Mr. LAKE. If hon. members on that side would take one basis of calculation, we should begin to know where we are, but it is absolutely impossible to follow all their different positions. When it suits their arguments in one district, they use the basis of population according to the census of 1901 and add to their calculation the homestead entries. When it suits them in another district to use another basis, they take the votes polled. Let them take one basis and hold to it all through. I could not find a moment ago the average of the votes on the lists in the three Reginas, but I have it now. I am not taking the votes polled in my calculation. The average on the voters' lists was 1,344 in those three Regina seats. The average voters on the lists for Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley, was 1,554, so that the hon. gentleman is taking four constituencies which already, on an average, have a larger number of names on the voters' lists than the average for the whole of the province. He has just told us exactly how many votes were polled in each of these new constituencies, which he has been redistributing. How does he get at that? For instance, here I find the polling division of Yellow Grass for the federal election had a voters' list of 300 names. Right through the centre of that polling division, which is a very large one, containing some eight townships, goes the dividing line between the two constituencies. How many does he reckon cast their votes on the west side of the dividing line and how many on the east side?

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me that when we have to come down to a dispute about individual cases in a matter dealing with so large an area, we pretty nearly bring the whole thing down to the level of farce. Nobody imagines that these figures are accurate, but they are approximately so. If there are divergencies on the one side, there will be corresponding divergencies on the other.

Mr. LAKE. No one pretends they are absolutely accurate, but I object to having the number of votes polled taken as the basis, because it is impossible even to get near the number of persons qualified to vote even in that way.

Mr. SCOTT. If my hon. friend will compare the number of votes polled with the number given on the lists, which he contends are absolutely accurate, he will find that the number of votes polled are given with approximate accuracy, which is my contention.

Mr. LAKE. The number of votes polled as compared with the number on the lists vary considerably in the different constituencies. In one of the northern constituencies only 49 per cent of the voters on the lists voted, whereas in one of the southern constituencies, that of the hon. gentleman's himself, there were 76 per cent votes polled of the voters registered. If the government would only take one basis and stick to it, that would give some chance to members on this side to offer alternative suggestions, which could not fail to be an improvement on their schedules. I do not propose to follow this matter very much further. I do not think that the argument made by the hon. members for Western Assiniboia and Saskatchewan have added anything to the information of members of this committee. I think they have not proved the case they started out to prove in any particular. They depend on vague calculations as to prospective populations and so on. In reference to the accusation made against me that I wish to deprive the newcomers of their right to representation, that is absolutely incorrect. Incoming American citizens were especially mentioned in this connection by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont). These American citizens have not settled in one corner of the country, but have spread everywhere. They have come in very largely into my own neighbourhood. Within a very few miles of me there are a considerable number of American citizens who were not entitled to vote at the last election. A great many of these American citizens, men of means, have determined to settle in the districts which have proved their capacity for growing grain. They have not struck into the remote districts where it is not finally established that wheat can be profitably grown. A very large proportion of the best class of these new-comers have settled in the older districts, where they know they can make a success of farming. I propose that all should be treated alike, both those who go into the north and those who go into the south—all should be given their fair share of representation.

Mr. SCOTT. I daresay we are to take it for granted that the division between the north and the south is going to be maintained by the committee—nine to the north and sixteen to the south. But I am going to appeal to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) that we should join hands on the suggestion I have offered, which, to a great extent, would remove the disparities and discrepancies in Assiniboia which exist in the plan presented by the government, that being the redistribution made by the assembly three years ago. My hon. friend, like myself, knows very well that the people on the Soo line contend, with a great deal of justice, that a different distribution ought to be made of Assiniboia to serve their purposes. They feel themselves at the extremes in South Regina and South Qu'Appelle. They feel that the weight is against them, and they have sent down a great many strong representations asking that different lines be run to create a district, the centre of which would be one of the towns on the Pasqua branch or the Soo line. I have made a proposition that I think is fair. These four districts on the main Canadian Pacific Railway line at the east of the province are comparatively small in area and in vote, and are exceedingly small in increase of population, if we take the homestead entries as being any proper guide in that respect. I feel somewhat strongly in regard to this, and I am satisfied that the committee would be willing to agree to my suggestion if the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) would accept it.

Mr. LAKE. I am quite prepared to agree with the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) in so far as he asserts that there should be a constituency given along the Soo line, taking in a portion of the districts of South Regina, South Qu'Appelle, Souris, and possibly Cannington. But I cannot agree with him as to where he is to take off one constituency in order to place a new constituency in that district. He proposes, as I have said, to go into the old districts of Moosomin, Whitewood, Grenfell and Wolseley and cut off one member from there. I have shown that already they have a very large vote in those four districts.

Mr. SCOTT. They are under the average of the sixteen Assiniboia districts.

Mr. LAKE. But they are over the average for the whole province of Saskatchewan. The only difference between my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) and myself is that I suggest that he should get this extra seat from the three constituencies which now group around Regina—Lumsden, Regina and South Regina—and that he should redistribute these seats. The average for these seats is 1,344 as against an average in the constituencies he proposes to cut up of 1,554. I contend that it would be very much easier and a much more suitable and fairer distribution to do as I suggested—to make the new Soo district out of a portion of the present district of South Regina, adding to it a portion of South Qu'Appelle, a portion of Souris and possibly a small portion of Cannington, and extending the North Regina or Lumsden district south to the 15th township line. As I have said, it would work out that the two constituencies of Lumsden and the Soo line would have something over 2,200 names on the voters' list; and Regina city, which would have a member, who, no doubt, would be approached by farmers in either of these constituencies if they wished to see him, would have a very small proportion of votes. Of course, I am agreeing to this suggestion on the assumption that the government are determined to force through this distribution as between the old district of Saskatchewan and the old district of Assiniboia.

On schedule 'B,' Grenfell.

Mr. SCOTT. I made a suggestion the other day in the conference to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) that the boundary of Grenfell should be slightly changed by taking away from the district of Yorkton five townships, in the southwest corner of the district of Yorkton. Owing to the building of the Kirkella extension of the railway these people will be nearer to that railway than to the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway, and their interests will be much better served by adding these five townships to Grenfell. The member for Qu'Appelle said that he would have no objection to this being done.

Mr. LAKE. I do not remember this question. As in the case of the Alberta constituencies an agreement was arrived at in the conference as to some changes of this nature, and the understanding was that some authority would make the changes and have them properly arranged the next morning.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend agrees, all right.

Mr. LAKE. It is a matter that I have not looked into and without having the figures of the votes and settlement there I am not prepared to make any particular suggestion in regard to that.

On schedule 'B,' Lumsden.

Mr. SCOTT. I have another suggestion to make with regard to Lumsden. There should be a slight change made here which affects Lumsden, Moosejaw and Batoche, on account of a lake, Last Mountain lake, through which the boundary runs, leaving on the east side of the lake, cut off from Lumsden, about a dozen or perhaps twenty or even forty people living in there separated by the lake from the district in which they are placed by the present boundary and cut off from the neighbours with whom they would naturally vote.

Mr. LAKE. I think there would be no objection to that.

On schedule 'B,' Moosejaw.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have a memo. referring to a new district of Moosejaw city. Are you making such a division or are you simply making a change in the boundaries of Moosejaw?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think there is a change in the boundaries of Moosejaw; it is simply taking out the city of Moosejaw from the constituency of Moosejaw. I suggest that we suspend the consideration of the schedule until the draft suggested by my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) be completed. We will pass to section 13.

Section 12 allowed to stand.

On section 15, law courts and officers continued.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 15:

15. Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all laws and all orders and regulations made thereunder, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all commissions, powers, authorities and functions and all officers and functionaries, judicial, administrative and ministerial, existing immediately before the coming into force of this Act in the territory hereby established as the province of Saskatchewan, shall continue in the said province as if this Act and the Alberta Act had not been passed; subject, nevertheless, except with respect to such as are enacted by or existing under Acts of the parliament of Great Britain or of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to be repealed, abolished or altered by the parliament of Canada, or by the legislature of the said province, according to the authority of the parliament or of the said legislature under this Act: provided that all powers, authorities and functions which under any law, order or regulation were, before the coming into force of this Act, vested in or exercisable by any public officer or functionary of the Northwest Territories shall be vested in and exercisable in and for the said province by like public officers and functionaries of the said province when appointed by competent authority.

2. The legislature of the province may, for all purposes affecting or extending to the said province, abolish the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories, and the offices, both judicial and ministerial, thereof, and the jurisdiction, powers and authority belonging or incident to the said court.

3. All societies or associations incorporated by or under the authority of the legislature of the Northwest Territories existing at the time of the coming into force of this Act which include within their objects the regulation of the practice of, or the right to practice, any profession or trade in the Northwest Territories, such as the legal or the medical profession, dentistry, pharmaceutical chemistry and the like, shall continue, subject, however, to be dissolved and abolished by order of the Governor in Council, and each of such societies shall have power to arrange for and effect the payment of its debts and liabilities, and the division, disposition or transfer of its property.

4. Every joint-stock company lawfully incorporated by or under the authority of any ordinance of the Northwest Territories shall be subject to the legislative authority of the province of Saskatchewan if—

(a) the head office or the registered office of such company is at the time of the coming into force of this Act situate in the province of Saskatchewan ; and

(b) the powers and objects of such company are such as might be conferred by the legislature of the said province and not expressly authorized to be executed in any part of the Northwest Territories beyond the limits of the said province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN : I understand that this is exactly in the form in which we had it in the Alberta Bill ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 16:—legislation respecting education—separate schools.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 16 :

Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with the substitution for paragraph (1) of the said section 93, of the following paragraph :

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

2. In the appropriation by the legislature or distribution by the government of the province of any moneys for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the said chapter 29, or any Act passed in amendment thereof or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in the said chapter 29.

3. Where the expression 'by law' is employed in paragraph 3 of the said section 93, it shall be held to mean the law as set out in the said chapters 29 and 30 ; and where the expression 'at the union,' is employed in the said paragraph 3, it shall be held to mean the date at which this Act comes into force.

Mr. BOURASSA moved in amendment that :

The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if, at the date upon which this Act comes into force, the territory comprised therein were already a province, the expression 'the union' in the said section being taken to mean the said date.

2. In the appropriation by the legislature of public moneys in aid of education, or in the distribution by the government of the province of any moneys arising from the school fund established by the Dominion Lands Act, there shall be no discrimination against the schools of any kind organized according to law.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN moved in amendment that :

That section 16 be struck out, and the following substituted therefor :

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

16. The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province in so far as the same are applicable under the terms thereof.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Fitzpatrick) agreed to.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 18 :—interest to be paid to province on a certain sum.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 18 :

Inasmuch as the said province is not in debt, it shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada, by half-yearly payments in advance, an annual sum of four hundred and five thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars, being the equivalent of interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the sum of eight million one hundred and seven thousand five hundred dollars.

Motion agreed to.

On section 19 :—compensation to province for public lands.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 19 :

19. Inasmuch as the said province will not have the public lands as a source of revenue, there shall be paid by Canada to the province by half-yearly payments in advance, an annual sum based upon the population of the province as from time to time ascertained by the quinquennial census thereof, as follows :

The population of the said province being assumed to be at present two hundred and fifty thousand, the sum payable until such population reaches four hundred thousand, shall be three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars ;

Thereafter, until such population reaches eight hundred thousand, the sum payable shall be five hundred and sixty-two thousand five hundred dollars ;

Thereafter, until such population reaches one million two hundred thousand, the sum payable shall be seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars ;

And thereafter the sum payable shall be one million one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

2. As an additional allowance in lieu of public lands, there shall be paid by Canada to the province annually by half-yearly payments in advance, for five years from the time this Act comes into force, to provide for the construction of necessary public buildings, the sum of ninety-three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Motion agreed to.

On section 20, lands vested in the Crown.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that the following be substituted for section 20 :

20. All Crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto shall continue to be vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada, subject to the provisions of any Act of the parliament of Canada with respect to road allowances and roads or trails as in force on the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and five, which shall apply to the said province with the substitution therein of the said province for the Northwest Territories.

Mr. LAKE moved in amendment:

That section 20 be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

All lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto situate or arising within the limits of the province and now vested in the Crown, and all sums due or payable in respect of the same shall belong to the province subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof and to any interest other than that of the province in the same except those portions thereof now used or occupied for the public works, the public buildings or otherwise for the public service of Canada which are more fully set forth and enumerated in schedule 'C' to this Act, and which shall continue to be the property of Canada.

Amendment (Mr. Lake) negatived, on division.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On the preamble,

Mr. BARKER. I have an amendment to move similar to that which I moved in regard to the other Bill. I have added two clauses referring to Rupert's Land but otherwise the amendment is the same. I beg to move:

That the preamble be struck out, and that the following preamble be substituted therefor:

Whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1867, being chapter 3 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the session thereof held in the thirtieth year of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, it was, among other things, enacted that it should be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, on an address from the Houses of parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territory into the union on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the addresses expressed and as the Queen should think fit to approve, subject to the provisions of the said Act; and that the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf should have effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

And whereas in and by the Rupert's Land Act, 1868, of the parliament of the United Kingdom it was, among other things, enacted that it should be competent to Her Majesty, by Order or Orders in Council, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, on address from the Houses of the parliament of Canada, to declare that Rupert's Land should from a date to be therein mentioned be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada.

And whereas, pursuant to such powers and authority, and to such addresses, by and with the advice aforesaid, the Queen by Order in Council on the 23rd day of June, 1870, did order and declare that from and after the 15th day of July, 1870, the said territory should be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the terms and conditions set forth in schedule 'A' to the said Order in Council, and that the parliament of Canada should from the said date of admission have full power and authority to legislate for the future welfare and good government of the said territory; and it was thereby further ordered that, without prejudice to any obligations arising from an approved report therein recited, Rupert's Land should from and after the said 15th of July, 1870, be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the terms and conditions in that behalf in the said Order in Council also set forth.

And whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1871, being chapter 28 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the session thereof held in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth years of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, it is enacted that the parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provisions for the constitution and administration of any such province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province and for its representation in the said parliament of Canada;

And whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1886, being chapter 35 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the session thereof held in the forty-ninth and fiftieth years of the reign of Her said Majesty, the parliament of Canada was empowered to make provision for the representation in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, of any territories which for the time being form part of the Dominion of Canada but are not included in any province thereof; and it was thereby also enacted that the said Act, and the British North America Act, 1867, and the British North America Act, 1871, shall be construed together.

And whereas that part of the said land and territory hereinafter described has not been included in any province of the Dominion and has heretofore been provisionally governed by and pursuant to legislation of the parliament of Canada.

And whereas it is expedient to establish as a province that part of the said land and territory hereinafter described, and to make provision for the constitution and administration of such province and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government thereof and for its representation in the parliament of Canada.

Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Amendment (Mr. Barker) negatived on division.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported as amended, and amendments read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that it would be well to have both of these Bills reprinted. They are amended so much from what they originally were, and I think it is important to understand what the amendments are.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My intention was to take up these Bills to-morrow for the third reading. The amendments are very few and the only important ones are well known. In the meantime if I can have them printed by to-morrow I shall endeavour to do so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend will find almost all of the amendments in the reprint of the first Bill.

THE BUDGET SPEECH.

Mr. FIELDING. If the Bills respecting the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are disposed of to-morrow, I hope to present the budget statement on Thursday.

THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved the second reading of Bill (No. 160) with respect to the Northwest Territories.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a Bill dealing with the powers of the Territories, and I think it would be well to have the explanation before we go into committee on it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill is intended to provide for the government of that part of the Northwest Territories which is not included in the two provinces, that is to say, all that part of Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territory which is not included in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the district of Keewatin and the Yukon Territory, and it provides for it by continuing all the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act which are already in existence and which are already applicable to these Territories.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that you repealed that clause of the Northwest Territories Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Northwest Terriories Act is still in force with respect to the two new provinces, subject to be dealt with by them as they deem best, except so far as there are constitutional restrictions placed upon the powers of the new provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. What law would apply, to the Territories now ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The law that has been in existence since 1875 without any change.

Mr. LENNOX. Whatever state of law applied to the Territories in 1875, now made into provinces, the same state of law would apply to the Territories we are now dealing with.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will be continued on.

Mr. LENNOX. The same law as governed the two new provinces down to 1875 will now govern the Territories. Therefore by passing this Act we will be giving our sanction to the continuance to that state of law. We are affirming the state of law said to exist in these Territories at present.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would not like to put it that way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. LENNOX. We are re-enacting in a certain sense and giving our legislative sanction to whatever state of law exists in the Territories at present. The result would be that in giving our sanction to the existing state of the school laws there, whether those laws be good or bad, we may be confronted in the future with the same unfortunate condition as we had to face this session. When we come to establish this remaining portion of the Territories into a province, we may be met with the same argument on the school question as we were met with this session and be told that we are bound by what happened years before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice inadvertently misstated a little the condition of affairs. The Bill, as originally drafted, contemplated the repeal of the Northwest Territories Act. That was abandoned afterwards. The position now is that that Act is left exactly as it is but these provinces are withdrawn from its operation to a certain extent. Any provision of the Act particularly applicable to a new province remains in force until repealed by a provincial legislature, so far as it has jurisdiction, or by the Dominion parliament, in so far as its jurisdiction extends. The Northwest Territories Act, as a statute, remains, and what is intended by the Bill is to make certain supplementary provisions which the government believe to be necessary, in view of the fact that a very large portion of the Territories is about to be established into provinces. The Northwest Territories Act is really not repealed.

Mr. SPROULE. In what position will the schools be in the future ? Will there be any authority to amend this law in any direction after we dispose of it here ? This Territory is outside the two new provinces. There is no council outside the two new provinces. What authority would there be which could amend the Northwest Territories Act in any direction ?

Mr. FITZPATRIC.K The parliament of Canada has the absolute control of the Northwest Territories Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Northwest Territories Act will stand subject to be amended or repealed by this parliament at any time. It will be open to us at any time to deal with it in any way we see fit.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 3, delimitation of the Territories.

The Northwest Territories shall hereafter comprise the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territory, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the district of Keewatin and the Yukon Territory, together with all British territories and possessions in North America and all islands adjacent to any such territories or possessions except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These are all embraced in the Dominion ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are taking in a part of territory about which there may be some doubt—the part, lying between the height of land in Ungava and the Labrador coast. It would appear at first sight as if Rupert's Land included all the territory watered by the rivers that run from the height of land into the Hudson bay, but between the height of land in Ungava and the Labrador coast there is a small strip of territory which is apparently no man's land at present.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any danger of this expression taking in all the British West India Islands ?

Mr. FIELDING. If they are in North America.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The section says 'adjacent to.' I think there is a piece of British territory on the mainland in Central America.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman refers to British Guiana ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No; near Honduras, on the mainland of Central America. I confess I do not know the names of all the British West Indies.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As far as a declaration of this parliament can affect it, we might bring it in ; but I think a declaration of this sort would be exceedingly useful to us, because there are islands in the north that belong to Canada, and already two foreign states have entered into possession of a portion of our territory. In order to make my position clear, I may say that this is taken from the Order in Council which was passed July 1st, 1880—it is an adaptation of that description.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that covered by the Northwest Territories Act, or is it something new ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is covered by the Northwest Territories Act, except a little piece between Ungava and the Labrador coast.

Mr. BERGERON. Would it not be better to avoid a description by saying that the Northwest Territories Act is withdrawn so far as the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta are concerned ? If that is done, it will remain just as it is for the rest.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is intended to adapt a description of this country contained in an Order in Council passed by the Imperial authorities. If we take the suggestion of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), I do not think there need be any discussion about it.

Mr. BERGERON. There would be no discussion on my part—the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) may be sure of that. But he has heard some discussion, and that kind of thing would be avoided if he would simply withdraw the Northwest Territories Act so far as it relates to Saskatchewan and Alberta, leaving it to apply to the rest.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am satisfied with it as it is.

On section 4—commissioner.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose this is a reversion to what was the original form of government of the Northwest Territories ? Does the hon. minister follow the exact language ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It might be possible to have a commissioner appointed who is not in the Territories. It might be possible to have a commissioner with his headquarters here. There would be no reason why the Minister of the Interior should not be commissioner of all these Territories, in view of the fact that they extend over such an immense area.

On section 5—council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it intended in the immediate future to act upon that, or is it a power that——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is a power that is taken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No immediate necessity to exercise it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No immediate necessity.

On section 7—disallowance of ordinances.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the same law that relates to the Council of the Yukon Territory ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Exactly ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would not say that it is exactly the same language, but it is the same thing. It is the law applicable to all these territories originally before they had power of legislation. It refers to the power which the Governor in Council exercises with regard to disallowance. A statute of a province goes into effect unless disallowed within a certain time. But in the Yukon and other territories ordinances come into effect after they have been submitted to the Governor in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. I was referring to the previous section—No. 6, ordinances by the Commissioner in Council. There appears to be a difference between the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in this respect.

We have the Northwest Territories Act, which provided that no matter what authority was governing the country they shall provide a certain system of education. In the Yukon there seems to be no such provision whatever, but the Yukon Council goes on and provides a system of education similar to what they have in the Territories. I asked on one occasion before, by what authority this was done. I would ask again is it under such a clause as this clause 6 that this has been done in the Yukon Territory ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under section 6 they would have authority to legislate only on those matters, jurisdiction over which is assigned to them by the Governor in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not find any evidence that jurisdiction has been given by the Governor in Council with reference to the Yukon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend knows more about the Yukon than I do.

Mr. SPROULE. I tried to look it up, but could not find it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I could get at it if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) wants it.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to be informed as to the matter during the discussion of these Bills, because it seemed to me that there was no authority for these ordinances to establish an educational system passed in the Yukon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will refer to section 6 of the Yukon Territory Act, he will find that this is practically a re-enactment of it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is why I asked the question. This section 6 of the Yukon Territory Act says :

> The Commissioner in Council shall have the same powers to make ordinances for the government of the territory as are at the date of this Act possessed by the Lieutenant Governor of the Northwest Territories, acting by and with the advice and consent of the legislative assembly thereof, to make ordinances for the government of the Northwest Territories, except as such powers may be limited by order of the Governor in Council.

So far as I can find, no instructions have been issued to them, either to establish this educational system or not to establish it, yet they have established it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will have that looked into.

On section 8—Supreme Court disestablished—stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the law as we had it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a reversion of the old system ?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. This provides for the disestablishment of the Supreme Court in this territory. There has also been, up to this time a territorial assembly of the Northwest, which met at Regina and whose authority extended over these Territories.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not to all—only to Mackenzie.

Mr. LENNOX. If it is necessary to disestablish the Supreme Court it is equally necessary to say that the legislative assembly shall no longer continue.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Act of 1888, section 2, provides that the jurisdiction of the legislative assembly shall be restricted to the electoral districts and the electoral districts are not to continue.

Mr. LENNOX. Are all the electoral districts comprised within the two provinces ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And more, Athabaska.

On section 14,

Mr. SPROULE. The wording of that section would seem to imply that the provinces were insolvent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are some assets that have to be distributed, and I thought instead of having an involved scheme such as that employed with respect to the old provinces of Canada, as these Territories are not quite so pretentious in their belongings we would appoint a liquidator to distribute the assets between them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I may say that I did this myself and I am open to receive any suggestions that may be made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not call him a 'provisional treasurer.' ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All right.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would suggest that a time limit should be placed so as not to have it continue for 30 or 40 years.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that no lawyer should be allowed to touch it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You might do that in order that it may be badly done.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest the word 'adjuster.'

Mr. HENDERSON. Would not the provinces have power to appoint arbitrators or commissioners ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, this officer will have the power to distribute ; we want to avoid what occurred in the case of Ontario and Quebec. I think the word 'liquidator' will serve as well as any. I move:

That the word 'provisional' in the third line of subsection 1 and in the first line of subsection 2 be struck out.

Mr. MONK. Had you not better fix the salary ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I really intended to take an official from the Northwest Territories who is familiar with that work and has a large amount of experience.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 15—commencement of Act—

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved :

That the word 'July' in first line be struck out, and that the word 'September' be substituted.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 159) to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act—Mr. Fitzpatrick—was read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 156) to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2—section 30 amended ; posting of lists ; notice by enumerator.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to suggest an amendment to that. The third subsection which has been read provides that the enumerator shall put up a written notice stating that he will attend, but it does not go on and impose upon him an obligation to attend. Perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has an amendment in that regard.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, I have a general amendment imposing penalties all around.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would move in amendment :

That section 2 be amended by adding to subsection 3 at the end thereof the words 'and the enumerator shall attend for that purpose at the time and place so designated for at least two consecutive hours on each of the said eight days.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All right.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the government propose to provide for additional remuneration to the enumerators ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why ?

Mr. SCOTT. For this additional duty which will tie them up for two hours for eight days.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the elector has the right to go to him at any time during that period the least we can expect is that the enumerator, who is our officer, shall be in attendance at the place appointed.

Mr. SCOTT. There is not a very heavy remuneration provided in any case for the enumerators.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And worse than that when they earn it they do not always get it.

Mr. SCOTT. That is another point. In many cases the Auditor General has interposed objections to their getting that which they ought to have under the existing law. I venture to say that the average enumerator has not been necessarily obliged in the full performance of his duty to remain tied up for sixteen hours for the purpose of providing these certificates.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is fair, I think, that they should be paid.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is not the remuneration fixed by Order in Council so that it can be dealt with at any time ?

Mr. SCOTT. I am not certain, but I think there is a schedule provided in the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If there is a schedule provided in the Act, I think it should be taken into consideration.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The remuneration is fixed by Order in Council.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, well. I think they should have special remuneration for this.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg to move that after the word 'certificates' in subclause A, the following words be added :

For use in any one polling subdivision.

This is evidently the intention of the clause, and these words have been apparently omitted.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 5.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg to move that the following be added as section 6 :

That Bill (No. 156) be amended by adding the following as section 6 of the Bill :

The said Act is amended by inserting the following as section 8½ thereof :

8½. Every person employed or acting at any time during an election for an electoral district as agent for or on behalf of any candidate in such election in the management or conduct of such election, or in the canvass for votes, or in the organization of the contest for such election, or otherwise in the promotion of a candidate's election, who shall act in such electoral district for such election as deputy returning officer, election clerk, poll clerk or in other public official capacity, is guilty of a misdemeanour.

I am not personally familiar with the facts, but I am informed it has been the practice in the Northwest that men who are in charge of the election campaign for a candidate are selected to act as deputy returning officers or otherwise in an official capacity as officers of this parliament It is obviously not desirable in the public interest that such should be the case. A servant of parliament should be an impartial officer and should not engage actively in the management of a campaign for one candidate or another. I submit the amendment for the consideration of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I can see no reason why we should make that principle applicable exclusively to the Northwest Territories. If it is adopted at all it ought to be a law of general application.

Mr. BARKER. Still it might go into this Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It seems to me it had better be applied to all the elections throughout the Dominion; it is not a bad principle by any means.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think so, too, but will it not be taking a step in the right direction if you insert it in this Act? I also bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice the following amendment:

That Bill (No. 156) be amended by adding the following as section 7 thereof:

Any person being at the time employed in the service of the Dominion of Canada, or in the service of any province or territory of such Dominion, who shall during an election for an electoral district solicit any other person to vote for or to vote against any candidate in such election, or who shall in such election act as agent or otherwise for or on behalf of any candidate, or in the promotion of his election, or in the management, conduct or organization thereof, or in the canvass for votes, is guilty of an unlawful act and shall also forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor with costs.

As I understand the conditions in the Northwest Territories it is most necessary to embody the principle of this amendment in the law. The policy has been laid down by this government that officers of the government paid by the people of this country shall not be actively employed either for or against any candidate at an election. They have the right to exercise their franchise, but their public duties are supposed to take up their whole time, and as the Prime Minister very well put in 1897, if any public officer sees fit to actively engage in political work the government will give him his whole time for that purpose. That is a principle which has not been acted upon by the government, and especially so in the Northwest Territories, where I am informed the officers of the government, especially the officers of the Department of the Interior, have in the most wholesale and unblushing manner actively engaged in the work of canvassing in the interests of government candidates. It is not desirable that that should be continued, and I do not know any better way of stopping it than by legislation of this kind. I am content to accept such legislation for the whole Dominion of Canada, but as the conditions in the Northwest Territories are, I am told, worse than elsewhere in this respect, and as we have now this Bill before us, I bring the amendment to the attention of the government in the hope that they will adopt it as well as the other amendment I have proposed. I do not know that the wording of these amendments is drafted in exactly the best shape that could be devised. It is not so much the exact language as the principle which I am asking the government to accept.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not a word to say by way of comment on the suggested amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition; but he has again to-night, as has very often been done, not only in this House, but in the newspaper press, thrown out insinuations against the civil service of the Northwest Territories, and I am going to ask the committee to listen to a piece of proof with regard to a specific case. This newspaper clipping is a proof that very often upon the flimsiest kind of evidence, these charges are made against members of the civil service. I may remind my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) that a couple of months ago he made a charge in the House on the basis of a two-line item in a newspaper against two members of the civil service who live at Regina, Messrs. Bredt and Porter, one a member of the immigration staff and the other a homestead inspector.

Mr. LAKE. Will the hon. gentleman specify? I am not quite sure to what he refers.

Mr. SCOTT. If I remember rightly, the hon. member, on the basis of a two-line item in a Regina newspaper, raised a discussion on the whole question whether the civil service in the Territories were departing from their proper line of duty.

Mr. LAKE. I am not aware that I made any special charge against these two gentlemen.

Mr. SCOTT. Did not my hon. friend quote from the Regina 'Standard' an item charging Messrs. Bredt and Porter with going into the Edmonton district in May and taking part in the election?

Mr. LAKE. I quoted an article and asked if it was true and the hon. gentleman said it was not.

Mr. SCOTT. I will give the committee further proof by quoting a short article from the Regina 'Standard' on June 12. It is headed, 'A Correction,' and is as follows:

We regret to find that an item which appeared in this paper by error, and which was afterwards rectified, should have been made the subject of discussion in the House of Commons. The return of Messrs. P. M. Bredt and S. P. Porter from an official trip along the boundary districts was noted in this paper a day or two after it had been erroneously stated that they had gone to Edmonton.

It may not be unfitting to say right here that we are strongly opposed to official interference in elections. We felt the full brunt of it in 1896, when the editor of this paper was a candidate, and the whole official horde of the dominant party of that day was let loose. It was not a matter of choice with some of them. To go out and fight for their masters was a command which no official of that regime dared disobey.

