like an argument has been made by gentlemen opposite is as to whether the district of Athabaska should be represented by one member or by two. I do not pretend that I am free from bias and I suppose if I did I would not be believed; all of us are perhaps more or less based on one side or the other, but I hold that that would not prevent us from giving a fair and impartial judgment in a matter of this kind. I have heard the word gerrymander applied to this distribution, but in the sense of grouping sections of the population or scattering naturally united districts with a view of giving an unfair advantage to one political party, I am glad to say that after four days discussion that has not even been suggested. Unfortunately a quarrel has arisen out of the fact that there are two rival cities in the new province of Alberta and I take it that this extraneous circumstance has led to the discussion on this distribution. Unless I am greatly mistaken, and I am in the judgment of those who have listened to the debate, if we had only Calgary and no Edmonton or Edmonton and no Calgary, no man in this House would grudge giving two members to the district of Athabaska. This House has never refused representation to constituencies which were much smaller than others, when these constituencies were separated by distance, when they were new communities, or when they had local interests to be served. I was impressed this afternoon with the reference to the representation of Quebec West, which of course I knew but which did not occur to me until it was mentioned. Quebec West has a population of about 9,000, but it has its member, and we never thought of merging it into another constituency simply because we wanted to give representation to a class of the population which might otherwise not be represented in this parliament. In other provinces there has also existed a great discrepancy between the population of constituencies, but the smaller communities have been left their representation although not entitled to a representative in point of number, because it is felt it would not be wise to leave particular interests or classes unrepresented. I have already called the attention of the House to the fact that in 1871 Cariboo in British Columbia had a total population of 1,955, the number of voters being 359, and these 359 men in the district of Cariboo had the same voting power as some 20,000 men in other constituencies of the Dominion. In the constituencies of Yale the population was actually only 1,316, and the total number of voters 148. In the election of 1874, Mr. Dewdney was returned having secured 75 votes and his opponent got 9 votes, making 84 votes cast in that election. I could cite a number of similar instances in Manitoba, British Columbia and elsewhere. Why were these discrepancies allowed? Nobody ever objected, nobody ever suggested these communities should not be represented; it was felt that as there were groups of populations scattered here and there, it was better for the contentment of the people at large and for the better government of the country that they should have a voice in the legislature, so that all matters affecting the country could be ventilated, and so that the peculiar wants and requirements of the community could be made known. To my mind these things apply equally well at the present day as in former times. The concession has been made by the opposition during this discussion that Athabaska should get at least one member. When the debate commenced four days ago, gentlemen opposite contended that Athabaska should not have a representative, but that the boundaries of St. Albert and Sturgeon should be extended north to the limits of Athabaska and Mackenzie, and that Athabaska should be included in these constituencies. That was the first proposition made by gentlemen on the other side. They have evidently now come to the conclusion that this would not be fair to the people now in Athabaska as well as to people who are going into that Territory, and who have their own interests and their own requirements, and whose voice should be heard in the legislature of the province. The point now is whether Athabaska should have one member or two. If we look at the population alone I grant that one member ought to be enough, but if you look at the peculiarities of the geographical conditions, I leave it to the leader of the opposition himself and to his friends behind him to say whether or not it is fair that you should have only a single representative for that immense territory in which there are at present no lines of communication, in which the settlements are centred upon the Peace and the Athabaska rivers, and between which two rivers so far as I know there is no direct communication. Under such circumstances I ask if it would be reasonable to give only one representative to the district of Athabaska. I do not pronounce categorically on the question ; I am willing to listen to argument, but again I repeat that unless I am greatly mistaken no one would begrudge two members to the district of Athabaska, but for the fact that the capital has to be selected and the gentlemen from Calgary seem to think that if Athabaska is given two representatives instead of one, Calgary has no chance of being the capital. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggests now that we should adopt another method of division and take as a basis the four federal electoral districts of Calgary, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Strathcona, giving six members to one, and three members to another, and five members to another. Why not give six members to the other instead of five. I do not know how that would work out. If you gave six members to these districts, you might also have to give six to the others ; but it seems to me that the best thing to do is not to do that in advance, but to take up the constituencies as they are on the map, one after another, and see whether they are fair or not, and, if they are not fair, to try to rectify them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I be permitted to say in reply to the right hon. gentleman that the question of the capital does not affect in any way the conclusions which I have been endeavouring to express to the House. The right hon. gentleman says that if there were no question of the capital concerned, no one in this House would begrudge two members to the unorganized territory which is to form part of the new province of Alberta. I do not like the word 'begrudge,' I am not begrudging anything ; I am proposing to allot to every man in the province of Alberta, so far as we can reasonably do it, the same voice in the legislature that every other man has. My right hon. friend talks of a concession having been made. I thought I had made myself reasonably clear. I stated over and over again that I did not think there was any evidence before this committee that would justify the conclusion that there are 5,000 people in that unorganized territory. I am of that opinion still. But we have got past that, not as a matter of fact, but for the purpose of this argument. I am taking the estimates made by the members of the administration themselves, and I am pointing out that 245,000 people are to have a representation of 23, and 5,000 people are to have a representation of 2. Can we concede for a moment that there are conditions which would justify that ? I know of no such conditions. If there are any let us know what they are. I have not heard from my right hon. friend what they are. He says that one representative is not enough because the people are scattered. Well, I have not observed any provision in this Bill that the members of these particular ridings are to be residents of the ridings they represent, or any provision to enable their constituents to see them. It is very probable that men who have business interests in these ridings will represent them, although residing at Edmonton. What advantage or necessity is there in having two representatives instead of one? Suppose you extended the constituency further towards the north pole, and had a population of 5,000 or 6,000 scattered over a thousand miles of that territory, would you give them three or four or five members because the territory would be so much larger? I have never heard of such an argument before. My right hon. friend refers to the illustrations given by the hon. Minister of the Interior, and talks about Quebec West and Yale-Cariboo. We are not discussing Quebec West or Yale-Cariboo. I assume that there were conditions that made it necessary for these constituencies to have the representation given to them; otherwise it was the hon. gentleman's duty in 1903 to remedy any grievance. Why did not the right hon. gentleman refer to Old Sarum with a dozen electors which elected one member when Liverpool with 100,000 people did not elect any ? That would have been a much better illustration than the one he gave. If he had taken a dozen rotten boroughs in Great Britain as they existed before 1832, he would have found much better illustrations of inequality than any he has given to-day. But we are not dealing with these at the present moment. We are dealing with the representation of the proposed province of Alberta, and I must confess that I expected to hear from my right hon. friend something different to that with which he has just concluded. What conditions make it necessary to give these supposed 5,000 people—because they do not really exist—two members I have not heard, except something about community of interest. The answer to that is that we are not disturbing that principle, because the proposal is that they shall all be represented by one member. The other suggestion is the feeble one, that they must have two members in order that they may be able to see their representatives. That seems to me extraordinary enough to provoke a smile. There are say 800 or 1,000 electors there according to the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite, though not supported by any sufficient basis, and we must give one member to each 500 of these in order that he may have the privilege of seeing his constituents and they him. What guarantee have we that if we give two representatives their constituents will see them any oftener than they would see one? Is there not a mail service there? How many of our constituents do we see in the course of a year or four years? Is not ninety-nine-one-hundredths of the business which each member in this House transacts with his constituents conducted by correspondence? The hon. junior member for Halifax represents at least 18,000 electors. How many of these does he see in the course of a year ? If he saw the whole 18,000 in the course of a year I think we might expect from him an early intimation of his intention to resign his seat, because it would take more than the 24 hours of every day to transact his business with them. Let us apply common sense and practical experience to this question. These matters are not transacted by personal interviews; they cannot be. The business of members with their constituents is transacted by correspondence, and the suggestion that there should be two members in order that they might spend their time travelling up and down these rivers in order to transact business in regards to roads and bridges, and so forth, is so trival that I hesitate to characterize it in the terms that naturally come to one's tongue. The main test to which we must go back is the test of population. I do not deny that there may be other considerations, but there are none brought to the attention of this committee that in any way would make it necessary to give to those who are supposed to live in this part of the province of Alberta four times the representation accorded to those who reside in other parts. The right hon. gentleman thinks the best course is to proceed to consider the limits of the constituencies. I do not see how we shall make very much progress in that way, because after all we shall have to come back to the question whether 5,000 men in one constituency shall have the same representation as is given to 20,000 in other constituencies. That is the question that will face us in the end however much we may go over this schedule; but if the right hon. gentleman would prefer to let this amendment stand for the moment and go over the delimitation of the constituencies, I do not know that there is any particular objection to that, except that I do not want to have the matter decided without further discussion.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no use in our threshing over the same word time after time, making the same statements, each declaring that he does not see what the other needs. I think my hon. friends on the other side are getting thrashed so far. There is a well-defined difference of policy, as I understand, between the two sides of the House. And, once the issue is taken on the question of policy and the position of each side clearly stated before the country, that should be enough, and the business of the House should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is proceeding.

Mr. OLIVER. Not so far.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is interrupting now. We are waiting for an answer from the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps I may be allowed to say that, as I understand the difference of policy, it is this : Our hon. friends on the other side claim that the only test in regard to distribution of seats should be population.

Mr. BARR. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I understand to be the trend and result of the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who stated that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has argued ever since he first touched this subject to that effect. If not I have misunderstood him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman certainly did misunderstand me. And he could not have been paying attention to the debate, for only five minutes ago, I stated that the distribution might be affected by other conditions, but I had heard of none which should affect it to the extent proposed.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) reminds me of a Scotchman who said he was quite open to conviction, but he would like to see the man who could convince him. If hon. gentlemen opposite will permit me to state what seems to me to be the position of the opposition, for the purpose of stating what seems to me to be the position of this side of the House, I can make my argument clearer. It seems to me that the trend of the argument on the other side up to the present time is that the test of representation should be population.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The main test—no doubt.

Mr. OLIVER. That and that alone. Now, if I understand the position of this side, it is that the population is one basis, but besides there should be considered also other elements—area, prospects and possibilities, community of interest. And we point to the example of every distribution of seats in every province of the Dominion ever since there was a Dominion. We say that our policy is that which has governed every party in every province, in every distribution. If that does not convince hon. gentlemen opposite that we are in the right, we simply fail to convince them, and there is no need to prolong the argument. If we, with the whole history of the country on our side cannot convince them, they can hardly hope to convince us. I have no hesitation in saying that their proposal, if carried into effect would result in the gravest difficulty. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) smiles. He doubts what I say. He has an amendment which he proposes to move setting forth his view of the proper distribution of these constituencies. If I have read that amendment correctly, he proposes to give to the Dominion electoral district of Alberta 5 local seats; to Calgary, 6; to Strathcona, 6; to Edmonton, 6. If I read the figures aright, that means that 686 voters in the district of Alberta will be entitled to a representative in the local assembly, according to his proposal, while in the district of Strathcona, 966 voters would be entitled to one representative.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think it works out that way.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my calculation, if incorrect, is incorrect only in small degree. The hon. gentleman has argued, on the occasions when he has stated his position before the House—and never more persistently and determinedly than within the last five minutes—that the basis of representation should be equality of population. Yet, in the very proposition he has placed before the House he has departed from that principle to the extent of 50 per cent. I find no fault with his proposition on that account, but simply with the argument; and I am trying to show how absurd is his argument of population that it should be the sole basis of representation. He proposes to govern the new constituencies of the province by the present Dominion constituencies. That may be a perfectly proper basis of division. I do not think it is, as a matter of fact. I say it is a very improper one. But, let us assume, for the sake of argument, that it is a proper division. In making that division he gives an advantage of 50 per cent to one part of the country over another. Does he say that the people in one part of the country are more intelligent, or that a larger proportion of them are voters? He has been careful, in speaking of the district of Athabaska to take my estimate of 5,000 whites and half-breeds but to omit the 1,500 Indians who went to make up my total estimate of 6,500 for that district. But, take the district of Alberta to which he proposes to give 5 members. Out of a total population in the district of Macleod, according to the census, there are 1,738 Indians. If the hon. gentleman finds the proposal we make does not absolutely accord with rule and line and plummet, I would call his careful attention to his own proposal to see how nearly he has met the condition he himself has laid down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as voters on the list are concerned, Alberta, according to the figures has 5,147 or about 1,000 voters for each member proposed to be given to that district.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) refuses to accept any other standard than the voters' list?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have said that a dozen times—that the voters on the list were a much better guide to population than the number of votes cast. I should think that so obvious that it would be hardly necessary to repeat it a dozen times. A greater proportion of voters may go to the polls in one constituency than in another. The difference may be due to a dozen different reasons. The weather, the nature of the issue, the organization of the party, the popularity of the candidate, the keeness of the contest—a hundred things affect the percentage of voters who go to the polls. Therefore it seems to me clear that the number on the list is a much safer guide to the population than the number who actually go to the polls.

Mr. BARKER. Let me ask the minister another question. Supposing in two or three constituencies there was no contest at all, what would he do if he were to rely upon the lists? Would he say there were no voters if there was no contest?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what my hon. friends have been saying with regard to the district of Athabaska. But I would like, for the information of my hon. friend, to give him a fact in regard to the method in which voters' lists are prepared in the Northwest Territories, and the purpose which they have in view. The very fact which was brought out recently by my hon. friend from Strathcona that in ten cases, I think, in the four electoral districts of Alberta, the number of votes polled overran the number of votes on the list, is sufficient evidence that the votes on the list are not an accurate guide to the number of the population, and the lists are not at all in the same position as the voters' lists in this part of the country where they are made up on a different basis. In the Northwest the enumerator is appointed immediately before the election, whose duty it is to place upon the list the names of those within the polling division who he believes are entitled to vote. He may see these people or he may not; and in the result of the vote it makes no difference whether a man's name is on the list or not, if he is a voter he is entitled to go to the poll, and by taking the oath, to cast his vote. That being the case, it is evident that the same care is not taken in making up the voters' lists that would be taken were the voters' lists the final test. In this part of Canada, candidates and members go to the expense of hundreds and thousands of dollars to get a correct voters' list, because that is the final test of the right to vote. But in the Northwest Territories the voters' lists are not the final test at all. Nobody goes to any expense to prepare a list, and the lists are consequently notoriously inaccurate so far as they represent the actual voting population. When we proposed to provide for a delimitation of the districts it was not with an intention of depriving any one of his right to vote that we took the basis of the votes cast rather than the basis of those on the list, but it was because we felt that the votes cast would be accepted by everybody as the more accurate indication of the number of voters available in the district.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman know what percentage of non-registered voters attended at the polls?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say.

Mr. BARKER. We want to know whether any material number voted who had not been on the list; and next, did not that apply to every one of the constituencies, so as not to affect the average.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course.

Mr. BARKER. Then what difference does it makes, as the list would give the true average after all?

Mr. OLIVER. It might and it might not, there is no assurance of it. The assurance is much better when you rely upon the ballots in the box than upon the names on the list, prepared as those lists are.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. gentleman forgets. There may be 30, or 40 or 50 per cent on the list that do not vote at all; but there may be only 1 per cent or 2 per cent who have voted that were not on the list. One is 1 or 2 per cent from the accurate figure, the other may be 30, 40 or 50 per cent off.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If the minister thinks that the better basis is the number of votes polled rather than the number on the list, how comes it that, according to the government's own figures submitted to this House, in the eleven southern constituencies there were 10,566 votes polled and 15,895 on the list? Which is the better gauge of population? The same way in the north.

Mr. BARKER. That shows a difference of 50 per cent. If the hon. minister will now tell us what the percentage was that voted who were not on the list, we will be able to say whether the list of voters, or the number who voted is the better guide.

Mr. LAKE. In the only case that came to my notice there was an equality between the names on the list and the number of those who voted, it was a case in which there was a duplicate of names on one of the lists. Two lists were supplied, and on the list which had evidently been used there was a duplicate of names. I did not find a single case in the large number of lists I looked through, in which there was a larger number of votes polled than of names on the list, and I looked more or less at the lists of six constituencies in the Northwest Territories. I was glad just now to hear the minister quoting from the census figures, showing he had looked them up. This afternoon I asked him the question as to what number he estimated the half-breed population in the eastern half of Athabaska to be. I think that is information that we might demand at this stage. The schedules for the new province of Saskatchewan have been drawn up, no doubt, after the minister had inquired very closely into the details of the population in that new province. I would like to ask him how many of the white and half-breed population in the district of Athabaska he places in the eastern part which is to go into the new province of Saskatchewan, and how many were there according to the census of 1901?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not prepared to answer that question, the return is not in my department. I will be glad to get the information and present it to the House, if desired.

Mr. LAKE. At any rate, the hon. gentleman might tell us how many whites and half-breeds he estimates are in the eastern part, as the schedules for Saskatchewan have been drawn up and submitted.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give any estimate. I have been careful, on the request of the hon. member for North Toronto, to secure from the Census Department a complete statement of the whites and half-breeds on the one hand and of Indians on the other, in the district affected by the Bill under discussion. If I had been asked to secure the other I would have got the information but I have not it at present. I hope my hon. friend is not going to hold the Bill up because I have not secured information which relates to some other Bill.

Mr. BARKER. All this should have been done before you brought the schedule in.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps my hon. friend would like the trade returns from Japan in connection with this Bill as well.

Mr. BARKER. I am asking with reference to the Bill before the House. The minister and his colleague from Strathcona have prepared this schedule. If the hon. gentleman does not know the facts relating to the matter, he should not attempt to draw up the schedule.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman seems to think he knows the pertinent facts.

Mr. BARKER. I did not draw the schedule; but the minister, when he was not a minister, when he had no responsibility as a minister, with the help of his friend and colleague, undertook to draw up the schedule. He has not attempted to deny it, although it has been charged again and again, but he admits now that he did not know the facts necessary to be known before he attempted to draw the schedule.

Mr. LAKE. Does the minister admit then that the schedules for Saskatchewan have been prepared without there being in his possession any information as to the white and half-breed voting population in the eastern part of Athabaska?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe that, as a matter of fact, the schedules for Saskatchewan have been drawn up without a knowledge of the number of whites and half-breeds in the eastern part of Athabaska. That eastern part of Athabaska is not under Indian treaty, and the fact that it is not under Indian treaty is evidence that there is not supposed by any authority to be any considerable population of white men in that district. If there was any considerable white population it would have been a necessity for the government before now to have secured a treaty from the Indians. I have every reason to believe that there is not either a large white or Indian population. At any rate, we have not the same means available for securing information in regard to the eastern as we have to the western part of the province. However, such information as is available in the census bureau will be placed at the disposal of my hon. friends as soon as we can get it.

Mr. LAKE. By the census of 1901 there were 242 whites in the western part of Athabaska and 2,395 half-breeds. I presume a portion of those figures were taken as part of the basis when the calculation was made as to the estimated population which the minister has given us of the western part of Athabaska. Could he tell us what proportion of those 242 whites were estimated to be in the western part of Athabaska and what proportion in the eastern part?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not made that inquiry of the census department.

Mr. LAKE. Then the 5,000 is a pure guess given on information supplied by some gentleman whose name has not been given to the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what particular import the hon. member attaches to the word 'guess.' Inasmuch as there was not an official census taken to substantiate that statement, it must be considered as an estimate and not as official; but to say it is a mere guess, is rather straining, because the hon. gentleman will have to take my word for it that I secured the information from a gentleman who was probably better informed regarding it than any other white man, and who gave it to me as being reliable.

Mr. LAKE. Was that statement verified, or was it just the statement of one gentleman?

Mr. OLIVER. It was the statement of one gentleman.

Mr. LAKE. And the minister did not take this basis of 242 which appeared as the white population in 1901 into consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. I hope my hon. friend will keep within the limits. I think he said a few minutes ago that the population was some 251, and now he wants me to say why I consider it is only 251.

Mr. LAKE. I said that, according to the census of 1901, the population of whites is 242. Now, I want to know his proportion in the west and in the east.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to know what the question whether the people are whites or half-breeds has to do with the matter?

Mr. LAKE. It has to do with an argument I wish to make.

Mr. OLIVER. We will admit it for the sake of the argument.

Mr. LAKE. That the whole of the 242 whites are in the west?

Mr. OLIVER. For the sake of the argument, we will accept any figure the hon. gentleman chooses to state.

Mr. LAKE. The minister has been making this estimate, I suppose, not simply upon the information of one gentleman unnamed to this House, but whom we would like to know, although apparently we are not to be told. The minister surely had some other means of verifying this extraordinary increase from 242 whites and 2,395 half-breeds up to 5,000 whites and half-breeds. I think it may be taken as granted that the half-breeds have not been increasing to any very great extent, probably just the natural increase of the half-breeds. As we know, the Indian population has been pretty well at a standstill for a great number of years past, and I think we may take it for granted that the half-breed population has not been increasing to any very great extent, and that there has not been any immigration of half-breeds into that country either. We know that half-breeds are moving about the country, but if they moved from Athabaska they would go to Alberta in all probability, so it does not affect the argument.

Mr. OLIVER. Would it be because they have moved from Edmonton that they would not be in Athabaska after they had moved there ?

Mr. LAKE. The reason I made the remark was that he is calculating a larger number of seats are due to northern Alberta on account of population than they are really entitled to, and so if he is gaining new half-breeds in northern Alberta, he must not count them in in Athabaska. Deducting the half-breeds, who are about stationary and of whom a very great number are likely enough in the eastern part of that territory, there has been an increase of white settlers. The increase in the number of whites was from 242 to 3,400 between the years 1901 and 1905 ; that is to say, that the number of whites in that country is fourteen times as great as it was. Taking that figure, it must be assumed that there has been an immigration into Athabaska of 850 whites per annum since 1901. Now, I would like to know whether the hon. minister can furnish us with any information which is likely to convince this House that such a large immigration went into that country every year within the last four years. First of all, what time do the immigrants for Athabaska and Peace River leave Edmonton ? I presume that practically the whole of them pass through Edmonton on their way to that country. At about what time in the year do they commence to leave ? At what time are the rivers open, and at what time does travel cease ?

Mr. OLIVER. People travel between Edmonton and Peace River at all seasons of the year.

Mr. LAKE. How many immigrants per week go into that country on the average ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LAKE. I think that when we have such an indefinite statement as that which has been submitted to the House, and when we have nothing to support it we have a right to inquire as closely as we can and to see if it can be supported by other probable facts.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the argument ?

Mr. LAKE. I am anxious to know whether the hon. minister is prepared to say if every week during these four years an average of about 15 immigrants started off and went up into the Athabaska or Peace River country.

Mr. OLIVER. The immigration department has not yet established an agency to check the immigration into Peace River.

Mr. LAKE. I thought the hon. minister might have been able to tell us from his own observations. He is living in Edmonton, he must know what is going on pretty well, and he must see these immigrants day after day starting off for the Peace River and Athabaska country, and it seems to me that he might assure this committee as to these facts, or if there is likely to be something more behind his statement than he has given us that there is this large white and half-breed population. How many per week has he himself seen ? How many wagons at a time has he seen week after week starting up into that country ?

Mr. OLIVER. They do not use wagons in the winter.

Mr. LAKE. Well, we will say sleighs if it suits the hon. gentleman better. The hon. gentleman apparently is not prepared to give any facts to substantiate his figures. He expects this committee and parliament to accept his estimate of 5,000 simply on an opinion expressed by some unknown gentleman. I think it is due to this House that it should have something more before it than simply telling it that is must accept that estimate of population and that it must give two members to represent that district because in the hon. minister's opinion there are something like 5,000 whites and half-breeds in that country. Since the House adjourned this afternoon I have been looking into a few of the census figures. We have had quoted to us on two or three occasions the census of 1901 and it seems to me that there are some interesting deductions to be obtained from these figures. For instance, I looked into the population of Alberta as given in the census of 1901 and the estimated population to the 1st of July of the present year, a few days hence, and I found that the population has increased nearly four times or 392 per cent. I work it out in this way : The total population of 1901 was 65,876. We will add the estimated population in the Medicine Hat district from the new province of Saskatchewan amounting to about 3,000. I think Medicine Hat itself had about 2,000 of that population. Now, we have to deduct from that the Indians who have not been immigrating into this country and whose population, as I think it will be admitted, has been pretty well at a standstill. You may take 5,620 Indians from that number. You may also take 3,686 half-breeds who have not been immigrating into that country and whose population may also be considered to be more or less at a standstill ; at any rate, there is a very small proportionate natural increase. That leaves a total number of whites in the year 1901 of 59,570 for the old district of Alberta. It is calculated that 250,000 is the population of the whole of the new province of Alberta. So, I deduct the total population of Indians and the estimated number of half-breeds which the hon. minister fancies he has found in the district of Athabaska and I find we have to deduct on this account 15,906 leaving a total white population at the present time of 234,094. It will be found from that calculation, if you simply divide that sum by 59,570, that the population has increased nearly four times or 392 per cent as compared with what it was shown to be in the 1901 census. What I am driving at is this : The census of 1901 is a most extraordinary basis to form this distribution upon when there are four white settlers now for every settler that there were four years ago. How can this committee for one instant say that this new population is divided absolutely evenly throughout the whole country, a population which is four times as great as it was four years ago ? In these last four years we have been having exceptionally good seasons in the southern part of Alberta and there has been a large inrush of immigration. Perhaps in the northern part they had almost too much rain and it is possible that the rush into that portion of Alberta has not been as great as in the southern part. It seems to be rather extraordinary that hon. gentlemen opposite should take the 1901 census as a standard and assume that as the white population has increased four times the increase has been evenly distributed throughout the whole of that country. I think from the figures which have been presented to this House it may be taken for granted that the population has not gone evenly through that country, because we find this peculiar circumstance that while from the figures which the right hon. Prime Minister gave to us it is found that the population of 1901 was 17 per cent greater in the northern part of the old province of Alberta than it was in the southern part. We find that the votes registered were 23 per cent greater in the southern part than they were in the northern part. How is this discrepancy which makes a change of nearly 40 per cent to be accounted for, unless the minister wishes to argue that a greater proportion of the new comers in the north than in the south have been aliens and are not yet naturalized.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I wish to draw the attention of the committee to some features of this amendment which has been proposed by the leader of the opposition. Our friends opposite have been trying to make us believe that they are so extremely just that no unfairness would be done if their amendment were carried. Let me point out a few facts and make a few comparisons. It is proposed by this amendment that that district of Alberta should have five local seats and the district of Edmonton six local seats. The vote cast last November in the Alberta district was 3,433 which for five seats would give an average of 686 votes to each. The vote cast last November in the district of Edmonton was 5,061 which for six local seats would give 843 each. We see that each of the local constituencies in Edmonton would have 843 votes while each of the Alberta local constituencies would have 686. This discrepancy will be more striking when you compare the rural constituencies of Alberta and Strathcona. The amendment proposes that Alberta should have five local constituencies and Strathcona six. The vote in Alberta last November was 3,432 or 686 for each of the five local constituencies. The vote in Strathcona was 5,871 or 978 votes for each of the six local constituencies, and yet that is the proposition of these gentlemen opposite who tell us they are so fair and so just that they would give each constituency its fair representation. I want to say to this committee that if there is any part of Alberta that is going to be underrepresented it is the constituency of Strathcona, for there is not a shadow of a doubt in the mind of anybody who knows the Northwest that it is by far the most populous district in the proposed provinces. Of that I can cite many proofs. Let us make another comparison. In the Alberta constituency there are 59 organized school districts and in Strathcona which I have the honour to represent there are 245. Each of the local constituencies in Alberta would have 12 school districts while each of the local constituencies in Strathcona would have 41.

Mr. LALOR. What is the average attendance in these school districts ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I do not know exactly.

Mr. LALOR. It is an important part of your argument to know that.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I know from the figures given last night by the Prime Minister that the aggregate school attendance north of Red Deer is greater than it is south of Red Deer.

Mr. LALOR. Is that merely an assertion or have you facts to base it on ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I base it on the official figures obtained by the Prime Minister from the commissioner of education for the Northwest Territories at Regina.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. Could the right hon. gentleman not ascertain the number of pupils attending these schools.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Which schools?

Mr. INGRAM. The schools the hon. gentleman (Mr. Peter Talbot) has referred to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was not asked to get that information. I was asked to get the school attendance north and south of Red Deer and I got it and gave the official figures.

Mr. INGRAM. Are these the schools the hon. gentleman (Mr. Peter Talbot) referred to ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The figures given by my hon. friend (Mr. Peter Talbot) are part of the figures I gave yesterday.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. It is all very well to say 'hear, hear,' but will any gentleman opposite from the Prime Minister down pretend to say that the figures as to the pupils attending schools in Alberta have been submitted to this House ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. North and south ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to see them ; let us have them again.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Peter Talbot) wait a moment until we get these figures.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Look at 'Hansard' and you will see them.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Let me draw the attention of the committee to some other facts. All of us from the west know that the southern part of Alberta is chiefly a ranching country and is thinly settled. The records of the Department of the Interior show that north of township 38 there are 51 ranching leases and south of township 38 there are 408 ranching leases, many of them covering very large areas—a ranch is a lease of land from the government to stock raisers. The area under lease north of township 38 is 11,520 acres ; the area under lease south of township 38 is 1,550,720. North of township 38 applications for leases are in for 54,400 acres ; south of township 38 applications are in for 5,514,560 acres, and the men who make applications for these leases base their claims upon the fact that this land is not agricultural land and is fit for nothing but pasture. Now, if this amendment were carried we would have south of Red Deer 14 constituencies and north of Red Deer 11 constituencies. We would have practically the distribution that was made by the territorial government in 1902. I maintain that that distribution was an unfair distribution, and I can prove it by the vote that was taken in these constituencies a month after the distribution was made. An evening or two ago I gave certain figures purporting to bear on that, but unfortunately there were some mistakes in these figures; fortunately for myself the mistakes were made on both sides of the account, and I would like to correct the figures now and give them as I have taken them from the records of the territorial government.

In 1902 the territorial government divided Alberta into fifteen constituencies. Nine of these were south of Red Deer and six north. Those south of Red Deer, with the vote that was given at the election immediately following, were as follows: Banff, 364; East Calgary, 784; West Calgary, 621; Cardston, 285; High River, 358; Innisfail, 433; Macleod, 676; Lethbridge, 489; Medicine Hat, 691 ; making a total vote for the nine constituencies of the south 4,701, or an average of 522. The six constituencies north of Red Deer were as follows: Edmonton, 1,105; St. Albert, 570; Victoria, 641; Strathcona, 645 ; Lacombe, 871 ; Wetaskiwin, no vote ; the member being elected by acclamation ; a total vote of 3,832, or an average of 766. If hon. gentlemen opposite will say that was a fair and just distribution, I maintain that it was not. I am aware that there was no motion of censure made in the legislative assembly of Regina in regard to that distribution, because that would result in no good, but the people in the north, of whom I was one, were certainly dissatisfied. Now, under the schedule which we have prepared, which I think I can prove to be eminently fair to all parties, the following would be the result. South of Red Deer there would be a rural vote of 8,380, and north of Red Deer, 8,220, an average for the 10 constituencies south of Red Deer of 838, and an average for the 10 constituencies north of Red Deer of 822, and the Red Deer constituency with 843. I maintain that the old part of Alberta is divided by the schedule as fairly as it can possibly be done. The only portion in regard to which any one could have reason to find fault is the added portion of the district of Athabaska. Now, I did not consent that Athabaska should be divided into two constituencies without giving the matter grave thought. I considered the immense area of that district. The proposed constituency of Athabaska will be nearly 150 miles one way and 300 miles the other way. During the past few years it has attracted an immense number of people. They may not stay there all the time, but they go and trade and make money there. Many of the wealthiest men in the northern part of Alberta have made their fortunes in that very portion of the country, and we all know that in the southwestern portion of Athabaska, in the valley of Peace River, there is a fertile country. I have talked with many men who have spent months and years in that locality, and they describe the grand prairie of the Peace River country as one of the most fertile spots in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the people who have traded there and made money are now residents of Alberta ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Some of those who made considerable fortunes up there are now residents of Edmonton, Calgary and other places in southern Alberta. I gave some information the other evening relating to that portion of the country. I believed at the time, and I believe yet, that the information was correct. I received it from a gentleman whom I have known for twelve or thirteen years, almost ever since I went to the Northwest Territories, a gentleman who has for several years traded along the Athabaska River and the Peace River, and who has seen the mills and the schools and the churches there.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman object to stating who the man is?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Certainly not. He is a member of one of the most prominent Conservative families in the valley of the St. Lawrence in Ontario. His name is F. W. Breden, a nephew of Lt.-Col. Breden, a very prominent Conservative. Mr. Breden gave me the following information respecting that portion of the country. The proposed constituency of Athabaska has twenty-four stores, thirteen churches, eight schools, four saw mills, three shingle mills, two planing mills, one flour mill, seven steamboats and three Northwest Mounted Police posts. The proposed Peace River constituency has eighteen stores, ten churches, six schools, four saw mills, five shingle mills, three planing mills, five flour mills (one of them a fifty-barrel roller mill and four stone mills), three steamboats, one Northwest Mounted Police post and three steam threshers.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. gentleman quite sure all these are to be found in the territories he speaks of, or any of them in British Columbia ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I have only the information Mr. Breden gave me. Of course, there is a population in British Columbia which is close to the Peace River, but I have never heard of any farming operations being carried on there. I have seen grain grown in the Peace River country of good quality

Mr. INGRAM. Nobody disputes that, but there is little of it.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. If there was so little grain there, they would not take into the locality three steam threshers.

Mr. INGRAM. What proof have you of the three steam threshers ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. My friend's word.

Mr. BARKER. The government reports do not show anything of that kind ; they show the opposite.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. We can hardly accept the government reports from that new country as being very complete. I know localities where, at the time of the census, there was not a single individual, and where there are now thriving towns and settlements.

Mr. BARKER. We have government reports up to 1903.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I know places where, in 1903, there was scarcely anybody, and now there are large settlements. Take the Barr colony, take Vagreville, go all through my constituency on the Canadian Northern Railway, take the proposed line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Wetaskiwin east, now laying rails on the first fifty miles, take also the line followed by the same company from Lacombe east, with rails laid for the first fifty miles—we have hundreds of settlers coming into that country a hundred miles ahead of the railway. There is the difference between our northern country and the southern country. In the southern country the railways precede settlement ; in the northern part, in the agricultural part of the country, settlers precede the railway.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman not know that the government reports prepared in 1904 include the whole of 1903, and are so minute that they give the actual names of the farmers ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I want to say that if any portion of the proposed province of Alberta is going to be under represented, it is the constituency that I have the honour to represent. That constituency is 200 miles wide and some 300 miles long, four railways are being built at the present time throughout its length, and it is known all over the country as the part which has the largest stretches of fertile land in the world. If we were to look forward at all and pay any attention to what we may expect in the future, we should have far more representation in the north than we are getting by this schedule.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Strathcona says that if there is any constituency that suffers by reason of insufficient representation, it is Strathcona.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I mean that if there is any portion of the province of Alberta that is not receiving as large a representation under this schedule as it should, it is certainly the district of Strathcona.

Mr. INGRAM. Now, the hon. gentleman has staked his word on that. Has the hon. gentleman no confidence in his friends in the southern part of the province of Alberta, and does he think that if he stated the case to them candidly they would not grant him more representation ? He has never given his friends in the south an opportunity to express themselves ; he has no faith in them. But what did the hon. gentleman do ? First, like a detective who was determined to fasten the crime on a suspected criminal, he says : We must have two constituencies in Athabaska, we must cut that in two. Next, like a detective with a supposed criminal, he had to make his schedules figure out 23 constituencies, giving two additional ones to the north ; and by that means he would get 13 north of Red Deer and 12 south, thus capturing the government seat. That is the whole thing—just like a detective fastening the crime on the criminal, innocent or guilty. For the last two years in this House hon. gentlemen on this side have been advocating local autonomy for the North-west Territories, which, however, the government refused on the ground of scarcity of population. But to-day we find them giving over-representation to a thinly populated district, and under-representation to a more populous district. The hon. gentleman has told us about a friend who furnished him with certain information with respect to what has been found in Athabaska and the Peace River. He does not know this of his own knowledge.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I did not say I did. I explained where I got it. I said I could not prove it, but believed it to be true.

Mr. INGRAM. As I said before, the detective is determined to fasten the crime on the supposed criminal, and is prepared to accept hearsay evidence that will prove his case.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Who else would a detective fasten the crime on but the criminal ?

Mr. INGRAM. Now, on this side of the House we want a little more substantial evidence than has been furnished. It has been stated that there were some 3,000 white settlers went into that country recently. Where is the record of that ? Here is an official document furnished to us by the government, that is better than any hearsay evidence, because the government must assume the responsibility for the documents they issue to parliament. I find, according to this map, the hon. gentleman has claimed more of the homestead entries for Battleford than that portion of Alberta is entitled to.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. But hon. gentlemen opposite do not give us any.

Mr. INGRAM. I have here the figures prepared by the hon. gentlemen on this side. Now the homestead entries I have here for 1902-3 north of township 38——

Mr. PETER TALBOT. But we want you to go back of 1902-3 and give all the homestead entries or none.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman want to go back to 1891 ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I want to go back to the time when the land officers were established, taking all the homestead entries granted in the province of Alberta. Now, there is the square thing.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Peter Talbot) will give us the entries up to 1903, we can add the rest.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I will gladly furnish the information I have. In the Edmonton land office there have been 18,773 homesteads up to 31st March, 1905.

Mr. INGRAM. Since when ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Since the Edmonton land office was established.

Mr. INGRAM. When was that ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I do not know exactly we are both in the same fix there. In Beaver Lake land office there were 436 entries. In Battleford land office we claim a certain portion of the total, say 1,243.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What proportion is that?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. One-fourth.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On what basis is that ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. On the proportion of the Battleford land district that extends into the present province of Alberta.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it based on the proportion of the surveyed townships ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. It is based on the part of the district that we know is settled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In area, or by surveyed townships ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. In area. I merely glanced at the map, and supposed it would be one quarter. I know it is all taken up. The government have had to appoint an inspector at Lloydminster.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is it taken up to the 4th meridian on the eastern boundary of the hon. gentleman's constituency ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. A good deal of it is. The settlement extends on both sides of the town of Lloydminster which is on the 4th initial meridian. Then, I have taken half the Red Deer entries, 4,630. This will make the total number of homestead entries north of Red Deer, 25,432. In the Calgary land office there were 12,278 homestead entries, in Lethbridge, 7,895; in Red Deer—taking half—4,630, a total of 24,803 south of Red Deer.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Did the hon. gentleman take anything out of the constituency of Edmonton by reason of part of it being east of the 4th meridian ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I did not.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman knows that there are some there.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I am not sure. I have a good map of my own constituency, but I did not bother with Edmonton. I did not count the spoiled and rejected ballots in the Edmonton district.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What has that to do with the homestead entries ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. It has to do with another question to which the hon. member for Calgary referred ?

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Peter Talbot) has spoken of homestead entries. Will he state what percentage of entries there were north of township 38 and south of township 38 outside of the entries he claimed should be counted for Battleford ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. The whole of Battleford land district is north of township 38.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman must know, if he desires to be fair, that a very small portion of Battleford is in Alberta, the greater part being in Saskatchewan.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. The number I took for Battleford was one-quarter of the whole, or 1,243.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the hon. gentleman think that fair ?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Just about. The land there is being all taken up : Lloydminster is on the line, and the land office is at the very centre of settlement; and we know that about 6,000 entries have been made in that locality.

Mr. INGRAM. Here is a map which shows the state of affairs, and which hon. gentlemen can see plainly. Now, admitting the hon. gentleman's argument that the homestead entries made in Alberta north of township 38 should be included—and that is quite fair—still this map shows that there is a very small portion of that district in Alberta to which that argument could apply.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. None of the Battleford land district is south of township 38.

Mr. INGRAM. If this map furnished by the government is a correct record, then I will stake my word that the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LAMONT. Will the hon. gentleman state that there is a single homestead entry in that portion of the Battleford district forming part of Strathcona electoral district south of township 38 ?

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman say there is not ?

Mr. LAMONT. I am asking the hon. gentleman if he will say there is.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman will not say there is a homestead entry even in Saskatchewan.

Mr. LAMONT. No, I cannot because even since last spring the settlers are pushing in there in great numbers.

Mr. INGRAM. According to this record there are homestead entries south of 38 on the Alberta side alone.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Are they in the Battleford land district ?

Mr. INGRAM. I will also make the statement that in the Battleford district there are if these buff figures are correct.

Mr. LAMONT. Are these homestead entries in the Strathcona electoral districts ? There are such entries immediately south of Battleford.

Mr. INGRAM. The Strathcona district is away off here opposite Red Deer on the Alberta side.

Mr. LAMONT. The point my hon. friend is making, if he is making a point at all, is that in the figures given by the member for Strathcona wherein he is only allowing a certain number, 1,000 and some odd homestead entries for that portion of the Battleford land district lying west of the boundary line are unfair because some of these homesteads may be south of township 38 and should be counted in the south, but he will not say that as a matter of fact any do lie south of township 38.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not understand that Strathcona is the question at all. As far as I am giving the figures here Red Deer is opposite the place I am speaking of and below township 38 there are the buff coloured townships.

Mr. SCOTT. What land district are the buff coloured townships in ?

Mr. INGRAM. In Battleford, that portion of Battleford that belongs to Alberta. The Minister of Justice read some figures to prove the population by the number of settlers. He said that from April 1, 1901, to July 1, 1901, there were 12,213, 1901-2, 44,020; and 1903-4, 73,957, making a total of 240,590 of population. Adding that all up with the population according to the census I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the country had something like 500,000 population at the first of July this year. I presume in making that estimate the Minister of Justice was counting all the so called 3,000 white settlers who had gone into the west for whom my hon. friends are figuring representation. That is not very satisfactory as far as the country in the Athabaska and Peace River is concerned. If the government are satisfied to give fair and adequate representation to Athabaska or to that portion of Athabaska which is cut in two to give representation in this provincial legislature, which we are agreed to there would be no difficulty as I understand in connection with this schedule, but the whole thing hinges on that and that is where the unfairness comes in and what hon. gentlemen on this side are complaining of.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. In making up the estimate of the vote cast in Strathcona, no doubt there has been included a considerable number of voters who do not now reside in Alberta. There are in the constituency of Strathcona alone, over 50 townships which now lie east to the 4th meridian, and these have not been eliminated from the total vote cast. If the vote was so much in that neighbourhood a large portion of it should be eliminated. The same thing applies to the constituency of Edmonton in the northeast part of that district. That is not now in the province of Alberta. I would ask the member for Strathcona (Mr. Peter Talbot) as he must have some local knowledge how far on an air line would the southern part of the constituency of Peace River or Athabaska be to the end of railway construction.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. I cannot give the information but I think you could tell from the map.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I figure it that the nearest route to Athabaska from the end of railway construction would be 125 miles, and to the northern limit of the riding it would be in the neighbourhood of 500 miles. In the constituency of Peace River these figures would be increased as they are in a nearly westerly direction from Edmonton to the end of railway construction. Comparisons have been made and I would like the hon. gentleman in these comparisons to point out any constituency which has representation in any of the local houses where there are no lines of communication nearer to them than upwards of 125 miles. That I think is sufficient evidence of the state of settlement in those districts. The hon. member for Strathcona has made the statement that in his constituency there is much more settlement and much more desirable farming land than in any other part of the Territories ; that the constituencies to the south are exclusively ranching constituencies.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Mainly.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The member for Alberta last night gave a comparison of the yield of the different grains per acre and it was found from that as has been shown in the geography published by the Department of the Interior that the yield in the south was greater per acre than in the north. It is generally accepted in this country that because originally the people in the southern and central part of Alberta preferred to devote their time to what was more profitable, the cattle industry, it was not a farming country, but if they would look to the records of the department they would find on either side of the city of Calgary, for instance, that great improvements have occurred, that grain is being grown and perhaps larger yields per acre can be shown than in any other part of the Northwest Territories. I have letters here which I will not take up the time of the committee reading to show exactly what these yields were, where the yields were and they were to be found on every side of the city of Calgary. The constituency of Calgary is as well adapted to farming as the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman opposite. That hon. gentleman also says that there is no thick settlement in the Calgary district, that the ranches consist of a very great area, but I would point out to him that in Lethbridge and Cardston there is a huge irrigation scheme known as the Galt Irrigation scheme or the Great Northwestern Irrigation scheme comprising 1,500,000 acres. The bulk of that land is all taken up. It is a thickly peopled portion of the country. Half a mile from the irrigation block there is the town of Raymond which last fall showed a voters' list of less than 200 and which to-day has a population of 2,800. Hon gentlemen opposite can show nothing in regard to northern constituencies which can compare with the irrigation block of the Great Northestern Company or which is capable of sustaining the same population within the same area. The same may also be said of the irrigation block of the Canadian Pacific Railway near Calgary which embraces 3,000,000 acres capable of sustaining a population of 120,000 people. Four hundred thousand acres of that have already been disposed of and half a million acres are to-day on the market. Therefore, I say that the argument which is made that there is no dense settlement in the south is not based upon facts. I referred some time ago to a map I had showing the thickly and sparsely settled townships in the southern and northerly parts of the country and it bears out what I say that there are more thickly settled townships in the southern part than in the northern part. The hon. gentleman refers to a gentleman who has given him certain information in regard to the conditions as they exist in the proposed district of Peace River—Mr. Breden, a member of the fur trading firm of Breden & Cornwall, I presume, who has every faith in the future of that country, but if I wanted to, which I do not, I could quote reports which do not bear out all the statements of Mr. Breden and which are known to hon. members of this House. He also speaks of Grand Prairie which has an area of 60 x 20 miles, not one quarter of the area of the Canadian Pacific Railway irrigation block in the neighbourhood of Calgary. Will there be a denser population in the next six months in the Grand Prairie region which is, I suppose, 200 or 250 miles from the end of railway construction or right along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in their irrigation block ? So I say the statements made by Mr. Breden are statements showing that he is too wrapped up in the future of that country to bear disinterested testimony. If it is such a grain producing country why has it not been developed ? I will not say anything detrimental to that country, but I will submit something which is in its favour. In 1876 grain which was grown at Fort Chippewyan at Athabaska Landing took first prize at the Philadelphia exhibition.

Mr. INGRAM. Grown in a garden.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I do not know where it was grown but there it was. You can go through that country and pick out certain spots like Fort Vermilion and Grand Prairie which may be more favourable to the cultivation of grain than other localities are. Letters can be produced showing that there are conflicting reports in regard to that country. I think it can be established from the paper owned and published by the hon. Minister of the Interior that more grain wheat and flour are brought into Edmonton then shipped out. The supply is not sufficient for the local demand. If this is such a grain growing country surely that would not be the case. I think that if the hon. gentleman will read his own paper, published about 1901 when the Canadian Northern was built across the river, he will find that a record was kept for some time which will bear out what I say. We have been told about the number of steamboats in that country, but we have asked for a return for some information in regard to these steamboats. No record is kept of them by the government. They have two flour mills and they have saw mills but all those things which we have heard about to-night constitute no reason why they should have double the representation according to population that is given to southern constituencies. Look at what has occurred in the south since the last local distribution was made. Take Cardston, for instance, at which a beet root sugar industry has been established capitalized at $400,000 not a dollar of which stock can be bought to-day, take Pincher with its coal mines at Frank and at Carbon, take the Bankside Coal Mining Company where over $1,000,000 was spent in coal mining last year and take the coal mines at Canmore. Are Athabaska and Peace River, with their two mills and one-tenth the population entitled to have four times the representation that Pincher Creek or any of these other constituencies are going to have ? I would not take up the time of the House making these statements if the statement had not been made on the other side which would indicate that all the development since that distribution was made in 1902 has been in the northern part of the country. I simply make these observations with the view of showing that population has been flowing very rapidly into the southern part of the country and with the view of showing that these statements of the hon. minister in regard to the condition of the industries of that country in 1902 do not apply to-day.

Mr. PERLEY. The hon. Minister of the Interior and the hon. member for Strathcona gave us some figures a little while ago which purported to show that the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition was unfair to the north, and amongst other things they quoted the votes cast at the last election. It seems to me that it is very unfair to bring up the number of votes cast in the southern part of Alberta when it is known perfectly well what the reason was last fall why there was a smaller percentage of votes cast in the southern part than there was in the north. That fact does not prove that the voters were not there. I propose to show, from the figures given by the right hon. leader of the government, that the division between the north and south proposed by the leader of the opposition is absolutely fair. Under his proposition there would be 12 constituencies south of township 34. Under his proposition this mysterious line, township 38, is changed to township 34 and each of the 12 constituencies south of township 34 would have, according to the figures given by the right hon. leader of the government, 10,153 votes cast at the last election. The northern part of township 34 comes almost in the middle of the proposed constituency of Innisfail, so that I have taken the figures for the constituencies south of the middle line of Innisfail, with half of Innisfail and that makes 10,153 votes cast at the last election. The leader of the opposition suggests that they should be given 12 seats, which would give an average of 846 for each. Under the amendment there will be 13 seats north of line 34 and at the last election these 13 seats cast 10,810 votes to which I have added 300 votes which would presumably have been cast in Athabaska had there been an election there, thus making a total of 11,110 votes cast north of township 34 which for the 13 seats would give an average of 855 votes for each. The leader of the opposition proposes to the government a plan by which there will be 12 seats south of township 34 in which 10,153 votes were cast at the last electiton or an average of 846, and 13 seats north of township 34 which on the basis of the vote of last election would have an average of 855 each. I do not think any man who has the honour of being a member of this House will say that is not an absolutely fair division. But take the number of names on the voters' lists which we still contend is the true basis and that basis shows that the suggestion of the leader of the opposition is very partial to the north, because on the voters' lists last autumn there were 15,287 names on the list south of township 34—I have put in one-half of Innisfail—and north of township 34 there were 14,663 names on the list to which I have added 342 votes which it is to be assumed would be in Athabaska according to the Prime Minister's figures, making a total of 15,005 names on the lists north of township 34. The leader of the opposition proposes to give south of township 34, 12 seats, each having an average of 1,274 names on the list, and north of 34, 13 seats each having an average of only 1,154 names on the list. The plan of the leader of the opposition would give to the north an average of 120 votes less per seat than in the south. That is proof positive that we are simply suggesting a plan that would give fair-play both to the north and to the south. Now, the government proposes to give seven seats in the extreme north each of which has an average of 892 names on the voters' lists, while they put seven seats in the south each of which has an average of 1,540 names on the list. As against that the leader of the opposition's plan is to have 12 seats south of township 34 with an average of 1,274 and 13 seats north of township 34 with an average of 1,154 on the list. These figures ought to show the justice of our plan to any independent man. I have endeavoured to make these calculations as carefully as possible from the figures given by the government, and I have shown that the plan proposed by the leader of the opposition can in no sense be said to favour the south, but on the contrary it is partial to the north to a slight extent because it gives one seat to Athabaska with an exceedingly small population.

Mr. SCOTT. Hon. gentlemen opposite in all the calculations they make apply a rule that never before was applied in Canada under similar circumstances. The calculations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) are based on a strict mathematical rule with regard to that new portion of Alberta which comprises fully one-half or more of the province. Was such a strict mathematical rule applied to Manitoba when she was brought into confederation ? No. Manitoba got four seats in this parliament when she had only a population of 17,000. Here in Athabaska we have a new portion of the province, unorganized, practically without the ordinary means of communication up to the present, but still a country where there has been considerable development already. To such a country hon. gentlemen opposite seek to apply this strict mathematical rule. What was done in 1887 when the Northwest Territories were given representation in this parliament ? Was the same mathematical rule applied ? No, certainly not. The Territories got four members in this parliament at a time when the mathematical rule probably would not have permitted of more than two. And so with British Columbia when she was brought into confederation. British Columbia got six representatives in this parliament when I dare say the strict application of the mathematical rule would not have permitted one-half of that number. It seems to me that our friends (Mr. Oliver and Mr. Talbot) who are contending for adequate representation for that portion of Athabaska which is to be within the new province, ought to be surprised at their own moderation. If representation is to be given at all, it is absurd to propose to give a lesser representation than is provided for in these schedules, or to say that the vast Athabaska district watered by the Athabaska river should have less than one member, and that the vast Peace River district watered by the Peace River should have less than one member.

Mr. PERLEY. When this parliament was giving federal representation to the Northwest Territories, it was dealing with its own business, and it could do what it liked. If Alberta were a province and she wished to give undue proportionate representation to any part of that province, it would be her own business. But this is not a matter for ourselves, it is a matter that has been forced upon us on account of the conditions existing, and I ask my hon. friend in all fairness whether in view of the contentions between the north and south we can proceed to make this division in any fairer way than by applying what he calls the mathematical rule as nearly as we can in reason.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the main question in this discussion ; is it the question of the capital of Alberta ?

Mr. PERLEY. That is not the main question with me ; my chief object is to try and make fair divisions. I am told there is a dispute as to whether the capital shall be north or south——

Mr. SCOTT. What other contentions could there be between north and south ; is not that the whole question ?

Mr. PERLEY. That may be so, but that is not a question which we should take sides on. If the province of Alberta had her own legislature and she chose to divide and give undue proportion to the northern area that is her own business exactly as it was our business, when in distributing the constituencies for the Dominion we chose to give the Northwest an undue proportion.

Mr. SCOTT. Not an undue proportion ; a fair proportion.

Mr. PERLEY. Well, perhaps I should have said a larger proportionate representation according to population than other parts of the country. It was our own business then, but in this case we are simply trying to set the machinery in motion for these new provinces, and I think it is beneath the dignity of this parliament to take sides against one part or the other part of these new provinces. The case cited by my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) is another matter altogether. In that case we were providing seats for our own parliament ; in this case we are legislating for provincial constituencies, and I submit that in all fairness as between the different sections of that country, and in order to make the people satisfied and happy, we ought as nearly as possible give every man the same power in voting at this first provincial election. Afterwards the province can divide the constituencies as it thinks fit, and I shall be quite content. I ask whether it is right that this parliament should apparently—and I cannot see any other object in it—take sides with the north as against the south in this matter.

Mr. SCOTT. No. I contend that this parliament is under full responsibility to do the fair thing in the premises, and I think that to do anything less for more than half the area of the province, the district of Athabaska, would not be doing the fair thing. My hon. friend admits that the whole matter hinges on the question of the capital. If he looks at the map, he will find that the centre of the province is 100 miles north of Edmonton. Yet our friends in the south are contending that they should have the privilege, while they compose perhaps nearly half the population of fixing the capital far south of the centre. Mainly because that is the question, I say it is the duty of this parliament to see that fair-play is granted to the northern portion of the province.

Mr. BARKER. Does my hon. friend contend that if the electorate of the province met to-day, they would grant two seats to Athabaska?

Mr. SCOTT. If the same rules of justice and fair-play prevailed in the legislature, they would.

Mr. BARKER. Does my hon. friend believe, without any ifs, that if the electorate of the proposed province met to-day, they would set apart two seats for Athabaska and twenty-three for the rest of the province?

Mr. SCOTT. I will tell my hon. friend what I do believe. If every man in Alberta were given the opportunity to vote on the question by a plebiscite, the capital would be placed at Edmonton.

Mr. BARKER. I am not talking about the capital. I am talking about the distribution of seats, and I ask the hon. gentleman, if the electorate of the proposed province met to-morrow, does he believe they would give two seats to Athabaska?

Mr. SCOTT. I think they would.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman took a long time to screw his courage up to that point. The argument is really delicious in the mouths of the hon. gentlemen on the other side—because perhaps 2,000 people, or at the outside estimate 5,000, are scattered over a portion of Athabaska, they should have two members, although that is at least four or five times the proportion assigned to other parts of the province.

Mr. SCOTT. That is not the whole argument.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is the main argument.

Mr. SCOTT. It is only half of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is the best half of it.

Mr. SCOTT. This distribution is to prevail for four years, and we believe that before the end of those four years there will be a vast population in that part of the territory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What reason is there to expect that it will develop more than the other parts?

Mr. SCOTT. Because there will be railroad construction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There will be no railroad construction before there will be a redistribution for a general election.

Mr. SCOTT. I venture to prophesy that when that redistribution takes place, the legislature will not take away these two seats if they are granted now. On the contrary, I venture to say that that representation will be increased.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not propose to match my hon. friend in prophesying; he is much better at that than I am. If it is a good argument that because there is a large territory there should be this extraordinary representation, how does it happen that the hon. gentleman has been so blind to that consideration during the last nine years? The Northwest Territories, with a small population, it is true, but with an area exceeding all the rest of the Dominion of Canada two or three times over, according to the argument now put forward, should have been represented in this House by fifty or sixty members instead of four from 1896 to 1900, and from 1900 to 1904 ; yet I never heard the hon. gentleman or any of the other members from the Northwest Territories advance any such argument during the time I have been in this House.

They seem, during those years, to have been strangely forgetful of this consideration, and of the rights of the people in this unorganized territory. We are now awake to the fact that this handful of people Arthabaska should be represented in the provincial parliament. Why during the past eight or nine years have they not been represented in either the Dominion parliament or the local legislature; and why have no murmurs ever been heard from any of these earnest and sincere gentlemen in the Northwest Territories. On a sudden the government and the members from the Northwest Territories have awakened to the extreme necessity of giving not only adequate representation but four times the adequate representation to the people of that district. It seems a remarkable circumstance, and rather gives colour to the idea that it was not after all a case of seeking a principle and applying it, but a case of applying a gerrymander to this province and endeavouring by hook or by crook to find a principle that would sustain it; and that principle has not been discovered up to the present time. I understand that the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Peter Talbot) made some observations, which I had not the pleasure of hearing, with regard to my proposal, indicating that it rather shocked his sense of proportion. Let me tell him that if he takes the names on the list, which I esteem to be the truest guide in this case, he will find that there are in Alberta, with Medicine Hat, which is really part of it, 1,222 names for each proposed constituency in Calgary, 1,325; in Strathcona, 1,464; and in Edmonton, 1,124. If you group them in two divisions, north and south, instead of four, you will find the average in the north 1,292. In no case is there an excess between the average and the highest or the lowest of more than 18 per cent. And yet the hon. gentleman, who is shocked at this disproportion, is perfectly infatuated with a proposal by which there shall be a difference of 300 per cent between the representation of this unorganized territory and the representation of the rest of the province. Can my hon. friend stand up under the burden of that disproportion when he is so much shocked at the others? I almost expect him to retire from the chamber when he realizes the full iniquity of his proposition. A difference of 10 or 15 per cent is dreadful, unheard of, shocking, and shows inconsistency, but a disproportion of 300 per cent is absolutely proper and right, and thoroughly consistent with a due regard to population—that, as I understand it, is the proposition of my hon. friend from Strathcona. It is about as logical and near the mark as any of the propositions which have been put forward on the other side of the House. Alberta, with Medicine Hat and Calgary, have a population of 14,687, and Strathcona and Edmonton, 14,263; or taking them by the votes cast, Alberta with Medicine Hat and Calgary have 10,209, and Strathcona and Edmonton, 11,028. These are ridiculous and absurd disproportions in the eyes of the hon. gentleman, but a representation of two members for 5,000 people at the outside, which is probably double the actual amount, as compared with a representation of one member for 10,000 throughout the rest of the province, is perfectly proper and desirable, and shows a due regard for every sense of proportion which my hon. friend so eminently possesses.

Mr. SCOTT. The memory of the hon. leader of the opposition is, I think, singularly short. He says he has never heard any person from the Northwest Territories before this time urge the principle which we urge at the present moment in regard to this northern district. In 1903, when it became the duty of this House to redistribute the representation throughout Canada, including the Northwest, we contended for this principle with success, and I am glad to say that the members of the opposition agreed with our proposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Can the hon. gentleman point out one line to that effect in the debates of this House?

Mr. SCOTT. I am pointing out that the figures of the census only entitled the Northwest Territories to six seats in this House. We contended that on this principle we ought to be treated specially, and we were treated specially.

Mr. LAKE. On the principle of prospective population, we would now be entitled to get twenty members.

Mr. SCOTT. It was partly on prospective population that we based our contention with regard to the Territories in 1903, and it is the same principle we ask the House now to apply with regard to Peace River and Athabaska.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was not the redistribution of 1903 rather upon the principle that we had full power with regard to the Northwest Territories, that we were not restricted in any way? Although the census of 1901 showed a population of only 159,000, nevertheless we knew that population had been pouring into that country faster than into any other part of Canada, and it was assumed that the population of that country was at that time about 250,000, and upon that basis it got ten members.

Mr. SCOTT. The principle upon which the House proceeded in that redistribution was the very principle for which we are contending now. The population there is increasing much faster than in any other portion of Canada. Of course, action could not have been taken if the House had not full discretion. The House has power to do in this case what it did in the case of the Northwest Territories two years ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman argue that this undeveloped district is increasing more rapidly than the developed district ?

Mr. SCOTT. I think that three or four years hence the population of those districts may be three-fold what it is to-day. We may reasonably expect that the population of these far-away districts may increase much faster than it can be expected to increase in the older portions of Alberta.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is entirely a matter of opinion, and the legislature can deal with those conditions when they arise. We are now dealing with present conditions, as we dealt with them in 1903, namely, that population had been pouring into the Northwest Territories for years more rapidly than into any other part of Canada ; and although the census showed a population of 159,000 in 1901, we had good grounds for believing that at that time there was a population of 250,000, which would entitle the Territories to the ten members they received. But as to any argument that the Northwest Territories were entitled to these because of their area, I never heard of it, and I do not think the hon. gentleman did.

Mr. SCOTT. Upon what principle were the four members granted to the Territories in 1887, and the four members to Manitoba in 1870, and six to British Columbia about the same time ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It certainly was not upon any principle of area.

Mr. SCOTT. It certainly was.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where does that appear ?

Mr. SCOTT. In all these cases the reason was partly area.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Can the hon. gentleman cite anything to show that ?

Mr. SCOTT. What other reason could there have been ? There was only 17,000 population in Manitoba in 1870.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Area was never taken into consideration in the distribution of 1903, from first to last, so far as I am aware. I was on that committee, and attended every meeting. I debated nearly every constituency in Ontario, every one in the Northwest, every one in British Columbia, some in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—I do not think I discussed any in Quebec, because that was settled by a conference between the Minister of Justice and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). But I do not think any member of that committee would venture the assertion that from first to last the question of area was ever taken into consideration. I never heard the argument until during the debate yesterday and to-day ; it would have been laughed at if it had been put forward.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend has failed to show the reasons which must have prevailed in the case of Manitoba in 1870, the Territories in 1887, and British Columbia when it was brought into the confederation. What other reasons prevailed, if area was not one ? There must have been some reason in addition to the claim upon population, because I repeat that Manitoba in 1870 had only 17,000, and it was given four seats, although it would scarcely have been entitled to one seat on the basis of population. What other calculation could have been made ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think, in the case of Manitoba, it could have been area, because there was one constituency in Ontario which was probably double the size of Manitoba at that time.

Mr. SCOTT. What other reason was there then ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, the hon. gentleman can refer to the debates. In British Columbia, if area had been taken into consideration, the representation would have been very much more than the representation from Prince Edward Island. British Columbia has an area of over 300,000 square miles and Prince Edward Island an area of about 2,000 square miles. And yet the representation was about equal in the two provinces.

Mr. SCOTT. British Columbia did not have half that population in 1870.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That may be, but those provinces were free to make their own bargain.

Mr. SCOTT. The Territories made no bargain in 1887.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. True, but surely he does not pretend that area was ever taken into consideration, otherwise the representation would have been enormous.

Mr. SCOTT. The committee is still in the dark about any other reason than area.

Mr. PERLEY. I think the representation to British Columbia was given as a condition to her entering the confederation.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes ; but the committee is still in the dark as to how the matter was arrived at if it was not on the basis of area as well as population. The hon. gentleman has not disproved my statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that I am obliged to take for granted everything the hon. gentleman says unless some one disproves it. He states something, and, unless some one disproves it, says it must be accepted as true, though it is a mere matter of opinion. Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) is attaching a very high value to his opinions. I have asked him to find anything in the debates or negotiations in any case which showed that area was taken into consideration. I say I do not recollect any such thing.

Mr. PATERSON. I fancy that would be found in the case of British Columbia. They had nothing like the population to warrant the number of representatives given to them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They came in on agreement, and we had not the settling of it. We had to make our bargain with British Columbia, as we did with Prince Edward Island. I think these are not apt illustrations.

Mr. INGRAM. I believe we are all agreed that there should be 25 representatives to each province. No one disputes that, so far as I know. The estimate of population up to the present time is 406,145 for the two provinces. The Minister of Justice estimates that on July 1, there will be 500,000, and we do not dispute that assumption. But the object of this provision, as has been stated, is to provide for the election of the first legislative assembly of the province. If after their election, they choose to redistribute these seats themselves, they can do so, and can dissolve and have an election immediately. Or they can effect the redistribution and have the election later. A redistribution for this House took place in 1893, but the election did not take place until 1896. We had another redistribution in 1902, and an election in 1904. In each case the redistribution took place on the population as it was known to be. But in this case hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to convince us that the redistribution should take account of the probable distribution of population for years hence.

Mr. SCOTT. Why was it that in the last redistribution for this House, the northern portion of this territory, particularly the eastern section, was given a much larger representation than would have been justified by a strict application of the census figures?

Mr. INGRAM. We did that for this parliament which we control. It was our right and our duty.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will permit me to tell him that it was by agreement with his leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) and it was in view of the larger population likely to go into that country on account of railway development.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) makes that assertion, I suppose he remembers about it; but I am bound to say that I do not think it was brought to my attention in that way.

Mr. SCOTT. The greater representation was given. What other reason could there have been for it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My recollection is that we had to delimit ten constituencies. Gentlemen from the Territories met together and they gave us these boundaries, and I understood it was granted as fair distribution of population.

Mr. SCOTT. There were Conservative representatives who agreed to these boundaries. On what principle could they have agreed except that which I have stated?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know they agreed. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) has spoken of my adherence to a principle. I say that it is new to me, that I cannot recall it at the moment.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose we did do that. We were doing something with regard to our own House. But we are not in the same condition in meeting a redistribution for the provincial House.

Mr. SCOTT. Surely, if we followed that principle then, we should follow it now?

Mr. INGRAM. But, we are distributing the seats for another legislature. If they do not like our work, they can redistribute and have another election.

Mr. SCOTT. People get tired of elections. They are tired of them in London.

Mr. PATERSON. Let them talk it out.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) takes matters very coolly these days. But I can remember only a few years ago, when all you had to do was to say 'redistribution' and the hon. gentleman would start talking in a voice that, if the door were open could be heard in Montreal, denouncing the wickedness of the Tory redistribution.

Mr. PATERSON. I was only suggesting that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) and the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) should take one of the committee rooms for their back-and-forth discussion and leave the rest of us to vote.

Mr. INGRAM. There was a time also when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) was strongly opposed to giving Indians the vote. He thinks now that the Indian is as good as a white man. He can hear redistribution discussed now with perfect good humour. With the hon. gentleman it depends on whose ox is gored. There was a time when he would not have been satisfied with the information that has been laid before the House in support of a redistribution.

Mr. PATERSON. I am quite satisfied.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, the hon. gentleman is satisfied, because it is not his ox that, is being gored. I can remember the time when he would not have justified this.

Mr. PATERSON. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) was not in the House at that time.

Mr. INGRAM. I have been in the House when the hon. gentleman has held forth on this subject very often. If there was anything in which the hon. gentleman really shone, it was in his denunciations of what he called the outrageous gerrymander of the Tory party. The hon. gentleman says I was not in the House. But it was not necessary to be in the House to hear him—I knew people in Montreal who heard him, when he was talking in this House. The hon. gentleman remembers that quite well. I heard him and heard of him in one rural constituency not very far away and not very long ago but he took very good care not to say anything about these schedules. He was not discussing the Autonomy Bill on that line but on another line altogether. He takes good care not to discuss the redistribution made by his own party in this House. The hon. gentleman has swallowed himself on provincial rights the same as he has on redistribution, and I hope my hon. friend will get up before this debate closes and give us his views.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is refreshing to hear the member for West Assiniboia and some of his colleagues when they cannot justify this redistribution on population, fall back on other grounds. The hon. member says that we should not allow that great Athabaska river to go unrepresented, that large area. Some other hon. gentlemen say we have so many grist mills, blacksmith shops, &c., and although they have not the population they want these industries represented and especially the great Athabaska river. They are willing to take population as a basis in the other parts, but in the north where they have not population they fall back on area, but if they are going to take area in the north and in the district of Athabaska in the new province of Alberta, why not apply the same principle in Saskatchewan? You are not giving any representation at all to the Athabaska portion of the new province of Saskatchewan, but two representatives to the Athabaska portion of Alberta. There is nothing fair about that. The minister states it has never been done before, the making of population the basis of redistribution. The hon. gentleman surely has not discarded the old-time doctrines of the Liberal party. I can recall three years ago when the Liberal party in Manitoba assembled in convention on the eve of a local election and passed a number of resolutions making their platform, and one of these was that in the distribution of seats for the local legislature particular importance should be attached to the good old Liberal doctrine of representation by population, and while the Minister of the Interior places little importance on that question and says it is only a subsidiary reason we have had no evidence as to the population in this portion of Athabaska. It has been stated by the Minister of the Interior that some one told him it was about 5,000. According to the last census we had 241 whites. This he would increase to 3,000 whites, and we still have not a scintilla of evidence to convince this side of the House, at any rate, that the population has increased to that extent. We are simply asked to take this gentleman's word that the population has increased to that extent. He cannot tell us how many half breeds are in the new district of Saskatchewan, and what proportion of the 3,000 whites in Athabaska is in each province. How then are we to adopt this schedule without more information? The minister seems to be satisfied, but we want some information when a glaring injustice is being perpetrated in giving this district two representatives. The minister has stated that if there was no question of capital there would not be any discussion on Athabaska. I will tell the premier that if Athabaska was situated in the southern portion of the district, with its large area, mills, &c., the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House would consider it simply outrageous if the members on this side suggested the idea of having one, let alone two, representatives in that district. It is the hon. gentlemen who have the capital in their minds and desire to fix it beyond recall by legislation. The hon. members say we should anticipate population and the hon. member for Assiniboia states that in the redistribution here in 1903 that was done in the committee on the Northwest Territories. I listened to a great deal of the evidence and never heard one suggestion to that effect. It is true they did not take the census of 1901, but they assumed an increase of population from the taking of the census to the making of the redistribution and that is the way they reached the representation and not on the estimated population for the next four years. We have no reason to anticipate the population of that country. If we had we must apply it all around. We are not supposing that the southern part of the district is going to stand still and all population flock into the north. Hon. gentlemen say that railways are to be built, but it is pointed out that the nearest point, Edmonton, will be 125 miles to the southern part of Athabaska except in the Peace River country. If population comes in there that is not there now and we are willing to assume the population at the present time as a basis for redistribution, but probably we will have in six months' time a session of the provincial legislature, and these settlers who are now coming in along the line of railway will not have a vote until the next election. The estimated population for the present is quite sufficient; that is all that has been considered in the past or that ought to be considered now. The objections urged to the redistribution are not confined to the members on this side. I shall quote from an editorial in a Liberal newspaper. This paper says:

> A present division is unfair, and the method adopted to decide upon the division is little short of iniquitous.

That is not the language of a member of parliament, but of a Liberal newspaper.

> Besides this the population has been increasing more rapidly in the south than in the north since the present territorial divisions were created. . . .
> The vote in the south district at the last election was very much larger than the vote in the north country, yet the greater representation is to be made in the north.

These are extracts to show that the opposition is not coming from the Conservative party alone but from the friends supporting the government. Even the hon. the leader of the government has admitted to-day in his argument that taking into consideration the population of Athabaska it is not entitled to any more than one representative at the most. He has admitted that, why does he not then take in the same area in connection with the other portions of the province? It is only when he comes into that portion of country where there is sufficient population, that he falls back on his argument of representing area and we never heard before that area was represented. I do not see why there should be any departure made on this occasion. The member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) in order to bolster up the division that the member for Edmonton is said to have prepared for the government, has said that Edmonton is not the centre of the province, but that the centre would be 150 miles north of Edmonton. Does he not see what position he is placing his own province in? Where is Regina, north or south of Calgary? It is practically on a line with it.

Mr. SCOTT. Do not worry. Regina will take care of itself.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If Edmonton which is far north of Regina is not within 150 miles of the centre of the province how can Regina be in the centre, and how is it entitled to be the capital of the province? The hon. gentleman should not be so discriminating when taking that into consideration. He is quite willing to have Regina as the capital of the new province of Saskatchewan because it is his own city though it is about as far north and no farther than the city of Calgary. If there was a redistrubution made by any Conservative government, if Mr. Whitney, in Ontario, or Mr. Roblin, in Manitoba, were to pass a redistribution Bill by which they should cut a town in two and put half in one district and half in another would there not be a howl from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House? We had evidence of that in the past. The right hon. leader of the government laid down sound basic principles by which he and his government were to be guided in the redistribution of 1903 one of which was adherence to municipal boundaries. If a municipality were to be divided it would be a departure from that principle, and now this Bill proposes that we shall not merely divide rural municipalities but that we shall cut a line through the centre of a town. Is the community of interest there preserved? Still these hon. gentlemen say there is nothing unfair in this at all and that it is perfectly acceptable. No doubt it is satisfactory to their friends who live in the northern part of the province. How can it be accepted by this parliament as a fair distribution? Who made it?—two gentlemen, one the Minister of the Interior who resides in Edmonton, the prospective capital, and the other who resides adjacent to that prospective capital, the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Peter Talbot). The hon. member for Strathcona has not been here very long and we have not had an opportunity of gauging his fairness, but his conduct during the last day or two in the House in connection with these schedules would lead us to form the opinion that he is a very apt pupil of the Minister of the Interior. We know how much dependence to place upon the independence of the Minister of the Interior. It is true that he came into this parliament as a so-called independent. He mighty soon lost that as was evidenced by his occupying a seat by accident and temporarily in the government in order to do which he had to swallow his independent convictions. He has produced in this parliament a schedule that he wishes the members of the opposition to take as fair and just to his political opponent. Well, if the hon. gentleman were as sure of its fairness to the south as well as to the north as he pretends to be, what reason would he have for objecting to have it transferred for adjudication by a commission composed of impartial men? If they would do justice, whatever the decision they might come to I am sure that the people in the north and the south would heartily coincide in adopting their decision. I think we have the best evidence that in his own heart of hearts the hon. gentleman does not believe that he is doing justice to the south and that he desires to force this measure through parliament by the aid of a subservient majority.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Prime Minister was to give us some information in regard to school attendance before we disposed of this amendment.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, it seems from the explanations which have been given to the committee that this is simply a question of whether Calgary or Edmonton shall be the capital of this new province. I want to place myself on record as not being influenced a particle by that consideration. If I had my way I would not make either of them the capital, but I think I would pick out Red Deer which seems to be half way between the two and put a dozen constituencies north and a dozen south. I think we have a precedent in the past history of this country when the capital of the Dominion was established in the little place called By-town and that is the reason we find ourselves here in Ottawa on the present occasion. I think that would settle the controversy. But, to my mind there are some other considerations. I think the political aspect of the question has had some little influence on hon. gentlemen opposite. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has stated that the only matter in controversy is the political capital. Well I would not like to dispute the statement of the right hon. gentleman because he probably knows more about what led up to the present arrangement than we members on this side of the House. If that was the main consideration in drawing up this schedule of the constituencies I think it would be in order for the right hon. gentleman to justify it. There are one or two anomalies which I would like to point out before this question is finally settled. It is stated by the hon. Minister of the Interior that they have given more representation to these large places in the north than to the constituencies in the south. I would point out that the constituency of Medicine Hat is much larger than the constituencies in the middle of the province. Take for instance such constituencies as Lacombe, Ponoka, Wetaskiwin and Leduc ; probably the whole four of them do not cover a greater area than the constituency of Medicine Hat. I presume that when the hon. gentleman went over these constituencies and found out that the very large ones required more representation, Medicine Hat was not overlooked. It is a very large constituency and requires more representation on that account. How was it adjusted ? They divided Peace River and Athabaska into two constituencies and got over the difficulty in that way. They got over the difficulty in regard to Medicine Hat by adding forty townships and giving it a population of nearly double that of other constituencies and three or four times the area. How can that be justified ? The question of Stony Plain has been referred to. There is a fringe of population down the side of this constituency and the adjoining constituencies could very easily have been extended a little westward so as to take in all the votes that there are in Stony Plain. To my mind there are three or four reasons why this Bill should not go through in its present shape. It is well known and I think it will be admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite that whatever the reason may be there is a good deal of feeling all over the Dominion of Canada, especially in the Protestant portions of this Dominion, over the distribution of this province as well as over the school clause which we have been discussing in this House for some months. I want to point out that it would have been wise, in my judgment, if the government, knowing the strained feeling there is in this country, to have left the delimitation of the boundaries of these constituencies to an impartial and independent tribunal, because the fact cannot be hidden that in making the adjustment we are making here we are giving to the people in the northern part of that country, including these half-breeds, a voting strength out of all proportion to what is given to the people elsewhere in the province. Figures were given to-day as to the census returns of that northern population taking in the whole of Athabaska which has now two members and they showed that in that country there were Roman Catholics 3,090, Anglicans 264, Presbyterians 23, and Methodists 2. There are people who will believe and who undoubtedly do believe that in that circumstance will be found one of the reasons for giving that additional voting strength to the northern district.

In order that there should be no excuse for any ill feeling over this matter, it would have been wise for this government to have done something to allay that feeling by leaving it to the judges to settle the boundaries. It has been said that there is no objection to the internal boundaries of these constituencies, but personally I may say that I have a decided objection. The question of the north or the south has no interest for me, but I find that some of these constituencies resemble the definition of a line, which is that it is length without breadth, and looking at these constituencies on the map it can be said that they are fearfully and wonderfully made. An impartial tribunal could have divided the constituencies in a manner fair to all concerned and allowed the new provinces to start out with that harmony and good feeling which should prevail. It is too bad that we should start them out with a red hot dispute over the question of the location of the capital. They have many other important matters to give their attention to, and this government could have easily prevented this controversy had they seen fit. Perhaps the selection of Red Deer would have settled the question as between Edmonton and Calgary, and removed the feeling of jealousy between the two. The government have had their way with regard to the school question, the number of provinces that ought to be created, and the disposition of the lands, and now they might accede to our contention and allow the judges to divide the constituencies.

Mr. HERRON. I draw attention once more to the fact that the districts of Lethbridge and Cardston are not properly represented in this proposed schedule. Cardston is one of the very thickly settled portions of that country. It is supplied by that great irrigating ditch company which will probably irrigate over half a million of acres of land. If there were any sure means of accurately ascertaining the population of that country it would be seen at once that the proposed representation is not fair to it. The case of Lethbridge is even worse. Take the town of Raymond which three years ago had not one person living in it, and which to-day has a population of over 3,000, with a sugar refinery having the most up to date plant in Canada and which is in operation for a large part of the year. Last election the town of Raymond with 3,000 population only cast 113 votes, which goes to show that the vote cast can be no basis for ascertaining the population. Lethbridge with its large mining and banking interests is one of the most prosperous towns in the west and is surrounded by a large fertile and farming district. I do not see why these great interests should be represented only by one member, when certain districts in the north not to be compared with it have the same representation. I think that Lethbridge probably has the greatest reason to complain of this proposed distribution. The majority of the people in that southern country think as I do on that question as is evidenced by expressions of opinion from boards of trade, and from the newspapers, not only the Conservative newspapers but the Liberal newspapers as well. Last evening there was a difference of opinion between the Minister of the Interior and myself with reference to the Board of Trade of Macleod. I was not very positive about it last night, because I have received so many protests from towns and villages in the southern country that I could not distinguish between them, but now I beg to read the following resolution which has been forwarded to me:

BOARD OF TRADE.

Macleod, Alta., June 8, 1905.

J. Herron, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I beg to bring before your attention the following resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of the Board of Trade of Macleod, held on June 6 :

That this board of trade express the opinion that the central and southern Alberta are unfairly represented in the schedule of the constituencies as proposed in the Autonomy Bill and place on record its belief that the question should be referred to an independent non-political tribunal.

I have the honour to remain,
Very truly yours,
GARNET P. GRANT,
Secretary Treasurer.

This all goes to show that the people in the southern country think on this question as I do. I do not think there can be any doubt as to the opinion of the people of Lethbridge. We will begin with the resolution unanimously passed by the Lethbridge Board of Trade ; and one of the gentlemen present who voted for this resolution denouncing the government for their action was a leading Liberal member of the legislative assembly, who has always worked late and early for the Liberal party, and who is at the present time nominated to represent that town in the legislative assembly. This paper says :

The letter appearing in this issue from the pen of Dr. DeVeber, M.L.A., explains itself, in fact it must be admitted that the doctor is an adept at explaining things. While we cannot agree with his interpretation of the impression he made at the board of trade meeting last week re the protest against the gerrymandering of Alberta, we cheerfully accept his explanation as to the impression he meant to convey. In any case, the essential point is that the doctor has now stated plainly that he will use his utmost endeavour to secure for the south its rightful voice in our provincial parliament.

This is an independent Liberal paper. I suppose the board of trade at Lethbridge would be about equally divided politically, and two of the most prominent Liberals voted for the resolution. The independent paper at Pincher Creek has expressed the same view. I think I have said sufficient to show that the people in the southern country, Liberals as well as Conservatives, are unanimous in the opinion that this Bill does not give them proper representation. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) this evening put forward the argument that that northern country was going to increase in the near future much faster than the south. I do not see on what ground he can believe that, with railways extending in all directions in the country extending southward from Edmonton, the people are going to leave that country, with fifty or perhaps a hundred millions of acres of vacant land, and travel to a country several hundred miles away from railways, and which it is difficult to get into. I think the hon. gentleman's argument is preposterous on the face of it. I do not think even the Minister of the Interior, who is a great advocate of that northern country, will say that it is going to increase more rapidly than the south.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do I understand that the Minister of Justice has some information which I asked for yesterday, and which the Prime Minister explained to-day could not then be given ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not taking much interest in this matter, I was not here, but I understood that the question was as to the school districts in Athabaska. I believe there is some information in the Department of the Interior on that subject, but it is only with respect to those schools which received grants. That is already included in the return which has been referred to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister thought he might be able to ascertain the number of pupils in the schools, distinguishing between the white, the half-breed and the Indian pupils, if there were any.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand from the gentleman here that it is impossible to get that, as there is no record kept of it. I will send over to the hon. gentleman a telegram that has been received.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am at liberty to read this ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (reading) :

Schools, Athabaska, and attendance last year : St. Bernard's Mission, 2 schools, 46 ; Isle à la Crosse, 23 ; Heart River, 25 ; Vermilion and Fort Vermilion, St. Henri and Irene, training school, 43 ; Fort Chippewan, 2 schools, 37 ; Lesser Slave Lake, 40.

There is no information as to what part of the telegram :

Eleven schools, 214 pupils. Above details only take into account the schools to which grants were made last year.

There is no information as to what schools, if any, exist outside of these ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. None that I know of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I trust that I am not putting the matter unfairly when I say that as we had no information from voters' lists, or as to the number of those who voted in this district, we might have had a little more information of this character. I would have thought that the government could easily have procured it. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior did not even take the trouble to put his information in writing. We had to depend upon a casual conversation. I would have thought that if reliance was intended to be placed upon the statement made by the gentleman from the west, the hon. minister might very well have got that gentleman to put it in writing, and to state the sources of his information, so that we would have had something definite before the House. Am I to understand from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that this is absolutely all the information we can get about the schools ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I know absolutely nothing about what has occurred. The telegram which I have just passed over to the hon. leader of the opposition was handed to me by a gentleman who received it from Mr. Cory. The nature of the telegram to which this is an answer I know nothing of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister suggested that we might make some progress by going into the schedules. I would not like to have the schedules disposed of to-night on account of the absence of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy), who was obliged to go to Toronto. I think we might dispose of the amendment and then take up the schedules, and I would like an opportunity of putting a few questions with regard to them so that the information may be available in a further debate on Monday. Of course I do not want the Minister of Justice to understand that we might not offer another amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course not.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived, on division.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Now I would like to know the area of division No. 1, Medicine Hat, and what proportion of rural and what proportion of town population there is in it ?

Mr. OLIVER. The area can be found by the map.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought perhaps the Minister of the Interior or some official had this information already tabulated.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, it might be more convenient for me to state exactly what I would like to know, so that the information may be prepared between this and Monday. If the hon. gentleman could get it completed before to-morrow night and let me have a copy of it, it would facilitate our work for Monday. I would like to know, first, the area of each electoral division ; second, the proportion of town population and rural population.

Mr. OLIVER. How would the hon. gentleman define a town?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have been using the terms 'town population' and 'rural population' in this debate I would be inclined to adopt the standard of the Minister of the Interior, if he would tell me what it is.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a village incorporation, a town incorporation and a city incorporation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the third place, I would like an estimate of the population of each constituency as on the 1st of July, 1905, with a statement so far as possible of the sources of information upon which estimate is based. I assume for the most part it will be the voting lists, and perhaps there may have been a census of some of these towns. If there are any other sources of information I would be much obliged if the hon. gentleman would indicate them. Now with regard to the Peace River district and the Athabaska district, which we have discussed pretty fully, what I have stated already applies to them as well. I would like, if possible, to get the information asked for yesterday from the Prime Minister with regard to schools. He had told us that the number of schools in this district, and I asked him to state the attendance at those schools, distinguishing if possible between white, half-breed and the Indian pupils. It may not be possible to get that information, but I think if the attempt had been made in time it could have been procured. Some other sources of information may be discovered between now and Monday. That information is important, as enabling us to come to a conclusion as to the population in that northern country. Those are all the items I think of at the moment. If anything should occur to me between now and an early hour in the morning, and I gave the hon. gentleman a reasonable time to prepare it, I trust he will permit me to communicate it to him so that we may have the information on Monday.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid it is not possible to get information as to the respective number of white, half-breed and Indian pupils in the schools, because they are conducted on an entirely different basis from the schools in the organized Territories. But if it is possible to make the distinction and get the figures, we will do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If we could get the total number of pupils, would it be fair to adopt the proportions of the whole population ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am inclined to think it would be. But that is only a guess.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might afford a basis for estimate at least?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. Are the schools in that district other than those that get the government grants?

Mr. OLIVER. This being an unorganized territory, there is no authority exercised over any schools except those for which money is paid. But I believe there are others.

Mr. LAKE. Would the minister get from the Census Department the best figures they have of the population of Athabaska showing where it is as between the east and west?

Mr. OLIVER. I have already furnished the fullest information I could get from the Census Bureau in regard to the Alberta part of Athabaska. I understand the hon. members to ask now for the Saskatchewan part of Athabaska.

Mr. LAKE. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And might I suggest that to save time the same information might be prepared with regard to the constituencies in Saskatchewan which we will have to consider shortly.

Mr. OLIVER. If I put both provinces in hand at once I fear it will cause delay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean that the minister should get ready for it.

Mr. OLIVER. I will do so.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is to supply figures showing the population of cities and towns. But there are incorporated villages also. Will they be given?

Mr. OLIVER. The understanding with the leader of the opposition is that cities and towns will be counted as urban population, while the villages will be counted with the rural population.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I pointed out some time ago that the census figures showing the population of Edmonton and Calgary extended into the country for miles and not for the cities alone.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only give the information I get from the census bureau, and I took it for granted that when the census shows the population of the towns of Edmonton and Calgary it means for those towns and not for the surrounding country. If a part of the surrounding country is taken in it is a very limited area.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is mistaken.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the area ?

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I will look it up.

Mr. INGRAM. While the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. Wright) is looking that up, I would like to urge the point to which I have just called attention. For instance take Pincher Creek. In 1901, according to the census it had a population of 837. But we are told that since then it has very considerably increased. It seems to me it would be fairer to include incorporated villages over say 500.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite willing to take in all incorporated villages as town population. But, as between the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and myself, it was agreed the other way. Because, with us, when a place grows to any size at all, it is called a town, and sports a mayor and council and all the trimmings.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I will point out that according to the census report Calgary and Edmonton include a large portion of territory outside the towns proper. Calgary West, for instance, 63,000 acres.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the electoral district of Calgary.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. There are no other figures in the census report except what I have stated.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, I am afraid I shall be unable to give the figures called for. I can only give the best I can get.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish to burden the returns too much, but could we have the same information with regard to the schools for each electoral division ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is not available here; it is to be procured at Regina. Of course, we could try to get it. We would wire and might get the information by Monday. Of course, we have no authority over those people.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it available there in the form of returns?

Mr. OLIVER. In the records of the Educational Department. There would be no records, I suppose, showing the number of schools by electoral districts, but by taking a map they might be able to work it out for our information. It would take time and it would impose upon them labour which we have no right to demand. But I am willing to ask for it.

Mr. LAKE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) get the same information for the towns in Saskatchewan? It will save time.

Mr. OLIVER. At the request of the leader of the opposition I am going to put in hand the information with regard to Saskatchewan that has been asked for in regard to Alberta.

Mr. BARKER. The minister said there was a much larger number of schools in one part of the country than in the other. Could he say whether in the case of the larger number these were general schools? For instance, were they Galician or Doukhobor schools, or were they all general schools, as I believe they are in the south?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. All public schools except two Roman Catholic schools in my constituency.

Mr. BARKER. Are there no separate schools of the foreign races?

Mr. PETER TALBOT. No, we have none of those.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the figures with regard to schools give us the number of pupils attending or the number enrolled?

Mr. OLIVER. That was read last night.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I can give the abstract of that now. According to the information received yesterday it would appear that there are north of township 38, 8,834 on the school rolls, and to the south, 8,553. There are in Edmonton 1,330 children and in Calgary 1,593 on the rolls.

Mr. LAKE. Are Edmonton and Calgary in addition to the other figures, or are they included in the other figures ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Edmonton is included in the number of school children in the north and Calgary in the south. I gave the special figures for these two because they were contained in the telegram.

Mr. INGRAM. And Red Deer also, 333.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do these include the Indian schools ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That does not include the Indian schools ; the Indian schools are not under the control of the local authorities : these are the schools organized under the school ordinances of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. INGRAM. This does not include the Indian children ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Indian children come under the Indian Department.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON moved that the following Bills from the Senate be placed on the order paper for second reading.

Bill (No. 177) respecting certain patents of David Thomas Owen.

Bill (No. 178) respecting the Canada Central Railway Company.

Bill (No. 179) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.

Bill (No. 182) respecting the Sterling Bank of Canada.

Bill (No. 183) respecting a certain patent of the Metal Volatilization Company ; and Bill (No. 185) for the relief of Isaac Pitblado.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is the same motion that was declared out of order today, is it not ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am informed it is now in order. The motion has been prepared by the clerk of the House in accordance with the rules.

Mr. INGRAM. Is Bill (No. 177) not the one we had before the Banking and Commerce Committee ? It is the number, but it does not seem to be the same Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand these Bills were read a first time in due course and referred to the Standing Orders Committee. This is simply to put them in proper order for the second reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When they are read a first time, why do you require a motion to put them on the paper ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. It is because there is no regulation providing that a Bill read the first time and referred to the Standing Orders Committee can be placed on the order paper for second reading, because there is no order of the House to that effect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is as to Bills that come from the Senate.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to Bills that come from the Senate there are two proceedings. Some of these Bills have been referred to the Standing Orders Committee before they come from the Senate. When they have been so referred to the Standing Orders Committee, they stand for second reading after they pass the first reading here. If the petitions have not been referred to the Standing Orders Committee the Bills are read the first time and referred to the Standing Orders Committee, and there is no provision in the rules by which these Bills stand for second reading. Then a motion has to be placed on the order paper for second reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no doubt that is all right, only I cannot say I quite understand it, and I think it is rather absurd. Still as it is according to the rules of the House we had better go ahead.

Mr. INGRAM. We considered in the Banking and Commerce Committee to-day Bill (No. 177.)

Mr. FIELDING. We did not have a Bill from the Senate of that number.

Mr. INGRAM. You cannot have two Bills of the same number.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. After private business on Monday, you resume this Bill, I suppose ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will continue the Autonomy Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 26, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE EMBARGO ON CANADIAN CATTLE.

Mr. McINTYRE presented the sixth report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization as follows:

The committee having had under consideration the question of the embargo on cattle from Canada entering the ports of the United Kingdom, and after a careful review of all the circumstances connected with the subject, past and present, the committee are unanimously confirmed in the opinion that the said embargo is most unfair and unjust, as it is a publication to the world at large that the Board of Agriculture considers it unsafe to permit Canadian cattle to come in contact with the herds in the United Kingdom, whereas it is a well known fact that in no other country than Canada can herds be found so free from disease.

That the scheduling of Canada by the imperial government is considered, from a financial point of view, a serious loss to the Canadian cattle trade, the farmers and the stock raisers of the Dominion.

That the action of the imperial government is not justified by the facts of the case, it having been clearly proved that the disease of pleuropneumonia has never existed in Canadian herds.

That in view of such conditions the removal of Canada from the schedule would be but an act of justice and should be strenuously pressed.

That as the Dominion is a stock raising country and capable of producing a large and constant supply of beef cattle, it is considered important to the empire that no obstructions or difficulties should be placed in the way of Canadian cattle breeders which would tend to decrease the food supply within the empire.

Whereas the committee realize that an injustice is being done to the people of Canada through the British embargo on Canadian cattle being maintained, and believe that it would be in the best interests of the farming industry of the Dominion to have a deputation consisting of the Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion, and the Minister of Agriculture of each province in the Dominion wait upon His Majesty's government of the United Kingdom, giving as much publicity to their proceedings as possible, to lay before said government the equity of the request to have the imperial Act authorizing the said embargo repealed.

And the committee further recommend that the government of the different provinces be invited to co-operate by sending the Ministers of Agriculture for their several provinces, to act in conjunction with the Minister of Agriculture from the Dominion, in presenting the case, in behalf of Canada, and that action be taken in the premises at the earliest possible date.

(Sgd.) P. H. McKENZIE,
Acting Chairman.

House of Commons,
June 26th, 1905.

RICHELIEU BRIDGE AT SOREL.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to ask the Minister of Railways if he will kindly bring down the report of the Minister of Railways and the Order in Council founded thereon, of date January 16th, 1900, with also the report of the chief engineer, upon which the minister's report was made ? That is in relation to the payment made on the bridge at Sorel ; and if the minister will bring down the papers, I propose to lay the case before the House at the earliest possible opportunity.

DOMINION LANDS—THE NIXON CASE.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire, in accordance with a note I wrote to the Minister of the Interior, to draw the attention of the House to the case of Nixon. On some newspaper and private information I asked the Minister of the Interior to make a statement with reference to the Nixon case. This the minister did about the middle of May, and then I asked that the papers in connection with the matter, especially the examination made by Mr. Leach in the case, should be brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend intend to discuss that matter ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will he move the adjournment ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. I propose now to lay the case before the House as it appears to me in the light of such investigation as we have had and of the minister's statement. Nixon was an officer in the Department of the Interior employed at Macleod as a land agent and caretaker of the immigration building, and, to a certain extent, a land guide. It appears from the statement made by the minister that Nixon was appointed in 1899 to that sub-agency, and that nothing was known of the irregularities of the agency until some time in March of the present year, and that Nixon himself knew nothing of anything being wrong in his accounts till the 15th of March ; that then the examination was ordered and took place. I find then that when the attention of the government was brought to it, a telegram was sent to Mr. Leach to the effect that the department was advised that possible serious financial default had taken place in the sub-agent's office at Macleod. Mr. Leach was told that he should investigate promptly, communicating first with the agent at Lethbridge, and to acknowledge his instructions by wire. On the 24th of March, Leach, telegraphing from Brandon, acknowledges the preceding day's telegram and informs the department that he is leaving for Macleod on the evening of that date. It appears that he gave notice to Mr. Martin, the agent at Lethbridge, who met him on the 27th of March at the Macleod agency. The report of Mr. Leach follows, and I will read some extracts from that report. It begins by saying :

Acting upon the instructions given in the above quoted telegram I communicated with Mr. J. W. Martin, agent of the Dominion lands at Lethbridge, instructing him to join me at Macleod on Monday morning, the 27th of March, with books and papers from his office required in the investigation. Together we spent the whole day and most of the night at Macleod, and the following day at Lethbridge collecting such information as was obtainable re the position of the sub-agency.

All of one day and most of one night was spent at Macleod, and then they went on to Lethbridge.

From the sub-agent we learned, that he had trusted the work entirely to his son, and kept little or no supervision of it. The son had left Macleod about the 15th of March, and at the time I was there his whereabouts was unknown.

Now, I have no hesitation at all in saying that this report of the investigation by Mr. Leach is not at all thorough or efficient. It is the very opposite of showing a thorough examination or of being an efficient report upon a case of this kind.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who is Mr. Leach ?

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, an officer of the department at Winnipeg, not at all an enemy of hon. gentlemen opposite or of the Minister of the Interior, as indeed Mr. Nixon is not. That is about all he has to say with reference to that. An inquiry that comes in here and is very pertinent is, how long had the son been in his father's office ? The father took charge of the office in 1899 ; what was the age of the son when he first went into his father's office ? It would have occurred, I think, to almost any person making an examination at such a distance from his minister, that that would be very pertinent information, to be followed of course by other information gathered later. He says that the son had left Macleod about the 15th of March, and that at the time he was there his whereabouts was unknown. He does not say that he took any steps whatever to inquire as to the whereabouts of the son. The whole onus of this bad business was laid by the father on the son, and yet the investigator who was sent out there to investigate does not show by his report that he took the least pains to find where the real criminal was at that time. Just at this point, I have information that I believe to be reliable that the son was never farther away than Frank, that he was in Frank only for three or four days, and that the rest of the time he was and has been and is in Macleod. The investigator goes on to say :

The books were in very bad shape. The sub-agent's receipt book stubs prior to November 18 could not be found.

November 18 of what year he does not say, but I take it from the context that it was the year 1904. Does this mean, then, as it seems it must, that from the time Nixon took charge of the office in 1899 until November, 1904, all the stubs in his receipt books were missing and had been destroyed ? That is the only inference you can draw from the statement of the agent. It goes on :

A blotter was kept, professedly for the entering of transactions at the time of their occurrence, and the regular register book of the office.

These are the only two books that Mr. Leach mentions ; yet in the next sentence he goes on to say :

In each of these books we found entries which were in neither of the others—

That would mean that there were other books than the two. Mr. Leach does not point out what were the books. In fact, he says there were but two books, the blotter and the register book of the office, but the context shows that there must have been three, for his next phrase is :

—but from the three we compiled a statement which, while it cannot be said to be positively accurate, is complete so far as we could procure information at the time.

It is of interest to know what this other book was. Now, what had been brought out ?

Irrespective of the transaction in lots of Macleod town site, the following is a list of the irregularities:

(1.) Receipt book, with stubs used prior to November 18, 1904, missing.

That is, all the receipt books with stubs, used from the time Mr. Nixon went into the office in 1899 up to the 18th of November, 1904, were missing—had been destroyed or lost.

(2.) Counterfoils for November, 1904, and February, 1905, also counterfoil No. 23,614 for December 3, missing.

(3.) stub of receipt No. 33,670 torn out of the receipt book and missing, supposed to be for $80, paid by M. McNaught on account of some land, and should be dated about February 16.

Mr. Leach does not in this case state in what year.

(4.) Very often there was a great difference between the dates moneys were received at sub-agency, and dates of remittance to the Dominion lands office, Lethbridge, the moneys being held by the sub-agent.

Now, any one would think that Mr. Leach, in investigating this matter, and trying to get information to send to his department, would have made up a list and sent it with his report, showing the dates the money was received and the dates of remittance ; yet he does not do it, either carelessly, or because he had determined not to do it. What he should have given the minister, what the minister ought to have had, and what we require, is a list of these moneys, the dates of their reception, and the dates of their remittance to the head office at Lethbridge or to the department at Ottawa.

(5.) On several applications for homestead entries, the dates have been altered, presumably to suit the dates of making remittance. This also applies to dates upon receipt of counterfoils.

In these cases it was essential that he should have sent a list of the names and the dates. He has not done this, and I submit that we have not the proper information to show the trend of this transaction. How many cases there were we do not know ; neither do we know the dates upon them nor the names with reference to which the alterations were made.

(6.) No application could be found for the following, and for which entry fees had been paid to the sub-agent,—one of December 3, from Burdette, and one of February 22 from Barber.

The year has not been given, though I presume it is the year 1904-5. With reference to Burdette, this has been made certain by a future statement. With reference to Barber, it is uncertain.

(7.) Timber requisitions could not be found for the following, who paid the fees.

Then follow the names of seven men who had paid fees, and the requisitions of whom could be found in the office.

(8.) The following moneys were received, for which apparently no receipts were issued.

Three sums of $10, 25 cents and 25 cents are mentioned. The year is not given in these cases either.

(9.) For the sum of $100 reported by the agent of Dominion lands, Lethbridge, March 18, 1905, on account of one Clifton, there was no entry to show that it had been remitted direct to the department.

But the departmental receipt of 20th March on form 42 was accepted by me as evidence of the remittance.

That probably turned out to be all right.

(10.) Items of moneys received by the sub-agent and not noted in his register.

Then follows seven items for sums of $10 each with the exception of one for $25. These were received by the sub-agents, but not entered in the register, but that is not all.

Nothing entered after the 20th of January.

He does not state whether there were any transactions after the 20th of January, but nothing was entered after that date.

(11.) The following is a list of moneys received by Sub-agent Nixon, other than the town site lots at Macleod, which were not remitted to the agent of lands, Lethbridge, from the 1st of November, 1904, to the 27th of March, 1905 (though no stubs are to be found for dates between the 31st of October and 18th of November).

Then follows a list of the moneys running over a page, amounting in all to $329.05.

(12.) Re the lots, Macleod townsite, for which Sub-agent Nixon had received payment. For these there are no data whatever in the records of the sub-agency, but I procured sufficient evidence to convince me that the following payments had been made, which were not remitted to the agent of Dominion lands, Lethbridge.

Brought forward	$329 05
April 11th, G. F. Beere, lot 13, N. 17, W. 5th avenue..	30 00
1902.
M. J. Gallagher, lot 10 and 11, S. 27th, W. 5th avenue..	80 00
1902.
J. Struthers, lot 20, N. 20, W. 5th avenue	30 00
1904.
Jane Hoge, lot 7, S. 24, W. 5th avenue..	30 00
Total shortage..	499 05

Which, added to the preceding sums, show a total shortage, so far as they have found out, of $499.05. Will you please note, Mr. Speaker, what is involved in these several counts against the sub-agent. I do not think it is a trifle, though it may appear so to some. When an agent, a trusted servant of the government, either loses or destroys all the receipt books or stubs of the same from 1899 down to the 18th of November, 1904, what does that mean? Gross carelessness is the least that can be said with reference to it, but when in connection with that you have the known sequestration of funds, it points to more than gross carelessness, and nothing but actual evidence can clear the man from a charge of something weightier than that of gross carelessness. That is established by Mr. Leach. Counterfoils in the second count are missing. The same remarks apply to those. Stubs torn out, which shows obstinacy and persistence in destroying evidence, which otherwise might incriminate him one way or another. That is worse than gross carelessness, and comes very close to malevolent injury done.

Very often there was a great difference between the dates moneys were received at the Scott agency and the dates of remittance at the Dominion lands office.

That is certainly worse than gross carelessness. It means that he took public money and covered up the facts by rearranging the dates, by making the dates of remittance or dates of acceptance different from what they were in order to cover up the track of taking money. But some thing still worse than this takes place.

5. On several applications for homestead entries, the dates have been altered, presumably to suit the date of making remittance.

That, I should think, comes as close to forgery as possible. A man makes his declaration and pays his money at the time. Then the remittance should have gone. But somebody in the office alters the date of application—forges a part of the document sent by another person than himself. For what purpose? Evidently to cover up the concealment or the abstraction of money. This also applies to dates upon the receipts or counterfoils. No applications could be found, for a number of applications had been either lost or more presumably destroyed. Many others were found for which no receipts had been issued. Consequently those paying had nothing to show. Then with regard to certain sums of money, amounting to about $329 in all, it is shown that they had been received and had not been remitted at all, the dates of reception run from November, 1904, up to the time that the investigation commenced in March. The 12th count is different from the others, because it shows that Nixon himself, as early as 1901, by what was found out—to say nothing of what was not found out—and from that date had been receiving money and had given his own personal receipts therefor—not his son's—his own receipts and had not paid these moneys in, but had converted them to his own use. One sum runs from 1901 to 1905; two from 1902 to 1905, and the third and fourth from 1904 to 1905—amounting in all to $120, making a total shortage discovered of $499.05.

Now we come to the next part of the report:

I may say that Sub-agent Nixon appears to be badly broken up over the unfortunate 'mix-up' in his office.

You will notice a family likeness between this and the Thessalon post office matter. There also the agent was badly broken up.

He readily assisted in every way in providing information and through friends made up the whole amount of the shortage of $499.05, which was handed to Mr. J. W. Martin, agent of Dominion lands, Lethbridge. Mr. Nixon also handed me his resignation, which herewith please find inclosed. He claims there is $200 due him for four months' salary.

That induces the question: Does the Interior Department not pay its officers who are in receipt of monthly salaries at the end of each month? If so, why was not Nixon's salary paid from November, December, January and February? It is not only that Nixon claimed it, but there is also here a letter from the secretary of the Department saying that four months' salary were due to Nixon. Why did the department keep back four months' salary from Nixon if they had not suspected that something was wrong in the office? It would seem as if there was some trouble and that his salary had not been paid pending the clearing up of the trouble. The family likeness is not exhausted by the agent being broken up. It appears in another feature. Mr. Nixon very generously throws the whole guilt of the transaction on his boy, who was in his office, he affirms who did all the crooked work and who left about the time that it threatened to come out. Mr. Leach goes on to say that he ordered Mr. Martin, the agent at Lethbridge, to take the books back with him to Lethbridge and to go on with the investigation so far as he could by the aid of the books.

Now, these are about all the facts brought out—with this exception: Nixon sent in his resignation; that resignation was, I presume, accepted by the department, but, within a very few days—or a very few weeks, in fact—Nixon was appointed to office of emolument in the Interior Department at a pay of $75 per month, in which office he is at present, I presume, and which pay he is now drawing.

The town lot cases are peculiar. It seems that, at a certain time the government proposed to hand over to the town of Macleod certain of the town lots. Among the lots thus handed over by the department were certain lots which had been paid for to Nixon in 1901, 1902 and 1904, which the purchasers had taken possession of and which they had improved ; but when they applied for their deeds, they found that there was no record of their receipt or title, and that, in fact, the title had been passed over to the town, the department having no knowledge of the lots having been purchased, that knowledge having been made impossible by the fact that Nixon had pocketed the money and had not reported the transaction. Now, I have said that Nixon's own signature appears on these receipts. This fact is attested by the affidavits of persons who bought town lots and who say in their affidavits that they hold the receipt of Sub-agent Nixon in their possession. In one case, this also is to be noticed: A firm of lawyers, Messrs. Campbell & Ballachey, acted for Mr. Conolly in purchasing a lot from Jane Hoge. The patent had not been issued to Mrs. Hoge, but she produced a receipt in full for the purchase price of the lot, signed by Nixon as Dominion lands agent. The lawyer states that he saw Nixon at the time, and adds :

—he assured us that Mr. Conolly was perfectly safe in taking a transfer of the land from Mrs. Hoge; in fact he stated that he did not think it would be necessary to do so, as he would communicate with the department and have the patent issued in Mr. Conolly's name. However, we did take a transfer from Mrs. Hoge, and sent it to the registry office for registration. Upon the receipt of the patent by the registrar, some months afterwards, the transfer was returned to us with a letter from the registrar, stating that the patent for this lot was issued in the name of the town. Since then we have made application to the town council, and they demand the full price for the lot, which is $150.

Another gentleman who paid for his lot, and who adorned and beautified it, finds that he will have to pay the city $400 for it if he wishes a title. Consequently these parties come in and demand from the department that they be held harmless and that their title be confirmed to them at the expense of the Crown. Now, the statement made by the minister included two paragraphs which I am going to note. He says :

Some time in the month of March, 1905, information was received by the department that there were some irregularities in the conduct of the office at Macleod. The inspector of agencies was immediately wired to investigate and report.

One would gather from these words that this was the first time the department had heard there was any trouble in the sub-agency at Macleod. Then, the question arises : How comes it that the salary of the agent has been held back for the months of November, December, January and February? The minister goes on to say :

Mr. Nixon's son, who had been in charge of the office, left for parts unknown on the 15th March. This was the first intimation Mr. Nixon had that anything was wrong with his accounts.

Now, how could the minister make that statement? It was not a statement as to when the knowledge of this matter first came to the department; but the minister makes the statement on his own responsibility that the first intimation that Nixon had was on the 15th of March, when his son left the office for parts unknown. The evidence that Mr. Leach presents shows that as early as 1901, Nixon had received money, had kept the money, had not reported it and had not registered the title for which the money was paid in the registry office. Yet, the minister steps into the breach on behalf of his friend and worker, Nixon, and absolves him of all knowledge that anything was wrong in that office until the 15th of March last. How could the minister have done it? And how foolish the minister must appear now, when Mr. Leach's own statement, fully corroborated, shows that, as early as 1901, Nixon had commenced abstracting and keeping money which belonged to the government. Was it a case of one friend being over-zealous on behalf of another? It seems to me it would have been the better for the minister not to have shown too much eagerness in defending Nixon until the completion of the investigation which he had ordered. He ordered an investigation into the charge and then, at the very moment when his own man is hurrying west to make investigation of the charges which had been made, he proclaims Nixon positively innocent.

Well, but that is not the worst of it. Both Nixon and the minister himself lay the blame on Nixon's son. Now, in the first place, I take this ground—that it is no exoneration of Nixon—who was appointed land agent, not the son, if he allowed an irresponsible boy to go into his office, steal money, destroy the evidence, forge names, and carry on mischief generally. Are you going to set a code of morals with respect to public employment that a man is not responsible for the people he puts into his office to act as his clerks and to represent himself? Is that the code of morals that is to be established by this government for the guidance of the hundreds and thousands of employees of this country? But even that is too thin to wash. Why did not Mr. Leach tell us when that boy entered that office? Was the boy anything more than a mere stripling in 1899 ? Is he of age yet ? May be the minister knows. If he does not know, he should find out. If the boy is of age and has stolen the public money, then justice should be done. Are you going to allow thieves in your departments, and when they are found out, just because they happen to skip away a few miles from the place where they committed a theft, are you not going to follow them and punish them ? Is that what you propose to teach to the people of this country ? If the boy was of age he is liable to punishment, and should be punished ; if he was not of age, it is as mean in this case of Mr. Nixon and the minister as it was in the case of the Thessalon postmaster and the Postmaster General, to try and take the tender children of these officials and lay the guilt upon them, and send them as scapegoats into the desert to bear the penalty. But, Sir, it will be found out if this boy was not of age, it will be found out if he was not long in office, it will be found out if an investigation is held, that Mr. Nixon had been stealing for years, and knows that he has, and the people who live in Macleod know that he has been. Now then what is the minister going to do about it ? Is he going to adopt this principle and carry it out, and is the government going to back him up in it, that a man who proves recreant to his trust, either by appointing those who abuse the trust, or worse still, as in this case, by abusing the trust himself then denying it and attempting to throw the guilt upon his little boy, that such a man is to go unpunished ? Is the minister going to establish this code of ethics ? Is this the class of people out of which you are going to get your employees for the Dominion government ? That is the whole question which is before this House. It is the same as the Jackson case, smaller in one sense, magnified in another. There you took a man who was publicly branded, and you made him your $3,000 agent to represent Canada in the old country, you keep him there yet,—so bad a case that when the Hon. G. W. Ross was attacked for it in the last elections in the province of Ontario, his only answer was : Well, gentlemen, I did not appoint him to any office. Yet we found some one ready to do the dirty work in this House. No more disreputable job has there ever been in the history of politics than that, unless it be this, and the Thessalon post office cases. Here you have it again. The minister is behind it, evidently holding up to this country and to the officials of this country, already sufficiently strong partisans, this principle : Be sufficiently bold in your transactions, in one sense, and be sufficiently mean to throw the guilt upon your own children when you are found out, and as long as you do that you are safe, we will appoint you to a fresh office and keep you there.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure the House has been very far from edified by the efforts of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) to expose to the gaze of parliament and the country the misfortunes of a man and his family who, whatever their shortcomings may be, however guilty he may be of having supported the Liberal party in the past, whatever sin he may have committed in that particular, is not entitled to be alluded to by that hon. gentleman, an ex-Minister of Finance of this Dominion, as a thief, under the cloak of his membership in this House. If this man is a thief, the courts are open and the process of law are available to the hon. member for Toronto. I say it is a cowardly act to accuse a man of theft under the privileges of a member of parliament. The same is true in regard to the whole procedure. If there is criminal guilt the courts are established for the punishment of that guilt.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the hon. gentleman come in?

Mr. OLIVER. The government of this country comes in as administering its public affairs, not as administering justice. The courts are there, the means of justice are there ; and I say it is an outrageous thing that such charges should be made here on the floor of this House under the privileges of parliament, charges that, if they are true, should have been made under process of law long ago. Is it charged upon the Department of the Interior, or upon this occasion, that every act of every man who does now, or ever has worked for the government, should be subject to our investigation, that we should prosecute every crime he has committed ? If some official steals a ham, is it for us to set the machinery of the law in motion ? The law is established for the punishment of officials here, there and everywhere.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister cannot do any better than that, I should advise him to leave the defence to some one else who has more policy, at least.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no policy about it, there is nothing but justice ; and I ask for a humble citizen of the district of Alberta that his name and the misfortunes of his family shall not be paraded before this country, under the protection of the irresponsibility of members of parliament, which they would not dare to do on their responsibility as individuals, and subject themselves to a prosecution before the court. Otherwise, why has this charge laid so long unpunished, when the mounted police and the courts of law are available in that country ?

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman at what date he learned from his officers that Mr. Nixon, or Mr. Nixon's son, had stolen public money, and if nothing has been up to him from that time till now as a matter of justice ? Does he take the ground that as a minister he has no right to see that his officers are punished when they steal public money, that he must not enter a private prosecution against them ? Does he take that ground ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not. The hon. gentleman does not enter a private prosecution in a criminal case. What is he talking about? There is a responsibility on every citizen to see that the law is enforced and when he has taken so much trouble to trump up a case like this and bring it before the public, he might surely take enough trouble——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to protest against the charge of having trumped up a case. I read before this House the report of Mr. Leach, who was appointed by the minister himself to make the investigation. It is the report of Mr. Leach which states all that I have stated. I am not trumping up any charge. The minister had better attack Mr. Leach in defence of his favourite.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Leach states, as I understand it, that Mr. Nixon did not steal public money.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who did?

Mr. OLIVER. That Mr. Nixon's son made away with the public money, and that Mr. Nixon replaced that money to the last cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the son enter the service?

Mr. OLIVER. The son never entered the service. My hon. friend is altogether misrepresenting the position.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did he enter the office?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know when he entered the office, it is not a concern of the department when he entered the office. That is a matter belonging to the land agent. The son is not an official of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the minister this question? I want to know what his position is. Some of these moneys were abstracted in 1901, as appears by the report of the hon. gentleman who made the investigation. Is it not of some importance at what time the son went into the office? Suppose the son went into the office in 1902, some of these moneys were abstracted in 1901, would not that be an important circumstance?

Mr. OLIVER. That certainly would be an important circumstance if the member for North Toronto had the courage and decency to cause a prosecution to be entered in the court and get this matter brought up for trial before a court, instead of taking up the time of this House in discussing something that should be discussed before the courts, rather than before this House.

Mr. INGRAM. Is not the administration of justice in the Territories under the Dominion, is not Mr. Mackenzie, who was the defeated candidate, the Crown prosecutor in this district, and did not Mr. Mackenzie refuse to serve on this committee because the reputation and character of Mr. Mackenzie were such as not to permit him to do so?

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will tell me what on earth that has to do with this case I will answer him.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. minister to say that this was a matter we should leave to the courts.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, I understand the administration of justice is under the Dominion officials and I am asking the hon. gentleman why it was that this case was not proceeded with?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman's ideas of the administration of justice in this country and mine are altogether different. There was a time when the administration of justice was under political control but that time has gone by; the administration of justice to-day is independent of political control and any man can get justice independently of any interference on the part of this government or of any of its departments. I want to explain the position of a sub-land agent and to show that that position has been misrepresented by the hon. member for North Toronto. He has referred to this sub-land agent, Nixon, as though he were a government official. He was doing government work but he was not a government official in the ordinary sense of the word. These sub-land agents are merely public conveniences for the acceptance of homestead entries and all the ordinary business that may be transacted by a land agent and the money that is received is transmitted to the land agent. The system is merely a convenience for the public and not a convenience for the government. The sub-land agent is therefore the convenience for the public. When this system was first established the sub-land agent was paid by commissions on his collections and not by salary. It was thought that was not a good way and a small salary was paid in consideration of the work done by the sub-land agent. Now, the sub-land agent is not under any rules or restrictions by this department in any way, shape or form. He is supposed to be engaged in other business, he is not supposed to sacrifice all his time for the stipend he receives from the Dominion government, he may be an insurance agent, a real estate agent, or in any other line of business, but for the public convenience the government asks him to receive applications for homesteads, timber permits and hay permits and to communicate them to the land office. The idea that the hon. member for North Toronto desires to convey is that Nixon was a government official and that he was under the control of the government as though he were the hired servant of the government. As a matter of fact, he was not in that position at all, and we had no more control over his office in so far as he conducted government business than we had over his office in so far as he conducted private business except in so far as the results of his work were concerned. As far as I am aware, as soon as it was discovered that there was a shortage in that office, an investigation was held. According to the statement of the gentleman who made that investigation, Nixon gave every facility for the investigation and as soon as the shortage was found, Mr. Nixon paid it to the last cent. Whatever duty there might have been in that matter beyond that I am not prepared to say, but I say that the first duty of the government in the matter was to secure the return of the money so that nobody should be out of his money, and when that was done the question had to be considered as to what further proceedings should be taken. As to the allegation that Nixon was stealing money from some time in 1901 until the present time, that is that he had received money which he had not accounted for, I can only say that Nixon certainly should not have been a Dominion sub-land agent, he should not have been anywhere else than within the walls of a lunatic asylum if he actually stole that money at that time intending to keep it and to carry on his business in that way, because it must in the nature of things necessarily have been discovered and he must necessarily therefore have been subject to punishment.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he gets another office.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that if he had the intention of stealing that money he must have been a kleptomaniac to steal so little and then not protect himself in any way.

Mr. FOSTER. That is ingenious.

Mr. OLIVER. When the officer goes there to investigate, instead of Nixon trying to cover up the matter, the report of that official shows that he endeavoured to give every bit of information that it was possible to give.

Mr. FOSTER. By destroying every stub from the 18th November, 1904.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. The fact that these stubs were destroyed did not prevent Mr. Leach from finding out certain facts in regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman is simply assuming that this man is a government official in the ordinary sense of the term and that we had control over his office as we would have over an ordinary land office. Both of these propositions are contrary to the fact. We have no more right to say what he shall or shall not do in his office than we have to control the actions of any other private citizen.

Mr. FOSTER. Nor hold him responsible.

Mr. OLIVER. We did hold him responsible and he has made restitution, so I understand, of the mony that has been found short. That it seems to me was the first duty of the government in the matter. Beyond that, if Nixon is liable to criminal prosecution, it is for those who consider him guilty in the matter to institute the prosecution. As far as the information which came to the department is concerned the department did not consider Nixon guilty and therefore did not institute any prosecution.

Mr. FOSTER. I should judge that.

Mr. OLIVER. You naturally and very properly would.

Mr. FOSTER. Very properly from what I know of the department.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman takes his replies from his seat in that way as either wit or argument, but to my mind it would be better if he would place his arguments before the House when he has an opportunity instead of interfering when the other side of the question is being placed before the House. In conclusion all I have to say is that the department has nothing to conceal on behalf of Nixon or any other man now or hereafter, that an investigation was held, that a report was received, that the money was refunded, and that it was the belief of the department that Nixon was not morally guilty and therefore no prosecution was entered against him. To those who think he was morally guilty the resources of the courts and the law are open to take such course as they may please, and I think that so long as we can show that there was a necessity for the land office at Macleod, that public business was transacted for the convenience of the public and that nobody lost a cent by these transactions we have done our duty. When Mr. Nixon resigned we thought that perhaps it would be as well not to reopen the office at Macleod. Possibly there was no necessity for it but we got very urgent demands from the people of Macleod asking for the opening again in that place of the very same kind of a land office. They are quite willing to take their chances on the transactions of the sub-land agent's office just as they did before.

If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will look over the record of the government of which he was a member he will have no difficulty in finding instances that were a very much greater trespass on the public right than this one was. So far as my knowledge of Mr. Nixon goes, I say without hesitation that I have every sympathy for him in the unfortunate position in which he is placed. I have no hesitation in saying that, although he is a very humble individual, living at a long distance from here and is not in the constituency I have the honour to represent at the present time. Furthermore, I wish it to be understood that however much our hon. friends on the other side consider that it is a criminal act to cast a vote for a Liberal candidate, I for one do not consider it a criminal act nor an act which would debar a man from holding any public position to which he may be called.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg leave to call my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) to order. He has no right to say that any hon. gentleman on this side of the House—confining it to myself he has no right to include me amongst such—considers it a criminal act to vote for the Liberal party. That statement of itself discredits the minister; it leaves him away down in the bottom of his seat. No one on this side ever made a statement like that; he knows that no one ever made a statement like that. Does he consider it proper and right and dignified to utter such a misrepresentation? If the hon. gentleman does himself justice he will rise in his seat and make an humble apology to members on this side of the House for making such a statement; one which is entirely unwarranted.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) wishes to be understood that penalizing a certain class of people is not dealing with them as criminals, then his position is correct. His insinuation, as I understand it, is, that men shall not be considered as suitable for public service because they have voted for the Liberal party or the Liberal government. I say he is putting a penalty upon such men and is thereby putting them in the criminal class——

Mr. FOSTER. I never made, nor have I ever heard any man on this side of the House make a statement such as that put into my mouth by the Minister of the Interior. If he knows that at any time I have made such a statement, or if he knows of any other man here who has made such a statement, it is up to him to give that person's name, the date and the place. If he cannot do so let him rise and make his second apology. It is an honest man and a brave man who will apologize when he finds he has made a bald misrepresentation. Now, either put up or shut up.

Mr. OLIVER. I am within the judgment of this House that to-day the hon. gentleman standing in his place used names and made arguments which absolutely substantiate the statements I have made.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. gentleman to cite a name or a statement that substantiates either of the two statements he has made. Why, I think the Minister of the Interior has lost his head.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of the Interior said he gave the other side of this case; if that is so then there is only one side to the case and that is the side put forward by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). The Minister of the Interior ventured to suggest that Mr. Nixon is not an official of the government in the ordinary sense; whatever that may mean. Mr. Nixon received these moneys for the government, he was appointed by the government, he was under the control of the government as is evidenced by the fact that the Minister of the Interior sent a departmental official to investigate the office. And yet the Minister says Mr. Nixon is not under the control of the government in any way, although his office could be investigated and was investigated by an officer sent from the city of Winnipeg for that purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. His accounts were investigated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, his accounts were investigated; is that it? Then Nixon was not under the control of the government but his accounts were under the control of the government. That is a most delicious distinction. That is the ministers view of the situation, is it? Well, if his accounts were under the control of the government, how does it happen that his books and accounts are missing for three or four years and the government have taken no steps about it? That is a pertinent question. If the minister, instead of pumping up a fictitious indignation which he does not feel, and instead of indeavouring to cast abuse on my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would give us some real information with regard to the matter he would be better discharging his duty. According to the minister this is not a matter for the people of this country; it is a matter personal to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). The moneys of the government have been taken; the moneys of the government have been withheld, the returns have been falsified and altered; all this has been going on for a long time, and in the end it does not concern the government or the country at all, but it is a matter to be dealt with by the hon. member for North Toronto. That is the statement of the government of this country delivered to this parliament and to the people of Canada through the mouth of the Minister of the Interior. Comment is not necessary. The Minister of the Interior goes further and he says this is a mere family affair, and he suggests that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is guilty of the greatest possible indelicacy in pressing upon public attention this purely family matter. Let us see. As the hon. member (Mr. Foster) has said, it is the same old story of the child of a public official upon whom is cast the burden of certain defalcations. The minister told us that it was of no concern to the people of this country as to the date when the son of Mr. Nixon went into that office. I asked him if he did not consider it of some importance in view of the fact that these defalcations, according to the official report, extend as far back as April, 1901, when the public money of this country was abstracted. These defalcations are now all charged upon the son, and yet the government of the country through the Minister of the Interior states that the date at which the son undertook to perform his duties is absolutely beside the question and not relevant.

Has not the minister read the report on file in his own department. Listen to what his own officials state; I read from the fourth clause of the report:—

> Very often there was a great difference between the dates the moneys were received at sub-agency and dates of remittance to the Dominion lands' office, Lethbridge, the moneys being held by the sub-agent.

Not held by the son or by any one else, but by the sub-agent himself, who is distinctly charged with the offence in the report of this official. Further on:—

> No applications could be found for the following and for which entry fees had been paid to the sub-agent.

Then he goes on to enumerate the items to which he refers. Further on he speaks of the lots of Macleod town site for which 'sub-agent Nixon had received payment.' Not the son of sub-agent Nixon. The son has been mentioned before but he is not mentioned here. Further on he reports that the fact that sub-agent Nixon had received these payments is substantiated by the statutory declaration of one of the persons who paid money to him. Yet this is a family affair according to the Minister of the Interior, and if any remedy is to be sought, it is the duty of some private citizen and not of the government, to protect the people of this country against the defalcations of this man which extended over a number of years. Let us look at one of these declarations, that of G. F. Beere, which was declared at Macleod on the 29th of March last:

> I, Gerald Frederick Beere, of the town of Macleod, in Alberta, do solemnly declare that on the 11th April, 1901, I paid to sub-agent Nixon $30 on account of purchase of lot 13-N, 17th street, West 5th Avenue, Macleod town site.

Not to a son of sub-agent Nixon, but to sub-agent Nixon himself. So far as I understand this report, this is one of the sums which was withheld by this man, and of which no account was sent to the proper authorities. Here is another declaration:

> I, William Henry Struthers, of the town of Macleod, in Alberta, do solemnly declare that I am a brother of J. A. Struthers, who holds sub-agent Nixon's receipt for $30 paid on account of lot 30-N, 20th street, West 5th Av., Macleod town site, dated 2nd June, 1902.

No reference to the son in this solemn declaration. You will bear in mind that these declarations were brought forward and presented to this gentleman in pursuance of inquiries which he himself had made; and we have every reason to believe that if the circumstances were as the Minister of the Interior, without any justification whatever, would have us believe, the fact would have been stated in these declarations, that the money had been paid, not to sub-agent Nixon, but to his son. Under these circumstances, what has transpired? This man is permitted to resign his position, with this investigation, trifling and formal as it was, proving his guilt on the face of the documents themselves, and not out of the mouth of my hon. friend from North Toronto. The son, on whom an attempt is made to cast the guilt, goes away for a few days, and the official making the investigation returns. What transpires then? My hon. friend from North Toronto gave a little too much latitude to the government in the case he made. This report was sent to the government on the 3rd of April, 1905. It would be received, I suppose, about the 7th of April. On the 19th of the same month this man Nixon was appointed to a position in the immigration department at $25 a month, and on the 4th of the following May, about two weeks afterwards, his salary was raised to $75 per month, $25 more per month than the salary he had previously enjoyed. In one sense it does seem to be a little family affair between this gentleman and my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, and in that sense it is a Liberal family affair, by which a man, who, on the report of an official of the department, has been guilty of defalcation, has been rewarded by promotion. Even if you could cut down the words of this report so as to make it appear that all these sums of money were abstracted by his son without his father's knowledge, still you have the case of a man guilty of the utmost possible negligence, a negligence which no one could conceive possible on the part of a public officer. Can any one of us suppose that a man in a public office could have unknowingly permitted his son to carry on for four years this system of stealing money, altering applications, and concealing the true condition of affairs from the officers of the government? It is incredible; but if it were possible to believe it, it would be the best possible argument for keeping this man out of the service for all time to come. Under the circumstances, the defence made by the Minister of the Interior is, from the standpoint of the government, the weakest and the most unfortunate that I think I have ever heard in this House since I have had the honour of being a member of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe, and, in saying so, I place myself in the judgment of the House, that the manner in which this case has been approached by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and by the hon. leader of the opposition is warranted by the facts which have been disclosed. There have been serious errors in the accounts of this man Nixon while he was sub-land agent at Macleod. The errors may have been going on for years. At all events, they were not of a very serious character in themselves, if they are to be judged by the amount, though errors of that kind are always serious, and can never be treated lightly. The amount in which the accounts of this man were short was only $500. As the case has been exposed by the hon. member for North Toronto, the government had reason to suspect that the accounts of this man were not altogether satisfactory. They ordered an investigation, an investigation was held by Mr. Leach and Mr. Martin, the land agent under whom this man Nixon was acting at Macleod. It appears from the report of that investigation that this man Nixon never offered the slightest opposition to it, but that, on the contrary, so far as he could, he gave his services in endeavouring to find out what was the real condition of his affairs. As soon as the fact was ascertained that his accounts were $500 short, he made up the cash and made good the loss to the country. If I understood aright the statement which was read by my hon. friend from North Toronto, it appears that Nixon after all has not a bad record in the community in which he lived, because his friends immediately came to his assistance and helped him to make up the shortage. Under such circumstances, the question arises whether or not Nixon is guilty of blame. Naturally he is guilty of blame; naturally he must be held responsible until the facts are brought out which can explain the shortage. I rather gathered from the report made by Mr. Leach and Mr. Martin that, so far as their information went, the blame was very much due to a son of Mr. Nixon, who took charge of the office, and who profited, so far as profit was made, from the shortage in the accounts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They did not say that. These are their words:

> From the sub-agent we learned that he had trusted the work entirely to his son, and kept little or no supervision of it. The son had left Macleod about the 15th March, and at the time I was there his whereabouts was unknown.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I interject a word? Mr. Nixon received $50 a month salary as sub-agent and I think $25 a month as land guide, and his services as land guide necessarily took him away from the office a great deal, and somebody had to transact the business in his place.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that even the correction which was interjected by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, really makes any change at all in the statement I made myself. The investigators accepted the statement of Mr. Nixon that he was obliged to trust his son with the management of the office, and it does not seem extraordinary that he should have been. According to my hon. colleague, the Minister of the Interior, this man was occupied in two different capacities, one of which kept him frequently away from his office, and it is not unnatural to suppose that the son was the guilty party. Somebody must have looked after the office while Nixon was away, and therefore the two investigators naturally came to the conclusion that the excuse he offered was a very reasonable one under the circumstances. If it be true that the son was in charge of the office and transacted the business for his father, the father is certainly responsible. That responsibility he at once accepted and made good the shortage in the accounts. But apart from that, there is the moral responsibility which always attaches to the abstraction of money. If Nixon was employed in a double capacity, and if one of them required him to be absent from his office and he had to employ a sub-agent, has he not acquitted himself to the full extent of his responsibility when he made good the amount deficient? Or must he be adjudged himself a criminal because his sub-agent acted in a manner which cannot be defended. That is the only question before the House. Was this man Nixon dishonest? Was he himself guilty of abstraction of money? But if the party who did the work in his absence and accepted the money did not account for it, would any one say that Nixon was morally guilty and should be branded as dishonest?

Mr. LANCASTER. Was the sub-agent prosecuted by the government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall come to that presently. The question now is whether or not the government or Nixon are to be held morally responsible for an act committed by the sub-agent.

Mr. FOSTER. Part of these moneys was received in 1901 by Nixon himself according to the affidavits of the men. Certain of those moneys which he did not return, which he made no motion to return, were received by himself. Will he charge that also to the small boy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was coming to that. My hon. friend threw a sneer at Nixon for putting the blame on his son, and says that this is like the case of Thessalon. It may be that the cases are parallel; but if they are, neither the postmaster at Thessalon nor Nixon can be held morally responsible. The question put by my hon. friend shows that he is convinced that under such circumstances, whether at Thessalon or at Macleod, the father cannot be held responsible for the amount abstracted by some one who acted with his permission and in whom perhaps he placed too much confidence. In the case at Thessalon as at Macleod it may have been that the father was guilty of having to much confidence in his off-spring. It may be that Nixon was to blame in this respect, that he should have exercised a closer supervision over his son. That no doubt is true; but looking at the case in its worst light, supposing that he did not exercise the supervision he should have done, after all he showed only the weakness of a father, but it does not allow that he himself was dishonest. That is what we have to look at now, and it is that charge of dishonesty against the father which excited the ire and indignation of the Minister of the Interior. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Foster) went altogether too far when he branded this man at once as a thief, when he charged him not only by implication but by the very word itself. He had no reason or warrant to use such an expression. and if my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior resented it, I think the hon. member for Toronto in a cooler moment will admit that he gave good cause for resentment. The man was not himself the guilty party except to the extent that he had to answer for his son. But my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that in 1901, Nixon received money for some town lots and pocketed it. If that be the case, there is no excuse for him.

Mr. FOSTER. Read the report.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have heard it read by my hon. friend and take it as explained by him.

Mr. FOSTER. It is there before you.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will take my hon. friend's reading of it; and I do not believe, if I did read it, I could make it more severe against Nixon. No doubt my hon. friend has taken from it all that could reflect against Nixon, and I am taking the report from my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish you would always do that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I did, I would often be wrong. I prefer my own judgment to his, coming from his smooth and bitter tongue. It appears that receipts for money were signed by Nixon himself. Is my hon. friend prepared to say that because the receipts were signed by Nixon himself he actually received the money, especially since it is in evidence that this office was frequently managed by his son?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not in evidence at all that the office was managed by Nixon's son at that time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nor is it in evidence that it was managed by Nixon himself. My hon. friend has been too precipitate on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, as I shall show him. There is evidence in the report of the commissioners, that Nixon had a boy to manage the office. We have no other statement, no other evidence of that than the admission of Nixon himself, but it was accepted as proved by the commissioners; and so far as we know, there is no reason to doubt that it was.

Mr. FOSTER. There was only one commissioner.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understood that Mr. Martin was assisting. Well, let us say there was only one, we must be very particular.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is necessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will be very particular in this as in every case. There was only one commissioner, although I thought there were two. Because, although there was Mr. Leach, who was acting-commissioner, if I understand the matter aright Mr. Leach commenced by going to Lethbridge with the land agent——

Mr. FOSTER. No, he did not go to Lethbridge, but wired the Lethbridge man to bring his books to Macleod.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly,—is there any difference? Mr. Leach, instead of going to Lethbridge, sent a telegram to Mr. Martin: Bring your books and meet me at Macleod. And for what purpose? For the purpose of holding an investigation. That investigation was held—notwithstanding the disclaimer of my hon. friend—by Mr. Leach and Mr. Martin. Though Mr. Leach was acting commissioner, in this matter he had the assistance of Mr. Martin. But that is beside the question, and I would not have mentioned it had not my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) interrupted me. There is no evidence that Mr. Nixon employed his son in 1901. True, there is no evidence to the contrary, but it does not matter. All we know is that he had his son in his employ.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I am not interrupting too much, might I ask my right hon. friend is it not important to know the time?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly it is. But what I say is that, until we know to the contrary, we must presume that the facts are as I have stated. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will agree that there may be occasion to have a fuller investigation. Had the hon. member for North Toronto stated a moment ago that a case had been made for further investigation and that the facts had not been sufficiently elucidated, I would have said that was a reasonable position. But that is not the position of the hon. member for North Toronto—he at once declares that the man has been proven guilty. I say that we have here no proof of that. My hon.

friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) who seems to be a little more moderate says there is a case for further investigation——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that is what the hon. member for North Toronto said.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I think that was not what he said. For, if I understood him, he did not ask for further investigation, but held the government responsible and blamed the government for what had been done.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be as well for me to say that I did point out several cases in which the information given us was absolutely incomplete and asked that it be completed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And without asking for the information to be completed he had no hesitation in saying that the man was guilty.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as the evidence goes, he is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will take the more reasonable view that the record, as I have read it affords no evidence as to when the boy came into the office of his father. We do not know but that the father was compelled to be absent and so had to appoint somebody to act for him. It is true, that, so far as town lots are concerned, it is shown that as far back as April, 1901, payments are made in the Macleod office of $120 which are not accounted for. But there is no evidence to show that this money was paid into the hands of Mr. Nixon though there may be a presumption as regards that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has overlooked the affidavit I read of Gerald Frederick Beere.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I am not overlooking that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because Mr. Beere makes that statement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He says he paid the money and has a receipt for it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There were two affidavits. One is as the Prime Minister states but the other says ' I . . . solemnly declare that on the eleventh April 1901, I paid to sub-agent Nixon, thirty dollars '—and so on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I had that in mind. But Mr. Beere does not state that he paid personally to the agent a certain amount. It may turn out, when we have a further investigation, if we must have one, that the money was paid into the office. Suppose this gentleman had gone to the office and found the boy there, had paid in the money and taken a receipt, it would have been money paid to the land agent though not paid into Mr. Nixon's own hands. I was particular to note when I received the affidavit that the man did not say he paid the money into the hand of sub-agent Nixon, but simply that he paid it to him. It matters not whether the money was paid to his agent or to himself, the payment was legally made, and the gentleman who paid it has legal recourse against somebody. I understand the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to say that the fact that this money, which was paid for a town lot, has not been accounted for to the department is likely to lead to serious consequences, because the lots have been handed over to the town of Macleod and the man who paid the money and has improved the lot has no title. Upon the face of the papers, it would appear that Nixon must account for the money and make good the loss, and that the man who paid the money has this recourse against him. This is a serious matter, one involving the man's reputation, a man who has been an honest man all his life, one against whom we have nothing conclusive. So far, it is premature to say that he is guilty on the evidence that has been brought out by the investigation held.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) said that no further investigation was necessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will permit me, the Minister of the Interior said nothing of the kind. What the Minister of the Interior said was that there was nothing in this report to show that the man was a thief and ought to be prosecuted. It may be that the boy ought to be prosecuted, but there is nothing in the record to warrant the government in prosecuting the father. Now, I come to the question asked me by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). That hon. gentleman asks: Have you prosecuted the boy? I do not know that the boy has been prosecuted. I do not know that he is in the country. I have heard what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—who appears to be better acquainted with the movements of the boy than either the Minister of the Interior or myself—has stated, that the boy never was further from Macleod than Frank, that he returned to Macleod and he is now to be found there. If that is so, there may be reason to decide what action will be taken in his case. One thing I wanted to caution the House against, and that is the conclusion reached by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) which, in my opinion is not justified by the facts which he himself has brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Of all the weak defences we have ever heard against any accusations made against this government. I think that made to-day by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is the limit. When the Minister of the Interior was making his speech I watched the Prime Minister, and I could imagine that right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) groaning in spirit and exclaiming:—'How long, oh Lord, how long!' And I made up my mind that he had mentally resolved that it would be the very shortest time possible before he would open another safe seat to secure a new minister. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) lectured the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) for lack of dignity. If there is any man in this House who has failed to rise to the dignity of the position he occupies it is the present Minister of the Interior. I do not know that we should blame him for that, because where nature and western civilization combined have not laid the true foundation, we can hardly look for a fine superstructure. The Prime Minister has defended the government on two or three grounds. One is that the money taken in this case was small—only $500. He judges the guilt of the man by the amount. Here is an encouragement held out to every government official—he may surreptitiously do away with the funds of this Dominion, but must not exceed $500. Another ground of defence is that he afforded Mr. Leach the inspector every opportunity to examine his books,—that he aided the investigation. Yes, but he took care that the stubs and counterfoil should be abstracted. Then when he found that somebody was guilty, that some account had to be made, he gave some information, not on oath, but merely his bare statement, whatever information they desired. The Minister of the Interior states that this man cannot be accused of being a defaulter because he has repaid the money.

Now; how many people who have held official positions in this country have started on their downward career by abstracting small amounts in the first place, with the idea of repaying them, but as these amounts grew they found their salary did not allow them to make repayment; and gentlemen who do this are to be held up by the government as guiltless, notwithstanding that they hold official positions under this government. Then again this gentleman cannot be blamed because, as a matter of fact, it is his son who was guilty. Now I would advise the government in future, when they are making appointments to official positions, for goodness sake not to appoint a man who has either a son or a daughter, so that he cannot lay the blame upon them for any crime he has committed. As the hon. member for North Toronto has stated, this is but a repetition of the case of the Thessalon postmaster. That gentleman also was accused of having abstracted government funds, and to screen himself he blamed it upon his daughter; yet he was reappointed to his position, after having been dismissed by the Postmaster General. This person who was appointed as sub-land agent hands in his accounts, gives in his resignation, and affords every opportunity for an investigation, and pleads that he is innocent but it is his son who is guilty. Now the Minister of the Interior has stated that a sub-land agency such as this is merely established for the benefit of the public, not so much in the interest of the government. I would ask him what an official of that character has to do if it is not to accommodate people who are doing business with the government? Why are post offices established throughout the country? Why are they assigned to different localities? Is it not largely at the demand of the people in those localities who send in petitions to the government? And is the government going to hold guiltless any postmaster who was abstracting the funds of the government? This sub-land agent is an official of the government, just as much as if he were the regular land agent; he was paid by the government $50 a month, and the Minister of the Interior has admitted that his accounts should be inspected and audited. It is a remarkable thing that these defalcations had been going on since January, 1901, and only this last spring did the government begin to realize that they had no audit of his accounts, though the minister states his accounts were properly open to government inspection. And this has been going on for the last four years, the government making no audit to see whether this gentleman was keeping his accounts properly.

Now who was it that made this investigation in the first place? It is Mr. R. E. A. Leach, a gentleman of Manitoba notoriety, the hero of the 'Thin Red Line,' the gentleman who was the Liberal organizer for the province of Manitoba during the last election. He did yeoman service on behalf of the Liberal party during that campaign. It was to him that all the returning officers in Manitoba sent their voters' list, and this gentleman fixed them up by scoring out the names of scores and scores of voters by means of a thin red line; and I see that to-day he has been sent up for trial by a magistrate in the city of Winnipeg. Naturally this gentleman would have a sympathetic feeling for this land agent, if he were guilty, and he was sent out to investigate the accounts of the sub-land agency in the district of Macleod. Now what kind of an investigation did he hold? The hon. member for North Toronto has referred to it. In the report made by this gentleman he states that, together with Mr. Martin, agent of Dominion lands, Lethbridge, he held an investigation:

> Together we spent the whole day and most of the night at Macleod, and the following day at Lethbridge, collecting such information as was obtainable re the position of the sub-agency.

What kind of information did he collect? Why, he held his little court in the parlour of the hotel, scarcely anybody in the town knew that such an investigation was going on. The doors were closed, it was more of a whitewashing investigation than anything else, if we are to judge by the results. Was this an investigation under oath ? He don't say so. What does he report :

From the sub-agent we learned——

On oath ? Here is a man who is accused of being guilty of defalcations to the amount of $500, and from his own statement :

—we learned that he had trusted the work entirely to his son and kept little or no supervision of it.

Mr. Leach did not even put this gentleman on oath, but he merely took his word for it, although he is accused of being the guilty party. But that is sufficient evidence for Mr. Leach. Here was an office established for the accommodation of the public, and the occupant of the office does not exercise any supervision over it, but trusted the work entirely to his son, a mere youth, for I am given to understand that his son today is only 19 or 20 years old, 15 years old four years ago. And this is the way the work is conducted at that sub-agency.

The son had left Macleod about the 15th of March, and at the time I was there, his whereabouts was unknown.

In the town of Macleod his whereabouts were not unknown. He has never been more than 30 miles away, he is now back in the town, and has been there ever since, with the exception of two or three weeks. The government don't seem to be very anxious to punish the guilty party, if the son was the guilty party. But there is really nothing to show he was the guilty party. This gentleman has been reported derelict in his duty under twelve different headings, which have been referred to by the member for North Toronto. A receipt book with stubs used prior to November, 1904, was missing, stubs, were torn off, counterfoils destroyed, moneys retained a long time in his possession without making a return to the government, no credit given for money handed over by men for the purchase of lots, these irregularities amounting to some $500 in all. Now some of these moneys were taken from individuals who resided in the town of Macleod. The town site of Macleod at that time was in the ownership of this government. Private individuals had bought certain lots for which they had paid the sub-land agent and got an interim receipt, the certificate of ownership had not as yet been handed over to them. These moneys had been retained by the sub-land agent, and no return made to the government for them. It turned out that after the government handed over the titles they were vested in the town, the very lots that had been purchased by private individuals from the Dominion government the titles of them were handed by the government to the town, and when these parties applied to the town for their patents, one lot in particular that had been purchased for $30, the town demanded $150 for the same lot. You see the inconvenience the public has been put to. An individual would go and buy a town lot for $30, and pay the government and get a receipt from the sub-agent in his own handwriting, pay the money to the land agent, according to the affidavit read by the leader of the opposition; and then finding those town lots vested in the town, after they were handed over by the government, an additional fee is charged for those lots, of $120 in one case. That is an outrage upon these people, and certainly the government should hold responsible the man who was their official, the sub-agent who was drawing his monthly stipend from this government. All these receipts were in the handwriting, as far as we know, of the sub-land agent himself. As my hon. friend from North Toronto has stated these defalcations had been going on for the last four years. It seems remarkably strange that anything like that should be occurring for four years and the government obtain no knowledge of it until the spring of this year. If the son who is 19 or 20 years of age was responsible for this four years it was a crime for his father to place him in a position to handle public moneys at that age, but there is no evidence to show that his son was in charge of the office in 1901 when these defalcations commenced, when, as far as the evidence show, they did commence. Mr. Leach, who made the investigation, is not at all sure that there are not other defalcations, because he suggests that the cheque that Mr. Nixon claimed was coming to him for $200, the department having held back his pay for four months at $50 per month, be retained by the government until they find out whether these were all the defalcations or not. So that this gentleman who held the investigation was not at all sure that he might not have been a defaulter to a much larger extent. As a result of this what did the hon. Minister of the Interior order?—that the land office be closed. Through the agent's misfortune, as he calls it, the people have been punished by having that land office closed. It was a great convenience. The people admit that. There have been loud complaints sent to the government since that office has been closed, and the hon. minister says that the question whether it shall be reopened or not is under his consideration. But, the people are obliged to suffer not only from the monetary standpoint, but from the standpoint of accommodation by having the office closed simply because of the defalcation of the sub-land agent. Another significant thing is the very fact that this gentleman's wages were held back for four months. It is a most unusual proceeding, when all these sub-land agents have monthly salaries, to hold back $200 that is coming to any of them. Did the government have any representation made to them that there was a suspicion that everything was not right in this land office? My hon. friend from North Toronto has asked that question. The hon. Minister of the Interior thought that he must attempt to make a reply to my hon. friend, but this reply partook more of the nature of offensive abuse than any valid defence of the government or of its officials. Now this gentleman, it appears, came to the conclusion after his discussion of the mater with Mr. Leach and after seeing Mr. J. Obed Smith, the commissioner of immigration, that he had apparently qualified, having in view the example of the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) in connection with the Thessalon post office affair, for an increase in his salary; he thought that his shortage of $500 as a sub-land agent gave him a good pull with the powers that be to get a better position, and the result was that he was appointed by the department at $25 a month as caretaker of the immigration hall, I think it was, which in a couple of weeks was increased to $75 a month, he receiving an appointment as immigration agent. It seems that the Department of the Interior is the haven of all such men as the hon. Postmaster General cannot accommodate, especially in western Canada. The department takes to its heart all who have done yeoman service on behalf of the party, and instead of degrading and punishing them for malfeasance provides them with better positions and larger salaries. I notice that there is a letter written by E. Blake Robertson, assistant commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg, to Mr. W. D. Scott, the Dominion immigration superintendent at Ottawa, as follows:

Dear Mr. Scott,—Mr. Joseph Nixon, who was employed at Lethbridge as sub-land agent, resigned his position there some time ago——

He does not say why. It was very magnanimous for this gentleman to resign his position when the government had been mulcted in the sum of $500.

—and I understand that Mr. Smith and some other of his friends are anxious to secure a position for him, if possible. I have discussed the matter with the commissioner here, and he thinks he would be a first-class man to put on as train checker between Fernie and Macleod, regarding which I wrote you some time ago. Mr. Smith discussed the matter of the position for Nixon with the deputy minister when he was here this week——

It appears that the deputy minister discussed the whole matter with Mr. Smith, the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg, and that they decided that it would be too bad that a gentleman of the capacity and capability of this Mr. Nixon who had worked so strenuously in the last election even while he was sub-land agent should go without his reward, and that they should give him another position. Mr. Smith himself, the commissioner of immigration, had a fellow feeling with Mr. Nixon because he had been the Liberal organizer before being appointed to his present position. It seems as if that were a necessary qualification now to occupy a high position in the Department of the Interior. The letter goes on:

—and it might be well for you to mention this position to Mr. Cory so that if he deems it advisable the place may be given to Mr. Nixon.

In reply to that Mr. Scott sends the following answer to Mr. J. Obed Smith:

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, 20th April, 1905.

J. Obed Smith,
Commissioner of Immigration,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

You may employ Joseph Nixon temporarily to check trains between Fernie and Macleod. Ask McPherson for transportation.

Immediately Mr. Scott responded to the appeal and appointed this person, Mr. Nixon, temporarily at $25 per month. Here is an extract from a letter dated Winnipeg, 4th May, 1905, from Mr. J. Obed Smith, commissioner of immigration, to Mr. W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration, Ottawa:

I have increased the salary of Joseph Nixon from $25 as caretaker to $75 as immigration agent.

So that this gentleman gets his reward and is now held up as an inducement for every person in the employ of this government to do likewise. So long as they are faithful workers in the Liberal ranks, no matter how they conduct their offices, even if they are defaulters, they have every hope of consideration and rewards and instead of being degraded or dismissed from positions which they have already held they will get promotion to other positions and draw larger salaries.

Mr. Mackenzie has been referred to to-day. Mr. Mackenzie, I understand, is the crown prosecuting attorney, and he was the Liberal candidate at the last Dominion election. I am informed that Mr. Mackenzie actually refused in 1896 to go upon the committee that was formed to work on behalf of the present Minister of the Interior. He would not go upon that committee because of the fact that Nixon and another gentleman named Grady, who is secretary of the Liberal association to-day, were on the committee. He did not think they were men of sufficiently good character to act on a committee with them and he absolutely refused to go on the committee. So that I think that hon. gentlemen opposite have shown to-day how weak a case they have, and I was rather surprised at the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) putting up the defence he did. No doubt he had to come to the defence of his colleague in the government, but surely, when that gentleman has shown what questionable transactions he can defend during the short time he has occupied the position of Minister of the Interior, the right hon. gentleman will be getting rather tired of rallying to the support of his colleague, who seems to put his foot in it every time he gets up to make a defence of any case which he is called upon to defend. Had this gentleman been a Conservative official do you suppose he would be occupying the position he is occupying to-day? I have in my mind another Dominion land agent, a gentleman who formerly lived in my own town, who was moved to the land agency in Brandon and who in the elections of 1900, because of his personal friendship for myself, merely wrote a letter to show his own good will. The letter was never replied to or acted upon, but it was stolen from my committee room. I never saw the letter myself, but on the strength of that letter this gentleman, although he had been in the service for twenty years, was dismissed from his position.

He was not a defaulter he was not a partisan, he never was accused of being a partisan. But, knowing there were a few residents of Brandon who had formerely lived in my district and had voted there, he wrote a letter telling me that if I would let him know the names of these persons he would speak to them and ask them to come over and support me at the election. The letter was handed to a committee man acting in my behalf ; I never saw the letter, it was never replied to ; this gentleman never did anything but to show his good will to me ; the letter was abstracted by a leading Liberal politician ; it was sent to the then Minister of the Interior, and on the floor of this House that gentleman stated to me that on the strength of that letter he discharged that official. And yet, here is an official, an active Liberal, whose office is a defaulter to the extent of $500, and he continues to hold a position under the government. That is the way this government discriminates between their political friends and their political foes. It is not necessary to dwell longer upon that ; it is a bad example to set to the public officials of this country. If men can so outrageously trespass upon the rules of every decency of public life ; whether wittingly or unwittingly, whether with the idea they are going to return the money or not, can abstract and use public funds and then when they are discovered refund the money, and can retain their positions in the public service and get an increase in salary just the same as if they had been most faithful officials, then I say, that the government which tolerates this is not encouraging a healthy public opinion in this country, and the conduct of that government must meet with the condemnation of the honest and intelligent people of Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. I have nothing to say as to the remarks relative to myself made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) I think I may treat them as being beneath contempt. But, as to his remarks with reference to certain private citizens of Macleod, it is worth drawing the attention of the country to the fact that private citizens can be attacked in this House by members of the opposition under cover of their privileges of parliament, as was the character of Mr. Nixon, by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and the character of Mr. A. F. Grady, of Macleod, by the member for Marquette. I wish to say that Mr. Grady and Mr. Nixon are guilty of being personal friends of mine, and although Mr. Nixon's position is not a prominent one he stands second to no member of this House of parliament in his character for honesty, so far as my knowledge goes. As to Mr. Grady, he is a leading merchant of the town of Macleod, and I do not think there is any man in Macleod or out of it who would allude to Mr. Grady as the member for Marquette has done here to-day under his privilege as a member of parliament. Matters have come to a very low pass in this House when men so abuse their privilege as to speak of private citizens who are not under their criticism in any degree——

Mr. INGRAM. We can very soon clear that up. Did Mr. Mackenzie ever remonstrate with him about Mr. Nixon and Mr. Grady being members of the committee ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not, most emphatically.

Mr. INGRAM. That clears that up.

Mr. OLIVER. Our friends on the other side have evidently spent a great deal of time on this case ; they have evidently gone to the greatest trouble to get particulars in regard to it. It would appear that in regard to what is of interest to certain people in the town of Macleod, there is not a man in Macleod or around Macleod who would take the action suggested by my hon. friends on the other side in regard to this case, because they are too well aware of the circumstances and the character of the people connected with it. It remains for our friends opposite, at the instigation of, I presume some person there—I do not know from which end the instigation comes, whether it is these hon. gentlemen here who are anxious to make a case and stop at nothing in their anxiety to do so, who set spies at work out at Macleod to secure for them information which so far has not resulted in any benefit to them or any discredit to the men affected by it ; whether it is men at Macleod who would not for their own sakes I presume take action there, but who expect to make catspaws of the members of the opposition here in dealing with the affairs of a private family. So far as the department is concerned the case is that an allegation was made, and an investigation was held. With a full belief in the truth of the report made, the blame was not placed upon Mr. Nixon. Now, either Mr. Nixon is guilty or he is not guilty. In the opinion of the department on the investigation made, he is not guilty and if he is not guilty he should not be punished for the fault of his son.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister tell us whether or not the investigation has been finished ?