We believe Messrs. Bredt and Porter took some part in the last general election, but both resigned before entering upon the campaign. That they have been re-appointed speaks well for their efficiency in either capacity.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Occasionally that form was gone through, of having them resign thirty days before an election, and having them re-appointed a few days after the election.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend knows that there is a very high precedent for that in the case of Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking of precedents. I am talking of the form gone through ; but I am told that that form is not always gone through, but that a great many officials take part in elections openly.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask the hon. gentleman to take with a grain of salt such statements with regard to Northwest officials.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Does the hon. gentleman pretend for one moment that Mr. P. M. Bredt was not actively engaged prior to the last election assisting himself ?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. P. M. Bredt some time before the election resigned his position and then took part in the election.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Was he not present at the meeting at Moosejaw at which the hon. gentleman was nominated, and was he not an official then ?

Mr. SCOTT. A great many things occurred at that meeting that I would not like after so many months to have to undergo cross-examination on.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I have the evidence here to show that he attended the meeting that nominated the hon. gentleman and made a speech on his behalf. When the hon. gentleman talks about statements being made to the hon. leader of the opposition that are not borne out by the facts, we are prepared to discuss these statements with him at any time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Have a special session for that purpose.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Yes. I do not propose to go into the matter now, but I will deal with it at a more opportune time. The hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Bredt is not the only official in his riding who actively engaged in his behalf prior to the last election. Mr. Bredt has since been appointed to a position at an increased salary, doubtless due to the assistance he gave to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He is working at the same salary he had before his resignation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That shows that the resignation did not amount to anything. The salary went on after a certain day.

Mr. SCOTT. It did not go on while he was taking part in the election.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I may say that before officials are called upon in future to take part in a general election there will be a law applicable to the new provinces similar to what is applicable to all the other provinces of the Dominion. It will be scarcely possible to single these new provinces out for special treatment, and I apprehend that if there is any necessity for the provisions which the hon. leader of the opposition has referred to, they will be dealt with in a general Act.

Amendment of Mr. R. L. Borden negatived on division.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I desire to move that the Bill be amended by adding the following as sections 6 and 7 :

6. Every officer or clerk who is guilty of any wilful misfeasance or any wilful act or omission in violation of the said Act or any amendment thereof shall forfeit to any person aggrieved by such misfeasance, act or omission, a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, in addition to the amount of all actual damages thereby occasioned to such person.

7. Every officer or clerk who refuses or neglects to perform any of the obligations or formalities required of him by the said Act or any amendment thereof shall, for each such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor.

Amendment agreed to ; Bill reported as amended, and amendments read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

CENSUS AND STATISTICS.

Mr. FISHER moved second reading of Bill (No. 163) to amend the Census and Statistics Act. He said : This is simply an Act to substitute the names of the new provinces for the name of the Northwest Territories in the Census and Statistics Act, which were passed in the early part of this session.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

NORTHWEST IRRIGATION ACT.

Bill (No. 161) to amend the Northwest Irrigation Act, 1898—Mr. Oliver—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. OLIVER. The Act provides that a certain officer designated shall be our officer for administering the Irrigation Act. He is at present an officer of the local government at Regina. We utilize him for that purpose, and pay part of his salary. As the province of Saskatchewan contains very little area requiring irrigation, it would not be suitable to have an officer of the Saskatchewan administration act for us in administering the Act, and this is merely to provide that we may apponit an officer resident in Alberta.

Bill reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.40 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 189) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900. He said: The purport of the Bill is to add two sections, 118a and 118b, to the Act. Section 118 of the Dominion Elections Act provides :

> Any person who, before or during an election knowingly publishes a false statement of the withdrawal of a candidate at such election, for the purpose of promoting or procuring the election of another candidate, is guilty of an unlawful act, and shall also forfeit the sum of one hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor, with costs.

The section which I propose to add as 118a is as follows :

> Any person who, before or during an election knowingly prints, publishes, posts, circulates, or distributes any written or printed statement falsely purporting to be made by or on behalf of a candidate at such election, for the purpose of prejudicially affecting the election of such candidate, or of promoting or procuring the election of another candidate, is guilty of an unlawful act, and shall also forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor, with costs.

Mr. FISHER.

The object of this is to prevent an offence which is of a very old character, but one which is sometimes particularly odious—the trick of sending out circulars and documents purporting to be issued on behalf of the candidate when, as a matter of fact, they are sent abroad for the purpose of injuring the prospects of his election. In a recent election in the province of Ontario charges and counter-charges have been made that this has been done. Those who are associated with the political party to which I belong claim that circulars of this kind purporting to emanate from the Conservative candidate were sent abroad, with which the Conservative candidate and his committees had no connection whatever. Whatever may be the truth of these charges I do not know. It is desirable, however, it seems to me, that some provision of this kind, which is quite in line with section 118 of the Act, should be placed on the statute-book ; and, although it is late in the session, I bring this to the attention of the government in the hope that they may see fit to adopt either this section or some section substantially the same, and have it placed on the revised statutes of Canada in the revision that is now being made. The other clause which I am moving, section 118b, is taken almost verbatim from a provision in the English Elections Act. It is as follows :

> Every bill, circular, placard, or poster, having reference to an election shall bear on the face thereof the name and address of the printer and publisher thereof, and any person printing, publishing, posting, circulating or distributing, or causing to be printed, published, posted, circulated, or distributed, any such bill, circular, placard or poster as aforesaid which fails to bear upon the face thereof the name and address of the printer and publisher is guilty of an unlawful act, and shall also forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor, with costs.

The object of this is not only to carry out the intent of section 118a, to which I have just referred, but it is also for the purpose of having some responsible person to whom recourse can be had in case false and libellous statements are published and circulated about any candidate at any election. It is desirable, I think, to follow the British practice in that regard, and to prohibit the circulation of any bills, circulars, and so forth, unless they bear upon them the imprint of the person who has printed them, and who, in the first place, at least would be responsible. Section 2 of the Bill which I am introducing is simply a verbal amendment to section 119, which is made necessary by the insertion of section 118a and section 118b.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIRCULATION OF FOREIGN COIN.

Mr. BERGERON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to ask the Minister of Finance if he intends to do anything to prevent the circulation of foreign coin in this country? On a previous occasion I understood the hon. gentleman to say he intended doing something.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be able to make an announcement in the budget speech.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman promised to give me some information to-day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have conferred with the Minister of Justice, and we are dealing with the matter. We shall select somebody to carry on the investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that go so far as granting the request I made?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say that. I will tell my hon. friend to-morrow when the Minister of Justice advises me.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved third reading of Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Before this Bill finally passes, I wish to refer at some length to a very important matter of detail, namely, the Canadian Pacific Railway exemption. In committee upon this Bill I proposed an amendment to section 23 and my amendment was as follows:

> Provided that the foregoing shall not prejudice the right of the parliament of Canada, by expropriation or otherwise, to obtain the relinquishment by the said company of the company's rights under section 16 of the contract aforesaid.

I am sorry to say that in Committee of the Whole my proposition received very scant attention. The failure of hon. gentlemen opposite to give more attention to it would have been a matter of surprise if any one really thought that these hon. gentlemen were sincere in the talk they have been indulging in for the past five months with regard to provincial autonomy. On the question of education, they have been disturbing the whole of Canada with the exception of the Northwest Territories. They failed, however, to disturb the people of the Northwest Territories on the matter of education and upon the subject they have been seeking to create a disturbance about practically nothing. As a representative of the Territories I tell them here and now that the Bills creating the new provinces are granting to these new provinces, in relation to education, all the freedom they desire. The Bills leave the provinces free to do exactly as they please in that matter. The Bills leave them free to retain their existing admirable school system, and I think the House and country have been given the most ample proof that what the people of the Territories desire to retain and maintain their present school system. But if any one is seriously concerned in the question of provincial rights he should devote his attention rather to section 23, which concerns the matter of tax exemptions than to section 16 regarding education. In the matter of tax exemptions involved in section 23, the provinces are not left free. If the school districts and municipalities and legislatures were left free to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway, they would without doubt, use that freedom. The failure of members on this side and members of the government to support my proposed amendment was to me a matter both of surprise and regret. In any case I had the right to expect from the government at least a moment's consideration of the proposal and a statement of their reasons for rejecting it, if any good reasons exist. The extremely casual way in which my amendment was rejected in committee may have been due to my own failure to make sufficiently plain my position in the matter, the intrinsic importance of the subject, and why the amendment ought to be adopted. If I fail to make these points plain now, it will not be my fault. To make my meaning plain, I must refer to the autonomy question in a general way. Prior to my first coming to this House in 1901, I was an advocate of immediate autonomy for the Territories. In 1901 and 1902, I urged my opinions in that direction strongly in this House. In March, 1903, the Manitoba courts gave a judgment on certain test tax cases, to which I shall refer later. That judgment was such as to lead me to revise my views as to the desirability of the Territories immediately obtaining autonomy. The Ottawa correspondent of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' obtained interviews upon that judgment from most of the Northwest members. In my statement to that correspondent, I spoke as follows:

> As a Northwest citizen I was disappointed last year when autonomy was not granted, but to-day I am exceedingly thankful that parliament then found it inexpedient to grant our demand. We will now wish for no constitutional change until judgment on the contention raised by Mr. Howell has been obtained from the Privy Council, and if the judgment of the Manitoba court is upheld, then the Northwest before becoming a province will have a very important arrangement to be arrived at with the Canadian Pacific Railway relating to this matter of exemption from taxation.

Towards the end of the 1903 session, the House was called upon to vote on a motion presented by the leader of the opposition relating to autonomy, and one of the reasons I advanced for voting against that motion I stated as follows, as will be seen on referring to the 'Hansard' of 1903, page 13931:

> Let me say, in conclusion, that in face of the position of this Canadian Pacific Railway tax matter, in view of the millions of acres of the land that are involved, of the millions of value in railway property of the company that are involved, it appears to me that the people of the Northwest would be simply crazy at present to accept autonomy unless driven to it as a last resort—and we are not driven to the last resort this year, because our immediate financial needs are fairly well met; the lack of borrowing power remedied by the capital advance method; and little room for complaint is left us as regards railways. Such being the case, I certainly approve of delay until all doubts of the Canadian Pacific Railway tax question is removed. I hope this doubt will not exist very long. I hope the case will soon be settled by a judgment of the Privy Council. Possibly it may be too much to hope that it may be settled before next year, because the law courts move slowly. But the position I take is that the government should obtain from the Privy Council a final decision upon this Canadian Pacific Railway tax exemption, and that as soon as it is obtained the people of the Northwest should be granted provincial autonomy.

This view thus expressed in the newspapers and in the House, I also expressed very distinctly to my electors in West Assiniboia, particularly during the election contest last autumn, and I have every reason to believe that the majority of the electors of West Assiniboia concurred in the view. I declared explicitly in the contest that I should oppose any constitutional change until the tax exemption matter became more clear, and until the people of the Northwest learned definitely that they would not as provinces stand in danger of the burden of that perpetual limitation upon their taxing power which was imposed upon the added portion of the province of Manitoba in 1881. The situation in January last when the autonomy negotiations opened was that no final judgment had been obtained. It is true that, since January, the Supreme Court of Canada has given judgment overturning the Manitoba court's decision, of March, 1903. But, until the case has been carried to the Privy Council and judgment obtained there, the matter cannot be considered as finally settled. I need not repeat to the House that in January last I was opposed to proceeding with the autonomy measures. Now, I shall explain briefly the reason why the Manitoba court judgment led me to revise my view on the question of autonomy. The Northwest test case was that of a school district, the Springdale school district. It was not a case brought by a municipality, nor a case directly raising the question of the powers of the local legislature to levy a tax upon the company. The case was taken for the purpose of obtaining an interpretation of the disputed question of the twenty years' land tax exemption, without reference to the roadway. But the arguments made by the government's counsel, Mr. Howell, of Winnipeg, were such that, if concurred in by the court, as was the case in the Manitoba court, they necessarily applied as well to the feature of the exemptions relating to the roadway. Mr. Howell raised the contention that a tax levied by any body or power within these Territories did not come within the class of taxes from which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were exempted by the contract, these classes of taxes being such as might be levied 'by the Dominion, by any province hereafter established or by any municipality therein, in other words the contention was that, as long as we remained Territories the Canadian Pacific Railway had no right to exemption of taxation in the Northwest, either upon lands or upon roadbed; and that it was not until the Northwest was created a province that any exemption rights became existent. The contention was a new one. Until it was raised by Mr. Howell, no one ever thought of questioning the company's rights to freedom from taxation on the roadway or freedom for at least twenty years on the land. Let me quote from Chief Justice Killam's judgment to show that the judgment meant just what I have stated:

> The case from the Northwest Territories raised another question. Does the exemption apply to the enactments of the legislature of the Northwest Territories or to the taxation by subordinate bodies created by that legislature? . . . . Evidently these words—'taxation by the Dominion'—did not mean taxation by any government or authority in the Dominion having the power of levying taxes. Taxation by a province or by a municipal corporation was recognized as something different from taxation by the Dominion. . . . In my opinion the expression 'taxation by the Dominion' did not, either from the import of the words themselves or by reference to other portions of the clause or the contract, include taxation by the government of the Territories or any body to be established by it, within its then powers.

I repeat that when I became aware of the purport of that judgment I at once made up my mind that the Northwest had better accept no constitutional change until we had ascertained finally whether Chief Justice Killam's view was the right one, because, in my opinion, any loss to be occasioned by delay of two or three years in gaining autonomy, would be light and temporary in comparison with the permanent loss to the province involved in the perpetual inability to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway roadbed. If the Privy Council were to uphold the Manitoba judgment and if it were finally found that the Canadian Pacific Railway must pay taxes as long as we remained Territories, it needs no argument to show that to obtain prior relinquishment by the company of the exemption rights that would otherwise become effective with the erection of provinces would be a comparatively easy task.

I now ask the House to consider the intrinsic merits of this question. There is a railway mileage involved in the two provinces of 750 miles, with six divisional points. Assume that this has a taxable value of $100,000 for each three miles—and it is stocked and bonded for $193,500 for each three miles—and you have a total taxable value of $25,000,000 to-day. A tax of 5 mills on the dollar—which is only ½ of 1 per cent, would amount to $125,000 per annum. But it is not particularly for to-day or for the immediate future that we are concerned. To-day it is the custom at least in the newer parts of the country, to give aid to railways rather than to levy taxation upon them. It is to the future that we have to look. If that property is worth $25,000,000 to-day, it will be worth—everybody will admit—some day, $100,000,000. While it is not our policy to tax railways to-day, yet when more stable conditions come and the country is more fully developed it will be fair that railway properties equally with the other properties shall contribute toward the cost of school, municipal and general government. I say that the loss involved to these two new provinces if they should be subjected to perpetual inability to tax this property is a loss simply beyond calculation. The exemption of the land is the least momentous, because it is only temporary, but it is still serious enough, I will give the House figures showing the land that the company owns at present in the Northwest Territories. The company has earned land grants as follows :

	Acres.
Main line construction..	18,206,986
Souris branch..	1,408,704
Pipestone extension..	200,320
Manitoba and South Western colonization lines	1,396,800
On account of Gr. N. W. Central Ry.	320,000
Total..	21,532,810
Total taken in Manitoba..	2,720,300
Total taken or to be taken in N.W.T.'s	18,812,510

The company has made sales up to date of approximately 10,000,000 acres—for about $33,500,000, I may say—of which as nearly as can be learned upwards of 7,500,000 acres were out of the lands in the two new provinces, leaving roughly 11,300,000 acres still owned by the company in the Northwest Territory, or about 70,500 quarter sections, which if taxed at $10 per quarter section would yield annually $705,000. Now, you may cut my calculation in two, and still have a very large amount. You will still find that by this exemption at this moment you are leaving each province shorn of a resource of a value about equal to what you are going to pay each province in lieu of its public domain. Instead of attempting myself to characterize in fitting language what has been very properly termed the incubus of these exemptions, I am going to ask the House to listen to words far more forcible than any which I could utter, which were spoken in this chamber some twenty-five years ago. They should appeal especially to hon. members on this side of the House. The experience of twenty-five years, the bitter experience of twenty-five years has shown the truth of every one of these words. I shall quote the words of Hon. Edward Blake, spoken in this chamber on December 15th, 1880, and to be found in 'Hansard,' 1880-1, page 97. Mr. Blake was referring to the Canadian Pacific Railway contract and particularly this exemption feature :

> They have perpetual exemption from taxation on their enormous property, a most monstrous provision in my opinion. Why! This monstrosity is not to last merely twenty years, which is to be the period of bondage in other respects, it is to last for ever. No matter how wealthy the company may be, how enormously lucrative, this institution is to be, for all time to come it is to be free from taxation in every place in which this Dominion can free it from taxation, and it is to be free everywhere from Dominion taxation in all the territories both from Dominion and territorial taxation wherever the Dominion can give it freedom and that is through all of the fertile belt at any rate. . . . Then, sir, there is freedom from taxation for the lands for the long period of twenty years, and that term of twenty years is from the time they acquire the lands and, therefore, is for longer than twenty years from now ; it is perhaps on the average twenty-five years—nay, more than that, I am not at all certain that it may not be very easy to arrange to make it longer, because by a convenient arrangement by which they are not to take out the patents until they want to sell they can keep them free from taxation until they want to put them on the market, indefinitely, indeterminately—until it suits them to dispose of them.

As long as the Conservatives were in power these words were perfectly true.

> The hon. gentleman says, perhaps, it does look awkward at first sight. . . . All their lands are exempt from taxation for a generation to come. What a discouragement this is to the settlers on the line of railways, to those who are settled on homesteads and preemptions alternating with these blocks of land which are to be the property of the syndicate. . . . There can be no greater obstacle to the progress of that country by the encouragement of other settlers than that large spaces of unoccupied lands should alternate with settlers' farms. Now add to the difficulty which exists in that respect, which the largeness of that area will enhance, at any rate, in a large degree. the fact that there is no power to impose municipal taxes on 25,000,000 acres of the choicest lands, those nearest to the railway, and you place a bar to progress and render it impossible to overcome the difficulty. You say that the cost of roads and bridges, schools and other municipal taxes are to be imposed on the settlers to enable the worthy syndicate to hold their lands until the reduced labours of those settlers have been sufficient to increase the unoccupied areas in value to induce the millionaires, the holders of the lands in the Northwest, to turn them into money. . . . Talk to me of this thing standing! It will not stand. If you pass this law and if the country of which you speak so glowingly is what you depict it, and if its prospects of settlement are such as you hope they are, I say you are blighting these prospects by passing this law; and if these prospects are measurably realized, notwithstanding the passing of this law, I say the people of that country would be less than men if they suffered such a law to exist.

Again, Mr. Blake, on January 18, said:

Do you want that your hands should be tied, or that they should be free to act as the public interest may require?

Mr. Blake was here referring to the alternative contract which had been offered.

If you want to tie them, take the contract; if you want to keep them free, take the other proposal. The choice is yours, the responsibility of choosing is yours. Choose, then, and choose wisely. The contract frees from taxation the railway, its property, and its stock. That exemption is contrary to the general rule in the United States. A little book which contains the report of Charles Francis Adams and others on the subject of railway taxation in the United States, and elsewhere, summarizes the law upon this subject and makes it to appear that in the whole of the states of the Union there is no instance of general exemption from taxation. There may be one or two isolated cases in particular states of partial and temporary exemption from taxation of particular railways under special circumstances; but the general rule of almost universal application is that there is no exemption in one form or another from taxation. The instances which the hon. Minister of Railways quoted in other places in Minnesota and Wisconsin, are instances of exemption from taxation by one statute and the imposition of taxation by another—a license tax, a tax upon gross receipts, is imposed in lieu of other taxes, and it may be that this is the fairest mode of taxation. Some hon. gentlemen have said that it is of very little consequence, that the road-bed is taxed very lightly in Ontario, that some of our legislatures have declined to tax railway companies at all. But what kind of railway companies were these? They were railways built by private capital, and were not paying interest on their investments. I do not say that a rule of this kind does not apply to a railway that is built at public charge and that is given a monopoly to secure it in obtaining good rates for its traffic. But this is no temporary exemption, it lasts for ever; no matter how bloated this corporation may become, no matter how magnificent may be its network of railways, no matter how blooming its country, no matter how prosperous the towns which are tributary to it, no matter how exaggerated its dividend, for ever and for ever and for ever you free it from Dominion, new provincial and municipal taxation. In considering that, you have to look at the general result of taxation. Some of the United States railways you find paying a tax of $300 or $400 per annum, and $600 or $800 per annum is paid as taxes by the English railways. You find, therefore, that the possibilities of railway taxation are very great. You find the Illinois Central Railway paying almost the whole expenses of the government of that state, and you find the people so nervous lest the legislature should be corrupted and should dispense with that, that they have actually put a clause in the constitution providing that the taxation of the Illinois Central Railway shall not be modified by the legislature, but shall be referred to the general voice of the people. But you do not keep your hands free, you tie them, and you say for all time we will never charge this railway company any taxation upon its property, its stock, or its capital. I say that I can well conceive a time when a tax on the gross receipts of railways might be a very satisfactory tax and a very satisfactory source of revenue to this Dominion. A tax for transportation would apparently be a very equal taxation, and if the necessity arose of adding to the revenue, it is quite possible that we might wish to avail ourselves of such a tax. There is another point in which this exemption is objectionable. It places this company in the position of a monopoly by itself, because it places at a disadvantage all competitors who are to raise the funds themselves to build their railways. The contract requires perpetual exemption, the other offer does not demand any exemption at all. Choose! The choice is yours! Take the perpetual exemption in the contract or take the liability to taxation in the offer. Yours is the choice; for it you will be held responsible. Then the contract provides that the land grant shall be exempt from taxation for twenty years, unless sold or occupied from the date of the grant. The money gain to the company is enormous, there can be no doubt about that. There can be no doubt but that the burdens which this company are freed from are most serious. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said so. They have said they could not use this land grant otherwise, that nobody would buy if they supposed the syndicate was to be subjected to the same taxes as the rest of the world. They get the choice of land and they are not to pay the same taxes as the rest of the community. Why should they not? Is it because they get a large profit? Because they are getting altogether four prices for building the prairie section, that, therefore, they are to be untaxed and free? Then the indirect loss is still greater by this mode of settlement, by the burdens it imposes on the adjoining settlers for the benefit of the railway company itself, by the imposition of double taxes on those who go in for the benefit of this great corporation. I do not know of anything that will more interfere with the development of the Northwest than this clause of exemption from taxation. Will you free the lands, or will you make them subject to taxation? Will you give the company the benefit of exemption from taxation, or will you let the lands be subject to taxation, and let the progress of the Northwest country be advanced by those lands, like other lands, being subject to taxation? The choice is yours; choose.

Other members of the Liberal party of that date uttered equally strong language upon this feature of the contract. The late Mr. M. C. Cameron, who sat for one of the Hurons, said on January 4, 1881:

We are allowing the company to select the best lands in the whole territory. We exempt them from all taxation, and the immigrants we induce to settle there pay every farthing of provincial and local taxes. This company and all of their property and land, stock and roadway, with all their appurtenances are exempt from taxation for all time to come. We are inviting immigrants to settle our boundless prairies and then tell them they must pay taxes to keep up the provincial and local governments, they must build the roads and construct the bridges, but the poor syndicate must pay nothing—they are altogether exempt from taxation. Every December the tax collector will call on the farmer there, but he dare not call on the syndicate. And so we are building up a gigantic monopoly, we are giving them huge privileges that no company should get; we are doing more than that, we are giving them all these privileges and advantages so that they may be in position to harass and oppress the people we are settling there. . . . I say, sir, that this is no small matter; I say that parliament should not, even if it had the power, deprive the people of that country—formed into provinces as it will be—of the power of exacting from this company taxes upon lands which they will hold for the purpose of making the most of, and thus throw the burden of local improvements on the actual settler. Sir, I never heard a proposition so monstrous as this one; I never heard one justified upon such grounds as have been advanced to support this proposition and no such proposition was ever before submitted to a free parliament.

Mr. John Charlton, on the 27th of January, moved an amendment on behalf of the Liberal opposition as follows:

That the contract respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway exempts perpetually the railway and all stations, &c., from taxation by the Dominion, &c.; that the property of the corporation will be in substance a gift from the public and its exemption from taxation is unjust; it creates an unfair incidence of taxation and gives an undue advantage to the company over other railway companies calculated to prevent the construction of competing lines; and the contract is in this respect objectionable.

In support of that amendment Mr. Charlton said in part:

It is not a principle which can be controverted that for the payment of the expenses necessary to be incurred in the maintenance of law and order all property should bear its equitable and due proportion; that no property whatever should be exempt from payment of its share of the expenses of maintaining law and order. . . . A settler in addition to paying the railway tax must pay a portion of the debt created for the benefit of the railway. The first item is the $31,000,000 incurred in building the portion of the line to be handed over to the company and cost of surveys, that amounts to $7 per head for every man, woman and child in the Dominion; in the next place he must pay a proportion of the taxes for the $25,000,000 to be paid over to the company, which amounts to over $6 per head for every man, woman and child in the Dominion; in other words the amount per capita is over $13 in addition to a fair proportionate share of the ordinary taxes of the country which should be borne by the company. In addition to all this a settler on the alternate blocks is to labour for the benefit not merely of himself but for the benefit of this company who will be enabled by the advantages given them in this contract to withhold their lands from the market as long as they please. For every two blows that he strikes he is to feel that he is striking one blow for a soulless corporation which quietly awaits his efforts, knowing that it has only to wait to realize results to which they do not contribute in the slightest degree.

It is 25 years ago that these words were uttered in this House with rare prophetic insight. I have quoted them here to establish my proposition that section 23 involves a limitation upon provincial autonomy of no trivial character. I trust that I have said enough now to show the House clearly my own position in the matter in its relation to the Autonomy Bills and as well the intrinsic importance of the subject. I propose next to show particularly why I think my amendment should be adopted. Probably it is not necessary for me at this stage to say that I am not proposing repudiation. I am not proposing to take away from the company any of its contract rights. I stand in that regard just as my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) who when referring to this subject some weeks ago said that no right thinking person would propose to deprive this company of any rights which the parliament and people of Canada 25 years ago with their eyes open gave to them. I admit, as any right-thinking person must admit, that the contract must be respected. But I ask, whose was the contract? Was it not a contract made between the Dominion of Canada and the company? The Canadian Pacific Railway was and is a federal undertaking. These exemptions were and are a part of the cost of the undertaking. Then, why shift part of such cost price upon these new provinces more than upon the province of Nova Scotia or any of the other provinces of the Dominion? The new provinces are, without these exemptions, bearing their fair share of the undertaking with the other provinces of Canada. Then, why place them under a double burden? Let me quote a little further from the debates of 1881, when the contract was first before parliament. I will quote from a gentleman whose name is fairly well known and respected throughout the Dominion of Canada, the Hon. George W. Ross, who was a member of this House in 1881. He spoke as follows:

What does it mean? It means that the people of the Northwest as far as the railway company is concerned must tax themselves extra to the extent from which the company is relieved in order to procure such advantages as schools, highways, sidewalks, and other advantages of civilization. . . . There is another grievance to which I must refer and that is when a new province is erected and we come to confer upon it those advantages which it can claim under our confederation we will be bound to consider the exemption from taxation of the lands and property of this company; this will mean that the whole Dominion must be taxed in order to provide a larger subsidy for the maintenance of local institutions of such new province or provinces. We pay Manitoba already 80 cents a head and several other perquisites. If we handed over to Manitoba her wild lands the subsidy to that province from the exchequer would not need to be so large. When we come to form a province in the Northwest and when the people come to find that the public lands are exempt from taxation with all the railway company's property and that the means for maintaining the municipal institutions in that province are closed against them, they will say: If we are going to be erected into a provincial government we must obtain a larger subsidy from the Dominion exchequer because we have not the advantages of taxation which other provinces have.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the Hon. George W. Ross withdrew that and every other statement that he had made opposing the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway in a public speech that he made a few years ago? He said that he had opposed it at every stage, but that he took it all back, that he approved of the bargain and contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, saying that the Canadian Pacific Railway had built up the great Northwest, that without it our country would have been practically nothing, and that he withdrew every statement that he ever made.

Mr. SCOTT. If my hon. friend will have the patience to listen to the whole of the extract from Mr. Ross's speech that I am reading——

Mr. TAYLOR. I heard it in the House when it was made.

Mr. SCOTT——I am certain he will not find a single word of opposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway in it.

Mr. TAYLOR. He opposed it, as Mr. Blake and every other Liberal did.

Mr. SCOTT. I will have to read this again for the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it as read.

Mr. SCOTT. Let the hon. gentleman point out one single word of this extract which means opposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway:

> What does it mean? It means that the people of the Northwest as far as the railway company is concerned must tax themselves extra to the extent from which the company is relieved in order to procure such advantages as schools, highways, and other advantages of civilization. . . . . There is another grievance to which I must refer and that is when a new province is erected and we come to confer upon it those advantages which it can claim under our confederation, we will be bound to consider the exemption from taxation of the lands and property of this company; this will mean that the whole Dominion must be taxed in order to provide a larger subsidy for the maintenance of local institutions of such new province or provinces. We pay Manitoba already 80 cents a head and several other perquisites. If we handed over to Manitoba her wild lands the subsidy to that province from the exchequer would not need to be so large. When we come to form a province in the Northwest and when the people come to find that the public lands are exempt from taxation with all the railway company's property and that the means for maintaining municipal institutions in that province are closed against them they will say: If we are going to be erected into a provincial government we must obtain a larger subsidy from the Dominion exchequer because we have not the advantages of taxation which other provinces have. For instance, if one-quarter of Ontario or Quebec were exempted from taxation, in what position would they be? Evidently in order to maintain prosperity they would have to draw freely from the exchequer of this Dominion and the whole Dominion, from Vancouver's Island to Halifax, will need to be more largely taxed because of the exemption we are now considering under this contract.

Is there a word involving opposition to the building of the railway in that? Not a word. The Liberal party of that day were not opposing the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. On the contrary the Liberal party when in power in the seventies were undertaking the building of that railway. I cannot conceive what my hon. friend is referring to. There is nothing I can find in Mr. Ross's words which involves any opposition to the principle of the undertaking, but the Liberal party of that day as a unit stood in opposition to some of the iniquitous features of this contract and particularly to the one which is going to place a limitation upon the provincial rights of the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan. George W. Ross, twenty-five years ago, when that contract was being debated, recognized and admitted that it was a federal undertaking, the cost of which ought to be borne by the Dominion. When the Dominion makes a payment every province contributes its equal share. If these provinces are left under these particular exemptions you are placing a double burden upon them—they are paying equally with the other provinces the money subsidies and the price of the $37,000,000 worth of completed road that was given the company—they pay almost the whole of the land subsidy—they bear equally with you the loss involved in the exemption from taxation by Dominion—and in addition to their full and equal share of the whole cost and burden, you leave them to bear alone a substantial piece of the cost of this federal undertaking beyond that share which the other provinces are carrying. Is there any fairness in that?

Look at it closely. The $25,000,000 cash subsidy to the company is looked on as a heavy charge to Canada. What is it actually? Three per cent on $25,000,000 is $750,000 a year. If my calculations are correct, the provincial tax exemptions will cost these two provinces easily as much. What then are you doing? You are asking the provinces to bear alone a portion of the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway equal to the item of cost which the whole of Canada bears by its $25,000,000 cash subsidy. I ask again, is there any fairness in that? Mr. Ross saw in 1881, if the exemptions were made an item of the contract, that when provinces were created it would be improper and unjust to leave them saddled with the burden of the exemptions. Mr. Blake in 1881 declared that the people of the Northwest would be less than men if they suffered such a limitation upon their autonomy to exist. In January, 1905, when confronted with the declaration of the government that provinces were to be erected this year, I took the position that if it was intended to leave the provinces under these exemptions I must oppose the measures, in particular view of the possibility that by waiting for the Privy Council judgment on the test cases a comparatively easy way might be found of obtaining relinquishment by the company of the provincial exemption rights. The Prime Minister intimated to me his recognition that these exemptions, both Dominion and provincial, would have to be abrogated in the interests not alone of the provinces but of the Dominion. With that intimation that the provinces need not fear that they would be left under the exemption perpetually I consented to take my part in discussing the autonomy terms and voted for the second reading of the Bills.

Mr. SPROULE. If you had not got that you would be on strike I presume.

Mr. SCOTT. You can have your own opinion about that. The Prime Minister has publicly repeated the assurance which he gave to me. What I ask now is that the government and the House shall concur in that assurance in a tangible way by putting in black and white in these provincial charters the notice of intention to cancel these exemptions,—a notice to all concerned, to the company, to the people of Canada and especially to the people of the new provinces. Is it unnecessary? I say it is no more unnecessary than your section 23. Section 23 does not say that the province cannot tax the Canadian Pacific Railway road or lands. It is not section 23 of these Bills, but section 16 of the contract of 1881 which imposes the limitation. Section 23 merely states that the provinces are subject to that contract—to the degree that the contract is good or bad in legality or constitutionality, weak or strong, doubtful or perfect, to that degree the provinces are bound. If you deem it proper and imperative to thus give notice to the provinces that their autonomy has been invaded by a previous parliament, then I say that it is not only equally proper, but doubly imperative, if there is sincerity behind the assurance given by the Prime Minister, which I do not for a moment question, that you shall give notice at the same time and in the same manner that parliament will in good time remedy that invasion, and that the provinces will not be left for ever under the unfair burden of these exemptions.

I appeal to the Liberal party on the strength of the principle of provincial rights; on the statement I made here in 1901, that entire equality as between the provinces is the only sure guarantee of the permanency of confederation; on the sound doctrine preached in this Chamber 25 years ago by Blake, Cameron, Charlton, Mills, Paterson, Cartwright, Laurier, and other Liberal leaders; and particularly on the declaration made in 1881 by Hon. G. W. Ross, which I have read. I appeal to the Conservative party in this matter because the difficulty is of their creation. It is not these Bills, it is not section 23 which limits provincial autonomy, but section 16 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. Whatever substantial or serious lack of autonomy there is against which these provinces will have to complain, is not the deed of the Liberal party, but of the Conservative party. Let me tell my hon. friends opposite that they need not think so far as the people of the Northwest Territories are concerned, that by raising a school question dust or a land question dust they are going to hide from the people of these Territories the knowledge of the fact that it is the Conservative party that is responsible for the only material limitation upon their autonomy which is being granted by these Bills to the new provinces. In every other respect where there is a departure from the strict plan of confederation it is a departure with which the people of the new provinces are entirely content. There is a departure with respect to representation; provision is made in these Bills for redistribution upon a census to be taken midway between two decennial censuses and there never has been any such provision made for any other province. That departure is in the interest of the people of these new provinces. There is a departure in connection with the debt or capital account. When I raised that question my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) took the position that it was much better in the interests of the people of these provinces that they should be put in a different position from the other provinces with regard to their capital or debt account. For instance, several million dollars stand to the credit of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and it is in the power of the governments of these provinces to withdraw that capital and use it immediately in any way they choose. But by these Bills the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan are not going to be left at liberty to withdraw their capital; all they will be able to do is to take from year to year 5 per cent interest on the capital account.

Mr. SPROULE. Where does the hon. gentleman find authority for saying that the other provinces could withdraw their capital account ?

Mr. SCOTT. I refer my hon. friend from Grey to his friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who, when we discussed this matter, stated that one of the maritime provinces had withdrawn a portion of its capital and acted very foolishly in doing so. There is a very material diverence in these Bills from the confederation plan with regard to the land, but my opinion is that the people of the new provinces are quite content with that. I do not think I can quote any better authority on that point than Mr. Haultain, who in a formal letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated he was quite willing to admit that the plan adopted in these Bills would work out more advantageously to the people of the provinces than had the actual confederation plan been followed. I hope I have said enough——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope I have said enough to convince the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friends opposite evidently think I have said enough, but they will have to hear more of this and some other questions out in the new provinces. I have no doubt that these gentlemen would be pleased indeed if these questions were never heard of again either here or anywhere in the Dominion of Canada. Have I left anything to be said ? I trust that I have been able to put the case in a way to prove that this is no light matter—that it is no immaterial limitation upon Northwest autonomy that is at issue—that a real and substantial matter of provincial rights is involved. I trust that I have left no room for doubt as to my own position. On last 3rd November, in last January, on the 3rd of May when I voted for the general principle of autonomy and for the principles bound up in the main details of the measures, I deemed myself in honour bound, and at this moment I deem myself in honour bound, to oppose any autonomy scheme which will leave the Northwest provinces for ever under these exemptions. As a whole, I believe the Bills provide not only fair but generous terms. On that account, and further because of the other vexed and complicating difficulties which have arisen and which would almost necessarily have led to a contrary vote by me being misconstrued, I have not deemed it fair nor right to oppose the Bills nor to withdraw my support from the Prime Minister on the measures. But in view of the position which I held on this question before my electors, I have open to me only one alternative. If the government and the House can see their way clear to adopt my amendment, I shall have redeemed the pledge upon which I accepted election in West Assiniboia. I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. Talbot, of Strathcona :

That the words after 'Now' be left out, and the following substituted : 'That the Bill (No. 69) be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House, with instruction to add to Section 23 the following sub-section :

Provided that the foregoing shall not prejudice the right of the parliament of Canada, by expropriation or otherwise, to obtain the relinquishment by the said company of the company's rights under section 16 of the contract aforesaid.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I regret, as much as my hon. friend himself who has spoken with a good deal of warmth on this subject, the necessity under which the government has found itself impelled to introduce the section in the Bill to which he has taken such strong exception. My hon. friend is aware, and the House is aware also, that the party to which he and I belong did everything we could to prevent parliament from accepting that clause of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract when it was submitted to parliament in the year 1881. Unfortunately the efforts we made at that time were unavailing ; parliament thought differently. That parliament made a mistake on that occasion I do not think is susceptible now of any discussion. However, even though parliament did make a mistake on that occasion, it is a rule which has never been violated, and which my hon. friend himself admits, that, even under such a sense of mistake which would be shared by the parliament of this day, there is nothing to do but to abide loyally by what has been done ; and I understand that my hon. friend himself does not propose that parliament at this juncture should with a rough hand attempt to repudiate the engagement which was entered into in 1881. His amendment does not go that length, nor did he imply in his argument that we should attempt to give to the new provinces which we are now creating the power of taxing the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in face of the exception which was made in its favour when the contract was entered into in 1881. The only amendment which my hon. friend wants to have made is a declaration to the effect that this clause which we insert in the Bill giving effect to the exemption contained in the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 'shall not prejudice the right of the parliament of Canada, by expropriation or otherwise, to obtain the relinquishment by the said company of the company's rights under section 16 of the contract as aforesaid.' The only answer I have to make to my hon. friend on this point is that the government do not think it advisable to complicate this Bill further than it is at present by the unfortunate necessity of inserting in the Bill the section which he wants thus amended. The parliament of Canada made a solemn contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and this contract cannot be done away with except in one of two ways, that is to say, by mutual agreement between the contracting parties, that is, between the parliament of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or by the parliament of Canada exercising its power of eminent domain, and expropriating from the company the privilege which was given to it by parliament. I appeal to my hon. friend on this matter. I do not see that this right of the Canadian parliament would be made any stronger than it is by applying to it a declaration of this kind. It would simply amount to a declaration, and nothing else; it would have no more effect than the passing of the section in silence. It would simply complicate this Bill and put a blemish on it, and the people on whose behalf my hon. friend has spoken with great effect and warmth, would not be benefited in the least. I said on a previous occasion that in this matter we are partners with the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan; we are in the same boat with them. The exemptions from which they suffer this parliament also suffers from; and our interests being common, the people of the Northwest Territories can rely that the Canadian government, in protecting its own interests, must likewise protect those of the new provinces which we are creating. I have only to repeat that in my opinion this is a blemish which has been placed, not only on the people of the new provinces, but on the people of Canada generally, and that the time has come, I am not prepared to say when, when the parliament of Canada must address itself to this question. Therefore I do not see that we can accept this amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A two-hours' speech delivered after nearly five month's of debate on this Bill, and followed by a motion that had some effect or meaning might have been excused to the hon. gentleman who has taken up the time of the House this afternoon; but inasmuch as his amendment means absolutely nothing, does not alter to the slightest extent the effect of the clause as it is at present, one can only conclude that this is a very pretty piece of byplay and comedy on the part of the hon. gentleman. Here is the clause he proposes to amend:

> The powers hereby granted to the said province shall be exercised subject to the provisions of section 16 of the contract set forth in the schedule to chapter 1 of the statutes of 1881, being an Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

To which the hon. gentleman by his amendment desires to add this:

> Provided that the foregoing shall not prejudice the right of the parliament of Canada, by expropriation or otherwise, to obtain the relinquishment by the said company of the company's rights under section 16 of the contract aforesaid.

A more absolutely irrelevant proviso could not be imagined. It is utterly absurd. The words in section 23 do not in the slightest degree affect the power of the parliament of Canada to deal with that question, and there is not any lawyer in the House who would venture for one moment to stake his professional reputation upon the contrary assertion.

The parliament of Canada is giving notice to the new provinces of the contract entered into by the Crown with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is not withdrawing anything from its own power. It is dealing with the powers of the provincial legislature. It does not purport, in any word or syllable of this section, to be taking away anything from its own power, and it will have, if this section be passed, exactly the same power to do that mentioned in this proviso as it had before the section passed. Therefore, I propose to vote against the amendment. I shall vote against it because it has not any effect or meaning, and I cannot see that it adds anything to or takes anything from the meaning of the section, as now proposed, in the slightest degree.

I do not know what assurance of the First Minister the hon. gentleman referred to this afternoon when he spoke of some assurance of the right hon. gentleman. I only heard some rather vague prophecy as to what parliament might or might not be obliged to do at some time in the remote future. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway exemption from taxation is concerned, the question remains to be determined whether or not the legislature of the Territories will or will not under this act have full jurisdiction to deal with provincial taxation. In good faith that jurisdiction must be exercised subject to the terms of the contract, just as this parliament, if it saw fit to attempt the expropriation referred to by the hon. gentleman, would be obliged in good faith to have regard to the terms of the contract. As I gave my views in committee, it is not worth while detaining the House by repeating them. I might add that one of the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, in dealing with this question under exactly similar conditions, said this:

> I think Manitoba was granted and received these lands with this special exemption attached and has not attempted to repeal it, if, as was argued, it could repeal this provision, and, in my view, the later taxing statutes of Manitoba do not purport to repeal this provision.

He leaves undecided the question whether Manitoba could repeal that provision or deal with this matter, as far as provincial taxation is concerned, in exactly the same way that the parliament of Canada can deal with it so far as Dominion taxation is concerned.

Furthermore, I pointed out to this House on a previous occasion that Manitoba has asserted the right to tax the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and has collected the sum of $50,000 or thereabouts during the past year under that head. Manitoba exercised that right, because section 16 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract does not exempt its earnings from taxation. That section is as follows :

> The Canadian Pacific Railway and all stations and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province hereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein ; and the lands of the company, in the Northwest Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

There is no exemption therein of the earnings.

Mr. SCOTT. In very much the larger part of Manitoba, there is no exemption at all. It might be that the company had not considered that what the Manitoba government has done in relation to taxes on earnings covered the small exempted strip.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have read carefully the terms of the Manitoba statute. They are general. They do not deal with the Canadian Pacific Railway alone but with all railway companies, and it is under that general provision that the tax to which I have alluded has been collected. All the railway companies, I believe, have protested, as they always do under the circumstances; but neither the Canadian Pacific Railway nor any other company has seen fit to test the validity of the tax imposed. For those reasons I shall vote against the amendment of the hon. member. I cannot see that it adds to or takes from the meaning of the section as now proposed in the slightest degree.

Mr. GALLIHER. I dealt with this question for a short time about a month or two ago and propose to say but very few words on it at present. I do not think my hon. friend from West Assiniboia goes far enough or I would support his motion. In my opinion, section 23 should not be enacted at all. If the parliament of Canada had full power to enter into the contract it did with the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1881, there can be no necessity for our continuing the exemption therein provided by any new enactment now. If it was intra vires of the government at that time, it holds good now, even after the new provinces are created. But if it was ultra vires of the government to continue that exemption beyond the time when the Territories became provinces, we should not do so by an enactment now. Either this section is for the purpose of securing such a defect as may have existed by reason of it not having been within the power of the Dominion parliament to continue the exemption beyond the time when the Territories became provinces, or there is no need for it. If this section were left entirely out of the Bill, we would not be in any way ignoring a contract that was legally made by any preceeding government. If that contract were not legally made, we should not be called upon to make it good by this enactment ; and if my hon. friend had moved for the expunging of this section, I would have supported him.

Amendment (Mr. Scott) negatived.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This Bill, which is now under consideration for its third reading, has been so elaborately discussed, both on the second reading and in committee, that I propose to occupy the time of the House but a few minutes in moving an amendment to refer the Bill back to the Committee of the Whole House.

So far as the main features of the Bill are concerned, those to which I am particularly opposed are pretty well known. I will briefly enumerate them and content myself with just summing up a few ideas which have been elaborated on more than one occasion during the discussion of the Bill.

I object to the policy of the government as far as the lands are concerned. In my opinion, as I have expressed it on a great many occasions during the past three years, the true policy for the government to adopt in regard to the lands in the Northwest Territories would have been to entrust the administration and control of these lands to the people and the legislatures of the new provinces, and not to retain that control and administration at Ottawa. The government, by adopting that view, would have followed the analogy of the British North America Act, section 109 of which provides that each province shall retain its lands and shall control and administer them. In the next place, it would have followed the British practice which has prevailed as between the government of Great Britain and the dependencies of the empire during the past sixty or seventy years. Every argument which has been advanced for retaining the control and administration of these lands in the central government would have availed equally in favour of retaining the control and administration of the lands of this country in the imperial government at London. There is no doubt about that. The British government attempted to enforce that principle. They did enforce it for a time, with results so absolutely unsatisfactory to themselves and to the people of the various dependencies of the empire that it was found necessary to make an absolute change. Further than that, the policy of the government in this regard is absolutely opposed, as I believe to the wishes of the people of the Northwest as expressed by the legislature in the Bill presented by Mr. Haultain, which had been unanimously adopted by the legislature of the Northwest Territories. It is also opposed to many expressions in the public press of the west during the time of this debate. And it is not unwise at this moment to recall the circumstances that, with respect to the boundary, with respect to many details that have been dealt with by this Bill, the wishes of the Northwest have been put forward as the true test. But when we come to the question of administering and controlling the lands we have departed from any consideration of the wishes of the people of the new provinces, and have decided to withhold the control and retain the administration of these lands.

Another argument in favour of entrusting these lands to the people is that the lands can be better administered and controlled in the province than at Ottawa. They can be better administered and controlled by officers of the provincial government in touch with the people and comparatively near at hand than by the officers of the Dominion government. What reason is there, as I have said before, why a citizen of Ontario should have the right and privilege to deal with the minerals and public lands of his own province at Toronto, while the citizen of the Northwest must be obliged, for the same purpose, to write or send to the city of Ottawa ? I am not going into an extended argument on this subject. The matter has been dealt with in detail by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) and my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), as well as by other hon. gentlemen ; and for me to indulge in an elaborate argument at this stage of the discussion would be weariness to the House as well as to myself.

The arguments of the government on this subject are threefold. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) bases his main contention on the necessity of controlling the lands that they may be used as a means of promoting immigration. He says there must be free homestead entries, and therefore there must be control of the lands at Ottawa. This consideration seems entitled to no great weight. I dealt with it on a previous occasion. Another hon. gentleman seemed to be under the impression that there would be less corruption if the administration of the lands were in the hands of the central government than if they were administered by the provinces. The Prime Minister adduces on this subject the example of the United States, where the federal government has retained the control of the public lands —although he took good care not to follow the United States with respect to certain other features of the Bill to which public attention has been called. The example of the United States has not been a happy one, if we test this question by the possibility of corruption. Those who have investigated the political affairs of the United States, know that some of the greatest scandals which have occurred in that country have been in connection with the public lands. The additional reasons which influenced the administration are those which they do not openly state—the desire for preserving patronage, for retaining power over the electorate of that country. In respect of these matters, no doubt, there were influences which were exercised upon the administration. But looking at the matter from the standpoint solely of the public interset, I venture to say that the policy should have been to hand over the lands to the administration and control of the provincial executives and provincial legislatures.

The next provision of the Bill to which I have specially referred is that which deals with the division of the province for the purpose of the election of a provincial legislature. Now, I am not going over a twice-told tale. I shall not review the provisions of clause 12 of the Bill and of the schedule which forms part of that clause. These matters have been discussed very elaborately in the committee of the whole House. But I will just point out one object lesson in this distribution which seems to me to afford a guide to the principle, or lack of principle, which has guided the administration and its friends in framing clause 12. The population of the province of Alberta is estimated by the government at 250,000. The number of members in the new legislature is to be twenty-five. Two constituencies are to be established in the northern part of the province in communities which have not, up to the present time, been given any representation either in the parliament of Canada or in the provincial legislature. Hon. gentlemen on the other side are now extremely solicitous about the persons who inhabit these portions of the province. They are extremely solicitous that those people should be represented in parliament. But up to the present time I have not heard a murmur of protest, either in this parliament or in the territorial assembly, on account of their lack of representation in parliament or in the territorial assembly. We have certain sources of information which have been pointed out by the government as those which guided them in making this distribution. One source of information is the census of 1901. According to that census the electoral division of Peace River contained 92 whites and 677 half-breeds, or a total population of 769 among whom electors might be found. The constituency of Athabaska, according to the census of 1901, contained 117 white persons and 824 half-breeds, or a total population of 941 among whom electors might be found. In addition to this, the Peace River district contained at that time 955 Indians and Athabaska contained 735 Indians. There is one post office in the entire territory comprised in the two ridings, and the income from that one post office is $90 per annum. You will therefore realize the extent and importance of the population to which has been given a representation of two members in the new provincial assembly.

Well, we need not perhaps stop at that; it is not fair perhaps to stop at that, because we have certain further information derived from my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. Some one told some persons who told the Minister of the Interior that there is a population of 5,000 souls in these two ridings exclusive of Indians—or perhaps it may be that some one told my hon. friend that directly. I think that was the way he put it to the House—some person, at some indefinite time, at some unknown place, the person being also unnamed and unknown to this House, has informed the Minister of the Interior that these two combined electoral divisions contain at the present time 5,000 persons exclusive of Indians. Well, I venture to think that if you look at the other sources of information upon which reliance has been placed by the government with respect to other portions of the constituency, we might discount that statement a great deal. For my part I should be extremely surprised if it could be proved by any evidence worth the name that there are more than 2,500 persons at the present time in those two electoral divisions, not including Indians. But let us take the statement of the Minister of the Interior; let us take his statement, which it was not even worth while to put in writing, of which it was not worth while to give any details; let us assume that there are in these two electoral divisions at the present time 5,000 people outside of Indians, and what have you? You have 245,000 people in the new province of Alberta to whom is allotted a representation of 23 members in the new legislature, and you have a supposed 5,000 people in the northern portion of that constituency to whom two representatives are allotted. That is to say, to one-fiftieth of the assumed population of the province of Alberta a representation of two is given, and to all the rest, to the other forty-nine-fiftieths of that population, a representation of 23 is given. Now, there can be no excuse for that; there can be no justification for it; there can be no apology for it. I do not know the motives which influenced the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister in forcing this upon the House. We can only guess at them. But it seems to be a transaction which is worthy of being characterized in the strongest possible terms that parliamentary usage will permit. It seems to me to be indecent and indefensible that 5,000 persons in the northern part of that constituency should be given a representation of two members, while to 245,000 persons 23 members are allotted, and that this should be done by hon. gentlemen in this House who stand up and state that they are solely desirous of distributing the representation of that province according to the standards of fair-play, according to equality of population and other similar considerations. It is perhaps inadvisable to express our opinion as to why this is done, why a population hitherto absolutely unrepresented in the provincial legislature should be given four times the voice in the new province that any similar number of persons in any other part of the province receive under the terms of this distribution.

Another provision to which I desire to call attention for a few moments is that contained in section 16. This has been discussed very fully. I will sum up what I have to say with regard to that in a very few words. The argument has been made not only by private members on the other side of the House, but by ministers of the Crown as well, not, I think, by the right hon. gentleman, but by some of his colleagues, that an obligation is imposed upon parliament to pass this legislation because of a compact which was made in 1870 at the time the Territories came into the confederation. That argument was disposed of by the right hon. gentleman the other evening, and it was disposed of by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice on the same evening. If there was any compact such as that which has been relied upon, it extended not only to separate schools in the Northwest Territories, but to the use of the French language. A disclaimer was made by the Solicitor General, concurred in by the Prime Minister, both of whom declared that no such compact existed under anything that took place in 1870; therefore, so far as that is concerned we come down to what the Minister of Justice quoting from the judgment of a court, calls a parliamentary compact, and we find the obligation to enact this legislation, if we find it anywhere, in the statute of 1875. The Prime Minister and his colleagues have taken away from themselves that argument; they have taken it away deliberately, with their eyes open, in answer to the motions of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), because they say that there is no compact by reason of the Act of 1877, and I challenge any distinction between the Act of 1877 and the Act of 1875 in that regard. Therefore, I am free to state upon the authority of the Prime Minister himself, upon the authority of his Minister of Justice and of his Solicitor General, upon the authority of every member of the government who combatted this motion, that there was no compact contained in the Act of 1875, because otherwise the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues would have felt themselves obliged to accede to the motions which they voted down. Therefore, we come down after all to the question of constitutional power, of constitutional right, and as to whether it is sound policy in this regard to limit the rights of the new provinces. I do not admit that there is any constitutional power; I deny that there is any constitutional right, and I deny further that it is sound policy to limit in this respect the rights of the new provinces. I say that so far as the distribution of the legislative power between parliament and the legislatures of the new provinces is concerned we should content ourselves with adopting that code which is contained in sections 91, 92, 93 and the two following sections of the British North America Act. These constitute the code of distribution of legislative power between the parliament of Canada and the legislatures of all the provinces, including those provinces we are now creating, and I say it is wise for us, from all standpoints, to abide by the constitution in that regard.

I pointed that out a little more in detail the other evening than I shall do at the present time. I pointed out that in the interest of the minority in this country as well as in the interest of the majority, it is right and wise that we should abide by the constitution, because, that constitution, if it is invaded to-day for one class, may be invaded to-morrow for another class. I deny that there is any intolerance in asking that we should abide by the compact and the constitution which were deliberately adopted in 1867. Any argument as to tolerance is an argument which ought to be addressed to the people and to the legislatures of the new provinces. I think that all of us on this side of the House may at the same time treat with some disdain the arguments of those who throw the taunt of intolerance in our teeth and at the same time turn to their friends and colleagues and say: We may grant this after all to the minority because it is absolutely useless to them; these are not separate schools; the privilege granted is absolutely worthless and in a few years the name of separate schools will disappear from the Northwest. That is a very high exemplification of tolerance! If it is so regarded by some hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not so regard it. If there was any compact, if there was any agreement, why grant separate schools are to be of no value at all to those who demand them? It seems to me that a different policy should have been pursued.

Now there is this one thing more. I do not think enough has been said in this House in regard to a certain motion which the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) moved the other evening. Perhaps some members of this House and a great many people in this country do not thoroughly realize what the import and effect of the amendment are. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) proposed certain motions when this Bill was in committee. I will not weary the House perhaps if I state the reasons for these motions, as I understand them. The amended clause 16 of this Bill provides that:

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

The Protestant or Roman Catholic minority in any school section in the Northwest Territories, if they saw fit to establish separate schools, could elect their own school trustees, and if they did so then the powers of these trustees in respect to religious instruction would be controlled by section 137 of chapter 29 of the ordinances which is as follows:

No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one-half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

Now, inasmuch as the Catholic minority or the Protestant minority could establish separate schools and could elect their own trustees, they would, in respect to such separate schools, control the religious instruction. But in respect of schools which were not within the designation of separate schools, the legislature of the new province was not in any way controlled by the provisions of section 16. I am trying to state this proposition in as simple and distinct terms as I possibly can. Inasmuch as these public schools—I may call them that to distinguish them from separate schools—were not within the designation of separate schools, contained in clause 16 of this Bill, the provisions of section 16, to which I have just referred, would not prevent the legislature of the new province from interfering with the power of the trustees or from vesting that control over religious instruction in the Commissioner of Education, or in the council of public instruction, or in any other body which it may designate at any time in the future. That was the position and my hon. friend from Labelle, in the first instance, and my hon. friend from Beauharnois afterwards proposed motions in Committee of the Whole House, which in their opinion, guarded the rights of the Catholic minority when that Catholic minority happened to be a majority in any particular school district. These motions were voted down. They were voted down without very much discussion by the government and without very much reason being given by any member of the government. They were regarded as unnecessary or inexpedient—I do not know which—perhaps both; at all events, they were very summarily disposed of and the matter was supposed to end there. But, it did not end there. Then came a very pretty little piece of by-play. That which had been proposed by my hon. friend from Labelle and by my hon. friend from Beauharnois and something more to which I will call attention was proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan evidently by reason of an understanding between himself and the members of the administration. What was proposed by the hon. member for Saskatchewan was this: He proposed to add to clause 16 as it had been amended these words:

Or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in said ordinances.

So that the section as it now stands before us to receive the sanction of the House upon the third reading is as follows:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.

Now, I regard those words which I have just read and which are embodied in the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan as an unnecessary and unwarranted attack upon the legislative power of the new province. They embody what my hon. friend from Labelle and my hon. friend for Beauharnois had in mind but they embody something more. They embody an absolute restriction of the powers of the provincial legislature at all times in the future in regard to the control of religious instruction in the public schools. There can be no doubt about that. The words are very distinct and very explicit. If you omit the immaterial words you have this language:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in said ordinances.

It might be proper if the policy of the government were one in which we all agreed to go as far as my hon. friend from Labelle and my hon. friend from Beauharnois proposed to go, but it is absolutely unnecessary to go beyond that and to limit and restrict the powers of the legislatures of the new provinces in respect to religious instruction in all public schools. What is the provision relied upon? I have already read it, but I will read it again:

No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school until one-half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permited or desired by the board may be given.

Whatever right or privilege is embodied in that provision, whatever power is vested in the trustees, under that provision, so as to create a right or privilege, must remain at all times in the future as part of the organic law of the new provinces. That is to say, if the legislature of the new province should for any special reason in any district desire to divest the tustees of that power and to vest it in the commissioner of education or the council of public instruction or any other body, it would find itself unable to do so. This is a specific and definite provision 'that no right or privilege with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school' shall be prejudicially affected. When this section first came down I called attention to this. The Prime Minister differed from me on the construction of the section. I was not able to precisely gather exactly what the view of the administration is with respect to the clause, but I am giving to the House my view as to what the difficulties would be. If the government have any different opinion it should be expressed in this House at the earliest possible moment in such distinct, definite and specific terms as will leave no room for misapprehension and misunderstanding. In view of the provisions contained in section 16; in view of its restrictions on the legislative freedom of the new provinces, once more I desire to test the opinion of the House upon that section, and I therefore move in amendment to the main motion:

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out, and that the following words be inserted instead thereof:

Recommitted to a committee of the whole House with an instruction that they have power to strike out section 16 of the Bill and to substitute the following section therefor:

16. The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province in so far as the same are applicable under the terms thereof.

I make the motion now as I made it in committee for the reason that I believe it is wisest to adhere to the terms of the constitution. It is wisest, because the observance of the constitution is a protection to all of us; wisest, because the provisions of the constitution will leave these matters to be dealt with by the legislature of the new province; wisest, because that will in the end tend to better relations among the people of all Canada; wisest, because it will confine within the restricted provincial area differences and difficulties of an essentially local character. It will leave the wider area of Dominion politics free from questions which concern only a particular province, a particular district or a particular territory. All of us who have had experience of the far reaching and harmful effect of such differences when they overpass provincial bounds by such differences; all of us who have strong opinions on the desirability of not lighting fires which are so easily spread; we all believe that in the end it is better to leave such matters to be dealt with within the restricted area which is most directly concerned. The motion which I propose will have that result. It is a result that is not likely to be fraught with any injustice to the minority. That feeling of tolerance of which mention has been made so often in this House is just as strong in the people of the Northwest of Canada as it is in the people of any province of Canada. The people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have been cited as examples of the good fellowship which exists in the maritime provinces between people of different races and different religious belief. There is no reason for apprehension that any different result will obtain in the Northwest of Canada if these matters are restricted to the provincial area and if the provincial legislature is left to deal with these questions. The people of the west are not less broad, they are not more narrow than the people of eastern Canada, than the people of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick and of Prince Edward Island who, even without the sanction of legislative enactment, have been broad enough to grant rights which are appreciated by the minority. For what reason are we to conjecture that the people in the Northwest of Canada would exercise the legislative rights conferred upon them in any less reasonable or fair manner? I hope that the government, even at this late hour, may accept this motion to leave the constitution untouched, and to let the new provinces be governed by the exact provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, unimpaired and unaltered.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I am absolutely certain that I give expression to the view, not only of every member of this government, but of every member of this House who is supporting the government on this legislation, when I say that it has been proposed with only one desire and that desire is to respect the true principles of the constitution, not only in its spirit but in its letter. So far as we are concerned there is no desire to antagonize any element of the community, any more than there is a desire to single out any class in the community for special favours. We have, however, to bear in mind that there are obligations on this government which the government cannot refuse to accept the responsibility of. It would be very poor statesmanship, it would be a very paltry thing, if, by simply shutting our eyes to the duty cast upon us we would attempt to get rid of it. I shall not detain the House at any length; I shall merely deal with the question of the land and clause 16, and leave the question of the distribution of seats to the Minister of the Interior and other hon. gentlemen. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said that with respect to the land we are departing from the principle laid down by the British North America Act. I take direct issue with my hon. friend on that, and I submit to the House that there is absolutely no analogy between the case we now have in hand and the case of the provinces as they came into confederation in 1867 and after. These provinces were separate political entities in existence when they decided to enter confederation. At the time they came into confederation, these separate political entities had vested in them their public lands; all their public properties were the property of these federated provinces; and when in the British North America Act we proceed to deal with the question of lands and properties, what do we do? We re-vest in the provinces those lands a part of which have been taken by this Dominion. That is what we did at confederation. Let me draw the attention of the House to sections 108 and 109 of the British North America Act, which deal with this question. Section 108 says:

> The public works and property of each province enumerated in the third schedule to this Act shall be the property of Canada.