Mr. OLIVER. The investigation is not finished if any cause is shown for it to be continued. If a reasonable case is shown for an investigation an investigation will always be held. That is not the question befor the House. The question is as to what shall be done in regard to certain allegations of criminality as to which hon. members on the other side have asserted Mr. Nixon is guilty, and as to which we do not believe him guilty. We, holding that belief did not treat Mr. Nixon as a criminal. If gentlemen opposite take the position that Mr. Nixon shall be punished as a criminal because of the faults of his son, they are within the judgment of the country ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to follow the Minister of the Interior in his spasms of indignation. I am quite willing to allow the House and the people of the country who read what takes place in this House, to put their own judgment upon these, as to their value and as to their fitness. The minister seems to think that whenever anything is brought up touching his department, there is something malevolent about it ; that there must be either spies here or spies somewhere else ; that it is almost a personal matter. I beg the minister not to allow himself to run away with any idea of that kind. Before he was a minister things were been brought up in this House with regard to all departments ; since he has become a minister there will be things brought up just the same as before. The very fact that he rises in indignation and throws himself into spasms will not prevent these things being investigated. Neither will any amount of abuse which he attempts to heap upon any member who does his duty in parliament, have the least effect in preventing the ventilation of these abuses. The minister tried to read a lecture to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) on political ethics, and he said that hon. member had made observations and insinuations against private persons under the guard of his privilege in parliament. Well, I leave the House to judge of that. But, is the Minister of the Interior always in perfect taste himself ? At least fair respect for the powers that be, so long as they keep themselves in an attitude to receive it, is due to them. But what does my hon. friend think of his characterization of the Prime Minister of the Northwest Territories as a heeler, which he applied to him the other night in this House ? Does he think that was particularly respectful and dignified ?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. It was my hon. friends opposite who saw fit to bring into the discussion the premier of the Territories ; and when they bring him in, they will have to be satisfied with the way they take him out.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, my hon. friend admits that he abused the premier, not from any fault of his, but because some one on this side brought his name into the discussion. That is one of those beautiful ethical theories which my hon. friend brings from the breezy west, and introduces here with so much unction, and supports with the pronoun 'we,' never 'I.' I am content to take the 'we' ; it implicates the whole government, and the whole government will have to stand behind these definitions. It may afford some amusement and some exercise of heart to the premier to take tomorrow's 'Hansard' and read these definitions of what constitutes a public officer of this Dominion—what is meant by an officer in an ordinary sense, and what by an officer in an extraordinary sense; how justice ought to be meted out, by what particular methods and on what particular authorities; and the fine distinction between a man employed at $100 a month to carry on public business without liability to be interfered with by the government who employs him and pays him in the interest of the country, and that same man carrying on a store and making profits of $100 a month out of his business. I would like the First Minister, who I presume rules and dominates the cabinet—sometimes he does it very much, they say—just to read that over and think it over, and then study out some ingenious way of justifying before parliament such absurdities and heresies as these. The Minister of the Interior thinks I have been setting spies at work at the other end of the line, or that somebody is using me and my associates as catspaws at this end of the line. Would it not be better for the Minister of the Interior to give a little attention to this matter, which has occurred in his own department ? Would it not reflect a little more honour upon himself and upon the government of which he is a member if he would bestow a little more pains on that, and place a little less emphasis on the suppositions which haunt his mind by mid-night and stay by him at mid-day, of catspaws and spies, all set upon Hon. Mr. Oliver, to hunt him down and root him up ? There is nothing of that kind going on. My hon. friend must not think that, because he is Minister of the Interior, the whole world has entered into a conspiracy to dim the halo that surrounds his brow, to pluck one single jewel from the crown that rests on his head, or to take one leaf from the laurel which has been wrapped around it by his admirers in Edmonton. No one has set at work any mechanism to do any of these things. No one in the Northwest is lying awake at nights to devise any schemes of that kind. If it will rest the soul of my hon. friend, I will tell him that I have received but one letter from Macleod about this whole matter, that I have written no letter to Macleod or anywhere else in reference to it, and that I had my information first from what I saw in the Winnipeg press and afterwards from what I have under my hand. These are all the sources of information that I have had, and they are legitimate sources. The hon. gentleman says that it would be well if gentlemen on this side of the House would not pay as much attention as they are paying to this case. The trouble is that we have to pay attention to it, because the hon. gentleman himself will not. If the hon. gentleman himself would attend to this matter, so much the less would be left to us to do. Now, I think my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) was a little too ingenuous—a little too fresh, we might say—in a compliment paid by him to the First Minister. He said it was rather surprising to him to see the First Minister putting up a defence, and such a defence, of such a case as that which has occurred, and which the Minister of the Interior has tried to defend. I am not astonished at all. I never knew a piece of political villainly which had been brought out and pressed home to the government, or to any of the departments, for which the First Minister was not ready to stand up and find a palliation. When he was in opposition, how virtuous he was! He held up one of his white hands and called on heaven to witness that when he got into power there would be a pure administration of public affairs. What has he been but the apologist of all kinds of political trickery and all kinds of departmental frauds? Never once in this House, when the evidence has been overwhelming against him, has the right hon. gentleman stood up and made an honest protest against what was going on. Any lawyer who went into a court and attempted to put up the defence my right hon. friend has done in this case, would not be allowed to go into court with his gown on again; he would be put out of court. My right hon. friend says there is no case. No, there is no full case; I quite agree with him. The man who, a partisan of the deepest red, was sent to investigate a brother partisan, did not make a complete investigation. He only took some shreds of evidence, which he could pick up without any public announcement or calling of evidence, in a day at Macleod and half a day at Lethbridge, and that evidence covers only about one-tenth of the whole time that this man was in office from 1899 up. And yet the small fragment of evidence, gathered in that way, is as clean and clear as it can be, unless you bring rebuttal testimony, that that man is guilty. Did my right hon. friend bring any rebuttal testimony? Not the least. He dealt in suppositions. Such and such, he said, might have taken place. The boy might have been there in 1901. One man makes an affidavit, not because he is a spy, who threatens to rob the Minister of the Interior of his laurels or his well-earned fame, that he has paid $30—to whom? To a little boy in the office? No, but to Sub-agent Nixon. Another man makes an affidavit that he holds a receipt—from the boy of the office? No, but from Sub-agent Nixon. When these men make these affidavits or declarations, my right hon. friend in court, before learned and wise judges, says: Oh, that evidence is nothing. I will put you up a supposition which will knock it higher than a kite. My supposition is that a little boy was in the office at that time, and that they paid the money to the agency and the little boy scooped it. Does my right hon. friend really put up such a defence in the high court of parliament? This is a case than which nothing could be worse. Oh, the overflowing sympathy of my right hon. friend, when the affairs of the country, and not his own, are in question, and how variable is that sympathy! One time he will plead for the boy, because of the father; another time he will plead for the father, because of the boy; and always the plea is to get a man out of red-handed crime in one way or another. In public trust and public office sympathies have not much place, and misplaced sympathies have still less place in the public interest and in the direction of public affairs.

Sir, you have not held any investigation in that case, nor did the minister intend to hold one. He sent a partisan out there to ask a few questions of another partisan. Was he instructed to take evidence on oath? Did he take it on oath? Neither one nor the other. Did he go there and ask for evidence? People in Macleod would have given evidence had they known there was an investigation, but they did not know anything about it until the inquiry was over. It was held with closed doors, it lasted a few hours, and then the accused was set free. What does an investigation such as that count for—an investigation not under oath? Yet the Minister of the Interior came here to-day on his high horse, and resented any reflection on the proceedings. Then he harked back a little and the First Minister harked back a little and half admitted there was a case for further investigation. I say you have had no investigation. You have had a few questions put but no investigation which would satisfy this House, and I say further that in what has been brought out you have the evidence of guilt, plain and irrefutable. There it lies.

There is another point I want to bring out. It is evidently one of the understood principles and practices of this government that their officials in any department shall put their heads together and get men accused, as was this man, immediately appointed somewhere else after they felt compelled to resign the places they held. Is that the way appointments are made by this government? If a Conservative were to be found doing what this man did, his head would go off pretty quickly. As soon as Nixon handed in his resignation and was out of office, what took place? Three officials of the department put their heads together and pulled the wires in order to get Nixon appointed to another office. Is that the right kind of thing to be going on? Yet that was what was done in this case. If this action on their part was not right, how comes it that before the investigation was ended, judgment was passed on Nixon by appointing him to a higher office. Not one shred of the evidence was in favour of that man. It was all against him, but the right hon. the First Minister says it was not all completed, and it may not be completed now, yet before the investigation is ended and with the strong evidence there is against him, they made that man one of their trusted well paid officers in the department.

What stuff for the Minister of the Interior to talk about this man not being in his office. Why was he not in his office? Part of the time he was not there because he was engaged in political work. That is the reason why. What salary did you pay him as a land guide? Ten dollars a month. What did you pay him as a land agent? Fifty dollars a month. What as caretaker of the immigration building? Fifteen dollars a month. There you have your salaries, $50 as land agent, $15 as caretaker, $10 as land guide. Yet because of the $10 as land guide, he is out in the woods all the time; and for the $65 for the other two places, he is not in his office.

I have under hand somewhere the instructions sent to the land agents of the government, that they are to keep in their offices and are not to go out as land guides. Those instructions were brought down in the papers relating to scrip, and yet the Minister of the Interior seeks to cover the guilt of this man by saying that because he was paid $10 a month as land guide he was warranted in neglecting the duties to perform which he was paid $65 a month. That is the excuse advanced in his favour for handing over his business to a minor.

Who advised the government of this default? Why is it we cannot get all the papers down? The very first paper we have reads as follows:

> The department is advised of possible serious financial default in the land agent's office at Macleod.

Why is not that advice among these papers. Did it come by letter or by wire? If it did, it ought to be among the papers, and the minister should find out where it is and bring down the missing paper.

Let me sear it into these hon. gentlemen, if it requires that process, that they should see that proper officers are in the departments, that no impropriety is carried on in the departments. Contrast this with the case of a man who had been in the service twenty years, doing good work, and against whom there was not a black mark. That man lives in Brandon and is a friend of the hon. member for that county (Mr. Roche). There is a little argument going on in Minnedosa, and this man wrote Dr. Roche:

> There are some voters, I think, from Minnedosa here. If you send me the names, I will talk to them and see if they will go and vote for you.

What became of the man who committed such a grievous crime as that? He was immediately decapitated. Somebody stole the letter, which was taken as evidence against him and he was turned out on the street. What for? Simply because he did not steal enough public money and have sufficient friends on the right side to get a better office, after he had kept the money he had stolen four years in his possession and only gave it up when the facts came out. That is the manly line of principle upon which this government acts with reference to its officers. It was just the same in the Thessalon case as in the Nixon case. The actual defaulter, who threw the whole guilt upon his daughter, was let go free and then appointed afresh to office. This in spite of the evidence which showed that the money wrongfully taken out of the public till he used in his own private speculations. The right hon. gentleman had nothing to say about that. Then this man Nixon took the public money in 1901 and kept it up until 1905. Let me ask: If nothing had come out, how much longer would he have kept it? How long must a man use the public money in his own business before he becomes a defaulter? The First Minister says that this man in Brandon to whom I refer, was dismissed because he wrote a letter to a friend of his, although he had been twenty years in the employ of the government doing good service. Does the right hon. gentleman justify that? Will he give a square answer to that question now, with all his sympathies fresh in him? Let me take him just at this physicological moment. Here is the case of a man, a good Conservative, who had been twenty years in a public office, without a black mark against him, who had done the work of his office all this time, and done it well. In simple earnest good-will, he wrote a letter to a friend of his saying:

> I see you are having an argument there. There are a few voters, I think, from Minnedosa here. If you send me your names, I will ask them to go and vote for you.

Would the right hon. gentleman dismiss the man who wrote such a letter? Would he throw him on the street? Will he get up now and say that he thinks that to dismiss that man was a first-class act to do ? Will he? I pause for a reply. The right hon. gentleman will not reply. Yet he overflows with sympathy for this other man, who for five years kept the public money in his pocket and never gave it up until he was discovered.

But, while this is the course of one minister, the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) dismisses a postmaster because the majority in the polling division in which that postmaster lived was Conservative ; and he re-appointed a man who had embezzled a thousand dollars and more, and who used a part of it, according to the report of the investigator, in his private speculations. All the milk of human kindness in the hon. gentleman's heart is for such an officer as that, but he has no sympathy for the honest man who was dismissed for partisan reasons. This was not a serious error, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) tell us. What would be a serious error ? Was the Martineau error a serious one ? an error which would not have taken place but for the Prime Minister himself, for he in spite of the civil service rules appointed a man of no experience who afterwards became a defaulter to the amount of $80,000. That comes from following wrong principles. But, while the civil service rules are ignored to appoint such men to office, we find that a man who has been twenty years in office, who has no black mark in his record, if he dares to write a sympathizing letter to a friend in the election, must be dismissed. Not a serious error, says the Prime Minister. What would be a serious error? I would like to have the right hon. gentleman's definition of that expression. I suppose a man is guilty of a serious error who finds himself in the position of a man in my own county. I have spoken of this before. This man was a lighthouse keeper, but had never taken part in elections. But the government dismissed the lighthouse keeper as an offensive partisan because of blood relationship with the man who had worked for the Conservative party. The error of Nixon was not a serious one, says the Prime Minister, if you judge by the amount. That would make a fine argument before a court of justice ; make a limit of say $1,000, and if a man takes less than that it is not serious, if more than that, that he has been guilty of a serious error. Another thing in Nixon's favour, the Prime Minister tells us that this man did not oppose investigation. Think of that, Mr. Speaker. This man who had embezzled funds of the country and kept them for five years, when he was found out, actually had the grace not to knock the man down who carried on the investigation into his operations. He gave right in. Well, most people of that kind do. But, before he gave in, he took good care that there should be no stubs from 1899 to November 18th, 1904. The Prime Minister says there is no proof against him. Even in the small fringe of time over which the investigation has gone, there is absolute proof against him. But, if you were to take into account the four years not covered by the investigation, it might occur to somebody to believe you would find him four times more guilty. The Prime Minister tells us that Nixon, must be loved by the men of Macleod. Why ? Because they joined together to pay his deficiency. What a position for a Prime Minister to take—to excuse a criminal because a number of his friends to save him from jail, put up a certain amount of money. Supposing this does show friendship, is that to be his passport to another office which requires honesty, diligence and unceasing care ? The Prime Minister tells us that there is no evidence that the money was paid into this sub-agent's own hands. No evidence ? What is an affidavit for ? The affidavit says that the money was paid to the sub-agent. And the Prime Minister spends ten minutes in defining these words. The man who makes the affidavit does not say that he paid it to the sub-agent personally. No ; and he does not say that he put it into the sub-agent's right hand, or that he put it into his left hand, or that he stuffed into the sub-agent's trousers' pocket. Therefore, says the Prime Minister, we have a right to assume that it was paid to some agent of the sub-agent. How would a lawyer like to appear before a court of justice, before a wise strong judge, and make such an argument as that ? And then the Prime Minister says that we seem to be better acquainted with the whereabouts of this boy than is the Minister of the Interior—he sneers at us for that. Well, it is not to your credit that we know more about it than you do. One of these two men is a criminal —there is no doubt about that. It is not to your credit as a government that we have to find the whereabouts of men who embezzled public funds. The government should show reasonable diligence in looking after these people. We had to do it because you utterly refused to do it. And the Minister of the Interior has refused this very day. He says : Do it yourself ; enter a private prosecution ; do anything you like, but do not come here and abuse private citizens. What a position for a minister to take. There have been many ministers from confederation to the present time, and many members of those ministries ; but I doubt if ever there was a member of any ministry who would present a defence upon the lines followed by the Minister of the Interior. What will the government do about it ? Will they appoint an honest man, a non-partisan to make a thorough investigation, have that investigation held in public and witnesses duly called, and get at the bottom of this matter ? Will they withdraw the appointment of Mr. Nixon from the new office until that investigation is finished ? Or will they condone the embezzlement and theft and show themselves unworthy to carry on the affairs of this country ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. It is very evident that the hon. member for North Toronto is angry that he has so little to find fault with in the administration of those who have had charge of the country's affairs for the last ten years. He is angry because these gentlemen have chosen not to follow the path which he marked out when he was a member of the Dominion administration. He rails against the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior because under this administration no money has been stolen from the people. In his day it was entirely different. Since then, new methods have been introduced. The filching of money from the pockets of the people has been done away with. The contrast makes him angry, and he cannot conceal his anger. He uses many strong words, but can he say that one dollar of this money that he speaks about has been lost to the people of Canada ? Of course he cannot. He could have told a different story before 1896 when he was administering the affairs of this country ; he could have told the country then that, with his consent, thousands and thousands of dollars of public money was being stolen without value given for it. It was all very well in those days, and it is because, forsooth, these methods have entirely disappeared that the hon. gentleman has obstructed all our proceedings for more than an hour.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What are you doing ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Before I sit down I am going to tell my hon. friend what I am doing. I am going to point out some reasons why this country should wake up and realize the true character of the hon. gentleman who undertakes to lecture the members on this side of the House this afternoon. I propose to give a few chapters of his history. There may be some people who would like to forget that the hon. member for North Toronto has a past, but thank God, there are enough honest men in this country never to forget the fact that he was an important factor in the government of Canada previous to 1896. But before I pass on, I want to refer to the case brought to the notice of the House by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche). He complains because a certain official of this government was dismissed for having written a letter offering him some slight assistance, and the soul of the hon. member for North Toronto is disturbed. Now those of us who have read his history know mighty well that his soul is not disturbed at all ; those of us who know his history know that he was himself guilty of crimes in that direction far more heinous than those recited by the hon. member for Marquette. Let me call his attention to the case that occurred in the county of Victoria, N.S. Has he forgotten about the dismissal of Samuel Campbell, light-keeper at St. Paul's island ? The people of Nova Scotia have not forgotten it, nor the people of New Brunswick. Talk about writing a letter to a candidate running an election ! Here was a gentleman who wrote a letter to a personal friend of his, a gentleman who enjoyed his hospitality for a number of years. He writes a letter, not upon any matter pertaining to the Dominion parliament. He was a municipal councillor in the county of Victoria, and Mr. Campbell wrote to him suggesting that he should give his support to a certain candidate who wanted to become warden of the county of Victoria. That was the crime committed by Sam. Campbell. And what happened to him for having written that letter ? The government dismissed him. He had been twenty years in office, he was a good officer, yet because he chose to write a letter to a friend of his who was a municipal councillor, he was dismissed from office. But that was not all. The man who gave away the letter written by Sam. Campbell was taken by the hon. member for North Toronto and given a position in the civil service. The hon. gentleman paid him for giving away Sam. Campbell's letter, and he was not a bit disturbed about it in those days. But he is disturbed in these later days because an offence which falls very far short of the one I have mentioned has not been punished. These things are known in this country, and the people in my province do not propose to forget them. Now it is almost pathetic to hear the hon. member for North Toronto indulge in philippics against this side of the House as to the way the business of the country is being conducted. Well, I do not blame the hon. gentleman for being dissatisfied with the manner in which the affairs of the country are being conducted to-day. He is angry, no doubt, because there is not a nest of traitors on this side of the House, and he cannot conceal his anger. Time was when nothing suited him better, when he could not live as a matter of fact without being in the midst of a nest of traitors. He made a reputation at that time, he is disappointed now. He has been wandering about this country for the past five or six years, and is somewhat out of touch with the situation. He was thrown down severely by his friends at the beginning of the present session, and he has taken this means of punishing them. He is sore on them. What was the spectacle that was presented to the people of this country when this parliament opened in January last ? We saw the member for North Toronto sitting in the front seat of the opposition, surrounded by whom ? Was he surrounded by his friends ? They gave the best evidence that they were not his friends. There can be no clearer evidence of it than the fact that they refused to have him as the leader of the party. So far as I am concerned, I do not propose that these things shall be forgotten by the people of Canada, and when he undertakes to stand up and lecture this side of the House as to how public affairs should be administered, I propose to tell the people exactly what sort of a man he is. Who is he ? Well, he was in the province of New Brunswick for a time. If reports speak correctly he was returned as the representative of the county of King's, N.B. The people in the county of King's, in a moment of weakness, perhaps, returned my hon. friend, but it did not take the people of King's very long to find him out and just as soon as they found him out, out he went.

Mr. LANCASTER. They have been sorry ever since.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. They have given no evidence of their sorrow. They have taken a very peculiar way of expressing their sorrow because they have taken pretty good care never to extend an invitation to him to return. He was next returned, where?—in the county of York, New Brunswick. In another moment of weakness the people of the county of York, New Brunswick, returned this hon. gentleman, but they discovered their mistake and just as soon as they discovered it they put him on the plank and sent him clean overboard. Well, he had to find some other place. He was determined to stand by and he landed in the city of St. John. We all know what happened. The people of St. John knew him and they never let him in at all. The counties of King's and York made the mistake of having let him in but the city of St. John shut the door at once and not only did they turn him out of the city of St. John, but they turned him out of the province of New Brunswick completely and from that day forward he never went back and it is safe betting that he will never go back.

Mr. LANCASTER. What was the amount that he stole?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Who ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The gentleman you are talking about.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I am bound to say he has never taken me into his confidence as to that. I could never hope to have the confidence of the hon. gentleman upon that subject, but if my hon. friend desires to ascertain I would suggest that he commune with him as he is his friend.

Mr. LANCASTER. We are talking about the stealing of public money and I believed that the hon. gentleman is trying to justify one stealing by another, but I cannot see the aptness of his argument.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I am not attempting to justify any stealing of public money.

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought that was what you were talking about.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I quite understand this is a sore subject with my hon. friend, but I am bound to say that he would have known all about the stealing of public money if he had been sitting in the House behind the hon. member for North Toronto when the government of which he was a member was permitting the stealing of public money.

Mr. LANCASTER. Were they prosecuted ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. It is safe betting that if my hon. friend had been sitting behind the hon. member for North Toronto that time he would have supported him loyally in such jobs as the Curran bridge and other scandals of that day.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. When the House rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston) was speaking, and it was expected he would continue his remarks. He was then referring to the Curran bridge, and he evidently wanted some one on this side of the House to answer him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. BERGERON. No. I want to tell the government that if they are at all anxious for the despatch of public business this session they will have to abandon such tactics as those they indulged in this afternoon. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) discovered what he considerd an act of dishonesty in the administration of public affairs in the western part of the country, and after a great deal of labour to himself he exposed it, as it was his duty as a member of the opposition to do. The Minister of the Interior answered, not as a minister of the Crown who was interested in seeing the public treasury guarded, but in a heated and partisan way. The right hon. the Prime Minister also put in a defence. I knew the right hon. gentleman was a good lawyer, but I never thought before that he was so good at defending a bad case, and the impression I gathered was that he seemed to know very little about the matter under discussion. Then the hon. member for Cape Breton rose, not to discuss the question, not to disprove the accusation brought by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), but to indulge in abuse against that hon. gentleman. I have been sitting with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) for many years in this House, and I can say that there is not a more honest man in this whole country——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I assert that without fear of contradiction. My hon. friend has been a minister of the Crown for years, and not one charge has ever been even hinted against him. The hon. gentleman from Cape Breton spoke about my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) having been defeated in some constituencies. What has that to do with the case? Good men, not only Conservatives, but Liberals, have been defeated. Why, the right hon. the Prime Minister himself, probably one of the most popular men in the Liberal party, was beaten in his own constituency. The hon. gentleman from Cape Breton spoke about the honesty of the government and the honesty of the party in power. Well, his party is now spending twice as much as ever was expended by any previous government; and as to honesty, we know they will not grant an investigation when charges are laid; and we know further, that during the eighteen years the Conservatives were in power the McGreevy scandal and the Curran bridge business were the only two things that were ever shown to have been wrong. And by the way, does my hon. friend (Mr. A. Johnston) know anything about the Curran bridge?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes, I do.

Mr. BERGERON. He does not appear to know much about it. I can tell him that there was an investigation granted, and during the course of that investigation, although the witnesses were examined by Liberal lawyers who were paid $100 a day, not a single accusation could be brought against any minister of the Crown or against any member of parliament.

Mr. McKENZIE. What about the cost of the bridge?

Mr. BERGERON. The cost was due to a variety of circumstances. As a proof that there was no stealing about it, I may tell my hon. friend that Mr. St. Louis, the contractor, was sued by the Conservative government, the suit was continued by the Liberal government, and after going from court to court, to the Privy Council in England, Mr. St. Louis was acquitted and no stain attached to any one who had to do with that public work. It is all very well for these gentlemen opposite to talk about the Curran bridge and the McGreevy scandal, but we can put our finger to-day on many transactions that are a great deal worse. There is one thing I heard the other day, and which will probably come before the House during the present session. There is another bridge in the province of Quebec; there is a bridge called the Sorel bridge. That Sorel bridge was built as a railway bridge, and under the authority of the law the federal government pays 15 per cent of the cost to aid in the construction of such bridges. There was a report made to Council, and the government of Canada was on the eve of paying 15 per cent on $219,000 as the cost of the construction of that bridge. It was declared that the bridge had cost $219,000, but it occurred to the Auditor General that there was something wrong about it, and on his own behalf he sent Mr. Keefer, an engineer, to make an inspection, and the report of the engineer was that the Sorel bridge could not have cost more than $119,000. The Auditor General then went to Mr. Schreiber, the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals, and he found out there that the Sorel bridge had only cost $98,000, while the government was ready to pay 15 per cent upon $219,000. That is one of the few acts of the administration of this government that will probably come out before the end of the session. When the Liberals were in opposition and the Conservatives were in power an investigation was granted whenever they asked for one; the books of the Department of Public Works and of Railways and Canals were open for inspection; their own lawyers were paid $100 a day to conduct the prosecution on their behalf, and all they found out was that it cost more money per yard than it should have cost for excavation work at Point Lévis. Is that any worse than this government calling for tenders for $200,000 worth of dredging at Fort William and only giving two days' notice for outside contractors to tender? I gave one example of the acts of this government in relation to a bridge, but there are others. However, this is not the time nor the opportunity to ventilate them. It is no pleasure for the opposition to examine into volumes of books and piles of papers to see if the public business is properly conducted, but we go to this trouble, feeling that it is our duty, and when we do so we are abused by the government and its supporters just as the member for North Toronto was abused this afternoon. I am surprised that my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston) should have spoken as he did, for I do not think it is in his nature. The member for North Toronto was discharging his public duty, and he was entitled to praise rather than to censure. The member for North Toronto works hard in this House as a member of parliament, and if every member worked as hard as he did and was as devoted to his public duties, probably more scandals would be unearthed. And now as to public employees. A word was said this afternoon about some employees who have been able, under this good government, to steal as much as $75,000 or $80,000. There is another case which is not quite ripe yet for publicity, but probably before the end of the session it may be shown that this government are not alive to the best interests of this country, that they are loose in their methods and that things have been done which, if they were done by a Conservative government, the opposition would keep the House six months in session to denounce them. We know that the government is to-day spending $85,000,000, when ten years ago the public expenditure was only $42,000,000. The expenditures have increased by about 200 per cent, while the population has increased by only about 1 per cent. What is the meaning of that? The meaning is that a great deal of the public money is squandered and lost because the ministers or their employees have not their eyes wide open to the interests of this country. The Hon. Alex. Mackenzie was an honest man, and what did he write one day to a friend? That he had to lie down on the public coffers in order to prevent his friends putting their hands into them. It was his government that appointed the present Auditor General. We had that gentleman for eighteen years, and we never spoke of having him dismissed, nor did we try to make his life such that he wanted to retire. We stood by Mr. McDougall. Although some ministers were dissatisfied with his rulings, they bowed their heads to them, because the law required it, and they prevented the waste of public money. But to-day this government are doing all in their power to get rid of the Auditor General. When he threatens to resign unless there is a change made in the Audit Act, they are glad of it, and they will not change the Act because they want to get rid of him, and because they want to have in their hands the expenditure of about $200,000,000 on the Grand Trunk Pacific, and wish to have an Auditor General who will not interfere with them. We sometimes hear it said that the people are in favour of the expenditure of public money. But it is the duty of the opposition, though it is not a pleasant duty, to do as the hon. member for North Toronto did this afternoon. We are all supposed to be here in the interest of the country, and whatever we on this side of the House do, we do it sincerely in the best interests of the people. I have to express my sorrow that the hon. member for Cape Breton spoke as he did this afternoon. I hope it will be the last time, when we bring accusations against the government, that personalities will be indulged in or that an attempt will be made to cover with ridicule any man on this side of the House who tries to do sincerely and honestly what he considers to be in the best interests of Canada.

Motion (Mr. Foster) to adjourn, negatived.

NORTH ATLANTIC CABLE COMPANY.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior when he will lay on the table the contract of the North Atlantic Cable Company with the government?

Mr. OLIVER. It will be ready in a very short time.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It should not take very long to prepare it as it fills only three or four pages.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 151) to incorporate L'Union Saint Joseph du Canada.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 175) respecting the Pacific Bank of Canada.—Mr. Galliher.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 177) respecting certain patents of David Thomas Owen.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 178) respecting the Canada Central Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 179) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill (No. 182) respecting the Sterling Bank of Canada.—Mr. Campbell.

Bill (No. 183) respecting a certain patent of the Metal Volatilization Company.—Mr. McCool.

Bill (No. 185) for the relief of Isaac Pitblado.—Mr. Bole.

QUESTIONS.

MAJOR JOHN WALSH.

Mr. HENDERSON asked:

1. Has Major John Walsh, chief superintendent of the Dead Letter Branch of the Post Office Department, been superannuated? If so, from what date?

2. Has George J. Binks been promoted to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Major Walsh?

3. Why has George R. White, who is senior in the branch, and has been performing Major Walsh's duties for fifteen months, been passed over?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. Yes, from the 1st of June, 1905.

2. Yes.

3. Because it was considered that the public interest would be best served by the appointment of Mr. Binks.

MR. F. COLSON.

Mr. HENDERSON asked:

1. Is F. Colson employed as chief clerk and accountant in the Department of the Secretary of State?

2. When was he first appointed to such position?

3. What is his present salary, and has the same been increased recently? If so, when, and how much?

4. Does Mr. Colson perform services for any other department, and from whom does he receive instructions for such additional services ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER :

1. Yes.

2. Accountant, July, 1885; chief clerk, July, 1904.

3. (a) $1,950. (b) increase on promotion, July 1, 1904, $100.

4. No.

ALIEN LABOUR ACT.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

1. Is the government aware that the Alien Labour Act has been declared by Judge Anglin to be ultra vires of the Dominion parliament ?

2. Does the government concur in this judgment ? If not, why not ?

3. What action, if any, does the government purpose taking, and when, to determine the rights of the Dominion to pass legislation of this character ?

4. Can an appeal be taken from the judgment referred to ?

5. What bearing has Judge Anglin's judgment upon (a) the Chinese exclusion legislation ; (b) the powers of Dominion health officers to exclude diseased immigrants from Canada ; (c) the power of the Dominion to detain, punish and deport poachers in Canadian waters ?

6. Has the whole Act been declared ultra vires ? If not, then what part is affected by the decision ?

7. Has the government yet determined upon introducing amendments to the Act ?

8. Has any counsel been appointed to represent the interests of organized labour with the Père Marquette case ? If so, who ?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Some of the provisions of that Act have been declared ultra vires. The government does not agree in that judgment, and it is our intention to apply to the Privy Council for leave to appeal. I do not think it necessary to say what effect that judgment might have with respect to other legislation on this question. As far as the proceedings are concerned, the Dominion of Canada will be represented by Mr. Shepley, of Toronto, and by Mr. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice. I do not know of any other interest affected at present.

SECRETARY OF STATE'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the number of employees in the Secretary of State's Department at 31st December, 1904 ?

2. What was the amount of the salary of such staff, including as well the salary of the Secretary of State and Under-Secretary of State, for the year 1904 ?

3. What was the total revenue of the said department for the year 1904 ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. 29.

2. $46,670.00

3. $58,256.35.

Mr. HENDERSON.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before we begin, I might say to the hon. the Minister of the Interior that the information which I have received, with regard to a portion at least of what I have asked, is not of very much use. What I asked for was the estimated population of each constituency as on the 1st of July, 1905. What I have got is a statement from the census, which I could have made out myself, of the population of each constituency in 1901.

Mr. OLIVER. I asked the Census Commissioner for such an estimate and he said he could not give me an estimate that would be of any value.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not depending altogether upon the Census Commissioner. As the government were delimiting certain constituencies, I presumed they would have an estimate of the population, because I thought that the delimitation must have proceeded upon an estimate of some kind as to the population of each constituency. I knew we had the information given in the census and thought it had already been given. It may be of some service, but it is not what I asked for.

Mr. OLIVER. We have said that, so far as the population is concerned, the calculation is based on the census, the voters' lists and the votes cast. These seem to be the only authoritative information I can get.

On schedule section 1,—Medicine Hat,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this division, according to the statement which I have from the hon. minister, is 13,680 miles. Has the present constituency of Medicine Hat been enlarged?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been by extension northward about ten townships, but that does not make any serious difference in the population, as that part of the country has very few people. In fact my information is that it has none.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought that, according to the argument of my hon. friend the other day, the area was the important thing.

Mr. OLIVER. It has some bearing, but in this case the area does not affect the population.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) give the estimate of the present population of this division, Medicine Hat ?

Mr. OLIVER. As I have said, I am unable to give any estimate of the present population except on the basis I have made—a calculation based on the census, the voters' list and the votes cast in the last election.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Did the hon. minister say there were ten townships added to Medicine Hat ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not one of the original maps. I may have been giving too much. The hon. gentleman himself probably has the area.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. If there are ten north and south, there are ten east and west—100 altogether.

Mr. OLIVER. As I say, I have not one of the old maps.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have one here.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman, then, can give us the correct figures. We will accept them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What kind of country is it ?

Mr. OLIVER. Clear, open prairie ; what we call a grazing country ; rather inclined to be dry but with good grass and suitable for grazing; not such a country as to attract farming population up to the present time, partly on account of its dry character and partly on account of its distance from railway communication.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it a country that is to be irrigated ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not in the irrigation tract.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 2—electoral division of Cardston.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this division, according to the statement I have, is 2,970 square miles. That is correct, so far as the minister knows ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. There is no alteration in that from the old electoral district.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The government has no information as to the population of this constituency other than he has stated with regard to Medicine Hat ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, there is information contained in the sheets which I gave with relation to the towns in the different districts, and there are towns in the district of Cardston.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Does not this overlap Pincher Creek in the southwest corner ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is an error if it does.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. For Cardston, the Belly River is made the boundary and for Pincher the range line between 27 and 28 is made the boundary. These overlap the southwest corner.

Mr. OLIVER. According to the map, the river and the range line are the same in that particular place.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. When a river is given as the boundary would it not be better to define the boundary as the centre of the stream ?

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps it would. I do not know exactly what the legal definition is.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I am not speaking of the legal definition. But there are islands in these rivers, and when you merely give the river as the boundary you are apt to create confusion. The same is true of range lines or meridians—nothing said with regard to road allowance, so that you may have people on both sides of a road which is the boundary trying to vote in the same constituency.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is provided for in the description of the surveys of Dominion lands—that when you speak of a line, you speak of the surveyed line, which is on a certain side of the road allowance in all cases. So, I think that is defined by the Act.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 3—electoral division of Lethbridge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It speaks here of 'the 14th township.' Should the word be 'township' ? Or has something been omitted ? Or does it mean that there is a range of townships all numbered fourteen ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this constituency, according to the statement the minister has handed me is 4,860 square miles. That I presume we may accept as correct. I merely read these figures to place them on 'Hansard' and to afford opportunity for correction in case any error has been made.

Mr. OLIVER. All the computations have been very carefully made in the department. I cannot vouch for them myself personally, but I believe they are absolutely correct.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the area of No. 2 ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. 2,970 miles, according to the statement the hon. minister has handed in.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 4,—electoral division of Macleod.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this division is 3,063 miles according to the statement the hon. minister has handed in. That I assume we can accept as correct.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to move that a change be made in the boundaries between Macleod and Pincher. I need not explain to the committee the reason for that necessity as I have consulted with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) on the subject. This is a mere change in detail which we think will be more satisfactory to the people of both electoral districts. By the change proposed the north boundary of Pincher would be the north line of township 11. Starting at the summit of the Rocky Mountains and running due east on the north line of township 11 to the 5th meridian, then south 6 miles on the 5th meridian, then east to the east line of township 29, then south 12 miles, instead of 6 miles as shown on the map, then east 6 miles to the west line of range 28, then south, as shown on the map, to the southwest corner of the Piegan reserve, then running easterly along the south boundary of the Piegan reserve to the line between ranges 26 and 27, then south to the Belly river and follow the Belly river to the Cardston boundary, then follow the Cardston boundary to the Rocky Mountains, then follow the summit of the Rocky Mountains to the place of beginning. The changes, while they will make some considerable changes in area, will make very little change in the population and we believe this will be more satisfactory to the people affected. We have received letters from the people there asking for some of these changes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does it take away from or add to the area of Pincher ?

Mr. OLIVER. It takes somewhat away.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much ?

Mr. OLIVER. It takes away 15 blocks from Pincher and adds them to Macleod. In one place it takes one township from Pincher, in another it adds a township to Macleod and in another it takes a township and two fractions of a township from Macleod and adds to Pincher.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It recasts the boundary line taking from each and adding to each ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, just merely to observe the community of interest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the net result about this, as far as the area is concerned, that it takes away from Pincher and adds to Macleod ?

Mr. OLIVER. It takes away 16 townships from Pincher and takes away about 2 townships from Macleod, a net loss to Pincher of about 14 townships.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is about 320 square miles.

Mr. HERRON. Before that passes I would like to have the word 'creek' added to the name.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We have not come to that yet.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that while we can have the area the government is not in a position to give us the estimated population in each electoral district ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand there is very little population in those districts.

Mr. INGRAM. Surely we are entitled to have some estimate of the population in those electoral districts. On what did the government base this delimitation ? Simple area ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that one of the reasons given is to take the area of the land which is drained by a certain river or creek.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman does not quite understand the inquiry of my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram), which I also made myself a while ago. The right hon. gentleman was asked whether he could not, as we go along, give for each constituency an estimate of the actual population at the present time. That is what I had asked for Friday night, and have not yet received.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am afraid it is difficult to make an estimate of the present population. There has been no census for the last four years. The only data we have are the reports of the immigration department and the homestead entries, and these latter we have not got made up to the present time. I do not know that the government has any information of the actual number of settlers in each of these districts.

Mr. INGRAM. Then that portion of section 12 which says 'having due regard to the distribution of population and existing local divisions' is altogether a farce, because there is none furnished.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have furnished the population such as we have it in the records of the government. We have no record of what the population is at this date. We have given last week the population of each of these ridings by the census of 1901, and in addition we have given the recorded vote, the registered vote, the school districts, and the improvement districts. That is all we have.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to see some of that information. Surely the minister handling this Bill can give us the area and the estimated population, he must have it under his hand.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the hon. member will not be absurd. We have given everything we have. We have given the returns by the census of 1901 ; we cannot give him a new census unless we get the authorization of parliament to make one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In this particular case of Macleod, there are 2,628 square miles.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a great discrepancy between the figures given to me. The figures given to me for Macleod were 3,063 square miles, to which should be added about 500 square miles, as I make it, for the addition ; therefore the area would be 3,563 square miles. But the right hon. gentleman mentions an area some 700 miles less.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the figures of the leader of the opposition are those I procured from the department, and they are authoritative so far as we can get them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Within the district of Macleod as it was described in the original draft, the population in 1901 was 3,403. The number of votes polled was 743, and the number of registered votes, according to my figures, was 975.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the right hon. gentleman give us the figures for sections 1, 2 and 3 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would refer the hon. gentleman to page 8007 of the 'Hansard,' where he will find all this information already given by the Prime Minister.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 5—electoral division of Pincher.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) suggests that we should add the word 'Creek' after Pincher. If he will move that amendment we will adopt it.

Mr. HERRON. I move that the word 'Creek' be added to the word Pincher, so that the name of the electoral division be Pincher Creek.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That means that we are to regard the area of Pincher as reduced from 2,180 to about 1,580 square miles?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To fourteen townships.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understood that this change was made for the purpose of meeting the convenience of the settlers in that locality, and that practically it had been decided between the member for Alberta and the Minister of the Interior.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

On schedule, section 6—electoral district of Gleichen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the statement I have this is 6,210 square miles?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The population, census 1901, 2,101; recorded votes, 785; registered vote, 1,286.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I intend to move, when we are dealing with Rosebud, that two townships be added to the northern limit, and if that be agreed to the boundary of Gleichen will have to be moved one township.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. That would interfere with Innisfail.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You want to take two townships out of Innisfail?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes. The local authorities of the town of Olds complain that this schedule cuts the town in two and gives one-half to Innisfail and one-half to Rosebud. They have a local land office there and by shifting the present boundary of Rosebud to the north limit of township 34 it will include in Rosebud the local land office at Olds and obviate the difficulty of cutting the town in two.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would necessitate a change in Red Deer.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. It would make changes all the way up. That was the old line between Innisfail and one of the Calgary districts.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman has complained that the division by the local legislature was improper, but the difficulty that presents itself to-day was not evident in 1902, because Olds, as well as many other towns there, has gone ahead tremendously within the last few years. If these sections are allowed to stand I think I will be able to satisfy the Minister of the Interior that this change should be made.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Gleichen, Rosebud, Innisfail and Red Deer will have to stand.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I am not suggesting that anything should be added to Innisfail in lieu of these two townships. Innisfail will contain a larger area afterwards than some of the others.

Mr. PETER TALBOT. Innisfail is only three and a half townships wide for the greater portion of the way, while Rosebud is five townships wide.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Innisfail has 6,228 square miles while Rosebud has only 3,708.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection to allowing the section to stand until I consult with my hon. friend, but I am afraid the local interests would hardly admit of the change he speaks of. The line between Rosebud and Innisfail is the dividing line during the life of the present territorial legislature, and our object was to interfere with old lines as little as possible. To shift the line two townships further north would disarrange the local conditions in Innisfail to the great dissatisfaction of the people of that constituency.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have a petition from the board of trade and from a number of other gentlemen in Olds advising me that the same petition has been sent to the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. From whom ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. From the Liberal Association at Olds; possibly the minister has considered it.

Mr. OLIVER. I have a telegram here dated the 23rd, which asks that townships 30, 31 and 32 in ranges from 4 to 7 inclusive be taken from Banff and added to Rosebud, extending Rosebud westward four ranges by three townships in width.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that the intention is to allow Gleichen, Rosebud, Banff and Innisfail to stand until my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) can confer with the Minister of the Interior.

Schedule sections 6, 8, 10 and 11 allowed to stand.

On schedule, section 7—electoral division of Calgary city—agreed to.

On schedule, section 9—electoral division of High River.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Our hon. friends opposite have the information with regard to area, and I understand that we are without a copy of it; so that we have delivered ourselves entirely into the hands of the enemy this time. The census population of 1901 is 2,472, the number of votes polled in the last election was 1,021, and the number registered was 1,786.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The area is 4,608 square miles.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 12—electoral division of Red Deer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area, according to the statement given to me by the Minister of the Interior, is 2,280 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The census population of 1901 is 2,009, the number of votes registered is 1,192, and the number recorded in the last election was 843.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 13—electoral division of Vermilion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why does the Minister of the Interior take this riding west of the line of the Beaver Hills lake?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason of the division being made where it is, is because of the great area of the Beaver Hills, which are largely unoccupied on account of being rough country, and on account of the settlements around Beaver Lake having been always separated from the settlements west of the Beaver Hills. They have different connections, different communications, different mail facilities, and so forth, and have always been directly associated with the settlements lying in what is included in the district of Vermilion. The Beaver Lake, instead of being a division of interest, has been really a sort of centre of attraction, and the settlements around the lake are recognized as having a community of interest, and as being divided from the settlement of Strathcona immediately west of the Beaver Hills by the wide area and the impassible barrier of these hills.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How wide is that area and what is the nature of the impassable barrier ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Beaver Hills are a rough area extending from township 47 to township 55 from north to south and from range 18 to range 22 from east to west, that is to say, four townships in width by about nine townships in length. It is a rough and wooded country. Settlement has gone in on the outskirts of it, but it is only within recent years that there has been any traffic at all to Beaver Lake. Of recent years, owing to the exertions of the local members of Edmonton and Strathcona, they have been successful in getting a road directly across Beaver Hill to Beaver Lake, but that road is still in a pretty rough condition and passes through at least twelve miles of practically unsettled country, so that there is a very well defined division between the interests on the west side of the hill and on the east.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister has not elucidated it at all. These people do their trading altogether in Strathcona and Edmonton, except what they do at the little shops around the lake, and the natural association of these people would be with Strathcona.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 14—electoral division of Lacombe.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this, according to the minister's statement, is 2,376 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population, according to the last census, was 2,565. The number of votes registered, 1,174, and the votes recorded 881.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 15—electoral division of Ponoka.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area, according to the minister's statement, is 2,772.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population, according to last census, is 2,775. The votes registered 1,229 and the votes recorded 764.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman give us Vermilion, section 13 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Vermilion, population 1,795, according to last census. Votes registered 1,105 ; votes recorded 763.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. 8,280 square miles is the area, according to the minister's statement.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 16—electoral division of Wetaskiwin.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area, according to the minister's statement, is 2,448.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population, according to the last census, was 3,720. Number of votes registered 1,199 ; number of votes recorded 857.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 17—electoral division of Leduc.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area, according to the minister's statement, is 1,656 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. According to last census, the population was 3,450 ; number of votes registered 1,176 ; number of votes polled 697.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 18—electoral division of Strathcona.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this division, as given by the minister, is 540 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population of Strathcona, according to the last census, is 4,248 ; number of votes registered, 1,278 ; votes recorded, 956.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 19—electoral division of Stony Plain.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The government said they were going to change this name. It might be well to call it 'Olivette.'

Mr. OLIVER. The people of the settlement would be anxious to retain the present name.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Which settlement, the one in the mountain pass ?

Mr. OLIVER. All the people of the district. The name is a historic name, and was given because this was the hunting and camping ground of the Stony Indians. The name is no indication of the character of the country. The people have used the name and are anxious to keep it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then it should be spelt 'Stoney' and not 'Stony.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area given by the minister is 15,408 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population, according to the last census, is 2,398 ; votes registered, 706 ; and votes recorded, 589.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. St. Albert and Stony Plain should be made one district ; or, still better, the five northern divisions should be made into three, and one of the members given to Edmonton and Strathcona locality and the other to Calgary and Rosebud.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does this include any portion of Edmonton ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No ; Edmonton is a constituency by itself, according to the plan I have.

Mr. OLIVER. This is an absolutely rural constituency. There is no town or village in it. The population is entirely agricultural ; there is no better agricultural section in the Northwest Territories, and the part that is settled is probably more closely settled than almost any other. There are ten school districts in operation in the district and six post offices.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The population given by the Minister of Justice includes Indians, of course, for there were not many white people there in 1901. There are big Indian reserves there. Would the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) consent to this idea of taking up the five northern divisions together ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have to confess my absolute ignorance with regard to this distribution. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the members for the Northwest know all about it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Or think they do. I would most respectfully submit to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) that it would be well to consider these five constituencies of Stony Plain, St. Albert, Sturgeon, Peace River and Athabaska at once. The five together have a less population than any one of several of the southern ridings. I venture to say that the whole five have less than one-quarter the white population of some of these southern districts. The hon. minister is making five ridings in the north, while a place like Calgary is given only one member. Now that the minister is beginning his ministerial career, I would suggest to him that he should not assume the responsibility of such an act as this.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not go into the discussion with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) as to the white population of these districts. But I think that he is entirely wrong in his contention. In this distribution the question whether the population is white or not is not considered. For instance, in the Macleod district the question is not asked as to the proportions of whites and Indians, though I believe there are 1,300 Indians there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I did not mention Macleod, but Calgary, where there is a very small Indian population and a very small foreign population.

Mr. OLIVER. When we are considering population we do not ask whether it is white, or half-breed or Indian. I do not think it would be fair to base their distribution upon the number of white people alone who are in an electoral district. A large part of the population of that country is white, there is no question about it, and the people are entitled to just as much consideration as are the people in any other part of this country. We only ask that they should be given a fair proportion of representation. In the last territorial distribution the constituency of Edmonton included practically Stony Plain, Sturgeon and the city of Edmonton, and the vote was 2,269 as against a vote of 648 in the district of Cardston, 826 in Lethbridge, 1,848 in Macleod, 1,028 in High River, 629 in Banff, 1,081 in Innisfail. There were 2,269 in the constituency of Edmonton as it stood, and as it is now divided practically into three constituencies, as it is entitled to be, according to the vote cast.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to tell the minister that the entire population of Stony Plain, St. Albert, Sturgeon, Peace River and Athabaska, including his Indians, is not as great as the population of Calgary alone, which has only one member.

Mr. OLIVER. When an hon. member of this House will make such a statement as that I will admit that I am out of business.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Let him give us the population of those places, including his Indians, his Galicians, his Roumanians and all these people, and he cannot make his population in those five ridings to be more than the population of the city of Calgary to-day.

Mr. OLIVER. The census put the population of the city of Calgary at 4,865. At that time St. Albert had 3,005, three-quarters as much as Calgary, and Stony Plain had 2,398, more than half as much as the district of Calgary, and Sturgeon had 3,272, very nearly as much. Now the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the population of these districts has increased very rapidly since the census was taken, quite as rapidly probably as the city of Calgary. They are close to railways, and there is evidence from the trade of that country that the population has greatly increased. Now these districts, leaving the district of Athabaska out of the calculation, starting with a population a great deal more than the city of Calgary five years ago, have had a proportionate increase with the city of Calgary since that time. In the face of these figures I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman can make such a statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In the first place, I do not believe the census figures are correct; in the second place, the figures I have are the figures of five years ago, and every one knows that Calgary has almost doubled in population since then, if not quite. I was estimating the population of Calgary at about 10,000 or 11,000 souls.

Mr. OLIVER. It was 8,675 when the census was taken five years ago.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The census there, I presume, was a good deal like the census in the province of Quebec. I happened to be down in the Connecticut valley the other day, and the president of the Fitchburg Railway told me that during the last Canadian elections they sent out five train-loads of men to the province of Quebec to vote in that election. I asked how that was, and he said that when the census was taken three years ago every family in the Connecticut valley was counted as belonging to Quebec. So I presume the same game has been played in the new provinces.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Were it not that I have been reading in the Montreal 'Gazette,' I might be tempted to make an announcement to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have heard another story, I was told in Boston that the voters came from Ontario, and not from Quebec. But even if they came from Quebec, my hon. friend should not blame those voters, it shows their attachment to Canada, that they take an interest in this country, and are not annexed to the republic to the south of us.

Mr. OLIVER. I was remarking that the five northern constituencies, when the census was taken five years ago, contained more population than the hon. gentleman claims for the city of Calgary to-day; they then contained 12,070 people.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 20—electoral division of Edmonton city.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that mean the area of the corporation of the city of Edmonton?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand it means the city of Edmonton as it is incorporated for city purposes.

Mr. INGRAM. How many square miles does it occupy?

Mr. OLIVER. Roughly, three miles from east to west and three miles from north to south, although it does not by any means cover the whole area.

Mr. INGRAM. Tell us about the area of Calgary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no area given for either Calgary or Edmonton.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am told Calgary is about two miles square.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was the population of this riding according to the last census?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population of Edmonton was 2,626, registered vote, 1,701, and recorded vote, 1,342.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 21—electoral district of Saskatchewan—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area as given to me is 2,448 miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population at the time of the last census was 6,545, vote registered 1,382 and recorded 1,116.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that there must be some mistake about the area of Saskatchewan; it looks very much larger than these figures would indicate.

Mr. OLIVER. 7,344 miles is the area of Saskatchewan. It has been suggested that it would be well to change this name on account of the conflict with the name of the other province and if the committee will agree I move that it be named Beaver Hills.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No, Olivette.

Mr. OLIVER. This is the district that was formerly called Victoria because that was the name of the old settlement in the district, but on account of that being the same as Victoria, British Columbia, it was thought well not to continue it. It was named Saskatchewan because that is the name of the principal town in the constituency, but it was thought, as that would be the same as the name of the province, it would lead to conflict and the Beaver Hills being one of the well known principal features of the country, it was thought it might be well to call it Beaver Hills.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Beaver Hills are not in that part of the riding at all.

Mr. OLIVER. Part of them are.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not a mile of them.

Mr. OLIVER. The post office and school house of Beaver Hills are in what is known as Saskatchewan and the northwestern portion of Beaver Hills where the principal settlement is located is in that constituency.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would move an amendment that it be called Olivette partly as a tribute to the hon. minister and partly on account of a certain exclamation of certain club members in this town.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think we will pass by Olivette to-night and take Beaver Hills.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to point out that the hon. Minister of the Interior said a short time ago that Beaver Hills ran from the boundary between Leduc and Wetaskiwin, or from a little below that, up to nearly the head of Beaver Hills Lake and now he is naming another riding entirely. He has just stated that the eastern end of Strathcona riding is in the Beaver Hills.

Mr. OLIVER. So it is.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And he wants now to name this constituency Beaver Hills. Why not call it Clover Bar?

Mr. OLIVER. Clover Bar is in Strathcona.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Clover Bar is on the edge of Strathcona.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. This might be confounded with Beaver Hall in Montreal.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not call it Bruderheim or Victoria?

Mr. OLIVER. It was thought that if we called it Victoria it would be confused with Victoria, British Columba or Victoria county.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, Victoria is the proper name.

Mr. OLIVER. That would be the general preference if it were not liable to lead to confusion. I will withdraw my first motion and move that it be called Victoria.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear. I suppose my hon. friend from South York withdraws his motion?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. All right.

Stction agreed to.

On schedule 22—electoral division of Sturgeon—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the statement given me by the minister the area of this is 7,272.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population according to the last census is 3,272; number of votes registered 1,088; votes recorded 782.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have you got the number of Indians in that population?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have ascertained that it includes the Indians in that part of the country.

Mr. OLIVER. It may satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Sam Hughes) to know that there are practically no Indians there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister is mistaken; he ought to know that there are Indian settlements at White Fish Lake and Lac la Biche.

Mr. INGRAM. Is this the constituency Mr. Boyle is nominated for?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware.

Mr. INGRAM. Your own newspaper says so.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 23—electoral district of St. Albert—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the statement furnished us the area of this is 23:616 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population last census, 3,005; number of votes registered, 965; votes recorded, 754.

Section agreed to.

On schedule, section 24—electoral district of Peace River—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this according to the statement given by the minister is 68:215 square miles?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population last census was 1,724.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Consisting of 768 whites and half-breeds and 955 Indians.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. 677 half-breeds, 92 whites, 955 Indians.

On schedule section 25—electoral division of Athabaska—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The area of this, according to the statement which the minister has given, is 57,767 square miles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population is: half-breeds, 824; whites, 117; Indians, 735; in all, 1,676.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the number of whites in the other division?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. 92.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Why not give one seat to these two constituencies and give one more to the more populous centres in the south? Why is an effort made to give such a preponderating influence to these two northern constituencies?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a question which I think we have not solved to the satisfaction of all those who listened to it during a discussion that lasted over four or five evenings.

Mr. INGRAM. How many post offices are in this electoral district?

Mr. OLIVER. One established post office and seven points for the delivery of mail.

Mr. INGRAM. When was the post office established in Athabaska?

Mr. OLIVER. Three years ago, I think.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is that Lesser Slave Lake?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is that in Athabaska or Peace River?

Mr. OLIVER. In Athabaska.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Are there any post offices in Peace River?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know, but mail is delivered at Peace River crossing to the mounted police, who handle it as a post office would. I think mail is also delivered at Vermilion.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is there not a post office in the constituency of Peace River?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe there is not a post office gazetted in the constituency of Peace River.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. minister sure that Lesser Slave Lake is in the Athabaska district?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure as I can be. The idea was to include the waters of Athabaska in the Athabaska division and the waters of the Peace River in the Peace River division, because the waters being a means of communication it was thought it would be the more convenient division.

Mr. INGRAM. Looking at the map supplied to us last year, I am inclined to think that the Lesser Slave Lake post office is in the Peace River district.

Mr. OLIVER. It is in what is called the Hudson Bay district of the Peace River; that is to say, the Slave Lake post office is the headquarters of that trading division, as Port Chippewyan is the headquarters of another trading division; but inasmuch as our division is for the representation of the people according to their interests and not merely according to trade, we thought it was better to divide the agricultural possibilities of the Peace River from the possibilities of the Athabaska waters, which are not considered to be agricultural, but will for some years depend upon furs, minerals and timber.

Mr. INGRAM. The western boundary line of the Peace River constituency will border on British Columbia, and to my mind the Lesser Slave Lake post office would be located in that district.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand, the population of these two ridings, some particulars of which we have now which were not before available, is as follows: for the Peace River district, according to the census of 1901, 92 whites, 677 half-breeds 955 Indians; for the Athabaska district, according to the census of 1901, 117 whites, 824 half-breeds, 735 Indians. I have already expressed my opinion of the policy which gives to each of these ridings one representative in the provincial legislature when constituencies which have admittedly 10,000 or 12,000 people are given only one representative. The two divisions together, according to the census of 1901, have a population of 209 whites and 1,501 half-breeds.

This distribution I regard it as a piece of political trickery, which is unworthy of this administration or of the gentlemen who are bringing it in. That is all I have to say about it at present, but I will have something to say on the third reading. To give one representative to a population of that kind is to give them four times the representation in the legislature which the electors in any other part of the riding would have. That would be bad and outrageous enough, but to do what is proposed by this Bill, in the face of what has been admitted here, is one of the most outrageous attempts at gerrymandering ever perpetrated in any country, not even excepting the United States of America. It is just as well that we should call this by its proper name. According to the statement of the Minister of the Interior and of the Prime Minister, according to the estimate given by both these gentlemen of the population of this particular division, according to that exaggerated estimate put forward by the Minister of the Interior, which has no other foundation than the casual statement made in conversation by some one from the Northwest—giving them all the advantage of that—you have an estimated population of 5,000 whites and half-breeds for this northern country, as I pointed out before, a basis of representation which gives to 5,000 in this northern country two representatives and to 245,000 people in the rest of the province twenty-three representatives. It is only necessary to state the figures, as they have been stated over and over again in this House, to characterize the attempt which is made by this proposed distribution. I do not think you could find too strong words in the English language to characterize such a distribution.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. What has the Finance Minister to say about it? Has the Minister of Justice no word to say about the policy or the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. We have talked a week on this subject. I have said all I have to say, and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition says he has said all he has to say——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At present.

Mr. OLIVER. It will be better to leave further discussion until we can put ourselves on record by our vote on the third reading. I have no hesitation in justifying, from every point of view of public policy, the proposal submitted. The strong language used by the hon. the leader of the opposition, which is not customary to him, is used under misapprehension of the case. I do not think he realizes the work which falls to the local members in their duties of representing constituencies, or he would not have expressed himself as he has done.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are four constituencies not disposed of, and we might arrange to have their boundaries accepted.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to trespass on the time of the House, but I would suggest a change which I consider satisfactory. The town of Olds is on the boundary line between Rosebud and Innisfail. While that is the old boundary, it must be recognized that the town has increased in population, and the purpose of the revision is to consider local interests. The dividing line has been retained where it is because we wanted to make the division as equitable with regard to population as possible, but now that we have decided our general plan I would be very glad, out of consideration for the views of the people interested, to move that the boundary line between Rosebud and Innisfail be the line between townships 33 and 34—that is allowing the boundary six miles north of Olds, which will give them that advantage over what they have at present. I move that the boundary line between Rosebud and Olds be the township line between townships 33 and 34, and that the boundary between Banff and Rosebud be the line between townships 29 and 30, in ranges 4, 5, 6 and 7; and that the line then run north between ranges 7 and 8. The southern boundary of Innisfail would be shifted a township north to correspond with this proposal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How far west would you take Rosebud?

Mr. OLIVER. On the west side of range 7.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Why not remove the north line of Gleichen to the north line of township 38?

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend from Calgary will move that I will agree to it.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I move that the dividing line between the constituencies of Gleichen and Rosebud be the line between townships 28 and 29.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that we have agreed to alter the boundaries of Gleichen, Banff, Rosebud and Innisfail—that the line between Rosebud and Gleichen be extended westward to the British Columbia boundary and six miles north of the present division. The Rosebud northern boundary goes six miles north and the Innisfail northern boundary remains as it is.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. My suggestion was that the line between Gleichen and Rosebud be moved twelve miles north—that is two townships. I understand that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) objects to that?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the boundary between Gleichen and Rosebud should move six miles north as the line between Rosebud and Innisfail is moved six miles north. It leaves Rosebud the same size and adds a township to Gleichen. I may say that I know all the towns along the line, and I think this would throw them pretty well into the constituencies they wish to be in.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. My desire was to have the northern boundary of Rosebud the northern limit of township 34.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, I understand that my hon. friend (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) means to move the northern boundary of Rosebud two townships north ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes, instead of one.

Mr. OLIVER. That would be objectionable from the point of view of the interests centred at Innisfail. It would bring the line almost as close to Innisfail as the present line is to Olds. It would be better to make the line between Innisfail and Olds the two principal towns, the line I suggested first. I move that the boundary between Gleichen and Rosebud be the township line between townships 28 and 29 from range 10 west of the 4th principle meridian.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understood the northern boundary of Gleichen ran to the British Columbia boundary.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, we might say that—it would make it simpler. Take the township line between townships 28 and 29, and run it to British Columbia as a boundary between Gleichen and Banff on the one side and Rosebud on the other.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The northern boundary of Gleichen will be the southern boundary of Rosebud. Then, the northern boundary of Rosebud——

Mr. OLIVER. Will be the line between townships 33 and 34 west to the British Columbia boundary ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then I understand the geographer of the Department of the Interior will draw an amendment to these sections to give effect to the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior. With that understanding, I move that the schedule be adopted as a whole.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) suggests another amendment to the boundary of Pincher Creek. There is an oil proposition down in the very corner of Alberta which is operated from Pincher Creek, they run the stage to it from Pincher Creek. It is in Cardston according to the present boundary and the proposal is to take it into Pincher Creek. The proposal is that townships 1 and 2 in ranges 30 and 31 be a part of Pincher Creek.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And it will be necessary to alter Cardston also.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, to take a little part off the western part of Cardston and add it to Pincher Creek.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We will leave the drafting of that amendment also to the geographer of the Department of the Interior to be prepared by him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that these will be placed before the House in advance of the third reading ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They will be distributed to-morrow, so that if there is any objection it can be taken at once.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that the schedule be adopted, subject to the amendments to be made. Shall the motion be agreed to ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On division.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As we are on these divisions, we might take up Saskatchewan by consent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We might have done so had I anticipated it. But I understand that my hon. friend from Qu'Apelle (Mr. Lake) desires to get some further information.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not press it. Going on with this Alberta Bill, I move that section 12 which covers the schedule, which we have just approved, be adopted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you going to leave in these words that have no sense ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think we might strike them out. I move that the words 'having due regard to distribution of population and existing local divisions' be struck out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They seem to be somewhat satirical as they are.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not in the mind of the man who drew the section.

Amendment agreed to and section as amended agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We might take up section 8, dealing with the seat of government ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) is anxious to have that stand. We might take up the section relating to the lands and let us move our amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 20 relating to Dominion Lands is carried.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What sections are there standing now?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will read them. Section 2, the application of the British North America Act; section 3, the capital of the province; section 15, continuation of laws, &c.—this clause was agreed to, but upon the understanding that the leader of the opposition might make any observations he chose in connection therewith. I thought myself I might suggest some verbal changes. Section 16, with regard to education; section 20, lands vested in the Crown; section 24, date of the commencement of the Act. Then I wanted to have section 22 reconsidered, that is the Hudson Bay clause, which was carried. If agreeable to the leader of the opposition, I will take that up now. Section 22 as it now reads contains some words at the end to which the representatives of the Hudson Bay Company objected. The words are:

And all rights, privileges and properties conferred on the Canadian government by the said conditions shall, so far as they relate to matters within the legislative authority of the province, be subject to and be vested in the government of the said province.

My hon. friend will remember that this provision is intended to give effect to an agreement made between the imperial authorities and the Canadian government at the time the lands of the Hudson Bay Company were acquired. The provision then made was that no law would be passed which would in any way affect the conditions of that agreement. The representatives of the Hudson Bay Company say that the words to which I have just referred would be a change in the agreement, and they ask that these words be struck out. I do not think that they affect the Hudson Bay Company's position at all, but as they object to them, and as it is made a condition of the transfer by the imperial authorities, perhaps we had better adhere strictly to the terms of the original agreement. I therefore move that these words be struck out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand the Minister of Justice, he is of the opinion that notwithstanding the omission of these words, the rights referred to will belong to and be vested in the government of the province, subject to the agreement which is referred to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As our attention has been drawn to it by the people in England, we think it is better to adhere strictly to the terms of our original agreement with them.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved to reconsider section 15.

Motion agreed to.

On section 15, laws, courts and officers, continued.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would suggest two amendments here. One has been suggested by the Minister of Justice in a memorandum which he handed to me. One is that section 15 be amended by striking out these words:

Including the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act and the amendments thereto, notwithstanding the repeal thereof by this Act.

And substitute the following in lieu thereof:

Including, notwithstanding the repeal of the Northwest Territories Act and the amendments thereto by this Act, such of the provisions thereof as remain applicable.

Following exactly the wording of the memorandum of the Deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How is that going to be affected by a new clause which I have proposed to move? I think it is all right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You can let the section stand until you have time to consider it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I intend to move an amendment to section 24, or to redraft it in this way:

The Northwest Territories Act, being chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes in all Acts amended thereof, are hereby repealed as respects said clauses, provided notwithstanding such repeal so much of the said Acts and of any order or regulation made thereunder as was in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act, and is not inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, or as to which this Act contains no provision intended as a substitute therefor, shall continue in force in the said clauses in pursuance of and for the purpose of section 15 of this Act.

That, I think, might make unnecessary the concluding three lines of the hon. gentleman's amendment. But I will communicate this section to him, and he may see how far it will be necessary to make the change. The first part of his amendment meets my view, but the three last lines might be unnecessary in view of this new clause I have suggested. I intended to add another section to clause 15 in respect to criminal procedure in the Northwest Territories. As my hon. friend is aware, in the Northwest Territories the criminal procedure differs somewhat from the procedure in other parts of the Dominion and in order to cover the point I think this proviso may be useful. I will consider that also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. minister read it so that it would appear upon 'Hansard'?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To clause 15, subsection 2, I beg to move the following proviso:

Provided, that if upon such abolition the legislature constitutes the superior court of criminal jurisdiction the procedure in criminal matters then obtaining in respect of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories shall until otherwise provided by competent authority continue to apply to such superior court, and that the Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time declare all or any part of such procedure to be inapplicable to such superior court.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 15 and the proposed amendment stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think we have disposed of everything except sections 2, 8, 16 and 20. Section 2 and 16 must of necessity be taken up together. As I view it I do not think we can very well dispose of section 2 until we dispose of section 16.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I think not. We will allow that to stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then, we want to consider this proposed section 24 at the same time as we consider section 15. That is the repealing section. Then we will keep section 2 to be dealt with at the same time as section 16. Section 8, in respect to the capital of the province, is, I understand, to be allowed to stand over. Will my hon. friend take up the question of lands to be vested in the Crown under section 20 ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we might make some progress with that. We have an amendment and we may as well move the amendment at least.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I beg leave to move to substitute the following for the original section 20 :

All crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto shall continue to be vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada, subject to the provisions of any Act of the parliament of Canada with respect to road allowances and roads or trails as in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act, which shall apply to the said province with the substitution therein of the said province for the Northwest Territories.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The change is in using the words 'Crown lands' instead of 'Dominion lands' ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I have adopted the words of the British North America Act. In view of the fact that the words 'Dominion lands in the said province' might not cover lands, mines and minerals. Then paragraph 2 of the section would read as it is in the original :

2. The Rocky Mountains Park shall continue to be subject to the provisions of the Acts of the parliament of Canada applying thereto, and to regulations made or to be made under any such Act : Provided that the provincial laws shall apply to and be operative within the said park so far as they are not inconsistent with such Acts and regulations.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That is giving the Dominion more jurisdiction than it has over parliament square here ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. I may state my difficulty in connection with this section so that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will see the way I propose to meet it. Section 2 makes applicable to the new province the provisions of the British North America Act which are applicable to the original united provinces, so that it might possibly follow from that that section 109 of the British North America Act would apply to the provinces ; that is to say that all lands, mines and minerals and royalties, except as we are now making provision for them, might pass to the province. My intention is to keep the lands, mines, minerals and royalties vested in the Dominion. I thought I would make that point clear. A difficulty occurred in the case of the Attorney General of British Columbia vs. the Attorney General of Canada in regard to the gold mines in British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I follow the hon. minister's suggestion in regard to the amendment. I do not know that I follow exactly the effect of section 109 of the British North America Act upon the change.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Perhaps I have not made my point clear. Section 2 of this Bill would make applicable all the provisions of the British North America Act. Then section 109, which is one of the provisions of the British North America Act, provides that:

All lands, mines, minerals and royalties belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the union, and all sums then due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any interest other than that of the province in the same.

Section 109 might be construed, being made applicable by section 2, as conveying to the new provinces all lands, &c., and bearing in mind the difficulty that occurred in connection with the case of Attorney General of British Columbia vs. Attorney General of Canada and I thought it would be well to make the point clear, because, when it comes to be a question of principle as to whether the lands should pass or not, in our view we want to keep the lands and we want to make the point clear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I see the point. You are providing by section 20 against the operation of section 109 of the British North America Act ; therefore, you use the language that is employed in the section to negative the effect of that section ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exactly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In view of the changes in the wording of section 20, it will probably save time and controversial discussion as to the wording of our amendment if we let that stand for the present.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Very well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the particular object is concerned we shall endeavour to use the same language the minister has used in order to reduce it to a mere question of principle.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is better to set the details at rest on one side or the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very well.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That disposes of the Bill with the exception of the capital and the school clause; section 2 being considered as part of section 16. The present section 24, being the clause fixing the date on which the Act will come into operation will become section 25, and I propose to move a new clause 24.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a new clause?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. A new clause altogether. I move that the following clause be inserted as clause 24 in lieu of clause 24 of the present Bill :

The Northwest Territories Act being chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes in all Acts amended thereof are hereby repealed as respect to said clauses, provided that notwithstanding such repeal so much of the said Acts and of any order or regulation made thereunder as was in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act and is not inconsistent with anything contained in this Act or as to which this Act contains no provision intended as a substitute therefor shall continue in force in the said clause in pursuance of and for the purpose of section 15 of this Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That will appear on 'Hansard' so that we may consider it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We should have a short title. I think we should say this Act will be known as the 'Alberta Act.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very well.

Mr. BARKER. We have an amendment to the preamble. Would the minister like to have it read now so that it may appear on 'Hansard' and he may consider it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. The preamble of the Bill omits any reference to the British North America Act, and in fact it treats that Act as if it has no bearing upon what we are doing here in creating a province. The preamble begins with the Act of 1871, as if we were proceeding under that Act and no other. This amendment begins with the recital of the Act of 1867 and it reads as follows :

Whereas in and by the British North America Act, 1867, being chapter 3 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom, passed in the session thereof held in the 30th year of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, it was among other things enacted that it should be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, on an address from the Houses of the parliament of Canada, to admit the Northwestern Territory into the union, on such terms and conditions as in the address expressed and as the Queen should think fit to approve, subject to the provisions of the said Act ; and that the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf should have effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

And whereas pursuant to such power and authority, and to such address, by and with the advice aforesaid, the Queen by Order in Council on the 23rd day of June, 1870, did order and declare that from and after the 15th day of July, 1870, the said Territory should be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada ; and the parliament of Canada should from the said date of admission have full power and authority to legislate for the future welfare and good government of the said Territory.

And whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1871, being chapter 28 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom, passed in the session thereof held in the 34th and 35th years of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, it is enacted that the parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of any such province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province and for its representation in the said parliament of Canada.

And whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1886, being chapter 35 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom, passed in the session thereof held in the 49th and 50th years of the reign of Her said Majesty, the parliament of Canada was empowered to make provision for the representation, in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, of the said Territory, the same not being included in any provision of the Dominion ; and it was thereby also enacted that the said Act, and the British North America Act, 1867, and the British North America Act, 1871, shall be construed together.

And whereas, that part of the said territory hereinafter described has not been included in any province of the Dominion, and has heretofore been provisionally governed by and pursuant to legislation of the parliament of Canada.

And whereas, it is expedient to establish as a province that part of the said territory hereinafter described, and to make provision for the constitution and administration of such province and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government thereof and for its representation in the parliament of Canada.

Therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :

We make the full recitals to show we have authority to act upon the statute of 1871 ; to recite the latter statute only would not show how we come to have the power to act upon it. We, also put in the Act of 1896 which in its very terms makes the three statutes one. The Act of 1886 expressely stated that this parliament could only create a province if the territory dealt with had not already been included in any province, and therefore we make a recital which explains that. The preamble of the Bill omits very material words.

It uses the words 'good government in the second paragraph as if we had power to make laws for the good government of the new provinces when all we have power to do is to enable a new province to pass laws for the peace, order and good government of the province. I use the exact words from the imperial statute. I move that Mr. Chairman, and I leave it to the consideration of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what is the object of the amendment?

Mr. BARKER. In the Bill, the Act of 1871 is recited as the origin of the authority of this parliament to create this province. That is not so. Our authority begins with the British North America Act of 1867. That Act was followed by the statute of 1871 and again by the Act of 1886, and it is under the provisions of the whole of these three Acts that we are proceeding to create this province. I submit that it is not proper to recite a part only of the authority. In fact, we on this side do not agree with the interpretation of the Minister of Justice, or at all events with the interpretation put by many gentlemen opposite on the Act of 1871. I do not think it gave absolute power to this parliament to create a province without regard to the provisions of the Act of 1867. Therefore it is important, in showing our powers here, to recite all the Acts under which we are proceeding. For that reason I would make the full recital. I think that would have been the course of a conveyancing counsel in settling deeds in matters of importance. He would not omit such important recitals as British North America Act and the Act of 1886.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We will consider that. Before I move that the committee rise, perhaps we might have an understanding as to the order of procedure for to-morrow with respect to this Bill. Will it be convenient for us to take the educational clauses to-morrow ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps we might take the land clause first, and after disposing of that take the educational clauses.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will it do to take all the clauses that remain undisposed of, and leave the educational clauses to the last ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes ; I think that would be the best course. Of course, we arranged to discuss clause 2 and clause 16 together, because they are very intimately associated, as to their effect at least. But in moving any amendments in one or the other, we shall have to consider them separately for that purpose. Apart from that, the two might be discussed together.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So that we might take up all the other unfinished business in reference to this Bill, and leave clauses 2 and 16 to be dealt with together ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes ; I think that would be convenient.

Mr. MONK. Is it intended to take up clause 16 first or clause 2 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that is a matter of absolute indifference, so far as the government is concerned. I think the logical order would be to take up clause 16 first and clause 2 afterwards.

Mr. MONK. I believe there are two amendments, one to each of these clauses, and we would have to separate the discussions.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think it likely that we can reach either of them to-morrow. Perhaps it will be more convenient to fix the next day for these two clauses, and dispose of the rest of the Bill to-morrow.

Progress reported.

ORDERS DISCHARGED.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I wish to say that it is my intention to drop Bill (No. 157) respecting the district of Mackenzie, and Bill (No. 158) to amend the Keewatin Act. I do not think these Bills will be necessary in view of the amendments which I propose to make to the Northwest Territories Act. I am making provision for another system of government than that which we had in contemplation at the time these Bills were introduced for that portion of the Territories which remain undisposed of by the Autonomy Bills. The intention is practically to unite all the Territories, with the exception of Keewatin, under the administration of the Governor in Council. I move that these orders be discharged.

Motion agreed to, and orders dischargd.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 27, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of George Smith, Esquire, for the electoral district of North Oxford, in the province of Ontario.

MEMBERS INTRODUCED.

Hon. Chas. S. Hyman, member for the electoral district of London, introduced by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Hon. Wm. Paterson.

George Smith, Esquire, member for the electoral district of North Oxford, introduced by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Hon. Wm. Paterson.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Hon. J. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 186) to provide for the regulation of wireless telegraphy in Canada. He said: The Bill is a very simple one; it is to regulate the establishment of wireless telegraphic stations. It should have been introduced during the last session of parliament, in accordance with a suggestion of the British parliament. It is almost an exact copy of a Bill which was passed by the British parliament in 1904. It provides that no wireless telegraphic station may be established in Canada without a license from the Governor in Council. Its object is to regulate the establishment of such stations and to provide that they shall be conducted according to law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to bring to the attention of the government two Bills among the Public Bills and Orders as to which I have been asked to say a word. I am not dealing with the question whether or not the Bills should pass, but whether or not an opportunity should be given to have them discussed and, if the House is of opinion that they contain wise provisions, to have them passed. The first one to which I refer is Bill (No. 120), which is intended to provide penalties for making false representations to intending immigrants. The Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister are no doubt familiar with the scope of the measure. A perusal of it indicates that it is important and ought to be passed. If false representations are held out to persons intending to come to this country, and if by reason of these they are brought to Canada, the tendency of immigration towards our shores may receive a check. It is not creditable to the country that such practices should prevail. The other measure to which I refer is Bill (No. 67), which proposes to amend section 523 of the Criminal Code. I have no special opinion on the merits of this measure. I understand that it is intended to make it clear that when a person is on trial for certain offences the option of a trial by jury shall rest with the accused, and not with the magistrate before whom he is brought for trial. Whatever may be the opinion of the House as to the merits of this proposal, it would seem to me that, as it deals with an important matter connected with the administration of the criminal law, it would be only right, under the circumstances, to give to those interested in the Bill an opportunity to have the House pass upon it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not prepared at this moment to express any opinion as to the propriety of having these Bills placed among government orders, even with the view of simply affording an opportunity to the promoters to have them considered by the House. However, we will take the matter into consideration, and I will inform my hon. friend what we can do at some later day.

WHARF AT INDIAN HARBOR.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to mention one other matter. I do not know whether the construction of public wharfs is in the hands of the Minister of Marine or the Minister of Public Works.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Public Works.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the Minister of Public Works be good enough to make a note of the fact that I have been asking for a copy of the petition for the construction of a public wharf at Indian harbour in the county of Halifax, N.S., including the signatures to the petition? Will he be good enough to send it to me or lay it on the table at his convenience?

Mr. FOSTER. In order that the Minister of Public Works may not lapse into idleness, will he kindly look up in his department and see if they have that short return on the construction of wharfs and buildings and the like of that and the incomes derived therefrom, which small piece of business was given into their hands some two months ago. I would like very much to get it before the budget speech is delivered. I do not know when that is going to be delivered. It is rather unusual for us to get into July before having it, but I suppose it will be delivered shortly. I do not see the Minister of the Interior here, but would like if the government would answer whether they propose to finish the investigation into the Nixon case. The investigation held was very partial and inefficient, and the report does not at all cover all the ground of the charges. I would like a return of all the transactions in the sub-agency of Dominion lands at Macleod since the appointment of Nixon—giving in detail the applications, the names of the applicants, the subjects of the application, the moneys received and remitted in each case, with dates, in respect of lands, timber, minerals, purchases, licenses and leases, besides the date of the employment of the son in the office and the age of the son when first employed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yesterday, when the Nixon matter came up, I had no knowledge of it until the statement had been made by my hon. friend. Immediately after the discussion I went to my hon. colleague, the Minister of the Interior, and asked him to investigate the alleged facts and then confer with me regarding what action would be taken by the government, if any.

Mr. FOSTER. The report of the Privy Council appointing Mr. Myers as a Commissioner in the scrip case has been brought down. It seems to be confined to the complaints made by the half-breeds in North Dakota, or made on their behalf. Two petitions are here in the House, and I supposed were wide enough to take in all the petitions from the half-breeds. I want to call attention to a very important point. In a letter written by Mr. Chaffey on the 15th April, 1905, to Mr. Cory, the deputy minister of the department, among other things he said this:

> You will thus see every move in the department in this matter—whether premeditated or not makes no difference—has been in effect playing into the hands of Mr. Macdonald to the detriment of all other parties connected with the matter.

That is quite as important an allegation as the petition of the half-breeds. It is an allegation from a respectable barrister in Winnipeg, who throws a reflection on the department which is thoroughly warranted by the papers brought down. In another paragraph he says:

> I maintain that this is sufficient ground on which to hold up these cases until the matter be further examined.

Over and above all this he says to Mr. Cory, with whom he had a personal conversation some time before: You are possessed of a knowledge of fraud on the part of Macdonald with reference to these particular cases, and you are the only head I know of at present of that department and are therefore responsible and should take further action. That is still a graver statement than that made by the half-breeds. It is the statement that Mr. Cory quite well knew that frauds and misrepresentations had been going on in these matters in the department, and he called on him as the only head he knows at that time to take action. These two allegations intimately affect the department; and if there is to be any investigation, it ought to be sufficiently wide to take in that charge. Mr. Chaffey is either responsible or not. He has made his charge in writing, it is before parliament, and it is due to the department to have that matter thoroughly examined, either by your present commissioner or some one else. As to other matters which may develop when the other papers come down, we will speak of them when the papers are brought down. There is another point I would like the hon. gentleman to make a note of. I do not think any investigation will be satisfactory unless arrangements are made for a proper presentation of the charges and carrying on of the trial on behalf of the aggrieved persons. I think the government should follow the precedent it has established in other cases and allow competent counsel on behalf of the prosecution. I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not want any investigation which will not be absolutely effective, and it can scarcely be effective unless competent counsel on both sides are allowed to conduct the examinations.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is great difference between the allegations made on behalf of the half-breeds and those made by Mr. Chaffey. The half-breeds allege that they were induced to sign papers which were not of the character represented, and being ignorant, unable to read or write, they easily fell into the trap. That is a special charge which can be investigated. But the charges made by Mr. Chaffey are of an indefinite and vague character. I know nothing of the correspondence except what I have heard from my hon. friend, but my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior will look into the matter. As I understand it, Mr. Chaffey makes no specific allegations, but speaks generally of fraud. At present I would advise the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) not to decide to hold an investigation until he has had an opportunity to thoroughly master the facts in the whole transaction. When he has had an opportunity to consider the case, from first to last, and ascertain what frauds are really charged against the department, it will be for him to say whether he will deal with the case himself or whether he will order an investigation. At present, I think, it would be premature to promise that an investigation should be made in the charges of Mr. Chaffey, because they do not seem to be specific; they do not seem to cover a case which could be investigated. As to the manner in which the investigation should be conducted, if one is held, certainly I agree that no money and no effort should be spared to make the investigation thorough and to bring to light all the facts in the case.

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). As to the returns referred to by the member for North Toronto, I may say that they will be very voluminous and will call for the collection of information that is not in the department at Ottawa, as well as information from several other departments. I will personally ask that the preparation be hurried in every way, but I cannot promise that it will be brought down at any particular time.

Mr. OLIVER. Inasmuch as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has read the allegation of Mr. Chaffey against the department, I would ask him to be kind enough—for the purpose of placing it on 'Hansard'—to read the last paragraph of the last letter of Mr. Chaffey to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I have the last letter that Mr. Chaffey wrote to the department. The last I heard of Mr. Chaffey's correspondence he had assigned all his rights, titles, grievances and everything else to Mr. Macdonald—and the purpose of that assignment, I should think, is sufficiently obvious.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. gentleman kindly read the paragraph? I think he has not stated frankly the contents of these letters.

Mr. FOSTER. It is up to my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) to read it. He has it. I told him I hadn't it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It was understood that we would today proceed with the Autonomy Bill. But I have been asked by some gentlemen on the other side of the House to give them an opportunity to discuss a matter connected with the cold storage system. The government has no objection to that course, and in order to give these gentlemen their opportunity I will move that the House go into Committee of Supply. But I would like it to be understood that if we want to we may move later on during the present sitting.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that perhaps the subject of cold storage might have seemed more timely on a warmer day, but the course proposed by the Prime Minister will be all right.

IMMIGRATION FROM CONTINENTAL EUROPE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to direct the attention of the government to a telegram which appeared in one of the newspapers yesterday, respecting a contract between the Canadian government and the North Atlantic Trading Company of Amsterdam. I understand that such a contract has been entered into for the purpose of encouraging immigration from the continent of Europe, the company being given a subsidy of £1 per head. According to the report, which comes from Amsterdam by cable, no such company exists or is known in that city. Is the government at liberty to give any information on that subject? I ask the question, as it seems peculiar that a company of this character, to which a fairly large subsidy is being given, should be so absolutely unknown in the place where it is supposed to have its headquarters. And I would like to ask at the same time whether the government has any knowledge of the intended immigration to Canada from Russia of a sect called the Molokans? I know nothing of the matter except what appears in one of the newspapers of the 24th inst. Is it intended by this subsidy to encourage the immigration of these people or has this arisen subsequent to the contract I have referred to?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There was some question as to the wisdom, all things considered, of submitting that contract to the House—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not asking that.

Mr. FIELDING. That question was to be the subject of a conference between some members of the opposition and certain ministers of the crown. Pending that, we prefer not to make any statement about it. As to the other question, I will have to ask my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to give information as to the class of immigration. As to the wisdom of bringing down the contract, it was intended to have a conference with the leader of the opposition on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be satisfactory. I would be glad to confer with hon. gentlemen opposite. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) reserves his decision in the matter and I reserve mine. Would the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) be good enough to tell us whether he knows anything about the Molokans to whom I have referred ?

Mr. OLIVER. No knowledge has arrived yet, but it will be transmitted to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) as soon as it comes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the Minister of the Interior to say that he knows nothing about this intended immigration?

Mr. OLIVER. The matter has not come to my personal knowledge. I will inquire in the department to learn whether the officials there have any information on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister will be good enough to make inquiry and let us know at a later date?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

MR. CHAFFEY'S LETTER.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER. I find that I have here what I suppose to be the last letter written by Mr. Chaffey to the department. I did not know that I had the correspondence here:

Winnipeg, May 22nd, 1905.

Secretary, Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—I beg to notify you that I have assigned, transferred and set over to R. C. Macdonald, Winnipeg, all right, title and interest, which I had or claim to have to scrip under the Order in Council of 13th August, 1904, under orders sent in by me, and that I have assigned and transferred to the said Macdonald to act on behalf of any claimants of scrip.

I therefore withdraw all claims whatever under and by virtue of said order sent by me, and withdraw all protests lodged by me against scrip being issued under orders filed with the department by said Macdonald, to which he now has any claim or order.

Yours truly,

B. E. CHAFFEY.

I think that is the last letter. I do not notice that he assigns or takes back the statements which he made to Mr. Cory.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He keeps his grievance.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. He withdraws all protests he has made against scrip being issued for Macdonald.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For a consideration.

SUPPLY—COLD STORAGE.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I wish to thank the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) for the opportunity of bringing forward to-day the subject I wish to place before the House. I think it is a question of sufficient importance to deserve the attention of the government. The subject I refer to is the manner in which our perishable products are transported in our country and from our seaports across the Atlantic. I wish to urge upon the minister the necessity of a more aggressive policy in the transportation of these perishable products. As the people are well aware, the farmers of the older provinces have been compelled to realize that they must give up the growing of hay and grain, for export and must keep cattle, hogs and sheep, and export these and also such products as butter and cheese.

During the last two months we have been spending days and weeks in discussing matters which should have been handed over to the provinces to deal with. Had we given the new western provinces the control of the lands, the minerals, the schools and the redistribution, the other important matters with which this parliament is properly charged would have been more fully discussed. We have voted money for a transportation commission to devise ways by which our perishable products of the farm could be taken to the markets in proper condition. But that commission has not yet been able to present to this House any report with reference to their labours. We have also a railway transportation commission. I think these commissions are a good thing, but although the Railway Commission is necessary to the general advantage of the Dominion of Canada, we find that this government is not urging upon that commission the necessity of attending to its duties, and looking after the interest of transportation. Why is not the transportation commission at work ? Whose fault is it ? Is there nothing to do ? I sincerely hope that the government will tell these gentlemen to proceed at once with their labours in reference to the transportation of our perishable products because the farmers of this country are losing millions of dollars for the lack of an adequate cold storage system and proper transportation in which to convey our perishable products across the Atlantic. These products are among the most valuable of our exports, and they require a great deal of skill to produce them. No matter how much care the farmers give to the production of butter and cheese and other perishable products, unless they have proper transportation facilities and adequate cold storage from the factories to the markets, they cannot expect to realize the same returns that they otherwise would. Cattle and their products require to be transported with a good deal of care. We may have farmers' institutes, travelling dairies, live stock associations, fruit growers' associations, agricultural and horticultural societies without end, but unless we have proper transportation facilities we cannot expect to reap full returns for our labors. The farming industry is the greatest industry in this country. It is estimated that we have 500,000 farmers. The area now under cultivation is 30,000,000 acres. Value of farm corps in Canada, 1904, $363,000,000. Value of farm property in lands, buildings and farm implements, $1,500,000. The exports for the year 1903-4 were, agricultural products (domestic), $37,138,875 ; animals and their products (domestic), $63,812,117, total, $100,950,992. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture to tell us why it is that while last year, if I remember rightly, we exported in the neighbourhood of $114,000,000 of agricultural products, this year we only exported $100,000,000. I have no doubt the minister will tell us that we did not export quite as much wheat out of the country in 1903-4 as we did in the previous year. But I want to tell him that we had a lot of perishable products that we would have exported had proper transportation facilities been provided. I desire to call the attention of the House to the importance of this question, and I will refer for a moment to the value of some of the perishable products in each of the provinces. The province of Prince Edward Island has 5,000 acres of apple orchard, mostly young trees, and 100,000 other fruit trees. Nova Scotia has 35,000 acres in orchards, and exports each year an average of 500,000 barrels of apples. New Brunswick has 8,900 acres in orchards and fruit, 1,000,000 apple trees, less than one-half of these in bearing ; production now is over 500,000 bushels. Quebec produced last year 2,025,113 bushels of apples. Ontario has 500,000 acres in orchards and fruits, 7,551,639 apple trees of bearing age, 1,989,983 young trees not bearing. The crop of 1904 according to the Ontario Bureau of Industry was 43,659,413 bushels. In round numbers, there were 15,000,000 barrels of apples, giving an average of a little over 2 barrels per tree. And when you come to realize that the total exports of apples in this country only amounted to a little over 1,500,000 barrels, and when you take into consideration that the estimated exports of canned fruits and dried apples amounted between four and five hundred thousand barrels, you will perceive that something is wrong. In Ontario also we have 811,725 peach trees bearing, 470,772 young peach trees not bearing, 2,620,036 grape vines in the province which produced in 1901 23,156,478 pounds, not mentioning small fruits such as berries, cherries, plums, &c. I merely give these figures to call the minister's attention to the importance of the subject which I am presenting to the House. The census of 1901 gave a total of 21,278,465 trees of which 15,000,000 were apple trees. Of this number 6,304,402 or about 30 per cent, were not of bearing age. Now if the minister is not able to cope with the transportation of the fruit products that we have at the present time, how can he expect to cope with the largely augmented production which we expect to have in a few years, in consequence of the encouragement which the government is now giving to the people to plant more fruit trees of different kinds. An enormous and increasing production is now going on in practically every province in the eastern part of the Dominion. Manitoba, the Northwest and British Columbia are not great fruit countries. Another word with regard to apples. The estimated production of apples in the province of Ontario, according to the bureau reports, is about 15,000,000 barrels ; the statistical year-book only gives 13,000,000 barrels. The Ontario Bureau of Industries gives it as 14,553,137 barrels, and the rest of the provinces are credited with 4,944,922 barrels. The total in all the provinces is 19,548,059. Thus in round numbers 20,000,000 barrels were the production of Canada in the year 1904. Deducting from that the 2,000,000 barrels which were exported there were left in the country practically 18,000,000 barrels. Suppose that we have wasted and eaten in the various provinces of the Dominion 8,000,000 barrels, there would still be left 10,000,000 barrels of the apple crop of this country that should be going to the markets of Europe. If we could export these apples in the best cold storage systems, we could easily increase the value of that product at least 50 cents a barrel which would give to the farmers of this country an extra $5,000,000 to spend. I realize the importance of this question for more reasons than one, because not only in the western peninsula in which I live, were there hundreds and thousands of barrels rotting on the ground during the last year, but in the eastern part of the province of Ontario many many thousands of barrels have been rotting for lack of proper transportation and cold storage facilities to the markets of Europe. I would urge upon the minister the great necessity of looking into this question more sharply and more carefully for the benefit of the apple growers of this country.

There has been a marvellous increase in the production of fruit in Canada between the years 1891 and 1901. In 1891 Canada produced only 8,561,145 bushels of apples or in barrels, 2,853,715 whereas to-day she is producing annually 20,000,000 barrels. We are still urging the people to go on and plant orchards, to go into the fruit industry and yet we are not able to cope with the production which we have for export at the present time.

The growth in the production of other fruit during this decade has been as follows :

Fruit.	1891.	1901.
	Bush.	Bush.
Pears	229,279	531,837
Cherries	196,859	336,751
Plums	269,114	557,875
	Lbs.	Lbs.
Grapes	12,252,231	24,302,634

I merely quote these figures to show the enormous development of the fruit industry of the Dominion of Canada and the urgent necessity for providing adequate transportation facilities. The development of the cold storage system in the United States has revolutionized the apple trade of that country. It is estimated that there are in the United States 150,000,000 cubic feet of space devoted to cold storage applied to the different perishable products of which 50,000,000 are devoted to fruit.

The United States Department of Agriculture reports as follows :

Cold storage is having an important influence in developing the apple industry. . . . The apple is now the principal crop in large sections of the country.

I wish to call the attention of the minister to some other United States reports. I have here a report called 'The Apple in Cold Storage' issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. This report says :

Apple culture has attained such proportions in the United States that the harvesting and disposition of the crop have become matters of national importance. A general failure of the crop of winter apples in any season results in serious disturbance of commercial conditions in many important agricultural regions and involves heavy losses to mercantile and transportation interests, as well as to the growers. At the same time it inflicts a serious hardship upon consumers by depriving them of this the most useful fruit in their household economy.

. . . . .

The successful keeping of apples on a large scale in refrigerated storage, which began about 1890, was welcomed by the growers and dealers as a solution of the problem.

I wish to call the attention of the minister to the temperature at which the apples are being taken into cold storage in the United States :

The investigations indicate that the ripening processes are delayed more in a temperature of 31 degrees to 32 degrees F. than in 35 degrees to 36 degrees F. The apple keeps longer in the lower temperature, it scalds less, the fruit rots and molds, is retarded to a greater extent, while the quality, aroma, flavour, and other characteristics of the fruit are fully as good, and when removed from storage it remains in good condition for a longer period.

We have to-day three systems of cold storage, the direct expansion, the brine circulation system and the indirect expansion, or cooled air system. I have not time to take up the different systems with reference to their advantages and disadvantages, but I wish to say that it is necessary to have the very best class of cold storage machinery in order that we may secure reasonably good results.

I wish now to call the attention of the minister to page 9 of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture of this House, with reference to the markets of Europe. Mr. W. A. Mackinnon chief of the fruit division of the Department of Agriculture in 1903 visited the fruit markets of Great Britain. In reply to a question from Mr. A. A. Wright, he said :

At Manchester, Bristol, Hull, Leith and Aberdeen there are received occasionally shipments from Canada, but Liverpool, Glasgow and London get the bulk of Canadian fruits.

. Now I want to say just a word as to the views of the British trade as to Canadian fruit. In regard to apples, when good, they are said to be unsurpassed in quality and appearance, and they are always wanted when they arrive there in good condition. There is practically an unlimited demand for good fruit to retail at about 2d. or 3d. a pound. Above 3d. the sale goes off wonderfully. The demand is then restricted to people of means.

By Mr. ROSS (Ontario) :

Q. How many pounds are there in a barrel of apples?

A. They call the Canadian barrel 140 pounds.

Q. That would realize about $7 a barrel when retailed?

A. About that.

I wish to call the attention of the minister to this in order to show him that only a small proportion of the markets of Europe are being covered with the fruit that comes from this country. A little further on in the same report of the committee Mr. Smith asked a question in reply to which Mr. Mackinnon said :

I might give the committee the prices realized by a Canadian grower who shipped to Hamburg No. 1 greenings. The average price was $4.85 per barrel. The expenses were : freight to New York, 38 cents ; New York to Hamburg, 75 cents ; cold storage, 25 cents ; commission, say 17 cents. That is a total of $1.55, leaving a net return of $3.30 per barrel.

The markets are demanding a better quality of fruit and this necessitates greater care in the selection of the fruit and also in the transportation. Cold storage increases the commercial value of the article shipped, and I would ask the minister now, if we cannot have distributing agents at the different European ports who would see that our products are properly distributed to the purchasers. The minister himself has reported that Canadian products remain for days on the docks of European ports, and it can easily be seen that if this should happen to fruit shipments, the fruit must deteriorate and the return to the producer be consequently less. I understand that the Minister of Agriculture has a number of men in Europe looking after the transportation records, and I would suggest that the services of these men should be utilized to take care of the fruit after its arrival and see that it is distributed properly. I would ask the minister also if he has considered the establishment of cold storage in England, so as to equalize the distribution of the perishable products in that market. I would point out that we have four means of transporting our products. The crudest form is taking our goods and battening them down in the hold of the vessel like wheat or oats. There is another system which consists of ventilation, requiring fans to introduce the sea air and exhaust the foul air in the hold of the vessel. The cool air system is a sort of hybrid between cold storage and the crude form of battening down our goods to which I have referred ; and while the cool air system is a very good thing yet it costs 36 cents per barrel for apples. Some years ago when the Minister of Agriculture asked this House to grant him money to place ventilating machinery in the transatlantic steamers, he told us that the cool air system would be provided without any extra charge to the shipper. I quote from page 5167 'Hansard,' 1901 :—

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the rates last year were raised one-half. Has the minister been able to make better arrangements this year ?

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was for freight in cold storage chambers. This is for freight in the ordinary hold of the vessel, and one of the conditions is that the rates shall be the ordinary freight rates.

Mr. CLANCY. How does this compare with the cost of the Mackenzie cold storage ?

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cost on a steamer of the ordinary carrying size would be about $8,000. We would pay $1,333 each year for three years. This is for the ventilation of the hold of the vessel.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that without the mechanical cold storage ?

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We must cool the air by mechanical apparatus, the cost of which with ventilating shafts is about $8,000. The other arrangement was a mechanical apparatus to cool the air in a closed chamber into which articles like butter and poultry, which require low temperature were placed. But vessels carrying in their holds in the ordinary way thousands of barrels of apples or thousands of boxes of cheese, when the hatches are closed tight, the cheese or the apples develop a heat of their own, the effect of which is to reduce their value. We propose to arrange the hold so that there will be ventilating shafts through it and out of it and an intake of air from the outside. This air would be cooled by mechanical apparatus and forced through the hold, cooling the air about the barrels or boxes.

I will later on show that the minister was mistaken when he said that there would be no charge made for the use of the cool air appliances, and he himself must know that at the present time the transportation companies charge for this service. The fourth means of transportation is by cold storage proper, which is the best system for carrying our perishable products to the mother country, and in this connection I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the treatment of cheese in cold storage increases the value of that product not only in this country but in the transportation across the Atlantic. The United States people have taken a great deal of pains with reference to the cooling of their cheese products, and in their report on the subject it is stated :—

To cool cheese the use of a temperature from 52 to 58 is advocated by the Canadian authorities. This stands midway and should be at least 40 degrees.

It is also stated that as a result of the experiments in the United States, cheese was kept at temperatures from 25 to 30 in curing chambers for a period of 18 months and with the very best results. It is distinctly stated by the United States investigators that by the ordinary cooling of cheese in ordinary factories there is a loss of from four pounds to seven pounds on each package, whereas if the cheese is properly taken care of and placed in cool curing rooms there is a saving of at least two pounds to the package on shrinkage, and not only that but also an additional value added to the product amounting to at least from one-half cent to one cent per pound. The minister has in his own possession letters from England showing that the cool curing of cheese which has been lately undertaken, has enhanced the value from one-half cent to one cent per pound. I call attention to the fact that the cooling of cheese at from 52 to 55 or 58 degrees is nothing like as valuable to the cheese producer as if that cheese were cured at 40 and below. The United States authorities after referring to the temperatures used in the Canadian cooling stations state distinctly that our Minister of Agriculture is only going midway in the process and that he is not going anything like far enough. I am satisfied that if the hon. gentleman studies this question more closely he will discover that this statement is true. The authorities in the United States have made tests with temperatures as low as 15 above zero, and these tests have been most satisfactory. As a result, they declare that the lower temperatures are giving the most satisfaction to the people of that country and that it has reduced the shrinkage and enhanced the value of cheese. Now, with reference to the butter industry of this country. At page 24 of the report of the conference of dairy instructors and experts, Mr. J. A. Ruddick, chief of the dairy division of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, made the following remarks :

We are beginning to learn, although it seems to be a slow process, that it is important that butter should be kept at as low a temperature as possible from the time it is made. Canadians have been losing a good deal of ground in the markets of Great Britain through negligence on this point. In that respect we are a long way behind our friends in New Zealand. All the refrigerator steamers sailing from New Zealand carry frozen meat. It is a matter of necessity that the temperature in the chamber be kept very low. As a matter of fact they are carrying frozen meat at a temperature from zero to ten degrees. Butter, when it is shipped from New Zealand to England, is placed in the chamber along with the frozen meat. The steamer is one large refrigerator, and the cargo is mainly frozen meat. The refrigeration on them was provided, in the first place, for the frozen meat trade. As the butter trade has grown, the same boats have been used for the purpose, and so they have the best possible service for sending butter to England. One great point is, that as the butter must be put in the same chamber with the frozen meat, it is not accepted for carriage unless it is below the freezing point of water. If butter comes alongside to be loaded, and the thermometer shows it to be above 32 degrees, the engineer will send it back to store. To take warm butter aboard and store it in the refrigerator chamber would have the effect of spoiling the frozen meat, which is very valuable cargo. Butter to be exported from New Zealand is put in store and frozen, and kept at a temperature of 10 degrees at least four full days before going aboard the steamer. So the butter is kept at a low temperature from the third or fourth day after it is made until it reaches England. This is one reason why New Zealand has been making such great progress in securing the trade of Great Britain for her butter. They are getting a good price, almost equal to Danish.

I want to call the minister's attention to this paragraph, because our butter industry is losing ground. We did not ship in 1904 anything like the quantity of butter that we did in 1903; and we cannot expect our butter industry to grow and expand as it should when our butter is carried in the cars at a temperature of from 53 to 58, and in the vessels crossing the Atlantic at a temperature of 35, in face of the fact that the Argentine Republic and New Zealand are sending their butter to England well cared for all the way. Mr. Ruddick goes on to say :

I do not wish to go too far afield, but as we compete with New Zealand and with Argentina, it is important that we should understand their methods. In New Zealand they have artificial refrigeration in nearly every creamery. The butter is shipped once or twice a week to cold storage, and kept there at a temperature not above 10 degrees. It reaches the ocean steamers at a temperature not higher than 32 degrees, no matter how far it has to be carried. It can be carried for a day's journey down the coast without refrigeration, and yet without the temperature rising above freezing point.

The minister has been encouraging the creameries to put in artificial refrigerator plants. I know of some creameries that have done so. I happen to be the president of a creamery which is manufacturing at least a ton of butter a day. Three years ago, after reading the minister's reports and looking into the question ourselves, we decided that it would be in the interest of the farming community to establish a thoroughly up-to-date creamery, with a refrigerator plant, so that the products would be kept at a low temperature, placed on the cars at a low temperature, and sent to the markets of England in proper condition. We have been carrying on that industry for three years, and although we have been trying to send our butter from the factory in a temperature below 32, it is placed in the cars which have an average temperature of from 53 to 58, and into the boats to cross the Atlantic at a temperature of 35, and when it reaches the other side it is allowed to remain on the docks for days at a temperature of perhaps 90. What encouragement have we under these circumstances to go on with the work which we have undertaken? If the minister urges us to place in our factories cold storage systems he should see that provision is made in the cars and in the steamers which cross the Atlantic, for keeping the butter at a proper temperature. The minister may say that he cannot provide a better temperature than that provided on the cars. If he looks at the frozen meat trade of the Swifts and the Armours, who send millions of dollars worth of products from Chicago to New York every year, he must realize that he can get a better temperature on the cars than an average of from 53 to 58. This is a statement made by Mr. Knowlton :

Now Mr. Knowlton reports that he found the temperature of butter when delivered on the cars in some cases as high as 58 degrees, while 52 degrees was very common. It was only occasionally that the temperature of butter coming out of the cars or coming out of the creamery was lower than 48 degrees. The lowest temperature noted was 38 degrees, but that was very rare.

Let me call the minister's attention to his own statement with reference to the refrigerator car service:

Now, as to the refrigerator car service, I am not going to bother you with many details. You are all familiar with the facts, or, if not, you can get the details as to rates and rules for shipment in refrigerator cars running to Montreal from over forty different points. These cars are not intended to refrigerate the butter —they cannot be kept cold enough for that. The object is to keep the butter in a cool condition if it is delivered so. If it is at 64 degrees when it goes into the car it cannot be delivered cool at Montreal. One of the cars that arrived in best condition in Montreal last year came all the way from Calgary. The butter was at a temperature of 48 degrees. The reason why it reached Montreal at this comparatively low temperature was that the butter was cold when it was put into the car, and the car had been iced well along the way.

I have tried to show the House the advantage of low temperature for conveying cheese products and butter products from the factory to the market. I want to draw the minister's attention to his cold storage appliances at Woodstock and Cowansville and other places in the country. Some years ago he placed a six-ton machine at Woodstock, but he found that it was merely a toy machine. He removed the machine from the factory, and tried to put in cold-air storage. He distinctly says that the temperature of the Woodstock creamery is from 55 to 58. I want to ask the minister if he believes that that temperature is of very great benefit to the farmers of this country as a demonstration of the necessity of having cold storage in their factories. It is certainly a very high temperature. I wish the minister to compare that with the temperature at which the New Zealand butter has to be placed in the boats. The hon. gentleman has cold storage establishments in this country that have cost the country many thousands of dollars. Why did he not put in a proper plant, a plant sufficient to cool the temperature and keep it down so that the goods could be taken into the cars and transported in better condition. On page 102 of the Dairy Inspector's report, with reference to the Brockville curing rooms, I find that the temperature there was for twenty-four days in the last two years at an average of 74. How can you expect good results with that temperature? The average in the Brockville curing rooms was from 60 to 70 degrees, yet the minister is demonstrating to the people the necessity of such cold curing rooms. I wish to be understood as not condemning cold curing rooms or cold storage plant if sufficient to cool the butter and cheese and other goods placed in them. I believe it to be a good thing to demonstrate to the farmers the necessity of cold storage, but you cannot do that with temperatures ranging from 53 to 58. The minister should put in a machine that would bring the temperature down below freezing point at least. He could then expect that the products would be transported in altogether better condition than they are at present.

Mr. FISHER. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the temperature in the cool curing rooms ought to be down below freezing?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes; I have tried to prove from the reports from the United States that the lower the temperature the better the results. They have made tests as low as 15, and distinctly state that the lower the temperature the better the results and the better the quality of the cheese. I feel satisfied that if the hon. minister will investigate he will find that to place cheese below the freezing point is not a disadvantage, but rather an advantage.

On page 12 of the Minister of Agriculture's report we find the following with regard to the cool curing of cheese:

> The cool cheese curing rooms at Woodstock, Brockville, Cowansville and St. Hyacinthe, for which I asked an appropriation from parliament in 1902, have now been in operation for three seasons. During this period 119,805 boxes of cheese have been cured at these establishments, being a sufficient quantity to make an impression on the market and to attract considerable attention. I am informed that during the past season cool cured cheese have been sold at an advance of one-eighth to one-quarter of a cent per pound above the highest price obtained at some cheese boards for ordinary cured cheese. The difference in price will be greater when the superior qualities of cool cured cheese are better known. The merchants who received the cheese had them examined by members of the trade in their various localities. The report on one lot was as follows:
> (a) Cool curing during the summer months is a decided improvement over the ordinary method, and improves the quality of the cheese not less than two shillings, and in some cases four shillings per hundredweight.

I again call the attention of the minister to this fact, that a temperature of 55 is certainly better than one of 80 or 90, but he is not going far enough. He requires to cool the cheese at a lower temperature, and after it is thoroughly cured carry it in the lowest possible temperature on the cars and across the Atlantic. The hon. gentleman has letters bearing out those facts and many more with reference to the shippers. Let me call his attention to this fact, that in Canada the total cheese production amounted to 232,980,716 pounds; and if you would increase the price by a cent a pound, you would have an increased value of $2,334,807.16 to the farmers of this country. If we could have proper curing rooms and transportation across the Atlantic, that would be a great advantage to the farmers. It would have the effect of placing into their hands $2,000,000 more than they are getting to-day. The hon. minister will not deny that the products, to some extent, are gathered together in box cars, and although the minister is not responsible for the gathering of these products in different parts of the country, yet the refrigerator cars he has should be more thoroughly insulated, and more care should be taken to provide facilities for keeping the temperatures lower than they are kept at present. To some extent the hon. minister subsidizes the cars of this country. He ices them free of charge and subsidizes them to a certain extent, yet they are not giving the service they should. The loss in moisture is less at lower temperature. The commercial qualities of cheese carried at low temperature are better and command higher prices. Cheese can be held long at a lower temperature without impairment of the quality. Fruit ought to be carried at 35 to 36, but is being carried across the Atlantic at a very much higher temperature. On transportation and cold storage the government has spent as follows: $254,740.02 on steamships; $13,997.35 on cars; $74,105.44 cooling rooms and care, total $342,842.81; with what result? From the minister's own explanation, in reply to a question I asked him early in the session regarding the quantity of cheese, butter and eggs and apples taken in cold storage and in cool air ventilated storage, we have these figures: Cheese in boxes, none of it in cold storage, 102,238; boxes in cool air and in ventilated or ordinary storage, 1,968,869. It can therefore be readily seen that, so far as the cheese industry is concerned, the shippers are not taking advantage of cold storage plant crossing the Atlantic, and no doubt it is because they are charged an extra price if they do so. Butter to the extent of 487,182 packages went in cold storage, and only 202,516 in ordinary storage. Of our exports of eggs, 1,000 cases went in cold storage, none in cool air and 78,625 cases in ventilated or ordinary storage. I am sure the minister will agree with me that it is not wise to have such a large proportion of so perishable an export as eggs carried in ordinary storage. Of bacon, none was carried in cold storage; 18,072 cases in cooled air, and 68,720 cases in ordinary storage. And now I come to the export of apples. I wish to call the minister's special attention to this. Of the apples exported in barrels, only 5,450 barrels were carried in cold storage ; 1,521 barrels in cooled air, and no less than 321,749 barrels in ordinary storage. Surely the minister will see that if he was giving this subsidy for cooled air transportation, he should have compelled these steamship companies to carry the apples in that manner without making the people pay 36 cents per barrel extra. Of the apples exported in boxes, only 827 boxes went in cold storage ; 1,003 went in cooled air, and 24,728 in ventilated storage. The minister says :

> The bulk of the butter discharged from each steamer is removed within a reasonable time, but the balance is allowed to remain for days before delivery is taken.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the contracts he entered into with these transportation companies. One is a contract with Messrs. H. & A. Allan, dated April 19th, 1900. This is the same as all the other contracts that I have before me regarding refrigerator storage. They call for a temperature of not more than 30 degrees Fahrenheit for butter and not over from 34 degrees to 38 degrees for cheese and fruit. The minister must realize, as well as I do, that the thermograph records show that these products are not carried below 30 degrees as required for butter or 34 degrees to 38 degrees for cheese and fruit, but that the temperatures were very much higher. And yet, the minister cannot compel the transportation companies to keep the temperature within any fixed limits. Not a word is there in these contracts to compel the companies to maintain on these vessels any specific temperature. The suggestion is made in the contract, but what else do we find ? We find in the fifth paragraph a provision that neither the government nor the steamship owners shall be responsible for the condition of cargo from any cause whatever ; but every reasonable precaution shall be taken by the steamship company to protect the cargo. But there is not a word by which the steamship companies are compelled or under which the minister can compel them, to carry our perishable products at any certain temperature. I will call his attention to another fact. As I understand, under this contract he must grant $10,000 to each of the steamers for cold storage. I have here an estimate of the cost of a cold storage plant to be built at Colborne, Northumberland county, Ontario. This plant will afford 400,000 cubic feet of storage room and the estimated cost is $50,000. The minister pays $10,000 for a half interest in the cold storage of a steamship, or at the rate of $2.00 per cubic foot, whereas these people in Colborne get their cold storage at the rate of 25 cents per cubic foot. And, under these contracts as I have said, the steamship companies may carry our perishable products across the Atlantic at any temperature they please. The government officials have no power to inspect, and if they go on the boats on their crossing the Atlantic, they go because they are allowed that privilege by the owners of the boats. I shall show later on many cases in which the temperatures stated in the contracts have been exceeded, and yet the minister is quite powerless to compel a change.

Let me call attention to the contract with reference to cooled air. That contract says that the carriage of cheese and apples and other perishable products is to be in a temperature not over 60 degrees Fahrenheit. Think of carrying the perishable products of Canada across the ocean at a temperature of 60 degrees. How can the minister expect apples which should be carried at a temperature of 35 degrees, to arrive in a good condition on the other side of the Atlantic if they are carried at a temperature of 60 degrees ? I have here two copies of thermograph records that were taken on the decks of vessels when crossing the Atlantic. And what do they show ? One shows the average of the outside air of the ship to have been 48 to 53 degrees. Yet, the minister enters into a contract with a company that fixes even the nominal maximum at 60 degrees. I am sure the hon. minister does not realize the importance of this matter ; he has not considered what it means to have these perishable products carried, as I can show they have been carried, at from 60 degrees to 70 degrees. But even though they were carried at 90 degrees the minister would be quite helpless, for he cannot compel the company to maintain proper temperature.

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. gentleman state at what time of the year these thermograph records on deck were made ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. One is a thermograph record on the steamship 'Corinthian' to Glasgow, September 28th ; and the other is on the steamship 'Lucanian' for Glasgow, on October 5th. These are the only two records we have on the steamers crossing the Atlantic. I want to suggest to the minister that there should be a record kept on the deck of every steamer, and then we would have a knowledge of what goods were being carried in the holds of the vessels. Now on page 5168 of the 'Hansard' of 1901, the minister stated there would be no extra cost for this service, yet we find in this same contract that the people have to pay a large amount of money for the transportation of these products in this cold air system. They are charged 36 cents per ton for butter and cheese. The minister must admit frankly that he said he would not make a charge on goods crossing the Atlantic, and still he enters into a contract with these men allowing them to make a charge, and compel the people to pay a large amount of money. I wish to call attention to the report of the Minister of Agriculture on page 23, where he says :

On the whole, the temperatures in the cold storage chambers for butter were not kept as low in 1902 as in 1901, and the department has advised that the temperature for butter should be maintained under 30 degrees Fahrenheit, and as near 20 degrees Fahrenheit as practicable.

Now I want to call the minister's attention to some thermograph records.

Total number of thermograph records taken, 215. Butter from Bristol, 30 records give as follows : 19 charts, average 30 or under ; 6 below 20 part of the time, 2 of which show an average of 10 degrees for the voyage from start to arrival.

If that steamer was able to carry two cargoes at a temperature of 10 below, the minister must realize that the steamships are not doing justice to our perishable products if they carry them at these higher temperatures. This steamer took over five out of the 18 below 30, to Bristol, and only one averaged over 30. I would recommend the minister to publish reports of all ships that are carrying products across the Atlantic in proper condition, and those that are careless in carrying those products, so that the people may know how their goods are being taken across.

Of the 11 charts to Bristol over 30 degrees, 9 would reach 30 degrees the last day, and would all average about 35 for the voyage. Butter should be at 10 degrees above zero. Many cold storages keep butter below zero. Buffalo cold storage is 5 degrees below zero. Cheese should be carried at from 32 to 33 at most. Butter at 35 is like cheese at 78 or 80.

Now here is a shipment in ordinary storage :

Bristol, ordinary storage, cheese, 3 shipments averaged 60 degrees. Cool air compartment, cheese, 1 shipment averaged 60.

How can the minister explain to us that by the cool air system these people are sending over that cargo of cheese at 60 degrees temperature, and here in the ordinary storage they are able to carry it over, as is done by the other shipments for Bristol, at a temperature of 60 degrees?

Montreal for Manchester : apples, ordinary storage, 1 average 49. Butter refrigerator, 3 average 27, 2 average 28, 1 average 29, 2 average 30, 3 average 33, 3 average 35. Liverpool, cheese, cool air, 8 records : 3 average 50, 2 average 55, 1 averages 60, 2 average 65.

I am sure the minister must agree that the cool air system carrying that cheese over does not compare satisfactorily with the refrigerator system, and that the men must be either very careless in handling that product, or it should be carried over at a lower temperature.

Cheese, ordinary storage, 2 records : 2 average 65, 1 averages 65, 1 averages 68. Apples, ordinary storage, 4 records : 2 average 58, 2 average 60. Steamship 'Bavarian,' average 64. Steamship 'Parisian,' average 65.

We cannot expect to carry apples over at a temperature of 65, and get good results in the markets of Europe.

Apples in refrigerator : 3 average 33, 2 average 45. Fruit in refrigerator : 1 averages 50. Steamship 'Vancouver,' August 26, refrigerator, butter, fresh salmon, cases of tongue, July 8, steamship 'Kensington : first two days, 42 average 35 ; August 14, steamship 'Bavarian' : butter and meat, average 34. Liverpool, beef cold storage : 2 average 26.

I am sure the minister can see that if they can carry meats at a temperature of 26 and lower, there is no excuse for them not carrying butter at that temperature. I am not going to call attention to the different thermograph records, only the average of all the records that have been carried across the Atlantic, and summing them all up. I wish to place before the House some of these facts :

Butter, 2 carried at a proper temperature of 10 degrees above zero, practically only 2 out of 215 shipments have been carried at the proper temperature ; 1 was carried at 15, 12 at 20, 8 at 25, 82 at 30, 40 at 35, 1 at 40.

The minister will agree with me that butter should not be carried at anything over 30 degrees, yet here he has carried 40 shipments at an average of 35 degrees, and in these contracts he says that these men should not carry butter at over 30. This is the way he compels steamship companies to keep temperatures at 30 degrees. What is the minister going to do with reference to these shipments of butter that have been sent over there, eight at 35, one at 40 and one at 45 ? Then we had shipments of apples; there were eight shipments at 35 degrees, that is at about the proper temperature for the carriage of apples, two at 40 degrees, two at 45 degrees, three at 50 degrees, three at 55 degrees, seven at 60 degrees, three at 65 degrees, one at 70 degrees. Out of thirty shipments of apples practically only 8 have been carried at the proper temperature. Of cheese there were shipments, one at 35 degrees, two at 40 degrees, one at 45 degrees, 12 at 50 degrees, three at 55 degrees, 13 at 60 degrees, five at 65 degrees, and one at 70 degrees. The minister will realize that cheese should be carried at an altogether lower temperature than that ; he cannot expect the best results unless he secures this. I feel that I was justified in the statement I made that in connection with the cold storage system in the cars and in the boats the minister has to a certain extent been humbugging the people of the country. How long does he expect the people are going to submit to a loss of millions of dollars on their apples and other perishable products in crossing the Atlantic without his putting forth a hand to assist them ? The loss to Ontario on the shipments of 165,306,573 pounds of cheese at 1 cent per pound, is $1,653,065.73 and the shrinkage, two pounds loss for every one of 2,066,332 boxes at 10 cents a pound would be $413,266.40, or a total loss to the province of Ontario on cheese alone on account of improper curing and transportation of over $2,000,000.

Then let us go further. There are in Ontario, 57,102 patrons of cheese factories, and this means to these people a loss of $36.18 each per year. It practically means that the farmers of Ontario are losing a good cow each every year because the minister is not taking proper precautions with reference to the transportation of their perishable products.

The apple production of Ontario amounts to 15,000,000 barrels, and there is a waste and home consumption of 5,000,000 barrels as I said before. This leaves 10,000,000 barrels for export. The trade and navigation returns tell us that the total export apples of Canada, amounted to 2,000,000 barrels. Would it not be better for the minister to tell the people of the country to cut down their trees instead of allowing them to go on and expend money in planting trees and increasing production when he is not able to afford transportation for the product? I am sure the minister cannot say that the system is better this year than last year. I would like him to explain what improvement there has been. He may tell us that he has taken out the cold storage appliances from the cool curing rooms in Woodstock and Brockville and substituted cool air appliances, but I am confident that he is not improving them by that means to any material extent. It is not the farmers who are to blame for this loss, they are doing their best, packing their apples in boxes and taking the greatest care in shipment. We have the Fruit Marks Act and are practically compelling the farmers to have their butter and cheese in proper condition and yet in the transportation of these products the government are most careless. It is the duty of this government to find markets for all these products and see that proper transportation facilities are provided for them. This promises to be a great fruit year, and might I ask whether the minister has given any special attention to the transportation of the fruit products of this country this year, so that he can improve the condition of the trade. Will we again see hundreds and thousands of barrels rotting on the ground ?

Then too, more attention should be paid to the St. Lawrence route for the transportation of our products. In 1903, $132,000,000 worth of freight went out by that route. The insurance rates are high, the Montreal harbour dues are high, steamers cannot navigate day and night owing to lack of sufficient aids to navigation, while inefficient and expensive methods of loading, and an inferior pilotage system all hamper the trade. If the St. Lawrence route were properly safeguarded and protected, the trade of this whole continent would be revolutionized. Cannot these matters be remedied for the benefit of the whole of Canada ? We are legislating day by day and spending millions of dollars in assisting the transportation of the products of the Northwest Territories. We are proud of that country, and justly so, proud of its great expansion and present progress. It adds to our commerce and to our national growth, but I must urge upon the Minister of Agriculture the necessity of paying more attention to the older provinces. The older provinces have need of most careful attention with reference to transportation of their perishable products on which they must largely rely for returns from the outside world.

Then too, better provision should be made for the transportation of these products to the western portions of Canada. These products cannot be carried out there in proper condition unless proper facilities are provided.

I would ask the minister if the boats that are equipped with cold storage appliances have separate engines to take care of the cold storage. If he is relying on the steamship engines to run the cold storage plants then he cannot expect that the temperature will be kept down when the vessels are in port. Has the minister made any experiments looking towards the adoption of any new ideas along the line of transportation and cold storage ? If he has done so he should explain them to the House in order that they may be debated here. New Zealand and the Argentine Republic are able to carry their goods across through very hot climates for 30 days. Mutton in New Zealand has doubled in value since the cold storage system was applied to the meat trade of that country. If the minister examines into it he will realize that unless we keep the temperatures down we cannot expect to have our products carried in good condition. The minister should at once bring in a Bill similar to the Cattle Inspection Act. We inspect the cattle before they leave the country, we go on board the ships and see that the regulation space is provided for each animal.

This government should have power to control the temperatures to which perishable products are subjected on the steamships which we subsidize. I have taken up a great deal of the time of the House on this matter, but my excuse is that it is one of the most important subjects the government has to deal with. I know that the farmers of Canada are losing millions of dollars by reason of the lack of proper transportation facilities for their products in this country, as well as in crossing the Atlantic and in Europe. I urge upon the Minister of Agriculture the necessity for paying strict attention to this matter, not a year or two years hence, but at once, so that our increasing exports of perishable products may realize their full value in European markets. I know that this parliament is willing to grant all necessary money for that purpose ; I know that this parliament has always been willing to vote money to secure the best means of transportation, but I regret that the minister has stopped half way, and that he has not gone further to make this system of transportation a complete success. I beg to move in amendment :—

That all the words after 'that' in the main question be left out, and the following substituted therefor:

Canada annually exports a large amount of farm products of which a considerable portion are of a perishable character. That the depreciation of value of such products during transit results in great loss to the farmers of Canada ; that the cold storage facilities provided under contract with the government should be thoroughly up-to-date and efficient, and should be such as to afford an adequate return for the subsidies granted.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I have listened with the closest attention and with much interest to my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) and I have considered the proposal which he makes in this amendment. It is usual to regard an amendment to the motion to go into supply, as a motion of censure on the government, but having carefully weighed the terms of this amendment I cannot read into it any censure or want of confidence in the government, and believing that the assertions in that amendment are quite true I shall be glad to accept them. In this amendment my hon. friend says :—

Canada annually exports a large amount of farm products of which a considerable portion is of a perishable character.

That is undoubtedly and absolutely true :

That the depreciation of value of such products during transit results in great loss to the farming community.

Equally true :

That the cold storage facilities provided under contract with the government should be thoroughly up-to-date and efficient, and should be such as to afford an adequate return for the subsidies granted.

That is an expression of opinion in which I absolutely concur, so that I have no reason to ask the House to reject the motion. Let me compliment my hon. friend on an evident desire to study the question carefully, but I must at the same time say that he is evidently neither very familiar with the facts nor with the desires and necessities of the trade. He has fallen into some few errors, and I shall endeavour to point out to him a considerable number of facts which do not coincide with the views he has advanced. First of all, the hon. gentleman has unfortunately mixed up the temperatures and the management of cold storage and cooled-air storage. The temperatures in these two systems on our steamships are decidedly different and must be different, and in dealing with them very careful notice has to be taken as to whether the temperature spoken of is the temperature of the cold storage chamber or the temperature of the cool air chamber.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the minister explain the difference ?

Mr. FISHER. The cold storage chambers which were first inaugurated a number of years ago, were for the purpose of carrying products which required decidedly low temperature and which did not require particular ventilation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which system was inaugurated first ?

Mr. FISHER. The cold storage, in 1897. The cool air chambers were started by us in 1901. The cold storage chambers are carefully insulated with mechanical apparatus for keeping the temperature down to any desired degree.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister be good enough to specify the special class of products which each system is intended for ?

Mr. FISHER. The cold storage chambers were especially designed for the carrying of butter, as well as, if the trade warranted it, meats, and particular tender fruits. It was thought at one time that eggs and even apples, especially the summer varieties could be advantageously carried in cold storage, but no practical advantage has been taken of that by the trade. For the carriage of cheese and the ordinary export apples, the cooled air was thought to be better than the insulated cold storage chambers.

Mr. SPROULE. What were the temperatures in each system ?

Mr. FISHER. The temperatures would vary according to the product. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) unfortunately mixed up the temperatures of the cooled air with the cold storage system, which was decidedly misleading and which made his remarks to some extent incomprehensible. My hon. friend all through his remarks spoke as if the government had the power to regulate all this business on the steamships—as if we only had to give an order to a steamship company to do so and so, and it would be bound by contract or by law to carry that out.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the hon. minister will excuse me, the remarks I made along that line went to show that we had given to those steamship companies over $250,000 to put in cold storage; and the minister, when subsidizing them to that extent, should have compelled them to keep a certain temperature.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate what my hon. friend said ; but the contracts were made for a term of years and for a specific purpose. When you make a contract it is not possible for one of the parties to it to dictate absolutely all the terms of the contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I ask the minister if it was not possible in that contract to compel the steamship companies to keep certain temperatures ?

Mr. FISHER. At the time the original contracts for cold storage were made, it was with the utmost difficulty that the department was able to secure any kind of a contract from the steamship companies. The original contracts for cold storage were entered into for the purpose of making an experiment in the Canadian trade—for the purpose of inducing the steamship companies to do for Canada what they had not found it to be their interest to do, what they doubted the expediency of doing, and what had never been done for the Canadian trade before. The consequence was that we had to hold out inducements to them to put in could storage plants. We had to promise to pay half the cost of the installation of the cold storage plant, which we did. The contract covered a term of three years, and during those three years we bound the companies to perform certain services. When the contract expired, the steamship companies were absolutely free to do as they liked—either to take out the cold storage plants, to charge extra for the space, or anything else. The same style of contract was entered into later for the cooled-air storage, except that in that case I think the contract was made for two years instead of three. Again the steamship companies did not believe it to be in their interest to provide these cooled-air chambers and cooled-air ventilation, and the trade did not demand them. Therefore we had to induce the companies to put them in. It was with the greatest difficulty that we could get two or three companies to take up the question and put in the machinery and plant necessary, and we had to make a better arrangement for them than we had originally done in regard to the cold storage chambers, because they were still more reluctant to enter into that agreement than they were in the original case. We did, however, succeed in doing it, and the result of getting a few steamship companies to do it under these terms and conditions, has been that to-day nearly all the steamship companies trading to Canadian ports are provided with either the cold storage or the cooled-air storage, and they have been put in without any contract or subvention from the government. Once the contracts had expired, we had no power to dictate to the companies as to what arrangements they should make in regard to the temperature or the accommodation they should provide.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister is giving a subsidy to these steamship companies, can he not lay down the terms on which he gives it ?

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly, and I made the contracts in the terms in which they are, after a great deal of negotiation and a great deal of difficulty. I was not able to succeed in making any better terms than I did.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Are there any companies now receiving subsidies from the government ?

Mr. FISHER. Not one.

Mr. INGRAM. In the contract made, the hon. gentleman does not control the cold storage.

Mr. FISHER. By the original contracts cold storage of a certain temperature was required to be available—not over 30 degrees Fahrenheit for butter and from 34 to 38 degrees for cheese and fruit.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose the steamship companies violated that, what then ?

Mr. FISHER. They would violate their contract.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is there not in all these contracts a provision that the company shall not be responsible for any loss on account of the cold storage?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows enough about shipping to know that that clause is in every charter-party.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. But when a company gets a subsidy from the government, that provision should be eliminated. There are many clauses in the charter-parties of companies subsidized by the government that should not be there.

Mr. FISHER. All I can say is that if I had undertaken to eliminate that clause, I could not have made the contract. No steamship company would have made a contract on any such terms.

Mr. INGRAM. The contracts are practically useless as they are.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no. They have accomplished their purpose, and the result is that to-day the steamships coming to Canada have cold storage, and before these contracts were entered into there was not a single steamer with cold storage coming to Canadian ports. I think I may say without boasting that our shippers have vessels for cold storage superior to the cold storage vessels sailing to any other ports in the world. With regard to the contracts my hon. friend ignored entirely the fact that they have expired. He spoke all through as though these vessels were to-day under contract and the contracts still in force. The hon. gentleman had no intention of misleading, but unfortunately, from the loose way in which he dealt with these questions, the impression he created was that he was speaking of hard and fast existing contracts.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. A large amount has been voted for subsidies to steamers. Is there any provision made for cold storage in these steamers ?

Mr. FISHER. I am speaking of contracts for the installation of cold storage made by my department, and not of the subsidies given by the Department of Trade and Commerce for other services. The Department of Trade and Commerce gives subsidies to a number of lines, and the contracts contain a provision for cold storage facilities. I have not the form of contract under my hand, but I believe the contracts call for cold storage facilities of a suitable character. My remarks do not apply to those contracts at all, but to the contracts which were made by my department for the installation of cold storage facilities on the steamship lines.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have all the contracts expired ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes ; some time ago.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Had the hon. minister control of the temperatures when they were in existence ? Because, if he will look at the thermograph returns, he will see that butter was carried at an altogether higher temperature than 30.

Mr. FISHER. Not infrequently perhaps the temperatures are about 30. At the same time the purpose desired was secured, namely, that we should have facilities here for the carriage of butter to England in cold storage at temperatures which would not injure the butter and enable it to be laid down in a satisfactory condition. As regards the cool air chambers for the carriage of cheese and apples especially, I think the same object was attained. My hon. friend spoke a little recklessly with regard to the temperature, but perhaps he is not so familiar with the subject as are men like my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Maclaren). He speaks about 10 degrees as the ideal temperature for the carriage of butter. Well, 10 degrees may be a very good temperature for the holding of butter when it is to be held for years or a very long time in cold storage. It does not hurt the butter, but you need not keep butter in 10 degrees when crossing the Atlantic when it is to be delivered for immediate use.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it not the better for it ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it is any better than it would be at 30 or 32.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will it not arrive in better condition ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What about butter carried at 35 degrees ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not believe it was in the slightest degree hurt, but at the same time I would prefer that the temperature should not be above 32. But in all these products, I do not pretend that we have been able—I doubt if anybody would have been —to absolutely hold down the temperature to a certain degree. I have examined the thermograph records, and was rather surprised at the general uniformity of the temperature in the chambers for the purpose for which they were intended. I do not want cheese to be carried at the same temperature as butter, or fruit to be carried at the same temperature. My hon. friend perhaps has been a little misled by not taking into account what was carried in the particular chamber.

Mr. INGRAM. Take a shipper who pays additional for cold storage privileges on a vessel going to the old country, suppose the proper cold storage accommodation is not provided and his products become injured, he has no recourse against the steamship company or the government according to the contract.

Mr. FISHER. My contract does not protect him, but the ordinary law of the land does.

Mr. INGRAM. But the clause in the contract reads : Neither the government nor the ship-owners shall be responsible for the condition of the cargo in cold storage from any cause whatever. There is, therefore, no redress for the shipper. What is the good of a contract like that ?

Mr. FISHER. That is the contract between the ship-owner and the government, not between the ship-owner and the shipper. The shipper has the same recourse in law as he would have in any other case of damage to goods in transit.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. But the government takes away all the rights of the shipper.

Mr. FISHER. No ; the government has no control over the rights of the shipper.

Mr. A. F. MACLAREN (North Perth). If the shipper wanted to send a man of his own to look after his goods in cold storage, as the Armours and the Swifts do, would he be allowed to do it ?

Mr. FISHER. He could if he liked. The government does not interfere in that at all. The shipper can send one man or a dozen men if he chooses.

Mr. INGRAM. The government subsidizes these steamers to provide cold storage, and they do not provide it, or they provide it at prices which makes it prohibitive, and the minister tells us that the government have no control.

Mr. FISHER. If the company breaks the contract, the government need not pay the contract price.

Mr. A. F. MACLAREN. Would the steamship company allow a shipper to send some one to take charge of his goods and look after the cold storage chamber on board the steamers and see that the temperature is raised or lowered, as the conditions may require ?

Mr. FISHER. There has been no arrangement to that effect. That has never been suggested to me, and I have not undertaken to do it. Nor do I think it is necessary. The shippers have the right to sue the company for damages or send their goods in other ships which have a better record. One of the objects we have always had in view has been to try and show the people how their goods were being handled. We have been trying, by giving information and investigating and finding out the condition of affairs and dealing with these people in a friendly manner, to improve the facilities ; and I venture to think we have been very successful in making great improvements. If we had undertaken to coerce and antagonize the various interests, I do not believe we would have made as much progress as we have. As a matter of fact, in consequence of the policy of the department in dealing with these companies in the manner I have described, great improvements, as I have shown, have been brought about. On the whole, I think that is the proper policy. Of course, parliament has the right to pass laws to coerce the steamship companies, to compel them to do certain things under certain penalties. But I have not asked parliament to pass such laws, because I did not think it was wise. I may have been wrong. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) seems to think I have been wrong. I can only say that our opinions do not agree. I think that the policy that I have followed has been a better one in the interests of all concerned, including the producers of perishable products, than the policy of coercion would have been.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not the contrary policy followed in the case of the shipping of cattle? We made certain regulations which steamship companies were obliged to carry out. And now the minister tells us that this is not the policy that should be carried out with regard to perishable products.

Mr. FISHER. It is true that that policy has been carried out in regard to cattle. Nevertheless I do not think it would be well to do the same in regard to perishable products at the present time. The time may arrive when, the vast majority doing right and only the few doing wrong, it will be well for the constituted authority to step in and coerce the few into the doing right. Up to this time, in my opinion, the policy I have followed is the proper one and it has accomplished the object sought better than a coercive policy would have done. Of course in that opinion I may be wrong. The House and the people generally may think that I am wrong. But, so far they have not shown me that I am wrong.

Now, I will turn to my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). I must apologize to him for having so long diverged from the course of his argument. But he has seen that I have been interrupted and so have been led to follow other lines. He spoke of the temperature on the deck of the steamer and said that the temperature in the hold should always bear some comparison to the temperature on the deck. I do not think that such a comparison would be of any value. The temperature on deck is very variable. Those who know more about ships than I do tell me that the temperature as indicated by the thermograph on one place on the deck, might be no indication of the general temperature of the air about the ship, and if, used for comparison might be a very misleading record. The thermograph records that my hon. friend quoted were for September and October, 1904. That is pretty late in the season. It is not at all unlikely that the temperature on deck would be lower than in a hold were a large quantity of apples were stowed. A higher temperature in the hold would not at all prove that the cool air arragements on the ship are ineffective or that the goods were not being properly carried. The ripening process in apples is a very heating process ; and the air in a hold with thousands of barrels of apples would be heated, and even superheated, and it would be very difficult even if cold air was forced through them to keep that temperature down.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then, would it not be wise to put in a direct expansion system, instead of the cold air system? If your cool air system will not keep the temperature down, why not put in a system that will keep it down?

Mr. FISHER. I did not say that the cool air system did not keep the temperature down. It did—it kept it down to a satisfactory point for the safe carriage of the apples. A temperature of 60 degrees is perfectly suitable for carrying apples.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Oh, oh.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I will not dispute that point—I merely state my opinion. But I may mention also that we have had no complaints from shippers of apples relating to the temperature to any extent. We have had some complaint of the condition in which apples arrive on the other side. We have tried to find out the reason for this, and we have found that in some cases it was due to the fact that the fruit was over-ripe when put into the barrels or when shipped from Montreal or Halifax. When fruit is shipped over-ripe, the heating is very great, and no amount of cold air will make the fruit good or keep it good entirely. Of course, I speak in general terms. Our investigations have shown that in order to understand why fruit does not reach the other side in perfect condition, you must know its condition of ripeness when packed. We have noted circumstances like these frequently: Two lots of fruit, sent from the same neighbourhood in Ontario, carried to Montreal under the same conditions and shipped in the same compartment of the vessel, with the same conditions, and one lot would arrive in perfect condition and the other in so unsatisfactory a state that it would hardly pay the freight. One had been picked and packed by one neighbour at the proper condition of ripeness, while the other was over-ripe when shipped. My hon. friends opposite seem to think we have not done enough in the way of providing cold storage and cooled air. As a matter of fact, the cold storage accommodation on ships going from Canadian ports have never been fully utilized. Our shippers have not taken advantage of the facilities which have been given them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would they not utilize them if the goods were carried without extra cost ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so. At the same time, I do not see any reason why steamship companies should be required to give certain facilities which cost them money, unless they are allowed to charge for them. Of course, the country at large can pay the steamship companies enough to cover the charge, if it chooses to do so. But no country in the world provides extra-superior shipping facilities without charging for them. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) has talked about the cold storage facilities of the United States. He is aware, perhaps, that the government of the United States has never done anything in regard to these facilities but everything has been done through the enterprise of the steamship companies and the shippers. It is done largely by contract between these parties, the shippers binding themselves to pay for the cold storage accommodation whether they use it or not.

Week in and week out California fruit shippers engage to pay for cold storage accommodation in dozens of ships that leave United States ports for Europe, whether they put fruit in them or not. They ship their fruit across and do their best to utilize the accommodation; but they pay for it whether they use it or not, and they pay much more for accommodation than Canadian shippers pay for the accommodation they get here. They bind themselves by contracts extending over the whole year to take so many feet of cold storage accommodation, and they pay a high price for it whether they use it or not. But neither the government of the United States nor the government of any particular state has ever done anything to encourage cold storage, as the government of Canada is doing for Canadian shippers. But in this country Canadian shippers have not availed themselves of cold storage facilities to the full extent that such facilities are provided. They do not seem to realize the advantages, or they do not know the business sufficiently well to undertake it. I do not know the reasons. We have published the advantages of the system, we have shown where, in trial shipments, advantages have accrued. I may say this however, and I think I am within the mark, that practically all the butter that is shipped from Canada to England to-day goes forward in cold storage, and shippers of butter use all the cold storage they require. But apparently there is not enough butter going forward at present to utilize all the cold storage that is available for Canadian shippers.

Mr. LALOR. Do the apple shippers use cold storage to any extent ?

Mr. FISHER. No, they do not need to, they use cool storage to a certain extent, though not to the extent it is available. The only cases where apple shippers require cold storage, are when the fruit is sent forward in small boxes, and these are not sent forward in great quantities. But I do not think that cold storage in Canada is entirely utilized. Of course I do not mean to say that occasionally a ship does not go out with the cold storage space occupied; but much more frequently, probably three times against one, it occurs that the ship has not got sufficient produce to fill her cold storage accommodation. That is one of the chief reasons why the steamship companies require assistance to start the system, before they are willing to undertake it in the beginning. But after it is initiated, and after it has shown to be successful, and people begin to demand cold storage facilities, then the ship-owners find that they have to put in cold storage.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman speaks of 60 degrees for apples, is not that high ?

Mr. FISHER. I think in a cooled air chamber 60 would not hurt apples at all if they were not over-ripe ; if they were over-ripe I think 60 would be too high.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister think that shippers of apples ought to pay 36 cents per barrel for a temperature of 60, when the temperature in the ordinary storange is little more than 60 ?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter for the judgment of the shipper. There may be many cases when it would be to his advantage, he has to use his own judgment as to that.

Mr. LALOR. What effect would it have on apples to ship them across in cold storage and then take them out of cold storage on their arrival in England ?

Mr. FISHER. That would depend upon the temperature, if the temperature was low it would probably hurt them.

Mr. LALOR. You would expect that they would not keep so well after being taken out of cold storage.

Mr. FISHER. Some people say they do not. I am not prepared to state definitely. I want to say, however, that there is enough cold storage and cooled air accommodation on the ships going out from Canada to-day for all the demands of the trade. I think the trade ought to use it more largely. I think it would be to the advantage of the trade to use it more largely, and those who do use it reap an advantage from it. But for the last two or three years particularly there has been more accommodation of cold storage, and cooled air both, than the demands of the trade require. Therefore there is no reason at all to-day why we should undertake to spend more money to increase cold storage or cooled air accommodation on the ships.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister not think that shippers would utilize cold storage facilities to a much greater extent than they do if the temperatures were kept a great deal lower than they are ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not think so. I think the temperatures are kept at about the point the trade desires, and that the needs of the business require. I have had no representations made to me by the trade respecting unsatisfactory temperatures. There has been a little difficulty in Nova Scotia in regard to carriage of fruit, not in the cooled storage, but in the ordinary hold, and at one time when people attempted to send forward fruit in cold storage, there were complaints about the sweating of the fruit. In some cases there were also complaints about the fruit being hurt by freezing, which was caused probably by using the cold storage too much. But the complaints that have reached me have been almost entirely in regard to the handling of goods in the ordinary holds of ships, more especially with regard to apples. Apples and cheese sometimes are put in places which are not properly ventilated, and where they sweat and are somewhat damaged.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there any complaints at the port of landing ?

Mr. FISHER. Our fruit when it arrives at the port of landing in England is frequently, what is called, wasted and slack. That is one of the greatest injuries to our fruit market in England. But I have been putting forth every effort to investigate this matter, and to find where the fault lies. We have not yet been able to avoid this difficulty entirely, but I say frankly that if there is anything wrong in this system I am the most anxious of any one to find out what it is. We have our agents in England and at shipping points here for the express purpose of watching these things, of making tests, and of seeing how the products of Canada are handled when they are put into the ship, how they are cared for, and how they arrive on the other side. We get reports constantly, and up to the present time I venture to think that the reports indicate that the temperature, either in cold storage or in the cooled air, is not responsible at all for the unsatisfactory condition of such of our products as are found to be injured when landed on the other side. If I thought there was any fault in the cold storage or cooled air system, I would ask parliament for money to make a change, nor would I hesitate a minute in asking for all that was required. But in my judgment the temperature on steamers crossing the Atlantic, in nine cases out of ten, has had nothing whatever to do in causing injury to our goods arriving on the other side.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How do the shippers know of the different temperatures at which their goods are being carried across ?

Mr. FISHER. The thermograph records are posted on the Board of Trade at Montreal, as soon as they are received. The shipper knows about ten days afterwards the thermograph record of the chamber in which he sends his goods.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is only the shippers in Montreal.

Mr. FISHER. The shippers in Montreal are nine-tenths of the shippers of the country. Ninety-nine one hundredths of the dairy shipments go through the hands of the Butter and Cheese Association of Montreal.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood that the ex-member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) complained about the correctness of the thermograph records ?

Mr. FISHER. I never understood that. We have had no cavil on that score and we have only had two or three cases in four or five years, during which we have handled from 50 to 100 thermographs, of machines getting out of order.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood that Mr. Smith complained because they were not placed on the deck.

Mr. FISHER. I referred to that a little while ago and said it had no bearing on the case. The placing on the deck would be of no use.

Mr. INGRAM. He contended otherwise.

Mr. FISHER. I know he did, and I referred to that a few moments ago.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Have any claims been made on the government for loss sustained by shippers in shipping goods across the Atlantic on steamers equipped with cold storage and subsidized by the government ?

Mr. FISHER. I never heard of any such claim. Stop ! I am not certain that I have not a letter from some person in Prince Edward Island who shipped some poultry two years ago in a boat subsidized by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I think the ship did not go and the poultry meat was spoiled in some way, but this is the only thing of the kind I ever knew of.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is it not a fact that the ship did go and the shipment was all thrown overboard at Liverpool ? Not only did that happen in this case but in many other shipments of dead meat.

Mr. FISHER. I never heard of any except poultry. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) spoke of New Zealand as a country which is a model for us. When the regulations which to-day are in force in regard to dairy products, cold storage, &c., were made in New Zealand, there was practically no dairy trade in that country at all. The trade was inaugurated there under government patronage and supervision ; they started ab initio, they had a clear table to work on and were able to lay down certain rules and conditions under which and by reason of which the trade was built up. That was not the condition in Canada. There had been a dairy trade of a large character in Canada long before any question of government supervision arose. The dairy and cheese trade of Canada was built up under the enterprise of private individuals. The transportation and handling of these goods was established on pretty definite lines before the government came in and we had therefore to take existing circumstances and conditions, to work according to them, and without violating them, and we were obliged to do or not to do a good many things which the New Zealand government did not have to concern itself with because it was calling into existence a trade which was not existent before and which was brought about entirely grace to and in accordance with the rules and regulations and movement of the government of that colony. My hon. friend speaks of the regulations on the steamers. These are regulations made by the steamship company. The government does not impose these regulations. The steamship companies make these regulations in regard to the butter trade because the butter trade is not as large as the meat trade and as the steamers carry large quantities of frozen mutton, which is the great product of New Zealand, the butter trade has to accord with the demands of that trade and so these regulations are made. The steamship companies in Canada are free to make such regulations as a matter of agreement between themselves and the shippers. The government are not able to dictate and the first to resent dictation would be the steamship companies and the shippers.

Mr. INGRAM. Do the temperatures vary in the cold storage chambers ?

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt they would from time to time. In the cooled-air chambers it will be a little more difficult to maintain uniformity than in cold storage chambers, because the cold storage chambers are not so large and are more completely insulated and more under control. The cooled-air chambers are more difficult to control and would not have an absolutely uniform temperature. For the products that go forward in cool air chambers, absolute uniformity of temperature is not so necessary as for those that go in cold storage.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. New Zealand is able to come next to Denmark in the matter of butter in the British markets. Its butter brings a much higher price than ours in Great Britain. Is that not largely due to the cold storage system ?

Mr. FISHER. I think it is due to two things, largely probably to the very close supervision and inspection in connection with that article, owing perhaps to the creating of the industry under government inspection in New Zealand ; and no doubt partly to the low temperature at which the butter is carried from New Zealand to England. It is a very much smaller trade than our trade. If I were a dictator, and could lay down absolute lines and conditions under which our butter should be manufactured, handled and sent over to England, according to the best scientific opinions, I have no doubt we could improve our butter trade. But perhaps unfortunately—no, I shall not say unfortunately, I think it is fortunate I am not a dictator, and that the people in Canada manage their own affairs for themselves and will not be altogether bound down by rules and regulations, and consequently I have to take them as they are and the efforts of my department have to be regulated to a certain extent by the views and ideas of the people for whom I am working.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What encouragement is there for the people who are trying to keep their temperatures down and their butter in proper condition ?

Mr. FISHER. They are reaping the advantage of it. The people who do not try are losing money every day. We are trying to impress that on them and to get them to do as well as the others. We are gradually, more slowly than I would like or than the people would like, making improvement all the time steadily and decidedly.

My hon. friend spoke of the butter trade falling off. Of course, he is not familiar with these things, but if the butter trade fell off last year it was owing to the large amount of cheese that was made and the shortage of pasture. But this year it is mounting away up again, and up to the present date, as compared with last year, we have sent a great deal more butter and are getting a higher price for it than ever before in the history of Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it not a fact that the butter producers ship their butter in proper order, but they complain of the usage it receives at the port of landing ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Therefore, the butter producers would not be to blame ; the difficulty is at the other end.

Mr. FISHER. Quite so. At some English ports there are good facilities and the butter is immediately put in cold storage, but at others, Liverpool, for instance, where a considerable amount of our butter goes, there are great complaints as to the butter being allowed to lie on the wharf. We have no control over that. I cannot dictate to the dock companies at Liverpool, but I have made urgent representations to them, and I have a letter here in which my officer went so far as to say that if improvement did not take place we would have to warn the Canadian shippers not to send butter to Liverpool.

Mr. INGRAM. That is no fault of the shippers.

Mr. FISHER. I am not blaming the shippers. As a rule, they are doing fairly well, although there are some complaints of carelessness that the butter is frequently carried from the cold storage factory to the railway cars in an open wagon exposed to the sun. We made tests last year which showed that the butter came out of the cars at Montreal at a lower temperature than that at which it was put into the cars. The iced cars are not made to cool butter, but to keep it cool, so that the shippers in such cases were imposing on the service of the iced cars. I did not hesitate to say at the dairy meetings last winter that if an improvement did not take place in that respect I might have to take some more stringent means of inspection, and perhaps to refuse to allow butter being put into the cars if it was not at a proper temperature. I do not want to go to that extreme, but if an improvement does not take place I may be obliged to.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, at the moment you left the chair I was closing my remarks in regard to the matter of carriage in cold storage from Canada to Great Britain. But perhaps it will be interesting to the House and to hon. gentlemen opposite to know somewhat of the opinions which the people who handle our goods in Great Britain have of the work we have been doing. Without going into details at all, I would like to read a few words from some letters that have been received at the department. This is from Nickson & Company of Liverpool, one of the largest handlers of Canadian produce :

In reference to your inquiry, it gives my directors very great pleasure to state that it must be apparent to all interested in the Canadian trade that the Department of Agriculture is doing the most excellent work, and one which is bearing fruit, and is highly appreciated by all connected with the development of trade between Canada and this country. The action of your department in maintaining inspectors at British ports for the purpose of reporting to the shippers and steamship people the manner in which Canadian products, more or less perishable, are stowed on discharge, and the condition of the goods on arrival, is having a most marked and beneficial effect on the development of the Canadian trade.

I have another from James Lindsay & Son, fruit importers, of Edinburgh. My hon. friend has talked a good deal about fruit. The letter first deals with fruit inspection, and then says:

We find that inspection is also carried out as to the carrying of goods while on board steamer. Ventilation has been examined and inquired into, also the temperature throughout the journey generally taken, and if anything unusual has transpired it is generally discussed between the inspector and the receivers, so as to improve any defect that may have taken place, or that exists.

Such inspections and reports, we are certain, will tend greatly to the benefit and improvement of the trade between Canada and the mother country.

A letter from Simons, Shuttleworth & Company, European receivers of American fruits, says :

We certainly think there has been an improvement in the handling of fruit and other produce since your government has maintained inspectors at this port, and we would be very sorry to see them withdrawn. It has also been beneficial to have you report the manner in which the apples have been turning out, not only as opened on the dock, but in the sale room, and with shippers knowing that they are being watched in this manner, we feel that they are using more care in the selecting and packing of the fruit. We of course can only speak regarding apples, as that is the only Canadian product that we handle to any extent.

We cannot at the moment state where we can see any chance of improving the work that you have been doing since you came to Liverpool, and in our opinion you have looked after the interests of Canadian shippers in splendid shape.

Now, I will leave that subject for a moment to refer to some remarks which the hon. member for East Lambton made in regard to the cool curing rooms and the cool curing of cheese, and I regret to say that he entered into a realm in which he is not familiar either with the trade, the business or the facts. He quoted certain results of certain experiments which have been conducted in the United States as to the cool curing of cheese, and he hazarded the opinion that cheese ought to be cured at a lower temperature than freezing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Not necessarily ought to be. It would be all the better if it were.

Mr. FISHER. I was so astonished to hear the hon. gentleman make the statement that I asked him if he meant to say it ought to be, and he said yes. Now, it is a well known fact that if cheese is put into a temperature lower than freezing, it is seriously injured.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was quoting from a test made in the United States. They put the cheese in a temperature as low as 15, and they distinctly said that they had splendid results from that temperature.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and it took them two years to get the results. If cheese is kept at a very low temperature, it matures very slowly. In the course of months or years it will mature better; but our cheese dealers do not want to hold their cheese for two years to get the results or to get their pay. The hon. gentleman has again shown that he is talking about things which he has not studied and which he knows very little about. He has fallen into the trap of stating things incompletely and making a statement which is absurd on the face of it to any one who knows anything of the business at all.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help thinking that the minister has gone wide of the mark. He has referred a dozen times to my lack of knowledge in this business. I wish to tell him that I have been directly interested in cold storage and in several different plants. I purchased one of them myself and oversaw the putting of it up, and I should know a little of what I am talking about. I spent twenty-three years of my life on the farm, and I have followed up the farming industry since I left the farm, and I am proud of it. When the hon. gentleman says that I am talking about something I know nothing about, I wish to refute that remark. I would ask him what harm it does cheese to go below freezing; can he tell us that?

Mr. FISHER. I can tell the hon. gentleman very easily. It makes the cheese crumbly, and it takes six, eight or ten months for it to get over that condition. If while in that condition it were brought to market, it would bring from one to two cents per pound less than Canadian cheese which had never touched the freezing mark.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the hon. gentleman made tests of that?

Mr. FISHER. The very United States tests which the hon. gentleman quoted show that, if he had followed them out to their conclusion. The hon. gentleman says that our cool curing rooms ought to be maintained at a lower temperature. I want to tell him that the temperature of our cool curing rooms has been thoroughly experimented on and worked out and discussed by the best cheese experts in Canada, and I venture to say that there are no cheese experts of greater capacity and knowledge on the face of the earth. Our Canadian cheese trade stands at the head of the cheese trade of the world. The cool curing temperatures of from 55 to 60 are the deliberate choice of the best cheese makers of Canada. The chambers had been kept intentionally at that temperature for the purpose of obtaining the best results. True, for the purposes of investigation, in order to see if anything better could be found, cheese has been cured in the United States at all sorts of temperatures, but the game has not been worth the candle. The expense has not been repaid, and the time required to ripen and cure that cheese has been found so long that it was detrimental to the profits of the cheese makers and those who handle the cheese. As a matter of fact, the temperatures we have chosen have been found the most profitable, advantageous and practicable, and have worked out eminently successfully. I am giving this, not as my own opinion, because I do not profess to be an expert, but I have in the employ of the department men who are experts and have to-day a reputation, not only in Canada and the continent of America, but all over the world where English is spoken or the literature of agriculture in the continent of America penetrates. Those men have worked this thing out, not for my benefit or at my individual direction, but for the benefit of the cheese makers and the trade of Canada, and the people of Canada have reaped the reward of their efforts.

My hon. friend said at Brockville cheese curing was held at 74.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For 24 days your report says.

Mr. FISHER. That is quite likely, but that was in the test room and not in the room in which we maintain the temperature we require. It was in the test room in which we keep the temperature as near as possible to what it is, under ordinary conditions, and in the ordinary factories in the country. We do this in order to show the difference between cheese cured at that temperature and at the proper temperature in the cool curing room, where we control and regulate the temperature. My hon. friend took the temperature in the test room and quoted that as the temperature of the cool curing room.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the report say it is the test room ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know, but as a matter of fact that temperature never existed in the cool curing room at Brockville. If there is anything in the report to indicate a temperature of that kind, it was in the test room. The temperature in the cool curing rooms at Brockville and elsewhere is never over 60 at any time during the whole season, and the temperature we desire to maintain is from 55 to 60, which is the most advantageous, profitable and successful in which to cool cheese, according to the opinion of experts.

Mr. hon. friend said we had a toy machine in the cool curing room at Brockville and another one at Cowansville, and had thrown them aside and adopted the cool air ducts or draughts. Well, when we established the four cool curing chambers we did, we wanted to try experiments and fitted up two of them with mechanical cold storage and two with ice cold storage. The methods of procuring cool air are different. In the one case, it is created by a mechanical appliance and in the other by ice, but the results in the chamber where the cheese is cured are practically exactly the same. What we wanted to find out however was which method was the most economical. After three seasons of careful testing, we found that the ice was the cheaper. Therefore we discarded the mechanical apparatus and replaced it with an ice arrangement. We did this not because the latter was better, not because people could not use the mechanical apparatus if they wished, but because the ice was cheaper ; and we to-day advise people, who wish to make good cool curing chambers at their cheese factories, to use ice and not the mechanical appliance.

The hon. gentleman asked whether there was any arrangement by which the mechanical appliances on the ship could be operated in the ports. They are operated in the ports and are not dependent at all on the engines which drive the ships. The steam is supplied by the boilers of the ships and a separate engine does the work.

He also said something about new ideas. Well, I must say that I am rather a little too prone to take up new ideas and try everything rather than be contented with the old thing. There is an old adage that says you must try and stand by what is best, and I have always been imbued with that idea and fear I am rather open to the accusation of trying too many things rather than not enough. But I must say that I think it as well to try a thing very thoroughly and see whether it works all right rather than launch into experiments before seeing clearly that what we are doing is wrong. I may be wrong in my judgment, I may be a little partial in my opinion, but I must confess that I am of the opinion that what we have been doing with regard to cold storage in Canada has been successful. It first of all brought about a condition of affairs which never existed before in our Canadian export trade of perishable products, by providing facilities which the people never previously had and which they have to-day in a larger measure than they are prepared to utilize.

And in the third place, it has resulted in the carriage of our products to England, which is our chief market, in a condition which gives those products a better reputation, enables them to command a better price and creates for them a greater demand than ever before. As a result not only of the cold storage but of the system of inspection and supervision which has been established, our products are landed to-day in the English market in a condition which is the envy of our rivals in that market. I have not them under my hand at the moment, but I can give the sense of a number of consular reports sent to Washington by the consular agents of the United States. These reports inform that government that they had better take example by the system of the Canadian Department of Agriculture ; that if they would follow that example they would introduce a fruit inspection Act, they would have agents watching their products arriving in the English market; they would give encouragement to cold storage facilities for the carriage of their butter and other perishable products ; and by these means would give their exporters a better chance in the English market, against our competition, than they have now. It is rather a new thing for this country to find the Americans pointing to us as a model, and to find their officers warning their people that the Canadians are beating them in the market to which we both send our produce. I am proud to say that in the last few years Canada has obtained that position, and in the English market, where we meet the Americans in open competition, they acknowledge that our arrangements and our facilities are a model which they ought to follow. And the sales of our products in England to-day show that those products occupy a position in the English market which American products have not attained.

Under these circumstances, I may fairly accept the motion. That motion says, that Canada exports a large quantity of agricultural products. It is true. The motion says, that depreciation in value of such products will result in loss to the farming community. It is true. The motion says, that the facilities provided should be adequate and should be commensurate with the assistance given. It is true. This motion is an endorsation of what has been done by this government and my department ; it is a statement of facts which the people of Canada can accept as being true. I am glad it comes from the other side of the House ; I am glad that these hon. gentlemen acknowledge and appreciate the condition of affairs. I accept this motion.

When this matter came up this afternoon, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) said in a jocular way that it was a rather cool day to talk about cold storage. I can understand that the opposition might feel cold, that the chills would be running up and down their back ; and they would feel all the worse when they saw introduced into the House this afternoon the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) and the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Smith) who were elected in spite of the frantic efforts of hon. gentlemen opposite to defeat this government. They may well feel chilly.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) means a roast.

Mr. FISHER. No, I am too kind-hearted to roast hon. gentlemen opposite. It was their leader who, feeling chilly, expressed himself in a way with which, no doubt, hon. gentlemen opposite will sympathize.

Mr. BLAIN. Before the hon. minister sits down, may I ask a question ? He has stated the temperature for butter crossing the Atlantic at 32 degrees, and for apples 60 degrees. Would he give the temperature required for cheese exported ?

Mr. INGRAM. And would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) at the same time give his own.

Mr. FISHER. My own temperature is at 'comfortable.' I have no reason to worry about that, or even about the temperature of hon. gentlemen opposite, because the more they fume and rail against us the stronger we are. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asks as to the temperature for the exports of cheese. I think that cheese which never goes above 60 degrees will not be hurt.

Mr. R. N. WALSH (Huntingdon). There is a matter in connection with the transportation question which, although it may not directly relate to cold storage, should be brought before the House at this time. I refer to the question of the weighing of butter and cheese at the port of Montreal. This is a matter of great urgency in the district from which I come. I have the honour to represent a county which depends very much on the dairy industry, and to that county this matter becomes more urgent as time goes on. For years our county has been a pioneer in dairying; and I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) will bear me out when I say that that dairy industry with us is as well developed as anywhere else in Canada. For many years, with us, the manufacture was carried on by a combination of factories operated by individuals. But we had failure after failure, the last one within the last two years. As a matter of self-protection, the farmers were forced to buy these factories and operate them themselves. Before the farmers took over the business in this way the question of weighing was not so commonly brought to their notice, because the goods were disposed of by the people who carried on the factories. But now they realize how much they are losing through the weighing. Of course, it is impossible for each factory to send a man to Montreal to sell its goods every week; and so a cheese board was established in the town. I may say here that we had the direct opposition of the buyers to the establishment of that board. I am glad to say that the board has been a success.

Many hon. members may know how cheese and butter are weighed in the port of Montreal, but I may explain briefly for the benefit of those who are not familiar with the subject. In the first place consider who does the weighing. The weighman is a Mr. McLeod who, according to the Minister of Agriculture, has no official status. Mr. McLeod is chosen by the butter and cheese association. He is supposed to be the arbiter between the buyer and the seller, but he gets his instructions from the buyer. Suppose that a lot of 50 cheese is sent in. Five of these are taken and weighed separately. The first, we will say, has been branded at the factory as weighing 84 pounds. When it is put on the scale at Montreal, the scale is set at 84¼ pounds, and if it does not bring that up, the farmers get credit for 83 pounds. Cheese No. 2 may turn out the same ; No. 3 may be O K; No. 4 and No. 5 may run 2 pounds above the weight. Then for the whole shipment 2 pounds for every five cheese is taken off. Now, this is not simply a local question. The matter has been before the House on several occasions. In the year 1901 the government appointed a commissioner, Mr. Parmelee, to investigate this question. He reported in 1903. I must admit that I am somewhat at a loss in regard to his report, because, it seems, it has not been thought sufficiently important to be printed. I sent a request to the department the other day for a copy of the report. I have here the answer, which states that there are only two copies extant, and they are both in use in the House of Commons. Not being able to secure a copy I have had to depend upon the 'Hansard' report of the debate on the question in this House. In the first place I would like to draw attention to the reason for which Mr. Parmelee was appointed. A number of questions were put on the order paper in regard to that, one asking whether a commissioner was appointed, and the answer was : Yes. The last question was : 'At whose request was the commissioner appointed ?' The Minister of Trade and Commerce replied :

> The commissioner was appointed in consequence of numerous complaints having reached the government re the weighing of butter and cheese.

Now, that was the reason Mr. Parmelee was appointed. He made his report in 1903, and I will read a few extracts from it. First he says :

There is no objection to the first paragraph of the rule——

That is rule No. 2.

—but there is to the second which reads :

Actual weights must be shown on certificate, but no gain shall be applied against losses in the average ; gains of two pounds and over shall be governed by rule 3. A further rule provides that not less than five packages of cheese nor more than ten per cent of each particular lot shall be weighed.

The effect of this I have stated before. He goes on :

Under the system of weighing in force and allowances insisted upon, it too often happens that at least one package in every lot is judged short weight. Therefore, all is cut accordingly. And it appears that frequently not sufficient care is taken to note the overs, it being claimed that the scales are set at the weight marked at the package, and if the beam goes up sharp it is too often registered as 'OK,' and no particular pains taken to note the amount of over weight. This practice is a source of great annoyance, and is looked upon by the factory men, to speak mildly, as fraudulent. This rule is insisted upon by the buyers for the purpose as they explain of avoiding cuts for short weight at the point in Europe to which they ship. This the undersigned looks upon as entirely another transaction for which the country maker should not be held responsible.

That is part of the finding of Mr. Parmelee, and his conclusion is this :

In conclusion, the undersigned has the honour to suggest that the Act, 28 Victoria, chapter 6, be so amended as to provide for the appointment of weighers of butter and cheese by His Excellency the Governor General in Council instead of permitting such appointments to be made as at present, by boards of trade.

Now, that is the finding of the commissioner. I find also the opinion of Mr. Publow, Dairy Commissioner of Ontario, who says he thinks that the government should appoint a weigher. Further than that, I will give some local experience in regard to this matter, as a sample case. Here is a letter which was written by the manager of one of the factories in reply to a letter from Ayer & Company :

Take our factory for example. In 1902 we shipped to our agent at Montreal (Gould's Cold Storage) 1,070 boxes of cheese and were cut 139 pounds. In 1903 we shipped to the same cold storage 1,357 boxes and were cut 534 pounds. In June, 1904, we sent in 220 boxes and were cut 176 pounds. In July, 1904, we sent in 206 and were cut 170 pounds. If a cheese weighs 85 pounds in factory, we mark it 84 pounds, and still we are cut in weight. We hold a certificate from the government inspector that our scales are correct.

That is only one of many samples I might give of what is happening. The excuse given for retaining this system was, in the first place, that the cheese would shrink. But I see at the meeting which was held in Montreal a few days ago they say nothing will be done, because the trouble is simply caused by the fact of their not putting on the proper weight, and there is no reason for making a change. Now, I think I can show that that is not entirely the case. There is a case in point. As I have said, Mr. Macleod was not the official weigher —Mr. Cameron was the official weigher of the Board of Trade. A consignment of cheese was sent in, and it was they asked that Mr. Cameron be allowed to weigh it, which request was refused. Another consignment was sent in which was weighed by Mr. Macleod, consisting of twenty packages containing 70 pounds each and twenty packages containing 30 pounds each. Mr. Macleod's certificate cut the 30-pound packages 1 pound each and the 70-pound packages 2 pounds each, in all 60 pounds, and a cheque was given for that amount. However, the factory man and the manager would not consent to it, and they went to Montreal to see the gentleman who had bought the cheese. After some talk he agreed that the butter should be weighed by himself on his own scales. The result was that every 30-pound package weighed O.K., while the 70-pound packages came so near the full weight that only 20 pounds were deducted from the whole lot. So the man who was supposed to stand between the farmer and the buyer proved to ask more than the buyer himself. Now, we think that is very unfair, and I think the Minister of Agriculture, who was so strong at this meeting in condemning the system of weighing, ought to make a change. We had also the question of grading butter and cheese, which was brought to the attention of the department. I wish to say here that we were very much indebted to the dairy commissioner for the action he took in regard to that ; he at once attended to the matter, and we have a new system of grading. However, the system of weighing still continues, and it is one that our farmers think a great hardship, and in regard to which I think I have every right in asking that the government take some steps towards appointing an official weigher. Consider all the work a farmer has to perform in order to produce and send to the factory a hundred pounds of milk, and then carry the product to the point of shipment ; and after all, as the government commissioner, Mr. Parmalee says, he is fraudulently deprived of a certain amount of his product. I think the farmers have every reason to complain. I do not wish this viewed as a motion of censure at all ; I want to know why it is that some effort is not made to place this business on an equitable basis. If it is a fact that cheese shrinks, would not a weigher appointed by the government be a safer man to ascertain how much that shrinkage is ? I do not say that each cheese should be weighed separately, but if it is weighed separately, the gain should be given in the same way that the deductions are made. It makes no difference whether the farmer is short or over in weight, he is punished just the same under the present system. I think I am justified in asking the government for some expression of opinion as to whether they intend to do anything towards remedying this system, which we feel is a great hardship.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words on this question of cold storage which is now only in its infancy. I am satisfied that we must pay more attention to this matter than we have paid in the past. It will I believe be extended and perfected to such an extent that in eight or ten years from now, when we look back, we will wonder how we got along with the appliances that we have at the present time. This question interests the farmers particularly, and I was very much pleased to-day to hear a suggestion from the minister that he was willing to take ideas from the other side of the House. The farm is, after all, the foundation of the prosperity of the country and anything that benefits the farmer tends to add to the prosperity and success of the whole community. We have an old saying that the farmer pays for all, which simply means that whatever benefits the farmer benefits every trade, every profession and every business in the country. The reason I think we will be compelled to give so much attention to this question is that there has been a change in the farming industry in this country during the last eight or ten years. I sympathize with the minister in that respect and understand his statement that in the older provinces of this country there has been a great change in the nature of the agricultural products during the time he has been in office. He has had a great deal to investigate and to consider and a great many difficulties to contend with. It has been found in the older provinces of the Dominion that it was impossible to compete with the western districts in the raising of grain, and the farmers were therefore compelled to go into the production of other products much more perishable and difficult to handle and this is where the system of cold storage comes in.

The statement that was made to-day in regard to the advantage enjoyed by New Zealand butter in the British market, is capable of explanation. It is true that New Zealand butter commands a better price in the old country than the Canadian butter which it meets, but we must remember that when we have winter in Canada they have summer in New Zealand, and we must remember also that the butter coming fresh from New Zealand meets our winter butter in the markets of the old country. Not only that, but if it is not our winter butter, which is certainly not equal in quality to the summer butter, it must be butter which has been produced in this country in the summer and kept until the winter. I think there is a little excuse for the Canadian butter in that matter.

Cold storage, in order to be effective, must be continuous and must be perfect. A little cold storage on a ship crossing the ocean is of very little use. Our system must be so complete that the product of the farmer leaving his hand fresh and pure, must at once be taken into the cold storage either at the station or in a refrigerator car ; when it reaches the harbour there must be a system of cold storage there to receive it ; our ships must be in a position to convey it to the British market in efficient cold storage and in the old country we must have equally efficient cold storage facilities. I was glad to hear it said that the Allans and Thompsons are arranging to receive our goods in cold storage in the old country. Formerly these products were shipped to Tilbury and had to be sent thirty or forty miles on cars, but now I understand they will be received in cold storage almost as soon as they reach the old country. The system of cold storage must be like a chain. A chain is of no use if any links are missing. It is the same with cold storage, it must be complete from the producer to the consumer or it will be of no use.

The constituency which I have the honour to represent is noted for its dairy products and its orchards. Owing to the nature of the soil, its elevation above the sea and its position on the eastern side of one of our Canadian lakes, the county of Huron has been pronounced by experts to be an ideal place for the production of apples for export. In that district the seasons reach the happy medium which enables such valuable shipping varieties as the Greening, the King, the Ben Davis, the Spy, and the Baldwin to become thoroughly matured without in any way running the risk of frost on one side or the greater danger of long continued exposure to hot weather after ripening on the other. Every year the trees are loaded with a magnificent crop of luscious apples. The inhabitants are careful, industrious and painstaking and yet in the face of all these favourable conditions the farmers of Huron complain that they have so far been able to make very little profit out of their orchards. The trouble began thirty or forty years ago when the orchards were planted. At that time the idea of shipping apples to distant countries was scarcely thought of. At that time the ambition of every farmer in planting an orchard was to have a great number of varieties, and the consequence was that a great many early ripening varieties were planted. Now these trees have come into full bearing, the fruit ripens early in the season in the hot weather and in such enormous quantities that it cannot be used and goes to waste or drops to the ground. In discussing this question with a farmer last fall I was told that in his orchard, which is a comparatively small one, he had 600 bushels of these early fancy apples that were an entire loss and for which he was unable to find a market. If this farmer had had good cold storage facilities he could have made something out of these apples, probably a dollar a bushel. I am told that at the same time in the northwestern country, apples of the same kind were bringing $2 to $2.50 a bushel. In regard to that matter I think I understood the minister to say that about 60 degrees was about the proper temperature for the care of apples. I may have been mistaken; I have great respect for the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture, and I know that he has given a great deal of attention to these things. I do not consider this a political question. I have here the report of the Department of Agriculture of the United States, by Messrs. G. Harold Powell and S. H. Fulton, dealing with the influence of storage temperature. My reason for referring to this is that we have these large quantities of early apples in Huron, hundreds and thousands of bushels going to waste every year on which nothing whatever is made, and I think it is important that some system should be adopted by which we will be able to ship these apples to the Northwest where there is always a good market. I read from page 21 of this report:

> The investigations indicate that the ripening processes are delayed more in a temperature of 31 degrees to 32 degrees Fahrenheit than in 35 degrees to 36 degrees Fahrenheit. The apple keeps longer in the lower temperature, it scalds less, the fruit rots and molds are retarded to a greater extent, while the quality, aroma, flavour and other characteristics of the fruit are fully as good, and when removed from storage it remains in good condition for a longer period.
> The impression is quite general that fall varieties and the tender early winter sorts, like Fameuse, Wealthy, and Grimes, are injured in some way by the low temperature, but the investigations of the Department of Agriculture indicate that these varieties behave more satisfactorily in every respect when stored at 31 degrees to 32 degrees Fahrenheit.
> If the fruit is intended for storage for a short time only, and it is desired to have it ripen before removing it from the storage house, then a higher temperature may be desirable to hasten the maturity.
> The influence of the temperature on the ripening processes appears to depend on the condition of the fruit. Baldwin, Esopus, Spitzenburg, Roxbury, Jonathan, Lady Sweet and other long-keeping eastern grown varieties have been held in prime commercial condition throughout the storage season in a temperature of 35 degrees Fahrenheit, when carefully picked and handled and stored soon after picking, but when the fruit was carelessly handled or the storage was delayed in hot weather, then a temperature of 31 degrees to 32 degrees Fahrenheit was required to retard the ripening.
> It might be safe to use a temperature of 34 degrees to 35 degrees Fahrenheit in a storage house located near the orchard, in which the fruit may be stored immediately after harvesting, but for general commercial apple handling, a temperature as low as 32 degrees Fahrenheit is needed to overcome the abuses that usually arise in picking, packing and shipping.

That is the American opinion on the question ; but of course that fact alone does not say it is correct. We know that our Minister of Agriculture and his officers have been very careful in the work they have been doing, but it is well to have the opinion of both sides, for in that way perhaps we will reach the truth. When I speak of the great losses we have sustained in Huron county particularly in the case of the early variety of apples, the answer will very likely be made : why did not the farmers get over the difficulty by top grafting? But so far as I have been able to learn, the growers meet with almost equal discouragement in the handling of the fall varieties. I have seen beautiful hand-picked Baldwins and Spies lying under the trees in the fall of the year until they were spoiled. The difficulty was that barrels could not be procured because of the impossibility of getting seasoned timber and expert mechanics to provide the barrels. Now, that we have the standard apple box this difficulty will be overcome, and the farmers and box makers, can put these boxes together in the winter and have them ready for the apple packing season. I would impress on the Minister of Agriculture that the farmers must be thoroughly instructed in the proper methods of packing apples, because there is a wide difference between packing apples in barrels and in boxes. You may hand pack a couple of rows in the bottom of the barrel and then put the others in without very much trouble, but when apples are packed in boxes they must be carefully hand placed. However, the farmers' daughters who would scorn to do other outside work are quite willing to go into the orchard under the shade of the trees and hand place the apples in the boxes. It has been suggested to me that if when these young ladies are packing the apples in the boxes they would place their names and addresses in the box with the apples and ship them to the Northwest where there are so many bachelors, mutual inquiries might be instituted and the country benefited in another way. Indeed it has been suggested that a very specially selected box of apples with the name of the young lady who selected it hidden therein, might be sent to the Minister of Agriculture himself, and in that way perhaps he could be induced to take a greater interest in the farmers of Canada than he has up to the present. For my part so long as we get a proper system of cold storage I care not whether it is supplied by the government or by private enterprise; and if the Minister of Agriculture can bring this about and thus enable the farmers of Canada to make more profit out of their products (especially in view of the immense market that is opening up in our own Northwest) his memory will be green when most of the rest of us are forgotten. I am sure the hon. gentleman will give his attention to this matter and consider it carefully. I believe that if we had a perfect system of cold storage $20,000,000 a year might be added to the wealth of the farmers of this country, and the man who succeeds in accomplishing that will have done a great deal for the material benefit of his country. I am sorry to have spoken at such length at this late period of the session, but hon. gentlemen will agree that I am not one of those who have wasted the time of the House, and my excuse for speaking now is that the subject under discussion is of the very greatest moment to our agricultural community.

Mr. D. DERBYSHIRE (Brockville). I compliment the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) on the manner in which he brought this matter before the House, and I wish to say that the Eastern Dairymen's Association would possibly desire to make him an honorary member of that body. This question has been engaging the attention of the dairymen of Canada for a great many years. In 1897, the right hon. the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and other members of the government met in Montreal a deputation of the Eastern Dairymen's Association, the Dairymen's Association of Bedford, and the Montreal Butter and Cheese Exchange, for the purpose of ascertaining our views on this question of cold storage. We then pressed on the government the necessity for affording to us in Canada the facilities provided in other countries for carrying perishable products to the British market. The government listened to us attentively and acceded to our request to the extent of giving us a moderate system of cold storage, which although not all that we wanted was a great deal better than what we had hitherto.

From year to year the cold storage accommodation has been improved until now every steamer that comes to the port of Montreal is provided with it without subsidy. Competition has brought this about. Of course, in the beginning the government had to subsidize the steamers in order to show the good results that would accrue to the people of Canada from the cold storage system. But now the steamers are providing it themselves, and the one which has the best equipment and can carry the goods to the British market in the best condition is the one that will get the most goods. Then, in order that the goods may be landed in Great Britain in proper condition, the Surrey commercial dock in London has been fitted up to receive the goods in cold storage the moment they arrive; and other docks in every part of the United Kingdom will have to give the same accommodation, or the goods will go to the Surrey dock. We feel proud of the record of the government in connection with this cold storage system. There is nothing for which they stand stronger before the country. In the year 1897, when we commenced shipments in cold storage, we shipped $13,000,000 worth of cheese; but, as the result of placing our goods on the British market in better condition than other countries were placing theirs, we gained in our exports until in the year 1904 we exported $24,000,000 worth of cheese. We did almost as well with our butter. In 1896, when we had not the cold storage system for it, out exports of butter amounted to only $1,000,000. But the government took hold of the matter in a business way, with the result that in the year 1903 we exported $7,500,000 worth. We are going steadily ahead all the time. Last week we shipped 11,810 packages of butter as compared with 6,602 packages in the corresponding week of last year. So that everything in connection with this cold storage business has been handled in the best possible way; and to-day it is not costing the government a dollar, because all the ships have to give the facilities in order to get the trade in this large and expanding business. The furnishing of these cold storage facilities is the most important thing the government have done since they came into power, and I feel proud of their record in this matter. As a result of better facilities, in place of shipping $4,000,000 worth of bacon, as we did in 1896, we shipped last year $13,500,000 worth. In 1896 our exports of butter, cheese and bacon together amounted to $19,455,000; but in 1904 they amounted to $47,697,000; showing what the people can do when they have the facilities for carrying on their business in the best possible way. In other words, because this government have given the country the facilities to enable them to place their goods on the British market in the best possible condition, we have added to the wealth of this country $3,000,000 every year since they have been in power. In nothing has the government been stronger than in this matter, and I feel proud of the Minister of Agriculture. He has not given us all we have asked, but we are in hopes of bringing him to time. With the assistance of my good friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), I am sure that we are going to persuade him to give us better facilities for carrying the goods to Montreal. Last week we should have had refrigerator cars for that purpose. The heat came very suddenly, and we had not the cars, but the government have agreed to give us the ice cars for the next week, so that we are going to be able to deliver our goods from every factory to the cool curing chamber in Montreal; so that the best facilities will be provided to ensure our goods being placed on the British market in a satisfactory condition. A few years ago we felt that something should be done to improve the curing rooms of our country; and we talked the matter over with the Minister of Agriculture. He at once established four central experimental cool curing stations, two in Ontario and two in Quebec. In three years these stations have cured 119,686 boxes of cheese. This cheese has been cured in such a way as to justify the experiment, and all the factories in the country will require to be put in better condition to properly cure their cheese. Thousands of dollars are now being spent every year in building cool curing stations. We are getting all the time into a better position for placing our goods on the British market. I feel proud of the record of the government on this cold storage business, and I hope they will give us still better facilities in the future. I hope my good friend from East Lambton will give us all the assistance he can, and will join the Eastern Dairymen's Association, and become a prominent man in the country.

Mr. C. H. PARMELEE (Shefford). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word or two in reference to a subject which has been introduced by my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Walsh). He stated, what is quite true, that there is more or less complaint on the part of the factory men of Canada in regard to shortages of weight in butter and cheese. My hon. friend seems to think that is a new grievance, which has only arisen since the Liberals came into power. Let me tell him that the same sort of grievance existed when his friends were in power, and what did they attempt to do to remedy it ?

So far as the Liberal government is concerned, a royal commission was appointed at the instance of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, which investigated the whole question thoroughly and laid the foundation for the application of a remedy. In this country it is the law that the boards of trade in the various centres are vested with the power of appointing public weighers, whose certificates have full effect in law. That has been done in Montreal. The board of trade there appoint a public weigher in the person of Mr. Cameron. But the butter and cheese exchange, for reasons best known to themselves, refuse to utilize his services, but appoint instead Mr. Macleod. So far as I have been able to ascertain, one of the chief complaints of the factory men is that Mr. Macleod is the employee of the Butter and Cheese Association instead of being an impartial public official like Mr. Cameron. So far as I know, I believe the factory men throughout Canada are perfectly satisfied with Mr. Cameron's weights, but have little confidence in Mr. Macleod's. I might say, for the information of the factory men, that it is their own fault if they accept Mr. Macleod's weights or pay claims for short weights on his certificates, because they are not worth the paper they are written on. In respect to the Minister of Agriculture, he is fully seized with the importance of this matter, and in the last few weeks he had a conference with the council of the Board of Trade of Montreal concerning it. Some four years ago, for some inexplicable reason, the council of the Board of Trade of Montreal, at the instance, I presume, of the Butter and Cheese Association, passed an extraordinary rule to this effect, that in the weighing of butter and cheese gains shall not be balanced against losses. The practise I believe to be this. Butter and cheese are weighed in lots of five. If two boxes should be short and one full weight and two over weight, the average weight making the lot all right, Mr. Macleod's practise is to charge them two out of the five short or forty out of a hundred. In other words, he gives no credit for gains, but in that he is following the rule of the council of the Board of Trade. The Minister of Agriculture pleaded with the council of the Board of Trade to rescind that rule. He urged strongly that such a rule was in contravention of the spirit of fairness and justice. He held, and very properly, that no other staple article in Canada is subjected to any such rule. That, however, is the situation to-day, and I may say that in my opinion any claims for shortage baased upon a rule of that kind would not hold in any court. Such is not the practice of the trade in the case of any other staple article. The rule is not based upon any principle of fairness or justice, and I do not believe that any court in Canada would sustain a claim for short weight based on it. I may say that should the council of the Board of Trade persist in refusing to rescind the obnoxious rule and refuse to put butter and cheese on the same basis as other great staples, it will become the duty of this House to amend the law in respect of public weighing, and particularly the weighing of these two great commodities. That is a step which no doubt most of us would rather not be compelled to take. It would be far better if the council of the Montreal Board of Trade would listen to the dictates of reason and fairness and rescind the rule complained of, and it would be far better, too, if the Montreal Butter and Cheese Association would then fall into line and avail themselves of the services of Mr. Cameron, in whom the factory men of Canada have confidence, who is besides a public official, and whose weights have effect in law.

I do not mean to stand up here and claim that there is no such thing as short weights. I know perfectly well the conditions under which butter and cheese are weighed and have to reach the market. I know their liability to shrinkage in hot weather, the possibility of the scales being out of order some times and of perhaps careless weighing; but I do contend that the factory men are entitled to have the assurance that when their goods are weighed they are weighed properly and honestly by a public official. The great cause of complaint and friction between the buyers and sellers is largely due to the fact that the factory men lack confidence in the weigher. They feel that there must be something wrong when the Butter and Cheese Association of Montreal refuses to employ a public weigher and appoints a man of their own, and they are justified in that lack of confidence when they become aware of the extraordinary rule under which the weights are figured out.

I am glad my hon. friend from Huntingdon has brought this matter up, because I wanted an opportunity of saying a few words on it. I may say, from my own knowledge of the business, that some curious things happen in respect of the weighing of butter and cheese. When the market is buoyant and prices are going up claims for short weights are rare, whereas in a falling market these claims multiply. I do not know that the two circumstances have anything to do with these results, but no doubt the employment of Mr. Macleod and his application of this unfair rule have tended to convince factory men generally that they are not being treated fairly. It is in the interests of the trade of the country, and particularly of the great butter and cheese trade of Montreal, which handles from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 worth of these products every year, to have this friction and misunderstanding removed by adopting fair, square and honest methods in respect of weighing. If that be done, I will guarantee that the factory men will pay claims for short weight, and do that cheerfully once they are convinced the claims are fair, because no factory man in this country wants to be paid for an extra pound of butter or cheese which he has not been able to furnish. And I would warn the Butter and Cheese Association of Montreal and the council of the Board of Trade of Montreal that unless they do their part towards putting the weighing of butter and cheese on a proper basis, it may be the duty of this government and parliament to adopt legislation which will compel them to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Might I ask a question? How long does the hon. gentleman think this grievance will continue before some remedy is applied? The government recognized it in 1901, and have as yet done nothing.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queen's, P.E.I.). I wish to bring to the attention of the House a promise made in 1901 by the Minister of Agriculture, which will be found on page 5168 of 'Hansard' of that year. At that time, in discussing the question of cold storage, he said he had in view, not only the equipment of steamers from Montreal and the maritime provinces, but a small steamer to run continuously between Prince Edward Island and Great Britain. I find this statement made by the hon. minister:

> For instance, we have one steamer we propose to equip that is undertaking to trade between Prince Edward Island and England, devoting itself to that trade exclusively. That trade only requires a comparatively small steamer, and the equipment will not cost much more than half what it would for one of the larger Elder Dempster boats sailing from Montreal to Liverpool.

He also states that there will be five trips in the year 1901 and six trips in the following year. I would like to know from the minister what became of this steamer which, he promised, would be equipped for the purpose of trading between Great Britain and Prince Edward Island. I do not think that steamer ever traded between that province and Great Britain. If she was so equipped, I would ask the minister from what ports she ran and what trips she made?

Mr. FISHER. The information the hon. gentleman asks for relates to the Department of Trade and Commerce. I will get it for him.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to say just a word before closing. I wish to thank the courteous member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) for his kind reference to myself and to tell him that I shall be only too glad to join the Eastern Dairyman's Association. I am glad to hear him say that he would like to have the minister improve the system. That is what we are eager he should do. As to the government weigher at Montreal, I cannot think of anything more necessary to secure the confidence of the people shipping these goods to the port of Montreal than to have a public weigher there, and I sincerely hope that the minister will soon arrange for the appointment of such an officer. I wish to correct one or two remarks made by the minister. He tells us of the wonderful work of the department and refers also the United States system. My reason for calling attention to some of the remarks of United States officials as to our cold storage system of Canada is emphasized by a report I have here which says that the system of cool curing of cheese used in Canada at a temperature of 52 degrees to 58 degrees Fahrenheit stands midway between the cool curing system that they advocate and one most widely in use at the present time. So, it appears that the hon. minister's system goes only half way. We urge upon him to insist on securing a lower temperature for the cheese. The hon. minister also referred to a remark I made as to a report from the United States which, he said, was an eighteen months' report of the cheese cure. I wish to call attention to a ninety days' report which states that at 40 degrees the losses were 1¼ per cent, while at 50 degrees to 60 degrees—the temperature the minister is advocating all over the country—the cheese shrank to 3·4 to 4·5 per cent in the same time. So, the minister cannot help but see that my contention in regard to cheese was reasonable and fair. The minister referred, in a rather heated manner, to my statement that the Brockville curing room went over 74 degrees on twenty-four days during the two years. I can only refer him to the document published by his own department, 'report of a conference of dairy instructors and experts.' In that I find the statement made by Mr. Ruddick, I believe—page 102—and I would ask the particular attention of the minister (Mr. Fisher) to this, as he warmed up particularly in speaking of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, all this is with the permission of the House.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) will understand that I have no right to reply and he has no right to speak. Of course, I am willing that he should speak.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister made a statement and I wish merely to place against it the statement in this publication of his own department.

Mr. L. LAVERGNE (Drummond and Arthabaska.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the hon. Minister of Agriculture on the clever, wise and business-like manner with which he has managed his department since the advent of the Liberal government to power.

I approve entirely the flattering remarks made by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) respecting the minister and the record of his department, and I take this opportunity to show briefly the excellent results derived from the establishment of cool curing chambers in different parts of the country, specially in Ontario, at Brockville and Woodstock, and in Quebec, at St. Hyacinthe and Cowansville. The rural districts which have been fortunate enough in procuring these stations, have fully justified their usefulness—say their necessity, by the superior quality of the cheese and the increased price secured for it. Cheese is graded in these curing rooms, so that every honest endeavour to produce a good article is rewarded by a proportionately high price.

I beg most respectfully from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), to establish more cool curing stations, at such places as were previously decided upon in Quebec, and Ontario, and up to those now in operation in St. Hyacinthe, Woodstock, Brockville and Cowansville. I beg to draw the attention of the hon. minister and of this House to the fact that the district of Arthabaska is one of the foremost in the province of Quebec for the manufacturing of cheese. I have the honour to represent this constituency and I am satisfied that I am now voicing the unanimous desire of the farmers of that district, in claiming for them a large cool curing station, in order that they may enjoy the benefit of it such as the farmers of the district of St. Hyacinthe and Bedford do. I believe that after he has perused the reports and satisfied himself as to the large quantity of cheese turned out in the district of Arthabaska, the hon. minister will not hesitate to decide upon the construction of a cool curing station in that district such as they now exist at St. Hyacinthe and other large cheese-producing centres. I am aware that the government cannot think of establishing such stations everywhere and that he can only build them where the quantity of cheese produced would justify the expenditure, but the district of Arthabaska is undoubtedly one of those that are entitled to it.

I do not wish to detain the House any longer, my only desire being to draw again the government's attention to the production of cheese in the district which I have the honour to represent, and I thought that perhaps this was the most favourable opportunity to do so. I hope that the hon. minister will take kindly to my remarks and that he will find his way clear to grant my request in favour of the farmers of Drummond and Arthabaska either in the course of this or next year.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I had not intended to take part in this debate; I do not pretend to a practical knowledge of the cold storage system which would warrent me giving advice to this House or to the farmers of Canada. I do not believe in placing upon the 'Hansard' any mere advice unless it is of such a character as that, when read by the farming community, it can be relied as being of some material value. There are one or two points in connection with this subject to which I might refer, even though I am not a practical agriculturist or shipper of perishable products. I am always glad to hear a question like this ventilated in the House. It is a question of deep interest to a great many people in this country, and I have no doubt that, from the able discussion which has taken place this afternoon, all of which I regret I did not hear, a great deal of useful information was imparted to the people of this country. However, I think it only fair to say this, honour to whom honour is due. If there is any good in the system of cold storage, let us be fair enough to give the credit to the proper parties. I listened a few moments ago to the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) who claims to be a very high authority on questions of this kind. Well, in some respects he is a pretty high authority, probably about six inches higher than any other man in this House. But I am not sure that he is as correct in his figures or in his data as he ought to be on a question of this importance. He told us about a system of cold storage that was inaugurated in 1897. I am afraid my hon. friend has been asleep during the intervening years. He does not appear to know that long before 1897 there was instituted in this country a system of cold storage which, in effect, was the basis of what we now have. Permit me to remind the hon. gentleman—because I have no doubt that he will be engaged in addressing cheese and dairymen's associations—that long before 1897 there was the nucleus of a good system of cold storage established in this country. I hold in my hand the report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year 1896, prepared by the present minister, and in that report I find the following statement :

A cold storage service for the safe carriage of butter was begun in 1895.

Not in 1897.

Arrangements were made whereby refrigerator cars for carrying butter were run during the summer on the main lines of railways leading into Montreal. These cars were used to pick up small lots of butter as offered at the different railway stations. Shippers by these cars were allowed to ship butter at the usual 'less than carload rates' without any charge for icing or special service. As far as space permitted, merchants were allowed to use these cars for the shipment of dairy and creamery butter between points at which the cars touched. During 1895 cars were run for at least part of the season on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway.

Arrangements were also made for the chilling of fresh-made creamery butter at the warehouses of the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company, Montreal.

Further on he states :

Arrangements were made for extending the area served by the cold storage cars on railways during 1896. Refrigerator cars were run on terms similar to those in 1895 on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways leading into Montreal. The increase in the quantity of butter exported from the port of Montreal may be quoted from the following figures :

	Packages.
Exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1894	32,055
Exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1895	69,664
Exported from Montreal during the shipping season of 1896	157,321

Now I want to draw attention to this fact, the hon. gentleman who preceded the present Minister of Agriculture is entitled to some share of credit for having established this system of cold storage. It was not due to the present minister. I am not reflecting on the present minister, I am commending the present minister for doing what he has done, for taking hold of a system that was instituted by his predecessor and using all the improved methods that are known for the carriage of perishable products and bringing that system to a higher condition. In that respect I think the present minister is to be commended. But whilst we commend the present minister for what he has done in this respect, we must not forget that something is due to the hon. gentleman who preceded him, and who initiated the cold storage system which has brought about the tremendous results that were referred to by the hon. member for Brockville. I regret that he was not quite fair enough to give credit to whom it was due, and that is the reason why I have risen to make this statement. I have listened to discussions of this character in former years, and the chief complaint I heard made was that the system of cold storage was, to a certain degree, imperfect, inasmuch as it was not kept at a regular temperature all the way across the ocean, and until the goods were delivered to the consumer. I presume the minister has taken steps to remedy that defect. I have also heard the complaint made against the Minister of Agriculture and the Department of Trade and Commerce that when subsidies were granted to steamship companies, and when the people of this country paid for a cold storage system on the vessels crossing the ocean, care was not taken to enter into an agreement with the steamship companies to carry freight at as low a rate as it was carried from American ports in vessels which were possibly better fitted up for carrying perishable products than those sailing from our own ports. I shall not speak any longer on this subject. I have accomplished my purpose in reminding the hon. member for Brockville that there were men living before 1897 who took a very deep interest in the matter of the export of our perishable products to the old land, and who were the authors of the cold storage system which has proved so advantageous to the farmers of this country.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to make a remark with regard to the exceptional manner in which this motion has been accepted by the government. The argument supporting the motion states that the cold storage system now existing is not adequate. It quotes the exports and the large amount of products of a perishable character which are conveyed in cold storage, and which depreciate very much in value on account of the inadequacy of the present system. Then it goes on to say that there was a heavy loss to the farmers for the want of that proper cold storage, and it follows that up by saying that the cold storage facilities provided 'should be thoroughly up to date and efficient, and such as to afford an adequate return for the subsidies granted.'

That is what we should have, but the whole argument went to show that we have not that and as a consequence there has been a large loss to the farmers. The Minister of Agriculture says : I admit that we should have that and therefore I agree with and accept the resolution, it is a motion of want of confidence in the government as it is an amendment to supply, but the minister has accepted it and what has he done by accepting it ? He absolutely condems what he has been doing as Minister of Agriculture for years, because the member who made the motion showed by the thermograph records that there has not been a proper system of cold storage, that there has been a serious loss to the farmers and that Canada is suffering immensely from this cause. The motion is a condemnation of the minister but he says he will accept it and thereby condemns himself and the administration of his department. The Minister of Agriculture says it is true that we have made contracts with the steamship companies to provide cold storage. Yes, they did, but what did those contracts contain ? Only a portion of what they ought to contain. They pretend to provide that cold storage shall be supplied to the farmers at a reasonable rate as was done by his predecessors, when similar contracts were made which contained a stipulation specifying exactly how much in addition to the usual freight rates should be added for cold storage. The present contracts do not ensure the maintenance of a uniform temperature for the whole voyage and the perishable products carried suffer in consequence of this omission. We assist steamship companies from two sources, one is by subsidies for carrying mails and the other by subsidies for the provision of cold storage, and in both of these cases I say the government have lamentably failed in the making of the contracts to provide adequate cold storage sufficient for the relief of the farmer and with a uniform temperature throughout the voyage. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce had his contract before the House we asked for a copy and what did that tell us ? It contained a provision that the steamships securing a subsidy shall provide adequate cold storage but there was no penalty attached if they do not provide that cold storage. It is like the old saying that a law without a penalty is valueless. You may say a thing is improper and should not be done, but if you do not provide some punishment your law is of no use, and so a contract of this kind without some penalty clause is valueless. You may say as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, that these steamships shall provide adequate cold storage, but they get the subsidy whether they provide it or not, and the farmers suffer in consequence. The result is that we are paying for something we never get and that is why we are blaming the government. That is why this motion is made and the government by accepting it, accepts a vote of want of confidencre in themselves.

Motion (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). In accordance with the understanding this motion for supply was brought forward to-day in order to afford an opportunity for the discussion of this important subject but without any intention of taking up supply. For that reason I beg to move that the House will to-morrow resolve itself into a Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 24,

The Northwest Territories Act, being chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes in all Acts amended thereof, are hereby repealed as respects said clauses, provided notwithstanding such repeal so much of the said Acts and of any order or regulation made thereunder as was in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act, and is not inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, or as to which this Act contains no provision intended as a substitute therefor, shall continue in force in the said clauses in pursuance of and for the purpose of section 15 of this Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The intention is to continue on the conditions existing in the Northwest Territories at the present time with respect to laws, &c., and at the same time to get rid of the Northwest Territories Act which shall cease to be operative in the territories after this comes into force. I have had the advantage of a conference with the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and while we are at one with respect to the object we both have in view, it has been suggested by the leader of the opposition that possibly some other form of words might be found to carry out our object. In that view sections 15 and 24 might either be allowed to remain in abeyance or be carried to-night with the understanding that if hereafter any better form of words is found we might reconsider the clauses, or, in the alternative, hold the clauses in abeyance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As the Minister of Justice has said the object to be attained is very plain, but it is not easy to adopt the exact form of words necessary for that purpose. The criticism which has been made is that the section now under consideration, while repealing the statutes, continues them in force subject to another repeal provided for in section 15. Probably the answer which will be made by the draughtsman is that the statutes are repealed but their provisions are continued in force by reference and that those provisions so continued in force by reference are to be dealt with afterwards under the provisions of section 15 by either the parliament of Canada or by the legislature of the province according to the jurisdiction of either the one legislative body or the other. I do not think there is any objection to passing these two to-night, subject to the condition mentioned by the Minister of Justice, that if it is desirable to return to either one or other of these clauses we can do so without any question. Of course it may be that some gentleman who is not here to-night might like to say something about either one section or the other.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The leader of the opposition has been good enough to suggest that the gentleman in my department who has drafted the clause might confer with some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side for the purpose of endeavouring to get some wording which will carry out the object we all have in view. This is a thing that ought to be settled by conference, and personally I think that is the best way to proceed. The suggestion of the leader of the opposition has been adopted by me, and I shall see to it that the official of the Justice Department shall consult gentlemen opposite with the idea of agreeing as to a form.

Mr. MONK. I was not present when the original section 15 was changed. The first draft of section 15 was very short, but as it is to-day the same idea has been extended considerably. I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the beginning of section 15 :

> Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all laws, including the Northwest Territories Act and the amendments thereto notwithstanding the repeal thereof by this Act, and all orders, &c., shall continue in the said province.

The amendment of which the Minister of Justice gave notice seems to change that. It says:

> The Northwest Territories Act, being chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes in all Acts amended thereof, are hereby repealed as respects said clauses, provided notwithstanding such repeal so much of the said Acts and of any order or regulation made thereunder as was in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act, and is not inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, or as to which this Act contains no provision intended as a substitute therefor, shall continue in force in the said clauses in pursuance of and for the purpose of section 15 of this Act.

Does it not seem that there is some clashing between this proposed amendment of section 24 and the rather sweeping terms in the beginning of section 15?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Quite right, but a word of explanation will make it clear. The words in section 15 which constitute a contradiction, namely : 'Including the Northwest Territories Act' are repealed by my amended clause. The history of the legislation is that the original section 15 in that brief form was drafted by myself. When this clause came up for further consideration it was necessary to amplify the original clause to some extent, and hence clause 15 in the form which my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has it in his possession. That clause was drawn in anticipation of a brief repealing section such as you have it in the original Bill which merely provided for the repeal of the Northwest Territories Act. The intention now is to change it so as to adopt section 15 in the form in which my hon. friend has it, amplified as it has been by the draughtsman, eliminating the words:

> Including the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act and the amendments thereto notwithstanding the repeal thereof by this Act.

And for these words substitute the new provisions of section 24. This is the fourth attempt we have made at conveying the idea we all have in our minds.

Mr. MONK. I did not know of the change. I would further call the attention of the Minister of Justice in a general way to this point : That in this section 24 we are maintaining in force a very considerable body of law contained in the Northwest Territories Act. A glance will show the Minister of Justice that there are very few sections of the Northwest Territories Act that are either inconsistent with the Alberta Act or for which there are substitutes in so many words in the Alberta Act. I wish to mention particularly section 110 of the Northwest Territories Act as to the English and French language and in regard to which I have given notice of an amendment. Section 110, under this repealing section 24, would seem to me to be preserved. There is no clause in the Alberta Act under consideration which provides any special substitute for that, nor is it inconsistent with any of the clauses of the Alberta Act, as I understand them. It would remain in the law, and I would venture the opinion that it would remain there very probably, subject to repeal by the local legislature as being a local matter within the province.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If section 110 is carried forward,—and I myself am disposed to think it is carried forward—it would be the law as they will have it in the province after this constitutional Act is passed. Then of course, it would become subject to the control of the local legislature, and it will be a matter to be dealt with by them ; and I say emphatically, Mr. Chairman, that is my intention. That is, the matter as I view it, ought to be dealt with by the local legislature—of course now I am speaking absolutely from my own standpoint.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me there may be a conflict of authority or jurisdiction after a while with regard to the Yukon Territory, if we repeal these laws. I take it that it is under the authority of the present Northwest Territories Act that the Yukon gets its power.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Originally it was, but we have passed a special Act with respect to the Yukon Territory.

Mr. SPROULE. When ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In 1898.

Mr. SPROULE. I have the Act of 1898 and it says :

Subject to the provisions of this Act the laws relating to civil and criminal matters and the ordinances as the same exist in the Northwest Territories at the time of the passing of this Act, shall be and remain in force in the Yukon Territory in so far as the same are applicable thereto until amended or repealed by the parliament of Canada.

Are you amending or repealing them ? Then the Yukon district is described and it says :

And the same shall no longer form a part of the Northwest Territories.

You have set off the Yukon as a separate district, but it gets its authority from the Northwest Territories Act. Then you provide :

The commissioner shall administer the government of the territory on the instructions from time to time given him by the Governor in Council or the Minister of the Interior.

And then :

The Governor in Council, by warrant under his Privy Seal, may constitute and appoint so many persons from time to time, not exceeding in the whole six persons, as he may deem desirable to be a council and under that council shall act.

Under that authority they have established an educational system. There is nothing set out in the Yukon Territory Act that gives them authority to establish the system which they have established—a dual system of schools similar to that of the Northwest Territories. Under what authority have they established that system, and what laws will apply to the Yukon Territory after we have repealed the balance of these laws except what relate to these two provinces? It seems to me there will be some conflict there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I must confess that one educational problem is all that I can deal with at one time. I do not want to be involved in the educational problems of the Yukon. I may say, however, that the Northwest Territories Act is made applicable to the Yukon Territory, subject to repeal, alteration or amendment by the Yukon council. Whatever we may do with the Northwest Territories Act so far as the new provinces are concerned does not affect it so far as the Yukon Territory is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. You have put the Yukon Territory under a separate authority, and under that authority the Yukon council is acting. When you repeal this law, what will be their position? Will they continue to act as a council under an authority which has been repealed?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Yukon Territory will continue, with the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act as they existed before incorporated in the Yukon Territory Act ; so that the repeal of the Act as it affects the Northwest Territories does not affect the Yukon Territory at all. I move to strike out the words :

Including the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act and the amendments thereto, notwithstanding the repeal thereof by this Act, from the first, second, third and fourth lines of the first subsection.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move the addition of the following proviso to subsection 2 :

Provided that if upon such abolition the legislature constitutes a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, the procedure in criminal matters then obtaining in respect of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories shall until otherwise provided by competent authority continue to apply to such superior court, and that the Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time declare all or any part of such procedure to be inapplicable to such superior court.

We have at the present time in the Northwest Territories a system of criminal procedure which is special to the Northwest Territories, differing from that which exists in the older provinces. After the new provinces are organized, they will have it within their power to re-create their courts altogether. I want to make the present exceptional system of criminal procedure applicable to the new courts until such time as they may alter it.

Amendment agreed to, and section 15 agreed to.

On section 8—seat of government——

Mr. FOWLER. I think it would be well if the Minister of the Interior would give the committee some idea of the reasons which actuated him in having the capital placed at Edmonton.

Mr. OLIVER. The reasons are so evident that I do not think it necessary to burden the pages of ' Hansard ' or to occupy the time of the House with any statement beyond what has been made during the weary weeks of the debate that has taken place already on this question. If my hon. friend is not familiar with the reasons which prevailed in favour of the location of the capital at Edmonton, I would suggest that he refer to 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOWLER. Well, from the geographical position of Edmonton, it does not strike me that the reasons for placing the capital there are so obvious as the Minister of the Interior would have us suppose. There must be some hidden reason for it which has not yet been disclosed to the committee. Is it because that happens to be the residence of the minister himself? Can he not get beyond the parochial idea? Surely the position he occupies to-day as a minister of the Crown should have broadened his ideas, and have enabled him to get away from the parish in which he resides. Any man who studies the situation must be convinced that Edmonton is not the proper place for the capital, but that the proper place is the city of Calgary, which is more nearly the centre of population in the province, the commercial metropolis of that country, and on the main line of travel, the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not on a sidetrack as the city of Edmonton is. It seems to me that the minister is treating this committee with very scant courtesy when he shows such a lack of explanation for placing the capital in this position. I do not think he has any right to treat this committee in this cavalier way in this matter, which is very important to the people of the province of Alberta. Take the homestead entries, and take the great movement of population, which is towards the southern part of the province. The present population in the southern part of the province far outnumbers that in the northern part; and yet the hon. minister places the capital at the very extreme of the populated portion of the province instead of at Calgary, which is more nearly the middle in point of position as well as in point of population.

Mr. SCOTT. I might say that the particular evidence which the hon. gentleman calls to the attention of the committee is evidence tending to the very opposite conclusion. If any one looks at the map of the proposed province of Alberta, he will find that Edmonton, instead of being north of the centre of that province, is about 100 miles south of the centre. Where the hon. gentleman gets his information in regard to the centre of population in recent years I am at a loss to understand. The census of 1901, as we have heard in the discussion on the redistribution of that province, showed a population in the northern part of the province in excess of that in the southern part to the extent of about 5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is that line of division?

Mr. SCOTT. The line of township No. 38. North of that line of townships, if my information is accurate, the census showed an excess of about 5,000 over the population south of that line.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the vote?

Mr. SCOTT. Take the two north districts. That province was divided into four federal constituencies. In the two north districts of Edmonton and Strathcona the vote was in the neighbourhood of 11,000, as compared with about 9,000 in the districts of Calgary and Alberta. I may say further that the general impression throughout the west with regard to the trend of immigration in recent years is that it has been very largely towards the northern country. Besides, throughout the northern country there will be shortly two main lines of railways built, namely, the Canadian Northern, which is expected to reach Edmonton this fall, and the Grand Trunk Pacific, which will reach it in a short time. This leads to the inevitable conclusion that very shortly the northern part of Alberta will have a population very much in excess of the population which may be expected in the southern portion. My hon. friend spoke of something hidden behind the selection of Edmonton. Well, I am not a particular advocate of the claims of Edmonton to be the capital as against the claim of Calgary. I, fortunately, do not live in the proposed province of Alberta, but in what I believe to be a better province, that of Saskatchewan. Surely my hon. friend has never been in that part of the country at present termed the northern part of Alberta, or he would know that Edmonton is situated on a hill, and there is nothing hidden about it.

Mr. FOWLER. As far as my information goes, I understand that south of Red Deer, which is nearly midway between Calgary and Edmonton, there would be a population of some 11,000 less than in the northern part of Alberta, which shows my calculation to be absolutely correct with respect to Calgary being nearer the centre of population of the proposed province of Alberta than would be Edmonton. The argument my hon. friend brings forward with respect to railways in the future to go through Edmonton rather gives the advantage to Calgary, because Calgary is not dependent on the future for railway communication as it has a railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, running through it now. And the maps published by the Department of the Interior show that the settlement in the southern part of the proposed province of Alberta is very much in excess of that in the northern part. They show that the country to the south is being taken up very much more rapidly than the country to the north. And that settlement will be greatly increased when the large irrigation canal is completed which is now in course of construction. That will open to settlement two or three million acres of very fertile land that only require irrigation to become capable of cultivation.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I would point to my hon. friend from West Assiniboia, whose figures I did not catch.

Mr. SCOTT. I said that in the two north federal ridings of Edmonton and Strathcona the aggregate vote on the 3rd November last was in the neighbourhood of 11,000, while in the two south federal ridings of Calgary and Alberta the vote was, in round numbers, 9,000.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. My hon. friend has possibly not given the matter as much attention as I have, for I hope he has no desire to mislead the House. He is perfectly well aware that the constituency of Alberta, which is in the south, does not go as far east as the 4th meridian, and the new province of Alberta is now taking in a very large portion of the constituency at present represented by the hon. gentleman. In that portion there are 1,650 votes on the list, which must necessarily go to the south.

Mr. SCOTT. In the Medicine Hat district ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes ; and that would alter his calculation. I simply offer this in explanation, because he possibly did not take it into consideration. I would further point out that a portion of the constituencies of Edmonton and Strathcona run east of the 4th meridian ; and in making his calculation, he no doubt included the vote cast in the province of Saskatchewan as it is now. The same remark applies to the constituency of Calgary. It also runs east of the 4th meridian ; but in that portion of the constituency east of the 4th meridian there was no poll held at the polling subdivision there, whilst at the poll held at Lloydminister a very considerable vote was cast, as there also was in that portion of the constituency of Edmonton which now is to the east of the 4th meridian. While I have not taken this into consideration, it will be seen from it that Alberta, Medicine Hat and Calgary contain 14,687, and Strathcona and Edmonton 15,263. If you would take these other matters into consideration—the vote in the fifty townships in the constituency of Strathcona and the townships in the constituency of Edmonton—it will be found that my hon. friend's figures are very wide of the mark.

Mr. SCOTT. Would that not leave the north and the south just about even, taking the north line of township 34, which is the dividing line between the two north and south districts ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. If you take the eleven ridings to the south and leave out Red Deer, and take the eleven ridings immediately to the north of Red Deer up to riding 23, there are 2,222 votes cast in the south, multiply that by five or four, you would arrive at the difference in population between the south and the north, which would be something like 11,000.

Mr. SCOTT. What is my hon. friend taking south of the dividing line ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Red Deer. I do not consider that consitiuency at all, I simply take eleven north and eleven south. You can put Red Deer either to the south or the north.

Mr. SCOTT. What reason have you for taking that as the dividing line ? Why not take a line that would run through Edmonton ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. That is line 38, and Red Deer is practically at line 38.

Mr. SCOTT. What justification have you for taking line 38 ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. None at all. I do not care which you take, but you mentioned line 38 a while ago, and it will work out the same. In leaving out Red Deer I am neither discriminating against the north or the south. If you choose to go through the constituency of Red Deer and take out the polling subdivisions which run north and south of it and take the names out from the list and see how many are in the south and north, you would get at the exact figures. The illustration the hon. gentleman gave is hardly fair, having regard to the fact that there are about 1,650 more names in Medicine Hat and that Strathcona and Edmonton run east of the 4th meridian.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask what greater right the hon. member has to fix the 38th line of townships than I have to fix the 34th line of townships ? Why fix an arbitrary dividing line between the south and the north of this province ? Or if that is to be done, why not trace a line through the centre of the province ? If we would do that, we would find that practically the whole of the population would be in the southern part.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, why does not the hon. gentleman fix the capital at Peace River ?

Mr. SCOTT. I am satisfied. I would not complain if it were fixed at Red Deer.

Mr. HERRON. One good reason why the capital should not be placed at Edmonton is that at present the population does not extend a great distance north of that place. It extends south to the boundary, about 350 miles by the most direct way of travel. One travelling from the Crow's Nest Pass, for instance, would have to make a three-day's journey by rail. The journey from Cardston by rail would be about as long. If the capital were fixed at Calgary it would be the most convenient point for all parts of the province. The people of the southern country certainly protest against having the capital placed at Edmonton.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. As to the choice of the 38th line of townships, I may say that I am willing to take any line the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) suggests. Whatever line he takes the calculation will be the same. My reason for taking the 38th line was because it left eleven constituencies north and eleven south of the line, exclusive of the Athabasca constituencies.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is a matter which will have to be settled eventually by the province, just as will the question of redistribution, of which we have heard so much. It is practically left to the province to settle. For the time, we take Edmonton, but the new province can choose any place it pleases. That is the intention, and I think it is the better plan.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes, but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will do me the honour to look at the map, he will observe that Edmonton is practically made the hub of a wheel through this distribution of seats. He will see that a condition of affairs is being established here which cannot be found to exist in any other province of the Dominion. Edmonton is one constituency—the hub. Stony Plain comes into it like the spoke of a wheel; as does Strathcona; and Sturgeon is another; and Saskatchewan is practically another and St. Albert also. Already three candidates have been nominated for these constituencies who reside in Edmonton. So when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) says that this is a matter for the local legislature to decide, I may tell him that the people in the south are perfectly willing to leave the capital to be fixed according to the will of the people. But under this measure the hands of the legislature are tied—for there are six constituencies out of twenty-four bordering on Edmonton.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course, I know very little of the conditions existing in that part of the country—but of one thing I am sure that if anything nearly so iniquitous has been perpetrated as my hon. friend (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) tells us, that wrong must necessarily be righted by the people. They will find out that wrong, and they will also find means to remedy it.

Mr. FOWLER. But the difficulty is that the first legislature must be elected from the constituencies as they are here, and that legislature fixes the capital. And the scheme that has been made by some person —I do not know by whom, but I very strongly suspect that it is by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver)) himself—will result in the permanent capital being fixed at Edmonton. It is like playing with loaded dice. The majority of the people of Alberta will have no fair chance to say which of these towns shall be their capital, for this iniquitous distribution will have its effect, and no doubt, Edmonton will be selected as the permanent capital, whereas, if the voice of the majority of the people could be heard, that selection would not be made.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. May I ask the Minister of the Interior to point out one single reason why the seat of government should be placed, even provisionally at the end of railway construction?

Mr. OLIVER. I am very sorry to delay the proceedings of parliament at this stage of the session for the purpose of stating what has already been stated, and re-stated, and re-stated again, until the House must be tired of it and the country most unwilling to hear it again. The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) that the capital is placed at Edmonton, because Edmonton is at the terminus of the railway is quite in line with the argument generally put forward in support of the contentions of hon. gentlemen opposite in this matter. They have been determined to find cause of offence where no cause of offence existed, to find a crime where there was no crime, a gerrymander where there was no gerrymander.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. They have assumed that something has been done wrong because it has been done by this side of the House. There is no ground for such an assumption. The placing of the capital is not in the same position as the distribution of the seats. The latter is, in the nature of things, only temporary. The placing of the capital is supposed to be permanent. This government, in locating the capital must, for its own justification place it where it will, in all probability be most suitable for the province, not only as it is, but as it will be. It would be a very short-sighted government and one that would take very little care of the interests committed to its charge if, having the responsibility of locating the capital of the new province, it should locate it otherwhere than at a point where it is likely to be, in future, if not at the present time, the centre of population and of traffic facilities.

Now it is the policy of this government to construct a transcontinental railway. That railway will pass through the city of Edmonton. At the present time the Canadian Northern Railway is under construction to that point. The Canadian Pacific Railway already has connection with that point. The city of Edmonton is the one point west of Winnipeg which has already any reasonable probability of having the three great railway systems of the west. As a railway centre there is no other point equal to it, prospectively, west of Winnipeg between Red River and the Rocky Mountains. If we seek for the geographical centre of the new province, Calgary is not near the centre. Calgary is within forty miles of the Rocky Mountains, it is close to the western side and at the southern end, and if there is any reason in having a central location for the capital, whatever other claims Calgary may have, it has certainly none of these. Edmonton is fairly centrally situated as between the easterly and westerly sides of the province, and as between the northerly and southerly ends, much more favourably situated than Calgary or any other business centre in the new province. That being the case, and it being a prospective railway centre, being already the centre of a very large population, as has been shown during the debate on the distribution, it seems to me that the fact that it is at the terminus of a branch line is no evidence against its suitability to be the capital, but is rather another evidence in its favour. Edmonton is located at a distance of 200 miles from the Canadian Pacific Railway main line, in a rich country tributary to it, and if, with 100 miles of railway, that Edmonton country is already equal in population, or nearly equal, to the population of the Calgary country with 900 miles of railway, it is fair to suppose that Edmonton with 900 miles of railway will be immeasurably ahead of Calgary in population, as Edmonton will have approximately 900 miles of railway tributary to it within a short time. I think it would be strange if the government of this country should not take all these facts into consideration in locating the capital of the province. It would certainly be very improper not to take into consideration the future prospects as well as the geographical location. There has nothing been said or shown, or can be said or shown, against the good judgment of the government in placing the capital at Edmonton. It has been necessary for the government to chose some point in the new province for a capital, and after they have done that, the matter passes out of their hands, and the new province will settle the question of a permanent capital.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The charge of the Minister of Interior that the proceedings on this question have been delayed by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House is about as fair as most of the statements that he makes in this House. This question I suppose has been discussed for about twenty minutes. The question of a capital has always been a burning question in every province of this Dominion. I would like the hon. minister to point out where any reason has been given in this House since the present session was called why Edmonton should be selected as a provisional capital except that it was the centre of the country. Let us follow out that argument. Where would it land us in the province of Ontario? Up above White Fish Point. Where would you be in the province of Quebec, or the province of Manitoba, or the province of British Columbia? Why then should an exception be made in this case, and why should you move the capital away from the centre of population and of trade, Calgary being the accessible centre to-day? The hon. gentleman speaks of railway construction that is to be. If Edmonton becomes the great railway centre that the hon. gentleman anticipates, then that matter is in the hands of the local legislature and they can place it wherever they think the centre is. But I want to refer to his argument with regard to railway construction. If any person will look at the map at the line of the Canadian Northern and where the Grand Trunk Pacific is looking for a line, he will find that it will open just as much country in the south as it will in the north. I submit that this capital should not be chosen on the ground of expectation and prophesy. I do not think my hon. friend will pretend that there is a greater population in the northern part of that province than in the southern part. I would ask him to look at this map published by the Department of the Interior, showing the lands surveyed up to the 1st of January, 1905, and he will find there that Calgary is in the centre of a very large section of surveyed land, while Edmonton is practically on the northern limit. When you go thirty or forty miles west of Edmonton and fifty or sixty-five miles north, there are no more townships surveyed, which have been printed. We have the evidence produced from his own department showing where the settlement in that country is to-day. Now on the question of population, Waghorn's Guide for February gives the population of Calgary at 9,175 and the population of Edmonton at 5,400. Does the hon. gentleman contend that there are more people in the city of Edmonton to-day than there are in Calgary? Look at the vote that was cast last November as another evidence.

Mr. OLIVER. I contend that there are many more people in Edmonton than Waghorn's Guide says there are.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Are there any more in Calgary?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Take the vote that was cast last November, and multiply that vote by four or five, and see how that will work out. If you multiply it by five there is a population in the city of Calgary of 13,410 and in the city of Edmonton of 8,445.

Mr. OLIVER. How many voters does the hon. gentleman figure as being in the city of Calgary?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I figure out on the list in the city of Calgary that there were 2,682.

Mr. OLIVER. How many were cast?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have not the figures here but if you desire the calculation in that way I will make it and give it to you before the committee rises.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman know the area of the country within which this list was given ? Is that the number of votes within the corporate limits of Calgary ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. There are three polls, numbers, 13, 7 and 1, and if the hon. gentleman desires to know I have gone through the list and picked out the names of those who reside in Calgary from those three polls and on the vote I have checked off the names with the scrutineer's book.

Mr. OLIVER. Would that be as correct as the hon. gentleman's statement in regard to Red Deer ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. It would be as correct as most of the statements which the hon. gentleman makes in this House. I differ with him, possibly I may err. I have not a band of officials behind me to work out the figures for me, but if a misstatement of mine is ever pointed out in this House I shall always be glad to correct it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am pointing out that the figures the hon. gentleman has given as the list for Calgary include a great deal of country outside the city of Calgary.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. But a man does not have to vote in the polling division where he resides, and if the vote polled in Edmonton is compared with that of Calgary it will be found that as many polled their votes in Edmonton who live outside that city as in Calgary.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what was done in that way in Calgary, but I say that was not done to any appreciable extent in Edmonton because the country immediately surrounding Edmonton was divided into small polling subdivisions so that it would be convenient for the people to vote at their own polling subdivisions and they did so.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. On this matter of correctness let me tell the hon. gentleman that it does not lie in his mouth to charge us with misstatements. In placing figures before the House I gave the vote polled, the number on the list of every subdivision and I offered to hand over any constituency poll by poll and ask the minister to point out wherein we were wrong or else to admit we were right. But when we asked a return from the Minister of the Interior of the vote polled and the votes on the list in the four ridings in Alberta, and were furnished with a return showing 1,500 less names on the list in Alberta than there actually were, I would ask the minister if he can show any such error as that in any figures I have cited. If he can do so, I will not detain him any longer in discussion ?

Mr. OLIVER. I was simply calling attention to the fact that when the member said there were so many voters on the list in Calgary he was including votes not in Calgary and he has already said there were three polls in that list not in Calgary.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I did not say anything of the sort ; I said a number of the names in these polls were not on the list. I went through the list and picked out the names of those who did reside in the subdivisions. But that is not all the minister said ; he went further and charged me with having some figures which I submitted in this House incorrect.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely, do you deny it ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. An error was found in Red Deer, but it was not one-hundredth part the error found in the figures submitted of the vote in the north and south. If the hon. gentleman contends for a moment that the city of Calgary is not the commercial centre of that country perhaps figures can be given which may be startling. What I said to him at the outset was that in the city of Calgary to-day we have a line of railway running east and west and another north and south. Edmonton is actually at the very end of railway construction. If he takes a point halfway between the two stations it will be there seen that there are 990 odd miles of railway south and only 150 north. Therefore, I ask, is there any question as to which is the most accessible place to-day ? I have pointed out—and I do not think he will contradict it—that when these new proposed lines of railway are built just as good country as he has in the north will be opened in the southern part of the province. Let us look at some of the returns from the two cities :

Item.	Calgary.	Edmonton.
Postal revenue year ending June 30, 1904..	28,638	13,104
Customs..	414,466	*185,317
Inland Revenue..	100,410	*29,164

* Including Strathcona.

The hon. member does not need to take my figures as the latter two items are returns to an order of this House. Therefore I say that there is not the slightest doubt as to where the centre of population is as I can prove from the map of the Department of the Interior showing the rural population. I have given the figures of the population of the two cities and there is not the slightest doubt as to where the centre of railway construction is to-day or as to which is the most accessible place. We must again trouble the Minister of the Interior to show why the capital, the seat of government has been taken away from the centre of population and trade and the most accessible point. If you look up the constituencies of the local House you will find that eight of the members would have to pass through Calgary to get to Edmonton, one other lives much closer to Calgary than to Edmonton and any of them along that line can get to Calgary with very little inconvenience. Take the member for Cardstone, or Lethbridge, or Medicine Hat or Pincher and it would take any of these men practically six days to go to Edmonton and return. None of them who go to Edmonton will be delayed in getting to Calgary save for six or eight hours of travel in the train between these two points. Let me point out a simple example which may illustrate where the people of that country consider the centre is at present. Our court en banque, sits at Regina to hear appeals for the eastern part of the country; for the west they sit at Calgary. Why? Because it is more convenient for the judges living in that country, for the litigants and for the lawyers. That is only an example of what a non-political body considers to be the accessible centre and the most convenient place to meet in that country.

Mr. TURRIFF. The fact which the hon. member points out that Calgary is at present the more central railway point certainly would not be denied by anybody who knows the conditions of the country there. But the very fact that although Edmonton has been side-tracked for all these years at the end of a branch line that there is in the country surrounding Edmonton practically the same population as there is surrounding Calgary is to my mind very good proof that Edmonton is more suitable for the capital because the capital is placed for the future not altogether for the present. It shows that the country up there is settling up rapidly when under these adverse circumstances they have practically as many people as there are around Calgary.

The hon. member for Calgary said that according to the map the surveyed townships were more numerous south of Edmonton, and that Edmonton was about on the northern limits. For years back, and especially for the past two or three years there have been demands made on the Department of the Interior by people going into that country 400 miles north of Edmonton to have lands surveyed, but it was the policy of the department not to encourage people to settle so far from railway communication. Last year survey parties were out in that country, and at the present time there are five survey parties near the Peace river subdividing the land at the demand of intending settlers. If anybody who knows that country gives an unbiased opinion, he will immediately conclude that Edmonton is much more centrally situated for the capital of the new province of Alberta than is any other town of importance within the limits of the province, and that the good lands extend as far to the North west——

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Did the hon. member say that Calgary was as far south as is Regina the proposed capital of Saskatchewan?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am saying nothing at all about the province of Saskatchewan. I state that Edmonton is more centrally located than any other town in the province of Alberta, and I say that there is a stretch of as good agricultural land suitable for mixed farming and grain growing extending Northwest from Edmonton, as there is from Edmonton to the boundary line, a distance of over 300 miles. Edmonton is as centrally located as it is possible practically to locate the capital of the province of Alberta, not only geographically, but as regards the available land that will be settled in the near future. With two new transcontinental lines heading for Edmonton, one expecting to get there this fall, there is no doubt that Edmonton is much more centrally situated for the capital than is Calgary.

Mr. FOWLER. There is some disagreement between the views of the Minister of Justice and the hon. member (Mr. Turiff). The Minister of Justice told us that Edmonton was only a temporary capital.

Mr. TURRIFF. So it is.

Mr. FOWLER. But the hon. member (Mr. Turiff) says they are selecting Edmonton because of its future possibilities. It is not unusual for us to observe a wide divergence of opinion among gentlemen opposite, and so we are not so much surprised at it as otherwise we would be. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) spoke of the relative nearness of Calgary and Edmonton to the international boundary, but if he looks at the map he will see that Regina is forty miles nearer to the United States than is Calgary, and this would seem to indicate, according to the hon. gentleman's own argument, that Regina is too close to the boundary to be the capital of Saskatchewan.

Mr. LAKE. I notice that the city of Prince Albert is almost exactly the centre of the province of Saskatchewan taking it from east to west, and taking it from north to south it is very much nearer the centre than either Regina or Saskatoon. It will, therefore, be necessary for the hon. members from East Assiniboia and West Assiniboia to adopt a new line of argument when we come to select a capital for Saskatchewan, but I have no doubt they will accommodate their argument to the idea they wish to advocate.

Mr. OLIVER. We will deal with that when we come to it.

On section 20,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move to substitute the following section for section 20:

All crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto shall continue to be vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada, subject to the provisions of any Act of the parliament of Canada with respect to road allowances and roads or trails as in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act, which shall apply to the said province with the substitution therein of the said province for the Northwest Territories.

2. The Rocky Mountains Park shall continue to be subject to the provisions of the Acts of the parliament of Canada applying thereto, and to regulations made or to be made under any such Act: Provided that the provincial laws shall apply to and be operative within the said park so far as they are not inconsistent with such Acts and regulations.

Mr. LAKE. I purpose moving an amendment having in view the carrying out of the principles of confederation in regard to the provincial ownership of Crown lands. A good deal of discussion has already taken place on this matter, and I do not consider it necessary to say very much more now. The British North America Act is very explicit and precise in regard to the distribution of legislative authority as between the Dominion and the provinces. There are certain rights and powers assigned to the provinces. An organized territory without full provincial powers is in my opinion a territory still, and not a province in the full meaning of the word. If the word 'province' is to be retained in these Bills the ordinary rights and powers of a province ought to be given to these new organizations It seems to me that comparatively little change is being made in the status of these two territories, and that the two so-called provinces will be provinces merely in name and not in actual fact. That being so they should have some distinctive name applied to them to distinguish their status from the status of the older provinces. I have protested on a former occasion against depriving these new districts of the ordinary rights and powers enjoyed by the older provinces of the Dominion. I have said that the designs of confederation cannot be said to have been successfully accomplished when there are two grades of provinces existing in the Dominion: upper and lower grade provinces. A confederation in which a citizen has greater rights in one province than in another cannot be enduring. I contend that when a Canadian goes from the province of Quebec or of Ontario to reside in Alberta he should not be deprived of any of the rights of his citizenship. One of the essential attributes of a province is the possession of its public lands. It has been the fashion during the debate on this Bill to criticise the fathers of confederation; I do not join in that criticism. I consider that the principle of the possession by the provinces of the public lands within their limits, was one of the wisest provisions adopted by the fathers of confederation. Sir John Macdonald, in advocating this principle, said it was:

One of the chief advantages of the federal union and of local legislatures, that each province will have the power and means of developing its own resources and aiding its own progress after its own fashion and its own way.

Sir A. T. Galt, speaking at the same time, said:

We may place just confidence in the development of our resources, and repose in the belief that we shall find in our territorial domain, our valuable mines, and our fertile lands, additional sources of revenue far beyond the requirements of the public service.

Not very long ago the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), in advocating this same principle used an expression which I thought a very apt one. He spoke of the principle of the possession of the public lands by the province as the very keystone of the whole scheme. In some strange manner he appears lately to have changed his opinion on that subject. The control and administration of the public domain as well as the beneficiary interest in it should be in the hands of the same authorities as those who have to open up internal communications and meet local services, such as roads, bridges, fireguards, water supply, and so on. No different treatment should be meted out to Alberta and Saskatchewan than has been meted out to the older provinces. The management of the land by the local government would be immensely more convenient to the people, who are settling those vast areas and converting them from their wild state to the needs and uses of civilization, than management from a centre thousands of miles away. Abuses and mismanagement are more easily remedied on the spot by a body of direct representatives all with an intimate knowledge of local requirements and local conditions, than by this parliament, such a small proportion of whom have any local knowledge, and many of whom take small interest in that country. The local administration would bring greater satisfaction and contentment to the settlers—always a most important factor in inducing immigration. I have on a previous occasion pointed out the utterly inadequate compensation being made for the loss of the public domain. Other provinces will be rich and prosperous and able to develop their resources by the judicious administration of their public domain when Alberta and Saskatchewan are having to resort to direct taxation for the ordinary purposes of local government. One excuse that has been urged is the difference of the position of the original provinces in regard to their lands at confederation and the two territories with which we are now dealing. The former were spoken of as sovereign colonies, at the time in full possession of their own lands. I submit that it is not true statesmanship to make this distinction. The present standing of the Territories is not inferior to that of some of the original parties to confederation. They have made a name for economical and pure administration, they have a good body of laws, and they have shown themselves enlightened and competent to legislate in the best interests of the people of that country. They have, for instance, a schools ordinance which has been lauded to the skies by many of the members on the government side of this House. A part of the lands, the ownership of which is claimed by the Dominion, and out of which these provinces are being formed, has already been handed over as a free gift, without terms or conditions, to the province of Quebec. I refer to the 16,000 square miles which, in the words of the Prime Minister were 'declared to be a part of the province of Quebec,' though we say they were simply annexed or added to that province. There should be no more difficulty in declaring the lands in the new provinces to belong to our fellow citizens in those provinces than in declaring the lands lying north of Quebec to belong to our fellow citizens in Quebec. There is a very prevalent opinion in the Northwest that neither the good of the new provinces, nor that of the Dominion were the chief factors in shaping the government's policy in regard to the Crown lands. The impression is that the most potent motive for the retention of the lands was that it would enable the government to maintain an army of land immigration officials who would without cost to party funds act as the political mentors of those immigrants who come to our western lands without experience or knowledge of the politics of the country and are instructed to vote for the good Liberal party who brought them out and will give them patents for their land if they do as they are told. Such men can and do act as the political agents of the Liberal party. If the amendment I am about to propose is voted down, I trust the government will take most strenuous steps to prevent political interference by their officials. Let them provide a penalty for such interference and put it into the power of the ordinary citizen to invoke the law in such cases. As I understand from the debate just closed there are no land or immigration officials now in the Athabaska constituencies. I trust that the government will show their good faith by positively forbidding any Dominion official to enter that district until after the local elections. I beg to propose, in amendment to the amendment:

That subsection 1 of section 20 be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

All lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto situate or arising within the limits of the province and now vested in the Crown and all sums due or payable in respect of the same shall belong to the province subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof and to any interest other than that of the province in the same except those portions thereof now used or occupied for the public works, the public buildings or otherwise for the public service of Canada which are more fully set forth and enumerated in schedule 'C' to this Act, and which shall continue to be the property of Canada.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I apprehend that this amendment will be moved again on the third reading, and I presume that it will be just as well that we reserve what we have to say in answer to the speech made by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) for that time. It is now a quarter past eleven. There are not many here interested in hearing what we have to say, and it would be just as well to reserve our remarks until the third reading. I think that even then it would be very difficult to add much to what has been said on the second reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As regards the amendment, it refers to the schedule, but the schedule, of course, we have not prepared. It will be prepared if the motion carries. The amendment is placed in that form simply for the purpose of reserving for the public use of Canada such portion of the public lands of the Territories as are absolutely necessary for that purpose. The language used has been selected altogether from the draft prepared by the government and from section 109 of the British North America Act. As far as the form is concerned, I do not think there can be any objection. As far as the principle is concerned, that has been somewhat fully discussed and will be discussd again on the third reading. My hon. friends behind me may have something to suggest.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not in the House when this matter was discussed before, but from reading the debates I have not been able to see any real cogent reason for this hardship, namely, the retention by the Dominion of the public lands within the limits of these two new provinces. It cannot be because these lands would be better administered by the Department of the Interior than they would be by the Crown Lands Departments of the new provinces. We have had some examples of the administration of the Northwest lands by the Department of the Interior. We have heard something of a company known as the Saskatchewan Land Company, which obtained from that department a very large block of valuable land for the beggarly sum of $1 per acre, which it is now offering for sale at from $8 to $12 an acre, and it obtained these lands without conditions of settlement such as would correspond at least to the tremendous profit it is making. I do not think any province could possibly do worse than the Department of the Interior did in that particular instance, and that is only one instance of maladministration out of many. Therefore, I fail to understand why these new provinces should be treated, as my hon.

friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) says, in a different manner from the other provinces which were given control of their lands at the time of confederation. It seems to me that the argument brought forward for the giving of these Crown lands to the provinces is strong and unanswerable, particularly when we find that a territory consisting of a good many thousand square miles has been given to the province of Quebec by the Dominion. Will it be said that the people of that province are any more capable of administering the Crown lands thus given them from a territory belonging to the federal government than would be the new provinces of administering the Crown lands within their own borders ? That is not my opinion. I think that the people in these new provinces, except perhaps that portion which used to be the cause of considerable solicitude to the Minister of the Interior, are just as intelligent as any in any of the other provinces, and have just as much public spirit and regard for the welfare of their country. I fail to see on any ground why this distinction should be made. I fail to see why the new provinces should be deprived of the control of their own Crown lands. They have been given a sum of money in excess of what they would be entitled to according to population, and they have been given this as a sop for depriving them of their public lands and treating them as in that respect inferior to the other provinces. Had we had a splendid administration by the Department of the Interior, had there been no such scandal as the Northwest Land Company deal and others of the same sort, there might be some argument why these new provinces should not be allowed to administer their own lands, but in view of these scandals I fail to see how a case can be made out in favour of the government policy. Not only have the lands of this country been frittered away in the manner I have mentioned, but the timber has also been squandered in the same way, by being given largely to friends of the government for very small consideration. We have had the splendid timber reserves along the railway belt given away in the most corrupt manner. These are matters within the knowledge of almost every member.

Mr. INGRAM. Particularly of some.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes ; and these facts dispose at once of the argument that the administration of these Crown lands would be better entrusted to the federal government than to the new provinces. I shall therefore support the amendment offered by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). As far as the second part of this section is concerned, I consider it perfectly right. The Rocky mountain part should be under the control of the federal government ; but so far as the first clause is concerned, it is my firm belief that the Crown lands within the limits of the two provinces should be handed over to them.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Having already stated my views as fully as I could regarding the retention of these Crown lands by the Dominion government, I shall not detain the committee at any length. But the reasons why the federal government wants to keep these lands are rapidly coming to light. One of the principal reasons, no doubt, is to maintain the large army of government officials who are up there to-day looking after the administration of these lands. Only a few evenings ago the Minister of the Interior stated that application were now in, south of township 34, for 500,000 acres of land under a close lease.

Mr. OLIVER. I said that there had been leases granted for about a million and a half, and there were further applications in for five million.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What is the policy of the government ? Are these leases going to be granted to friends of the government and refused to others ? That is a burning question in that country to-day. I put the question fairly before the hon. minister the other night, and he answered that he would tell me when the proper time came. I desire to know when the proper time is coming. Applications are coming in from all quarters for closed leases in that country. Is the government going to grant large closed leases such as they granted two years ago for their own friends, covering thousands and thousands of acres of land ? Or, are all parties to be placed upon an equal footing ?

Mr. OLIVER. If it will ease the hon. gentleman's (Mr. M. S. McCarthy's) mind I may tell him that the fact that a gentleman has ever voted for a Liberal candidate will not debar his claims from consideration.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. That is what I charged. These lands are being retained for the purpose of being exploited by the friends of the hon. gentleman opposite. I ask again what is the policy of the government on this subject ?

Mr. OLIVER. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) that the lands are not being retained for the purpose he suggests.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have only to say to the minister that if he makes the statement in this House with the idea of belittling the southern part of that province, when he says that 1,500,000 acres of land south of township 34 are fit only for pasturage, his statement is due to ignorance or worse. The people of that country are fairly entitled to know what is the policy of this government with regard to these lands. Do they intend to continue the closed lease system ? For some years past the people were given to understand that the government would not grant any more closed leases. But cases have come out in which the government have granted leases to their friends. In the constituency of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) there is a large tract of land, which, two years ago, was handed over, as I understand, to political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, under lease for twenty-one years at a merely nominal rental. Is it the intention of the government to consider every application that comes in? Are they going to grant these closed leases, and so retard settlement in that country? If these leases are to be granted, upon what terms will they be granted—what length of time? What provision is to be made with regard to the termination of the leases? These are fair questions, questions in which the people of that country are greatly interested. The information on this subject is necessary in order to place all the people on the same footing and avoid the discrimination which has been shown in favour of men in the east against men who went into that country in days gone by, when hon. gentlemen opposite had no faith in that country.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to make a statement at this moment as to the policy of the government with regard to leases. I hope to make that statement soon. My hon. friend (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) will have to bear with me until I have had an opportunity to reach a decision as to what shall be done. I can only assure him of this—that there will be no advantage given to outsiders as against insiders—if I may be allowed those expressions. No advantage will be given to outside speculators as against local cattlemen—the hon. gentleman may depend on that.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have no desire to hurry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) in his decision. We realize that it is a very important matter and one that calls for grave consideration. Will the hon. minister say if any closed leases have been granted since he took charge of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid I shall be obliged to ask the hon. gentleman to wait for a time. It will be possible for him to get a return of the leases that have been granted. I have not in mind everything that has been done by the department since I took hold of it, so I am not able to answer the hon. gentleman's question. Of course, it will be available to the hon. member—all the business of the department is available for the consideration of the House at any time.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) knows whether any closed leases have been granted since he became Minister of the Interior. I am not asking with regard to a lot of 160 acres, or a township, or a section. Surely he can remember if any closed leases have been granted. All I ask is that all men in that country be treated equally; and if it is the policy of the government to grant these closed leases, he should let the people of that country know. Complaints have reached me from men who have large holdings in that country, who have been depending on neighbouring property as a range, and who find that closed leases have been granted to men who live hundreds and hundreds of miles away from the locality covered by those leases. All I want to know is whether any such leases have been granted, and surely the minister can remember.

Mr. OLIVER. I have been anxious to do what is right by that country since I took hold of the department. I found that regulations were in force permitting the granting of leases. While I did not feel that in continuing the granting of such leases the best would be done that could be done for the country, it seemed to me it would not be possible for me arbitrarily to break off arrangements that may have been entered in to by the department before I took office, merely because it happened that the bargain required my signature. But I can tell my hon. friend that no leases have been granted concerning which the initiatory steps——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No such leases have been originated?

Mr. OLIVER. No such leases have been originated since I took office. While I am ready to be held responsible for these things departmentally, I am not able to give the hon. member, off-hand, the information he asks for.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Would the minister be kind enough to bring down a return showing what lands are under lease in the province of Alberta at the present time?

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that, in answer to a request of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), such a return has been prepared and I think it will be placed on the table of the House in a day or two.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the policy of the department with regard to the granting of closed leases? When an application comes in, is an examination made of the land to ascertain whether it is fit for agricultural purposes; or is a lease granted because application has been made?

Mr. OLIVER. There is an official, known as the inspector of ranches. When an application is made for a lease, he is instructed to inspect the territory applied for. And if he does not report that the land is suitable only for grazing, I understand that no lease is granted.

Mr. FOWLER. He goes over the land and inspects it, and it is on his report that the lease is granted ?

Mr. OLIVER. It may or may not be granted ; but it is a preliminary condition that the ranch inspector shall report the land as only fit for grazing in order for it to be leased. If it were agricultural land, it would be contrary to the regulations of the department to grant it as a grazing lease.

Mr. FOWLER. In case a portion of the land is fit for grazing and a portion suitable for agriculture what does the minister do ? Would you eliminate the agricultural part, and grant the lease over the grazing part ?

Mr. OLIVER. There have been no leases granted under my initiative taken since I entered the office. But my judgment would be that if any considerable portion of the agricultural land were included, leases would not be granted as grazing leases.

Mr. HERRON. I desire once again to place myself on record in regard to this amendment. I have not heard any sufficient reason put forward why the Dominion government should retain control of the lands instead of handing them over to the provinces. I think we are just as capable of dealing with the lands as are the people of any other province. We have put in as strong a protest as we can. I think we ought to be granted full autonomy in regard to the lands, also in regard to the control of our school system.

Amendment (Mr. Lake) negatived, and section 20 as amended, agreed to, and schedule as amended agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This disposes of the Alberta Bill, with the exception of sections 2 and 16, and also the section which will be section 25, the date at which the Act is to be brought into force. To-morrow we will take up sections 2 and 16.

Mr. LAKE. Will the minister kindly bring down for each of the local constituencies in the province of Saskatchewan the numbers of votes cast and the names on the voters' lists, as was done in the case of Alberta ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think I will be able to lay a copy of them on the table to-morrow.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 28, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

PARLIAMENTARY CARPETS.

Mr. OSLER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What is the quantity, quality, make and value of carpets purchased by the government for use in both Houses of parliament for each of the past two years ?
2. What quantity came in free of duty ?
3. Were any of the carpets purchased made in Canada ?

Hon. C. S. HYMAN (Minister of Public Works). In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, the following is a statement of facts : Amount expended, $1,043.87 ; number of yards of carpet purchased, 459, ranging from 69 cents to $1.75 per yard. Linoleum purchased, 318⅓ yards at $1.15 and $1.28 per yard ; also 7 rugs ranging from $19.75 to $25, and 3 stair carpets at $2.35 each. All the above purchased in Canada, but the department does not know whether they were made in Canada.

As to House of Commons carpets—

1. The quantity, quality, make and value of carpets are as follows :—

		Fiscal Year 1903-4.	Per Yd.
36½	yards	Tapestry, at.	$1 05
1	"	Brussels, at..	1 25
108	"	Axminster, at..	1 50
1¾	"	Wilton, at..	1 75
23	"	Brussels stair carpet at	2 25
1¾	"	Brussels stair carpet at	2 25
22½	"	Cork carpet, at..	1 25
		Fiscal Year 1904-5.
26¾	"	Brussels, at..	$1 15
20	5-6"	Brussels, at..	1 05
57	"	Brussels, at..	1 35

30	"	Brussels, at..	1 50

2. None.
3. No information.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my hon. friend not think it fair to get the information he is lacking ? It could easily be obtained.

Mr. HYMAN. I shall endeavour to do so. These carpets are not bought from the manufacturers, and to do so would necessitate in each case a particular inquiry. But if the hon. gentleman desires it, I hope to be able to get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) wants.

MR. J. G. TURRIFF.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. When did J. G. Turriff become an employee of the government ?
2. In what capacities has he from time to time been employed, and at what salary in each case?
3. What was his position, and what his duties, when employed in the department at Ottawa ?
4. When did his connection cease with the department at Ottawa ?

5. Has he since that date been performing any services whatever in connection with the government ? If so, what ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. On the 8th of July, 1898.
2. In the capacity of Commissioner of Dominion Lands, at a salary of $3,000 per annum.
3. As Commissioner of Dominion Lands, he had, under instructions from the Minister of the Interior, general charge and supervision of the lands branch of the Interior Department.
4. On the 10th February, 1904.
5. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. minister know whether the duties of Mr. Turriff included scrip duties of any kind ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am under the impression that the handling of scrip is rather a separate special branch directly under the deputy minister, and not under the Commissioner of Dominion Lands.

Mr. FOSTER. What I would like to know is through whose hands go the applications for the issue of scrip, which and who makes the final signature ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. N. O. Côté is the officer specially charged with the scrip department, and I think the signature is that of the deputy minister.

SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY LAND COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What official or officials of the department authorized, or made the issue of, the patents to the Saskatchewan Land Company, on evidence of homestead entries instead of actual settlement, as stated in speech of Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, as recorded in 'Hansard' of 1904, page 7035 ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Patents have been issued to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company for 149,450·21 acres of land sold to that company with settlement conditions. Such patents were issued on the authority of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands.

The officials of the department are unable to find in the 'Hansard' page mentioned the statement attributed to the Hon. Mr. Sifton.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to lay on the table certain information as to population and other matters relating to the constituencies of the new province of Saskatchewan ; also certain proposed amendments to the schedule ; also certain maps with the suggested amendments marked on them.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are the proposed amendments material ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are to this extent, that they give the city of Moosejaw a member and join three constituencies in the northern part of the province into two.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was about to say that as some alleged misunderstanding referred to by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, was put forward as one of the causes for adopting the very extraordinary schedule contained in the Bill for the establishment of the province of Alberta, there need be no excuse of that kind so far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, because we are willing to enter into a conference with regard to these schedules. As I understand from my hon. friends who have examined them as they were originally—I do not know what they are now—of even a more extraordinary character than those in the Alberta province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am very glad to have the suggestion of my hon. friend, and will immediately confer with my hon. colleague (Mr. Oliver) for the organization of a committee to take the Saskatchewan schedules and dispose of them. I do not agree that they are of a more extraordinary character than those of the province of Alberta. Both adhere very closely to the present condition of things.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was a surprise to me to learn that they are of a more extraordinary character than those of Alberta, for I did not suppose that possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then my hon. friend's surprise is equalled by my own.

RICHELIEU BRIDGE AT SOREL.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) a day or two ago asked for copies of the report of the chief engineer and the report to council thereon in connection with the Sorel bridge. He also asked for other papers in connection with the same work. I find in the Auditor General's Report of 1900, page A—65 and following pages, all these papers are published except the report of the chief engineer, and this report I now submit to the House.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that the Minister of Justice has not yet come to a conclusion about the proposed amendment to section 15. That will stand for the present ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have a report which will help to elucidate the point involved which I will send to my hon. friend.

On section 16—legislation respecting education.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). When I presented this Bill to the House some few weeks ago, I stated that, at the proper moment, in Committee of the Whole, I would ask leave to substitute another clause of which I gave notice. I now beg to move that amended clause as follows:

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

2. In the appropriation by the legislature or distribution by the government of the province of any moneys for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with said chapter 29 or any Act passed in amendment thereof, or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in the said chapter 29.

3. Where the expression ' by-law ' is employed in subsection 3 of the said section 93, it shall be held to mean the law as set out in said chapters 29 and 30, and where the expression ' at the union,' is employed, in said subsection 3, it shall be held to mean the date at which this Act comes into force.

The House, perhaps, expects—at any rate it has the right to expect—that on this occasion I shall present a somewhat full statement of the reasons which have induced the government to substitute the clause which has just been read for the clause introduced in the Bill. Perhaps it would not be amiss then, if I look at the subject from a larger point of view and endeavour to give a resume of the why and wherefore of this clause in its original and in its amended form. The Conservative party has taken the position upon this question that the government are invading provincial rights. When I say that the Conservative party has taken this position, perhaps I make a mistake ; perhaps I should not use so wide and general an expression, because it happens that upon this question the Conservative party has no policy. It is not too much to say that on this question the Conservative party is an assembly of contradictory opinions without any separate idea upon what to rally. When my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) spoke upon the second reading of the Bill he was careful to state—he made haste to state—that he was only speaking for himself, that the Conservative party had no policy upon this important question, and that every man in the party was at liberty to follow his own inclination and to vote as he thought best. Evidently the Conservative party had renounced the idea of having a policy which, as a party, they could present to the House. It is true that after that, one important section of the party took the ground that I have just stated—that the government, in introducing this legislation violated the principle of provincial rights. The answer I have to offer to that assertion, the simple answer, the categorical peremptory and paramount answer, is that in matters of education there is no such thing under our constitution as absolute provincial rights.

Now, Sir, I make that statement deliberately. It is a statement which has some importance, and in making it I do not wish to be misunderstood. My contention has been and my contention is to-day, that upon this important matter of education, there is no such thing, under the constitution under which we live as absolute, independent right, but that the rights of the provinces in this matter are limited by the very letter of the constitution.

Let us turn to the book of the constitution and look at the clauses which define the powers of the central government and the powers of the local governments. Let us look first at section 91 which defines the powers of the central government. It is as follows :

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces ; and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms of this section it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say :

And then follows the enumeration. Let us now look at section 92 which defines the powers of the provinces :

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated ; that is to say :

And no exception is given. There are sixteen subjects enumerated as follows :

1. The amendment of the constitution of the province, except as regards the office of Lieutenant Governor.

2. Direct taxation within the province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes.

3. The borrowing of money on the credit of the province.

4. Provincial offices.

5. The management and sale of public lands belonging to the province.

6. Public and reformatory prisons in and for the province.

7. Hospitals, asylums, charities, and eleemosynary institutions in and for the province other than marine hospitals.

8. Municipal institutions in the province.

9. Licenses

10. Local works and undertakings other than those extending beyond the limits of the province or are declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada.

11. The incorporation of companies with provincial objects.

12. Solemnization of marriage in the province.

13. Property and civil rights in the province.

14. The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

15. The imposition of punishment by fine, penalty or imprisonment, and generally, all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.

Not a word here about education. Now, let us look at the following section, section 93, that deals exclusively with education, and see what are the powers of the provinces with regard to education.

In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions :

Here, therefore, are qualifications to the exclusive power of the legislature to make laws. They are thus defined:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

2. All the powers, privileges and duties at the union by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees of the Queen's Roman Catholic subjects, shall be and the same are hereby extended to the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant and Roman Catholic subjects in Quebec.

3. Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the union or is thereafter established by the legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any rights or privileges of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

4. In case any such provincial law as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

Here are the qualifications: If a province is admitted with a system of denominational or separate schools, the provisions of section 93 at once apply, the powers of the province are at once limited. If it comes in without any separate schools, then the provisions of section 93 do not apply. But if that province, in the exercise of its legitimate authority, adopts separate schools, forthwith section 93 applies, and the powers of that province become limited. The legislature has power to pass a law establishing separate schools, but it has no power to abolish them, and that power becomes at once subject to the provisions of this Bill. I say, therefore, that there is no such a thing under our constitution, in matters of education, as absolute provincial rights. Speaking upon this subject on the second reading of the Bill my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) quoted some remarks of mine in which I deprecated the interference of the Dominion with provincial legislation. If my hon. friend will do me the honour to study the opinions I have expressed on this subject since I have been in parliament, he could have quoted much more in the same line, and expressing the same views. More than once upon the floor of this House I have compared, upon this subject and other subjects, our constitution with the constitution of the United States; and whilst in general terms I have always maintained that in many respects our constitution is superior to the American constitution, my opinion has never varied that upon this subject, namely, the respective powers of the federal and state governments, the American constitution is far superior to our own. Under the American system the powers of each government, both the federal and the state, are clearly defined, so that there can be no overlapping by one over the other, and no supervision of the one over the other, except the judicial authority which keeps each one in check. Unfortunately such has not been our system ; unfortunately, I say, the fathers of confederation, for good and sufficient reasons, I am sure, reasons which I understand and appreciate, came to a different conclusion, and did not make an absolute separation between the local powers and the powers of the central government, but in a number of cases allowed them to overlap each other, though in all cases they made the powers of the legislature subject to the power of the central government; and in some cases, as in this one, they made special provision that the powers of the legislature, under certain circumstances, were subject to supervision by the central government. The fathers of confederation, I say, for good and sufficient reasons, came to that conclusion. Now, it has been stated, and I believe it is true, that it would not have been possible at that time to accomplish the project of confederation unless this provision had been inserted in the constitution. But my hon. friend on the occasion I have referred to, expressed the idea that the restrictions which are contained in the British North America Act and which curtail the powers of the legislature in matters of education, must be and are confined by the letter of the constitution to Quebec and Ontario alone. In order that I may do my hon. friend no injustice, and that I may give him the benefit of his views then expressed, I will quote from what he said on that occasion, as found in the unrevised 'Hansard,' page 3108:

The very basis of confederation, contemplating the eventual inclusion of all British North America, provided for separate schools in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec only. This provision was the result of compact and agreement. But no restrictions on provincial powers were contemplated in the Northwest. None are mentioned in the Quebec resolutions. The terms of the constitution, if applied in their integrity to the new provinces, do not, in my humble opinion, restrict the powers of the provincial legislature.

Now, I say to my hon. friend it is quite true that in the Quebec resolutions Quebec and Ontario alone are mentioned. But, Sir, the Quebec resolutions are not the British North America Act, the Quebec resolutions were simply the basis of the British North America Act, and there are several particulars in which the British North America Act differs from the Quebec resolutions. Several provisions were introduced in the British North America Act which were not found in the Quebec resolutions. Let me give a case in point. Section 80 of the British North America Act reads as follows :

The legislative assembly of Quebec shall be composed of sixty-five members, to be elected to represent the sixty-five electoral divisions or districts of Lower Canada in this Act referred to, subject to alteration thereof by the legislature of Quebec : Provided that it shall not be lawful to present to the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec for assent any Bill for altering the limits of any of the electoral divisions or districts mentioned in the second schedule to this Act, unless the second and third readings of such Bill have been passed in the legislative assembly with the concurrence of the majority of the members representing all those electoral divisions or districts, and the assent shall not be given to such Bill unless an address has been presented by the legislative assembly to the Lieutenant Governor stating that it has been so passed.

The counties or districts here mentioned are thus enumerated:

Pontiac, Ottawa, Argenteuil, Huntingdon, Misissiquoi, Brome, Shefford, Stanstead, Compton, Wolfe and Richmond, Megantic, Town of Sherbrooke.

These are the counties which are known in that province as the English-speaking counties, and a provision was there inserted that the boundaries of these twelve counties could not be altered by the Quebec legislature except with the concurrence of the representatives of those twelve counties. That provision was not in the Quebec resolutions, that was a disposition introduced at Westminster into the British North America Act for the greater protection and security of the Protestant minority in Quebec. Therefore, I say that there are several things in the Quebec resolutions which are not to be found to-day in the British North America Act. It is quite true that the Quebec resolutions referred, and referred only, to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The Quebec resolution with regard to education was this :

The local legislatures shall have power to make laws respecting the following subjects : education, saving the rights and privilege which the Protestant and Catholic minority in both Canadas may possess as to their denominational schools, at the time when the union goes into operation.

However, that is not the language of the British North America Act ? There is a disposition in the British North America Act in respect to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but there is also another disposition. There is this disposition :

In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions :

(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

These words, I grant, were not in the Quebec resolutions. They have not been imported from the Quebec resolutions into the British North America Act. Are we to be told that they are simply for ornament? Are we to be told that they have no meaning ? Are we to be told that these words are not to be read as if they were in the Act although they are in the Act ? It seems sufficient only to state such a question to have an answer. If those who do me the honour of listening to me at this moment will go back to the year 1866, to the month of November and to old London, they will find a number of men engaged in a very important work. Who are these men ? They are the delegates from the provinces of old Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and they are engaged in the task of preparing the Act which is to be submitted to the Imperial parliament which is to become the charter of the Dominion of Canada and which is to give it new life and existence. We know that one of the delegates on that important mission was Mr. Galt and we know by the debates which have already taken place in this House that Mr. Galt was there as the special representative of the Protestant minority of Quebec. We know by the debates which have already taken place and by the language of Mr. Galt which has been quoted in this House that he was not satisfied with the Quebec resolution, that he was not satisfied with what my hon. friend has called the compact, that he thought the Quebec resolution did not convey to his co-religionists and fellow countrymen of the English speaking language all the security to which they were entitled. We know that it was his intention, because he had so stated before he left, to have this Quebec resolution implemented in order to give more security and a greater guarantee in matters of education to his co-religionists in Quebec. We know that he wanted to make them absolutely independent of the majority in that province. We know also by the book which has been written by Mr. Pope on this subject and which has been more than once quoted in this House, that Mr. Galt is the author of this paragraph of section 93, which reads as follows :

All the powers, privileges, and duties at the union by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees of the Queen's Roman Catholic subjects, shall be and the same are hereby extended to the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant and Roman Catholic subjects in Quebec.

That is the drafting of Mr. Galt. We know that the two next sections which give the right of appeal to the minority if they fail to agree with the decision of the majority are also of Mr. Galt's drafting. We do not know who is the author of the first subsection which I have read, but if we want to know the spirit of this resolution and the object for which it was moved we have only to go to the preamble of the Act which is in these words :

Whereas the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have expressed their desire to be federally united into one Dominion under the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom :

And whereas such a union would conduce to the welfare of the provinces and promote the interests of the British Empire :

And whereas on the establishment of the union by authority of parliament it is expedient, not only that the constitution of the legislative authority in the Dominion be provided for, but also that the nature of the executive government therein be declared :

And whereas it is expedient that provision be made for the eventual admission into the union of other parts of British North America :

Be it therefore enacted and declared.

What is enacted ? What is declared ? The rules and regulations, the principles and exceptions to principles which were thought at that time by the fathers of confederation to be necessary not only for the organization into confederation of the provinces then in existence, but for the admission into the confederation at a later stage of other provinces when other provinces were to come in. Such was at that time the policy of the Conservative party ; such was the policy of the Liberal party ; such was the policy of Sir John Macdonald; such was the policy of Geo. Brown. It is the policy to-day of the Liberal party, but what is the policy to-day of the Conservative party ? What has become of the traditions of Sir John Macdonald in that respect ? If Sir John Macdonald were to come into this House to-day would he recognize his party which has so far departed from the principles laid down on that occasion ? If this position be the true one, if this is the spirit in which we must read the situation, then I ask : How is this section 93 of the British North America Act to be introduced into the new constitution of this new province ? Is it to come in automatically, is it to come in mechanically, or is it to come in legislatively ? Is it, in other words, to be introduced in the way in which we are about to introduce it, that is by the Act and by the vote of this parliament ? Certainly it is to be introduced by the vote of this parliament, but because it is to be introduced by the vote of this parliament, because it is submitted to the members of this House to vote upon it I understand my hon. friend to say that therefore we are not constitutionally bound, and that we can vote as we please either one way or the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is my right hon. friend referring to me ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did he say my position was ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought my hon. friend took the ground that it was a matter of policy and not of constitutional right, that we could vote as we pleased regarding the introduction of section 93.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to have my right hon. friend quote any portion of my remarks bearing out that suggestion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will not quote anything. If my hon. friend disclaims that position I accept it at once. If my hon. friend says we are bound constitutionally then I accept the disclaimer and I am very glad my hon. friend's position is clear upon that point. I understand we are bound constitutionally to adopt that position. At all events that is my position.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have stated over and over again in this House, at least twenty times, I would think, that in my opinion we are obliged to apply to the new province the provisions of the British North America Act regarding the distribution of legislative powers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not a very, very categorical answer, I think. That is rather equivocating upon this subject. We are bound to have a distribution of legislative powers, certainly. But, what is the legislative power of these new provinces in regard to education ? Is it absolute or is it not absolute ? Is it absolute or is it limited ? In my estimation it is limited. Does my hon. friend say the contrary ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is that power conferred by the provisions of the British North America Act as embodied in section 93 having regard to the condition of the province at the time it is created into a province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good. Then I understand that the position taken by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is that the provinces come in with their legislative authority, with their school legislation, and that we are bound by the constitution to apply that school system. That is all my theory ; I never went further than that. We are bound to apply the system which is now in force, the only difficulty that there is now will be to ascertain what is the system in force in the Territories which we are going to make into provinces. But, Sir, although my hon. friend to-day takes a position which is somewhat ambiguous, for my part I take the ground that we are bound constitutionally at this table to insert legislative provisions which will make the system of schools which exists in the Northwest Territories to-day absolute and beyond the purview and the powers of the legislature. That is to say, we are bound to apply the principles of the constitution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend claim that we should do that even if, in doing so, we go beyond section 93 ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My contention is that we must not go beyond section 93.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then why do you ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We do not, because we must remain within it, as I shall point out by-and-by. If all the question between myself and my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is that we must apply section 93, a great deal of ground that has been obscure is now clear. I am only sorry this was not known three or four weeks sooner; it would have saved a good deal of turmoil if we had known it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let me say to my hon. friend that I shall ask him before the conclusion of the session this afternoon to vote for a motion to that effect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall wait for this motion of my hon. friend. I know something of it and I shall tell him that he will not escape in this way. These clauses contain what is to apply in the Northwest Territories, not in the way my hon. friend wishes to move, as I shall show him presently when we come to discuss his motion. But at all events I shall be spared a good deal of the argument which I intended to make upon this subject since we are agreed that it is the provisions of section 93 which must apply. We come now to the question of what is involved in this proposition, but we have to apply section 93. What is the system which prevails to-day in the Northwest Territories ? because, as I understand, the contention of both my hon. friend and myself is that we must apply the system which exists in the Northwest Territories, and then my hon. friend will see by-and-by, that he is not on very safe ground in the proposition he wants to make, which I see looming up, but which I shall not define now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend curiously misquotes me. I said we were to apply the provisions of the British North America Act in which the constitution of this country is embodied.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good. This is delightfully indefinite, delightfully uncertain; I want to come to facts, to pure certainty which we can understand and apply. I wish to say to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) and to show him presently that the condition of things is not so clear as he seems to imagine and to think. We thought ourselves that we were on pretty safe ground when we reproduced in this Bill the provisions of the Act of 1875, introduced by Alexander Mackenzie in this House, in which the system of separate schools was made the organic law of the Northwest Territories. We reproduced in clause 16 of the first Bill the provisions of that Act ; we thought, as I said, that we were on safe ground, but on a closer examination of the subject we came to the conclusion that it was very much involved and would require a little more attention that we had given to this matter. The Act of 1875, I may observe, which is the organic law of the provinces up to this moment, was not a school Act, it was simply an organic law. It did not pretend to frame a school law for the Territories, it did not pretend to enact a school system, it simply put forth certain rights which were to be pilots to the legislative power when it came to exercise its authority. It imposed certain restrictions on the legislative powers of the Territories which they were bound to observe. Now what were these restrictions? I cannot do better than give the very words of the Act itself. The Act stated this :

> The legislature of the said province shall pass all necessary laws in respect of education, and that it shall therein always be provided :
> (a) That a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the said province or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name it is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessments and collection of rates therefor, and (b) that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor, and (c) that in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves with respect thereto.

The principle there is clearly laid down that where the majority or the minority, whether Protestant or Catholic, shall have the power to establish such schools as they think fit. Now these words are important to remember. Under that organic law a system of schools has been established in the Northwest Territories by a series of legislative enactments, the last expression of which is to be found in the ordinances of the year 1901. It may not be unimportant however, with a view of observing and understanding the present character of the legislation in that respect which is now in existence in the Northwest Territories, to trace from the commencement the history of the development that has taken place and has resulted in the present school system. The first law which we find was an ordinance passed in 1884. This law had several important provisions. Perhaps the most important of all was that there was to be a council of education, a board of education to be composed of not more than 12 members, 6 of whom were to be Roman Catholics and 6 of whom were to be Protestants; that the board of education was to be divided into two sections, the Protestant section and the Catholic section; that each section was to have under its jurisdiction and control the management of the schools of its own denomination, the Roman Catholic section was to have under its control the management of the Roman Catholic schools and the regulation of their discipline; it was to arrange for proper examinations, guiding and licensing of teachers, to select the books to be used in the schools provided that in the case of all books having reference to religion and morals, such selection should be subject to the approval of a competent religious authority, to appoint inspectors. That was the complete power of supervision of the schools given to the Roman Catholic section of the board of education. The same thing was provided for the Protestant subsection. Another important provision was that a school district could be formed on the petition of a certain number of ratepayers within a certain area and that all schools were to be organized at once either as Protestant or Roman Catholic public schools. Another important provision was that with regard to religious instruction, that when a school system had been organized, a separate school could be organized by the minority. Another important point was that all religious instruction was to be at a certain hour under certain conditions :

No religious instruction, such as bible reading, or reciting, or reading or reciting prayers (except as hereinafter provided), or asking questions or giving answers from any catechism, shall be permitted in any public school in the Territories, from the opening of such school at nine o'clock in the forenoon, until the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction, permitted or desired by the trustees, may be given.

Section 86 provides :

Any child attending any school, whose parent or parents or guardian, is or are of the religious faith different from that expressed in the name of such school district, shall have the privilege of leaving the school room at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon or of remaining without taking part in any religious instruction that may be given, if the parents or guardian so desire.

This school ordinance remained without any substantial alteration until the year 1887, when an important amendment was made, and in the following year, 1888 another was made in the same line, by which the provision of the Act of 1884 which required that all schools when first organized should be either Protestant public schools or Roman Catholic public schools, was repealed, and a provision was made to the contrary, namely, that all public schools should be at once organized as public schools quite independent of the religious faith of the majority. No important amendment took place afterwards until the year 1892, when a very important amendment was made. By that amendment the board of education was reorganized on absolutely different lines. The members of the executive committee and four other persons, two Protestants and two Catholics, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor, were to constitute a council of public instruction. There was to be no subdivision of the council into Protestant and Roman Catholic subsections as was previously the case. There was to be only one school board, which was to have the control and management of all schools established under the Act, that is to say, public schools, separate schools, kindergartens, normal schools and teachers' institutes. That remained in force until 1901, when it was consolidated with practically no change, except that there is to-day a Department of Education, which is a department of the government, over which presides one member of the executive council, with the assistance of the council of education. That is the law of the land to-day ; it is the law which is to be perpetuated, and therefore it is important that we should know what it is. Let me recapitulate the provisions of this law. By the ordinance of 1901 there is a department of the government known as the Department of Education which is presided over by a member of the executive council, with the assistance of the educational council appointed by the Governor in Council. That Department of Education has the absolute control of education without any interference at all from anybody else, whether with regard to public schools or separate schools. Public school districts are to be organized, and there may be separate schools. Then there may be religious education, and as it is important that we should know exactly what that is, let me quote from the Act in regard to it :

137. No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one-half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

2. It shall, however, be permissible for the board of any district to direct that the school be opened by the recitation of the Lord's prayer.

138. Any child shall have the privilege of leaving the school room at the time at which religious instruction is commenced, as provided for in the next preceding section, or of remaining without taking part in any religious instruction that may be given if the parents or guardians so desire.

Let me observe with regard to this legislation that, so far as religious instruction is concerned, in my humble judgment there is no departure whatever from the principle laid down in the law of 1875, and therefore the majority or the minority in any district in the Territories can have such religious instruction as they think fit. They can have it or not have it, as they think fit; it is for them to say; there is no interference from anybody. But with regard to secular education, it is not the same. The whole subject of secular education, including the certification of teachers, the inspection of schools and the selection of books, is under the control of the board of education. In this the Roman Catholic minority of the Northwest Territories have seen a serious departure from the privilege which was guaranteed to them by the law of Mr. Mackenzie of 1875; and it is not to be supposed that this departure would have taken place without serious protests and remonstrances and even some commotion. I may say that Sir John Thompson, the Minister of Justice, when he came to review the legislation of 1887 and 1888, expressed the opinion that the law which had been passed by the legislature in those two years was a departure from the principle which had been laid down in the Act of Mr. Mackenzie, in so far as the organization of school districts was concerned. This is the language in which he put forth his views:

Section 14 of the Northwest Territories Act, chapter 50, Revised Statutes of Canada, provides that ordinances in respect of education may be made in the Territories, but stipulates that in such ordinances it shall 'always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Territories, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor, and also that a minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein.

The ordinance respecting schools does not contain the provisions that the statute requires it to contain, but merely contains the provision that the minority may establish a separate school in an unorganized public school district, thus placing the minority at the mercy of the majority, and only giving the minority the right to establish a separate school, if the majority think proper to organize a public school. It is necessary to point out that the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act, before cited, cannot be abridged by the ordinance, and must be considered as still in force, notwithstanding the restrictive terms of the ordinance. In so far as it is attempted by the ordinance to declare the meaning of the Northwest Territories Act, the ordinance fails of that purpose, and is objectionable, as being an interpretation by an inferior legislative body of the acts of its superior.

The undersigned only refrains from recommending the disallowance of this ordinance, in consequence of its being merely a re-enactment of an earlier ordinance, which disallowance would not affect, and which was allowed to go into operation, probably because attention was not called to this provision. The undersigned has the honour to recommend that the ordinance bringing these revised ordinances into effect, be allowed to go into operation.

When the ordinance of 1892 was passed, abolishing the dual control of schools through a Protestant subsection and a Roman Catholic subsection of the educational council, the Roman Catholic minority sent to Ottawa a very strong and I may say rather vehement protest. They alleged that by that Act the privileges and the rights which had been conferred on them had been invaded and abridged. They spoke in these terms:

Until the 31st December, 1892, there was in force in the Territories an ordinance, passed in pursuance of the above mentioned provision of the Northwest Territories Act, which contained the following provisions:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint and constitute a board of education for the Northwest Territories composed of eight members to hold office for two years and until their successors are appointed, five of whom shall be Protestants and three shall be Roman Catholics. (Revised ordinance, chapter 59, section 14.)

Provision was also made in the said ordinance prescribing the duties of the board of education in respect of all schools under their management. (Section 10.)

The said ordinance contained also the following provision:

The board of education shall resolve itself into two sections, the one consisting of the Protestant, and the other of the Roman Catholic members thereof; and it shall be the duty of each section:

(a) To have under its control and management the schools of its section, and to make from time to time such regulations as may be deemed fit for their general government and discipline, and the carrying out of the provisions of this ordinance.

(b) To select and prescribe a uniform series of text books.

(c) To appoint inspectors who shall hold office during the pleasure of the section appointing them.

(d) To cancel the certificate of a teacher upon sufficient cause.

The said ordinance contained also the following provision: Each section of the board shall have the selection of the text books for the examination of teachers in history and science, and it shall have power to prescribe any additional subjects of examination for the teachers of the school of its section, and in all examinations on such subjects the examiners of each section shall respectively have exclusive jurisdiction.

The system indicated above for the management of the schools operated with entire harmony and to the general satisfaction of all connected with the active work of education in the Territories.

On the 31st December, 1892, there was passed by the legislative assembly of the Territories ordinance No. 22 of 1892, intituled 'ordinance to amend and consolidate as amended the ordinances respecting schools,' whereby all previous ordinances relating to education were repealed.

The last mentioned ordinance contains the following provision :

The members of the executive committee, and four persons, two of whom shall be Protestants and two Roman Catholics, appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall constitute a council of public instruction, and one of the executive committee, to be nominated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall be chairman of the said council of public instruction. The appointed members shall have no vote.

Then the petition goes on :

By the said ordinance there is vested in the council of public instruction not only the powers and authority which, by the previously existing ordinance, were vested in the board of education as a whole, but also the powers and authority thereby vested in each section thereof.

Then the petition continues :

For the reasons aforesaid, your petitioners protest and declare concerning the said school ordinance No. 22 of 1892, of Northwest Territories, and the regulations of council of public instruction made in pursuance thereof :

(a) That the said ordinance, and the said regulations prejudicially affect the rights and privileges of your petitioners, and all other of Her Majesty's Catholic subjects in the Territories, in relation to education.

And they pray as follows :

That your Excellency may be pleased to disallow ordinance No. 22 of 1892, of the Northwest Territories.

Alternatively your petitioners appeal to your Excellency in Council from the said ordinance and from the regulations of the council of public instruction passed in pursuance thereof, and pray that the legislative assembly and the council of public instruction be ordered and directed to repeal or amend the said ordinance and regulations, so as to eliminate therefrom the provisions thereof above objected to, and that such further and other relief in the premises may be rendered as the circumstances require and admit.

This petition was referred to a sub-committee of the council, and that sub-committee reported as follows. I need not read it all but will give only the conclusion :

The Committee of the Privy Council regret that the change made in the ordinances relating to education should have been such as to cause, even unwittingly, dissatisfaction and alarm on the part of the petitioners, and they advise that communication be made to the Lieutenant Governor of the Northwest Territories, urgently requesting that the complaints set forth by the petitioners be carefully inquired into, and the whole subject be reviewed by the executive committee and the Northwest assembly, in order that redress be given by such amending ordinances or amending regulations as may be found necessary to meet any grievances or any well-founded apprehensions which may be ascertained to exist.

However these suggestions, though communicated to the assembly, were not taken into consideration, and the law has remained from then until now as it was then. That is to say, after 14 years the law is the same in 1905 as it was in 1892. I must say also that the views of the minority were not pressed further by them. They did not go to the courts, the law was not disallowed, the minority rather submitted to the condition of things imposed on them. They accepted loyally that condition of things. They have taken their part in the working out of this law ; and although they thought that by it they were deprived of an important right they submitted loyally to that deprivation. They have taken their share in the working out of the Act, and as I am given to understand it has worked on the whole satisfactorily. At all events, we have the opinion of Mr. Haultain—who in that respect ought to be counted an authority—that if he were dictator he would not change the present law. It is satisfactory to the Protestants, and as I understand from an interview in the press, in which Bishop Legal, Bishop of Alberta, was reported to have said that so far as it went, although not an ideal system, he was satisfied with it, it is accepted by the Catholics. Therefore we have the opinion from both sides that the law, though supposed to be an invasion of the rights of the minority, is on the whole accepted as satisfactory and with a desire to work it out for the common welfare of the country. What then was to be done under the circumstances ? Here is the law as it is to-day and as it has been for 14 years. It may be that the point taken by Sir John Thompson was well taken. I pass no opinion on that. It may be that the point taken by the minority was well-founded, and on that I likewise pass no opinion. But we find a condition of things which has been in existence 14 years, and I think it would be foolhardy to attempt to displace it now. At all events, the point we have in view, the end we pursue, on behalf of the minority on both sides, whether Protestant or Catholic, is that the present condition of things shall continue, and the view we take is that it comes within the purview of section 93 of the British North America Act. That is the position we take. I do not say that our drafting is absolutely unimpeachable. I have stated our view and aim, and to this aim and purpose we propose to adhere, but I do not intend to be committed absolutely to the drafting of clause No. 2. If it be insufficient, we are willing to consider any reasonable amendment, provided it be on the line I have stated and on no other. But let me say this, and I will sum up my argument by referring to a question put me two or three times by my hon. friend opposite. He said :—If you agree to maintain the present school system, such as it is in the Territories, what of the French language ? By an Act passed in 1876 or 1877 the French language was imposed upon the Territories. That was an Act passed by Mr. Mackenzie, but by an Act passed by Sir John Macdonald in 1890 the restriction put upon the legislature by the former Act was removed. Therefore, so far as the question of language is concerned, the Territories enjoy provincial autonomy. The power of the local legislature being unrestricted with regard to language, why should it not, I am asked, be unrestricted with regard to schools. My answer is simply this. There is a provision in the British North America Act guaranteeing separate schools, and there is no such provision with regard to the French language. And speaking here, as a member of the minority in this country, I would make a strong appeal to my fellow countrymen of the same race and language to stand by the constitution and to ask nothing which is not to be found within its four corners.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not want to have any privileges which are not granted any other class of subjects, but only the privileges and rights which are given in the British North America Act. On this ground I appeal to all Liberals from all the provinces, whether from the centre or from the extremities, whether from Ontario or Quebec, whether from the west or the maritime provinces, to show that we are a united party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To show and prove that we have but one policy for all the provinces and that we do not claim for one province one thing and another thing for another province, but that in all things we should realize that to carry on the government of this country, and in building up a nation, we must be prepared to make sacrifices, we must be prepared to give up something even of our legitimate pretensions, we must show both by precept and example, that we are for Canada first, Canada last, Canada forever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has referred to me as not speaking for the whole Conservative party in my address on the second reading of this Bill. The somewhat impassioned appeal with which he has just closed his speech indicates that he is not very sure for whom he himself is now speaking. I may further remind the hon. gentleman that if I kept within bounds in my speech on the second reading of the Bill, I cannot congratulate him upon doing the same in his speech on the first reading. For, in that speech he spoke as if for his whole party. Well, certainly so far as the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is concerned, he did not speak for him. And, if rumour is to be trusted he did not speak for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), though, since then, that hon. gentleman has come back to the fold and is prepared to support a position in absolute contradiction to that which he took in 1896. Now, I do not want to make this debate very long. But the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) must have found himself in straits, when, after two months' debate on this subject he has found it necessary to speak for an hour without saying anything that has not been said a number of times before. I think there is nothing in his present speech which he himself has not said before. And some things he has said now for the third time—I think I have heard the right hon. gentleman four times give the historical account of the conference in Great Britain.

The right hon. gentleman has said there is no such thing as absolute provincial rights in matters of education because there are certain qualifications in section 93 of the British North America Act, which he himself admits to be the sole clause governing the distribution of powers as between the Dominion and the provinces in regard to education. Suppose that there is not absolute power in the provinces, is that a reason why he should seek to invade, as he does by this legislation, those provincial powers as they are? Suppose that a man has the lease of a farm for ninety-nine years. That is not an absolute title, as the right hon. gentleman, being a lawyer, knows. But does that justify any one in going in and breaking down the man's fences and taking possession of a portion of his land. The provinces have certain powers conferred upon them by section 93, subject to certain qualifications. If the right hon. gentleman is true to the spirit of his speech of this afternoon, he will vote for the application of section 93 with nothing more and nothing less than that section contains. The right hon. gentleman declares that he desires that the constitution shall be applied. Yet he begins his speech by taking for granted that which it was necessary for him to prove in order to maintain his case. He declares that there is some constitutional necessity to be found somewhere —I know not where—that separate schools should be continued forever in the Northwest Territories of Canada, even when they are created into provinces. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is outside section 93 of the British North America Act that he finds that constitutional provision, or is it contained in section 93?

Would the right hon. gentleman answer me that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked the right hon. gentleman whether or not the constitutional right in virtue of which he says that separate schools are to be imposed forever upon the people of the Northwest is to be found in section 93 of the British North America Act, or whether it is to be found somewhere else?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In section 93.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, I would ask my right hon. friend one more question. If he is determined to adhere as he says he is determined to adhere literally, absolutely, to the terms of the constitution by which we are all bound, why does he not apply section 93, instead of mangling it by the special provisions of this clause?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I answer, that I apply section 93.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And I answer the right hon. gentleman that he does nothing of the kind. Here is his amendment:

Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province with the substitution for subsection 1 of the said section 93, of the following subsection:

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

And so forth. Does the right hon. gentleman believe that, if section 93 were applied in its entirety without any amendment, exactly the same result would be produced as that which is produced by the interpolation of these words? Will he answer that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall answer my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) in due time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I challenge the right hon. gentleman to answer that question directly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I accept the challenge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the right hon. gentleman give the answer now?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think a discussion can properly be carried on in this way, and I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman's speech. I will answer in my own time and in my own way.

Mr. FOSTER. Come out of the woods.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will tell my right hon. friend——

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. May I be permitted to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) a question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) says that his policy is to apply section 93 of the British North America Act simply. Why is it that, in his resolution on this subject he seeks to apply it with a peculiar construction which he chooses to put upon it and not simply and directly?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because that is the construction I believe it bears. That is the construction by which I am prepared to stand. And I will give my hon. friend a motion by-and-by, which I think will satisfy even his discriminating taste in that regard. Now, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is not prepared, at least at the moment, to give a plain answer to a plain question. He says he is applying the constitution. But when we look at his measure, we find that he is not applying the constitution, but he is mangling the constitution before he applies it. I ask him: Do you wish us to understand by this language which you are substituting for the constitution that you mean to bring about exactly the same thing that would be brought about by the constitution if you did not mangle it in that way? And he says he will answer in his own time and in his own way. I should think it would be easy to answer at once so plain and simple a question. I say that if section 93 means what I suppose the right hon. gentleman says it means—although he will not say it—then there is no need to change that section; there is no need to add to it or to take from it. On the other hand, if section 93 does not mean the same as the amendment of the right hon. gentleman, then, I say, we have no right to make a change in the words. That is the dilemma in which I place the right hon. gentleman. If it means the same thing, what is the necessity of the amendment which he says is merely carrying out the provisions of the constitution; and if it does not mean the same thing, by what right does the right hon. gentleman stand up in this House and move an amendment which alters the wording of the constitution, while at the same time he declares that he is adhering to the terms of the constitution without any amendment whatever?

The right hon. gentleman is very particular about some of the provisions of his amended section 93; he is very particular about subsection 3, both in his speech and in his resolution. He thinks it extremely important that the powers of the new provinces shall be restricted in accordance with the amendment which he has introduced into the terms of section 93. The right hon. gentleman I suppose, expects that this legislation will be of some advantage to the new provinces ; that is to say, that a minority in the Northwest Territories, whether Protestant or Catholic, may come by and by to this parliament for a remedial order and for remedial legislation. I ask the right hon. gentleman another question : If he believes that remedial legislation is of the value which it seems he would attach to it, how is it that, when a remedial order is still outstanding with regard to the province of Manitoba, and when he himself has stated, as a member of this House and over his own hand, that that final settlement which he made in the province of Manitoba was only the beginning of justice—why is it that he does not apply this provision to that province in the meantime, and demonstrate in the first place that it is of some value to the minority in at least one province ?

He referred to my remarks about the basis of confederation. The language which I used did not justify the argument which he sought to make with regard to it afterwards. I said that neither in the resolutions passed at the Quebec conference nor in the British North America Act itself was any warrant to be found for the legislation which is sought to be put through this House to-day. I said that in my opinion what we should do is to apply the provisions of the British North America Act, including section 93 which deals with the distribution of legislative powers, and to stand or fall by the meaning of the constitution as expressed in those provisions. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue sought to make an argument of the same character some time ago. He went into the question of the Quebec resolutions and what transpired in London. At the conclusion of his argument I asked him whether there was any compact or agreement in the constitution, any constitutional right in this regard, which was not to be found within the terms of the British North America Act itself, and the Minister of Inland Revenue answered, as he was bound to answer, that everything which he relied upon as a compact or a pledge was to be found within the terms of the British North America Act.

The right hon. gentleman has referred to an illustration which I drew with regard to the use of the French language. I drew that illustration for a very good reason, and I used it, as I think, to support a very good agrument. I understood that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House claimed that this parliament, under the British North America Act of 1871, had the constitutional right to alter the provisions of the British North America Act as regards the distribution of legislative power. I understood them to say further that we were bound so to alter the provisions of the British North America Act, because there was a compact contained in the provisions with regard to separate schools in the Act of 1875; and I stated that if there was such a compact found in that temporary provision contained in the Act of 1875, designed only for the government of the Territories during their territoral stage, I saw no reason why a similar argument, as good an argument, could not be made for the compact to be found in that same provision with regard to the use of the French language in the Territories. I see no distinction whatever between the one case and the other. So far as I am concerned, I do not regard either one or the other as a compact. They were simply statutes passed for the governance of those Territories during the period in which they were Territories ; and to argue, as the right hon. gentleman and some of his friends have argued, that this constitutes a compact imposed for all time upon the people of the Northwest Territories, is absolutely contrary to the opinion brought down by the Minister of Justice. The opinion of the Department of Justice. The opinion of the government itself given through the law officers of the Crown, upon this very question, I have read once in the House already, though I may be permitted to read it again :

> The criticism of the clause (clause 15) is I think largely, if not altogether, founded on a misapprehension. It is, as I understand it, suggested that these words may enlarge or limit the constitutional powers of parliament or of the legislature of Alberta. They can, I submit, have no such effect. The Northwest Territories Act, so far as it affects constitutional powers, is merely a delegation by parliament to the assembly of the Territories of certain legislative authority for the government of the Territories provisionally. The territorial assembly is, with all its constituent authority, by the provincial Acts abolished, and two new legislative bodies are established with provincial powers. They differ in their nature from the territorial assembly, and are in no proper sense successors to it. It cannot, I think, be argued that because the territorial assembly had certain legislative powers, the provincial legislatures, in the absence of provisions to the contrary, must therefore have the same powers. A provision in the Northwest Territories Act, for instance, that the territorial assembly may legislate in respect of education could not, by reason of the clause in question, be held to confer any power with respect to education upon the provincial assemblies : first, because it has no application whatever to the provincial assemblies, and secondly, because the constitution and powers of the provincial assemblies are comprehensively provided by the express provisions of the provincial Acts.

Further on in the same opinion I find this :

> The other section to which Mr. Borden refers is section 14 of the Northwest Territories Act with regard to education. This seems to be a case where it is clearly otherwise provided by this Act, inasmuch as the provincial Acts contain expressed provisions determining the provincial powers with regard to education, but if they did not contain any such provisions I do not see how it could be argued that a power which the territorial assembly had can, without apt words, be made to apply to the two provincial assemblies ; they are not continuations of the territorial assembly ; they derive no powers by reference to its constitution ; they are new bodies created in the execution of special powers by parliament, and there is no room for the application to them of the laws previously defining the constitution of the territorial assembly.

Now I have only a few words more to say in answer to the observations of the right hon. gentleman. He says that the Conservative party has no policy with regard to this matter. The Conservative party has the policy of applying the provisions of the British North America Act, the constitution of Canada, to this matter, without any amendment and without any alteration ; it has the policy of neither seeking to strike out or add to anything in that constitution ; it has the policy of applying that constitution to the new provinces, and of accepting loyally whatever result may ensue from the application of that constitution to those provinces, even if that result is not in accordance with the views which we think best suited to the conditions of those provinces ; it takes that stand because the constitution was settled, as we regard the question, once for all in 1867, because the Act of 1867 was based upon resolutions which not only looked forward to the consolidation into one confederation of the four provinces which originally constituted this country, but which also expressly looked forward to and contemplated the entry into the Dominion of all the territory which now forms part of the Dominion and the colony of Newfoundland as well. Under these circumstances to say that we apply the constitution when we are departing, in so many words, from it is to ignore the facts that are before us, is to ignore the very wording of the Bill itself because it is a direct departure from the constitution and the spirit of the constitution.

I have nothing more to add by way of reply to my right hon. friend. He says he is prepared to stand by the constitution. He says that the compact is contained in section 93 of the British North America Act. He says that he asks no rights for any class of people in this country which are not to be found within the provisions of the British North America Act. He professes to abide as far as education is concerned by the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act. What is the obvious duty of the House and what is the obvious duty of my right hon. friend under these circumstances ? The obvious duty of my right hon. friend and the House is to apply to these new provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, the provisions of section 93 in their entirety. My right hon. friend says it is delightfully uncertain to do that. When he says it is delightfully uncertain, he simply says that the constitution is delightfully uncertain, not that the policy of the Conservative party is delightfully uncertain. The constitution is as we find it and as it was framed by the men of 1867 who were not small men and who were not believed to be unequal to a task of that kind. They prepared a constitution which must be interpreted from time to time in the courts, which has been interpreted many times in the courts in the past, and if you apply the provisions of the constitution it may be and doubtless will be the case that questions as to the meaning of the constitution may arise in regard to section 93 in its operation upon the new provinces just as it has arisen under section 93 in regard to other matters and in regard to other provinces, and just as it has arisen one hundred times, or even two hundred times, I suppose, in regard to the meaning of section 92, the immediately preceding section. The constitution is as we find it and we are content with the constitution and do not desire to alter it according to our view of what a particular class of persons may demand or what the interests of a particular community may require. We believe that we have neither the right nor the power to do that. I therefore beg to move in amendment to the motion of my right hon. friend :

That section 16 be struck out and that the following be substituted therefor :

The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province in so far as the same are applicable under the terms thereof.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to put a question to my hon. friend because I think the time has arrived when we ought clearly to define our position on this question. Will my hon. friend be good enough to allow me to put him this question? What would be the effect in respect to the existing school ordinances of the adoption of that amendment?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In regard to the existing school ordinances?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I expressed my opinion on the second reading of the Bill in regard to that. I believe that the application of section 93 of the British North America Act will leave to the new provinces the right to deal with the question of education. I have said already that this is a question about which hon. gentlemen in this House have differed and that I do not claim to be infallible. I answer my hon. friend because that is my opinion and because it is my duty and the courtesy which I owe him to express it when he asks me for it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The result is that the rights and privileges which are granted to the minority by reason of the existing school legislation in the Northwest Territories will be taken from them ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They may not be taken from them, but the matter will be left absolutely to the people of the new provinces to deal with.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is to say that unless there is other and further legislation by the new provinces the existing legislation disappears?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I do not think it disappears. I think it is continued under section 15 to which I have just referred. It is continued with the other laws of the Territories, because the province has a right to deal with other matters embraced in section 92 or it has a right to deal with the subject under section 93.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. gentleman contends that section 93 would not be applicable to the Territories because the word 'province' is used in section 93, and under this section it would come in not as a province but as a territory. The result, therefore, would be that they would have no rights or privileges whatever. There would be the question as to whether section 93 would be applicable to these Territories and a decision of the court would be required to ascertain what were the rights and privileges of the minority.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend be prepared to say that there will be no litigation over this section as he proposes it?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not prepared to say that there would be no litigation, but there is one thing I am prepared to say and that is, that in so far as I am concerned my endeavour has been to prevent any litigation by making the matter absolutely clear. I do not think it would be fair to this House if I were to come here with a proposition which would oblige me to say that this matter will have to be settled by the courts. I say this is the place to settle the question. We should take it out of controversy in so far as these provinces are concerned. Let us have the courage to say, now, if we have the power, as I contend we have, what are these rights and privileges which are guaranteed to the minority and prevent another Manitoba school case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is the object and intention of the government why does it not deal with section 92 in the same way? There are many questions involved in section 92, the question in regard to jurisdiction over the harbours and foreshores for instance, which is about being again referred to the Supreme Court, and many other matters of that kind and why not cover the whole area?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That will not do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know it will not do. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to apply his remarks to section 93, but if he wants to make matters plain and certain, he had better devote his attention to section 92. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice is too good a lawyer to claim that the meaning of sections 91 and 92 is beyond question. He knows that there are many matters still in controversy to which I have already referred. If I am not mistaken the government is about submitting to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council a further question about the legislative power of parliament and of the provincial legislatures, in regard to the foreshores and the fisheries. If we are going to alter the British North America Act, if we have power to change it as we like we had better deal with this question and make absolutely plain for all time to come the area of the legislative power of the Dominion and of the provinces. Let us not stop at section 93. Continue the good work and deal with sections 91 and 92 in the same way.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not intend to detain the House at any length, but I think I ought to say that this short debate has served an exceedingly useful purpose; it has defined the position of the two parties with respect to this much discussed question. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden), speaking with authority as the leader of the Conservative party, declares to us that the Conservative party are a unit, that those who stand behind him are united in endorsing the views he holds; that is to say, that the wish of the Conservative party is to leave to the future provinces the question of determining what are to be the rights and privileges of the minority.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I made no such statement; it may be perfectly true.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then if my hon. friend did not make the statement, I apologize for having misunderstood him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend asked my opinion, as a lawyer, with regard to the meaning of section 93 of the British North America Act and I stated it. I expressly stated also that I had no doubt, in fact I knew there was a difference on that point. I could not unite the Conservative party on the question of the construction of a statute. I am afraid my efforts must stop short of that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understood my hon. friend to state that he expressed the opinion of the Conservative party when he moved his amendment and then as he after having moved that amendment construed it, and I inferred that those for whom he spoke endorsed the construction he put on it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not so confident in my ability as to seek to impose on my hon. friends behind me or upon the Minister of Justice my opinion as to the construction of a statute. I did say on behalf of the gentlemen on this side of the House that I did believe that they would accept loyally the result of applying section 93 whatever it might be, and I stated further my own opinion of what it would be.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understood the hon. member to say that his amendment gives expression to the wish of the united Conservative party. Of course it is not possible for us on this side to accept the principle contained in his amendment. I take it that there may be doubt with respect to section 93 as to whether or not, in view of the words used in that section, 'province' and 'union,' section 93 would be applicable in its entirety to the new provinces. That I consider is a matter of doubt. Some good lawyers say that section 93 would be applicable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the hon. gentleman, as I understand his previous argument, thinks that that doubt can be removed by virtue of the powers conferred on us by the British North America Act, 1871.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have absolutely no doubt about that. There may be some doubt about section 93, but no doubt as to our right to legislate with respect to this matter. I consider that point was absolutely set at rest at the time the Manitoba Act was passed, and if it was necessary thereafter to find confirmation of what was done at that time, it can be found in the Act of 1871. So far as we are concerned we submit that the territories now coming in as provinces should be dealt with as if they were provinces now. The parliament of Canada undertook when we assumed legislative jurisdiction over these Territories to give to these territories a constitution similar in principle, or rather similar in so far as the circumstances would permit to those enjoyed by the then existing provinces. This parliament gave them the power to deal with the question of education and under the Act of 1880, section 93 is specifically made applicable to the Territories; under that legislation a system has grown up in the Territories, which if they were provinces, section 93 would make applicable to-day and I say it is our bounden duty to give effect to the legislation which we passed and under which this system was created. That is the position we take. We say that rights and privileges have been created under that provision, and we say: Give effect to them. Hon. gentlemen say that no rights and privileges exist and we are not under obligation to consider them.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not the position of the Hon. David Mills in 1884.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course I differ with my hon. friend as to the construction to be put on Mr. Mill's position, but I do not want to play the part of echo; I like to give my own opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. Nor was that contention put up when Mr. Dalton McCarthy moved his motion on the ground that if this was allowed to continue, afterwards, when we came to erect these Territories into provinces and give them a constitution, vested rights and the privileges which they enjoyed might be plead as a bar against any amendment to the constitution then. That was not contended at that time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. McCarthy and George Brown both contended that as a result of the passing of this legislation by this parliament, that is to say of the Act of 1875, with respect to schools, if that legislation was allowed to continue in force until the present moment had arrived, that is until the time came to give provincial autonomy, the result would be that we would be obliged to continue on that system that would create rights and privileges which might have to be accepted. That was the opinion of Brown and McCarthy and of a greater lawyer than either, Sir John Thompson.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it your opinion?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is my opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that Mr. McCarthy did not hold to that contention after Sir John Thompson's explanation, because he said: I frankly confess I have not looked into it as closely as the Minister of Justice has done, and, therefore, I would not stand upon my own opinion to the same extent, but for fear that this should be plead afterwards as a justification for continuing these rights then I will move my motion. In supporting that motion I remember distinctly that I referred to the custom which prevailed in this House, especially amongst lawyers, of pleading vested rights and precedents as a justification for continuing rights acquired, and I said because of that, because that might be plead in the future, I will feel constrained to vote with the member for North Simcoe (Mr. Dalton McCarthy), which I otherwise would not be disposed to do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) a moment ago put to me one or two questions to which he wanted an immediate reply. I said at that moment I did not choose to reply. I am sure my hon. friend and the House generally will agree that when a question is put to an hon. member it is for him to select the manner in which he will answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought the moment was not convenient for me to give an answer, because I could not give such an answer as my hon. friend wanted to have, simply yes or no. The question was asked: Why do you not apply the provisions of section 93 at once without anything more?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you intend to adhere exactly to the constitution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well; if you intend to adhere exactly to the constitution. I said we wanted to adhere exactly to the constitution, and the reason why I did not think it would be advisable at this moment to apply section 93, without any qualification, simply to vote for the amendment of my hon. friend which he has just put in the hands of the chairman, and which is as follows:

The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said provinces in so far as the same are applicable under the terms thereof.

Was, Sir, because that is absolutely meaningless, because you do not mean anything, that there is nothing certain as to what is really the law under such circumstances. You do not know what kind of school system you would have in the Territories if you were to apply that. I call the attention of my hon. friend and the House to this fact that the law of 1875 put in certain prescriptions which were binding on the legislative powers. These prescriptions were that the minority or the majority in any school district would have the power to establish such a school system as they thought fit. Now, Sir, let me call the attention of the House to this, that no less an authority than Sir John Thompson gave his opinion and put it on record that one part of the law passed by the Northwest Territories, the part regarding the organization of school districts, was ultra vires and had no existence in law. Let me again quote Sir John Thompson:

The ordinance respecting schools does not contain the provisions that the statute requires it to contain, but merely contains the provision that the minority may establish a separate school in an organized public school district, thus placing the minority at the mercy of the majority, and only giving the minority the right to establish a separate school, if the majority think proper to organize a public school. It is necessary to point out that the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act, before cited, cannot be abridged by the ordinance and must be considered as still in force, notwithstanding the restrictive terms of the ordinance. In so far as it is attempted by the ordinance to declare the meaning of the Northwest Territories Act, the ordinance fails of that purpose, and is objectionable, as being an interpretation by an inferior legislative body of the Acts of its superior.

The undersigned only refrains from recommending the disallowance of this ordinance, in consequence of its being merely a re-enactment of an earlier ordinance, which disallowance would not affect, and which was allowed to go into operation, probably because attention was not called to this provision. The undersigned has the honour to recommend that the ordinance bringing these revised ordinances into effect, be allowed to go into operation.

Here you have the opinion of Sir John Thompson that a part of the law which was passed in 1888 with regard to the organization of school districts, and which is still the law in force in the Territories, was unconstitutional, was ultra vires, was null. He did not recommend the disallowance of it, and it was not disallowed; but if it was null at that time, it remains null to this day. Therefore what would be the law today? If you say that section 93 of the British North America Act should apply, to what would it apply? To the law as it was in the ordinances of 1901, or as it was in the Act of 1875? This is a serious question, and it is a question we ought to settle. We do not want it left unsettled to be a bone of contention, with all that that implies. My hon. friend's amendment would settle nothing at all, but would simply throw a bone of contention into these new provinces. My hon. friend says, let the British North America Act apply, whatever it may be. When he is asked what that Act means, he says that is for the courts to determine. Is that satisfactory? Is that the manner in which we should legislate? Is that the way to build up this country? Sir, it is not the way. The only way is to find what the law is at the present time, and then apply it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask my hon. friend what tribunal will determine what his amendment means?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The courts must of course determine what our legislation means; but, as was said by the hon. Minister of Justice, we want to do all we can to prevent litigation, not do all we can to faciliate litigation.

Mr. BELCOURT. Before the question is put, might I be permitted to ask the hon. leader of the opposition why, in framing his amendment, he has introduced purely and simply section 93 of the Act of 1867—why he has left out the other provisions of the constitution, as contained in the Act of 1871, the Act of 1875, and the Act of 1886? As I understand, the constitution of Canada is to be found in these four Acts, and my hon. friend proposes to introduce into this Bill which we are now discussing the provisions of the Act of 1867 only. Why has he left out the others?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will answer my hon. friend. It is very unfortunate for his friends that he should have asked that question. In the first place, I followed what the hon. gentleman seems to consider the very bad example of the government, who in section 16, deal specially with section 93 of the British North America Act. If we are to deal with section 93 specially in a particular section, I want to take it exactly as it is, and not with any amendment or alteration. My hon. friend has made a very good point, namely, that we are making no reference to the Act of 1867. He has doubtless observed that there is no reference to that Act in the preamble, and my hon. friend from Hamilton has introduced an amendment referring to the Act of 1867, for which no doubt the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) will vote if there is any question about it, because he clearly appreciates the fact that there should be a reference, not to the Act of 1871 alone, but also to the Act of 1867.

Mr. BELCOURT. Is my hon. friend not prepared to admit that the Act of 1871 particularly, possibly the Act of 1875, and possibly the Act of 1886 in a certain measure, probably in a large measure, are necessary to be looked at in order properly to interpret the provisions of section 93 of the Act of 1867 ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly, as to the Acts of 1867 and 1886, and that is the reason that we are moving a preamble which refers to them.

Mr. BELCOURT. And why has the hon. gentleman left these provisions out of his proposed amendment ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not left them out.

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, the amendment is limited to section 93 of the Act of 1867. It makes no reference whatever to subsequent constitutional Acts. I would like to have some reason why that has been done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The amendment of the Prime Minister says that section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867 shall apply to the said provinces, with certain substitutions. The section is designed to deal only with section 93 of the British North America Act. Taking the standpoint of the government that it is necessary to deal with that by a special section, we are providing a section which leaves it unimpaired, unaltered, unmangled. We propose that the provisions of the whole British North America Act should be dealt with by one section ; but inasmuch as the government thought a special section was necessary, I adopt in that regard their standpoint, making no criticism along the lines my hon. friend suggests, which I might very reasonably have made, as he has made it, on the attitude of the government in that regard.

Mr. BELCOURT. My hon. friend's object is to repair the defect of the legislation proposed by the government. If he admits, as I understand him to admit, that in order to legislate properly in this matter, the provisions of the constitution subsequent to 1867 are necessary, then he must admit that his amendment is defective, because those provisions are not contained in that amendment.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived: yeas, 37 ; nays, 87.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before the amendment moved by the First Minister is adopted, I beg to say that I do not wish to pursue the debate on the lines laid down by the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, because it seems to me that the whole constitutional question was dealt with before the second reading of this Bill. I do not think the government or the Liberal party need to apologize for stating that they do follow the constitution in this matter. I do not think it is necessary to go back over this whole debate in regard to the restriction of provincial rights in matters of education. The only question I want to consider to-day is the difference between section 16 as proposed by the government in the first instance, drafted by the Minister of Justice and adopted by the government, and by the Liberal party of Canada—and the amendment which has been accepted by the government after the late Minister of the Interior thought fit to oppose the clause as first drafted. I think I made it quite clear, in the speech which I made in this House on the second reading of the Bill, that I approved heartily of the legislation as it was introduced in the first instance, and I do not propose to submit to the dictation of the late Minister of the Interior so far as the rights of the minority in the Northwest Territories are concerned. The clause relating to the grants to schools being similar in both clauses as well as the application made of section 93 of the British North America Act, the only difference which exists—and it is a large difference, the opinion of the hon. leader of the opposition to the contrary notwithstanding—is as between the law of 1875 which was adopted by this parliament, and the ordinance of 1901 which was adopted by the Northwest assembly. The text of both clauses shows the difference.

So far as the law of 1875 is concerned, the hon. the leader of the opposition, as well as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) have on a previous occasion, during the consideration by this committee of clause 16, put upon that clause a construction which should not go before parliament and the country without contradiction. My hon friend, the leader of the opposition, supported by the hon. member for North Toronto, argued that what I might call the first subsection of clause 14 of chapter 50 of the revised statutes of Canada, originally clause 11 of the Act of 1875, had no reference whatever to the character of the schools and that the separation granted by the second subsection of that clause meant simply and purely separation without any religious character whatever. Well, I suppose if we want to know what the legislation of 1875 meant, we have to go back to the annals of this parliament. What there do we find ? When the Northwest Territories Bill was proposed to this House, there was nothing in it whatever regarding education. Thereupon the Hon. Mr. Blake made an objection. He said :

He believed it was essential to our obtaining a large immigration to the Northwest that we should tell the people before hand what those rights were to be in the country to which we invited them to settle. . . .

He did not agree with the policy of asking people to settle in that western country, and tell them that a paternal government would look after them and would give them such institutions as the government thought suitable. We had better let the people know their fate politically and otherwise before they settled there. . . .

He regarded it as essential under the circumstances of the country, and in view of the deliberations during the last few days——

Making reference to the New Brunswick school question—— —that a general principle should be laid down in the Bill with respect to public instruction. He did believe that we ought not to introduce into that territory the heart-burnings and difficulties with which certain other portions of this Dominion and other countries had been afflicted. It seemed to him, having regard to the fact that, as far as we could expect at present, the general character of that population would be somewhat analogous to the population of Ontario, that there should be some provision in the constitution by which they should have conferred upon them the same rights and privileges in regard to religious instruction as those possessed by the people of the province of Ontario. The principles of local self-government and the settling of the question of public instruction seemed to him ought to be the cardinal principles of the measure.

I need not say that Mr. Blake did not give the slightest intimation that the cardinal principle of that legislation with regard to public instruction meant only that parliament was dealing with it for the time being and that as soon as the Territories were organized into provinces, they would be at liberty to change their system. Mr. Mackenzie, who immediately assented to the proposition of Mr. Blake, said :

As to the subject of public instruction, it did not in the first place attract his attention, but when he came to the subject of local taxation he was reminded of it. Not having had time before to insert a clause on the subject, he proposed to do so when the Bill was in committee. The clause provided that the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the consent of his council or assembly, as the case might be, should pass all necessary ordinances in respect of education, but it would be specially provided that the majority of the ratepayers. . . . . .

I would like to draw the attention of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to that :

—might establish such schools and impose such necessary assessments as they might think fit ; and that the minority of the ratepayers, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, might establish separate schools, and such ratepayers would be liable only to such educational assessments as they might impose upon themselves. This, he hoped, would meet the objection offered by the hon. member for South Bruce.

It will thus be seen that parliament was dealing not with this minority and that majority in any particular section of the Territories, but with the Protestant or Catholic majority and the Protestant or Catholic minority, as the case might be, throughout the Territories. When the question was brought before the Senate, and Mr. Brown opposed the measure, the Hon. Mr. Scott who has charge of the Bill for the government, spoke as follows :

He was one of those who maintained that parents had a right to educate their children as they pleased and that they ought not to be taxed to maintain schools to which they could not conscientiously send their children. Our whole system of government was based upon that sound principle, and how long could we have happiness and peace in the country if we were to abolish that safeguard which was now recognized in both the large provinces ? Would not every gentleman in this chamber gladly see the New Brunswick trouble removed ? Now was the proper time to establish in the new territory a principle that ought years ago to have been established in this Dominion.

And the Hon. Mr. Miller, a Conservative, who was afterwards President of the Senate, said :

All the Bill asked was that all parties in that new country should have such schools as they chose to establish at their own expense, and that minorities would at all times be safe against the tyranny or intolerance of majorities. That would not be interfering with the just rights of any body or class but, on the contrary, it would be guaranteeing the rights of all classes. It would simply be providing, while they had the power to do so, for freedom of conscience with regard to the vexed question of education.

But I would call especially the attention of members of the Conservative party to the construction put upon that law by the Hon. Alex. Campbell. He said :

It would be much to be regretted if the amendment passed. The object of the Bill was to establish and perpetuate in the Northwest Territories the same system as prevailed in Ontario and Quebec, and which had worked so well in the interest of peace and harmony with the different populations of those provinces. He thought the fairer course, and the better one, for all races and creeds, was to adopt the suggestion of the government and enable people to establish separate schools in that territory, and thus prevent the introduction of evils from which Ontario and Quebec had suffered, but had judicially rid themselves.

In the year following, 1876, petitions were sent to this parliament, just as they have been this year, asking for the repeal of that law; but at that time the wave of anti-Catholicism was not from Ontario but from the maritime province ; and unfortunately, apart from the province of Quebec, all the provinces of Canada have from time to time been subjected to such kind of agitation—the setting of one race or creed against another. Those petitions were presented by the Hon. Mr. Macfarlane, and the minister who spoke for the government on that occasion was the Hon. Mr. Letellier. Mr. Letellier declared positively that the question had been settled and would not be considered again by the government and the Hon. Mr. Miller added :

He thanked the government again for their determination to adhere to the law of last session, which secured freedom of education forever to the great Territories of the Northwest. When the Act will have been proclaimed, which he supposed would shortly be done, it can never be repealed, and the privileges it guarantees will then become the birthright of the generations that are to people that great and promising country, so long, at least, as British institutions and British justice shall prevail there.

In addition to which, the Hon. Mr. Scott said :

The government were guided by experience in settling the separate school question in the Northwest and setting it at rest at once and for ever.

So, we have the declaration from leading members of both parties in 1875 and 1876 that, in establishing separate schools in the Northwest Territories in 1875 they meant first, to establish them for ever, and, second, to establish in the Northwest the same system of separate schools as existed in Quebec and Ontario. And when hon. gentlemen opposite quote Sir John Thompson against that contention, I have to remind them that Sir John Thompson, although on the legal point of whether or not the settlement of this question in 1875 was binding on parliament, differed with Mr. Dalton McCarthy, and stated positively that the parliament of Canada, when the time came to give provincial institutions to the Northwest be free to do whatever it liked, yet, at the same time he said parliament would have to consider the pledges given in 1875 on that question. The pledges given in 1875 were pledges which this government at first considered that they should keep, but which it is proposed by that amendment to ignore. They provided for the same system of schools in the Northwest as was established in Quebec and Ontario. There cannot be two opinions about that.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman has scarcely given a correct interpretation of what Sir John Thompson said. Here are Sir John Thompson's own words :

We claim therefore that the constitutional system which was established with regard to schools and with regard to language in 1875 ought to be maintained for the same reasons as those which dictated its creation, and that this condition of affairs should last, at least, while the affairs of the Territories are under control of this parliament. What the constitution of the future provinces should be, in view of the pledges which have been referred to, or in view of any other set of circumstances, will be for parliament to decide when it decides to create those provinces.

That is entirely different from the interpretation given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa).

Mr. BOURASSA.

Mr. BOURASSA. Not at all. I say distinctly that this parliament is free. I do not claim some small legal technicality, but a broad moral obligation, which this parliament has taken upon itself. I admit that we are free to ignore that obligation, we are free to be untrue to our pledges. I admit that Sir John Thompson never attempted to say that this parliament would not be free. But, if we have any desire to maintain the honour of parliament, if, in the words of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), we want to build up a nation, we cannot do it by tying ourselves up to legal forms ; we can only do it by being true to our moral obligations. And this parliament will not be doing good work for the building up of this country and the maintenance of British justice and British institutions in Canada if it does not live up to its moral as well as its legal obligations.

Mr. SPROULE. If I am not interrupting the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) too much I would like to ask him a question : If we have a constitution which provides for the rights of all the provinces, and if education is one of those rights, what guarantee would there be of the rights of the provinces in the future if an Act such as that passed by this parliament in 1875 should control them for all time in the matter of education ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not going to enter into a discussion of these small points. I have made the point that, so far as the Northwest is concerned, this parliament was the only body that could legislate for it up to the present time. And this body established, in the very words of the legislators of 1875, for ever, a system based on that in Ontario and Quebec. And, by adopting the amendment proposed by the Prime Minister we are breaking that engagement. That is my position. The law of 1875 was not a law of narrow scope which would have prevented the government of the Northwest, any more than the original proposition of the Minister of Justice, if adhered to, would have prevented the legislatures of the new provinces, from dealing with educational matters just as we may deal with them in Ontario and Quebec. I would ask any hon. member on either side of the House, why should the people of the Northwest Territories be in a different position from those of Ontario and Quebec ? Are we in Ontario and Quebec interfered with, is our liberty curtailed, because there is in our constitution some restriction as to our power of encroaching upon the rights of the minority ? And, if it was found best to prevent the majority in Ontario and in Quebec from dealing improperly with the minority, why should not the majority in the Northwest Territories be checked in the same way, should they feel inclined to deal less fairly with the minority than the minorities in Ontario and Quebec are dealt with ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should not the people of the maritime provinces be in the same position ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly ; but the great difference is that they were already self-governing provinces when they entered the confederation compact in 1867. They had a school system as well as a judicial system, under which they had lived for years. But the Northwest Territories were purchased by the people of Canada. The money which has been spent for the settlement of that country has been the money of Catholics as well as of Protestants, the money of French Canadians as well as of English Canadians. And in the words of Blake, of Mackenzie, of Sir Alexander Campbell, the people of Canada purchased that territory, designing to introduce there the principle of freedom in the matter of education so that the French and Catholic Canadians would be allowed to go there on an equality with the Protestants and English Canadians. When it comes to the time of taxes for the development of the Northwest, have you made an exception in favour of the Roman Catholic and the French Canadian ? No. Then, why should the law, which is designed to provide for the education of all future generations, be made such that the French Canadian and Catholics will not feel as free in these Territories for the acquisition, defence and settlement of which they have as loyally given their share of self-sacrifice and money as have those of any other race or religion ?

I need not go over again the ground of difference between Roman Catholic and Protestants with regard to education. That was discussed thoroughly on the second reading of the Bill. I need not again point out the difference between separate and public schools. I stand on the ground on which the Prime Minister stood on February 21st, when he compared the system of separate schools in Canada with the system in the United States and said he wanted to prevent the introduction into Canada of a system of schools which would produce the moral results we see in the United States. Therefore I adhere to the legislation introduced by the Prime Minister, and I refuse to alter my position even to please the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). So, we have to choose between the law of 1875, which this parliament passed in the full exercise of its prerogative—as most clearly shown by the Minister of Justice—under the imperial statute of 1871, which law of 1875 must be binding upon the conscience of the parliament, and which is the only one the government can invoke to show that they are morally bound to give something to the minority,—between that and the ordinance of 1901 adopted by the legislature of the Northwest Territories contrary to the provisions of the law of 1875, the only law under which the legislature could act. In other words, I stick to the law instead of to an ordinance which has been passed in defiance of the law, in defiance of the wishes of this parliament and of the moral pledges which we have taken, and which in itself is an unjust act as against the interests of the people for whom this legislation of 1875 was adopted.

Sir, the law of 1875 was adopted in order to give freedom of education to minorities in the Northwest Territories, whether Catholic or Protestant. Now, I put this question to the leader of the opposition : I say that the parliament in 1875 meant to give certain rights to the minorities in the Northwest Territories ; and is my hon. friend prepared to put such a construction upon that statute of 1875 as that the first subsection thereof would have nothing to do with religious education, with the consequence that under such a construction nine-tenths of the minority would be deprived of the rights and privileges that were intended to be given to them ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The question, if the hon. gentleman wants me to answer it, sems to be a little involved ; I do not know whether I fully understand it. I think it would be answered by the reply I gave to the Minister of Justice, which is in effect this—I will elaborate it. The government, through their Department of Justice, had given an opinion, which coincides with mine, as to the nature of the Act of 1875 passed by the parliament of Canada, and which can be amended by this same parliament. Parliament was not then establishing a province, it could have established a province——

Mr. BOURASSA. My hon. friend is not answering the question I put to him. I am not asking what might be the actual constitutional value of the Act, I am simply asking his opinion of the way it would affect the local majority and the local minority. In order to make myself clear I will read the Act, section 11 :

> The Lieutenant Governor in Council, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education ; but it shall therein be always provided, that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor ; and further, that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and that, in such latter case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they may impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Now, the other day I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the first part of this section with regard to the right of the local majority to establish 'such schools as they think fit,' had no reference to the religious character of those schools, but that it simply meant that the local majority could establish the number of schools they saw fit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think that the words 'as they think fit' have the significance which was attached to them by the Minister of Justice, with whom I had rather an elaborate argument upon that question, which ended, I think, in each one of us retaining his own opinion. I adhere to the opinion I then expressed; I do not think my hon. friend requires me to repeat what I then said.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is all right, I only wanted to be sure that I understood the hon. gentleman correctly. This then is the result that legal science may produce in an otherwise broad-minded and honest man. The result would be, if we consider the position of the Roman Catholics in the Northwest, who form the majority in the most of the local districts where they live, that nine-tenths of them would be deprived of the schools meant to be given to them. That would be the logical and the actual result of the contention of my hon. friend. Well, I am not a lawyer, but I contend that is not the opinion of the legislators of 1875, that is not the opinion of Mr. Blake, who was considered at that time, and is still considered throughout the British empire to be a lawyer of some eminence. I still adhere to the opinion which was expressed at that time by Mr. Blake, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Mackenzie, that what they meant is what they said; that is, they wanted to give the minorities in the Territories, whether Protestant or Catholic, the right to have such schools as they saw fit; in other words, if they were Catholics they could have Catholic schools, and if they were Protestants they could have Protestant schools, and the majority in each case could not impose its will upon them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could the hon. gentleman refer to that portion of my remarks on this question which he says bear that construction?

Mr. BOURASSA. I say that if the hon. gentleman means that the first subsection of section 11 of the Act of 1875 has no reference whatever to the religious character of the schools, as a matter of fact, nine-tenths of the people of the Northwest, according to the ordinances of 1901, are entirely deprived of such schools as were intended to be given to them by that Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How does the hon. gentleman know what was intended except by referring to the statutes?

Mr. BOURASSA. Of course, that may be the narrow legal view to be taken; but I say that if there is anything obscure in the language of a statute, then we have to consider the comments that were made upon it by the men who adopted it, and to take the construction that was put upon that statute by those for whom it was made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Really, does the hon. gentleman ask us to refer to the debates in order to interpret a statute?

Mr. BOURASSA. I say that Mr. Blake's object was to give freedom of education to the total minority in the Northwest Territories, and if a narrow interpretation of the law of 1875 will prevent nine-tenths of those people from getting such schools as they see fit, then you are contradicting the spirit of the legislature that passed the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I only asked this question of my hon. friend, because he says he is prepared to discuss the constitutional point with any person, and he has told us over and over again that the proper method of construing a statute is to refer to the debates in parliament.

Mr. BOURASSA. I said that was my method.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman said it was not only the proper way, but it was the best way. He is dealing with the question, I suppose, from the standpoint of the legal construction which a court of law would put upon it. Is he doing that, or is he talking about something else? Is the hon. gentleman talking about its real construction which would be given to it in a court of law, or is he talking about something else?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am talking about the law of 1875, and I am talking about those who passed that law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But I am asking whether he is dealing with the question of what the real legal construction is.