We take from these provinces, as they came into confederation, the public works and property therein enumerated. Then, section 109 goes on to say:

> All lands, mines, minerals and royalties belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the union, and all sums then due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any interest other than that of the province in the same.

That is, simply a revesting, in so far as a revesting is necessary of those lands which are their property, or which, by the terms of this section, are declared to be their property. What are the facts in regard to the public lands in the Territories? The facts are that in 1870 they were almost entirely the property of the Hudson Bay Company; and what occurred? The Dominion of Canada, acting in concert with the imperial authorities, contracted to pay to the Hudson Bay Company £300,000 sterling for the purpose of acquiring these properties, they to become the property of the Dominion; and can any man to-day dispute our title to those properties? Now, where is the analogy between the case of a province which has its property vested in the province, coming into confederation and retaining control of that property except the part which it gives up to the Dominion of Canada, and the property of the Northwest Territories, which to-day is the property of the people of the Dominion of Canada? How can you compare the two? How can you draw any argument from the British North America Act to make it applicable to the case in hand? That is not all, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend says we ought to observe the constitution. The constitution of this country is not only, strictly speaking, the terms of the British North America Act, but is, as I conceive it, the written constitution together with that intangible constitution which has grown up by practice and usage. We have a precedent for what we are doing to-day. How were the public lands in Manitoba dealt with ?—which public lands occupied, quoad the Dominion of Canada, absolutely the same position which the public lands of the Territories occupy to-day, except that in the interval we have spent enormous sums of money to develop that country, in connection with immigration, irrigation, and other matters. How did we deal with the case of Manitoba ? We dealt with it absolutely in the way in which we are dealing with the Territories. Were we to do otherwise and Manitoba were to come to us, are we to say to her : We have given these lands to the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, but so far as you are concerned lands occupying the same position are not to be dealt with in the same way ? Why should we distinguish between the two ? But, Mr. Speaker, we have more than that. This question has not been raised here for the first time. It was the subject of much consideration by the government in power in 1884, and a report to Council was made by gentlemen, members of the government, who had been appointed to consider the whole of these questions, and chiefly the question that was then raised, as to the right of the province of Manitoba to the control, management and sale of the public lands within its limits—the same question that is now being considered. How was that question dealt with by the report of Council of May 20, 1884 ? I have made a few extracts from that report, which I will read :

> The lands of Manitoba hold a very different position in relation to the Dominion government, from the lands of the other provinces. Shortly after the union of the old provinces, the government formed from that union purchased at a large price in cash, all the rights, titles and interests of the Hudson Bay Company in and to the territory out of which the province of Manitoba has been formed, it incurred further a very large expenditure to obtain and hold this territory in peaceable possession, and at a still further cost which is continuous and perpetual, is extinguishing Indian titles and maintaining the Indians, so that the Dominion government has a very large pecuniary interest in the soil which does not exist in respect to any other of the confederated provinces.

Is there a reason advanced in support of the position taken by the government at that time which is not applicable to the conditions existing in the Territories to-day ? But that is not all. My hon. friend thought there was not much in the argument with respect to immigration ; but let me point out to him what the views of the government of 1884 were on that point. The report says :

> Parliament pledged its faith to the world that a large portion of those lands should be set apart for free homesteads to all coming settlers, and another portion to be held in trust for the education of their children. No transfer could therefore be made without exacting from the province the most ample securities that this pledged policy shall be maintained. Hence in so far as the free lands extend there would be no monetary advantage to the province whilst a transfer would most assuredly seriously embarrass all the costly immigration operations which the Dominion government is making and mainly in behalf of Manitoba and the Territories.
> The great attraction which the Dominion government now offers, the impressive fact to the mind of the man contemplating emigration, is that a well known and recognized government holds unfettered in its own hands, which it offers free, and that that government has its agencies and organization for directing, receiving, transporting and placing the immigragrant upon the homestead which he may select.

These are the reasons which were given then, and these are the reasons which apply under existing conditions to the lands in the Northwest Territories.

My hon. friend dealt afterwards with section 16, the school clause. I shall not go over the position I have already taken with respect to that section or the arguments which I have already advanced. Briefly, I think I may put it in this way. You have to provide by this constitutional Act for the distribution of a legislative power as between the Dominion and the province. Sections 91, 92 and 93 of the British North America Act must be made applicable, section 91 being the section which is applicable to the Dominion, section 92 the one applicable to the province, and section 93, the one applicable to both. Neither the province nor the Dominion can deal exclusively with the subject mentioned in section 93. The Dominion can deal exclusively with the subjects mentioned in section 91, and the province can deal exclusively with the subjects mentioned in section 92.

But when we come to deal with this question of education, we find by section 93 that it is a subject over which both the Dominion and the provinces exercise legislative jurisdiction. Section 93 provides for this condition of things, that if a school system has grown up in a province under which any class in that particular province has acquired a right or a privilege, then that right or privilege is guaranteed that particular class for all time to come. That is the restriction placed upon the powers of a province to deal with the subject of education. It can only deal with that subject under the restriction that all the rights and privileges therefore vested in any class in that province cannot be interfered with. There can be no doubt on that point because it has been irrevocably settled as the result of two judicial decisions. If these Territories were a province now in existence, the school system there existing would be of necessity perpetuated, and whatever rights and privileges are conferred on the minority under that school system would be guaranteed them for all time. My hon. friend says, however, that these Territories are not provinces and conseqently this section does not in terms apply to the new provinces. Conceivably that is true. There is a doubt in my mind as to whether or not these Territories, not being provinces, come within the wording of section 93 ; and in the technical meaning of the term, the minority might not have those rights and privileges which they enjoy under the School Ordinance. That is the letter of the law, but what is the spirit ?

Mr. SCOTT. Was that point ever raised in the Manitoba case ? Manitoba was not a province either.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It could not be raised in the Manitoba case because in that case there was a special section which provides that the minority shall have not only the rights and privileges which exist by law but also those which exist by practice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Manitoba became a province at the moment it entered confederation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am charging no narrowness or fanaticism to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. I believe the view he has given to be his conception of the spirit of the British North America Act, and that he is seeking to apply that Act, but I put this question to him ? Have we not at present in the Territories conditions which are practically analogous to those which exist in a province ? At the time the Territories came in, did we not petition the home authorities to give us the power to legislate with respect to them ? And did we not, at the same time, give the undertaking that we would give them institutions similar to those which existed in the provinces ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If we had power, under the Act of 1871, to absolutely disregard section 93 of the British North America Act, then of course there is no further question. We cannot make a new section 93. If, on the other hand, we are bound to observe section 93, it does not seem to me that we can increase our power by passing any Act restricting the powers of a territorial legislature, and then, the following year, when creating a province, say : there you have restrictions operating upon the territorial legislature and the provincial legislature must also be governed thereby.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My answer is cadit questio. Proceeding on the assumption that we are dealing with these Territories, under the Act of 1871, as Manitoba was dealt with and British Columbia and Prince Edward Island and every province brought into the Dominion since confederation, we are applying to these new provinces the same principle we applied to those provinces. If these Territories were coming in as provinces, created previous to this time, there would be no question as to the application of section 93, and all the rights and privileges guaranteed the minority under existing legislation would be continued ; but because they do not come within the word 'province' my hon. friend says : your door is barred and section 93 of the British North America Act does not apply. My answer is that when these Territories were brought into confederation, they were brought in under a compact entered into between the people of Canada and the imperial authorities. We find in the petition to the imperial authorities the following language :

> That the welfare of the sparse and scattered population of British subjects of European origin, who inhabit these remote and unorganized territories, would be materially enhanced by the formation therein of political institutions bearing analogy, as far as the circumstances will admit, to those that exist in the several provinces of the Dominion.

That was the allegation of our petition. We asked for legislative control over these territories on conditions that we would give them institutions similar in principle to those existing in the provinces. That prayer was granted. In the Order in Council it was provided :

> It is hereby ordered and declared by her Majesty, by and with the advice of the Privy Council, in pursuance and exercise of the powers vested in her Majesty by the said Acts of parliament, that from and after the 15th day of July, 1870, the said Northwest Territories shall be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the terms and conditions set forth in the first hereinbefore recited address.

The terms and conditions were that we would give these Territories political institutions bearing analogy, as far as the circumstances would admit, to those existing in the provinces. That was in 1870 or 1871. What then did we proceed to do ? In 1875 we gave these Territories a constitution in accordance with the solemn compact entered into with the imperial authorities. In that constitution what did we provide ? We provided for separate schools, or rather we provided, under section 11 of the Act of 1875, for a system of education. That is the letter of our constitution. At the time that constitution was given these Territories, in the execution of our solemn undertaking towards the imperial authorities, the man who was responsible for section 11 of the Act of 1875 stood up in this House and gave expression to the hope that by that Act we had settled for all time this vexed question of education in so far as these Territories were concerned. I need not repeat his words. Mr. Blake then said to the people of Canada : We are taking out of provincial politics and out of municipal control this vexed question of education and are settling it for all time in so far as these Territories are concerned. Those great men who then sat in parliament, those men who had been framers of the Act of confederation, who had started Canada on its triumphant wave,—those men declared, without a dissentient voice, in adopting this measure: yes, we are settling the question for ever; and those who shall hereafter go into the Territories to establish there homes for themselves and their children will know the conditions under which they take possession of the land. They will know that their children will be educated under the system we are creating to-day, which provides for a separate school system.

Mr. SPROULE. With the hon. minister's permission, I would like to ask him a question. Is he strictly keeping faith with those to whom promises were made prior to confederation that they would have institutions similar to those of other provinces? Did not the other provinces have freedom of choice in their educational system?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Absolutely none. The other provinces have no choice where rights have been guaranteed.

Mr. SPROULE. Never had?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Never had. A province coming into confederation with a separate school system is bound to maintain that system. And if after coming into confederation they establish a school system under which rights and privileges accrue, they are absolutely precluded from interfering with them.

Mr. SPROULE. Do not they exercise the same rights——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I fear I am wandering from the point to which I was addressing myself. Without being offensive to my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) I will claim my right to proceed. I feel that he cannot convince me, and I fear that I cannot convince him. Now, that system was given to this country at that time, and at that time those who were opposed to the principle of separate schools so far as the Northwest Territories are concerned, through Hon. George Brown, voiced this sentiment: You have passed this legislation; you have settled the question for all time; it has passed out of the domain of Dominion controversy. I gave you the views of those who promoted this legislation and were favourable to it. Here I give you also the opinion concerning it and the construction put upon by the man who most bitterly opposed it. So there, friend and foe alike, joined to say that this question was settled for ever. And, as I have said, it passed beyond our domain. Subsequently, in 1891, an attempt was made to settle this question, otherwise. That is when the Act was being consolidated, if I remember rightly, and at that time the attention of the House was again drawn to this section 11, to this provision in the constitution we had given to this territory. We were told: You must repeal that provision, you must not consecrate that principle by your positive legislation; because if you do, the system will be continued under which rights and privileges will be acquired, which, when you come to deal with these Territories and make them into provinces, you will find in existence and you will not be able to get rid of them. Not only that, but, if I remember rightly, it was in 1880, that a statute was passed by this parliament with respect to the constitution of these Territories in which we made the provision of the British North America Act with respect to education, that is to say, section 93, expressly applicable to the Northwest Territories. Now, in the light of these facts, we are called upon to deal with these provinces. and we have to remember the pledge we gave to the imperial authorities that we would give to these Territories institutions similar in principle to our own. We have to bear in mind the fact that we have by our own Act created in the province a certain condition of things with respect to schools, that by our positive act that school system has been continued up to the present time. And, when we come to apply section 93, what do we do? The rights that have grown up in that territory under the present school system, if these rights and privileges have been brought in by reason of the legislation of the Territories, go on in spite of anything that could be done. But, because they have been created and have grown up not by reason of the Act of the territorial authority, but by reason of our Act, we are to repudiate, and say to these people: It is true, we have created that system, true we are responsible for it; true if these had been provinces and the legislation had been their work, we would not have had any right to deal with it;—but because these things have grown up under our Act, we have the right to repudiate them. That is a position this government refuses to take. So far as this government is concerned, there will be no repudiation, either with respect to the contracts entered into with the Hudson Bay Company or the implied parliamentary contract entered into with the minority of the Northwest Territories.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has accurately stated the conditions which exist in the Northwest Territories as the result of section 16, No. 2. The minority—and I do not want to use the word 'Roman Catholic' or the word 'Protestant,' I speak of the minority—the minority in any school district would have guaranteed to them all the rights and privileges they enjoy at the present time under chapter 29 of the ordinances. With respect to the minority in general, when they happen to form a majority in a school district, they would not have a guarantee of the continuance of these rights which they now have.

The intention of this amendment is to continue to the majority in number in a school district, where it happens to be a minority in the province, the same rights and privileges with respect to religious education that they now enjoy. That is, we are not depriving them of one iota of the benefits of the provisions of the Northwest Territories ordinances. We are giving to the minority in general, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, when they are a majority in a school district, the same privileges that they now enjoy. Now my hon. friend says that the result of this is to impose restraints on the action of the legislature. That is true; there is a restraint upon the action of the legislature. But here is the condition we have: My hon. friend says that we are vesting this control of religious education in the hands of the trustees. My construction of the Bill —I am not dealing with it otherwise than as I construe it—is that which is placed upon it by the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Secular education, for which the state pays, is under control of the statute; but religious education, which is essentially that which concerns the parents themselves, remains under the control of the parents. The trustee is the representative of the parent, for he is elected by the parent. I take all the responsibility for saying that I have no desire to see the control of religious education vested in any other person or authority than the parent. I have no desire to see it vested in the superintendent of education or any person who is under the control of the state. I wish to see it vested in the person elected as representative of the parent. That is what I think my hon. friend's amendment carries out, and that, I think, we ought to give effect to.

Mr. BOURASSA. There is a point which is not very clear and which I would like to have explained, if the minister will allow me a question. Under clause 137, the minister has just stated, the trustees would decide what kind of religious instruction would be given. It is perfectly clear so far as that is concerned. But suppose a school section in which the majority is not Protestant or Roman Catholic—say, for instance, of the Greek Orthodox church. And suppose they decided to devote the half hour for religious instruction to instruction according to that church. Then, I suppose the minority would either have to simply prevent their children from attending the school during that half hour of religious instruction or form a separate school. In that case, which would be the minority to have the right to form a separate school under section 41 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not able to answer that question. I am not giving off-hand legal opinions to-day.

Mr. BOURASSA. But, if the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will allow me, I think I put my question courteously. In case the majority is neither Protestant nor Roman Catholic, would the minority have the right to establish a separate school? That is a simple question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be a simple question, but it is a question to which I have not given consideration, and I do not want to commit myself to anything that I have not considered. The leader of the opposition also referred to the right to use the French language, and as I understood him, he said that the right to use the French language was as sacredly guaranteed to those who speak that language in the Northwest Territories, as the right to separate schools.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said there seemed to be as much of a parliamentary compact in the one case as in the other, because both depended on the statute.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will deal with that question when we have to consider the amendment which will be moved in that connection.

Mr. STOCKTON. I was unfortunately absent from the House when the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) moved his amendment, which was adopted by the government and passed. Therefore, I wish to make one or two observations upon section 16, subsection 1, as it is affected by the amendment of the member for Saskatchewan. I do not object to the interpretation put upon section 93 by the Minister of Justice. We know that a province has an absolute right to legislate with respect to education. I ask this question: What legislative authority outside of the legislative assembly of the province of New Brunswick has a right to legislate for that province in respect to education ? No legislative authority whatever, Sir, except the assembly of the province of New Brunswick. But with the interpretation that has been put upon section 93 by the Minister of Justice, I agree. If the legislative assembly of the province of New Brunswick, to-day, or to-morrow, passed a law giving certain rights to the minority, and next year sought to withdraw those rights by which withdrawal they were prejudicially affected, then I entirely agree with the Minister of Justice that there might be an appeal to this parliament to interfere.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would be a case for remedial legislation.

Mr. STOCKTON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And it would be subject to an appeal.

Mr. STOCKTON. It would be subject to an appeal. Under that explanation, I entirely agree with the interpretation which the Minister of Justice has put upon section 93 of the British North America Act. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will very briefly show in what respect the Bill as now before the House is a departure from the Bill as originally presented by the Prime Minister, and as afterwards amended by him. Separate schools, under section 41 of the ordinance 29, can only be established by a minority of the ratepayers. Under the Act of 1875, section 11, the majority of the ratepayers can establish a school district and provide for education. After the school district is established then the minority can ask for and have separate schools. The question was asked the Minister of Justice by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), under what circumstances could a school be established if there were neither Catholics or Protestants in the district. Now if you put a construction upon section 11 of the Act of 1875, that ratepayers mean only Catholics or Protestants, then a difficulty might arise. But under section 2 of the ordinance 29, a meaning is given to the word 'ratepayer,' such as you would expect to be given it, that is, a person who pays rates, with the limitation of a certain residence within the district before he casts his vote for the election of a trustee. Now, the First Minister provided in his Bill for the minority but not for the majority. The amendment of the member for Saskatchewan, following the amendment moved by the member for Labelle, and following to a certain extent the amendment moved by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), sought to cure this defect, with the exception that the amendments of the member for Labelle and the member for Beauharnois were summarily voted down at the instance of the government and afterwards, when the member for Saskatchewan, under the inspiration I imagine of the First Minister, or some member of the government, moved his amendment, it was accepted by the government and adopted by the House, under the authority of the First Minister. What is the effect of that amendment? I think, Sir, that many members of this House do not fully understand the element that has been introduced into the organic constitution of the province by this amendment. At the end of subsection 1, section 16, these words are added:

> With respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided in the said ordinances.

Now, under section 137 of the ordinance 29 religious instruction can be given from 3.30 p.m. to 4 o'clock, under the direction of the trustees in separate schools. But what if you apply it to all the schools? As the law now stands it can be changed, it can be amended by the provincial authorities, because the amendment does not form part of the organic law; but by introducing this amendment into the constitution you make it a fixture, you make it part of the organic law, and it puts the trustees for the time being above the educational authority of the province, it puts them above the Minister of Education, above the government of the province, and it makes them for all time supreme with respect to their action on this matter. It takes the control away from the provincial authorities, and it makes the amendment, as I have said, a part of the organic law, incapable of amendment or repeal by any authority in Canada, either in the Northwest or in this House, incapable of amendment except by an appeal to the imperial authorities. I think the Minister of Justice will agree with me that that is the effect of the amendment which was moved by the member for Saskatchewan and adopted by the government; it places the provincial authority for all time to come in a position of servitude to a law which they have not asked for, and which they do not want. But the irony of the situation is accentuated by the fact that this is an amendment, moved by the hon. member for Saskatchewan, which, at the instance of the government, puts shackles upon the freedom of action of the people of the west, an amendment moved by a gentleman from the west, who should have been solicitous to look out for the freedom and liberty of the people of the west.

PRIVATE BILLS.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS moved third reading of Bill (No. 139) respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that there was a question raised by the Minister of Justice with reference to the fourth clause. I do not see the minister in his place, but I believe that the objection he raised was sufficiently important to lead the First Minister to say that it would be looked into before the third reading.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The point raised by the Minister of Justice was that the clause with reference to the amalgamation was rather vague, declaring that certain roads are for the general advantage of Canada when they are all put together. I have not spoken to the Minister, but I have had the matter looked into for my own information, and I find that the companies here referred to are Canadian companies and the roads Canadian roads. Therefore, it is only a question of degree how far the government should permit the amalgamation and should declare these roads to be for the general advantage of Canada. If they are all amalgamated, they are for the general advantage of Canada, and if only a part of them are amalgamated, they are for the general advantage of Canada. These questions have all, I am sure, been considered by the Railway Committee, and I have always made it a rule to support the report of the Railway Committee unless there are strong reasons to the contrary.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that provision was made for the amalgamation of some roads which are not specified.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are all specified.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, when the Bill was before the Railway Committee I objected to the third clause and desired to have it amended, but my amendment was laid over on the suggestion of the Minister of Finance that it would be considered by the government. I, therefore, did not test the efficacy of that amendment in the committee as I otherwise would have done, and I propose now to submit it to the House. My amendment is as follows:

It is hereby provided that the Governor in Council shall grant no permission to construct any part of the proposed road south of the international boundary unless it be shown to be necessary in order to overcome engineering difficulties, nor until satisfactory guarantees are given that the line from Cloverdale to Princeton will be completed on Canadian territory within a reasonable time.

It may be suggested that a part of this amendment is covered by the amendment of Mr. Macpherson, which is as follows:

The company shall within two years from the passing of this Act, commence the construction of the western portion of its main line from a point at or near Cloverdale, and continuously prosecute construction in an easterly direction to Princeton, along the route as laid down in the original charter of the company, being chapter 75 of 60 Victoria of the statutes of British Columbia.

That, however, I do not think has any great virtue in it. There is no penalty, so far as I can see, which will be incurred provided that it is not carried out by the company, except that if the company does not carry out its work as laid down in the Act, its charter powers at a certain time will lapse unless they are again renewed. What I wanted to do was to make sure that if that road could be built on Canadian territory, it should be built on Canadian territory. I also wanted to make sure that if it had to be diverted—and there could be no reason for the diversion other than engineering difficulties—to the south of the line, that diversion should be limited and temporary, and should not include the possibility of running south of the line for a longer or a shorter distance, as the company itself might think would be best in its own interests, but that the road should come into Canadian territory again after that engineering difficulty had been overcome, and that it should be carried through to the coast, opening up and developing Canadian territory and connecting it with the cities on the coast. Now, it has been rather assiduously circulated that my opposition and the opposition of others with me in this respect was due not so much to good and patriotic reasons as to a desire to burk the construction of this road and to preserve the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am quite willing that any person shall form whatever idea he chooses as to my motives. That conclusion will vary, I suppose, according to the amount of charity and the like of that in the person who forms it, but I rest my case entirely upon the reasons which I give and on the policy which I think is the correct policy. I do not think any good Canadian will contravene the statement that, other things being equal, it is to the advantage of Canada that those roads which are meant for the development of Canadian raw resources and the opening up of Canadian territory should be constructed on Canadian soil. A trunk line running through that country and terminating on the Pacific coast, making a connection between those, as I hope very rich undeveloped resources in the Similkameen valley and the country adjoining, and the sea coast, and the large cities and the trading centres on the sea coast, would keep up that connection and make it quick and constant. There is no doubt that a road of that kind would promote the development of that country and inure to the best interests of Canada as a whole, better than would a system of branch or tapping lines from the United States, drawing off the undeveloped resources of our country for the purpose of working them up and developing them with the enterprise and capital and labour of another country.

It would be much better to have a trunk line along there in that way than branch lines running up from the roads in the United States, tapping our country at certain points and drawing off our resources in the way I have stated. If we do agree that that is the better plan, what is the reason why it should not be adopted? The only reason is that there are engineering difficulties and that a part of the Canadian country north of the International boundary line between certain limits, not very long as it is theoretically stated, in extent, extending some thirty of thirty-five miles, which will make it, if not next to impossible, very expensive to build the road, and which will make it a road less easily operated commercially, because of the height it has to ascend and descend again. I do not think it is anything too much to say that in the committee we were not treated to any information regarding these engineering difficulties which would be considered as adequate and satisfactory. The statement was made that there were engineering difficulties, that there would be heights running up to thousands of feet, and that the grades would have to be, if not very largely distanced out, pretty steep. But as regards engineering reports or engineering evidence, there was nothing satisfactory submitted to the committee. There were statements of lay men which may have been well enough so far as they went, but there was no testimony of engineers given. What objection then can be taken to the course that we suggest? If it be not considered well to make it a provision in the Act, at least make somebody responsible that these engineering difficulties shall be shown to exist before the line shall be allowed to diverge to the south of the international boundary. For customs and other reasons, it would be better to run north of the international boundary line. But if it is shown impossible to get a commercial line north of that, I would not take it upon myself personally to object to the divergence, provided that that diversion were limited in extent, and that as soon as the engineering difficulties were overcome, the line should go back to Canadian territory and pursue its way there. What is the objection to that? If in the committee we were not given any satisfactory testimony at all, why should we not tell the government, which has to take its duties and responsibilities, that it must get full information on that point, and then if engineering difficulties can only be reasonably overcome by diversion to the south of the line, let the government authorize that diversion. But there is another point. It is stated—I am not going to say how true that is—that the intention is to divert the line and by that means divert the traffic of that Similkameen country to the southern roads south of the boundary and consequently on to the smelters and the American coast trading cities. That is stated. It is stated on the other hand that that is not intended. Well, one statement is as good as another. If it be best that the company should build on our own ground, either insert that provision in the Act or let the government take the onus and responsibility of seeing that within reasonable time as much of the railway as possible is built in Canadian territory. What seems to be, so far as I can gather, the opinion of British Columbia—and what seems to be a reasonable opinion—is that, first of all and as soon as possible, the road should be built from Cloverdale in towards Princeton and in towards the Similkameen valley just as far and as rapidly as possible. If any one will take the railroad map of that country, he will see that Mr. Hill's lines tap our country now at seven different points, all of these lines running pretty closely north and south. There is a line built from New Westminster up to Cloverdale. That line at Cloverdale or near that point has a connection with the southern road; and it is to make it sure that that shall not also be simply a tapping branch, but that it is the intention of the company to bring their road from Cloverdale to the heart of the Similkameen that we think some provision should be made to see that that is done.

Mr. D. ROSS. What other lines besides what are known as the Hill lines in southern British Columbia are in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not discussing the question as to the competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway at all.

Mr. D. ROSS. If you will not permit the Hill line to go into British Columbia, how are you to get another railway in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. FOSTER. Again the hon. gentleman takes for granted something absolutely denied by myself. He takes for granted that I and those who think with me are opposed to Mr. Hill's lines going into that country. We are not. Let Mr. Hill build his line. Let him go right at it and build and finish and operate it, I would be glad to see the line running through there, but let there be fair guarantee that he will build his line through Canadian territory. That is all I want. It is not a question of trying to keep the ground for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Other things being equal, I would rather see the Canadian Pacific Railway build that line than any other company. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway has put a great deal of enterprise and capital and labour in opening up our new countries, in British Columbia as well as elsewhere in the west, and with less profit, for obvious reasons, in British Columbia than in most other parts of the country. If the Canadian Pacific Railway would put that line through, I would rather see them do it than the Hill line or any other from the south of the border. But if Mr. Hill asks simply for a franchise to build a road through Canadian territory, if the Canadian Pacific Railway has not yet pre-empted that territory and run its line through it, I am not raising any objection to Mr. Hill getting his franchise and building his line. He does not ask any subsidy from this country; and if he proposes to build without a subsidy through Canadian territory, it would have to be a mighty strong national reason that would cause me to raise any objection. But I do not want to see a road built which will make that country mainly tributary to the United States. I want to see a road built which will make that country do its particular work as a part of Canada. Our cities on the coast are more important to us than Seattle or Portland. Our smelting industry, which is not large now, but is bound to increase—because British Columbia is full of mineral and the country to the north is full of undeveloped minerals—is more important to us than the smelting industry of the United States.

We may not have many smelters in operation now, but they are beginning and they will grow. I would rather see our smelters do this work than United States smelters; I would rather Canadian labour should do all the work of bringing these products from the raw material of the mine to the finished article. That is why I would rather see the trunk lines that go through that country trending towards Canadian ports and traversing Canadian territory. Let me state again as emphatically as possible that I have no objection to Mr. Hill having a franchise to build the road. All I want is to make sure that he shall build the road, and that every mile that is not prevented by insurmountable engineering difficulties from being built on Canadian soil shall be built on Canadian soil, taking the products of the rich Similkameen region to our own ports and helping to build up the industries of our own country. I hope, therefore, it will not be possible for anybody to ask me why I am opposed to Mr. Hill building the road through Canada. I am not opposed to it. I want to see the diversion of the road as short as possible south of the boundary, and I want the road between Cloverdale and Princeton built as quickly as possible. My amendment tends toward both these ends. It throws upon the government a responsibility which they ought to be willing to take—first to make certain that the road shall be diverted south of the line only when engineering difficulties cannot reasonably be overcome; I say 'reasonably' because that is only fair. and, second, that they shall make certain that the road shall be built from Cloverdale to Princeton as quickly as can be reasonably done. The government has the power, and it is responsible to parliament; and it can take such guarantees and make such provisions as may be necessary. Now, who would be hurt if this amendment is carried? Certainly not British Columbia. British Columbia wants every mile of railway possible on her own territory—she would be foolish if she did not. She also wants her coast cities connected with the interior country as quickly as it can possibly be done. Let us get out of the notion that any of us are opposed to Mr. Hill building the road. Let us have the proper provisions and the proper guarantees, such as, I contend, my amendment will provide, and we will be glad to see this work undertaken. There is nothing dogmatic about this amendment. It simply says that the government must be sure that there is valid reason for diverting the road south of the boundary even for thirty-five miles. And, in the second place, the government must make as sure as they reasonably can that this road from Cloveradale to Princeton shall be built in a reasonable time. There is a part where it will come in from south of the boundary into Canadian territory where there will be pretty heavy building. That is the least profitable part of the country for the work of development, as I understand. It is more important that the part from Cloverdale to Princeton and the part connecting the Similkameen Valley with the coast cities should be quickly built.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has stated truly that this amendment was left over in the Railway Committee for the government to consider whether it would or would not accept the new conditions proposed. There are two conditions involved in the amendment, I will take those in turn. The first is that 'the Governor in Council shall grant no permission to construct any part of the proposed road south of the international boundary unless it be shown to be necessary in order to overcome engineering difficulties.' I do not see that there is very much difference between this drafting and that of the Bill, which provides:

Mr. FOSTER.