Mr. BOURASSA. Oh, no.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then he is not dealing with the meaning of the statute.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am dealing with the common sense meaning, not with the legal meaning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is not dealing then with the meaning which would be put upon it by the courts.

Mr. BOURASSA. That depends on the courts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say, if the courts adopt his view it is a common sense view, and if they do not adopt his view it is not a common sense view.

Mr. BOURASSA. What I say is very simple. I say that in 1875 the parliament of Canada intended to give separate schools as between Protestants and Roman Catholics in the Northwest Territories, as is done in Quebec and in Ontario, and I quoted the language of the legislators of that day and the intention they had in passing the statute. I say we must interpret the word 'majority' in the second paragraph of that Act in the same way as the word 'minority' in the third paragraph; that is, it means that if the majority were Catholics it could establish Catholic schools, and if the majority were Protestant it could establish Protestant schools; but if the minority were of a different creed they could separate from the majority and establish such schools as they saw fit. Now, to that the hon. gentleman makes an objection that would leave no schools to any other class of people than the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. I never contended that, and I think it would be a senseless contention.

The law left to the authorities of the Northwest Territories the power to deal with education, to pass ordinances in respect to education, and under that power, they may establish a system of public schools. They may establish a system of non-sectarian public schools to-day, one to which Protestants or Catholics or any other class of people can send their children, and as a matter of fact that is what was done under the law of 1875 before the ordinance of 1892 was passed. But I say that in so far as separate schools are concerned it meant nothing but Protestant schools on the one side and Catholic schools on the other. The hon member has tried to throw ridicule on that opinion of mine which I expressed the other day and he cited the opinion of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick in the famous case of Renaud to the contrary. In my simple, layman way of reading a document I have read that judgment and what I found I thought was this, that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick decided first that under the Parish School Law or under the Common School Law, Catholics enjoyed no rights which they could claim as rights under section 93 of the British North America Act, that whatever religious exercises were carried on in public schools were not those provided for under clause 93 of the British North America Act. They decided secondly that denominational schools, as provided for under subsection 1 of section 93 meant the schools of any denomination, any Protestant denomination, or the Roman Catholic but in so far as separate schools are concerned and as provided for by subsections 2, 3 and 4, they meant Catholic schools on one side and Protestant schools on the other. I quote from the judgment:

> It is contended, in this case, that the words 'denominational schools' were not used by the legislature, and should not be construed by us in their ordinary grammatical sense and meaning, but should have a much broader interpretation. While freely admitting that, though the general rule is that every word must be understood according to its legal meaning, in constructing an ordinary as opposed to a penal enactment, where the context shows that the legislature had used it in a popular or more enlarged sense, courts will so construe the language used; we are at a loss to discover anything in the British North America Act, 1867, indicating a legislative intention of using the words otherwise than in their ordinary meaning. It is clear enough that the reference in subsection 2, to separate and dissentient schools in Ontario and Quebec, is especially to schools of Protestants and Catholics, and it is, perhaps, equally clear that subsection 3 applies only to schools of a like character existing in any of the four provinces.

But, it was more clearly established in the judgment in the Manitoba school question. Dealing with that very question which was raised by the hon. leader of the opposition, Mr. Blake said:

> You may have some difficulty in treating the Protestant school as separate, because you may say: 'what sect does it belong to? But when you find a school as to which authority is given to conduct it under the control of religious teaching, which applies exclusively to one religious body, that for which I appear, can you call it other than a separate school for the denomination? It is a school having religious teaching, the religious teaching of a single denomination, the Roman Catholic demonination, authorized, erected and created by the state in order that such teaching may take place. . . . In the very nature of things the school of the minority is a denominational school. The minority has a right to establish out of the whole or part of the area the school which is to be the school of the minority, conducted according to its views of Roman Catholic education.
> The LORD CHANCELLOR. The word 'separate' applied before the Act only to schools in Ontario?
> Mr. BLAKE. Yes.
> The LORD CHANCELLOR. The separate schools were a system of Roman Catholic schools as distinguished from the general non-denominational system of the whole province?
> Mr. BLAKE. Precisely. The separate school was the technical term applied to the Roman Catholic schools of the province and was grafted upon a non-denominational school system.
> The LORD CHANCELLOR. Subsection 3 deals with separate schools existing at the time of the union. That of course refers to the separate schools in Ontario and the dissentient schools in Quebec. When it speaks of 'or as thereafter established by the legislature of the province,' that is something new, and in order to ascertain what comes within 'separate or dissentient' you must look at what the nature of 'separate and dissentient' was at the time of the passing of the Act.

Applying the words of Lord Herschell to the law of 1875, what comes within the word 'separate' under the Act of 1875, if not a full system of separate schools as they exist in Ontario and Quebec when it was clearly stated by the legislators of those days that what they meant to do in the Northwest Territories was to establish the same system as that which was in existence in Ontario and Quebec? In the judgment that was delivered by Lord Herschell, he said:

The second subsection of section 93 of the British North America Act extended all the powers, privileges and duties which were then by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees of the Roman Catholic inhabitants of that province to the dissentient schools of the Protestant and Roman Catholic inhabitants of Quebec. There can be no doubt that the views of the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Quebec and Ontario with regard to education were shared by the members of the same communion in the territory which afterwards became the province of Manitoba. They regarded it as essential that the education of their children should be in accordance with the teaching of their church, and considered that such an education could not be obtained in public schools designed for all the members of the community alike, whatever their creed, but could only be secured in schools conducted under the influence and guidance of the authorities of their church.

As I have said on a previous occasion it is most extraordinary that we should have to go to the Privy Council of England, to the Protestant statesmen of England, to have a clear interpretation of what our rights are. In this parliament, representatives of the Roman Catholic minority are ready to accept as satisfactory to the needs of their own fellow countrymen and co-religionists what according to Lord Herschell, cannot and does not constitute what is regarded as essential by the Roman Catholics. Surely I will not be accused of being more fanatical or bigoted than Lord Herschell. I think I am safe in saying that I am not a fanatic or a bigot because I still claim for my fellow countrymen in the Northwest Territories that justice shall be given to the minority there. Four years after the law of 1875 was adopted this parliament adopted an amendment to the Dominion Lands Act, in 1879, by which they adopted the principle of state aid to education. They laid aside, as is well known, two sections out of each township, the proceeds of the sale of which were to be placed in the hands of the Dominion government and the interest paid twice a year to the government of the Northwest Territories as well as to the government of Manitoba to be applied towards the support of schools. I suppose nobody will deny that the intention at that time was that the Catholic schools established under the authority of this government were entitled to receive their equal share as well as the schools established by the majority. Therefore, there was a subsection in clause 16, No. 1, as there is in clause 16. No. 2, simply fulfilling the moral obligation assumed by this parliament in 1879.

Now Sir, how did the Northwest Assembly proceed to act under the powers given to it by the Act of 1875. The Prime Minister has referred to the ordinance of 1884 as being the first school ordinance adopted by the Northwest Territories and as being the basis of their system up to the ordinance of 1892. I beg to differ with the hon. gentleman for the excellent reason that the ordinance of 1884 was never put in force, because it was found by the legislature that they had not the power to exercise the taxation part of it and it was only after an amendment was made to the Northwest Territories Act that they adopted the ordinance of 1885 which was the basis of the school ordinances of the Northwest Territories; so that the ordinance of 1884 was never put in force and cannot be considered the basis, though most of it is materially the same as the ordinance of 1885 except in one particular. The right hon. gentleman has read this afternoon the clause of the ordinance of 1884 which provided that no religious instruction, such as Bible reading or reciting or reading prayers, &c., was to be permitted in any public Catholic or Protestant school. The hon. gentleman has added that this remained the law of the Northwest Territories up to the present time. Again I beg to differ and if he refers to the ordinance of 1885 which was the first ordinance adopted, which was the basis of school legislation in the west for seven years, he will find that this clause of the ordinance of 1884 was struck out and that religious education was limited only so far as public schools were concerned. This is clause 78, of the legislation of 1885.

No religious instruction, such as Bible reading, or reciting, or reading or reciting prayers or asking questions or answering questions from any catechism shall be permitted in any public school of the Northwest Territories from the opening of such school at 9 o'clock in the forenoon until the hour of 3 o'clock in the afternoon, after which time any such religious instruction as is desired by the trustees may be given.

So that under the law of 1885 which remained the law until the passing of the ordinance in 1892, religious instruction was permitted in separate schools such as the trustees wanted to have. No interference was made by the local legislature, against their liberty, and it was only in 1892 that they returned to the legislation of 1884 which had never been put into force and which did not exist in the Territories until 1892. It was stated by the late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that the system which was established by the ordinance of 1885 was to all intents and purposes what is called a church system. Of course I understood the hon. gentleman's object. It was desired by him at that time to use the cry which was being started in this country by some members of the opposition, and everything which scented of church, bishops or hierarchy, was to be used for the purpose of frightening the government. The schools established in 1883 as well as the schools in Quebec were schools under the authority of the fathers of families, the authority of the ratepayers, who elected their trustees and conducted their schools according to their views as free citizens of this country as well as fathers of families and therefore were entitled to whatever they liked, within the purview of the law. That did not prevent the government of the Northwest Territories any more than the government of Quebec from carrying their right of supervision over the schools.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Or vice versa.

Mr. BOURASSA. Any more in Quebec than in the Territories, but I am not now dealing with the school system in Quebec—in Quebec we have no such thing as church schools. You have them in Ontario, you have your Sunday school which is practically a church school. We have nothing of the kind, we have schools in which we allow and ask the authorities of the church to give religious instruction and conduct the choice of books from which religious instruction is to be given to the children. It is our right to do so and I think it is the best method by which religious instruction can be secured. The result is that out of these schools, under the pall of the church, under the domination of the hierarchy, we have no race of people growing up among whom exists that plague which has been denounced of late by the president of the United States, and by one of the Anglican bishops of this country, that plague of race suicide, which is so much spoken of. Perhaps if a little more church authority was brought into the schools and a little more religious teaching given in the majority schools of this country we would not have such denunciations as the chief statistician of the province of Ontario is bound to give every year in this connection.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman continues in his present mind there will be no danger of him raising up a race.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not talking of that kind of process, I am not talking of the abstention process. The hon. gentleman knows that it is another kind of process that is carried on under our public school education.

In 1886 another ordinance was passed. This time they established what I may call as far as the system of schools is concerned, an ideal system, the system which gives full application to the intention of the federal parliament in 1875. Instead of having simply a dual system of schools, Catholic and Protestant schools, they established a triple system, public schools, nonsectarian, that were to be under the control of the full council, that is of the council composed of Protestants and Catholics alike. Then they had a system of public schools to be called Catholic public schools where the Catholics were in the majority and Protestant public schools, where the Protestants were in the majority, as well as Protestant separate schools and Catholic separate schools. Those schools not called either Protestant or Catholic were put under the control of the full council. The Catholic schools were left under the control of the Catholic section and the Protestant schools under the control of the Protestant section of the council. It may be said that this meant a great mixing up of authorities. Not at all, the whole administration of the schools system was left to the full council, but with regard to religious instruction, with regard to the inspection of separate schools, with regard to the choice of text books, each section had to provide for its own schools, and this was the only way in which it was possible for every one to enjoy liberty. That is the system we have adopted in Quebec and which up to this time has worked so happily.

I come now to the question touched by the Prime Minister this afternoon with respect to districts. Under the ordinance of 1885 you could organize a Catholic public school district or a Protestant public school district and the minority could secede therefrom and organize a separate school—the Protestants in a Catholic section or the Catholics in a Protestant section. Under the ordinance of 1886 they restricted the rights of the minority to this extent that the minority could only organize a separate school when the majority had organized a public school. This was reproduced in the legislation of 1888, and was pointed out by Sir John Thompson as an invasion of the rights of the minority because it prevented the minority from organizing before the majority had organized. The right hon. gentleman pointed that out this afternoon as the essential feature in existence then but he will allow me again to tell him he has left aside an important fact. Theoretically Sir John Thompson was right but in practice this did not work much to the disadvantage of the minority because it was not probable that a local minority would be ready to have a school before the majority had established its schools. But under the legislation of 1886 as well as under the ordinances of 1888, 1892 and 1896, the right of the majority to organize a Catholic public school district still existed, and it was continued till the adoption of the ordinances of 1901. It is only in the ordinances which we are now asked to adopt as a basis for the future rights of the minority, that the right to establish Catholic public schools where the Catholics are in the majority is taken from them ; and therefore it is only in the last four years that they have been deprived of this right. I find the evidence of that in what was quoted in this House the other day by the Minister of Inland Revenue. He said that the Catholic public schools were still acknowledged by the Northwest government, because in the report of the Department of Education for the year 1900, the year previous to the ordinance in question, they still recorded Catholic public schools. Although the rights of the Catholic minority had been abridged by the ordinances of 1887, 1888 and 1892, the rights of the Catholic local majority still existed, and they could still establish Catholic public schools. But the only Catholic schools that exist at present in the Northwest Territories, and the only ones for which provision is made by this amendment, are nine separate schools; and the only provision you make, if you adopt the amendment proposed by the Prime Minister —which in my opinion has been imposed on the government by the late Minister of the Interior—is a provision to guarantee those nine schools to the Catholics, with one-half hour for religious instruction. After eight o'clock I will deal with other provisions of the ordinances of 1892 and 1901, and will show that so far as the teaching of French is concerned, they afford no guarantee whatever.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 139) respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. D. Ross.

On the preamble,

Mr. SPROULE. Is the government prepared to make any announcement regarding this Bill? The principle involved in it must be settled in this House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I suggest that the committee take up the other sections of the Bill excepting the 3rd, and by the time we take up the Bill again I will be in a position to announce the decision arrived at.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest that the minister reserve section 4 as well as 3. We know why the minister proposes to reserve section 3, it was a suggestion made the other day in committee. In four provision is made for agreements between this company and companies in the States. I think the government would do well to consider that with the changes that they may make in section 3, because it might be possible under section 4 to do away with thte safeguards that may be provided by the government in section 3.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The companies referred to in clause 4 are Canadian companies and Canadian lines, not American companies.

Mr. BARKER. It cannot do any harm to keep them. You have contracts with companies in the States, they are or may be traffic contracts, and the Minister of Railways knows that you may by traffic contracts do everything you could by the ownership of the railways.

Mr. BOURASSA.

Mr. EMMERSON. I see no objection to letting 3 and 4 stand.

On section 5,

Mr. HENDERSON. It was suggested by some person in the Railway Committee that an amendment should be made to section 5. I am not sure whether the promoter of the Bill had considered this or not. I will read the amendment, and if he approves of it, it can be put in; if not, I will not offer any opposition to it:

> The construction of the railway shall be commenced within two years after the passing of this Act. and the said railways which the company is authorized to build shall be finished and put in operation within five years after the passing of this Act.

The remainder of the clause is the same. The words struck out were in the first line 'authorized by the said Act of the province of British Columbia and by this Act, may.' I would ask the promoter of the Bill if he has considered the nature of this amendment, and whether he desires an amendment along that line. I understood the clause was desired in order to conform with the requirements of the Railway Committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. If any one had the intention of proposing such an amendment he did not make it known before the committee. I would call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that section 5 as now in the Bill is the standard section, and I think if we adopt the amendment it would be a departure from the course invariably pursued by the committee with respect to all Railway Bills.

Mr. HENDERSON. The amendment which was drafted and put into my hands seems to be for the improvement of the Bill, to make it conform with what is generally done in the Railway Committee. The clause makes reference to the construction of the railway authorized by the said Act of the province of British Columbia. Now are we not making a provision for the construction of the railway authorized by this Act? It seems to me that the clause offered is a limited clause, and will not in the event of section 3 being adopted cover the whole ground. However, I am not going to press the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Clause 5 speaks of two companies:

> The construction of the said railways authorized by the said Act of the province of British Columbia and by this Act may be commenced within two years——

Is the railway not already commenced?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then why do we say it should be commenced within two years? It is proper to say that it should be finished within five years.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think that one of the objects of section 1 of this Act was to cure any defect that might exist by reason of the particular section in the British Columbia Act, which stated that if a railway was not commenced within a certain time the corporate powers of the company ceased to exist. Now, we have cured that, as we believe, by section 1 of the Act. And that extends still further. We do not want the question whether or not that was commenced within the time prescribed by the British Columbia Act left in an uncertain state. We wish to make it definite and distinct by this provision.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the promoter is satisfied I have no reason to object.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would like to give notice of a motion which I intend to move at the next meeting of the committee to consider this Bill. It will be to this effect:

The company shall, within two years from the passing of this Act, commence the construction of the western portion of the main line from a point at or near Cloverdale, and shall continue to prosecute the construction in an easterly direction to Princetown, as provided in the charter of the company, chapter 75 of 60 Victoria, statutes of British Columbia.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House resumed in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. BOURASSA. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock, I had just made an analysis of the different ordinances that were adopted by the assembly of the Northwest Territories from 1884 to 1888, completing, to my mind, the historical sketch given by the Prime Minister this afternoon, and showing especially—and that was the point I insisted upon and still insist upon—that, so far as the organization of school districts is concerned, under all these ordinances the majority of any district remained entitled, as they had been under the law of 1875, to organize either a Catholic or a Protestant school. Most of the members of this House will remember that it was about these years that Mr. Dalton McCarthy began his movement for the abolition of the separate schools in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, which, as he stated, was a preliminary step to the abolition of religious education throughout the Dominion and the abolition of French as an official language in Canada. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) stated some time ago that in the Northwest assembly, although the first opinion had been given in favour of abolishing separate schools, that opinion was not maintained by Mr. Haultain especially. I have followed the proceedings of the assembly of the Northwest Territories just as I have read all the ordinances, and not only a few of them. I have found that first in 1889 the Northwest assembly petitioned this parliament by two addresses, one asking for the repeal of clause 14 of the Northwest Territories Act in the revised statutes of Canada, and the other asking for the repeal of clause 110. Clause 14 provides for the maintenance of separate schools and the other provides for the maintenance of French as an official language in the Northwest. These addresses were not complied with in this parliament. In 1890, on November 18th, a resolution was introduced by Mr. Richardson and seconded by Mr. Brett, reaffirming the resolution of 1889. Perhaps for party reasons, certainly for reasons with which I am not familiar, Mr. Haultain opposed this measure, and it was defeated by a vote of 15 to 6. But, ten days afterwards, a resolution was brought forward by Mr. Cayley, seconded by Mr. Haultain, to the very same effect—reiterating the demands of the Northwest assembly of the previous year, and asking the Dominion parliament to repeal sections 14 and 110 of the Northwest Territories Act. So far as Mr. Haultain's intentions are concerned, I think there can be no doubt that from 1889 his aim, so far as education is concerned, was to do away with the dual system established under the law of 1875—and we shall see presently how far he has succeeded. Of course, as hon. members know, in 1891 Mr. Dalton McCarthy introduced a Bill that would have had for its effect the carrying out of the wish of Mr. Haultain and the Northwest assembly. But that Bill was rejected by this parliament. In 1892 the Northwest Territories adopted the ordinance that has been so often referred to. As the Prime Minister accurately stated this afternoon, the effect of that ordinance was to do away with the dual administration of the schools. The council of public instruction, composed partly of Protestants and partly of Catholics, which council divided itself into two committees for the supervision of the Catholic and Protestant schools, respectively, was abolished, and the government of the Northwest Territories in effect formed itself into an executive committee of public instruction, with a kind of advisory board, having nothing to do with the execution of the law and having only powers of advice. This may not be the most important point in the case, but it was certainly the beginning of what I call the policy of persecution inaugurated by Mr. Haultain in the Northwest Territories. Of course, opinions may differ as to that. But I am sure that if you have a system of separate schools, one of the essential bases of that system must be a body composed of men of the creed that has the right to the separate schools. In support of that I may quote an opinion which I am sure will be accepted by at least the majority of this House. In 1893, speaking on a motion of Mr. Tarte, then member for L'Islet, condemning the Conservative government for their course on the school question, the leader of the opposition of that day, now Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), said :

I have quoted to you the law which now prevails in Quebec—the law demanded by the Protestant population of that province giving them a school board of their own. I have quoted to you the law whereby in 1869 two separate boards of education were organized, a Roman Catholic board and a Protestant board. The Roman Catholic board to-day is composed of seventeen members, nine Catholic laymen and all the Catholic bishops of the province. Now suppose that to-morrow the legislature of Quebec were to abolish the Protestant school board. Then, by the effect of that law, the management of the Protestant school would become vested in the Roman Catholic board of the council of education, that is to say, practically in the hands of the Roman bishops. If such legislation were to be enacted by the legislature of Quebec, is there a man to say that it would not be a most infamous act of tyranny.

Perhaps these words are a little violent. But if an Act of the legislature of the province of Quebec putting the management of the Protestant schools under a Catholic board would constitute a most infamous act of tyranny, then, using a more moderate language, I would say that the effect of abolishing the right of the Catholics to supervise their schools and putting the Catholic schools of the Northwest under direct and exclusive control of the Protestant board at least constituted an act of injustice.

It is well we should know exactly what the position was, viewed from a different point of view. I entirely agree with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister in the words he uttered this afternoon when he said that if we want to build up a nation we can only do it on the principle of conciliation and fair-play to everybody. But if we are to put such a principle into practise there must be one law for all—one law for Protestants and Catholics alike, one law for French, English, Scotch and Irish. What has been done by the territorial government would be qualified as an infamous act of tyranny had it been done by a Catholic government at the expense of a Protestant minority. Shall that, then, which we would condemn as infamous if done by a Catholic government at the expense of a Protestant minority be qualified as an act of conciliation and fair-play when performed by a Protestant government at the expense of a Catholic minority ? I leave it to the government to decide what difference there is between the two cases. But that is not the only point. If that had been the only attempt of the majority in the Northwest to deprive the minority of their rights, I would not be raising my voice in protest to-day. But the Protestant majority went further. They withdrew from the minority the right to choose their own text-books, which is another of those rights qualified by Lord Herschell as one of the essential rights pertaining to a system of separate schools. They also deprived the minority of their right to choose their own inspectors to inspect their schools, and of the right to give normal school training to their own teachers. They went so far as to compel the nuns to go out of the convents and take off their religious garbs if they desired to receive diplomas entitling them to teach ; and this order was passed by the paternal government of Mr. Haultain. Those religious teachers who were qualified in France and England and in the province of Quebec, who had been teaching, some of them, for thirty-five years, were put on the same footing as young girls who had not diplomas, unless they chose to submit to Mr. Haultain's Russian ruling. So far as religious teaching is concerned, Mr. Haultain said, in an interview which he gave to the Toronto 'News' on the 14th April, 1905 :

There are two or three clauses in the ordinance of 1901, which, it is now argued, go to limit separate school powers. Every one of them outside of that creating a commissioner of education, Mr. Haultain points out, appears in the previous ordinances under which the dual system prevailed. Section 137 prohibits religious instruction earlier than 3.30 p.m., The ordinance of 1884, and all succeeding ordinances forbade religious instruction earlier than 3 p.m.

The same statement was made by the Prime Minister this afternoon, but I have proved that it is inaccurate. Although that provision is to be found in the ordinance of 1884, it was never put into force. In the ordinances of 1885, 1886, 1887 and 1888, full liberty was given separate schools so far as religious teaching is concerned. It was only in 1892 that, for the first time, was applied the ordinance limiting the right of religious instruction in these schools. On this point I want to correct a mistake made, not only by Protestants, but by Catholic members of this House. What we ask is not that the catechism be taught for half an hour during the time given to religious instruction. I have been in one of those church schools in the province of Quebec, and there all the teaching of catechism we had only took up one hour a week. But what we claim as inseparable from separate schools is that in the teaching of history, in the reading books, in the study of classical authors, we should have the right to impress upon the minds of the children the principles of our religion, and this again has been positively stated by Lord Herschell, in the second case of Manitoba, as one of the essential features of the separate school system, so far as Roman Catholics are concerned. Affidavits were produced there, just as declarations have been made here, to the effect that several Catholics did not care for that kind of religious teaching. But, as one of the other members of the Privy Council said : Whatever may be the views of private individuals among Roman Catholics, it is well known that one of the bases of the Roman Catholic religion, so far as teaching is concerned, is that the Catholic idea should permeate the whole system of education; and when you deprive Catholics of the teaching of history in their own way, you deprive them of one of the essential rights of separation.

The provision with regard to the teaching of language was also changed. In the preceding ordinances, even in 1888, Sir John Thompson pointed to one of the clauses as being unwantonly complained against by the minority. That clause was to the effect that the teaching in English was imperative in the schools. On that point I share the opinion of Sir John Thompson. There was no harm in that. French Canadians do not object to it. We all wish to learn English. I may say, without boasting, that, so far as the study of the dual language is concerned, we are far in advance of any of the English-speaking provinces. Take, for instance, only this House, and I ask what is the proportion of English members who have taken the trouble to learn French compared with the number of French-speaking members who speak English? In this country, where one-third of the population is French Canadian, where the whole system of our constitution is based on a fair understanding between the two races, it should be the duty of every provincial government to insert in its education laws the provision that both languages should be taught in its schools. Let those gentlemen who are often so ready to give lessons in loyalty go to the mother country, and they will find that no man in England considers his education complete unless he learns the French tongue. Here in this country, where the French is the mother tongue of one-third of the population, why should so many of our English-speaking fellow-citizens show that blind inexplicable hatred against the teaching of French in our schools? Make the teaching of English imperative if you like, but give the French Canadians the right to impart the most important part of our teaching in French. That I maintain is perfectly just. But under the ordinance of 1892 the teaching of French was prohibited in the Territories, and it became imperative that all matters should be taught in the English language. Why, at a banquet given at Prince Albert some years ago, at which I was present, I heard one of the oldest school inspectors telling the audience, in the presence of Mr. Haultain, that their educational system, in so far as the teaching of languages was concerned, was absurd, unjust and criminal. He ridiculed the idea of forcing small children of five or six years of age to study geography, history and arithmetic in a foreign tongue. What happened after the adoption of the law of 1892? Inspectors were sent by Mr. Haultain to examine the schools. These inspectors questioned the children on all matters taught in the schools in a language which they had never learnt at their homes, and the inspectors reported to the Department of Education in Regina that the nuns and friars were not fit to teach, because the children could not reply properly to the questions put to them.

I admit that under the law which is still on the statute-book of the Northwest Territories, under which the teaching of French is prohibited in the schools, you are allowed to give a primary course in French to small children of five to eight years of age. But you have not the right in a school that you pay for with your own money, where you have teachers paid by yourselves, to insist that your children shall acquire a perfect knowledge of their mother tongue. As far as that is concerned, I may quote to my hon. friends on the other side of the House language which will perhaps bring them back to a better understanding of this question. We are now told that we should adopt as the basic law of education for these provinces a law which stamps out the language of one-third of the people of this country as an uncivilized language. What were the remarks made by the late Sir John Macdonald upon this point? When opposing a Bill introduced into this House by the late Dalton McCarthy, Sir John Mcdonald said:

> The reason why I oppose the Bill of my hon friend to-day is the same, because that Bill, a small Bill—I might almost call it an insignificant Bill in its enacting clause—is based on the purpose of doing away with the French language, of discarding the French language, at all events, and depriving the French Canadian people of the solace of the language they learned at the feet of their mothers. Why, Mr. Speaker, if there is one act of oppression more than another which would come home to a man's breast, it is that he should be deprived of the consolation of hearing and speaking and reading the language that his mother taught him. It is cruel. It is seething the kid in its mother's milk.

I want to make my French Canadian friends in this House understand that in accepting this as our honourable compromise, in voting for this in a spirit of conciliation, they are voting for what has been denounced by Sir John Macdonald as one of the most infamous acts of oppression that could be charged to any man.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. gentleman says that he is addressing these remarks to this side of the House. May I ask him if that proposal does not come from his own side of the House?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly, I am addressing it to the other side.

Mr. LALOR. Apply it to both.

Mr. BOURASSA. I apply it to both fully, and if the hon. gentleman listens to me he will see that I am not trying to make any party politics out of this question. If the hon. gentleman wants to know, it is very clear that I have used the language which I have in reply to some of his friends and especially to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) who, either at London or at Woodstock, said that whatever the French Canadians had in this country had simply been gracefully granted to them by the majority because they are a conquered people. In the province of Quebec even such language is used.

Mr. LALOR. In opening your remarks upon that question you said that you were speaking not to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House but to the government who are making this proposition.

Mr. BOURASSA. If the hon. gentleman will keep quiet I will explain later on the position I take towards both parties, but if he wants me to be clear on this point, I may say that unfortunately his party started the racial cry, and that this party unfortunately is too cowardly to resist it. As far as the rights of the French Canadians in this country are concerned, I again quote the language of the late Sir John Macdonald. I do not suppose that Sir John Macdonald will be denounced even by members on this side of the House as a French demagogue.

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other. I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible. The statement that has been made so often that this is a conquered country is 'à propos de rien.' Whether it was conquered or ceded, we have a constitution now under which all British subjects are in a position of absolute equality, having equal rights of every kind—of language, of religion, of property and of person. There is no paramount race in this country; there is no conquered race in this country; we are all British subjects, and those who are not English are none the less British subjects on that account.

By the language of Sir John Macdonald, I am ready to abide. These Northwest Territories had, unlike British Columbia, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, no sovereignty when they came into this confederation of ours, but they were purchased by the people of Canada, by all the people of Canada, paid for by the whole people, and I say we have the right to stamp on these Territories the principle laid down by Sir John Macdonald in this House when he said that there is no conquered or inferior race, and that this country was born and it can only live upon the principle of equal rights for all races, equal rights for the French language and equal rights for the Catholic religion.

I ask no privilege for my church or for my language. But I say that while we still have the sovereignty to declare what the constitution of these Northwest provinces shall be, if we want to be true to ourselves and true to our country, if we want to build up a nation on the principle of conciliation, equal rights and fair-play it is our duty, not because we want to submit to the influence of the church or to conciliate the French vote, but because, whatever may be our creed or origin, we want the Northwest Territories to be built up on the same principle as that which was adopted by the fathers of confederation; that is equal rights to the French language, equal rights to the Catholic religion and equal rights to all parties whatever may be their religion or creed.

There was in the ordinance of 1892, a clause relating to the organization of the districts which remained what it had been in the previous ordinance; that is that the Catholics when they were a local minority in any district were still under the disposition which was denounced by Sir John Thompson in 1890 under which the Catholics could organize a minority separate school only when the majority had organized a public school. As I stated this afternoon, practically speaking this was no detriment to them because the majority were always ready to organize their schools before the minority, but as far as the majority were concerned, even under the ordinance of 1892, they observed the spirit of the law of 1875 and allowed the Catholics where they had a majority, to organize the majority school which was called a Catholic public school. So that, we have to come to the ordinance of 1901, which I will consider in a moment, to find out the disposition which was spoken of by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister this afternoon. An effort is now being made to create the idea that the minority in the Northwest Territories had accepted the ordinance of 1892. But, it must be remembered that the Catholic minority came before the Privy Council of Canada and asked for the disallowance of this ordinance. Upon this point I wish to correct the argument which my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) made in reply to the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur). The hon. member for Beauharnois stated that the reason why the ordinance of 1892 was not disallowed was that the dispositions of which the Catholics complained in that ordinance were contained in a previous ordinance. My hon. friend, on that point, was mistaken. He confounded 1892 with 1888. When the law of 1888 containing a special disposition in regard to minority schools was brought before Sir John Thompson, he argued that it would be useless to disallow that ordinance because it would simply put into force the ordinance of 1886. But, the ordinance of 1892 was entirely new legislation. The reasons that were given by Sir John Thompson for not disallowing the ordinance of 1892 were these:

I think the principal reason was perhaps the same reason that this government has to-day for not doing justice, the principal reason probably was that Sir John Thompson, who had been attacked by a certain wing of his party, wanted to have himself forgiven for being a Roman Catholic. That was the political reason. The ostensible reason given by Sir John Thompson was that the time was too short because he had received the petitions only a few days before the year elapsed, and he gave further this reason, that the complaint of the Roman Catholics was rather based upon dangers which might arise from the ordinances of 1892 and that they had not yet received any ill-treatment under these ordinances, that he did not see any special article under these ordinances which clashed, in his opinion, legally with the dispositions of the law of 1875. As the Prime Minister has rightly stated this afternoon, the law of 1875 did not pretend to be a public instruction law, it was simply an organic law to be considered the basis of future legislation.

Mr. BERGERON. And is still the law.

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly. There is no doubt the ordinance of 1892 was against the spirit of the law. Of course when it comes to the fine legal point as to whether this or that article of the ordinance of 1892 was legally against the law of 1875, there is no doubt, I suppose, that Sir John Thompson could find the same easy excuse that the leader of the opposition and that the government are now finding in order not to do full justice. But I want to remind gentlemen on both sides of the House that the fact that the ordinance of 1892 was not disallowed did not have the same result as if it had been a law from another province, that the fact that the ordinance of 1892 was not disallowed within the 12 months following its sanction by the Lieutenant Governor of the Territory did not deprive this parliament of the right of rendering justice when these dangers which Sir John Thompson pointed out as being only in the future were to arise. In connection with this I will quote the words of Sir John Thompson in a debate in this House on a motion by Mr. Tarte asking for the production of documents with reference to separate schools in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. This debate occurred in the early part of the session of 1894 and the quotation is to be found at page 2059 of 'Hansard.' It is as follows:

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Let me call attention especially to the differences which exist, as to the disallowance, between an ordinance of the Northwest Territories and the statute of a province. If a year is allowed to elapse without the disallowance of the statute of a province, that statute being within the provincial powers —and that is practically admitted here, except for the statement of Mr. Justice Rouleau, which I shall not discuss—that statute becomes law and is beyond the reach of any power but the legislature which enacted it. But, as regards an ordinance of the Northwest Territories, it must be remembered that this parliament has control of the Territories in a fuller and more absolute sense than it has control of the provinces. We have a limitation upon our power with regard to the provinces; we can only exercise our jurisdiction within a limited sphere. But from day to day everything that happens within the Territories is within the jurisdiction of this parliament, no matter what the legislature of the Territories may do with regard to it. So, instead of being limited to the immediate exercise of the power of disallowance, as in the case of provincial statutes, we have the power from day to day, and from year to year, to correct any substantial grievances found to exist there, if the legislature should turn—though I am sure it would not—a deaf ear to those complaints.

So that the position taken by Sir John Thompson was that, although he did not think proper to disallow the ordinance of 1892, he maintained the right of this parliament to pass legislation at any time, because, as he said, the Territories were still under our control. Sir, it was so very true that in that very debate leading members of the Liberal party, although it had been about 15 or 18 months after the ordinance of 1892 had been passed, made passionate appeals to this parliament to have some kind of remedial legislation passed, and I may say that one of the most eloquent on that occasion was the member for Rouville, now the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Brodeur), who said:

I will ask my hon. friends on this side who come from Ontario to be just to the Catholics of the Northwest as their great leader in provincial politics is just to the Catholics of this province. We hope——

Mind you, this was three months after the appeal for disallowance.

We hope that they will help us restore to the Catholics of the Northwest the rights of which they have been deprived, and I trust the Liberal party will continue to be just, as it has always been, to the minority.

I echo these sentiments. I say that this parliament has always the right at any time on any occasion to remedy the injustice that was committed in 1892. Is this not the very occasion when we are going to abandon all that right of sovereignty which we now possess, when we are going to hand over for ever to the provinces the right to deal with these matters, reserving to ourselves what I might call the empty right of remedial legislation under clause 93? If there is a time when we should not create injustice it is when we are building a constitution in that country. If there is a time when we should do that justice for which my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) was appealing to the English-speaking Protestant Liberal members of this House in 1894, I think this is the occasion and it is the only occasion, and if you let it pass justice will never be done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hon. members on the other side of the House from the English-speaking provinces have described themselves in nearly every case as extremely tolerant, so I have no doubt that if the Minister of Inland Revenue appeals to them now he will be met with a response which will surprise him.

Mr. BOURASSA. If my hon. friend wants my straight and candid opinion I am fully convinced that if this question had been put squarely before the true Liberals of this country, as it should have been, instead of seeking subterfuges as we have seen during the last three months in this parliament and in the country, justice would have been done. I know that the elections of London and Oxford have been carried on just as if this amendment had not been presented. Did the electors in London and North Oxford enter into all the fine distinctions that have been made by the lawyers in the House? No, Sir, they were appealed to by gentlemen on the other side of the House: Don't vote for Hyman and the Pope and Sbarretti. So I say, Sir, if the electors of London and North Oxford have shown themselves intelligent enough, as I was sure they would, to resist that cry, is there a true Liberal in this House who will contend that if it had been proven that justice was not going to be done by the amendment forced upon the government by the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) they would have gone back, they would not have voted for Hyman and Sbarretti and the Pope just the same? No, Sir, I repeat what I have said. In the discussion on this whole question on both sides of the House there has been shown a lack of courage and a lack of sincerity that is not to the credit of the parliament of Canada at a time when we are going to constitute two of the largest provinces of the Dominion. This language which I have quoted from Sir John Thompson and the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) disposes of that argument which is now made in Quebec by the government's organs, by 'Le Canada' and 'Le Soleil,' that if we are now bound to submit to the terms dictated by the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) it is because the Conservative government in 1892 did not disallow the ordinance. That is no excuse; it does not excuse the government of 1905 for not doing their duty because the government of Sir John Thompson was not up to their duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do they take the ground that the refusal of parliament and the executive of 1893 amounted to a compact?

Mr. BOURASSA. That is not my ground.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, that is the argument that was made.

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly, that is the argument—that the Conservatives not having disallowed the law, we cannot make any change in it. That ordinance of 1892 remained for some time. In 1896 it was recast, but without any material change. In 1898, again, the ordinances of the Northwest were re-cast, but the School Ordinance remained in all important respects what it was in 1892. In 1901 the ordinances which are to be the basis of this honourable compromise were adopted, and it is necessary for us to consider what are the most important dispositions of those ordinances. As was stated by the Prime Minister this afternoon, the only important change in the management of the schools was that the old system of the government of the Northwest forming practically the board of education with the addition of two Catholics and two Protestants, was abolished. The new law created a department of public instruction, at the head of which was one of the ministers of the government. In clause 8 it was enacted:

> There shall be an educational council consisting of five persons, at least two of whom shall be Roman Catholics to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council; who shall receive such remuneration as the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall determine.

This educational council as well as the preceding one was only an advisory board, and the whole management of the law remained in the hands of the commissioner. The selection of text books, the inspection of schools, the normal training of teachers —all these dispositions remained, what they were under the law of 1892 and the succeeding ordinances. The disposition as to the French language was practically the same as it was in 1892; but on this point I would like to have my mind made clear by some higher legal authority than myself. The other day I understood some member of this House, I do not know on which side, to speak of the guarantee given to the minority that their language would be taught in the future, in the separate schools or the public schools, and I understood the Minister of Justice to say that there was no guarantee whatever, either in the clause now submitted or in the previous one, with regard to the teaching of the French language. May I ask the minister if I am right on that point?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The law respecting that question as it is now in the Territories will be continued in its present form.

Mr. BOURASSA. I wish to understand if the clause, stating what is guaranteed to the minority with respect to separate schools, covers a guarantee that the government of the Northwest cannot deprive the French-speaking people of the teaching of French.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The question of religious education and the question of the French language are entirely different. There is no connection between them.

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly; that is what I have always understood. But the government organs in the province of Quebec during the last month, among them 'Le Canada','Le Soleil' and 'La Patrie', have stated that under these ordinances as well as under the clause in the government Bill, the teaching of French is guaranteed for all time; and I wanted to elucidate the fact from the Minister of Justice. I know that it was not guaranteed in the clause as at first introduced, because, as the Minister of Justice says, the question of separate schools was never regarded as having reference to language, but only as referring to creed. But let us see how under the paternal legislation of Mr. Haultain religious education and the teaching of French are guaranteed, I will not say in the Catholic public schools—that is, those that are organized and paid for by the Catholics and French Canadians—but in the only separate schools that are now left to the French Canadians of the Northwest. Clause 136 of the ordinance says :

All schools shall be taught in the English language, but it shall be permissible for the board of any district to cause a primary course to be taught in the French language.

Clause 137 provides for religious instruction :

No religious instruction, except as hereinafter provided, shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

Now, section 133 says :

School shall be held between nine o'clock and twelve o'clock in the forenoon and half-past one o'clock and four o'clock in the afternoon of every day, standard time, not including Saturdays, Sundays or holidays, but the board may alter or shorten the school hours upon receiving the permission of the commissioner.

Now let us look at the regulations which are adopted by the department of education under section 7, and therefore form an inseparable part of the law under which this honourable compromise is going to be effected. As hon. members may have noticed, section 133 says that the trustees may shorten the school hours with the permission of the commissioner. Now, what is the regulation on that point ?

School shall be held between the hours of nine o'clock and twelve o'clock in the forenoon and half-past one o'clock and four o'clock in the afternoon (standard time) of every day except Saturdays, Sundays, and days declared to be holidays by or under the School Ordinance.

This is in conformity with section 133 of the ordinance. But article 16 of the regulations says :

The board of any district may direct that school be opened at 9·30 a.m., during the whole or a portion of the months of November, December, January and February ; and the board of any rural district may direct that only one hour's intermission be taken at noon, in which case school shall be closed at 3.30 p.m.

Article 17 says :

During both the morning and afternoon sessions recreation periods of fifteen minutes each shall be allowed all pupils attending school. Upon direction of the board all or any of the pupils in Part I of Standard I shall be given additional recreation periods not exceeding one half hour during the day ; and in town and village districts the board may direct that all or any of such pupils may be allowed to leave for their homes at any time between 11 and 12 a.m., and 3 and 4 p.m.

So that it will be seen that when the parents or trustees in the Northwest want to do what is done in every civilized country, that is, to have shorter hours for the younger children, in order that they may get a little fresh air and go home earlier, the only time they can do that is from three to four o'clock in the afternoon. What about the clause permitting the teaching of French to these young children, who are the only ones allowed to be taught French ? Article 25 of the regulations says :

Subject to the provisions of section 136 of the School Ordinance the board of any district may employ one or more competent persons to instruct the pupils attending school in any language other than English. Such instruction shall be given between the hours of three and four o'clock in the afternoon of such school days as may be selected by the board and shall be confined to the teaching of reading, composition and grammar. The text books used shall be those authorized by the commissioner of education.

They are not allowed to read even the history of their own country in their native language. They are not allowed to read the history of the province of Quebec in French. More than that, if they are allowed to have half an hour of religious teaching, that half hour must coincide with the time they are allowed to go home, and if they want to be taught French also, they must learn it in the half hour in which they are allowed to have religious instructions. This is the law we are asked to consider as a fair compromise in the interests of the minority. Sir, there are no such restrictions imposed on any one of the conquered provinces of India—I am not speaking of the semi-dependencies. Go into the Punjaub or Bengal, and I say that in those provinces the autocratic power of the British government would not dare to impose on the natives a law such as we are asked in this parliament to adopt as the basis of our constitution, and that in a country in which we are supposed to enjoy some kind of constitutional right and which, in the words of the leader of the Conservative party, should not be considered as a conquered country. Why, in South Africa, Lord Kitchener offered to the Boers, who had just laid down their arms, terms as to their educational system much more liberal, much more regardful of their religious and national rights than Mr. Haultain has granted to French Canadians of the Northwest. And our French Canadian representatives here are ready to accept that system as a guarantee of the rights of their fellow countrymen. Let me tell them that there is not much pride and not much spirit in them if they do.

It has been said that the Catholics, at least where they have a majority, are free to engage their own teachers, that they are free to elect their own trustees, and may then avail themselves of the right to choose their own teachers. But it must not be forgotten that, so far as these teachers are concerned, they must of necessity, under subsection 17 of section 95, be qualified under the regulations of the department of education. If this had only reference to the technical knowledge of the teachers and their pedagogical qualifications, I would have nothing to say. Our teachers are not afraid to submit to any kind of an educational test. I do not see why our teachers in the Northwest should not be able to obtain their share of the diplomas, especially when our students in the colleges of Manitoba generally take three times their proportion of the university honours in that province. But there is everything in this ordinance to prevent Catholic teachers from attending the normal schools. For three years during Mr. Haultain's administration, from 1892 to 1895, Catholic teachers were precluded from following the courses of the normal schools. True in practice more toleration has been given, and that is the reason why there are not more protests from the Northwest. The Catholic minority in the Northwest are being deceived by the government organs just as are the people of the province of Quebec. They have been told that the object of this legislation is to keep to them everything they now have in fact. Not later than six o'clock this afternoon, a friend of mine told me that the object of the amendment moved by the First Minister was to keep to the minority everything they have in practice. But let us not suffer under any delusion. The only thing guaranteed by the amendment is what the minority may have with respect to separate schools under the ordinance of 1901. That ordinance contains everything sufficient to stamp out the teaching of French and religious teaching in the Territories. It may be said that the governments of the new provinces will not rigidly apply it. But if we are to rely upon the generosity of the majority of the people, why put anything in the law at all ? But do not come and make the people in the province of Quebec, or the minority in the Northwest, believe that you are guaranteeing the minority the right to choose their own teachers or to have the French language taught in their own schools or Catholic education. You are guaranteeing nothing of the kind. The whole guarantee is contained in the declaration of the Minister of Justice made a few days ago. You guarantee the right to have separate schools wherever there is a minority. Where the Catholics are in a majority, they have no such right. And where they have the right to separate schools, all that right consists in their being given the liberty to have half an hour of religious teaching and the choice of two primary readers for the younger children. More than that, under the ordinance of 1901 the government may dispense at any time with the trustees. The board of trustees may be suppressed at any moment. Under section 7, subsection 2, the commissioner of education has the right :

> To appoint an official trustee to conduct the affairs of any district, and any such official trustee shall have all the powers and authorities conferred by this ordinance upon a board of its officers ; and shall be remunerated out of the funds of the district or otherwise as the Lieutenant Governor in Council may decide ; and upon the appointment of any such official trustee the board of any district for which he is appointed shall cease to hold office as such.

It may be said that this is only in cases where financial difficulties may prevent the trustees from acting. No, that is provided by another clause. Section 51 provides for the disorganization of a school district and the administration of its affairs in cases of financial difficulty. Section 7 gives ample power, without qualification or limitation, to the commissioner to dispense with the trustees and in this way deprive the people of the right to have trustees. So that even that primary right is not guaranteed either for the public schools or separate schools under the ordinance of 1901. It may be said that the provision, which I was the first to point out, with respect to the organization of public school districts was unintentional. The right hon. the First Minister this afternoon tried to connect the provision of the ordinance of 1901 with the preceding ordinances. But, as I have said, if you go to the ordinances of 1886, 1888, 1892, 1896 and 1898, you will see that any three resident ratepayers could organize a school district without any qualification, and the Catholics always could organize Catholic public schools wherever they were in a majority. In 1901, however, this was changed, and for the first time there was in the ordinances a provision which allowed only public schools to be created—article 12 of that ordinance, under which any portion of the Territories may be erected into a public school district.

The hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) quoted some few days ago a document which, I think, was sent to the Department of Justice from the Northwest giving the number of Catholic public schools in the Territories, and the hon. minister drew the inference that there are still such things acknowledged by law as Catholic public schools in the Northwest. But, as I have said, the only four reports of the department of education that are in this parliament are the reports of 1900, 1901, 1902 and 1903. In the report of 1900, which was the last one published before this ordinance of 1901, as a matter of fact the existance was acknowledged, on the 31st December, 1900, of 565 public schools, 46 Roman Catholic public schools, 13 Catholic separate schools, 2 Protestant separate schools and 4 schools in unorganized districts. But in the following reports, all public schools are classed under one heading and there is no such thing, legally, as a Catholic separate school. And the document quoted by the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) is proof of what I say. In the practice, but not in the law, they continue to speak of the schools organized before 1901 as Catholic public schools. The number of these stated by the minister was about 45, I think.

Mr. BRODEUR. About that, I believe.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is an evidence of what I have stated. On 31st December, 1900, the number of Catholic public schools was forty-six; and what they call Catholic public schools are the remnant of the Catholics schools. I have received information from the Northwest Territories within the last few days that the schools organized since 1901 by Catholics were not allowed to bear the name of Catholic public schools. But I have here also an official document of the government of the Northwest Territories to the same effect. At Oakhill, there was a petition signed by Catholics asking for the organization of a Catholic public school. And here is the reply of the Deputy Commissioner of Education :

Regina, January 31st, 1905.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo, I beg to say that your school district, when established, will be called the Oak Hill school district. The present school law does not make any provision for the organization of Roman Catholic public school districts.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. A. CALDER,
Deputy Commissioner.

F. A. Bennett, Esq.,
Otthon, Assa.

I already knew that. The fact had been stated to me by people who reside in the Northwest. It had been stated to me by people who have come back from the Northwest that they had tried, time and again, to procure from Regina, as before 1901, the establishment of a Catholic public school, and they were told that to organize a Catholic public school district was not allowed, and the only Catholic schools they were entitled to organize was in cases where they were the minority.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have here a statement signed by the Deputy Minister of Instruction for the Northwest Territories, and in it the schools are divided into public schools, Roman Catholic public schools and Roman Catholic separate schools.

Mr. BOURASSA. What is the number of Roman Catholic public schools?

Mr. BRODEUR. Forty-nine. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) says that there has been a change since 1901, but here is a statement signed by the Deputy Commissioner of Education stating that there has been no change.

Mr. BOURASSA. If my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) had followed me he would have understood that I stated positively that the change left intact the name of Catholic public schools as applied to those organized before 1901. It was then that these forty-nine schools were organized. But every school organized by the Catholics since has been refused this privilege. There are now 150 schools organized and supported by Catholics that should be called Catholic public schools. Only forty-nine appear now. Why? Because that is all the remnant of those established previous to the ordinance of 1901. All the others were refused, as shown by the document I have just read, which emanates from the same authority that the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) has quoted. And everybody who has been in the Northwest knows that these are the facts. Since 1901, the Catholics have no right to establish a Catholic public school. Yet, as I have said, there are 150 schools that should be known by that name. I venture to say that nine-tenths of the Catholics of the Northwest Territories live in school districts in which they form a majority. And here we have the result—not one more Catholic public or separate school to-day than four years ago. And this has been pointed to with pride by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) as showing the disposition of Catholics not to organize more separate schools. When the law of the land is against you and you cannot get justice at the hands of the sovereign parliament it is hardly to be wondered at if you do not do exactly what you would like to do. As the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has said, the effort has been to make the Catholics believe that they were receiving bread when they were being given a stone. The Prime Minister has quoted Bishop Legal. 'Le Canada,' of Montreal, had for three weeks, under great headlines, a statement of the alleged opinion of Bishop Legal—because both parties in Quebec still like to use the name of a bishop, when it is to their own advantage. Bishop Legal was quoted as saying : We are satisfied with the school system of the Northwest, and we desire to have it continued. 'Le Canada' gave that as the approval of Bishop Legal of the present amendment. And, when asked three or four times to produce their authority, they had to admit that this was an extract from an interview given about a month before the amendment was known—that is, given about the time the Prime Minister brought in his Bill and made the speech of which all fair-thinking people of this country thought so much. What Bishop Legal approved, and what the Catholics want, is not merely these nine paltry separate schools, not merely the half hour of religious instruction in these schools. The Catholics of this country are under a false impression, as they have been kept under a false impression as the people of Quebec are being kept, by the government's organs. They believe that what is being given is the guarantee of the continuance of what the Catholics in the Northwest enjoy to-day. That is a widespread impression. A friend of mine from Ontario told me only to-day, that it was unreasonable for us to expect to get more than we now have. Why, Sir, give us what we have, even though it may not be one-quarter of what the minority in Quebec are guaranteed—I admit that it is useless to ask for a French-speaking minority anything like what we have been ready to give the English-speaking minority of Quebec—and I would show my spirit of conciliation, by saying: I accept. Give these people the right to their separate schools, their Catholic schools, controlled by the government, where they are a majority as well as where they are a minority, and I will abandon the rest. I will even agree to the keeping of the uniform system which the Prime Minister has declared would be an act of infamous tyranny if committed by the province of Quebec. I will say that in the Northwest it will not be an infamous act of tyranny. I am willing to trust to the generosity of the people of the Northwest if you give us separation. The reason is obvious. I think I know the English-speaking people; I know their good qualities. They may have the spirit of domination, but they have not the spirit of persecution. An Englishman will not go into your home to force you to adopt his ways of living. But if you live in the house with him, he will try to compel you to live his way. This is but an exaggeration of a good quality in the English—the strength of will and persistency of purpose. It is not surprising, that, having had large success in spreading their institutions and power over so many lands they should be convinced even in an exaggerated form at times, that their institutions are the best—that they should be convinced that because they eat roast beef nobody else should eat chicken. But as I say, the Englishman will not go to another man's house to persecute him there. So, if this principle of separation is recognized, I am willing that we should be deprived even of the provisions of the Act of 1875, and be submitted to provisions, which if enacted by the representatives of the majority in Quebec would be immediately denounced as tyrannical.

I am ready to accept all that, but I ask you only this, give me the right to schools for the people forming the majority as well as the minority. Is that unreasonable? Was it really the intention of this parliament to say that if Catholics happened to be one-third of the population of a district they shall have a separate school, but if they happen to be two-thirds they shall not have a separate school? Did the Liberal members of this House, when they accepted this amendment, think that the effect of it would be to deprive nine-tenths of the Roman Catholics of separate schools? I am sure that if the Prime Minister, or even the leader of the opposition, yes, if the majority of the two parties were appealed to, they would say, let us give to these people what they have a right to. I say there are not ten members of this House who knew what the disposition of this amendment was. The first time I spoke of it, I was denounced as a crank, the government organs in the province of Quebec laughed at me, but the Minister of Justice acknowledged that my position was right, the Prime Minister acknowledged it; and consequently the government organs in Quebec changed their tune and now acknowledge that I was right. Now they say, What the member for Labelle said a month ago is true, but we cannot get any more because the English Protestants will not give it. Sir, what is done now in Canada in the name of conciliation, is of a strange character. I appeal also to this House on the ground of conciliation, on the ground of an honourable compromise. But what is conciliation? Is it what the Minister of the Interior has said it was in the province of Ontario? He said, we are told that we have abolished separate schools in the Northwest, why don't you do the same in Ontario? Is that the basis of conciliation? Now, what was the ground taken by the Minister of Finance? He says there are in this country 40 per cent Catholics, and therefore you must respect them. In the maritime provinces we give them separate schools, although they have no right to them. In the Northwest Territories we are bound by pledge of this parliament to keep separate schools. But we are entitled to the confidence of the Protestants of Canada because in violation of all pledges, we do not give to the Catholics of the Northwest what they are entitled to, that which we give to the Catholics in Nova Scotia who have no right to it. Is that the basis of an honourable compromise? Is that abiding by the spirit of the British constitution? At the same time the government organs in Quebec are saying that it is useless to ask from the Protestant majority any justice for Roman Catholics. Sir, I claim that both these positions are false. I claim that if a straight appeal was made to the people of the English-speaking provinces to give to the Roman Catholic minority in the Northwest one-tenth of the privileges possessed by the Protestants in the province of Quebec, the same response would be given that has been given in London and North Oxford. In spite of the position taken by the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Finance, I claim that the majority of the people of London and of North Oxford voted in the belief that they were giving separate schools to all the Catholics of the Northwest. I would ask the Minister of Public Works, I would ask the newly elected member for North Oxford (Mr. G. Smith), whether 5 per cent of the electors who voted for them supposed that they were depriving nine-tenths of the Catholics of the Northwest of separate schools. I know they did not think so. I will go further, and I say there were not ten electors on the government side who knew the real meaning of this law.

Mr. SPROULE. That is complimentary to the intelligence of the electorate.

Mr. BOURASSA. After what has been said on both sides in this House, I doubt whether 1 per cent of the electors of this country really know where they are. Now, Sir, I think this disposes of the argument that the minority are satisfied, as it also disposes of the argument that the English-speaking majority in this parliament and in this country are not prepared to do justice. Now we are told that the second clause is clearer than the first. It is clearer on one point, that it leaves so little advantage to the Roman Catholics that it is not worth mentioning. Is that a ground on which this government should stand as the defenders of the minority ? It is stated that some sacrifice has been made to the opinions of the majority. I do not know why. Is it because the English Protestant people have demanded it ? No, Sir. The division between the Protestant people of this country has been as to whether there should be any separate schools in the Northwest at all. The majority of Canadians do not split hairs, the people of this country have already pronounced upon the question as to whether we will give separate schools to the Northwest. If I asked to-day for the establishment of such separate schools in the Northwest as the Protestants enjoy in the province of Quebec, at first sight perhaps they would not be willing to grant them. But I say that when we reduce our demands to the mere right of separation, the Protestant people of this country, the people of London, the people of Oxford—I will go further and say the people of Toronto, would answer, yes, we are ready to give separate schools to the Catholics of the Northwest, we are ready to give them not only to the minority in any particular section but to the majority as well.

I know there are those who oppose separate schools on principle. There are men who are always ready to copy American institutions in preference to British institutions, lawyers as well as laymen. Let me tell them that I am a true British subject, imbued with the true spirit of British institutions, and I will cling to the old British system of freedom of education in preference to the nefarious system of education adopted by the Americans. But if these gentlemen cannot go as far as I do in adopting British institutions, at least I ask them not to be Yankees enough to deprive people of the right of educating their children in the elementary principles of their nationality and their religion. I repeat, the argument which is now made by friends of the government in the province of Quebec is not one upon which conciliation can be obtained. You cannot make the people in Quebec believe that the vast majority of the English-speaking Protestants are so fanatical that they will not allow the minority to have the same rights in the Northwest that the Boers have in South Africa and the natives have in India. That is not the way to create a feeling of conciliation and harmony between the races and creeds of this country.

Now, Sir, let us consider the argument made by the Minister of Finance that by adopting the new clause we are paying more respect to provincial rights. With all deference to the hon. minister, it seems to me that is one of the most extraordinary arguments I have heard. Is it paying more respect to the rights of the people of the Northwest who will live in 1930 to tell them: You are bound by the law of 1901—than to tell them, you are bound by the law of 1875 ? Do you say it is respectful of provincial rights to say to the people of the Northwest, here is one of your ordinances passed in such a year by such an assembly and you will never get free from it, so far as separate schools are concerned ? If you need take a northwest ordinance as the basis of your education clause, why don't you take the ordinance of 1885, which emanates from the same authority as that of 1901? The difference between the law of 1885 and that of 1901 is that the former was in conformity with our own law, and therefore by adopting the law of 1885 we would respect the principle of provincial rights as viewed by the Finance Minister, with the additional advantage that we would be respecting ourselves and our past. But in adopting the law of 1901 we are breaking our pledges, and at the same time we are not respecting provincial rights.

Sir, there is only one way to find our way out of all these difficulties. There is only one choice and that is to respect the doctrine which was laid down by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister on the 21st of February—respect provincial rights as far as provincial rights are respected by our constitution and no further.

Respect also federal autonomy which was enacted by section 93 of the British North America Act which provides for the imposition of a restriction upon provincial rights in matters of education. Let that be clearly understood and clearly laid down. It is said that if we adopt the amendment there will be so little to claim for Catholics that there will be very little occasion for litigation, but to say that because there will be lots of litigation we must go back on our own pledges, that we must go back on the principle laid down by the Prime Minister as the only basis of legislation, it is to take a position which I do not think will ever result in the creation of a broad spirit in those provinces.

Now, I may say that the opinion I have of this amendment is that it was framed in a moment of panic and scare and that the very wording of it is proof of that fact. Here is a sovereign parliament that has received, in the very words of the Minister of Justice, under the Imperial Act of 1871, full power to deal with this question. The Minister of Justice did not admit any restriction on the powers of this parliament. Here is a sovereign parliament which has the jurisdiction to pass legislation. We borrow on the one hand an imperial document, we take on the other hand a territorial document which is ultra vires, we join them together and say : We have nothing to do with this law. We renounce our sovereignty and because of our respect for provincial rights we adopt as the basic law of the new provinces the Northwest ordinance which we acknowledge to be against our own legislation. It is ultra vires, we make it intra vires ; it is against all the moral pledges which are binding on us, and in the execution of these pledges we enact this legislation which breaks these pledges. I confess that the position taken by the government is completely incomprehensible to me from a constitutional point of view and from a political point of view. I do not see what can be gained either for the future of this country or for the advantage of the Liberal party, or for the advantage of the country at large. Sir, to my mind, we had only one thing to do, we had only to stand, as the Prime Minister said the first time, upon the basis that had been made for us in the first place, on the constitution as it was laid down by those who opened up the Northwest Territories to civilization. The law of 1875 was the only safe basis of legislation. Now, it has been said that the law of 1875 did not provide for the granting of state aid to separate schools, but, as I stated this afternoon, this parliament accepted that principle when it passed the law of 1879 forming a school fund for the support of schools in the Northwest. Therefore, the clause, as it was first prepared by the Minister of Justice, contained all those essential principles ; it contained the reference to the British North America Act, it wiped out all the doubts possible as to the date of the union, and it re-enacted the law of 1875, which guaranteed separate schools. That was the only thing that we were bound to do. The government said when they framed that legislation : We stand upon the rock of the constitution. How is it to-day when they are putting that aside that they are still claiming to stand upon the rock of the constitution ? Is it the rock of the constitution that is moving, or is it the government ? I prefer to think that the interpretation which was given by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice before they were colleagues, a buccaneering politican,—if I may be allowed to use the language of the member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald)—who tried to shelter himself behind a pretense of concern for a national principle in order that his private and public deeds might be forgotten, was the correct one. If the government had remained upon the solid ground which they took when this question was free from all these appeals and when it was upon a common sense basis they would have remained upon the rock of the constitution, and they would have stood by their legislation.

I have been denounced by government organs in the province of Quebec as a demagogue, as the Quebec Maclean. I have been threatened with excommunication from the Liberal party because I am still saying in June what the Prime Minister said in February. If I am the Maclean of Quebec now, the Prime Minister was the Maclean of Quebec in February. Sir, I have not gone one inch outside the position that he took, or said anything upon this question different from that which he has said. I am still on the rock of the constitution. I do not say so from the legal point of view. I am no lawyer, but I say that I remain upon the rock of the constitution as I find the constitution erected by the great men who laid the foundations of this country, by the men who laid down as the basis of the education of the youth of this country the sound principle of religious freedom of education. I remain still upon that ground and I say that whatever may be the will of other provinces before they came into confederation the will of this parliament as regards the Northwest Territories were clearly enacted in the law of 1875. Let us respect the will of parliament as then expressed. Let us preserve for these future provinces the safeguards that were adopted by the authors of their constitution and which were alluded to by the Prime Minister himself as the great safeguards of the youth of our country. As far as our English-speaking friends are concerned am I to be denounced as an anti-English and anti-Protestant demagogue because I ask them to make clear the policy under which we are giving to the Catholics of the Northwest Territories about one-tenth of what we are giving to the Protestants of Quebec and what I would be ready to stand for if there were any disposition to deprive the Protestant minority of Quebec of their rights. When my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture was making that fine appeal to Protestants and Catholics in this House which he made on the second reading of the Bill and when he was pointing out the generous treatment which was given to the Protestants of Quebec I heard a member of this House make the remark that perhaps if we did less for the Protestants of Quebec it would be better. I denounce that kind of argument, but I am afraid it is going to be the kind of argument which is going to be heard later on. The Liberal papers of the province of Quebec denounce me as an unfaithful supporter of the government, they say that I am a demagogue, they say that I am not a man fit for a country like this which is composed of Protestants and Catholics, and it is said that perhaps if we did a little less for the fanatical Protestants of Quebec it would be better. That is not my policy. There is only one kind of justice and that kind of justice must be the same for all. Even if all the provinces treated us as we have been treated in the Northwest Territories I would still say that I am ready to treat the Protestant minority of the province of Quebec with justice and generosity. If this country is to last and to achieve greatness it is not by trying to find within the four corners of an article of the constitution in what way we may deprive a minority of a privilege or a right. If this country is to last it will only be by adopting the principle of equal rights and equal justice for all, and therefore, standing upon that ground, I move, seconded by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) that clause 16 be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor :

The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if, at the date upon which this Act comes into force, the territory comprised therein were already a province, the expression 'the union' in the said section being taken to mean the said date.

2. In the appropriation by the legislature of public moneys in aid of education, or in the distribution by the government of the province of any moneys arising from the school fund established by the Dominion Lands Act, there shall be no discrimination against the schools of any kind organized according to law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the same as the original section or is there some change?

Mr. BOURASSA. It is substantially the same as the original section without the middle paragraph.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that perhaps the Prime Minister had some observations to make and desired to give him an opportunity of doing so, but as he has not I wish to address the House. The conclusion to which I came, after listening to the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and his trenchant criticism of his friends on that side, was that they were very much like the old man and the boy with the ass; they were trying to please everybody and succeeded in pleasing nobody and lost that important animal. That is about where they are to-night. The Prime Minister said the Conservative party had no policy on this question. We thought the Conservative party offered a resolution to this House embodying their policy. They imagined that is what they were doing and voted on it and have a record.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Who voted on it?

Mr. SPROULE. The House, the Conservative party voted on it certainly as the members of the government voted for it. In the face of that it cannot be successfully asserted that they have no policy. That policy embodied the principle for which they stood. The Prime Minister followed that up by saying that in the matter of education there is no such thing as absolute provincial rights for any province. That is not the ground taken a few years ago by the Reform party, all over the country, especially in Ontario, we were confronted with the argument on every platform both in provincial and Dominion elections, that the Reform party stood for provincial rights absolutely.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. And in enumerating these rights in connection with the Streams Bill, with minerals, with public lands, with timber, the right to control education was included; they were all put in the same category and all read out of the same list. These were the provincial rights for which the Reform party stood, which the Reform papers advocated and which carried that party into power in Ontario time after time. It was on the same principle of provincial rights that the Reform party stood in 1896, when they fought the Conservative party on the question of remedial legislation in Manitoba. It was not contended then that the provinces had not absolute and sole right in regard to education except in Ontario and Quebec, because it was claimed that the provisions in regard to those two provinces did not apply to the others and it was only in connection with the debate which took place within the last few months that the contention has been put forward that no province has the absolute right to control its own educational affairs. That argument was advanced by the Minister of Justice only a short time ago, and the explanation he gave, although it may be satisfactory to his own mind, will not, I think, satisfy the people of the country or of the various provinces that to-day enjoy absolute freedom with regard to education as is done by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As they do not.

Mr. SPROULE. As they do.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As they do not.

Mr. SPROULE. Has any authority dared to interfere with the right which these provinces have enjoyed since they entered confederation in 1867? Who has dared to interfere with their rights to deal with education? And have we not had discussions in this House with regard to the province of New Brunswick and was it not decided here that they had that absolute right and must enjoy it? That was declared by Sir John Macdonald and he refused to interfere with that right

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Never.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The leader of the opposition, who has a reputation as a lawyer, would not repeat that?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was it you said?

Mr. SPROULE. I said with regard to New Brunswick it was contended they had the absolute right to control their education and when the question was brought into this House of interfering with that right Sir John Macdonald declared against it, and said it was one of the rights which the provinces must enjoy. I stand by that, and I am upheld by the record. When it was said that the minority did not get what they were entitled to, what he said was the remedy was to agitate, agitate, and try to convince the majority that what they were doing was wrong and if they could not do that to vote them out at the polls. That was his answer, to attempt to vote them out, and they have enjoyed that right ever since. So has Prince Edward Island, and in face of that will it be said that no province has an absolute right to deal with education?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Privy Council has said so, that does not make any difference.

Mr. SPROULE. The Privy Council has said that when a certain contingency arose there was federal jurisdiction, but unless those conditions laid down by one subsection of section 93 were brought about there could be no interference, and, therefore, the province enjoyed absolute freedom.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Absolute freedom subject to regulation.

Mr. SPROULE. Subject to conditions which they never invoked, which can only be brought about by themselves and which they are free to bring about or not, so it is absolute freedom. The Prime Minister said that we want to adhere exactly to the constitution, and by his amendment which is supported by the Minister of Justice he is proposing to substitute something else for a portion of the constitution, something else for the subsection of section 93 of the constitution, and he says we want to adhere to the constitution. Is that not a strange proposal? Is that not somewhat paradoxical? We want to adhere to the constitution and yet we propose to amend it, and the Minister of Justice supports him in that contention that he should amend the constitution. As long as the constitution secures the rights which he desires to give the minority he is prepared to stand on the rock of the constitution, but as soon as he imagines that the constitution does not secure those rights then he is prepared to amend the constitution, itself as he now proposes to do.

The Minister of Justice, who, I imagine, will also contend that they are endeavouring to stand on the constitution, supports them in the proposal to amend the constitution to secure to the minority the rights which he is afraid they may not otherwise get. What excuse did the Minister of Justice give for proposing this amendment? He said: 'I do not wish to be misunderstood. It is because we are not sure that these rights would be secured to the minority if we allowed the whole of section 93 to go into operation in connection with this Act, that we are proposing to amend a portion of that section 93, and substitute clause 16 for the old clause, which provides that we shall amend section 93 by reading into it the ordinances as they exist to-day in the Northwest Territories, and thereby amend the constitution.' What did the Prime Minister say when he introduced this Bill? He said: 'We are standing on the rock of the constitution.' But he contended that as the minority in the Northwest Territories enjoyed separate schools to-day, and as those schools had been in existence for so many years, this provision would bring them under the constitution and secure to them that right in perpetuity. Now, here was something that rather amused me, and that I thought was scarcely consistent with that statement. Following it, the row broke out between the present government and the late Minister of the Interior, and they succeeded in bringing him back by amending the clause in question. The Prime Minister said: 'We may have been unfortunate in our language, but what we desired to perpetuate is what exists in the Northwest to-day.' But what exists there to-day is not by any means what was given under the Act of 1875. If the rights given under the Act of 1875 were what the minority fell heir to, the Prime Minister admitted that he did not intend to perpetuate those rights, but that he intended to perpetuate what was grafted on that Act by the ordinances and the amendments made to it and the regulations. Is that consistent with the position he took, that he was standing on the rock of the constitution? In my judgment it was not. Then there was a controversy between the late Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice as to who drafted the original clause 16, and why it was drafted as it was.

The late Minister of the Interior said: 'I am bound to say that the draftsman was most unfortunate when he used the language embodied in this clause to provide for the right he professed that he desired to give.' But the Minister of Justice, in his explanation said: 'When this federal parliament was giving to Manitoba a constitution, it did not succeed in giving the minority the rights whch it said it intended to give, and I was bound to make no mistake in this case, but to use the language that would clearly confer the rights we intended to give, and we intended to give the minority the rights as to separate schools which were contained in the Act of 1875.' But the Prime Minister said: 'We intended to do nothing but to perpetuate what exists to-day.' The Minister of Finance contends that what exists to-day is not what existed in 1875—that what existed in 1875 were separate schools similar to those in Ontario and Quebec; but what the Northwest minority have to-day are not separate schools at all, but only public schools. The Minister of Customs took the same ground. So that it seems to me that these hon. gentlemen are not consistent with themselves, and their speeches do not hang together when analysed. Now, I come to the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). He says that Mr. Blake, Mr. Mackenzie, the Honourable George Brown, and others, intended to, and did to all intents and purposes, settle what would be the educational system of that country for all time.

Mr. BOURASSA. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I did not quote George Brown. I quoted Mr. Blake, Mr. Scott, Sir Alexander Campbell, and Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the hon. member say that the Honourable George Brown in his speech declared that if that law were passed in that form it would remain for all time?

Mr. BOURASSA. No, the Prime Minister said that.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. member looks up 'Hansard' to-morrow, he will find that he said it.

Mr. BOURASSA. I may have said it, because it is true.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, what did that mean? It meant that they were making a constitution for what might afterwards become provinces. What does the British North America Act provide? It provides what shall be the constitution of provinces after they come into confederation or after they are established as provinces of the confederation. What was the confederation of Canada for? It gave a constitution which provided what rights the provinces should enjoy; the same rights were laid down for all; and it was intended that among the rights the provinces should enjoy was the right to deal exclusively with education, with the exception of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The Prime Minister, when quoting the British North America Act to-night, said that in the list of subjects assigned to the provinces, there was a division between what might be regarded as the subjects over which they had absolute control and the subjects over which they had not absolute control; but I find that in the original resolutions on which the Confederation Act was based there was no such division whatever. It was clause 43 and the rights run from 1 to 18. They are direct taxation; borrowing powers; the establishment and tenure of provincial offices; agriculture; immigration; and then there is the clause giving the right to make laws in relation to education having regard to the rights and privileges which the Protestant or Catholic minorities in both the Canadas may possess as to their denominational schools at the time when the union comes into operation. That is all. There is nothing there to indicate any intention to bring all the province under the same right. But I want to draw attention to another point. When it was proposed to take home these resolutions and get an imperial enactment, the government declared that they would bring back nothing but an Act strictly upon the lines of these resolutions. I have here a motion that was made by the Hon. Mr. Holton. What was it? It was that the imperial Act should not become law until it would be submitted to the parliament of Canada and obtained the consent of that parliament. What reason did he give in support of his motion? He said he made his motion because of our experience in 1854, when we got an imperial Act giving us a constitution which contained clauses it was never intended should be in it. In answer to that resolution, the Attorney General of that day, the late Sir George Etienne Cartier, guaranteed on behalf of the government that they would bring back nothing but an imperial Act strictly based upon these resolutions. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, in reply to what the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Holton) has just said, I would merely tell the hon. members of this House that they need not become alarmed at the apprehensions and predictions of the hon. gentleman. I have already declared in my own behalf and on behalf of the government that the delegates who go to England will accept from the imperial parliament no Act but one based on the resolutions adopted by this House, and they will not bring back any other. I have pledged my word of honour on that point, and the word of honour of the government, and I trust that these will have at least as much weight with this House and the country as the apprehensions of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Holton).

I have just read the resolutions making no distinction with regard to the subjects which were to be assigned exclusively to the provinces. In the list of those subjects without any distinction is the subject of education, except as regards the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which were then called Canada East and Canada West. No doubt it will be said: What of that? we find the British North America Act was amended in England; we find that it did not strictly adhere to the lines of the resolution. It was amended by somebody. Who amended it? That is the question. I listened carefully to the First Minister speaking on that subject, and he went on to say that Sir Alex. Galt was anxious about the rights of the Protestants in the province of Quebec that he desired to have an amendment in order to secure their rights. But that was not the only amendment. The other amendment went further, and who was responsible for introducing he did not know. But we know one thing, we know that there is always an eye that never sleeps, a vigilance that knows no recess, that the one party and the one church always seems to be provided for in every law that passes, that somehow or other it gets its work in, and I am afraid that that is the explanation of this amendment. That is the reason why to-day we have that departure from the original resolutions. It was never contemplated, except as regards Ontario and Quebec, that there was to be any control or interference with the exclusive rights of the provinces regarding education; and in accordance with that understanding all these provinces have enjoyed that right ever since. From time to time that right has been sought to be interfered with. One time the attempt was made in the province of New Brunswick, another time in the province of Manitoba, but this federal parliament has put itself upon record as declining to interfere with that right. We have to-day the contention put forward, as it was expressed to me by an hon. membtr of this House in 1896. We understand confederation to mean this, that in every province the Roman Catholic minority shall have the same rights in every province in the Dominion with regard to education as they enjoy in Ontario, and we shall never cease to fight until that is accomplished, whether it be gained early or late. Our experience rather justifies our belief that the desire and intention and the aim of that church is never to cease that fight until it secures that right in every province of the confederation. It will have succeeded in bringing a large proportion of the Dominion under that right, if it succeeds in putting this clause through. In the Yukon it has had that right introduced without any sanction of law, so far as I can find. Then you have the proposed new Act, which is to create a government for the Peace River and Mackenzie river district. If I know anything of that proposed law, it is intended to extend that right to these unorganized Territories and force separate schools on them for all time in the future. We have done that with regard to the Yukon, a country as large as one of these provinces, and it has been done under some kind of a pretext, but under no legal authority, and that privilege exists there to-day, and the same fight is intended to be kept up. Can we come to any other conclusion when we take into account the pronouncements made with regard to this question by Archbishop Langevin in St. Boniface and another bishop in British Columbia only a few days ago. We are therefore justified in coming to that conclusion, and the people of Canada might as well understand what they are face to face with, what is the intention and the aim and what is going to be the fight for all time to come in the future.

Will it be pretended that by the Act of confederation it was intended to give a constitution to these Territories before they become provinces? Why, a Confederation Act which professed to give each province a constitution before it came into the confederacy would be only a farce. That certainly could not have been its intention, and we are now providing a constitution entirely different from what the confederation Act intended when it was introduced and when we confederated the provinces.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said that there is an anti-Catholic wave passing over the province of Ontario to-day. He declared that all the intolerance seemed to be on the other side, and the young member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) said, 'hear, hear.' He appears to be the only follower the hon. member for Labelle has got.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He has several on your side.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. We have quality if not quantity.

Mr. SPROULE. That is rather doubtful. I heard the cheers and could only find one cheering. If there are other supporters of the hon. member for Labelle, they must be ashamed of him, because they did not cheer him.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There was one alongside of my hon. friend, but as soon as my hon. friend began he ran away.

Mr. SPROULE. I was speaking of the other side of the House. What evidence have we of an anti-Catholic wave in the province of Ontario?

Mr. BOURASSA. Is the hon. gentleman trying to make out that I said there was an anti-Catholic wave in the province of Ontario?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, the hon. gentleman said there was an anti-Catholic wave passing over that province.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, but what I said was that there was one raised by hon. gentlemen opposite and that hon. gentlemen on this side were afraid of it, but that I did not believe it really did exist.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood him to say it was passing over Ontario to-day.

Mr. BOURASSA. But not in the sense the hon. gentleman makes out I said it.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not attempted to show what the statement meant; I am dealing only with the allegation of fact. What evidence is there of anti-Catholic feeling in Ontario? I was in London and in Oxford, and I saw no evidence——

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The electors were told to take their choice—to vote for King Edward or vote for the Pope.

Mr. SPROULE. Who said that?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. That appeared in the London 'Free Press.'

Mr. SPROULE. I do not happen to have seen that in the 'Free Press.' I speak of what came under my own observation.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I would remind the hon. gentleman of the speech made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). That hon. gentleman, speaking of the rights accorded to the Protestants by the French Canadians of Quebec, said that the French Canadians were a conquered people and that anything they had they owed to the Protestants, so that it was not a question of toleration on their part.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that anti-Catholic?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. It was a prejudiced appeal. And in my speech I quoted extracts from the 'Orange Sentinel,' which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has not disavowed.

Mr. SPROULE. And is this evidence of an anti-Catholic wave in Ontario?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. It is evidence of an effort to raise an anti-Catholic wave, though that effort failed. But it was made by the Order of which my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is the Pope.

Mr. SPROULE. If it failed then it cannot exist. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) says it does exist. Now we are told that it failed to materialize.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is what I said—and I gave that as a reason why we should pass the original clause.

Mr. SPROULE. There is evidently a difference between these two hon. gentlemen. The hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) went on to say that he was tolerant and broad-minded, and so were his confreres from the province of Quebec. He criticised adversely many of the articles appearing in the Toronto newspapers. I may be allowed to put alongside of these something which appeared in the organ of the government, that he may judge of the tolerance of the French Canadians.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. What paper?

Mr. SPROULE. 'Le Canada.' Is it a French newspaper, and is it a supporter of the government?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) quote it as the organ of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)?

Mr. SPROULE. No; as the organ of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I wish to quote it to show the spirit of toleration among these people of whom the hon. member boasted.

Mr. BOURASSA. I stated that the spirit of tolerance always existed in Quebec. But if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) followed me he must have noticed that I said that 'Le Canada' was trying to raise racial feeling in Quebec in an effort to cause the people to forget what the government was doing.

Mr. SPROULE. I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman. But I wish to quote this in connection with what he said as to the intolerance of the article in the Toronto newspaper. There was a criticism made some time ago in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' which I said voiced the sentiments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). That hon. gentleman denied it. I said it was a Reform newspaper and that it still supported the hon. gentleman's policy. Let me show what 'Le Canada' said on what was then said. Noting my objection to the Halifax 'Chronicle's' designation of Toronto Centre as a 'yellow dog' constituency. 'Le Canada' seems to think it is all right, but it does not go far enough. 'Yellow dog,' says this organ of the government, 'is a term too polite to designate the people under the command of Dr. Sproule.' That is intended for the Orangemen, several of whom in this House support the government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is the hon. gentleman quoting from 'Le Canada,' or is it a translation from another paper?

Mr. SPROULE. I am giving a quotation from 'Le Canada.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has not 'Le Canada' under his hand.

Mr. SPROULE. No; this is a translation in another paper of what appeared in 'Le Canada.'

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. By whom?

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman——

Mr. SPROULE. One at a time, please. Does the hon. gentleman deny that the article appeared in 'Le Canada'?

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) please give us the date of the article?

I said a few moments ago, that other statements have already been read in this House as having appeared in 'Le Canada,' which never did appear in that paper.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not follow that because forty-nine articles may be wrongly attributed to that paper, the fiftieth article may not have appeared in it. In the absence of any information the hon. gentleman possesses, I say again that I am quoting what appeared in a responsible paper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What paper ?

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot give the name just now, but I will get it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I saw the article myself, I think it was in the St. John 'Sun.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. About what date ? —so that we can trace it up.

Mr. SPROULE. Speaking from memory, I think it was the St. John 'Sun.' Now then, I have just read that as an offset to some of the unkind criticisms that have been indulged in with regard to the intolerance of Ontario, and especially of the newspapers of Toronto. I have also read it to remind the First Minister that hundreds of Orangemen voted for his candidates in the last election, as they did in 1896, to my personal knowledge, hundreds of them who are as consistent reformers as any other people in this country. I want him to understand when such a diatribe as that is published against the Orangemen of this country it strikes many of his own friends as well as those represented by the hon. member for East Grey.

Mr. MILLER. Are the Orangemen mentioned in that article from the beginning to the end of it?

Mr. SPROULE. They were in the other one, and the hon. member knows it well.

Mr. MILLER. Then why does the hon. gentleman apply this article to the Orangemen when they are not mentioned in it ?

Mr. SPROULE. Because it is another evidence of the epithets that have been hurled at the Orangemen for fifty years, all over this country they have been called yellow dogs, and the hon. member knows it. He should be the last to get up and interrupt me here, because he knows that in his own riding there are Orangemen who have supported him but who will resent this insult.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the hon. gentleman again——

Mr. SPROULE. I have found the name of the paper marked where I did not see it. It is the St. John 'Sun,' of June 10, 1905.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have the article of 'Le Canada' here now, and I would ask any hon. gentlemen on the other side who are more familiar with the French language than I am, to read it. It is found in 'Le Canada' of Saturday, June 10, 1904.

Some hon. MEMBERS. En français.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (reading).

Yellow dog is a term too polite to designate the people under the command of Dr. Sproule, and who stir up the dust of sectarian passions. A dog is generally clean. The friends and henchmen of Dr. Sproule and his leader, Mr. Borden, are individuals too dirty to be compared to dogs, even yellow dogs.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Pass it over here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought it was so disgusting and discreditable that it could not have appeared in 'Le Canada.' It seems to excite very much the risibilities of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I was merely congratulating the leader of the opposition on his good French.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I only ventured to read it because I was asked to do so from the other side. I do not think the article in 'Le Canada' is materially different from the translation which my hon. friend from East Grey has just read. If any hon. gentleman opposite thinks it does differ, I will pass it over that he may read it for himself.

Mr. SPROULE. Notwithstanding the denials of the Minister of Inland Revenue, that the article never appeared in 'Le Canada,' he is mistaken, and it has been fairly translated. The hon. member for Labelle has frequently designated the hon. member for East Grey in almost similar words. The Minister of Inland Revenue did not know what he was talking about and of course it was impossible that he could enlighten the House. But it seems that this is even more reliable than the hon. gentleman desired and notwithstanding the fact that supporters of the government could not have imagined for a moment that it was possible that it would appear in a government organ, it did appear in a government organ and they are obliged to admit it and cannot help it at the present time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Here is the translation of it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Labelle said that if this is to be a nation there must be one law for all. I agree with that exactly and will never dissent from it. We always stand for that—one law for all, equality before the law for all, equal rights for every religion in this country, but it is because we think there is a desire to have one law for one class, and to have it different from that which applies to all

If that is true that the board is a Roman Catholic board. Any religious instruction desired by the board of trustees may be given.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend pretend to say that is guaranteed by the present law ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know, but here is the ordinance that provides for it. I am only answering some of the remarks that were made by the hon. member for Labelle. If the Roman Catholics are in the majority there they have the same right to teach the religion of their church in that half hour as the Protestants have in the public schools.

Mr. BOURASSA. It is not guaranteed under the statute.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know if it is guaranteed or not, but the contention of the hon. member for Labelle was that what was being guaranteed was what was done under this ordinance.

Mr. BOURASSA. I never contended that. On the contrary I contended that everything which was guaranteed under this amendment was what the minority enjoyed in respect to separate schools only.

Mr. SPROULE. And it did not guarantee this at all ?

Mr. BOURASSA. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that the hon. member for Labelle contends that it does not guarantee this right ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly not ; only in the separate schools, not in the majority schools.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not going to quarrel with him over that. If it does not I will be the better pleased, that is all. I say it is because of that——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is hardly worth my hon. friend's while to talk for two hours and reach such a conclusion. My hon. friend does not understand what he is talking about.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid that all the brains in the House are not in the cranium of my hon. friend, although he tries to leave that impression. He says there should be equality for all. I take as an example a family. Suppose I am in the domestic circle and there is a family of 12.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. All boys?

Mr. SPROULE. All boys or girls, and three or four of the family should say: I will not eat at the same table with the others. I want a different diet; a table to myself and rights to myself. What would the father say ? He would say that was not equal rights to all. He would regard it as doing something for these few members of that family and he would say: We must have equal rights for all of them. Is it not the same here? If any portion of the community says that they will not be satisfied with the public school but insist on separate schools, that they are too good to sit with Protestants in public schools, and insist on being among themselves only, that is not equal rights, that is special privileges to some, which are not asked for by all and are not provided for all by the law. I say equality before the law, equal rights to all and special favours to none. That is the correct principle. The hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) quoted it, but the whole tenor of his argument was in contradiction to it from first to last. This Act, if passed, is sure to breed discontent, because it is interfering with the rights of the people of a province, whether the majority or minority, as provided under the constitution. If it is passed will it settle the thing for all time to come? We hear a great deal about settling this once for all. Will this settle it once for all? You may satisfy the minority, but what have you done with the majority ? If in satisfying the minority you create a grievance on the part of the majority as great or greater than the satisfaction which you give to the minority, will there be other than discontent in the new provinces ? I say it is the most unlikely thing in the world; it will not settle the question to take away the rights of the majority so as to give special rights to the minority. The principle still holds good that the majority must rule, as enunciated by the First Minister in 1896. He then said that is a truism that cannot be denied, the majority must have their way. He was applying it to Manitoba, and I ask him to apply the same language and logic to the new provinces and he will find himself sadly in conflict with the Bill now before the House. Who are the people after all that we should seek to satisfy by the constitution we are giving? Is it not the majority of the people in these two new provinces ? Is it the people in Quebec ? Is it not more important that we satisfy the people out there ? Does the Minister of Finance remember that at one time in the history of his province, because his province was compelled to come into confederation without the people having a say in it, or being able to negotiate for their entrance, he saw fit to run his election on secession. Take the same conditions in these new provinces, and the same results are likely to follow. If you ignore the rights of the people there, if they are not consulted or allowed to take part in these negotiations and their rights have been disregarded, I say it is not reasonable to suppose they will be content in the future and that there will be no grievances out there. You are compelling the majority to submit to the minority and to give what the majority may not want to give—I do not know whether they do or do not. Do that there shall be one federal parliament to deal with laws relating to the whole country along certain lines, and that each province shall have its own separate parliament; and the French said, if you give each province its own separate parliament, and lay down the subjects that it may deal with without interference, we will join the confederation. They did join the confederation on these conditions, and agreed to the terms contained in the resolutions part of which I have read. I say that the French people of the province of Quebec stand to lose more than any other people in this country from any interference with the confederation compact, and they should be the most zealous people in this whole Dominion to live up to that compact. If they do not, it will be as one of them said, a rope of sand—this is their own argument—and it may be a rope of sand, too early for them if they insist on breaking down the constitution which they helped to make, and on violating the sacred principle under which they declared they would come into the confederation, and no other. If we commence by interfering with the rights of these two provinces to-day, who will say that they will not invoke the English-speaking element all over the country to interfere with the rights of the province of Quebec to-morrow? Who will say that the people of these two provinces will not petition parliament to interfere with the province of Quebec? Have they not as good a right to do that as the 41,000 people from Quebec to petition it to interfere with the rights of these two new provinces? And who can say that it will not be done? I say this because the French people of the province of Quebec should be the most zealous to support this principle of confederation under which we live to-day; and yet they are trying to break it down. If they succeed in breaking it down, all I can say is that they will destroy that confidence in the confederation compact under which we have lived from 1867 down to the present time. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House longer. There are many other things I would like to say. I intended to deal with some remarks made by members from the Northwest Territories and to give them some information which I have with respect to that country; but I do not think it would do any good. I will leave them to be dealt with by their own constituents in the future. But I have given my reasons for holding the views I do. I wish to be understood; it is not because I have any antipathy, ill-feeling, or disrespect towards any Roman Catholic in this country that I speak as I do. I have not any feeling of that kind towards them, and never have had. Such is not my nature. I hold no spite against any person; I have too much of the Irish character for that. I can fight with you this minute and shake hands with you the next. I am stating my views and giving the reasons why I hold them to be sound. It is not because I am at the head of the Orange body. The Orangemen stand for perfect equality before the law, and they are in favour of giving the Roman Catholic minority what the constitution provides they shall have. If the constitution gives them separate schools, we will not quarrel with it. We are not constitution breakers, but constitution supporters; but we want equal rights for all before the law. There is no class of people who are more tolerant, more reasonable and more desirous of conceding to the Roman Catholic people their rights than the Orangemen of this country, who are so much vilified and criticised by those who do not know them. I can readily excuse some hon. members of this House for indulging in criticism of them, because they unfortunately do not know them as well as I do, or they would not be so uncharitable.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), in his address, quoted a few words from the St. John 'Sun' purporting to be a correct translation of an article which appeard in 'Le Canada,' the chief organ of the Prime Minister, on the 10th of June last.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why does the hon. gentleman say it is the chief organ of the premier?

Mr. TAYLOR. That article was translated and published in the St. John 'Sun' of the 13th June. When the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) quoted the editorial article which appeared in 'Le Canada,' the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue and several others said that such an article had never appeared. The hon. the leader of the opposition got the paper and read it in the French language, in which it was published, and sent it across to the Minister of Inland Revenue. That hon. minister, the Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice and several others, scanned it, and I presume the translation which appeared in the St. John 'Sun' was correct in every word, because there has been no contradiction. But the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), who, I presume, is one of these Orangemen to whom my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) referred as having supported this Bill all through, challenged him to show that there was one word in that article reflecting on the Orangemen of this country. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did not reply. But I, as an Orangeman, feel it my duty to say it is one of the greatest insults cast on the Orangemen of this country. Let me read it to my hon. friend who, I presume, is an Orangeman.

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. He challenged the hon. member for East Grey to show that there was one word in it reflecting on the Orangemen, and therefore I presumed he either was one or there were many in his constituency who supported him.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Allow me to say——

Mr. TAYLOR. If my hon. friend wants to reply he will have an opportunity to do so, but I will take no interruption from him here or elsewhere. He has a habit of interrupting without even rising from his seat, and when hon. gentlemen on this side treat hon. gentlemen opposite, when speaking, with the greatest courtesy and respect, we have the right to demand similar treatment from them. Let me now read the article I referred to; and when I have read it let the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) tell the Orangemen in his constituency that there is not a word in the chief Liberal organ in this country reflecting on them. In its issue of the 10th June, 'Le Canada' says editorially:

> Yellow dog is a term too polite to designate the people under the command of Dr. Sproule——

Who are the people under the command of Dr. Sproule but the Orangemen of this country.

Mr. D. D. MACKENZIE. Not at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Le 'Canada' says:

> Yellow dog is a term too polite to designate the people under the command of Dr. Sproule, who stirs up the dust of sectarian passion. The dog is generally clean. The friends and performers of the base work of Dr. Sproule and his chief Mr. R. L. Borden, are too dirty individuals to be compared with dogs, even yellow dogs.

Now I ask the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) to go home and call the Orangemen together who supported him, and read to them that article and say there is not a word in it reflecting on them. It is a disgrace to any paper supporting this government, or even supporting the hon. member for Labelle, to publish such trash as that. What the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said regarding the Orangemen of this country is perfectly correct. They have no antipathy to the French race or the Roman Catholic creed. It is their duty to uphold, and they do and will uphold, the constitution of this country. We are willing to apply the constitution of this country to the new provinces whether it gives separate schools or not. If the constitution gives them separate schools, they are entitled to them, but we are opposed to the mutilation of the constitution and will fight for that constitution to the last ditch. We do not believe that the constitution of this country should be mutilated or departed from one jot or tittle. I simply rose for the purpose of bringing this matter to the attention of the hon. member for South Grey and to ask him when he goes home to read in 'Hansard' what he said in reply to the hon. member for East Grey, Grand Master of the Orangemen, and this article which the hon. member for East Grey quoted, and then say there is not a word in it reflecting on that order. I challenge any hon. gentleman who has 'Le Canada' of the 10th June in his hand, published in French, to say that the translation given by the St. John 'Sun' is not correct in every particular.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Let me give the hon. gentleman a definition which is not to be found in any French publication but in the Imperial Dictionary, which is the standard dictionary of the English language. That is why I read it, for I would not publish it even in 'Le Canada'; but I just read it to show that my hon. friend's indignation against that French paper would be more properly vented against the dictionary of his own language. I find that the Imperial Dictionary thus defines the word Orangeman:

> (In honour of William Third of England, Prince of Orange). A member of a secret society instituted in Ireland in 1795 to uphold the Protestant religion and ascendency, and to oppose the Catholic religion and influence. It has lodges in many parts of the British empire and her colonies, but the membership is now pretty much confined to the lower classes of Protestant Irishmen.

Mr. MILLER. In reply to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who has told you that I am an Orangeman, I may say that I am not, but I may add that I am equally charged, on just as good ground, with being a Roman Catholic. The other day I received a letter written from my own constituency by one of my own constituents, in which he said he did not know what my creed was, but that after reading my speech he supposed I was a Roman Catholic. Let me say that I am neither a Roman Catholic nor an Orangeman. I have no use myself for people who use extreme or abusive language regarding Roman Catholics or Orangemen or any other class, and that is the reason I am at issue with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I do not like to hear extreme or abusive language applied to any section of our Canadian people. I have nothing whatever against the Orangemen, but I do say again, after listening to the hon. member for East Grey to-night, that I do not see in the article he read any reference whatever to the Orange society. The article refers to the people commanded by Dr. Sproule. When you speak of the Orangemen of this country, however, you are speaking of a very large body of men, most of whom are very respectable and loyal citizens of this country. But when you refer to those commanded by Dr. Sproule, you are referring to a very small number.

Mr. SPROULE. Who does the hon. gentleman think the article referred to?

Mr. MILLAR. To a very small coterie of extreme persons such as the hon. member for East Grey. I think that the Orangemen of this country should resent being termed the persons who are commanded by Dr. Sproule.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only tell the hon. gentleman what perhaps he does not know, that I think I do represent the Orangemen of this country and have their unanimous support.

Mr. D. D. MACKENZIE. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I represent 99 per cent of them notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary by the hon. member for South Grey.

Mr. MILLER. It is one thing to represent the Orangemen and entirely a different thing to command them.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking of commanding them.

Mr. LENNOX. I listened to the extract from the Imperial Dictionary read by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne). I will read it again in order that the position taken by some hon. members in this House may be understood. An Orangeman, it is said is :

A member of a secret society instituted in Ireland in 1775 to uphold the Protestant religion and ascendency, and to oppose the Catholic religion and influence. It has lodges in many parts of the British empire and her colonies, but the membership is now pretty well confined to the lower classes of Protestant Irishmen.

The hon. member (Mr. A. Lavergne) must have some reason for making this quotation—I suppose we are not to presume that he acts without reason. And the only intelligible reason that can be given is that he was prepared to adopt the language of this dictionary——

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I deny that—my object was to——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I will not sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the point of order?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is attributing to me words that I never used as my own. Before I read the article I took the precaution to say that it did not represent my sentiments. That is the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. LENNOX. I have a right to assume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Lavergne) has the ordinary intelligence of a member of parliament. He could have no reason for reading that article unless he desired to cast a slur upon Orangemen. And it is not out of line with the past conduct of the hon. gentleman to say that he wished to cast a slur upon Orangemen by suggesting that they are a lot of low-class Irishmen.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I did not say that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is misquoting me and is out of order.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not say the hon. gentleman said it. I say that that is the only intelligible reason for his making this quotation. And let me say to the hon. gentleman and to others like him on that side of the House—there are some, though not a great many, who on all occasions interrupt members of this side who are speaking—that it is evident they are not above casting a slur upon the Orangemen of this country. It is evident that in the article read by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that he is there referred to in his capacity of leader of the Orange body. I am not going to discuss the propriety of a newspaper using such language. But I am prepared to say that the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), for whom I have great personal respect, does not advance his cause by saying that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is not representative of the Orangemen of this country. I do not wish to drag Orangeism into this debate, but I do say that Orangemen are not confined to one nationality or one class, nor are they so 'low' but that they are ready to support the institutions of this country, to advance the liberty of the people, to maintain British connection and uphold the British flag wherever it may wave—to uphold the constitution, and, in the case of the Northwest Territories, to uphold that constitution whether it does or does not give separate schools. It does not become any hon. member of this House to cast a slur upon Orangeism. The history of that institution everywhere has been a history of toleration and of the maintenance of equal rights for all. Orangemen desire liberty for themselves, but they desire it equally for all other people. More than any other society in this country, the Orange society has stood for the maintenance of the liberties of all classes. I wish to say of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who has been persistently interrupted in the House and taunted that he represents only a small body of Orangemen, that he has the confidence of the Orange body of this country and has that confidence to an extent that no other Orangeman in Canada has. It is no credit to any member of this House to try to belittle the hon. member for East Grey in his position as representative of the Orange body.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I call the attention of some hon. members to the fact that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has the floor and that he has a right to be heard.

Mr. LENNOX. I may say that I was not anxious to speak at this time. I have only spoken once upon the Bill, and I would not nave spoken now had the hon. member for East Grey been given fair-play. I feel that not only has an injustice been done to him, but a very great injustice has been done to the Orange body. I have a large number of the members of that order in my riding. They are amongst the best citizens of South Simcoe—they are not better than the others, but I do say emphatically that there are none better. I do not think I should be doing right if I did not call attention to the matter which has cropped up in this way. I have refrained from speaking on many occasions in this debate, because, in common with the Orange body of this country, I desire that peace and harmony shall prevail amongst all classes of the people, that we may unitedly work out the destiny of the country without distinction of creed, and without emphasizing those prejudices which make for division. If we are to work in peace and harmony, it will not be because hon. gentlemen in the flush of youth, like the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) interrupt hon. gentlemen on this side and seek to divert their attention from the serious issues before us. That hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Lavergne) has been very conspicuous in interrupting me until you, Mr. Chairman, were obliged to call him to order. I trust he will live to realize that it is no proof of wisdom to be constantly speaking when others have the floor.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not wish to justify the article published in 'Le Canada'; but, if the House will trust my translation, I will read it first in French and then translate it into English. Hon. members will see that only an extract has been read to the House. They will see that that article is an answer to a series of attacks contained in certain circulars which were distributed in the late campaign of North Oxford and London.

Mr. INGRAM. By whom?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) will please wait. I have already said that I do not justify this article, nor can any hon. member of this House justify the attacks. The article is published in 'Le Canada' of June 10th last.

The 'Mail,' the 'World' and the 'News' are boasting that the by-elections in London and North Oxford are being fought on a question of principle, on the question of provincial rights.

Well, here is the language which these good farmers make use of in calling upon the electors to vote against the government:

Vote against the attempt to impose on the Northwest a system of education which is a relic of centuries of ignorance, which attempts to perpetuate repulsive superstitions, cruel persecutions and degrading dogmas which are dethroning conscience, violating reason and obscuring intelligence.

It is by such ignoble arguments, by such odious calumnies, that the Canadian electors are expected to vote for the candidate of Mr. Borden, for the protégé of Dr. Sproule, for the chosen of Mr. Foster and the friend of Mr. Maclean. It is in the name of a candidate for whom such appeals are made that the name of our respected King is used in another electoral circular.

A vote for Billy Grey is a vote for King Edward.

On the same lines and with the same logic the name of the Pope is opposed to that of King Edward, and they apply to him the odious epithets by which are qualified the system of education which teaches Catholic dogma. Dr. Sproule got mad one day because a Protestant Liberal paper had styled the electoral division of Toronto as a division of yellow dogs. If the great Orange leader is so sensitive, why does he insult a system of education and a religion which is approved and professed by forty-one per cent of the population of this country?

Yellow dog is a term too polite to designate the people under the command of Dr. Sproule, who stirs up the dust of sectarian passion. The dog is generally clean. The friends and performers of the base work of Dr. Sproule and his chief Mr. R. L. Borden, are too dirty individuals to be compared with dogs, even yellow dogs.

And to think that these men had the audacity to spread their infamous statement under the cover of the blasphemous title—to use the words of the 'Globe'—'For God and country.'

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say it again, I do not approve, I do not justify the answer which was made to the attacks which are quoted in this article. Now I will translate it to the best of my ability.

The war cry—some of the arguments used by the Tories in London and Woodstock.

The 'Mail,' the 'World' and the 'News' are boasting that the by-elections in London and North Oxford are made on the question of provincial rights. Here are some of the expressions used and some of the appeals made to the electors to obtain their votes against the government.

Here is now the attack contained in the circular. I have seen the circular myself in room 16 the other day and read it.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Who wrote it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It was not circulated in London or in North Oxford anyway, by my friend the Minister of Public Works or by the new member for Oxford. Here is the attack contained in the circular:

Vote against the attempt to impose on the Northwest a system of education which is a relic of centuries of ignorance, which attempts to perpetuate repulsive superstitions, cruel persecutions and degrading dogmas which are dethroning conscience, violating reason and obscuring intelligence.

The article concludes:

It is by such ignoble arguments, by such odious calumnies, that the Canadian electors are expected to vote for the candidate of Mr. Borden, for the protégé of Dr. Sproule, for the chosen of Mr. Foster and the friend of Mr. Maclean. It is in the name of a candidate for whom such appeals are made that the name of our respected King is used in another electoral circular.

And here is the quotation:

A vote for Billy Grey is a vote for King Edward.

On the same lines and with the same logic the name of the Pope is opposed to that of King Edward, and they apply to him the odious epithets by which are qualified the system of education which teaches Catholic dogma. Dr. Sproule got mad one day because a Protestant Liberal paper had styled the electoral division of Toronto as a division of yellow dogs. If the great Orange leader is so sensitive, why does he insult a system of education and a religion which is approved and professed by forty-one per cent of the population of this country ?

Mr. SPROULE. I never insulted any man's religion.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am merely translating. Now comes the extract which was read by the hon. member for East Grey:

Yellow dog is a term too polite to designate the people under the command of Dr. Sproule, and who stir up the dust of sectarian passions. A dog is generally clean. The friends and henchmen of Dr. Sproule and his leader, Mr. Borden, are individuals too dirty to be compared to dogs, even yellow dogs.

That is to say, those who are making the attacks which I have just read. Mind you, Mr. Chairman. I do not justify the answer, any more than the attack which led to it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Don't try to explain.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am not explaining, I am translating, and if the hon. gentleman thinks I am not translating correctly he may call me to order. But I was not referring to the hon. member for East Grey nor to my esteemed friend the leader of the opposition, but to the henchmen who are circulating the attacks which I have just read.

And to think that these men had the audacity to spread their infamous statement under the cover of the blasphemous title 'For God and country.'

Now, this is the article. I repeat again that I do not, I cannot justify the answer, nor can any one in this House justify the attacks which called forth the answer. The answer is on a par with the attacks that were made during the electoral campaign in London and North Oxford.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the hon. gentleman goes further—is the extract which I read from the St. John 'Sun' a fair translation of that article ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not all the article.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, it is only an extract. The hon. member for East Grey does not pretend that he read the whole article. I have just read it, but the extract which was read by the hon. member for East Grey was a fair translation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of the portion of the article which he purported to translate ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly, I do not deny that. The one who wrote that article in which the term 'yellow dog' is used does not use it as against the hon. member for East Grey or the hon. leader of the opposition. It is used against the henchmen of these hon. gentlemen who were supposed to be circulating attacks during the elections which took place lately.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a very charitable explanation.

Mr. INGRAM. What about the friends it refers to there ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am not here to justify or to answer what my hon. friend attacked. I am simply stating a question of fact. My hon. friend read an extract. I am reading the whole article and translating it to the best of my ability. Now, Sir, in what position are the Liberal members from the province of Quebec ? Here is my hon. friend from East Grey who quotes an extract from 'Le Canada.' He pretends that 'Le Canada' has compared himself and his friends to yellow dogs. We are, of course, accused by the hon. gentleman of fanning the prejudices and passions of the people against himself and his party in the province of Quebec. On the other hand here is my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who repeats the same accusation. I do not intend to answer the long and able speech which he made this afternoon and evening on the school question, but having been connected with the press in the province of Quebec for the last fifteen years and having had something to do with the Liberal press as a member of the Reform party, I deny in toto the accusation made by my hon. friend from Labelle. We are not fanning the passions and prejudices of the electors in the province of Quebec. I say that ever since this school issue has been before the people of the country, the Liberals of Quebec have stood firm to their guns and have behaved like patriots and good Canadians. We have a good illustration of our stand at the present time. We have on the one hand my hon. friend from Labelle who is supposed to represent the extreme views of Quebec, and I use this word in no offensive sense, while on the other hand we have my old friend from East Grey who is supposed to represent the extreme views of Ontario, or of a certain body called the Orange body, and here they are pulling together against the government on this very issue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was asking his permission.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not have to ask the permission of any other hon. gentleman. I would like to know whether or not that was not the position in 1893 and 1894 when the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy and Mr. Tarte were doing exactly the same thing in regard to the Conservative administration ? That was all right.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Dalton McCarthy is dead. Peace to his ashes. Mr. McCarthy was a great lawyer, he was a great Canadian and I dare say that if Mr. McCarthy were living to-day he might not be with my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) even on this question. Mr. McCarthy, after 1896, joined the ranks of the Liberal party and sat with us on this side of the House. I have heard Mr. McCarthy himself say that he had learned a good deal since he had been associated with the French Canadians. I say that if Mr. McCarthy were living to-day he would certainly not have taken the stand which has been taken by some hon. gentlemen opposite. But, I was speaking of the position occupied by the Liberal members of this House coming from the province of Quebec. Which are the papers in the province of Quebec which, since the beginning of this campaign, have been trying to arouse the passions and prejudices of the people although with no success ? My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) knows 'L'Evenement,' the chief Conservative organ of Quebec. When my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) spoke on the second reading of the Bill he quoted some of the articles which had been published by 'L'Evenement.' I appeal to my hon. friends who belong to the Protestant faith in the province of Quebec to say if it is not a fact that my right hon. friend the leader of the government is represented by the papers friendly to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as a traitor to his race, to his faith and to his ancestors. For what reason ?—because forsooth, my right hon. friend has taken the right stand in the present conflict. He has not been with the extremists. In medio stat virtus. He has stood firmly on the rock of constitution and he has acted in that spirit of conciliation, toleration and liberality which has always animated Liberals in every part of the world. Sir, my hon. friend from Labelle compared the French Liberals with the tribes of India. He said that we were accepting crumbs which the Bengalese and the men from the Punjaub would not accept. On the contrary, Sir, we recognize the happy position which the French Canadians occupy in this country at the present hour. Since 1840 the French Canadians, not only in the province of Quebec, but in the whole Dominion have attained, it seems to me, a very exalted position. Sir, I would call upon my hon. friend to look in front of him and see who occupies the first position in this country. Who was selected to occupy that position, under what circumstances and by whom ? By the English-speaking Liberals. And under what circumstances and by whom ? One of our own, and by the English-speaking Liberals. And under what ciriumstances ? Was it when the province of Quebec was united in favour of the Liberal party ? Was it not when we were in a hopeless minority against the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite ? Sir, what is our status in the confederation ? I will not speak of yesterday; I will speak of to-day's. My hon. friend from East Grey referred to the Yukon Territory. Who is the Chief Justice in the Yukon Territory? Is it Mr. Justice Dugas, a French Canadian? Who is the Lieutenant Governor of the province of British Columbia, if not Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière? Who is the Lieutenant Governor of the Northwest Territories, if not my friend Mr. Forget ? Who is the Chief Justice appointed at the request of the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) in the province of Manitoba, if not Chief Justice Dubuc, a French Canadian? Who is the Chief Justice of Canada? Is it not a French Canadian ? And, Sir, coming to the province of Ontario, who occupies at the present time the proud position of Minister of Public Works in the Ontario government ? I am happy to say that the great Conservative party paid a compliment to the large French minority in the province by appointing Hon. Dr. Rheaume from the county of Essex. In Ottawa I think my co-religionists and my fellow-countrymen occupy a proud position, and I deny in toto the statement made by my hon friend that the French Canadian Liberals have no pride and no courage. The man who has courage is not the one who, through his ability and eloquence, will fan the passions and irritate the prejudices of the people, and say to his fellow-countrymen : 'You are not treated as white men, you are treated as slaves, you are entitled to a loaf of bread and get only half a loaf. You should resist and revolt.' No, Sir, the man of courage and the true patriot is the man who tells his fellow-countrymen : We are in the minority, we live in a country where there are two predominating races and two predominating religions, and we must meet like friends and like men. If there is on the other side of the ocean an entente cordiale there must also be on this side an entente cordiale. We cannot expect to have and obtain everything, we must make concessions. My hon. friend—no one more than he—knows what is the history of our countrymen in this Dominion of ours. Let him read the history of the union from 1840 to 1867. His great and noble ancestor, Mr. Louis Joseph Papineau, after his return from exile, accused Lafontaine of being too timid, of being a tool in the hands of the English majority because he had formed an alliance with Baldwin. What did Lafontaine answer? He said: 'The days are gone by when the fight is to be made with bayonets or guns. We are working now under the constitution which has been freely granted to the inhabitants of this country. True it is, I have not obtained for the French Canadians everything they have claimed, but notice since I have formed this alliance with my English friend Baldwin, what has happeened: The French language, which has been expunged from the records of the House, has been restored; the French language is now the official language. Political exiles had been sent to Australia and the Bermudas, but through concessions, because I have learned the policy of conciliation, I have been able to obtain the return of the exiles to their country.' And what other reforms did not Lafontaine mention? My hon. friend is not playing the right game in saying to the public, to his fellow-countrymen, that in this confederation, in this wide Dominion, with two great races facing each other, the French Canadians are ill-treated and are trodden upon. No, for my part, I have a better opinion of the majority. It is true we have not obtained in the present instance all that our bishops wanted to obtain, but in conclusion I would say: Let us follow the advice which has been given us by a great writer, Sydney Smith, in his essay on Catholics, when he said:

> Wait. Do not add to your miseries by a mad and desperate rebellion. Persevere in civil exertions, and concede all you can concede. All great alterations in human affairs are produced by compromise.

Sir, when this confederation was brought about, when this great Dominion was formed, George Brown, Sir John Macdonald, Alexander Mackenzie and Sir George Etienne Cartier, all stated that the new confederation was the result of a compromise. Sir, mutual concessions were made, and I say that it is on honourable compromises, on honourable concessions from both sides and both nationalities that the great work of this country can be carried on.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. As I seconded the motion proposed by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I may be allowed a few words. Of course, it will be understood that my position is rather difficult coming after a speaker who has made such a passionate and political appeal as the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux). But, Sir, I cannot let pass the sentiment uttered by the Solicitor General, that the hon. member for Labelle and myself were pulling with the member for East Grey. Sir, I am very sorry to have to say it, but if anybody is pulling with the member for East Grey it is the government. My hon. friend for Labelle and myself have not changed on this question, and we stand to-day as we stood before the whole of this House on the 21st of February last. If anybody has changed, and if the law which is presented to us has changed, it is not because the member for Labelle or myself have changed, but because the policy of the government has changed. To-day the member for Labelle and myself are accused by the Solicitor General of calling for revolt in Quebec. Are we calling for revolt in Quebec because we ask fair-play at the hands of our fellow-countrymen? Is it an appeal to revolt because we believe that if we make an honest appeal to our English-speaking friends full justice would be granted to the minority in the Northwest Territories? I ask any man in this House, I ask the Solicitor General, if there is any appeal to revolt because we trust more than he does to our broad-minded English compatriots of this country than they do themselves? We take no other position to-day than the one we took on the second reading of this Bill, when the whole House, by a majority of 81, asked that full justice be granted to a minority in the west, when every one recognized that we had a moral obligation and should render justice to the Northwest. What are we claiming to-day more than that? We claim nothing else than what we should have by the constitution, that the minority in the west may be treated in the same way as if they were the majority of the district. I ask you, Sir, and I ask any member if it is asking too much, and if it is an appeal to revolt, to say that if we had presented the question to our English-speaking compatriots in its true light, as it should have been presented, we would have had more justice given to us? That is the justice that we have a right to expect. The right hon. leader of this House, speaking on the 8th of June last of the difference between clause 16, No. 1, and clause 16, No. 2, said:

> The difference is simply this, that in clause 16, No. 1, the law of 1875 was enacted, giving to the minority—I suppose the Roman Catholic minority—the control over secular education as well as the control over religious education, whereas the new clause brings into force the existing law of the Territories, the ordinance of 1901, by which the state has absolute control over the secular part of education, and the people have control simply of the religious part of education from half-past three in the afternoon. I have for my part agreed to the new clause 16, and in so doing I know that I have restricted my fellow-religionists in regard to some of the rights which they think they have at this moment. I shall explain in due time why I agreed to do so.

Well, Sir, I listened this afternon to the right hon. leader of this House, and I did not hear him give the explanation which he told us that his co-religionists had a right to expect. If there is one good reason that can be given for the change in the policy of the government other than that stated by 'Le Canada,' 'Le Soleil,' and the other Liberal papers in the province of Quebec, that the government was afraid of the narrowness of mind of the English-speaking people of this country, let us hear it. I ask, where is the appeal to prejudice to be found? In the words of the hon. member for Labelle, or in the English speaking organs of which the Solicitor General said he was one of the inspirers. In voting against the government on this question, I do not think I abandon the Liberal policy of this government. On the contrary, as I said before, it is the government that has abandoned its policy, and it seems to me that our Tory friends on the other side of the House are more consistent than the government because they for their part always denied to the minority of the Northwest any right to justice. What do we ask ? I will quote what was said by my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. McIntyre), who is opposed to separate schools in the Northwest. He said :

To say to me that the Bill gives little to Roman Catholic minorities is not in itself a recommendation. I am not seeking to find how little I can give to the minority in this case, but I am urging on the government the desirability of ascertaining what the constitution does give. If the constitution itself, according to the decision of the courts should give more to the minority than the present Bill gives why should we seek to deny that to them ?

Well, Sir, is there any doubt that the law of 1875, which is still the constitution of the Northwest, gives more to the Catholics than the amendment which we have today ? I do not think there is any doubt, and I protest against the statement of the Solicitor General that we are making an appeal to revolt because we ask for our rights. If I spoke my own language, I might be too violent; but I will quote the language of one of the ministers of the present government, the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur), who, speaking in the House of Commons in 1894 on Mr. Tarte's motion for the production of documents relating to separate schools in Manitoba and the Northwest, said this :

(Page 1993). The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in the course of his speech said that the Catholics of the Northwest and the French Canadians of the Territories had no grievances against the ordinance of 1892. I must say that my hon. friend is entirely in error in taking that position and in making that declaration. I will prove in a moment that the Catholics have received from the Northwest legislature the most grievous treatment that could be received by a minority from a legislature.. . .

(Page 1997). Since a few years everything has been done by those who control the government of the Northwest to destroy the rights of the Catholics in that country. . . . My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) asserted the other day that the teaching of French stands in the same position to-day as it did in 1888. I deny that assertion entirely. My hon. friend is quite mistaken. I will prove conclusively that the law has been disregarded in the Northwest in order virtually to destroy the use of the French language. . . . . .

(Page 2008). It will be seen from this that according to the ordinance of 1888, the French language could be used in the separate schools during the whole course, but according to the ordinance of 1892 French is only permissible for small children of five, six, seven or eight years old. It therefore cannot be denied our French Canadian people have been deprived of the rights which they had under the ordinance of 1888. . . . . .

(Page 2009). Under the ordinance of 1888, French Canadians could pass their examinations for teaching in the French language, but now, as you will find by the assertion of the secretary of the council for public instruction, they cannot do so. If the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) does not find any grievances in all the facts I have brought before this House, then I must say that he is a very difficult man to satisfy. . . . . .

(Page 2010). My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said : You are not deprived of your schools. You have your separate schools No, we have no separate schools now in the Northwest. The right of having separate your schools. You have your separate schools. choosing our books, appointing our inspectors, and appointing our examiners. All these rights are now denied by the ordinance of 1892 ; and consequently we have no longer separate schools in the Northwest . . . . . .

(Page 2014). It is very much to be regretted that men who call thmselves liberal have thought fit to abolish separate schools in Manitoba, and the use of the French language. But there is one thing in that connection which affords me great pleasure, and that is that when the Manitoba government proclaimed that policy, all the Catholic Liberals in Manitoba rose as one man to protest against it. And those who had portfolios in that government resigned their positions. Do we see the same thing today in the federal government ? Do we see the French Canadian members of the cabinet resigning their seats when they find the government of which they are members abolishing separate schools in the Northwest ? No ; there is no danger. It is true that Martin the Liberal, has abolished separate schools in Manitoba ; but the French members of the Manitoba government resigned when that was done. Here we see the federal government virtually abolishing the separate schools of the Northwest, and, at the same time, we see the French Canadian members keeping their seats in the cabinet, and, consequently, approving what the government has done. . . . . .

(Page 2015). Is it not to be deplored that in this country the French Canadians and Catholics should be treated as they have been ? In the province of Quebec, where we have a majority, we have treated the Protestants with justice. They have no complaint to make against us. Why should they not give us in Manitoba and the Northwest the same right that we give to the Protestant minority in Quebec . . . . . .

(Page 2016). I will ask my hon. friends on this side who come from Ontario to be just to the Catholics of the Northwest, as their great leaders in provincial politics are just to the Catholics in this province. We hope that they will help us restore to the Catholics of the Northwest the rights of which they have been deprived, and I trust the Liberal party will continue to be just, as it has always been, to the minority.

Have the hon. member for Labelle and myself said anything more violent than was then said by the present Minister of Inland Revenue? Could I use any stronger language, and if I did not repeat it, I should be a coward. When my fellow countrymen are deprived of the rights granted to them by the constitution and guaranteed by every treaty relating to this country, I am proud enough to stand up here and say that we are being given, not a loaf of bread, but a stone. What is the object of the legislation which we are enacting at this moment? What is the object of these ordinances which we are re-affirming ? It is this : You will find it stated in the report of the inspector of schools for Northern Alberta. Speaking of foreign languages—and the French language falls into that category—he said :

> The quickest and surest method of assimilating the foreign elements in our population is through our schools. . . . The best teachers —better for not using the language of the locality—should be secured for these foreign schools. It might be well to offer a bonus to suitable teachers for these districts, the more especially as the nature of the accommodation is not always the most inviting.

Have I not the right to stand up here and say that I object to having the French language abolished and a bonus paid to professors and teachers who do not understand French, in order that they may more easily assimilate the French Canadian with the other people in the Northwest ? What is the reason given by Dr. Goggin, late superintendent of education in the Territories, for abolishing the use of the French language? He says that if French is taught in the schools, the Germans, Doukhobors, Galicians and any other nationality would have the right to have their own language similarly taught. That may be, but it seems to me that there should be a difference made in this parliament between the French Canadians, who have been here 300 years, and the Galicians or Doukhobors or any other of the breeds imported lately. That is the position we take, and I think it is not using violent language or making appeals to passion or prejudice to claim the rights promised us most solemnly in the name of the Queen when the Northwest entered the union and were also promised us not later than the 21st of February last.

Mr. TURGEON. If I rise to address the committee at this hour it is because some references have been made to the position of the minority in the province of New Brunswick, from which I come, which were not only injudicious but unfounded on fact. We have had the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) contending that clause 93 of the British North America Act does not apply to the maritime provinces, but only to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Against that contention of the hon. gentleman, I would set the judgment of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on the school question, given in 1872, and which has been our guide there ever since. And in that judgment the court declared, contrary to the opinion of the hon. member for East Grey, that the clause referred to of the British North America Act applies not only to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but to every province in confederation. That, it seems to me, effectively disposes of the argument of the hon. gentleman. In the speech which I had the honour to deliver on the second reading of this Bill, I thought I had made this point perfectly clear, but inasmuch as some hon. members evidently persist in holding the opposite contention, I thought it would not be at all out of place if I should refer to it again. With regard to the eloquent plea made by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), whose ability and knowledge and earnestness in the cause he advocates I fully recognize, I may assure the House that I deplore just as deeply as he possibly can the fact that our co-religionists and compatriots in the Northwest are not given these right and privileges which we, French Canadians and Catholics, so deeply cherish and should like to see enjoyed by all sections of our race and creed wherever settled. I see the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) shaking hands with the members for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne.)

Mr. Chairman, I hail this pleasing incident as a sign of the times and the best augury we could have for future conciliation and harmony, and I think the whole House will join with me in expressing the hope that out of this rather at times embittered discussion, a better feeling may result between all creeds and races, such as we have just had evidence of in the present rapprochment of the hon. member for East Grey and the hon. member for Montmagny, and that in the practical working out of the proposed law, the Catholic minority in the Northwest may secure a better and more generous treatment than a rigid adherence to the letter of the law might exact. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I regret that my compatriots and co-religionists in the Northwest are not given all the rights and privileges we desire they should enjoy. But we are not here to legislate according to sentiment. We are here to legislate according to the constitution, according to the limited powers given this parliament by the British North America Act which brought together our many provinces and territories. We are here to grant the minority for all time to come whatever rights and privileges they now possess under the law. I admit that by the Act of 1875, which was passed unanimously by both sides of this parliament—Liberals and Conservatives alike

—the Catholic minority in the Northwest Territories were granted rights and privileges to the fullest extent they could desire and enjoyed these rights and privileges down to 1892. But, I am sorry to have to confess, those rights and privileges were considerably curtailed in 1892 by the legislature of the Territories. They were curtailed by their own local legislature, whose members were elected by the people, whose executive council was responsible to the people, and to which was given the supervision of the status and condition of education in that country. The law existing previous to 1892 was amended, not to the advantage of the Catholic minority, I admit, but still that was done by the local legislature elected by the people, and we must take it for granted that in amending a law, a legislature has the intention of bettering the existing conditions, said legislature may err, may make a mistake, but intendedly its action is supposed to be moved towards an improvement. If I understood the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) correctly, he said that section 93 of the British North America Act did not apply to the maritime provinces, did not apply to the province of New Brunswick. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the speech which I had the honour to deliver on the second reading of this Bill, I proved that section 93 did apply to the province of New Brunswick and to the maritime provinces; and the judges who gave decision on the question of the constitutionality of the Act against which we appealed upheld the view I take.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turgeon) has misunderstood me. I did not say that section 93 of the British North America Act did not apply to New Brunswick. I said it did apply.

Mr. TURGEON. The hon. member said that it applied to Quebec and Ontairo, but I understood him to say that it did not apply to New Brunswick. If I misunderstood him, of course I accept his correction. But, at the same time, it may be as well that I should continue my argument. In New Brunswick, we had the privilege of denominational schools—both the Catholics and the Protestants; but we did not apply to the court against the law under which the schools were inaugurated. To eliminate any doubt that may exist in the minds of any of my colleagues, I may say that we had not appealed to the court on the privileges which had been granted to us by the board of education, or the inspectors under that board. The Supreme Court judges said they would be prepared to look into our claim were we coming before them upon the merits of those privileges. Instead of taking that step, after so many years of struggle, the Catholic minority of New Brunswick preferred to work out their own fate. Before I go further, it may be that I ought to substantiate my statement by quoting the words of the judges in giving their judgment. With reference to the privileges which the Catholic minority had been enjoying, the judges say:

If the right and privilege falls under section 93, and if there is no power to compel the board of education to make such a regulation, or the legislature should have inserted a clause in the Common Schools Act, requiring them to do it, is not this just a case where subsection 4 of section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867, applies? viz.:

In case such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section is not made, then as far only as the circumstances of the case may require, the parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section. In this connection we may refer also to the 20th regulation, which, it has been contended, prejudicially affects the rights and privileges which the Roman Catholics had under the Parish School Act. This regulation declares that 'symbols or emblems distinctive of any national or other society, political party, or religious organization, shall not be exhibited or employed in the school room, either in its general arrangement or exercises, or on the person of any teacher or pupil.' It may be, that the board of education have disregarded the general policy of the Common Schools Act, and interfered with the rights of teachers, parents and children, in excluding from the schools alike, teachers and pupils, who may exhibit on their persons, in dress or ornament, symbols or emblems distinctive of any national or other society, political party, or religious organization; for, however clear the right of the board of education may be to make regulations necessary for the good government and discipline of the schools, to make arbitrary, restrictive regulations, as to the dress or personal adornment of the teachers and pupils, or which are calculated unnecessarily to interfere with the feelings, national, social or religious, in matters not calculated to give any just cause of offence to others, or to interfere with good order in the schools, is quite another question. And while it is by no means clear to us that any power exists in the board of education, under the Common Schools Act, by regulation, to deprive teachers, parents and children, of their right of access to the free schools of the country, to the support of which they, and all others, are forced to contribute, unless they submit to such regulations; and though the assumption of such power of practical expulsion by the board of education raises a question involving important and delicate rights—rights which, in this land of civil and religious freedom, few may be willing to see infringed—or at any rate, raising discussions which must be unpleasant to those engaged in them, and calculated to result in consequences which can scarcely fail to produce acrimonious feelings, and in the end be injurious to the cause of free education, which we must presume the regulation objected to was intended to further.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House particularly to these words:

All we can say is, as the case stands, the regulations are not before us in such a way that we can deal with them, and therefore we are not called upon to express any decided opinion as to their validity.

These last words are sufficient evidence of the fact that the Catholic minority of New Brunswick might have appealed to the courts with a great chance of gaining all these privileges. This part of the judgment may become useful at some other opportunity. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said that the Liberal members who supported the amendment brought in by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) were not true to their principles. I have the greatest respect for my dear, very dear friend, the hon. member for Labelle. None in this House more sincerely admires his ability, his deep knowledge, and his telling eloquence, and it would be with timidity that I would rise in contradiction to any statement, historical or constitutional, he may make. But when my hon. friend rises in this House and says that the right hon. the leader of the government and every Catholic member of the Liberal party is a coward, I have, Mr. Chairman, as a Catholic member, a French member from New Brunswick, I have to resent such an accusation. My life has not been a life of eloquent deliverances, of famous speeches, the echoes of which may have vibrated abroad, but, my neighbours in New Brunswick in this House will be ready to corroborate my statement when I say that my life has been a life of hard work, of constant and energetic efforts for the promotion of the welfare of my French compatriots in the county of Gloucester and throughout the province of New Brunswick. None will accuse me of having at any time failed in my duty towards them as French people or as Catholics, and in the exercise of my parliamentary duty on this solemn occasion, I have to follow the voice of my conscience, refuse to be carried away by my inconsiderate feelings, and act not according to my personal wishes, but after an intelligent study of the question before us, with the ambition of translating to our co-religionists of the west, all the privileges they are entitled to by the constitution, refraining from a desire of inserting cherished favours which an appeal to judicial authorities would at once eliminate after a useless excitement of feelings. As a member of the minority in New Brunswick, I must say that we have had to make a fight to gain and hold the position that we now have. We made that fight pacifically, but we made it advantageously. I feel deeply grieved that the French and Catholic minority in the Northwest, which is as dear to me as to any one, will not be given by the constitution all the privileges that I would like to see them enjoy. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not despair for all that of the Catholic minority and the French population in the Northwest. It is no more necessary for them to despair than it was for us of the New Brunswick minority to despair. I believe that the minority in New Brunswick are an example and should be an inspiration for the minority in Manitoba and the Northwest. Certain rights are being granted to them by the constitution, and their future is as bright as ours was. We of the minority in New Brunswick have had to work our own case. We are working it out, slowly perhaps, but surely, and during the last twenty years the French Acadian population in New Brunswick has made as great progress in popular and primary education as has the French population in any of the rural districts of Quebec.

As I have said, we have occasionally had statesmen in our province who understood the rights of minorities, and who understood that it was the duty of the rulers of a country so to legislate that every child in the country should be educated, whether he was French, Scotch or Irish. I am sure that it is with great regret that the right hon. the leader of this government cannot give to his co-religionists and compatriots in the west a greater measure of privileges, which might place them on a better footing. But we are to-day compelled to take the position—I would not call it a humiliating position, but a constitutional position—that we cannot grant to our co-religionists all the privileges that we would desire to give them. In the province of New Brunswick we enjoy certain privileges which the judges of the Supreme Court of our province considered not to have been granted by the law of the province and said privileges were maintained by the court. The constitution to-day can only grant such rights and privileges as are possessed by minorities, Catholic or Protestant, by the law of the country. That was the consideration upon which the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick based their judgment.

It is not by what the board of education, superintendent, inspectors or trustees may have done or allowed to be done under the Act, nor is it from the mode in which the principles of Christianity may have been actually practically taught in one or a hundred schools which may have drawn public money under the Parish School Act, that the question in a legal view must be determined. We must look to the law as it was at the time of the union, and by that, and that alone, be governed.

The law regarding separate schools in the Northwest Territories is based on the ordinances which are brought into force by the amendment, and which accords rights and privileges to the minorities, whether Catholic or Protestant, of which they are now in the enjoyment in pursuance of their own legislation, passed by a legislature elected by the people themselves. These ordinances which are now in existence are adopted by the constitution of the new provinces, and will secure for all time to the minorities the privileges they now enjoy. I must say that if to-day we cannot give to the people of the Northwest Territories that measure of privileges which we think they are entitled to with respect to religious teaching in the schools, it is certainly due to the action of the Conservative government, which refused to exercise their veto on the ordinances which were eliminating old consecrated rights and privileges upon the minority of the Northwest and which deprived the minority of privileges they were enjoying. But as regards the legislation of the present government, I have to say that the position taken by the right hon. leader receives the fervent approval and the earnest sanction of all the Catholic Liberals of New Brunswick; I go further, and say that I have heard lately some of the greatest Catholic authorities in New Brunswick, who have always been Conservatives in politics and who may remain so, say that the action taken by the right hon. the Prime Minister on this question is worthy of his past fame.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived,—Yeas 7; nays 126.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING. I desire to make a motion for the purpose of correcting a clerical error in the proceedings of the House. Attention has been called to the fact that certain Bills have been sent back to the Senate after having been amended but that the amendments have not been sent with the Bills. It becomes necessary to recall the Bills from the Senate in order that the amendments may be attached. I therefore beg to move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that the Bill sent down from the Senate intituled 'An Act respecting certain patents of the Ideal Manufacturing Company' was passed by this House with certain amendments, but that by some mistake the said Bill was returned to the Senate without these amendments, and to request that the Senate will give leave that these amendments be inserted in the said Bill by the proper officer of this House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that the Bill sent down from the Senate intituled 'An Act to amend an Act respecting certain patents of William A. Damen' was passed by this House with certain amendments, but that by some mistake the said Bill was returned to the Senate without these amendments, and to request that the Senate will give leave that these amendments be inserted in the said Bill by the proper officer of this House.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The same Bill will be on for discussion to-morrow?

Mr. TURGEON.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, and I hope we will finish it to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman is responsible himself for the circumstance that it has not been finished to-day.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 29, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

BURRITT'S RAPIDS LOCK.

Mr. J. D. REID—by Mr. Sam. Hughes—asked:

1. Was James Todd lockmaster at Burritt's Rapids lock?
2. If so, for how long?
3. Has he been dismissed?
4. If so, for what reason?
5. Who has been appointed in his place?
6. Was William Ormrod lock labourer at Burritt's Rapids lock? If so, how long?
7. Has he been dismissed? If so, for what reason?
8. Who has been appointed in his place?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes.
2. Twenty-five years.
3. No; he was not dismissed, but was superannuated.
4. On account of age.
5. John Merryfield.
6. No.
7. No; he has not been dismissed, but was not re-employed as bridge-tender upon the opening of navigation in spring of 1905.
8. William Swain was employed as bridge-tender at Burritt's Rapids for the season of 1905.

SALE OF OLD DRILL HALL, LONDON, ONTARIO.

Mr. ELSON asked:

1. Has the old drill hall in the city of London, Ontario, and the lot of land in connection with it, been sold?
2. If so, was each parcel disposed of by auction or by tender?
3. If sold by tender, what are the names of the persons who tendered, and the amount of each tender?
4. To whom was each or both of the said properties sold, and what was the price obtained for the same?
5. What was the date of sale?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Yes.
2. By tender.

3.

Name of tenderer.	Amount.
Edward Shea	$13,250
John Garvey	13,127
R. G. Fisher	13,000
D. McIntyre	13,000
P. Walsh	12,550
J. W. Jones, A. T. McMahon	12,010
H. Cronyn	12,000

4. Edward Shea; price, $13,250.

5. The tenders, which were advertised for on April 6, were receivable up to noon April 20, 1905, and the property was conveyed almost immediately thereafter.

INSPECTION OF WATER METERS.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue) moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to provide for the inspection of water meters, and to authorize the Governor in Council to fix the fee for such inspection.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this motion, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH JAPAN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the government not to forget to lay upon the table of the House the Orders in Council with regard to the treaty between Japan and His Majesty's government to which reference was made a few days ago.

INTERCOLONIAL ENGINEERS, STEAMER 'SCOTIA.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would bring to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals statements which have been made to me with regard to the engineers on the steamer 'Scotia,' employed in the carriage of passengers between Port Mulgrave and Hawkesbury. I have no knowledge as to the accuracy of the statements made, but as they have been given to me by persons who profess to know whereof they speak, I consider it my duty to bring the matter to the attention of the government. It may not be possible for the Minister of Railways and Canals to answer me to-day, but if not, I shall be glad to have an answer at the earliest convenient time. The statement is made that this steamship has been running with only one certified engineer and that this engineer holds only a second-class certificate. It is alleged that the Steamboat Inspection Act—if that Act applies to steamers operated by the government—requires for such a boat three engineers holding first, second and third class certificates respectively. It is alleged that in this case only one engineer holds a certificate, that he holds only a second-class certificate and that the other engineers have had no experience on sea-going boats. It is further alleged that the wages paid on this boat are such as to enable the government to employ men possessing the qualifications called for by the Steamboat Inspection Act, the three engineers being paid respectively $140, $105 and $60 per month, while on local boats the wages run from $50 to $65 a month, and they are compelled by law to carry engineers who are duly certified. It is also alleged that there is no lack of competent men to fill these positions. If the Minister of Railways will be good enough to make the necessary inquiry and give the answer as soon as convenient, I shall be glad.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The matter referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has been before me for some time. I received the communication—I presume it was the same—that he has received, stating the case. I am not personally familiar with the matter and cannot speak as to the correctness of the allegations; but I have already asked the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway to make a report to me setting forth all the facts. The steamer in question is a ferry boat which conveys cars and passengers between Mulgrave and Point Tupper in connection with the running of the Intercolonial between Truro and Sydney. The conditions which prevail there now are the conditions which have prevailed for some time. I am not personally familiar with the appointment of the officials in question or as to there having proper certificates. Another question that, as I presume, would arise in connection with the matter, is how far, such a steamer will be subject to the Steamboat Inspection Act?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I may be permitted a word, I would say that if these regulations are necessary in the public interest in the case of steamboats operated by private owners, one would think that they should be equally carried out, even though the letter of the law may not require it, on boats which are operated by the government. A very large number of passengers is carried by the boat, and sometimes under very difficult conditions, as the hon. minister knows. Therefore, I should think that this is a case in which not only the spirit, but the letter of the law should be carried out. In case of a serious accident, even if it did not result from failure to observe the requirements of the law I mentioned, it would be associated in the public mind with that failure; and it would be very unfortunate—of course the minister will agree—that such should be the case.

Mr. EMMERSON. I quite concur in what my hon. friend says. As to the qualifications of the officers, I am, of course, assuming that these men are properly qualified. I will know more about the matter, and, as soon as I have the information, I will explain it to the House.

THE MINT—TRANSPORTATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. F. D. MONK. I ask leave to remind the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the correspondence with the Imperial government in regard to the establishment of a branch of the Royal Mint in Canada, has not been brought down although it was ordered on February 15th. I made mention of that to my hon. friend, and this I think we will require. I would like to ask the government also if they have received any protest or communication of any kind from any foreign government in regard to the ten year contract for the transportation of immigrants from the continent of Europe to Canada ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will inquire about that, and will answer my hon. friend probably to-morrow or Monday.

POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I desire to draw the attention of the First Minister to the fact that the postal arrangements in the House are very primitive, resembling some rural post office. I take the liberty of suggesting that the Public Works Department supply the members with a box or a drawer from which they can get their mail matter. They are put to much inconvenience now by having to wait and the letters and papers get mixed up. I assume that this reminder to the Speaker and the First Minister will be sufficient to have this remedied by another session.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the goverment of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 16, legislation respecting education.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to move the following amendment of which notice has already been given:

That all the words of the amendment be struck out, and the following substituted therefor : 16. Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if at the date fixed for the coming into force of this Act, the territory included in the said province were already a province, the word union in the said section meaning the said date :—

2. The legislature shall have the right to pass laws with reference to education, but it shall always guarantee, (a) the existence of separate schools and their enjoyment by the minority, Protestant or Catholic, who may claim them ; (b) the effective control of said schools in matters of teaching by the said minority ; (c) the full liberty for the majority of any school section to have such school as it may desire ; (d) the equitable and proportionate distribution between the majority and the minority of all moneys appropriated for education.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, you must think I am very bold to rise at this time and propose an amendment, and it does require a great deal of courage after the treatment accorded yesterday to the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I desire to be as brief as possible in the remarks I propose to make. I want to say immediately that my action on this occasion is prompted by a very strong sense of what I believe to be my duty on this occasion. The remarks we heard yesterday from my hon. friend from Labelle and my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) will assist me a great deal in making my remarks short. I was agreeably surprised to see in the ranks of the majority coming from the province of Quebec that there were some gentlemen with sufficient independence to express the opinion which they expressed yesterday. It is needless for me to say that I think the position I occupy on this question is a sound one. When I saw my hon. friends from Labelle and Montmagny speaking in the same sense, I thought there was still hope that we might be able to convince, if not the government to-day, at least the electors later on, that the position we have taken is the right one. The remarks made by the hon. member for Labelle must have gone home, if we may judge by the reply of my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) who, in a very eloquent harangue, endeavoured to draw a herring across the trail, and to weaken the effect of the remarks of my hon. friends from Labelle and Montmagny. The Solicitor General, who is a very eloquent and able man, said certain things which, when he comes to think them over, will considerably dampen his enthusiasm. In speaking of the position which the French Canadian race has reached in this country, he said that what struck him the most was the high positions in the state to which some of our French Canadians have attained. Naturally he mentioned my right hon. friend the premier of Canada, he mentioned the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, he mentioned the lieutenant governor of the Northwest Territories, the lieutenant governor of British Columbia, and the chief justice of the Court of Appeal for the province of Manitoba. I do not know whether he should have mentioned these things. My hon. friend is a reader, and if he has read carefully the reports of Lord Durham he may conclude that it would have been better not to mention these things. I do not think that we can correctly judge of the position of a race by noticing some of the high positions which certain of its members may have attained. Speaking as a French Canadian, as a man who holds different ideas probably from most of the members of this House, I say that the French Canadian race would stand higher to-day than it does if the minority in Manitoba were in the enjoyment of all the rights to which they are entitled. That, to my mind, would be a better proof of the position which my compatriots occupy in the confederation. These things show that some individuals are men of talent, but where is the race? A few of them shine, but where is the French Canadian race in the province of Manitoba? Where will be the Roman Catholic minority in the Northwest Territories after this law is passed? It seems to me that I am giving some food for reflection to the Solicitor General, which he will have to mention if he speaks again on this question. Now, Sir, it seems to me that we are confronted by two propositions very clear and distinct; the position taken by my hon. friend the leader of the Conservative party, which is, as he says, to stand by the constitution, by clause 93 of the British North America Act, and the position of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, who also says he wants to stand by the constitution, though at the same time he proceeds to amend it. The leader of the opposition says: We must leave everything to the provinces, without saying whether they shall have separate schools or not; we will have nothing at all to do with the schools, whatever they are. Well, that may be good policy, but I do not think it is, and have shown it by my vote. I am very sorry to differ from my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, but I am bound to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) states my position exactly as I would like it stated. My position is that we ought to apply section 93 of the British North America Act because it is part of the constitution; and in reply to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I said that I thought that section would leave the new provinces free to enact legislation with regard to education. I said there was a difference of opinion as to that, but whatever the result might be, I was prepared to accept it loyally, because we would be applying the constitution.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, it may be that my language did not sufficiently express my idea. I mean that the position taken by my hon. friend is to leave all educational matters to the management of the local legislature.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The first amendment will have that effect.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what I understand, but it does not make much difference to my argument. The position taken by the leader of the opposition is that he stands by section 93 of the British North America Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not necessarily. If section 93 does apply then he stands by section 93.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In so far as it applies.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, if it applies.

Mr. BERGERON. Any way he starts at clause 93.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I understand it in that way, and if I am to judge by the remarks which were made by my hon. friend I will still persist in understanding it in that way. It seems to me that his remarks went to show that he had nothing at all to say in regard to the kind of schools that they should have. I heard him say that if it suited the local legislature of these provinces to enact a separate school law, he would have nothing at all to say against it. Of course, this would fall under the principle of autonomy. Well, that is the position of my hon. friend. Although I do not agree with it, I want to say that it is a manly position whether it is good or bad. We know where he is. But, that is the position of my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The position of my right hon. friend is a mixture. He wants to stand on the constitution as much as he can, but at the same time he wants to do something else. I think he was right when he proposed under the first clause 16 to apply something else to this question than the provision involved in section 93 of the British North America Act. I voted for that. That was a plain, clear proposition. But we shall see later on why he made that proposition. This amendment which is now before us means nothing at all. It is neither standing by the constitution as defined by section 93 nor does it recognize the rights of or do justice to the minority in these two provinces. It is opportunism. Will you have it white?—there it is. Will you have it black?—I am giving it to you under clause 93 of the British North America Act. That is why the amendment which I intend to propose calls things by their names. Some hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec will later on say and write in their papers that they are in favour of granting separate schools to the minority in the Northwest. But, if they are they will have to vote for the amendment which I propose, and not for the proposition which has been placed before the committee by the government. Why was my right hon. friend prompted to do something for the minority? I want to give him the credit of saying that he did intend to be just to the minority. That brings me to say why I look upon this question—I am always tempted to speak of the two provinces because the same principle applies to both—in a different light from that in which it is viewed by my hon. friends who have spoken here. It seems to me that we are here to continue the great work which was commenced long ago. We are not here to stand on the abstract questions of the constitution. The constitution of Canada was made for men and not Canadians for the constitution. If we read the history of our country, if we start from the commencement and read it with a great deal of care, we must come to the conclusion that the history of the people of this country is a most extraordinary one. We all remember that great event on the Plains of Abraham when the soldiers of two great nations met far from their respective homes and when the two opposing generals fell together and mingled their blood upon the same battlefield. A monument has been erected to perpetuate the memory of that day. There is something significant in that. Why were these two races placed there side by side? Do we not recognize the hand of Providence which ordained that this great northern part of America should be built up by the descendants of the two greatest nations in the world, the English and the French, who, since 1759, have lived happily together, as happily as men can live together and more happily than people of the same race and origin sometimes live together. If we pass by degrees through the history of our country we find other events of almost equal significance to that of which I have spoken. More than that; there was a time when some English politicians, sent out here as governors, tried to crush one of the two partners who were building up the nation on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. What was the result of it? Every man who knows the history of this country has in his mind just now the constitution of 1841. Was it not adopted to crush the French Canadian element? It was. Did it succeed? No, on the contrary, probably the most brilliant and most useful part of our history dates from 1851 and continues until the great coalition of 1854. Talk about the abstract letter of the constitution! Let us rather study the minds of those who framed the constitution of this country, let us go back to 1854, when, after struggling for years and years, two men, prompted by Providence, one from Ontario and one from Quebec, one a French Canadian, having the respect of his compatriots, another an English Canadian having the respect of the people of Ontario, joined hands, regardless of whether they were Conservatives or Liberals, regardless of whatever might have been their past differences or ways of thinking and united like patriots with the object of continuing here the peaceful work of the two races who had stood together in the province of Canada. I refer to Lafontaine and Baldwin whose names will go down to posterity as those of the two great founders of the Dominion of Canada. Then, later on we had the compact which resulted in confederation.

We have heard a great deal said in regard to this question from both sides of the House, but more probably on this side of the House and naturally so because a great many hon. members on the other side of the House do not say openly what they think. They are not obliged to do so. We know what it is to be in power. Our friends on this side of the House are more free to criticise. A great deal has been said about this famous clause 93 of the British North America Act in regard to schools. The province of New Brunswick, of which my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) was speaking with so much eloquence last night, and the province of Nova Scotia were not, as he said, bound by section 93 of the British North America Act, and he said that the new provinces should not be bound. There is a great deal of difference there. It is true that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were not bound by that clause. Quebec and Ontario alone were bound, but if you recall the spirit which animated the men who were at the birth of this country you will find that the promises which were made before the adoption of the British North America Act were made to whom? Not to the people of Quebec, not to the people of Ontario, but they were made to the French Canadians who were found here by the English government in 1759, and these promises formed the basis of the treaty of 1763. Would you allow me in case these things may be forgotten to place before the committee some of the promises which are made.

I do not attach so much importance to the exact words of the constitution, as I do to their spirit and as I do to the indication which they give as to what was in the minds of the pioneers of this country when they were laying the foundation of the basis of our nationality. I interpret the constitution in that light, and I endeavour to find if we are worthy successors of the men who laid the corner stone of the Canadian nation. Promises were made to the French Canadian people. These promises were made by England at first, and afterwards by those in Canada who controlled the destinies of the nation. I have often heard it asked: Why should the all powerful England have made promises when she had crushed the little French Canadian colony on the banks of the St. Lawrence? Well, there is some difference of opinion as to that, but at all events it is true that French Canada was ceded to England. French Canada may have been conquered according to the opinion of some, nevertheless there was a cession. However I shall not quarrel over words; for the sake of argument I will admit that French Canada was conquered by England one of the greatest colonizing nations in the world ; a nation which has made her colonies her equals ; a nation whose strength lies in the very fact that wherever the British flag floats there is liberty and everything akin to liberty beneath its folds. For whatever reason it may be, England made promises to the French Canadian people. In 1759 the following promise was made on the good faith of the English nation :

That the free exercise of the Catholic Apostolic and Roman religion shall be preserved.

I want you, Sir, to remember that, because I think I shall be able to show conclusively that separate schools—I do not like that word 'separate' schools, because to my mind it means nothing—I want to show conclusively that denominational schools, Catholic schools, are a part of the Catholic religion and that the free right to have Catholic schools is inherent to the free exercise of what this document calls : 'the Catholic Apostolic and Roman religion.' The treaty of 1763 contained these words :

His Britannic Majesty on his side agrees to grant the liberty of the Catholic religion to the inhabitants of Canada. He will consequently give the most precise and most effectual orders that his Roman Catholic subjects may profess the worship of their religion according to the rites of the Romish Church, as far as the laws of Great Britain will permit.

Could a conquering power go further in promises to the small French Canadian people then numbering only 60,000 souls ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the treaty of Paris would apply to the territory which is to be included in the new provinces ?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend had better make a note of all the questions he wants to ask me, and I will answer all of them together at the end of my remarks.

Mr. BRODEUR. I merely wish to ascertain whether the hon. gentleman was indulging in an academic discussion, or whether he was advancing argument to sustain his position with regard to the new province.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend will listen patiently he will soon know why I am making these observations. The hon. gentleman evidently was not listening to what I said when I was referring to the promises made to the French Canadians and to the Roman Catholics wherever they were in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. Even in the Northwest Territories ?

Mr. BERGERON. Anywhere. The French Canadian and Catholic people of the Northwest Territories did not come from the moon ; most of them came from the province of Quebec.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was under the impression that the Northwest Territories belonged to England before the treaty of 1763.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend will have patience I will make that plain. I do not object to the hon. gentleman putting questions, but when one is continuing the thread of an argument it is very annoying to have questions constantly put, unless the interruption has reference to something serious. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we take the Quebec Act of 1774, we will find in it substantially the same words. It says :

That subjects may have hold and enjoy the free exercise of the religion of the Church of Rome subject to the King's supremacy, and that the clergy of the said church may hold receive and enjoy their accustomed dues and rates with respect to such persons only as shall profess the said religion.

All this was promised to the inhabitants of Canada at that time who were French and who professed the Catholic religion. I take it for granted that the British government when they made these promises did not mean that they were giving these privileges only to the people who were then living, but that they were according these privileges to the entire race. England said to the Canadian Catholic people : We want you to be contented, we want you to be loyal British subjects, and in order to be so we know that you must enjoy these privileges which are sacred to you.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Was England giving these privileges to individuals so that they might carry them around in their vest pocket ?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not aware that heirs and inheritors of privileges are obliged to carry them around in that way in this country. England was not giving to the French Canadian people any emolument ; she was granting privileges. Surely the Minister of Justice is not serious, because he must have had these things in his mind when he drafted clause 16, No. 1, or else there is no sense in that clause.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My statement is that the treaty was given to the country and not to individuals.

Mr. BERGERON. And my contention is that this treaty was given to the whole French Canadian race. The words are plain and I read them again :

His Majesty will consequently give the most precise and most effectual orders that his new Roman Catholic subjects may profess the worship of their religion.

That is not a privilege given to the state; it is given to the Roman Catholic subjects of the King and it is worded in plain English too. This is the position in which the Catholics of Canada stood at the commencement of our history, and that position was continued at the time of confederation. Coming down to the immediate subject under discussion, let us look at the promises made to the people of the Northwest Territories and of Manitoba. The same promises contained in the treaty of Paris and in the statutes of 1774 were made almost word for word to the inhabitants of Manitoba and of the Northwest Territories. I wish to have this recorded on 'Hansard' so that all may know now and in years to come, why we in this House take the view which I am expressing and which was expressed by some of our friends yesterday. When Colonel De Salaberry and Mr. Thibault were appointed by the Canadian government commissioners to the Red river settlement the following was contained in their instructions :

You will not fail to direct the attention of the mixed society inhabiting the cultivated territories of the Red River and Assiniboine, to the fact which comes within your daily knowledge and observation and is patent to all the world, that in the four provinces in this Dominion men of all religious creed and complexion stand upon one broad footing of perfect equality in the eye of the government and the law ; and that no administration could confront the enlightened public sentiment of this country which attempted to act in the Northwest upon principles more restricted and less liberal than those which are fairly established here.

Here ? Where is that ? In the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Later on, instructions were given to Mr. Donald A. Smith (now Lord Strathcona) which contained the words :

The people (of the Northwest and Manitoba) may rely upon it that respect and protection will be extended to the different religious denominations ; that titles . . . and that all the franchises which have existed or which the people may prove themselves qualified to exercise shall be duly continued or liberally conferred. In declaring the desire and determination of Her Majesty's cabinet——

You see how far it came from, not only from the government of Canada but from the government of England——

—you may safely use the terms of the ancient formula that 'right shall be done in all cases.'

' Not a stone for a loaf of bread as my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said the other day would be given to these people by the amendment which is before the House.

Later on a letter was written to Mr. MacTavish, then governor of the Hudson Bay Company, in which are the words :

And the inhabitants of Rupert's Land——

That is very much the people of whom we are talking now ; we cannot be nearer the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan than when we are talking of Rupert's Land :

And the inhabitants of Rupert's Land of all classes and persuasions may rest assured that Her Majesty's government has no intention of interfering with or setting aside or allowing others to interfere with the religions, the rights or the franchises hitherto enjoyed or to which they may hereafter prove themselves equal.

In 1869 the Canadian Secretary of State wrote to Mr. McDougall in these words :

You will now be in a position to assure the residents of the Northwest Territories that all their civil and religious liberties will be sacredly respected, that the country will be governed as in the past by British law and according to the spirit of British justice.

What is British justice ? We find it in the law which was passed only two years ago in England. And that is the promise which was made to the people of Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories.

Later on the Governor General of Canada issued a proclamation which was in these words :

By Her Majesty's authority I therefore assure you that on the union with Canada all your civil and religious rights and privileges will be respected, your properties secured to you, and that your country will be governed as in the past under British laws and in the spirit of British justice.

Need we go any further than that to ascertain the promises which were made to the Catholics of the Northwest Territories, that Territory where we now intend to create two provinces ? I am reading these promises, I am speaking here before the representatives of the people of this country. I am here supposed to be speaking before men of broadmindedness, of men who represent the good spirit of the people of this country, who represent those in the country who want to see it great and prosperous, and these men are generally the best. When I mention these different promises which were made, it seems to me that I am proving the position I said at the commencement I intended to take, that we should not stand so much by the words of the constitution as by the spirit of the men who wanted to create a great empire in this part of the American continent.

Promises were also made in the province of Manitoba. I shall read them and I shall show which political party was the first to curtail the rights and privileges of the people of that province, just as to-day the same party is going to do the same work for the Northwest Territories. Let us read some of the promises made in Manitoba. They call that a kind of compact which was made in 1870. There was at that time a legislative council in Manitoba and there was a strong rivalry between the French Canadians and the English Canadians. The fight was carried on for a long time. As long as the Manitoba government was under the leadership of the Conservatives right and justice were respected. The Liberal party wanted to get into power ; they could not do it on their policy, they had none, any more there than anywhere else. They thought they would gain something by raising racial or religious cries and they were ably seconded by Mr. Dalton McCarthy who sat in this parliament at that time and who had some reasons to work against the Conservative party. Of course it came to the ears of the minority, the French Canadians, and they commenced to be frightened. There was a question of abolishing their legislative council which was their safeguard. Upper houses, in the opinion of the Fathers of Confederation were established for the safeguarding of the provinces as well as of the Dominion parliament. What were the reasons given in order to obtain the consent of these men to the abolition of the legislative council ? Let us read some of them. The Premier of Manitoba at the time of which I am speaking, was Mr. Davis, who said :

It may be said that the council is a safeguard to the minority. He could assure the minority that their rights would never be trampled upon in this province.

Now there was a sacred promise made by the Prime Minister of the province of Manitoba (Mr. Davis).

There would always be sufficient English speaking members of the House who would insist on giving their French fellow subjects their rights to protect them.

Mr. Norquay, who became premier afterwards, said :

In 1870 when the Dominion government invested the people of this province with the responsibility of self-government they gave them a constitution which in their belief would meet the demands of those who had offered opposition to the inauguration of Canadian authority in this province. There was a certain class of people in this province, who in the belief that they would soon be in the minority required the protection of the Upper House. No doubt the time will come when the privilege claimed by those speaking the French language will be waived, but he for his part would never like to see them deprived of the privilege of speaking their language on the floor of the House and in the courts of justice ; and also of being able to make themselves acquainted with the laws of the country by reading them in their own language if they cannot read them otherwise.

I am proud to say that man was a Conservative, Mr. Norquay who for many years was premier of the province of Manitoba. Another gentleman spoke not a member but a journalist, Mr. Luxton. What did he say:

There are some questions of sentiment which lay close to the hearts of the French people, and he could assure them that the English speaking members would not deal with these ; and if the French representatives were sufficiently patriotic to support the measure before the House, they would recognize their generosity and not forget it.

There was another gentleman, Mr. Cornish. What did he say:

He believed the old settlers and the French would make common cause if their rights were infringed upon, and he would assure them that if the Canadian party——

He meant the English.

——became the great majority they want to keep these promises that were made in Manitoba.

What was the result of all that? Later on in 1888, the premier of Manitoba was Mr. Harrison. His majority was very small. He had to replace one of his ministers. He chose a man by the name of Burke. Burke was a French Canadian with an Irish name, and he presented himself in the county of St. François Xavier, of which the great majority is French Catholic. The Liberal party brought against him, Mr. Francis, an English Protestant. It was very hard to elect Mr. Francis under the circumstances. Mr. Burke raised the cry that it had been the policy of the Liberal party for years to deprive the Roman Catholics and the French speaking Canadians of their schools and the use of their own language. What was the result ? Mr. Francis wanted to resign. He thought it impossible to make a fight, but the Liberal party sent out Mr. Martin—Joe Martin—and he went there and made promises. What did he say ? In a powerful speech he denounced the statements of Burke and his friends as follows:

He told the meeting that it never had been the policy of the Liberals to interfere with the language or institutions of the French Catholic population, and he appealed to them to trust the Liberals and support their candidate.

That was the promise made by Mr. Martin, as a minister, in the name of the government of which he was a member.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No, he was not a minister at that time.

Mr. BERGERON. Was he not Solicitor General ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No, Mr. Harrison was premier and Mr. Martin was a member of the opposition.