3. The company may,at such points on the international boundary line between the west bank of the Similkameen river and the Columbia river as the Governor in Council deems expedient for the purpose of avoiding difficulties in construction, make connections——

If there is any difference between these two, it seems to me it is very slight.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does not one put a responsibility on the government that is not imposed by the other?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If there is a difference it seems to me it is a very minute difference.

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill says: 'difficulties of construction.' That would seem to me to be only to the points of divergence. But my amendment puts upon the government the responsibility of any divergence at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not see the difference between one and the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What section is the Prime Minister referring to?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Section 3.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was speaking of another—I withdraw my remark.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then the Governor General is to select the point at which the road is to cross the international boundary. That means that the boundary must be crossed somewhere. It seems to me merely refining a little more to put the provision in the form in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) puts it. Then his amendment goes on:

—nor until some satisfactory guarantees are given that the line from Cloverdale to Princeton will be completed on Canadian territory within a reasonable time.

I do not know exactly what guarantees we could have in this matter. I cannot see why instructions should be given to the Governor in Council to see that this line shall be constructed on Canadian territory. I consider that is the object of the company to build this railway upon Canadian territory—that is the purpose of their charter. It is deemed absolutely essential that this connection between the coast of British Columbia and the Kootenay, the mining portion of the province should be given in some way or other.

I would have preferred that this communication were given by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They were first in the field, they have shown great enterprise, great energy and have done a great deal of work. Everything in that regard that has been stated by my hon. friend is absolutely true, in my own judgment. But for some reason or other the Canadian Pacific Railway, whether they are too busy elsewhere or not, have not given the people of British Columbia that communication which, it is to my knowledge, to the knowledge of my hon.

friend also, to the knowledge of all, that the people of British Columbia have been asking for years. Now, when a company comes forward which claims that it is able to give this communication, which asks permission to do so, which apparently is able to do so, has the power to do so, has all the necessary resources; under such circumstances, I would not take it upon myself to deny this advantage to the people of British Columbia, or even to retard the consummation of what they have desired for so long a time. This communication, I consider, is not only necessary to them, but absolutely essential to their welfare and development. It is indispensable to the welfare of British Columbia that there should be communication between the cities of the coast, Vancouver and Victoria, and the mining section in the Kootenay district. They have long been waiting for it, they have now an opportunity of getting it; and I would not take it upon myself even to retard for a moment the consummation of their earnest desire. Now, I agree with my hon. friend that this railway should be built on Canadian territory. Well, it is provided by this Bill, as it has come from the Railway Committee, that the Governor in Council shall be entrusted with the power and duty of seeing that it is kept upon Canadian territory, and not allowed to go out of Canadian territory except for adequate reasons.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the Prime Minister considered the fact that this road merely runs along inside the Canadian boundary line, and when it comes to a convenient point it crosses back into American territory; and from opposite that point branch lines, which will be found to be five or six times as long as the main line in Canada, will be run up in order to tap the mining districts of British Columbia and feed American cities?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know a single road built or projected on Canadian territory which is not tapped by the Americans. Let this railway be built on Canadian territory by all means, but this railway does not serve its purpose if it is denied access to American territory. Why, Sir, all our railways are tapped by American railways. The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago that this territory in British Columbia was already tapped at several different places by American railways. Possibly it is. But let me ask if there is any part of the Canadian frontier between the Pacific ocean and the River St. Lawrence which is not tapped at almost every mile by American railways? The necessities of the case require it. We built a road a few years ago, the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, a very useful road; but when that road was completed, one of the very first things it did was to obtain communication with the American side. The American traffic forms a valuable part of the traffic of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and this American connection increases the value of the business which it has developed in the mining districts. So I say: Put this road on Canadian territory by all means. But I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the powers which are vested in the Governor in Council are ample, and the Governor in Council will exercise those powers in order to keep it, if possible, on Canadian territory, and it is only allowed to be diverted when that is necessary in order to avoid great difficulties of construction. For these reasons, the government have come to the conclusion not to accept the amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the right hon. gentleman to suggest that clause 3a, proposed by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), is similar in some aspects to clause 3 of the Bill. The remark I made a moment before was in view of what I understood to be another comparison, namely, that between section 7 of the Bill as it now stands and the section proposed by the member for North Toronto. But if there is, as the Prime Minister says, very little difference between section 3a, now proposed to be added by way of amendment, and section 3, why, after all, is it likely that the proposed amendment would have any greater effect in retarding the construction than section 3 as it now stands? It seems to me to impose more responsibility upon the government. But I do not quite follow that portion of the right hon. gentleman's argument which indicated that there would be greater danger of unduly retarding the road.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that there would be much danger if we accepted either draft. I speak under correction, but in my judgment I do not see much difference between the first part of the amendment suggested by the member for North Toronto and the present drafting. At all events, we have the Bill as it has been considered by the Railway Committee, and I always hesitate to alter in any way the drafting adopted by that committee. My hon. friend, who has experience in these matters, knows that it is always an invidious task to amend a Bill under such circumstances. You may correct an error which any one thinks he sees in it, but after this Bill has been considered by the Railway Committee, I see no reason to depart from its finding.

Mr. LENNOX. As the Prime Minister says, it is a delicate matter to amend a Bill coming from the Railway Committee. The Railway Committee has already amended this Bill, and would have amended it further had it not been, as suggested by the Minister of Finance, that it might be better to leave it until the policy of the government had been ascertained. The Minister of Finance evidently regarded it as an important matter at that time; the Minister of Justice also regarded this Bill as probably a serious invasion of certain rights that we should protect. Therefore, I think I am not out of place in urging upon the government a little caution, a little delay perhaps, even the possibility of retarding the passage of this Bill for an hour or two, in the hope that we may arrive at a knowledge of the true condition of affairs and the way the Bill will affect the province of British Columbia. We have been told many times in this House about the supreme importance of sending different kinds of Bills to the Railway Committee for the purpose of having the facts fully ventilated and laid before the committee in a way that the House of Commons cannot easily accomplish.

This is a case that has peculiarly demanded that class of investigation. This is a case in which we have particularly needed that we should be put in possession definitely and distinctly by scientific men of certain information that will enable us to judge intelligently of whether or not the difficulties suggested by the promoters of the Bill exist. We have, as we have been told here to-night, had suggestions in the Railway Committee that there were engineering difficulties, but we have had no evidence in the Railway Committee from the promoters of the Bill of the actual existence of these engineering difficulties. It is not at all as if the matter had been overlooked. The engineer was there. There was expert testimony given. It was not expert testimony on behalf of the promoters of the Bill, but engineering testimony on the other hand that there were no insuperable or serious engineering difficulties in the way of the construction of a line in all Canadian Territory. It therefore became especially incumbent upon the promoters of the Bill, and it is, I submit, especially incumbent upon the government now to satisfy the House that these suggested engineering difficulties actually exist. The right hon. the First Minister admits that it is important, if possible, that we should have that line an all-Canadian line. That the Prime Minister is at times imbued with the desire of having an all-Canadian line was illustrated very well not very many sessions ago and I therefore felt when the committee was asked to send this matter to the House that we would have at once a declaration of policy by the government and that we would at least have the government announce that they would take upon themselves the duty in the interest of the whole country of ascertaining whether these engineering difficulties exist as a matter of fact. We know that the Canadian Pacific Railway have a charter to build, not by patches upon Canadian territory, but an all-Canadian line and that they undertake to build through and over these difficulties which are described by the Hill interests as being insurmountable.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. GALLIHER. They undertake to build but they do not build.

Mr. LENNOX. They undertake to build and they will build.

Mr. GALLIHER. If it suits them.

Mr. LENNOX. It has become the fashion in this House—I am glad that it is not the fashion outside the House to any great extent—to discredit the enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am glad to find that the right hon. the Prime Minister has to-night suggested that it is not altogether deserved, but I would be better pleased, if, when we find that the Canadian Pacific Railway, having a charter, propose to build through that territory, do not ask to build into American territory, and are willing to conserve our own traffic and our own interests in British Columbia, the government would recognize it to be their duty to see to it that these two railways shall be placed upon the same basis and upon equal terms. The Canadian Pacific Railway, as the right hon. the Prime Minister has admitted to-night, had done much to develop the country, it has shown great energy and enterprise and is doing every day of the year a large amount of work in promoting Canadian interests. That being the case, is it fair to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway: You shall be compelled to build up through the mountains on all-Canadian territory, and to the American line, with seven lines leading up to the International boundary waiting for the traffic of Canada to be diverted into American channels, with seven lines waiting in the Hill interest to grasp that traffic—I am speaking not in the interest of the Americans, but in the interest of the Canadian people.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. You have earned your money now; that will do.

Mr. LENNOX. I will ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Johnston) to take that statement back. He says that I have earned my money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Johnston) must withdraw that remark.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) has taken the observation in any offensive way whatever, I assure him that it was not so intended. I simply wished to convey the idea that I thought we were perfectly satisfied. Let me assure him that I did not intend the observation in any offensive way whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. Withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. If the hon. gentleman wishes it, I withdraw very fully.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that was the same hon. gentleman who made the same offensive remark to me in the committee.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I want the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to withdraw that and withdraw it instantly.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, I want the hon. member to withdraw that observation.

Mr. SPROULE. What is there to withdraw ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the point of order ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. The point of order is that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that I am the person——

Mr. FOSTER. No, no, he did not.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes you did.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He denies it.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the reference of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was to the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston) it should be withdrawn.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but it was not. The statement I made was that I supposed that was the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that is what I said.

Mr. GALLIHER. You said that you believed it was.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say I believed ; I said I supposed. It came so pat from the hon. gentleman that I supposed he had broken out before.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I am not quite satisfied with the statement of the hon. gentleman, and I only desire to say to him that if I had made that observation in the committee the other day, I would have been prepared to have stood behind it. I want him to withdraw the statement absolutely.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a circumstance which would lead me to deal kindly with the hon. gentleman. The gentleman who did say that, I denominated as a coward because he would not stand up and show himself openly. This hon. gentleman states that he would have been bold enough to have done it and under these circumstances, if the hon. gentleman says he did not say that, I withdraw all my remarks.

Mr. LENNOX. I regret that I cannot please both sides of the House, but I think we might conduct this business, which is certainly of very great importance, without trying to interrupt hon. members. I admit that I have not that fluency of speech and that command of argument that some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have, but I am convinced that I have a good sound case to argue and I am convinced that in standing up for the interests not of the people of the United States, but for those of Canada and for those of British Columbia particularly, I am discharging my duty, and whether it is pleasing to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House or not I shall claim that privilege. Now, it has been said that nobody is interested in this Bill except the people of British Columbia. I submit that is not the position of this matter. British Columbia may be said, perhaps upon a narrow view of the case, to have been the only party interested in it, so long as it was the subject of a provincial charter, but it has since become a matter of greater magnitude than concerns merely British Columbia, because this company has come to the Dominion parliament and the Dominion parliament, not only recently, but long ago declared this to be a work in the general interest of Canada.

Perhaps on some occasions this parliament has been too quick to declare that works are for the general advantage of Canada, but as that declaration has been solemnly made by parliament in this case, we must assume it is true ; and that being so, it is the duty of this parliament to see that all necessary investigations should be made—even if there is a temporary delay—into the conditions which would prevent the construction of this railway upon all Canadian territory. Is there a gentleman in this House so ignorant of the conditions that exist to the south of the international line—even the hon. gentleman who first interrupted me—who does not know that when we allow the deviation of our smelting trade from Canada to the United States, not only do we give to the United States the profit on the labour which should accrue to Canada, but we also afford an inducement to our young Canadians to go into the United States to seek that labour which they should have at home. Having regard to the fact that two prominent members of the administration are not in sympathy with this measure, it behooves us to consider it well. The Finance Minister pledged himself to the committee that this Bill should be carefully considered by the government and their policy announced on it ; it is a significant and unfortunate fact that the Minister of Finance, who is supposed to be best versed in financial matters, is not here to-night to give the House the benefit of his judgment. I see signs which convince me that the pledge given by the Minister of Finance has not been satisfactorily redeemed ; I have evidence that the government has given this matter only very casual consideration, because the Prime Minister himself has intimated that he is not aware of what the amendment is, although it was previously placed before the House. This is a question which not only affects the province of British Columbia, but the whole of the Dominion of Canada. British Columbia is not a province in which you can build a railway wherever you please, because its topographical conformation makes that impossible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Nine o'clock.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose the Speaker will know when it is nine o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for private Bills being exhausted, the House will resume the order of business.

Mr. LENNOX. I have something more to say at another time.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

House resumed debate on the motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier for the third reading of Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, on the motion for the third reading of this Bill I desire to propose an amendment similar to that which I have already proposed in Committee of the Whole. When I proposed this amendment in the committee the Minister of Justice criticised its wording more than the principle which it contained. I have therefore tried to meet his views by making a more perfect translation into English of this amendment, which I originally wrote in French. I have modified the wording slightly, and have added a few words at the end of paragraph D. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Paquet :

That all the words of the amendment be struck out, and the following substituted therefor : 16. Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if at the date fixed for the coming into force of this Act, the territory included in the said province were already a province, the word union in the said section meaning the said date :

2. The legislature shall have the right to pass laws with reference to education, but it shall always provide for, (a) the existence of separate schools and their enjoyment by the minority, Protestant or Catholic, who may claim them ; (b) the effective control of said schools in matters of teaching by the said minority ; (c) the full liberty for the majority in any school districts to have such schools as it may desire ; (d) the equitable and proportionate distribution between the majority and the minority of all moneys appropriated for education by the legislature of the province and of all moneys arising from the school fund established by the Dominion Lands Act.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Bergeron) :

Amendment (Mr. Bergeron) negatived.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I beg to draw your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has not voted.

Mr. SCOTT. I came into the chamber after the question was put. Under these circumstances I understand that the rules do not permit my vote to be recorded. If I am properly informed as to the amendment, I would have voted nay.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, each of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada when it entered the confederation came in with a school system of its own manufacture. That is all that is asked in relation to the elevation of the Northwest Territories into two provinces of the Dominion. I hold in my hand a motion which reads as follows:

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out and that the following words be inserted instead thereof:

Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House, with an instruction that they have power to strike out section 2 of the Bill, and to substitute the following section therefor:

2. The provisions of the British North America Act, 1867 to 1886, shall apply to the province of Alberta in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the other provinces heretofore comprised in the Dominion, except such provisions as in terms or by reasonable intendment are specially applicable to or affect one or more only and not the whole of the said provinces.

I shall not detain the House with any remarks on the motion further than to point out that if under the British North America Act the provinces are entitled to absolute control of educational affairs subject to the restrictive clauses of the British North America Act, well and good; but if under the British North America Act these new provinces would be subject to the legislation of 1875 and subsequent legislation, then we are satisfied that it should be so construed, and if separate schools are to be attached to the Northwest Territories which are now being erected into provinces, all we ask is that we stand by the British North America Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We might take the same division on this as was taken on section 16.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot see the object of this motion at all. What is proposed?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought I might save the taking of a division. The object of the motion I can explain to the right hon. gentleman at considerable length if he would like to hear it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We had better have a vote on it.

Amendment (Mr. Sam. Hughes) negatived.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle) moved :

That the Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House with instructions that they have power to strike out clause 16 of the said Bill and substitute the following therefor :

16. The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867 shall apply to the said province as if, at the date upon which this Act comes into force, the Territories comprised therein were already a province, the expression 'the union' in the said section being taken to mean the said date.

2. In the appropriation by the legislature of public moneys in aid of education, or in the distribution by the government of the province of any money arising from the school fund established by the Dominion Lands Act, there shall be no discrimination against the schools of any kind organized according to law.

He said : I need not explain that the object of this clause is purely and simply to enact the provisions submitted by the government in their first clause No. 16—that clause which was qualified by the hon. the Minister of Justice as an ideal one. The only difference is that I leave out the middle paragraph, which the Minister of Justice said was absolutely unnecessary. The position I take upon this question is the same as that which the government is taking upon the question of the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands. If this parliament is pledged by contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is equally pledged to the Catholic or Protestant minority in the Territories. I do not see how we can respect one pledge and not the other. Moreover, clause 16, as it has been amended by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont), to my mind, will create a very strange position indeed. Of course, I voted for the amendment of my hon. friend when that amendment stood by itself before the committee because it was based on the true principle that it is the right of the ratepayer and the father of a family to decide what kind of education his children shall receive. But when that amendment is connected with clause 16 it brings about a state of things which should be well put before the House and the country before a final vote is given. According to clause 16, as now before the House, it will be the right of the majority of every school district in the new provinces to decide what kind of religious teaching shall be given in the public schools. The legislatures will have no right whatever to interfere ; and the result will be that if the majority should happen to be of any denomination other than Protestant or Roman Catholic that majority may decide that the religious education given in the public schools will be one that will suit neither Roman Catholics nor Protestants, and neither this House nor the legislature will have any power to interfere. In that case, where will be the minority ? My hon. friend to my left says they will not send their children to the schools. Then what becomes of the right of the minority to have the school teaching such as we are promised by this amendment ? The government press have been saying that the effect of the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) will be to secure to the Catholics the right of having everywhere such religious teaching as they desire. But in a district where the Greek Orthodox Church, or the Mormons, or Jews, or others who are neither Protestant nor Roman Catholic, are in a majority, they will be able to dictate what kind of religious teaching will be had in the public schools, and a separate school cannot be formed by the secession of either the Protestant or Catholic minority. If the majority should be neither Catholic nor Protestant, you will deprive the Catholics of any religious instruction in the public schools, and they will be deprived of their right to secede under section 41 of the ordinances. So that their position would be worse than it is now. This answers the argument of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition who said the amendment of my hon. friend from Sasktchewan covered my point and something more. What he should have said is that the amendment, connected with clause 16 of this Bill and with clause 41 of the ordinances of 1901, does not cover my point, although it covers something never asked for by me or anybody else. It will prevent the local legislatures from dealing with the matter of religious education in the public schools.

Neither the local legislatures nor this parliament will be able to protect the Protestant or Catholic minority in any district where they both may be in a minority. I may be told that I am predicting an impossible state of things ; but I would point out that there is now litigation before the Supreme Court of Canada as to the relative rights of the Greek Orthodox Church and the Catholics on church matters, and we may expect before long the same condition will exist with respect to schools. Certainly before ten or twenty years will have elapsed that state of things will exist in a large portion of the school districts of the new provinces.

I need not explain further the purport of my amendment. Its object is to guarantee what this government and parliament have acknowledged to be a pledge given to the minority, that wherever they are in a majority they shall be authorized to have schools of their own, and wherever they are in a minority they shall be authorized to separate from the public schools. Clause 16, No. 2 does not cover that point, and the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont), although good in its spirit, does not cover it either, so that I shall record my vote on this motion as protesting against the abandonment of the pledge which this government and parliament have acknowledged as binding upon them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition respecting the legal aspect of the clause, and on further consideration, I think that my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) will find that if the majority in any district should happen to be either Catholic or Protestant, the right for the Protestant or Catholic ratepayers to establish a school undoubtedly exists. As to the right of the Mormons to teach their peculiar tenets in the Territories including the unsavoury one of polygamy, I submit, with all deference to my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that no such right exists in view of our Criminal Code.

Mr. BARR. But what about the Galicians and other denominations ? What position will they occupy ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not familiar with the doctrines of the Mormons any more than those of the Galicians. I assume that the Mormon doctrine goes in the direction of polygamy, and that cannot be taught in Canada.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I would draw your attention to the fact that the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) has not voted.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am paired with the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). Had I voted I would have voted 'nay.'

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved:

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be sent back to Committee of the Whole House with instructions that they have power to add the following paragraph after clause 2 of the Bill:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the legislative assembly of the province and in the proceedings of the courts, and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of such assembly, and all laws made by the legislature shall be printed in both languages: provided, however, that the said legislative assembly may by law or otherwise regulate its proceedings and the manner of recording the publishing the same and the regulations so made shall be embodied in a proclamation which shall be forthwith made and published by the Lieutenant Governor in conformity of the law and thereafter shall have full force and effect.

He said: Just one word of explanation. This is the law of the Territories at the present time, and, under the terms of the Bill, that law would be continued until altered by the provincial legislature. The law was enacted in 1891. Previous to 1891 the scope of the law was wider. The French language had the same status as the English language in the Northwest assembly. This amendment, passed in 1891, permits the assembly of the Territories to regulate its proceedings as it thinks fit and to adopt the English language. It has done so. Under this amendment, if adopted by the House, the legislatures of the two provinces would be free to regulate their own proceedings absolutely and to adopt the English language. The only right that is safeguarded by this amendment is the right to use the French language in the courts and also in the debates if a member of the House sees fit to use that language, and it provides for the translation of the statutes. It maintains to that extent, and to that extent only, the agreement to which I referred at length when I proposed this amendment in the first instance.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) When this question came up for discussion last Friday, I was obliged to be absent; hence my desire to take advantage of this opportunity to say a few words in order to explain the vote that I will be called upon to give upon this amendment. To begin with, I must remark that this proposition coming from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) emanates from a source that we should not and could not have anticipated. In truth, when that hon. member delivered an address on the constitutional question affecting the schools in the new provinces, we did not differ in opinion, and we all were unanimous in recognizing that his speech was evidence that the hon. member had thoroughly studied the question. During the debate on the second reading of this Bill, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier defined the principles that should guide us in the exercise of our powers, as a parliament, regarding the constitution of the new provinces created in the west. At page 3071, the hon. member expressed himself thus:

My interpretation of section 2 of the Imperial Act of 1871, is that that Act clearly gives us the creative power. It enables us to decree the establishment of a province, to constitute it by defining its limits and entering into other details which are absolutely necessary for the purpose of such creation, but the moment that act has been performed our power is exhausted and the new province comes under the control of the different clauses of the Act of 1867, and these clauses apply in their entirety to it.

The hon. member therefore stated that, in his opinion, this parliament has not the right to change the provisions of the constitution, nor to alter it in any way, when we apply it to these western territories; all that which we could do, to his mind, was merely to create those provinces, to define and limit their powers, and that from the moment we have defined their powers, the federal parliament has exhausted its own legislative power. Such is the theory advocated by the hon. gentleman. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier decided to vote for clause 16, such as proposed by the government, it is because that principle was consecrated and recognized by the constitution as the one constructed by the hon. gentleman himself, and that he considered it opportune to remove all doubts. But the hon. gentleman is not the only one to claim that this parliament had not the right to limit the powers of the new provinces. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) followed in his footsteps, and at page 3496, I read the following in his speech of March 30 last:

In speaking of the position taken by my leader, I wish to say openly that, to my mind, he made an admirable speech to which nobody can take exception. We may not all share the conclusions to which he came, but every man on this side, and I believe on the other side as well is convinced that the leader of the opposition spoke in all sincertity without any bias, and influenced solely by a desire for the welfare of Canada. So much is that the case, that if in that amendment of his, ten words were struck off at the end, I would be disposed to support it. And in doing so I would be standing on a good principle, namely, provincial autonomy and provincial rights; and in my opinion clause 93 of the British North America Act would give the new provinces the school system they have to-day. But as a doubt has been expressed by the Minister of Justice, I would have clause 16.

As will be seen, the hon. member for Beauharnois did affirm the very principle formulated by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). As I said a moment ago, there is ground for surprise at seeing the hon. member for Jacques Cartier laying down a proposition to restrict the rights of these provinces, rights that are evidently recognized as theirs by the British North America Act.

The hon. member stated also that we were abolishing the French language; but we are not doing away with the French language, and it will continue to exist by law. But that is not the issue before us; what we are dealing with now, is whether or not we should place a restriction upon the liberty of the provinces. That is the question. It is now a matter of formulating the principle that this parliament has not the right to enact without any necessity, special provisions, when making a constitution for the new provinces.

Now, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier after having upheld that position and having also supported his leader, even to the school question, was obliged to abandon him. The hon. leader of the opposition had, likewise, followed the hon. member as long as he could do so, he paid him back, he supported him down to the moment of voting exclusively, but there his zeal stopped.

The hon. gentleman having advocated the principle that we had not the power to give the new provinces the constitution we wanted to give them, exclaimed: 'Why, if you restrict the power of the provinces on the school question, why not also do the same as to all their powers'? We made answer to this, that it was necessity alone that could justify the government in defining more clearly clause 93 of the constitution.

Now, the hon. member for Labelle stated that, in his opinion, this motion did not go far enough, and he moved an amendment to the amendment. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier claimed that the legislature should have the power to abolish the French language in its proceedings, as enacted in the motion passed in 1890. He considered that it was a question of policy and that the legislature should be left free to deal with the question as it deemed fit. The hon. member for Labelle wished to take that power away from the legislatures, and yet the hon. member for Jacques Cartier supported the amendment moved by the hon. member for Labelle. But if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was of the opinion that it was but fair to leave it in the hands of the legislatures to abolish or to maintain the French language, what are the grounds which have compelled him, since he moved his amendment, to change his mind?

In 1890, the hon. member for Beauharnois voted in favour of a proposition similar to that of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, allowing the legislative assembly of the Territories to abolish the use of the French language in their proceedings, whenever they shall deem it opportune to do so. He voted for that resolution, with all the Conservative members of the day. How, then, could he vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle, as he did the other day?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Does my hon. friend believe that we are not bound by clause 16 of the 'Bill of Rights' submitted by the delegates from the Red River settlement in 1870 to the government of Canada, which provides for the use of the dual language throughout the whole extent of the Northwest? Does not the hon. member believe that the pledge is being now broken by the abolition of the French language.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) I think the hon. the Prime Minister, amongst others, has demonstrated in a most absolute manner that the contention of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier was indefensible. I do not wish to go now into the merits of that question. This question had been discussed by this parliament in 1900 and this House has allowed the abolition of the French language in the Northwest. The legislature of those Territories had been authorized by a vote of this House to do away with the French language. A most significant fact, that cannot escape the attention of most members is this, that when the Bill was submitted to this House, the vast majority of members approved of it. Take the speeches that were delivered during the debate on the second reading of the Bill, and you will see, Mr. Speaker, that not one of all those who spoke has found fault with the government for not providing for the use of the French language in the legislatures of the new provinces.

I would like to know if among all those members, who then spoke, there was to be found one single speaker who made the slightest reservation in favour of the French language. For my part I did not hear any. Did not my hon. friend the member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne), give his unqualified approval of the Bill to the 21st February?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) On the school question, I did approve of the Bill, but not on the use of the French language.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) I say that there was no question of the French language, that no complaint was made that its use was not prescribed, and I affirm that no member, before voting on the second reading, had made any reservation on that point, nor blamed the government for not having provided for the use of the French language. Moreover, how comes it, that the 'Club Jacques-Cartier' of Montreal, which showed so much zeal in regard to this Bill, that had petitions circulated, did not think of that omission of the government? And the Conservative newspapers, I will say further, the opposition newspapers such as the 'Nationaliste,' for example, did not think of that slip. The correspondent of that paper, Pont Bernard, on the 26th February, referred to the debate raised by this Bill, and to the speech made by the Premier, but he did not say a single word regarding the omission concerning the use of the French language. No person, at that time, had noticed that awful omission, and it was only later on that, for the purpose of having a vote, it was thought of.

As I said, it is a most remarkable fact, that, after the second reading of the Bill, no person had stated that the French Canadians, in the Territories, had an absolute right to the maintenance of the French language. As a matter of fact, I have not heard of any representations having been made to the government on the matter, up to that date.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) Why ?

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) On the grounds that were so ably set forth by the hon. the Prime Minister ; on this ground, namely, that under the constitution, we have a right to the use of the French language in the Dominion parliament, before the federal courts, and before the courts and in the legislature of the province of Quebec, but nowhere else. That is the right provided for by the constitution of 1867. But, I may be told that there was a law passed in 1877, which provides for the use of the French language. We do not repeal that law.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) Does my hon. friend pretend that when this Bill is passed, the law of 1877 will not be repealed ?

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) The law of 1877 will be repealed ; but by that very fact, the French language will not be abolished. I maintain that under this Bill, we are not doing away with the use of the French language. I hold, moreover, that under the constitution, we have no right to impose that restriction. We have the power to do it. You may have the power to do a thing without being bound to do it ?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) We have the power ?

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) Does my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier state that we have not the power ?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Have we that power ?

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) I have maintained that we have the power. The hon. member for Labelle has stated the same. He could then bring forward this motion, without stultifying himself.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) The hon. member should not forget that I grounded myself upon the statement made by the Minister of Inland Revenue, who declared that, for us, the Bill of Rights of 1870 was sacred. I argued that if we are bound by the Bill of Rights on the school question, we are also bound as concerns the use of the French language.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) My hon. friend is nw abjuring the principle which he has laid down.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I have been enlightened by the argument made by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) Precisely, but it is regrettable that the hon. member did not allow himself to be enlightened upon other points by the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue. The school question is one thing and the use of the French language is another thing.

We should be very solicitous about the autonomy of the provinces. We are bound to give them all the rights conferred upon them by the constitution. That constitution restricts the powers of the provinces, as to the educational question, but not as to the language. That restrictive provision is to be found in article 93, with which we are all familiar. The provision relating to the French language is limited only to the province of Quebec, and to the federal parliament, and it applies nowhere else. Could the government impose this new restriction on the western provinces, the more so as our French speaking fellow-countrymen are so few in numbers there that they would not even speak French in the legislature, were they given that right ? The French Canadian population in the west represent but about four per cent of the total population ; such being the figures laid before the House without being challenged by anybody. Each legislature will have 25 members, making 50 in all. According to that ratio of 4 per cent, there would only be one French member in each legislature. That there may be an assembly, at least three people are needed, and as that French member would be alone, he would have to speak French to himself.

To my mind it is not a matter of sentiment, but it is one of principle. I do not call in question the good faith of any hon. member. I am quite willing to believe that the mover of this motion is a sincere convert. To my mind, this is a constitutional matter, and I say that we should not impose, without an absolute necessity, any restrictions on the new provinces. This view of mine tallies with the statement I made on the first reading of the Bill. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), is of a different opinion, and I regret very much that I cannot see this matter in the same light as he does. For us, it is a very delicate duty to be obliged to vote against the binding use of the French language, but we have to follow the wise dictates of reason rather than those of sentiment.