Mr. BERGERON. I thank my hon. friend for the correction. True Mr. Martin was in the opposition, but he became shortly after a minister of the government which was formed. Mr. Martin was in opposition, and speaking in the name of his party he promised the people that if there should be a change of government, all that had been said by a Mr. Burke and his friends about the Liberal party abolishing Catholic schools and the French language, if they came into power, was wrong, and that such had never been the policy of the Liberal party. The people believed Mr. Martin and elected Mr. Francis—a most extraordinary thing under the circumstances. That was the death of the Conservative party; and Mr. Greenway, the present member for Lisgar, was called upon to form an administration. What did Mr. Greenway do ? I have said that the province was divided into two parties. There was a kind of dead-lock, so that although the defeat of Mr. Burke had killed the Conservative party, the Liberal party was not any stronger. They wanted the help of somebody and they were not proud in asking it. Mr. Greenway went over to interview the Archbishop of St. Boniface, Mgr. Taché. He could not see the archbishop, who was ill, but he saw his Grand Vicar (Mr. Allard), and what did Mr. Greenway then promise ? He said that he was in entire sympathy with the Archbishop and the Grand Vicar on the question of Catholic schools and the French language as well as the maintenance of French electoral divisions.

It would be the policy of this government to maintain them inviolate and he requested his Grace to mention some one who would be acceptable to him as a member of the new cabinet.

The Grand Vicar recommended Mr. Prendergast, a young French Canadian lawyer, as one who would be agreeable to his Grace, and Mr. Prendergast was taken into the government. The government therefore, with the moral support of Archbishop Taché and the ecclesiastical party, carried the election. What took place afterwards ? Everybody knows what happened in 1890 when in spite of all those pledges, in spite of the position taken by Archbishop Taché, in spite of the word of honour given by Mr. Greenway, the Liberal government abolished the separate schools and the use of the French language—that language which was the first civilized tongue ever heard on the shores of Red river. What unfortunately occurred later, we too well know. The war which had begun in 1890 lasted until 1896, and that famous clause 93, of the British North America Act of which so much has been heard during this debate, was then as now the bone of contention. In 1896, after having gone from court to court, the Conservative government then in power here, being convinced that they were doing for the best, and that they were bound to do as they did, after taking every precaution, every possible means of preventing the enforcement of drastic measures, after sending delegation after delegation to induce the Manitoba government to withdraw the measures it had adopted, brought down what we all know as the Remedial Bill. My impression is that all the debate we have had this last three or four months and all the trouble which has been created in this country, are due to the events of that time. The Conservative government in the Dominion, after having promised in the first place through Sir Mackenzie Bowell and then through Sir Charles Tupper, that they would remedy the grievances of the Manitoba minority, not relying on these promises, although these should have been sufficient, brought down the Remedial Bill. That Bill was accepted by the minority of the people of Manitoba. It was accepted by Archbishop Taché, who was the chief of that minority. We struggled for weeks and weeks and the record of the Conservative party on that occasion, is one of which we are proud and which deserves the eulogium of every well thinking Canadian, whether Protestant or Catholic. For standing as they did by the constitution of Canada, the Conservative party were entitled to the gratitude of the country. That is why I refrain from saying anything that would reflect upon my hon. friend the leader of the opposition for the position he has taken—it is because I am convinced that to-day in his heart he thinks he is right, as at that time the Conservative party thought it was right when it brought down the Remedial Bill. Those who know the history of which I have read a few extracts, those who knew that history were not surprised at the stand taken by the Conservative party.

Of course, extremists were not satisfied. But many of the people of Canada were not surprised to see the position taken by the Conservative party. And if my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had stood up here, as he did in the case of the Jesuits Estates Bill, and said : That is the law, and we must obey it—it might not have been so much to his personal advantage, but it would have added to his reputation as a statesman —his name would have been written in larger letters in the history of this country. He moved the six months'hoist, which means the killing of the Bill. But what did this mean in the opinion of extremists—and there are extremists on both sides of politics ? I will read by-and-by the remarks made by one of these Conservatives who became a great admirer of my right hon. friend, but who has withdrawn that admiration now. These people believe—honestly believe—that the French element in this country has been too strong. There are no such extremists in this House, but there are such in the country ; and I do not feel aggrieved at them if they are sincere. These people said : A grand victory ! Here is a French Canadian, a man of education, supposed to be the best speaker in the country, an honest man—and he is ready to put his foot on the hierarchy of Quebec ; he is ready to go with us and put an end of the domination of that hierarchy ; let us follow him. And they did follow him. And so the sluices were open to the flood of fanaticism, and a great many who would have stood by the Conservative party—would not have dared to go as far as the extremists went—felt free to rejoin the extremists in what they did. And so this country was given over to that element of the population. Many of these people in Ontario and in the Maritime provinces, thought that my right hon. friend was most tolerant. They thought he was above the hierarchy. They thought that he was against separate schools. But what were the facts ? He spoke yesterday of giving his 'categorical answer' to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). But no one could get a categorical answer from him in 1896. In Ontario he was for investigation, he wanted to find out the facts ; but one thing was sure, there would be no coercion. But in Quebec the Remedial Bill did not go far enough to suit him ; if it were true that the schools were Protestant schools, he would do more than the Conservatives could do to remedy the grievance of the Catholics ; only put him in power, and when he was in power everybody would be happy ; if he could not settle the question by conciliation, he would take strong means to provide by the constitution. And he came into power. And what has he done ? He has satisfied that element which led him to take the position he did on the Remedial Bill ; he has satisfied the strong Protestant element, which is honestly convinced that the future safety of this country lies in keeping the French Canadians and Catholics in a secondary place—or, as I say, there are people of that kind, and those the right hon. gentleman has pleased. And to-day—yes, this very moment, while I am speaking—the Catholic minority in Winnipeg are obliged to pay a double tax for education. In the first place, they must pay for the support of the separate schools ; and, as they cannot conscientiously send their children to those schools, they must pay for the education of their children elsewhere. And the Prime Minister knows that these people have had no redress of these grievances. He knows also that in the other parts of the province any rights that the Catholics enjoy with regard to education are not guaranteed by the law—but only exist by tolerance—I hope that the situation will not grow worse. The present provincial government is Conservative, and I hope that they will secure to the Catholics what they already have. But I am convinced that if a Liberal government got into power in that province, in twenty-four hours they would take away the privileges, such as they are, which the Roman Catholics enjoy. But there has come a day of reckoning. When the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was charged with the duty of establishing two provinces in the Northwest, he said—probably prompted by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick)—we must try to redeem ourselves in those provinces ; our case has gone bad in Manitoba, and we cannot rehabilitate ourselves there. He had promised that he would send Mr. Mowat to Manitoba. 'Father of all the Roman Catholics of Ontario,' they used to call him in Quebec ; no one so good as Mr. Mowat. But he never went ; but they sent another gentleman there. Well, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister decided that they would do something for the people of the Northwest, and so they introduced this Bill with its original clause 16. Now, the original clause 16 was good. It expressed the first idea of these hon. gentlemen, their spontaneous sentiment. And yesterday the right hon. gentleman presented his amended clause. Now, let us not play upon words. We have been trying here for weeks to find out what is the difference between the first clause 16 and the second clause 16. And that is going to be a great game in the country. In Quebec they will say that the two clauses are the same thing. And that is the reason for my amendment—I want to make it clear that there will not be any mistake about it. And in Ontario they will say, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and others have said, that there is really nothing in clause 16 as it is now amended. Why, the hon. member for Centre York not only said that, but wrote it. He told his friends : Don't be anxious ; don't lose sleep over this thing ; even ultra-Protestants need not fear; of course, we had to put something in the Bill about separate schools, but this means nothing at all, and in three or four years there will not be a single separate school in the Northwest Territories.

And what is the reason why the Prime Minister has proposed this amendment ? It seems to me that what he has done—to use a favourite expression of his own—is to give a stone for a loaf of bread. I know that what I am now saying will be used to help the Liberals in Ontario—they will say that the member for Beauharnois himself declared that there was nothing in this amended section. But we are here to speak the truth concerning matters that come before the House. If my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) wanted to be candid—and I wish he would be—he would acknowledge that he was frightened into this act. I am convinced that had he stood up for clause 16 as it was originally drafted he would have carried it. But he got frightened. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) left the cabinet. But that was not what frightened the Prime Minister. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is a lucky man ; he was born under a lucky star. I think it was a good thing for him to get rid of the hon. member for Brandon ; and when the opportunity of doing so occurred, he took advantage of it in a very clever way. I do not want him to smile at that, because he must not show approval of what I say. But when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) showed his teeth, that was a different thing. The Minister of Finance is spoken of as the coming Prime Minister when my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) claims his right to rest. He is considered the strong man in the cabinet. There is no comparison between the one who left and the one who threatened to leave.

My hon. friend the Finance Minister—and I want the French Canadians to know that as soon as possible, in case he may become premier of Canada—was the man who forced the right hon. gentleman to change his clause. The Minister of Finance had an easy job to gather about him a few men who are always ready to follow, and who said, unless that change is made we cannot support the government. I thought the Prime Minister had more force of character than that, but he gave way. I think I recollect hearing the right hon. gentleman say one day: It takes me some time to make up my mind, but when I have made up my mind I stick to it. He did not do it on that occasion, he gave in. It is a dangerous thing for the chief of a party to give in once. Well, the consequence was that we had clause 16, No. 2, that does not mean anything at all. Here I want to repeat what the hon. member for Labelle said yesterday in such eloquent language, that clause 16 is worse even than the amendment of the leader of the opposition, because the amendment of the leader of the opposition does not prevent Roman Catholics from having separate schools if they want them. But if this amended section 16 becomes law, it will for ever prevent the Roman Catholics from having denominational schools in the province of Alberta. First of all, as was said yesterday, it is only the minority who will have separate schools, the majority will have public schools. But what kind of schools have they got there? I take the honest word of the Minister of Finance, who said they were public schools everywhere, there are no separate schools anywhere. The word 'separate' reminds me of a story I heard of an old man in Ontario who was mad because the dual language had been adopted. He said, you can talk to me in French or you can talk to me in English, but I dare you to talk to me in that dual language. We have been speaking so much about separate schools that the word 'separate' has ceased to have any meaning. We should speak about denominational schools instead of separate schools. I ask the Minister of Finance: What is the meaning of the word 'separate' in the law which is now before the House? It will be separate schools for the Protestants if they are in a minority, and separate schools for the Catholics if they are in a minority. We mean something when we speak of denominational schools, but the word 'separate' conveys no meaning at all. It follows that in places where the Roman Catholics are in a majority they must have the public school, which is left in the hands of trustees, who themselves are responsible to the board of education, under the control of a minister who has arbitrary powers, and can dismiss the trustees and do anything he likes with that educational board.

Now the desire for denominational schools is no mere caprice. I want my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to understand that. I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of Finance, I really believe that he is sincere in what he does, there is no doubt about it. He has been a long time the premier of his province, and I will give him credit for the fact that the Catholics in the province of Nova Scotia, so far as I know, are perfectly satisfied, I have never heard a word of complaint. So I will give him credit of being a broadminded man, so far as the question of separate schools in Nova Scotia is concerned. Well, there is a strong sentiment at the bottom of this question of schools. I am convinced that it is a good sentiment, it is a most respectable sentiment, and I propose soon to read from the speeches of some English Protestants to show that it is more than a respectable sentiment, and we should grant them either to the French or the English in order to have peace and contentment. Now, Sir, who was it that first spoke about separate schools in this country? Who was it that first objected to all the children being educated together? I met a gentleman yesterday who said, Why should the children not all eat the same thing and all eat at the same table? I did not think the example was very convincing; but it meant this: Why should not the little Catholic boys go to the same school with the little Protestant boys? At first sight that looks very reasonable. But there is something behind all that, and those who are not au courant of that sentiment cannot understand it, because there is a great deal in it. But this idea of separation did not start with the Roman Catholics. I want to show, and I want it recorded on the 'Hansard,' who it was that first spoke about separating the children in the schools. My impression is that we would never have heard of separate schools if they had not been asked for by the Protestant population of Quebec. I am convinced that at the time of confederation there was no question of separate schools, nobody thought about them. It may have been a lack of prudence on the part of our people, because our people are very honest in their way of thinking, they do not apprehend that anybody will do them any harm, that is their character. But the English population of Quebec were more prudent, and I do not blame them. We must remember, Mr. Chairman, that this question of religion is deeply rooted in the heart of every man, and you cannot play with it. More than that, I want to tell my right hon. friend that you cannot compromise with that sentiment. You can compromise on everything else, you can compromise on the tariff; you can preach against protection for eigtheen years and then adopt it in part you can compromise upon a fast line by having steamers that take 36 days to cross the ocean; but you cannot compromise on questions of religion and conscience. Now what do I find here? Old members of this House will remember Mr. Holton, who sat in the old parliament of Canada. In the confederation debates I find he said this:

Another question which we had proposed to put had reference to the educational system of Lower Canada. The hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) must be aware that this was a question on which there was a great deal of feeling in this section of the province amongst the English speaking or Protestant class of the population. Among that class there was no phase or feature of those threatened changes which excited so much alarm as this very question of education.

The hon. gentleman was then representing the county of Chateauguay, he was an English speaking Protestant in the province of Quebec. He goes on :

Well, the Minister of Finance had said that the government would bring down amendments to the school laws of Lower Canada, which they proposed enacting into law before a change of government should take place, and which would become a permanent settlement of that question. The question he desired to put was whether they intended to submit these amendments before they asked the House to pass finally upon the scheme of confederation, as it would undoubtedly exercise very considerable influence upon the discussion of the confederation scheme, and probably in the last resort from several members from Lower Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, do you not see how prudent he was ? There is an important example for many of us. Mr. Holton knew the French Canadians perfectly, he was elected by French Canadians, he sat for Chateauguay during all the time he sat in this parliament. He sat after confederation for a Montreal division in the local house. He knew the French Canadians well, he knew how broad they were, how generous they were, but in spite of that he insisted upon having a guarantee. He would not even take the word of the Minister of Finance when he said : We will see that a law is passed. But he insisted. He said : I want to see the law because it will have some effect upon the vote which is to be given. Later on he comes to the conclusion that :

The English Protestants of Lower Canada desire to know what is to be done in the matter of education before the final voice of the people of this country is pronounced on the question of confederation. To this statement Sir John Macdonald replied : There was a good deal of apprehension in Lower Canada, on the part of the minority there, as to the possible effects of confederation on their rights on the subject of education, and it was the intention of the government, if parliament approved the scheme of confederation, to lay before the House this session certain amendments to the school law to operate as a sort of guarantee against any infringement by the majority of the rights of the minority in this matter.

Which majority ? The Roman Catholic majority against the Protestant majority.

Before confederation is adopted the government would bring down a measure to amend the school law of Lower Canada protecting the rights of the minority.

Who were the men who were exacting a promise and more than a promise, exacting a law ? They were the representatives of the Protestant minority. They wanted to be sure there would be a law to protect the Protestant minority of Quebec before they consented to the scheme of confederation. But, Mr. Holton was not satisfied with the answer of Sir John Macdonald. He said :

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance——

The Minister of Finance was a Protestant too. Throughout the course of the session, Mr. Holton was very persistent and he came back to the question every day.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance as to the course to be pursued in reference to the Lower Canada School Law, which was promised to be introduced this session.

To this the like reply was made as before, but still Mr. Holton was not satisfied, and repeatedly thereafter he brought up the question again, indicating the intense interest felt in the situation by the Protestants of Lower Canada. Mr. Sanborn, another Protestant representative from Lower Canada, gave expression to the same feeling as follows :

The English, who were a fourth of the population, and who, by habit and tradition, had their own views of public policy, were left entirely without guarantee other than the good feelings and tolerant spirit of the French. Was this safe ?

Mr. Sanborn represented a county in Quebec, the population of which was half French Canadian, and still he wanted to be sure of having a law before he consented to the scheme of confederation. Sir John Rose, one of the most prominent representatives of the lower Canadian minority expressed his sense of the keen feeling that prevailed among his people in these terms :

It is a very grave and anxious question for us to consider, especially the minority in Lower Canada, how far our mutual rights and interests are respected and guarded.

Sir George Cartier answered Sir John Rose as follows :

It is the intention of the government that in that law there will be a provision that will secure the Protestant minority in Lower Canada such management and control over their schools as will satisfy them.

Mr. Chairman, in the presence of a vast majority who do not think as I do in regard to this question, I want to know if we are not justified in asking to-day that the rights and privileges which we have enjoyed and which men like Sir John Rose, Mr. Holton, Mr. Sanborn and others, representing the Protestant minority of Quebec, so sincerely and perseveringly demanded on behalf of the minority in Quebec, shall not be taken away from us. I see that Mr. Haultain also took part in this discussion. I wonder if that gentleman is the father of the present premier of the Northwest Territories ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He was.

Mr. BERGERON. Colonel Haultain from Upper Canada. I believe he was the father of our Mr. Haultain. This is what he says :

I am aware from personal intercourse with many gentlemen belonging to that section of the community that they do feel a very strong aversion to this scheme because, as they say, it will place them at the mercy of the French Canadians . . . and I must say, for my own part, that I do think the Protestant minority have some grounds for this fear. . . . I speak what I know when I say there is a feeling of distrust on the part of a great many of the Protestants of Lower Canada.

These men have all gone. If they were living to-day, would they not be here to thank the majority in the province of Quebec and to offer their most sincere congratulations to that majority for the way their people have been treated since 1867? We do not deserve any credit for that. If you were to meet a French Canadian in Quebec and say to him : I am glad to see that you are treating the Protestants well in your province, he would shrug his shoulders and he would think it quite natural that they should be so treated. I have seen parishes in the province of Quebec in which there was only one Protestant and he was the mayor. I have seen parishes where there were only a few Protestants and where the mayor was an English speaking Protestant. They would not come down to think of a thing of that sort.

Later on, some promises were made to the province of Manitoba besides those which I read a few moments ago. I desire to say only one word en passant because this is part of another discussion in respect to the rights and privileges that these people have in the list of rights. Article X was as follows :

Article 10. That the English and French languages be common in the legislature and courts, and all public documents and Acts of legislature be published in both languages.

This is another promise which has been broken. Now, I have spoken of the demands of our English friends in Quebec before confederation, and I have said that these are sentiments which we cannot question. This brings me to ask this question: Should religion be taught in the schools ? In 1896, it was rumoured that my right hon. friend the leader of the government—I do not want to say that it was true—was convinced of one thing and that was that it was better that there should be no religion in the schools. Of course, he would not say that in the province of Quebec, but it was said somewhere. I say that is a non-Catholic proposition. You cannot be a good Catholic and be an observer of your religion if you are of opinion that there should be no religion taught in the schools. I will go further than that. I am saying this to our English Protestant friends. The teaching of religion in the school is part of our religion and I am going to show it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is theology.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I am not going as far as that. I will take the statement of His Lordship Bishop Taché, of Winnipeg, who spoke for the bishops, as he says, for the clergy and for the Roman Catholics and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice may contradict that if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Monseigneur Taché, and this is given under affidavit, says :

Roman Catholic schools have always formed an integral part of the work of the Roman Catholic church. That church has always considered the education of the children of Roman Catholic parents as coming peculiarly within its jurisdiction. The school, in the view of the Roman Catholics, is in a large measure, 'the children's church,' and wholly incomplete and largely abortive if religious exercises be excluded from it. The church has always insisted upon its children receiving their education in schools conducted under the supervision of the church, and upon their being trained in the doctrines and faith of the church.

In education the Roman Catholic Church attaches very great importance to the spiritual culture of the child, and regards all education unaccompanied by instruction in its religious aspects as possibly detrimental and not beneficial to children. With this regard the church requires that all teachers of children shall not only be members of church, but shall be thoroughly imbued with its principles and faith ; shall recognize its spiritual authority and conform to its directions. It also requires that such books be used in schools with regard to certain subjects as shall combine religious instruction with those subjects, and this applies peculiarly to all history and philosophy.

Later on Archbishop Taché says:

When in the foregoing paragraphs I speak of the faith or belief of the Roman Catholic Church I speak not only for myself and the church in its corporate capacity, but for its members.

That is the pronouncement of Archbishop Taché, and that is good sound Catholic doctrine. I come now to glance at the system of education in England, that great Protestant country; and surely we cannot expect the Protestants of Canada to be more Protestant than the Protestants of England. When people talk about the independence of Canada, I always think that after all the best thing for us here is to stick closely to the British connection, because in the mother land we find the principle of freedom of religion exemplified in its most perfect form. I do not say this as a reproach, but I do believe there is more fanaticism in Canada against Roman Catholics than there is in all England. That may be due to want of knowledge on the part of those who are prejudiced against us, but nevertheless that appears to be the fact. The reason of it I do not know; but it has always been a conundrum to me why the people of England are broader in their views on these matters than are the people of Canada. The people of England have shown their liberality by the Education Act passed by the British parliament in 1902, and that Act was the outcome of a Royal Commission appointed in 1886 by our late lamented Majesty Queen Victoria. During this discussion we have often heard advocated, separate schools in which no religion at all would be taught; we have heard non-sectarian schools exalted; men sincere in that view say: Why not send Canadian children to school together and bring them up in friendly feeling and in harmony. I have already said that this is ideal, but it is not practical and whenever it has been attempted it has been a failure. As a Roman Catholic I declare that religion must be taught in the schools, and when I make that declaration I am in accord with a great body of the Protestant people. Later on I shall read the curriculum of an English Protestant college in my county, and which will show that they care a great deal about religion in Protestant schools. It would seem that some people are in favour of non-sectarian schools only when they want to entrap the Roman Catholics, and then they say: We will have no religion at all in the schools, we will educate all the children together. But, when these gentlemen have the management of their own schools for their own Protestant children there is not such a demand for non-sectarian schools, and their schools have as much religion taught in them as have the Roman Catholic schools. The Royal Commission appointed in England in 1886 looked over the educational systems of the different European countries and I quote from their report:

> In Prussia, in all the elementary schools the religious instruction is compulsory as well as the other branches of instruction. The religious instruction is given by the teacher, exceptionally by clergymen and by special teachers of religion.

That is the way I understand religious instruction; I do not understand it as being merely one-half hour's instruction at the close of the school day. The religious instruction which the right hon. gentleman is giving in the Northwest schools means that when a child has been in class for six or seven hours learning secular subjects, there is to be half an hour for religious teaching. What veneration can a child so taught have for religion. Will he be imbued with the idea that it is the most important of all things to learn and practice if he wants to be an honest man and a good citizen. What will he think of religion when it is relegated to one-half hour at the close of the day? That is giving the Catholics of the Territories a stone instead of a loaf of bread. Here we have the example of Protestant Prussia which I hope every man here will heed, and in the schools of which country religion has a first place. The report continues:

> Religious instruction is obligatory on all the scholars. For the religious instruction of the minority provisions are made partially at the expense of the state. For this purpose means are regularly granted by the government.

They are not afraid in Prussia to grant state aid to teach the children religion and morality.

> In Saxony religious instruction is given in the schools of the state; in Protestant schools by the master, in Catholic schools by priests.
> The religious instruction is obligatory on all the scholars but the minority of Catholic scholars would be taught by the local Catholic priests.

And yet that is in a Protestant country; a country more Protestant than Canada:

> In Wurtemburg the schools of the state give religious as well as secular instruction. One-third part of the school time is devoted to religious instruction.

It is not one-half hour at the close of the day, but one-third of the entire school time is given to the teaching of religion:

> The greatest part of the religious instruction is given by the teacher. The religious instruction is not obligatory on all the scholars. The minority may take part in the religious instruction of the majority, but if the parents prefer their children may not do so, they may be excused.
> In Bavaria in the schools of the state religious instruction forms part of the curriculum, and is given by the parish priest. The religious instruction is obligatory on all the scholars.

These quotations are from the report of a Royal Commission of England, and on that report I assume was founded the English Education Act of 1902, under which not only do they teach religion in the schools but they teach the religion that the parent desires, and no religion will be taught in the English schools unless it is approved of by the bishop of each denomination. And why is this? It is because the great principle is understood in England, that the state has not the right to teach the child in any way other than as the parent desires. That is the natural right of the parent. No law and no constitution can change that. It is the natural law that you have the right to educate your child as you desire. But, my right hon. friend is giving to the state the control of the education of the child, and if the Catholic minority in the Northwest Territories do not want to avail itself of the education which it provides, then they will have to pay out of their own pockets for private education, and at the same time pay taxes to support the state education of which they disapprove. Now, let me point out that in the town of Valley-field in my county, there is an English Protestant college called the Gault Institute. In some remarks which I made in this House on a previous occasion I expressed the idea that there was not much religion taught in Protestant schools. I had in my mind more than anything else non-sectarian schools. I received immediately the curriculum of the Gault Institute and I found there was lots of religion in it and the religious features were marked so that I would not overlook them. In scripture I find in different classes the following items :

The Acts of the Apostles, the Gospel of St. Luke, Life and Words of Christ, Selections from the Life of Christ, Selections from the Life of Christ, Selections from the Life of Christ, Stories from the Life of Christ.

I do not believe the majority in this House are in favour of having no religious instruction in schools. I know very well the majority of the members from Quebec cannot be in favour of that. If you must have religion in the school, what kind of religion will you have ? What is taught in the Galt institute is very good religion, but is that the way that French Canadians would like their children to be taught in religion ? My right hon. friend knows very well they would not. More than that, my impression is that it is forbidden by the bishops to let the children go to schools where another religion is taught. Whether they are right or wrong that is the position, and for that reason I say that in the Northwest Territories by your amendment you are giving what ? Schools where no religion at all is taught, except that half-hour after school. That will be taught in the way I have read in the Protestant schools and in another way in the Roman Catholic schools, after the classes are over. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows very well that is not the spirit of Roman Catholic schools, but he will do as the member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) did last night, make apologies, saying it is true we would like to give more, but we cannot do it. Is that the way that those who built up this country spoke ? Is that the way Cartier spoke when he wanted to get the Militia Bill passed and was threatened with defeat in consequence ? He introduced the Bill, he was defeated, he brought it on again and was returned and carried the Bill, and my right hon. friend could have done the same; he could have done better than Cartier, he could have carried his measure and he knows in his heart it is the only measure that could be carried that could do justice to that minority and not only that but to the Roman Catholic element in Canada. If my hon. friend has done that because he expects to have more peace in the future, if he has done it as the only thing by which he could have peace he has made an awful mistake. I do not know in the little of history I have read that injustice has ever lasted very long ; nothing but contentment will last. This amendment will never stand until there is redress to the amendment he has proposed. I wish to refer to an article from a paper which I read the other day. There are in Quebec some papers which reproduce extracts from papers in Ontario in order to inflame the population of our province. This practice was deprecated by some hon. gentlemen opposite last night and I join them in that. We have a press which does a great deal of harm by reproducing articles from papers in Ontario, articles which I do not defend but which I think very bad. A great many of these papers are not party papers, and of course no party can be held responsible for their actions. The papers I want to speak of are in the same line. I have seen it stated that Catholic teaching and separate schools had a tendency to diminish the loyalty of the people. Mr. Chairman, you know better than that. Anybody who has read the history of this country knows better than that. I will take the contrary proposition. I say give to Roman Catholics their schools, treat them as England has treated them after the cession and you will have the same results that we have seen in the past. In 1875 when the rebels in the United States wanted to take Canada, when they came here and wanted to take from England these immense possessions of which we are now so proud, who was the man of authority who stood by the British flag and who held the French Canadians by his suasion and influence ? It was Monseigneur Jean Olivier Briand, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Quebec.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Bishop of Quebec ?

Mr. BERGERON. Bishop or archbishop, he was the highest ecclesiastical authority at that time.

In 1812, when 300 or 400 Canadians, most of them French Canadians, defeated the Americans at Chateauguay, who was the bishop who issued a mandement to the people of this country to stand by the British flag and the British constitution if it was not Mgr. Joseph Octave Plessis, who was then the highest Roman Catholic authority in this country ?

In 1837 when some of our people rightly or wrongly—this is not the place to discuss that—though they should rise in rebellion against the British government, or rather against the Canadian government, who was the bishop—and he has been censured very often by some politicians in Quebec—who told the people to keep cool, to go back to the laws of the country, to go back to the flag that was protecting them and not to rebel against that flag, if he was not Jean Jacques Lartique, first bishop of Montreal ?

I am saying this to show that those who contend that separate schools or the Roman Catholic religion tend to take away the loyalty of the people are making an awful mistake. I shall now say something which is personal and I take advantage of this opportunity to answer certain things which were said against me. In 1899, on October 13, a dinner was given at the city of St. John to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Foster). It was the first time there was a question of sending a contingent to South Africa. I happened to be speaking at the time the news came and I said then, without consulting anybody—and I did not have to consult anybody, it was coming from the heart—that after the speech made by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in England, when he had said openly that whenever there would be any danger to the British flag, let the bugle be sounded and help would come from the colonies, particularly from Canada, I said then, immediately, that it was the duty of Canadians to follow up what my right hon. friend had said and that I hoped Canadians would go to the defence of that flag which is our only guarantee in this country. In saying that I said I had no doubt the province of Quebec would do its duty. I was assailed by Liberals on all the hustings of Quebec, in the many election campaigns I have made since, because I had proposed that, saying I wanted to send Canadians to South Africa, and had offered 10,000 men of the province of Quebec ! I have answered that and I am doing it now in a way it can go everywhere. I mention this because if we are to believe the stories circulated in those newspapers to which I refer and our loyalty is to be affected by our religion, I should be most disloyal, I should be most disloyal, because I happen to be a pupil of the Jesuits !

In speaking about the ordinances of 1892 my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) yesterday said, and said correctly, that the government were mistaken if they thought they would make the country believe that they could not go further than the ordinances of 1892. Of course my hon. friend, in a very delicate way, left it to be understood that if these ordinances were not disallowed that was the fault of the government then in power. But my right hon. friend accused the Conservative government of not having disallowed these ordinances in 1892. In making this argument he quoted from a report of the Privy Council of the 5th February, 1894, but he read only the conclusion of that report, which is as follows :

> The committee of the Privy Council regret that the change made in relation to education —and so on.

I need not read the whole of the conclusion as it is already in ' Hansard.' But he should have read more of the report. In reply to those who say that the Conservative government should have disallowed these ordinances but were afraid to do so, let me read this part of the report, and I think the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General said something the other day very much on these lines. The contention of Sir John Thompson was that the ordinances passed by the legislature of the Northwest Territories did not affect the law passed by this government and consequently if this government had disallowed those ordinances, that would have been tantamount to their disallowing their own laws.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When did I say that ?

Mr. BERGERON. I said I was not sure whether it was the Minister of Justice who said it, but some one on that side did so It is in any case very good law and the hon gentlemen need not be ashamed of it. I heard it said by some one on that side, and thought it must have been the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General because it was a question of law. I take this from the report :

> While an appeal in the sense of the provisions of the British North America Act, referring to appeals to the Governor in Council, on matters affecting education in the province of Canada, is not established as regards the Territories, the committee of the Privy Council feel confident that any suggestion having Your Excellency's authority would be given all proper consideration by the assembly and by the council, and the committee consider themselves justified in entertaining this confidence, more especially as in the same enactment as that under which the Northwest assembly is organized and exercises its functions (the Northwest Territories Act, section 14) the following provision is made :

That was the reason given by the government at that time for not disallowing the law of 1892. As regards the other law of 1887 or 1888, what my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said is perfectly correct. If on a previous occasion I said the law of 1892 instead of 1888, that was a lapsus linguae. The disallowance of the second one would not have prevented the first one which was in operation already, from having full course.

My amendment does not differ very much from that of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) except that to my mind it is more clear. There would be no danger of having any litigation over it, and those who are in favour of granting denominational schools or of rendering justice to the Catholic minority, those who believe that the promises made long ago to the French Canadians and Roman Catholics both in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories should in honour be kept, should stand by this amendment, which gives not only to the minority in the Northwest Territories the schools they desire——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I presume I may now put some questions to my hon. friend, in conformity with his suggestion that any questions to be put to him should be reserved until he had finished his address. I would like to put one or two. The first question is whether this amendment is intended in effect to restore the original clause 16 ?

Mr. BERGERON. No, my amendment reads very well.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think it does, as I shall point out. In what respect does it differ from the original clause 16 ?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has not been able in the last four weeks to show the difference between clause 16, No. 1 and clause 16, No. 2, which is evidence that the language of these clauses is not clear. That of mine, I submit, is clear. Nobody can make a mistake in reading it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a question open to doubt. Is my hon. friend able to explain the difference which exists between his amendment and the original clause 16, if there is any difference ?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to be discourteous, my answer is there. I contend that my amendment gives the minority what I think they should have. It may be much like clause 16, No. 1, but it is not the same thing. I contend that the language of my amendment is clear, that it can only mean one thing. I voted for clause 16, No. 1, and if that had been accepted, I would not have moved this amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Therefore my hon. friend moves his amendment because the original clause 16 would, in his judgment, give to the minority those rights and privileges to which they are entitled, and that the second clause 16 takes them away, or practically does not secure them.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not all. I believe clause 16, No. 1 would have given to the minority the school laws of 1875, or the principle of these laws, because, as I said before, they embody the principle of separate schools, and would give them separate schools in spite of the ordinances which have been passed since. There might have been a case for contention before the courts, but at any rate, I think they would have then secured their rights. Clause 16, No. 2, to my mind does away with the law of 1875, and does away with the principle of Roman Catholic schools, and only gives to the minority the schools granted by chapters 29, 30 and 31 of the ordinance of 1901, which was very much like the ordinances of 1892 and 1898. My amendment goes further than that, and avoids all doubt and all chance of litigation, because it says as clearly as it can be said in the English language that the Catholics of that country shall have Catholic schools when they want them, and the Protestant shall have Protestant schools when they want them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So that in effect my hon. friend's opinion is that the original clause would have granted more, and that if the original clause had remained he would not have moved this amendment?

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact that is true.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will put one more question to my hon. friend. I would like him to tell me what, in his opinion, is the meaning of these words used by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) when he was discussing the clause 16, No. 2, as they will be found on page 3213 of 'Hansard :'

> In this connection let me say that we have before us three drafts of proposed legislation in the very able communication made by Mr. Haultain to the government, which has been brought down to this House. There is a draft which, at first sight, seemed to me to go even farther than did the first educational clause of my right hon. friend, and farther than this one, and that clause is to be found in Mr. Haultain's draft, at page 14 of the papers produced before the Northwest Territories assembly.

Further on he says:

> I think they might urge that at any rate. As to the first educational clause that was brought down I must say that it did not seem to me to have any other effect than to create in the public mind an extremely erroneous impression as to what we were doing for the new provinces. Any man who takes the trouble to inquire will be able to ascertain that by the clause relating to education which was first submitted to the attention of the House we were not breaking in upon the educational system of the Northwest Territories ; not introducing a separate school system exactly as it existed in the province of Quebec, but that we were following the established order of things in the Northwest Territories, and it is probably due to the haste with which that clause was drawn that all the agitation that subsequently arose is to be attributed, because in reality what did that clause give to the Northwest Territories ? It gave separate schools.

Then further on in the same speech the hon. member for Jacques Cartier goes on, and I wish to draw the attention of my hon. friend from Beauharnois to what he says:

> They are not denominational schools ; certainly not. So, I do not see in the last enactment——

That is clause 16, No. 2.

> ——that there is any concession—very far from it. I think the last amendment perhaps goes a little farther than the original enactment which caused so much excitement, because it defines more clearly what the privileges of the separate schools are. They were not defined at all in the original enactment. It defines them by reference to the chapters of the Northwest Ordinances where they are fully explained, so that it defines more clearly these privileges, and it may be argued that it secures to the separate schools the right of religious instruction. I am not just sure under the first enactment that it would have been possible to say in the Northwest Territories : You have the right to separate schools, that is granted, you will have them but you have no right even to the half-hour of religious instruction because it is not laid down in the bond. It is not in the Dominion enactment, and we will withdraw that right from you. This enactment goes a little farther, because it refers to the ordinance which secures the right of religious instruction.

I would like my hon. friend to say if these words in any way affect his opinion with respect to the relative merits of the two sections?

Mr. BERGERON. I thought I had given my answer before. I do not suppose he wants me to say that I differ in opinion from my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier? I have given my opinion, I have said what I thought. If this clause 16, No. 1 had remained I would have voted for it, in fact I did vote for it, because it went far enough. The clause 16, No. 2, in my humble opinion, does not give anything to the minority, and I propose to amend it so that, to my mind at least, it shall say more clearly what it means. You cannot make any mistake if you take my amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We will have occasion to see that in a moment. I understand my hon. friend thinks that this second clause does not go so far as the first, that it falls far short of the first, and he wants to revert to 16, No. 2, by his amendment.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I go further than clause No. 1.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. gentleman's amendment reads this way:

Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if at the date fixed for the coming into force of this Act, the territory included in the said province already a province, the word 'union' in the said section meaning the said date.

Does my hon. friend think he conveys very much meaning in these words 'the word union in the said section meaning the said date?' If he had said the 'union at the said date' it would have been better.

The legislature shall have the right to pass laws with reference to education, but it shall always guarantee (a) the existence of separate schools——

How will the legislature proceed to do it?

Mr. BERGERON. I have not the advantage of being assisted, as the hon. gentleman is, by a lot of legal employees behind him. I concede immediately that my language is not perhaps what it should be, but surely he will give me the credit to admit that my meaning is there anyway.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be there, but I cannot see it. He says it is much clearer than the first clause.

Mr. BERGERON. To my mind it is. You can play on words in the second clause, but you cannot play on the meaning.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Unfortunately for the hon. gentleman, in legislation, words are intended to convey a meaning; we can only gather the meaning from the words.

Mr. BERGERON. If my amendment carries, we will go to the Department of Justice and with the help of my hon. friend we will make a clause that will be well worded.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The material is not there for the purpose. His amendment goes on:

(a) The existence of separate schools and their enjoyment by the minority, Protestant or Catholic, who may claim them; (b) the effective control of said schools in matters of teaching by the said minority; (c) the full liberty for the majority in any school section to have such school as it may desire.

Mr. BERGERON. Clause 16, No. 2 prevents them from having such schools as they may desire.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What provision does the hon. gentleman make for the collection of rates and assessments for the support of his schools by his clause? Are there to be any rates paid for the maintenance of these schools?

Mr. BERGERON. We understand that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Where?

Mr. BERGERON. The whole system of schools exists already in the Northwest Territories. We do not want to take away from the minority any of the privileges they enjoy to-day. I say in my amendment:

The equitable and proportionate distribution between the majority and the minority of all moneys appropriated for education.

You cannot make it clearer than that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend does not realize——.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has nothing to say in defence of his own amendment and therefore he has to talk about mine.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend does not realize that this specifies that the school law——

Mr. BERGERON. I did not expect such a success as that which I have achieved with my amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think my hon. friend did expect success. I do not think he had any conception of what was involved in his amendment. My hon. friend does not realize that this specifies that the laws providing for the collection of these rates are to be superseded by this amendment.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I am qualified to be Minister of Justice later on if I can frame a law which cannot be understood by my hon. friend.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think my hon. friend need consider it a great feat to make a law I do not understand. There are dozens and dozens of people in this country who could do that—even men who are not lawyers.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has not been able to explain yet the difference between section 16, No. 1 and section 16, No. 2.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I may not have been able to explain it, but I have tried to do it.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, the hon. gentleman tried to do it. He came down here with a big typewritten document, he stood within the four corners of it and when he was asked some questions he would not say a word.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think after what my hon. friend has said that I might perhaps bring down forty typewritten documents and explain them and then my hon. friend would not understand what they meant. Now let us deal with this. I had my quarter of an hour; let the hon. gentleman take his.

Mr. BERGERON. I have no objection to giving my hon. friend all he wants, if the government are satisfied to spend a week or ten days more on this question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have only been speaking for ten minutes and I am only going to keep my hon. friend a minute or two more on the gridiron.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not on the gridiron at all.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am quite sure my hon. friend likes it. He shows that he does. Would my hon. friend be good enough to tell me what he means by the words 'school section' in subsection (c) ? He says that :

> The legislature shall have the right to pass laws with reference to education, but it shall always guarantee (c) the full liberty for the majority in any school section to have such school as it may desire.

What is the meaning of that ?

Mr. BERGERON. That means, under the amendment of my hon. friend and by the acceptance of the ordinance of 1901, that wherever the majority is Roman Catholic they will have public schools. They will not have their own schools.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend says :

> The full liberty for the majority in any school section.

Is there any such term as 'school section' in the Northwest Territories respecting education ? What is the meaning of 'school section'? The words 'school section' have a well defined and well understood meaning. In the Dominion Lands Act we have in reference to school sections and townships, but my hon. friend's amendment would be applicable to school laws and not school districts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend will vote for that I will change those words.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Now, let us get on. I will only be another minute.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, go on.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend provides for the—— > Equitable and proportionate distribution between the majority and the minority of all moneys appropriated for education.

What provision does he make for the Dominion lands grant ?

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the government are going to have some very clever men as premiers there and I am sure that they will find a way of distributing the moneys appropriated for education. They will gather the money for education, and what I desire is that they shall distribute that money to the majority and the minority according to their needs for the purposes of education.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So that my hon. friend is going to leave it to the clever men of these provinces to deal with this question as they chose and as they think best.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is not serious. He knows very well what it means.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If that is my hon. friend's amendment it gives to the Roman Catholic minority of the Northwest Territories absolutely nothing at all.

Mr. BERGERON. If that were true my hon. friend and all his friends behind him would vote for it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is quite fair to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). Whether he be literally exact in the terms of the amendment which he has proposed or not, at least this may be said in regard to it, that not only in dozens of Bills that are brought down every session but in this very Bill which is now being discussed by this committee there has been infinitely greater need for amendment than any that can be found in this amendment. Take clause 15, for instance: we have had four versions of it already. We have had two versions of clause 16. We have had amendments without number. We have found it necessary to make amendments to a great many measures brought down by the administration, an administration that has a Department of Justice, that has a Minister of Justice, a Deputy Minister of Justice, and in the preparation of this particular measure the hon. minister has had the assistance not only of the Deputy Minister of Justice but of two or three gentlemen, for example, Mr. Beck, who have been especially brought into the Department of Justice to aid in the drafting of this clause. To answer my hon. friend as the Minister of Justice has answered him by some more or less minute criticism of phrases and words when the idea is infinitely plain, an unworthy answer, an answer which should not have been made by a government that is so susceptible to criticism in this regard.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not admit the criticism of my hon. friend. I say that the Bill as brought down originally gave evidence of the best draftsmanship that could be produced in connection with it and that the amendments which were made were not made for the purpose of differently expressing the original intention but for the expression of a different intention.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend deny that in clause 15 there were words that were absolutely meaningless ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Nothing of the sort.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say there were.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Nothing of the sort. I say the contrary. I say that the original clause which was brought down showed better draftsmanship than does the clause in the form in which it is now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I deny that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend the leader of the opposition understands so thoroughly what my hon. friend from Beauharnois has in mind in proposing this amendment, he had better explain it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not my province to explain it. I think there is a very well defined idea and the only suggestion which the hon. minister has made is a quibble—I do not use the word in an offensive sense, but I cannot think of any other at the moment to express my meaning—as to certain forms and expressions. He says that the word 'section' is not found in the legislation of the Northwest Territories. Then the hon. Minister of Justice with a triumphant wave of his hand asks my hon. friend what he means. The answer of my hon. friend is that if the word 'district' is a better word the word 'district' can be used. But, I say that there were words in clause 15 which I have just referred to which had no meaning. We have had legislation submitted by the government to this House on many occasions which required extensive amendment. This is one of the many illustrations that I can call to mind. We had legislation of that kind brought down by the government last session. Take for instance the Railway Act of two years ago ; there were over 1,000 amendments made to that Bill in this House, notwithstanding the fact that the government paid $2,500, I think it was—

Mr. STOCKTON. Double that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. More than that, perhaps to special counsel in New Brunswick for the purpose of drafting it. And yet the Minister of Justice was extremely critical of this amendment, the plain intent of which is evident, even if it is not couched in every respect in the exact words in which it would be couched if my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) had behind him a Department of Justice, with his deputy minister and his half dozen or more of assistants, and with four or five lawyers from outside, to help him in choosing the exact words that would best express the meaning he intended. The Minister of Justice asks what the intention of the amendment is ? I have not read it carefully until this moment, but I think I can see in it a very plain meaning. It seems designed to express, in somewhat plainer terms—outside of any verbal inaccuracies, such as those to which the minister called attention—the idea that the Prime Minister at least had in his mind when he first introduced this Bill with its clause 16. I am not responsible for my hon. friend's (Mr. Bergeron's) amendment ; I did not see it or know of it, or of his intention to move it, until I saw it on the order paper. All that I desire to say at this moment is that I do not think that under the circumstances it is a fair way to treat an amendment put forward such as this, or a fair way to answer the hon. gentleman who presented it in a very moderate and able speech, to say that it contains some inaccuracies of drafting, such as have occurred even in legislation brought down by the hon. Minister of Justice himself. I do not say that with the idea of taunting the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I have always recognized his ability and spoken of it. I regard him as an able lawyer, and a man who fills his position well. And he knows, as every one knows, who has had anything to do with the drafting of statutes or other difficult documents, that it is impossible for a document of that kind to be at once framed in a way which will be above criticism as to its verbiage. The hon. gentleman will remember that, after this House had spent a great deal of time—too much time, according to hon. gentlemen opposite—on the Transcontinental Railway Bill two years ago, it was found necessary to bring in, during the following session, a Bill to correct an error so obvious that every member of this House should be ashamed that it escaped his attention in the first place, an error so obvious that when our eyes were directed to it in that following session, every one of us wondered how it could have escaped his notice in the first place. Under these circumstances, I think my hon. friend from Beauharnois is entitled to more respectful answer than that given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick).

Mr. BERGERON. If it is only to the wording of this amendment that the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fitzpatrick's) criticism is directed, I am quite willing that my amendment should be treated as the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) expressed himself as willing that this Bill should be treated. This is what the right hon. gentleman said :

I do not say that our drafting is absolutely unimpeachable.

I do not say that my drafting is absolutely unimpeachable.

I have stated our view and aim, and to this aim and purpose we propose to adhere——

I say the same thing about my amendment.

—but I do not intend to be committed absolutely to the drafting of clause No. 2.

And I do not intend to be committed absolutely to the drafting of this amendment.

If it be insufficient, we are willing to consider any reasonable amendment, provided it be on the line I have stated and on no other.

And, as to my amendment, I am willing to be bound by those very words. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) indulges in some persiflage at my expense. I can stand a great deal of that kind of thing—I can stand even more than that. But what I want—and this is the object of my amendment—is that there shall be no misunderstanding as to what we are voting for. If he can phrase it in any better way, I will be happy to accept his suggestions. I am sincere in this matter. I am not doing this to embarrass anybody. My object is to render justice to the minority in the Northwest. Now, the hon. gentleman has put a good many questions to me ; perhaps he will be good enough to answer two questions of mine. In the first place, what is the difference between clause 16 in the original Bill and clause 16 as amended ? And, in the second place, why did he (Mr. Fitzpatrick) make the change—for what consideration ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not intend to enter into a controversy with the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) as to the relative merits of drafting. I can only say that the drafting that I brought down was good—if I do say it myself, it was pretty good. I know some people who have said that it was very good——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope the minister——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Sit down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will sit down in a moment. I trust the Minister of Justice did not understand me as casting any aspersion upon the drafting of the Bill as a whole. I pointed to one clause which seemed to contain an obvious error, as the words, apparently, had no meaning. And this I pointed to as a fair answer to his comments upon the amendment of my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron).

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If I were to attempt any criticism of myself in these matters, I would not criticise my drafting, but my good nature. I am tempted, through my good nature, to make changes, even when I think they are not at all necessary. However, this is a lesson to me by which I may profit in the future. The question is as to the merits of the amendment—not as to whether it is well drafted or not. The Prime Minister said, when he introduced the Bill, that he was not only willing, but anxious, that any improvement possible should be suggested. And here is the answer, on the part of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), in the shape of an amendment to this clause 16, No. 2. By way of meeting the suggestion of the Prime Minister that suggestions for improvement will be welcome, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) gives us this amendment, which, I say, has no meaning.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fitzpatrick's) opinion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is my opinion. And I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) to name any lawyer on the other side of the House who will say that it has any meaning. He told us that his reason for introducing this amendment was to make the meaning of section 16, No. 1, clear. In what respect does it make it clear ? Does it make it clear by declaring merely that this section is to guarantee full liberty to the majority in a school section ? Does it make it clearer, so far as it omits any reference whatever to the Dominion land fund or securing any portion of that fund to the minority ? Does it make it clearer so far as it omits all reference to the assessment ? Does it make it clearer so far as it omits to make any provision for the maintenance of these separate schools that the hon. gentleman speaks about ?

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) want an answer to that ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. gentleman is sincere, he knows what I mean by this clause ; he knows that I want to secure to the minority all that they are entitled to. If the phraseology of my amendment is not correct, let the hon. gentleman improve it and I will be glad.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is not necessary that I should improve it. We had the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), in whose amendment there was some meaning.

Mr. BERGERON. And I voted for it, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) voted against it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then why weary the House with a repetition of the same thing ? If this amendment means anything, it is the same thing as the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. BERGERON. But not the same wording.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I congratulate the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that it is not the same wording.

Mr. BERGERON. I mean the same thing that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) meant. I want the minority to get their rights. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) does not want that, and he is making this fuss because he wants to clear his skirts. But he can't do it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not trying to clear my skirts. I take the responsibility for clause 16 as it stands; and I took the responsibility of voting against the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I did not walk out into the passage to avoid a vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Who did ? I didn't.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This amendment is one thing or the other. If it is intended to do what the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle was intended to do, it is a vain repetition of the same thing. But I never can understand what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) means to do. I gather that this is intended to accomplish the object that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) had in moving his amendment. If that be the case why waste the time of this House moving the same amendment twice over ?

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend allow me a question. I see in this amendment :

(c) the full liberty for the majority in any school section to have such school as it may desire.

I presume 'school section' would be 'school district.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is not much similitude between 'school district' and 'school section.'

Mr. MONK. But this raises the point which was discussed last night and which materially differs from the law which the government has placed before us. It raises the point of the protection of the majority when the majority happens to be the Catholic minority of the province in a school district where they have organized a public school. I think that appears very clearly by this subsection (c). Has the Minister of Justice any observation to make on this part of the amendment offered by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) ; the protection, not of a minority in a separate school district, but of the majority when that majority happens to be Catholic and they have organized a public school ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is something I had in mind before to-day. That is something provided for in terms by the original clause 16 which my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) said was not an improvement on clause 16, No. 2, when he told us that clause 16, No. 2, which made no provision for that, was better than clause 16, No. 1. Let me explain this over again. In effect the result of the legislation we are now going to adopt guarantees to the Roman Catholic minority in those school districts where they are a minority with respect to the district, their separate school system. But it does not guarantee to the Roman Catholic minority when they happen to be the majority in a school district any privileges whatever at the present time. That was provided for by the first clause 16, which my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) condemned ; that was the time to speak.

Mr. MONK. What does the Minister of Justice say as to that part of this amendment which endeavours to secure protection in the case indicated ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If that is intended let hon. gentlemen say so.

Mr. MONK. Will the Minister of Justice support it if it says so in plain language ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, I will not support it, but I will not say that the second clause 16 is better than the first.

Mr. MONK. I will explain that when the time comes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I hope you will.

Mr. BERGERON. When the Minister of Justice said that he would vote for it and not go out of the Chamber, I want to know if he insinuated that I went out of the Chamber ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not make any insinuation; I said it right out as I always do.

Mr. BERGERON. It might be inferred that the Minister of Justice insinuated that I left the Chamber.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not responsible for the meaning the hon. gentleman takes from my words.

Mr. BERGERON. If the Minister of Justice refers to me I want to tell him that I stayed right here in the Chamber and never left my place. I never shirk a vote, and he knows it.

Mr. BOURASSA. I rise simply to explain why I shall support this amendment. I agree with the Minister of Justice that the wording of the amendment is not satisfactory. I believe that the amendment I moved last night covers all the questions of principle which the member for Beauharnois seeks to cover, and especially the point raised by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). As was clearly stated by the Minister of Justice on the 8th of June, and has been repeated by him just now, the law of 1875 provided for the rights of the minority throughout the whole province. That is, whether the minority was represented by a local majority or by a local minority. That is the main reason why I was in favour of clause 16, No. 1, and why I am opposed to clause 16, No. 2. The amendment which I moved last night covered that point fully and my only reason for voting for this motion—which if it were adopted I would ask the government to have framed in such way as to give full effect to the intention of the mover—my reason for voting for this motion is that I am not going to be recorded in this House as voting against a motion which affirms the principle of separate schools, and in favour of the amendment moved by the government which in the very words of the Minister of Justice abolishes separate schools for nine-tenths of the Catholic population of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, before voting upon this amendment, I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) if I understood him right last night, when he said that the amendment moved by the hon. premier was a compromise ? Has the hon. Solicitor General said last night that the amendment moved by the premier was giving less to the Catholics in the Northwest than they had the right to ask under the law of 1875.

Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation). My hon. friend is a very able lawyer, with many years' standing. He has my speech before him, he may read it, and see what it means.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The hon. minister answers my question as he generally answers on the hustings of the province of Quebec in presence of a French audience, when there are no shorthand writers to take down his words. He answers my question in the same way he generally answers all the questions by raising the race cry, and I charge him here openly of having been one of the most vehement in that work in every general election since 1896, and even in by-elections. I remember that in the election of 1902 at Saint Martin, in the county of Laval, the hon. Solicitor General instead of discussing the political questions of the day, did nothing else but to ask the people to vote for my opponent because he was a candidate of Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the great French Canadian. Notwithstanding his appeals to race prejudices, I was elected at that time. It was not my intention, Mr. Chairman, to pass any remarks upon this if I had not seen that the hon. minister was last night unable to answer a single word to the excellent and courageous speech of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), whom I congratulate for having had the courage to free himself of the party ties upon this national question, and speak his mind openly. I regret to see the Liberal members of the province of Quebec, and I see some laughing presently, I regret very much, I repeat, to see them voting against this amendment without knowing whether the Catholic minority is sacrified or not.

I would not at all be surprised to learn that the hon. premier and the hon. Minister of Justice have presently before them coming from the western provinces, many letters asking the government to grant to the Catholic minority of these provinces what this minority is deprived of by this amendment. Before going any further, I will be allowed to say a few words upon the nature of this Bill, in order to clear off certain misunderstandings and false impressions which becloud the question in the minds of some sincere people and divert the discussion. The ministerial organs in the province of Quebec made a great fuss about the approval more or less formal of clause 16 as amended, given by His Lordship Bishop Legal of St. Albert. A journalist, whose elegant pen is easily recognized, told his readers that this prelate was the bishop of the Territories in which are included the new provinces and that they were entirely under his jurisdiction. That is not so. The Territories are divided into four dioceses. Regina, the capital, and the greatest part of Assiniboia are in the diocese of St. Boniface. Thus, the approval of Bishop Legal, even if it was true, would lose uuch of its weight. Archbishop Langevin and his two other suffragans, condemned and disapproved of this clause 16, and with them the question is clear and there is no doubt possible. Till we have the exact words of the statement given by Bishop Legal, it would be impossible to say how far and how much it differs from the well known statements of his predecessor, the revered Bishop Grandin of St. Albert, who has strongly condemned the ordinances 22 and 23 (of 1892 and 1893) which are the basis of the school system it is intended to perpetuate by this famous clause 16.

The statement of the government upon the meaning and the bearing of the two clauses 16, has caused an agreeable surprise. We were not accustomed to so much frankness. The discussion will thus be easier, and the ministerial papers will be no more able to continue their campaign of falsehood. In this discussion in which we had to answer to the windy and empty sentences of our opponents, their last cry was : ' Let the provinces be free ; give them their exclusive rights of legislation in matters of education.' But I will make this distinction : You may about educational matters maintain or abolish the minority rights, you may respect or violate the natural rights of the parents and of the conscience, but these things are not properly matters of education, and when the constitution says that a province will have the exclusive right of making laws pertaining to education, but that these laws will respect the rights of the parents and the liberty of conscience, it does not in any way prevent the province to legislate in this matter; it only says this: If you wish to exercise freely your legislative power, you should not violate the natural rights of the parents, you should not hurt the religious persuasions of the people. Is that a limitation of provincial rights? Evidently no. I think it ought to be sufficient to call attention upon the distinction I have already made, to put an end to the recriminations of those who sincerely believe that provincial rights are attacked by clause 16. We must respect their sincerity, but not their astonishing thoughtlessness. I will not say more for the present.

None of those who have spoken on this school question to my mind, Mr. Chairman, sufficiently called our attention to the extracts from the minutes of the council of Assiniboia, published in a blue book in 1894, though these extracts, which could have been utilized before 1894, have to my mind a considerable interest and bearing upon the Northwest school question.

The Northwest territory was a Crown colony which had been given to the Hudson Bay Company. This company had established in that colony a regular civil government, which was keeping order and peace, administering justice, receiving taxes upon imported goods and excise duties, and had established a municipal law. The legislative power was vested in a council composed of the governor of Rupert's Land, of the high officers of the territory, and some advisers.

These extracts contain the names of most of those advisers, if not of all. Amongst them were the Anglican Bishop of Rupert's Land, the Catholic Bishop of the Northwest, who, later on, became bishop of Saint Boniface when Bishop Taché was appointed, many Protestant ministers, and Mr. L. Laflèche, Catholic missionary, who later on became Bishop Laflèche of Three Rivers.

Schools had been established in the territory by Catholic and Protestant missionaries; about 1850 these schools were recognized as being of public necessity. The 1st of May, 1851, Rev. Mr. Cochrane, seconded by Rev. Mr. Laflèche, moved the following resolution:

> To weaken the mischievous and destructive energy of these violent and untamed qualities of human nature which so frequently manifest themselves in society, in a half civilized state, and to strengthen the feelings of honourable independence, to encourage habits of industry, sobriety and economy, it is moved—That £100 be granted from the public fund, to be divided equally between the bishop of Rupert's Land and the bishop of the Northwest to be applied by them, at their discretion, for the purposes of education. Carried unanimously.

Thus, this half civilized country which had at the most a white and half-breed population of an ordinary size town, recognized as a public utility, gave to the schools a grant of money out of the public funds.

At the fall sitting of the same year, 1851, the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Frog Plain presented to the Governor in Council of Assiniboia the following petition:

> To the Governor and Council of Assiniboia,
>
> The petition of the trustees of the Presbyterian church of Frog Plain humbly showeth:
> That, as the improvement of education seems to be more requisite, at least among the Protestants of the settlement, than its mere extension, your petitioners pray, that their minister may receive from the public fund a sum proportioned to the fifty pounds, as aforesaid granted to the Church of England, without prejudice, however, to the recognized equality in the premises, between the Protestants as a whole and the Roman Catholics.
> And your petitioner shall ever pray.
> (Signed) A. ROSS,
> JOHN FRASER. > and the other trustees of the > Presbyterian community.
> Red River Settlement, 26th November 1851.
> Extract from Minutes of Council.
> Dr. Bunn moved and Mr. Laflèche seconded this resolution. That fifteen pounds be granted to the Rev. John Black, of Frog Plain, for the purposes of education in accordance with the petition of the committee of his congregation.
> Carried unanimously.
> Mr. Laflèche gave notice that, at next meeting, he will move for an additional grant to the bishop of Saint-Boniface of fifteen pounds for education in consideration of the additional fifteen pounds now granted for the education of the English population.

A year later, the motion of Mr. Laflèche, had not been presented at the spring sitting, I do not know for what reason. A year later on, on the 9th of December, 1852, the Rev. Mr. Laflèche, seconded by Doctor Bunn, moved: 'that £15 be granted to the bishop of Saint Boniface for the purpose of education.' The motion was carried, the Anglican bishop and the Rev. Mr. Cochrane voted against. These facts prove that denominational schools were recognized and subsidized by the regularly constituted authority of Assiniboia. These schools continued to exist till the organization of that part of the territory as Province of Manitoba, 1870, and at that date they had a vested right which was recognized in the Act 33 Victoria, chapter 3, section 22, subsection 1.

The Northwest Territory had in 1870 a population composed of white and half-breeds of a little over 12,000 inhabitants, of whom 7,000 were Catholics; that territory belonged to the King of England and was a Crown colony. The inhabitants were British subjects, and as such enjoyed the rights and privileges which are always recognized to British subjects. The Hudson Bay Company had, for a sum of money paid by Canada, abandoned all its rights upon that country, which became thus a public domain. By the British North America Act, His Majesty transferred the administration of that part of his domains, as integral part of the Dominion, to the Privy Council of Canada. The British Act 31-32 Victoria, chapter 105, the Canadian Act, 32-33 Victoria, chapter 3, were passed to regulate this transfer from one jurisdiction to another, and provide for the organization of Red River as Province of Manitoba.

The Privy Council for Canada was not an expert in the art of governing and organizing a colony. It would not be saying too much that many of the members of that Privy Council believed that Canada was still a colony at that time. The Privy Council made many mistakes which necessitated the interference of the English cabinet. These mistakes and this interference brought the recognition of the rights and privileges of the inhabitants of the Territories, and the solemn promise that these rights and privileges would always be protected. Right shall be done in all cases, but let us not anticipate. This drama of the transfer of the territory to Canada lasted for more than a year. There were some comical incidents, when the governor of the new province would not be accepted by his subjects ; tragical incidents, such as the execution of Scott, and last the opera bouffe finale, when Fort Garry was taken by Colonel Wolseley. These incidents of so different nature were merely incidents. The main part was the resistance of twelve or thirteen inhabitants of the territory who did not want to come under the government of Canada, the Canadian domination, unless all their rights and privileges would be granted to them. In order to give a better relation of the facts which have direct bearance upon the present Bill, I will quote the great pacificator of the west, the eminent Archbishop of Saint Boniface, whose last years were devoted in claiming the execution of the solemn promises which were made in the name of the Queen and of the government of Canada to this population which had full confidence in him.

I cannot have been used as a medium of pacification, during the difficulties of 1870, and be obliged, to-day, to remain a silent witness of the violation of the promises which, more than anything else, secured that pacification.

As a general proposition, I say without hesitation that what is now going on in Manitoba and the Canadian Northwest, with regard to schools, is a flagrant and unaccountable violation of the assurances given to the Catholic population of these vast countries. Such assurances were entrusted to me for transmission, precisely because I was the chief pastor of that population. My episcopal character did not prevent the civil authorities asking my aid in a settlement of political difficulties ; and I claim the political mission I have accomplished should strengthen my voice when I state that the population was deceived when asked to accept an agreement which it would have repudiated in a very energetical way if it could only have suspected what is going on to-day.

These reproaches are serious, Mr. Chairman, I will establish that they are well founded. Would this not be sufficient to cause to reflect those who in this House believe in the principles of honour and dignity of the Crown ?

It was in March, 1869, that the conditions of the transfer of the Territory of the Northwest to the new Canadian confederation was settled between the imperial government, the commissioners of Ottawa and the Hudson Bay Company. In the course of that negotiation the inhabitants of the country were entirely ignored. Later on, Lord Granville in his despatch to Sir John Young, Governor General, cautioned the government of Canada : 'that the old inhabitants of the country will be treated with such forethought and consideration as may preserve them from the dangers of the approaching change.' This wise advice was not acted upon ; on the contrary, such measures were taken that Lord Granville in a despatch, dated the 3rd November, 1869, did not hesitate to state : 'The Canadian government have by this measure given an occasion to an outburst of violence in the Territory.' The noble lord added afterwards : 'Those proceedings have certainly enhanced the responsibility of the Canadian government.' The imperial authorities, in consequence of the dissatisfaction of the people, took on themselves a closer direction of affairs, in order, according to Lord Granville's words : 'to exhaust all means of explanation and conciliation before having recourse to force.' To comply with such direction the Canadian government asked Vicar General Thibault and my friend Mr. De Salaberry to proceed to Red River, in order to calm the apprehensions of the people. Sir Donald A. Smith received a commission under the great seal of Canada, and started for Fort Garry to use his salutary influence as mediator, and to turn towards that end the resources of his ability and the means that his exalted position placed at his command.

I was then at Rome, enjoying the happiness that the grand and imposing ceremonies and deliberations of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican would procure to a bishop devoted to his church, when a telegrahpic despatch called me to Ottawa. Owing to the importance of the summons, the sovereign pontiff dispensed me from the ordinary rules of the council for obtaining leave of absence. His Holiness granted me a private audience, blessed my mission and myself and added with emotion : 'I bless the people of the Red river, on condition that they will listen to your advice and live in peace and charity.' I left the Eternal City on the 12th January, 1870. On my meeting Sir George Cartier in Montreal, he said to me, with his usual frankness : 'I am happy to see you. We have blundered, and you must help us to undo the mischief.' I proceeded with him to Ottawa, and remained in the capital some ten days. I often met the Governor General and his ministers. His Excellency called me to several private audiences, either alone or with some of his advisers. I had an interview with the whole ministry, and several with its leading members. After I had been made well acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, my departure for the Northwest was fixed for the 17th February. The day before leaving, I had the honour of a long interview with the Governor General. His Excellency handed me the following autograph letter :

Ottawa, 16th February, 1870.

My Dear Lord Bishop,—I am anxious to express to you, before you set out, the deep sense of obligation which I feel is due to you for giving up your residence at Rome, leaving the great and interesting affairs in which you were engaged there, and undertaking in this inclement season the long voyage across the Atlantic, and long journey across this continent for the purpose of rendering service to Her Majesty's government, and engaging in a mission in the cause of peace and civilization.

Lord Granville was anxious to avail of your valuable assistance from the outset, and I am heartily glad that you have proved willing to afford it so promptly and generously.

You are fully in possession of the views of my government, and the imperial government, as I informed you, is earnest in the desire to see the Northwest Territory united to the Dominion on equitable conditions.

I need not attempt to furnish you with any instruction for your guidance beyond those contained in the telegraphic message sent me by Lord Granville on the part of the British cabinet, in the proclamation which I drew up in accordance with that message, and in the letters which I addressed to Governor McTavish, your vicar general and Mr. Smith.

In this last, I wrote : All who have complaints to make, or wishes to explain, are called up to address themselves to me, as Her Majesty's representative, and you may state with the utmost confidence, that the imperial government has no intention of acting otherwise than in perfect good faith towards the inhabitants of the Northwest. The people may rely that respect and attention will be extended to the different religious persuasions ; that title to every description of property will be carefully guarded and that all the franchises which have subsisted, or which the people may prove themselves qualified to exercise, shall be duly continued and liberally conferred.

In declaring the desire and determination of Her Majesty's cabinet, you may safely use the terms of the ancient formula : 'Right shall be done in all cases.'

I wish you, my dear lord bishop, a safe journey and success in your benevolent mission.

Believe me, in all respect, faithfully yours,

JOHN YOUNG.

This great citizen, Archbishop Taché, continues in this memorandum, from which I am quoting entire pages, to prove the royal promise and its violation by the Manitoba ordinance of 1890 and the Northwest ordinance of 1892 :

When I met the Governor General in Ottawa, in 1870, he insisted, in a special manner, that I should accept his word as a sure guarantee. He was not acting simply on the advice of his responsible ministers, but he was acting as the direct representative of our beloved Queen, having received from Her Majesty's government a special direction to that effect.

As a proof of this special mission, His Excellency, in alluding to his proclamation of December, 1869, told me : 'The proclamation I drew up in accordance with the message of Lord Granville.' That proclamation had not yet been promulgated in the Red river settlement ; it was given to me with the request to make it as widely known as possible ; specially among the Catholic population. His Excellency pointed out the following passage : 'By Her Majesty's authority I do assure you that on the union with Canada all your civil and religious rights and privileges will be respected.

The very letter I have quoted above proves also that the Governor was acting in the name of Her Majesty, otherwise he could not have said to me : 'I am anxious to express to you the deep sense of obligation which I feel is due to you for giving up your residence at Rome for the purpose of rendering service to Her Majesty's government.' His Excellency let me know that my services had been desired by the Secretary for the Colonies, and he wrote: 'Lord Granville was anxious to avail of your valuable assistance from the outset, and I am heartily glad that you have proved willing to afford it. Alluding to our long and numerous conversations, His Excellency added : 'The imperial government, as I informed you, is earnest in the desire to see the Northwest Territory united to the Dominion on equitable conditions. The imperial government has no intention of acting otherwise than in perfect good faith towards the inhabitants of the Northwest.'

His Excellency was so anxious that I should persuade the people that they had nothing to fear, on account of their religion, that, in his letter to me, he added a new promise to the assurance given in his proclamation. In that letter, we read 'By Her Majesty's authority, the people may rely that respect and attention will be extended to the different religious persuasions.'

If the proclamation issued by the representative of our beloved Queen, in her name, and framed by special direction from a minister of Her Majesty ; if the letter addressed to me, to corroborate His Excellency's most solemn assurances, given 'by Her Majesty's authority ;' if all that means anything and is not purely idle talk, it means that : at the union of this country with Canada all religious rights and privileges of the different religious persuasions would be treated with respect and attention.

The Catholic populations of Her Majesty's domain were not to be excluded from such advantages ; the proclamation was specially intended for them, as well as the letter addressed to me.

Now, the religious convictions of the Catholics, with regard to the education of children, are well known ; they are the same in all countries and at all times ; they are such that the faithful and their pastors bear all sorts of expenses and annoyances rather than to desist from them.

A Catholic population does not enjoy full religious freedom when impeded from having schools in accordance with their own ideas or convictions. This was well known to the Governor General of Canada when he promised respect and attention for our religious persuasions, when he assured the Catholics that their religious rights and privileges would be respected. It would have been a mockery to add that there would be no protection for Catholic schools. That mockery, the Catholics have to bear it now, both in Manitoba and in the Northwest. Respect and attention are extended to the different religious persuasions, except to Catholics ; so much so that Protestants are granted schools that satisfy them while the Catholics are refused the same privileges ; their schools are surrounded with difficulties on account of religious convictions.

Such is the respect and attention extended 'to one of the different religious persuasions' in Manitoba.

In the first part of this memorial, I have shown, under its true light, the condition of Catholic schools in the Northwest under the ordinance of 1892, which the government of Ottawa has just declined to disallow. More cautious than the government of Manitoba, the government of the Territories has left the Catholic schools in existence, but it has deprived them of what constitutes their true character and of their freedom of action.

The new school laws of Manitoba and of the Northwest are a plain and manifest violation of the assurances given by Her Majesty's authority and in her name.

The Catholic persuasion 'far from receiving the respect and consideration promised to the different religious persuasions,' is deprived of rights and privileges which ought to be considered natural and inalienable in a country which boasts of religious equality and of freedom of conscience.

The Governor General wrote to me : 'In declaring the desire and determination of Her Majesty's cabinet, you may safely use the terms of the ancient formula : right shall be done in all cases.' I used the terms, they were respected for twenty years in school legislation, but since 1890 the lie is given to the formula.

I know, better than any one else in the world, the impression I was asked to convey to the dissatisfied people of Red river, and now that the assurances then given are not taken into account, I strongly protest against such injustice and violation of the promise said then to be formulated by royal authority.

I thought that these lengthy quotations of a memorandum now unknown by most of our politicians were necessary for the argument I wanted to make, that the posthumous words of a man having such an importance and authority will be of a great help to prove the facts upon which I rely. There were schools in existence in the Northwest more than twenty years before the transfer of that country with Canada; these schools were denominational, that is to say, Protestant or Catholic. This is a fact which I have proved and that nobody can deny. In 1869, the population of the territory did not want to join the confederation unless they would have the guarantee that their rights and privileges, civil and religious, would be respected by the Canadian government. These assurances were given in the name and by the authority of Her Majesty. I could stop here and conclude my argument in the very words used by Archbishop Taché :

> To any British subject it ought to be sufficient to have demonstrated that the rights of the Catholics to their separate schools in Manitoba and the Northwest have their foundation in the honour of the empire which has been engaged by the assurances given officially in the name and by 'Her Majesty's authority.'
> To any Canadian worthy of the name it ought to be enough to have proved that the most elementary justice commands the respect of the conditions which have been stipulated and to which Canada has been a party having consented to the terms without which she would not be to-day in possession of what constitutes the half of her domains.

But I desire to complete my argument and give the proof that Canada thought the country was bound by the assurances given to this western population, so much so, that before taking possession of the Red River the Canadian parliament passed a law organizing part of the territory which was to be admitted into the union, as province of Manitoba. Section 22 of that law is known to everybody and reads thus :

> In and for the province, the said legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education subject and according to the following provisions.
> Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the union.

The Canadian parliament was aware of the true state of things in the Northwest Territories when this law was sanctioned on the 12th of May, 1870. Parliament knew that if there was no very elaborate laws on education in the Northwest, the denominational schools were in existence there for a quarter of a century, and that there was no other system. Parliament knew that when the delegates were asking an annual grant for their schools, it was for the denominational schools because there were no other, and section 22 could be made only for the protection of Catholic and Protestant schools then in existence. All the quibbles of the world are of no avail against logic and simple reasoning. The parliament wanted to fulfil the promise which had been given by the British government. Our statesmen knew that there were no other schools in the Northwest except the denominational schools, and their intention was to guarantee these schools against attacks of fanaticism and ignorance by passing this section 22. 33 Victoria, chapter 3.

In 1870, the Conservative party was in power in Ottawa, and the action of the government and of the parliament where that party had the majority, could have been construed by thoughtless people as the action of a party. Even that straw was not to be left to the opponents of right and justice.

In 1875, the Liberal party was then in power. Parliament passed a law organizing the Territories and in that law we find section 11 which says :

> The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall pass all necessary laws in respect of education, and that it shall therein always be provided (a) that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the said province, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name it is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessments and collection of rates therefor, and (b) that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor, and (c) that in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves with respect thereto.

By these two Acts, constitutional parliament the whole country, Conservatives as well as Liberals, fulfilled the royal promises made to the inhabitants of the Northwest Territories and the rights and privileges which were covered by those promises. By these constitutions of Manitoba and the Territories, these rights and privileges solemnly guaranteed became intangible, and the legislature of the new province and also the legislature of the organized territories have maintained these rights and privileges in their first laws and ordinances on education.

During twenty years in Manitoba, during seventeen years in the Territories, the sense of justice and honour prevailed and peace was enjoyed. After that short period imperial promises were violated, constitutions given by federal government were shattered, and since then, Catholics are deprived of their rights.

There was a lack of firmness at the beginning. It should have been distinctly stated that provincial rights in matter of education existed only under the express condition that the rights of the minorities should be respected. Without this condition provinces have no rights whether exclusive or others. To my mind, this doctrine cannot be assailed. It is because it has not been held from the beginning and firmly and strongly sustained, that this morbid agitation which is still doing to-day so much mischief became possible, and in the course of time led astray a great part of our people. Nevertheless we may say that it has been more noisy than effective. In 1896, notwithstanding the efforts of the strange coalition of the Liberal party, under Mr. Laurier, with the ultra Protestants under the guidance of Mr. Dalton McCarthy, and the Tories under Mr. Clarke Wallace, Manitoba which according to the coalition, was so cruelly persecuted, the province which had the greatest interest, was sending four Conservative members out of six to the federal parliament. The same would be repeated to-day if only we had a little courage and firmness. But I come back to my argument. I have proved most conclusively that assurances and promises had been given by the imperial authorities to the inhabitants of the Northwest before the transfer of that territory to the new Canadian confederation. The constitution granted to Manitoba and to the Territories show that Canada recognized these assurances, and fulfilled them faithfully. I am thus in the position to say that the dignity of the Crown is engaged and that the violation of these promises and constitution should be remedied. I may say, with all due respect to the King, that the King by parliament of Canada is bound in honour to restore these violated rights, to reinstate in their rights and privileges that portion of his subjects who trusted the word of the Crown, and who are now persecuted on account of their religious convictions.

The sole reason of the Canadian parliament in voting the two constitutions of Manitoba and the Territories, was not merely the execution of the promises given ; the country had entered towards the proposition of the Northwest in a compact which we are bound to maintain.

In the beginning of 1870 there was no province of Manitoba, no government in the Northwest Territory. Canada itself possessed nothing, and had absolutely no jurisdiction in these vast countries.

Forgetful of the restrictions of federal autonomy, Canada went beyond its jurisdiction and thereby gave occasion to difficulties in the Red river country, which at the time was purely and simply a British possession ; the Hudson Bay Company having, on consideration, desisted from its pretensions or rights. The imperial government was willing to transfer the country to Canada, on the conditions stipulated in 1869, but moreover, on certain other conditions determined by the insurrectional movement, which had been caused by Canada's premature entrance in the country.

The Northwest was not to enter into confederation as a conquered land. ' Troops should not be employed in forcing the sovereignty of Canada on the population of the Red river, should they refuse to admit it.' (Sir F. Roger's letter, 22nd March, 1870.) Having not to conquer, Canada had to resort to negotiations to secure the admission of the Northwest into her confederation and to accept decision of Her Majesty's government on all portions of the ' Settlers' Bill of Rights,' in order to satisfy the delegate who had been called to negotiate. The negotiations were unquestionably binding on both sides on the points agreed to, otherwise they could not be called ' negotiations ' or ' understanding as to the terms on which the settlements on the Red river should be admitted into the Dominion.'

Peace was restored within a short time and on May 3, 1870, the Governor General was able to telegraph to Lord Granville: ' Negotiations with the delegates closed satisfactorily.'

All that was to be, and was done without trespassing on the autonomy of the Dominion of Canada; but all that could not be done without imposing on Canada new and special obligations, that she would have to respect and cause to be respected throughout the country she was to acquire, and in the different provinces and territories that she might think proper to circumscribe therein. These obligations, on the part of the federal government, cannot be considered as an encroachment on the rights of the province of Manitoba, or of the Northwest Territories, as they were accepted by Canada, even before the creation of Manitoba, and the organization of the Territories.

Let us now consider what are the obligations of the federal government with regard to education in the countries which have been the object of the negotiations of 1870.

The delegates of the Northwest carried to Ottawa and supported a certain bill of rights. The 7th article related to schools, and demanded separate schools and an equitable distribution of school money, in order, according to the Governor General's expression: 'that respect and attention would be extended to the different religious persuasions.'

No objection was made against this proposition of the delegates. On the contrary, they were assured that it would be carried out, and on both sides it was considered as a condition of the entry of the Northwest into Confederation. Therefore, the delegates asked for separate schools which would have the right to share in school appropriations; the request was accepted favourably by the ministers who were negotiating in the name of the Canadian government, and Lord Granville, in the name of the Imperial government, wrote Sir John Young on May 18, 1870:

'I take this opportunity of expressing the satisfaction with which I have learned from your telegram of the 3rd instant, that the Canadian government and the delegates have come to an understanding as to the terms on which the settlement on the Red River should be admitted into the Dominion.'

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) When the House rose, I had shown—and these facts cannot be controverted—that the population of the Red River settlement would object to come into Confederation unless given the assurance that their 'civil and religious rights and privileges' were guaranteed to them. The Queen by her substitute had made a solemn pledge to that effect. In order to come to an explicit understanding, the Canadian government invited these people to send their delegates to Ottawa to negotiate. A delegation was appointed, the members of which came to Ottawa, and being duly received as fully authorized delegates, negotiations were opened which 'were closed satisfactorily.'

The Imperial government expressed its 'satisfaction that the Canadian government and the delegates had come to an understanding as to the terms on which the settlement on the Red River should be admitted into the Dominion.'

And this understanding included the continuance of sectional schools in the Northwest. The people of that country had no other and knew no other form of schools.

So that the continuance of the separate school system was made a condition for the Territories to come into Confederation. Thus it follows forcibly that the same principle must necessarily prevail and be embodied in the constitution which might be drawn up for any province that the Canadian government or parliament may in the future create in the Northwest. There is no doubt but that the Canadian government and parliament yielded to international law and the laws of honour in inserting clause 22 in the constitution of Manitoba and clause 11 in the constitution of the Territories.

And this is the reason why I stated that parliament was moved by another incentive than the redemption of the royal pledges which led him to perpetuate under the constitution the continuance of sectional schools, and that incentive was the sacredness of verbal pledges and the obligations imposed by international law.

Mr. Chairman, this obligation still holds. We are not free to evade it. We could not constitutionally repudiate it even if we so desired. And this is the last point I wish to draw your attention to before concluding my remarks. In the provincial constitutions drawn up by this parliament, the stipulations concerning the legislative power are of three different natures: First, are the clauses relating to the active power of the province and determining the matters it shall bear upon; 2nd, are the clauses expressly restrictive or by reference to the B.N.A. Act; and 3rd, are the constitutional clauses proper. Matters pertaining to the two first clauses are subject to the will and even to the mere impulse of the legislatures and the parliament. But the constitutional clauses which are based upon formal compacts, cannot be tampered with by any one, neither by parliament nor by legislatures; and anything enacted to the contrary is void and null; anything that infringes upon the spirit and even upon the form of those clauses is equally void and null. And this parliament cannot re-enact laws or ordinances contrary to the spirit of the constitutional clauses of Manitoba or the Territories. I draw especially the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister and of the Minister of Justice to this particular point of constitutional law.

Clause 16 as originally passed in second reading, is in conformity with clause 11 of the constitution of the Territories, and is in order. The clause which the hon. the Premier wants to substitute in its stead is unconstitutional and would be null and of no effect even if carried by this parliament.

In connection with the teaching of the French language in the schools of the Territories, I was very much pleased indeed to hear the beautiful argument made last night by my hon. friends the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne). I would have liked very much to have added a few words of endorsation of what they have said upon this question, but I hesitated to do so for fear lest I should be exposed to repeat again what this House is already very much aware of. I will confine my remarks to the mere statement that I approve unhesitatingly of their views on this matter, and that I am sure that if the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) wished to be sincere he could this very evening amend this Bill in such a way as to guarantee to the children of the Territories the right of being taught their own language in the schools that are about to be forced upon them.

I regret to have detained this committee at such a length, but it occurred to my mind that perhaps the duty would devolve upon me to explain why, after voting with the Prime Minister as against the leader of the opposition, on the second reading of this Bill, why after voting with the Liberal party under those circumstances I am now forced to vote for the amendment put by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron).

Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) Did I understand my hon. friend to state in the course of his remarks that the Minister of Justice had in his possession certain documents purporting to emanate from the Catholic hierarchy protesting against the wording of the law now under consideration and claiming certain rights and privileges for the minority?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I stated that I had been informed that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice had received letters from the proper authorities asking to be more adequately protected.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) I must say that I never received any such letter as that stated by my hon. friend.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) No letter whatever?.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. (Translation.) Yes, I received one letter.

Mr. BERGERON. Before the motion is put I wish to make a few remarks in answer to the criticism made by the Minister of Justice of the wording of my amendment. I drew the amendment in French and afterwards had it translated into English, the translation may be badly made. If the minister will look at the French version of the amendment he will see that the word 'school district' is used. In the translation into English this is improperly rendered 'school section.' The translation was badly made and that is probably the explanation which my hon. friend desires.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend would permit me to look at it it would be better, the translation is so exceedingly bad.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish my hon. friend would read it in French.

Mr. MONK. Before the vote is taken I think it is perhaps better that I should give some explanation in answer to the remarks made by the Minister of Justice just after my friend from Beauharnois spoke, and also to explain my object in voting for the amendment now under consideration, and why I voted yesterday for the amendment presented by the hon. member for Labelle. I intended to give these explanations in speaking in support of the motion of which I have given notice and which will come up in a moment. It would, however, be perhaps better and clearer and save time if I gave these explanations now. There is one point to which, I have no doubt, the attention of the House has been drawn for a long time in connection with clause 16 and the second amendment of the Prime Minister. That point is that that clause does not provide any guarantee or protection for the Catholic minority in that province, when that Catholic minority in any particular locality in which they are organizing happens to be in a local majority. There is no doubt about that, it is sufficient to read subsection 1 of the section proposed to be substituted in order to see that. The subsection reads :

> Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of passing of this Act under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

Therefore this clause only provides a guarantee of protection and maintenance of existing rights such as they are where the Catholic minority being in a given locality in a local minority have organized a separate school. Where they are in a majority in a locality and they organize a school district under the ordinances referred to in this subsection they have no guarantee that their rights will not be interfered with. When this question came up for discussion at first and I spoke upon it I was not aware, nor was any one in this House I think aware, that that case of a majority organization was the most frequent case in the new provinces. As I understand it, there are 150 schools where the Catholics being in a majority have organized what we may term for the purposes of this discussion public schools, and therefore they have no guarantee of any protection in the future. It is, on the contrary, in a minority of cases that they are organized into separate schools.

Mr. BOURASSA. In nine cases.

Mr. MONK. In nine cases, and in 150 cases they lack that protection. As I understand it, this parliament has declared expressly in favour of protection, of the guarantee of the maintenance of rights in favour of a Catholic minority. I shall not discuss the reasons which have led to the confirmation of that principle by a very large majority in this House and as far as we have been able to test public opinion the sentiment expressed by the House has been confirmed throughout the country. Under those circumstances I deem it the duty of the government to supplement this provision in subsection one by guaranteeing to the minority protection all over the province. That is the reason why I voted for the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). We have an intimation from a very high authority, up to the present moment at least, Mr. Haultain himself, who has declared publicly that the struggle for educational independence will be pursued ; it will continue. We have seen fit in this parliament in the exercise of our legitimate functions to secure protection to the minority against further encroachments. The principle has been confirmed; it remains for us, it seems to me, to complete the confirmation of that principle by amending that subsection. I will be asked: Did the amendment of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) provide that protection? Does the amendment, which I have not examined carefully until this afternoon, presented by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) provide that protection. Let us take the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). My hon. friend has by his amendment sought to apply purely and simply clause 93 of the British North America Act. It is true that there is the educational provision which exists in all these amendments as to the distribution of public moneys for educational purposes, but he rests his expectation that this important, this grave defect in the present section will be remedied by applying section 93 purely and simply. This is undoubtedly a very complicated matter. I doubt if section 93, applied purely and simply, does assure that protection to the 150 schools that exist at present.

Mr. BOURASSA. I meant the application of section 93 by making it perfectly clear that it would apply as if the Territories to be admitted as a province were already provinces, therefore assimilating the law passed in this parliament in 1875, to a law that would be passed by the province.

Mr. MONK. Yes, I shall come to that in a moment. I presume it is in this first subsection of section 93 of the British North America Act that we must look for the solution of the case to which a moment ago I called the attention of the committee.

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

Is a school organized by a Catholic majority under the present ordinances in the Territories, consequently, a public school or a denominational school? I say there is a doubt upon that point. I confess—but what is the value of an opinion?—that I would be inclined to think that it is a denominational school, but not a denominational school as we have hitherto understood denominational schools to be, as we understand denominational schools in the province of Quebec. I think it might fairly be argued under all the circumstances that a school organized by Catholics because they are in a majority in a given locality is sufficiently a denominational school to bring it within the purview of this subsection. There is a doubt, but I think it is brought within the section, and if it is to be understood that the particular school, the public school organized by a Catholic majority is a denominational school it seems to me undeniable that under this subsection of section 93 they cannot be interfered with, therefore that if this school is a denominational school it would be impossible for the legislature to diminish the rights which at present the Catholics who have so organized would have in that school. Under the subsection of the Minister of Justice it is needless for me to argue, it is certain that it is only in the case of separate schools that the protection is provided.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the hon. gentleman explain the difference between a denominational school and a public school?

Mr. MONK. It is very difficult to do that because as we understand denominational schools in the past, they are schools frequented by children belonging to a certain denominaton, the regulation, teachers and control in every respect of such are exercised by a body belonging to that denomination. That is what we understand by denominational schools in the province of Quebec, and that is what at first blush one would understand by such schools. But inasmuch as in the Northwest Territories, under the special legislation now existing there, they recognize the difference between Catholics and Protestants, I think it might be fairly argued that where Catholics are in the majority in a school district to be organized, the school there organized would be sufficiently denominational to claim the protection given by the very general terms of subsection 1 of section 93 of the British North America Act. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice quoted some words I uttered when I first spoke on this question, when I spoke of the protection afforded the Catholic minority in the Northwest by the draft Bill submitted to the right hon. the First Minister by Mr. Haultain, and the protection which the minority found in the first clause 16 and that given them by clause 16, No. 2. Let me point out what I think is of some importance to this committee and what may explain the great divergencies of opinion existing among lawyers as to what our powers are in creating a province. I argued, when I first spoke on this subject—and I think that opinion was also expressed by many legal gentlemen—that our only power under the British North America Act and its amendments was to create a province. We could create a province and under section 2 of the Imperial Act of 1871 we could provide sufficient machinery to bring the province into existence and subject it to the provisions of the British North America Act. But we could not go beyond that. We could not invade in any way the division of the field of jurisdiction which has been made by the British North America Act. I proceeded upon that assumption at that time, and it did not seem to me to admit of doubt. A very different proposition, however, has been enunciated here by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and I think it is the proposition of the government, namely, that we are not restricted at all in that way; that we can not only create a province, to be subject afterwards to the application of the British North America Act, but that we can by the Act of creation legislate for the province so as to vary the jurisdiction provided by the British North America Act. I think that there can be no doubt at all that that is the opinion of the Minister of Justice and the theory of the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do I understand my hon. friend's opinion to be that if we create a province it then falls automatically under the provisions of the British North America Act? If that be conceded, what would become of the existing school legislation of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. MONK. Under section 93 of the British North America Act the existing legislation would be maintained.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But that legislation was made when there was no province but only a territory.

Mr. MONK. I stated that if we created out of a territory a province, the legislation of the territory on educational matters, previous to its erection into a province, would be maintained.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under what section?

Mr. MONK. Under the section of the British North America Act, which I do not wish to quote as it would take too long. But the proposition of the government is very different. It is that we are absolutely the master. I pressed my hon. friend the Minister of Justice one evening, when we were providing for a new distribution of seats after five years, on that point. I called his attention to the fact that by that provision we were violating the law as contained in the British North America Act, which provided that a distribution could only take place after the decennial census, and my hon. friend explained that we were not bound by that very clear provision of the Confederation Act. In support of that view he pointed to the closing clause of the British North America Act amendment of 1886. But we need not go so far as that. The British North America Act provides expressly that Crown lands vest in the province, and we are legislating absolutely in an opposite sense. We are keeping the Crown lands by virtue of a formal clause in this Bill. On another occasion I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue if he went so far as to say that we could reserve to ourselves exclusive jurisdiction on the subject of agriculture, which is one of those assigned to the provinces under the British North America Act. He said that we could. Then my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, asked if we could keep under our jurisdiction the important subject of property and civil rights, and he said we could undoubtedly. I asked him if clause 93 of the British North America Act applied and if we could amend it. He said it did apply and we could amend it. I have, therefore, good ground for saying that, according to the interpretation of the government we are not bound by the British North America Act, and can legislate with absolute power on all subjects mentioned in that Act, and there is no such theory as the application automatically of the British North America Act to any new provinces we may create. I explained my view at that time, and my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) went a great deal more fully into that point. Section 2 of the British North America Act of 1871, which is rather a long section to quote, according to our interpretation, merely gave us the power to provide the necessary machinery for the creation of a province, but once the province was created, it became subject to the British North America Act.

As to what Mr. Haultain said, I have not here the papers which contain all the documents connected with the negotiations between the government of the Territories and the government here regarding the creation of these two provinces, but hon. gentlemen will find, by reference to those documents, that Mr. Haultain's view was shown by his draft Bill and expressed throughout all his comments upon it, and it is that the British North America Act should apply, and consequently section 93 should apply. This is precisely what my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) asked for in his amendment; and I stated under my view of our powers, that I thought that was the best perfection we could have. But I stated that it would be necessary probably to modify the words of Mr. Haultain's draft Bill. I had not that Bill before me at the moment. But the principle was admitted that section 93 was to be applied, and I thought that was all the protecion which the minority could claim in any newly-organized province. The Minister of Justice and other hon. gentlemen on that side representing the government, contended that our powers are far more extensive. Then we had clause 16 as at first brought down. Well, that clause provided for the application of section 93, and in applying that section we always find the difficulty of determining whether the schools at present in the Northwest are or are not denominational schools. But it immediately continues in these words:

> Subject to the provisions of said section 93, and in continuance of the principle heretofore sanctioned under the Northwest Territories Act——

In continuance, that is to say, of the statute of 1875.

> —it is enacted that the legislature of the said province shall pass all necessary laws in respect of education, and that it shall therein always be provided (a) That a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the said province . . . may establish such schools therein as they think fit . . . (b)

That the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein.

And there is a provision in regard to the ratepayers being obliged to pay only for the support of their own schools. Well, speaking generally, what has happened under the law of 1875 ? The legislature of the Territories has maintained the bare principle of separate schools, but it has taken away everything else. It began by recognizing, probably, the spirit of the law of 1875, and providing a dual system such as we have in Quebec. But since then it has taken away the control of the curriculum, of the qualification of teachers, the normal schools, everything but what is covered by the mere letter of the bond—if I may use that expression—as to the existence of separate schools. It has been stated that these enactments are ultra vires, and opinion has been cited to that effect. But we have no pronouncement by any tribunal. And it occurred to me, I must say, that if we re-enact that clause, which is the governing clause of the section, that would keep the ordinances which now exist. To say that under this clause litigations might be begun to question the validity of the ordinances, and to try to obtain restoration of the law as it existed previous to the passage of these ordinances, would be a very unsatisfactory condition of affairs for the minority in the new province. I claimed at the time that under the substituted clause 16 we had something clearer. The ordinances at present in force were specially referred to. There was no ambiguity possible ; and what small rights the minority possess today were indicated there in so many words, and the minority could not be deprived of those rights. Under clause 16, as first brought down—to give an instance—if the legislature of the province saw fit to abolish the advisory board, and thereby deprive the Minister of Public Instruction in the province of the advice—for it is nothing more —of the two Catholic members of that board, what would there be to prevent ? I do not think that there is anything in clause 16, as at first proposed, to prevent such an enactment. It would be, nevertheless, an encroachment, to a certain extent, upon the rights of the Catholic minority. If, under clause 16, as at first proposed, the legislature passed a law declaring that the Minister of Public Instruction would have a right of veto upon the nomination of professors, would that be ultra vires ? I do not think so. But it would be an abridgement of the rights of the minority. Under the present clause 16 the trustees have the right to choose and control their own professors, provided that those professors have the qualifications required by the law of the Northwest Territories. In other words, under clause 16, No. 2, I find the assurance that there would be less possibility of litigation. It merely, in effect, enumerated the privileges which, under clause 16, as at first brought down, it was attempted to secure in a vague way. But there is no doubt that the case of the majority in an organized district, if Catholic, is not provided for in this section. The amendment of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is an attempt to provide for that case, which case, I think, must have been overlooked. The amendment of my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) clearly raises that point—it matters little in what language—as will be seen on reading subsection (c) of that amendment. That is the reason why I vote for these two amendments.

But before I resume my seat, let me advert again to the position taken by the government. The government takes the position that it is not restricted, in the sense that I understood and said that it was, in legislating in regard to these two provinces. It claims to be free. Well, if it is free, why does it not provide further guarantees ? We have declared in this House that the minority in this new province is entitled to protection. If we are not bound by the British North America Act in the strict sense that some have maintained we are ; if, on the contrary, we are free to legislate absolutely untrammelled, why does not the government, I do not say restore all the privileges of which the minority have, in my opinion, been most unjustly deprived, but at least provide guarantees which will give us the assurance that what was promised to the minority in the most solemn manner when these Territories were organized shall be secured to them in the future.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) gives as a reason why he now changes his opinion about the effect of this legislation, that, under clause 16 No. 2, the position of the minority, where they happen to be a majority in a particular school district, was not provided for. As a reason for changing the opinion that he expressed on the 23rd of March, he says that their position is made clear by the amendment now proposed.

Mr. MONK. I do not think my hon. friend is justified in saying that I changed my opinion. If I were one of the minority in that province I would find as much protection in the second clause as in the first, excepting as regards the particular case which I have mentioned a moment ago, and I think I explained the circumstances under which that case was brought to our notice.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend must not overlook what he said. Speaking of clause 16, No. 2, he said :

So I do not see in the last enactment that there is any concession—very far from it. I think the last amendment goes perhaps a little farther than the original enactment which caused so much excitement, because it defines more clearly what the privileges of the separate schools are.

Mr. MONK. I remember also my hon. friend answering the ex-Minister of the Interior and telling him that the intention which he had was to maintain existing privileges solely ; if that purpose was not expressed in the clause it would be changed, but that his intention was solely to maintain existing privileges.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But that is not answering my question. Does he think that the second clause goes further in the direction of protecting the rights and privileges of the minorities than the first ? My hon. friend expressed the opinion that it does. I understand him now to say that he was mistaken at that time.

Mr. MONK. As regards the minority.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand him now to say he was mistaken at that time because, with respect to that part of the minority, speaking broadly, which would happen to be the majority in a particular district, the second clause does not protect them, and that this amendment now does protect them, hence his support of it.

Mr. MONK. I question very much whether the case which I brought to the notice of the Minister of Justice was provided for by the first clause, and I think it would be in order for my hon. friend to state whether, when he drew this second clause, he knew what the position was in districts where the majority is Catholic.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, and I have provided for it. If my hon. friend will do me the pleasure to take up the first clause he will see it is provided for in terms :

2. Subject to the provisions of the said section 93, and in continuance of the principles heretofore sanctioned under the Northwest Territories Act, it is enacted that the legislature of the said province shall pass all necessary laws in respect of education, and that it shall therein always be provided (a) that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the said province or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name it is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessments and collection of rates therefor, and (b) that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor.

Mr. MONK. And if the legislature makes that very school so organized a school where it is impossible for Catholics to send their children, what will happen ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What will happen will be exactly what will happen under this amendment, that you leave the whole thing in the hands of the legislature, and you ask them to guarantee the doing of something that they are free to do or not to do. That is what will happen.

Mr. MONK. I recognize that under the first clause they can organize as under the second clause, but when they are organized separately, if the legislature chooses to say that in the public schools there shall be no religious teaching at all, what will be their recourse ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think that time can be profitably occupied in any further discussion of this matter. I think the only difference between the position taken by my hon. friends opposite previous to the London election and the position taken now, was the effect to be produced in Ontario at that time and the effect to be produced in Quebec at the present time. I will now repeat to my hon. friend what was said by the leader of the opposition with respect to this second clause, speaking on the 8th of June, 1905 :

If I understand the English language, you have in chapter 29, section 41, which is thus perpetuated as part of the constitution of the new provinces for ever, exactly the same provisions as those which are to be found in the Act of 1875. Every word, so far as I understand it, that is to be found in the Act of 1875, is to be found here. Section 16, No. 1 perpetuates the Act of 1875 in so far as that Act provides for separate schools for the Territories. That was the intention, that was the direct enactment, of section 16, No. 1. Section 16, No. 2 does the same thing indirectly. It does not re-enact this Act of 1875 as a part of the constitution, but it re-enacts this part of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories as part of the constitution, the chapter and section of the ordinances to which I have just referred, and which are thus made part of the constitution of the new provinces for all time to come. The provisions of that section are to all intents and purposes, so far as my understanding goes, the same as the Act of 1875.

That is the opinion expressed by the leader of the opposition on the 8th of June last, to the effect that the second section perpetuates the provisions of the Act of 1875 with respect to schools ; and that was the opinion expressed by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier on the 23rd of March last.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice might add that it was the opinion which he controverted, and that he attached importance to the words contained in the first clause 'may establish such schools therein as they think fit,' arguing, as I understand him, distinctly and forcibly, that the words 'as they think fit' contained in the first clause gave to the majority in any district power to establish, not only any number of schools, but schools of any character that they desired, with such control over the religious teaching as they desired. That was the point the Minister of Justice made as to the difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. It is of much more importance to know what the Minister of Justice and the government thought about this than what the leader of the opposition thought about it, and I wonder that my hon. friend, on this particular occasion, is so anxious to seek refuge in what the leader of the opposition said. If the Minister of Justice will take the opinion of the leader of the oposition as to all these matters, I think we may get along pretty amicably.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Which side of that side of the House does my hon. friend speak for ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I think I can speak in that regard for all sides of this House. If the Minister of Justice wants to resolve himself into an interrogation point, well and good ; but perhaps he will answer some questions on his own part. He has not answered one question that has been put to him a good many times to-day, and that is, why he substituted section No. 2 for section No. 1. He has never answered that yet. He brought in here a typewritten statement of the alleged differences between them ; but he has never, from the time that this amendment was first introduced up to the present time, although challenged repeatedly across the floor of this House to do so, he has never stated the reasons which induced him to abandon section 16, No. 1, after having declared that he would stand or fall by that, that the minority would never rest, that there would be no peace in this land until they got their rights. There is, according to his express statement in this House, a very important difference between the two sections, a difference to this effect: Section 16, No. 1, gave to the minority in the Northwest Territories—I use the word minority in the general sense—control over their schools in so far as teaching is concerned and in so far as other matters of importance are concerned, whereas, according to the statement of the hon. Minister of Justice made to this House on the 8th day of June, if I apprehend his meaning, there is not that control under section 16, No. 2.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have no hesitation in answering any question put to me in so far as I am able to do it. Section 16, No. 1, was, in my humble judgment, an ideal clause. It was a clause which consecrated a principle ; that is to say the principle of giving to the minority in the Northwest Territories those rights and privileges which the law had conferred upon them. Clause 16, No. 2, is a departure from that in so far as it consecrates the system which was created in the Northwest Territories by the local authorities. Clause 16, No. 2, is a departure from that principle as far as the minority where they happen to be the majority in a certain district is concerned. If I had been alone in this matter I would undoubtedly have adhered to clause 16, No. 1, but I knew perfectly well that I could not always have my own way and I knew that under the alternative it was a question of giving to the minority what they get under clause 16, No. 2, or giving them nothing if my hon. friend had power to do it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the one case the hon. Minister of Justice says that there is mere separation while in the other case it is separation with control. That is about what it means ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would not like to say that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not ask the hon. minister to accept that. It may be a very rough and ready way of arriving at the result. I stated before, and I still think, that the logical result of the right hon. Prime Minister's argument in this House on the 21st February and of his argument again in this House on the 22nd March would be to pass such legislation as that which was moved by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) last night and that which is moved by my hon. friend from Beauharnois to-day. The argument was that there is a compact, there is a pledge, and it is our duty to observe that compact and to keep that pledge. We have power in the British North America Act, according to the views of the government to keep that compact and maintain that pledge. It is, therefore, not only our constitutional right but our bounden duty to enact legislation for that purpose. I can understand that position. It is not a position with which I agree. I have stated my position over and over again. I do not agree with that position and therefore I voted against my hon. friend from Labelle last night, although, I am bound to say that I think he was logical and consistent and that those on the other side of the House who voted against him and who talked of toleration and the maintenance of pledges were not exactly consistent with what they had said in this House. These tolerant gentlemen who were shouting at us on this side of the House as if we were seeking to take away something from the minority in the Northwest Territories suddenly found themselves afflicted with that intolerance which they ascribed to us and they all stood up manfully and voted against the carrying into effect of the logical result of the argument of the right hon. leader of the government which they had cheered to the echo. I can understand the maintenance of pledges if there are pledges under the constitution which the government is bound to carry out, but I cannot understand merely separating these children in the Northwest Territories without giving any control, and I cannot understand the position of those who in creating that separation turn to the Protestants of this country and say: We have given these gentlemen something which may satisfy them a little, but after all it amounts to nothing and will do them no good in the end. I have not thought to take away from the minority in the Northwest any of their rights. My position has been put by my opponents in that way over and over again in this House and the country. That is not my position. I have advocated leaving to the people of the Northwest Territories the power to deal with this question because I believe it is the right way to deal with it under the constitution. I have said that if the people of the new provinces in the Northwest are willing to extend the rights of the minority to any extent to which they may see fit I regard that as a matter with which they are to deal and I have not one word of criticism to offer in regard to their action in that respect. That is my position. It seems to me that it is a plain and definite position, but I do not understand the argument and the position of those who say that there are pledges which ought to be regarded as sacred and which ought to be maintained and who at the same moment stand up and vote against my hon. friend from Labelle and my hon. friend from Beauharnois when they seek to enact legislation which would carry out those pledges. Some criticism has been uttered in regard to my own position. It is said that I am too technical, that I pay too much regard to the constitution, that you must look at the constitution not in the light of the exact words which are employed or in the light of the legal meaning which is to be attached to these words, but that you must look at it in some broader, wider and more generous light. I do not know where limitations or qualifications of that kind would lead us. That is my difficulty. You must in the end determine by some rule what the constitution means, and I venture to say that in so far as the interests of minorities in this country are concerned it is very much safer to adhere to the true spirit and meaning of the constitution than to depart from it. If an invasion of the constitution is demanded or is granted to-day in the interest of the minority in this country, who shall know to what extent a demand of that kind may be made at some time in the future on behalf of the majority in this country? For example, would we all be quite willing that the complete and unlimited power of dealing with the British North America Act should be conferred upon this parliament? There may be a good deal of question as to whether or not all of us would concur in that view, and yet, as far as the constitution of these new provinces is concerned, that is a view which has been impressed by the government upon parliament through the law officers of the Crown. Of course, we cannot really give ourselves power by merely legislating, but the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and other hon. gentlemen in this House have suggested, as we all know, that if there lacks in parliament the power to pass this law it is the simplest thing in the world to go to the imperial parliament and have that power made good. Well, I doubt a little whether that will be found a good principle to act upon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That has not been acted upon by me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has been acted upon by the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior who has imposed clause 16, No. 2 upon the administration; and if he is able to impose his views upon the administration in that regard who shall tell us that he may not be able to impose his views upon the administration in regard to the matter to which I have just referred? I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) who is a constitutional student and who pays more attention, and properly so, to these matters than do some other hon. gentlemen in this House; I would ask him as a constitutional student: whether or not he would think that a course of that kind would probably tend to the welfare of minorities in this country or to the stability of the Canadian constitution? I would think it much better, everything considered, to stand by the agreement and compact which we made in 1867. It may not be thoroughly satisfactory to us in every respect or on every occasion, but it is dangerous to tamper with it or to meddle with it or to suggest, as has been suggested by that very prominent gentleman to whom I have made reference, that if there is any difficulty in altering the constitution we can easily remedy that difficulty by simply making an application to the imperial parliament. To propose to act upon a suggestion of that kind is not the wisest course in the interests of either the majority or the minority in this country. It is not the wisest course surely in the interest of the minority because we do not know at what moment a test of that kind may be applied as against them; it is not the wisest course in the interest of the majority, because it is not in their interest that there should be any dissatisfaction raised by efforts of that kind which may in the end tell against the welfare of the country. I did not find myself able last night to vote for the motion of my hon. friend from Labelle; I do not find myself able to-night to vote for the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), but if it were simply a question of choice I am not sure that I would not prefer either one or the other of these to the amendment suggested by the government. For the reasons which I have already given I am opposed to both, and I shall therefore be obliged to vote against the motion of my hon. friend from Beauharnois as I have already voted against that of my hon. friend from Labelle.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Permit me to say that there is not the slightest doubt entertained by this government as to our right to deal with this matter in the way we are dealing with it. I can safely make the statement that the government as at present constituted would never apply to the imperial authorities for any interference on their part with respect to this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am very glad to have that assurance from the Minister of Justice, but he recollects no doubt that a suggestion was made by my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and by another very important gentleman on the other side.

An hon. MEMBER. Postmaster General.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am informed that a very prominent member of the administration, the Postmaster General, made the same suggestion with regard to carrying out the intention of the government even if it should be beyond their powers under the British North America Act.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would like to know from my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) where we stand with regard to this amendment ? As we are aware two educational systems have been in force in the Northwest Territories ; one under the ordinances from 1884 to 1892 and the other from 1892 to the present date. The motion, as the hon. gentleman admits, is not very well drafted, and if that motion should be adopted I would like to know whether under it we would adopt the educational system of 1884 or the system of 1892, or whether we would adopt another system altogether ?

Mr. BERGERON. In the meantime I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) for which system he stands ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I stand, and the governments stands, for the system which is now in existence in the Northwest Territories. I want to crystallize into the constitution the system just now in existence in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) stand for the whole system in the Northwest Territories, or only that part of the system as it applied to separate schools ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was stated by the leader of the government when the Bill was introduced, it is stated in the amendment proposed by the government, that we stand for the system in existence to-day. When clause 16, No. 1 was introduced we were convinced that it carried out the system now in existence, and which has been recognized by the law. However, in order to put it very clearly and in order that there should be no misunderstanding, we have put into the amended clause the existing ordinances so as to embody these ordinances in the constitution. There is no doubt as to the position of the government on that matter. I presume that now my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) will tell us on what ground he stands.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it correct, as stated by my hon. friend from Montmagny—quoting from the speech of the Minister of Inland Revenue—that in 1894 the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) thought the existing system was a very poor system, and he was very much pained that it did not go far enough ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. I expressed at that time my dissatisfaction with the policy of the Conservative government which refused to disallow these ordinances, when Sir John Thompson, then Prime Minister, himself declared that these ordinances were illegal and ultra vires. I thought the government of Sir John Thompson should have disallowed these ordinances. Now, these ordinances have been accepted by the minority there ; instead of taking proceedings in the court to have these ordinances declared ultra vires they accepted them and they have been working under them since 1892. I do not see why the government to-day should not embody in the constitution these ordinances which have been accepted by the minority since 1892. That is the position taken by the government and there can be no dispute as to that. Will my hon. friend from Beauharnois be good enough to tell me what system his amendment would establish ?

Mr. BERGERON. I will carry out my promise to my hon. friend to give him an answer. In the first place permit me to congratulate him on the facility with which he can change his mind. There is no doubt he was in favour of clause 16, No. 1, because it was proposed by the government of which he is a member and I have not heard that he sent in his resignation. He is now in favour of clause 16, No. 2. I think it was Bismarck who said the language was given us to conceal our thoughts.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Talleyrand.

Mr. BERGERON. Another great man. My hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) is proving that the cynicism of Talleyrand is true. He is in favour of clause 16, No. 2 to-night, but he does not give his reasons for being in favour of it. However, I will give him my reasons for the faith that is in me. Since the parliament of Canada has declared by a majority of over eighty votes not to adopt section 93 of the British North America Act in the sense mentioned by the leader of the opposition, but to amend it so as to give the minority in the Northwest Territories their rights and privileges ; I am in favour of restoring to that minority their full rights and not a shadow of their rights. I am for the granting of those rights and privileges in their entirety to the minority and in my opinion clause 16, No. 1, guaranteed that because I believe it was putting in force the principle enacted in 1875 of giving separate schools in their entirety to the Catholic minority of the Northwest Territories. I am opposed to clause 16, No. 2, which the Minister of Inland Revenue accepts, because it does not go any further than the ordinances of 1901, which have deprived the minority of the Northwest of all its privileges and all its rights. The Minister of Inland Revenue has spoken very often of the ordinances of 1892. I intended to refer to that to-day but forgot to do so. They have been referred to in the speeches of my hon. friend and in the organ of the Liberal party in Montreal, 'Le Canada.' My hon. friend is generally brave enough. He was in parliament in 1892. Did he ever stand up in his seat, or did any of his friends from the then leader of the opposition, the Prime Minister of to-day, down in the Liberal party, and ask the government of that day to disallow the ordinances of 1892 ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. What about the hon. gentleman ?

Mr. BERGERON. I did not do anything at all because I accepted the answer of Sir John Thompson as I explained this afternoon. That is my answer, but since then I have not been perambulating through the country accusing any one of not disallowing these Acts as my hon. friends are doing. Even the Solicitor General does that. Having no answer to give they use the cry : Why did they not disallow the ordinance of 1892 ? I took the word of Sir John Thompson, but why did not the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) or the premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stand in his place and ask the government of the day why they did not disallow the ordinances of 1892 ? Why did they accuse any one on this side of the House of acts done by the government 13 years ago when they could have had an answer immediately by the man who knew why he did not disallow the ordinance ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Might not my hon. friend have accepted the word of Sir John Thompson just as my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) did ?

Mr. BERGERON. I accepted it and have never said a word since, but my hon. friend is talking about it day after day. Why did they not prompt the government of that time to disallow the ordinance of 1892 ? My hon. friend was in favour of clause 16, No. 1. He has changed his mind and if he wanted to be sincere with the House, to speak from the bottom of his heart, he would say he has accepted clause 16, No. 2 in favour of the minority of the Northwest Territories for which he is going to vote to-night against my amendment which is made sincerely in favour of that minority. He will vote against my amendment and will accept the amendment which comes from the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), that champion of Catholic schools in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. BRODEUR. I put a very simple question to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I wanted to know from him the nature of the amendment which he is now proposing before the House, and I thought my question being put in a civil way should have been answered in the same way. Instead of that the hon. member for Beauharnois starts to make a political speech, a party speech. I thought he was here not to make party capital out of this question, that he was sincere in the desire to protect and defend the interests of the minority in the Northwest. I thought he was here not to make party capital in the interest of his party which now is in a serious condition with regard to that question, but that he was here to protect and defend the minority. I asked him what was the purport of his motion. Was it for the restoration of the rights of the minority as they existed before 1892, or was it simply for the maintenance of the rights which are now in existence ? He has not been able to give me an answer to that because I do not think his motion as drafted shows whether it contemplates the restoration of the rights of the minority as they were before 1892 or the rights of the minority as they exist to-day. My hon. friend has no policy ; he is not able to proclaim before the country and before the House a policy which can be sustained by a certain number of people. They want simply to make party capital. They want simply to arouse prejudices in some parts of the country—and perish the minority in the Northwest provided they get some political gains in Quebec. If the minority can not get more than what they get to-day, to what party is it due ? It is to the party of my hon. friend who in 1892 refused to give to the minority the protection which the government could then have given to the minority. The minority accepted a state of things, the minority was satisfied with accepting the situation which was made by the policy of the government then supported by my hon. friend. Now if we come to deal with that question, we have to take it as it is to-day and we have to assure to the minority the rights which are now in existence, and that is what we are going to do. But what is the Conservative party doing ? The Conservative party, led by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden, are they willing to protect the minority ? Are they willing to give something to the minority ? No, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition wants to leave everything in the hands of the provincial legislature and does not want to protect in any way, shape or form the rights of the minority. My hon. friend from Beauharnois thinks that he will gain some advantage in the province of Quebec with such appeals to prejudice. My hon. friend from Beauharnois was in the House in 1892. He, who was supporting the government which refused to give the minority their rights, is the one who should be ashamed to take the position which he is now taking in this House. He wants to know what is the difference between clause 16, No. 1 and clause 16, No. 2. Clause 16, No. 1 was crystallizing into the constitution the rights of the minority as they exist to-day in the Northwest Territories. There was some doubt as to the interpretation of that clause. Some people thought we were going to restore in that way what existed before 1892. That was not the intention. The intention was simply to crystallize into the constitution what was in existence to-day, and in order to make it clear, in order that we should not force that minority to go before the courts, we declared in the most unequivocal way what was the law and what was the protection that the minority was going to receive. That is our position. My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) moved a resolution. It is very easy to blame those who are at the helm of affairs. It is very easy to throw on them all sorts of suspicion, but if my hon. friend reads his own motion and if that motion was going before the courts perhaps he would find out before the courts that that motion was not at all in this way protecting the minority. We heard the argument of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and I am inclined to believe that that hon. member was right to a very large extent in that respect. The motion of my hon. friend is alleged to be for the purpose of protecting the rights of the minority with respect to denominational schools. But where are there denominational schools in the law now existing? Are there any schools of that kind in the Territories to-day? There are not, and my hon. friend, instead of throwing suspicion upon men who have got just as much patriotism as he has—because I am not ready to admit that he has the monopoly of virtue in that respect—should give credit to others for sincerity in their views. I am not going to cast any suspicion upon his motives. I will be more charitable than he. I am not going to make all sorts of assertions with regard to those who differ from me, but shall always discuss the question as such questions should be debated. Let us discuss those questions without making appeals to race and prejudice. Let us not imitate what we see some persons doing to-day. They go into Catholic districts and denounce the right hon. the leader of the government—a man who is just as respectable as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR. A man who is devoted to his country and who has done more for his country than my hon. friend from Labelle.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has gone into some other parts of the country and made there also appeals to racial and religious prejudices. Let us denounce those appeals; let us put an end to those methods, and let us unite in working for the welfare and development of this country.

Mr. BERGERON. To those who do not know how we carry on politics in the province of Quebec to-day, I say we have just had an example of it in this harangue delivered by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue. For the last eight years in that province every time we try to talk politics, this is the sort of violent appeal we have always heard. Not being able to discuss the questions which we bring before the people, our hon. friends opposite always resort to their favourite policy of carrying a big flag in their hands and waving it. Had I any doubt regarding the efficacy of my amendment, the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) would have dispelled it. My hon. friend well knows what that amendment will signify to the people of the province of Quebec. I have not made any frantic appeals in my argument on that amendment to creed or race or sentiment of any kind. I leave it to the judgment of the House whether I did not speak in a most courteous way. I challenge any man on either side to say the contrary.

Somn hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Did I say a word about race or religion in any shape or form? I discussed the question as I understood it and ended my remarks by a motion, in which there is nothing to offend the susceptibilities of anybody, which to my mind, is as clear as day, and which cannot be answered by the hon. gentlemen opposite. There seems to be a concerted plan between my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who has had to swallow the amendment of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), and my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, who finds himself in the same humiliating plight. Not being able to controvert this amendment, the Minister of Justice played upon words and tried to cast ridicule on it. Then my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue is very anxious to have some information. He does not quite understand where I want to go, but he himself is prepared, in company with the Minister of Justice, to vote with both hands for the amendment dictated to them by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). The Minister of Inland Revenue is accustomed to go on the hustings of the province of Quebec, and he has his plan of campaign cut and dried. When this question comes to be discussed before the people he will say to them: The Prime Minister was devoured with a desire to give the Catholic minority in the Northwest Territories all the rights and privileges to which they were entitled. But Mr. Borden and Dr. Sproule—those bad men on the Conservative side—prevented him. That is the way these hon. gentlemen will talk, and when we come with this amendment—

Mr. BELCOURT. Will your friends vote for you?

Mr. BERGERON. According to what I have heard from the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Inland Revenue they are making a strong appeal to their partisans to prevent them voting for it.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will they (Messrs. Borden and Sproule) vote for it?

Mr. BERGERON. I don't expect it.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. What will my hon. friend say about it when he goes before the people of Quebec?

Mr. BERGERON. I will be all right when I go before my electors, as the Minister of Justice very well knows. I have met these hon. gentlemen opposite before and I am not afraid to meet them again.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I have met my hon. friend, and he cannot say I have ever been beaten yet.

Mr. BERGERON. Where ?

Mr. FIZPATRICK. Anywhere.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand it is those fighters who brag the most who are the worst fighters. People who meet me know what that means, and they are not anxious to meet me. Look at the position taken by the Minister of Inland Revenue and let us discuss it in a quiet way. He is in favour of clause 16, No. 2 because, forsooth, he cannot go any further than the ordinances of 1892. Why? Because the Conservative government in 1892 did not disallow those ordinances. Surely he is not serious? Sir John Thompson, as was stated yesterday by my right hon. friend—and it is on record—always treated those ordinances as if they were only of a temporary character and were only to last until the Territories were created into provinces. The creating of new provinces out of the Territories had been talked of for years; and when this took place an educational law would be framed which would do justice to all. If we are to accept the dictum of the Hon. Mr. Brown, which my right hon. friend quoted in his first speech on the 21st of February, and that of Sir Alex. Campbell made in the Senate, the law of 1875 passed by Mr. Mackenzie was to be the law for ever. That was the reason why Mr. Brown was so much opposed to it. He said: If you pass that law now, it will be the law for ever. Yet we are told that because the late Conservative government did not disallow the ordinances of 1892 my brave friend the Minister of Inland Revenue and his government, with a majority of 70 behind them, have not the courage to give to-day to the minority in the Northwest Territories the law of 1875 to which they are entitled, and offer them instead the ordinances of 1901 which give them nothing. That is the position of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue. Mine is vastly different. I say if you give the minority anything, give it to them fully and generously or not at all. The Minister of Inland Revenue will tell the people of the province of Quebec that this government wanted to give justice to the minority. I say from my seat in the House that we are not giving them justice. And it is because my hon. friend knows that we are not that he has got into such a hot temper. He knows that the position he is taking is untenable before the people of the province of Quebec, and that is why my hon. friend tries to cover his sense of humilitation by working himself into a simulated frenzy.

Mr. SCOTT. Does my hon. friend contend that section 16, No. 2 means nothing ?

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly

Mr. SCOTT. I heard his leader on the platform in London declare that section 16, No. 2 was granting more to the minority in the Northwest than section 16, No. 1.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the Quebec end of the policy.

Mr. BERGERON. No, Mr. Chairman, we have only one——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. I have only one policy. I have been in every province in this Dominion, and wherever I have been my policy has been the same. My chieftain can defend himself. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) has been accustomed to be dragged after his leader, I can tell him that on this side we are not worked by strings in our leader's hands. We have opinions of our own particularly on questions of this kind. I speak for myself. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) has put a question to me and I desire to answer it. I say that clause 16, No. 2, the clause he is going to vote for, does not give anything to the Catholic minority of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I would like to put to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) one question. I do not rise to prolong this discussion, but, as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has expressed a desire that I should follow him, I propose, in a few words to test his sincerity on this very important question. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) finds fault with the attitude of this side of the House on this particular question. He says he is prepared to go before the people of his province and denounce the attitude of the government on this question. Will he, in his place in this House to-night, say that when the time comes he will go before the people of his province and denounce the attitude of his own leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) and those who surround him ?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend (Mr. A. Johnston) knows the parliamentary usages, does he not ? And that is a very fair and very polite way to answer him. The people of my province are a most intelligent people ; and when they read the proceedings of this House and see that I voted against my leader, they will understand that without any speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. That is not a satisfactory——

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) agrees to disagree with his leader.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I make the statement here—and I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will contradict me—that when the hon. gentleman goes before the people of his province, he will not condemn the attitude of his own leader and those around him.

Mr. BERGERON. One thing is sure—the government which is responsible for this legislation will get a very large share of it too.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. gentleman threatens us with the province of Quebec and what is going to happen to us when we go before the people there.——

Mr. BERGERON. I do not threaten.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I want to give the hon. gentleman notice now of a question that he will be called upon to answer when we go before the people there, and that question is, why he kept this amendment back until three days after the London election ?

Mr. BERGERON. That is a very small point for a Minister of Justice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Give us an answer.

Mr. BERGERON. I cannot oblige the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to believe me, but I state here that I had no more thought when I prepared this amendment ten days ago, of the London or the North Oxford election then I have to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. And I do not see what possible effect my amendment could have had upon those elections. If the hon. minister knows, I shall be glad if he will tell me.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is only one thing that I have to say. Previous to the London election we had two speeches from the opposition—one by the leader from Quebec (Mr. Monk) and the other by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). Both of them declared that section 16, No. 2, went further than section 16, No. 1, in favour of the minority in the Northwest. The leader of the opposition still holds that view, but the leader from Quebec tells us that practically section 16, No. 2, gives the minority nothing at all.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. Minister of Justice wants to be fair, he will state also that I spoke on the second reading of this Bill, and that in the main, I said exactly what I have said to-day—and that was a long time before the elections in North Oxford and London. But as the hon. minister has mentioned that point, will he tell me why we were marking time three weeks before those elections came off ? Who is managing the affairs of this House ? Who is responsible for having legislation brought in here and pressed through the House ? The responsibility rests upon the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and he is the one who can tell us why we have been for three weeks marking time, instead of going on from day to day with the business which we had in hand.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not think that this quarrel will throw light upon the legislation before us ; but, having taken the course which I thought the only one that I could take with propriety, I intend to keep to that course without regard to the comments upon my conduct or upon my utterances. So far as the legal strength of my amendment is concerned, I have every respect for the opinion of the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur), but I may tell that hon. gentleman that I have still more respect for the Minister of Justice as a legal authority. The words of this 'worthless amendment' of which the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) speaks were taken from the clause prepared by the Minister of Justice, accepted by the whole government and presented as the means of securing the rights of the Catholic minority in the Northwest and so upheld by the government and their supporters up to the time they changed their policy.

Mr. BRODEUR. The clause prepared by the Minister of Justice included more than the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bourassa's) amendment.

Mr. BOURASSA. The only difference between the clause prepared by the Minister of Justice and the clause which I proposed last night is that subsection 2 was omitted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the Minister of Justice (Mr Fitzpatrick) himself said that that was not necessary.

Mr. BOURASSA. This was done upon the strength of a declaration made in this House by the Minister of Justice that, so far as he was concerned, he did not see the necessity of bringing in again the words of the law of 1875, because, by making it perfectly clear that section 93 of the British North America Act should apply, that meant that the Territories could come in as if they were provinces, and would bring into force the Act of 1875, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any ordinance of the Northwest Territories. I have here the declaration made by the Minister of Justice on the 8th of June to that effect. I have also the declaration made by the Minister of Justice this afternoon, saying that my amendment meant a re-enactment of everything which the hon. member for Beauharnois intends to secure to the minority in the Northwest. Therefore, so far as the legal strength of my amendment is concerned, I rely upon the Minister of Justice who is the legal adviser of this government and of this parliament. It may be that I am mistaken, but, I suppose, if I am mistaken, no suspicion should rest upon me in following so distinguished a legal light rather than following those whom I do not consider legal lights, the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) tries to continue on his own account the efforts made by some hon. gentlemen on the other side to fasten upon me the reputation of a demagogue. And it was the friendly pleasantry of my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) to couple my name with that of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). But unfortunately for the views of these hon. gentlemen, a quarter of an hour after the Solicitor General and the Minister of Inland Revenue voted with the hon. member for East Grey against the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). Mr. Chairman, it is not my habit to discuss—the Solicitor General reminds me that he shirked the vote.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, my hon. friend ought to be courteous to me; I said I did not vote, because I was paired with an hon. member opposite.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is a little joke, it means simply that if the Solicitor General had been here he would have voted with the hon. member for East Grey. Now I do not mention that to make any political capital. We should be broad enough to consider the value of motions brought before the House, without trying to make capital out of the fact that this or that gentleman votes for them. I have declared that I was opposed to clause 16, No. 2 brought in by the government, and I said that I was standing upon the same ground that the whole Liberal party occupied on the 21st of February; and if I am a demagogue now, and if my name should be coupled with that of the hon. member for East Grey as a brand of discord, then the whole Liberal party, beginning with the Prime Minister and ending with the Minister of Inland Revenue, are brands of discord. As I stated last night, I should not be denounced by Liberals on that ground. They may say I am wrong, that I am mistaken in refusing to follow them in their retreat, but I think they should spare themselves the idea of trying to make political capital among their own friends in the province of Ontario by calling me a French demagogue for what I said in Montreal, in the only speech I have made outside this House, and which the Minister of Inland Revenue has denounced this afternoon as the speech of a demagogue and in which he said, I had charged the Prime Minister with sacrificing the rights of his fellow citizens. I was the only Liberal in the province of Quebec who opposed the campaign which is now conducted by the organs of the Minister of Inland Revenue, stating that there is not enough spirit of justice among the English Protestants of this country to do justice to the minority in the Northwest. When they go to Montreal and Quebec they do not make those broad speeches. Oh no, they say: It is true, the hon. member for Labelle is right, the minority in the Northwest is sacrificed, but it is useless to ask for anything more, and the member for Labelle is only a brand of discord, because the English Protestants of this country are not broad enough to give justice to the minority. What I stated in Montreal is what I stated here last night; because it is unfortunately my habit, as it was during the Boer war, and as it will be as long as I have a seat in this House, to use the same language in my province that I use in this parliament of Canada. Instead of making patriotic orations on St. Jean Baptiste Day in the province of Quebec, if I have anything to say in the defence of my people, I come here and speak openly. Let me tell the Minister of Inland Revenue that I do not seek shelter for my cowardice by saying that the English Protestants of this country are not broad enough to give justice to the minority. I said in Montreal, at the Monument National, in that speech which the Minister of Inland Revenue has denounced as the speech of a demagogue: Gentlemen, those Liberals who tell you that the English-speaking Protestants of this country are not broad enough to render us justice, are calumninating the English-speaking population of Canada. I said in Montreal, and I repeated it last night, that if this question had been put in its true light by the government, there would not have been ten per cent of the members in this House, including both sides, who would not have answered: What the minority is entitled to they shall have everywhere.

Now, the Minister of Inland Revenue has denounced me, he says I am conducting a political agitation, that I am trying to manufacture political capital for myself—or rather he has insinuated that I am trying to make political capital for myself at the expense of my party, and at the expense of the peace of this country. Sir, what were the words of the Minister of Justice? Here again, if the Minister of Inland Revenue does not agree with his colleague the Minister of Justice, I may be pardoned perhaps if upon a legal question I prefer to take the opinion of the Minister of Justice to that of the Minister of Inland Revenue. What did the Minister of Justice say with reference to the second section 16? He said:

> The second gives effect purely and simply to those provisions of the ordinance of 1901 which are applicable to separate schools, and as I have pointed out in the opinion of Sir John Thompson, the provisions of the ordinance of 1901 which merely reproduces the ordinances of 1887 and 1888 abridge the right of the Roman Catholics in such a way as to give to the minority in a school district the right to a separate school and makes no provision for a majority.

Now, the Minister of Inland Revenue stated positively that the object of this amendment was to perpetuate the existing state of things, and as I said last night and as I repeat to-night, has it not been up to this time the opinion of the vast majority of the Liberal party that, as a matter of fact, this amendment meant to secure the existing state of things in the Northwest? Now we have the deliberate opinion of the Minister of Justice that the only thing which is secured by this clause is the right of Catholics with respect to separate schools. I stated last night, and I proved by documents emanating from the Northwest Territories, that the only separate schools which can exist under the law are reduced to the paltry number of 9, and that there are to-day 150 schools organized by Catholics which receive no guarantee whatever under this amendment, and I have the word of the Minister of Justice for it. Therefore, when the Minister of Inland Revenue says that the object of this amendment is to crystallize the existing system, he is giving a straight denial to the Minister of Justice. Therefore I think I am justified in saying that either the Minister of Inland Revenue or the Minister of Justice is deceiving us and deceiving the minority in the Northwest. When we are told positively by the Minister of Inland Revenue, that the minority in the Northwest have accepted the present amendment, I tell him that they have accepted it just as the people of Quebec accepted it, because they have been positively assured during the last few months by the government supporters and the government press, and privately by members of the government, that the object of this amendment was to secure the whole existing system in the Northwest, majority schools as well as minority schools. Therefore when I have before me the straight declaration of the Minister of Justice, the member of the government who is responsible for this legislation, that this is not true, and that these 150 schools organized in places where Catholics are in a majority, receive no guarantee whatever, and when I have shown by the ordinances that in every district where Catholic will be thus situated they will be in the same position, then I say that the Minister of Inland Revenue has no right to call me a demagogue because I simply state what has been heretofore admitted.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not say anything of the kind, I simply said that the hon. member has no right to accuse other members of being cowards, as he did last night.

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. gentleman is reducing his speech to a small proposition now. The hon. gentleman, no more than the Solicitor General, has used the word 'demagogue'; but after their organs have denounced the member for East Grey as a demagogue, he coupled my name with his, and stated that I was fanning religious prejudices in the province of Quebec, that I had no idea of giving justice to the minority in the Northwest. I begin to doubt whether those hon. gentlemen have taken the trouble to learn the meaning of the word 'demagogue.' I know something of my language, I know something of the English language, and I know something of the word 'demagogue,' but after their organs have deman, in the very words of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, who tries to fan the prejudices of people without any other object than to serve his own purposes. What did the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue insinuate against me? That, without having regard to the needs of the minority, I had brought in an amendment which meant nothing for the minority, and that I was fanning the prejudices of the Catholic people of Quebec against the Prime Minister. Why, the only kind of appeal I made in the province of Quebec was against the hypocritical campaign carried on by the government organs in that province for the last three months, saying that, as a matter of fact, justice is not rendered to the minority, and that justice cannot be rendered to the minority because the English Liberals did not want to render justice to the minority.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, no. It has never been stated in any Liberal organ in Quebec that the Liberals were not willing to render justice to the minority.

Mr. BOURASSA. It has been stated positively in an article in reply to a letter I sent to 'Le Canada' of Montreal. I have not the paper here, and I do not remember the date, but my hon. friend had better not be too sure about it or we will have a repetition of the event of last night, when it was stated positively that 'Le Canada' had not called the henchmen of hon. gentlemen opposite yellow dogs. It has been stated positively in 'Le Canada' that it was true justice was not rendered to the minority by the Quebec Liberals, that they must take this measure or nothing, because the English-speaking members of the House would not agree to give more. What is the position in the province of Ontario? It was clearly expressed there a short time ago by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). It is, as I stated last night, that the Catholics of this country have rights ; they have moral rights because of their number and because of the necessity of living in harmony with them, that in any province where they have no legal rights they have received separate schools, but in the North-west Territories, where they have legal rights, they will not receive separate schools; and therefore the Dominion government is entitled to the support of the Protestants of this country, because, breaking its pledges, breaking its moral and constitutional obligations, the Liberal government has abandoned the clause which secured separate schools, and is now enacting a new clause which gives separate schools in name and public schools in fact. I have asked the hon. leader of the Conservative party if he thought that he was working for the good of the country by adopting the position which he has assumed, under some legal opinion which I respect, but which I think that hon. gentleman would never have entertained if he had not been forced to adopt this attitude by the wing of the party—I will not say yellow dogs, in the words of the government organs to which I have referred, but I will simply say, in demagogic language, by the members of the Orange wing of the Tory party. I have made my statement against the Conservative party, and now I make my statement against the Liberal party. I say that the Liberal party has not fulfilled its duty by bowing to that campaign which has been raised by the Tory party, or by apologizing for the position it has taken. The spectacle of one party apologizing to the other and trying to give the least possible measure of justice to the minority because of its opponents being able to take advantage of it, is not one which is apt to produce that conciliation and harmony which the right hon. Prime Minister sincerely has been trying to bring about in this country for the last thirty years. That was the only kind of denunciation that I uttered against the Liberal party, and I still adhere to it. I admit it puts me in this strange position, that one day I am against one party and another day I am against the other party. I admit that it is a dangerous position, that it is a position which opens the door to the narrow and small argument, which has been used by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, that I want to pose as a virtuous man. Last night my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) was trying to build a pedestal of virtue to his party and the government, because he said it stood between the hon. member or East Grey and the hon. member for Labelle. But a moment later the government were voting with the hon. member for East Grey, and the Solicitor General and the member for East Grey were joining in a tender embrace. I might follow in the footsteps of my hon. friend the Solicitor General and build a pedestal to myself between this demagogic government and those demagogic people who voted with them. I could stand in the middle as the only virtuous man in this parliament. But I am not doing that, and if my hon. friends had spared their insinuations and their accusations—their false accusations against me—if they had contented themselves with defending their position against my argument, if they had contented themselves with proving the falsity of my argument, I would have contented myself with trying to make my position as good as possible. But the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General know what my position towards the government is. They know that I have been a Liberal as long as they have. They know that I have fought for the Liberal party, they know that I have never received—nor do I expect to receive—a favour from the Liberal party, they know that I have conducted all my elections at my own expense, and that I have not received a cent for making speeches in support of that party. While I am ready to stand for the principles of the Liberal party as long as the Liberal party is true to its principles, I am Liberal enough and attached enough to the traditions of my party not to sacrifice the views which commend themselves to my judgment because any small mob may try to frighten me. My hon. friend the Solicitor General has gone back to past history. I will not follow him in those steps. I will not trace him back to the history of his ancestors, I will not even trace him back in his own history, but why he should pose as a moderate man and charge me with being a French extremist and the representative of the minority of extremists in the province of Quebec, is something that I cannot understand. I have always been the same kind of a man. I have always stood for the policy of conciliation, which the hon. gentleman spoke of last night ; I have always stood for the policy of maintaining British institutions, and while I have not been given to making loyal speeches, speeches in exaltation of the British Crown, I have never tried to get applause in any French Canadian city by making speeches in favour of the independence of Canada. I have never been in the habit of holding conferences at the Club National for the justification of Nihilism, as the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue did.

Mr. BRODEUR. I deny that entirely. If my hon. friend wants to go into ancient history, we can do the same, too.

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly, I am ready. I have nothing to protect but myself, and I find myself so small that it is very easy to protect myself. My hon. friend professes to be insulted. Well, of course, I admit that my way of putting things is perhaps harder than his words are. I do not proceed by that kind of insinuation which consists of standing upon a pedestal of virtue and lecturing people for deeds they never committed, accusing them of having used words which they never uttered, painting them in colours that they never assumed. That was the kind of argument which was used by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue against me to-night. It cannot harm me, but I would rather receive a blow straight in the face in regard to something that I had done than that mild and polite insinuations should be made in regard to something that I have never done. I will never try to pose as a man of moderate views, as a man of great balance of mind when out of my own province, leaving to my organs the task of doing the demagogie campaign that I dare not do myself; nor will I try to shelter myself by saying that the English-speaking majority are not courageous enough to stand by the measure of justice which the government is granting.

And now, Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to detain the committee longer. I beg pardon if I may have been somewhat out of order, but the fact is that for the past two days the greater part of the discussion has been out of order. As I am about alone in my own party except for my good and loyal friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) I am sometimes obliged to say a little more for myself than if I had some devoted followers who would be always ready to take up my defence. For the consolation of my good friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, I shall quote an article which was published in 'Le Canada' on the 9th of June, 1905. I could follow up the files of that journal and find many more articles like it, because I distinctly remember one to which I replied stating: You are calumniating the English-speaking members of the House of Commons, for I feel sure that if the question were put straight to them they would be ready to support the government in any measure of justice. Here is the article from 'Le Canada' which I will read in French first and then translate into English:

Il n'y avait donc que deux alternatives; tenir ferme et se faire battre à la Chambre des Communes; puis voir le gouvernement Laurier remplacé, comme le disait carrément l'hon. M. Fielding, par un gouvernement tory, exclusivement protestant.

Ou bien accepter l'amendement Sifton comme un compromis, nous garantissant un minimum de droits, qui est le maximum de ce que les députés libéraux anglais consentent à nous accorder.

Et pourtant, aujourd'hui, ceux qui lisent les comptes rendus des discours prononcés pendant la campagne électorale qui fait rage à Lôndon et à Oxford Nord, peuvent contater deux choses:

10. Que l'article 16 originaire n'aurait pas été accepté par le parti conservateur ni même par la majorité des libéraux. Parmi les collègues même de Sir Wilfrid, il y a eu une défection sensationnelle, celle de M. Sifton, qui entraîne avec lui probablement tous les députés libéraux de l'Ouest.

Mr. BOURASSA.

I translate.

There were only two alternatives: be firm and be beaten in the House of Commons and see the Laurier government put aside and as squarely stated by the Hon. Mr. Fielding, a Tory government, exclusively Protestant, taking its place. Or, accept the Sifton amendment as a compromise granting the minimum of rights which is the maximum that the English Liberal members are consenting to grant us.

There is another paragraph which says:

The first clause 16 was not accepted by the Conservative party, not even by a majority of the Liberals; among the colleagues of Sir Wilfrid Laurier there was a sensational defection, that is, Mr. Sifton who probably would have carried with him all the Liberal members of the west.

Now, Sir, as I stated last night the only effect of the second clause 16 is to guarantee the existence of so-called Catholic schools where the Catholics are in the minority. It grants nothing where the Catholics are in a majority. This point has been admitted by the Minister of Justice, it has been admitted by the Prime Minister, it was published by me without contradiction—there was some contradiction at first but afterwards it was admitted I was right —'Le Canada' for one month had heard its leaders admitting that this amendment deprived the Catholics of their rights so far as 150 out of their 160 schools in the Northwest is concerned, but 'Le Canada' still tried to create the impression on the people of the province of Quebec that the English members of this House of Commons would not grant justice to these 150 schools as well as to the other nine schools. This is what I have denounced, perhaps I did not express it in as strong and heated language as I might use—but I certainly have denounced it as more apt to raise a feeling in the province of Quebec against the English population of this country than anything I can say here. It was represented that although it were demonstrated to the English Liberal members of the House of Commons that they were as a matter of fact sacrificing the rights of nine-tenths of the Catholics of the Northwest, they would still exact their pound of flesh and refuse justice to nine-tenths of the Catholic population. I have denounced that contention in Montreal, I reiterated my denunciation here last night. These are the only two speeches of mine upon which the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General can build up their virtuous appeal in favour of their moderation and against my demagogy. I have stated in Montreal, as I have stated here, that I did not entertain such an opinion of my English-speaking colleagues in this House, and I said that I was convinced that if the government would show them that the effect of the amendment would be to deprive nine-tenths of the Catholics of the Northwest of the rights promised them—I do not refer to first clause 16 but to the second, it is my deep conviction that the Liberal members of this House and a large portion of the English Conservative members would have said : at least if we give something to one-tenth of the Catholics let us also give it to the remaining nine-tenths. I still adhere to that opinion, and I say that trying to make the people of the province of Quebec feel that the English Liberals in this House are so unreasonable as to be unwilling to grant that measure of justice, is not the proper means to take to bring about that feeling of conciliation and fair-play for which the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General are so anxious now, and which they are so much afraid I am going to disturb. Mr. Chairman, I say here what I say elsewhere, nothing more and nothing less—I am wrong ; I say a little more here than I would say in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not rise to continue the debate but merely to ask a question, and before doing so I congratulate the leader of the third party on the vigorous reply he has given to the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General. I naturally feel a little more pride and interest in the hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) since the information was given me last night—which I did not know before—by the Solicitor General, that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) though working from different standpoints were working for the same end, and that therefore we were naturally allies. That idea dawned on me then for the first time and I thought it was due to myself that I should cross the floor and fraternize with the other members of the party. I congratulate the leader of that party on the vigour his party has shown to night notwithstanding its youth, and it seems to me there is a more hopeful outlook for it in the future. As there seems to be a desire to get proper legal interpretations of certain clauses, I wish to put a question. In view of the emphatic statement made by the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) when we were in North Oxford with regard to the meaning of clause 16, No. 2, I wish to get an interpretation from the Minister of Justice. The hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) stated emphatically that clause 16, No. 2, left the new province free to amend this educational system and this Act, or, to substitute any other Act they desired and do away with this law entirely. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) drew my attention to this portion of the clause which he said justified his statement.

In the appropriation by the legislature or distribution by the government of the province of any money for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the said chapter 29, or any Act passed in amendment thereof, or any substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination whatever, &c.

The hon. member (Mr. Campbell) declared that this clause justified him in saying that the province was free to amend this Act in any way it wished or to substitute any other Act for it. I then told the member for Centre York that when we reached the House of Commons I would endeavour to get a higher authority than he to interpret this clause, and in accordance with that promise I wish now to ask the Minister of Justice, if the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) was justified in the statement he made in North Oxford.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend will remember that I read a statement in the House so that there might be no doubt whatever as to my opinion in respect to the construction that should be put on clause 16, No. 2. I cannot do better now than to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) to do me the honour of reading that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I to assume that the Minister of Justice dissents entirely from the interpretation put on the clause by the hon. member for Centre York ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is rather a dangerous thing to assume too much.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in that assumption or am I correct in the assumption that the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) was right ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Justice does not deign to put his interpretation alongside the interpretation of the member for Centre York.

Mr. MONK. I return to what I mentioned a moment ago. Subsection 1, of section 16, No. 2, makes provision for the protection of the existing rights of the Catholic minority when they are in a minority in a school district, but it makes no provision for the protection of the majority where the majority happens to be Catholics, in case the legislature should wish to interfere with their rights. Has my hon. friend given that matter any attention ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, yes.

Mr. MONK. And is it the intention of the government to modify that section in order to meet that case ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think we will deal with the amendment now proposed if my hon. friend will permit me.

Mr. PORTER. Before this question is submitted to a vote, inasmuch as the election in North Oxford has been referred to in this debate and perhaps some hon. members in this House have a very forcible recollection of the proceedings in that riding during that contest, and inasmuch as I feel it my duty to call to your attention and to the attention of the committee the facts, as I believe, that there is present in the committee now, taking part in the deliberations of the committee, and there has been for some days in the House, taking part in the deliberations of the House, an hon. member who, according to my judgment, has forfeited his right as an hon. gentleman to longer continue to occupy a seat in this committee or in this House. It may be a source of surprise to some hon. members that I should make this statement, it may be a matter of curiosity to others. I am bound to say that I do not state that to be the fact from a legal standpoint at all. The position of the hon. member to whom I refer, the hon. member for Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. D. D. McKenzie) is one which he has brought on himself voluntarily, it is a peculiar one. His retirement, the forfeiture of his seat cannot be enforced by law or by the rules and regulations or procedure of this House, it rests entirely with the hon. member to say before this House whether he recognizes those principles of honour which should characterize the conduct of a public man either in this House or out of this House when speaking on a public occasion. It is, I say, therefore a matter entirely with the hon. member himself as to whether he appreciates, fully appreciates——

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I rise to a point of order. I desire to ask through the chairman what clause of the Bill the hon. member for Hastings is discussing ?

Mr. SPROULE. Clause 16, No. 2.

Mr. PORTER. I think I stated my position that there was in the chamber an hon. member who shortly will be called upon to vote and I am questioning that right——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member must discuss matters relative to the subject before the chair. If it is a question of privilege it is different altogether.

Mr. PORTER. Quite so, the matter I am speaking to has reference entirely to a difference of opinion between my hon. friend and myself as to this very clause 16.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Chair.

Mr. PORTER. I think I might be permitted to go on without going to the extreme of moving for the rising of the committee because it is a matter of which I have given my hon. friend notice and of which I have spoken to the Prime Minister in reference to bringing it before the House. I was told by the Prime Minister that when clause 12 was under discussion would be the best time to bring it up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman told me the other day that he wanted to have a point of difference between him and the member for Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. D. D. McKenzie) settled. I forget the time at which he wanted to discuss it, but I told him that I thought he might find an opportunity when we were in committee on this Bill, but if the hon. gentleman had told me that he wanted to put in jeopardy the seat of the hon. gentleman or to question his right to take part in the proceedings, and to vote upon the question now before the House, certainly I would not have told him what I told him. I understood the hon. gentleman wanted to have just a little passage at arms between himself and the hon. member for Victoria such as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has attempted to have with the member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell), but if the hon. gentleman had stated that he wanted to put in question the right of an hon. member to a seat in this House or to take part in the proceedings or to vote, my hon. friend must realize that a question of this kind cannot be taken up at this stage.

Mr. PORTER. I did not take the position, nor do I intend to put in jeopardy the seat of the hon. member to whom I have referred; that is a matter resting with him. It rests with him as to whether he shall jeopardize his seat.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not see any difference.

Mr. PORTER. But I do claim I have a right inasmuch as there is a difference of opinion between the hon. member and myself with regard to clause——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling is that it is not relevant to the question. We are discussing clause 16 and the amendment thereto. This can have no bearing on that.

Mr. PORTER. I move that the committee rise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I wish to point out to my hon. friend, and I think he will agree, that he has no right on such a motion to speak of anything else than the question before the House.

Mr. PORTER. I move that the committee rise, and the reason I do so is that the committee is not at the present moment properly constituted, that the committee ought not to proceed further constituted as it is at the present moment for the reason I have already pointed out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I rule that motion is out of order.

Mr. PORTER. What is out of order ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Raising the question that the committee is not properly constituted. I declare that out of order.

Mr. PORTER. I move upon general grounds.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member cannot move a second motion without some proceeding intervening, so I will call the hon. member to order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never heard any such rule as that in committee; that is a rule for the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rules in committee are those that prevail in the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg pardon, I think that in committee an hon. member can speak as often as he likes ; in the House he is confined to the particular question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He cannot move a second motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the other one is to be characterized in the way the chairman has mentioned. He can move again, he can move motions alternately, he can move as often as he likes. A member can move that the committee rise and report progress and then move that the committee rise, and then again that the committee rise and report progress and keep that up indefinitely.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend knows the hon. member cannot move two motions in sucession.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg pardon, I thought he could provided he does not move the same motion twice in succession.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend pretend that when a member has moved that the committee rise he can, while still on his feet, move that the committee report progress ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly he can, not in the House but in the committee where he can speak as often as he likes. You can move as many motions as you like provided they are not of the same character. You cannot make the same motion twice in succession, that is the only restriction in committee. If, for example, I move an amendment in this committee to clause 16, that need not prevent me moving another and still another to the same clause, providing they are not of the same character.

Mr. PATERSON. And not all running at the same time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know that any of them were going to run. My hon. friend is trying to be jocular, but his jocularity is rather ponderous. I do not know of any rule which would prevent any hon. member discussing any question on the motion that the committee rise. I have always understood that this motion in committee corresponds to a motion to adjourn the House, and that the mover may debate upon it any matter he sees fit and give any reason he thinks proper why the committee should rise.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not the authorities at hand, but if my hon. friend will take the trouble to look at the books—I have heard it discussed so often in 1885—I am quite certain he will find that upon a motion that the committee rise, the subject under discussion cannot be departed from, but must continue to be discussed.

Mr. STOCKTON. The Chairman only ruled that the reasons assigned by the mover of the resolution were out of order—not that the resolution itself was out of order. The mover of the resolution may give different reasons that will be in accord with the order of the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He cannot debate anything but the question before the House. Moreover the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) is stating that the object of his motion is to declare that the committee is not properly constituted because the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) is not eligible. This is clearly a question of privilege and not one which can be discussed on this motion.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is one of the reasons, but not all the reasons. The moment the Chairman rules that the reason given by the hon. member for Hastings is out of order, he can drop that and go on with another reason.

Mr. FIELDING. Provided it relates to the subject before the committee.

Mr. STOCKTON. And the motion to adjourn, certainly.

Mr. PORTER. I have only made one motion before the committee, and can give one reason or half a dozen for making it. Whether one reason is good and another bad or not is a matter the committee may deal with. But I do submit that my motion being before the Chair, I have the right to give such reasons as occur to me in support of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have held that the question raised by the hon. gentleman is not relevant to the subject under discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What question ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Regarding the hon. member for Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. D. D. McKenzie). If you wish to appeal from my decision, the hon. gentleman is at libery to do so.

Mr. PORTER. I do not desire to appeal from your decision, but I do not think the Chair quite appreciates the position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows that he cannot discuss my decision. If he wishes to appeal, the course is open to him.

Mr. PORTER. I do not desire to question your decision and not doing that, I am proceeding to urge other reasons and surely I have the right to do so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Provided they are relevant to the question before the House.

Mr. PORTER. I take the position with regard to this clause 16 under discussion, that when it was introduced and came up for debate, on more than one occasion the right hon. the First Minister was interrogated by different members on this side as to whether or not he or members of his cabinet had not consulted with the Papal Ablegate regarding the educational paragraphs of this clause. As often as I heard that question asked, just so often did I see the right hon. gentleman remain silent in his seat and refuse to deny the truth of that statement. I have taken occasion to repeat that statement outside of the House, and I believe that the statement I have just made and the statement I made outside of the House is a true statement. My utterances with regard to that matter were reported to some extent in the 'Globe' newspaper in its issue of the 12th June last.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is wandering back to what I declared out of order. We are now studying one of the clauses of the Bill before us and we cannot go beyond it. If the hon. gentleman wishes to appeal from my decision, I shall report to the Speaker, and he can take the sense of the House, but at present he must confine himself to the clause under discussion and not wander to matters not relevant.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is not this quite as relevant as the discussion of meetings held in Ontario and Quebec and which were taken part in by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Labelle said that what has taken place here the two days past was out of order, but no objection was raised. In this case, however, objection being raised, I have to give a ruling.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. We are discussing clause 16, which is the educational clause. A statement has been made with regard to what has taken place in this House concerning that clause. That statement was denied by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) reiterated his statement. When discussing clause 16, is it not entirely in order to discuss that question of fact without any motion whatever? According to my reading of the proper procedure of parliament, it is entirely in order.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. It must not be understood that anything said here to prevent this discussion has received any sanction from myself. I am only too happy to meet the hon. gentleman. I am just as ready to meet him here as I was in North Oxford. If there be any way in which he can properly bring this matter up, I shall be only to happy to reply to him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the committee is willing that the question should be settled between the two hon. gentlemen, I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. PORTER. The hon. member having expressed himself as quite ready——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion that the committee rise.

Mr. PORTER. That is all right, Mr. Chairman. I was about to relate to the committee the circumstances under which this difference between the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) and myself arose, and I made reference to that fact that there had been an election in North Oxford, the results of which both sides have cause to remember. During that election I was invited by the Conservative party to take part in discussing the issue, or what I conceived to be the only issue before the electorate in that contest, and that was the effect of this section 16 in regard to the education or educational rights in the new provinces about to be created. I do not intend now to enter into any lengthy discussion as to my views on this question. I have already expressed those views in this House, and having listened attentively to the debate since then, as well as to that which took place before I spoke, I have not heard any arguments which have led me to change my opinion. All I desire to do is to prove the position I took in North Oxford which was disputed by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). The meeting at which the difference of opinion between us arose took place at a place called Braemar in North Oxford. The only report of that meeting that I have seen was published in the 'Globe' on June 12. This report it would seem must have been prepared, or at least inspired, by the hon. member for Cape Breton. I say that for this reason——

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. The hon. member (Mr. Porter) is entirely wrong. I had nothing to do with the report.

Mr. PORTER. That the audience at that place was composed entirely of farmers in the vicinity of Braemar, except the hon. gentleman (Mr. D. D. McKenzie), a gentleman who accompanied him, Dr. Welford, who accompanied me, and myself. There was not, I venture to say, a single man at that meeting who would have written such a report as this except one of these four; and neither Dr. Welford nor myself have been in the habit of writing political articles for the 'Globe' newspaper. The report of that meeting in the 'Globe' is as follows:

(Special despatch to the 'Globe.')

Woodstock, June 10.—The Liberals succeeded in capturing a Conservative meeting at Braemar, North Oxford, last night, and the proceedings at times were unusually lively. The Tory speakers were Dr. Welford, of Woodstock, and E. Gus Porter, M.P., while Mr. D. D. Mckenzie, M.P., of Cape Breton, and Mr. J. S. Mackay, of Woodstock, went out on behalf of the opposition. There was some quibbling at the outset as to the order of speaking, and the time to be occupied. Ultimately Dr. Welford spoke for about ten minutes. Messrs. Mackay and McKenzie occupied three-quarters of an hour between them, and Mr. Porter addressed the meeting for an hour and a half. Mr. McKenzie made a very forcible speech and quite carried the audience with him, and after Mr. Porter had spoken asked for two minutes in which to answer him. The Conservatives objected, but a Liberal stalwart named John Mackay said the audience wanted to hear the matter out, even if they had to remain till morning. The Liberals obtained the upper hand, and Mr. McKenzie was able to speak for another three-quarters of an hour.

There were some warm passages in the course of the proceedings, notably when Mr. Porter claimed that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been interrogated on the floor of the House as to whether there had been any negotiations between him and Mons. Sbarretti. Mr. McKenzie explained that when Mr. Porter said that he said what he knew was untrue, and he added: I brand as a slanderer and a coward the man who would make such a statement as that.

Mr. Porter challenged Mr. McKenzie by saying that if he could not prove from the pages of 'Hansard' that that was so, he would resign his seat in parliament, if Mr. McKenzie would, on the other hand, agree to resign his seat if Mr. Porter proved that it was on the pages of 'Hansard.' Mr. McKenzie asserted that if Mr. Porter could prove his point he would resign his seat the next moment, and he added that he would take the first opportunity in the House of Commons to ask Mr. Porter to substantiate his statement.

The occurrence of which this purports to be an account took place on June 9 inst. It is now the 29th. That is to say that twenty days have elapsed since the hon. gentleman (Mr. D. D. McKenzie) undertook at the first opportunity to arraign me in this House to prove the statement that I made on that occasion. I leave it to the hon. gentlemen and this committee to say whether I have been arraigned or not. However, fearing that the hon. gentlemen might forget his undertaking with the audience at Braemar I wrote the hon. gentleman a letter, as I thought I had a right to do, having sat in this House waiting for him to bring the question up. This is the letter I wrote:

House of Commons,
June 21, 1905.

Dear Sir,—As some eight or nine days have elapsed since you took occasion to say at a public meeting held at Braemar, North Oxford that you would take the first opportunity in the House of Commons to ask me to substantiate my statement 'that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been interrogated on the floor of the House as to whether there had been any consultations between him and Monsigneur Sbarretti in regard to the school clauses of the Autonomy Bill and that Sir Wilfrid had not when so interrogated denied having such consultations and that you would resign your seat if I could show from 'Hansard' that my statement was true.' I feel it to be my privilege and duty since I have regularly attended the House since then by affording you the opportunity to carry out your promise which you have failed to do although you have been in the House—to now bring the matter to the attention of the House myself and beg to advise you that I shall do so at the first favourable opportunity presented when I am in the House.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) E. GUSS PORTER.

D. D. McKenzie, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons.

So, notwithstanding the promise and the bold statement made by the hon. gentlemen at that time that he would arraign me in this House on that question, he has not seen fit to do so. Therefore, as I wrote the hon. gentleman, I take the first opportunity to mention this matter. I do not propose to deal with this article so far as it reports the effect of the meeting, the capturing of the meeting or how it was captured. I could do so, perhaps, not to the advantage of the hon. member. That is all beside the question. But there is a straight issue between the hon. gentleman and myself as to whether the statement I made at that meeting is justified by the record of 'Hansard' or not. Let me refer to the speech made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on April 6 and reported in 'Hansard' at page 4414 and 4415. The hon. member for North Toronto said:

There were certain things that my right hon. friend, however, did not say and they are quite as remarkable as the things that he did say. He has been told times without number to his face in this House and he has not once risen to deny it, it has been very courteously brought to his attention to-day and he has thoroughly ignored it, that before he brought down his educational clause on February 21, 1905, there had been numerous conferences between himself and Monseigneur Sbarretti with reference to the provisions of that Bill. There is no denial yet. Mr. Speaker, I ask you, I ask this House. I ask the people of this country if it has come to this that in Canada the representative of any church I dont care what it is——

Then follows an interruption by an hon. member and the hon. member for North Toronto continues:

Through its accredited highest head must be visited by the premier of this country before be dares to bring down the policy——

Another interruption.

The right hon. gentleman has not denied it yet. Then I wish to ask one other question to aid this thoughtfulness that I am sure is present in this country at the present day. Is it proper for the right hon. gentleman as leader of a government to have frequent conferences with the Papal Ablegate in Ottawa with reference to a dominant part of his policy in creating new provinces, and to give the go-by of the representatives of the people in the government?

Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman did not consult the Minister of the Interior who represented the Northwest Territories, who was their sole representative in the cabinet in reference to the educational clauses of this Bill, but he sits in abject silence and allows me to state here in the House by that silence, that he did take care to consult the Papal delegate here in Ottawa. The right hon. leader of the government did not consult the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Will the right hon. gentleman tell me now whether he consulted on that educational clause more frequently the one than the other, his Postmaster General or the Papal Ablegate ?

He goes further :

Why all this fuss about such a thing as that, but, when it comes to a question of infants in arms, the wards of my right hon. friend, when their manhood and their rights for ever are to be given to them or abridged from them, my right hon. friend ignores the Minister of the Interior, ignores other members of his cabinet, but consults the Papal Ablegate.

I also desire to refer the committee to the speech of the hon. the leader of the opposition as found in 'Hansard' on page 4006 :

I have nothing to say with regard to the position which is said to have been assumed by His Excellency Monseigneur Sbarretti. He is not in any sense responsible to this parliament, he is responsible only to his ecclesiastical superiors in authority. The only persons who are in any way responsible to this parliament are the government of this country, and I thought that my right hon. friend to-day might have gone a little further than he did go. He knows as well as any one of the rest of us that it has been rumoured throughout this country, not only rumoured but stated in the publis press, that there were negotiations with His Excellency with regard to education in the Northwest Territories, if not in Manitoba. My right hon. friend did not see fit to touch that question at all to-day, and I suppose when he thinks a proper occasion arises he will deal with it. But in the meantime I may call his attention to the fact that the statements are being made in the press of the country upon what authority I do not know. All I do know is that when statements made in a very much less direct manner and on very slight foundation, were current in 1895 and 1896 with regard to the Conservative administration of those days, my hon. friend was always ready to come forward and ask for ministerial explanations, and if necessary to move the adjournment of the House in order that they might be discussed.

In view of the attitude which he saw fit to adopt ten years ago, we might have expected that he would have gone a little further to-day in calling the attention of the House to these circumstances. As I said before, the matter may perhaps require to be discussed a little further. I was not aware that the right hon. gentleman intended to bring it up to-day in this somewhat extended form. If necessary, it may be brought up and discussed on a future occasion.

I refer also to the speech made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), which I find on page 4194 of the 'Hansard':

It has been charged here to-day, and it has not been denied. that the Prime Minister was in constant consultation with the Papal Ablegate in the framing of these educational clauses. I will give the Prime Minister an opoprtunity to deny that now, and if he denies it I will withdraw all I am going to say ; I will not proceed any more.

On page 4195 he is reported to have said :

It took a month to have that clause changed. It was not in the Prime Minister's power to change it apparently to suit his own views within that time. There was a power outside the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice who had to be consulted before the admission was made that that clause might be changed.

I also refer to the speech of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) which is found on the 'Hansard' on page 4148 :

I want to know if the Minister of Justice had night interviews or any other kind of interviews with the Papal Ablegate. I want to know if the Secretary of State has been in communication with the Papal Ablegate. I want to know if it is true that the Secretary of State, the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister and the Papal Ablegate were daily holding interviews about this school question and discussing the matter in all its shapes and forms, while the people of the west and the minister from the west and Mr. Haultain were ignored. Is there any wonder why the country has been fanned into a flame when the people discover these things ? I would like to know if the Minister of Finance and the Minister of the Interior had any interviews with the Papal Ablegate? I do not suppose they will admit it, but all the other gentlemen have to admit it ; the Prime Minister had an opportunity of denying it and he did not deny it, and his colleague who followed him was not able to deny it.

I also refer to the statement made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) as reported in the 'Hansard' on page 4032 :

Can we not believe what appears in the newspapers in this city from day to day that every time there has been a crisis in connection with this Bill the Prime Minister has visited that Papal Delegate, and every change that has been made has been made with his knowledge and on his advice. We are told that the Bill was submitted to him and that the Bill was satisfactory to him, or otherwise it would not have been introduced into this House.

Further on he says :

We find that the provisions of the Bill which were submitted to that Ablegate, if we can believe what appears in the press, fasten separate schools on these new provinces for all time to come. That Bill was only accepted by the members from the west when some amendments were proposed, which were submitted to the Papal Delegate and approved of by him before they were submitted to parliament.

I refer also to the statement of the Minister of Justice—only in the course of argument I am bound to say—but it has an important bearing, inasmuch as he as well as other ministers of the Crown, had been called upon to deny this statement. The Minister of Justice is thus reported on page 4206 of 'Hansard':

> Assuming it to be true that the delegate was consulted, where is the difference in principle between the case of our friends in 1896 and the present occasion ?

I also refer—and this is the last reference I will make—to the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) as reported in 'Hansard' at page 4314 :

> When this question was launched a few weeks ago it assumed great importance, but since then a further and still more important issue has cropped up, and that is that undue influences are at work controlling and guiding the administration in a manner which should not be possible in a free British country. There is the fact—and the Prime Minister has not dared to deny it—that he has had conference after conference with the Papal Ablegate, not only as to clause 16 of the original Bill, but as to the amended educational clause which was substituted for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have very little further to add in connection with this matter. The issue between the hon. member for Cape Breton and myself was clearly and distinctly defined. I made the assertion that the right hon. leader of the government had been interrogated on the floor of this House as to whether he had been holding consultations with the Papal ablegate in connection with the educational clauses of this Bill or not and that although he had been interrogated he had not taken occasion to deny the assertion. I have read the statements of hon. members as reported in 'Hansard' that the right hon. Prime Minister was so interrogated and the question comes down to this that if the hon. member for Cape Breton, as I said in my opening, appreciates the position that he has placed himself in by the statement he made at that meeting declaring the statement I made to be false and slanderous and offering to resign his seat if I could prove the statement I made to be contained upon the pages of 'Hansard,' he should carry out his undertaking. While I do not expect from an hon. member who would be so careless in making a statement such as that to which I have referred, which he is reported to have made in the 'Globe' newspaper and which must have been made with a knowledge of its falsity or with a total disregard and want of knowledge as to whether it is true or false, that he will resign his seat in the House I do think that the least he could possibly do would be to take the first opportunity to apologize to the audience before which he made the speech to which I have referred.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, if I am lectured upon moral ethics, and upon my conduct as a citizen of this Dominion and upon the way in which I should exercise my rights and if I am obliged to accept that lecture, possibly it would be proper for me to inquire into the source of that lecture and as to how well the hon. gentleman who undertakes to lecture me has exercised those rights himself and what is his history in the particular place from which he comes. I must say at the very beginning that there is a direct issue between the hon. gentleman and myself on a question of fact. If you, Mr. Chairman, or any other hon. gentleman in this House, had to meet this hon. gentleman in North Oxford as I had to meet him, if you had to hear his speeches and his statements of alleged facts as I had to hear them, you would not be surprised that there is a direct issue as to the facts between that hon. gentleman and myself at the threshold of this question. I am not very well acquainted with hon. gentlemen in this House. I am a stranger to many of you. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows me. He knows the province from which I come. I put myself in his judgment if in the province from which I come and among the people who know me my word would not be taken on a plain question of fact between the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and myself. I will at least ask the hon. members of this House to follow the ordinary common sense way of things and to consider how a circumstance of this kind would have been brought about. It is a well defined and well understood rule of evidence that there must be an order of common sense in the way things are brought about and a story is told. I will say that only a part of the truth has been stated by the hon. gentleman as to what took place at the meeting in that campaign at which we met in North Oxford. It is quite true that I said I would bring this matter up in the House. It is well within the experience of every hon. member of this House that in discussions of the character that took place between the hon. member and myself very often things take place and expressions made use of which might not take place at cooler moments, and we think it just as well to let sleeping dogs lie. The North Oxford election is over. It resulted favourably to us, we were triumphant, we are rejoicing in the victory, and I thought it would be a small business on my part to bring this matter up in the House. I thought it would be just as well to let it go. If the hon. gentleman thinks he is going to make any capital in parliament out of what took place at that meeting I think his effort will result in failure. I am only too glad to meet him. I have taken part in campaigns not only in my own province but in other provinces, and in these campaigns I have always discussed the issue upon the conduct of the government of the day whether in Dominion or local politics on the record of the government. It was a considerable revelation to me when I met this hon. gentleman at Braemar to find that it was a hot campaign of anti-Catholicism from start to finish and not one word about the policy of this government, nothing in regard to that phase of the responsibility of the government, nothing but popery in the beginning, popery in the middle and popery in the end. That was the whole song of the hon. member who is coming here and asking you to pass judgment upon me because I crossed swords with him on that occasion. What was his first act when he arrived at the meeting? Himself and another gentleman landed there loaded with newspapers (in a carriage) the London 'Free Press' with all its blazing head lines about Sbarretti, the Pope and Hyman, that had been used in all those cartoons up there. They had their carriage loaded with these papers and the hon. gentleman, his friend the doctor and the driver started out to distribute that stuff the moment they got there. That was the first thing that I was up against. It was a new line to me and I appeal to the hon. leader of the opposition to say if in the province that I come from we carry on elections on questions of that kind. We never make an issue of that kind. The hon. member at the opening of the meeting showed his generosity by confining myself and another gentleman to forty-five minutes while giving to himself and his friends two hours. That was the very first start. If we had been intruders at that meeting, it would have been a different thing. We were invited to be there. Their posters said that discussion was invited. When we went there in response to that invitation we were told forsooth that we would get forty-five minutes between the two of us and that we could do what we liked with that time. Mr. McKay spoke for fifteen minutes and I occupied the balance of the time. I want to point out to you the syllogism or logic of this thing to show how it came about. The hon. member was not speaking ten minutes when he made the statement that it had come to a fine pass in this country when the laws of the country were dictated, written and handed to her premier by the representative of the Pope. That was the very first statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. Yes; he said that clause 16, No. 1, was not drafted by Sir Wilfrid Laurier; that it was not drafted by the Minister of Justice; that it was not drafted by any other member of the government, but that it was drafted by Sbarretti and placed in the hands of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was told: Go; introduce that, and do not dare introduce anything else. I felt it was my duty to say at once to the hon. member (Mr. Porter): You belie the Prime Minister, and you falsify the facts, and I challenge you to prove your statement. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) introduced his evidence, and he said: I will prove it to you from 'Hansard'; I will show you that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was interrogated on that point, and he did not deny it. I challenge the hon. gentleman now to prove his statement with regard to the drafting of that clause. If he can prove now that the Minister of Justice did not draft that clause, but that His Excellency Monseigneur Sbarretti drafted it, I will stand by my promise and resign my seat if he will do the same. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) said he would resign his seat if he did not prove his proposition, but he never touched on his proposition at all to-night. That is the kind of a gentleman that comes before you to-night producing one half of the evidence only. When he made the statement about the party who drafted clause 16, number 1 as alleged, I said to the people of Braemar: Gentlemen, even if it were true that Sir Wilfrid Laurier did consult Monseigneur Sbarretti about this question, what is there wrong in that; this is the man beyond all men in Canada who represents the religious denomination that is particularly affected by this legislation; and if Sir Wilfrid Laurier or any other man at the head of a government in this country did consult the special representative of a church about legislation that concerns it particularly, is there anything wrong about that? I took occasion to point out that the Presbyterian General Assembly was then sitting in the city of Kingston, and I said that if Sir Wilfrid Laurier went to Kingston and spoke to the Venerable Doctor Armstrong about something that particularly concerned the Presbyterian Church, would it be fair or honourable for anybody in this country to arraign him because, forsooth, he consulted the Moderator of the General Assembly upon a subject that particularly concerned the Presbyterian Church in Canada? That is the argument I used. I said to the people that it was cowardly and contemptible—I did not mention this gentleman's name—I said it was cowardly and contemptible for any man in the midst of a Presbyterian and Protestant body, and miles away from any Catholic that could take his own part, to start a discussion on religion and denunciation of the Catholic church, I said such a man was a slanderer and a coward, and I repeat that statement now. The House will remember that I was meeting a campaign of a character I never met before, I was meeting in controversy a man of a class I never met before. I appeal to the leader of the opposition, a gentleman from my own province, if it is not true that when lawyers in Nova Scotia meet, either at the bar or on the hustings, they tell the truth as they understand it, and they tell the whole truth. I told the hon. member (Mr. Porter) on that occasion that I did not know much about the judges or the courts of Ontario, but that I looked upon them as perhaps higher courts and greater judges than ours, and I said to the hon. gentleman that if he would conduct himself in his quotations of law and the handling of a case in our Nova Scotia courts as he did before that audience, in ten minutes he would be kicked out of the court. That is what I told him in Oxford, and that is what I tell him now. These are the facts, and I am not going to follow the discussion up any further. I told some of my friends up there the character of the opposition that was given by this man, and they asked me who it was, and the moment they heard his name they said: Oh, what else could you expect? Now, Mr. Chairman, they tried to steal the vote in that constituency, they tried to falsify the facts, but the result was that in that small place Braemar, the Liberal candidate came out with seventy-five of a majority. I shall be glad to go back to that place with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) and discuss the facts over again. He was in his own province, where I was an entire stranger; and if I could kick him out of court and capture the meeting, I think I was entitled to do it. He undertook to prove that section 16 was drafted by the Papal ablegate and put in the hands of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who moved it without changing a line or a word. Has the hon. member (Mr. Porter) proven that? When he proves that it will be time enough for him to interrupt the proceedings of this House with the statement that I should resign my seat.

Mr. PORTER. I do not intend to prolong the discussion between my hon. friend and myself as to our personal qualifications. I rose to bring to the attention of the House a plain and simple issue between him and me upon a public question. It will be utterly useless for me to undertake to prove the statements made either by myself or by him, except by producing the report in the public press and one other written document which I happen to have in my possession. The statement made by the hon. member (Mr. D. D. McKenzie) as to how I introduced this question at that meeting is utterly untrue. I say it is absolutely false.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PORTER. I say it is not in accordance with the facts, and the written evidence proves it is not in accordance with the facts. The only report of that meeting is printed in the 'Globe' newspaper, which is a friend of the hon. gentleman, and which reports his side of the case in a friendly way. The 'Globe' defines the issue between the hon. gentleman and myself on that occasion in plain and unmistakable language, and its statement is not in accord with the statement of the hon. gentleman. The 'Globe' says:

> Mr. Porter claimed that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been interogated on the floor of the House as to whether there had been any negotiations between him and Monseigneur Sbarretti.

The paper does not show that one single word or syllable was uttered by me to the effect that that clause had been drafted by Monseigneur Sbarretti.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. That is what you said.

Mr. PORTER. I repudiate that statement entirely. What I said at that meeting is exactly what is reported in the 'Globe,' with the single exception that I added, and it is not reported, that when the right hon. gentleman was so interrogated he had not taken occasion to deny it. The 'Globe' goes on to define the position in this way:

> Mr. Porter challenged Mr. Mackenzie by saying that if he could not prove from the pages of 'Hansard' that that was so, he would resign his seat in parliament if Mr. Mackenzie would on the other hand agree to resign his seat if Mr. Porter proved that it was on the pages of 'Hansard.'

That defines the issue between us and I leave it to this House or to any one who reads this speech whether or not I have proved the statement I made, declaring it to be contained on the pages of 'Hansard,' word for word almost as I stated it. My hon. friend took issue with me on that and undertook, if I did prove it that he would resign his seat. To-night he has not attempted to make any answer; he has not attempted to deny that that was the issue between us, and he has not resigned his seat. He has tried to call attention to something else but he has not denied it and I venture to say he will not deny that the report in the 'Globe' newspaper is absolutely correct with the addition to which I have already referred. That is not the only evidence. Let me call my hon. friend's attention to another little piece of evidence which if he was so secure in the position he has stated to the committee to-night he would have taken occasion to repudiate. On June 21, when he had failed to keep his promise of arraigning me before the House as to my statement, I wrote the letter to which I referred and in that letter I distinctly and clearly defined the issue between us. I said in that letter:

> As some eight or nine days have elapsed since you took occasion to say at a public meeting at Braemar in North Oxford, that you would take the first opportunity in the House to ask me to substantiate my statement——

Then I inserted in inverted commas:

> —'that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been interrogated on the floor of the House as to whether there had been any consultations between him and Monseigneur Sbarretti with regard to the school clauses of the Autonomy Bill, and that

Sir Wilfrid Laurier had not when so interrogated, denied having such consultations and that you would resign your seat in the House if I could prove from 'Hansard' my statement to be true.'

That letter has been in his possession from June 21 to the present time, but he has never taken occasion to deny that in any way, shape or form. The issue is a plain, clear and distinct one, and I think the proof is beyond controversy. I leave it to my hon. friend to pursue what may seem to him the proper course.

Committee divided on the amendment to the amendment Mr. Bergeron.

Amendment (Mr. Bergeron)—negatived. Yeas 6; Nays 125.

On the amendment:

Mr. LAMONT. Before this amendment is put there is a point which I would like to have made a little clearer than it is at present. This point has been adverted to by several hon. members in this debate and in calling the attention of the government and of the committee to it, I recall the language of the Prime Minister yesterday when he said that if the language of this section now under discussion was not sufficient to carry out the object which the government had in view he would be prepared to consider any reasonable amendment to it. The object which the government has in view by this clause as stated yesterday by the Prime Minister and as stated a few moments ago by the Minister of Inland Revenue is to carry into effect the very excellent school system now in force in the Northwest Territories. That school system was established in 1892 by the ordinance of that year. Since 1892 when it was established it has worked very satisfactorily to the people of the west and the object of the government as I understand is to perpetuate that system and continue it in the new province of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The principle of the system contained in the ordinances is two-fold. In the first place it secures to the local government the absolute control and jurisdiction over secular education in the Northwest Territories. In the second place it leaves the religious instruction absolutely in the control of the trustees of the school districts. Under that system as established by the ordinances from 9 a.m. until 3.30 p.m., the school system is absolutely under the control and jurisdiction of the local government and the instruction given in the schools, public and separate alike is purely secular instruction. From 3.30 p.m. until 4 o'clock p.m. religious instruction may be given, if desired by the trustees. The reason for that two fold principle is the system established by the ordinance is, that secular education being a national affair ought to be under the absolute control and jurisdiction of the state, while religious instruction, being a domestic matter ought to be under the control and jurisdiction of the parents of the children. So far as secular education is concerned I am satisfied, the language of this clause is sufficient to carry out the object of the government and to continue to the provincial governments in those new provinces the absolute jurisdiction and control over all schools in the new provinces. But in so far as the religious instruction is concerned, I am not satisfied that the language used in this section is sufficient to carry out the object of the government and to continue to the schools of the new provinces the present provisions in the Northwest Territories ordinances, which allow one-half hour's religious instruction to be given in the schools if desired by the trustees. The clause, in so far as separate schools are concerned, places the matter, it seems to me absolutely beyond question, because clause 1 of sec. 16 provides: That the provincial government shall not pass any law which shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act under chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories. Under chapters 29 and 30 provision is made for one-half hour's religious instruction in the separate schools from 3.30 to 4 o'clock p.m., and I am satisfied the language of the clause will carry into effect the object of the government and continue to the separate schools the half hour's religious instruction. But in so far as the public schools are concerned I am not satisfied that the half-hour's religious instruction granted by the ordinances will be continued. And that is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the committee and which I would like to have made clearer, I want the clause when it is passed to be so plain and clear that there will be no doubt whatever that in the public schools of the new provinces, the half-hour's religious instructions now given by the ordinances will be continued. In order to make that clear and to place it beyond the realm of controversy and to make certain that the object of the government will be carried out, I move, Mr. Chairman, that to subsection one, there be added these words:

Or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.

This will make it absolutely clear in my opinion that the object of the government will be carried out, and that there will be continued to the public as well as to the separate schools the right to have half an hour of religious instruction, if the trustees so desire. With regard to the position taken by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that where the Catholics are in a majority they should be allowed to form church schools, I cannot concur. We have in the Territories established a school system which we believe to be the best in Canada, and which has worked satisfactorily ever since it was introduced in 1892. The principle of that system is to leave in the hands of the provincial government the absolute control and jurisdiction over secular education and to allow in the schools, both public and separate, one-half hour of religious instruction, if desired by the trustees. To continue that system is, I understand, the object of the government, and in order to make sure that that system will be continued and that the right to the half hour religious instruction will be continued to public as well as separate schools, I make the motion which I have already read, namely :

That to subsection 1 there be added these words : Or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for by the said ordinances.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that if the aim of the hon. gentleman be what he says it is, he is taking a very unusual way to accomplish it. Suppose that the trustees of any public school were all Roman Catholics and that Protestant children are attending to it, what kind of religious instruction would be there given ? No doubt it would be the dogmas of the Roman Catholic Church that would be taught. The hon. gentleman is not only conceding the right to Roman Catholic separate schools to teach the dogma of the Roman Catholic Church, but he is providing to enable that same church to teach its doctrines in a public school, even though a large number of Protestants may attend it.

Mr. LAMONT. The provision, as it exists in the school system of the Territories today, is exactly the same as the one I am asking this committee to carry into effect. For thirteen years we have had experience of that system, and it has worked satisfactorily, both in districts in which the Catholics are in a majority and in the much greater number of districts in which the Protestants are in the majority. And the reason is this. In those districts in which the Protestants are largely in the majority and the trustees are Protestants, the trustees have always been willing to allow the Roman Catholic ratepayers the right to have their children given Roman Catholic religious instruction in the public schools within the half-hour prescribed ; and in these districts in which the Roman Catholics are in the majority and in which the majority of the trustees are Roman Catholics, they have always been willing to make a similar concession in favour of the Protestant minority. It is merely to continue this system which has been found satisfactory that I move the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is evidently seeking to give another concession to the Roman Catholic church. I asked the Minister of Justice what was the position under the new clause. And if I understood him rightly, he said that the Roman Catholics could not take control of a public school and teach in it the dogmas of their church.

Mr. LAMONT. In the districts in which the Roman Catholics are in the majority, they can have whatever religious instruction the trustees may desire or permit. And in the districts where the Protestants are in the majority, the same right exists as regards Protestants. The provision applies equally to both. From nine o'clock to three thirty neither Catholics nor Protestants, nor any other power except the civil government, have the right to say what will be done in those schools ; but in the half hour subsequent such religious instruction may be given as the trustees may desire. In those districts where the Catholics are in the majority, if the Protestants are not allowed by the Roman Catholic trustees to give their children the religious instruction they desired, they have the right to form a separate school of their own, and that would entail on the Catholic trustees additional taxation as well as additional taxation on the separate schools. No Protestant child is obliged to stay and receive religious instruction from a Catholic teacher, nor is any Catholic child bound to stay and receive instruction from a Protestant teacher.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lamont) allow me one question ? Could not the local legislature change that privilege in the future if they saw fit ?

Mr. LAMONT. I fancy the local legislature could do so if they wished.

Mr. INGRAM. That being the case, I would ask the hon. gentleman this question : Supposing that this parliament passed this section as amended, could the local legislature change it ?

Mr. LAMONT. The local legislature could not then pass any law which would prejudically affect any right or privilege granted under subsection 1, which, like the clause in the British North America Act, prevents any interference with the denominational schools provided for by subsection 1 of sec. 93.

Mr. LAKE. I am personally greatly in favour of allowing this half hour's instruction at the end of the school time. But I am unalterably opposed to interference by this parliament with the rights of the new provinces. Therefore, I shall vote against the proposal to interfere with these rights.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This amendment was first brought to the attention of the committee only fifteen minutes ago. We might very properly ask that it be allowed to stand over until to-morrow for consideration. But, certainly, we are not going to have it put through without any debate whatever——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have had an opportunity to consider this amendment—it looks very much as if they had. But, if that is the case I think it would have been only courteous to have let us see it at an earlier stage than at the last moment, when the clause is being put through. I do not think that this is the way to deal with an important question of this kind. This may be a very proper amendment, if we assume the principle on which it is based; but at least this committee is entitled to the courtesy of being allowed the time to consider it.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lamont) says that the provincial legislature could not change the amended section of this Bill if his amendment is adopted. If that be true, how comes it that the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) says they could? He has made that statement in this House.

Mr. LAMONT. In my opinion, the legislature will have the absolute power to change it, unless this amendment is adopted. Of course, it is contended by some that the present wording of the section is sufficient to carry into effect the system now in force in the Northwest Territories. I am merely expressing my own opinion in this amendment.

Mr. BELCOURT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lamont) wants to remove doubts?

Mr. LAMONT. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, I think we are entitled to have the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) explain what effect this amendment will have?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question put to me by my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) is a very fair one. The House is entitled to know from the government what they think of this amendment. As to the meaning of the amendment, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Lamont) has explained it so as to remove all ambiguity. As to the policy of the government, that is a question upon which we are not likely to reach a unanimous opinion. Those who favour that policy will continue to favour it, and those who are opposed to it are likely to oppose it still, notwithstanding any defence we may offer. But it is absolutely requisite that there should be no ambiguity as to the position of either side, and especially as to the position of the government. We have taken a position from the start, that, according to the constitution, when a province comes into the Dominion, if it possesses a system of separate or denominational schools, it must remain with that system of schools as it exists at the moment. And I may say here—although I do not intend to discuss that part of the question, but I may do it later on—that this is a justification of the amendment moved yesterday. When we came to consider the clause as it was first introduced, we found that it left the matter in doubt as to what was assured to the minority. But, by taking the ordinances passed in 1901, which are the law of the Northwest Territories to-day—conceding that our intention was to perpetuate the law as it exists to-day—every ambiguity is removed. We know exactly where we are. The position at the present time is that there is in the Northwest Territories a system of schools which are known as public and separate schools. This school system has been framed under the organic law passed by this parliament in 1875, which declared:

> That a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the said province, or any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name it is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessments and collection of rates therefor, and that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor.

That is the organic law. Under that organic law this system of schools was established—not at once, but by stages, the final development being in the year 1901 under the ordinances mentioned in the amendment I have proposed. Under that law as it exists to-day, the majority may establish what is called a public school. The minority in the district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, if they are not satisfied with the treatment they receive from the majority, may establish a separate school. From the opening of the school up to half-past three o'clock the education given is absolutely secular, and absolutely under the control of the board of education of the province, in every particular—not only in the public schools but in the separate schools as well. It has been contended by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and also by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and others that in this respect the provisions of the organic law of 1875 has been departed from. That may be—I do not dispute that or consider that point at this moment. So far as religious instruction is considered I believe that the law of 1901 is in accordance with the law of 1875,—that is, that the majority of the ratepayers in a district can have such religious teachings as they see fit. So far as the secular education is concerned these schools may be called national, but so far as religious education is concerned, they may be called denominational, because trustees who represent the people of the locality are at liberty under the provision in 1901 and which had been passed seven years before to have such religious instruction as they think best. If they do not want religious instruction, they are bound to have it. What is the character of the religious instruction they may have? That is a question altogether for themselves to decide. If they are Roman Catholics, I apprehend that the religious instruction will be according to the Roman Catholic religion. If they are Protestants the religious instruction will be according to the Protestant creed, and if they are Roman Catholics, it will be according to the Roman Catholic creed; or both classes can dispense with religious education altogether. There is a further provision to the effect that in these schools, if the parents desire that their children should have no religious instruction, then they can withdraw them during the half hour devoted to such instruction. We can agree upon this point, I am sure, whether we sit on one side of the House or the other, whether we approve or disapprove of separate schools, we can at all events agree that it is not a bad thing in itself that opportunity should be given for religious instruction at a certain hour, if the parents so desire it. This is now the law in the Northwest Territories, it has been the law for nearly fourteen years, or more; I venture to think it has been the law since 1885, and this is the law which it is now sought to perpetuate by this amendment. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) stated a moment ago: This is another concession, you are giving something more to the Roman Catholic minority than they have at present. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. If this amendment is passed the minority will be in the same position as it was, the majority also will have what they now have, and have had for the last twenty years.

Mr. SPROULE. I said that according to my reading of that ordinance that was the real condition that existed in the Territories now, and would be in the future, and I was corrected by an hon. gentleman on the other side who said that this amended clause 16 did away with that right.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who made that answer to my hon. friend?

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was the Minister of Justice, but I would not be sure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Now, Sir, the reason of this amended clause is simply this: It is the result of insufficient drafting of the second clause. I want to be clear upon that point, I do not want to sail under false colours, the position we take should be well understood; let it be well understood by friends and foes. We have taken this position, whether wrong or right, I believe it is right, at all events, I am deeply convinced it is right, though we have taken it against the judgment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), we have taken it against the judgment of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), we have taken it against the judgment of a good many people in this country. We think it is our duty to perpetute the system of schools which exists to-day in the Northwest Territories. Let me call attention to what would be the result of this amendment. The clause as it now stands reads:

> Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege in respect of separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act.

That is to say, the right of the minority to have separate schools, that feature is perpetuated in this amendment. But the right of the majority or of the minority which exists to-day under the ordinance of 1901, chapters 29 and 30, of having religious instruction of half an hour a day, is not perpetuated. But under the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan the new clause will read as follows:

> Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories passed in 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for by the said ordinances.

That is to say, that by this amendment the minority will have the right, if they are not satisfied with the management of their schools, to have separate schools of their own, and the majority will have the right also, under all circumstances, to this half hour of religious instruction. Now let me put a concrete case before the House. Here is a school district, for instance, which is composed of Protestants, they have their own religious instruction. There are amongst them five or six Roman Catholics. While the Protestants have their religious instructions, the Catholics want their religious instruction also, and whether they shall have it is at the option of the school trustees. If they do not get satisfaction from the school trustees, they can secede and organize a separate school. Let us take a concrete case. Here is a school district where there is a majority of Roman Catholics. There are a few Protestant families, and they all go to the same school. If the religious instruction which is given by the Roman Catholic trustees is not satisfactory to the Protestants, they can organize a separate school. Now we know that whatever may be the conscientious scruples we have upon these matters, at all events my co-religionists have them, we know that in these new territories there are many districts where there are schools in which pupils of all denominations attend, and somehow they manage to get along fairly well. Sometimes it happens that they do not, sometimes they disagree; then the law provides that they have the privilege of separation to organize their own schools. By this amendment the law which is in force to-day receives the sanction in its entirety of the federal authority, it comes exactly within the purview of section 93 of the British North America Act. Now I say this is a small concession, and it seems to be very reasonable. Everybody has heard on the floor of this House, and everybody must have been struck with the fact that all the members of the Northwest Territories, whether on one side of the House or the other, have expressed a pride in their school system, because it provides both for national schools so far as secular instruction is concerned, and it acknowledges the rights of conscience for those who think that there should be religious instruction in schools. Now I know there are gentlemen perhaps on both sides of this House, and there are people in this country, who do not believe in religious instruction being given at all in schools. I respect their views, but I differ from them. I would follow in this matter the example of old Scotland, of England, and also of that land from which we have many traditions. I think it is a proper thing that, pari passu with secular education, some attention should be given to the duties of man towards his neighbour and towards his creator, and that is all that is provided for in this amendment. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) stated a moment ago that he objected to this amendment because it infringed provincial rights. He is consistent in his objection, as he objects to other provisions of this Bill on the same ground. The hon. gentleman says he is in favour of religious instruction, but he is against this amendment, because he would leave that matter altogether to the province to deal with as it pleases. Well, Sir, we have discussed this point and the House has pronounced upon it. I appeal to the fair and calm judgment of the House if this is not a reasonable amendment, which does not interfere with the conscience of any man. It is merely carrying out the intention that has been affirmed by this House of putting into force by federal sanction the system of schools which now prevails in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I understand what is intended by this proposed amendment, and if you once accept the principle upon which the section is based, which I do not accept, there is something to be said in favour of it. But I would have thought it better and manlier for the government, instead of asking one of their supporters to make this motion, to have accepted a portion of the motion of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), which covered exactly the same thing It was a considerable portion of the argument of my hon. friend from Labelle last night that this very injustice, as he called it, prevailed under the terms of the Bill which is sought to be remedied by the motion which is just now made. My hon. friend from Labelle made a most elaborate argument in regard to that and made it absolutely clear to every hon. gentlemen in this House, and particularly to myself, that this difficulty did occur under the terms of the amendment proposed by the government, but instead of accepting that part of the amendment of the hon. gentleman which dealt with that particular matter the amendment was voted down in its entirety. Hon. gentlemen opposite have twice already voted down this very suggestion, as it was contained in the two motions which they have caused to be defeated. Now, apparently this amendment has been considered by the government and handed to the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) to move after my hon. friend from Labelle has made this matter very plain and after my hon. friend from Beauharnois has made a very able argument in regard to it. These are little matters of party tactics, but I trust that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice does not suppose for one moment that we are so absolutely blind as to be misled by a little by-play of that kind. It is not paying us any compliment at all to suppose that we are misled by anything so transparent, because every one understands it perfectly. Now, I understand exactly what is intended ,and if you accept the principle there is a great deal to be said in favour of the proposal. But my hon. friend from Labelle made that so absolutely clear last night that I need not say very much. The point reduced to a few words, is simply this: We are dealing with the rights of the minority in the Northwest Territories, and in so far as we are to restrain the powers of the provincial legislature the minority, where it is the minority, in the district has certain rights in respect to religious instruction, but the minority where it is the majority in a school district, has not the constitutional guarantee of its rights. If I understand the point made by my hon. friend from Beauharnois and my hon. friend from Labelle that is what they brought to the attention of the committee. This amendment is intended to cover that. It not only seems to cover that, but a great deal more. I will point that out to my right hon. friend the leader of the government and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and we will see if they do not agree with me. Will my hon. friend the Minister of Justice do me the kindness, because we cannot always have these matters immediately in our minds, to look for one moment at the language of subsection 1 of the amended section 16:

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

You are dealing with the right of the Roman Catholic minority, or the Protestant minority, as the case may be, in any school district. Now will the Minister of Justice observe once more as he has so many times observed in the past, the exact language that is used.

Any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have, &c.

But the language which is proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan does not use that expression 'any class of persons.' It goes on with a very much more general form of expression. It continues the section with these words:

Or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.

If you eliminate part of the section which is immaterial for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of it the section will read thus :

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.

When you come to look at the ordinance you will find that section 137 of chapter 29 is as follows:

No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one-half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

Now, I am not concerned for the moment with the principle of the Bill. I am dealing with what I understand to be the intention of the government. I am doing this as a member of this House who desires that legislation may express that which it is the intention of parliament to set forth. It is not the right or privilege you are dealing with there. It is the power with which the legislature of the Northwest Territories has invested the trustees of every school district, and either one result or the other will follow. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice will understand that I am, of course, speaking off-hand on this question not having had any opportunity before of considering it. Either one result or the other will follow. The first result may be that these words 'right or privilege' will be considered inapplicable, to express a power vested in the board of trustees. The only place where you find the word 'privilege' contained in the sections which deal with religious instruction is in section 138 where every child is accorded the privilege of retiring. That is not what is intended to be dealt with by this. It is the power vested in the board of trustees to regulate religious instruction. The other alternative is this, that if you consider the words 'right or privilege' to be apt to describe the power vested in the trustees, you are limiting unnecessarily the power of the provincial legislature. If the provincial legislature should desire to withdraw from the trustees and to vest in the board of education, or the Commissioner of Education, the power to regulate religious instruction in Protestant majority schools, the provincial legislature would find itself powerless to deal with that particular phase of the question although to deal with it would not be inconsistent, as I understand the intention of the government, with that which they intend by this section. I do not know whether or not this somewhat close point has been made clear by my remarks to the Minister of Justice, but I do not think he will find upon consideration that the language employed may go further and does go further than his intention or than the intention of the Prime Minister. I am not going over the argument of the right hon. gentleman; I have said about all I can say with regard to that. I am opposed to the whole section, amended or otherwise, for the reason that I think the matter should be left to the provincial legislature. I can see, however, reason for making some change if you once accede to the policy of limiting the powers of the provincial legislature, but I think that object can be accomplished without going so far as the words of this amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will give my hon. friend my own view of this matter. I was once a lawyer—it is many years ago, and I am rather rusty in my law now—but nevertheless I will give my hon. friend the interpretation I place upon this amendment. In my opinion there can be no doubt whatever that the legislation which has been passed in the Northwest Territories and which is now in force has been somewhat at variance with the principles laid down by the organic law of 1875. That is a point which I might have debated with my hon. friends from Labelle and Beauharnois when they accused us of giving nothing to the minority ; that is a point which is rhetorical rather than legal and actual. One thing is certain, and that is that when Mr. Mackenzie introduced the Act of 1875 he stipulated in so many words that the majority could have such schools as they thought fit, and that the minority also could have such schools as they thought fit. The legislature of the territories did not follow that closely. If you analyse their legislation such as it now is before us, you will find that the legislature evidently had in their mind secular education and religious education. Secular education they have absolutely taken control of and they intend to keep it ; religious education they have left altogether to the people themselves, and therefore when the amendment says that the power of the majority to have religious instruction shall continue, it is a right and privilege which is given to the people. What people? The people who are represented by the board. It is true that in section 127, the power is given to the board, but what is the board? The board is a board of trustees acting for others; they are acting for the people who have elected them and therefore the people who elected them have this privilege and right of religious instruction granted to them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. My contention is that this language does go to the extent of preventing the Protestant majority in the Northwest Territories from regulating the religious instruction in their own schools.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes. I do not think the Minister of Justice will say it may not have that effect. It says you are not to prejudice any right or privilege with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in said ordinances, and the ordinances declare that the board of trustees shall have power to deal with that question. There is no reason why the provincial legislature should not be given power to alter that if they see fit, so far as the Protestant majority is concerned. The rights of the minority do not require that limitation of provincial powers. The clause is absolutely general; it does not relate to Roman Catholic schools but to all schools. In respect to all schools the board of trustees have at present the right to regulate religious instruction, and if these words are apt for the purpose intended, then the legislature of the new province cannot in respect to Protestant schools deal with that question by taking away that power from the board of trustees.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that, but as I read this clause there is no such thing provided for on behalf of the Roman Catholic minority in the initial legislation of 1875. The right and privilege is given to the majority and to the minority as well. It says the majority shall have the power to have such schools as they see fit. That right is given to the majority in the district and not to the majority in the province as in the case in Ontario and Quebec. The minority in the district is given certain powers also, and therefore the intention of the legislation all through was simply that this power of having such religious instruction as they want is vested in the people of the district.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not essential to the protection of the minority of the whole province that you should for ever impose a law upon the people of the Northwest Territories, that the power to regulate religious inspection must be vested absolutely in a board of trustees. The majority in the new province may desire, so far as Protestant schools are concerned, to deal with that question in another way and no one would complain if they did; certainly not the majority of the province who do not want to be fettered. I point out to the right hon. gentleman and to the Minister of Justice, that I am afraid these words will go to that extent. I ask the Minister of Justice, because we want to deal frankly with each other in these matters, whether he appreciates my contention; in the first part of the section you deal only with separate schools and Catholics have a separatet school and Protestants have a separate school only where they are in the minority. Now, so far as the Catholics are concerned you desire to go further and provide that the power to regulate religious instruction by trustees shall not be taken away from the Catholics where they happen to be in the majority. But surely you do not need to go so far as to apply the same limitation upon the provincial power with respect to schools where the majority in the district is Protestant.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as I am concerned, I do not agree with the argument that this clause applies to Roman Catholics; it applies to the majority or the minority, just in the language of the Act of 1875.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does, and that is the very ground of my objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The leader of the government took the position which I think I should take. It seems to me that instead of calling these schools Roman Catholic schools or Protestant schools, if we spoke of them as majority or minority schools we would be keeping better within the lines of the Act. We have an Act which contemplates a dual system of minority and majority schools, and as the Act stands with the amendment originally proposed, it seems to me we have conserved to the minority where that minority is a minority in a district all those things which the minority has at the present time. With this additional amendment we will find ourselves in this position that under the Act as we now have it the majority, whatever that majority may be, has also the same right in respect to religious instruction that the minority has got and what is intended, it seems to me is to confirm to that majority the same rights and privileges as the minority has in a school district, whether that majority be Protestant or Catholic.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes; that is exactly my view of it, but what I am suggesting is that in respect of schools in any district where the majority is Protestant, there is no reason why you should limit the powers of the province in that respect.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In what respect do we limit the power of the province ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By declaring, as you do declare, that a power which is vested in the trustees by a law of the Territories cannot be taken away by the legislature of the new province. If you go that far, then you limit the power of the legislature, not only in school districts where the majority is Catholic, but you limit the power of the provincial legislature where the majority is Protestant.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would it be equally correct to say that we perpetuate the right to religious instruction which is now vested in the trustees in a majority or a minority district ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the intention, to continue the religious instruction which they now have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the government intend that, well and good ; but I thought the intention was to limit the powers of the provincial legislature so far as the minority is concerned. If you are going further, limiting the power of the legislature so far as the Protestant majority in any particular district is concerned, then I think you are going beyond any argument advanced by the government in support of this resolution. You started in the first place by protecting the minority, whether Protestant or Catholic, in every school district. You go beyond that now for the purpose of protecting, as I understand, the Catholic majority in any particular school district, but you do not, by any argument hitherto advanced, have any reason for limiting the power of the provincial legislature beyond that. You do limit it beyond that, because you prevent the provincial legislature from dealing with religious instruction in districts where the Protestants are in the majority. That power must for ever be in the trustees, although it may be the opinion of the vast majority of the people of that province that that power should be vested in some other body, in the Commissioner of Education, the Council of Education or some other tribunal to be appointed. That is all I have to say, if I make myself clear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand the point.

Mr. MONK. I understand the point. I wonder why the suggestion of the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) is not made applicable to the cases where the majority is Catholic only.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why ?

Mr. LAMONT. Why should it be ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why should we amend the ordinance ?

Mr. MONK. The objection of the leader of the opposition would disappear. His objection is that in order to meet the objection referred to throughout this discussion we are making the law so general that the legislature will not be able to legislate in any respect regarding the control of instruction in the schools, even where these schools are in a district with a Protestant majority.

Mr. LAMONT. If it is a good principle to grant to the Roman Catholics the privilege of having a half-hour's religious instruction in the school, I, as a Protestant, do not see why it is not a good principle for the Protestants.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be.

Mr. LAMONT. So far as the amendment I had the honour to move is concerned, my object is to continue the present law to the public schools, Protestant as well as Catholic. I want the school law of the new provinces to contain a provision that for all time to come there shall be granted to each school district the right to have religious instruction in that school district if they think fit, and that applies to Protestants as well as to Catholics. There are some 150 Catholic schools to some 1,050 Protestant public schools, and that provision I believe to be a wise one to apply to all schools and not only to one class of schools. I am satisfied that at the present time the legislature would not change it, but the 250,000 people who now constitute the estimated population of each of these two provinces will be but a small percentage of the millions who will find homes on our prairies, and it may be that future legislatures, elected by the immigrants from all quarters of the world, may not be of the opinion that the inculcation of religious and moral principles in the schools is necessary to the welfare of the state, and if not this amendment is desirable. I am satisfied that it is a wise provision to leave in the hands of the trustees, Protestant or Catholic, I do not care which they are, the right to give the children of that school section religious instruction if they desire from 3.30 o'clock to 4 o'clock. That is all the amendment covers. That is what it was intended to cover ; if it does not cover that, I hope it will be made to do so.

Mr. INGRAM. I want to understand this, too. As I gather, our hon. friends from the Northwest are opposed to any interference with the school system of the Northwest Territories, and they desire the matter of education to be left entirely in the hands of the local legislature. I understood the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) to say that he is in favour of the present school system in the Northwest Territories. He is in favour of perpetuating public and separate schools for all time to come. That is his position, and he also wants to provide that there will be religious teaching in the schools from 3.30 to 4 o'clock.

Mr. LAMONT. Permission to have it if the trustees desire it.

Mr. INGRAM. I was coming to that; that is, if the trustees see fit they can continue the religious teaching in any school. If it is to be left to the trustees, what objection can there be to allowing the local legislature to control that matter; and if the school trustees desire to have religious teaching, well and good; and if they do not, well and good; the majority would rule in that case. As I understand, the hon. gentleman says that religious teaching will not be continued unless he has embodied in section 16 the amendment which he has just moved, and I understood the First Minister to say that the principle of separate schools is being perpetuated, but not the principle of religious teaching. The religious teaching for the half hour can be changed. That is what I understood the right hon. gentleman to say; but just lately, before the Minister of Justice sat down, I understood him to say they were going to perpetuate religious teaching. I may be wrong, but that is my understanding.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No; the right to religious teaching.

Mr. INGRAM. What we intend to do is to carry out what my hon. friend has in mind, to allow this question of religious teaching to be a matter controlled by the trustees.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And to prevent the provinces dealing with that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And that the trustees, representing the ratepayers, shall have the power and the right to determine whether or not there shall be religious teaching.

Mr. INGRAM. So that instead of the local legislature having any control whatever of the privileges, we fasten this on the trustees for all time to come.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We do not fasten it; we give them the right.

Mr. INGRAM. What I say now is that the province cannot change that. I am going to end up in York again. My hon. friend from York said that the local legislature could change and I am glad to know I have the opinion of the Minister of Justice on this, he says they cannot. On the other hand, I have this to say that the Northwest representatives, sitting here on the government side, are in favour of perpetuating separate schools in the Territories. I am perfectly satisfied. That places me in this position. I am opposed to any interference by this government in the matter of perpetuating separate schools, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, in the Territories. I am in favour of the new provinces having entire control of their educational affairs; and when any supporter of the government, at any future time, undertakes to say that the local legislatures of the new provinces have the right to interfere with religious teaching in the public schools, he is not making a statement in accord with that made by the Minister of Justice and the leader of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. The whole thing is an attack upon the public school system of the country. Step by step we are interfering with that principle which we have admired so much and which has been constantly built up by accretion during the last fifty years, and which was started in Ontario by Egerton Ryerson many years ago. We are providing that the school board, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, can have such religious instruction in the public schools as they desire.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Who says no? I say if this amendment carries, the school board, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, will provide for religious instruction in the public schools according to the views of the trustees. You are taking a public school, which ought to be a school that Catholics and Protestants alike may attend, without having to listen to any instruction in any dogma which they do not profess, and you are giving to the trustees of that school ths right to insist on religious instruction being given and the dogmas they favour being taught.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We are not introducing anything new. What we are introducing has been in existence at least twenty years. The very condition of things to which my hon. friend objects, the possibility of having religious instruction in the public schools, has existed in the Territories since 1885. No injustice has been done to anybody under that system. If my hon. friend wants evidence of that, let him ask the representatives of the Territories who sit on this side. They will tell him that they are satisfied with this condition of things, and that it has worked no injury to anybody.

Mr. SPROULE. What I was endeavouring to say was that when the educational clause No. 2 was submitted, the hon. members for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) declared that, to all intents and purposes, it left the public school a school in which no person had any right to say what religious instruction ought to be given in it. But the government are now doing, through one of their own stool pigeons, what they dare not do of their own motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The term used is not parliamentary.

Mr. SPROULE. If so I am quite willing to take it back, but I cannot find any other term which expresses so well what I mean, I wish to refer to another point. The territorial government have to-day the power to do away with the trustees and take control of the schools. In that case what will be the religious instruction? If the trustees are done away with and a commissioner appointed by the legislature in their place, who will direct the education to be given, the curriculum and everything else, how will this clause act?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Just as it has done the last twelve years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be true of every clause, and you might as well petrify them all.

Mr. SPROULE. If the trustees, to whom are given the right to say what religious instruction shall be provided, are removed, and a commissioner, who is the representative of the local government, is put in their place, he will have that right.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

An hon. MEMBER. You ought to be satisfied with that.

Mr. SPROULE. You do not allow local government to control the trustees, but you do allow them to control the commissioners. The whole thing is an attack on the public schools, and is intended, as far as possible, to do away with them.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend takes a very distorted view of this amendment. The hon. the leader of the opposition this afternoon gave us a ten minute dissertation on the impossibility of having absolutely correct drafting, and what he said was very true. We have an illustration of it here. After about four or five months discussion, we from the Territories think we are now getting a provision in our constitution with regard to education which is exactly what we asked for in the first instance. There are seven members from the Territories behind the government. There has been considerable discussion in the House and in North Oxford and London regarding the origin of the educational clause in this autonomy Bill. The very point brought up by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) this evening is the very best proof of the fact that the issue in North Oxford and London was not the actual effect of the educational clause, it was not the separate or the public school system, but it was whether it was the representative of the Pope or not who drafted that clause and put it in the hands of the First Minister. If the amendment of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) be adopted, we will be getting what the seven members from the Territories, who consulted with the Prime Minister and his colleagues for weeks prior to the 21st February, suggested should be given; and whether that may suit the representative of the Pope or the heirarchy or the people in the other provinces or not is a matter of comparative indifference to us provided the Northwest people are satisfied with it. And notwithstanding all the efforts made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and others behind and around him, in and out of the House, they have failed to find any element of dissatisfaction in any part of the Territories with regard to this matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that they were satisfied with clause 16, No. 1, and clause 16, No. 2, and yet now they say they require to have this amendment in order to get what they wanted.

Mr. SCOTT. When the Bill was first introduced, the people of the Northwest believed it was securing to them a continuation of the system they now enjoy.

Mr. LALOR. Then you admit you were deceived?

Mr. SCOTT. We were not very much deceived with regard to what would happen in North Oxford and London and what might happen in Edmonton. Not much deceived as to what might happen in Lévis.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) was evidently badly scared as to what might happen if they opened Western Assiniboia.

Mr. SCOTT. But I repeat that when this Bill was introduced on February 21, the people expressed no dissatisfaction. When the amendment was announced a month later, they again believed that the object of section 16, No. 2, was to perpetuate exactly what already exists. And so they expressed no dissatisfaction. Notwithstanding all their efforts to obtain such expressions of dissatisfaction, the hon. gentlemen opposite have lamentably failed to secure these expressions. But we find—and the point is made abundantly clear by the discussions of the amendments of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) —that section 16, No. 2, does not perpetuate exactly and entirely what exists in the Northwest Territories with respect to separate schools and religious teaching. Therefore the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) has proposed a further amendment which will result in doing what we have asked should be done from the very beginning. Hon. gentlemen opposite are too prone—especially the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to look at one section of the people only. They cannot get away from the Roman Catholics of the Northwest. But these are not the only people who are interested in religious instruction in the schools. About a month ago the country was given what in my opinion, was a very valuable expression of opinion on this question. This was given by Dr. James A. Carmichael, one of the superintendents of Presbyterian Home Missions in Western Canada. And here is a sentence from what Dr. Carmichael said :

> The half hour of the day in which religious instruction may be given had been a provision, Dr. Carmichael explained, not demanded by any hierarchy, but suggested and incorporated in the Bill by an inspector of schools who was an elder of the Presbyterian church.

Now, Dr. Carmichael was speaking of something he was fully acquainted with. He had lived in Regina for a dozen years —was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church there. The inspector referred to was one of the members of his congregation. And, when it was made plain to the members from the Northwest Territories supporting the government that section 16, No. 2, would not guarantee in regard to religious instruction, exactly and entirely what we have at the present time, we said we would have to insist upon an amendment. What we said in January before the Bill was brought down we repeated in February after the Bill was before us, and when we recognized that the government had failed in carrying out our suggestion that the existing condition should be perpetuated exactly and entirely, we decided to ask for a further amendment. And I think the committee will agree that if the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) is adopted we shall have obtained exactly what the seven men from the Northwest Territories supporting the government suggested in the first place—that, so far as separate schools and religious instruction are concerned we should have guaranteed exactly what we have under existing ordinances.

Mr. SPROULE. But in London and Oxford the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) declared that section 16 was absolute perfection.

Mr. SCOTT. Did my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) hear anything that I said in Oxford ? I never saw him there.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that the less the hon. gentlemen opposite say about Oxford the better for themselves. We know that North Oxford reduced their majority about twelve hundred in the last election, showing conclusively that many of their own friends there have no confidence in the educational clauses of this Bill. And Braemer reduced the Liberal majority to 75. Why was it not 125 ? Why, you could scarcely find a Conservative in Braemar. I had the honour to go there, and we had to get a Liberal for a chairman—and he made a very good chairman indeed. I talked to those people and I flatter myself that I had made a very good impression and that I was amongst those who succeeded in bringing down that majority to 75. I think hon. gentiemen opposite have got all they want from Braemar. And Zorra. Why Zorra never gave so large a Conservative vote in its history as on this occasion. Zorra and Braemar have spooken in no uncertain tones, and I think in a way not very satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite. I was called out of the House for a short time, and have not heard all of this discussion. I would like to deal with this amendment from my own standpoint. And by the way, I would be obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lamont) who moved it if he would kindly send me a copy of the amendment.

An hon. MEMBER. Here it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to get a copy from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lamont) himself. No doubt he has many copies. Did he not supply his friends with copies ? Or are they taking it for granted ? Surely the government would not propose to put an amendment through the House in this secret, clandestine way, without even allowing members an opportunity to read it. We have heard a good deal about restricting the rights of the people of the Northwest. But has it come to this, that the government are going to restrict the House of Commons and not allow hon. members an opportunity to read an amendment that is proposed in this committee ? Now, we have been talking for a long time on this question. And I confess that I am somewhat surprised that at this late hour of the day and of the session we have another resolution proposing to put further restrictions upon these new provinces. I believe that the British North America Act gives to these provinces the exclusive power to make laws in relation to education. We may talk by the hour, but we cannot get over that fact—that the British North America Act gives to these provinces the exclusive power to legislate in relation to education.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is absolutely wrong.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman was all wrong at Zorra, he was wrong in Braemer, he is wrong all the time, I am speaking of the British North America Act, there is no uncertainty about that, it is not a 'Globe' report. The British North America Act, says that the provinces shall have the exclusive right to make laws in relation to education.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. It says nothing of the kind.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. gentleman challenge the correctness of the British North America Act ? I do not believe the hon. gentleman ever read it, unless he read it by proxy, as he votes by proxy.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. I challenge the hon. gentleman to read it now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have it in my head as well as in this book, and it states that each of these provinces shall have the exclusive right to make laws in relation to education.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. There is no such law on our statute-book.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, because it is on the imperial statute-book. The hon. gentleman is quibbling.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. I challenge the hon. gentleman to produce a lawyer with the name in this House who will agree with him.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let the hon. gentleman contain himself. It is not necessary to get excited over this, all he has to do is to read the Act, and he will see that I am right. Under the British North America Act the provinces have the exclusive right to make laws in relation to education, and the hon. member for Cape Breton has no more right than a man in Bengal to sit here and make laws in relation to education for the people of those provinces. He is usurping a right that does not belong to him. Now we are asked at this late, late date, after we have been legislating for the last three or four months, to put a chain around the neck of these new provinces, restricting their rights, coercing them. That is what the hon. gentleman is doing. Now he says they have not been coerced enough. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has opened his eyes, and he makes out that they are not coerced enough, so he wants to apply a further measure of coercion, he wants to add an amendment that will coerce them not only in relation to separate schools, but also in relation to their public schools. I think this is a very serious question indeed. What right have we to interfere with the public schools of Alberta and Saskatchewan ? The provinces alone have the right to legislate on that matter. But the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) does not think so. Well, I do not think he is representing the people of his constituency, and when the time comes they will tell him that he has not represented their views on this question, that they do not wish to be coerced in the matter which belongs exclusively to them to deal with. The amendment has just been handed to me, and I have scarcely had an opportunity of reading it; but I understand it is to apply a further measure of coercion. Now I take the ground that we have no right to restrict the provinces at all in relation to education. Unfortunately clause 16 is likely to go through, because hon. gentlemen opposite are bound that these provinces should be throttled, and gagged and restricted. On the general principle that I disapprove of interfering with the rights of the provinces I propose to vote against this amendment. We have gone already too far in the matter of restriction, and I think the hon. gentlemen ought to hesitate before they apply this further restriction. The discussion so far has related almost exclusively to restrictions with regard to separate schools; but now there is an attempt to place a restriction on the management of the public schools, the schools of the people of the province, to refuse the provinces the right to deal with public schools as they think fit. I say that is unfair. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) read an extract from a gentleman whom he said was the Reverend Mr. Carmichael. I do not know the gentleman, he may be a very estimable gentleman, probably he is, because he has the honour to belong to the same church as I do. But we know that many good men go wrong at times—like the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. D. D. McKenzie), a very decent man under ordinary conditions, but when he gets excited and carried away, he goes wrong. The hon. member for Assiniboia goes wrong; the hon. member for Saskatchewan has gone very far astray when he consented to do something that even a member of the government had not the cheek to undertake. I do not think that what the Reverend Mr. Carmichael said was very pertinent to this question. By the way, did Mr. Carmichael know that the member for Saskatchewan was going to move this further coercion measure ? When he knows that he may change his opinion. It is unfair to quote him until he has had an opportunity of reading the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan. Now, I have stated my opinion plainly, I am going to vote as I have spoken. I am going to stand on the ground of provincial rights, leaving all matters in relation to education where the British North America Act places them.

Mr. SPROULE. I stated a short time ago that this was an attack upon the public schools. In fact, since this Bill was introduced, the government have been proceeding step by step to attack public schools. Let me give the steps briefly. First, there was the attempt to discredit the public schools by declaring the superiority of church schools. That was the first step when the Bill was introduced, and the Prime Minister was responsible for that, when he tried to show the superiority of the dual system over the national system of the United States. Next, by restricting the right of the provinces to deal with their own educational affairs. This has always heretofore been understood as one of the exclusive rights of the provinces, except the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The third is taking out of the province the control of separate schools; the next is that in the federal parliament we, by virtue of the law we pass here, compel them to give separate schools; and the fourth is that we propose by this amendment to give them, not only control of separate schools, but control of public schools as well. We leave nothing to the people of the country. Therefore, am I not justified in saying that this is an attack upon the public schools, and that it means the destruction of the public school system ? Let me give you an example. In L'Orignal not very far from Ottawa, for the last twelve or thirteen years there has been a public school. During all that time it has been under the control of three Roman Catholic trustees composing the school board, and in all that time the Protestant children have attended that school without any interference or without any forcing upon them of the dogma of any church.

Mr. PROULX. Is my hon. friend aware that the Protestants have established a separate school at L'Orignal?

Mr. SPROULE. I know that and I might tell my hon. friend (Mr. Proulx) a little more about it that perhaps would not be very creditable. But, I am now dealing with this question. We will suppose that in the Northwest they have a public school that every Protestant child has a right to attend without any interference with his religion and without any teaching of religious dogma. Suppose that this school to which I have referred at L'Orignal had been in the Northwest Territories and that these trustees who were Roman Catholics had declared that nothing but the dogma of the Roman Catholic church should be taught there; what would the rights of the Protestant child be in the school? The school would be converted practically into a separate school.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Practically it will be controlled not as the public schools of Ontario are, because in the public schools of Ontario there is no religious dogma taught and every child has the right to go there whether he is Protestant or Roman Catholic although these Roman Catholic trustees manage and control that school, for it is controlled under the law governing public schools.

Mr. SCOTT. The public school in the Northwest Territories may be entirely different. If this is merely perpetuating the state of affairs that is existing now the public school is entirely different. In our public schools at the present moment under the ordinances that we are asked to perpetuate religious dogma may be taught from 3.30 to 4 o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. I know all about that, but I think I am still justified in my statement that this is an attack upon the public school, because, if you can establish that principle in the two new provinces in the Northwest Territories, and if it is afterwards extended to the Peace River district and the Mackenzie River district as the proposed Bill for government of these Territories provide and it is now in existence in the Yukon, how long will it be before the same right will be demanded in Ontario and in the other provinces ?

Mr. CONMEE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would permit me to make a statement in regard to his remark ?

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman wants to make a speech he may do so after I am through, but if he wants to ask a question I will answer it.

Mr. CONMEE. I am not going to make a speech. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has stated two or three times that there is no religion taught in the public schools of Ontario——

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman ask the question and not make a statement?

Mr. CONMEE—and that there is no religious instruction in the public schools of Ontario. Is he not aware that there is religion taught in the public schools of Ontario and that the regulations permit the teaching of religion exactly as they do in the schools in the Northwest, for half an hour in the day?

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if he ever went to school, which I doubt very much, within the last thirty years, he would know that there is no religious instruction given in them. I have attended them and I know that what I say is true. I have addressed them over and over again, I know what is the custom in Ontario and I know that my statement is exactly correct.

Mr. CONMEE. I will tell the hon. gentleman this——

Mr. SPROULE. I have the floor and I intend to keep it. Let the hon. gentleman content himself until I am through.

Mr. CONMEE. You have not answered my question.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not want to be interrupted. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for East Grey has the floor.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that it is the right of every child to attend a public school without having religious dogmas forced upon him, but that if this passes it will not be his right in these new provinces. There will be no public schools to go to, no schools except those which are dominated over by whatever is the religious faith of the trustees, and the children will be practically driven out of the public schools as they were out of the public school in L'Orignal when the Roman Catholic trustees turned around and sold the school to themselves for a separate school. That is what will happen up there. I again draw attention to the fact that this is another interference with the rights of the province. What right has the province to-day in regard to these ordinances? The Lieutenant Governor in Council has the right to appoint a commissioner of education. That commissioner of education representing the Crown has a right to dissolve a school, to do away with all trustees, to take possession of the school and to direct how it shall be run and to say what shall be the character of that school. If that is done what will be the effect of this amendment upon the commissioner of education, who is a member of the government itself ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nothing at all. It will be the same as it is to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. He is not one of the trustees. The ordinance says that the education shall be education as prescribed by the trustees.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This amendment will not change anything. The law will remain as it is, and the commissioner of education will have the same power as he has to-day under the law.

Mr. SPROULE. The same power ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. Then he can only disobey this law, and if so, it does not give to the people what it professes to give.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman takes a meaning out of this amendment which it does not bear. This amendment is simply to confirm what exists to-day. It adds nothing to it and takes nothing away from what has existed for thirty years. It will continue it in existence. The commissioner has this power and he exercises it to-day just as he will in the future.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman who moves this amendment says that the present clause provides for religious instruction in separate schools, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, but it does not provide for religious instruction in public schools and it is to provide for religious istruction in public schools that this amendment is introduced. I am saying that it does provide for religious instruction in all the public schools, but that religious instruction is what the trustees of the school desire and therefore I say this amendment and in fact this whole Bill constitute an attack upon provincial rights and upon the public school system of the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before this question is put I want to say a word or two in reply to what the right hon. leader of the government has just said. He seems to think that it is an absolutely conclusive argument to say that this law simply perpetuates what is in force in the Northwest Territories to-day. That would be just as good an argument in regard to every line and syllable of chapters 29 and 30. The question is not what is there to-day or whether it has been satisfactory ; the question is : What will these provinces require in the future ? That which is satisfactory to-day may not be satisfactory in ten years. If my right hon. friend's argument were good he would take every line and every syllable of chapters 29 and 30 and say that not one line or syllable of these ordinances should ever be changed by the provinces about to be constituted in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to ask the Prime Minister, how many classes of people in the Northwest Territories will be entitled to separate schools under this law ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question is not relevant to the question we are discussing, but I may say that the number of separate schools, whether this amendment is adopted or not, would remain just the same ; it does not affect the question at all.

Mr. BARR. This is an amendment of too great importance to be voted upon at one o'clock in the morning, especially since it was sprung upon the House only an hour ago. The member for Saskatchewan must have very little confidence in the legislatures of these new provinces when he seeks to impose upon them legislation of this kind which they cannot change, although it should prove to be for the worst interests of the community. The argument he used in favour of his amendment was the very strongest argument why it should not become law. Suppose the Morman majority in a locality would elect in a locality Mormon trustees and these trustees provided religious teaching which was most objectionable to the minority, it would be impossible for the legislature to change the government of these schools for all time to come, if this law should pass. Reference has been made to the fact that in Ontario they have had at different times religious teaching in the schools. That is quite true, but instead of its being a blessing it was a curse, and the people of Ontario changed it, and although the law is there to-day it is a dead letter. In these new provinces into which immigrants are coming from various foreign countries, it can be easily seen that if they are allowed to have control of the teaching in the schools it might be most injurious to the whole community.

Mr. SCOTT. In what way ?

Mr. BARR. I am trying to tell the hon. gentleman and if he has brains enough to understand I can prove it to him. The hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan said that the new provinces were all in favour of this amendment, but he must know that gentlemen on this side of the House who represent these new provinces, and who represent them properly, are opposed to this amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I may be very dense but I would like to know in what possible way, by any ingenuity of the imagination, the provision for one-half hour's religious instruction can work harmfully.

Mr. BARR. I have been telling you. Suppose the Galicians or the Mormons should provide for their religious teaching in a school, it would not be in the best interests of any community, and if this amendment is passed the trustees can control and the legislature of the new province could not interfere. Why should we not trust these new provinces? I believe that the legislatures will be composed of representatives just as intelligent as we are, and in fact more capable of making laws to suit themselves. I venture to think they would give a matter like this more time for consideration than we are giving it here. To-night this House is adopting the extraordinary course of legislating to protect the majority, when we have usually found that the majority can take good care of themselves and make such laws as they consider in their best interests. It may be that under certain conditions the interests of the minority would require to be guarded, but when you undertake to make laws like the laws of the Medes and Persians that can never be changed, I say you are legislating in a dangerous way and in a way that may reflect discredit on the country.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. member for Dufferin has raised an important point which I would like to have answered. If the majority of the trustees in a good school section are Galicians or Doukobors or Mormons, can they have their religious teaching in the public schools of the country?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In my estimation that is a power which is vested in the legislature. So far as this parliament is concerned, as I read the law, it applies only to Protestants and Catholics.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is there anything about Protestants or Catholics in section 137?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The section is a recapitulation from the Act of 1875 which established separate schools for Protestants or Roman Catholics.

Mr. BARR. The Galicians belong to the Greek Church and do not acknowledge the Pope and so they must be Protestants. Are the Mormons, Protestants or Catholics?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Galicians are certainly Christians but the Mormons are not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman has made a statement of a great deal of importance and which is altogether opposed to the view I entertain. The question of religious instruction is dealt with in section 137. Section 137 says this:

> No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one-half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

I do not observe any reference in this provision to Protestants or Roman Catholics or any other denomination.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is nothing there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is absolutely general, it is not dealing with separate schools where there is such a distinction made, it is dealing with public schools, where there is no distinction made. That circumstance is the very reason for that amendment which has been introduced, because no distinction has been made. Therefore I do not find any such qualification or limitation in section 137 as that which the Prime Minister suggests.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have given my opinion for what it is worth and I have said that although I have been a lawyer it was many, many years ago and I do not pretend to give a legal opinion. I have given my opinion for what it is worth and if my hon. friend reads the Act, not section 137 alone, but the whole context, I think you will find there is a previous section which gives the power to have separate schools and that power is given to Protestants and Catholics. Therefore the Act deals with Protestants and Catholics and when this class of legislation was introduced into this country there were practically the only two classes although it is different now, and therefore my contention would be that all the sections intended to preserve the rights must be construed with the general tenor of the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The argument of my hon. friend seems to be that because Protestants and Catholics are mentioned in a section which deals with separate schools, although any such mention is omitted in the section dealing with public schools, nevertheless the last clause must be construed as if it contained that which is omitted from it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That would certainly be my view.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then I am not surprised to hear my hon. friend say it is a long time since he was a lawyer if that is the construction he puts on the statute; that you are to construe it as if it contained certain words which it does not contain; that you are to do this because some other section dealing with different schools contains these words. I never heard of such a construction in any authority, any text-book or any court.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have stated my own opinion and I have stated frankly that as a lawyer I would not be prepared to give an opinion. The Minister of Justice is there to give me advice on legal matters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would take almost any law from the Minister of Justice whose ability as a lawyer I very highly respect, and also from my right hon. friend, who I think, underrates his own ability, but I would not take any law like that from the Minister of Justice or any one, namely, that you are to construe a section as having certain words in it which it does not contain because another section dealing with something else altogether contains those words.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no fault to find with my hon. friend's statement. I give my view for what it is worth but as a member of the government I take my law from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BARR. Would the Minister of Justice say what he does? Take the Dowieites who are becoming very numerous in that country, becoming a powerful section, who in many places would control a school; would the minister say that they could get in their work?

Mr. HERRON. I would like a distinct answer?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Separate schools are confined to Protestants and Catholics alone.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend from the Northwest Territories who has asked a question knows very well the conditions existing there now, and those conditions which he is aware exists now will be continued hereafter; there will be no change.

Mr. HERRON. If the school system is to be continued as it is, what is the necessity of this amendment proposed by the member for Saskatchewan?

Mr. LALOR. Are we to understand that the separate schools are confined to Protestant and Catholic schools but that the public schools may be of any denomination, Mormons, Doukhobors, or any other section to which the majority in any section belongs?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the law.

Mr. LALOR. And are we to understand that the public schools of the country are to be conducted in that way? If that is what we are to understand, I think the country at large will be surprised to know that the government are passing a measure of this kind.

Mr. BOURASSA. I wish to state to the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) that I never asked the government or parliament to introduce church schools, either public or separate, in the Northwest Territories. I never made such a statement either in the House or outside of it. All I asked, and all I still ask, is that what is given to Catholics where they are a minority in a district should be given to them in a district where they are a majority. Of course I know they are entitled to more; I know that we give more to the Protestants in Quebec, and that if we were to reduce the Protestant schools in Quebec to the condition of the Catholic schools in the Northwest Territories there would be such an agitation for disallowance as no government here could resist. As I have stated, to my mind, the least that could be given for the protection of the minority in the Northwest would be the right to form separate schools of the character defined in the ordinance of 1901 in every district, whether they be a majority or a minority. That is the position I have taken. While I am sure the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont), spoke in all good faith, at the same time I do not want to have him misrepresent me. In Quebec we have no such thing as church schools; but we have given and do give to the Protestant minority the full right to have schools conducted according to their wishes at which their children can receive such religious instructions as they see fit without interference from the government, and I think we should have the same thing in the west. I am glad to have it from the words of the member for Saskatchewan and from the Prime Minister, as well as from the leader of the opposition, that the objection which I have raised some two months ago, and which has been contradicted flatly by the Liberal press in Quebec, has been acknowledged, namely, that if we adopted clause 16, No. 2, we would have deprived the Catholics of all rights in respect of schools wherever they are a majority. I thank the member for Saskatchewan for introducing his amendment with a view to covering that point. However, I wish to say it seems to me it would be much more in conformity with the constitution of our country, as well as with the pledges taken by this parliament to give the right to the Catholic minority to their separate schools under the ordinance of 1901 where they are a majority, than by giving them the right contemplated by this amendment.

I have no personal objection to this, because I am in favour of the principle of religious freedom being left in the hands of the fathers of families as represented by their trustees; but undoubtedly, so far as the rights of those people who believe in religious education are concerned, this is much more dangerous than if the suggestion I had made were accepted. Why? Because there might be at any time an important group of people throughout the provinces opposed to religious instruction in the public schools, although ready to leave it in the separate schools, and they could not obtain from the local legislature the removal of this amendment now proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont), nor could the federal parliament remove it because we are precluded from doing so by imperial legislation. That will be settled for all time. However, if hon. gentlemen from the Northwest are ready to accept it, I have no objection to offer. But it seems to me very strange that this parliament, which is so much frightened by the accusation of interfering with provincial rights, are not giving the minority in the Northwest such rights as are within our purview and the purview of clause 93 of the British North America Act. Instead of giving the minority everywhere the right to have their own schools, you are making a provision by this clause which will interfere with the public school system of the whole province. I am ready to accept it, but the danger is that if you should have a large class of people in either province opposed to religious instruction, the provincial government might not be able to resist the pressure and might abolish the system, so far as public schools are concerned; and this parliament might not feel disposed to pass such kind of remedial legislation as would be the only means by which the minority would be given its rights.

Mr. LAMONT. If I understand my hon. friend's argument aright, it is this, that the amendment I propose is dangerous for this reason, that if in the new provinces there should happen to be a majority not in favor of religious instruction in the schools, the legislature would be put in a position to abolish that in the public schools, and his suggestion would allow public schools to be changed into separate schools. Well, if that would be the result it would be a premium on the establishment of separate schools.

Mr. BOURASSA. I undoubtedly acknowledge that. The right we are entitled to in the Northwest is the right to separate schools. It might be argued, as it has been by my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) that people who do not want religious instruction are not obliged to have it by this clause. But you might have a large portion of people, disseminated throughout districts where the majority impose religious instruction in the public schools, and who, being opposed to it, would join hands with those people and try to create an agitation so that the legislature would abolish religious instruction in the public schools every where. The only way to cover this point would be by adopting such a provision as I will suggest, no doubt uselessly, but to show that my intention has never been to impose schools of such a character as the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) has intimated. Suppose the government, instead of adopting the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan, would adopt the following:

> And if the board of any public school district so elects any public school therein shall have and enjoy all the rights and privileges for the time being appertaining either to Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools, as the case may be, organized and carried on as mentioned in the next following subsection.

This would leave undoubtedly the right for the local legislature to regulate secular teaching in the separate schools just as they have it now. To my mind that is wrong. I admit that the local government should have control so far as the qualification of teachers is concerned, but it is wrong for the government to interfere in the question of religious instruction and decide what kind shall be given through secular education. But let us leave that aside. The amendment I propose would leave the system as it is to-day. Instead of interfering with that system you would simply give the right to those who want to have a public school conducted as are separate schools, to have in those public schools the same privileges as pertain to separate schools. As a matter of fact both schools are conducted in the same way at present. This would allow the majority in every district where they want religious instruction in the schools to have those schools carried on just as they would be under the separate school legislation, and leave their management entirely in the hands of the legislatures of the provinces. And this would, at the same time, cover the objection which I made, and which has been acknowledged at last by the government as well as by my hon. friend from the Northwest, and prevent any dangerous agitation in the future in those provinces with the object of having the local legislatures do away with religious instruction in the public school as they might if the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan be adopted.

Mr. LAMONT. Would the effect of the hon. gentleman's suggestion not be that every school in the province which wanted religious instruction would have to become a separate school ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Only in case when the legislature would abolish religious instruction in public schools. Suppose there would be such an agitation as might cause the local legislature to do away with religious instruction in the public schools, the right would still remain to all people who had organized public schools to have them carried on as separate schools are carried on under these ordinances.

Mr. LAMONT. That suggestion would leave it in the hands of the trustees to turn public schools into separate schools.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes. I simply want to add that if my suggestion is not accepted by the government—and I make it simply to prove that I have always been in good faith in that respect—then although I think it does not cover the point I have raised and which has been acknowledged as serious by members from the Northwest and the government, however reluctant I may be to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan, still as it is an improvement upon the amended clause submitted to us, I am prepared to support it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The mistake of my hon. friend from Labelle is that he argues as if we had the constitutional power to make the laws for the Territories. We have no such power. My contention has always been that our powers are very limited constitutionally and that the only one we have is to perpetuate the condition existing in the Territories. Whether I be right or wrong, that is the constitution as I understand it. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) said that the rights of the provinces are unlimited in this respect. On the contrary they are limited.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not in this case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall not argue that point with my hon. friend. But, I have to say to my hon. friend from Labelle that if we were to accept the amendment he suggested we would import into the Northwest Territories a condition of things which does not exist at the moment —the right of the minority in the province to organize a separate school where they happen to be a majority in the school district. That is not the law even under the Act of Mr. Mackenzie in 1875. Therefore the amendment of the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) has the effect of continuing the state of affairs that exists today.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Lamont) concurred in : Yeas, 99 ; nays, 27.

Section as amended, concurred in : Yeas, 90 ; nays, 28.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has not voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has not voted.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am paired with the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) does not wish to take up section 2 this morning ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We might consider it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Adjourn.

On section 2—British North America Acts, 1867 to 1886, to apply.

Mr. MONK. I have given notice of an amendment to this section. I think it would be a little late to go into it now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) intends to speak to his amendment ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have an amendment which might be disposed of very quickly. It is merely a question of form. I bring it forward now to save time, and do not wish to discuss it at length, as I can say what I have to say upon it with equal advantage on the third reading. The provisions of section 2 are quite familiar to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). It may be possible—in fact it is very probable —that the language of that section would have the same result as that which I propose to offer in place of it. But I do not regard the expressions used in section 2 with regard to the date at which the province is supposed to have been established as definite but rather descriptive. I do not know whether I make my meaning clear to the Minister of Justice ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not exactly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I mean is this. The Minister of Justice in section 2 uses this language :

> The provisions of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1886, shall apply to the province of Alberta in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the provinces heretofore comprised in the Dominion, as if the said province of Alberta had been one of the provinces originally united.

'As if the province of Alberta had been one of the provinces originally united.' I regard those words as descriptive rather of the extent and not as definitive of the construction which we should place upon them in respect of the date of admission ; that is to say, that notwithstanding the words which the Minister of Justice has used, you would regard the date of union as the 1st of July, 1905, or whatever date may be fixed. However, I think it desirable, in dealing with the establishment of a province out of Territories, to use simpler language to carry out what I conceive to be after all the effect of this section. Therefore, I move that section 2 be struck out and the following be submitted therefor :

> The provisions of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1886, shall apply to the province of Alberta in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the provinces heretofore comprised in the Dominion, except such provisions as in terms, or by reasonable intendment, are specially applicable to or affect one or more only and not the whole of said provinces.

The object is to apply the provisions of the British North America Act as of the date of the establishment of the province, and in every respect unaltered, that is to say, I want them applied as of the date at which the province is established. I ob-object to the use of the words to which I have just referred, 'as if the said province of Alberta had been one of the provinces originally united.' I do not think they are necessary, although I consider them to be merely descriptive.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is aware that these words are used in the Manitoba Act; they are also in the Order in Council passed in connection with Prince Edward Island and British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister will remember that Manitoba was constituted a province immediately upon its becoming a part of the Dominion of Canada, while Prince Edward Island and British Columbia were not united to the Dominion until they became provinces.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have adopted that clause because these cases are the only cases in which territories came in as territories, and provinces came in as provinces. I think the words are found in the Manitoba Act, and in the Order in Council relating to British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, and I do not like to depart from them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I expected the Minister of Justice would make that answer. I will not discuss the matter any further to-night, though I may discuss it again on the third reading.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived on division.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 1.50 a.m., (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 30, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RELIEF OF ARTHUR HERSEY.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS moved:

That leave be given to the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to employ the services of a stenographer to take down such evidence as the committee may deem necessary in connection with Bill (No. 167) for the relief of Arthur O. Hersey.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—LAND EXPROPRIATIONS.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I beg to lay on the table a return in answer to an order of the House of Commons, dated 13th March, 1905, calling for copies of all correspondence, letters, petitions and so forth, in possession of the government, or of any member or official thereof, relating to land damages claimed by Thomas Curley and Charles Mitchell and others, of the village Green, Prince Edward Island, for land expropriated for the Murray Harbour branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway. I might explain to the House that there is missing from this return a petition or copy of a certain petition that is referred to in the other papers. A thorough search has been made for that petition here and at Moncton, but there is no record that it was ever actually filed in the department, and we can get no tidings of it from the general manager or from the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

COMPANIES' ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Solicitor General) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 187) to amend the Companies' Act, 1902.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Prime Minister if that is a government measure?

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). It was introduced by the Secretary of State in the Senate, but I do not think that so far the government has given much consideration to the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it were a government measure I intended to ask for an explanation of its provisions.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We will let the first reading stand over until to-morrow.

Motion withdrawn.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the First Minister if he can give any information with reference to counsel being appointed for the commission to inquire into the issue of half-breed scrip. I understood him the other day to be favourable to having counsel appointed on both sides. That commission opens on the 25th of July, and I would like very much to know what provision is to be made for counsel on the side of the charges and of the grievances.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The matter has not been considered yet, and I am not in a position to answer my hon. friend to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister may possibly remember that when some inquiry was made with regard to the irregularities that have taken place in the elections throughout the Dominion, the government at that time assented to the proposal that counsel should be appointed on both sides to represent, not only one side of the question, but also to bring forward and put into the hands of the commission any irregularities, any frauds, of which there was information in the possession of hon. gentlemen on either side of the House. So far as the present matter is concerned, it would appear that there are two considerations. One is the consideration of protecting the rights of the half-breeds ; the other is the consideration of seeing that the public interests are protected in regard to all transactions with the Department of the Interior. Now, as to both of these features, I desire, as I presume it must be the desire of the government, to have a fair investigation and a fair consideration, but it is difficult to see how that can be accomplished unless the suggestion of the hon. member for Toronto is adopted. There should be counsel in whose hands information can be placed in regard to what has been alleged concerning the half-breeds, and also as to the alleged intention of this gentleman and those associated with him to utilize this Order in Council for the purpose of acquiring profit to themselves out of what was intended exclusively for the benefit of the half-breeds. I think my hon. friend has made a very fair proposal, and I would be inclined to think that the investigation could not be very thorough or satisfactory unless some such plan is adopted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have only to repeat what I said the other day, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) called the attention of the government to it, that we have not yet taken the matter into consideration. But I will think over the suggestion, and perhaps on Monday, if the hon. gentleman will repeat his question, I can tell him what we will do.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the Minister of the Interior to facilitate as much as possible the production of the papers asked for. There has been a lull of serious dimensions of late. I am not able to satisfy my desire for an examination so far as I would like to.

Mr. OLIVER. All right.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I moved for two returns a while ago—one from the Department of the Interior with regard to grazing leases, and another showing the number of employees in the civil service appointed since 1896. Neither of these returns have been brought down. I would like to know if the government can give us any information as to what rate of progress is being made in getting these out.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior.) In regard to the return of grazing leases I am compelled to say that the return has been ready for same days and that it is owing to inattention on my part that I am not able to lay it on the table of the House to-day, but I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that it will be here on Monday without fail.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to the other I think the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took a note of it a few days ago, but we have had no result since.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that we have not.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 2—British North America Act, 1867 to 1886, to apply.

Mr. MONK. I gave notice of an amendment to this section on the 15th of the present month. I will read the proposed amendment. It is proposed to add to clause 2 of the Bill the following paragraph:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the legislative assembly of the province and in the proceedings of the courts, and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of such assembly and all laws made by the legislature shall be printed in both languages: provided, however, that the said legislative assembly may by law or otherwise regulate its proceedings and the manner of recording and publishing the same and the regulations so made shall be embodied in a proclamation which shall be forthwith made and published by the Lieutenant Governor in conformity of the law and thereafter shall have full force and effect.

The object of this motion, Mr. Chairman, is not, as some have supposed, to attempt to introduce the dual language into these two new provinces. Nor is it an attempt to force the French language upon the two new provinces. To describe the amendment in that way is a very incorrect proceeding. It is sought, on the contrary, by this amendment to maintain the constitutional provision in the law of the Northwest Territories which has always existed from time immemorial and it is also sought to secure the maintenance of the solemn agreement which was entered into when Rupert's Land was incorporated into and became a part of the Dominion of Canada. I would like to call the attention of the committee, because I would like to be as brief as possible, to the amendment of which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) gave notice on the 26th June inst. It was an amendment intended to replace clause 24, and it reads as follows:

> The Northwest Territories Act, being chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes, and all Acts amended thereof are hereby repealed as respect to said clauses, provided that notwithstanding such repeal so much of the said Acts and of any order or regulation made thereunder as was in force immediately before the coming into force of this Act, and is not inconsistent with anything contained in this Act or as to which this Act contains no provision intended as a substitute therefor shall continue in force in the said clause in pursuance of and for the purpose of section 15 of this Act.

As hon. members no doubt remember, section 15 provides for the maintenance of the Northwest Territories Act until the provisions thereof, which are not repealed under the section which I have just read, are either abrogated, amended or changed by competent authority; that is, by the imperial parliament, or by the Dominion legislature or by the provincial legislature itself. At the time when the amendment which I have just mentioned of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was submitted to the House I asked the hon. minister if it was not the case that the provision of law which had existed in the Northwest Territories ever since their complete organization regarding the local use of the French language was not continued by this very Act, and if it was not the case that it was so continued. I pointed out that it might fairly be claimed by the local legislature that it was a provincial matter and that consequently the legislatures of these two provinces might claim the right to abrogate that old disposition of law and abolish completely the use of the French language. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice was of the opinion, and no doubt correctly, that the clause in the law was continued, the clause which dates from the year 1877, but he also added that in his opinion it was a local matter and that the provincial legislature might validly abrogate that disposition of law. He further declared that in his opinion it was a matter that should be left entirely to the discretion of the legislature. I do not wish to go too fully into the history of this legislation, which it is my desire to see continued for many reasons, but there is so much ignorance abroad as to the circumstances under which the French language was adopted in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories that it is absolutely necessary to refer at least to some of the important and governing facts. I may say that I have received from my electors and others many communications in regard to this amendment, and amongst other communications there was one from a very intelligent man who should have some knowledge of the history of this country and who asked me to point out to him in what clause of the treaty of Paris there was any stipulation providing for the maintenance or existence of the French language in the Northwest Territories. This betrays, as hon. members who have some knowledge of history, will no doubt admit, a very great ignorance of the circumstances, though comparatively recent in the history of this country. I will, therefore, briefly state to the House what was the origin of this legislation, in what sense it is to be considered as an agreement of a most binding nature, and why, in my opinion, it is incumbent upon us at the present moment to wish for the maintenance of this constitutional provision in the Act which we are about to pass. As hon. members are no doubt aware, after the formation of the Canadian confederation and the passage of the British North America Act two members of the new Dominion cabinet, Sir George Cartier and the Hon. William Macdougall were deputed to England to interview the imperial authorities, and in pursuance of the scheme of confederation, to have incorporated in the new confederation that vast territory in the west known as Rupert's Land. These negotiations were successful and culminated in the passage by the imperial parliament in 1868 of the Rupert's Land Act which gave power to the imperial government to treat with us as to the cession and abandonment to the Dominion government of that large territory which we coveted the moment we became a confederation. Sir George Cartier and his colleague returned to Canada after the Order in Council had been passed under which all the rights of the Hudson Bay Company in that territory having been settled, it became incorporated into the Dominion of Canada. Upon their return to Canada proceedings were taken by the Dominion government to take possession of this newly acquired territory. As hon. members are aware —it is a story that has been often told in this House—the inhabitants, then settled principally on the Red river, offered a strenuous resistance to the taking possession of that territory by the Dominion government. They organized as a provincial government and prepared to resist violently the arrival of the new governor of these territories, the envoy of the Dominion government. We, on our side sent out an armed expedition with the knowledge and co-operation and assistance of the imperial authorities. At this juncture, and in order to avoid bloodshed the imperial authorities intervened and instructions were given to Sir John Young then Governor General of Canada, by Lord Granville, Colonial Secretary, to solicit 'pourparlers' with the residents of the Territories, and to make with them the best terms possible, giving them every guarantee that the rights which they had enjoyed under the semi-paternal government of the Hudson Bay Company would be preserved to them, and telling them that by submitting to the new Dominion government they would not be deprived of any of the privileges of any kind which they had enjoyed up to that time. I wish to show as briefly as possible the nature of the negotiations entered into between the people known then as the Red River colony—in reality the only white and civilized inhabitants of Rupert's Land—and the Dominion government. Perhaps I had better read a recital of the facts such as they took place at that time from the narrative of Archbishop Taché, himself a prominent actor in these events and whose interference was solicited by the Dominion government in order that he should by his influence endeavour to bring about a successful issue of the conference, prevent violence and armed resistance by the people of the Red River, and secure to them what they considered—and very properly considered as British subjects—their rights, as a condition precedent to their entering under the control of the new authority. This is from Archbishop Taché's statement :

I may be permitted to review certain portions of our history, perhaps not too well known. In 1868 two delegates of the Canadian government, Sir George Cartier and the Hon. Wm. Macdougall, were sent to England to negotiate with the imperial government and the Hudson Bay Company for the acquisition of Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories. After long deliberations the conditions of the transfer were agreed to by the interested parties.

Meanwhile Earl Granville, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, though rejoicing at an agreement he had so largely contributed to secure, felt a little uneasy about the future condition of the old inhabitants of the country, and, to relieve his anxiety, addressed to Sir John Young, then Governor General of Canada, a despatch dated the 10th of April, 1869, from which I quote the following paragraph :

I am sure that your government will not forget the care which is due to those who must soon be exposed to new dangers, and in the course of settlement be dispossessed of the lands which they are used to enjoy as their own or be confined within unwontedly narrow limits.

That government, I believe, has never sought to evade its obligations to those whose uncertain rights and rude means of living are contracted by the advance of civilized man. I am sure that they will not do so in the present case, but that the old inhabitants of the country will be treated with such forethought and consideration as may preserve them from the danger of the approaching change and satisfy them of the friendly interest which their new governors feel in their welfare.

To remedy the evil, Lord Granville telegraphed to the Governor General advising the issue of a proclamation in the name of Her Majesty in order to quiet the minds of the disturbed. In that proclamation of the 6th December, 1869, we read :

Her Majesty commands me to state to you that she will always be ready through me as Her representative, to redress all well-founded grievances and any complaints that may be made or desires that may be expressed to me as Governor General.

By Her Majesty's authority I do therefore assure you that on union with Canada all your civil and religious rights will be respected.

Lord Granville having heard of the proclamation and of the goodwill of the Canadian authorities, wrote as follows to Sir John Young on the 8th January, 1870 :

I observe with great satisfaction the anxiety manifested by the Canadian government to avoid any collision with the insurgents in the Red River settlement and to exhaust all means of explanation and conciliation before having recourse to force.

Unfortunately the difficulties of communication prevented the knowledge of the proclamation being imparted to the interested parties at Fort Garry, and on the other hand the same difficulty of communication left the Canadian officials at Pembina in the greatest uncertainty. Expecting that the affairs were progressing as understood when they left Ottawa they thought they had but to proclaim the transfer and secure by force their entry in the Northwest Territories. They acted in accordance, but the result was altogether contrary to their hopes, and the difficulties were increased to such a lamentable extent, that Lord Granville expressed his regrets to the Governor General in a despatch dated 20th January, 1870.

I much more seriously regret the proclamation put forth by Mr. Macdougall and the commission issued by him to Colonel Dennis. Those proceedings do not render Her Majesty's government less desirous of the restoration of tranquility under the authority of the Dominion, but they have certainly enhanced the responsibility of the Canadian government.

I enter into some of these details in order to show the extent of the participation of the imperial government, and what followed ; and also to show with some degree of detail under what circumstances the solemn covenants to which I am about to refer were entered into. The Dominion government finally invited the settlers of the Red River settlement then organized as a provincial government—or at any rate organized in such a way as to be in a position to name representatives—the Dominion government invited the residents of the Red River to send delegates to Ottawa, to meet the Dominion government and to lay before that government the claims, the pretentions, and the desires of the residents of Rupert's Land and the Red River, so that an arrangement might be arrived at which would be satisfactory to these residents and lead to the peaceful taking possession of this vast territory by the Dominion government. There was a meeting of the members of the provincial government at Fort Garry, at any rate in the Red River settlement, and delegates were deputed to Ottawa, in conformity with the wish of the Dominion government, at the suggestion of the imperial government, and in order to carry out the intentions to which I have just referred. After an election had been made, a regular commission was issued to Judge Black, Mr. Albert Scott and Father Ritchot as representing the residents, to lay their claims before the Dominion authorities. Perhaps I may read the commission issued to these three delegates, in order to show the regularity of their nomination, which, I may say, has never been questioned :

To John Black, Esq :

Sir,—The president of the provisional government of Assiniboia in Council, by these presents, grants authority and commission to you, John Black, Esq., jointly with the Rev. N. J. Ritchot and Hon. A. Scott, to the end that you betake yourselves to Ottawa, in Canada ; and that when there you should lay before the Canadian parliament the list entrusted to you with the presents, which list contains the conditions and propositions under which the people of Assiniboia would consent to enter into confederation with the other provinces of Canada.

Signed, the 22nd day of March, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy.

By order,
(Sgd.) THOMAS BUNN,
Secretary of State.

The delegates proceeded to Ottawa. Upon their arrival here a committee of the Privy Council of Canada consisting of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir George Cartier were named to confer with the delegates. I may mention that upon their arrival here two of the delegates were arrested. They were subsequently released and were able to proceed with the execution of their mission. They held several conferences with the Dominion ministers, and laid before them the list of rights which had been confined to them by those who had named them, and which they had brought with them to Ottawa. Hon. members will remember that there has been a controversy as to the authenticity of the Bill of Rights. The authenticity of the one called No. 4 has been questioned. That controversy is important only in so far as the educational settlement is concerned, because in one of these Bills of Rights the school privilege is not mentioned, but in both, in the same terms and in the same article, the important question of the preservation of both languages is mentioned in identical terms. I may say that at that time the French-speaking residents of that large district were in the majority. It is clause 16, strange to say, of the Bill of Rights which is in the following words :

That the English and French languages be common in the legislature and in the courts, and that all public documents as well as all Acts of the legislature be published in both languages.

Now, I will not trouble the House with a recital of what passed at the numerous interviews between these delegates and the Dominion ministers. Some of these results have been published and some have not ; but it is necessary only to state that, as a result of the conferences between these representatives of the old residents of the district and the Dominion government, many of the articles mentioned in the Bill of Rights were agreed to, among which was this article 16 referring to the languages. That was granted unreservedly ; and, as the Act creating the province of Manitoba was then under consideration by the House, in order to prove its good faith and its desire to carry out the covenant, the delegates were invited by the Dominion government to remain here until the Manitoba Act had passed through its different stages in parliament. It is a historical fact that at that time their labours were finished and they wished to return home. They were detained here until the third reading of the Manitoba Bill, in order that they should see incorporated in the charter of the new province this clause of their Bill of Rights, in which they had mentioned as a condition of their entry into confederation the adoption of both languages as legal ; and presumably that was stipulated at that time in the interest of the English-speaking residents, who were in the minority. The imperial authorities were kept au fait with all that was going on, and I wish to quote briefly, in support of this statement, which I deem to be one of considerable importance under the circumstances, some despatches exchanged between Sir John Young, the Governor General, and Earl Granville, who was at the head of the colonial department. On the 5th of March, 1871, Earl Granville telegraphed to the Governor General :

Her Majesty's government will give proposed military assistance provided reasonable terms are granted to the Red River settlement.

On the 22nd of March a despatch from the Under Secretary of the Colonies directs that :

Troops should not be employed in forcing the sovereignty of Canada on the population of Red River, should they refuse to admit it.

On the 17th of March Earl Granville cabled :

Let me know by telegram when you know delegates have started from Fort Garry.

On the 7th of April the Governor General telegraphed as follows :

Last of the delegates is expected at St. Paul on Thursday the 11th ; the others arrived there to-day, and may reach Ottawa on Saturday, the 9th.

On the 9th Earl Granville cabled :

Let me know as soon as you can by telegram the result of negotiations with Red River delegates.

On April 23rd, Earl Granville thus informed the Governor General :

The Canadian government to accept the decision of her Majesty's government on all portions of the settlers' Bill of Rights.

On May 3rd, the Governor General cabled to the home government :

Negotiations with the delegates closed satisfactorily.

And to this Earl Granville replied on the 8th :

I take this opportunity of expressing the satisfaction with which I have learned from your telegram of the 3rd instant that the Canadian government and the delegates have come to an understanding as to the terms on which the settlers in the Red River should be admitted into the union.

I mention these despatches in order to show to the committee that the imperial government was kept in constant knowledge of the negotiations going on here between the Dominion government and the delegates and ratified and approved of everything that was done by the new government. We have, therefore, the imperial government, the previous ruler of that territory, a party to the covenant arrived at between the Dominion government and the delegates, and this is, I think, a matter of some importance. In the Manitoba Act which was passed here creating the new province the articles of the Bill of Rights were inserted and, as is well known, submitted to the delegates for their approval before they were passed through parliament. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has suggested the possibility that this covenant applied only to Manitoba. Now it applied to the entire new territory. It was so understood by all parties treating during the negotiations and, as a matter of fact, effect was given to the covenant and the agreement arrived at as soon as possible after the delegates of the Dominion had agreed and that question has never been raised since. As a matter of fact while the delegates were deliberating with the Dominion ministers there was no certainty as to the creation of the province of Manitoba with its present limits. Correspondence which I need not read here shows, and it is a fact of history that it was supposed when the new territory of Rupert's Land was taken possession of, when delegates came down here, that one government, either a provincial or some kind of government, would be organized for the whole new territory, and it was only after the delegates had stipulated for their rights that the limits of the new province of Manitoba were settled upon. As a matter of fact at that period the Red River settlers as they were called, were the only white civilized people in the whole of Rupert's Land. The country back of that, which had been discovered was hunted over, inhabited by Indians, but there were there simply occasional travellers from the Red River and the whole territory was known as Rupert's Land. I submit that the whole of that territory has to be considered and was understood by the Dominion government as coming under all the protective clauses stipulated for in the Bill of Rights and it was so understood, as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) mentions, by the British government. A careful perusal of the negotiations, of the despatches and of the letters, leaves no doubt upon that point. The Manitoba Bill was carried through the House and when sections 22 and 23 are to be found, the stipulations concerning the educational system and language. I shall read section 23 of the Manitoba Act which remained in force until it was abolished by the provincial legislature in 1890. This is the section :

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the legislature and both these languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of both Houses and either of these languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under the British North America Act, 1867, or in or from any or all of the courts of the province. The Acts of the legislature shall be printed and published in both of these languages.

During the first five years of the rule of the Dominion over the Northwest Territories provision was made for the administration of these Territories by temporary Acts which I shall not refer to. In 1875, under the Mackenzie government, it was determined to establish there a stable, regular government with a certain amount of autonomy, although even these organizations with their autonomy were still kept under the control of the provincial legislature. Mr. Mackenzie caused the adoption of the statute 38 Victoria, chapter 49, and in that legislation, under article 2, will be found a stipulation or a provision in regard to separate schools ; but in the statute of 1875 there was no provision of the nature referred to in section 23 of the Manitoba Act in regard to the reservation of the French language. It was an oversight which parliament repaired in 1877. I referred to the Act passed in 1877 which provides as follows :

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the said council and in the proceedings before the said courts, and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of the said council and the ordinances of the said council shall be printed in both these languages.

In 1880, the different Acts concerning the Territories were revised by the statute 43 Victoria, chapter 35. Article 94 of that statute contains the same disposition in regard to the French language which is to be found in the statute of 1877. In 1890, the Manitoba legislature adopted an Act abolishing the French language. That Act was not disallowed. I may say here at once, to anybody who would suggest to me that disallowance should have been made, that I do not deny that. We are dealing with circumstances as they exist to-day and consequently I do not think it is an answer to the argument which I am at present submitting to the committee to say that there was no disallowance, because those who had the power did not choose to prevent that provincial legislation, clearly ultra vires, from going into force. I do not see that is an argument against my present contention. But in 1890, as many members of this committee are aware, a very great agitation began having for its object the abolition of the French language in the Northwest Territories, and indeed it is sufficient to refer to some of the speeches which were made in the House at that time to see that the object of these agitators was to achieve the complete suppression of the French language throughout the whole of Canada.

They considered—to my mind very erroneously—that unity of language was absolutely necessary for the formation here of a united people, and that there was no constitutional guarantee of any kind providing for the mantenance of the French language, either in the province of Quebec or anywhere else. It is rather astonishing, on referring to that debate, which lasted many days in this House, to find that Mr. McCarthy, who was a man of very considerable attainments, seemed to consider,—when introducing his resolution to expunge from the Northwest Territories Act, the provisions to which I am now referring—that it must have been by some mistake or oversight that this provision had been inserted in the Manitoba Act and the Northwest Territories Act. He saw no reason why there should have been such a provision. That conclusion to which he arrived seems astonishing when one is aware of the facts, a summary of which I have just given the House, and when one knows the arrangements which were made in 1870 before the Dominion government took possession of Rupert's Land. On Mr. McCarthy's resolution, the discussion took a very wide range indeed. To that discussion I propose briefly to refer in order to show why I have arrived at the conclusion that the amendment I am submitting ought to be most acceptable to this committee and House. Mr. McCarthy's Bill provided for the expunging from the Northwest Territories Act of 1877 the constitutional provision guaranteeing the preservation of the French language in the Territories. The late Mr. Davin, who was then a member of this House proposed an amendment on the second reading of Mr. McCarthy's Bill, the gist of which was that the decision as to whether that provision of the statute should be maintained should be left to the North-West assembly. To that amendment a sub-amendment was proposed by the late Mr. Beausoleil, who then represented the electoral division of Berthier. Mr. Beausoleil took a very different view, by his sub-amendment he proposed that the provision in the statute should be maintained intact. His argument was, as is mine now, that that provision had been inserted in the Northwest Territories Act, as well as the Manitoba Act, in conformity with a solemn agreement made in 1870—an agreement which could not be departed from without the evident consent of all those interested; and that it would be an absolute breach of faith with the people of the Northwest to interfere in any way with that agreement, much less remove it from the federal statute. The House divided on Mr. Beausoleil's sub-amendment, and it was negatived, but my right hon. friend the leader of the government voted in favour of it. Speaking on it, he said:

> The amendment affirms the proposition that the present state of things ought to be permanent. With this, however, I cannot agree, and although I am prepared to vote for the amendment of my hon. friend from Berthier, I cannot do so without taking exception to his statements. It is impossible to admit, for instance, that the institutions of the Northwest are permanent. On the contrary they are exceptionally temporary; they deal with a state of things which is exceptional in itself, they were devised at a time when there was no population, and they must be modified from time to time as the necessities of the case require. But at this moment to say they are permanent is a thing in which I cannot agree, except so far as they must be permanent in every particular, so long as we are not ready to give these people a more extended form of local authority. My hon. friend also says in this amendment, that since we passed this law and gave this incipient constitution to the Northwest Territories, nothing has occurred to change our views. I cannot agree with that. Everything has occurred since that time, not to change our views, but to set us thinking about what we should do at a future time, not very far off, in regard to these Territories. What has occurred is this: a population has gone into those Territories; they have been given a legislature, and that legislature has demanded certain measures—not only on the question of language, but on that of schools and on the system of government. Bearing these facts in mind it seems to me that the proper time to deal with this question will be when we are prepared to give the Territories perhaps not absolute, but a more extended form of local self-government; and when that time comes, we must be prepared to deal with this question upon the broad principle of this constitution, which has been devised for the safety of the majority and the protection of the minority, and in the light of the condition of things which may exist at that time in the Territories.

I quote my right hon. friend, in the first place, as a justification for my bringing up the question at present, because, according to what he then said, this is the proper time to deal with that question. That is one point, but there is another which I invoke in favour of the contention I have the honour to submit, and that is what my hon. friend said, namely, that when the time came to deal with this question, we must deal with it in the broad spririt of the constitution, safeguarding the majority and at the same time protecting the minority.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On what page is that?

Mr. MONK. Page 744 of the 'Hansard' of 1890. I will refer to what Sir John A.

Macdonald said on that occasion, although he has been quoted by my hon. friend from Labelle in support of what he said a day or two ago concerning the school law. I may say that this was a most interesting debate, from which I would quote at greater length if time permitted. I could show that upon that vexed question both parties, the moderate men on both sides of the House, came to an agreement, which is incorporated in my amendment. The agreement they came to was incorporated in a resolution finally adopted by the House, which is word for word the amendment I have offered to-day. They came to that agreement considering that the terms of the resolution as they settled it among themselves, men of different race and creed, and different political colour, was a proper settlement of that time of the needs of the Northwest, satisfying no doubt to some extent the local demand, and at the same time—because they all expressed that opinion—maintaining the sacredness of the agreement arrived at in 1870 under the circumstances I have indicated to the House. Mr. Blake suggested the substance of an amendment, but had been obliged to leave the House during the debate. Finally a form was agreed upon for which both Sir John A. Macdonald, my right hon. friend, and leading men on both sides of the House, voted. This is how Sir John A. Macdonald, towards the end of the debate, spoke upon that question:

I go a great way with my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) in his remarks concerning the principle of this Bill. I sympathize with his very natural feelings of indignation at much of the language that has been used in support of this measure now before the House. I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other ; I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible. The statement that has been made so often that this is a conquered country is 'à propos de rien.' Whether it was conquered or ceded, we have a constitution now under which all British subjects are in a position of absolute equality, having equal rights of every kind—of language, of religion, of property and of person. There is no paramount race in this country ; there is no conquered race in this country ; we are all British subjects, and those who are not English are none the less British subjects on that account. But while I say so much, Mr. Speaker, I must regret that my hon. friend perhaps yielding to the necessity of his position as a party leader, should have commenced his speech with some party attacks against the Tories. My hon. friend felt constrained, I suppose, to make those allusions which, in the circumstances of the case, I think were not altogether generous or altogether politic. The hon. gentleman spoke of the spirit of this Bill being that of Toryism, utter Toryism, oppressive Toryism. Why, Sir, if he looks at the history of England in modern days, I think he will find that most of the Liberal measures passed there have been passed, if not by Tories, by Conservatives. I think also, if he will look at the history of Canada, he will find at all events, that liberality towards the French Canadian race was pretty much confined to the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman had to admit that while this Bill was, as he affirmed, an evidence of utter Toryism, the exclusion of the French language, the injury done to the French people, the insult offered to them, came from a Radical, the Earl of Durham. To be sure, my hon. friend said that Lord Durham was a Radical who did not understand all about liberty. That is quite evident ; and so great a Radical was he that in order to get rid of him the English goverment sent him to this country to show us his liberalism by attempting to deprive half the people of their rights to use their own language.

Further on, speaking more particularly of the point then under consideration, Sir John A. Macdonald said :

The reason why I oppose the Bill of my hon. friend to-day is the same—because that Bill, a small Bill, I might almost call it an insignificant Bill in its enacting clause—is based on the purpose of doing away with the French language, of discarding the French language, at all events, and depriving the French Canadian people of the solace of the language they learned at the feet of their mothers. Why, Mr. Speaker, if there is one act of oppression more than another which would come home to a man's breast, it is that he should be deprived of the consolation of hearing and speaking and reading the language that his mother taught him. It is cruel. It is seething the kid in its mother's milk. The greatest, perhaps, of all the objections to this measure, is that it is a futile measure, it will not succeed, it cannot succeed.

There is further matter, but I will leave that part of the case as it was stated by the great leader of the Conservative party at that time. Speaking in reference to this measure which was then under the consideration of parliament, my friend, Mr. LaRivière, then a member of this House, quoted the 'Electeur,' then the organ of the Liberal party, published in the city of Quebec, which has been succeeded by the 'Soleil' as the governmet organ in that city. I will merely read the advice which the 'Electeur' gave upon that occasion :

Our friends in Ottawa are, unfortunately, on the opposition side, that is to say, powerless to secure the triumph of their broad and liberal ideas, to which the Hon. Mr. Blake, a few days ago, gave voice in eloquent words. But we beseech them to stand firm and to do their duty to the end, and we feel that they shall have, not only the sympathies of our co-religionists and fellow countrymen, but also those of an imposing number of fair-minded English-speaking people who consider as an honour to follow the traditions of the Liberals of old England, and follow the steps of those who, in the old country, defend the cause of home rule and equality of rights for all races and all creeds under the British flag.

I might quote further from Mr. LaRivière who, upon that occasion, in a speech well worthy of perusal, went fully into this question with which he had been familiar from the beginning, and concluded in what I would call a very eloquent peroration in favour of the maintenance of those rights. Now, Sir, I will not detain the House unduly, I merely wanted to show what is the basis of the legislation which has existed in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories—which formerly were Rupert's Land—from the very beginning, and what was the cause of that legislation. I would have added more had time permitted. I would have quoted from a book published by a very eminent lawyer, Mr. Ewart, in which this matter, as well as the school question, is gone into at great length, with documents and evidence; indeed, Mr. Chairman, evidence is necessary to show to what a shameful extent, to use the very words of Mr. Ewart, those rights so carefully stipulated for in 1870 and so well safeguarded ever since, have been invaded. It is a painful story of treachery and bad faith, there is no other qualification. Pleading before the Privy Council on behalf of the minority whose lawyer he was, Mr. Ewart stated that he would be ashamed to bear the name of a British subject if the redress which he was then seeking was not granted to the minority.

In truth, when one examines with care what has taken place, one really questions how it will be possible for people, having entered into that agreement, solemnly and carefully, and having maintained it for a time, to break it and explain their conduct. I think, Sir, that is sufficient justification for me to bring this matter before the committee and to ask that that faith which is so essential, which has been claimed as such a characteristic of British fair-play and British government, should be maintained in these Bills. Objections have been urged. Strange to say, I have seen the objection that this was a matter in which needless expense would be caused to the new province. Why, Mr. Chairman, to invoke the question of expense or of convenience where rights have been guaranteed and where it is our duty, here in this parliament, to see that this agreement is maintained is, it seems to me, to raise a pusillanimous objection. It was urged in the debate of 1890 and Sir Hector Langevin, speaking upon that point, stated that from statistics furnished to him the expense as regards the French language during the previous ten years—and he was speaking then at a time when everything had to be translated, when the work was more considerable than it is proposed to make it under this law—had averaged $400 a year. I submit to this committee that the sum of $500 or $600 a year is a small price to pay to maintain the solemn promise which we made in 1890 and to see maintained in the Northwest Territories the language of Bossuet, Fénélon, Bernardin de Saint-Pierre, and of the more modern writers of France, and the language which is used in diplomacy throughout the world to-day. It is a small price to pay to maintain this language in those remote provinces that have a future before them and to maintain the traditions of the men who discovered that great western territory and of the first settlers who went up there, of La Verendrye and the other courageous discoverers of the Rocky mountains who were the first settlers in that region, and when their descendants were called upon with the advance of events and with the progress of civilization to give up the control of that country to the Dominion government they stipulated with the Crown of England and stipulated with ourselves that that constitutional provision should remain guaranteed to them, not for a specific time but for all time throughout these Territories. There has been the objection raised also that the vast majority of the people in those Territories speak a different language. I will not answer that objection because it does not seem to me to be an objection which can be urged against the amendment which I have the honour to submit to this committee. People have gone so far as to say that if this particular constitutional guarantee is maintained in favour of the French language we should grant it equally to the Russian settlers, to the Doukhobors and to the Icelanders. But the members of this committee must see that the position of the French language in that country is a very different one from that of the languages of these other people, because these people are modern immigrants who have recently gone into that country. The others were the pioneers of the country and, as I stated before, they obtained that guarantee which to us ought to be sacred. Besides, there are thousands of the descendants of these men in that country, and even if they were fewer, still I consider that that fact has nothing to do with the duty which we have to perform here. From the remarks which were made by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice I inferred that he was of the opinion that this might be considered a local law after the creation of these provinces, and that under section 15 of the Act being a purely local matter, it might legitimately be legislated upon by the new legislature. If there is a danger of other people taking the same view as that of the hon. Minister of Justice I think that is all the more reason for us, if there is any validity in the arguments I have presented to the committee, making the necessary provision to guard against such a contingency. But, is it a local matter ? Can it be said that this agreement which covered the whole of Rupert's Land, that this law which has applied for the last thirty years to these two provinces and which also concerned the province of Manitoba, the maintenance of which not only concerns the federal parliament but concerns the Crown of England, can be considered as a purely local matter within these provinces ? I think not. It is nothing or it is a constitutional provision. It is not only a Dominion matter but it is an imperial matter in a certain sense, and the moment would be badly chosen in my estimation, Mr. Chairman, when we are the witnesses to the carrying out by the King of England of a policy of entente cordiale, of a policy of conciliation which has been carried out between the two great ruling nations of England and France, to tear asunder an agreement arrived at with that small colony of settlers, if you like, but British subjects of Her late Majesty, the mother of the present King in 1870

Mr. Chairman, I am no believer, and I have often so stated, in what Mr. McCarthy, in 1890, termed the unification of the Canadian people by the sacrifice of race, religion or anything of that sort. It is an impossible and Eutopian task anyway. No man has yet invented the secret of causing a nation worthy of the name, a nationality with all its distinctive characteristics and traits to disappear or to be merged into another nationality. Nor, are these conditions, as might be supposed, general even in the United States. I think that in four states of the Union there are two or more languages that are official or legal. In autocratic Russia, the government, certainly not a liberal one, tolerates the legal use of a hundred different languages. There are only four countries in Europe where there is one language absolutely and those are Italy, Portugal, Denmark and Greece. The policy of the British government has been one of unsurpassed unequalled tolerance as regards language and in that great empire, the greatest that the world has ever known, there are to-day forty-seven different languages. It does not in any way interfere with, but on the contrary it helps the autonomous and Liberal government of that great empire. Under these circumstances, Sir, there is great justification for the amendment I have moved. To carry it into effect will cause little expense and inconvenience, and it clearly maintains not only the honour of this parliament and this government, but the honour of the British Crown itself, which is something worth being maintained to British subjects. It would have been extremely regrettable had this matter not been brought to the notice of this parliament. I will do my English speaking colleagues the justice of saying that I feel perfectly convinced that if this matter had been one particularly committed to their care, not one of them would have failed in his duty of bringing it to the attention of parliament. I require no justification I am sure, from the French speaking members of this House, for having, I think in moderate language placed this question before the parliament of our country. I have been severely criticised by certain newspapers for having done so, but my conscience is easy on that point for I feel that I have only discharged a simple duty. Before I resume my seat I wish to refer very briefly to a newspaper article published in the Montreal 'Sunday Sun in which I am taken to task in the most venomous manner for having ventured to express my determination to move this amendment. There is a despatch in that newspaper which I will not take up the time of the House to read, purporting to come from Ottawa but which I am sure has been fabricated in an office in Montreal which attributes very unworthy motives to me. That newspaper has been sent under cover to the members of this House and perhaps circulated elsewhere or I would take no notice of it. I suppose I ought to say that I deny the allegations contained in that article, and perhaps I may add that I have very little consideration for the 'alligators.' I think that any one who reads that article and who afterwards takes cognizance of what I have reasonably presented to the House, will come to the conclusion that I have simply discharged my duty, and, standing on that vantage ground the attacks of these people directed against me for some years back—low, scurrilous and mendacious as they are— will never reach me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have read the article to which the hon. member (Mr. Monk) has just referred, and as my name is mentioned in that despatch purporting to be sent from Ottawa, I may say to the House that from the beginning to the end the article is a tissue of falsehoods. It is there alleged that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has enjoyed my hospitality with the view of coming into the true fold, and placing himself in the ranks of the Liberal party. It is my great privilege to be a friend, a true friend, of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), but let me assure the House that there has never been between us any compact with a view of bringing that hon. gentleman over to the Liberal party. And if there had been the attitude taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) on this question today would show conclusively that he intends to remain in the Conservative party. His speech, a very able speech, is a most seductive one, especially to the province of Quebec. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) reminds me of a certain statesman in England who, having been selected to lead the forces of a great party against the government of the day ; seeing no cloud on the horizon; seeing all round him the prosperity of Great Britain; seeing there was no chance for his party to attain power, asked his friends what he should do to educate the people of the country to support the views of his party. And one of his friends answered : Sir, you have only one thing to do, you must advertise for a grievance. I suppose that my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the gallant little band of French Canadian Conservatives who sit opposite me. have held caucus since clause 16 has been adopted, and seeing that there was no chance for them to agitate the province of Quebec on religious grounds, have decided to advertise for a grievance on racial grounds.

Mr. BERGERON. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) pardon an interruption. Does he pretend to say that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) were at that caucus.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am speaking of the French Canadian Conservatives, and I did not mention these two hon. gentlemen. Now. Sir, the hon. member (Mr. Monk) who at this very late date has advertised this grievance has not informed the House whether he holds a brief from any of the French Canadians in the Northwest to represent them on the floor of this House. May I ask the hon. gentleman, if before bringing this vexed question before the country he received one solitary petition from the French Canadians who live in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. SPROULE. If that argument is sound would it not apply with equal force to the education clause against which there were floods of petitions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We are not dealing with the school question.

Mr. SPROULE. If your argument is sound it ought to apply in one case as well as in the other.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We are not dealing with the school question; that question has been solved, happily for the country, by the vote taken last night. I am referring to the dual language and I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), who seems to have clung to this grievance in view of future elections in the province of Quebec, if he has received one solitary petition from any of the French speaking electors in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. MONK. If I get the Solicitor General one petition will he vote for my amendment ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is not the question.

Mr. MONK. I assure my hon. friend that I can get a great many petitions of that kind.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is evading the issue. I asked if he had received one petition from the Northwest Territories.

Mr. MONK. I have received no petition, but I can tell my hon. friend that I have been told by a great many people who have no political axe to grind that it would be a disgrace to us in the province of Quebec if this question were not at least raised in this parliament.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The explanation given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is perfectly clear. He wants to agitate ; he is anxious to get some French Canadian votes in the province of Quebec, to embarrass the government and to create trouble. That is the whole question. The hon. gentleman began his remarks by asserting that there was a treaty made between the citizens of the Northwest Territories and the Dominion government, and inferentially with the imperial authorities, that the French language would be guaranteed to the French Canadian minority. He read from Mr. Ewart's book on the Manitoba school question what purported to be the Bill of Rights of the citizens of the Northwest Territories. My hon. friend read a long recital of the articles contained in that famous Bill of Rights. I have here, Sir, the sessional papers published in 1870, and I see in them the list of rights which was submitted, together with a letter, signed by John Bruce and Louis Riel, to Mr. Macdougall, who had been sent as the first lieutenant governor of the Red River settlement. The first of these was:

> That the people have the right to elect their own legislature. That the legislature have the power to pass all laws locally in the Territories over the veto of the executive by a two-thirds vote.

And finally, the tenth:

> That the English and French languages be common in the legislature and courts, and that all public documents and Acts of the legislature be published in both languages.

And the list of rights adds :

> All the above articles have been severally discussed and adopted by the French and English representatives, without a dissenting voice, as the conditions upon which the people of Rupert's Land enter into confederation.

I claim that the Northwest Territories were not concerned with that list of rights. but only the Red River settlement. Mr. Riel and Mr. Bruce were speaking on behalf of the inhabitants. Therefore, the so-called guarantee of the imperial government and of the Dominion government applies only to the French Canadians and French halfbreeds who resided on the shores of the Red river. I may mention that after this list of rights had been submitted to Mr. Macdougall, pourparlers took place between the Dominion government, Sir John Macdonald was then premier, and delegates were sent here, not from the Northwest Territories, but from the Red River settlement: and immediately thereafter the Act creating the province of Manitoba, and containing in so many words about the same guarantees as had been asked in the list of rights, was passed by this parliament and ratified by the imperial authorities. In 1875, the Act organizing the Northwest Territories was passed ; but you will notice that in that Act, there is not a line concerning the use of the French language in the legislature of the Territories or in the courts. It was only in 1877, in a Bill introduced by the late Hon. Mr. Mills, and moved in the Senate by the Hon. Mr. Scott, the present Secretary of State, that a clause was inserted on that subject upon an amendment moved I think, by the late Senator Girard. That clause, which appears as clause 11 in the Act of 1877 and clause 110 in the Revised Statutes, reads as follows :

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the said council and in the proceedings before the courts, and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of the said council, and the ordinances of the said council shall be printed in both these languages.

At that time there was a comparatively large French Canadian element in the Northwest Territories. That Act passed the House of Commons and became the law of the Northwest Territories, and remained so until 1890. The House is aware of the agitation which took place as a result of the campaign led by the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy. Mr. McCarthy advocated the abolition of the separate schools system, and the abolition of the French language in the Northwest Territories and in the Manitoba legislature. The older members of this House are conversant with the Bill which was introduced during the memorable session of 1890 by Mr. Dalton McCarthy. In the preamble of that Bill Mr. McCarthy declared that it was essential to the welfare of the country that there should be one language only; but the enacting clause only proposed to abolish the use of the French language in the Northwest assembly. I may say that a few months or perhaps a year before, the Northwest assembly had practically unanimously decided to expunge the French language from its records and its deliberations. The Bill of Mr. McCarthy was of a very radical nature, especially the preamble, which conveyed the idea that if it were passed by the House of Commons of Canada, it meant that not only in the Northwest Territories the French language be abolished, but that it would be the signal of a campaign against the use of that language in this parliament and even in the province of Quebec. In fact, Mr. McCarthy and several other gentlemen made a very bitter campaign against the separate school system and the dual language. What happened then ? The Bill was introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. McCarthy. Our late colleague (Mr. Davin) who represented the constituency of Assiniboia and who at that time, when the Northwest was represented, I think, only by two or three members, was the spokesman of his fellow members, moved an amendment to the effect that this House should not pronounce on the use of the French language in the Northwest Territories, but that the legislature be authorized to deal alone with that question. The words of his amendment were:

That the said Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that it is expedient that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories be authorized to deal with the subject matter of this Bill by ordinance or enactment after the next general election for the said province.

That was Mr. Davin's amendment. Mr. Beausoleil's sub-amendment was :

That all the words after the word 'resolved' in the amendment be struck out and the following be inserted instead thereof :

That the official use of the French and English languages in the legislature and the courts of the Northwest Territories, was established by this parliament in the well understood interests of the people of the said Territories, in order to promote the good understanding and the harmony that should exist between the different races, and with a view, by a liberal policy, to promote the colonization and settlement of those vast domains ; that nothing has happened since to excuse or justify the withdrawal of the privilege granted only a few years ago ; that the result of the proposed legislation would be to create uneasiness and discontent throughout the Dominion and to put in doubt the stability of our institutions, and hereby to hinder and delay for a long time the development of the immense resources of the Canadian Northwest.

I may say that only one French Canadian member voted against Mr. Beausoleil's sub-amendment ; that was the late Sir Adolphe Chapleau, then Secretary of State. The debate went on and Sir John Macdonald delivered probably the most remarkable speech of the latter part of his career. He appealed to the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) he appealed to Mr. Blake, who was a member of the House, and he asked especially Mr. Blake to join hands with his Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson in framing an amendment which would embody the sentiments, the aspirations, and the opinions of all those who sat in the House of Commons. To that effect the following amendment was moved, replacing the amendment of Mr. Davin :

That this House, having regard to the long continued use of the French language in old Canada, and to the covenants on that subject embodied in the British North America Act cannot agree to the declaration contained in the said Bill as the basis thereof, that it is expedient in the interest of the national unity of the Dominion that there should be community of language amongst the people of Canada ;

That, on the contrary, this House declares its adherence to the said covenants and its determination to resist any attempt to impair the same ;

That, at the same time, this House deems it expedient and proper and not inconsistent with those covenants that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories should receive from the parliament of Canada power to regulate, after the next general election of the assembly, the proceedings of the assembly and the manner of recording and publishing such proceedings.

This was on February 21st, 1890.

Mr. MONK. The amendment which I presented is copied from that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is the amendment of Sir John Thompson. It was carried by a vote of 149 against 50. I see the name of my hon. friend the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) who voted yea. That is to say he voted that,

This House deems it expedient and proper, and not inconsistent with these covenants, that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories should receive from the parliament of Canada power to regulate, after the next general election of the assembly, the proceedings of the assembly and the manner of recording and publishing such proceedings.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend might have read the other vote where I voted the other way. It will be easier for me to explain afterwards.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend voted with all the French Canadian members and a few of the English Canadian members of the House of Commons in favour of the amendment which I have read, and which was introduced by Mr. Beausoleil. So did the then leader of the opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But the amendment which was carried by the House was that of Sir John Thompson which affirmed two principles, first that Mr. McCarthy was wrong in inaugurating a campaign to abolish the French language in the province of Quebec and in the parliament of the Dominion, and second, that the legislature of the Northwest Territories should be authorized by this parliament to regulate its proceedings in whatever language it chose to have after the next general elections.

Mr. BERGERON. How did the right hon. gentleman vote on that clause ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend has the votes and proceedings.

Mr. BERGERON. I had them before you mentioned my name.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman voted. I told him I saw his name amongst the yeas. He voted to give the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories the right to abolish the French language. Now, Sir, what did happen ? The year after, general elections were held in the Northwest Territories, and as a result the French language was abolished on a motion made by Mr. Haultain. I may say that I have perused and read carefully the whole debate of 1890 on this question of the dual language in the Northwest Territories I may say to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that if he has read it carefully as I am sure he has, he will have observed that neither Mr. Blake nor Mr. Mills nor Sir John Macdonald, nor any of those high constitutional authorities living at the time claimed that prior to the annexation of the Northwest Territories to Canada there had been a covenant between this government or the imperial government and the people inhabiting these Territories that the French language should be official.

Mr. MONK. Is that the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux)?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend has only to read the list of rights. Where does he find in any treaty that the people of the Northwest Territories were guaranteed the use of the French language except in the statute passed in 1877? But let me point out to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), who is watching the issue of this debate so carefully in order to start an agitation in the province of Quebec, that the parliament of Canada, under the inspiration of the late Sir John Thompson, gave the legislature of the Northwest Territories the right to abolish the use of the French language.

Mr. MONK. Is not that proposition a very general one? Is that the way my hon. friend understands the resolution adopted in 1890 on the Bill to abolish the French language ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me read the resolution to my hon. friend:

That at the same time this House deems it expedient and proper and not inconsistent with those convenants that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories should receive from the parliament of Canada power to regulate, after the next general election of the assembly, the proceedings of the assembly and the manner of recording and publishing such proceedings.

Mr. BERGERON. How would you have voted on that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend should not ask me how I would have voted in 1890. I was not then a member of parliament. Is my hon. friend ashamed of the vote he gave at that time ?

Mr. BERGERON. Is it not a question of principle, and when we give a population free institutions, we could not prevent their legislature from having that right. I was very much disappointed at the way the legislature abused the right we gave them. But at that time we could not deprive them of that right, and that is why we then voted as we did in company with the many of our hon. friend's opponents.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yesterday, when I called to my hon. friend's attention the attitude he took and the vote he gave after the separate school system had been abolished in the Northwest Territories, when I recalled to him the fact that he had not raised a finger in favour of the Catholics of the Territory, and that, at a time when he had a seat in this parliament, he answered very ingenuously: 'Oh, well, I had full confidence in the Minister of Justice at that time.' To-day, however, he is trying to stir up racial issues, along with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in the province of Quebec, without having the slightest evidence of any treaty or covenant guaranteeing the use of the French language in that country, and when we recall to him the fact that he sat in this parliament in 1890 and then voted for a resolution which gave the legislative assembly of the Territories the right to regulate the manner of its proceedings and to decree what language shall be used in its proceedings, he asks: 'How would you have voted if you had been there?' That is not an answer to a straight question. Let me further call the attention of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to this point: The French Canadians of the Territories knew themselves so well that there was no covenant and no treaty guaranteeing to them the right to use the French language in the legislative assembly, that when the question came up before the Council, Mr. Rouleau, who was a judge of the Supreme Court, and who sat ex-officio, I think, in the Northwest Council, expressed himself as follows:

> Judge Rouleau spoke at great length on the question. He claimed that no action could be taken until the people had a chance to express themselves on the matter. Let the members make it an issue at the next election, if they wished. He had spoken French before he had spoken English and this memorial proposed to deprive him and others of their mother tongue. He closed by again claiming that the question should be decided by the electors, and hinted that some of the members, who probably vote for this now, might suffer at the next election.

Thus we have Mr. Justice Rouleau—who was then, I think, the highest official amongst the French population of the Territories, who sat in the Northwest Council—expressing the opinion that the matter should be left in the hands of the electors, and that if the electors gave a mandate to their representatives to abolish the dual system, then the French Canadians would have to submit.

Mr. MONK. This had reference to the abolition of the use of the French language merely in the proceedings of the legislative assembly, and did not mean the abolition of the French language in toto. That language at present, and ever since the establishment of the Territories, has been the official language of the Northwest in the courts, and in the debates of the House, as I contend. The resolution to which my hon. friend the Solicitor General refers is merely confined to the proceedings of the House, and it was in that sense that Mr. Justice Rouleau spoke.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is perfectly right in saying that even to-day, although this resolution was passed by the legislative assembly of the Territories, the French Canadians there are at liberty to use their own language in the courts. This is the opinion expressed by Sir John Macdonald in the debate of 1890, and he based it on section 133 of the British North America Act:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and the journals of those Houses, and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.

Some of the members at that time thought that by the expression 'Courts of Canada' was simply meant the Exchequer Court and the Supreme Court. But Sir John Macdonald held that the courts of the Northwest Territories, having been established and constituted by the federal government, this clause applied to them also as regards language. But I may say to my hon. friend at once, that although this privilege exists until the provinces consitute and establish courts themselves, the people throughout the Northwest Territories do not seem t have taken advantage of it. Not later than the day before yesterday I took the trouble to wire to a gentleman well known to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, Mr. Justice Prendergast of the Supreme Court of the Territories. This is the telegram I sent, dated June 27:

> Please inform me if the French language is used before the courts in pleadings or otherwise?
> (Signed)
> RODOLPHE LEMIEUX.

To that telegram I received yesterday the following reply:

> Not used to my knowledge either in pleadings or otherwise. I am writing.
>
> JAMES D. PRENDERGAST.

Mr. MONK. What difference does that make?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It does not make any difference as regards the abstract right to use the French language. But it shows that the motion of the hon. gentleman is not very practical, that he is fighting for phantoms and not for realities. For myself, I prefer to fight for the substance rather than the shadow, and to avoid creating the trouble which my hon. friend would like to stir up in this country. Now, he has taunted the Prime Minister for some opinions expressed by him in 1890, when this question was before parliament. The Prime Minister can defend himself; but my hon. friend should have done him the justice to quote the exact language which he used on that occasion. When this question was debated in 1890 he said, page 1014 of the 'Hansard':

> Let us remember this: That if we are prepared to stand by the principle of local autonomy in the Northwest Territories, we will stand ten times, and a hundred times, stronger when we have to meet an attack in our own province. If we are now prepared to stand by the principle of local autonomy, I submit that when the time comes we will find a tower of strength in the position which we may take upon this question. This is one of the reasons which impel me to take the action I propose on this measure, that is, to support the measure of the hon. Minister of Justice. I quite realize that it must be painful for many hon. members from the province of Quebec to vote for a measure which may perhaps imply the possibility that the French language should cease to be the official language in the Northwest Territories. I have no reason to suppose, and I do not for one moment suppose, that the people of the Northwest Territories would act unjustly or unfairly towards the French minority. I know it has been said that if we vote this measure it is a foregone conclusion that the French language will not be an official language of the Northwest, because the legislature has already expressed its opinion in favour of removing it as an official language. Well, that it true; but we must remember that at present there is not one single member speaking French in the legislature, and if, after the next election, there should be no change in the representation, if there should be no French representative in the Northwest Territories assembly, surely no one will complain if, under such circumstances, after the attention of the people has been aroused to the question the local legislature were to adhere to its present intention.

So the Prime Minister, when leader of the opposition, said that as there was no French Canadian representative sitting in the Northwest assembly, and as it was a question of local autonomy, the legislature had full power to do what it has since done. That was also the opinion of the highest constitutional authorities which were in parliament at that time. Now, Sir, the leader of the opposition of that day stated that if this question would come up before parliament he would have to consider the number of French inhabitants in the Northwest Territories. As I said a moment ago, it is a good thing to fight for our undoubted rights, but it is another thing to fight uselessly for special privileges. I challenge my hon. friends from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to find, within the four corners of this constitution, anything guaranteeing the use of the French language in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. BERGERON. We are not going to fight on words. Does not the hon. gentleman think that all that took place before Manitoba entered confederation, that all that was done at that time in favour of the French language and separate schools, in favour of the rights of the French Canadians and the half-breeds in that part of the country, was done on behalf of people who resided in that territory now comprised in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Again I will quote to my hon. friend the language of the contracting parties. Here is the declaration of the people of Rupert's Land as I find it in clause 10:

> That the English and French languages be common in the legislature and courts, and that all public documents and Acts of the legislature be published in both languages.
> All the above articles have been severally discussed and adopted by the French and English representatives without a dissenting voice, as the conditions upon which the people of Rupert's Land enter confederation.

The people of Rupert's Land, these are not the people of the Northwest Territories to-day. But I will go further. Immediately after this had been submitted to Sir John Macdonald and Sir George E. Cartier, and the other ministers of the Crown, an Act was passed to create the province of Manitoba, containing exactly the same provisions. Three years after, the Northwest Territories are constituted, but not a word is mentioned about the French language. Will my hon. friend explain that to me?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Would not the federal parliament to-day have the right to establish the French language in the Northwest if it saw fit to do so?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Undoubtedly, and so can my hon. friend agitate the country and ask that the 200,000 French Canadians in the province of Ontario shall have the right to the official use of the French language in the legislature. But as there is not one word in the British North America Act about the use of the French language in Ontario, as there is no covenant or guarantee to that effect in previous documents, nobody would dare agitate for such a thing. Would not my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) be more practical, would not my hon. friends from Jacques Cartier and Beauharnois be more justified, in agitating the country and asking our English fellow citizens to grant the use of the French language in the legislature of Ontario, rather than asking the use of the French language in the legislature of the Northwest Territories where it is not guaranteed by any article of treaty, or by any covenant.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Admitting that there is no treaty guaranteeing the use of the French language in the Northwest Territories—which I do not admit—would not the federal parliament have a right to establish the French language in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Parliament is supreme. It has the right to do anything. My hon. friend has read the principles of the British constitution. But we must act as men of common sense, we must not act like children and ask for the moon. We must ask our rights and nothing but our rights and it ill becomes my hon. friend to clamour for special privileges when they are not guaranteed by the constitution.

Mr. BERGERON. If I understand well the difference which my hon. friend finds between the Manitoba side and the Northwest Territories side as far as that covenant is concerned, is this: Although the government of Canada agreed to the Bill of Rights which provided that the French language should be an official language in the province of Manitoba, and although they did not make provision for the continuance of that right in 1875 the right did not cease in the Northwest Territories, because it was re-enacted in 1877. Would not the argument of my hon. friend put the position of Manitoba and of the Territories on the same basis in regard to that question? Since the government of Canada in 1870, when they created the province of Manitoba, enacted a special clause providing that the French language should be an official language, would it not be our duty to-day, for the very same reason, since we are creating these two new provinces, to do the very same thing, as far as the language is concerned, as was done in regard to the province of Manitoba in 1870?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, because in the case of Manitoba, there was a treaty or Bill of Rights. That Bill of Rights was adhered to by the high contracting parties, whereas, in the Northwest Territories, there was no such thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend the Solicitor General remember that my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, in the speech which he delivered upon this Bill, put forward——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not remember that speech.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will read it to my hon. friend.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Several speeches have been delivered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend would be attracted by the speech of his colleague as his colleague took the exact opposite of the position which he has taken to-day. I have under my hand the argument of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue who bases the right of the minority in the Northwest Territories to separate schools upon the very Bill of Rights that the Solicitor General says does not extend to these Territories at all. Does my hon. friend want me to read it to him?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I remember it now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This was the argument not only of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, but of at least half a dozen other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. It was that the Act of 1875 was a legislative compact based upon the so called treaty of 1870 and that that treaty extended not only to Manitoba, but to the Northwest Territories. Now, when it is convenient for the government to take the other position, my hon. friend the Solicitor General stands up while the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue prudently remains in his seat and takes exactly the opposite position to that which was put forward by the government only a few weeks ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. We might perhaps settle the question by finding out what the views of the hon. gentleman are upon this question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will tell the hon. minister what my views are. I have taken the position, but there is no legislative compact or compact of any kind and I have stood by that. I have never argued when convenient that there is a compact and where it is otherwise that there is no compact, and I do not propose to do that. I say that if the Bill of Rights constitutes a compact, then the Act of 1877 based upon it is as binding upon this parliament as the Act of 1875 is binding upon it. That is my position and I would like the hon. minister to define his position now. He does not seem to be very anxious to do so.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, I will speak.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue and I do not agree on a question of history, I find myself in very good company, because the hon. leader of the opposition stands by me and says there was no compact prior to 1870. Therefore, that destroys the argument of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier upon this question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I must deny myself the compliment of saying that I stand with my hon. friend the Solicitor General. I stand in the same position in regard to both matters, whereas, my hon. friend the Solicitor General stands in one position in regard to one and in exactly the opposite position in regard to the other.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would not like to stand very long with my hon. friend because if so we would have to fall together. But it would be more practical on the part of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, instead of agitating for rights that do not exist except in his own imagination, to agitate on behalf of 200,000 French Canadians who live in the province of Ontario. But, he will not do that because it would be an attack upon the constitution which this country gave itself in 1867. As my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said the other day in this House, the French Canadians of Quebec will not ask for more than they are entitled to, and under the present circumstances I say to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier that he is rendering no service to his fellow citizens of the province of Quebec by trying to arouse the feelings of the people over this vexed question.

Mr. MONK. I would like my hon. friend to quote some words or speech or something which would show that I have any intention of agitating or that I ever have agitated.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The fact of bringing up this motion.

Mr. MONK. Is a man agitating the province because he brings up a legitimate subject of inquiry such as this ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The very fact of bringing up this motion is the beginning of another agitation in the province of Quebec, because, in that province, we have two apostles, one, the apostle of denominational schools, my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and the other the apostle of the French language, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). It is a holy alliance and I hope it will be blessed, but I fear it will not be blessed by the electorate. Now, I shall read the figures which I have here in order that I may have the opportunity of quoting them when we shall meet these two hon. gentlemen before our own people. The figures which I hold in my hands show conclusively how few French Canadians there are in the west. What is the population of the French Canadians in the Northwest Territories ? I have here the official figures.

Mr. MONK. For what year ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. For the year 1891.

An hon. MEMBER. 1901.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will begin with 1891, the year after the McCarthy Bill came up in the House. At that time the total population of the Northwest Territories was 66,799. The French Canadians only numbered 1,543, a little more than two per cent of the total population. In 1901 the total population, according to the census of that year, was 158,940. The French population numbered 7,040, a little more than four per cent ; the German population 19,572, more than twelve per cent ; the Scandinavian, 5,390 ; the Russians 17,050, more than ten per cent; the Austro-Hungarian 6,407, a little more than four per cent. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we would be asking a special privilege for the French Canadian element in the Northwest Territories when at the present time, they are not even five per cent of the total population, when they have no guarantee, when there is no treaty, no covenant, no right whatsoever to that special privilege. Under these circumstances, I say it again the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is not rendering a service to his fellow countrymen in the Northwest Territories ; he is simply trying to catch a few votes in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. Where did the Solicitor General get his figures as to the French population. I have here the census of 1901, and the figures seem to differ from his.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have the figures given me by Mr. Blue, census commissioner.

Mr. SPROULE. According to the census report there would appear to be only 246 French in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I suppose that would mean the French people from France.

Mr. SPROULE. It is in the column under the heading 'French,' and I find no column giving the French Canadians.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have here a statement showing the population of the Northwest Territories in 1901, in the electoral districts of Alberta and Saskatchewan classed as French and all other races, together with their percentages. I would ask the permission of the House to have it published in 'Hansard.'

I may summarize it by saying that the total population of the Northwest Territories according to the census of 1901, is 158,940. British, 74,870; French, 7,040. The British is 47 per cent of the whole. Then come the Germans with 19,572, the Russians, 17,051, and then all others, which I suppose include all Indians and half-breeds, 28,610, or 18 per cent of the total population.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose the British population referred to there would mean all Canadians.

Mr. BRODEUR. No; only English, Scotch and Irish.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the French Canadians ?

Mr. SPROULE. There would seem to be only 7,040 French Canadians according to this book.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that mean French Canadians or French coming from France.

Mr. FISHER. Both together.

Mr. BERGERON. Then why do you class French Canadians with the French, instead of classing them as British ?

Mr. FISHER. Because that statement is given according to origin.

Mr. BERGERON. The proper classification should be 'British.' The French Canadians of this country are Britishers. The entry is in the census report but it is not proper. There are a good many old country French people in the Northwest Territories and there are some districts settled by them. These are French, but when you come to classify the French Canadians you should put them in with the Irish, Scotch and England, as British subjects.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should you class with people coming from foreign countries, the French Canadians whose ancestors have been living in this country for 250 years?

Mr. FISHER. Because the tables are divided according to the origin and not according to the place of birth.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not approve of that.

Mr. FISHER. That may be.

Mr. BERGERON. It is my opinion that that classification of the French Canadians is not a proper classification. I protest against it. The French Canadians in this country are Britishers in the complete sense of the word. The ancestors of most of the French Canadians in Quebec have been here for 250 years, and how can you call me a Frenchman. I am entirely a Canadian, and I wish to be classed as a Canadian. It is misleading to say that the French Canadians are French.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will relieve the mind of my hon. friend at once. There are two tables in the census report, and in one table is given the nationality and that was read by my hon. friend from East Grey, and it led to his making the mistake he did. There are in the Northwest Territories only 246 of French nationality, but there is another column giving the origin of the people, and that gives different figures of course.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a different thing, but it is not the answer of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. One table gives the race origin and the other table gives the place of birth.

Mr. BERGERON. A stranger looking at the statistics of this census report would immediately want to know where the French Canadians are.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Here they are.

Mr. BERGERON. Where ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are under the heading giving the nationality.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am very pleased to hear my hon. friend from Beauharnois say that he is a Britisher to the core, because I remember that some years ago when the Prime Minister went to England and declared in a speech that he was a Britisher to the core, my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) and his political friends and the papers published by the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, tried to fasten a crime on the right hon. gentleman because he had used that expression. I have heard my hon. friend himself in his own county stating: Sir Wilfrid Laurier is not one of us, see what he said in England; British to the core; he has renounced the nationality of his ancestors. And that can be read every day in 'Le L'Evenment' of Quebec, a paper published by the Conservative party.

Mr. BERGERON. It is very easy for the Solicitor General to make a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down. He has attributed words to me that I did not use. I did not say I was British to the core; I said I was a British subject. I live under the British flag and you cannot class me as anything else than British. If you call me a Canadian then it is all right. That is the title I am most proud of, but if in the columns of nationality you class me as French, then it must mean that I am old country French, and that is not a correct description.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. How far does your British go in if it does not go to the core.

Mr. BERGERON. I am answering my hon. friend the Solicitor General now, and I will answer you by-and-by. The Solicitor General says that I denounced the Prime Minister because he stated that he was British to the core. The Solicitor General never heard me make such an accusation in my life. When I go on the public platform I do not indulge in any such smallness as that. I have heard it said, and it has been published in the newspapers, but I have not said it. What do I care whether he is British to the core or not? My statement here is that I am a British subject and I do not want to be classified as if I were a Frenchman from old France. It is not that I do not respect the French, I am proud of my French origin, but I do say that if you describe the French Canadians as French in a census report, then you are not giving a correct description of men whose ancestors have been living in this country for 250 years. I am a British subject and a Canadian and should be classed as such. I am proud to be a descendant of the French race but I am Canadian first.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) Is the hon. member for Beauharnois ashamed to claim his French ancestry?

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman understands English—

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) Oh! I understand it thoroughly.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Then he must know that I am just after stating in English that I am not ashamed to own up to my French origin. But I don't see why I should be classed among the French in the census reports.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) The Census gives the origin of every race of population.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) I contend that the classification is misleading. When a stranger looks over our statistics and beholds a race of population under the heading of French, he is led to believe that they are French emigrants, while they are Canadians whose ancestors came to settle in this country over two centuries ago

Mr. BOURASSA. I rise to a point of order. This discussion is entirely outside of the clause before the committee.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In view of the fact that the constitution confers no rights in regard to the use of the French language and that a very small French population inhabits the Northwest Territories, I do not think the motion of my hon. friend should be accepted. Not that I am against the dual system; not that I am against the use of the French language; not that I would not be very happy to see the legislature of the Northwest Territories adopt the French language as one of the official languages; but because I know that it is perfectly useless to ask for more than is contained within the four corners of the constitution. Now, Sir, after the legislature of the Northwest Territories had abolished the French language in 1892, no further action was taken by the parliament of Canada. The parliament of Canada, by adopting the amendment of Sir John Thompson, had pledged itself to confer the principle of local autonomy in the Northwest Territories with regard to the dual system. In those days the leaders representing more especially the French Canadian population—the Hon. Sir Hector Langevin, the Hon. Sir Adolphe Chapleau and the Hon. Sir Adolphe Caron—who had seats in this House, never raised their voice to restore the use of the French language in the Northwest assembly, because at that time there was not one French Canadian member in that assembly, and to-day I believe there are only two, Mr. Prince and Mr. Lambert. I have the evidence of one of the most eminent judges of the Northwest Territories, who, though having an Irish name, is French Canadian at heart, Mr. Justice Prendergast, to the effect that the French language has never been used to his knowledge before the courts of the Territories. I said a moment ago that the Conservative party in 1892 had not moved in the matter at all, although letters and other documents had been sent to Ottawa on the subject. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) must remember a letter of Monseigneur Grandin to the other bishops of Canada, which was sent to the Ottawa government in 1889. In that letter Monseigneur Grandin declared that the federal government was responsible for the persecution arising from the suppression of the separate school system and of the French language in the schools. I also find in the votes and proceedings of 1890 that Mr. Amyot asked the government:

> Whether they are aware that the following letter has been addressed by His Grace Monseigneur Grandin to persons occupying a high position in the province of Quebec?

The letter he referred to was the letter of Monseigneur Grandin in which he accused the Conservative government of the day of having favoured the abolition of the French language and the abolition of the separate school system. And yet my hon. friend from Beauharnois did not say a word in protest.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the answer to that? There was an answer?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. BERGERON. What page is that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Page 34 of the Votes and Proceedings of 1890. It is well known that no answer was made by the government.

Mr. BERGERON. That was only a notice of motion? If there was an answer it would be in 'Hansard'?

Mr. LEMIEUX. At all events, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier comes before the House with the present motion in order to redress a grievance.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend has said that several times. I am not asking to redress a grievance. I am asking for the maintenance of the law as it exists to-day in the Territories.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is not serious—the law of 1877 ?

Mr. MONK. The law as it exists to-day in the Territories.

Mr. BRODEUR. The French language was abolished in 1892.

Mr. MONK. How can my hon. friend say that when he knows this is not the case. The proceedings of the legislative assembly may be held in English but does my hon. friend mean to say that the use of the French language in the courts and elsewhere as provided by the statute is not in force?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will answer my hon. friend. The British North America Act section 33, is as follows:

> Either English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the legislature of Quebec ; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec. The Acts of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those languages.

There is nothing else in the British North America Act concerning the language or concerning the records or proceedings in the courts of Canada.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend who is an able lawyer knows perfectly well that that article is not the article we are discussing here. We are discussing a law at present in force in the Northwest Territories which is going to remain in force after the provinces are erected and in existence. We are discussing that law which is in force to-day. I am not asking the remedy of a grievance, I am asking for a constitutional provision in the new provincial charter for the maintenance of what exists.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does my hon. friend refer to that law passed by this parliament in 1877?

Mr. MONK. Yes, section 110 of the revised statutes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is not serious, he cannot be serious. He knows perfectly well that this parliament in 1890 at the suggestion of Sir John Thompson gave to the legislature of the Northwest Territories the right to abolish the dual system and it was so abolished in the session of 1892. Therefore it does not exist to-day.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend must really pardon me, we must make this clear. This is the law to-day, section 110 revised statutes:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the council of legislative assembly of the Territories and in the proceedings before the courts; and both those languages shall be used in the records and journals of the said council or assembly; and all ordinances made under this Act shall be printed in both those languages.

The assembly has acted under that law but does my hon. friend say that the legislative assembly having decided that its proceedings should be in English, the use of the French language is totally abolished in the Northwest Territories? Is that what my hon. friend contends?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I told my hon. friend a few moments ago that the opinion given by Sir John Macdonald, was that even if the legislature of the Northwest Territories would abolish the dual system as regards the proceedings of the courts such ordinance of the legislative assembly would be illegal and could be disallowed. Sir John Macdonald relied on section 133 of the British North America Act in saying that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reasons may be as the hon. gentleman stated, but I have looked into this somewhat carefully and I arrived at the conclusion that the Act of 1877 was modified only in one respect by what took place in 1890-92, namely, that the legislature of the Northwest Territories was given authority, by resolution or otherwise, to regulate its proceedings and pursuant to that the legislature of the Northwest Territories abolished the use of the French language in its proceedings and in the recording of its resolutions. Apart from that the Act of 1877 is as much in force in the Northwest Territories to-day as it ever has been.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The effect of the ordinance applies to the use of the language in the legislative assembly, but not in the courts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I shall conclude by saying that the motion of the hon. gentleman was presented by him not with the hope that it would be adopted but with the expectation that it would create some agitation in our province.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think that my hon. friend has said anything which will necessitate my taking up much of the time of the House in reply. He was simply trying to make political capital out of this question by saying that we on this side, in introducing the amendments which we believe are proper, are trying to create an agitation in Quebec. My hon. friends are afraid of that agitation in Quebec. They remember what they did in 1896 and think that we are going to do the same thing. My hon. friend spoke about the caucus. To show him that he was wrong there I may state that we had no understanding with the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) and yet we happen to be side by side on this question. That shows that we may be on the same platform without caucus or understanding. My hon. friend at the conclusion of his speech showed that he wanted to make political capital out of this when he spoke about the petition brought into this House by Mr. Amyot in 1890. Mr. Amyot at that time was opposed to the government, he was a Liberal and was trying to embarrass the government and brought in the petition referred to. I asked if there was an answer. My hon. friend said: No, I do not see any. This is a long petition covering about two columns and a half which Mr. Amyot read in the House in the effort to show that the Roman Catholics in the Northwest Territories were illtreated and that petition was signed by Bishop Grandin. That the petition was brought into the House on June 29, 1890. I shall read the answer of Sir John Macdonald:

Sir JOHN MACDONALD. The government have not received the letter set out in the question or any copy of it. I have been informed that it appeared without signature in the Montreal 'Witness.'

Another agitator, I suppose, according to my hon. friend:

I would simply say that the letter has never come before the government except in the manner I have mentioned. The government will attend to the complaints of Monseigneur Grandin and those of any other person, clergyman or person in Canada who has any complaint to make.

My hon. friend says to me: Did my hon. friend get up in his place to answer the letter? Could I give a better answer than the one given by the Prime Minister of Canada at that time? The whole speech of my hon. friend has about the same value as that. What a difference it makes to be on this side of the House! What a powerful address my hon. friend would have made if he had been on this side of the House, knowing him as I do and knowing his propensities in that line. He is bound to defend something in which he has no confidence, to work against his own heart and that explains probably why his defence is so weak. If he had listened to the Minister of Inland Revenue he would have known that the position taken by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is equally logical according to the opinion of a member of the government. I shall not read that opinion, it will be found at pages 5408 to 5410 of 'Hansard.' He will find there all the reasons which can be adduced to show that the French Canadians of the Northwest Territories according to the covenants or to the promises made to the people of Rupert's Land, that is the land where we are to-day trying to found two provinces.

You may play on the words as much as you like, but you cannot come to any other conclusion than that the French Canadians who are to-day in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are the men, or the descendants of the men, to whom were made these promises of the free use of their language and separate schools. Now, my hon. friend thought that he was making a great point when he spoke about my vote on the motion of Sir John Thompson. He was trying to make a hustings speech, otherwise he would have gone on to say that a few days before I had voted for the motion of Mr. Beausoleil. Since he wanted to criticise me for one vote, he should have complimented me for another vote that I gave on that occasion. But he only drew attention to the vote taken on the 21st of February, 1890, and he said that the member for Beauharnois had voted for the motion of Sir John Thompson. Certainly I did, and I am proud of it; I voted in good company, I voted with 37 other French Canadians from the province of Quebec; I voted with Liberals as well as Conservatives; I even voted with my right hon. friend; I voted with nearly all those who are to-day in the cabinet. Who voted against me? Some of the noble thirteen who had voted against the Jesuits' Estates Act, Mr. Charlton, Mr. McCarthy, Mr. McNeill, Mr. Tyrwhitt, Mr. Scriver, Mr. Weldon, of Albert. Those were great apostles in favour of the French Canadians. I voted against those men. I only mention this in answer to my hon. friend who, instead of replying to the logical argument I made, is trying to make political capital. When this session is over these hon. gentlemen will go around the country and say what they please. I am glad to be able to discuss that subject in parliament rather than on the hustings, because here they are obliged to keep within bounds; they cannot say anything they like, but on the stump they can say anything they like, and we are obliged to submit to it.

Mr. BELCOURT. A great compliment to the electors of the hon. gentleman's province.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a very unfortunate state of things. But we may have some more discussion on this question before the end of the session.

Mr. BELCOURT. As a French Canadian I object to such a slur being cast upon the people of the province of Quebec, as that anybody can go among them and say anything he likes, to pass beyond bounds, and that one can do that from one end of the province to the other. I am very much surprised to hear my hon. friend cast such a slur upon his own countrymen.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is trying to play the same game. The committee understands what I mean. But on the whole it is true, that in the province of Quebec these gentlemen can go on the stump anywhere and say what they please, and we have to listen to it and to submit to it. But when they find themselves brought up sharp then as a last resort, they bring in the name of the right hon. premier, and then it is all up with us, and we have to sit down.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before this motion is disposed of, I think it is due to the House that I should give reasons why it cannot be accepted by the government. I venture to express the opinion that when, in a few years from this, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) reviews the events of this day, he will have no cause to rejoice or feel proud of the position he has assumed. The motion he has made, in my estimation, cannot be defended in any way, either on the ground of constitutional rights or usefulness to the race to which he and I belong? The object of this motion is to limit the right of the new provinces in the matter of language and to do for the French language what we have done for the schools. This proposed legislation would crystallize the use of the French language in the provinces, to a large extent at all events, if not absolutely. There is great difference, my hon. friend will admit, between the position given to the French language under the constitution and that given to the schools. My hon. friend has not attempted this afternoon to base his motion upon anything that can be found in the British North America Act. That Act expressly leaves the subject of language to the legislatures, with two exceptions only, namely, the Quebec legislature and this parliament. Section 133 is in these words:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec. The Acts of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those languages.

The very fact that here the French and English languages are made the official languages in the Dominion parliament and the Quebec legislature, necessarily excludes the other provinces from that provision, and leaves that subject to be dealt with by them as they may see fit in the best interests of the public. With regard to the schools, the matter is very different. There is no use discussing again the provision of the law in that respect, because we have been discussing it for months. But let me repeat, for the purpose of this debate, that the law says in, so many words, that where a separate school system is found to exist in any of the provinces admitted into the union, that system must be perpetuated and be given the privileges provided in section 93. No such privilege, however, exists for the use either of the English or French or any language, in any section of the British North America Act, and I did not understand my hon. friend even to attempt to pretend that the constitutional right which he claims for the French language in the Territories is to be found in the four corners of the British North America Act. Therefore let any such contention as this be discarded. There is nothing in the British North America Act to support the motion made by my hon. friend. Where then is the constitutional right invoked by my hon. friend? He finds it in the Bill of Rights which was presented by the delegates of the Red River colony, when they came to Ottawa in 1870, after the important events of the year before in that distant part of the country. The delegates who came to Ottawa, in my judgment—and I submit it as a fact which belongs to history—did not represent the whole people of Rupert's Land. They represented simply a portion of the people of Rupert's Land. No doubt they claimed to represent the whole people—the people not only of Red River colony, but also of Rupert's Land. It is easy to show in any public document that the people of such and such a place profess to represent the whole country just as the three tailors of Tooley Street said: 'We the people of England.' It was easy for the delegates to say: 'We represent the people of Rupert's Land'; but there was superabundant reason why they could not represent the whole people of that section of country. They represented only the people of the Red River valley, because—and I submit this also as a matter of history—there were no white people then except in the valley of the Red River. There were no white people in the valley of the Saskatchewan. I doubt even if there were any, except a few isolated individuals, anywhere else outside of the valley of the Red River. Outside of that valley, I submit with all deference—and I do not think my statement in that respect will be contradicted—there were no actual settlers. But it matters not who are the people who were represented at that time; it matters not whether they were the whole people of Rupert's Land or only the people of Red River colony. In the view of subsequent events, that matter was of little importance. I admit however that when they came here, they came as delegates professing to be the delegates from Rupert's Land; and they claimed for themselves at that time their right to separate schools and the use of the French language as an official language.

They claimed to be delegates for the whole territory of Rupert's Land. Whether they were the delegates of one portion of Rupert's Land only, or whether they were the delegates of the whole of Rupert's Land I am not prepared to say, but I am prepared to admit for the purposes of argument that they represented the whole of the people of Rupert's Land, and they claimed for the whole people of Rupert's Land, as they stated at all events, in the petitions which have been presented to this parliament, the French language and separate schools. Let there be no ambiguity. Let us state the facts exactly because if we do we always, under any circumstances, come to a better understanding. If their petition as presented had been adopted, the argument made to-day by my hon. friend would have been conclusive. It would have been paramount, but I may say to my hon. friend that the petition which was presented on that occasion for the whole people of Rupert's Land was not accepted by this parliament. That is a point which has been forgotten by my hon. friend and we have only to refer to the case to make it very plain. Here is the Bill of Rights. There have been several Bills of Rights, but it is not at all a point of any importance in this debate to ascertain which was the true Bill of Rights, whether it was the first, or the second, or the third or the fourth. I think there is very little use of going into this debate because all the Bills of Rights were practically the same and differed only in a very few and minor details. This is the Bill of Rights that was quoted here this afternoon by my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. What is my hon. friend reading from ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am reading from Mr. Ewart's book, page 365. I am reading from Bills of Rights Numbers 3 and 4. Number 4 :

That the Territory of the Northwest enter into the confederation of the Dominion of Canada as a province, with all the privileges common with all the different provinces in the Dominion.

Number 3 :

That the Territories heretofore known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest shall not enter into the confederation, except as a province, to be styled and known as the province of Assiniboia, with all the rights and privileges common to the different provinces of the Dominion.

Between these two Bills of Rights there is very little difference. One asks that the whole of the Territories known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest shall enter into the confederation as a province to be styled the province of Assiniboia. The other does not say the territory known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest, but it says :

That the Territory of the Northwest enter into the confederation of the Dominion of Canada as a province, with all the privileges common with the different provinces in the Dominion.

It is a matter of history so well known that it is useless and vain for me to refer to it that the prayer of this petition was not granted. It was not the whole of the Northwest Territories or Rupert's Land which was admitted into the Dominion, but it was only a small portion of the territory and of Rupert's Land which was admitted into the Dominion and which became the province of Manitoba. When a petition of that kind is presented and is accepted in part it follows as a consequence, that what is not granted is rejected and therefore if the petition which was presented by the representatives of the whole of the people of the Northwest and Rupert's Land, if they can be said to have had representatives, had been accepted not for a portion of the Northwest, not for a portion of Rupert's Land, but for the whole of the Northwest and for the whole of Rupert's Land, it having been presented to cover the whole extent of what is to-day Manitoba, of what will be to-morrow Saskatchewan, of what will be to-morrow Alberta, what is still Mackenzie and a part of Keewatin, if not all, there would have been something in the argument of my hon. friend, but if under such circumstances, when a broad petition of that kind was presented, it was not accepted, but accepted only in part it follows that the concession made as to the schools and as to the French language was restricted simply to the province of Manitoba where it was granted. This seems to be so clear as not to be susceptible of any controversy. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and my hon. friend from Beauharnois have agreed that the petition was granted for the whole of the Territories.