The present circumstances recall to my mind an anecdote. A great Greek orator one day declared at a public meeting in Athens that he had devised a great scheme for the good of his country, but that he could not inform his audience of it. He begged of them to point him out a person to whom he could communicate his plan. Socrates was the person selected. Socrates, being informed of it, returned to the Greeks and told them that nothing would be more useful than the project in question, but he added that nothing could be more unjust. The people, then, with one voice, refused at once to be a party to the scheme. Their example should be a guide for us. It is regrettable that public men should have to pronounce upon delicate matters that touch their national pride and dignity. I, therefore, consider that this motion, under the circumstances, is inopportune.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA. (Labelle.) (Translation.) Before moving an amendment to the amendment, moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier—that is to say before making the same motion that I made on Friday—I wish to offer a few remarks in reply to my hon. friend the member for St. John and Iberville, (Mr. Demers), I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the language that he has used, which contrasts happily with the stump-speech wherewith another hon. gentleman honoured me last Friday on the same subject. No more to-day than last week do I propose replying to that language, but I will take the liberty of saying that I was surprised at the applause with which certain French Canadian members, so-called Liberals, received those passages in the speech of the member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) which insulted the memory of a man whom the Liberal party had long claimed as its founder and as the most illustrious of its leaders.

Mr. ETHIER. (Translation.) Who ?

Mr. BOURASSA. (Papineau). (Translation.) It is scarcely necessary that I should strive to refute an old time calumny long known to be false, not only by the disciples and admirers of Papineau, but even by his opponents. To that colleague who deemed it fit to unearth that calumny and to those who cheered him, I will simply recall the words used by a great French writer in reply to the insult launched by an obscure calumniator against the memory of an illustrious man. 'A filthy insect may soil his statue; but the wind that blows carries off the insect and the stain, and the marble remains intact in its imperishable beauty.'

The first argument brought forward by the hon. member for St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers), and that upon which he most depended to oppose the motion of the member for Jacques Cartier, is that no one here—referred to the maintaining of the French language, during the debate that preceded the second reading of this Bill. I agree that from the standpoint of narraw logic, that argument might have some weight; but I do not think I shall have much trouble in reputing it and in explaining why I did not deal with this question, at the beginning of the discussion. It is needless to recall to the House the explosion of fanaticism that greeted the attitude taken, in the first place, by the government in connection with the educational clause. From the outset of the debate, the leader of the opposition laid down a proposition that narrowed the discussion to the consideration of the principle of the interference of the federal power in educational matters. When I spoke during that debate, I squarely opposed the proposition of the leader of the opposition and the policy of his party on that subject, and gave a loyal support to the position taken by the government. I did not then think it wise to introduce into the discussion the consideration of the subject which we are now dealing with. I had, however, decided to move an amendment similar to that of the member for Jacques Cartier, or rather to move the amendment that I submitted to the House on Friday, and that in a moment I will repeat. I have, moreover, no fault to find with my colleague who has got ahead of me, and I do not hesitate in any way to give him my support, while yet proposing to impart a more complete scope to his amendment.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier is accused of seeking to make political capital out of this question. It is strange that the government members and newspapers should so treat the hon. member. When he supported the policy of the government, the 'Herald' and the organs of the cabinet could not find language sufficiently eulogious to sing the praises of his patriotism. To-day, when he is not in harmony with them, but while he continues to uphold the rights of the Catholic and French minority in the west, of which the Liberal party pretends to be the champion, they have only insults to heap upon him. As to me, I am in accord with him on this question which affects our national honour, as I was in accord with him on the school question, the solution of which affects to such a degree the minority of the west and the prosperity of the whole country. I decided from the very start, to take in all these questions a stand in conformity with my convictions, without any regard for the interests and the intrigues of the cliques.

I was sufficiently liberal to consider all propositions submitted to this House according to their intrinsic merits, and to give them my support, no matter from whom they emanate, if I find them in accord with my principles and convictions. This, perhaps, is in what my liberalism differs from that of a number of my colleagues on the right.

Upon the constitutional ground, whereon the hon. member for St. John and Iberville, based his second line of defence, he will allow me to tell him that he entrenches himself too easily behind the general and absolute proposition that the Prime Minister has completely disposed of the theory of the member for Jacques Cartier. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Demers) attaches no importance whatsoever to the Bill of Rights which the delegates from the Red River presented to the Federal government in 1870. He denies the existence of the contract that arose from the acceptance of that document by the Federal authorities. He does not agree with his leader on that point. The Premier recognizes the existence of the contract, but he denies that the obligations born thereof extend beyond the province of Manitoba.

The hon. gentleman further wholly disagrees with another of his leaders, the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur), who not only admits the existence of the argeement, but has recalled it in the course of his argument as made on behalf of the people of the Northwest Territories, as well as on that of the people of Manitoba.

I have already clearly defined my position on the subject. I entirely agree with the Minister of Inland Revenue. I believe in the existence of the agreement, and I do not find anything in the records of this House to warrant the contention of the Prime Minister. I cannot bring myself to believe that in tracing the boundaries of Manitoba, the Dominion parliament have thereby shown their intention of denying to the French speaking people settled in the remainder of the Territories, the guarantees which they granted to that part of the population comprised within the limits of the new provinces. Now then, if the Minister of Inland Revenue and myself are right, would not the compact whereby the Dominion government is bound to guarantee to the Catholic minority in the Northwest their separate schools, bind them to maintain at the same time the official use of the French language, since these two constitutional rights were both included in the Bill of Rights presented by the delegates from the Red River and accepted by the Dominion parliament? I willingly acknowledge the ability of the member for St. Johns in all legal matters; but, with all due respect, I think I may, in a matter of this kind, abide rather by the opinion of the Minister of Inland Revenue, who is also an eminent lawyer.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) Will the hon. gentleman state what paragraph of the constitution would warrant the enforcing of the use of the French language on the western provinces?

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) On this point as well as on the other, my colleague will allow me to stand by the opinion of another of his leaders, a legal authority of still greater eminence than the Minister of Inland Revenue, I mean the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). That hon. gentleman has clearly set forth the difference which exists between the letter and the spirit of the constitution. Of course, the Confederation Act has no provision which defines the powers of the Dominion parliament in this transaction. But, as stated by the hon. Minister of Justice, beside and above the written law, there is a constitutional doctrine, which it is difficult to define, growing out of the gradual and reasoned carrying out of the very principles embodied in the constitution. The Act of 1867 provided at the outset solely for the organization of the provinces then constitutional. Even before entering confederation, these provinces enjoyed self-government; they had their parliament, their official tongue, their rules of parliamentary procedure. The idea did not occur to the fathers of confederation to alter that condition of things; but in establishing the Dominion parliament, they did so on a basis in harmony with the rights and traditions of the two elements which make up the Canadian nation; and that is why they provided that the French and English tongues would be, on equal terms, the official language of Canada. Later on, the Dominion parliament acquired those immense western territories out of which were carved the province of Manitoba and those of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These territories were acquired in the name and with the money of the whole Canadian people, French as well as English, Catholic as well as Protestant. And when parliament established the former of these provinces, they did not forget the rights of the French Canadian people, they deemed it fair and reasonable that the two official languages of Canada be also declared to be such in the province of Manitoba. Does the hon. member for St. Johns contend that the legislators of 1870, that the Macdonalds, the Cartiers, the Holtons, the Huntingtons, that all those eminent statesmen who were then at the head of both parties, broke the constitution of 1867 when, in 1870, they recognized the rights of the French language in Manitoba.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) Circumstances have changed.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) In what respect?

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) As the Prime Minister has explained, the French Canadians were numerous enough at the time to warrant the official recognition of the French language in Manitoba; that reason does not exist in the Territories to-day.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) That is not at all the contention set forth by the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman acknowledges the existence of the moral agreement entered into in 1870. But he suggests that its scope is limited to the province of Manitoba and that it would not be possible to make it applicable to the other western provinces. I contend that the right hon. gentleman has not adduced the slightest evidence in support of that statement. However, the fact remains that the makers of the Manitoba constitution have enacted section 23 provided for the official use of the French language in that province; and if they had the right to do so, why should we be debarred from imposing the same terms on the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I shall go further: I contend that not only have the promoters of the Act of 1870 not violated the constitution of 1867, but they have, on the contrary, been inspired by its fundamental principle, in granting to the French language in Manitoba the same rights which the constitution itself grants to the Dominion parliament. And if we wish ourselves to remain faithful to that principle, we should follow their example and provide that the French and English tongues will be for ever, and on an equal footing, official in Alberta and Saskatchewan, two provinces cut out, as was Manitoba, from those vast territories which are the property of the whole Canadian people. What I claim, is the carrying out of the same principle which was applied in connection with the establishment of the Dominion itself. It is the principle which Sir John Macdonald advocated when he proclaimed that there were no longer in Canada victors and vanquished, but two allies whose rights, equal by virtue of the constitution, are not measured by the numbers and riches of the various groups. That is the principle which is embodied in the constitution of Manitoba. That is the principle which I would have recognized and applied to-day. I am not breaking the constitution, but parliament will be breaking it, should they reject my proposal and that of the member for Jacques Cartier.

The hon. member for St. John's has referred to the small numbers of French speaking people in the Territories. The Solicitor General argued on the same lines, when he stated that we had no right to claim the official recognition of the French language in the Northwest Territories, because the French speaking people were not as numerous as the Germans, the Doukhobors or the Mormons. The Prime Minister spoke in a similar strain, when he stated that the French Canadians in Massachusetts have stronger claims to the official recognition of their tongue in that state, than the French speaking people have in our western provinces. Have we really reached that point? Are we, with one stroke of the pen, to blot out 150 years of our history; and on this Canadian soil, which our ancestors opened up to civilization, under the British flag which we twice saved from the savage onslaughts on the part of Anglo-Saxon Protestants from the neighbouring republic, under this constitution which is the mere outcome of the compact entered into by the two great groups of the Canadian nation, are we to be told that we are entitled to no more consideration than our fellow countrymen who have drifted to a foreign land? Is that really the reward coming to us after a century and a half of unfaltering loyalty to British institutions? Is that the result of the compact loyally gone into in 1867 between English and French speaking Canadians?

In order to do away with a proposal resting on the wide and solid foundation which I have mentioned, subterfuges are resorted to. It is argued that the original compact and the rights of the French language in the west have already been interfered with by parliament in 1890. That is only a pretense. I have a higher notion of the duties and responsibilities devolving on the representatives of the Canadian nation. If the parliament of 1890 has made a mistake, that is no reason for us to repeat it and aggravate it. If parliament in 1890 misapprehended the work of the fathers of confederation and of the makers of the Manitoba constitution, it is our bounden duty to correct that mistake. Parliament in 1890 abolished the use of the French language in the legislative assembly; and now that injustice becomes an argument for those who wish to carry through that sinister work and do away with the printing in French of statutes and legal proceedings. An effort is made to palliate that wrong by covering it up with a further crime. To that I answer boldly: Instead of resuming the work initiated by parliament in 1890, let us retrace our footsteps and take the stand taken formerly by the promoters of the Act of 1870.

In this connection there has been some quibbling. It has been contended that we are not doing away with the French language, but that we are simply leaving to the legislature in the new provinces the right to act as they think fit. That is another attempt at hedging. We all know what fate is reserved to the French language if provincial legislatures are granted full sway. Past experience is sufficient to enlighten us in that respect. When, in 1890, Sir John Thompson moved that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories be granted the right to decide in what tongue its proceedings would be carried on, the then leader of the opposition, to-day Premier of this Dominion (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) seconded his motion. He drew attention to the fact that there was not at the time a single French Canadian member in the legislative assembly. He added that if the French minority should elect a single representative, the English-speaking majority would, no doubt, refrain from abolishing the use of the French language. What was the outcome? In 1892, Mr. Haultain moved the abolition of the French language. At the time there were two French Canadian representatives in the legislature. One of them, Mr. Prince, spoke on behalf of the rights of the minority, appealed to the spirit of fairness of the majority, claimed equal rights for the two great Canadian nationalities ; but his efforts were in vain, and the French language was done away with. So, then, we are in a position to know what are the feelings towards us of the English-speaking majority in the west ; and if we are anxious to perpetuate in these provinces the conditions of the compact of 1867, if we are anxious to carry on the work of the makers of the Manitoba constitution, if we are anxious to maintain the constitutional basis which I have referred to, let us introduce in the Bills submitted to us a clause guaranteeing the rights of the minority against any interference similar to that of which the English majority has been guilty in 1892. Instead of seeking in our past experience an excuse for our present inactivity, I find therein a lesson which should induce us to define clearly the rights of the minority and safeguard them by means of a precise and unmistakable enactment. Let us not delude ourselves in the matter ! If the House rejects my proposal and that of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, then let us give up all hope as to the rights of the French language in the west. French Canadian members who are fighting us are making for the downfall of our nationality ; and should parliament reject our amendment, I say an essential principle of our constitution is being violated.

Let each one of us consult his conscience and realize what responsibility he is assuming just now. As for me, I refuse to take a hand in this unpatriotic work.

The Prime Minister recalls the obligations which parliament has assumed towards the Canadian Pacific Railway company. He does not hesitate to go counter to the letter and spirit of the constitution in order to secure the rights of that powerful corporation ; and in this connection he has the support of the whole House ; the agreement is considered sacred ; and all enactments, all constitutions are bound to disappear in order to secure its full carrying out. Why, then, should the no less sacred obligations which parliament and the Canadian people have assumed towards the French people of the west be violated ? Is it because that powerful Canadian Pacific Railway Company commands a greater number of votes than the French minority in the west ? I refuse to measure or weigh by such a standard my moral responsibilities and obligations. I give my support to the government when they wish to compel the western provinces to respect the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ; but I regard as still more sacred the rights of my fellow-countrymen ; and that is why I am moving in this House a provision which guarantees those rights still more completely than the amendment introduced by the member for Jacques Cartier. I wish to blot out the wrong committed by the legislators of 1890, and to revert to the constitutional basis laid down by parliament in 1870.

I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Lavergne, member for Montmagny, that the amendment introduced by the member for Jacques Cartier be amended by striking out the last clause beginning by the word 'provided.'

The Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. (Translation.) The hon. member for Labelle, knows that there is a principle which all Liberals, and particularly French-speaking Liberals have always held sacred, and that is the absolute right of the provinces to make their own laws. It is an historical fact, well known to all, that if we have to-day a federal, instead of a legislative union, that is due to the persistent efforts of the French Canadians, who, in order to secure self-government, in order to be in a position to legislate for themselves, and to settle all questions of internal economy have insisted on having that division of powers implied in a federal union. Well, among the rights embodied in section 92 of the constitution, there are some which are perhaps more important than all others ; I mean property and civil rights. The language question is one of civil rights.

I deny the statement which has just been made by the hon. member for Labelle, that, under the constitution enacted in 1867—I am mistaken, to which we freely gave our assent in 1867—the French language was put on an equal footing in the various provinces.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) I think the right hon. Prime Minister is mistaken ; that is not what I said. I said that each of the original provinces had preserved its rights ; but that the French language had been put on an equal footing with the English in the Dominion parliament, and that I considered we should do the same as regards the new provinces.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. (Translation.) I am very much pleased to hear that statement ; in the heat of the debate the hon. member seems to have gone beyond what he intended to say. At any rate, if, in this House, we have the right to use both languages, it is not simply a theoretical right. It is because the great majority of the province of Quebec send French Canadian representatives to parliament.

I am now coming to the principle expressed by the hon. member for Labelle—and I trust he will recognize it as I do on all occasions—and that is that the rights of the provinces are absolute within the limits of the constitution, and that among these rights there is the freedom to legislate as regards the language to be used in the courts and the legislative assembly.

Now, if the House agreed to that amendment, as desired by the hon. member for Labelle, and if we inserted it in the constitution which we are enacting for the province of Alberta and for that of Saskatchewan, we would be interfering thereby with one of the rights of these provinces, that of deciding in what language the proceedings will be carried on in the legislatures.

There is one other thing which he will recognize. In the constitutions which we are giving to Alberta and Saskatchewan, we have deliberately restricted the rights of the provinces to legislate on educational matters. We have done so under the authority granted by section 93 of the constitution. For, in matters of education, the rights of the provinces are not absolute; they are restricted by the powers of interference of the Dominion parliament. We have done so with a view to remaining faithful to the principle laid down, whereby in matters of education the fundamental right of the provinces is limited, in order to safeguard separate schools. My hon. friend stated a moment ago that we had refrained from dealing with the French language question, on account of the commotion which the discussion on separate schools had given rise to. Does my hon. friend think that the excitement has now subsided? Is he of opinion that the agitation is about to cease, and that he may safely to-day do what he considered unadvisable two or three months ago? I ask him, is he any more justified in taking that stand just new than he would have been a few weeks ago? No; we would have been grievously amiss if we had given further cause to the agitation already on foot.

If my hon. friend were able to point out in the constitution a single clause stating that the French language shall have official recognition in every province, I would be ready to agree with him. But he will seek in vain in the whole British North America Act a provision dealing with the French language in the same way as schools are dealt with. Schools have been put on a different footing. Exception has been made for them; but no such exception has been made as regards the French language.

I need not tell my hon. friend of Labelle that I am as proud of my tongue as he himself may be, that I am as proud of my race as he is, and that I am anxious to see it respected in the other provinces. If the French Canadians, however, are desirous that their rights be respected in the other provinces, they, should always be the first to abide by the constitution.

As a matter of fact, I do not at all agree with my hon. friend for Jacques Cartier (Mr Monk) as to the guarantee which he claims to find in the Bill of Rights. But another question comes up here: Is not that merely an illusory right? Of what use would it be, following on the enactment of 1890? According to the member for Labelle, parliament committed a wrong, in 1890. In my opinion, parliament did not do anything of the sort. If there had been a number of French-speaking members in the Northwest legislature in 1890, if there were a number of these French-speaking members in that legislature to-day, he would have no reason to fear the emergency he refers to. But I need not recall to the hon. member for Labelle that the hopes he entertains regarding the development of the French idiom in the Northwest will not materialize.

I remember—I was not here then, but it is an historical fact—that Sir George Cartier speaking from the very seat which I occupy at present, stated, in 1870, that the province of Manitoba, which was then being created, would be a second Quebec. Sir John A. Macdonald made a similar statement, but these hopes have not materialized; the tide of French Canadian emigration did not flow towards that province, as was then expected.

In 1890, two Acts were passed by the Manitoba legislature, one abolishing separate schools, and the other abolishing the official use of the French language. Enormous efforts were made to prevent the abolition of separate schools, but as regards the French language, what steps have been taken? Sir John Thompson stated in a memorandum, that the Act doing away with the official use of the French language was entirely ultra vires. Nevertheless, no steps were taken to have it repealed. Why? Because the French-speaking people out there did not care to undertake the fight, being too weak, and, I imagine, realizing that there was no need for the use of that language in the legislature. Well, to-day, in these territories where French Canadians are so few, of what avail would it be to grant a right which would limit the power of the legislature on that point.

I regret that it should be so, but I for one intend to vote against these amendments. I am not ignorant of the consequences which may result therefrom; but even in face of these, I do not hesitate to say that I trust French Canadians will be the first on this occasion, as on any other of the same kind, to respect the constitution which guarantees their rights in the province of Quebec.

House divided on the amendment to the amendment.—(Mr. Bourassa.)

Amendment (Mr. Monk) negatived.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation,) moves :

1. That the Bill be not now read a third time but be recommitted to a committee of the whole House with an instruction that they have power to amend it, by adding the following as subsection 2 of section 2 :—

2. Such rights to separate schools and such educational privileges as are guaranteed or granted to the Catholic or the Protestant minority in the Northwest Territories, under chap. 50, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, shall be continued by this constitution to the minorities of the said provinces.

I do not deem it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to go again at any length over the grounds which I gave to the House last week to justify the passing of this amendment, but let it suffice to state that I intend to embody in the constitution of the two new provinces the provisions which I find in chap. 30 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 14.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman having seconded the motion of the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), he has no right to speak again to the motion.

The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) has already spoken on the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). He has no right to move an amendment, because he has already seconded a previous amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the point is well taken.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation). I never spoke on the motion ; but in answer to the objection raised by the hon. minister, I may say that if my name has been given by the Speaker, as having seconded the motion, it was altogether without my knowledge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the point has been well taken. If the hon. member desires to appeal from the ruling of the chair of course, he may.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). I have an amendment which I desire to make to the motion of the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to read the Bill a third time. The motion which I propose to offer in amendment is similar to the one which I had the privilege of introducing when the matter was under discussion in the committee. The intention of that motion was that the distribution of the local seats in the province of Alberta should be referred to a commission of judges of the Supreme Court residing in that province. While this matter was being discussed in the committee I assigned then reasons which I had hoped would have induced the government to have looked at the proposal in a favourable light and to have referred this matter to a commission of judges. I do not propose to repeat the arguments that I then assigned or the reasons why I thought that this matter should be referred to a commission of judges. I therefore will move, seconded by Mr. Herron :

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out, and that the following words be inserted instead thereof :

Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House with an instruction that they have power to strike out section 12 of the Bill and to substitute the following section therefor :

12. Until the said legislature otherwise provides the legislative assembly shall be composed of twenty-five members to be elected to represent the electoral divisions hereinafter mentioned.

(a) Such division shall be made by a board of commissioners consisting of at least three persons resident in the said province and being judges of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories who shall for that purpose be appointed by letters patent under the great seal immediately after the coming into force of this Act, and who shall divide the said province into twenty-five electoral divisions.

(b) The letters patent appointing the commissioners shall require the commissioners in making the divisions to have due regard to the distribution of population, the public convenience, the existing local divisions and such other considerations as appear to them best calculated to do substantial justice.

(c) In case of the death or resignation or refusal of any one or more of such commissioners to act a successor or successors shall in like manner be appointed ; and in the event of their being no resident judge or judges available any judge or judges of the said Supreme Court may be appointed such successor or successors.

(d) Within a time to be limited by the said letters patent the commissioners shall complete such divisions and report the same to the Lieutenant Governor of the said province setting forth in such report the boundaries of the electoral divisions to which such report refers, and the ranges, townships and sections comprised therein and shall assign an appropriate designation to each electoral division. Upon receipt by the Lieutenant Governor of the said province of the report of the commissioners completing the divisions aforesaid the respective territories described as constituting the respective electoral divisions into which the said province shall have been divided as aforesaid shall become and be the electoral divisions of the said province as if the same had been so set apart and established as such by this Act.

(e) The commissioners shall also within the said time limited forward a duplicate of their said report to the Secretary of State.

(f) The said report and the said duplicate thereof shall be signed by the commissioners or in case of a disagreement by the majority of them and the report of the majority of the commissioners shall be the report of the commissioners.

(g) The said report shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette' and in the 'Official Gazette' of the said province forthwith after the receipt thereof.

(h) The commissioners may frame rules and orders for regulating the conduct of their proceedings and generally for carrying into effect the provisions thereof.

(i) The letters patent appointing said commissioners shall confer upon them the power of summoning witnesses before them and of requiring such witnesses to give evidence on oath orally or in writing, or in solemn affirmation (if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters) and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners may deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to inquire and the commissioners shall have the same power and authority to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories in civil cases.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I desire to move, seconded by Mr. Perley, the following amendment :

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out, and that the following words be inserted instead thereof :

Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House with an instruction that they have power to strike out section 12 of the Bill and to substitute the following section therefor :

12. (1) Until the said legislature otherwise provides the legislative assembly shall be composed of twenty-five members to be elected to represent the electoral divisions hereinafter defined.

(2) The expression 'federal electoral district' where used in this section means an electoral district as established by and under the provisions of 3 Edward VII, chapter 60.

3. (a) The federal electoral district of Alberta shall be divided into five electoral divisions each of which shall return one member.

(b) That portion of the federal electoral district of Calgary comprised within the limits of the province of Alberta shall be divided into six electoral divisions each of which shall return one member.

(c) That portion of the federal electoral district of Strathcona comprised within the limits of the province of Alberta shall be divided into six electoral divisions each of which shall return one member.

(d) That portion of the federal electoral district of Edmonton comprised within the limits of the province of Alberta shall be divided into six electoral divisions each of which shall return one member.

(e) That portion of the provisional district of Assiniboia included within the limits of the province of Alberta and not included in any of the federal electoral districts above mentioned shall return one member.

(f) That portion of the unorganized territory of Athabaska which lies west of the 4th meridian shall return one member.

(4) Where under the foregoing provisions any federal electoral district is to be divided into more than one provincial electoral division such division shall be made by a board of commissioners consisting of at least three persons resident in the said province and being judges of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories who shall for that purpose be appointed by letters patent under the great seal immediately after the coming into force of this Act and who shall divide each such federal electoral districts into the number of electoral divisions in this Act assigned to it.

The letters patent appointing the commissioners shall require the commissioners in making the divisions to have due regard to the distribution of population, the public convenience the existing local divisions and such other considerations as appear to them best calculated to do substantial justice.

In case of the death or resignation or refusal of any one or more of such commissioners to act a successor or successors shall in like manner be appointed; and in the event of there being no resident judge or judges available any judge or judges of the said Supreme court may be appointed such successor or successors:

Within a time to be limited by the said letters patent the commissioners shall complete such divisions and report the same to the Lieutenant Governor of the said province setting forth in such report the boundaries of the electoral divisions to which such report refers and the ranges, townships and sections comprised therein and shall assign an appropriate designation to each electoral division. Upon receipt by the Lieutenant Governor of the said province of the report of the commissioners completing the divisions aforesaid the respective territories described as constituting the respective electoral divisions into which the said federal electoral districts shall have been divided as aforesaid shall become and be electoral divisions of the said province as if the same had been so set apart and established as such by this Act.

The commissioners shall also within the said time limited forward a duplicate of their said report to the Secretary of State.

The said report and the said duplicate thereof shall be signed by the commissioners, or in case of a disagreement, by a majority of them and the report of the majority of the commissioners shall be the report of the commissioners.

The said report shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette' and in the 'Official Gazette' of the said province forthwith after the receipt thereof.

The commissioners may frame rules and orders for regulating the conduct of their proceedings and generally for carrying into effect the provisions thereof.

The letters patent appointing said commissioners shall confer upon them the power of summoning witnesses before them and of requiring such witnesses to give evidence on oath, orally or in writing, or on solemn affirmation (if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters) and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners may deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to inquire and the commissioners shall have the same power and authority to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories in civil cases.

Amendment (Mr. W. J. Roche) negatived on the same division last recorded.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). I propose to move an amendment which, if adopted, would have the effect of granting to the new provinces the lands, mines, minerals within their boundaries. To give to the new provinces those rights and powers in regard to the public domain as are declared by the British North America Act to come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces of the Dominion. I have already spoken at considerable length in advocacy of this principle, first on the second reading of the Bill and subsequently on more than one occasion when the Bill was in committee. I have nothing to add to the arguments which I then used. They are before the House and it is not necessary that I should repeat them. I believe that if the House refuses to accept this amendment and passes the Bill in its present form it will be doing a great wrong not only to the new provinces, but to the whole Dominion. The provincial ownership of the public domain is one of the basic principles of confederation; to disregard it and the other fundamental principles of the British North America Act is to undermine the whole structure of confederation and to lay up a store of trouble in the days to come. The struggle for provincial rights will only begin when this Bill comes into effect on the 1st September next, if it remains in its present form. The culmination of that struggle may not be reached this year or next year, but it must inevitably come some day in the future and it will be due to the action of this parliament if that struggle does injury to our common country. I said in the first words that I uttered about this Bill that the action of Canada in dealing with what may be called her own colonies in the matter of self-government, would be watched with interest not only in the mother land but throughout the empire. Comparisons will be drawn between the treatment accorded to the north American colonies when they become self-governing colonies by Great Britain on the one hand and the treatment accorded to her new provinces by Canada on the other hand. Those comparisons will not be flattering to the Dominion parliament if the Bill goes through in its present form.

No satisfactory reason has been offered to this House for disregarding the clear and definite provisions of the British North America Act in regard to provincial ownership of the public domain. The arguments adduced by the Prime Minister and others in respect to this matter will not be regarded either by the country at large or by the new provinces as adequate or indeed even as quite worthy of the great principle involved. In the argument he used this afternoon surely the Minister of Justice did not intend to suggest, although his words sounded like it, that Canada had purchased from the Hudson Bay Company, through the medium of Great Britain, the absolute title to one-third of the North American continent for £300,000. That sum, as I understand it, was paid for the surrender to the Crown of certain claims and privileges which the Hudson Bay Company had over this vast area. The claims and privileges of the company being thus removed, the property itself was vested in the Dominion, the title being in the Crown. The very fact that Great Britain having thus procured a surrender of the Hudson Bay Company's rights over this area then handed it over to the administration of the Dominion of Canada with the evident view of its ultimate formation into provinces is the very strongest argument that could possibly be used that the Dominion should hand over the area comprised in the new provinces to the administration of those provinces. I hope that even at this stage it is not too late, and that the House will be induced to reverse the policy it has up to this time sanctioned. I beg to move, seconded by Dr. Schaffner :

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out and that the following words be inserted instead thereof :

Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House with an instruction that they have power to strike out subsection 1 of section 20 of the Bill and to substitute the following therefor :

All lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto situate or arising within the limits of the province and now vested in the Crown and all sums due or payable in respect of the same shall belong to the province subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof and to any interest other than that of the province in the same except those portions thereof now used or occupied for the public works, the public buildings or otherwise for the public service of Canada which are more fully set forth and enumerated in schedule 'C' to this Act and which shall continue to be the property of Canada.

Amendment (Mr. Lake) negatived on the same division, last recorded.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I have an amendment to move. It is in the exact words of the amendment I moved last night in committee on the Saskatchewan Bill and I therefore do not intend to occupy the time of the House in reading it. I might say that its purport is to recite as the foundation for the action we are taking in constituting these provinces, not merely the Act of 1871 as the Bill does, but the British North America Act of 1867, the Act of 1871, the final Act of 1886, and also the Rupert's Land Act. Every one who has listened to this long debate must be aware that the very foundation of the constitution both of the Dominion and the various provinces is contained in the British North America Act, and although that is the case there is not a word in the preamble referring to that Act as the ground work of our action on this occasion. Without further remark I move, seconded by Mr. Henderson :

That the preamble be struck out, and that the following preamble be substituted therefor :

Whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1867, being chapter 3 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the session thereof held in the thirtieth year of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, it was, among other things, enacted that it should be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council on an address from the Houses of parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territory into the union on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the addresses expressed and as the Queen should think fit to approve, subject to the provisions of the said Act ; and that the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf should have effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

And whereas in and by the Rupert's Land Act, 1868, of the parliament of the United Kingdom, it was, among other things, enacted that it should be competent to Her Majesty, by Order or Orders in Council, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, on address from the Houses of the parliament of Canada, to declare that Rupert's Land should from a date to be therein mentioned be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada.

And whereas, pursuant to such powers and authority, and to such addresses, by and with the advice aforesaid, the Queen by Order in Council on the 23rd day of June, 1870, did order and declare that from and after the 15th day of July, 1870, the said territory should be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the terms and conditions set forth in schedule 'A' to the said Order in Council, and that the parliament of Canada should from the said date of admission have full power and authority to legislate for the future welfare and good government of the said territory ; and it was thereby further ordered that, without prejudice to any obligations arising from an approved report therein recited, Rupert's Land should from and after the said 15th of July, 1870, be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the terms and conditions in that behalf in the said Order in Council also set forth.

And whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1871, being chapter 28 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the session thereof held in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth years of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, it is enacted that the parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provisions for the constitution and administration of any such province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province and for its representation in the said parliament of Canada :

And whereas, in and by the British North America Act, 1886, being chapter 35 of the Acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the session thereof held in the forty-ninth and fiftieth years of the reign of Her said Majesty, the parliament of Canada was empowered to make provision for the representation in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, of any territories which for the time being form part of the Dominion of Canada but are not included in any province thereof ; and it was thereby also enacted that the said Act, and the British North America Act, 1867, and the British North America Act, 1871, shall be construed together.

And whereas that part of the said land and territory hereinafter described has not been included in any province of the Dominion and has heretofore been provisionally governed by and pursuant to legislation of the parliament of Canada.

And whereas it is expedient to establish as a province that part of the said land and territory hereinafter described, and to make provision for the constitution and administration of such province and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government thereof and for its representation in the parliament of Canada.

Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :

Amendment (Mr. Barker) negatived on the same division, last recorded.

On the question for the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. H. BOURASSA. I rise to offer a word of personal explanation and to give the reasons why I do not feel disposed to vote either for the third reading of the Bill or against it, so that I may not be accused of shirking the vote. My reason is this : I am in favour of the principle of the Bill; that is, I am in favour of giving the Northwest Territories their autonomy, but the Bill does not contain what in my opinion is a sufficient guarantee of the rights of the minorities that we are bound to protect, and therefore I cannot vote with those who are opposed to any kind of guarantee to the minorities, nor can I vote for a Bill which in my opinion does not give a sufficient measure of guarantee.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I shall not surprise any one in the House by saying that I take the same position as the hon. member for Labelle. I therefore leave the House before the vote is taken.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved third reading of Bill (No. 70) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, before this motion passes I would ask the House to allow me to occupy a few minutes further on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway exemption. I have no hope, after the reception that was given to the amendment I moved this afternoon, that I shall succeed with a similar amendment moved to the Saskatchewan Bill, but I feel that I would not be doing my full duty to the proposed province in which I live, and to the electors in that proposed province which I have the honour to represent, if I did not utter on this motion a further word of protest with regard to this feature of the measure; and I do this notwithstanding that I am probably bringing again upon myself the severe disapprobation of the hon. leader of the opposition. In face of the fact that that hon. gentleman has for three or four months been responsible for a waste of the time of this parliament, and responsible for a great deal of disturbance throughout the Dominion of Canada upon these autonomy measures, he rises to censure a representative from the Northwest Territories who has the hardihood to ask the House to listen for thirty or forty minutes to a protest with regard to a limitation on the autonomy proposed to be given to the people of these two provinces, which is a very serious matter in comparison with the comparatively trifling matter that he is responsible for causing to be discussed at such great length and disturbing the country to such an extent. The hon. leader of the opposition said that the words I used in my amendment were meaningless—that the power of expropriation was inherently in this parliament, and that, therefore, it was meaningless to put in this Act words giving notice to the people of these provinces and to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that this parliament intends to exercise its inherent powers of expropriation if it were not able by some other means to obtain the relinquishment of these exemptions.

Mr. LALOR. What construction did the hon. gentleman's leader put upon the resolution?

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask my hon. friend what construction he places on the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition this afternoon when he proposed to strike out section 16 and substitute this:

> The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province in so far as the same are applicable under the terms thereof.

What is the meaning of that?

Mr. LALOR. May I ask the hon. gentleman if that is the way he answers a question—by asking another?

Mr. SCOTT. I venture to say that my hon. friend cannot tell me, nor can the hon. leader of the opposition himself tell me what that means. It means about the same thing as the amendment he proposed formerly in relation to education. The hon. leader of the opposition admitted, when the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue questioned him on the floor of the House of Commons, that he did not know how it would work out, and that he did not know what it meant. Does the hon. leader of the opposition think when he speaks before the people of this country and before the members of this House that he is speaking to children? Let him go to the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway or to the head of the Canadian Northern Railway and ask these gentlemen if they think these words specifying the intention of parliament to exercise its inherent power of expropriation do not mean anything.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the hon. gentleman has no right to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. SCOTT. I propose, Mr. Speaker, to move an amendment, and I trust I am not out of order in discussing the amendment which I propose to move. It concerns the Canada Pacific Railway exemption feature and the inherent right of expropriation possessed by this parliament with regard to that exemption feature. I was proceeding to remind the House that a couple of years ago we granted certain rights to the Canadian Northern Railway, and it was proposed at that time that it should be specified in the Bill that parliament retained the right to expropriate. I can tell the hon. leader of the opposition that Mr. Willilam Mackenzie, the president of the Canadian Northern Railway, did not think these words meaningless, because he opposed the proposition strenuously, and whenever the same proposition has been made with regard to a railway which is being chartered, it has been opposed by the promoters of the charter. It is not so long ago that discussion took place in this House on the Grand Trunk Pacific proposition, and if my memory serves me rightly, we had an amendment moved on the other side of the House that the Bill should specify that under such and such conditions parliament would expropriate the undertaking. Am I stating the fact correctly? I put that squarely to the hon. leader of the opposition. Silence, I suppose, gives consent; but we may as well have the actual proof. On May 26, 1904, the hon. leader of the opposition summarized certain resolutions which he had in the previous months presented to this House with regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific proposition. Some of these amendments, I suppose, were not entirely meaningless, but so many were presented that I venture to say that no single person in the whole of Canada can tell at this moment whether the hon. leader of the opposition faced north, south, east or west on the Grand Trunk Pacific question. Here is what the hon. gentleman said on May 26, 1904, as found at page 3558 of 'Hansard':

> We then moved an amendment that if the Grand Trunk Pacific should exercise its right to force on the government any unprofitable branches at the end of fifty years, the government might take all or any of the remaining branches. In this way we desired to prevent this country being placed in the position of having to take and operate unprofitable branches without having the option of controlling the situation by taking also all the branches this company might find profitable.

That surely was a meaningless proposition, because parliament had the inherent right of expropriation. The hon. gentleman was needlessly taking up the time of parliament when he discussed that proposition at great length.

> We further moved that the government should have haulage rights and running powers over the western division for the same period granted to the company over the eastern division. Both these amendments were rejected.
> Then we proposed that the government should be empowered to expropriate the railways from ocean to ocean, upon paying fair compensation, and in addition we moved a further amendment empowering the government to do so in case these railways should not carry out the true intent of the agreement, or should combine or conspire to divert traffic to foreign ports.

By the vehicle of these words of his own I hand back to the leader of the opposition all the criticism and sarcasm which he applied to the proposition I took the responsibility of presenting to the House this afternoon. What was the main purpose of the remarks of the hon. gentleman and what has been the main purpose of many of the remarks of the hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to members from the Northwest Territories sitting behind the government? From day to day, by means of sneers and other references, they have attempted to lead the country to believe that the Liberal members from the Territories have been entirely dominated by the government and ready at any moment to sacrifice the interests of the Territories.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friends opposite applaud the remark. I am, therefore, giving an accurate discription of what they have attempted. We had some reference here a few days ago to a Northwest conference called by Mr. Haultain and to the matters discussed there. I proposed a motion at that conference with regard to the redistribution schedules. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) arose here and declared that the motion made by me was not as I stated, but was that we should hold out together to get our land and minerals for the new provinces.

Mr. HERRON. I state now that you did make that statement, and it is the only statement that you have made.

Mr. SCOTT. I state now deliberately to my hon. friend that the matter of lands was not discussed at that conference at all, and I say it in the hearing of several gentlemen who were present. There were three conferences in all. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) attended the first two, but was not present at the third, and the matter of lands was not mentioned at the third conference concerning which we had the discussion on this floor. I tell the hon. gentleman now that there never was any such motion made at any of the three conferences.

Mr. HERRON. I repeat positively what I have said.

Mr. SCOTT. Regardless of what my hon. friend says, I say that no such motion was presented at any conference.

Mr. HERRON. And I reiterate my statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I will tell the hon. gentleman more, if he wants to know it, about those conferences. We had three altogether. It has been already explained that the invitation was issued by Mr. Haultain to all the Northwest members to attend conferences at Ottawa and a part of that invitation reads as follows :

> My colleagues and I are very anxious to have the co-oporation of the Senators and members from the Territories at the very outset of these negotiations with a view to, if possible, presenting a case for the Territories which in its broader features, at least, shall be approved by all the Northwest representatives.

I ask any of the hon. gentlemen opposite who were present at these conferences if he ever heard any mention by Mr. Haultain or any one else at any of them with regard to the subject of education. Let them say yes or no, here and now. Did Mr. Haultain bring up the subject of education ? Was that one of the large and broad subjects which we were brought together to discuss ? I say that the subject was never mentioned. In that fact alone we have the complete proof that the Northwest government and the Northwest people generally were not asking for any change in their educational constitution.

Mr. LALOR. Does the hon. gentleman make the statement that Mr. Haultain called the conference ?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. LALOR. Did you not make the statement on a previous occasion in this House that it was the Prime Minister who called this conference ?

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend is quite mistaken. The Prime Minister suggested to Mr. Haultain that he should furnish to the government the schedules of redistribution, and Mr. Haultain called a third conference partly for the purpose of getting assistance from the Northwest members and senators generally with regard to redistribution and two or three other matters. I repeat that no motion was made at any conference as is described by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) either by myself, himself or by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) or by Mr. Haultain to the effect that we should stand out for the absolute transfer of our public lands. What I did at that conference however, was to attempt to get it to take the position—not by motion, but by suggestion ; and that is doubtless what has misled the hon. member for Alberta—that we should unitedly and resolutely stand out for the principle that the public lands belong to the people of the Territories and that we should have their actual transfer or a fair price.

Mr. HERRON. The hon. gentleman has acknowledged just now that he was wrong.

Mr. SCOTT. It is my hon. friend who admits the mistake. I suggested that we should unitedly take the position, and hold to it resolutely, that the lands were ours, and that we should get an actual transfer of them or a fair price. And in my opinion, and in that of the majority of the people of he Northwest, even of Mr. Haultain himself—because he has said so in a public letter—we have got a fair price for the lands. Let me say to hon. gentlemen opposite, from their leader down, that in view of the history of the last two years with regard to the subject of autonomy, it does not lie in the mouth of any Conservative anywhere in the Dominion to charge any Northwest Liberal——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SCOTT. Let my hon. friends be patient and I will give them plenty of proof. I say it does not lie in their mouths to charge any Northwest Liberal with a willingness to sacrifice any Northwest local interest at the behest of any party leader. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) knows very well to what I am referring. He and I and the Liberals and many Conservatives in the Territories up to two years ago were of the belief that, in view of early autonomy negotiations entered into with the Ottawa government, it was essential that the people of the Territories should be united and not have party divisions in their local affairs, so that we might come down as one man, with the whole strength of a united people, in the presentation of our case to the government here. I think I am stating the thing fairly. But what has occurred in the last two years? At the instigation of the hon. the leader of the opposition, the Conservatives of the Territories were called into convention in April, 1903, at Moosejaw, for the purpose of reorganizing for the next federal election. What was one of the most important actions taken by that convention?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. SCOTT. These hon. gentlemen are getting a little tired of the subject.

Mr. GALLIHER. Take your medicine.

Mr. SCOTT. One of the most important resolutions adopted at that convention called for the purpose of reorganizing for the next federal election was this:

> That in furtherance of the objects of this convention be it resolved, that Conservative candidates as such be placed in nomination in every constituency, at the next general election of members to the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories, and kept in the field till the close of the polls.

Since the moment of the passing of that resolution, since the moment of the holding of that Moosejaw convention, Mr. Haultain and his Conservative friends in the legislature—of whom my hon. friend was one—have been dominated in their management of local affairs by considerations of federal party interest.

Mr. LAKE. I deny that statement, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend (Mr. Lake) will have a good deal of trouble to successfully deny it in the Territories. We had the matter of the capital advance. Mr. Haultain stated that on certain conditions he wanted the capital advance—that on certain conditions he would be satisfied to have it. And on these conditions it was granted. Is that not true? It was granted on the very conditions that he himself had set out. I make the statement to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) that on the first day of the meeting of the succeeding legislature in the fall of 1903, he told a man in Regina that the capital advance was not going to be accepted. I make the further statement that Mr. Haultain did not disclose to his Liberal supporters in the legislature, until practically the closing week of the session the fact that the capital advance was not going to be accepted.

Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. LAKE. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. SCOTT. I will give my hon. friend (Mr. Lake), privately, information that will recall it to his memory. I do not wish to mention publicly here the name; but I will give my hon. friend privately the name of the gentleman to whom he gave that information on the first day of the sitting. And it was three weeks later before the Liberal supporters of Mr. Haultain were told by Mr. Haultain that he did not intend to accept the capital advance. And my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) knows perfectly well—I know he knows—that over that capital advance matter the unity which had prevailed in the assembly was very nearly broken; and if it was not broken it was not because of any excessive desire on the part of these Conservatives, or on the part of my hon. friend, or on the part of Mr. Haultain, that means should be taken to preserve it. Any sacrifice that was made was made by the Liberals in the Assembly, and to preserve that unity in local affairs that was so important, the Northwest Liberals have for two years past been putting up with slights and humiliation and insult, —having their every confidence abused, their every action mis-used,—they have been feeling the knife of the traitor in every way. But, for the purpose of preserving the unity that they considered essential for the presentation of the autonomy matter to this government and to this parliament, they put up with this kind of thing. But, Mr. Speaker, thank God, that condition need no longer continue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SCOTT. The autonomy matter is now settled, and the question is removed from the field of controversy. It no longer furnishes a reason for that sort of party self-sacrifice, and from this time forward the Liberals of Saskatchewan will not find their party interests conflicting with the interests of the province.

Mr. BOYCE. I ask that the motion before the House be read.

Mr. SPEAKER. Any hon. member has the right to ask that the motion be read, but not so as to interrupt the hon. gentleman who is speaking.

Mr. SCOTT. So much for that, at all events. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) declares that the amendment I moved this afternoon is meaningless. It is no more so than is section 23 itself. Does the hon. gentleman say that section 23 in this Bill has any meaning; that the Bill will have any different effect whether section 23 is retained or is left out of the Bill? That is a fair question. Will the taxing power of the province be the same if section 23 were not in the Bill as it will be with the section in the Bill? My hon. friend the leader of the opposition is not prepared to answer that question.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. SCOTT. Evidently not. Well, in my own opinion, section 23 in these Bills means absolutely nothing—or at all events very little. But I say that if section 23 is put in the Bill, then it is fair, it is right, it is imperative that further notice be put in the Bill that parliament intends, as the Prime Minister says, to negotiate the surrender of these exemption rights from the company—that further notice be put in the Bill, so that the provinces, the people of Canada and the railway company will understand that parliament, at some future day will take away these rights by expropriation or by negotiation. But, as I have had no success with the amendment which I moved to the Alberta Bill, it is useless to repeat that proposal. I beg with regard to this Saskatchewan Bill to move :

That all the words after 'now' be struck out and the following inserted :

That the Bill (No. 70) be recommitted to Committee of the Whole House with instructions to expunge section 23 thereof.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I only desire to say that I have no sympathy with any motion in this House that has for its purpose the violation of a solemn compact made many years ago by the parliament of Canada. Therefore, I cannot recognize in any form the motion that has been moved by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott). I do not believe for a moment that this parliament will stultify itself by accepting the amendment the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) has presented and so violating a sacred contract made many years ago.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). I fully agree with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that this government and this parliament should hold sacred the contracts made with the former government and parliament by any party or corporation. But, as I stated this afternoon—and I do not intend to repeat my remarks—I contend that if the government in 1881 had power to make this contract and to pass that law, there is no necessity for this section in the Act, for that law would apply, and it cannot be overridden by local legislation afterwards. On the other hand, if this law was ultra vires the parliament of Canada in 1881, then this parliament is not called upon to confirm any portion of a contract that was ultra vires of parliament when it was made. There is a vast difference between carrying out a contract made with a former parliament which contract was within the powers of that parliament, and carrying out a portion of a contract made that was not within the powers of parliament. If it was within the power of parliament to make it, then the rights of the other party will be safe in any case, whether section 23 is put in or not. And if it is not within their power, it is no part of the duty of this parliament, or any other, to carry out an arrangement which was ultra vires of the authority that made it. For these reasons I support the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Scott).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There is absolutely nothing new in this question, which was discussed fully in committee. And, for the same reasons that I gave my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) before, I must tell him that we cannot accept this motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has covered a very wide range in his speech, including the convention in the Northwest Territories, Mr. Haultain's secrecy as to capital advances, the conferences held between members from the Northwest Territories during the recent session, besides formulating a number of questions, which no one, himself included, seemed able to answer, with regard to certain alleged opinions of the president of the Canadian Northern Railway. These questions seemed to be particularly irrelevant to the matter we have been discussing this evening. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) says this is a serious matter. It certainly is a serious matter, but he did not treat it in a serious way. It is a serious matter. But any one who looks over the volume of 'Hansard' during the last four or five years and observes the gyrations the hon. gentleman has indulged in on this question can form a pretty good opinion as to how serious he is in taking up the time of the House in discussing it at this stage.

Look at his motion as he defines it, a motion in respect of which he has taken up 40 minutes of the time of this House. He says that section 23 means nothing, therefore he takes 40 minutes to ask us to strike it out. If it means nothing then striking it out means nothing. That is the position of the hon. gentleman according to his own statement. That is his own definition of the position which he occupies in taking up the time of the House to-night. If it means anything at all it means that a right which has been made with the Crown, confirmed by the parliament of this country in 1881, may be taken away without compensation. If it has any meaning at all I would suppose it to mean that, or that it was an attempt to accomplish that result. I do not know what the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) means by discussing the question as to whether it was within the competence of the government to make this agreement in 1881.

Mr. GALLIHER. If it was not within the competence of the government to make it we did not need this section, because that right will pass on to them notwithstanding that they are formed into provinces ; and if it was not within the right of this government to make such an agreement, then I raised the question whether it was incumbent upon us to carry out the contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not a question of their right to make a contract, it is a question of the effect of a contract when made, it is a question as to whether the government of this country, by virtue of an Act of parliament passed in 1881, can make a contract which shall have effect in the Territories after they are created into provinces. I suppose that is what the hon. gentleman means. I have already expressed my opinion with regard to that, but the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) does not seem to be able to understand it. I have expressed in committee the view which I entertain with regard to it. I say the contract is binding upon the Crown because it was ratified by parliament. The question of legislative jurisdiction respecting Dominion taxation remains in the parliament of Canada ; the jurisdiction over provincial taxation goes to the provinces. But in both cases there is a contract to be observed, and neither in the one case or the other could the parliament or legislature properly interfere without compensation. That is the situation as I regard it. But however that may be, the motion of the hon. member for Assiniboia does not commend itself to my judgment because it does not accomplish what, after all, I presume, he wishes to accomplish. He referred to a provision for expropriation which we proposed to introduce into the National Transcontinental contract. We were not doing what he is doing now, or what he did this afternoon. We prepared a clause providing for and authorizing expropriation and stating the terms of it. The hon. gentleman has done nothing of the kind. If he had made any such motion as that with regard to section 23, or introduced it by an independent Bill, I could understand it ; but his motion this afternoon was obviously meaningless for the reason I have stated.

Mr. SCOTT. It was open to the hon. gentleman to help improve it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, there are some motions conceived and framed in such a form that no human agency could possibly improve them. The hon. gentleman has apparently accomplished that result in this case. If expropriation is desired, the parliament of Canada can act in the future, and with all deference to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I think the legislature of the province can act also in respect to exemption from provincial taxation. But neither the motion which the hon. gentleman proposed this afternoon nor the motion which he proposes now seems to me to deal with the matter in the way in which it should be dealt with. If his motion means nothing, because it strikes out something which means nothing, surely that does not improve the situation. If his motion means to disregard a contract into which the government of this country entered in 1881, his motion means something, but it means something with which I certainly cannot agree.

Mr. SCOTT. In the hon. gentleman's opinion, does section 23 mean anything ? Does it change the situation ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a notice to the provinces of this contract, it has at least that operation ; and it is proper that at least the provinces should be notified of a contract into which the Crown has entered, and in respect of which the action of the Crown has been ratified by parliament.

Mr. SCOTT. Is there or is there not a possibility that by leaving out section 23 the provinces might be free to tax ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That the provinces might be free to tax—I would not think that would improve the situation at all, because even if by inadvertence a provision of that kind were left out of the constitution and an attempt were made to expropriate without compensation that which was a vested right in either the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other corporation, surely the hon. gentleman knows that over and over again the executive of Canada has been called upon to disallow provincial legislation in cases of that kind.

Mr. GALLIHER. Would not the question whether that was a vested right or not, depend upon the question whether parliament in 1881 had power to legislate beyond to the time when these Territories were formed into provinces ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The parliament of Canada at that time was the only parliament that had power to enact this legislation. But if the hon. gentleman believes what he says he does to-night, does he not recognize that he has been voting against his conscientious convictions on section 16 of the Bill ? If he does not recognize that, then it is useless for me to argue with him.

Mr. GALLIHER. Argument of that kind is no answer to a legal question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, it would seem to me to be very much an answer.

Mr. GALLIHER. Supposing even I was wrong, would that strengthen my hon. friend's argument ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman, on clause 16, has taken the position that the parliament of Canada in 1875 could deal with a similar matter, and that there was an obligation on us in future for all time to be governed by that provision. He has distinctly taken that position, if he has taken any position at all. On the other hand where we have not any such shadowy or vague understanding as was relied upon for clause 16, but where there is a distinct, binding agreement made by the Crown at a time when these provinces were Territories, he denies that parliament has any right to legislate. He says that in the one case there is an absolute obligation in 1905 to continue legislation with regard to the schools, but there is not any obligation whatever to continue the contract made with regard to this tax exemption.

Mr. GALLIHER. I have not argued that it was ultra vires of the parliament in 1881 to make this law and to enter into this contract. But I say that if it was within their power to do so, that right goes on, and we can absolutely leave that alone and dispense with section 23 entirely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am afraid that I cannot appreciate or even understand my hon. friend's argument when he talks about this contract being ultra vires, a contract ratified by the parliament of Canada in 1881, when this parliament had the absolute right to deal with the Territories. I am not able to follow that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) means to say, I think, that in 1881 we had power, but when these Territories became provinces then that power would be restricted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a sufficient answer to say that the legislation which we are passing in clause 23 cannot have a greater operation than that which we passed in 1881. It seems to me that if it is ultra vires in the one case it necessarily follows that it is ultra vires in the other case.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, that is my argument at all events.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think not for the reason that by the virtue of the British North America Act the provinces are entitled to absolute control in regard to taxation, but we are limiting that control of taxation by this section 23. At the time we are granting them powers as provinces we are limiting the power of taxation by section 23 which says that it shall be subject to the existing agreement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I do not see the distinction of the hon. gentleman. Perhaps he can see it; I do not. It seems to me that the parliament of the Dominion in 1881 had the absolute right to deal with this contract in respect to a railway running through the Territories which were subject absolutely to the legislative jurisdiction of Canada.

Mr. GALLIHER. That may be true.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman says that we have not the right to limit the constitution of these new provinces

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not say that at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I do not know what the hon. gentleman does say then.

Mr. GALLIHER. I have not said that the parliament of Canada had not the right to make the law in 1881. If they had the right to make that law the instant that these Territories became provinces that right passes without this section 23 of this Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good. Then, in that view section 23 is absolutely harmless.

Mr. GALLIHER. Not harmless, because I say that by section 23 we are going further now. We are forming these Territories into provinces by this Act. We are giving them the right to exercise the power of taxation, but we are limiting that right by section 23.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, the hon. gentleman will have to be content with his own opinion. It seems to me to be absolutely clear that we had the right to make that contract in 1881. It became a contract binding upon the Crown in the right of the people of Canada and that binds the Dominion and the provinces after the Territories have been created into provinces. On the very lowest position that can be taken it is proper to insert in his Bill a notice to the provinces of the contract so entered into by the Crown ratified by parliament at a time when parliament had power so to legislate. I do not want to take up the time of the House, because this is a matter between the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, the right hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. I am not responsible for section 23. I think it is right to give notice to these provinces, but after all the Minister of Justice is responsible for this measure as he is responsible for a similar clause in the Bill in regard to the Hudson Bay Company. I have stated my view as to what should be done. The contract should be observed. There should be no expropriation without compensation. I think upon that we can all agree. It seems to me, as I have stated over and over again, that the right of the Dominion to legislate and the right of the provinces to legislate within their respective spheres of jurisdiction continue subject to the contract in both cases. I might, in conclusion, refer the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) to some language of his upon a motion in regard to this same tax exemption which was introduced in 1901. The hon. gentleman then said:

> If I thought this resolution would do the slightest good, I would vote for it.

It was a resolution declaring that in the opinion of parliament the tax exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway should extend only to a period of 20 years. The hon. member for West Assiniboia said :

> If I thought this resolution would do the slightest good, I would vote for it.
> Mr. MACLEAN. It will not do any harm if you vote for it.
> Mr. SCOTT. It might not directly, but indirectly it would be an encouragement to hon. gentlemen to come forward with demagogic and buncombe resolutions, and I do not propose to encourage anything of the kind. I do not think there will be any practical value in the House declaring for this resolution and shall, therefore, vote against it.

I would say to my hon. friend that I do not see any good whatever in either of the resolutions which he has moved to-day. I refer him to his word which I have quoted. If I was a little warm in any of my expressions this afternoon I trust he will understand that I did not intend to be offensive to him in any way. I do not think either of his resolutions has the merit of being practical. As far as this one is concerned I shall vote against it with the same goodwill as I voted against the one he moved this afternoon.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the opposition intended to assist the government in every way they could in passing these two Bills before the early hours of the morning. But the hon. member for West Assiniboia occupied an hour and twenty minutes this afternoon and 40 minutes more to-night with speeches and with resolutions similar to one moved by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) a few years ago on this very same question which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) then characterized as a buncombe resolution. But I only intend to deal with one of the many reckless statements that he made this afternoon. He made the statement that the Liberal party had always been in favour of building the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Northwest. Does he know the history of the Liberal party in regard to the building of that railway that created that country and made something of it? A contract was made by the Conservative government previous to 1873 to build that railway, but by the opposition then offered in the House, the government of the late lamented Sir John A. Macdonald were driven from power on account of having entered into that contract. The Liberals came into office. Did they make a contract to build that railway or did they attempt to build that railway? They attempted to use the water stretches and to connect Port Arthur with Winnipeg by a part water and part rail route. They built the Fort Francis lock, squandered a lot of money, but did not do anything towards the building of the railway. Then the Conservative party came in again; they entered into negotiations, and in 1881 this contract was made. The Canadian Pacific Railway, under the contract, spent millions and millions of money in attempting to construct the railway in that country. When tney had spent the last dollar they had and when they had exhausted the last dollar of credit they could obtain owing to the opposition of the Liberal party and of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, they came down to this parliament and asked for a loan of $30,000,000 to save them from going into bankruptcy. If they had gone into bankruptcy, what would be the position of the Northwest Territories to-day? The government of that day said: We will assist you, we will grant you a loan of $30,000,000 and take ample security. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia to-day quoted the words of Mr. Blake, Mr. Ross and Sir Richard Cartwright. What did these gentlemen say? They said that if this railway were ever built it would not earn enough to pay for the axle grease, and every Liberal in the House at that time—and there are a few of them left, as there are only a few on this side of the House who supported that measure—opposed the granting of this assistance. The supporters of the government of that day stood up and voted in favour of loaning the Canadian Pacific Railway $30,000,000, because, notwithstanding the fact that under the contract they had the lands and they had the exemption from taxation that my hon. friend is now complaining about, they could not raise a dollar to go on and complete the road. Yet, the hon. gentleman makes the reckless statement that the Liberal party were always in favour of building this road. A few Conservatives who are here now were in the House then and they stood up and voted to loan the Canadian Pacific Railway $30,000,000. The measure was carried notwithstanding the opposition of every Liberal in the House at that time, and there are only a few of them left. We loaned them $30,000,000; the road was completed; the company paid back the $30,000,000, and yet the hon. member for West Assiniboia will say that the Liberal party were always in favour of building the road.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did he say that?

Mr. TAYLOR. He did say it this afternoon. He had the assumption to make a statement of that kind. There are many of us in the House to-day who know that the Hon. G. W. Ross, when the hon. gentleman quoted against the Canadian Pacific Railway, was man enough to get up and say in recent years that he had opposed the Canadian Pacific Railway at every stage, but he regretted he had ever done so, and he withdrew every statement he ever made against it. It is not so with the other Liberals who opposed the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and who now try to get credit for building it and making that western country what it is. Why, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) would have no country were it not for the policy of the Conservative party in these days. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to transact public business when one of them occupies two hours time talking about nothing. The opposition here were anxious to facilitate the despatch of business, but these gentlemen opposite seem to want delay and I therefore move that the House adjourn so that we may get out of this heated atmosphere.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will withdraw if the supporters of the government keep quiet and allow business to be transacted.

Motion to adjourn the House (Mr. Taylor) withdrawn.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Scott).

Mr. BOURASSA. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron), the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce), the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) and the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Walsh) voted, though they came in after the question was put.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will not be proper to record their votes if they came in after the question was put. I would ask the hon. members whose names have just been mentioned if they were in the House when the question was put.

Mr. LEONARD.

Mr. BOYCE. I may say, so far as I was concerned, that there was a very imperfect ring of the bell.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. The names of the hon. members for Algoma, Alberta, Calgary and Huntingdon, will be struck out.