Mr. BERGERON. Upon what does my right hon. friend rely when he says that it was not granted. I do not see it here.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will not see it there, but I say this to my hon. friend : The delegates from Rupert's Land and the Northwest ask that the French language and the separate schools shall be granted in the province which was to cover the whole of Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories. What is Rupert's Land ? Rupert's Land is all the territory which is washed by the waters which flow into Hudson Bay and Hudson straits. It is a very large territory. What is the Northwest ? It is all the territory which was not included in Rupert's Land and therefore the whole of the territory which the delegates asked to be included in one province was Rupert's Land, which comprised part of Keewatin, part of Manitoba, the whole of Saskatchewan, the whole of Alberta and part of Mackenzie. Mackenzie which was washed by the waters of Mackenzie river was the Northwest Territories. It was asked that the whole of this territory should be organized into one province. The prayer of the petition was not granted. It was restricted to the province of Manitoba and therefore my hon. friend will not find it here, but if he refers to the Manitoba Act he will find that the province of Manitoba was organized on the petition of these delegates but not organized as they had asked it. The new province was confined to a very small portion of that which they had asked to be organized into a province and in which they had asked for the right to use the French language and to establish separate schools. Therefore, it is useless to say that the French language has been introduced into the Northwest, Rupert's Land, Mackenzie and Saskatchewan.

Mr. MONK. My right hon. friend will allow me to observe that the petition was granted as far as the Northwest Territories was concerned by the legislation which subsequently followed.

Mr. BERGERON. In 1877.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nothing of the kind. I have only to refer to the petition. What is the petition ?

> That the Territories heretofore known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest shall not enter into the confederation, except as a province, to be styled and known as the province of Assiniboia, and with all the rights and privileges common to the different provinces of the Dominion.

All these Territories were not introduced as a province. Only the province of Manitoba was introduced as a province and therefore the petition of the delegates was not taken into consideration. I can imagine what was the answer made by Sir George Cartier and Sir John Macdonald to the delegates : You are asking too much altogether. Here, you have just a handful of people in the Northwest Territories, you have a mere fraction of population upon the banks of the Red river near Fort Garry, and you are asking to have a whole province established at once which would cover millions of acres of land. The petition has no sense; it cannot be granted. We will give you the province of Manitoba which will cover the Red River colony and as to the future we will keep that in reservation to deal with later on.

Mr. BERGERON. Were they deprived of their rights and privileges ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has argued that there is a constitutional compact. I admit there was a compact so far as Manitoba is concerned, but there was no compact with regard to Rupert's Land except Manitoba. Therefore the whole argument of my hon. friend is absolutely without foundation. It is true, that the parliament of Canada at that time would not accede to the petition on behalf of the people of the Northwest Territories, and eight years later, in 1875, when Mr. Mackenzie introduced the Act for the government of the Northwest Territories, a clause was introduced with regard to the schools, but that clause was introduced not as a result of this compact or of the petition of the delegates, but on the ground that it might avoid the difficulties which had taken place in other provinces, in regard to the education question. There was not a word as to the petition which had been presented in 1870 ; there was not a word said about the Bill of Rights; all that was said was: let us introduce a school clause as a matter of policy and to avoid the heart burnings and the friction and the bad blood which resulted elsewhere because separate schools were not granted. In the original law introduced by Mr. Mackenzie in 1875, there was not a single word about the language ; it referred only to the schools. Two years afterwards an amendment to that law was brought from this House to the Senate by Mr. Girard, then a member of the Senate, asking for the introduction of the French language into the Territories. Did Mr Girard base his case upon the ground laid down by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and the hon. member for Beauharnois ; did he base his case upon the ground of an agreement or a compact or a Bill of Rights ? No. Mr. Girard supported his case upon the ground of expediency, necessity and justice. Mr. Girard based his case on the fact that at that time there were as many French speaking people in the Territories as there were English speaking people. He said : I believe the French Canadians are just as numerous and more numerous than the English speaking people in the Northwest Territories and you cannot refuse us the use of our language. It was on that ground that the use of the French language was granted in 1877. It was not granted as the result of a compact or as a constitutional right, but simply as a concession to the inherent sentiments of justice.

Let me ask another question of my hon. friend. If there is one thing which ought to be held to be a right of the people of the province, it is that the French language should be used in the debates of the legislature and in the courts of justice. This proposition will not be denied, and in that respect the contention of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) cannot be maintained unless he can base his claim upon the ground of constitutional right. True, he has attempted to do so, but he has failed in his attempt to show that the French people in the Northwest Territories can claim the right of the use of their language upon any authority in the British North America Act or upon any reasons which are to be found in the history to which allusion has been made. If the French people of the Territories cannot claim this right upon any constitutional ground, upon what ground can they claim it? It is perhaps worthy of remark that although the French language exists to-day as an official language in the Northwest Territories in the courts of law, if I am correctly informed there has not been a single document in the French language entered in a court of justice there for the last fifteen years, nor a single word of French spoken in the courts. That is not to be wondered at when we remember that to-day the population of French origin in the Northwest Territories is almost infinitely small, not more than 4 per cent. If the French people in the Territories were in the same position to-day as they were in 1877; if there were as many who speak the French language as there are who speak the English language, then I could understand my hon. friend arguing from the point of view of utility and sentiment. But, if it be true that according to the last census there were altogether 200,000 people in the Northwest Territories, and only 8,000 of them who spoke the French language, then I say it cannot be argued in the name of justice that they have the right to the official use of that language. For my part, proud as I am of my French origin, I could not claim in the name of justice and fair-play that right, in view of the fact that there is such a small proportion of French-speaking people in those Territories. Indeed, if we look at the statistics, there would be more justice for the French Canadians in the state of Massachusetts to claim the right to use their language in the legislature at Boston, because the number of French Canadians in Massachusetts is greater in proportion to the total population, than is the number of French-speaking people in the Northwest Territories to the total population there. In 1877 it was said that there were as many who spoke the French language as there were who spoke the English language in the Northwest Territories. Thirty years after, in 1890, Mr. Dalton McCarthy proposed to abolish the French language in these Territories. It was felt at that time that it was not fair to ask for the passage of such a law. Members on both sides of the House agreed—I was one of them, my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) was one of them, Sir John Macdonald was one of them, Sir John Thompson was one of them, Mr. Blake was one of them; the entire House of Commons with the exception of a small minority agreed to the proposition that the legislature of the Northwest Territories, which under the law of 1877 had not the power to deal with the French language, should have that power. Now, this is the resolution of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the legislative assembly of the province and in the proceedings of the courts, and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of such assembly, and all laws made by the legislature shall be printed in both languages; provided, however, that the said legislative assembly may by law or otherwise regulate its proceedings and the manner of recording and publishing the same, and the regulations so made shall be embodied in a proclamation which shall be forthwith made and published by the Lieutenant Governor, in conformity of the law, and thereafter shall have full force and effect.

That is the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) and it is word for word the resolution passed by this parliament in 1890 for which I voted in common with my hon. friend from Beauharnois. It did not happen very often in those days; it does not happen very often now, that my hon. friend from Beauharnois and I vote together, so that it must have been a good cause which united us on that occasion.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope it will be the same thing to-night.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I hope also it will be the same thing.

Mr. BERGERON. I will vote for the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And if my hon. friend is fair as he was in 1890 he will vote with me on this occasion as he voted with me then.

Mr. BERGERON. It is the same motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is the same motion and the circumstances are similar, and when I explain the matter my hon. friend will be welcome afterwards to say how he will vote. What did I vote for on that occasion, and what did my hon. friend vote for? He voted that the legislature should have the power to deal with the French language in the debates of the legislature, either to adopt or to abolish it. Is my hon. friend to-day less disposed to give that power to the new provinces than he was to give it to the legislature of the Territories in 1890? In 1890 my hon. friend and I agreed to give to the Territories the privilege of dealing with the language in everything except in the courts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the printing of the ordinances.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The printing of the ordinances was treated differently, more as a matter of convenience than anything else. But these things are in the past. Thirteen years have elapsed since then; and when a few days ago I saw the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and I remembered that in 1890 we had given to the legislature of the Northwest Territories the privilege of dealing with the French language in the debates of the legislature and had not given that same privilege in the courts, I asked myself what was the reason for that.

Mr. MONK. There is a reason given in the debates.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the reason given?

Mr. MONK. It is proper that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories should have the right to regulate its proceedings for its own convenience.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the reason parliament did not give the legislature the power to deal with the language in the courts?

Mr. MONK. There may be some new reason.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, there is a very old and simple one. I have not had time to look at the debates, but I think my memory serves me. It was because the courts of law were then, as they are to-day, under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and not under the jurisdiction of the territorial legislature; and therefore, according to the terms of section 133 of the British North America Act, in all courts organized by the parliament of Canada the two languages are official. That was the reason we could not leave to the legislature the power to deal with the language in the courts. Let me quote the section again:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act.

The courts of the Northwest Territories were established under this Act, and therefore the parliament of Canada had not the power to abolish the use of the French language in those courts. When those courts shall have become provincial, we shall no longer have jurisdiction over them, and therefore the legislature will have the right to deal with the language in the courts as well as in the legislature. That is the way I understand the question. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier quoted from the remarks I made on that occasion; and, if I understand his motive in doing so, I do not think it was served by that quotation. If he reads that speech again he will not find in it an argument in favour of his motion. My hon. friend thought he would find me at fault, but I do not think he has done so. I beg pardon of the House if I take the liberty of quoting once more my own language on that occasion:

> It is impossible to admit, for instance, that the institutions of the Northwest are permanent. On the contrary, they are exceptionally temporary; they deal with a state of things which is exceptional in itself; they were devised at a time when there was no population, and they must be modified from time to time as the necessities of the case require. But at this moment to say they are permanent, is a thing in which I cannot agree, except so far as they must be permanent in every particular, so long as we are not ready to give these people a more extended form of local authority. My hon. friend also says in this amendment, that since we passed this law and gave this incipient constitution to the Northwest Territories, nothing has occurred to change our views. I cannot agree with that. Everything has occurred since that time, not to change our views, but to set us thinking about what we should do at a future time, not very far off, in regard to these Territories. What has occurred is this: a population has gone into these Territories; they have been given a legislature; and that legislature has demanded certain measures—not only on the question of language, but on that of the schools, and on the system of government. Bearing these facts in mind, it seems to me that the proper time to deal with this question will be when we are prepared to give the Territories, perhaps not absolute, but a more extended form of local self-government; and when that time comes, we must be prepared to deal with this question upon the broad principle of this constitution, which has been devised for the safety of the majority and the protection of the minority, and in the light of the condition of things which may exist at that time in the Territories.

I suppose my hon. friend, when he read these words of mine, laid particular emphasis on the last sentence. Well, Sir, I take the same ground to-day. I am prepared to deal with this question on the broad principle of the constitution, which has devised rules and regulations for the protection of minorities. Has anything been done in this constitution for the language of any minority in any province? Nothing at all. The fathers of confederation did not pretend to authorize the French language in any part of the Dominion except in this parliament and in the province of Quebec. Everywhere else the people were left free to deal with the matter as they thought fit. Not so with regard to the schools. As to them the minority were given special protection by the Acts I have quoted. The legislature of that day, composed of men whom we still delight to call the fathers of confederation, put into the constitution principles and regulations for the protection of the minority in its religion, but not in its language. Sir, I have to say this only to my fellow-countrymen. I know very well what will be said to-morrow in the province of Quebec. I anticipate the language which I shall hear in a few days—that I have gone back upon my race. I have heard that before, and I am prepared to hear it again.

I have done the best I could in order to give to the minority in those Territories the rights to which they are entitled under the constitution and my first words to my fellow countrymen in Quebec will be, if they continue in me that confidence which my hon. friend said to-day they had in me, I will tell them that upon this occasion as on all occasions I have stood for their protection in the rights given to them by the constitution. But, Sir, I find nothing in the constitution for the protection of the rights of the French language. It is a right which they must exercise like everybody else and if they become strong they shall be respected and they shall have their language respected but not if they are a minority, as they are to-day, for I understand there are only two members of the French race in the legislature of the Territories out of twenty-five, not a word of French is ever heard in the courts of law because I am happy to say the French do not go to the courts of law and do not require to use their language there. On what principle or what language can it be said that the French people in the Northwest Territories have a right to the privilege of having that language implanted in the constitution, that their language shall be there for ever. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) this afternoon asked a question as to whether parliament had not the right to implant the French language in the new province. Sir, I answer to my hon. friend that I do not recognize that parliament has that right to implant the French language in those new Territories. Parliament may have the power to do so, but I deny that it has the right. Parliament has the power to do everything, but I deprecate the day when the French people of this country shall ask parliament to anything that they have the power to do if they have not at the same time the right to do it. These are the reasons for which I ask that this motion shall not be granted. These are the reasons why I say in the presence of friends and foes, in the hearing of the people in all parts of Canada and especially in the province of Quebec, that if we should grant this motion we would be granting the worst measure that could be granted for the protection even of the very people whom it intends to serve.

Mr. BOURASSA. I need not say that the Prime Minister has made a case upon this question which goes far beyond in convincing power the one made this afternoon by the Sollicitor general. However, one who is anxious of giving on this question a conscientious vote may feel very much embarrassed, when coming to consider the basis of right upon which this legislation is based, to find out that out of our four members of the government, three members of the cabinet and the Solicitor General, there has been complete disagreement between them all as to the basis of right of this legislation. On the 2nd of May the Minister of Inland Revenue made a full and to my mind a convincing argument that one of the strongest reasons why this parliament should secure separate schools to the minority in the Northwest was that those separate schools had been promised to the delegates of Rupert's Land in 1870 by the federal government. He quoted the documents, he gave the evidence and he added these words :

> So, Mr. Speaker, there was a formal agreement, a formal compact by which these rights and privileges should continue to be exercised by the Protestants and Catholics of the Northwest. There is no doubt about that. And now that we are called upon to give autonomy to the Northwest Territories, some elements in this country would have the government and parliament not carry out the promise which was made to the minority by the imperial government, by the Canadian government and by Lord Strathcona. Sir, the government of this country will not commit such an injustice ; they will not go back on the promise which was made in 1869-70. The government of this country will give the minority their rights which were guaranteed to them by the promise then made, the rights which they enjoy under the constitution.

And those words were applied by the Minister of Inland Revenue to prove that article 7 of the Bill of Rights constituted a solemn pledge upon the conscience of this parliament. If article 7 is covered in that agreement how is it now that we are told there is no such pledge, that there is no such agreement, that that Bill of Rights meant nothing as far as the preservation of the language of the minority is concerned. It is either one or the other, either the Bill of Rights meant something and then the whole Bill of Rights meant something, either clause 7 covering separate schools was guaranteed by this parliament or not. We have been told by the Minister of Inland Revenue, and it has been intimated by the Minister of Justice on the 2nd of May when he quoted one of the despatches of Lord Granville with reference to the same agitation, with reference to the same stipulation and agreement, that the beginning of the engagement taken by this parliament was the pledge given by the government of Canada ratified by the parliament of Canada to those very delegates of Rupert's Land who the right hon. gentleman says now had no right to stipulate with these persons.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Simply for the accuracy of debate would the hon. gentleman be good enough to point out those words in anything I said.

Mr. BOURASSA. I simply said that the hon. gentleman quoted that as one of the proofs, I did not say that he had stated that; I said he intimated it because he quoted it as one source of engagement on the school question. His words were:

> The imperial authorities of that day, to their credit be it said, faithful to the traditions of the imperial parliament, the mother of parliaments, the parliament of that people who have always held sacred their covenants, acting through their representative, Lord Granville, sent to the Governor General of Canada a cablegram on the 5th of March, 1870, which reads as follows:
> The proposed military assistance will be given if reasonable terms are given to the Roman Catholic settlers, and if Canadian government enable Her Majesty's government to proclaim transfer simultaneous with movement of troops.

I have quoted the words of the Minister of Justice to prove that the whole of these negotiations which had in view the same insurrection, which covered the same lands, were concluded by the same pledge, the only one pledge based on the only one Bill of Rights, which pledge was invoked by the Minister of Justice as one of the reasons why there had been a compact made by this government and the former settlers of the Territories.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was never referred to once in the course of the debate on the Bill of Rights.

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. gentleman need not protest. I have not said that he made these statements. I said he quoted Earl Granville's despatch with reference to the pledges taken between this parliament and the settlers of the Northwest to prove that engagements had been made with those people. We were discussing the rights of those people with respect to separate schools and it was stated that we had to consider the despatches of the imperial government with respect to separate schools and to consider the moral obligations of the imperial government and the Canadian parliament. How is it now that such pledge should be left aside as it does not apply when it comes to another subject contained in the same petition, one of those subjects for which the same people came here and wanted the Dominion parliament to grant justice and to take a pledge in their favour? As far as the Minister of Inland Revenue is concerned there is no doubt whatever as to the construction he put upon the agreement which was made. This afternoon the Solicitor General made an address in which he said there was no compact whatever because Rupert's Land or the delegates from Rupert's Land spoke only for what now is termed Manitoba, which did not cover the rest of the Northwest Territories. I have brought the parliamentary documents here, the titles of the Hudson Bay Company, the imperial statute of 1867 and the Canadian statute of 1869, to prove to the hon. gentleman that he had forgotten to learn the first elements of the geographical condition of that country. The argument by the First Minister this evening spares me that trouble and completely destroys the argument of my hon. friend, the Solicitor General. The right hon. gentleman proves what should be known by everybody who has the most elementary notions of that country, that Rupert's Land included not only part of what is Manitoba, to-day, but a large section of the Territories. Further, in the statute of 1868, adopted previous to the Bill of Rights presented by the Northwest delegates, it is most clearly stated in the second clause:

> For the purpose of this Act the term Rupert's Land shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held by the said governor and company.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Has my hon. friend read clause 146 of the British North America Act, which says:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, on addresses from the Houses of parliament of Canada . . . to admit Rupert's Land and the Northwestern territory or either of them into the union.

According to that, Rupert's Land and the Territory are two different things.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is what I said, but a year later another imperial statute declared that, for the purposes of the union, Rupert's Land shall include that country and the whole of the Territories. As a matter of fact, Rupert's Land is named in the British North America Act, but it is defined in the letters patent granted by Charles the Second to the Hudson Company; and the limit of Manitoba, as created a province by this parliament in 1870, had nothing to do with the Rupert's Land as defined by the letters patent granted by Charles the Second two centuries previous. It was never imagined then that the parliament of Canada would subsequently carve a province out of that territory to be called Manitoba and set limits to it. As stated by the right hon. the First Minister this evening, and by the hon. the Minister of Justice on the second reading of the Bill, Rupert's Land formerly included all the territories whose waters flowed to Hudson bay; and after the company had secured their legal title to the occupation of those lands and the exercise of the prerogatives of government therein, they occupied, I may say by usurpation, the rest of the territory, and the British government informally acknowledged that occupation, so that when we had to deal with that company the British parliament had to pass an Act, which not only covered the country legally known as Rupert's Land, but the whole of the Territories.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must thank my hon. friend for this little lesson in geography. But if he would refer to the 'Hansard' of Monday last, he would see that I spoke of Riel and Bruce as representing the delegates of Rupert's Land, and speaking only of the colony of the Red River settlement.

Mr. BOURASSA. As stated by the First Minister a moment ago, the only permanent inhabitants, the only inhabitants who had settled in that country, were, most of them, settled along the Red river, but other establishments were made as far as Portage la Prairie. And if my hon. friend will refer to the debates that preceded the establishment of the province of Manitoba, he will find that there was a discussion in that parliament as to whether or not such portion of the territory as includes the Portage la Prairie district would be included in the new province of Manitoba.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Hon. Mr. Brown refused to accept the total claims made by the Hudson Bay Company.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It has never been accepted.

Mr. LEMIEUX. So my hon. friend might also learn something.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have a great deal to learn. But I generally try to know the subject upon which I have to speak. I say simply that there was nothing in the argument of the hon. gentleman this afternoon, who has tried to show that Rupert's Land was, as a matter of fact, the province of Manitoba.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understood that Riel and Bruce, in their list of articles, spoke of the Red River settlement. That is clear in the list of articles and the sessional papers.

Mr. BOURASSA. That does not alter the case. They represented the inhabitants who lived then in the Red River settlement; but when they came here to present their claims, they claimed to represent the whole of the inhabitants in the Northwest Territories. They asked such and such conditions to be granted on the admission of Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories. I now come to the point of the right hon. the First Minister, namely, that because this parliament, for the time being, confined Manitoba within certain limits, these basic conditions, which were asked for by the delegates from Red River, who claimed that these conditions should apply to the whole of Rupert's Land—that because the Dominion parliament limited the actual application of their claim to the then created province of Manitoba, that meant that this parliament did not want to give the application of those claims to the rest of the Territories. I do not see anything on record to show that because the Dominion government then created only one province, the parliament of Canada thereby refused to acknowledge the moral right of the people outside of that province, but within the same territory, to the use of their language and to their own schools, and that their descendants who should found settlements outside of that province should be deprived of the application of the same rights. I cannot believe that; and unless it be shown to me by the archives of this parliament, I cannot believe that Sir George Cartier, Sir John Macdonald —though I must say that they acted on that occasion, at least so far as certain details of that agreement are concerned, in such a way as to have profited by the good faith of the delegates—I cannot believe that because they gave certain limits to the province of Manitoba, they meant to deny for ever the claims of those people, who were speaking in the name of all the inhabitants of the Northwest, to their own language and schools, outside as well as within the limits of the new province. So far as that matter is concerned, I agree with the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) in thinking that the moral obligation of this parliament covered the whole of that territory. The province of Manitoba was created, and article 23 was introduced in the Manitoba Act of 1870. That article is well known no doubt to all the members of this House; it reads as follows:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the legislature, and both these languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person, in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under the British North America Act, 1867, or in or from all or any of the courts of the province. The Acts of the legislature shall be printed and published in both those languages.

It does not seem that the parliament of those days—and if I take the words of the hon. Minister of Justice, uttered some time ago, they had the full power to do what they did—were so scrupulous as is the parliament of to-day about imposing the use of the French language for all time to come on any province. There was no opposition in those days to the granting of a dual language for the province of Manitoba. Has the constitution changed since 1870? The men who framed the Act of Manitoba were, most of them, the men who framed the constitution of 1867. Will it be said that this provision, adopted unanimously by the parliament of 1870, constituted a breach of the constitution, which was then just fresh in the minds of every man who made that law? Is the Prime Minister prepared to say that Mr. Blake, Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. Holton, Mr. Huntington, Sir John Macdonald—all those men who passed that legislation without a dissenting voice—were all untrue to their mandate and broke the spirit of the constitution which was just fresh in their minds, which had been framed by them and enacted by the imperial parliament ?

Sir, if it was not a break of the constitution in 1870 to establish the dual language in Manitoba for all time, why would it be such a break in 1905 to establish for all time the dual language in the Northwest Territories ? Now, the Solicitor General made an argument this afternoon that would be true if one fact was not forgotten. He said, Why don't you go to Ontario and raise a cry about the use of the French language there ? For the very reason given by the Prime Minister a moment ago, that by the spirit of the constitution of this country the province of Ontario is not a creation of ours ; it was a sovereign colony when it entered the confederation in 1867, and the French language had no official recognition there at that time. But the representatives of Ontario as well as the representatives of Quebec declared, the first time they made a new province, that the dual language would be official. The reason was obvious. What was the idea of parliament in 1870 when they carved out the province of Manitoba ? It was something more and higher than merely to establish a new province. What were the words of Sir George E. Cartier when he spoke of establishing for the first time the Northwest Territories ? Did he say to the delegates from Manitoba, We are going to make a small province in Manitoba, but the rest of our territory will not be organized on the same basis ? No, but what he said was this :

> As soon as the resolutions were agreed to and the address passed, it would be the duty of the government to bring down a measure and obtain authority to organize a provincial government for that territory.

So it is not surprising if the delegates from that province thought that the parliament of Canada had in mind the organization of provincial governments. Sir George Cartier added :

> The British North America Act would soon be carried out by a succession of provinces from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Now, Sir, the British North America Act, leaving aside all small considerations of detail, had, I think, two great objects in view. The first has been frequently stated, it had for its object to bury all quarrels of the past between Upper and Lower Canada, that was the birth idea of confederation. The second idea was a larger one, one that had been conceived by imperial statesmen and by Canadian statesmen, it was the loftier idea of creating under the British flag, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a great confederacy of provinces, the basis of which would be the principle of equality which had been accepted by both races in this country. It was at first to unite the existing colonies and then to make them one nation. It did not enter into the minds of the fathers of confederation to impose the French language upon the province of Ontario, neither upon the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, which already had constitutions, which already had parliamentary institutions. But when they considered—and this was the second object of the Confederation Act—when they considered those virgin lands when they threw open to civilization those immense territories which had theretofore been only the domain of the Indian and the buffalo, what was the idea which dominated their minds ? It was to introduce there an idea that would include both nationalities, to introduce an idea that would bring together the French and the English ; it was to create there a British colony, but also an Anglo-French alliance, that would endure for all time. That was the mother idea of confederation which dominated the minds of Sir John A. Macdonald, George Brown and Sir George E. Cartier. Their idea was that in those new territories, provinces should be carved out where the best traditions of England and France would be introduced and maintained for all time to come. And are we going to be called demagogues, are we to be branded with the narrow accusation that we wish to make a few votes in our province because we desire to keep that pledge that not only was given to the people of the new Territories, but which formed one of the bases of confederation ? Are we to be condemned because to-day we wish to give effect to that intention of the fathers of confederation, to that intention of the framers of the Manitoba Act, which we wish to perpetuate in the northwestern provinces ? We desire to prove that the agreement between the English and the French still endures.

The Solicitor General, I was sorry to hear, made an argument this afternoon that because the French Canadians are less numerous in the Northwest than the Germans, or the Scandinavians or the Doukhobors, there is no reason to grant us the official use of the French language. The Prime Minister argued that it would not be fair to ask for the official use of French because we were only a small percentage of the population in those provinces. Sir, a question like that which was considered by the fathers of confederation and by the framers of the Manitoba Act, is not one of those that can be settled by quoting figures. What are we doing at the present time by this legislation ? We are not creating two provinces for five years, or ten years. What will be the character of the population of those provinces in the future ? My hon. friend has given this afternoon some figures that throw a great deal of light on this question. It is true that we are only four per cent of the population in those two provinces. At one time there were, besides Indians, no other representatives of civilized nations but the French and the English. But if it is true that in 1901 only four per cent of the population was French, it is equally true that only 47 per cent was English speaking, including Scotch, Irish and Welsh ; all the rest was composed of foreigners from other lands, men who have no traditions in common with the two original races in this country, who know nothing of our history, who know nothing of our constitution, which is now thirty-three years of age. I say it is the duty of the founders of these provinces, it is their duty to the descendants of those French pioneers who were the first to bring civilization to those western countries as well as the first to plant it on the shores of the St. Lawrence, to join hands with the English-speaking people in the resolve to unite these two races together so as to make that country great, a British country as long as possible ; but at the same time to make it so far as traditions are concerned, an Anglo-French country, so as to realize that great idea of the former leader of the Conservative party whose memory and whose words are now impressed upon the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. I appeal to the better feelings of my hon. friends of the Conservative party, I appeal especially to the better sentiments of the Liberal party, and I say : Let us follow the teachings of the men of 1867 and the men of 1870. Instead of looking into ancient documents, instead of quoting from books to ascertain what our rights are, to ascertain what was the intention of the fathers of confederation, let us recognize it more clearly in the words of Sir John A. Macdonald when he said that there should be no predominant race in Canada, that whether one was more numerous or less numerous than the other, whether one was poorer or richer than the other, was not to be considered ; we should only keep in view that we are one united people, though cherishing in our memory what both races have done to build up this great country.

Why do you not join hands together and instead of catering for French votes or for English votes, look to the future as the great men who have built up our country did, and if so, why refuse to put into the constitution of these Territories the very provision which was put into the British North America Act, into that very clause 133 which had been read by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, and which says that both languages are official in this country ? If it is disrespectful to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan to say that French shall be an official language, there, why should the English language be imposed upon us as an official language in Quebec ? It may be stated to-day that the English language is the official language of this country because this is a conquered country. I am not going to use bitter words in regard to arguments of that sort. I quite realize that some of my English-speaking friends, who, perhaps, have forgotten some of the developments of our history and think only of such dates as 1759 and 1763, may think they are justified in saying that this is a conquered country ; but I would refer my liberal friends to the speech delivered in 1890 in this parliament by the late Hon. David Mills, who proved conclusively that there was no such thing as an official language under the British constitution, that what gave an official language to a country was the language of the majority of its inhabitants, and that when Canada was taken over by the English it was not necessary to put into the Treaty of Paris that French was acknowledged as an official language, because the French language was the birthright of the country. You have become the majority ; is that a reason why you should deprive the people of the right to the official use of that language in these new Territories which had no constitution of their own when they joined confederation and therefore were not in the position of the older provinces ? They were carved and created by the people of Canada out of virgin land, purchased by all the people of Canada, paid for by all the people of Canada, and I ask : Why do you not join hands with us and put into the constitution of these Territories the same principle which was put into the constitution as far as this parliament is concerned and as far as the legislature of the province of Quebec is concerned, and declare that the dual language shall be official in the Northwest Territories ? Really, I cannot see, if my English-speaking friends are true to the traditions of their nation, why they should object to this. Do you think that the French Canadian people will be less loyal if their language is put there as the official language? If there is a black page in the history of England it is the attempt to impose the English language and English ways of education upon the old land of Ireland. For 400 years the attempt has been made by force of bayonets to impose the English language upon an unwilling people. Think you that the Irish people have been thereby made more loyal, or that they will be made English by law ? No, Sir. To come back to our own land of Canada, which was the possession of a nation that had been fighting with your ancestors for years, do you think that the descendants of that nation would have become loyal if the British government had undertaken to enforce upon them the methods of government that have been carried on in Ireland ?

Mr. SPROULE. Are the people of Alsace and Lorraine less loyal to the German empire because the Germans insist upon the language of the empire being spoken ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has brought that point to my attention. If my hon. friend knew the conditions which prevail in that country, he would know that there are two races, the Alsatians and the people of Lorraine, that the Alsatians are German by birth, education and language. Under the French government all their schools were German. The official language, as far as municipal documents were concerned, was German. After the war of 1870 the German language was imposed upon this province by law. What was the result ? The Alsatian people started to speak French in protest against that legislation, and if the hon. gentleman will refer to the latest studies that have been published, not upon the official administration of Alsace and Lorraine, but upon the true sentiments of the people, he will find that up to a few years ago, Alsatians, who spoke good German and who hardly could speak French, when they met a German official spoke to him in broken French rather than have it said that they were a conquered race. But within three or four years the Emperor of Germany has changed his mind upon that question, as he has changed it upon many other questions. The Emperor of Germany, frightened at the increasing development of socialism, is endeavouring to bring to the support of his empire all the conservative elements within it. Laws of exclusion against the Catholics have been repealed. A more liberal method of government has been introduced into Alsace and Lorraine, and within the last few years the sentiments of the Alsatians have changed more rapidly than for the previous thirty years.

But, my point is this, and perhaps I have passed over it in the heat of argument: Coming back to the figures which my hon. friend the Solicitor General quoted to-day, let me say that you have in the Northwest Territories at the present time more people who are neither English nor French than there are who are either English or French. Cannot the government and the members of this House, and especially the members of the opposition, forget for the moment party considerations and even, I may say, racial considerations, and realize that in the future of this land, in thirty or forty years probably, three-quarters of the people in the Northwest will be neither French nor English? If so, this is the proper time to implant into the new and coming race the spirit of our constitution, so that French Canadians will go there and help you in maintaining the Canadian character of that country. If before 1867 there were English-speaking provinces and there was one French province in British North America, since 1867 you have only eight Canadian provinces. To take an example from the figures that were quoted this afternoon, you have two elements in this country ; you have the racial composition and you have the national composition. It may be that in one province it is more English and that in another it is more French; but all provinces are more Canadian than before. I say that if we want this country to last, if we do not want these western provinces to become the destroyers of confederation, if we do not want, within fifty or a hundred years, the thousands and millions of men who have no attachment to our traditions, who know nothing of our history and development, whose sentiments are largely attached to themselves and to the present, to take control of that country, we must take hold of it ourselves. If we do not implant in western Canada the traditions which have been so fruitful in bringing about the development of eastern Canada where we French Canadians unite with our English-speaking compatriots and share their attachment to our country, the time will come when that western country will not be English or French, and Canada itself will be no more Canadian. If there were no other ground than that, I say that it would be the duty of this parliament to make that country an Anglo-French country.

I am not going to enter into a discussion of the effect of this amendment or of the effect of Sir John Thompson's amendment, but I simply say this is the time to make the constitution of those provinces. It was the opinion of the framers of the Northwest Territories Act in 1877 that their Act was not complete without putting in the dual language clause. They did it. In 1890, they removed a part of that article and allowed the rest to remain there. My hon. friend the leader of the government has stated that the only reason why the preservation of the French language in the courts was agreed to in 1890 was because the courts were federal courts, but that if they had been provincial courts probably the same fate would have been meted out to the French language as far as the courts are concerned as that which befel it as far as the legislative assembly was concerned. That is not the only reason given by Sir John Thompson ; here is another reason given by him which will last long after this Bill has become law. Referring to the abolition of the language in the courts, he said :

> If that provision be obligatory we may have the misfortune of seeing men brought to the bar of justice in our own courts, tried before our own judges, convicted, condemned and sentenced in a language not one word of which they understand, and unable to offer a plea for justice or for mercy.

That is a reason which will last long after the adoption of this Bill. A telegram has come from Mr. Justice Pendergast saying that nobody has pleaded in French in the courts of the Northwest Territories for some years. Well, we are not making a temporary law here, nor are we making a law for the few French Canadians that are now there. We are making a law for all time to come, and why not leave the door open so that when the number of French Canadians will be increased there, they will find on the statute-books a provision for the use of their language which they can avail of. Why not give to these few French settlers, poor as they may be, the right to plead before the courts of their country in their own language. In the Yukon Territory, which is under the same law as the Northwest Territories, a year ago an attempt was made by a judge to prevent a man giving his testimony in French, and the judge was obliged to be reminded that the man had that right under the law of the land. Why should we not be protected against the same danger in future? Well, Mr. Chairman, I go further; even if I should be exposed to the danger I have been exposed to during the last few days of being called a French demagogue, I am going to move an amendment to the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), and it is in these words:

That all the words in the said amendment beginning with the word 'provided' be struck out.

My object is clear and plain. I want the law to be as it was in 1877. I want the law to be as it is in the province of Quebec. I want the law to be as it is for this Dominion parliament. If the parliament of 1890 forgot the intention of the framers of our federal constitution and of the Northwest Territories constitution, that is no reason why now when we are legislating for the future we should not put into the constitution of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan the same provision as was inserted in the constitution of the province of Manitoba. I have extended my remarks longer than I intended, because it seems to me that this is a most important matter, for it will have its effect upon the teaching of French in the schools. I have always known that there was no guarantee given us by law with regard to the teaching of French, but there are other guarantees than are to be found in the actual text of the law. If we make the French language one of the official languages of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan it will be a further reason why French speaking fathers of families will, especially in separate schools, teach French to their children. In fact, one of the reasons that were given in 1893 against the ordinances of 1892 was, that it was against the spirit of the constitution of these Territories to abolish the teaching of a language which was acknowledged as an official language by the constitution of that country. I therefore say that for the protection of the children as well as to uphold the principles laid down as the basis of our constitution, we should without restriction and without equivocation make the French language one of the official languages of these provinces, and nobody will suffer by it. Neither the English-speaking majority nor the British Crown will be impaired by that—I will not say by that concession—but by the acknowledgment of that principle which is a basic principle of our constitution.

Mr. SPROULE. I shall occupy but a few moments dealing with this question because it seems to me that in this age of the world it will not be necessary to defend at length the stand which I intend to take. I do not agree with the hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) either in his logic or his conclusions, both of which were much at fault. I happen to find myself to-night—it is a very rare thing indeed—in agreement, with the leader of the government on a question of this kind. We were together in 1896 on the great question of provincial rights, and we are together to-night on this question of the French language. Let me express the hope that before this Bill goes through the right hon. gentleman will come back to his position of 1896 in defence of provincial rights, and then we will be absolutely in accord; but I am afraid he is like the Indian who lost his wigwam. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) who introduced the motion said: That in pursuance of a solemn agreement entered into when Rupert's Land was acquired we should continue the French language in that territory. I have not a very religious regard for these solemn agreements that we have heard so much about for the last few weeks?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have known that for some time.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and you agree with me to-night in that regard because you expressed exactly the same sentiments which I express. That sentiment is, that if we are to do what is right we must deal with conditions as we find them, and that although at one time the French people in the Northwest Territories might have been in the majority, they are to-day only four per cent of the population, so that it is absolutely useless and needless to maintain the French language so far as the requirements of the people in that country are concerned. There might be something in favour of the argument that we should give an official language to the Germans or to the Russians because they are increasing more rapidly in proportion to the population, while the French are decreasing in proportion to the increase of other nationalities.

Mr. BOURASSA. The French people are increasing very rapidly in proportion to the population. They were only two per cent in 1891, and in 1901 they were four per cent of the population.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) seems to imagine that all the knowledge in the world is in his cranium. If he had listened to me he would have heard that I said that the French were not increasing in proportion to the increase of other nationalities.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is exactly the point which is contradicted by the figures which were given by the Solicitor General.

Mr. SPROULE. In 1891 the French were 2·31 per cent of the population, and in 1901 they were 4 per cent.

Mr. BOURASSA. Exactly.

Mr. SPROULE. But listen to this. In 1891 there were no Germans in the country and in 1901 there were 19,572 or 12 per cent of the population. Does that not show that my statement is correct. I said that the French were not increasing proportionately as other nationalities are.

Mr. BOURASSA. As some others.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, take the Scandinavians. In 1891 there were none in the Territories and in 1901 there were over 5,000 Scandinavians or 3·39 per cent of the population. In 1891 there were no Russians in the Territories, but there are 17,051 there to-day. Therefore the French have not increased as rapidly in proportion as any of these nationalities I have mentioned. If the French were increasing very rapidly and if they were going to be numerically very much stronger than the other nationalities, there might be some justification for arguing that you should make the French language official or semi-official. But when we remember that they are only 4·43 per cent of the population to-day there seems to be no reason for such suggestion.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. It would appear that other nationalities are increasing more rapidly than the English, and that therefore according to your argument the English language should not be official.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all; there is not one-fourth the number in an English-speaking country to-day. But I ask, what is the history of every country in the world? Is it not a history of change? And must not governments keep up with the changed conditions? What is the history of constitutions? Is it not a history of evolution? What is the British constitution? Not a written constitution. It is a constitution which is changing every year of its life; it is a constitution that grows by accretion and evolution. And it is so in that country as much as in any other. While there may have been a justification at one time in the history of the Northwest for making the French language official, there is no justification for it to-day, because the French element is not sufficiently numerous to warrant it.

Mr. MONK. Would my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question? If there was a pledge or agreement made, does my hon. friend think that number or proportion can affect that?

Mr. SPROULE. What are we doing in every session of our parliament? Are we not breaking pledges that were made in the past? Are we not making laws to repeal others under which vested rights were acquired? Are we not taking away the liberties of the people in various directions? Yes, we are doing it. That is the history of every parliament in the world. I have not the sacred and religious respect which some people have for pledges given forty or fifty or a hundred years ago, given under conditions that do not exist to-day, and there is not the same necessity now for carrying out those pledges that there was at that time. We must be up-to-date. There is not a religion under the sun that is not changing; there is not a constitution that is not changing; there is not a parliament that is not changing. So it is with countries, and so it is with provinces and localities. The language that was spoken in England centuries ago is not spoken to-day. There is no need of it, because other people are occupying the ground. When the Romans occupied England, the Roman language was spoken there, but it is not found there to-day, because the conditions have changed. Other languages have come in and taken its place. So it must be in the Northwest Territories as in every other part of the world; as the conditions change the language must change. We must deal with this matter in the light of existing conditions, and the existing conditions do not in my judgment justify either making the French language official in the legislative assembly or authorizing its use in the courts. The hon. member read what Sir John Thompson said to the effect that it would be a strange thing if we convicted a man belonging to the French race in a court where the evidence against him was given in a language which he did not understand. The same thing was done in the case of an Italian who was tried at North Bay the other day; it was all done through an interpreter. Is not the same thing done every day both in Canada and the United States? Although foreigners come here who do not understand our language——

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend pretend that the French Canadian is a foreigner in Canada?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying anything about them being foreigners. I am talking about criminals being convicted in a court where they do not know a word of the language that is spoken; and when the hon. gentleman quoted the language of Sir

John Thompson as an argument why we should make the French language official, I say it is not a strong argument at all, because the same remark would apply to the Doukhobors, the Galicians, the Finns, the Poles and the Italians.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. That is putting the French Canadians on the same footing as the Doukhobors, Galicians and Poles.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I am not making any comparison at all. The French Canadians may be as far superior to these other nationalities as day is to night or light to darkness. I am only discussing the question whether it is or is not a great hardship or a great wrong to a man to be tried in a court of justice where he does not understand the language that is spoken—that is all. It is done in every country in the world to-day. The history of every country in the world is a history of change, to suit changed conditions. France is an illustration of it. Spain is an illustration of it. The hon. gentleman referred to Alsace and Lorraine. A gentleman who travelled in those provinces told me last year that when they were taken over by Germany, nearly everybody there spoke French, but that you would be surprised to-day to find nearly everybody speaking German, and the strange thing is that there is no complaint about it, although the change was compulsory. I do not go so far as that, because I think we ought to be more generous; but in that case, though the change was made by law, no great hardship has resulted. Nor will it be so in the Northwest any more than it has been in Alsace and Lorraine. We are told that unification is an impossible task, that it is a Utopia, and that therefore we must keep up two languages.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier said, why shall we not be allowed to speak our mother tongue? I understand at one time that the hon. gentleman was half Scotch and half French, but I am told that he is half English and half French; what would be his mother tongue ?

I am told that in Glengarry there were a lot of Scotchmen who married into the French Canadian race ; which language would be the mother tongue of their children ? Are we going to perpetuate it by law ? Let the law of the survival of the fittest be the law that will determine that. We need not trouble ourselves with it at all. The hon. gentleman says it is hard to deprive people of the right to speak their mother tongue. Nobody wants to deprive them of the right to speak their mother tongue; let them speak it as long as they like. I was interested in one statement that was made by the Solicitor General. He said, why are you demanding this privilege for the Northwest? Have you had a single petition from the French there asking that it should be done ? He thought that was a strong reason why it should not be done. I ask, is there a single petition from either the French or the Roman Catholics of that country asking that separate schools be forced on the people ?

Mr. SCOTT. There is a petition from the legislature. The Haultain draft Bill asked for separate schools.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all. The legislature passed two resolutions asking parliament to repeal the law. The hon. gentleman will wish he had not spoken, because he has only put his foot in it. The only expression we have from the legislature as a legislature was the two requests which they made that the right should be done away with.

Mr. SCOTT. Those two memorials of which the hon. gentleman speaks were passed before the ordinances of 1892 were passed. Since the change was made in the ordinances there has been no complaint on the part of any person in the Northwest against the existing separate schools.

Mr. SPROULE. Has there been any request from the legislature that you compel them to have separate schools for ever?

Mr. SCOTT. I say that the Haultain draft Bill contains that request, and I challenge the hon. member to ask his leader to deny it. The Haultain Bill certainly asked for the perpetuation of separate schools.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend asks my opinion I say it does nothing of the kind.

Mr. SCOTT. I would call the attention of the leader of the opposition to an expression he used on May 10, when he said that he coincided entirely in the opinion of the Minister of Justice that section 93 would not only perpetuate existing separate schools, but would secure to the Northwest minority what is termed full justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the hon. gentleman will find that I said that. If I am so represented, I was wholly misreported, but I have not seen it in 'Hansard' and I do not think it is there; I have expressed an exactly opposite opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. If section 93 provided for all that, why was there any necessity for clause 16 and the amended 16 ?

Mr. SCOTT. For the very purpose that 16 was put in, to modify section 93.

Mr. SPROULE. Because clause 16 in the Haultain Bill was the same as in this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. What is out of order?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. My hon. friend is speaking to a motion dealing with the question of language, but he is now discussing separate schools.

Mr. SPROULE. I was interrupted by an hon. gentleman opposite and now this hon. member has not the courtesy to allow me to answer his own friend. I said if there was any force in the argument that there were no petitions from that country asking that the French language be made official, that argument is equally strong with regard to separate schools because there is not a petition asking that separate schoo's be made permanent in that country. A good deal has ben said about the Bill of Rrights to-night, and I do not think it is necessary for me to refer to it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. My views were expressed very closely by the Prime Minister himself. I was rather inclined to think his sentiments to-night were not quite in accord with some sentiments I have heard him utter before in this House. I tried to hunt them up hurriedly, but have not succeeded in finding them. Perhaps I can do so later. I am glad to see that he is with me because I think he is now in the right track and I agree with him and am glad to do so. There is no need in the world for any people, whether French or any other people, to have French made official. If the French become strong enough they have sufficient national characteristics to make their language permanent.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. I said that after I had been a few years down here that there was one nationality that would down the Scotch. The Scotch seem to have a preponderating influence in their nature as a nationality, so that if they inter-marry with other nations the Scotch seem to always turn up as the dominant element.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. But I found that when I came down here that if there was a union between the Scotch and the French the French would in every case become the dominant element; it was the French language that prevailed and the Galic that went into oblivion. In view of that you can safely trust the French whenever they plant themselves in any part to perpetuate their language without its being made the legal language.

Mr. BRODEUR. I wish to make a few remarks with regard to the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I am somewhat surprised to see the terms used by my hon. friend in his motion. I think that it would not be advisable to restore what was abolished in 1892. My hon. friend knows very well, and he has shown it in his speech, that in 1890 a motion was made before this House declaring practically that the Northwest Territories legislatures would have the right to abolish the French language in the proceedings of the legislative assembly.

Mr. MONK. No, I do not know that. What the statute of 1890 said was that the legislature after the next election could regulate its proceedings if it thought fit.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it comes to the same thing. There is no use our playing on words with regard to that. It is very plain to me that the object of this motion, the object of the law which was passed in 1891, was that the local legislature would have the right to deal with that question and to decide how its proceedings should be published. This gave to the legislature the right to declare whether the French language would continue to be an official language in the records or in the proceedings of the legislature or not. I suppose my hon. friend will not dispute that fact? I will go further. I do not know whether the statement has been made before or not, but I say that in the proceedings of the assembly in 1892 a resolution was moved by Mr. Haultain to the following effect:

> That it is desirable that the proceedings of the legislative assembly shall be recorded and published hereafter in the English language only.

We are face to face with the statement that in 1877 the French and English languages were to be the official languages in the Northwest Territories. I will explain in a few minutes how that resolution came to be incorporated in the Bill of 1877. Dealing now with what happened in 1890, I find that then and there it was decided that the local legislature should be absolutely free to decide how the records, how the proceedings of the legislative assembly should be recorded, and we find also that in January, 1892, as I have just mentioned, on motion of Mr. Haultain, the English language was declared to be the only official language in the records and proceedings of the legislative assembly. Now, this is a settled question as far as this parliament is concerned. It is a question over which it would not be advisable to try to do what was done in 1890. But what is my hon. friend proposing? Is he proposing to declare that the English and French languages will be forever the official languages in the Northwest Territories? No, he simply says we are going to declare that the English and French languages shall be official languages, but next year, after a few months, six months from that time, the legislative assembly would have the right to declare whether the French language would continue to be an official language or not. Why not take a bold position? Why should my hon. friend, if he wants to restore the French language, if he is serious in contending that the French is an official language in the Northwest, not formulate words declaring that it shall be for ever the official language in the Northwest?

Mr. MONK. I am much obliged to my hon. friend for his suggestion. I am prepared to adopt it. It is a very valuable suggestion.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was discussing the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. MONK. Does he not think he can address himself to a higher phrase of the question ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what I am doing.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. My hon. friend can vote for the sub-amendment.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose I may discuss the motion of my hon. friend. What I find is that it is simply repeating word for word the resolution which was adopted in 1892, which gave to the legislative assembly of the Territories the right to abolish the French language, and he knows well that it did abolish that language.

Mr. MONK. I am ready to forego that part of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is not my hon. friend proposing the same legislation that was adopted in 1890-1.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend puts me a question. I tell him that it is necessary to re-empower the provincial legislature to deal with the question, so far as its proceedings are concerned.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then the motion of my hon. friend is absolutely useless from a practical point of view. The records of the legislative assembly of the Territories show that in the Northwest to-day the French is not desired as an official language.

Mr. MONK. I do not know that.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am quoting to my hon. friend what happened in 1892. I suppose he knows that ?

Mr. MONK. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall read it again.

Mr. MONK. That is not necessary.

Mr. BRODEUR. On the 19th of January, 1892 it was decided by the Northwest legislature, on a division of four to twenty, that ' it is desirable that the proceedings of the legislative assembly shall be recorded and published in the English language only.' Now what is my hon. friend proposing? He is proposing that we should give again to the local legislatures of the new provinces the right to declare, as the territorial assembly has done, that the official use of the French language be abolished.

Mr. MONK. Is this parliament of the same opinion as it was in 1892 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am quoting what the local legislature did in 1892. How is it that the use of the French language was provided for in the Northwest Territories Act ? It has been stated that there was a compact regarding the use of the French language with the representatives of the Red River settlement in 1870. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has suggested, and it has also been suggested by some other members of this House, that I declared there was a compact with regard to separate schools ; but these hon. gentlemen have forgotten one thing. I never asked with regard to the school question, that we should adopt, word for word, the agreement, if there be an agreement, with regard to the Northwest. I never suggested that this agreement should be accepted word for word or in its entirety.

Mr. MONK. Neither did I. I am ready to accept any suggestions.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition suggested this afternoon that we were bound by an agreement which I said had been made in 1870. What was the agreement with regard to the school question ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend will allow me, what I said was this. I distinctly understood him to argue that the two Bills of Rights, to which reference was made, extended to the Northwest Territories as well as to the province of Manitoba ; and because they did so, the hon. gentleman argued there was a compact in respect of separate schools.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does my hon. friend remember whether or not the Bill of Rights was ever discussed in any case before the court, or has ever been accepted by parliament, as conferring any right whatever. I have examined every document and book I could get, and I never found anything was ever based on the Bill of Rights either by way of legislation or decision of the court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it was used by Mr. Ewart in his argument before the sub-committee of the Privy Council of 1895 with regard to Manitoba.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What I asked was whether my hon. friend knows whether anything has ever been based on that Bill of Rights?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I could not at the moment say. Of course, my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue based something on it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not as a legal argument. I think my hon. friend will admit that. I never based anything upon it as a legal argument.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a compact ?

Mr. BRODEUR. As a moral obligation to a certain extent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And my hon. friend extended it to the Territories ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Based upon a compact I was discussing then. But I said I never for one moment pretended that we are obliged to adopt this agreement, if it refers to the Territories. There is some divergence of opinion as to that. Some say that all the rights conceded in 1870 have been incorporated in the Manitoba Act. Some others pretend that these rights apply not only to Manitoba but also to all the settlements in the Northwest. But coming to what I said the other day, what I said was that there was a moral obligation, that the school question was one of the rights demanded by the settlers in 1870 and incorporated in the Bill or Rights. They demanded that they should have their own separate schools and that the public money granted for education should be distributed among the different denominations in proportion to their respective numbers as is done in the province of Quebec. My hon. friend will admit that the legislation we have submitted with regard to separate schools does not go so far as that. I was simply quoting that just as a moral obligation to a certain extent on our part, which obligation was incorporated later on in the legislation of 1875, and which is recognized by the different statutes we have to-day; and I added that what we wanted to incorporate in the legislation of to-day are the rights and privileges which the minority are now enjoying in the Northwest. I never pretended that we should enact legislation entirely upon the Bill of Rights—clause 7, No. 4—but simply that we should continue the system now existing. What I am claiming to-day with regard to the French language is the same thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that what my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is asking by his motion is that the present system shall be continued.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, he is not asking for that.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. That is what I am asking for.

Mr. BRODEUR. What he is asking is to give to the new provinces the power which was given the territorial assembly in 1890, which power that assembly exercised by abolishing the French language.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend is totally mistaken. That is not what I am asking at all. The power given in 1891 was a power granted to the assembly of the Northwest Territories. That assembly will be in a day or two non-existent, and the power will be granted anew to the legislature of the province.

Mr. BRODEUR. But let us come to questions of fact. Is the French language to-day in use or not in the legislative assembly of the Northwest ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN

Mr. MONK. Is the legislative assembly going to be continued or is it to be abolished by this Act ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am asking the hon. gentlemen this question : Is the French language to-day in use, or is it not, in the legislative assembly of the Northwest ? I claim it is not ; my hon. friend says it is, if I understand him aright.

Mr. MONK. Will not my hon. friend admit that we are creating a new state of things, a new province and a new assembly?

Mr. BRODEUR. What I am contending for is that we should take things as they exist to-day. What will be the result of the motion of my hon. friend ? I put the question to the leader of the opposition. What will be the result of this motion ? Will it not be that the legislatures of the two provinces will be obliged, at their next session, to publish their proceedings in French ? To-day they are not obliged to do so. A member of the local legislature to-morrow, if this motion carries, would have the right to speak in French ; to-day he has not that right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did the hon. gentleman ask me a question ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He asks me what would be the result. I think the result would be this, that the legislature of the new province would determine, probably by resolution on the very first day, or the second day, on which it met, whether or not it would publish its proceedings in French.

Mr. BRODEUR. But if this motion is not carried the position would be different.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is right as to one aspect. But my hon. friend says he wants to continue the existing condition of things ; then he would have to continue the use of the French language in the courts and in the printing of the ordinances.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will come in a moment to that question. So far as the use of the French language in the legislature is concerned, the leader of the opposition admits that if this motion carries the situation will be different to-morrow to what it is to-day, because to-day the French language is not used in the legislative assembly, the Votes and Proceedings are published simply in English. But to-morrow, or at the next sitting of the legislature, so long as it does not exercise the powers which are given to it in this resolution, then the proceedings would have to be published in English and French.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is quite right, but I think he is overlooking one thing. The legislative assembly of the Northwest, on any day, could rescind that resolution and pass another. My hon. friend, by his motion, simply asks that the legislature of the new provinces shall be placed in the same position, that is, that it can by resolution one day declare its proceedings shall be published in both languages, and that it may the next day or any other day declare that they shall be published only in English, or only in French. I am not arguing upon the motion, I am arguing merely as to the effect. As I understand his motion, he is desirous simply of giving to the legislature of the new province that power which the legislature of the Territories possesses at the present time. That has been exercised once by the legislature of the Territories, and it might be exercised again from time to time, as the occasion would require. So the power which he proposes to confer upon the legislature of the new province might be exercised to-morrow, might be exercised the next session in a different way, and so on from time to time. It is the vesting of a power, not the manner in which that power shall be exercised, with which the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is concerned.

Mr. BELCOURT. Would not the legislature have that power, whether the motion is carried or not ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is only a proviso in what, after all, is the important part of the amendment of my hon. friend.

Mr. BELCOURT. The amendment, if it were passed by this House, would not give to the legislature of the new province any power which it does not now have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the hon. gentleman understands the motion as I understand it. A certain limitation was imposed upon the power of the legislative assembly in that regard, by the statute of 1877 ; a proviso was added to that in 1892 which defines the power of the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories at present.

Mr. BELCOURT. The power given in 1892 was general, unlimited.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend will permit me to finish the sentence—it defines the power which the legislature may exercise, defines the limit of their power with respect to the two languages. The statute of 1877, together with the statute of 1892 defining the power which the legislature of the Northwest Territories should have in that regard did not give the power to do away with the French language in the courts or in the printing of the ordinances ; it was therefore a limited power. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, as I understand his motion, desires to circumscribe the powers of the provincial legislature in exactly the same way. The exercise of that power is an absolutely different thing. It may be exercised in one way or another. It has been exercised in a certain way already, but when we are dealing with the limits of the power let us not confuse them with the exercise of that power.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But to do this would be a departure from the British North America Act. What would become of section 92 ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why, the Minister of Justice has told us over and over again, let us not forget, that we are absolutely free to depart from section 92.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So I say, and I want the hon. gentleman to say so likewise by voting for this amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not dealing with the wisdom of this amendment, or its constitutionality, I am dealing with the meaning of it. Did my hon. friend think I was doing anything else ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The result of the motion of my hon. friend would be simply to put the legislature of the province in the same position as the assembly is to-day by the law of 1890, which gave them power to abolish the use of French. That was the object parliament had in 1890.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman is mistaken, they have not abolished the French language, they have decided that the proceedings for the time being shall be in the English language. Does not the hon. gentleman think that they can revoke that to-morrow ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, the local legislature have power to restore any language they like. In the province of Ontario the legislature can declare to-morrow that the proceedings shall be published in French.

Mr. MONK. What does the hon. gentleman mean when he says they have abolished the French language ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I mean that they do not use it any more. There was a resolution passed, which I quoted a few moments ago, declaring that the only official language in the legislative assembly should be English. Does that mean that the French language can be used any longer in their proceedings ? I do not think so. Well, then, let us take the situation as we find it. I say the assembly has given its decision on that point, has exercised the authority which was vested in it by this parliament. It has always been the policy of this government to accept the situation as we find it, we have done so on the school question, and we will do so with regard to the French language.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is the policy of the government, they will have to accept this motion.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, because it has been decided by the legislative assembly not to use French any more. But that will not prevent the local legislature from restoring the French language if it likes. I come now to this point: How is it that the use of the French language came to be provided for in the law of 1877? We must not forget that in 1875 when we passed the Act in regard to the Northwest Territories providing for the appointment of a council and for the administration generally of the Northwest Territories, nothing was said in regard to the language question, but in 1877, a Bill was introduced into this parliament providing for the amendment of the Northwest Territories Act. The Bill passed the House of Commons and no mention was made of the French language. When the Bill was before the Senate the hon. Senator Girard proposed that we should add a resolution providing, that the French language could be used in the Northwest Territories. Why? Did he ask that in view of a compact or of an agreement? No, he advanced the simple argument, that, the majority in the Northwest Territories being French, it was only fair that the French language should be used in the legislative assembly. Here are his own words:

He would also call attention to the fact that the French language seemed to have been totally ignored in the Bill, although the majority of the people of the Territories were French.

That was the reason which was given. The amendment was made simply because of the fact that the majority in the Northwest Territories was French.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You are speaking of 1877?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. My hon. friends from Jacques Cartier and Beauharnois said that the question of population had absolutely nothing to do with it, that we had no right to-day to say that only four per cent of the population was French because it was, as alleged by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, an absolute right which could not be denied even if there were only five, or ten, or twenty French speaking people in those Territories.

Mr. MONK. Does my hon. friend not think that 8,000 is a very respectable number?

Mr. BRODEUR. When we take into consideration the fact that there were 158,000 people in the Northwest Territories in 1901, because I am speaking of the census of 1901, we will admit that 7,000 people is not a very large number. I am simply stating these facts to show to my hon. friend the reason which induced parliament to adopt the French language in 1877. It does not to-day impress itself in the same way as it impressed itself upon parliament then?

Now, coming to the question of the courts, I think that what has been said by my right hon. friend the leader of the government in regard to that is conclusive. Could we by Act of parliament, in 1890, have abolished the French language in the courts of the Northwest Territories? We have simply to read two articles of the constitution to find out that it would have been absolutely contrary to the constitution not to permit the use of the French language in the courts. What does section 101 say?

The parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance and organization of a general court of appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

Section 133 says:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of the parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.

Established under this Act. Are the Northwest Territories courts existing today, courts established under section 101 of the Confederation Act? Then, is not the French language an official language in the courts? But now the question assumes a different aspect. Now that the Northwest Territories are about to become provinces they have to be dealt with as all the other provinces are. The organization of the courts falls entirely under their control and they have the right to declare what language shall be used in the courts, whether it shall be English or French.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question in reference to that argument? What does he say in reference to the publication of the law? It does not fall under the argument which he has just made.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a question also that appertains absolutely to the province. The provinces, under the Confederation Act, are obliged to say how their proceedings shall be recorded. But, I may be told: You are not adopting the same system as far as the school question and the language question are concerned. In regard to the school question you say that you must maintain separate schools in the Northwest Territories. There is a very good reason for that and I find it also in the constitution.

What does the constitution say in regard to the use of the French language ? Section 133 is the one which applies and it says that the French language shall be used in the courts established by the parliament of Canada in the Dominion parliament and in the courts and proceedings of the legislative assembly of Quebec. The constitution in regard to the question of schools is absolutely different. What does it declare in section 93 ?

> In and for each province——

Not only the four provinces which were then in existence but all the provinces which might be created :

> —the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:
> Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

What we are doing in regard to the schools is simply incorporating into the constitutions of these provinces the provision which is embodied in section 93 of the British North America Act. We find that under the British North America Act a system of separate schools will be recognized for ever in the Province, whether it exists, whether it is a province coming into the union, or a province where a system of separate schools may be established later on. As far as the French language is concerned, on the contrary, the British North America Act simply declares that the French language shall continue to exist only in the courts created by the parliament of Canada, or that it shall be used in the proceedings before the Supreme Court, or in the proceedings before the courts and the legislative assembly of the province of Quebec. So I say our contention is absolutely in conformity with the constitution of Canada, and I am sure that nobody will attempt to argue that our position on the question of the French language is not in harmony with the position which we took on the school question. As a question of fact is the French language used to-day in the courts in the Northwest Territories? Is it used to-day in the publication of the ordinances? I have been informed that the ordinances have not been published in French for many years, and that there never was any request for their publication in French by the French people there.

Mr. MONK. Is not that a violation of the law as it at present stands ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The statute is somewhat confused, but giving my opinion off hand, I would say that it is not in harmony with the legislation of 1877 and 1890.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I remember correctly, the Territorial government said that they had no appropriation for publishing the ordinances in French, and that it was the duty of the federal government to have them published in that language.

Mr. MONK. It is the fault of this government then ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not at all ; the local government has the right to levy taxes for revenue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Territorial government took the ground that the statute did not say that the ordinances should be published by them in the French language.

Mr. BRODEUR. The law says that they shall be published in French as well as in English, and if the Territorial government are bound to publish them in one language they are bound to publish them in the other. As a matter of fact they have not published them in French for many years, and after the legislation of 1892, of their own proprio motu they ceased to publish the ordinances in French because it seemed to be their policy that French should no longer continue to be an official language.

Mr. SCOTT. On the 25th of August, 1898, the government at Regina was interrogated with regard to their failure for some years previously to permit the ordinances in French, and this is a part of the answer given :

> There was no practical necessity for printing the ordinances in French. The returns show no demand for French editions. In the whole of the business of the government there have only been two applications for ordinances or assembly records in French.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the rest of the answer ?

Mr. SCOTT. That is the only part of the answer I have, but the rest of the answer was as indicated by the leader of the opposition, that if the Dominion authorities thought it was necessary that the ordinances should be printed in French, they should furnish the money.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a poor argument for Mr. Haultain to use. Any way he never made application to the Dominion government for money for that purpose.

Mr. SCOTT. His main reason was that there was no practical necessity for printing them in French.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the Prime Minister that Mr. Haultain never made an application for money for that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not remember that any was made.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Haultain puts the blame on this government.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was the policy of the Territorial government not to publish these ordinances any longer in French, and they never applied to this government for money to publish them in that language. As a matter of fact, can the hon. member (Mr. Monk) refer to any one instance for the last twenty years in which French has been used in the pleadings before the courts of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) gave a very good answer to that.

Mr. BRODEUR. A few days ago I corresponded with Mr. Lambert and Mr. Prince, the two French speaking members of the Northwest assembly on this subject, and I sent them the following telegram :

Will you please inform me whether the French language is used in the pleadings before the courts, or if the proceedings, oral or written, are all made in English ?

Mr. Lambert member for St. Albert replied :

French language not used in courts ; proceedings, oral or written, all made in English, requiring the use of interpreters.

Mr. Prince answered :

So far as I know the pleadings before the courts, either oral or written, are all made in English.

Mr. MONK. There are English pleadings in Montreal.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. And in Quebec too.

Mr. BRODEUR. In Montreal most of the pleadings are in French, but the fact remains that the French language is to-day official in the Northwest Territories and nobody asks for it. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is now bringing this question before this parliament. I do not say that his object is to raise another agitation similar to that which has been going on for some time, but I do say that his policy is calculated to be detrimental to the interests of those whom he seeks to protect. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), representing a constituency miles away from the Northwest Territories asks that the people of the Northwest should have the right to use the French language in the proceedings before the courts of the Northwest, when the people of the Northwest have not asked for that themselves. That is not fair to the minority in the Northwest Territories, and it may bring upon them serious results for which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) will be responsible. Everything is now going on there in peace and harmony, and why cause a disturbance? Last night we heard an hon. gentleman from the Northwest Territories state in this House that if the law as proposed did not absolutely protect the rights of the minority, he would vote to make the law clear on that point. I believe that such a noble sentiment will in future guide those who administer the affairs of the Northwest Territories ; that the majority there will see that the interests of the minority are fully protected and that the minority will not have to rely upon politicians who may come from the province of Quebec.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. My remarks shall be brief on this question, because the legal point of view has been so fully dealt with by the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), by the Solicitor General, by the Minister of Inland Revenue, and by the right hon. Prime Minister that little is left to be said. In the first place I congratulate the Solicitor General on being in the happy position of pulling with the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the French language should be abolished in the Northwest Territories. I take this opportunity of returning the Solicitor General the compliment which he paid me the other evening.

Mr. SPROULE. My party is growing stronger.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. To my hon. friend the Solicitor General I will say: Let us take history as it might have been. Suppose that Canada instead of being an English colony to-day had been conquered by the French and was a French colony and that there was an English group in that colony, there is not an English member in this House who would rise to support a motion for the abolition of the English language. To my hon. friend the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) I may say this much: that if any man in the province of Quebec would declare that because of the expense of publishing official documents in the two languages, and as there was no practical use for their publication in the English language it should cease, the first men in the province of Quebec to stand up in defiance of such an unjust proposition would be the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who have been denounced in this House as French demagogues.

I heard the hon. member for Labelle say in Montreal that if the French Canadians were treated with injustice in any part of Canada, that was no reason why we should visit reprisals on our English speaking compatriots in the province of Quebec. We are told that we should be satisfied because there are a considerable number of French Canadians who have public positions in this country. The hon. gentleman who advanced that argument reminded me very much of the Polish king who when he was drunk thought all Poland was drunk too. I do not think it is a soothing balm on the wounds of the French Canadian people to know that some of their number have obtained public positions in this country. What does this fact do for the people who claim their rights? Wha we want are not positions, but the rights that are guaranteed to us by the constitution. I have heard the objection made in private conversation—and I suppose it will be made by French Canadians who will speak on this question—that I who rise to speak on behalf of the French language in the Northwest am using the English language in this House. Yes, I am using the English language to protect the French language in the Northwest, because I trust more in the broad-mindedness and the spirit of fair-play of the English members of this House than I do in the courage of my French Canadian compatriots. My fellow-countrymen are laughing at that remark. With their actual position how can they dare smile? They have shown the extent of their courage in speaking on behalf of a motion to take away from their brothers in the Northwest the language which they are so proud to speak. We can hear some of these gentlemen speaking and singing loudly on St. Jean Baptiste day. I do not make many speeches or sing much of the glories of the past or the hopes of the future on St. Jean Baptiste day; but I am ready to rise in this House and defend the rights of my fellow-countrymen in the Northwest, even against my own party. I trust that my English speaking fellow members, with that broad-mindedness and that spirit of fair-play which distinguish their race, will be ready as brothers and compatriots to give us justice, even though some French Canadians do not ask for it.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior seemed to be very much embarrassed as to the interpretation of the amendment which I have presented to the House that even after a lengthy discussion with the leader of the opposition, he seems still not to understand the gist of it. I told my hon. friend that it might be modified. There is no doubt that the sub-amendment presented by the hon. member for Labelle more clearly expresses the full extent of the rights that were granted in 1870 and subsequently consecrated by legislation. If my hon. friend has any doubt as to the meaning of my amendment, he had better vote with me for the sub-amendment of the hon. member for Labelle. I thought my hon. friend would take a larger view of this question, and deal with it on its merits as the right hon. leader of the government did, instead of spending most of his argument in trying to cast obscurity on the amendment as I drafted it. I may say that it is only a repetition of the law as it was drafted in 1890. The Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General have said again and again—it is their hackneyed defence—that those who bring up the question of this kind do so for the purpose of creating an agitation. Is my hon. friend serious in that? Is it his opinion that we have such a low regard for our duties and our responsibilities as members of this House as to bring up a question of this kind for the mere purpose of laying a foundation for an unfruitful and unhealthy agitation? Is that the opinion he entertains of the hon. member for Labelle? I have known that hon. gentleman since he was a boy, and I can say that his career is of such a nature that no man who is acquainted with him and who knows something of his qualities and his earnestness would dream that underneath the speech he has made here to-day is concealed an intention of going down to the province of Quebec and agitating his compatriots. And has my hon. friend the audacity to state before this committee that I have that intention? My hon. friend knows perfectly well that after the general election of 1896, I stated at a caucus of which a report appeared in the Montreal 'Gazette,' that I would not at any public meeting refer to the school question. Have I ever done so on any one of the many platforms where I appeared? I would look upon it as one of the most culpable acts a a man could be guilty of if, having brought this important question to the notice of this House, as he was in duty bound to do, he should use it afterwards for the sinister purpose of arousing his fellow-countrymen of French origin against the rest of the population. It is my hon. friend who on every occasion has done that miserable work. He did it in the last election in my own county, and no one knows better than he does how he was received on that occasion, and what effect his words had—none. I am a politician; we are all politicians in this House—who will deny it; but we draw the line, those of us who have any sense of their duty, at questions of this kind. I have only done to-day what was incumbent upon me; but does my hon. friend not know me well enough to know that I would not prostitute to such uses the discussion that we have had here to-day? He knows it full well. The right hon. the Prime Minister who, I will do him the justice to say, attacked this question upon its merits—not quibbling, like his colleague, the Minister of Inland Revenue—has contended that we are bound by the British North America Act.

My hon. friend knows very well that in this very statute, under the inspiration of the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Inland Revenue was holding that we are not bound by the British North America Act, and that we are bound by the Act under section 109 to leave to the two new provinces their Crown lands. My hon. friend knows perfectly well where we have departed from that principle. We are taking those lands from those two provinces and saddling Quebec and the older provinces with a useless debt to pay for these lands, and we are doing this in violation of the British North America Act, not illogically since it is contended by the government we are not bound by that Act. When we insert in this Bill a special clause to continue the exemption granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway we are not bound by the British North America Act, we are holding these two new provinces for all time bound by the agreement which we made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Why cannot we hold those two provinces bound by what the Minister of Justice told us was a contract in respect of schools ? We are protecting by another clause the rights of the Hudson Bay Company. Is that in the British North America Act ? My hon. friend knows perfectly well that we would probably have had no grounds for what we are claiming had it not been for the pronouncement by the government that we are not strictly bound by the British North America Act, and that we can go beyond it. My hon. friend the Solicitor General pronounced yesterday an excommunication against the member for Labelle.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What ?

Mr. MONK. The excommunication which my hon. friend pronounced is similar to those which have been pronounced against us by him during the ten years we have been in politics together in Quebec. You begin by 'yellow-dogging' the doctor, and when you have 'yellow-dogged' the doctor, you turn and say to us in your papers in Quebec that we are pulling with Doctor Sproule. That is an anomaly, and I can tell the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that it does not prevent a man from feeling very well.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does my hon. friend pretend that I have written that in 'Le Canada' ?

Mr. MONK. I do not ; but I will say to the Solicitor General that that article shows there is a fate reserved for us in Quebec when we differ from our friends on the other side. We began by hearing all about what I call the 'yellow dogs,' and then we are told : These are the people with whom you are in league. But that will not, I think, go down for all time, and I can tell the committee that there would be no ground for an agitation in my own constituency. My constituency is one which is very evenly divided. I have very many English-speaking electors and many members of the Orange Order, and I am ready, as I have been in the past, to go before these men, who are serious men and whose good opinion I value, and defend before them, as I must do, the attitude I have taken upon this question. I shall say this, that, with the experience I have had in the past with these men, they will understand the argument which has been presented to this committee to-night, and I am perfectly sure that they will ratify what I have done.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, let me say a few words in French in answer to the abuse hurled at the representatives of the French Canadians by the hon. member from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) and the hon. member from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). Strange to say, Mr. Chairman, these champions of the French Canadian nationality seem to think it is unworthy of them to use their native tongue when addressing this House ; although it would be only proper to my mind that they should speak French when advocating, as they claim, the official use of that tongue. It would be much better for him, I think, it would be the part of a true patriot, and highly gratifying to the province of Quebec, if the hon. member from Labelle, for instance, spoke French oftener than he does in this House, especially when he undertakes to vindicate the official use of that tongue in the proceedings of the proposed legislatures of the Northwest. The hon. member for Labelle has not as yet such a considerable following as to oblige him to speak English whenever he addresses them or appeals to them. Since he has but one follower, the member for Montmagny, it seems to me he might speak French without running any risk of not being understood. I can well conceive that the head of a great party, comprising English speaking and French speaking gentlemen, should think it necessary to speak English in order to make himself understood by all, and to express the views of that party made up largely of English speaking gentlemen, but surely no such reason exists for the hon. member from Labelle.

Mr. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) Does the hon. member consider that the 'considerableness' of a party is measured by the 'considerableness' of its members ?

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) I thank the hon. member from Montmagny for his interruption, as it affords me an opportunity of saying that, if the worth of a party was to be judged by the worth of some of its members, one would be tempted to consider the hon. gentleman's party as of very little worth.

I did not intend to speak, Mr, Chairman, but I feel that it is incumbent upon me to protest in my name and in that of my French colleagues in this House, against the insults lavished upon us by the hon. members for Montmagny and Labelle, yesterday and the day before, in the course of this debate, I protest at the same time against the abuse heaped by the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) on the French speaking representatives of the province of Quebec. I think it is rather a peculiar way of showing one's patriotism to endeavour to belittle in the eyes of the whole country the French Canadian members in this House, as was done by the hon. member from Labelle, who has thought fit to revile those whom the French Canadians have chosen as their standard bearers in this House. The hon. member for Labelle, who poses as the champion of the rights of our nationality, showed himself a poor type of a patriot when he insulted the French Canadian members in connection with the school question, when he insulted the right hon. gentleman, who has the confidence of all French Canadians, and whose qualities, whose talents, whose accomplishments and work have contributed in so marked a degree to enhance the prestige and influence of the French Canadian nationality throughout the Dominion.

I think that the appeals to prejudice—I cannot call them by any other name—to which my hon. friends have resorted, will not have much effect. Yesterday, during the debate, when the hon. member for Labelle was abusing—as he has been constantly doing since the opening of the discussion on this Bill—one of the most distinguished members of this House, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, I could not help recalling an historial event, and it is this: More than half a century ago, a leader, who proclaimed himself also a great man, and who certainly was such a man admired by the French Canadians of the province of Quebec, induced the people of Lower Canada to take up arms, and brought upon them a disastrous war. But as soon as hostilities had broken out, that great man made haste to take refuge across the border, while the grandfather of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue was meeting death on the battlefield.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) These insults are from a quarter whence I should not have expected them to come.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) What is it?

Mr. LEONARD.)Translation.) I understood, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kamouraska, to state at the outset, that the members from Labelle and Montmagny had unduly reflected on the French Canadian members in this House and the French Canadians generally. However, I notice that the aspersions of the hon. member for Kamouraska, are aimed more particularly at the memory of the man whom these same French Canadian members are fond of exalting very highly at public meetings.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) My hon. friend from Laval will be at liberty to go on with his argument by and by, when I am through. It is an historical event which recurred to me, while the hon. member for Labelle was casting abuse on the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, and I think it was my duty towards the hon. gentleman to. recall these facts. It is an illustration of the fact that men of action and patriotism are not always those who do the most talking. As regards our friends on the other side of the House, it is no wonder that they should be at one with the hon. member for Labelle in urging these claims in such fine fashion. As the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue and the hon. Solicitor General have stated, these are tactics which might be worthy of attention, if they were initiated by some party other than that which is now in such sad plight in the province of Quebec. It is hoped that by this means the Conservative party may recover in some measure the prestige which their objectionable policy has caused them irrevocably to lose in the people's opinion.

That renewal of the war waged against the right hon. gentleman in the province of Quebec, in 1896, will have no more effect than the proceeding. In order to be taken seriously, our Conservative friends, would have to carry out great reforms. In the first place, they would have to sever the ties which bind them to the party led by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Borden). They would have to enter their protest once for all against that party which, during the recent elections in Oxford and London, carried on a campaign of insult and abuse against our race and our religion. They would, I say, have to break away from these fanatics, before they can expect to be taken seriously in the province of Quebec. Then again my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) would have to give people time to forget the speech he delivered not long ago, in the course of which he stated that the presence in this country of the Papal Ablegate was an insult to the Canadian hierarchy. I fancy it will be a difficult matter for our Conservative friends to pose in the province of Quebec as the champions of their religion and their nationality.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier was quite aware that his amendment would not carry. The hon. member for Beauharnois, when he moved his amendment yesterday, stated at the outset that he well knew what its fate would be here, but that he expected better treatment elsewhere. Such is the motive, as stated by the hon. member for Beauharnois, which induces them to take that stand just now; they hope that the electors of the province of Quebec may thereby be made to recognize the worth of our hon. friends, more fully, perhaps, than it is recognized on this side of the House.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier is well aware that the British North America Act does not guarantee the use of the French language in the Northwest. I notice that my hon. friend from Montmagny is laughing just now. Let him laugh, he does so everlastingly, although he would make us believe that he and the hon. gentleman for Labelle are the only two wise members of the House. I thought the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would resent the scathing references to him contained in the organ of my hon. friend from Labelle. I mean the 'Nationaliste', of Montreal.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) It matters very little to me what the hon. member may think or say concerning me; however, I would like to state once more that I have nothing to do with the 'Nationaliste.'

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I am very sorry to hear what the hon. member has just stated.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) The 'Nationaliste' heaps insults on hon. gentlemen who do not agree with the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) I have already denied under my signature having anything to do with the editorials of the 'Nationaliste,' and I demand that the hon. gentleman take back what he has just said.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) I did not state that the hon. member for Labelle had written these editorials; but I know, as everybody does, that the 'Nationaliste' is under the thumb of the member for Labelle. That newspaper is constantly saying that there is only one member of parliament worthy of the name, the member for Labelle. Now, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) will, I presume henceforth be classed along with the member for Labelle, and looked up to by that newspaper as stalwart advocates of the French Canadian cause. The 'Nationaliste' has informed us that the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier is straightening up.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to send me a copy of that issue of the 'Nationaliste.'

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) With the utmost pleasure. In moving this amendment, the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier may have some other object. He may be intent on breaking away from gentlemen on the other side and joining in with the member for Labelle, as I see that the friends of the hon. gentleman for Jacques Cartier are rather hard on him. For instance, the Hamilton 'Spectator,' a Conservative organ, referring to the rumor that the French Canadian members of the opposition were about to sever their party ties and to join the Liberals, thus expresses itself. Here are the very words it uses:

> But if it should be that the Quebec French Conservatives are actually thinking of going over to the Liberal party, bag and baggage, then we say that they cannot do it too soon for the good of the Conservative party and of the Dominion of Canada.

That may be the reason which induces the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to break away from the Conservative party; although he prefers joining the hon. member for Labelle, rather than becoming a follower of the right hon. leader of the government, whom the friends of the member for Jacques Cartier have always pointed out to as a man unworthy of the confidence of the people, as a traitor to his race and to his religion. However, if the member for Jacques Cartier falls in with his colleague from Labelle, let him make up his mind to be ever ready to pardon insults, as the hon. gentleman from Labelle unhesitatingly terms a traitor and a coward whoever differs from his views. I think the hon. gentlemen on the other side will have to be firmly determined, if they wish to get along with the member for Labelle, as he will, no doubt, make life miserable for them.

In rising to address the House, I was anxious to state that the hon. members who follow the leadership of the right hon. Prime Minister, rather than that of the hon. member for Labelle are not and do not play the part of cowards, as that hon. gentleman has thought fit to assume. I do not think that our fellow-citizens in the province of Quebec will look upon as traitors and cowards those members who think that the light shed by the hon. member for Labelle is in no way brighter than that shed by the right hon. leader of the government. I make no special reference to the lights of the hon. member for Montmagny, as he puts his whole confidence in the member for Labelle and is guided solely by that luminary. In a matter of this kind, I think it is a greater evidence of courage to vote against the amendment, than to follow the lead of the members for Labelle and Montmagny; for Conservative organs, such as the 'Evenement,' will not fail to brand us as cowards, renegades, &c. If, on the contrary, we supported the member for Labelle, the 'Nationaliste' would be flying its colours in our honour Sunday next. In voting against that motion, we are in danger of being struck down by the thunderbolts of the tory party hurled by its public men and newspapers with the help of the members for Labelle and Montmagny, as well as of the 'Nationaliste.'

In going over the 'Hansard' for 1890, when that question was discussed in this House, I noticed a speech delivered by the late Sir Wm. Edgar, who came to be later on Speaker of this House, and who was known as one of the great friends of the French Canadian. That speech was a vindication of our rights. It was an eloquent appeal in our favour, and wound up with the following words, which should be a lesson to our hon. friends:

> I shall also take the liberty of counselling them not to ask for anything unreasonable, or for anything which will give their enemies an excuse for open and continued hostility towards them.

I think the above words uttered by that great friend of our race should have caused the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to reflect before introducing his motion. I think it is a very unwise policy on the part of the French Canadian to ask for privileges which it is not possible to grant, which are not guaranteed by the constitution, which could not be given effect to and which it is not reasonable to expect.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Why?

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation.) For all the reasons which have been given here to-night and which my hon. friend from Laval would have grasped no doubt had he been present.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I have been here all the time.

Mr. LAPOINTE. (Translation). I do not deem it necessary to speak at greater length. I must thank my hon. friend from Montmagny for the highly complimentary certificate which he has given to his colleagues in this House. If I had any desire of being ironical towards him, I might suggest that a good many of those who he brands as cowards are the very people who helped most to bring about his election in Montmagny.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation). Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to reply to the hon. member for Kamouraska, beyond saying that to-morrow the government newspapers in the province of Quebec will proclaim that he delivered this evening the finest, the greatest and the most eloquent of speeches.

Mr. GLADU. (Yamaska.) (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, following the example of the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) I wish to give my reasons for voting against the motion introduced by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

I must first draw attention to the fact that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier who has constituted himself the champion of the rights of the French language is the same hon. gentleman who, ten years ago, in this House moved the abolition of that same French language.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I deny it emphatically.

Mr. GLADU. (Translation.) I think I am in a position to prove what I say. If, Mr. Chairman, you will refer to the 'Hansard' for the second session of 1896, at page 2214, you will find that a proposal was made to cut down certain expenditure; and that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier expressed himself as follows :

> Mr. MONK. There is an item of nearly $2,000 here for the translation of statistics into French. I do not deny that that may be necessary, but it seems to me that in future some scheme might be devised by which that expense should be avoided. The statistics are perfectly well understood in English, just as well as in French by the members in the province of Quebec, and it seems to me that something might be done—say if it were placed in the hands of a committee of French members to prevent this expenditure. Most of the expressions used in our province with reference to the statistics are English expressions, and this would consequently appear to be an absolute waste of money.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Does not the hon. member think that $2,000 is rather excessive expenditure for that amount of work ?

Mr. GLADU. (Translation.) In my turn I shall ask the hon. member for Jacques Cartier whether, when he decided to introduce the motion which is now before the House, he had in mind the one he moved in 1896 ? He contends that the amount was excessive, but if that was truly the motive which urged the hon. gentleman to act on that occasion, I may be allowed to inquire whether he might not have attained his object otherwise than by asking as he did that the French translation be done away with. That is direct evidence that the motion introduced by the hon. gentleman is not the outcome of a desire to promote the French language, but has an entirely different object. We all know in the province of Quebec that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is a most distinguished jurist, an eminent lawyer, a highly considered professor of Laval University ; and it is that hon. gentleman who now brings in a proposal which, as he himself stated a moment ago, is absolutely without any meaning. In fact, what does the hon. member ask for? He is quite willing that provision be made for the official use of both English and French, in the new Western provinces ; but he wishes, at the same time, that this right be a matter left to the free will of the legislatures of the new provinces, whose members will be at liberty to do away with it whenever they think fit. If the hon. gentleman had been in earnest, he would have struck out the latter part of his motion, in the way suggested a moment ago by the hon. member for Labelle.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why did the hon. member add that second part to his motion? For a very simple reason. I do not wish to be unfair or to unduly impute motives, but at the same time we should endeavour to find out the true motive of his action. Why has the hon. member added to his motion the last clause whereby he asks that this right be dependent on the consent of the legislature ? It is in order that, in the province of Quebec, the hon. gentleman and his friends may be in a position to say: we have asked that in the Territories, provision be made for the use of the French language. And these gentlemen will also be free to add : the Liberal members from the province of Quebec have voted against that motion. On the other hand, the latter part of the motion meets the requirements of the province of Ontario. Then these gentlemen may state to their friends in Ontario : True, we made such a proposal, but it had no meaning since its carrying out was left entirely in the hands of the legislature.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I see that my hon. friend intends supporting the amendment moved by the member for Labelle.

Mr. GLADU. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman may rest assured that I intend decidedly to vote against that motion. Now, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier flushed with indignation, a few moments ago, in defending the position taken by the hon. member for Labelle. He was recalling, in no smooth terms, what the Solicitor General had said last night—'You are pulling with Dr. Sproule.'

The Solicitor General may have used this expression, and it is hard to make it a crime for him to have used it, but I dare say it may not be so hard to prove that he was perfectly right. There is a way to pull together in two different directions, and if it should be true that extremes meet, then I think I am fairly justified in stating that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the hon. member for East Grey (Dr. Sproule) are hugging each other pretty closely at times. Coming again to the hon. members for Labelle and Beauharnois, I think it incumbent upon me to take up, as was done a moment ago by the hon. member for Kamouraska, the unwarranted insult hurled at the French-speaking members in this House, when we were charged by them with being cowards and poltroons. He who refuses to perform his duty is undoubtedly a coward and a poltroon, but he also is a coward and a poltroon who does not perform his duty the way he should. To charge the French-speaking members on this side of the House with being cowards and poltroons as did the hon. member for Labelle last night, I think I can fairly be allowed to retort, with all due deference to the chair, that the expression cowardice does not apply to those it was aimed at, but rather to those who uttered it. Why insult the Prime Minister? Can any occasion be pointed out when the right hon. the leader of the government has shown himself to be unworthy of his countrymen? I challenge the hon. member for Labelle to point out to a single action, a mere fact, any circumstance whatever in his lifetime which justifies the insult? I do not know that the Prime Minister was in any way unworthy of his countrymen when in England, where he held out so successfully against Mr. Chamberlain, the most powerful man in Great Britain at that time, and where he the Prime Minister of a British colony, was putting his political career at stake by resisting so vigorously such a mighty statesman. Would this be one of the occasions in which he displayed his lack of courage? I do not believe either that the Hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) deserved to be called a coward by the hon. member for Labelle. Was he acting the part of a coward when he stood firm against one of the most gigantic trusts that ever operated in this country, in order to put a stop to the shameful dealings that had been going on for some years? Surely not.

I meant to make these few remarks on the motion put by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, for the purpose of explaining the vote that I am about to give.

Mr. MILLER. I hesitate to take up the time of the House at this late hour, but I shall detain you only for a few moments. I would not speak at all were it not that our good humoured good natured and able friend the member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) said he would make his appeal largely to the English-speaking members of this House, of whom he said he thought they were perhaps broader-minded than some of his own compatriots. I do claim to be broad-minded; I would rather deserve the reputation of being broad-minded than almost anything else a man can have a reputation for, and, as a broad-minded Canadian, as a broad-minded member of this House, I shall reply to the invitation of my hon. friend in a few words. Before coming to this House I had but a limited knowledge of the French Canadian people, not having had many opportunities to come personally in contact with them. I came here without any prejudice whatever against my French Canadian fellow citizens, either because of their language or because of their religion ; but since coming here, I can say that my greater knowledge of them has certainly not led me to esteem them less highly or appreciate less their value as fellow citizens of this great Dominion. I think we will all admit that the French is a beautiful language. Our sons and daughters are studying that language, and deem their education quite incomplete without a knowledge of it. We, Sir, who are ignorant of the language, who have not been sufficiently able or have not had sufficient opportunity to acquire a knowledge of it, deeply regret our ignorance; but as our children are studying today and acquiring a knowledge of the French language because of its beauty and its place in literature, so are the children of our French Canadian citizens studying and learning the English language because of its utility. They are learning the English language because it is fast becoming the commercial language of the world; because it is the language of the people of Great Britain from whom we buy so largely and to whom we sell so largely; because it is the language of the great American republic to the south of us with whom we so largely deal; and because the English language is the language of the larger portion by far of the people of this Dominion, it seems to me it goes without saying that if in the new provinces there is to be but one official language, it ought to be the English as a matter of convenience and utility. I object to implanting in the new provinces any second language, not because it is French, but because it is a second language, and because only one, it seems to me, is required.

In the first place, I would object to the establishing officially of the French language in the new provinces because of the additional expense. It would involve the additional expense of printing and the greater expense of translation. That, however, would be the smaller reason. The greater reason I would have for objecting to an official recognition of the French language in the new provinces would be the inconvenience attending its use. If for instance a French Canadian member should address this House in French, the greater number of us would fail to understand what he said. We would know that he was speaking eloquently by his manner of speaking, by the manner in which he appeals to the other members who understand him; but to us this language is a blank, whereas we might, perhaps, if we understood his speech, be considerably influenced by his argument. But when a member speaks in French, which the great majority of us do not understand, he fails to have any influence on the greater part of the House, and his speech loses a great part of its power and effect. I am surprised that our French colleagues, should insist, any of them, upon the use of the French language as an official language in the new provinces. It seems to me entirely unnecessary that it should be so recognized. When a French Canadian member, who would naturally speak French, gets up to address this House, he does not require to use any other language than the English to convey his ideas and make his meaning clear. We cannot but admire those hon. gentlemen, whose mother tongue is the French, but who address the House in English. They put the English speaking members to shame by the eloquence and ability with which they express themselves. The right hon. the First Minister, the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue, the hon. the Solicitor General, and the very eloquent and able member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) on that side of the House, and upon this side of the House the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and the other French Canadian members, almost without exception surpass in eloquence and ability, while speaking in the English language, the English speaking members. And it would be cruel on their part to seek to use any language by which they would excel any more than they now do those of us who speak the English language. I can easily understand how it would appeal to every worthy sentiment of the French people that their language should be recognized as an official one. So it would appeal in like manner to the Germans that their language should be similarly recognized. We have many Germans in this country, they are pouring into the western provinces in very large numbers, they are as good citizens as we have in Canada, just as industrious, loyal and economical and as enterprising and as clever as the citizens of French or British origin; and just as it would appeal to the sentiments of the French Canadians that we should use officially the French language, would the official use of the German tongue appeal to the Germans. But we do not appeal to the sentiments of Englishmen in using the English language. If we are in the same manner and to the same extent to reach the heart and appeal to the sentiment of what we may term the British Canadian, we will use, not the English language, but for one section the Gaelic, the language of the forefathers of the Highland Scotch. For another section, we would use the ancient Erse, and for another the language of Wales. But we do not do that. No one asks us to do that, and I say that the English language is a peculiar one. The English of to-day is a language of recent growth and construction—I might almost say of recent manufacture. It bears scarcely any resemblance to the old English of a few centuries ago. It is a composite language, drawn from many sources, contributed to largely by the French, and made richer, fuller and more expressive by that which is contributed to it from the beautiful language of the land across the channel. I say that the English language of to-day is a composite and a commercial language, and we do not appeal to the sentiment of the English people when we use it. There never was a day in the history of Canada when the French language was being studied by so large a number of the children of the British Canadian people as the present, and the use, the study, the knowledge of the French language will not be increased to any degree, it seems to me, by its official recognition in the two new provinces or be discouraged by the refusal to so recognize it. My hon. friend from Labelle has said that some people may make some unpleasant reference to the fact that the British conquered Canada in recent years. I have never heard any one make any such reference; but should any such reference be made, it could be easily replied that away back in the eleventh century French soldiers crossed the channel and conquered Britain; and I believe that the conquest in 1066 the infusion of French blood into British veins, consequent upon that French invasion, has made the people of the British islands a better people than they would be without it. And I believe that the time will come, in a more or less distant future, when we will have a better Canadian people because we have sprung, not alone from the British stock, but from the British and French and the German as well, and we shall see Canada prosperous and great, not because we have perpetuated differences of race or creeds or the jealousies which accompany such differences, but because, while not forgetting the traditions of France, or the glories of Scotland, or England, or Ireland, Wales or Germany, and the traditions of our ancestors from whatever land we have come, we realize that we are first of all Canadians and a united people, and that we all unite in our endeavours to make our country what it is destined to become. I heard my hon. friend from Labelle express the desire that there should be in the new provinces an Anglo-French alliance. Sir, I do not like that term as applied to Canada. An Anglo-French or an Anglo-German alliance may be all right in Europe, but I do not like to hear of it in Canada. When we speak of an Anglo-French alliance, it seems to me we speak of an agreement between two separate parties, and when we speak of such an agreement, we speak of something which may be entirely cancelled and made void. What I desire to see here is, not an Anglo-French or Anglo-German alliance, but a union of the several peoples who make up our population—a union that will be indissoluble, eternal and everlasting as the mountains and prairies of the new provinces themselves.

Amendment to amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 60.

On the amendment:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the amendment is put I would like to say two or three words. I have not been in favour of the sub-amendment that has just been disposed of for the same reason on account of which I am opposed to clause 16. But I am bound to say that if I could have supported clause 16 for the reasons which have been advanced by hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches, I would have been obliged to support this amendment; because I think the reasons in the one case are as conclusive as in the other. The right hon. gentleman last evening when he went beyond any argument yet given, accepted the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) because it continued a condition which now exists in the Territories, and which has been found satisfactory for a great many years. I will not trouble the House with quoting his words, that is the effect of them. Those are exactly the reasons that have been put forward by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). The only distinction between the two cases is the one put forward by the Prime Minister, and I think also by the Minister of Inland Revenue, which is, that the use of the French language in the courts of the Northwest Territories exists to-day, and has existed under sections 101 and 133 of the British North America Act. I do not think that the courts of the Northwest Territories were established under section 101 of the British North America Act, and therefore in my opinion that argument falls to the ground. I will not elaborate that now, I may do so afterwards if it is necessary; that is my opinion, for which I am prepared to give good and sufficient reasons. My main object in rising was to say that I think the Prime Minister, in his remarks this evening, has justified those who have argued in this House, and who have been much criticised for so arguing, that there was no compact by reason of which we should interfere with the control of the new provinces in respect of separate schools. The right hon. gentleman, to whose remarks in that regard I listened with a great deal of attention, made it abundantly clear that the policy of the government with regard to schools did not depend upon any compact. His language was absolutely explicit so far as that is concerned. It is true that a directly opposite view has been expressed many times on the other side of the House. I need only refer to the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice in that regard, which is to be found in his speech of the 3rd of May, where he refers to what he calls a parliamentary compact made with the people of the Northwest.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. A parliamentary compact under the Act of 1875, quoting the words of the Privy Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Exactly, the hon. gentleman is absolutely accurate in that regard, quoting, as I understand him, the language is one of the courts in that connection. It is made clear by the language of the Prime Minister that it is a parliamentary compact alone which is relied on. My right hon. friend does not depend upon the argument of the Minister of Inland Revenue; he agrees exactly with his Solicitor General who declares that the so-called compact of 1870 did not extend to the people of the Northwest Territories; it is therefore a parliamentary compact, a compact made in 1875 by the enactment of a statute. The argument based on that, as I understand it, is that although the legislation was temporary in its character, only to prevail while these Territories were to be governed as Territories, nevertheless there was a representation held out to the people who should go into them and that parliament is bound now to make good that representation. For reasons which I will not repeat, I have not been able to agree with that view. But I cannot distinguish between a parliamentary compact created by the Act of 1875 and a parliamentary compact created by the Act of 1877. That is the view I would take if I adopted the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite. If the Act of 1875 constituted a compact which we are obliged to carry out, why does not the Act of 1875 constitute also a compact which we are obliged to carry out? I have not been able to concur in the view that there is a compact; I have regarded both these matters as subjects proper to be dealt with by the people of the new provinces. My position with regard to the one is my position with regard to the other. Further than that, if we are to regard the existence of a compact as having been proved, it would seem to me that it was a compact the performance of which we might safely entrust to the people of the new provinces; because, under our system of government, where part of the jurisdiction is vested in parliament and part is vested in the legislature of a province, we must have regard to the expectation that good faith will be observed, and that if a compact has been made it will be carried out by the proper authority having jurisdiction in that regard. For this reason I have not been able to support the amendment; and for a similar reason which I have elaborated at greater length on previous occasions, I was not able to support the proposition of the government with regard to schools.

So far as the use of the French language in this country is concerned, we are absolutely bound to observe the obligations which have been created by treaty and by the constitution. If any remarks which have been made to-day would look in an opposite direction—I do not know whether they were so intended—I would absolutely dissent from them.

I agree with what has been said by my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) as to the value which we ought to attach to the French language in this country and the respect which we should pay to it. I have endeavoured, not so much by precept, but a little by example to manifest my belief in the principles which my hon. friend has voiced to-night and I am free to say to-night, as I have said on other occasions, that I think that perhaps it would be much more to the credit of the English speaking people of this country if they would teach their children the French language which is the mother tongue of more than 2,000,000. An hon. gentleman on the other side of the House referred the other evening to the circumstance that every educated Englishman who comes to this country is able to speak to our French Canadian friends in their own language, and that very circumstance which I have noticed over and over again has made me a little ashamed more than once because I have not been able to do this to my own satisfaction, or to the same extent. However, that is to a certain extent beside the question. We are dealing with the question of the enactment of a statute. I again repeat that the attitude which the government has taken in this connection to-night is a very ample justification for those of us who have taken a certain attitude in the past, and that the very strong criticism which has been used in regard to myself in some parts of the country is very much disarmed by what has been said this afternoon by my hon. friends sitting on the treasury benches.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have just a word to say in answer to my hon. friend as to the position which I have taken all along on this question. Not later than two days ago my hon. friend asked me, across the floor of the House, whether I rested my contention with regard to the schools upon anything else than section 93 of the British North America Act, and I answered my hon. friend at once that I rested my contention upon that and that alone. That has been my contention from the first and it is my contention yet. After four months I do not want to continue the discussion and with this remark I close that part of the debate. I have only one observation to offer to my hon. friend in regard to the courts of the Northwest Territories. I stated that in my judgment the reason why the use of the French language was continued in the courts in 1880 when the matter came before the House was that the courts in the Northwest Territories were not provincial courts but were directly under the jurisdiction of this parliament. I understand my hon. friend to controvert this point. I have no better authority to offer him at this moment than that of Sir John Thompson who was the author of the amendment which was adopted on that occasion and who, in 1890, as reported in 'Hansard' page 879 of that year, used the following words:

> When we undertake to say that we shall expunge from the statute book a provision that justice shall be administered or may be administered in either of the two languages used in the Northwest Territories, we are touching a subject far more important than the mere language of debate, and the mere language of the publication of the journals of a legislative body. These, sir are our courts; these are the courts of the Dominion of Canada. In respect to the provinces, power is given to the provincial legislatures, by the British North America Act, to establish the courts, and to regulate their organization, their maintenance, and the extent of their jurisdiction. That power, which rests on them, as regards the provincial courts, rests directly on this parliament as regards the courts of the Northwest Territories. We have imposed upon us the duty, not only of creating those courts, but of breathing into them the breath of life by giving them the jurisdiction they exercise and the procedure by which that jurisdiction is to be carried on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is not one word with which I do not agree, but the point is whether or not the power under which we created these courts is to be found in section 101 of the British North America Act, 1867, or in the British North America Act, 1871. I do not find anything in the language of Sir John Thompson which is in any way inconsistent with the view I have just now expressed that the courts referred to in section 101 are not temporary courts of the Territories, created for a temporary purpose, but that, they are courts of an entirely different character, such as the Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court. That is my humble opinion and I do not think there is anything in the language of Sir John Thompson which in any way is inconsistent with that. If I am right in that opinion, which I venture with all deference to submit, then, the argument which has been made by my right hon. friend and by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue would entirely disappear. I think we created courts in the Territories under the power which was given to us by the British North America Act, 1871.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think there is a very distinct line of cleavage between the educational privilege in the British North America Act and the question of language; in fact, with all due deference to my hon. friend, I cannot find any comparison between the two. The British North America Act provides in special sections for the distribution of legislative power. Section 93 of the British North America Act makes special provision for a code in respect to education applicable to all the provinces of the Dominion without any exception whatever. The effect of our legislation is to apply that code to the new provinces. There is also a provision in respect to language. Section 91 provides for the question of language. Section 91 provides that the provinces shall deal exclusively with property and civil rights which never include language and for the organization of the courts. So much is that the case, that it was found necessary to have a special provision to create an exception as far as the province of Quebec is concerned. That exception is created for one province, and that is the only province which enjoys this privilege with respect to language. That is the situation under the British North America Act. I state it briefly and imperfectly, simply because I intend, on the third reading, of this I now give notice, to discuss this question at that time, which I think is the proper time to discuss a matter of this importance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Just one word, so that when my hon. friend does discuss it he may understand what my position is. If the attitude of the government is based absolutely on section 93, without any changes on account of the supposed compact of 1875, I am with them. I have said that before; but that does not seem to be the attitude of the government. We may perhaps be at cross purposes about that; I do not know; but that does not seem to be the position of the government, because they have introduced changes in section 93 depending, as I understand it, upon the supposed legislative compact contained in the Act of 1875. If there is a legislative compact in the Act of 1875, it does seem to me that there is also a legislative compact in the Act of 1877. Have we the power to implement that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Undoubtedly we have the power to deal with the British North America Act in so far as these provinces are concerned.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I understand to be the attitude of the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Always bearing in mind the character of the provinces.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have the power, as I understand the position of the government, with which I do not agree, to take away from the new provinces any of the legislative jurisdiction which was conferred upon the original provinces by section 92, and therefore as members of the government we can deprive the provinces of their power to legislate respecting property and civil rights. Therefore, there seems to be no constitutional difficulty in the way from the standpoint of the government. But it is too late to enter into any further discussion. If the hon. Minister of Justice proposes to speak on the third reading of the Bill, it will be better to deal with it then.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The position the government take is a perfectly logical one. We argue that we can depart from the provisions of the British North America Act but without constitutionally destroying the province in so far as it should have those attributes which are essential to its provincial existence, but we depart in several instances from the provisions of the British North America Act, if we do depart in respect to education we also depart in respect to the tenure of land, in respect to provincial and municipal taxation in so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway are concerned and also in respect to the Hudson Bay privilege. My hon. friend will agree with us that if we can depart for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we can depart for the Hudson Bay Company, we can with respect to education.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the logical result.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not at all. So far as lands are concerned my position is simple. Section 109 simply provides that all lands, mines, minerals and royalties belonging to the several provinces shall continue to belong to them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is not the interpretation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Justice considers that section, he will see it does not deal with legislative jurisdiction, but with proprietary rights. Section 92 gives to the provinces power to deal with their lands, but whether they own the lands or not depends not upon the question of legislative jurisdiction but upon the terms and conditions mentioned in section 146 of the British North America Act. The terms and conditions mentioned in that Act can be varied indefinitely, but the legislative jurisdiction cannot be varied at all, in my humble opinion. I have not the good fortune to have the support of the Minister of Justice in that view, but nevertheless it is my view. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Hudson Bay rights are concerned, I have already expressed the opinion that the sections which have been adopted probably do not go further than to give the provinces notice of the agreements into which we have entered, and as to which they are bound just as much as we are. I repeat that there is nothing in these agreements which takes away the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament. It would be a monstrous thing for us to legislate them out of existence, but we would have the legislative power to do so, and when we impose what are supposed to be restrictions on the provinces in that respect, in my opinion we are doing nothing more than giving them notice that these bargains have been made; and that the Crown is bound by them and that the legislatures of the province are not to deal with these matters except consistently with these contracts into which the Crown has so entered. Technically the bargain is between the Crown and these companies, but the Crown expects that the legislature will observe the contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is a fact that there is a legislative restriction on their powers, and in effect it is the same thing. Now, Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I have grown old enough to be thoroughly convinced of the saying, that if speech is silver silence is golden. I must admit that my faith in that saying has been increased to some extent by what has occurred to-night. A great many things have been said to-night that might have been very well left unsaid. I did not intend to take any part in this debate, but I learned for the first time in my experience to-night that, with respect to this legislation, if we did not adopt this amendment we were going to abolish the French language in the Northwest Territories. It is undoubtedly a case of live and learn.

Mr. MONK. Did I say that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No; my hon. friend would not be responsible for anything of that sort; nobody would imagine it possible he would be responsible. We were also told that we were taking away a constitutional right. I would like to know whether there is a lawyer in this House who has any regard for his reputation who would be responsible for such a statement as that. We are continuing all the conditions existing at the present time; we are perpetuating the rights, whatever they may be, in the Northwest Territories with respect to language, leaving it to the legislature to determine hereafter to what extent these rights may be maintained. That is what we are doing; we are not taking away anything.

Amendment (Mr. Monk) negatived.

For the amendment, 6; against the amendment, 69.

Section 2 of the Bill agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In view of the amendment to the Irrigation Act to be introduced by the Minister of the Interior, I move that section 20 be amended so as to read:

The Crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto and the interest of the Crown in the Northwest Territories in the waters within the province under the Northwest Irrigation Act, &c.

Amendment agreed to.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 24—commencement of the Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved to strike out the word 'July' and substitute therefor the word 'October.'

Mr. LAKE. That would bring the elections into the middle of the winter, as I understand they must be held within six months from the 1st of October.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is suggested that it will be preferable to make the date the 1st of September instead of the 1st of October, and if it is agreeable, we will make that change.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The only question that remains is the preamble, and I would suggest that the hon. member for Hamilton bring his proposed amendment to the preamble on the third reading.

Preamble agreed to on division.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would call the attention of the members from the Northwest Territories to a letter which was addressed to me some time ago from Lloydminster, in these terms:

We understand that it is intended to make the fourth meridian the divisional line between the proposed new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

While we believe that the fouth meridian is in many ways a suitable divisional line, we beg to point out, that it will be detrimental to the interests of this town and surrounding district to be so divided, as to be partly in one province and partly in the other.

As the site of Lloydminster occupies section 2, township 50, range 28, fractional section 3, township 50, range 28, west of the third meridian, and the northeast and the southeast quarters of section 1, township 50, range 1, west of the fourth meridian, the proposed line will cut the town in two. We beg to submit for your consideration the accompanying plan whereon is indicated what we believe will be the more desirable arrangement in the interests of both the town of Lloydminster and the surrounding district.

You will note that while retaining the fourth meridian as the boundary line as far north as the Battle river the line is then deflected to the east and follows the course of the Battle river as far as the division line between ranges 23 and 24, and thence proceeds north along the said line to the Saskatchewan river and follows the course of the latter, westerly back to the fourth meridian. The divisional line between ranges 23 and 24 from the Battle to the Saskatchewan rivers passes through a sparsely settled and low lying country where there are no villages, and the suggested arrangement would not, we believe, be detrimental in any way.

This arrangement will place the whole of the so called British colony in the same province as Lloydminster, which is very desirable in the interests of the whole district.

We respectfully beg that this matter will receive your earnest consideration.

If the town of Lloydminster were fully settled, I think there would be a good deal to be said in favour of deflecting the line; but I understand that it is in its infancy as yet and that there are only a few houses on one side of the line, while all the other are on the other side; and to deflect the line would make it unshapely and inconvenient generally. Therefore, having consulted several gentlemen, I have not heard any reason favourable to the view put forth in this letter. The government would be glad to grant the wish of the settlers if there were not the inconveniences to which I have called attention.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is one matter with respect to which parliament can act afterwards with the consent of both legislatures—the boundaries of the two provinces.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What shall we say as to the third reading?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Can we not take up the Saskatchewan Bill to-day and insert the same clauses and the same amendments? It will be the work of only half an hour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps we had better let it stand until Monday. I would like to consider what amendments, if any, will have to be moved to that Bill to make our position clear. I am not referring to discussion; I am referring to formal amendments; because it is idle to repeat discussions. The schedule, however, I have no doubt will have to be discussed unless we come to an arrangement in committee. When do you propose to take the third reading of this Bill?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When will suit the convenience of hon. gentlemen opposite?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as I am concerned, I think it would be agreeable to take it on Tuesday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then, if it is agreeable to the hon. leader of the opposition, we might on Monday take up the Saskatchewan Bill and adopt the same amendments that we have made in this Bill. I have two or three other Bills ancillary to this which we might take up on Monday. Then, on Tuesday we would be ready to dispose of the whole legislation with respect to the new provinces.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that we shall be able to get through with it all on Tuesday. I understand that what you propose to do with the Saskatchewan Bill on Monday is to deal with in in committee?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is all.

Bill reported, as amended, amendments read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 12.15 A.M. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 3, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PREVENTION OF TUBERCULOSIS.

Mr. G. H. PERLEY. Some time ago a resolution was unanimously passed by this House declaring that some active steps should be taken to lessen the great mortality caused by tuberculosis. With the consent of the House I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Black:

That a special committee composed of Messrs. Barr, Béland, Black, Cash, Chisholm, Daniel, Dugas, Gordon, Hughes (Prince Edward Island), Johnston (Lambton), Laurence, Loggie, Miller, Paquet, Parmelee, Roche (Marquette), Schaffner, Schell (Oxford), Smith (Nanaimo), Thompson and the mover, be appointed to act as members, on the part of this House, of a joint committee of both Houses, for the purpose of considering what further steps should be taken and what suggestions can be made, in the direction of the suppression of tuberculosis in Canada, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time; and that that part of rule 83 which limits the number of members to serve on such committee be suspended.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). This motion is somewhat irregular, in that no notice has been given. But the Senate has already taken action in this matter, and this is simply a proposal to join in that action. And, as no interest can suffer through want of notice, I suppose there is no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PERLEY moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting their honours to unite with this House in the formation of a joint committee of both Houses for the purpose of considering what further steps should be taken, and what suggestions can be made in the direction of the suppression of tuberculosis in Canada, with power to send for persons papers and records, and to report from time to time, and informing them that Messrs. Barr, Béland, Black, Cash, Chisholm, Daniel, Dugas, Gordon, Hughes (Prince Edward Island), Johnston (Lambton), Lawrence, Loggie, Miller, Paquet, Parmelee, Roche (Marquette), Schaffner, Schell (Oxford), Smith (Nanaimo), Thompson and the mover, will act on behalf of the House of Commons as members of said joint committee, should the Senate agree to its creation.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 139) respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company. —Mr. Duncan Ross.

Mr. BARKER. I understood there was an arrangement between the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that this Bill was not to go on to-day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is an error ; I never heard of it.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is absent, and he has an amendment which he desires to move. I understood that the Bill was to stand over.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I know that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has given notice of an amendment. But my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) states that he understands that an arrangement has been made between the leader of the opposition and myself with regard to the Bill. There is no such arrangement. The leader of the opposition never mentioned the matter.

Mr. BARKER. I was informed that there was an understanding in some way that the Bill was not to go on to-day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I know nothing of it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may have arisen out of a note sent to me by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), stating, as I understood, that he would be absent on Wednesday. But I understood the Bill was to come on to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON. There seems to be a misunderstanding ; for the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) told me that the Bill would not come up until Wednesday because of his absence on Monday. I made no inquiry, but I understood from what he said that he had an arrangement made. He was going to move an amendment, and I understood the Bill was not coming up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say what the hon. member for North Toronto had in his mind. But, so far as I am concerned, not one word has been spoken to me on the subject of having the Bill postponed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not say that the member for North Toronto had an arrangement with the Prime Minister—I do not know with whom he had the arrangement or understanding ; but he certainly understood clearly that the Bill would not come up to-day. That is all I know about it. There seems to have been a misunderstanding; and, if the government, on account of there having been a misunderstanding, could allow the Bill to stand over, I think it would be very well.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If it were government business, we would certainly have no objection in agreeing to have the matter stand over to a convenient day. But this is not government business, and it is for the promoter to say what should be done.

Mr. D. ROSS. This is the first I have heard of any arrangement made to postpone the Bill until Wednesday. A number of supporters of the Bill have remained over purposely to be here when the Bill should come up to-day. And, as this is a private members' day, I do not see how we can postpone the consideration of the Bill until Wednesday next.

Mr. TISDALE. I saw it stated in the newspapers that, when this Bill was last before the committee, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) stated that he had an amendment which he would move when the Bill came up for consideration again.

Mr. BUREAU. Why is he not here ?

Mr. TISDALE. I am not dealing with his not being here. I am dealing with the question of what the government are going to do about it. And also I am asking for information as to the correctness of certain newspaper reports which I have read. According to the newspapers the hon. member for North Toronto stated that he would postpone the motion he proposed to move in order to ascertain—as I understood—what the amendment was which the government proposed to move.

The amendment proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) may be met by the promised announcement of the government with regard to their policy on this Bill. It is quite certain that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) intended to move his amendment unless the government announced a policy in consonance with it.

Mr. EMMERSON. When this Bill was under the consideration of the Railway Committee the hon. member (Mr. Foster) proposed the following amendment :

3a. It is hereby provided that the Governor in Council shall grant no permission to construct any part of the proposed road south of the International boundary unless it be shown to be necessary in order to overcome engineering difficulties, nor until satisfactory guarantees are given that the line from Cloverdale to Princeton will be completed on Canadian territory within a reasonable time.

After some discussion it was agreed that the consideration of that proposed amendment would be gone on with in the House. It involved a question of policy that might or might not affect the government, and the Minister of Finance suggested that in the meantime the government might consider the matter and make an announcement to the House. The matter has been considered and in the judgment of the government they do not deem it necessary to impose these restrictions on this railway.

On section 3,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This clause is amended by striking out the word 'company' in the 43rd line and replacing it by the words 'Governor in Council'; and in the 46th line by adding after the word 'may' the words, 'subject to the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners.'

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Do I understand the statement made by the Minister of Railways to cover the objection taken by the Minister of Justice that the Bill as framed would probably divert trade from Canada ? Is it the intention of the government to insert any protecting clause in the Bill ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. HAGGART. How do we come to consider the first clause ? I did not understand that the other clauses of the Bill were carried.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. All the clauses of the Bill have been carried except 3 and 4.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not understand it that way.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member (Mr. Haggart) is correct as to what took place in the Railway Committee, but the Bill has since been before the Committee of the Whole House and all the clauses except 3 and 4 were carried.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not in the House when that was done.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that this is the only amendment to be made to clause 3 ?

Mr. TISDALE.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest that one thing should be done at a time.

Mr. BERGERON. In the Railway Committee as well as in the House the other night, there was a question as to the wording of this clause and the House waited an expression of opinion from the government. There is more in the clause than the reference to the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners. For instance the last five lines of the clause read :

And may construct, aid in the construction of, and when constructed maintain and operate such part of the continuous line of the companies railway instead of the line authorized by the Acts relating to the company and by this Act.

I understood from the Minister of Justice that this wording would be changed. It would seem to create two companies instead of one which would be a most extraordinary proceeding.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has been considered by the Railway Committee, such as it is, and approved.

Mr. BERGERON. It was only passed by the Railway Committee on the understanding that an announcement would be made by the government in the House and that some change might be made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The only expression of opinion asked from the government was on the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the Minister of Railways has said that we have no intention of accepting this amendment.

Mr. BERGERON. I am speaking of the last five lines of the clause, to which I would refer the right hon. gentleman. It looks as if the intention were to incorporate two companies instead of one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The attention of the government has never been called to that point.

Mr. HENDERSON. An hon. member a few moments ago asked why the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was not here. I have already explained that the hon. member was under the impression that this matter would not come up until Wednesday. However, I think it makes no difference now. The government having announced their policy on the question, I do not think any one on this side of the House desires to move that amendment. I had a good deal to say with respect to this Bill in the Railway Committee. I never opposed the construction of the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway; only I contend that it should be constructed throughout on Canadian territory in accordance with the original charter. I still hold to the same opinion, and I believe that those who voted in the Railway Committee as I did felt that the original desire of the people of British Columbia in 1897, when they granted a charter to this railway company, was to have a road constructed in Canadian territory. I did not even oppose a road diverging into the United States if that was absolutely necessary. I moved an amendment in the Railway Committee to the effect that the road from Burrard Inlet or Vancouver to Princeton should be constructed before permission was given to cross the boundary line; but that did not prevent the company crossing the boundary line. My intention was to make sure that the road from Cloverdale to Princeton should be constructed at all hazards. I desire to make my position perfectly clear. I never opposed the construction of this road; but I endeavoured to procure for the people of British Columbia an all-Canadian road from Similkameen valley through New Westminster to Vancouver, before there should be any divergence into the State of Washington. Now that the government have announced their policy, I do not think that the hon. member for North Toronto, even if he were here, would move his amendment. I do not see any advantage in it. All the information I could get from British Columbia, from the newspapers, from the resolutions of boards of trade, and in other ways, was that the people wanted the road from the coast to the Kootenay built on Canadian territory, and I did all I could to secure that. If there is any responsibility for the divergence of the road before it is completed from Cloverdale to Princeton, the government assume it and leave the promoters of the road free to construct the Canadian portion or not, before they diverge to the United States.

Mr. GALLIHER. I believe that the members whom the people of British Columbia have sent here can be trusted to look after the interests of British Columbia without calling to their aid the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). I was rather amused to hear the hon. member state that he has always been in favour of this Bill. If you turn up the records, I think you will find that the hon. member for Halton among others voted against the preamble. With regard to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halton, that the company should not be allowed to cross the boundary line until they built from the coast to Princeton, what would that have meant? It would have meant at least the loss of two years before the road from Princeton to Medway in the boundary country could have been built, and that valley would have been without railway service. I feel satisfied, and so do my colleagues from British Columbia, that the road from Princeton to Vancouver will be running over all-Canadian territory before another railway builds from Princeton to the boundary country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am quite prepared to defend myself in this House without the aid of the hon. member. He tells us that the people of British Columbia have sent certain representatives here who he says are able to look after the interests of British Columbia. Well, I am not very sure that they are.

Mr. GALLIHER. If we are not, we will send for some one we have more confidence in than the hon. member for Halton.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member may keep his mind easy. A year ago the hon. member made an elaborate speech in this House pleading with the government for a duty on lead. He did that in response to a request from the people of British Columbia, and when the vote came on, he turned around and voted against it. He voted down the very resolution which would have given him what he wanted. Does he mean to tell us that he is here to defend the interests of British Columbia?

Mr. GALLIHER. Since then the people elected me by the second largest majority in British Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON. The vote of the hon. member last year shows that he is here first in the interests of his political party. I believe in supporting the interests of my province and country first, even if I have to vote against my party, in a matter of such material consequence. After the hon. gentleman told us that he wanted a duty on lead, I was ashamed to see him cast a vote declaring that protection to that industry was not required. After that the hon. gentleman need not tell us that the people of British Columbia can trust their representatives. But that is aside from the question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. But I think it is sufficient to show that the hon. gentleman is not what he represents himself to be, namely, a pure representative of the interests of British Columbia. I repeat there is no object on this side in moving the resolution proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto. The government having taken their position on that question, I have no desire to do it nor have we on this side. I leave it to the government to carry out the policy they have proposed. I thought it would be a good thing to get some assurance from the railway company, which is seeking a charter, that they would construct that road on Canadian territory. All that I asked was a guarantee that that should be done, but did not want to refuse them a charter to cross the boundary line if they desired. I think our amendment was extremely moderate and fair. All we wanted to do was to protect Canadian interests; and these interests being protected, we tell the company practically by a resolution that if they desire to cross the boundary line by diverting the railway, they may do so if absolutely necessary. I have no desire to continue this discussion. I have made my position perfectly clear. Every step I took in the Railway Committee was in the interests of the province of British Columbia by securing an all-Canadian line on Canadian territory; and to secure it beyond doubt, we should hold as a guarantee that the Canadian portion of the line should be built, crossing the boundary by diverging a short distance into the United States. If we have failed, we have at least done everything the people of British Columbia ask us to do. I feel perfectly satisfied that I have done nothing contrary to the interests of British Columbia.

Mr. D. ROSS. All I have to say in reply to the hon. gentleman for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is this, that the people of British Columbia will not forget what he and his friends have done.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad to hear that statement.

An hon. MEMBER. Everybody is satisfied.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is everybody satisfied ? The people of British Columbia will not object to what I have done. I have done all I could to secure a Canadian line on Canadian territory before allowing any divergence to the United States. I am much pleased with the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to tell the hon. gentleman that the people of British Columbia will not forget the part he took in doing his best to fasten something on them which he would not attempt to do in his own province. He does not want our railways to be run into American territory for fear that they will carry away Canadian trade. Why did he not take that line when the Canadian Pacific Railway got a charter to draw trade from Winnipeg to St. Paul and from Vancouver to Seattle ?

Mr. HENDERSON. The answer is very plain. I hold in my hand a copy of a resolution passed by the board of trade of Chilliwack.

An hon. MEMBER. Where is it ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I know where the place is, if the hon. gentleman does not, but I am not here as his geographer. The resolution is as follows :

> Resolved that Mr. J. B. Kennedy be urged to move or support in the Railway Committee an amendment to the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern charter to the effect that the road to the west from Princeton be laid out, constructed and operated through Canadian territory to the south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that construction be commenced continuously with the beginning of construction in the boundary district, and that this be a condition precedent to the granting of the said charter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who is Mr. Kennedy ?

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for Westminster. There you have the board of trade from his own district asking the identical thing I proposed in my amendment. I was acting in the interests of the people of British Columbia by endeavouring to have carried out what they desire, as shown by the resolutions of their board of trade, and I have my course of action confirmed here by the telegram in my hand giving a copy of the resolution of the Chilliwack board of trade. I think that when the hon. member for Westminster considers the whole question, he will be satisfied that my course was in the interests of the people, and in not one instance did I say a word or call for a vote that operated against their interests.

Mr. HAGGART. The object of the amendment of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was to provide that if this road be built westward in the Similkameen Valley, it should be built upon Canadian territory; and if found impossible to build it entirely upon Canadian territory, power was to be given to the Governor in Council to inquire into the subject and allow a diversion into American territory. The other part of the amendment was to empower the Governor in Council to take means to see that the western part of the road, the road to Vancouver, should be built, not pari passu with the eastern section, but to see that there should be some guarantee that it should be built. I am not sure but that, under the clause proposed, all that is required by the amendment of my hon. friend from North Toronto is provided. I think the clause throws the responsibility, if the road passes out of American territory, upon the Governor in Council; and if any arrangement should be made with the lines to the south, the responsibility of the whole arrangement is cast upon the Railway Committee. In the meantime I do not see any objection to this section passing. The only thing suggested by the hon. member for North Toronto, which perhaps is not in the Bill, is that there should be some guarantee that the western portion of the road will be built. However, after it passes through committee, the next stage will be taken on Wednesday, and the hon. member for North Toronto may then be here and move his amendment to the Bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have no desire to offer any amendment to this clause at all or to consider the matter further than to suggest that, in the interests of the people and of those promoting the legislation, it would be very much wiser for them to amend the form in which it now is. Leaving the gentlemen who are responsible for this legislation to deal with the suggestion as they choose, I would submit that the clause be amended by inserting the following words, at the beginning of the section:

Upon the establishment, to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that in order to the avoidance of difficulties of construction, it is reasonably necessary so to do——

Section 3, agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. TISDALE. There is one point in connection with this clause which is worthy of the consideration of the government. As the clause is worded the government is not required to approve of any agreements made. This, I think, is a very serious departure from the usual practice of this parliament; heretofore we have not authorized any such agreement without its being subject to the approval of the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is left to the Railway Commission in this.

Mr. TISDALE. I submit that this is a matter involving policy and it is a dangerous innovation to take from the country and from parliament the safeguard that the government shall be responsible for all agreements of this kind. I do not think it was intended that the Railway Commission should have these duties.

Mr. HAGGART. But the Railway Commission have not these duties.

Mr. TISDALE. It was asserted in the committee the other day that the Railway Committee would have this authority. Whether they have or have not I think the government should not divest itself of that responsibility. I think that in this case, in this particular Bill, we are throwing a new and unconstitutional duty on the Railway Commission. If I am right in that view I think it is a serious objection. While I am not in accord with many things the government do and with their policy upon some things I am in accord with them in the view that we should carefully guard their responsibility in matters of this kind because they represent the whole country. I think, as I said, that this is a novel and dangerous departure.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My last suggestion with respect to clause 3 was so enthusiastically received that I am encouraged to make another suggestion with respect to clause 4. Section 4 is one which I think deserves a moment's consideration. The first paragraph provides for agreements that are to be made with certain railway corporations, but section 2 of section 4 reads:

2. Upon any such agreements being entered into the railway or portion thereof to which such agreements apply shall thereupon become and is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and may be operated as a portion of the railway of the company.

That seems to leave us somewhat in the dark. What road is to be declared for the general advantage of Canada, what portion of road? I do not want to discuss this matter at length, but I wish to make my protest against legislation of that description.

Mr. D. ROSS. The roads to which this applies are mentioned in section 4, they are the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company, the Victoria Terminal Railway and Ferry Company, and the New Westminster Southern Railway Company, or any of them. I might say that under their provincial legislation all these companies have the right to enter into agreements with other companies. Similar legislation was passed by the Railway Committee of this House this session of parliament in connection with the Dominion Atlantic Railway.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think these are all Canadian railways that are mentioned.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice should not be content with a protest. If I correctly understand the principles of constitutional government, the government are responsible not only for government measures but for all legislation introduced into this House; they are as much responsible for this Bill as if it had been a government Bill, and if the Minister of Justice states that two clauses of it are not in accordance with what he thinks is right, then it is the duty of the government to see that they are put right or else the government are laying aside one of their absolute duties. A part of their function is to see that all legislation, not only that introduced by themselves, but all legislation, is correct and has the approval of the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is something to be said in favour of the contention just enunciated by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart). On the other hand I must say that the government as a rule take the position upon these Bills which are reported from the Railway Committee that the House ought to support the committee, presuming that the matter has been carefully attended to in that committee. But when an objection of the serious character just mentioned by the Minister of Justice is brought to the attention of the government it is a thing which cannot be overlooked. As the matter is now brought to my attention for the first time I may safely say that in my judgment the Bill while it should pass, ought to be allowed to stand until Monday next and during the interval this matter may be looked into.

Mr. GALLIHER. As I read section 4 the first part is that the company may enter into an agreement with the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company, which is a Canadian company; the Victoria Terminal Railway and Ferry Company, which is a Canadian company; and the New Westminster Southern Railway Company, which is also a Canadian company. They are permitted to enter into an agreement with all or any of these three companies, and the second section says that when such an agreement is entered into with either one or all of these three it shall be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. What is there in that legislation that is not in line with the legislation that is passed in this House every session? I am willing to accept or to consider any suggestion the Minister of Justice will make with reference to this. I hope I have not been discourteous; I did not intend to be sarcastic in reference to the amendment of the minister a moment ago. I did not speak upon it and did not intend to treat it in that way. Far be it from me to take such a position. The suggestions of the minister are suggestions that I think every one of us is bound to consider carefully, and if there is anything wrong in section 4 or any departure from the ordinary principles of legislation in it, I am willing to consider any suggestion the Minister of Justice may make in that behalf.

Mr. BARKER. I think there is a good deal in what the Minister of Justice has said for the consideration of the hon. member who has just spoken. We all know that in this House we have power to declare that a particular work is a work for the general advantage of Canada and certain results flow from that declaration. It has become the practice of this House to declare anything for the general advantage of Canada that the promoter of a Bill chooses to so style in that Bill, but the statement in this Bill goes a little further than any we have yet had. It does seem a hypothetical declaration, if certain things happen in the future it is a work for the general advantage of Canada, but if these things do not happen in the future I presume it is not a work for the general advantage of Canada. That is the point practically that the Minister of Justice is raising.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not only that, but you can declare a specific work, which is certain and is known, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, but can you declare in advance that a work or a portion of a work which is not defined or described may become a work for the general advantage of Canada? That is to say, can you say that a portion of something that is not in existence to-day may become subject to our legislation. I am not saying this in order to criticise the Bill, but in the well-understood interest of this legislation if it is seriously intended to carry it. When the courts are called upon to construe this Act in the future how are they to know what portion of the road is to be for the general advantage of Canada? How are the courts to determine which Railway Act, the provincial or the Dominion, will be applicable? In case of expropriation how are you to proceed?

Mr. GALLIHER. Is there a Bill that goes through this House authorizing a railway, before a mile of it is built, in which the railway is not declared to be for the general advantage of Canada? What would the Minister of Justice suggest? I am willing, as I say, to consider any suggestion. I do not want to see the Bill delayed and it must not be forgotten that we declare railways before a mile is built to be for the general advantage of Canada. This is simply a permission to enter into an agreement with existing companies; they are not mythical companies. If an agreement is entered into with actual existing companies in Canada surely we can declare them to be for the general advantage of Canada, if we can make a similar declaration in Bills relating to railways of which not a mile has been built.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What you do here is to authorize the company to enter into an agreement with the other companies. Then you go on to say that the others which are mere provincial concerns may become Dominion concerns. You do more than that. I can understand legislation of that description, but you do more, you not only declare the company that is in contemplation to be for the general advantage of Canada, but you declare any portion of its line to be for the general advantage of Canada. What portion? What are you dealing with? What is it that you are bringing under the scope of our legislation?

An hon. MEMBER. The railway.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be a mile of railway.

Mr. TISDALE. I want the gentlemen who are supporting this Bill to understand that others are just as anxious as they are to see it pass in a proper shape, and they must not think that we are obstructing their Bill. The clauses of section 281 of the Railway Act apply, which requires that the charter should be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and that proper notices should be given. But in section 3 the agreement is even more important, because their powers are taken for amalgamation, they are more important than an ordinary agreement between two roads in Canada. If it is only two roads in Canada, they have to go through all the proceedings that are mentioned in 281. Now, section 3 absolutely removes it from the Railway Act, in my opinion, because it refers the terms of that agreement to the Board of Railway Commissioners, an entirely different board from that to which all other agreements and amalgamations by our Railway Act are approved. I doubt if the Railway Committee the other morning considered what was in the other clause.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will my hon. friend read the section of the Railway Act?

Mr. TISDALE. Section 281 is headed 'Amalgamations and agreements,' and is followed by 282 and 283, which are too long to read. Clause 4 of the agreement between Canadian companies refers to 281. Clause 3 goes on to state that agreements may be entered into between an American road and a Canadian road for running rights and so forth. Now, by this special Act we have referred the terms of this agreement to the Railway Commission, something that, in my opinion, was never intended to be referred to the Railway Commission. I want the Minister of Railways to look at this clause and look at clause 3 and see if the suggestion that I made in the committee ought not to prevail. It hurts nobody; on the contrary, the time will come when the promoters of the Bill will thank me for having pointed out to them this departure from the usual procedure.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is to be submitted to the Board of Railway Commissioners first.

Mr. TISDALE. Still, the Governor in Council has to deal with it.

Mr. MACPHERSON moved to add the following to the said Bill as clause 7:

The company shall, within two years from the passing of this Act, commence the construction of the western portion of its line at or near Cloverdale, and continuously prosecute the construction in an easterly direction to Princeton, along the route as laid down in the original charter of the company, being chapter 75 Victoria of the statutes of British Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection to the amendment; I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, however, what would happen. It seems to me it will be no advantage to the people of British Columbia to say that the company should do so and so, when you do not provide that they should do so and so. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that his motion will have no effect whatever.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the charter be subject to the conditions? Suppose they don't go on and build the road.

Mr. GALLIHER. It applies only to so much as is constructed, the same as any other charter.

Mr. HAGGART. I doubt if the clause in the Act will have the effect of voiding the charter on the part of the road you have completed unless there is a special provision to the contrary.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. In reply to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) I would say that under this Bill the Governor in Council has the right to say where this line shall cross the international boundary, and if they do not comply with the conditions imposed by the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) it is not at all likely that the Governor in Council will allow them to do anything else, unless they comply with the legislation adopted by this House.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand the suggestion of the Prime Minister to be that we pass this clause and let it stand until Wednesday, because we will have to come back into committee if the suggestions of the Minister of Justice are considered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, we must go on to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the Bill was not coming on to-day. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) assured me that it was not coming on, that he had an arrangement with some member of the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I never heard of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He assured me on Saturday that the Bill would not come up to-day. He said, 'I have an arrangement about it, as I am not to be here on Monday. It will stand over until Wednesday.' I do not know the nature of the arrangement, but he left me under the impression that the Bill would not come on.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He sent a note across the floor to me. I understood from it that he could not be here on Wednesday, and asked if it was coming up on Monday and I said, 'yes.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He has evidently got the thing reversed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I read the note to mean that he would be absent on Wednesday and wanted to know if the Bill would come up on Monday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that it would come up on Monday, until I saw the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) on Saturday when he assured me that it was not coming up on Monday.

Mr. HAGGART. Referring to the clause that was under discussion I would like to ask a further explanation. Suppose bonds are issued on the eastern section of the road on the condition fixed that within two years the road shall be completed, will the bonds issued on the whole road be subject to the condition embodied in the Bill?

Mr. TISDALE. I suppose they would. The charter would not be forfeited by non-compliance with the condition, but would remain good for that part of the road that has been constructed. There are questions that we have never decided here, but that have been decided in the courts. A charter does not expire merely by non-fulfilment of such a condition as this, but only as a result of action in the courts, and action can be brought only by the authority of the Attorney General. Comparatively few people understand that a railway company's charter remains good, even though it has not completed its work within the time fixed. That is the distinction between the Dominion law and the extraordinary clause in the British Columbia charter. That forfeits the charter. But what becomes of the road already built? There is no doubt that under our law the charter remains good in law and fact, as regards any work that has been completed. There is no doubt about that, and that is as it should be. This clause is the usual clause.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the Bill is reported, I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to section 5. I have given notice of an amendment to be moved on the third reading of the Bill; but, if the Minister of Justice thinks there is no merit in that amendment, I shall not move it. The point I wish to draw attention to is this: Under section 20 of the original charter, power is given to construct a great many branch lines, the length of these branches, or their points of commencement and termination not being definitely stated. Now, I find that subsection 8 of section 175 of the Railway Act of 1903, provides as follows:

> Except with reference to branch lines authorized by the special Act to be constructed between any two points or places definitely fixed or named therein, no power to construct branch lines in any special Act contained, inconsistent with the provisions of this section shall have any force or effect after three years from the passing of this Act.

Now, I apprehend that there is a conflict between the Railway Act and the charter of this company. If the Minister of Justice thinks there is not, I have nothing further to say. But it would certainly not be wise to pass this charter without having all matters of this kind cleared up. Section 5 of this Bill provides as follows:

> The construction of the railways authorized by the said Act of the province of British Columbia and by this Act may be commenced within two years after the passing of this Act, and the said railways may be finished and put in operation within five years after the passing of this Act.

Now, the amendment I have given notice of would leave out the words 'authorized by the said Act of the province of British Columbia and by this Act.' As the original charter provides for the construction of a great many lines of considerable length the points of commencement or terminus not being definitely fixed, it would seem that the charter is out of harmony with the General Railway Act of 1903. I do not wish to throw any obstacles in the way of the Bill and I do not think that the amendment I suggest, even if it should be adopted, would have such an effect.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to have time to consider the point.

Mr. TISDALE.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is worth considering.

Bill reported.

PATENTS OF DAVID THOMAS OWEN.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 177) respecting certain patents of David Thomas Owen.—Mr. Stewart.

On section 1—extension of time for manufacture—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are these sections in the form usually adopted by the House? Perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) can tell us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not the promoter of the Bill, and have not even had an opportunity to look at it. It concerns the department which has control of the patent law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose the Bill will stand until somebody can answer?

Mr. BELCOURT. When the Bill was considered by the Private Bills Committee, there was an officer of the Department of Justice there, and no objection was raised by him to the form or substance of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that somebody should be here who is able to answer a simple question such as that I have asked with regard to this Bill.

Mr. BELCOURT. There having been no objection to the Bill in committee, I assume that the Bill was in satisfactory form.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the section carry?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I object to the Bill passing until some one is here to answer the question asked—whether or not these clauses—which have not even been read—are in the form usually adopted by the committee and the House. I suppose they are. But somebody should be here able to answer that question definitely. There should be some one who takes enough interest in the Bill to be able to state the facts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is only one way to proceed regularly and that is to allow the Bill to stand until some one can explain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Progress reported.

BRANDON, SASKATCHEWAN AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 179) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company—Mr. Turriff.

Mr. TURRIFF. I move that this Bill be referred back to the Railway Committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For what reason?

Mr. TURRIFF. The Bill was called earlier than I expected in the Railway Committee so that I was not present, and clause 3 was struck out under the misapprehension that proper notice had not been given. The advertisement in the newspaper was wrong in the first issue, but it was set right in subsequent issues, and clause 3 was rejected on the mistaken ground that it had not been properly advertised.

Mr. BERGERON. If that is the only amendment you need, it can be done in this committee with the consent of the whole.

Mr. TURRIFF. I should be very glad of that.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was intimated in the committee that no notice or not sufficient notice had been given of this clause, and for that reason the committee very properly decided to expunge the clause. A short time ago the right hon. leader of the House stated that we should pay a good deal of attention to a report of the Railway Committee, and I ask that the advice of the Prime Minister be taken in this case. We did pay attention to it in regard to another Bill in which unfortunately an error was made. A resolution which I moved in the Railway Committee with regard to the Victoria, Vancouver and Eastern Railway was declared defeated, but it was defeated by the vote of an hon. member of the House who was not a member of the committee, and I am sorry to say that he was one of the right hon. gentleman's colleagues. Therefore, we cannot always depend on the reports of the Railway Committee. But in this case I feel quite satisfied that the report of the Railway Committee voices the sentiment of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the motion is that I do now leave the chair.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. TISDALE. Will the hon. member tell us what he wants to do ?

Mr. TURRIFF. The Bill came to this House from the Senate. It was taken up by the Railway Committee at the last meeting earlier than I expected, and I was not present ; but I understand that clause 3 was struck out on the ground that proper notice had not been given. I want clause 3 re-inserted.

Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand that the hon. member can show that proper notice was given ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am informed by the senator who had charge of the Bill in the Senate that it was.

Mr. HENDERSON. The clause was struck out in the Railway Committee because we were informed there that the notice was insufficient, and we thought it would be unfair to put in a clause authorizing the construction of a railway through a section of country in which, I have no doubt, numerous other railway companies are chartered to construct railways without notice that this clause was proposed in this charter. The lack of notice was the only reason why it was struck out.

Mr. BERGERON. If that was the only reason, I do not think it was proper. The question of notice is a question for the Committee on Standing Orders ; we have nothing to do with that here. That was a question to be settled by the Senate when the Bill came up there. If we struck the clause out on that ground, we might become involved in one of those discussions between the House of Commons and the Senate that should be avoided. If that is the only reason why the clause was expunged, I think we should allow it to be re-inserted.

Mr. TISDALE. We must not forget that this Bill was passed by the Senate, and we must assume that they looked properly into the question of notices. The question is a question of fact. If the promoter of the Bill cannot inform us of the facts to-day, I think we should allow the Bill to stand till Wednesday, so that the hon. gentleman could inquire into them in the meantime.

Mr. GRANT. I think I can throw some light on this matter. I am informed by the Clerk of the Standing Orders Committee of the Senate that they looked thoroughly into the question and found the notices to be sufficient. It may be true that the original notice was insufficient, but I am informed that it is now all right. In my judgment, the clause was struck out by the Railway Committee in error.

Mr. BERGERON. On reference to the report of the Standing Orders Committee, I find that this Bill was reported on by that committee on the 23rd of June, and that the notices were stated to be correct. As my hon. friend from Halton states that that was the only reason why clause 3 was expunged, I believe it would be our duty to comply with the request of the promoter of the Bill and re-insert that clause.

Mr. TURRIFF moved that section 3 be restored.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it covered by the petition ?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. This clause gives power to construct a railway, and we ought to proceed carefully. I am inclined to think that the prudent way would be to refer the Bill back to the Railway Committee. This can only be done without notice by unanimous consent. We should avoid falling into loose methods of doing business, and I do not think it would endanger the Bill to refer it back to the committee if we have no facts before us to justify us in restoring what the committee struck out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the point raised by my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is well taken, and I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

Mr. TURRIFF moved that the order be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 165) respecting the Canadian Yukon Western Railway Company.—Mr. Thompson.

Bill (No. 173) respecting the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—Mr. Bureau.

QUESTIONS.

SASKATCHEWAN LAND COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What official or officials of the department authorized, or made the issue of, the patents to the Saskatchewan Land Company, on evidence of homestead entries instead of actual settlement, as stated by Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, as recorded in 'Hansard' of 1904, page 7046, as follows: Mr. Clancy—Was it done on his recommendation? Mr. Sifton—No. Mr. Clancy—If the deputy did not recommend it, who did? Mr. Sifton—We will make careful search and find out exactly how the transaction took place. And also on page 7050, as follows: Mr. Sifton—I presume they referred to homestead entries as sufficient evidence. I was not willing to act upon that, but subsequently the officers issued the patents on Mr. McConnell's report.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Patents to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company were issued by the Chief Clerk of Patents Branch on the authority of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, and were signed by the deputy Minister of the Interior, the Under Secretary of State, and the deputy governor. The land so patented was sold to the company with conditions of settlement.

SECRETARY OF STATE REPORT.

Mr. BELCOURT asked:

1. What was the number of employees in the Department of the Secretary of State on December 31, 1894, and on December 31, 1904, respectively?

2. What was the total amount paid to the staff of such department in each of the fiscal years covering the said dates, including as well the salaries of the Secretary of State and the Under Secretary of State?

3. What was the total revenue of the said department for those years respectively?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. December 31, 1894, 39; December 31, 1904, 29.

2. 1894-1895, $51,758.18; 1904-1905, $47,-645.85.

3. 1894-1895, $5,763.95; 1904-1905, $65,-590.80.

PORT BURWELL DREDGING.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. Who has the dredging contract at Port Burwell?

2. When was the contract given, and was it let after public competition?

3. Who are the contractors, and at what price?

4. How many tenders were received, and what was the amount of each tender?

5. Has the government made any advance for purchasing the dredge now being used at Port Burwell? If so, what amount?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. The Dominion Dredging and Construction Company.

2. Contract not yet signed; yes.

3. The Dominion Dredging and Construction Company; (b) 14½ cents per cubic yard.

4. Five tenders were received:

	Per cubic yard.
A	14½ cents.
B	16 "
C	17 "
D	18¾ "
E	20¾ "

5. No.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

Mr. SPROULE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

Referring to a report of the secretaries of the Lord's Day Alliance, published in the 'Lord's Day Advocate' of June, 1905, setting forth an interview had with the Minister of Justice on the 9th of May last, and containing the following paragraph: 'We were much pleased further, to be assured by Mr. Fitzpatrick that, should the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decide that the Dominion parliament has jurisdiction to legislate upon the Sunday question, and not the provincial legislatures, we could rely upon having his loyal support for the enactment of such legislation as we had indicated in our draft Bill. You will find me, he said, solidly with you in this matter;' 1. Did the Minister of Justice give the assurance and make the statement above set out?

2. If so, was the minister then speaking for the government, or for himself only?

3. Has the government, as a matter of fact, determined upon the course of action outlined by the Minister of Justice as above stated?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I had several conversations, the exact tenor of which I do not now recollect, with the secretaries of the Lord's Day Alliance. I need hardly say that I did not consult the government as to what I was to say on each occasion. No doubt the government then intended, and now intends, if it be found that Sunday legislation is under our control, to deal with the matter in such a way as to give satisfaction to all parties concerned.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Northwest Mounted Police, $1,065,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The two principal items have been passed. We reserved the sum of $25,000, on which I promised to explain all the estimates, as at that time most of the members of the Northwest Territories were engaged elsewhere, and I thought it advisable to wait their return. We have this year for the pay of the force $240,000 against $205,000 last year. This is in consequence of a Bill adopted in the early part of the session whereby we have sought power to increase the pay of the force. I shall take separately the affairs of the forces of the Northwest Territories and the forces of the Yukon. The strength of the force in the Territories at the present moment is intended to be and is about 600 men. There are 39 officers and about 546 non-commissioned officers and men. The pay of the officers is as follows:

Commissioner	$2,600
Assistant commissioner	1,600
Superintendents	1,400 each.
Inspectors	1,000 each.
One surgeon	1,200

The pay of the men is as follows:

	Per day.
Staff sergeant	$1.25 to $1.50
Sergeants	1.00
Corporals	0.85
Constables	0.50 to 0.75
Special constables and scouts	0.75 to 1.50
Buglers	0.50
Artisans	0.50

The object of the Bill we have passed is to raise the pay of the officers by $400 each, so that the commissioner who to-day receives $2,600 will hereafter receive $3,000; the assistant commissioner instead of $1,600 will receive $2,000; the superintendents instead $1,400, $1,800 and so on. It is not the intention of the government to give that increased amount of $400 each immediately but to increase the pay at the rate of $50 a year. However, the men who have been eight years in the service and more will receive eight times $50; that is to say they will increase at the rate of $50 for each year they have been in the service. The officers who have been seven years in the service will receive an increase of seven times $50 or $350, and so on. The same principle will be applied in granting the increases to the men of the force. They will be increased at the rate of five cents per day for each year they have been in the service until they receive the increase of 25 cents a day. At present we engage our men at 50 cents a day and they work up to the maximum of 75 cents. We propose to engage them at 60 cents a day and to give a maximum of $1 a day. The rate of addition will be the same as in the case of the officers. The men who have been a long time in the force will receive the full amount of increased pay and those who have been in only a certain number of years will receive a proportionate increase. This explains the increase of $35,000.

There are no increases for forage, repairs to buildings, and new buildings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I simply wanted to inquire the number of the force at present and where they are stationed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER The force is calculated to be 600 men. It is kept at about 600. At present I think it is a little less. We have seven or eight different districts and about ninety different stations. Each district is in charge of the superintendent; we have one say at Regina, one at Macleod, one at Banff one at Fort Saskatchewan, and so on. The force is distributed all over the Territories from the boundary line up in the mouth of the Mackenzie river. We maintain a force and I conceive that we will be obliged to maintain a cordon of police on the boundary from the banks of the Red river up to the boundary of British Columbia. That is to say that for many years we will not be able to dispense with the services of the force on the boundary line. We have to do that not only to protect the country against the operations of smugglers but to protect property, also principally against horse thieves and criminals of that class. The moment these men do not see the uniform they will invade our country, but with the uniform at the boundary line we feel reasonably sure there will be no crime of that kind. That country has been remarkably free from crime up to the present time. Then we have at the present time forts extending all the way from the boundary to the Arctic ocean, in the district of Athabaska, along the Peace river, the Athabaska river and the Mackenzie river up to the mouth of the Mackenzie river. We have two small forts at the mouth of the Mackenzie river, one at Fort Mackenzie and the other on Herschell Island. In the lower parts of the country, that in the upper portions of the Peace river and the Athabaska river district, settlement is now going in and we find the police the best possible help to the settlers. At the mouth of the Mackenzie river the police are intended principally to protect the country against American poachers. American whaling men winter at the mouth of the Mackenzie river and the complaint is that their presence is not at all conducive to the best interests of the Indians, and the object of having the force there is to maintain British law in that distant part of the country.

I can conceive that we shall be obliged, as soon as the new provinces are organized, to revise the present arrangement for the maintenance of order and the administration of justice. The committee is aware that the administration of justice in that country has been chiefly in the hands of the Northwest Mounted Police. They not only have to take care of the country as regards the offences against the laws of Canada but they are called upon also to perform all sorts of duties, not only those which properly appertain to the police force, such as it was when first organized, that is to say to check the Indians and protect life and property, but they are also called upon to discharge many different duties which add to the comfort and security of the settler. For instance, one of the chief duties of the police has been to protect the country against prairie fires. The men are stationed all the way from the boundary line to the Mackenzie river in about ninety different posts, each post comprising a number of men varying from six, ten or twelve at the principal posts such as Regina, Fort Macleod, and so on to intervening posts at which there will be perhaps only one, two or three men. These men are really the friends of the settlers and are looked upon for a multitude of duties chiefly where settlement is going on. The settlers come chiefly from Europe and are not accustomed to our ways and they look at once to the police for every possible thing they may require.

Well, we have to maintain a force of that kind. As soon as the new provincial governments are organized we shall ask them to make arrangements with us for the pay of the police in connection with the administration of justice, which will be taken over by the provincial governments. Therefore they will have to pay for it. We are prepared to maintain the police if they pay a reasonable share of its maintenance, and if they are not disposed to pay a portion of the maintenance of the force, then we shall have to consider what course to take. I will give to the committee a communication that has been placed in my hands by the Comptroller of the Mounted Police, relating to this subject:

More than 1,500 prisoners passed through the police guard rooms last year—those sentenced to two years and upwards are sent to the Manitoba penitentiary, others are sent to the Regina and Prince Albert jails, but there are never less than 100 in the custody of the police.

The Department of Justice repays our vote a per diem rate for prisoners after committal, and travelling charges of prisoners, and escort to place of confinement; also, in serious and costly cases, a portion of the costs incurred—in all between $30,000 and $40,000 per annum, which is steadily increasing. We also recover for lunatics.

Then there is a great deal of work done by the police which in older provinces would be paid for from provincial or municipal funds.

Last year there were nearly 1,000 cases of offences against the person or property, over 1,300 under the heading 'religion and morals,' and between 700 and 800 against ordinances of the Northwest Territories, in all there were 4,329 cases entered, and 3,465 convictions. In 1900 there were less than 1,000 cases all told.

Section 31 of the Mounted Police Act, Revised Statutes, chapter 45, provides as follows:

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, enter into arrangements with the government of any province of Canada, for the use or employment of the said police force, or any portion thereof, in aiding the administration of justice in such province, and in carrying into effect the laws of the legislature thereof; and may, in any such arrangement, agree upon and determine the amount of money which shall be paid by the province using the same in respect of such services of the force.

Well, we intend to negotiate with the new provincial governments on the basis of this section, and to arrange with them that they shall pay a portion of the maintenance of the police.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is any portion of the police maintained in Manitoba?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Only on the boundary line.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have you any arrangement of that character with the government of Manitoba?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Now that these Territories are being organized into provinces, is it the minister's intention to maintain the mounted police in those Territories?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We must certainly maintain the mounted police on the frontiers of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not on the frontier of British Columbia also?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Because there is not the same reason as there is in Alberta and Saskatchewan, where the frontier is exclusively prairie. If we were to withdraw the police from that frontier there would be an amount of lawnessness such as this country has never seen, and I hope will not see. I think we shall have to maintain a portion of the police also in Athabaska for some time and in Mackenzie; and in the other portions of the country where railway construction is going on, it will perhaps be necessary to maintain the police for some time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are there any on Hudson Bay?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, we have had an expedition on the Hudson Bay this winter, and for the last two years; one superintendent, Major Moodie, one inspector, Mr. Pelletier, one physician, one sergeant, and nine men. We have not yet received the report of last winter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the increase in the number of the force this year over last? And can the minister also give us the number of desertions from the force, the number of promotions from the ranks to the position of officers, and what punishments have been inflicted?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In 1896 we found a force consisting of 1,000 men. We reduced it to 500, and afterwards increased it to 600, which is the present number. Since 1896 we have made thirteen appointments and eleven promotions. As to the number of desertions, I can only speak of last year, when there were twenty. All the appointments have been made from the ranks of the active militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the First Minister any record of the punishments?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the Northwest Territories 23 men were dismissed from the service and in the Yukon 10 men. The offenses were not of a very grave character—the most common one was drunkenness.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There were other offenses for which men were confined in barracks, put in prison, and so on?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not that information at hand.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think it advisable that the information should be brought down during the session. Not that I think the officers are too hard on the men, but this is information which should be before the public. The position of a mounted policeman is changing. Formerly he was more or less a judicial officer; now he is more a policeman.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is as much a judicial officer as ever.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But he has not the same scope for the exercise of those functions. There was a time when the mounted policeman was practically king of the country in which he was situated. To-day municipal organizations and other authorities exist which do a considerable part of the work formerly done by the mounted policeman, and so the exercise of his powers is more or less limited. I have always thought it important that the mounted policeman and the regular soldier should not be subject to any danger of extreme punishment by their officers. To this end, whatever offences these men may have committed we should have a record of them here in parliament, so that in case of necessity the public may have all the details. There may be cases in the mounted police, as there have been in other organizations, of vindictiveness and spite on the part of those who exercise power. I would rather that a thousand offenders should go unpunished than that one man should be punished improperly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is the ninth year that I have had charge of the estimates of the Northwest Mounted Police, and I must say that information such as that asked for by my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was never asked before. I think the condition of the force is as good to-day as it ever was, and I do not know that there has been any charge of cruelty or anything of that sort on the part of the officers. But my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is entitled to the information that he asks for, and I shall see to it that it is brought down.

Northwest Mounted Police—Yukon Territory—pay of force, $185,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The force in the Yukon is composed of three hundred officers and men. There are 16 officers—an assistant commissioner, 2 superintendents, 9 inspectors and 4 surgeons.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. So, all told, there are 900 mounted policemen?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes—600 in the Northwest Territories and 300 in the Yukon. The rate of pay to the mounted police in the Yukon is the same as in the Northwest Territories, except that a special allowance is given to those in the Yukon. The assistant commissioner and commandant of the force receives an allowance of $2 per day; superintendents, inspectors and surgeons, $1.25 per day; sergeants, 75c. per day; corporals, 50c. per day, and constables 50c. per day.

Mr. THOMPSON. Even at the increased rate of pay that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has suggested, and the Bill provides for, the officers and men in the Yukon are not paid as much as they should be when you consider the pay received by the ordinary labouring citizen in that country In the mounted police of the Yukon we have a very high class of men, and the force has been a credit to the government and to the country. When the force was first established, I believe, the idea was not to have a swagger regiment, but a mobile force that would police the frontier. If that was the idea, then the force in the Yukon have lived up to that idea absolutely. The variety and value of the work done by these men is not generally known or appreciated. Besides ordinary police duty, they furnish escorts to bring gold from claims to the banks in Dawson—unfortunately there is not so much of this as there formerly was. They assist the crown timber and land agents in collecting fees. They act as officers of the Customs Department to collect duties on imported goods, some of the men being employed in the Customs Department altogether. They help the telegraph department in repairing the lines. The sergeant-at-arms in the Yukon Council is a member of the mounted police. In some cases of minor offences on the creeks the policemen try the offenders. And it is surprising, Mr. Speaker, what an amount of legal knowledge these men acquire from having to try these cases in their own courts before sending the offenders before the higher courts. The mounted policemen serve papers, such as jury summonses, small debt summonses, subpœnas, and so on. Sometimes the mounted policeman is made the receiver upon a claim. This duty requires that the man shall not only be a man of good education, but a man of thorough integrity as well. They have charge of the jails in Dawson and Whitehorse. During 1904, 416 prisoners passed through their hands in the Yukon Territory. They also have charge of the insane. This requires almost special knowledge, because in that country there is a larger proportion of insane than in other parts of Canada owing to the strenousity of the life there. The mounted policemen also carry the mails. I have seen these men turn out with a dog team in the dead of winter to carry his Majesty's mail distances of from 100 to 500 miles. In fact, so varied and so important are the duties of the Northwest Mounted Police in the Yukon, that I do not know how we could have got on without them. They have made it possible for us to live there in peace and quietness. They have protected life and property and have stood practically for everything that is right. It is true that the people have backed them up. Still, had it not been for the police we should undoubtedly have had much more crime in the Yukon than we have had. That the ministers themselves value the services of these men is shown by one incident out of many. Last fall the Department of the Interior saw fit to discharge a number of our mining recorders. These officers were receiving about $200 or $225 a month each. At one fell swoop they were removed. I have not a word of criticism to offer on that action; I rather think that there were too many of these officers. But, whom did the government appoint in place of these mining recorders? They took the policemen—regular constables, sergeants and others—and placed them in these offices. And surprising to state, the men whom they put in these offices have given the people first-class satisfaction. So great is that satisfaction that I have in my desk a petition asking that policemen who are now presiding over the affairs of the mining recorders' offices should be left there and no more civilians appointed. I think that is recommendation enough for any force. The policemen are attached to the secret service and do valuable work in that way. In almost every department of life in the Yukon the mounted policeman and his officer has been an invaluable help. I believe that even with the increased allowance the government is now giving men in the Yukon, their remuneration is not sufficient. In section 2 of the Act to amend the Northwest Mounted Police Act passed this session there is the following provision:

Mr. THOMPSON.

The Governor in Council may authorize extra pay and allowances to be paid to members of the force serving in the Yukon Territory, or the unorganized portions of the Northwest Territories.

I hope the Prime Minister under whose direction the force is, will avail himself of this power given in the law and authorize extra pay and allowance to the men serving in the Yukon territory. I may mention that two or three years ago a committee of the United States Senate was delegated to visit the Yukon and Alaska so that they might compare the conditions which existed in both Territories, with instructions to report back to the United States Senate on the conditions existing. These gentlemen came to the Yukon ; they were entertained by the people of the Yukon and taken over that territory to some considerable extent. What struck them as being most valuable in the governing of a frontier country, for the administration of justice, for the collection of customs and for everything that tends to advance civilization and preserve order, was the organization and the efficiency of this mounted police force of ours. So great was the impression made upon the minds of that committee of the United States Senate, that in their report, if they did not absolutely advocate the establishment of a similar force in Alaska they recommended it very strongly, and they were good enough to say that our mounted force policed that territory better than any section of the United States is policed by any force in that country. In the district of Alaska the United States had been trying to do the police work by regular soldiers; posts had been established along the Yukon river and along the southeast coast of Alaska making one continuous chain connected by telegraph and cable round the whole district. But these were regular soldiers and they did not understand police work, and the contrast afforded by the mounted police in Canada gave to the Senate committee a very striking illustration of the two methods so that in their report to the United States Senate they were loud in their praises of our mounted police and recommended the establishment of a similar force in Alaska. All Americans who pass back and forth from the Yukon to Alaska are loud in their praises of our police, and in their comparisons they say that the order kept in the Yukon is much superior to the order kept in Alaska, as it ought to be, because we in Canada will not stand for anything but the very best of order even if it is on the very utmost limits of our territory. Let me mention another incident. Last year it became necessary to establish communication between Dawson and the Arctic ocean, some 400 or 500 miles away. There is a sealing station at Herschell Island where, in the absence of customs officials, smuggling was being carried on, and a line of communication had to be established with that post. What happened ? In the depth of winter a squad of our policemen left Dawson with dog teams and travelled through an absolute wilderness for four or five hundred miles. Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that there is not a man in this House who would duplicate that trip no matter how much money was offered to induce him to do so. In the dead of winter, through an absolute wilderness, they struck due north 400 or 500 miles with their dog teams carrying food for themselves and their dogs, made the Arctic, established communication and came back safely. These men in the Yukon are doing a work which the people of Canada do not appreciate and for which the government of Canada should pay them more than even this new law provides.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am very glad to hear the high character given the force by such a competent authority as my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson). It is not new to hear good things said of the Northwest Mounted Police ; we always expect to hear them, but from one who can speak with such authority as my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) it is all the more pleasing to hear that the Northwest Mounted Police Force have not only done their duty but indeed much more than we could expect from them. The force has merited high encomium from others than Canadians ; the following has been placed in my hand :

Judge J. W. Whitten, chief of the Law Division of the General Land Office in Washington, has completed a trip of 5,000 miles through Alaska, covering four months. In an address the other night on his tour, the judge declared that while Dawson, which is under Canadian rule, is, in his opinion, one of the best governed towns in the world, all places of business there closing from early Saturday evening until sunrise Monday morning, on the other hand, at Nome, the first American city across the boundary, the saloons and gambling houses are running in full blast on Sunday, and though he was told that the place possessed a church, he saw no evidence of it.

Parliament has granted us power to increase the pay of the Northwest Mounted Police in the Yukon even beyond what we are paying the force in the Northwest Territories. I do not think, however, it would be advisable to take advantage of this power immediately. The Act providing for this increased pay for the force comes into operation on the first of this month, and we will have to watch for some time how the matter will work before we can give consideration to the suggestions of my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson). I may say, however, that the question is one that ought to be carefully considered at the proper time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Northwest Mounted Police is a force of which all Canadians are proud. I agree with what has been said as to the importance of their services to the administration of justice in our western country. That has been universally recognized. Those men have done a great deal of very good work in covering enormous areas of our country and in enforcing order and good government therein. We are all very pleased to unite in this appreciation of their services. Might I ask the Prime Minister to state where they are stationed in the Yukon territory.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is a chief station at Dawson with eighty-three men and twenty-two horses, and there are the following substations containing two, three and four men each :

B—Dawson, Fortymile, Indian River, Ogilvie, Stewart River, Stewart Crossing, Halfway, Selwyn, Selkirk, Minto, Grand Forks, Dominion, Hunker, Sulphur, Gold Run, Grand Valley, McQuesten, Mayo, Town Station, Miller Creek, Steamer 'Vidette.'

Then there is another chief station at Whitehorse containing sixty-six men and the following substations with from two to four men each :—H—Whitehorse, Dalton Trail, White Pass, Carcross, Tagish, Tahkini, Braeburn, Hootalinqua, Livingstone Creek, Tanaalus, Yukon Crossing, Champagne Landing, Big Salmon, Lower Labarge, Pine Creek, Kloo Lake, Bullion Creek, Town Station.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have repeatedly drawn the attention of this government and of previous governments to the fact that the Northwest Mounted Policemen who took part in the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, alone of all those who served the country then, are denied their scrip. When the Conservative government was in power I was never able to see any reason, nor have I been able to see any reason since the Liberals came to power, why scrip should not have been issued to these men, the same as to volunteers, teamsters and all others who took part in the suppression of the rebellion. Now that the Prime Minister is in such a congenial frame of mind towards the Northwest Mounted Police, I would avail of the opportunity to impress on him the advisability of giving scrip to these men, or to the families of those who have since died. They fought for their country bravely in that rebellion and the country should tender them this recognition of their splendid services.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would be the first to agree with my hon. friend as to the character of the service rendered by the force in 1885 ; that is admitted by everybody. The government of that day had the claim of the Northwest Mounted Police referred to a board of inquiry and investigated ; and, if I remember rightly, for reasons which they considered sufficient, they refused to entertain the claim. When this government came into office, some ten years afterwards, we did not think it would be advisable to re-open a question which had been settled by the previous government, not hastily, but after due consideration. I understand that the reason which actuated the government was that the police were employed for duty in the Northwest, whereas the militia had to leave their usual vocations to perform the onerous duty of defending the country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have always understood that to be the reason, but the same reason would hold good with reference to the men of the permanent militia force, who were held to go anywhere that their duties might call them. I never could see why the Mounted Police were denied the scrip and the permanent force given it. The police are a lot of deserving men who, in their faithful and judicious services in preserving law and order, saved the country many times more than the cost of a few hundreds or thousands of acres of land that it would be necessary to give them in scrip. I know that in some cases it would be a great boon to the families of old policemen to be given that scrip in order that they might take up land and settle on it. Will the First Minister look into the matter ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that I do not think it will be at all advisable to re-open that question, which was considered with great care by the previous administration immediately after the close of the rebellion.

Mr. HERRON. I am sorry that the government take the stand that the question should not be reconsidered. I can back up what has been said by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) with reference to these men. Many of them are settlers in the country, and they think they are entitled to something in the way of compensation for their services in the rebellion. I can see no reason why they are not as much entitled to scrip as the men who served in the militia, or the permanent force or the volunteer force. I hope the government will not take a decided stand against giving the matter their further consideration. I would like to say a word with reference to the service the Mounted Police are rendering in the southern country. It is not new for us to realize that that country is thoroughly well guarded by the Mounted Police, perhaps better than any other country similarly situated has ever been. I would like to draw the attention of the government to some raids that occurred along the boundary line about three years ago, when there was considerable horse-stealing done. The Mounted Police did all they could in the matter, but I think something should be done along the lines of secret service, and I would like to have an opportunity of making some private suggestions to the Prime Minister, who, I understand, is at the head of that department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall be very happy to receive suggestions from my hon. friend in reference to that matter.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I understood the right hon. First Minister to say that whilst he appreciated the fact that the Northwest Mounted Police, who assisted in the Northwest rebellion, were perhaps entitled to some recognition along with the members of the militia, that recognition was prevented by the fact that they enlisted for service in that country. If there is any great anxiety on the part of the government to show recognition to these men, there are a large number of them who, though they enlisted for service in that country, assisted the militia in South Africa, and a demand has been made by these men that they should be treated by this government in the same way as other volunteers who went to South Africa. There are a number of other men in the Northwest who enlisted for service in South Africa and who have received no recognition from this government, because this government own the land, whereas those who went from the province of British Columbia and the province of Ontario have received recognition at the hands of the provincial governments. It is a matter of considerable wonderment to these men why such efforts are put forth to bring certain classes of settlers into the country when they are not given any land and are not allowed to buy an acre of land, although they assisted in the defence of the empire in South Africa.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no connection between the two questions to which my hon. friend refers. The question of giving land to those who served in South Africa has been brought to the attention of the government. But these matters grow. We have also received applications on behalf of those who served in the Fenian raids. Some of these went to the front and endured hardships, while others were not called on for any special duty, so that the work of discriminating is a matter of some nicety. Whether scrip should be given to all or whether there should be a scale of concessions is a question that must be considered before the government can come to any conclusion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When I drew the attention of the government to this matter on two or three former occasions, the right hon. the First Minister pointed out that the province of Ontario was giving to her sons who fought grants of land, and added that the time would come when the Northwest Territories would be erected into provinces, and these could then recognize their sons. As the right hon. gentleman has not seen fit to give the new provinces the control of their lands, his former argument falls to the ground. I think, therefore, that my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) is amply justified in reminding him that the men from the new provinces who fought in South Africa are entitled to grants of land for their services, and I trust that he will see his way clear, in view of the fact that this government retains control of the lands, to give scrip to every man who fought in South Africa.

Explorations and surveys, printing and publishing reports, maps, &c., wages of assistant explorers, draughtsmen, clerks and others, purchase of specimens, books, instruments, stationery, mapping materials, maintenance of museum, laboratory apparatus, chemicals, miscellaneous expenses, &c., advances to explorers, $60,000.

Mr. OLIVER. During the season of 1904, there were twenty-five parties in the field, and it is proposed to send out twenty-five exploratory parties in 1905.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are there any special results, the hon. minister desires to mention ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are the ordinary explorations. Immediate results are not looked for from the explorations of the Geological Survey. They lay the basis for future explorations and examination. The report of last year is now being bound and will be published in a short time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the hon. minister know how much the United States are spending annually on the same survey ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are spending a million and a half dollars on geological exploration.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And increasing it every year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has there been a geological exploration of the region now opened up in north Ontario where cobalt deposits are supposed to be so profuse ?

Mr. OLIVER. That country has been under geological exploration many years, the work having been begun under the supervision of the late Sir William Logan. Parties were working from time to time, from that time forward. Last year a party was at work in the Temagami and Temiscaming districts.

For special explorations and surveys in British Columbia and the Yukon, and the publication of reports and maps thereon, $19,000.

Mr. OLIVER. $18,516 of the appropriation of $19,000 voted in 1904-5 for geological work in the Yukon and British Columbia has been expended as follows :

Cost of explorations, season 1904—
Dr. Ellis, British Columbia.. ..	$ 834 30
R. G. McConnell, Yukon..	3,174 92
Joseph Keele, Yukon..	1,883 64
R. W. Brock, British Columbia.. ..	1,393 50
Wages F. H. Maclaren to 1st May..	532 50
Instruments..	1,024 14
Freight charges and duck for boxes	23 51
Micro—sections, Yukon rocks	$ 26 75
Coteau place..	46 24
Advances to explorers on account of season's work, 1904..	9,576 50
	18,516 00

Leaving a balance of $516 which will be expended in replacing instruments, &c., burned in fire at Whitehorse.

The appropriation now asked for is to cover the expenses of the following geological parties at present in the field :

Joseph Keele—investigations around the head waters of Stewart river in connection with the discoveries of gold there. (No assistant).

Charles Camsell, assisted by F. Camsell, Peel river region, coal, gold and copper.

R. G. McConnell, assisted by Mr. F. H. Maclaren, in the Whitehorse, Kluane and St. Elias range, regions. Gold and copper.

R. W. Brock, assisted by Messrs. Young, Boyd and Denny in a detained examination of the Rossland mining district, together with reconnaissance work in the Lardeau district. Gold and copper.

Dr. H. S. Poole, an examination of the Nanaimo and Comox coal field and other geological work on Vancouver Island. (No assistance).

Dr. R. W. Ellis, Nicola coal field and Queen Charlotte Island. Coal, copper, iron—assisted by Sydney Ells.

D. B. Dowling, Cascade Valley, Kananaskis and Elk river regions. Coal. (Assisted by George Malloch).

To provide for engraving, lithographing, printing, &c., and to bring out maps of work already done and for plotting and compiling of surveys, plans, maps and utilizing field-notes, &c. (salaries in excess of $500 may be paid, notwithstanding Civil Service Act), $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER. It is proposed to issue during 1905-6 the most important of the maps enumerated below. The engraving, printing, &c., is by requisition on the King's Printer. The Toronto Lithographing Company, Copp Clarke and Company and the Mortimer Company are the principal firms, as a rule, doing the work for the King's Printer.

About ten new geological sheets of Nova Scotia series (H. Fletcher and D. R. Faribault).

One geological sheet, northern Ontario series (W. McInnes).

One geological map, northwestern Ontario (W. J. Wilson).

One geological map, Bruce mines, Ontario (E. D. Ingall).

One geological map, coal fields in district ot Alberta (photo. surveys by D. B. Dowling).

One geological map, Lardo mining camps, British Columbia (photo. surveys by R. W. Brock and W. H. Boyd).

One geological map, upper waters Winisk river, Keewatin (W. McInnes).

One geological map, new explorations in Cat lake district Keewatin (Dr. A. G. Wilson, C. Camsell and J. F. E. Johnston.)

One geological map, east coast of James Bay (O. O'Sullivan).

One geological map, Yamaska mountain Quebec (G. A. Young).

One geological map. Brome mountain, Quebec (J. A. Dresser).

One geological map, parts of Templeton and Portland townships, Ottawa county, Quebec (Prof. Haycock).

One geological map, Kluane mining district, Yukon (R. G. McConnell).

One index map of mining fields, Yukon (R. G. McConnell).

One geological eastern sheet, Dominion map (Dr. Bell).

One geological map of northern lands (A. P. Low).

One chart of northern lands (A. P. Low).

To pay for assay apparatus and chemicals, metallurgical, petrographical, library and clerical assistance (salaries greater than $500 per annum may be paid from this vote, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $6,300.

Mr. OLIVER. To continue the work in the assay laboratory, extra chemicals, apparatus, &c., exclusive of our regular laboratory supply, will be required. The cost is estimated at $260. Mr. M. F. Connor is the assayer in charge. His employment began in September, 1903. The assistant petrographer is Mr. G. A. Young, a graduate of McGill and Harvard.

The temporary staff to be paid out of this vote is as follows:

M. F. Connor, assayer	$1,200 00
G. A. Young, assistant petrographer	1,200 00
Miss M. H. Barry, library assistant	766 50
Mrs. Jane Alexander, library assistant	821 25
Miss C. M. Alexander, library assistant	475 00
Miss M. C. Stewart, library assistant	575 00
Miss E. F. Goodman, stenographer and writer	700 00
	5,737 75

For the purchase of new books for the library, $2,700.

Mr. BLAIN. Who makes the selection of the new books?

Mr. OLIVER. The books are purchased by the acting director, Dr. Bell, and the committee on the staff of the survey. Of course the books are entirely technical and can only be selected by those who are very familiar with the work.

Surveys—examination of survey returns, printing of plans, including $13,000 for irrigation surveys, &c., $500,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The amount asked for the survey of Dominion lands for the fiscal year 1905-6 is $500,000 which is $250,000 less than the appropriation for 1904-5. The surveys made during the last two years have been so extensive that they are now well in advance of settlement and it is not considered necessary to continue surveying at the same rate; hence, the decrease in the estimated expenditure.

The subdivision surveys made in 1904 and those which it is proposed to make in 1905 compare as follows:

	1904.	1905.
Number of townships sub-divided	530	180
Area in acres of townships sub-divided	11,500,000	4,000,000
Number of townships re-surveyed	125	60
Area in acres of townships re-surveyed	2,750,000	1,300,000

Construction of fence along national boundary, Northwest Territories, $100,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I move that this vote be dropped.

Mr. BARR. You are not building a fence then?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not this year.

Mr. BARR. So much saved.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there no need of it?

Mr. OLIVER. We need the money elsewhere.

Mr. HENDERSON. No election this year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No election this year.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Consolidation of Dominion statutes, which may be paid, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act or in the Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $20,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When this item was up for consideration before, the leader of the opposition asked for some information as to the probable date at which this revision would be completed. I hold in my hand a memorandum of the Deputy Minister of Justice dated 16th of June last, and which reads as follows:

It was anticipated at the last meeting of the Statute Revision Commission, which concluded its last session about a month ago, that the drafting of the remaining legislation up to the end of the session of 1904 would be completed and passed at the next sitting which is expected to take place about the 1st September. The draft of the Criminal Code is, I think, the only matter of any length or difficulty whatever which is not already in print, and Mr. Roscoe has agreed to have that in print and ready for consideration at the next meeting. There will then remain the legislation of this session which will have to be worked in, and the tables to be prepared. The commissioners were of the opinion that if the commissioners go about the matter diligently the whole work of the commission should be completed by the end of the present year. I am writing to each of the commissioners urging the importance of accomplishing this. I think, in view of the assurances I have, that I can certainly answer that the work of the commission will be finished in time to admit of this.

The vote I am now asking for will make the whole expenditure to date, $57,641. The amount estimated to finish is $21,000, so that the total estimated cost will be $78,641. This estimate does not include the cost of final printing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the commissioners begin their work of revision ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If they complete their work by September they will have been three years and a half at work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me in view of the time that has already been occupied, we might have expected the work to be done so that we could have had it during the present session. I do not remember how long the previous revision occupied.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Over five years. The work began in 1881. I find the first payment was made to the Hon. Jas. Cockburn, commissioner, in 1881-2 ; and the work continued on down to 1887-8.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister must have the exact dates, but my recollection is that the commission were actually at work a very much less time than that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The reference I have is taken from the public accounts. In the year 1881-2, provision was made for the payment of the Hon. Mr. Cockburn, commissioner, and again in 1882-3, then the regular payments began on August 14, 1883.

Mr. LENNOX. Speaking of the revision of the statutes, I would like to mention a matter which perhaps does not come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice, but this affords me an opportunity of doing so. I refer to the indexing of the statutes in the library, or rather keeping them annotated up to date. Those statutes are almost useless in their present condition. You have to gather from year to year all the changes and amendments, and it is almost impossible when a question comes up in the House, to ascertain within half an hour what the law is. It does appear to me that there should be in the library officials quite competent to do that kind of work, and if they are I think they should do it ; if they are not, it would be well to employ some one competent to do that kind of work and keep the library up to date in that respect.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is a matter that properly comes under the consideration of the Library Committee. But I think the time is opportune to draw attention to the fact that our House of Commons library, so far as legal works are concerned, is very defective. In fact some of the works there are becoming obsolete. The impression appears to have gained ground that since the Supreme Court has been established and we have a Supreme Court library, we must depend upon the latter. I recognize the necessity of providing for some one to annotate the statutes so as to keep them up to date.

Mr. LENNOX. I note what the Minister of Justice says about the books. When you go into the library and do not find the books, you have to go down to the Supreme Court, and you have not been there more than half an hour perhaps before the court is closed and you have to get out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The law department of the library deserves a little more attention than it has been receiving. I have had some difficulty myself in endeavouring to examine legal questions in connection with matters that come up in the House. There is a difficulty now and then in not being able to obtain in this library the books that are necessary for your purpose. I quite understand why those in charge of this matter would desire to curtail the legal department of the library as much as possible, because there is a great lack of room, not only for law books but for others, and that is a matter that will have to engage the attention of the government and of parliament before long. But apart from any difficulty of that kind, I agree entirely with what the Minister of Justice has said as to the necessity of keeping up the law department in the library, because we have almost as much occasion for research of that kind in parliament as those who are engaged in the work of the Supreme Court.

Some resolutions reported.

INSPECTION OF WATER METERS.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide for the inspection of water meters, and to authorize the Governor in Council to fix the fee for such inspection.—Mr. Brodeur.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). This resolution is designed to prepare the way for the inspection of water meters in the same way as gas meters and water meters are now inspected. The rates are to be fixed by the Governor in Council. The intention of the department is to provide that the fees shall be about the same as gas meters, ranging from 75 cents to $6.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it compulsory or optional ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is compulsory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have any representations been made to the department as to the necessity for this inspection ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. For several years representations have been made to the department asking us to provide for the inspection of water meters. However, there has not been so much necessity for the inspection of water meters, as perhaps for the inspection of gas meters and electric meters, because, in most cases water is supplied by municipalities and at a flat rate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What expenditure will it involve ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I intend to ask in the supplementary estimates for a vote of $1,000 for this service; and we expect that the fees collected will be more than sufficient to meet this small expense.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will it involve the appointment of additional officials, or will those in the department be sufficient ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The intention is, as the Bill will provide, that the inspection shall be made by the officers of the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The present officers ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The present officers.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will this interfere with a person making a flat rate for supply of water ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. It will only provide that where meters are used, those meters must be inspected.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Has it to do with anything except the quantity of the water ? Has it anything to do with the quality ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. simply the quantity.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Because, the water supplied in our town is fit only for laundry purposes. I understand that it will still be optional with people to buy their water at a flat rate ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. This is simply to provide for the inspection of the meter where payment is made according to the amount supplied as shown by meter.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister says that the charge will be from 75 cents to $6. Could he explain that more definitely ? I suppose the higher charge will be in the case of a factory or large establishment ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Generally large establishments make contracts for supply of water at a fixed rate for a certain time. In some municipalities the water is supplied through meters, and this is to provide that the meters shall be inspected; but it will not interfere with those who desire to make contracts for water supply otherwise than by meter.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. LENNOX. Who will pay the fee—the person supplying the water, or the purchaser ?

Mr. BRODEUR. When a meter is manufactured, it will have to be inspected before it is used. Therefore the fee will have to be paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. LENNOX. That is, according to the theory of hon. gentlemen opposite it would be paid ultimately by the consumer. But what I am trying to get at is in what cases the charge will be 75 cents, and in what cases it will be $6. I can understand that it would depend upon the capacity of the meter, but that does not indicate very clearly how this expense is to bear upon the public. Whether it is in the form of an expenditure through the department or in the form of fees paid for this service, the burden will rest upon the public; and we ought to know how that tax will be borne. For instance, what will the expense be in the case of the ordinary householder ?

Mr. BRODEUR. About 75 cents every five years. So my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will see that it is not a very heavy tax. And this inspection is for the protection of the public.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the meters to be inspected once every five years ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, as in the case of gas and electric meters.

Mr. TAYLOR. They will be inspected oftener, I suppose, if the consumer thinks the meter is not running fairly and wants it inspected again ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Bill will provide for that. The consumer can have his meter inspected by the inspector of the district in which he resides.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 188) respecting the inspection of water meters.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 176) to amend the Inland Revenue Act—Mr. Brodeur—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a mere verbal change in the old Act and it is to make legal a practice in the department about which there was a little doubt in the law.

On section 2,

Mr. BRODEUR. Under the existing law licensees of the department can furnish bonds by guarantee companies or by private individuals. This amendment provides that licensees will be obliged to furnish bonds by guarantee companies which is a preferable system.

Mr R. L. BORDEN. I have no doubt that this Bill is carefully drafted, but it would appear that something is omitted. You seem to take it for granted that a guarantee company can give security.

Mr. BRODEUR. Section 19 of the old law provided that the department would have power to accept the bonds of guarantee companies, and section 13 provided that security might be given by private persons. We have amended all the sections of the law bearing on securities so that in future the bonds must be given by guarantee companies alone.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume the government has considered the advisability of making this change and doing away with securities given by private persons?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the reason ?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend will understand how difficult it is for the department to find out whether a person who is offered as surety is solvent or not. This leads to a great deal of correspondence and difficulty, and the result is sometimes to put the department in a very awkward position. The guarantee companies offer a better security in every respect than personal sureties.

Mr. LENNOX. It makes business for the guarantee companies; but all the same, I am inclined to think that it is an improvement, because, as the minister says, it is sometimes difficult to ascertain the solvency of the personal security, while this makes the security absolutely sure, I presume.

On section 6—security to be given before bonding warehouse is licensed—

Mr. BRODEUR. The only change in this clause is to provide that the security shall be by bond of a guarantee company approved by the department.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask if the losses of forfeitures under these bonds amount to very much, or are they only trifling ?

Mr. BRODEUR. For some years, I am advised by the deputy minister, there have not been any great losses, but in former years some heavy losses were incurred.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the government taken into consideration the question as to whether it would be profitable for the government to bond these people themselves, and take the fee that would otherwise accrue to the guarantee company ? Possibly there might be a saving to the country.

Mr. BRODEUR. You mean to make our own guarantee business.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let the government guarantee these various persons and collect the same fees that would be paid to a guarantee company. At the end of a few years the government would have saved a considerable sum. I understand this system prevails in the Post Office Department and works there satisfactorily.

Mr. BARKER. I do not quite agree with my hon. friend in that respect. I fear that where losses occur without security to the government, the government would be importuned by friends of the defaulters to overlook the offence ; but when the government collects from the guarantee company, the company collect from the individual. I am not at all sure of the illustration my hon. friend has given as the very best. We have had lately one or two instances in connection with the Post Office Department in which the government has been very lenient indeed to the officers in default. Had there been a guarantee company, as surety, the government would have collected the money, and the guarantee company would have looked after the officers.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to the special bond the licensees have to give, the guaranty given by the guarantee companies would be very much better than if the department assumed the risk itself and collected the fees. True we have not been losing much money these late years but it would be a dangerous policy to adopt. In some cases these bonds are for a very large amount. Some of the licensees have to obtain a guarantee for half a million dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON. The government does not insure its own property against fire.

Mr. BRODEUR. We control that to a certain extent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand it works satisfactorily in the Post Office Department, but the minister does not seem to agree with his colleagues on this question.

On section 8,

Mr. BRODEUR. The system of gauging has been done away with and replaced by a system of weighing, which is found more accurate. This clause simply provides that the quantity of spirits shall be determined by weight instead of by gauging.

On sections 13, 14 15 and 16,

Mr. BRODEUR. These are all to provide for the substitution of guarantee companies for the present bondsmen.

On section 17,

Mr. BRODEUR. The original Act provided that the quantity of grain should be stated in pounds and malt measure. We now substitute for the malt measure the cubic inches. That is the usual way of determining the weight.

On section 18,

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been represented to the department by some malt manufacturers that hours of work were too short. The old Act provided from 8 in the morning until 5 in the afternoon. We now provide that labour may be carried on from 7 in the morning until 6 in the evening. It is at the request of malt manufacturers.

Mr. BARKER. This affects only the government employees I suppose ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They cannot work unless the official is there.

Mr. LENNOX. It becomes the duty of the official to be there for a longer time, that is all ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

On section 20,

Mr. BRODEUR. This is only a verbal change providing for the substitution of the word 'initials' for the word 'signatures.' The last words of the original section read :

Such person shall also attest the correctness of the entry by his signature.

On section 21,

Mr. BRODEUR. This is because the malt measure has been replaced by the cubic inches.

On section 22,

Mr. BRODEUR. This is made necessary by the substitution of the guarantee companies for the bondsmen.

On section 23,

Mr. BRODEUR. The only change here is in section 1. It has been represented to the department that we could make methylated spirits not only with wood naphtha but also with some other articles. If such a system could be provided it would be cheaper than what we have to-day, and we simply take the power to use some other renaturalized spirit, than the one used to-day.

On section 24,

Mr. BRODEUR. This is simply a verbal change in the section.

On section 25,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister know that there has been a commission appointed in England to inquire into the use of alcohol in the arts, and into the manner of making it in the cheapest form, so that it may take the place of gasoline, and that everything in that direction is an encouragement to develop engines to take the place of steam engines ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; the department is watching those developments very closely.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. At present the Americans have control of the supply of gasoline practically for the world. If alcohol can be made cheaply, and all the investigations go to show that it can be made cheaply, it is the coming material for use in these new engines ; and if it is found that alcohol can displace gasoline, it ought to be made as cheaply as possible. I hope that the minister will keep that in view in framing his legislation.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the reason why, in section 23 of the Bill, we have provided that if any other means can be found of denaturizing spirits we would be willing to accept it. So far we have nothing better to offer than the methylated spirits.

Mr. GALLIHER. Before passing from these sections that deal with spirits, I would like to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue if there is any minimum age limit under which spirits of different kinds come into Canada ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no age limit regarding imported spirits ; there is with regard to our own spirits.

Mr. GALLIHER. As I understand it, a distiller in Canada cannot place upon the market any of his products until it has been two years distilled or in bond. The Canadian distiller is under that restriction. Now, we can get in Scotch whisky, or what passes for such—some of it is all right and some of it is not—we can get in Scotch whisky, or Irish whisky, or any other kind, from foreign countries, that may not be a month old when it is brought in. Has the minister ever considered the advisability of imposing upon importers of spirits from outside countries the duty of showing to the satisfaction of the government that these liquors have been distilled as long a time as is required of the Canadian liquors ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say to my hon. friend that this question does not pertain to the department of which I have the honour to be the head ; it is a question to be dealt with by the Customs Department. In our department we simply take knowledge of the spirits which are manufactured under control of the department ; that is to say, spirits manufactured in this country. There is much to be said in favour of the contention of my hon. friend, that foreign spirits should be put on the same footing as our Canadian products. That is a question which I will be glad to bring to the attention of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it not a fact that spirits have been brought into Canada from the United States that have not been aged to the required period, and have been bottled here in Canada and have the inland revenue label put upon them, which would appear to guarantee their age, when, as a matter of fact, these spirits have not been aged as the law requires ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That has not been done so far as we are aware, and indeed I am informed by the deputy that it would be impossible.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) appears to regard the two years' restriction as a burden upon the Canadian distiller to which the foreign distiller is not subjected. I think if he makes inquiries he will discover that the Canadian distiller would not regard it as a burden, but rather as an advantage.

Mr. GALLIHER. If there is any advantage in keeping liquor in bond for two years, our people should get the benefit of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. No doubt the distiller regards it as an advantage, because, to my mind, that is the very highest form of protection, inasmuch as it prevents new distilleries from being opened up.

Mr. BARR. It seems to me there is a good deal to be said in favour of the proposition of the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher). It does seem to me to be a hardship and injustice. When importers bring in Scotch whisky in any quantity and sell it, certainly they have an advantage over the Canadian distiller, and importers do bring in Scotch whisky and sell it at less than the Canadian manufacturer can sell it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose the foreign manufacturer is apprised of what is going on in this country, and will consume larger quantities of our own spirits on account of their superior excellence. Because I think it has been kept in bond two years, and in some cases seven or eight, or ten years, kept in wooden barrels so as to improve greatly the quality of the spirits. That is a reason, I think, why some of our spirits now are getting a reputation abroad.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What do the Canadian distillers do with the large quantity of American spirits that are brought into this country of late? I have been given to understand that the native product has not been sufficient for their trade. and they have been importing largely of American spirits. I want to know what is done by the Canadian distiller with these spirits that they import from the United States.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not aware that our distillers have been importing spirits from abroad. But they can if they please, because to-day every man in the country has a right to import spirits from any foreign country, whether those spirits have been manufactured for a year or for a longer period.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But cannot that spirit, in some way, come within the jurisdiction, so to speak, of the Inland Revenue Department? It comes through the customs, but the Inland Revenue Department makes provision that all spirits in this country bottled by Canadian distilleries shall have the quality of age. What I want to get at is whether or not a large quantity of spirits has been imported from the United States and has gone out as the product of Canadian distilleries though it has not the quality of age.

Mr. FIELDING. What inducement would there be to do that? For they would have to pay the custom duty.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Because the Canadian distilleries have not been able to make enough spirits for their own trade. I would like the Minister of Customs to throw some light upon this question. I am told that there have been enormous importations of American spirits into this country. There is a big concern, with its headquarters in Toronto and made up of all the distilleries of the country; and this concern has made these enormous importations.

Mr. BRODEUR. Why should they be prevented from importing?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have heard it stated that this whisky is labelled Canadian whisky, which is supposed to have an age of two years. Yet it is new spirits. I am asking the Minister of Inland Revenue, who ought to know, what becomes of these large importations of American spirits. Does he know of this association of Canadian distillers which is making these importations?

Mr. BRODEUR. I must tell my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean), for perhaps he is not aware of it, that all the spirits made here bear on the bottles the certificate of the age at which it is bottled. This certificate bears the signature of the officers of the department. Any persons importing spirits cannot use these labels. Therefore, it could not be sold as Canadian spirits, for if that were attempted the fraud would be detected.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Well, then, my question still stands—does the minister know of these large importations and what is done with them?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have no means of ascertaining.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. In justice to the Canadian Inland Revenue Department, I say the minister ought to know what is done with these large importations of American spirits into this country. He might ask his colleague the Minister of Customs what are done with these importations.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Department of Inland Revenue has to look after the collection of duties on spirits manufactured here. We are not concerned about the importations of foreign spirits.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But suppose that the minister heard—I do not know that the thing would happen, but I have heard it stated—that this American spirit is put under the protection, so to speak, of the Inland Revenue Department certificate, so that people think that they are getting an aged product when they are not.

Mr. BRODEUR. That does not come under the control of the Department of Inland Revenue. They could not use our labels for that product, and there would be nothing from the department to indicate that this was Canadian spirits.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would put it another way. There is a large demand for Canadian whisky, not only inside, but outside of Canada. All the whisky coming from Canada is aged. Now, what would the minister say if it should be shown that it was possible for Canadian distillers to put out whisky which has not been aged ? If that were done, of course purchasers would be deceived.

Mr. FIELDING. It could not be done without somebody deliberately labelling it as something better than it is. The Inland Revenue Department can only deal with the distillers. Unless this foreign spirit passes through the Canadian distillers and is sent out as Canadian whisky, that grievance would not arise.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It could not be done under the regulations. But what I am told is that it is being done—that American spirits are brought in, the customs duty paid on them even though it is greater than the inland revenue duty—and sent out as Canadian aged spirit. And why the custom duty should be larger than the inland revenue duty, I have never seen explained. I would like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), now that he has taken an interest in this thing, to explain why the Canadian distiller has that great advantage ? And who gets the benefit of it ? The consumer of Canadian whisky does not get it, for he has to pay as much for the Canadian as for the imported article. But, as I am informed though the Canadian distillers are charged less duty on their products than on importations they still import American spirit. What do they do with it ?

Mr. FIELDING. We might have expected such a speech as that we have just heard from any other member of the House, but I did not think that my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) would have attacked the protection given to the Canadian distillers.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am not attacking the protection given. I simply want to know the reason for it.

Mr. BARKER. I think we ought to have, if not from the Minister of Inland Revenue, certainly from the government, an explanation of the point put by my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean). If I understand him, Canadian whisky has to remain a certain number of years, and then must pay the inland revenue tax. But this other whisky is coming in that may not be a year old, and though it may pay more in customs tax, on the whole it may be able to undersell the Canadian product. This is the point to which I understand the hon. gentleman called attention. How is it that American whisky is being brought in here, paying a higher customs duty as against the inland revenue whisky—if I may so call it—which has to be kept two years?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been no change in this respect for many a year. I think that the Canadian distiller, far from regarding this restriction as a burden, regards it as a substantial advantage to him as guaranteeing the quality of the Canadian spirit.

Mr. BARKER. As between the several Canadian producers of Canadian whisky, but that is not the point.

Mr. FIELDING. There is nothing in the regulations now that has not been there since long before any of the present members of the cabinet took office. As I have said, I think the Canadian distiller regards this restriction as a decided advantage to him. Of course, we are somewhat at a disadvantage in discussing this matter because none of us in this House are consumers of these articles and are unable to understand the value of goods of that character.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. From the point of view of the revenue it would be better that the whisky brought into Canada should be imported, because the customs duty is larger than the inland revenue duty. But I would again suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should consult with the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue, and I think they would find a new condition of affairs existing which will repay their investigation. It may be that a change in the law is necessary.

On section 26,

Paragraph (g) of section 247 of the principal Act, as the said paragraph is enacted by section 13 of chapter 15 of the statutes of 1889, is repealed and the following substituted therefor : (g) The expression 'caution label' means and includes the notice required by the provisions of this Act to be attached to certain packages hereinafter described, containing manufactured tobacco or cigars.

Mr. BRODEUR. The only change there is to add the word 'manufactured' before the word 'tobacco.' First the label was simply with regard to tobacco or cigars, but as we have no control over raw leaf tobacco, it was considered advisable to have the word 'manufactured' added, as we have control over manufactured tobacco.

Mr. BARKER. Has that construction ever been disputed by the manufacturers?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it has always been admitted, but this is to make it clear.

Mr. GALLIHER. Will the hon. minister please give a fuller explanation as I do not understand the point. He says he has no control over raw leaf tobacco.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have control over the imported raw leaf, which pays a customs duty of 10 cents per pound, and afterwards pays excise duty, but we have no control over the ordinary Canadian raw leaf.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The Minister of Inland Revenue is in favour of the gradual adoption of the decimal system, and I know of no way in which it could be adopted so effectively and so easily as in connection with the working of his department. I would suggest that the minister should try the system in his department in connection with the collection of duties on excisable articles.

Mr. BRODEUR. The metric system is making a great deal of progress in public favour, and we may expect before long that it will be adopted in Canada. We are educating the people, and the suggestion that it should be tried in the Inland Revenue Department is a good one.

Mr. HENDERSON. In reference to this inland revenue law and the amendments that we have passed, will the commissioners for the consolidation of the statutes take these amendments into the consolidation and present the Inland Revenue Act to us in the form of one complete Act?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. When the law is consolidated it will contain the changes which have been adopted to-night.

Mr. HENDERSON. And an entirely new Act will be presented?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. That will be more convenient than if we had the Act in one place and the amendment to it in another.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

NATURALIZATION ACTS—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 184) to amend the Acts respecting Naturalization and Aliens—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read the second time and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This applies particularly to the Northwest Territories. The existing law provides that aliens must go to a judge of the Supreme Court and have the certificate posted up in the place where the judge holds his court. The amendment provides that the name may be posted up in any subdistrict when under an ordinance of the Northwest Territories the judicial district is subdivided.

Mr. BARKER. The gentlemen from the Northwest are not here; perhaps we should let it stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Very well.

Progress reported.

THE CITY OF OTTAWA ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 180) further to amend the Act of 1899 respecting the city of Ottawa (Mr. Fielding) was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. FIELDING. This is a Bill from the Senate for the purpose of amending the Act respecting the Ottawa Improvement Commission. Its purpose is to allow the commissioners by by-law to impose penalties—the penalties are blank, but we propose to insert not exceeding $50, or imprisonment not exceeding three months—upon persons who may violate the by-law. The special purpose is to enable the commissioners to protect and preserve the improvements which they may make. It is purely technical, but I am sure it is an object which will commend itself to the committee.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I want to suggest another clause. At an earlier stage of this session attention was directed to the fact that there is no provision for a report from the commission. The commissioners make returns of their expenditures, which are properly audited, and as to which we receive all necessary information in the Auditor General's Report. But I think it is right that the commissioners should make an annual report of their operations. I propose therefore to insert a clause which provides that the first report for the year ending June 30, 1905, shall deal not only with the affairs of the year, but with all the work that they have been doing up to date, and that thereafter they shall make an annual report.

Mr. BLAIN. I saw in the Ottawa 'Citizen' the other day a reference to the name of Dundonald Park, with the suggestion that no further improvements would be made in that park because of the name. May I ask the minister if that article was brought to his attention, and if there can be anything in a report of that kind?

Mr. FIELDING. I know nothing of the matter more than what I saw in the paper. I would regard it as highly improbable.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the government would not sanction anything of that kind?

Mr. FIELDING. It would be time enough to consider that when we saw it.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the government might consider it worth while to make a statement as to whether money would be voted for the improvement of the park after the name was changed.

Mr. FIELDING. If there were any proposal of that character before the government, I think my hon. friend would be quite right to ask for information concerning it; but as we have never heard of anything of the sort, and as the whole matter is left in the hands of the Ottawa Improvement Commission, I do not think there is any need of the government making any suggestion concerning it. I can tell my hon. friend that the government have made no suggestion concerning it. The commission are free to deal with that as with all other matters. Except what I have seen in the press, I have never heard of it.

Mr. BLAIN. Considerable discussion took place upon it in the city council. They regarded it, I suppose, as important, otherwise it would never have been mentioned.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend understand that the report in the newspaper indicated that the alderman who made the suggestion did so in a jocular manner ?

Mr. BLAIN. I did not so understand it.

Mr. BARKER. I do not think the matter was brought up in the council in a jocular manner. It seemed to be taken rather seriously by some people, and it does seem to me that the very fact that such a statement has been made should lead to some inquiry from the government as to whether there is anything in it or not. I take it that there would be some hesitation about making further contributions if it were seriously believed that such a thing could be done in Ottawa by this commission. I agree with the minister that it is not at all probable that such a thing occurred, but the fact that it has been asserted seems to me to call for some inquiry from the government if they are going to continue to make contributions.

Mr. FIELDING. All I can say is that I do not think it is the business of the government to concern itself very much with the names of these little plots of land around Ottawa, and we have not done so. The commission or the proper authorities call them by what names they see fit, and we have not interfered. I do not think it is a matter as to which we should take the initiative. If any one proposes anything objectionable, it will be time enough to do so ; but I do not think that on a mere newspaper rumour of that kind the government should enter on any investigation.

Mr. BLAIN. I have the article in my hand now. It is contained in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of Friday last, June 30. It is headed: 'What's in a name ? Is Dundonald Park a hoo-doo name ? Startling charge : Alderman Plouffe, prominent Liberal, says it prevents park being improved.' The article says :

> Has the fact of Dundonald Park being named after Lord Dundonald anything to do with the failure of the Improvement Commission to make the needed improvements ?
> That was the question brought up at a meeting yesterday of the board of works.
> 'I think we had better change the name of Dundonald Park to Somerset Park,' said Alderman Rosenthal, 'unless this is done, I don't believe the commission will ever do anything with the park.'
>
> 'That's right,' said Alderman Plouffe.
>
> 'I don't think that that is the reason why nothing has been done,' stated Alderman Davidson ; 'if it is, however, I may state that the name won't be changed.'
>
> 'Then no improvements will be made,' asserted Alderman Plouffe.

Mr. FIELDING. I think I will leave these aldermen to settle it among themselves. They appear to know all about it.

Mr. BLAIN. As the government is contributing a large amount towards the improvement of Ottawa city to-day, to which I personally offer no objection, I think it should make a statement when an important matter of this kind is brought up in the city council, and the aldermen say that no money will be expended on this park while this name is perpetuated. The government should say that, in so far as they are concerned, they will continue the appropriation of the money notwithstanding the park is called the Dundonald park.

Mr. FIELDING. The government is not much concerned with regard to the names of any of the parks in the city. The commissioners have called them what they please, and I never inquired what the names were.

Mr. BARKER. The charge is that money which the government is contributing will not be used as it ought to be because of the particular name. It is very improper that money contributed by the government should be withheld from its particular purpose for such a reason.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that we would undertake to oblige the commissioners to spend the money at any particular point in Ottawa. That is one of the details we have left to the commission, and I see no reason why we should depart from that rule.

Bill reported, amendments read the first and second time, and agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE BANK ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 181) to amend the Bank Act—Mr. Fielding—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. This is designed to remove the limitation from the number of bank directors, which at present may not exceed ten. It was proposed to leave that to the judgment of the banks themselves, and there is also a provision that the banks may have an honorary president.

Mr. BARKER. You simply put the minimum number ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; five.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Has the government made any progress with reference to the proposal submitted to parliament some years ago to issue five-dollar and ten-dollar notes ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is nothing to prevent the government issuing five-dollar notes. Although the matter was talked of at one time, we have found that although the issue of four-dollar notes is not as convenient as the five-dollar bank bills, the present facilities of the bank enable them to give an ample supply of five-dollar notes.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We are increasing the number of Canadian banks, and therefore augmenting the distrust shown in the United States towards Canadian money. In New York and a great many points they refuse Canadian bills, simply because of the large number of Canadian banks, and I think the time has come when there ought to be an issue of national notes of five dollars. These would pass current in any country, and would be of great advantage to travellers.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATURALIZATION ACTS—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 184) to amend the Acts respecting Naturalization and Aliens—Sir Wilfrid Laurier—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill is peculiarly applicable to the Northwest Territories, and I have had a conference with my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy), who sees no objection to it. The object of the first section is to provide that certificates may be issued in the office of the deputy clerk where there are sub-districts and when the applicant resides in the sub-district. This will obviate the necessity of going to the court-house in a district town, which may be hundreds of miles away.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it a fact that a man naturalized in Canada is a British subject only in Canada ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is right, and something should be done in the way of remedying that grievance. I think it will be necessary for us to make our period of residence required for naturalization correspond with that in England, and in that way we might be able to arrange with the imperial authorities so as to have a naturalization which would practically be British instead of Canadian. We are in correspondence with imperial authorities for the purpose of bringing that about.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That is the very point I was going to suggest, that some negotiations should take place.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There has been correspondence with the Colonial Secretary.

Mr. MACDONALD. I was going to ask whether or not, after all, this question of naturalization does not require some international arrangement in order to obviate the difficulty which my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) suggests, because if by the laws of a foreign country the legal principle which formerly applied to British nationality by which 'once a British subject always a British subject' applies, then no matter what our provisions in Canada might be, a person could not rid himself of his nationality in a foreign state.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think the principle laid down in the case of Eneas Macdonald ever prevailed. I think 'once a British subject always a British subject' ceased to be recognized in international law.

Mr. MACDONALD. I quite agree with that but I thought the same principle might apply to the laws of some other nation although it has been done away with as far as British law is concerned.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is worthy of consideration.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And something ought to be done.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Because we have a number of naturalized Canadians who have found out that they are not British subjects. They thought they were and it is certain that we have understood that a Canadian was a British subject. As a matter of fact a naturalized Canadian is not ; he finds difficulties in connection wiht his citizenship when he goes abroad. A German who has become naturalized in Canada on going to Germany might be called upon to perform military service. In that way if we call ourselves a nation—and as the leader of the Liberal party (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said he had made Canada a nation, but he has not completed the job and there is something still to be done. It is more or less of a stigma and ought to be removed. I hope the Minister of Justice will follow this up and secure a remedy for what now is a grievance.

On section 2,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are changes in the form of the oath. They are merely intended to conform to the amendment of the law.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. Two items remain in the main estimates and we might take them up to-night. Of course if hon. gentlemen opposite regard either of them as important and desire to have them stand we will let them stand although the supplementary estimates which will come down very soon, I hope to-morrow, will contain items in relation to most of these things and therefore there will be ample opportunity for discussion.

Charges of management, $241,400.

Mr. FIELDING. These items, as will be seen, are the same as usual with the exception of two or three small increases in the case of the offices of the assistant receiver general, amounting to the sum of $1,150 all told. These increases are found necessary owing to our estimate of last year having been found rather close. In the supplementary estimates I find it is necessary to have items relating to some of these votes with a view to making readjustments of the salaries of some of these officials.

A line or lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax, or either, and the West Indies and South America, $80,700.

Mr. FIELDING. That item was held over in consequence of a question being raised as to whether the service should be continued to the same ports. The contractor had made a suggestion of some change involving the dropping of St. John. The conclusion of the government was to continue the service on the same route as before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For what time is it continued ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is an annual vote but the contract has been continued for five years.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. FIELDING. Messrs. Pickford & Black. The contract will be renewed for a term of five years, the ports to be the same. There is some question of the dropping of some ports in the West Indies ; that will be a matter for negotiation with the imperial government. For the present we have not determined upon any change.

Steam communication between St. John and ports on Minas Basin and Cumberland Basin, $3,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why was that left over ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think owing to the absence of the member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) owing to his illness. As that hon. member is still absent perhaps we should allow it to stand over if any hon. gentleman has a question to ask.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know of any particular question.

Mr. FIELDING. Let it go then.

To provide for expenditure in connection with Transportation Commission, $15,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This item was left over to furnish an explanation in connection with the work of the commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked that that item should stand until the government gave us a full explanation of what the Transportation Commission have done. I do not think it will take them very long to tell us about that. I wanted to know what they expected they ever would do. But, in short, what I want to know is a statement of what has been accomplished by this commission; how long they have been doing it, and what they are doing now. I want to know all about it from first to last; what its present status is, and what use it is proposed to make of it in the future. I have mentioned this three or four times already this session. If the Minister of Finance would get one of his clerks to turn up the places in 'Hansard' where this item has been mentioned, and one place where I brought it up on the Orders of the Day, he will see what I want.

Mr. FIELDING. My impression is that there was a report showing what progress they had made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was a report of only one place.

Mr. FIELDING. They made an interim report at the beginning of their operations, and I think they have made a later report. However, the hon. gentleman's request is quite reasonable, and I will allow the item to stand.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Murray Harbour Branch and Hillsboro bridge, $357,400.

Mr. EMMERSON. That item was allowed to stand with the promise that an opportunity would be given later for its discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has any explanation been given of it already?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and the papers have all been furnished, copies of contracts, and all the papers that have been asked for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we might pass this item with the understanding that it can be reopened.

Mr. FIELDING. It can be taken up on the supplementaries, which will be broad enough to cover a discussion on it.

Mr. EMMERSON. There will be an opportunity of discussing this matter further on the supplementaries.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business is to be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was understood that we would go on with the Autonomy Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Saskatchewan Bill I understood, and also some Bills relating to the Northwest Territories.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We shall try to get all the Bills that have reference to the Northwest Territories and the two new provinces into shape to be dealt with on third reading on Wednesday—the Alberta Bill, the Saskatchewan Bill and all the ancillary Bills, such as those relating to census and irrigation ; all that are necessary to complete and round out the legislation respecting the Northwest Territories. We will try to-morrow to get the whole thing ready for third reading on Wednesday, if that is agreeable to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as I am concerned, I see no objection. And it is what I thought would be done. The Minister of Justice promised my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) to send a memorandum respecting the preamble——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I had it ready on Saturday, but the office was closed, and I could not get anybody to typewrite it then. It is all ready and will be delivered to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 4, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST—SALARIES OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That section 2 of chapter 4 of the revised statutes, intituled : ' An Act respecting the salaries of certain public functionaries, and other annual charges on the Consolidated Revenue,' be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words and figures :

The Lieutenant Governor of the Saskatchewan, $9,000.

The Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, $9,000.

He said : I beg to inform the House that His Excellency the Governor General having been informed of the subject matter of this recommends it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

DEATH OF DR. JOHNSTON, M.P.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, once again it is my very sad duty to have to inform the House that we have lost by death one of our colleagues. Dr. Johnston, the member for West Lambton, is no more. This is the fourth time during the present session that death has visited the members of this House. Nobody could have believed when we met here some five months ago that our late friend, Dr. Johnston, who then appeared to be the very incarnation of rugged health, would be one of the first victims ; but such is the uncertain tenure of life, that upon this, as upon many other occasions, the hand of fate has been laid upon him who looked to be the strongest. I need not say to the House that Dr. Johnston was one of the popular members among us. He had no enemies ; all his acquaintances were his friends ; he was beloved by those on this side, and I know he was equally respected by hon. gentlemen opposite. If there was any place where his high and sterling qualities were appreciated more than elsewhere it was in the town of Sarnia and the county of West Lambton, where he passed the greater portion of his life. His death will be a sad blow to his friends, above all to his family, and I am sure that the members of this House on both sides will unite in tendering to his bereaved family the deep and sincere expression of their sympathy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those who sit at your left I join with what has been said by the Prime Minister. Our friend, Dr. Johnston, who has passed away, was a man of very kindly and genial disposition, and I cordially endorse what the right hon. gentleman has said as to the respect and esteem in which he was held by those who sit on this side of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that the body of Dr. Johnston will be removed from his place of residence in Ottawa to the train at half-past five o'clock. If it is agreeable to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I would ask that Mr. Speaker suspend the proceedings of the House at 5 o'clock instead of 6 o'clock as usual.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

VENTILATION OF THE CHAMBER.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. I regret that the Minister of Public Works is not in his place, but I see the Minister of Agriculture, who is the father of the cold storage system, and if the Minister of Public Works does not act, the Minister of Agriculture might take steps to obtain some better arrangement than that which now exists for cooling the air in this chamber. The Prime Minister has just referred to the fact that during the present session four members have been called away ; the only wonder is that the number is not greater. In this chamber last night there were 80 degrees of heat, and when you came in from the outside, where you were breathing fresh air, the foul air here struck you at the door. It is the duty of the government to at once correct this. Surely some arrangement can be devised whereby this chamber can be made healthy ; the windows ought to be removed on such a day as this and the fresh air allowed to come in. We should have fresh air introduced through pipes filled with ice, so that it may be cooled. Just now the temperature here is 75, while outside it is 70. Under this very room there are five or six furnaces kept going day and night for the purpose of supplying hot water ; and if it is necessary to have hot water in the building, some arrangement should be made for heating it outside and forcing it through in pipes. We have put up with this state of things long enough. The session of parliament is never going to be got through in cool weather. We commenced on the 11th day of January and here we are in July. I never expect to see a session over again before six or seven months, and it is time the government did something to preserve the health of the members who are obliged to attend their public duties here.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER. I do not think any words can be too strong to impress this matter upon the minds of those who have it in charge. Ever since I have been in the House this has been a constant complaint, and nothing efficient has ever been done to provide a remedy. It is not too much to say that a man either of very rugged health or of delicate physique takes his life in his hands when he attends the sessions of parliament in this chamber regularly afternoon and night. A man midway between the very rugged and those of a very slender type seem to get through much better than the others, but anyhow the place is very unhealthy. That floral tribute on that vacant desk to-day tells us of the passing away of one of our members. I do not know that directly the foul air in this chamber had anything to do with it, but I do know that the members of this House feel very strongly—I feel so myself very strongly—that when one attends this chamber constantly he takes great risks on living out the term of his natural life. There ought to be something done right away to cool the air in this chamber ; and our caretakers, aided by scientific advice, should immediately take up the matter. If necessary they should knock out the sides of the thing one way or the other ; better knock out the side of the House and allow fresh air to come in than make us live in this foul atmosphere. The fact that the temperature is higher in this chamber than it is outside is patent to everybody ; you cannot come in from the fresh air and enter that corridor without distinguishing the deadly atmosphere. I feel it every time I come in. Something ought to be done ; and if nothing can be done to this chamber, let us take some of the money we are lavishing in other ways—for instance, on the mint and the museum—and let us make a chamber which will be at least healthy for the people's representatives, whose lives are at stake.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has rightly said that this is not a new complaint ; he and I have heard it ever since we have been in this House. Something certainly ought to be done at the earliest possible date to remove the grievance to which he has alluded. I shall make it my special duty to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this state of affairs, so that he may try any means possible to have it remedied.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. I know, as a matter of fact, that two or three years ago a gentleman named Manny, who is an inventor, and who has successfully installed fresh air plants, offered the government to ventilate this chamber in a proper way and to provide any temperature that might be required. That offer was refused on the opinion of the engineers and architects of the government, who held that if they had not been able to do it, Mr. Manny could not succeed. This offer is still before the government, and I think we should ascertain whether or not that gentleman is prepared to carry it out. He has said that he could keep the temperature of this chamber at 70 or 72, or at any other degree that is required.

Mr. C. PICHE. I wish to state that the gentleman mentioned by the hon. member for Beauharnois has offered to give any amount of security that he will carry out his contract to ventilate this chamber in a proper way. So there need be no fear that he will not do the work properly.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. I think I suggested before, and I mention it again, that the ventilation of this chamber could be very much improved by opening up six of the squares in the ceiling, and at the same time opening some of the windows lower down. During several months each year for two or three years I occupied a square chamber something like this with about 500 other people, yet we have never experienced any of the deleterious effects from impure air which we experience in this chamber. The high openings above would draw off the heated air, which tends to ascend, and the cool air from the lower openings would take its place. I do not know why architects have never made any attempt to improve the ventilation in that way, which seems to me the most natural way to ventilate.

HALF BREED SCRIP.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the government has come to any conclusion with reference to the investigation or the carrying out of the process before the scrip commissioners.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend asked if the government had employed counsel. I may say that we have not come to a conclusion as yet. I will give an answer to my hon. friend to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this is somewhat important. To-day is the 4th of July, that place is somewhat distant, Winnipeg is somewhat distant from here, and if proper preparation is to be made, some time must be given to counsel to procure witnesses and get the evidence in shape. As an evidence of what is taking place, I may read the following telegram :

Rolla, North Dakota, June 24.—Emissaries of a real estate firm in Canada have been here for some days endeavouring to find out the half-breeds who are likely to go to Killarney next month to give evidence in the scrip scandal investigation to be held there. It is said many of the older half-breeds, who are likely to give damaging evidence, have received large sums of money to go to the mountains about that time. It is also said that a notary public of North Dakota who signed many papers in blank, is holding the firm in question up for a large amount and threatens if he does not get his price there will be startling revelations. There is great unrest in the case here.

My right hon. friend must see that it is worth a great deal to these parties to get incriminating evidence out of the way, and they are able to pay, and pay royally, for doing it.

THE NIXON INVESTIGATION.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like also to ask the government whether they are yet able to inform the House whether or not they are going to have a thorough investigation made into the Nixon case. Evidence has been sent to me to prove: that the boy Nixon was not in the office when the money was stolen, that all the receipts were signed by the elder Nixon himself, that the son never left the country, that he always lived at Macleod, except for a few days spent at Frank and Blair, that he was much on the surveys and was not always engaged in the office, and that the elder Nixon did all the work and took all the money, and that the proof of these facts is abundant if an opportunity is given for it to be utilized. One feature of the case which is probably more important than any other, as it stands to-day, is that this young boy has been branded and marked for life. He is either innocent or guilty. If he is not guilty, it is a wretched outrage to brand him as guilty, and send him out to live his forty or fifty or sixty years of life with that brand upon him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I informed my hon. friend the other day that I had asked the Minister of the Interior to look into the different allegations and prepare a report. My hon. friend knows that we have been very busy, and he cannot wonder that all these things have not yet been attended to ; but they will be attended to.

THE KENTVILLE RIFLE RANGE.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I wish to draw the attention of the government to the fact that the report of the evidence taken in regard to the Kentville or Aldershot rifle range in Nova Scotia will cost upwards of $100 to be copied. It is rather a heavy expense, but I would respectfully draw the attention of the government to the necessity of having it copied, so that the House may be in possession of the report.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend must remember that the matter was referred to the Exchequer Court, and I apprehend that there must be a printed copy of the report.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know anything about it personally, but my information comes from the officers of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will find out to-morrow how the matter stands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think it can be printed, because I understand that the proceedings before the judge of the Exchequer Court are not printed at all.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved second reading of Bill (No. 70) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss this Bill. The debate which took place on the second reading of the corresponding Bill (No. 69), was very exhaustive, and it is not worth while at this stage of the session to repeat any portion of it. I shall therefore content myself, for the reasons which I gave at that time, with moving:

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the question be left out and the following substituted therefor :

Upon the establishment of a province in the Northwest Territories of Canada as proposed by Bill (No 70) the legislature of such province, subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1886, is entitled to and should enjoy full powers of provincial self-government including power to exclusively make laws in relation to education.

This is precisely similar to the motion I made with regard to the other Bill.

House divided on amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Mr. SPEAKER. In my opinion the ayes have it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN—FINANCIAL TERMS.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the following amounts shall be allowed as an annual subsidy to the province of Saskatchewan and shall be paid by the government of Canada, by half-yearly instalments in advance, to the said province, that is to say :

(a) for the support of the government and legislature, fifty thousand dollars ;

(b) on an estimated population of two hundred and fifty thousand, at eighty cents per head two hundred thousand dollars, subject to be increased as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: a census of the said province shall be taken in every fifth year reckoning from the general census of one thousand nine hundred and one, and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made at equal intervals of time between each quinquennial and decennial census ; and whenever the population, by any such census or estimate, exceeds two hundred and fifty thousand, which shall be the minimum on which the said allowance shall be calculated, the amount of the said allowance shall be increased accordingly and so on until the population has reached eight hundred thousand souls.

2. Resolved, That inasmuch as the said province is not in debt, it shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada, by half-yearly payments in advance, interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the sum of eight million one hundred and seven thousand five hundred dollars.

3. Resolved, That inasmuch as the public lands in the said province are to remain the property of Canada, there shall be paid by Canada to the said province annually by way of compensation therefor a sum based upon the estimated value of such lands, namely, $37,500,000 the said lands being assumed to be of an area of 25,000,000 acres and to be of the value of $1.50 per acre, and upon the population of the said province as from time to time ascertained by the quinquennial census thereof, such sum to be arrived at as follows :

The population of the said province being assumed to be at present 250,000, the sum payable until such population reaches 400 000 is to be one per cent on such estimated value, or $375,000 ;

Thereafter, until such population reaches 800,000, the sum payable is to be one and one-half per cent on such estimated value, or $562,500 ;

Thereafter, until such population reaches 1,200,000, the sum payable is to be two per cent on such estimated value or $750,000 ;

And thereafter such payment is to be three per cent on such estimated value, or $1,125,000.

4. Resolved That as additional compensation for such lands there shall be paid by Canada to the said province annually for five years to provide for the construction of necessary public buildings, one-quarter of one per cent on such estimated value, or $93,750.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). As we are treating these two Autonomy Bills as one all through, I would suggest that instead of taking up these resolutions seriatim, we agree that they shall be amended to correspond to the similar resolutions in the Alberta Bill, leaving it to the clerk to make the necessary changes for that purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they word for word the same clauses?

Mr. FIELDING. The resolutions were originally introduced in the same form. In the case of the Alberta Bill some amendments have been made. My proposal is that the amendments made in the Alberta resolutions and in the Bill founded thereon be made also in these resolutions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand, the resolutions are the same as in the Alberta Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the amendments necessary are the same word for word as those in connection with the Alberta Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. Precisely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To keep the records right I suppose it will appear in the journals that the Minister of Finance made the necessary motions or amendments?

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am willing to agree to the Finance Minister's proposal for the purpose of saving time.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not know whether the amendments as they were finally in the Alberta Bill were all made in one day or not. The object is to conform this Bill word for word with the Alberta Bill? I would like to know on what day or days the amendments in the Alberta Bill were made ?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Uriah Wilson) will find these amendments on page 542 of the 'Votes and Proceedings.'

Resolutions as amended reported, read the first and second times and agreed to.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in committee on Bill (No. 70) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Saskatchewan—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 2, British North America Acts, 1867 to 1886, to apply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg to move :

That section 2 be struck out and the following substituted therefor :

2. The provisions of the British North America Act, 1867 to 1886 shall apply to the province of Saskatchewan in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the other provinces heretofore comprised in the Dominion, except such provisions as in terms or by reasonable intendment are specially applicable to or affect one or more only and not the whole of the said provinces.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. MONK. It was in amendment to section 2 of the Alberta Bill that I moved my amendment to that Bill the other day. As I desire to move a similar amendment to this Bill I suppose I had better move it now?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well.

Mr. MONK. I move:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the legislative assembly of the province and in the proceedings of the courts, and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of such assembly, and all laws made by the legislature shall be printed in both languages : provided, however, that the said legislative assembly may by law or otherwise regulate its proceedings and the manner of recording and publishing the same, and the regulations so made shall be embodied in a proclamation which shall be forthwith made and published by the Lieutenant Governor in conformity of the law and thereafter shall have full force and effect.

Amendment negatived on division.

On section 4,

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 4 :

The said province and the province of Alberta shall, until the termination of the parliament of Canada existing at the time of the first readjustment hereinafter provided for, continue to be represented in the House of Commons as provided by chapter 60 of the statutes of 1903, each of the electoral districts defined in that part of the schedule to the said Act which relates to the Northwest Territories, whether such district is wholly in one of the said provinces, or party in one and partly in the other of them, being represented by one member.

This is to make this Bill conform to the Alberta Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I assume that in every case where the government makes any amendment it is, ipsissimis verbis, in the terms already moved and carried with respect to the Alberta Bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the assumption on which we are proceeding.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Upon that assumption I make no further comment.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 5 :

Upon the completion of the next quinquennial census for the said province, the representation thereof shall forthwith be readjusted by the parliament of Canada in such manner that there shall be assigned to the said province such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population ascertained at such quinquennial census as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the population of Quebec as ascertained at the then last decennial census ; and in the computation of the number of members for the said province a fractional part not exceeding one-half of the whole number requisite for entitling the province to a member shall be disregarded, and a fractional part exceeding one-half of that number shall be deemed equivalent to the whole number, and such readjustment shall take effect upon the termination of the parliament then existing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

2. The representation of the said province shall thereafter be readjusted from time to time according to the provisions of section 51 of the British North America Act, 1867.

Motion agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 9,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no question about the seat of government in Saskatchewan. An amendment was moved to the other Bill with respect to the seat of government.

Mr. BERGERON. It is understood it is to be at Regina.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think there is any discussion in regard to it.

On section 12,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The words :

Having due regard to the distribution of population and existing local divisions.

are struck out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have a sechedule to this Bill have we not ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, and I now move that Schedule 'B' be adopted.

Mr. LAKE. When the Alberta Bill was before this House the statement was frequently made that the desire to make Calgary a capital was at the bottom of a great deal of the opposition which had been raised by members on this side of the House to the schedules as they were presented. Occasion was taken several times by members on this side to repudiate that statement. I certainly did so for my part and others did the same. We objected to the proposed distribution on the ground that it was a most unfair distribution of representation. In the present Bill there is no question about the capital ; there is no doubt as to the proposition that Regina should be selected for the first meeting of the new legislative assembly, but an examination of the schedules as attached to this Bill shows that there is apparently a deliberate intention on the part of the government to deprive the older settlers in the new province of their fair and legitimate share in the representation of that country. Under the schedule those older settlers who have mainly made that country what it is, who have borne the burthen and heat of the day, who have legislated in the past for that country and successfully legislated, are to be deprived of an equitable voice in what the future of that country shall be, now that it is made into a province. I say there ought to be no mistake whatever as to what we are contending for in this matter. We simply ask that every vote in that new country shall have an equal value, that the vote of the old-timer shall have a value equal to that of the new comer to the country. We ask no more and no less. We ask simply for equitable treatment to all. Taking a general average we find that with the distribution proposed, the vote of the new-comer shall be equivalent in value to the votes of two of the older settlers in that country. That is the general effect of the proposed distribution. We desire that the principle of representation according to population should be adhered to, and this distribution does not adhere to it. In the old legislative assembly, in so far as concerns the present proposed province of Saskatchewan, there were two distinct legal divisions, there was the provisional district of Saskatchewan in the north and that of Assiniboia in the south. Those two divisions have been recognized in all distributions of representation from the beginning up to the present time and we find that to a certain extent they have been recognized in the schedules which have been placed before us. All the seats with the exception of three are completely in either the northern district or the southern district. In three cases the seats, while properly belonging to the north, have been run into the south and take in a considerable slice of the southern districts. I intend to show that it is proposed to give a far larger representation to the northern parts of the province than it is entitled to, and a far smaller share of representation to the southern part of the province than it is entitled to. For that purpose I will take the old division as between the provisional district of Saskatchewan, which I shall call the northern portion, and of Assiniboia, which I shall call the southern portion. This Bill, roughly speaking, gives nine seats to the north and sixteen seats to the south. The original schedules which were laid before the House gave ten seats to the north and fifteen to the south. I did not catch what the right hon. Prime Minister moved when these schedules were brought up, but I understand he moved the amended schedules as laid on the table of the House a few days ago :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I moved the original schedule, not the amended schedule, but of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) has notice of the amendment which it is proposed to introduce and which modifies to some extent his argument.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister if it is his intention to move the amended schedule ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. I think, therefore, that I might as well base my argument on the amended schedule.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAKE. The original schedule, of course, shows far more in favour of the argument which I propose to make than the amended schedule, but if, as I understand the right hon. Prime Minister, he intends to move the amended schedule then I suppose it would be more satisfactory to this committee if I based my argument on the amended schedule. Since the Bill was introduced we find that an amendment has already been made to the original schedule as brought in. I am very glad to find that the amendment has been made. It has made things slightly better, but this distribution is still about as bad, in my opinion, as it is possible for any distribution of seats to be. Now, in dealing with the question of Prince Albert the government laid down certain principles which they said would govern them and which did govern them in the distribution of seats. At page 8000 of 'Hansard' it is stated by the right hon. Prime Minister that :

> The prime object——
> Of the distribution—
> ——was as far as possible to give equality of numbers in the different electoral districts.
> Mr. FOSTER. How equality of numbers ?
> The PRIME MINISTER. Taking the unit of population.

On the following page he used this language :

> That was the first consideration, at all events —the existing representation. The next was the geographical distribution of the population. These are the three principles which we have in mind and I do not think it possible to have any other guides.

Later he went on to elaborate this a little farther. At page 8100 of 'Hansard' he said :

> I stated yesterday at the opening of the discussion that we took as the basis of the distribution which we made, the condition of things existing at the present time, the number of seats assigned to the province of Alberta in the present legislature of the Territory, which amounts to 16. First of all we had to increase that by 10, we had to give to Alberta 10 more seats than there are to-day in the legislature of the Northwest Territories within the limits of Alberta. How are we to come to that conclusion ? We come to that conclusion upon information derived from three sources which we submit to the House to be challenged. We take first the number of votes recorded. We do not say to the House that this is the only thing we should take into consideration ; we say that is one thing which ought to be taken into consideration but not alone. We take next the number of votes registered ; we do not say that is the only thing to be taken, that is only one of many things on which we should form our judgment. Then we take the census of 1901. That is the best thing of all. If we had a census for 1905 we would not have to consider the number of recorded votes nor the number of registered votes, nor the number of post offices, school districts or improvement districts ; we would take only the census for 1905. But we have no census of 1905 and therefore we have to make up our minds as to what is the actual population at the present time. We know that the population at the present time is double what it was in 1901, and we have to make our calculation accordingly. But though the population has doubled, I think it is only a fair suggestion that we must find a wealth of information in the census of 1901. We say moreover that we think this is something to go on, not the number of post offices, school districts and improvement districts.

That was the basis upon which the distribution in Alberta was made, according to the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister. I would like to read also a statement which was made in this respect by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). He was more definite. He said :

The definite division of the constituencies is based on the vote actually polled on the 3rd November, as we believe that was the closest and most recent date upon which we could get information we could rely upon. The information with regard to post offices, homestead entries and other matters of that kind was arrived at in order to bear, not upon the question of division of constituencies, but on the question as to whether the bulk of the population was in one end of the country or the other. That information therefore would not have any direct bearing on the propriety of the actual division made, but would be merely corroborative evidence to show whether the trend of population was in this direction or that.

Later on the Minister of the Interior made another statement as to the basis upon which they proceeded. At page 8118 he is reported to have spoken as follows :

The basis of the division of the constituencies was necessarily, I said, the vote cast. That was not the question that he was arguing about at all. That question has not yet arisen. I said that we took the actual vote cast, because it was the latest and most accurate information we could get for the purpose of drawing a dividing line between the constituencies. But that was not, if he followed my remarks of yesterday, the sole basis, from my point of view, of the general arrangement that was made. He speaks of my having introduced the question of the dividing line at township 38. I do not know whether it is to the purpose in this argument to shut our eyes and ears to what we have seen and heard ever since these Autonomy Bills came up for consideration ; but I instanced the increase of population, the number of post offices, the number of statute labour districts, the number of school districts and other matters connected with the northern country, as evidence.

I would like to ask now how this basis of calculation applies to the distribution which we have before us. A number of figures have been brought down by the government showing the populations in the various proposed districts, the votes cast, the voters on the list, the area and so on. I would like to get this statement upon 'Hansard.' I have had an abstract made of the figures given by the government in a more concise form than their figures are given and I think it will be found correct. If hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House would kindly correct me if I misquote any of the figures I would be very much obliged. The following is the statement given by the government :

These are the figures as given by the government. I do not think they are absolutely correct; I compiled figures on my own account, but I find my figures and the government figures sufficiently near to enable me to accept the government figures as sufficiently accurate for the purpose of the argument which I propose to make. In the original schedule proposed by the government there was an average of 1,328 votes cast in each electoral district in the south, while there was only an average of 571 votes cast in each electoral district in the northern constituencies. It would be seen therefore that considerably more than double the representation to which they were entitled was given to the people in the north, according to the original schedules, than was given to the people in the south. There was also an average of 1,856 names on the voters' lists of each constituency in the south as compared with an average of 1,036 names on the voters' lists in each constituency in the north. Under the proposed original distribution, also, there was according to the census a population of 4,067 in each electoral division in the south and an average population of 2,076 in each electoral division in the north. I wish to put this on record as showing the way in which the original distribution proposed by the government worked out.

Mr. SPROULE. One man in the north seemed to be equal to two in the south.

Mr. LAKE. Under the amendment proposed by the Prime Minister which has been laid on the table of the House and which gives sixteen seats to the south and nine to the north, instead of fifteen seats to the south and ten to the north as originally proposed, I find that, taking the census of 1901, there was an average population for each of the twenty-five constituencies, omitting Indians, of 3,222. Taking the votes polled on the 3rd November, 1904, there would be an average of 1,026 to each of the twenty-five constituencies, and an average of 1,529 names on the voters' lists of each constituency.

We find that the distribution provides for sixteen seats in the southern portion. There are to each of these constituencies, according to the population of 1901, omitting Indians, 3,813 persons; according to the votes polled on the 3rd of November, 1904, 1,245 votes; and, according to the number of voters on the list at the same date, 1,740 votes. In each of the nine constituencies in the northern portion of the district, the old district of Saskatchewan, there is according to the population of 1901, omitting Indians, an average of 2,307 persons, an average of votes polled on the 3rd of November, 1904, of 635, and an average number of votes on the list, 1,151. These were the three main bases on which the government proceeded with the distribution of seats in the province of Alberta. They also took the number of post offices. From the post office guide I estimate that the number of post offices in the northern portion of Saskatchewan is about 100, and the number in the southern portion 285. The number of schools was also taken into consideration. I find that in the northern portion of Saskatchewan there are, roughly speaking, 200 schools, and in the southern portion 575. As further corroborative evidence, the number of local improvement districts in Alberta was quoted. I am informed by a telegram which was sent to me yesterday by Mr. Bulyea of the Public Works Department at Regina, that in the northern district of Saskatchewan there are only eight districts organized, as against 151 in the southern portion. He goes on to say:

> A large portion of Saskatchewan is eligible for organization, but information and petitions come too late for action this year.

We were told that the number of homestead entries should also be taken into consideration as evidence of the trend of population. I find that in the nine northern constituencies, from 1901 to May or June, 1905, there were 17,424 homestead entries, and in the southern portion 31,611, which also goes to show that there has been a larger immigration into the southern portion of that district than there has been into the northern portion. It will of course be readily understood that when a new population comes into a new district, practically everybody who goes in takes up a homestead. I well remember that in the early eighties, when the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway first opened up the Northwest, practically every man who came to the country and was eligible to take up a homestead, made his entry. It cost him only $10, and he could take up a homestead quite close to a town. A great many of these entries were subsequently abandoned. I fancy that this will be found to be the case very largely in the northern part of Saskatchewan. Almost every railroad man who came into that country took up a homestead, as it might become very valuable to him if he could keep his hold on it without going upon it and putting in his settlement duties. In the last three or four years matters have been very different. In the southern portion of the province it has been practically impossible to get a homestead within a reasonable distance of the railway. People have been going into the older and well known districts, where it is known that farming can be satisfactorily carried on. As they have purchased land, we do not of course find their names among the homestead entries. A great number have also come in to work for farmers. These have not been able to find homesteads near at hand, and we do not find their names among the homestead entries. A great number of business people have come to settle in the towns, and their names are not among the homestead entries. So that I think an examination of the homestead entries will be found to bear out my contention that the larger proportion of the immigration has been going into the southern portion as against the northern. However, it is not necessary to the argument which I wish to place before the House, to press that point home. Even supposing that a larger proportion of immigration has not been coming to the southern portion, it will be found that the distribution of seats will show that a most unjustly excessive proportion of the representation is being given to the northern portion of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. SCOTT. What dividing line is my hon. friend adopting as between north and south Saskatchewan?

Mr. LAKE. I am taking the dividing line as shown by the constituencies in the amended schedule.

Mr. SCOTT. Of course, certain constituencies as proposed by the amended map lap over from Saskatchewan into Assiniboia, and vice versa.

Mr. LAKE. Yes, but I have no doubt that the hon. member for Saskatchewan will endorse what I say when I say that the figures were given by the officer of the government for each of the amended constituencies. At least, he had them so on his statement.

Mr. LAMONT. I am not disputing the figures at all, but that does not meet the point which the hon. member for Western Assiniboia raised. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) is classing them as north and south. There is no north and south according to this schedule. and what the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) wanted to get at was on what basis the hon. gentleman was speaking of northern seats and southern seats? Where does he make the dividing line? According to the amended schedule, some constituencies extend down to Assiniboia, and vice versa.

Mr. LAKE. I thought I had already made that plain. There are nine seats which are entirely or mainly in the old district of Saskatchewan. Six of them are entirely in the old district of Saskatchewan, and three of them extend some little distance into the old district of Assiniboia. Those are what I call the northern seats, and those which are entirely in the old district of Assiniboia I call the southern seats.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Numbers 17 to 25.

Mr. LAKE. In this statement numbers 17 to 25 comprise the nine seats. All of them are either entirely or to a very large extent in the province of Saskatchewan. The other sixteen seats are entirely in the old district of Assiniboia.

Mr. SCOTT. Would not Saltcoats and Yorkton be as fairly classed as northern districts? I find the southern boundary line of Yorkton is only eighteen miles further south than the southern boundary of Batoche, Saskatoon and Battleford.

Mr. LAKE. They are entirely in the district of Assiniboia.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, in the old district, but they are in a federal district made two years ago in this House, which we looked upon as a northern district, the district of Mackenzie.

Mr. LAKE. I am not dealing with a federal district. I am using this for the purpose of argument, to show that what has always been considered part of the present province of Saskatchewan has been given an undue amount of representation, and I take the seats which are entirely or mainly in the province of Saskatchewan. These we call northern seats, and the seats entirely in the old district of Assiniboia I would call southern seats.

Mr. FOSTER. Just as well call them 9 and 16. The inequality would be just the same.

Mr. LAKE. I have given the vote and population to each seat, and I would like the matter looked at from another point of view. Instead of giving nine seats to the north and sixteen to the south, if a fair division were made, based on the population as given by the census of 1901, there would be six and a quarter seats, to be exact, in the north and eighteen and three-quarters in the south. If it had been based on the votes polled—and the Minister of the Interior said this was necessarily the basis in the distribution in Alberta—then there should be only five and a half in the north and nineteen and a half in the south.

Mr. LAMONT. If it were based on the Haultain redistribution in 1902, what would you be entitled to?

Mr. LAKE. If it had been based on the Haultain redistribution, we should have had a fair distribution of the seats, and there never would have been a word raised on this side.

Mr. LAMONT. You said that that was a fair redistribution in 1902?

Mr. LAKE. We are not dealing with Mr. Haultain's redistribution at present; but as between the districts of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, it was the fairest possible redistribution which could have been arrived at. Had this government adopted a redistribution anything like that, there would be no dissatisfaction.

Mr. OLIVER. What was the basis of that redistribution?

Mr. LAKE. The population of 1901. It took place within a year of that census.

Mr. OLIVER. We gave the district of Edmonton 2,500 and Cardston 611.

Mr. LAKE. Does the hon. gentleman know how many votes there were then in those two townships ?

Mr. OLIVER. I know how many were cast in 1905.

Mr. LAKE. There is considerable difference between 1901 and 1905. The Minister of the Interior will admit that there has been a slight change in the number of people living in the Northwest.

Mr. LAMONT. What is the difference between the votes cast in Moosejaw in 1902 and the votes cast in Batoche on this fair redistribution ?

Mr. LAKE. I am not dealing with the Haultain redistribution of 1902. I think the hon. gentleman's cross-examination on that point is entirely irrelevant. I have made the statement that if as fair a redistribution had been made in this case, there would not have been a word said.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman show how fair that redistribution was ?

Mr. LAKE. If the hon. gentleman will bring up that question later on, if he thinks it relevant to the point at issue, I will have the figures and satisfy him as to the fairness of that redistribution. I was comparing the effect of the various grounds upon which the distribution was made in Alberta if applied to Saskatchewan when I was interrupted. If the distribution had been based on the names on the voters' list there should be only 6¾ seats in the north and 18¼ in the south. If based on the number of schools, or post offices, or local improvement districts or homestead entries, there would be about the same results. We claim also, apart from the fact of this very undue representation being given the north, that the distribution of seats among the various constituencies is exceedingly uneven. Compare, for instance, the district of Humboldt with the district of Maple Creek, each of them very large in area.

Mr. SCOTT. If the hon. gentleman insists upon treating the province in sections—for instance he classes a certain part as north and a certain part as south—does he not think it unfair to make a comparison between a district in the south and a district in the north ? Let him compare districts in the same section or compare the whole south with the whole north. It is not fair to take districts out of the south and compare them with districts in the north.

Mr. LAKE. I can see absolutely nothing unfair in showing the incidence of this redistribution. To compare one district with another and one constituency with another is the only way in which the House can be thoroughly seized of the fact of the distribution under consideration. Compare Humboldt with Maple Creek. Humboldt had 198 votes polled on the 4th November last and has an area of 7,657 square miles. Maple Creek had 846 votes polled and has an area of 20,669 square miles.

Mr. LAMONT. Is that any greater variation than the difference between Batoche and Moosejaw at the last local election, which you say is fair ?

Mr. LAKE. These hon. gentlemen apparently have been brooding over the distribution of 1902 and cannot throw it off.

Mr. LAMONT. You say it was fair.

Mr. LAKE. We will have ample time to consider that redistribution later on, if the Chairman considers it relevant to the question at issue. Batoche had 1,659 votes polled on November 3rd, and its area is 3,746 square miles. Souris had 2,544 votes polled on November 3rd and its area is 3,190 square miles. Let us group a few of these constituencies together and see how it works out. If you take Humboldt, Prince Albert, Prince Albert city, Redberry and Batoche ; the total vote polled in these five amounted to 2,140. They are to have one member each. Compare this with Souris, which, under this distribution, is to return only one member. Souris polled 2,544 votes, over 400 votes more for this one constituency than were cast in these five northern constituencies. With two exceptions, every one of the sixteen southern constituencies polled more votes in the last election than the northern constituencies. The question might well be asked : How comes it that the voter in the south is not considered equal to the voter in the North ?

I find that there has been a radical departure, in the case of the province of Saskatchewan, from the rule laid down by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) in regard to the representation of cities. The hon. gentleman was very positive that certain principles ought to be adopted in dealing with rural populations as compared with urban populations. As reported in 'Hansard,' page 8300, the hon. gentleman said :

> Mr. OLIVER. Population is one thing and there are many others. But there is one universal principle and it is that a purely rural population, a population of producers creating wealth in the country is always given a greater share in the government than an equal number of consumers.
>
> Mr. HAGGART. That is so in no place.
> Mr. OLIVER. In every place. On what other grounds are the cities of our country so unjustly treated by comparison of population in being under-represented compared with the rural constituencies ?

Later on he said :

> The rule has always been applied throughout the provinces of the Dominion, and it is being applied in the Northwest now, and it would be improper if it were not so applied.

Now, this is a very definite statement of policy. How is that policy applied in the province of Saskatchewan? It is applied in the case of Alberta in a way that may be quite satisfactory to the hon. gentleman himself. But in Saskatchewan we find that the government propose to give one member each to the city of Regina, with 740 votes polled on November 3rd, and 933 votes on the list; Moosejaw, with 786 votes polled and 1,000 on the list; and Prince Albert, with 542 votes polled and 740 votes on the list. Why should these three cities be given separate representation, when you have such thickly populated rural constituencies in the province? Compare any of these cities with the district of Souris, which polled 2,544 votes and had more than 3,348 names on the list, the area of this constituency being upwards of 3,000 square miles. Or compare any of them with South Qu'Appelle, with 1,930 votes polled and 2,692 on the list. Or compare it with Saltcoats with a population of 11,004 according to the last census, with 1,478 votes polled, and 2,327 names on the list. If these three cities are to be given separate representation why was not the town of Medicine Hat treated in the same way? The town of Medicine Hat has a larger population, a larger number of votes on the list and a larger number of votes polled than has the city of Prince Albert. If Prince Albert is to be given one member, why should not the town of Medicine Hat also be given one member? But we find that it has not suited the Minister of the Interior or the government to carry out in its entirety the principle so definitely laid down in the case of Alberta. It seems to me that in every single particular, they have departed from their principles in distributing the seats for the province of Saskatchewan. It will be within the memory of the House that, a few days back, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) stated that in view of the fact that the Prime Minister had stated that it had been his desire on one occasion to have the distribution of seats submitted to a conference to the Northwest members on both sides of the House, he (Mr. R. L. Borden) was perfectly willing and anxious to have a conference in regard to the distribution of the seats in the province of Saskatchewan, if it was not too late. This suggestion was acted upon by the Prime Minister. The committee met and discussed the situation generally, I was one of the members of that committee, but, of course, I do not speak officially for the committee in any way. In the discussion it was found that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) took an uncompromising position. He took the position that upon no consideration would he agree to fewer than nine members being given to what I have described as the northern part of the province.

Mr. LAMONT. Was not the position taken by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) just as uncompromising, that he would not give nine members to that district?

Mr. LAKE. I will come to that presently. But the position that I have described was taken. The suggestion was then made by myself that although the northern portion was not even entitled to as many as seven members, I was prepared to give way to this extent—I would compromise on eight members for the north. I said: If you will come down one member I will compromise, I will take what I consider something a little better than you propose to give and I will compromise on eight.

Mr. LAMONT. The hon. gentleman is aware that I stated the government had already come down from ten to nine according to the government's first proposition.

Mr. LAKE. The government had come down apparently because they found their position too untenable even for their following on that side of the House. They had come down of their own accord. Then this conference was to take place and surely if the conference had been arranged there should have been some give and take on both sides. The member for Saskatchewan, however, took that position and I was not backed up by the other gentleman who was present at that time, at least not to the extent of voting down the member for Saskatchewan, and consequently it resulted in a deadlock. As to the distribution of representation between the northern seats and the southern seats I made the offer to compromise although from the figures I have shown, the northern portion was not entitled to seven seats, still I was prepared to say: We will settle this matter without further dispute, let us say eight.

Mr. LAMONT. Which of the northern seats would the hon. member cut out?

Mr. LAKE. Of course there would have to be a general rearrangement of the northern seats made after mutual discussion of the counties. This, as I say, limited the discussion just to the limits of the constituencies in the north and the limits of the constituencies in the south. I took the position at that time, and I took it strongly, that cities of such comparatively small population should not be given separate representation, that they should be thrown in with the rural constituencies. I took the position that a member for a city in the legislative assembly of Saskatchewan will have very little to do, that, as is well known, the members for rural constituencies have a very large amount to do in connection with the representation of their districts; they are constantly applied to in regard to public works and many other matters of local interest. I took the ground that the city members would have little to do, and it would be better to put the cities in with rural constituencies and to redistribute these rural constituencies, and to give every member of the legislative assembly a certain amount of country to look after. I thought that would be the fairest distribution to ask, but this was met with a positive refusal and a statement that it was impossible to go back and take away the representation which had now been promised to the different cities.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend is aware that it is only to cities which are incorporated by the legislative assembly, of which until recently he was a member, that the members are being given. There are only five incorporated cities in the Territories and each one of these has been given a member.

Mr. HAGGART. What difference does the incorporation make?

Mr. SCOTT. It shows that they are people of great enterprise.

Mr. LAKE. It shows a certain amount of ambition, nothing else. The member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) then proposed to group certain constituencies together to provide for a seat which appeared to be very badly needed in the southern portion of the province. I disagreed with him in reference to one of his proposals, but I am prepared to agree to such a redistribution if a suggestion which I made would be accepted. I do not know whether the hon. member is prepared to bring a suggestion based on that.

Mr. SCOTT. Is my hon. friend prepared to say that his suggestion would bring about that equality for which he is arguing this afternoon ?

Mr. LAKE. It would be bringing it about considerably better than by the plan proposed by the member for West Assiniboia. He proposed to take Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley, four of the oldest constituencies in the country, which are filled with the pioneers who have made that country, to group these together and give them three seats and to take the seat we thus save and place it where I think a seat is badly needed, along the Soo line. I proposed that this seat should be provided for in another way.

MESSAGES FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) delivered a message from the Governor General.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER read the message as follows:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1906, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

(Sgd.) GREY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the message of His Excellency, together with the supplementary estimates, be referred to the Committee on Supply.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER read the message as follows:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons further supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1905, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

(Sgd.) GREY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the message of His Excellency, together with the further supplementary estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 70) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Saskatchewan.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 12, Legislative Assembly.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Chairman, I was referring this afternoon to the proposal which had been made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) in regard to grouping four constituencies on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, adding to them small portions of two constituencies, which lie to the north, making three new constituencies out of the original four and giving the one constituency which has been thus saved to the Soo line. While I am strongly in favour of a constituency being given to the Soo line, I object to the constituency being formed in that way. I held that these four constituencies on the main line were settled in the earliest stages of the country. The greater part of this area is occupied by people who are amongst the oldest settlers, who have exercised their franchise for years and who have contributed largely to the building up of the country. In addition to that I have another objection, and it is that these four seats have a larger average voting population than the average voting population which the whole of the province has as obtained by the even distribution of the voting population of the province into 25 different seats. I find that the average number of names on the voters' lists in these districts is 1,554, while the average for the whole of the province would be 1,529. I suggested as an alternative, provided there was a positive refusal to grant the extra seat from the northern portion of the province where I consider it should come from, that the three Regina seats should be altered as regards their area and that one of the seats, the south Regina seat, or a portion of it, should be given to the Soo line. I found that the three Regina seats, Lumsden or North Regina, Regina city and South Regina, on the average had only 1,344 voters on the voters' list, and I thought that the adoption of my suggestion would be a proper way of finding an additional constituency to provide for the people along the Soo line, who, I think, are justly entitled to have a representative of their own. They have forwarded to me a copy of a resolution, which they have also forwarded to the hon. member for West Assiniboia and the hon. Minister of the Interior, on the subject. During the discussion which took place in this committee I submitted a tentative suggestion of my own showing how the constituencies might be divided up in the new provinces in such a way as to give a fairly even distribution of votes to each constituency. I did this for the purpose of demonstrating that it was possible to make a comparatively even distribution, a distribution based on existing conditions, that is to say, by preserving as far as possible the constituencies as they exist at the present time and giving additional representation where the additional population and the additional number of votes on the list appear to demand. This distribution which accounted for seven seats in the northern portion of the district and eighteen seats in the southern portion, even then gave an advantage of 8 per cent to the northern constituencies. The suggestion was, of course, purely tentative; it was drawn up after a pretty close examination of the vote that was polled and was marked on the map which I had in my possession, but without any very prolonged consideration of the matter. On the whole, I think it met the purpose fairly well, and I believe it could have been made into a very good distribution indeed if the committee had discussed the details and had made alterations here and there where the local conditions would appear to demand them. Although I left the map with the constituencies marked in it and the figures showing the vote of each constituency with the Liberal members of that committee, I have heard nothing more on the subject from them since; it appears to have been ignored. I would like to put on record the constituencies which I proposed, the area of each and the number of voters in each according to the lists, as near as I could estimate. I first proposed to divide the present constituency of Souris into two constituencies, one of which, the old district of Souris, would have 1,684 voters on the list and an area of 1,188 square miles. The second constituency—to be named as the committee might decide—would have 1,593 voters on the lists.

Mr. SCOTT. Would the hon. gentleman say how many votes were cast last fall in the proposed district of Souris?

Mr. LAKE. It was absolutely impossible to say how many votes were cast in any of these constituencies; the government may be able to find that out by some method unknown to me.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) took the responsibility of preparing a map based entirely on the vote polled last fall. He has contended strongly that the vote cast last fall, and that alone, was the proper basis for this distribution.

Mr. LAKE. I have never contended it was the proper basis. I have said it was not the proper basis on every occasion I have had an opportunity of speaking on this question.

Mr. SCOTT. Was not that the plan on which my hon. friend prepared the map?

Mr. LAKE. Certainly not; it was based on the number of voters on the lists. How is it possible for any one to say how many votes were cast in each of these districts? It constantly happens that a polling division which was created for the purpose of the Dominion election lies in two different local constituencies. We could tell exactly how many voters there were on the lists in each of these constituencies, but it is practically impossible to tell how many of them cast votes unless you get at the returning officer's book, which, I believe, is under seal in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I do not know if that is the way in which the government have got at the figures they have submitted; I have taken the figures of the government all through, not that I think they are absolutely reliable, but at all events sufficiently so to enable one to make a comparison. I said that the second constituency into which the old constituency of Souris is divided would have 1,593 voters on the list and 1,836 square miles. A part of Cannington would also go to a new constituency, which would take in the Regina-Arcola branch, from Arcola some little distance westward. Cannington would have 1,460 voters on the list and an area of 1,332 square miles. The other Cannington constituency would have 1,456 voters on the list and 2,340 square miles of area. The old district of Moosomin would have 1,895 voters on the list and an area of 1,165 square miles; Whitewood would have 1,357 voters on the list and an area of 1,335 square miles; Grenfell would have 1,497 voters on the list and an area of 1,440 square miles; Wolseley would have 1,441 voters on the list and an area of 1,120 square miles; Saltcoats, 1,663 voters on the list, area, 2,736 square miles; Yorkton, 1,711 voters on the list, area, 2,484 square miles; North Qu'Appelle, 1,541 voters on the list, area, 4,536 square miles; South Qu'Appelle, 1,655 voters on the list, 900 square miles; North Regina, 1,600 voters on the list, area, 3,780 square miles; South Regina, 1,600 voters on the list, area, 540 square miles; Soo, a new constituency along the Soo line, which was to take in a portion of South Regina, South Qu'Appelle, Souris and a small portion of Cannington, would have 1,504 voters on the list and an area of 8,016 square miles. I proposed to divide Moosejaw, and instead of giving a city constituency and a country constituency I proposed two constituencies which would probably meet in the near vicinity of the city of Moosejaw. North Moosejaw would have 1,313 voters on the list and an area of 8,820 square miles; South Moosejaw, 1,550 voters on the list, area, 5,184 square miles; Maple Creek, 1,303 voters on the list, area, 28,152 square miles. This will give an average of 550 voters on the list of each one of these eighteen constituencies in the south. Then I proposed to divide the northern constituencies as follows: Kinistino, 1,385 voters on the list, area, 22,716 square miles.

Mr. LAMONT. How many square miles in Kinistino?

Mr. LAKE. 22,716.

Mr. LAMONT. I do not think that is right; you are not taking in all of the district.

Mr. LAKE. It is not the old original district of Kinistino; a good many of the constituencies I propose are slightly changed.

Mr. LAMONT. You are not taking in the whole division of Kinistino according to your own map; you are not including Athabaska.

Mr. LAKE. Of course, this is exclusive of Athabaska, and the figures which were given this afternoon were also exclusive of Athabaska. In regard to Athabaska, as the Prime Minister said, there are only a few wandering hunters and Indians there, and I thought that for such a purpose as this it would be unnecessary to include that area. I continue: Prince Albert, 1,427 voters on the list, area, 7,572 square miles; Batoche, 1,551 voters on the list, area, 10,908 square miles; Rosthern, 1,601 voters on the list, area, 950 square miles; Saskatoon, 1,535 voters on the list, area, 1,280 square miles; Redberry, 1,200 voters on the list, area, 14,292 square miles; Battleford, 1,279 voters on the list, area, 15,552 square miles. This is the division of constituencies I proposed, given in tabulated form:

	Voters on list.	Area exclusive of Athabaska.
Souris	1,584	1,188
Alameda	1,593	1,836
Cannington	1,460	1,332
Forget	1,456	2,340
Moosomin	1,895	1,165
Whitewood	1,357	1,335
Grenfell	1,479	1,440
Wolseley	1,441	1,120
Saltcoats	1,663	2,736
Yorkton	1,711	2,484
North Qu'Appelle	1,541	4,536
South Qu'Appelle	1,655	900
North Regina	1,600	3,780
South Regina	1,600	540
The Soo	1,504	8,016
North Moosejaw	1,313	8,820
South Moosejaw	1,550	5,184
Maple Creek	1,303	28,152
Average 1,550.
Kinistino	1,385	22,716
Prince Albert	1,427	7,572
Batoche	1,551	10,908
Rosthern	1,601	950
Saskatoon	1,535	1,280
Redberry	1,200	14,292
Battleford	1,279	15,552

This will give an average of 1,425 voters on the lists of each of these Saskatchewans, or I should say northern constituencies. I have avoided as much as possible using the word Saskatchewan as applied to the old district of that name, for fear it should get confounded with the name of the new province. As I said before, the distribution which I propose does give an advantage of about eight per cent in favour of the northern constituencies. This is practically unavoidable, because the number which would be given under a fair distribution based on the number of voters on the list would give a fraction of a constituency both north and south. As I have said, I do not consider that the proposal which I made was in any way perfect. I thought, however, that I should not go to this committee prepared only to criticise the existing schedules, but prepared to make an offer of something which I considered to be a fair distribution, and I hoped the committee might take this as a basis for working out something that would be satisfactory to all the members of the committee. However, that apparently was not to be, and I have heard nothing more about that proposal. It seems to me that the result of the conference is one which was to be expected under the circumstances, when certain members took an absolutely uncompromising attitude which made it impossible to arrive at anything useful in the way of readjustment. It seemed to me that the only possible way to get a fair distribution of seats was by an independent commission, and I am very sorry that the government did not take this opportunity, which I consider was a very good one, to initiate this principle of distribution by commission. I think it would have been much to the credit of the great party now in power if they had been the first to take practical steps in that direction. I greatly regret that from the action taken by the government it seems impossible for us to obtain that independent commission for this purpose. There is just one thing further I want to say, that is, that I have been making this argument on the basis of the votes polled. I consider that that was the only fair way to look at the matter, because the Minister of the Interior had told us most distinctly that that was the basis upon which he had made the distribution.

Mr. SCOTT. That is the point I questioned my hon. friend about a few moments ago—whether he had not made his map on the basis of the votes cast.

Mr. LAKE. I made that map on what I considered to be the fairest basis—the number of voters on the list. I have made my criticism of the government's proposal on the basis of the number of votes polled, because that was the basis on which they had made the distribution. In criticising their distribution, it seems to me to be only fair to take the basis they set for themselves. This is what the Minister of the Interior said :

> The definite division of the constituencies is based on the vote actually polled on the 3rd November as the closest and most recent date upon which reliable information can be got.

I myself consider the fair basis on which to make the distribution is the number of voters placed on the list for the election of the 3rd of November last. The enumerators who drew up those lists were government employees of the administration here at Ottawa, and I presume that they would endeavour to do their duty to the best of their ability. At any rate, they would endeavour to put as large a number of names on the list as possible of persons entitled to vote. That was the nearest I thought we could get to a fair distribution. I do not pretend that that would be an absolutely positive standard. It is imposible to declare that of any basis, except a census taken within a month of the drawing up of the schedule, because of the rapidity with which the population of the Northwest is changing at the present time. I do not think I need add anything further to what I have said with regard to this distribution. The figures which I have read, provided by the government in regard to the schedules which they have submitted to the House, speak for themselves far more eloquently than I could possibly hope to do.

Mr. LAMONT. Would the hon. gentleman state which of the northern constituencies he objects to, or which he has cut out in his distribution ?

Mr. LAKE. I handed the hon. gentleman my map a couple of days ago, and he knows exactly what it is.

Mr. LAMONT. I am at liberty, then, to lay that on the table ?

Mr. LAKE. I have no objection at all. He can put it anywhere he likes ; he can put it on 'Hansard' if he likes. I am prepared to stand by that distribution as a far fairer one than that presented to us by the government. I merely desire to point out and to accentuate the fact that in spite of the statement of the Prime Minister that the prime object was as far as possible to give equality of numbers in the different electoral districts, and in spite of the statement of the Minister of the Interior to which I have just referred, that the definite division of the constituencies was based on the votes actually polled on the 3rd of November, I find that the schedule has apparently been drawn up with an absolute disregard of all the principles which were laid down as those which guided the government in making the distribution. A distribution has been made based, it seems to me, if it was based on anything at all, on the vaguest and most sanguine estimates of the prospective population of the northern part of the province, and less sanguine estimates of the prospective population of the southern portion of the province. This distribution practically gives double the representation, man for man, to the newer population who are going into the newer country which is being opened up to the north. That population is composed largely of late arrivals who do not understand the political questions of the day in Canada, and who are far too busy, as all men who go into a new country are, in getting started, to study these questions and to form personal opinions upon them. And over this population it cannot be doubted that the Dominion government exercises a considerable amount of influence. Only half the representation to which they are entitled on a fair distribution is apparently given to the older settlements of the south —the men who have built up the country, who have taken such a leading part in governing it up to the present, and who, I think, have governed it with a very fair amount of success. The distribution shows the most extraordinary discrepancies in individual constituencies, varying from 178 votes cast in Humboldt and 277 cast in Redberry in the recent election—and the votes cast at the recent election is the basis upon which these constituencies were constructed —to 1,930 in South Qu'Appelle and 2,594 cast in the district of Saltcoats. That is to say a voter in Humboldt practically exercises as much voting influence as fourteen in the old district of Saltcoats, and a voter in Redberry exercises as much influence as seven in the district of South Qu'Appelle.

Mr. LAMONT. Will the hon. gentleman say whether in his opinion those American settlers have gone into Humboldt and Redberry in such large numbers, but who had not been long enough in the country to vote last fall, are entitled to representation in the local House ?

Mr. LAKE. Why did not the Minister of the Interior make that the basis of the distribution of seats?

Mr. LAMONT. As a matter of fact, does the hon. gentleman think they should be represented?

Mr. LAKE. I certainly think the population of this country should be represented in the legislative assembly no matter who they are. One man's vote should be just as good as another.

Mr. LAMONT. Even although they have not been long enough in the district to vote?

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity in a moment or two of making his speech. In one of his constituencies, to which they are only given one member, and which cast a very large number of votes last year, the district of Saltcoats, there were upwards of 11,000 inhabitants. Should they not have a proportionate say in the representation of the country just as well as the other new settlers. If the hon. gentleman will take one basis and go on that throughout, I am willing to support him. I believe the fairest basis to be just now the number of votes placed on the voters' list by the officials of the Dominion government on the 3rd of November last. Here is another comparison I would like to make before sitting down. Ten southern constituencies cast upwards of 1,100 votes each—one of them as high as 2,500. There are three northern constituencies which, grouped together, did not cast 1,000 votes among them. That appears to me an extraordinary condition of affairs. The three northern constituencies are Redberry, Humboldt and Prince Albert. Prince Albert city and Prince Albert rural district get a very ample representation—far more than they are entitled to on an even distribution. I might refer to that question of Prince Albert which I mentioned just now. Prince Albert, city and country together, cast 1,026 votes. There is another constituency in the northern part of the district, the district of Kinistino, which the government proposes to form. That district has an area, outside of Athabaska altogether, of 25,000 square miles odd. The two districts of Prince Albert have between them only an area of 6,555 square miles. The vote cast in the district of Kinistino was 1,029. That is to say, even with that enormous area the vote cast in the district of Kinistino was in excess of that cast in the two constituencies alongside, to which the government proposes to give two representatives. I may have something more to say on this matter later on. For the present I shall content myself with submitting what I consider a fair and moderate criticism on the question before the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend's criticism on the Saskatchewan redistribution schedule is very much milder than a great deal of the criticisms we have seen in the Conservative press throughout the country during the past three or four months, or some of the criticisms we have heard in this House. I think it was the hon. gentleman's leader who said that he found in these distribution schedules the worst gerrymander that had ever been perpetrated anywhere in the world, even the United States.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not speaking of this one. I was speaking of Alberta, and may speak of this one presently.

Mr. SCOTT. I am very glad to find the hon. gentleman much more disposed to agree that the Saskatchewan schedule is fair.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You will find out about that.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) feels disposed to make his criticism milder. He has within recent days taken the responsibility of making a map and has found that it is much more difficult to make a proper distribution than offer criticism. When he spoke a few evenings ago in criticism of the Saskatchewan schedule, he was horrified to find the area of the district of Maple Creek in comparison with the area of the district of Rosthern. I am surprised to find that in the map——

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman is not giving a fair estimate of my remarks on that point. I compared the area and the vote.

Mr. SCOTT. For what purpose?

Mr. LAKE. The two together.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend asked the committee to look at the area of Maple Creek in comparison with the district of Rosthern. I find upon his own map that he has actually added to the area of Maple Creek by something over 6,000 square miles. And in the district of Rosthern he has cut off a township or two and actually makes it smaller than it is in the schedule presented by the government. I find also that one of his pet districts, the district of Wolseley, which is certainly not a very large district even upon the government map, he has reduced by some three townships. Wolseley did not cast a very large vote either last fall. They didn't have a large registered vote last fall. And, consulting other statistics, we are led to believe that the population of Wolseley has not been increasing as fast as that of other places.

Mr. LAKE. How many votes were cut off the district of Wolseley ?

Mr. SCOTT. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) found a district that was not exceptionally large, that was, in fact, rather on the small side, which did not cast a vote last fall equal to the average, what was his purpose in reducing the size? I am not offering these observations in criticism of the hon. gentleman's map, but I am trying to show the committee, and particularly my hon. friend (Mr. Lake), that it is much easier to criticise a distribution map than it is to frame one. We have had, as I have already said, from the Conservative members, the most vehement denunciation of these proposals. The leader of the opposition declared that the distribution of Alberta was the worst gerrymander there had ever been in the world—he could not find anything to equal it in the United States. When my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) was criticising the Saskatchewan distribution a few evenings ago, he referred to the last federal redistribution. It may not be out of order for me to make some observations on the redistribution made by this parliament in 1903. In the first place, who made the federal redistribution of 1903, so far as the Northwest Territories are concerned? Was it the bi-party committee of which the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) was chairman? No. We have the evidence of the leader of the opposition himself that the matter of redistribution of the Northwest was referred to a committee of gentlemen representing the Northwest Territories, senators and members of this House, representing both sides of politics. It did not take us more than fifteen minutes to reach an agreement. Does the hon. gentleman think that that redistribution was not a fair one? Does the hon. member for Qu'Appelle claim that it was unfair? Does the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) claim that it was unfair?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. If you will adopt it for Alberta.

Mr. SCOTT. I am speaking of the federal redistribution two years ago.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Adopt that and we will be satisfied.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) is willing to admit that it was a fair redistribution——

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. For Alberta.

Mr. SCOTT. Perfectly fair as between the parties.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. For Alberta.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, and for Saskatchewan. And perfectly fair as between the north and south. At that time those who made that redistribution did not look upon it as a matter involving a division between north and south or any difference between the parties. At that time the northern part of the country was not looked upon as more Liberal than the southern part. I will recall to the memory of members of that committee—and I think that they will say that I am stating the facts correctly—that prior to the 3rd of November, nobody had any idea that the vote would be as it proved. In fact many expected that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) was going to be defeated in the district of Edmonton. On the other hand the Liberals were just as confident that they would carry the district of Alberta as they were that the Liberals in the person of the Minister of the Interior would carry the district of Edmonton. The 1903 distribution was not looked upon as a disputed question between the north and south or as between the parties. There was in that sub-committee on redistribution no consideration of party or any other advantage; we approached the work with the simple desire to make a fair and equitable distribution on the basis of census figures, allowing for expected increase of population to take place within the next few years. If hon. gentlemen will look at the map of this federal distribution, they will find that there were five southern seats, as they may be called, south of the north line of township 34 between the Rocky Mountains and the elbow of the Saskatchewan, being about north of Swift Current, and the line north of township 24 from the elbow of the Saskatchewan to the Manitoba boundary line. And as there were five constituencies south of that line, so there were five to the north. I think every one will admit that that redistribution was perfectly fair in a party sense. That being admitted, let us consider how it was as between the north and the south. We find that in two western ridings of the north district there was a total of 11,000 votes in November, as against 9,000 in the two ridings in the south district. So, there was no unfairness to the southern part of the country in that.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I pointed out, when discussing this matter before, that the constituency of Alberta did not go as far east as the fourth meridian.

Mr. SCOTT. There were two constituencies in the western part of the north district and two in the western part of the south district. And the division of 11,000 votes to the north and 9,000 to the south was certainly not unfair to the south. I think that it must be admitted that that redistribution as adjusted to the circumstances then known, was a fair and equitable distribution. Now, as between the three north districts in the proposed province of Saskatchewan and the three south districts in the same, there was a great disparity of votes on the 3rd of November last. Nobody expected anything else. Those who prepared this redistribution expected that there would be a larger vote in the three ridings of the south than in the three ridings of the north; and that expectation was realized. It was also expected that the population in the northern part would thenceforth increase very much more rapidly than that in the southern part. And if that expectation was reasonable two years ago, it is more reasonable now, because two lines of railway are now being constructed across the northern part of the country; and everybody who knows anything about that country and the effect upon a new country of railway construction knows that in the near future there will be an enormous increase in the population of the northern part. I venture to say that at this moment there is very much less disparity between the populations of the three northern federal constituencies and the three southern federal constituencies than there was last November. And it may be that before this parliament dissolves the lines will have to be recast, because of there being a majority of people in the north. Now, it is perfectly proper for this committee to consider how this local distribution fits in with the federal redistribution of two years ago. And, if we keep in mind this line between the north and south that I have given, it will be found that twenty-six seats are given by this Bill to the south five ridings as against twenty-two to the north five ridings, the other two going to the far north country which, up to this moment has been unorganized territory. I may not be able to make that as an absolute statement. If we split hairs we may find a slightly different result. I will take the calculation made the other evening by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) who stated that the three south ridings in Saskatchewan are given thirteen and one-half seats as against eleven and one-half to the three north ridings. It seems to me that if the federal division of three to three was a fair division two years ago, and is a fair division now, and likely to be fair up to the end of this parliament, it cannot be contended that there is unfairness to the south in the present proposed distribution of 11½ to 13½. And as a matter of fact the map has been amended taking one seat from the north and giving it to the south. We have then, according to my hon. friend's calculation, 14½ seats given to the three federal ridings south of the dividing line as against 10½ for the three north of that line. I might call to the attention of the committee the fact that a portion of one of the south ridings is taken away and put into the province of Alberta, the Medicine Hat constituency. Thus really the proper calculation would show 15½ to the south three ridings as against 10½ to the north three. So really without splitting hairs it may be stated that the south country, the old Assiniboia district, is getting 16 seats while only 9 are given to the north or Saskatchewan district. I ask any fair-minded person where he can find unfairness in this new redistribution. In 1903 certain areas were treated equally, and in this redistribution any difference that is being made is largely to the advantage of the south country. It seems to me it is impossible for any person to find any outrage in this. I do not think the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) will be able to find, in this Saskatchewan plan at all events, those evidences of gerrymander which seemed to bother him so much in the case of Alberta. It seems to me it will be difficult for any one to find in this Saskatchewan redistribution traces of that Italian hand, of the work of that Italian gentleman of whom we have heard so often, Monseigneur Sbarretti. I say that no cry has ever been uttered in this country with less justification than the cries in regard to these plans of redistribution. I had a brief dispute with the leader of the opposition one evening with regard to the question whether or not any parliamentary body had ever considered the question of area together with the matter of population in making a redistribution. I asked my hon. friend how he explained the disparity that was permitted by this parliament when Manitoba was first given representation, in the year 1870. Manitoba was at that time given four members, when the population of the province did not entitle it to one member. A few years later the Northwest Territories were given representation in this parliament and although their population would not have entitled them to one member, parliament made provision for four members, and in like manner when British Columbia was brought in provision was made for six members when the population would not have entitled that province to one third of that number. My hon. friend took very strong grounds; he declared absolutely that area was never made a basis of representation in a redistribution and he challenged me to produce the contrary evidence. I have gone to 'Hansard' of the year 1886, and at page 1205, I find that in the case of the Northwest Territories when the late Sir John A. Macdonald brought in a Bill to grant representation to the Territories he uttered these words:

> The population would scarcely allow of so many members, but, although the settlers are so few in number the country is large——

I think my hon. friend's predecessor was considering the question of area.

> —the country is large and has many different interests requiring many legislative measures, and following the example set by giving representation to the province of Manitoba, many years ago——

Evidently the same rule was applied in Manitoba, area was considered.

> —when it had a very slight population, we propose to give the Territories four members——

Now I wish to repeat that, in my opinion at all events, all this talk of gerrymander that has been going on for the last three or four months, since these plans were brought down, is pure and arrant nonsense. If any political advantage was to be found in these schedules does my hon. friend think the Liberal journal in Calgary would be complaining or that the Liberal candidate in Calgary at the last election, Dr. Stewart, would be complaining, or that that very pronounced Conservative journal, the Edmonton 'Journal' would be strongly maintaining these schedules? Would we see these things if any political disadvantage was to be found in the schedules against the interests of my hon. friends opposite?

My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) took the responsibility one evening of saying that there was a gerrymander involved in the dividing line selected, the 4th meridian, but it remains for him or any other person to show how the political interests of the Liberals or Conservatives are affected in any way by the selection of that line or could be affected by any other line.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The fact is, as my hon. friend knows, that two Liberals were elected in the northern part and two Conservatives were elected in the southern part. I made the statement that the line had been moved too far west, further west than the point they adopted when dividing the country two years ago into federal seats. That was done for the purpose of throwing population to the north.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend thinks the line should be placed further east?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. That would not help his friend in Southern Alberta. The further east the line is put the more Liberals you have. If Alberta had been placed further east in the redistribution two years ago my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) would not be here. I make this proposition to the hon. member for Calgary: He can take the map and divide the country in any way he chooses, he may apply a mathematical rule with regard to area or with regard to population and see what he gets. Or let my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) set the best expert on gerrymander that he has to work on these maps, and I venture to say he cannot produce a map in any manner or shape which will not show a Liberal majority in both provinces. What is the use of charging gerrymander simply because possibly these plans when worked out on last fall's vote show a Liberal majority in these provinces, if my hon. friend cannot produce any map which will not do so? It is not only the northern part that is Liberal, even by last fall's vote. It is true the north gave a Liberal majority of 7,000, but the south also gave a Liberal majority, and the best possible proof that there is no injustice is that in the five south ridings there was a Liberal majority of fully 1,000, but nevertheless our friends opposite have three members to our two. If the lines had not been put just where they were some of our hon. friends opposite would not have been here. If you change Qu'Appelle in almost any conceivable way, take off or add on a range on the east, or take off or add on a range on the west, or take off or add on a line of townships on the north to the district of Qu'Appelle and my hon. friend would not be here. It is the same with regard to the member for Alberta, as I have stated. If he had the whole southern part of Alberta, the province as produced down to the 4th meridian, he would not be here at all. I got a considerably larger majority in the Medicine Hat country in the province of Alberta than the total majority upon which the hon. member sits in this House. I am going to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to attempt to justify this distribution by the plethora of figures which were produced in the case of the Alberta Bill. I shall not attempt to justify the Saskatchewan schedule on such a basis, in fact I was discouraged at the commencement from going into figures by the action of the hon. member for North Toronto. The Minister of the Interior produced figures with regard to post offices, school districts, local improvement districts and all manner of things, but the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) at once said that these were all nonsense and had no bearing on the question, so I shall not attempt to inflict the same figures on the House.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. You had better not.

Mr. SCOTT. I will say this, that there never was a redistribution plan presented in this parliament, or in any provincial parliament in this country, that could be so absolutely justified as that Alberta redistribution was justified by the Minister of the Interior. However, there was a very material difference in the cases of Alberta and Saskatchewan. In the case of Alberta ten seats had to be added to fifteen, and it was necessary to very largely recast the lines of the old districts as they had existed for the purposes of representation in the legislature. In the case of Saskatchewan, on the other hand, we were only compelled to add five to twenty seats, making it a very materially different proposition. Following the general plan which was agreed upon at the outset, of giving incorporated cities a seat, we found it possible, by allowing three of the five to go to the north and two to the south and by putting the two in the south in the two cities of Regina and Moosejaw, to leave the lines as arranged by the legislature three years ago absolutely untouched. There is not a single point of material change in the whole district of Assiniboia. I would say to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle that if we take his word for it, and he has given us his word, that the distribution made by the legislative assembly was as near perfection as it was possible to make it, we will have to come to the conclusion that the greater part of this plan—because the greater part applies to Assiniboia—is perfection, too. I would ask the committee, fairly looking at the subject, looking at the maps and at the facts before it, if it is not fair to give the north country three of these five additional seats and the south country two of these seats? The fact is admitted by the committee that we cannot afford to go on the census of 1901, that the changes since that time have been too great, and I say it is not fair to go exactly upon the vote of last fall, because there were in some parts of the country large blocks of men who, although already in the country, had not been there long enough to enable them to be naturalized, and were therefore not permitted to vote. We must go to some extent upon estimate, and the best estimate that can be made in regard to that part of the country will be somewhat speculative. I would not take the responsibility of saying that the government plan will work out absolutely fairly. If we may be permitted in two, or three, or four years hence to get the actual population within these lines, it may be found in some surprising ways that the plan the government asks the House to adopt at the present moment is not an absolutely fair plan. I would not say that if we had given Saskatchewan four of these additional members, as was proposed in the first government plan, that would be found in the end to work out unfairly, or if we turned the proposition around and gave the three additions to the south and only two to the north, it might be that in two or three years hence that would be found to be a perfectly fair distribution. It must be remembered that we are providing for the next four years. It must be expected that the first legislature of the province of Saskatchewan will live out its life of four years, and keeping in mind the trend of immigration as we have had it in the past, as we have it at the present time, and as we may expect to have it, and remembering the new railway construction in the northern part of the country, I may say, as a southern man, as a man who lives in and represents a southern constituency, that I am prepared to agree to the giving of nine of the seats under this redistribution to the north as against sixteen to the south. The point of difference between hon. members opposite and hon. members on this side of the House has come down to whether three of the additional seats should go to the north country or whether only two of them should go to the north country, and it may not be uninteresting for the committee to look at the history of the Northwest Territories in so far as representation is concerned. Some of these figures that I am going to give to the committee I would call the particular attention of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to. He may finally come to the conclusion that there has been in past years in this country worse things done than ever were done in the United States in regard to gerrymanders. The first plan for representation in the Northwest Territories was based purely and entirely upon population. That was for the election of members to the old Northwest Council prior to the creation of the legislature. It was provided in the original Northwest Territories Act that as soon as any area of 1,000 square miles had 1,000 population it should be made a constituency and elect a member. Under that plan I find upon looking at the records that in the year 1885 Assiniboia had eight members in the Northwest Council, Alberta had four and Saskatchewan had only one. In 1887 I find that Assiniboia had eight members, Alberta five and Saskatchewan one. The population of Saskatchewan only entitled it to one member in the Northwest Council. In 1888 this parliament created the first legislative assembly in the Northwest Territories. A Conservative government was in power then, and, strange to say, they made a redistribution for that legislature. They did not refer the matter to the courts. That redistribution was made on this floor. Twenty-two elected members were provided for the legislature, and of these eleven were given to Assiniboia, six to Alberta and no less than five to Saskatchewan. What was the population? The previous census showed that Assiniboia had 16,408, Alberta 4,871 and Saskatchewan 1,792, exclusive of Indians. Those 1,792 people were given five members as against only six members for the 4,871 people in Alberta and the eleven members for the 16,408 in Assiniboia. Surely a terrible outrage was committed there. But nobody seemed to think it. Nobody said anything about it. Saskatchewan, in 1888, was given five members in a house of twenty-two members on a census population of 1,792, or an average unit of 358 souls for each seat; Alberta was given six members on a population of 4,871, an average of 812 per seat, or more than 100 per cent difference; while Assiniboia, with eleven members, had a population of 16,408, with a unit of roundly 1,500 as against a little more than 300 for Saskatchewan. On previous days we have been asked to point to a parallel case of this parliament providing a redistribution for a new provincial legislature. Here is a parallel case. This parliament did exactly what we are doing now in 1888 when creating the first legislature.

Mr. LAKE. In what year was the census taken?

Mr. SCOTT. Probably in the year 1885. I may say that I have gleaned these figures from discussions out of 'Hansard.' That was a real and terrible outrage, and doubtless the first thing the assembly did when they got an opportunity was to remedy this outrage. Five members given to that population! Of course, they represented a very large portion of the country, and possibly area was considered, a very heinous offence in the opinion of the hon. leader of the opposition. Surely the Conservative government must have considered the area in granting five members to 1,700 people. Well, now, the legislature was convened, but there was not a word said in the legislature, as far as I can find, about that awful outrage; but, on the contrary, three years afterwards, although the population of Saskatchewan had not increased probably any faster than the population of other parts of the country, the first legislature in their first redistribution increased the representation of Saskatchewan to six members. Possibly in the year 1891 they had very recent census figures to guide them. I find that by the census taken in 1891 Saskatchewan had a population of 11,150, Alberta 25,277 and Assiniboia 30,372. Saskatchewan was given six members by the legislature, not by this parliament, with an average of 1,858 souls per seat, while Assiniboia was given eleven seats on a population of 30,372, or an average of 2,531, while Alberta was held down to 8 seats with a population of 25,277, or an average of 3,159, or pretty nearly 100 per cent there again, done by the legislature itself. I find that sixteen years ago this parliament gave Saskatchewan a representation of 5 seats out of 22, with a unit of only 358 population as against Assiniboia's unit of no less than 1,500. And 13 years ago the legislature itself gave Saskatchewan a representation of 6 out of a total of 26 seats with a unit of only 1,858 as against Alberta's unit of 3,159. Now we are giving the same district of Saskatchewan out of practically 50—because keeping in mind the province of Alberta we are dealing with the whole Territory—we are giving the Saskatchewan area 9 seats out of a total of 50. I find upon making a calculation—like my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) I would not be willing to swear to the last figure of this calculation, but roughly speaking it is correct—we are giving the Saskatchewan area 9 seats with a unit of roundly 2,850 population as against a unit of 3,250 for the balance of the Territory, if we take the last census, or a unit of 830 votes cast as against a unit of 930 votes cast in the balance of the Territories, if we take the vote last fall. If there was no outrage perpetrated by this parliament in 1888 and no outrage perpetrated by the legislature 3 years later, it seems to me it will be difficult to work up an outrage out of what is being proposed in this Bill. My hon. friend (Mr. Lake) has referred to some of the alternative propositions which were made at this recent conference between himself and his leader and some members on this side of the House. He complained very grievously in his criticism the other evening against the disparities not only between the north and the south, but against the disparities that existed in the part of the new province which is composed by the old district of Assiniboia; or at all events some of his complaints were based upon discrepancies which we find do exist even in that perfect distribution which was made by the assembly three years ago. He complained that Moosejaw had a very large area and a disproportionately large population. That is being remedied by this Bill. A seat is taken from the north and is given to the city of Moosejaw, leaving the district of Moosejaw in a fairly average position so far as population and votes cast is concerned. He complained also that certain of the other districts, Souris, Cannington and South Qu'Appelle, had disproportionate votes compared with some other districts, and what he said in that regard was perfectly true. But I think my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) himself will be the first to admit that there was no disadvantage to the Conservative party in any of these disparities to which he drew pointed attention. Take the district of Souris and the district of Cannington, which have a large population, these are the parts of the country in which my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) got his majority last fall, and even the fact that Moosejaw had a disproportionate vote and a disproportionate population did not involve any disadvantage to the Conservative party, because Moosejaw is a part of the country which never gave anything else but a Liberal majority since it has existed. However, when the conference met, recognizing very clearly that there were unfair disparities in the old district of Assiniboia under the assembly's plan, and some of these disparities being such that the people of the local communities have sent down grievous complaints, I took it upon myself to suggest that even if we gave 9 seats to the north and held the south down to 16 seats, that did not compel us to have these disparities remain if we could arrive at an agreement as to the remedy. I suggested to my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) that there was a part of the country on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the eastern part of the province where the assembly's redistribution left the area very small, where also the vote last fall was comparatively small, and where the most reliable information that we can get goes to show that the population increase is almost infinitesimal in comparison with the increase in other parts of the country. I suggested that there were four districts, Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley, which might very fairly be put into three districts and that would enable us to provide a new district in the Soo line country with regard to which my hon. friend has made complaint. I may say that I have taken the liberty of drawing a map showing these changes. The officials of the department so far have been too busy to draw up the schedule to describe this map, but I think I can give in a very few moments a brief statement of the changes I propose from the government map. Maple Creek is an enormous district in area, and I think it would be fair to cut it down a little, and so I propose to take off three ranges from the easterly edge and throw these three ranges into the district of Moosejaw. I think the district of Moosejaw can very well stand the addition of these three ranges. I change the northern boundaries of the districts of Maple Creek and Moosejaw from the north line of township 27 to the north line of township 26, thus taking an additional line of townships off Maple Creek and off Moosejaw and adding that line of townships to the northern districts, Battleford, Saskatoon and Batoche. Coming to the other part of the map I propose to add a range line to the district of Moosomin on the west side, taking it off the district of Whitewood. Coming over to the district of Wolseley I propose to take a range line off Grenfell and add it on to Wolseley, and then throw the districts of Whitewood and Grenfell into one. Thus I propose to make four districts into three. I propose to remedy the grievance with regard to Souris and Cannington by cutting off four ranges from the west of these districts. Then I propose to draw a line through the district of South Qu'Appelle on the north line of township 10. These portions taken off the districts of Cannington, Souris and the south part of Qu'Appelle will form a new Soo line district, according to the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lake).

Mr. LAKE. How far west does that district go?

Mr. SCOTT. I propose also to take two ranges off the district of South Regina. By this map South Regina would lose two ranges on the east side up as far as the north life of township 10. I have already said that we should not go on the population of last census as a basis, and I do not think it would be fair to go entirely on the vote last fall. I think the committee will agree with me that possibly the fairest basis that can be obtained is to take the census population together with the homestead entries that have been made in the various parts of the country since the census was taken four years ago; calculate that each entry is worth so many people, say three if you like; multiply each homestead entry by three, and by that means we will arrive fairly at what is the present population of these various parts of the country. Does my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle suggest that that is not a fair method?

Mr. LAKE. Certainly it is not a fair basis, to consider that a homestead entry in a new district will bring as many people into the country proportionately as a homestead entry in an old district. It is not a fair basis for showing the increase of the population.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the committee will agree with me that it is an approximately fair basis. We cannot arrive at the absolute facts with regard to the present population of that country. If we find a number of homestead entries in a particular area, and calculate that each entry will account for a certain number of people, and apply the same rule in all parts of the country we shall not be very far out. I find that in these four districts of Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley, which my hon. friend thinks is so unfair to suggest should be thrown into three, there was a census population in 1901 as follows: Moosomin, 5,163; Whitewood, 3,733; Grenfell, 3,956; Wolseley, 4,059; making a total of 16,911. There have been homestead entries in these four districts since the census was taken as follows: In Moosomin, 631; in Whitewood, 690; in Grenfell, 1,038; in Wolseley, 1,131; a total of 3,490. Now, I propose to multiply these homestead entries by three, and I get this result—that the homestead entries mean an addition to the population in these four districts since the census was taken of 10,470. Add that to the census population, we get 27,421 as an estimated present population in these four districts. I may say that these four districts cast an aggregate vote last fall of 5,671. If we make them into three districts, we shall have a population unit of 9,140, and an average vote cast last fall in each of the three districts of 1,690. Now, my hon. friend objected very strongly to my proposition to make four districts out of Souris, Cannington and Qu'Appelle. I am going to present the same calculation in regard to them. The census population of these three districts in 1901 was as follows: Souris, 5,704; Cannington, 3,485; Qu'Appelle, 5,530; a total of 14,719. There have been homestead entries made in these districts as follows: In Souris, 2,998; in Cannington, 2,354; in Qu'Appelle, 2,865; a total of 8,217, as against a total of 3,490 in my hon. friend's four districts. Multiply this total of homestead entries by three, and we get an estimated increase of population in these three districts of 24,651. Add that to the total census population of 14,719, and we get a present estimated population for these three districts of 39,370 as against 27,421 in my hon. friend's four districts which I propose to make into three. Now, if I make these three districts into four, there will be a population unit for each of the four districts of 9,842 as against a population unit of 9,140 for each of the three districts which I make out of the four districts of my hon. friend; and I find that last fall we had an average vote in each of the four districts which I make out of these three districts of 1,889 as against an average vote in each of the three districts which I make out of my hon. friend's four districts of 1,690. Does my hon. friend tell me that that is not fair? Does he tell me that the suggestion he has made is a more equitable one? His districts are less in area, less in votes cast, less in registered votes, less in homestead entries, less in every respect, than the three districts out of which I propose to get an additional district for the purpose of the new population on the Soo line. My hon. friend says these four districts are old settlements. So they are; but what does he propose to do? He proposes to get a district for that Soo line country from just as old a settlement as the district he is speaking about. He proposes to take the district of Lumsden, which polled a vote last fall considerably larger than the votes polled in some of these four districts which he has taken under his care, and which has so large an area that you could put almost the whole of those four districts into it, and which had about four times the number of homestead entries since the census was taken of any single one of those four districts of his, and he proposes to take twenty-one townships just south of Regina, the most thickly settled in the Northwest Territories, and add them to the district of Lumsden; and he calls that fair. He calls that leaving undisturbed the old settled areas. I have occupied the attention of the committee a great deal longer than I should have done or than I had any intention of doing. As we sometimes do the work in committee by conversation more than by set speech, some of the other information which I have may more properly be presented in that way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The curious part of the schedule proposed for the new province of Saskatchewan is that every one of the arguments made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and especially by the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior, in the case of Alberta, is absolutely destructive of the schedule now proposed. In Alberta reliance was placed by this side of the House upon the federal distribution of 1903. A resolution based upon it was voted down. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken relies upon it in Saskatchewan. Reliance was placed by the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior on the principle that electors in rural constituencies should have a greater voice in the legislature than those in urban constituencies. That principle has been shown by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle to have been entirely cast aside in the proposed distribution. Reliance was then placed on the voters' lists, coupled with information derived from the number of schools, the number of post offices, and the number of homestead entries. If you take the voters' lists, the schools, the post offices and the homestead entries, you will find that this proposed distribution cannot be sustained as an equitable division for one moment.

Take the census of 1901, which was relied upon to some extent in Alberta, and apply it to this, and you have most extraordinary results. In other words, if you take all the information and data, which were used for the purpose of supporting the Alberta division and apply it to Saskatchewan, you have the best possible argument to show that the latter is absolutely unfair, unjust and improper. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has gone over the whole subject so thoroughly that not very much needs to be said in addition. Let us just take two illustrations—the district of Humboldt and the district of Souris. You will find that by the census of 1901 there were 582 souls in Humboldt and 5,704 in Souris, or nearly ten times the population in the one that is contained in the other. Each one of these is given a member. If you eliminate the Indians, you find the comparison still worse. Humboldt had in 1901 a population of 271 souls and Souris a population of 5,704. Each one of these districts is now entitled to a representative. Take the votes recorded—178 in Humboldt, 2,554 in Souris; votes registered, 298 in Humboldt, 3,348 in Souris. Between these two extremes you have every possibly variety of constituency that can be imagined, both as regards area and population. Another principle which has been absolutely cast to the winds is the supposed principle, relied upon in the case of Alberta, that the area was to be taken into consideration—that a constituency with a very large area might be entitled to a representative although it had a comparatively small population. Well, observe numbers 16 and 17. Number 16, Maple Creek, with votes polled to the number of 846 and registered to the number of 1,198, and an area of 20,699 square miles, is given one member. Humboldt, with 178 votes polled, 298 registered, and an area of 7,657 square miles, or about one-third the area of the other, is given one member.

Mr. ADAMSON. Are you aware of the present population of Humboldt?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN: I am not aware of it nor has any one been able to state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can state that the present population of Humboldt is between 8,000 and 10,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We are bound to give the hon. gentleman's statement all the consideration it deserves; but when we are told that a population of perhaps 1,500 has increased in less than a year to 8,000 or 10,000, that affords the best possible reason for having the delimitation determined by a tribunal which could investigate the accuracy of such statements. We do not want to delimit these constituencies according to what one or another may tell us some unnamed person has told him. We heard from the Minister of the Interior that some unnamed person had told him there were 5,000 persons, exclusive of Indians, in that portion of Athabaska to be included in the new province of Alberta. We have no evidence beyond that statement. I am willing to give my hon. friend's statement every consideration, but I have yet to learn that he is absolutely infallible in these matters, which are matters of opinion and not of personal knowledge.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have been frequently through that district on business. The homestead entries will show there must have been a large influx of settlers. There are now four towns there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good, let us take the homestead entries, and we find a very great discrepancy in the representation given to the 16 and the 9 constituencies. There are 31,000 homestead entries in the 16 constituencies in the south as compared with 17,424 in the 9 constituencies in the north, yet not very much regard seems to have been attached to that consideration in the making out of this schedule. Although we have a population nearly three times greater, according to the census of 1901, in the south we have 16 members allotted to one portion of the province and 9 to the other. Assuming that the population has increased in the same ratio as the homestead entries, we would not find any change such as would justify the distribution the government proposes to make.

Mr. LAMONT. Is not the proportion of 9 members to 17,000 homestead entries just about the same as 16 members to 31,000 homestead entries ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose it is, that would seem to indicate that the population in the south has increased as much as in the north.

Mr. LAMONT. Would not that also indicate that 9 members for the 17,000 is the same proportion as for the 31,000 ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not at all. The population of the 9 constituencies, as I have heard my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) give it, was about 26,000 according to the census of 1901, out of a total of 90,000.

Mr. LAMONT. That would be for Saskatchewan, but these 9 take in a considerable portion of Assiniboia as well, which would not be considered as belonging to the Saskatchewan population.

Mr. LAKE. The population was exclusive of Indians, 20,769 in Saskatchewan, and 61,008 in Assiniboia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difference to which the hon. gentleman has just referred would not very much affect the result of the calculation. You have a population of 20,000 against a population of 61,000. You have homestead entries in the north to the number of 17,424 and in the south to the number of 31,611. The inevitable result is that if you base a distribution upon the population, according to the census of 1901, and according to the subsequent homestead entries, you could not possibly arrive at any such result as that which the government is attempting to embody in the proposed schedule. Let us take their number of post offices, on which great reliance was placed in the case of Alberta. There are 100 in Saskatchewan and 285 in Assiniboia. Then take the schools, upon which the Minister of the Interior placed perhaps the strongest reliance and so did the First Minister, when dealing with Alberta—according to a return brought down to the House from the government of the Territories, there are 200 schools in Saskatchewan and 575 in Assiniboia. Base it on any information you like, you cannot work out any such result as that which the government desires to enforce in making its distribution.

I have looked over, with some interest, the proposal which my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has submitted to the committee as a basis of what may be accomplished if you propose to distribute the seats in Saskatchewan upon an even basis of population. He has divided the province into 25 constituencies. I observe that the least number of voters which he gives to any constituency is 1,200, and the highest 1,825. The average in 16 constituencies in the southern part of the province is 1,550, and in the 9 constituencies in the northern part of the province, 1,425. There is not, it is true, absolute equality of population. It would be difficult, if not impossible to work that out. But when you consider 1,200 on the voters' list in the lowest division and 1,825 in the highest division, and compare that with what is proposed by the government with respect to Humboldt and Redberry on the one hand and Souris and South Qu'Appelle on the other hand, it seems to me absolutely obvious that it is possible without any difficulty, to make a fairer and more equitable distribution of seats in this province than is proposed by this Bill. I regret that the efforts made to bring about some compromise with regard to this vexed matter have not been successful. I am bound to say that I think that my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle is not in fault in that regard, because while he has strong opinions on this question, I have always found him moderate in his views and willing to accept any reasonable compromise. I do not think that the distribution proposed by the government in Saskatchewan is any better than that in Alberta. I say that for the information of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). I think that they are very much alike, except that, if possible, there is even a greater discrepancy between Humboldt and Souris in Saskatchewan than any that is to be found in the province of Alberta, if we accept the evidence of the Minister of the Interior as to the northern ridings of the province. It is perfectly obvious that no principle was selected in the first place upon which these provinces should be divided into constituencies. There was a delimitation made of Alberta, and then principles were sought upon which to base that distribution. There was a delimitation of Saskatchewan and entirely different principles are invoked to support it. It seems obvious that in each case the redistribution was made first and the principles to justify it sought afterwards.

Mr. LAMONT. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has submitted to this House a mass of statistics which, perhaps, have satisfied his mind that he has a grievance against this redistribution. He has made a number of comparisons in order to show that the schedule submitted by the government works an injustice to the south as against the north. He does not complain that the government has made a gerrymander in the ordinary sense of the word—that is, that it has hived the Conservatives in the north in order to enable the surrounding districts to return Liberals. His whole complaint is against the representation given to the north as against that given to the south. And he has, as has already been stated, submitted a schedule of his own under which two seats which are given to the north according to the government schedule are taken away from the north and given to the south.

Now, let us see where we stand in this matter and what are the conditions fronting us as a committee in distributing the districts of the province of Saskatchewan. We find that the Northwest Territories are divided into two provinces, the dividing line being the 4th meridian. In the province of Saskatchewan, there were, according to the territorial redistribution, twenty seats out of thirty-five in the territorial legislature. And we also find that, according to this Bill, we are to give twenty-five seats to the new province of Saskatchewan. So, the task before us is to divide the province of Saskatchewan in such a way that it will have twenty-five seats distributed as fairly as possible. My hon. friend (Mr. Lake) has made his comparisons as between the north and the south, and he has taken as his dividing line the line between the old districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Now, I propose to make several comparisons between the north and the south, but I do not propose to follow the line heretofore followed and take the district of Saskatchewan as the north and the district of Assiniboia as the south. It seems to me that that is a most unfair way to divide the two districts into north and south. I am going on another basis. I find that in the Haultain redistribution of 1902 there were twenty seats in the new province of Saskatchewan. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and the hon. member from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) have stated to this committee that the Haultain redistribution of 1902 was absolutely fair and just. Well, I am prepared to take it as a basis. I will take the ten southern seats according to that redistribution and the ten northern seats, and then I will endeavour to ascertain into which of these districts—the ten northern seats or the ten southern seats— we ought to put a majority of the new seats which are to be given to the province of Saskatchewan. We have five new seats to be added to the twenty under the Haultain redistribution, and the question, to my mind, is where should these seats be put in order to make a fair distribution. Now, if the ten northern seats show a vastly greater increase in population than do the ten southern seats, it is reasonable that the majority of the five should go to the north. If the ten southern seats show the greater increase of population, the bulk of the five seats should go to the south. The ten southern seats are as follows : Souris, Cannington, Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell, Wolseley, South Qu'Appelle, South Regina, Moosejaw, and Maple Creek, I call these the ten southern seats for the following reason : They are the ten seats which touch the southern boundary line of the new province or are the nearest to it according to the Haultain distribution. They correspond practically to the three southern seats of the federal redistribution of two years ago. Maple Creek, Moosejaw and South Regina are in the district represented by my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). The other districts correspond very closely to the district represented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). The ten northern seats correspond very closely to the northern seats as laid down by the federal redistribution. Whatever difference there may be is in favour of the south. I find the actual difference to be that there are 124 townships which should belong to the north that are included in the south in the eastern part of the territory, and 264 townships that should belong to the south are included in the north in the western part of the territory. So that there are 140 townships, according to that calculation in favour of the south. Now then the question is, do these ten southern districts show a larger increase of population since the Haultain redistribution than the ten northern seats. I have based my calculation upon the census population of 1901 and upon the homestead entries since, for notwithstanding what my hon. friend for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) may say, it does seem to me that the homestead entries form one of the soundest bases on which to calculate population. Have there been more homestead entries since 1901 in the ten northern than in the 10 southern districts ? I find the following :

	Ten northern seats.	Ten southern seats.
(Not including Arthabaska.)
	Sq. miles.	Sq. miles.
Area..	91,330	57,460
Census population in 1901..	50,818	38,369
Homestead entries since 1901	30,576	18,449

Of homestead entries since 1901 we have, roughly speaking, 30,000 in the north and 18,000 in the south. If that is a fair basis —and I submit it is a fair basis—then the fairest division of the five new seats we can make is to give to those ten northern seats, in which there is an increase of 30,000 homestead entries, three seats, and to the southern group, in which there is an increase of 18,000 homestead entries, two seats. This is still giving an advantage to the south. There cannot be any dispute as to these figures, because they are official, and there is a reason why the increased population should appear in the north. Those who are familiar with the country unhesitatingly say that the increase of population during the last three or four years has been largely in the north, and the reason, as was pointed out by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), is that in the north two lines of railway have practically been built —the main line of the Canadian Northern running right across the province, and the northern branch of the Canadian Northern from Erwood, which is now built up to within a few miles of Prince Albert. Then, too, the Grand Trunk Pacific line has been surveyed there, and every one knows that a great number of settlers have gone in along that survey and taken up homesteads. As a matter of fact, we know that the northern country has progressed much more rapidly than the south. We know that from the homestead entries, which demonstrate beyond question the fact that the settlement in the north is proceeding much more rapidly than in the south. Therefore, taking the homestead entries as a basis, 30,000 as against 18,000, it seems to me that no fairer distribution of the additional representation could be made than to give three to the north and two to the south. I have estimated the population upon these figures, and have taken the same basis as the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott); for each homestead entry I have allowed three persons, and I have added to that the census population of 1901. I find, according to that calculation, in the ten southern districts the present estimated population is 92,254, while in the ten northern districts the estimated population is 141,646. These figures not only justify the distribution of three new seats in the north as against two in the south, but taking into consideration its prospective increase of population, it certainly would justify four in the north and one in the south, as in the government's first schedule.

I shall compare a few of the figures that have been given for the northern and the southern seats. I might point out that my hon. friend for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) proposes to allow four of the new seats to the south, while to the ten northern seats he is only allowing one new seat. Comparing the figures for the two groups of districts, I find that he has retained unaltered according to his map, a certain number of seats in the south. I shall take the districts of Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley. He has pointed out that these are old districts, and he has objected very strongly to any lessening of their representation. These four seats have a census population of 16,051. Since 1901 there have been 3,480 homestead entries made in these four constituencies. Allowing to each of these homestead entries three persons, those four constituencies have at the present moment a population of 26,491, or an average for each seat of 6,622. Compare these with the four districts in the north which my hon. friend says are so much over-represented. Take Saskatoon, Battleford, Kinistino and Batoche according to Mr. Haultain's redistribution. These four districts have a census population of 14,123, but since 1901 there have been 15,386 homestead entries made within their limits. Comparing these with the four seats in the south, which have a census population of 16,051 as against a population of 14,123 for these four districts in the north, and we find that the four southern seats have only added to their population, in so far as homestead entries would indicate, the population represented by 3,480 entries, while in these four northern divisions in the same time there have been added the population represented by 15,386 homestead entries. Following the same principle of allowing three persons to each homestead entry, we have a present population in this northern district of 61,281 as against 26,491 in the south, or, while in these four districts in the south 6,222 people can elect a member, it requires 15,320 people in the north, and yet my hon. friend says that the north is being over-represented.

Now, I need not follow out these figures. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle has submitted a map, and in so far as he lays out the same divisions as are laid out in the government schedule I think we may take it for granted that the government schedule is perfectly correct. I find that the hon. gentleman has made some criticism in regard to Redberry, but according to his own schedule he makes a district of Redberry, which corresponds fairly with the government one; Battleford is practically the same; Rosthern is made a little smaller; Saskatoon is made smaller; Prince Albert city is cut out altogether and Humboldt is cut out altogether and added to Batoche. I want to call the attention of the committee to the facts in regard to Humboldt. The hon. gentleman says that Humboldt should not have separate representation because it only cast 178 votes at the last election. Any one who knows anything about that district, knows that two years ago a German settlement went into Humboldt from the United States numbering 4,500 people, and, as has been pointed out by my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Adamson), there is to-day in that district a population of from 8,000 to 10,000 people.

Mr. LAKE. How does the hon. gentleman get at that calculation? Is he just accepting the statement of the hon. member for Humboldt?

Mr. LAMONT. Just wait a moment and I will show you how I arrive at that. The census population of Humboldt in 1901 was 582. But since that time there have been made 2,274 homestead entries. Following the same principle of allowing three persons for each homestead entry that gives as far as homestead entries are concerned a population of 6,822, and including the population of 582 as set out in the census of 1901, a total population of 7,304 without counting any of the town population, and everybody who has gone over the main line of the Canada Northern Railway knows that there are very considerable towns growing up along that line. Therefore, I think that my hon. friend from Humboldt is well within the mark when he says that there is a population in the district of Humboldt of between 8,000 and 10,000 people. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle thinks that population is not entitled to one representative and that Humboldt should be added to Batoche. Now, I have here the figures which my hon. friend has read showing the homestead entries for the different districts, and I find that in Batoche in 1901 there was a census population of 1,970 and in Humboldt a census population of 582. In addition, in Batoche, according to this list, there have been since 1901 2,594 homesteads entered and in Humboldt 2,274, making a total of 4,868. Following the same principle of allowing three persons to each homstead, we have a present population in the district to which my hon. friend would only allow one member of over 16,000 people.

Mr. LAKE. I had better say right here to my hon. friend from Saskatchewan that I think he certainly is not correctly describing the boundaries of any of the districts which he has referred to as my distribution.

Mr. LAMONT. In order that I shall not misrepresent my hon. friend I will put his map on the table so that it may be seen by any one who wishes to refer to it. I think, Mr. Chairman, I ought to call the attention of the committee to this map and to show the committee the beautiful redistribution of my hon. friend. Whether or not he felt that the member for the Cannington district would have some difficulty in getting to Regina I cannot say, but he has built a beautiful series of steps that look as if they were calculated to assist him very materially in getting there. It seems to me that the only difference between my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle and hon. members on this side of the House is that he refuses to consider that these citizens who are from the United States or from Europe and who had not been in the country for three years before last fall so as to be able to get their names on the voters' list should be entitled to representation. We think they should be entitled to representation. They are there on the ground and developing the resources of the country, and the fact that they are yet American citizens is not in my opinion a sufficient reason, although it may be a sufficient reason in the opinion of my hon. friend, for depriving them of a voice in the affairs of this country.

Mr. LAKE. I have no intention of depriving American citizens of fair representation. They are scattered through the whole length and breadth of the country from north to south.

Mr. LAMONT. My hon. friend cannot deny, as the homestead entries prove beyond a doubt, that the number of new settlers who have gone into the north far exceeds the number who have gone into the south.

Mr. LAKE. I do not think it does.

Mr. LAMONT. Well, I submit that the homestead entries demonstrate that the ten northern districts, according to Mr. Haultain's redistribution which my hon. friend says is fair, shows 30,000 entries as against 18,000 for the southern districts. To my mind that is conclusive. Even though a very large number of these 30,000 people had not been in the country for three years last fall, yet we know that they are improving their farms, they are improving the country, they have come here on our invitation and they require roads and bridges and schools to as great an extent and perhaps greater than the settlers in the older districts of whose interests my hon. friend has been so solicitous. In the older districts the settlers have better roads than in the newer districts. Their interests have been looked after in the past; their schools are established and their roads and bridges are practically built, and they will not require the same amount of attention on the part of the government that the newer settlers will. It seems to me that this ground of difference is the only one between us. The hon. gentleman has made a calculation of the voters on the lists, but there were thousands and thousands of settlers in that northern country who had not been there three years and were consequent ly not entitled to have their names on the lists. The hon. gentleman cuts out Humboldt and Prince Albert. As the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has said, we have adopted the principle of giving to incorporated cities a member, and if we give a member to Calgary, Regina and Moosejaw, I do not see on what principle Prince Albert can be cut out. There are a few facts to which I will call attention in reference to the Prince Albert seat. Until the redistribution of 1902, which my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) says was fair and just, Prince Albert had two seats, East and West Prince Albert, and the Haultain administration in 1902 cut out one of these seats, putting a large portion of it into Prince Albert West forming one seat, and putting the polling divisions down the Saskatchewan river into Kinistino. To my mind and to the mind of the Prince Albert people that was most unjust. It was stated in the district, it was stated in the legislature that it was an unjust gerrymander, and the votes cast at the next election proved that to be the case. The Haultain government took away one seat from Prince Albert and formed a new seat of Saskatoon. Prince Albert at the next election had a vote of 771 while Saskatoon had a vote of only 376. Between Prince Albert and Kinistino was divided the extra territory which up to that time had been in Prince Albert. Up to that time there had been three seats, but by the 1902 redistribution they only were given two. These two seats provided a vote of 1,453 at the next election whereas the three other seats in Saskatchewan in which elections were held gave only 1,065 votes, so that the Haultain administration divided 1,065 votes into three seats, whereas they only divided 1,453 votes into two seats, taking one seat away from Prince Albert. Yet my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) says that was a fair redistribution.

It was stated over and over again on the platform and elsewhere that the reason for cutting off one seat from Prince Albert was because Prince Albert East and Prince Albert West returned two strong opponents of the Haultain government, while Saskatoon was supposed to be friendly, and at the next election Saskatoon returned a government supporter, while in the two seats that had been fused into one in Prince Albert the government nominee lost his deposit. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up the time of the committee further. It seems to me that if we look at this question on fair and broad principles, if we take the 10 southern and the 10 northern seats as laid out by Mr. Haultain—and in which distribution my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) had a part—and if we take the homestead entries in each of these 10 seats since 1901 we are forced to the conclusion that a fair distribution of the extra five seats we have to add to Saskatchewan, would be 3 to the north and 2 to the south. In my opinion if we were to consider the prospective increase, it should be 4 in the north and 1 in the south, but certainly not less than 3 in the north and 2 in the south. I believe that before the next local election, if the term of the legislature runs four years, there will be a vastly greater population in the north than there is in the south.

Mr. LAKE. My hon. friend (Mr. Lamont) has taken up a great deal of time trying to prove what a terrible gerrymander was made by the Haultain government in 1902, but the opinion of the gentleman (Mr. Scott) who sits beside him was very different at the time the Haultain redistribution was made. The Regina 'Leader' of the 24th of April, 1902, says :

> The other matter is the Redistribution Bill, in regard to which not even the faintest odour of gerrymander could be detected. The prevailing idea in the distribution is the basis of population and area combined, and the principle acted upon is very similar to that in the Dominion Acts for a similar purpose ; these have the population of Quebec as a starting point, and Mr. Haultain takes the population of Saskatchewan.

Mr. HENDERSON. Whose paper said that ?

Mr. LAKE. The paper of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott).

Mr. LAMONT. The hon. member for West Assiniboia was a very strong supporter of Mr. Haultain's then, I would presume from that article.

Mr. BARKER. But he would not say what was not true ?

Mr. LAMONT. Read what the Prince Albert 'Advocate' said about it and you will get the other side.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Regina 'Leader' is a better authority.

Mr. LAKE. I was in the legislature at that time, and I know that there was no criticism to amount to anything of that distribution. It was generally accepted as fair.

Mr. LAMONT. Did not Mr. Mackay state on the floor of the legislature that it was a very bad gerrymander ?

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Mackay was the only one who suggested the idea of gerrymander at all, and he did it, not in a very determined manner. He was a member of the opposition at the time and if the rest of the members of the opposition had any idea that there was a gerrymander, the Bill would not have gone through as it did in the course of a few minutes, accepted practically by the whole House without discussion. In the distribution, as the Regina 'Leader' said, Saskatchewan is taken as a basis and one member was given for every 4,279 of the population according to the census of the previous year. In Assiniboia one member was given for every 4,492 of the population, and in Alberta one member for every 4,700 of the population. It was as even a distribution as it was possible to make. If there had been only the same differences in the present Bill we should not have had much to say against it.

Mr. SCOTT. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) permit me to point out that if he will calculate the result of that redistribution upon the basis of the most recent vote in the Territories at the previous federal election, as we are compelled to some extent to do in this case, he will find a very great disparity. Saskatchewan was given 6 seats, and the old Assiniboia 15 seats, while the vote polled the previous November showed 11,857 for Assiniboia as against 2,529 for Saskatchewan, being an average in Assiniboia of 790 votes for each member as against only 420 in Saskatchewan. This will tend to show to the committee what an insecure basis we are obliged under present circumstances to go upon.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman is referring to the votes polled ?

Mr. SCOTT. The votes polled in 1900.

Mr. LAKE. That is the basis the Minister of the Interior took for the distribution he has given in both of these Bills.

Mr. SCOTT. Not absolutely.

Mr. LAKE. I quoted the Minister of the Interior's own remarks, which I think were pretty absolute in regard to that matter. That was the first basis of distribution. He said : 'The basis of the division of the constituencies was necessarily the vote cast ; it was the latest and most accurate estimate we could get.' In another place he said : 'The definite division of the constituencies is based on the vote actually polled on the 3rd of November.' The hon. member for Saskatchewan made a very long argument in regard to north and south, as he would make the division. I do not propose to follow him into that question. He makes a very arbitrary division when he brings one of his northern constituencies apparently down to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think that will be sufficient for any one acquainted with that country to estimate the value of the hon. gentleman's remarks in that respect. Then, in endeavouring to prove from the homestead entries what a very large population had gone into the north, he took an all-round estimate that three would be about the proportion of individuals who would go with each homestead entry. When he endeavoured to apply this principle to the absolute statement of the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) as to the population in that constituency, he found that it fell short of the estimate made by the hon. member for Humboldt. In order to make up for this deficiency, he immediately said this was outside of the numbers who had gone into the towns which were springing up all along the line. Once he departs from that general basis of three to every homestead entry, his whole argument falls to the ground ; because I contend that he cannot compare an entirely new country, which is being opened up for the first time, and in which every man who goes into it for business purposes or any other purposes, immediately makes a homestead entry with the older settled portions of the country, such as the Indian Head district, which has been referred to, in which every bit of vacant land has for years been taken up, and into which great numbers of new population have been coming. There people who go in to farm, being unable to find homesteads, buy lands. Then, an immense number of labourers go in to work, and business men to carry on business in the towns ; and these have no opportunity of finding homesteads. So that it is absurd to take for granted generally that for every homestead entry in a particular district, three people have come into that district. Certainly three people would be no fair estimate in the older districts ; probably four would be nearer the mark ; whereas in the newer districts probably every other person who comes in makes a homestead entry. As I said when the hon. member for Saskatchewan was speaking, his verbal description of the distribution which I submitted to the committee was an absolutely incorrect one. I do not think I need go any further. Any one who chooses to look at that map and compare it with his statements as they appear in 'Hansard' will find that he has not correctly described the constituencies which he undertook to criticise ; so that I do not think I need follow his remarks in that respect.

Mr. LAMONT. Will my hon. friend state what the inaccuracy in my description was ?

Mr. LAKE. He said I left the district of Redberry as it was.

Mr. LAMONT. I did not say that. I said that the hon. gentleman had made the district of Redberry, and had added to it Battleford.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman also said that I added Humboldt to Batoche. I did not add the whole of Humboldt to Batoche. The hon. gentleman, perhaps unintentionally, did not give a fair description of those constituencies. My hon. friend from Western Assiniboia proposed to cut up four constituencies in Eastern Assiniboia—Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley—and make three of them, and he compared that proposal with the alternative suggestion I made on the spur of the moment, to the disadvantage of that suggestion. The hon. gentleman's proposal would work out on the basis of numbers on the voters' lists as follows : Moosomin, 2,282 ; Broadview, 2,280 ; Wolseley, 1,850. These are figures which I took from the figures at my disposal. The average of these four constituencies, as I have stated before, is already above the average throughout the whole province of Saskatchewan. I suggest that we should take the three constituencies around Regina, which are considerably below that average, and add to the portions of south Qu'Appelle, Souris and Cannington, and thus remove a certain amount of congestion in those three districts.

Mr. SCOTT. The vote polled in Lumsden was just about up to the average, and since the census of 1901 almost as many homestead entries have been made in Lumsden as in the four districts. Yet my hon. friend proposes to add to that district of Lumsden, which is already big enough, both in area and population, a portion of the thickly settled territory in the neighbourhood of Regina—twenty-one townships as thickly settled as any in the Territories, with an area almost as large as Wolseley.

Mr. LAKE. The figures which my alternative suggestion shows would give to Lumsden 2,230 votes. That is less than two of the constituencies which he proposes to create in the eastern part along the main line. It would still leave the city of Regina, with a very small vote under 1,000, and it would make South Regina up to about 2,270. Curiously enough they work out in exactly the same figures, according to the calculation which I made.

Mr. SCOTT. According to my figures I find that Lumsden had 3,096 of a population according to the census of 1901, and cast a vote last fall of 1,122 and there have been homestead entries, since the census of 1901, in that district to the number of 3,254. Does my hon. friend contend that these new homestead entries do not mean population? Lumsden shows 3,200 entries as against only 3,400 in the whole four districts of Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley, and Lumsden is in the same class as the other districts practically, except in the northern portion. The southern portion, particularly in the neighbourhood of Regina, is entirely the class of old-settled district to which he refers and to which belong Moosomin, Grenfell, Whitewood and Wolseley. The old settlers are to be found there. According to my suggested division, by putting these four districts into three, we will have a record of the vote polled last fall in the new districts of as follows: Moosomin, 1,573; Broadview, 1,383; Wolseley, 1,366. Compare those with the two districts on the north: Saltcoats, 1,473; Yorkton, 1,081. On the other hand, take the districts to the south, Souris will have 2,114, very much larger still than in the other three which I make out of his four; Cannington, 1,508.

Mr. LAKE. How many will the three Reginas then have?

Mr. SCOTT. I will give the figures for each of these according to the map I have suggested. I take the votes polled: Souris, 2,114; Cannington, 1,508; Moosomin, 1,593; Broadview, 1,383; Wolseley, 1,366; Saltcoats, 1,473; Yorkton, 1,081; Weyburn—this is the new district on the Soo line which I propose to create—1,282; South Qu'Appelle, 1,383; North Qu'Appelle, 927. I do not propose any change in the North Qu'Appelle district. South Regina, 1,153; Regina city, 740; Lumsden, 1,122; Moosejaw district, 1,168; Moosejaw city, 786; Maple Creek, 783. If my hon. friend will look at that a moment, he must agree with me that it is a fairer redistribution than the government plan, observing what was done three years ago by the legislature, and very much fairer than his alternative suggestion, by which he proposes to add to a district, already fairly large in votes cast, large in area, and exceedingly large in the population which we must conclude has come into it, judging by the number of homestead entries made since the census was taken.