Amendment (Mr. Léonard) negatived.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is put, I desire to make the same motion in amendment with regard to clause 16 which I made with regard to the corresponding clause in Bill No. 69, seconded by Mr. Cochrane :

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out and that the following words be inserted instead thereof :

Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House with an instruction that they have power to strike out section 16 of the Bill and to substitute the following section therefor :

16. The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province in so far as the same are applicable under the terms therof.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With the consent of the House we might have the same vote recorded with the same motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I had already suggested that, and I concur. Where the provisions of the Bill are exactly the same and the motion in amendment is exactly the same, surely we need not come trooping in to vote again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Instruction might be given to the clerk to have the same motions and the same votes recorded on this Bill as on the other Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. On the understanding that that is the unanimous wish of the House, I direct the clerk to record the same motions in amendment and the same votes on this Bill as those on the previous Bill, with the names of the movers and seconders entered.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived.

Mr. SPROULE. I beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Lennox :

That all the words after 'now' to the end of the question be left out, and that the following words be inserted instead thereof :

Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House with an instruction that they have power to strike out section 2 of the Bill, and to substitute the following section therefor :

2. The provisions of the British North America Act, 1867 to 1886, shall apply to the province of Saskatchewan in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the other provinces heretofore comprised in the Dominion, except such provisions as in terms or by reasonable intendment are specially applicable to or affect one or more only and not the whole of the said provinces.

This is a similar motion to that presented by Mr. Sam. Hughes with reference to the other Bill. I do not propose to accompany it with any remarks, as the argument has been made on the other Bill and will apply with equal force to this.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 156) to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Bill (No. 159) to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Bill (No. 163) to amend the Census and Statistics Act.—Mr. Fisher.

Bill (No. 161) to amend the Northwest Irrigation Act, 1898.—Mr. Oliver.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 1.15 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 6, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

INVERNESS, NOVA SCOTIA, POSTMASTER.

Mr. LANCASTER asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at the town of Inverness, Nova Scotia ?
2. Does he attend to his duties personally, or are they delegated to others ? If so, to whom ?
3. What salary does he receive ?
4. During what hours is the office kept open ?
5. What accommodation has the post office building, and what is the size and character of the building or room used for the post office ?
6. What is the intention of the government with regard to post office accommodation in this town ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for the Postmaster General) :

1 and 2. Donald McIsaac is in charge of the Inverness post office, Nova Scotia. He gives personal supervision to the duties of the office.

3. The salary and allowances attached to the office amount to $606.

4. The office hours are from 8 a.m to 10 p.m.

5. The post office building is provided by the postmaster subject to the approval of the Post Office Inspector. As the inspector has not reported the accommodation as insufficient, it is assumed by the department that it is adequate to the public requirements.

6. As the department has not been notified that accommodation is insufficient, the question has not been considered.

WEIGHING OF BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Mr. WALSH asked :

1. Is the government aware that a grievance exists at the port of Montreal with regard to the weighing of butter and cheese ?
2. Does the government intend to take any action in the matter ? If so, when ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The government is aware that a grievance exists in Montreal with regard to the weighing of butter and cheese. The Department of Agriculture is dealing with the matter in connection with the Board of Trade of Montreal, which now has the rules and regulations of this weighing under its control.

HALIFAX AWARD.

Mr. PICHE asked :

1. Did the government of Canada receive any portion of the sum of $5,500,000 paid by the government of the United States to the government of the United Kingdom, in consequence of the decision rendered on the 23rd November, 1877, by the arbitration commission sitting at Halifax ?
2. If so, what amount ?
3. At what date was such payment made ?
4. Did the provinces which are interested in the fisheries affected by that decision, or any of them, claim the remittance total or in part, of the amount paid to the government of Canada ?
5. If so, when, and by which provinces were such claims made ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.
2. $4,490,332.64.
3. 6th December, 1878.
4. Yes.
5. Prince Edward Island, 19th February, 1879 ; Quebec, 5th February, 1902 ; New Brunswick, 7th September, 1903.

Nova Scotia has made no specific claim ; but her agreement to an adjustment of the case between the Dominion and the provinces involves such claim, if the principle, which is now denied, eventually prevails.

MILITIA OFFICERS.

Mr. LEONARD—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Were the militia officers who successfully passed their examinations last winter at Montreal ' Gazetted ' ?
2. If so, on what date ?
3. What are their names and rank ?
4. If not, why have they not been ' Gazetted ' ?
5. When will they be ' Gazetted ' ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia) :

1. Yes.
2. Promulgated in Militia Order 109, 13th May, 1905. Provisionally appointed officers, confirmed in their rank by General Order No. 103, dated May 30th, 1905.

CONTRACT WITH NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

Mr. F. D. MONK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my right hon. friend if he can give an answer to the question I put a week ago with regard to the protest received from foreign governments concerning the ten year contract for the transportation of immigrants from the continent of Europe to Canada. Has any protest been received ? Have any representations been made to the government by the imperial government itself concerning that contract ? When I put the question my right hon. friend said he would give an answer in a day or two.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as I know at present I am not aware that any representation has been made by the imperial authorities, but I am not sure whether any has been made by another government, whose name I have not in my mind at this moment.

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance moved:

That the House go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supplies to be granted to His Majesty.

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the ninth time it is my privilege to present to the House the annual statement of the financial affairs of the Dominion, which is commonly called the budget speech. I much regret that the budget this year has been delayed to a somewhat late period, but the reasons which have occasioned this delay are within the knowledge of the House. In the early part of the session I was unavoidably absent in Europe, and on my return the House had taken up the consideration of two very important Bills designed for the purpose of creating two new provinces. It seemed desirable that these Bills should become law before the 1st July this year, and with a view to accomplish that purpose we deemed it necessary to put aside other matters and proceed with them as matters of the greater urgency.

For that reason the budget is delayed to an unusual date. I am glad to know, however, that this has not led to any considerable public inconvenience. It had been well understood that there would be no extensive tariff changes during the present session. It was well known that the government had announced their intention, before making any extensive revision of the tariff, to make an inquiry by a commission of ministers, and that commission not yet having had an opportunity to sit, it was well understood that during the present session we would not undertake any extensive tariff revision. That being the case, as I said a moment ago, I do not think any considerable public inconvenience has been caused by the delay of the budget. In view of the fact that no extensive changes are contemplated, and in view of the late period of the session at which we find ourselves, and I think I may correctly say, in view of the very general desire that public business shall now be rapidly expedited, I shall endeavour not to detain the House for as long a time as may have been necessary on the occasion of some previous budget speeches.

The public accounts for the year ending 30th June, 1904, have been in the possession of the House for a considerable time, and it will not be necessary to dwell very much on their contents. A brief reference is all that I shall deem it necessary to make. The outcome of affairs for the year in most respects does not differ widely from our anticipations ; in some respects the figures differ, but not to an extent to cause any general remark. I estimated that the revenue for the fiscal year 1903-4, terminating on the 30th of June, 1904, would reach $71,000,000 ; the actual revenue was $70,669,816.82, a difference of $330,183.18 less than the estimate.

Coming to the expenditure, the difference is more material. It is always more difficult to estimate the expenditure than the revenue, for this reason, that there are outstanding contracts running to the end of the year and sometimes overlapping into the next year, and it is not easy to determine how much money will be expended on any one of these works up to a given date. If the season proves particularly favourable for work, or if contractors are particularly energetic, they may do more work than is anticipated at an earlier stage of the year; and at the close of the year we may find it necessary to provide for a larger expenditure than we had anticipated at an earlier stage. At all events, at the close of the financial year to which I refer, we found that whereas the estimated expenditure was $54,500,000, the actual expenditure was $55,612,832.70, being an increase over the estimate of $1,112,832.70. These figures have reference to expenditures chargeable to income and represent the ordinary expenditure of the year.

I shall not dwell upon the receipts of the year except to say that on the principal sources of revenue there was a gratifying increase. Customs, excise and post office all showed a considerable increase; and the only item in which there was a material decrease was in regard to Dominion lands, a decrease which was due to the reduced revenue received from the Yukon. This increased expenditure affected to some extent our estimate of the surplus which fell a little short of what I had anticipated. My estimated surplus for the year was $16,500,000, the actual surplus was $15,056,984.12, making a surplus less by a considerable sum than I had anticipated, but still the most magnificent surplus of $15,000,000 and upwards, far and away the largest surplus ever recorded in the history of Canada.

The capital expenditure of the year 1904, came more closely to the estimate, and fell a little under it. In the budget of 1904, it was estimated that capital and special charges would reach some $11,500,000; the actual expenditure chargeable to these items was $11,244,711.80. The operations of the year in their relation to the public debt were on the whole very satisfactory. In the last budget I presented a review of the revenue and expenditure for a period of eight years. Dealing for a moment with our own expenditures, and leaving out of consideration certain entries which arose from the settlement of old long standing accounts between the Dominion and the provinces, confining my observations entirely to our own expenditures, I made the estimate that at the close of eight years it would probably be found that we had carried on the affairs of the government for that period without adding anything to the public debt, and I thought we might even hope for a little reduction of the public debt. That anticipation was not fulfilled to the letter, but it was fulfilled to a very large extent. The increased expenditure to which I refer affected the calculation a little but the result is that looking at those eight years expenditures, leaving out of consideration the special entries in relation to the settlement of old provincial accounts which had to be dealt with, but which were no part of our expenditure and dealing with the matter in that light, we find there was an increase in the net public debt of Canada to the extent of $278,232.94, or an average increase per anunm for the eight years of $34,779.11. While I make that statement, separating our own expenditure from the items connected with the readjustment of the old provincial accounts, if we include, as we must according to the figures published in our public accounts, the items readjusting the old disputed accounts between the Dominion and Ontario and Quebec, the net result will be that in eight years there is shown an increase of debt to the amount of $2,370,285.83. Practically nearly all of that, as I say, is accounted for by the readjustment of old accounts with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Now with regard to the surplus, I intimated in the review of eight years operation that our surpluses would probably amount to $57,880,091.92. When the accounts were closed the actual total surpluses on the eight years operations was found to be $56,437,076.04. The average surplus as estimated by me in the review to which I referred, was $7,235,011.49; the actual average surplus on the closing of the accounts was $7,054,634.50, a very gratifying statement.

Now sometimes questions are raised in this House, and more frequently outside, as to the manner in which our surplus is calculated. I have discussed this matter in the House before, and perhaps it is hardly necessary to refer to it again. Yet I remember that we are in the first session of a new parliament, and that there are many hon. gentlemen here who were not with us in former years, and perhaps it would not be unprofitable if I devoted a few minutes to a consideration of that question. It is sometimes argued by unfriendly critics that Canada should not claim any surplus in her accounts unless she has a revenue which enables her to provide for all expenditures of all classes, without any exception, and that there should be no distinction between capital account and income account. That is a criticism not unfrequently offered in the public press, and I wish to say that in my judgment that criticism is unsound, and I say further, that it is directly at variance with the views that have been entertained by every Minister of Finance of Canada who has ever occupied that position, without any exception.

The distinction between ordinary income and capital account has always been observed in our public accounts. And for good reasons. In a country like Canada, with great works to provide for, it would not be reasonable to suppose that every year we could provide out of our ordinary revenue enough money to meet all the demands upon the federal treasury. In the life of the nation, as in the life of the individual, there are times when it is necessary to provide for something which cannot be provided for within the ordinary current expenditure. The man who rents a house pays his rental from year to year. He knows that he must provide for it in that way. But, if he buys the house he does not have to provide in the same way; it is a special disbursement; and he opens a capital account. That homely illustration of what a man will do in his private affairs explains exactly what the nation has to do in its greater affairs. There are great public works—the construction of canals, the subsidizing of railways, the erection of public buildings in the federal capital (for we do not charge outside buildings to capital account), and all these classes of large expenditures of special character, most of them for works of a permanent nature, are and have always been, charged to capital account. And I persist in the opinion I have often previously expressed—and I am supported by the opinion of every Minister of Finance of Canada who has held the office—that it is right and proper to make a distinction between ordinary and capital expenditure, or special expenditures which should be charged to an account other than that of ordinary expenditure. So, on the general principle of the distinction between income and capital expenditure, there is no difference between hon. gentlemen opposite and myself. My predecessors adopted the same principle that I adopt in this matter. The only possible difference between us will be as to the working out of the details of the account. There is one item only in the capital and special account which did not appear there in the days of our predecessors; and that is the item with respect to the bounties on iron and steel, and so on. In the days of our predecessors, and for a number of years in our own, these bounties were paid in the way of drawbacks from the customs revenue. That is to say, the customs revenue was never shown in the public accounts at its actual amount, but was subject to a deduction to the extent of the bounties that had to be paid. At that stage the bounties were not very large, and this method of treating the accounts was, perhaps not a matter of very great concern; although, as a matter of principle, in my opinion it was not the correct method. However, as I have said, it was established by our predecessors and continued for one or two years by ourselves. But when the amounts increased, as they did very largely, we thought there should be a change in the method of dealing with them; and we decided that they should be charged to a special account, which is practically capital account, along with railway subsidies and expenditures of that nature. We regarded these bounties as temporary outlay intended to run for only a few years; and therefore they might be considered as special expenditures. However that may be, there is that difference between the accounts of our predecessors and our own—they charged these bounties practically to income, inasmuch as they deducted them from the customs revenue; we have charged them to capital or special account. And it is a fair question, as it has been in the past, whether that is or is not the proper method. What I wish to point out is that we need not dwell very much on that, because the difference between charging these bounties to income and charging them to capital would not affect to any considerable extent the question of the surpluses. If the surpluses had been small it might be possible by an analysis of the accounts, by transferring these items from capital to income, to show that there was no surplus at all. Happily, however, nothing of that kind has occurred. The surpluses have been large and generous. And if we transfer these disputed items—if I may call them disputed—from capital to income account, they do not make much difference in the general result. The net total surplus for eight years is $56,437,076.04. If we throw out the bounties and charge them to income, we find that the net surplus for eight years has been $53,107,692.77. The average yearly surplus as shown in our statements is $7,054,634.50. If we leave out the bounties, the average yearly surplus has been $6,638,461.59. So, though these bounties amount to a large sum in themselves, yet, whether you charge them to income or charge them to capital does not make much difference, comparatively speaking, so far as the surplus is concerned.

The question of the interest on our public debt is always of importance. In a country like Canada, it would be reasonable to suppose that there would be a considerable increase from time to time in the burdens the people would have to bear in the way of interest on the public debt. We are able to present a very gratifying statement on that point. The net amount of interest on the public debt is actually less than it was in 1897. By the net amount of interest I mean this: We first take the actual interest paid on the gross debt; then allow for the interest we receive from sinking funds and other investments, and the balance represents the net amount paid on the public debt, the actual burden upon the people for that service. The following figures will show the reduction in the net amount paid for interest on the public debt:

Reduction in net amount of interest on public debt—

1896-97.

Amount paid in interest on public debt..	$10,645,683 27
Received as interest on sinking funds and other investments..	1,443,003 84
Net amount of interest, the real burden upon the people..	9,202,659 43

1903-04.

Amount paid in interest upon public debt..	11,128,636 72
Received by way of interest on sinking funds and other investments..	2,236,255 93
Net amount of interest on public debt, the real burden on the people..	8,892,380 79

So, the net amount of interest on the public debt to-day is $8,892,380.79 as against $9,202,659.43 in 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the net payment in 1903 ?

Mr. FIELDING. In 1903 it was $9,047,186.13. I come now to the year ending June 30, 1905. As a rule the budget speech deals with the current year. But we have to recognize the fact that, owing to the lateness of the budget statement this year, we are dealing with a year that has been completed, the fiscal year ending June 30 last—that is last week. Under the system followed in the mother country, it is possible, within a few days after the end of the fiscal year, to make up the statements of the year's business. It is not the practice there to delay for the settlement of any accounts. The accounts are closed as they stand at 31st March, and any outstanding accounts are taken into the transactions of the next year. That may be a convenient and useful way to deal with the accounts in a country like Great Britain, where they have a dense population, where the distances are short, the means of transportation very good and the operations of the national exchequer throughout the country are quickly brought under review. But it has not been found suitable to Canada with our vast territory and with great operations going on from ocean to ocean involving the collection of money at distant points. With territory so far from the capital as British Columbia and the Yukon, it would be found most inconvenient for us to close the accounts on June 30. We have, therefore, in the wisdom of parliament, and under all governments, deemed it well to allow time for closing up the accounts. Therefore, though our fiscal year ended a few days ago, it may be a couple of months before we can have a correct idea of the operations of the year. Nevertheless, as we have now just closed the year, we are in a better position to form an estimate as to its operations than we would usually be. I find that the receipts of the Dominion up to the 30th of June as shown in the last ten days' statement—that means the receipts that have been brought to the notice of the Finance Department and have entered into the Dominion books; it does not mean the receipts everywhere, because there are receipts in distant parts of the Dominion which are not yet reported—the receipts which have passed through the books of the Finance Department up to the 30th of June—as shown by last ten days' statement—are as follows:

From customs..	$40,954,871 94
From excise..	12,461,113 42
From other sources..	16,058,772 18
Total..	69,474,757 54

I propose to add to this $69,474,757.54, as the probable sum to be received into the Dominion treasury from the different operations of the Dominion where the money has been collected, an estimated sum of $1,775,242.46 which will appear in the final adjustment of the accounts for the year. Therefore, I estimate the revenue for the year which has just closed at $71,250,000 in round numbers. This, if realized,—and I hope it will be and possibly a little more—this will be an increase of something like $600,000 over the revenue of the previous year ; not a very large increase, but we are hardly in a position to expect that our revenue will increase in the future as rapidly as in the past, though I feel sure that there will be a steady wholesome growth.

Coming now to the question of the expenditure for the year which closed on the 30th of June last ; the expenditure accounted for in the Finance Department to the 30th of June (as shown in the last ten days' statement) was $50,279,597.14. I propose to add to that, as the probable additional outlay which will have to be made to complete the operations of the year, the sum of $11,970,402.86, making the estimated total expenditure for that year, $62,250,000 chargeable to consolidated fund account.

The actual expenditure for the year 1903-4 was, $55,612,832.

It is apparent therefore that while we are estimating on a moderate increase of revenue—which I have placed at about $600,000 though I am hopeful it will be better—we have to provide for a largely increased expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the figures of the expenditure last year ?

Mr. FIELDING. The actual figures for 1903-4 were $55,612,832, and the estimated expenditure for the year just closed I put at $62,250,000, making the increased expenditure for the year chargeable to consolidated fund, $6,637,167.

Now, under some circumstances that would be a statement which would give grave cause for anxiety and even alarm. To have a small increase of revenue and a large increase of the expenditure is of course a reason for great watchfulness and care, but in this case, while we should be watchful and guard against any extravagance, and while an increasing expenditure with a moderately increasing revenue is a just cause for exercising more than ordinary watchfulness, yet, I am glad to say there is no cause for alarm because we shall be able to provide for that largely increased expenditure during the current year and yet have a very handsome surplus to our credit.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. Estimating the consolidated fund revenue at $71,250,000 and placing against it the consolidated fund expenditure of $62,250,000, we find that notwithstanding our liberal expenditure of the past year we shall close the year with a handsome surplus of $9,000,000; a surplus large in itself, small by comparison with our surpluses of $14,000,000 and $15,000,000 of recent years, but nevertheless larger than any surplus ever recorded in the history of Canada prior to the days of the present government.

The expenditure on capital account for the year 1904-5 as shown in our accounts to the 30th of June was: $11,007,925.51. I add to that a probable further sum of $1,492,074.49 making a total estimated capital and special expenditure of $12,500,000.

Now we may consider the effect of the operation of this large capital expenditure, together with the consolidated fund expenditure I have mentioned, upon the question of the net debt. For this purpose we have of course to take into consideration all expenditures. The estimated expenditure on consolidated fund account then is $62,250,000; the estimated expenditure on the capital and special account is $12,500,000; making the total estimated expenditure of all classes for the year $74,750,000.

Against this we place the estimated revenue of $71,250,000, and the sinking funds $2,250,000, which are expenditures on one side of the account, but which immediately pass into our assets and therefore do not increase our public debt. Taking into account then our total expenditure estimated for the year at $74,750,000 and placing against it our revenue of $71,250,000 and the sinking fund of $2,250,000, we reach the conclusion that there will be in closing up the year's accounts an addition to the net debt of Canada of $1,250,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Cheer now?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it would be a happy thing in the days of the friends of my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson), if they could have closed year after year with an addition of only one and a quarter million dollars to the net debt of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Cheer now.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FIELDING. If they could always have come out with no greater addition than $1,250,000 to the public debt in a year, it would have been deemed a most gratifying statement by the Conservative party.

Mr. FOSTER. That all depends.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. I am not trying to import a party element into this discussion. There were some years that my hon. friends opposite did have a surplus to their credit and the public accounts show it, and nothing is further from my purpose than to indicate to the contrary.

Mr. COCHRANE. You like to enjoy a little cheap applause when you can get it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is not bound to join in the applause. There is nothing in the revised statutes of Canada which obliges him to join in it.

I think, Sir, when we have regard to the vast works that have been carried on, when we have regard to the very liberal expenditure in which Canada has been indulging, when we have regard to what my hon. friends opposite sometimes wish to call the lavish expenditure of the government, it will be a very gratifying statement of our affairs if at the close of the year which ended a few days ago it turns out that we have no addition to the public debt beyond $1,250,000. I present that as a somewhat conservative statement; I am not without a hope that the result may be better, that we may even be able to come out square; but if there be an addition to the net debt of Canada on the operations of last year my judgment is that it will not exceed $1,250,000.

Mr. SPROULE. You have not yet given us the net debt.

Mr. FIELDING. I have given my hon. friend the amount of the probable reduction of the net debt. The figures are given in the public accounts. The gross debt of Canada is about $364,000,000 and the net debt about $260,000,000. The exact figures will be found in the public accounts; I am giving the reduction or the addition as the case may be.

than usual and to that extent we are in a better position to form an impression as to the outcome. We have had eight years of certainly very prosperous finance in Canada. The eight years' statement of expenditure which I have given must be gratifying to the hon. members on both sides of the House. Our operations of the past year are also in their general result very satisfactory. But we realize that we are now reaching a period when our revenue is increasing in only a moderate degree and when, nevertheless, we have to consider the question of a considerable increase in expenditure. It is necessary to guard against too lavish expenditure; surely a Minister of Finance must always appreciate that, but it would be equally possible to err on the other side. There is a saying which I have quoted once in this House, that wise expenditure is true economy. A single dollar squandered or spent corruptly is open to the greatest censure, but hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars spent in useful public work, will be defended by every good citizen. Therefore while on one side we should guard against extravagant expenditure, I think in this period of the growth of Canada, in the midst of this period of great development, it would be a serious mistake to deny the public service the grants which are needed in order that the progress of the country may not be interrupted. The function, therefore, of a Minister of Finance is to find a happy medium, to guard on one side against wastefulness and extravagance and on the other side to see that the applications made by his colleagues and by the people of all sections of the country for increased expenditure shall not be refused if the proposed expenditures are reasonable and likely to assist in the general development of the country. Therefore we do not shrink, Sir, from bringing forward liberal expenditures for the coming year. We think that the liberal expenditures of the past have been one of the factors—how large a factor may be a matter of debate—but surely on both sides we can agree that the liberal expenditures of the past few years have been one of the factors which have made for this great development of which every Canadian citizen is so proud, and if that be the case we should be prepared to continue a liberal expenditure for useful purposes, guarding against extravagance and wastefulness. The demands upon the treasury of the country are great and varied. We have a vast territory with varying needs according to the varying physical conditions. In one part of the country it is the construction of a great railway which seems to be demanded to meet the requirements of the people; in another case it is the construction of a new canal or the enlargement of an old one; in another case it is the construction of a great armoury to afford the facilities required by our militia and to encourage the men who are giving their time and devoting their energy to the study of the work of defending our country; in another it is the construction of public buildings to give an increase of necessary accommodation to the public officials and to stimulate the local feeling of the people and encourage them to go ahead with the improvement of their community; in another case it is the construction of a breakwater to protect the fishermen; in another case it is the construction of a wharf or a pier to bring the people of the community in which this work is placed within the reach of the various means of communication. In a country stretching from ocean to ocean, with widely differing needs, it is the function of the government to take into consideration all these wants and to endeavour to provide for them in a generous spirit. We have adopted that view and in the estimates that we have submitted to parliament we provide for a very liberal expenditure in the coming year. The question is : Can we afford that expenditure ? We feel satisfied, Sir, that we can afford it, and that it is in the best interests of the country that to the extent of our appropriations we should meet the demands which come upon us from all parts of the Dominion. We have brought down for the next year main estimates amounting to $58,495,187.70 on consolidated account. We have also brought down supplementary estimates on the same account amounting to $8,394,710.60, making a total of $66,889,898.30. But it is to be remembered that in the next session there will probably be a number of supplementary estimates to wind up the affairs of the year just as during this session a supplementary estimate was submitted to wind up the affairs of the past year. The final supplementary estimate for the past year amounted to something under $5,000,000. I am therefore placing $5,000,000 in my statement as the sum which we will probably have to ask for in the next session of parliament to close up the affairs of the year.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount of the supplementary estimate ?

Mr. FIELDING. $4,839,556. That includes the estimates brought down some days ago and which have now been passed for the year ending June 30, 1905. Thus in allowing $5,000,000 for the next year we are providing a sum larger than that for which we asked the House in the final supplementary estimate in the last year.

Thus taking our main estimates as submitted and our supplementary estimates as submitted and allowing that next session we will have to add $5,000,000 more by way of estimate for the year we shall reach a probable total appropriation for the year of $71,889,898.30.

bill and have a modest surplus. But of course experience has shown that you cannot spend the whole sum appropriated, for various reasons. It is found impossible to spend within the year all the money that parliament appropriates. Take for example the Department of Public Works; it is necessary that appropriations be made in order that you may authorize the proper officials to begin to make plans for public works, to take all the preliminary steps and to get ready, but with a vast territory to cover and a great deal of work to be done it frequently happens that the officials cannot overtake the work, and at the end of the year there is a very considerable sum of money which has been appropriated for works which will ultimately have to be built, to be expended within the fiscal year.

Experience shows, as my hon. friends opposite are aware, that necessarily very considerable sums lapse. I said a moment ago that even if there were no lapses we would still, I feel confident, have the revenue to provide for every dollar of our expenditures on consolidated fund account; but if we take into account the customary lapses, which will reduce the expenditure to a very considerable degree, I feel confident that at the close of this year, upon which we have just entered, we shall be able to provide for all our expenditures chargeable to consolidated fund and to have a very respectable surplus. I would prefer not to go into figures so far ahead, but I feel confident we shall have a very respectable surplus, and if it should prove to be, as it it is quite possible with the development of trade, a large surplus ,then to that extent, whatever the surplus may be, it would go against our capital expenditure and diminish the amount which would otherwise be added to the debt of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman made any calculation as to what the revenue will be?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. In its different parts?

Mr. FIELDING. No; I have not in detail. My general estimate is that there will be a moderate increase of revenue as compared with the revenue of the past year. I do not place it at a large amount. I think that as we have during the year which has just closed only had an increase of some $600,000—perhaps it may reach $700,000 or $800,000—over the revenue of the previous year, I would not be justified in expecting a large increase in the coming year, but I anticipate the revenue of the coming year will be equal to the revenue of the past year, and that, roughly speaking, we will probably have a million more.

Now, in regard to our capital account, because I have been dealing so far with the question of the consolidated fund account, only our main estimates provide for $10,169,210, and our supplementary estimates for $5,020,262.85. I add, as a probable supplementary estimate at the next session for the same year, $1,500,000, making an estimated total appropriation—not necessarily a total expenditure—on capital account for this year of $16,689,472.85. This is an unusually large appropriation on capital account, but the House must remember that we have now reached the point where we are beginning to provide for the construction of the Transcontinental Railway, and from this time forward we must expect to see in our annual appropriations very considerable sums chargeable to capital account which must be appropriated for the construction of that road. For example, in the estimated votes amounting to $16,500,000 and a little more, which I place as the probable total of the votes on capital account for this current year, we have asked for $3,682,212.85 on account of the Transcontinental Railway, and we must expect that from this on—

Mr. FOSTER. A part of which is a back debt already due.

Mr. FIELDING. Not for the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Part of it.

Mr. FIELDING. What is that?

Mr. FOSTER. For plans and surveys taken over from the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. FIELDING. Whether that enters into one year or another is of no consequence. It all goes into the general account. The plans and surveys have been taken over by the commissioners from the company, and we have to take an appropriation to pay for them. Whether we put that in the appropriation for one year or another year is of no consequence. This is a charge which has not hitherto figured in our public accounts to any extent, but we must anticipate that from this time forward, from year to year, we will be called upon to provide large sums for this service, and I am inclined to think that the larger the sums we ask for, provided they are expended, the better the House and the country will be pleased, because the general desire on the part of hon. members on this side and, I would hope, of hon. members on the other side, although they did not quite agree with us as to the scheme, now that the scheme has been adopted, is that we should prosecute the work with all possible speed, complete the new road and see what good it is going to bring to our country. Therefore, I do not regard it as a matter of regret that we are obliged to ask for this large sum in our capital account for the current year, nor do I regard it as regrettable either that we shall be obliged every year, for the next five or six years, to include in our capital appropriation a very large sum on account of that railway. While the appropriation of these sums will necessitate the raising of considerable money for construction, they will not affect our general interest account as it appears in the public accounts for some years to come. In the General Railway Act of Canada the principle is recognized that interest during construction is a part of capital account. Every railway is constructed on that basis. That principle has been carried into the legislation respecting our Transcontinental Railway. The interest during construction is payable out of capital, and at the close of the construction period, it is all added to the capital sum, and thereupon the Grand Trunk Pacific pays us a rental based upon the total sum, including the interest. Therefore, during the period of construction, while the Dominion will have to pay the interest, of course, on all the sums it borrows, that interest will be charged, as respects the railway, in the capital account, and our ordinary interest account will not commence to bear any burden until after the construction period has been finished.

There is a very interesting feature in our financial affairs to which a passing reference may be made, because it is very suggestive. I allude to the remarkable increase which is shown in the public documents in respect to the issue of money orders in Canada payable abroad. Between 1884 and 1899 such orders amounted to between $2,000,000 and $3 000,000 yearly. For the year ended 30th June last they amounted to almost $8,000,000. The countries for which the principal increases have taken place are the United States, the United Kingdom, Italy, Newfoundland and Japan. In the case of France, Germany, Norway and some of the other European countries, there are small increases. The most noticeable increase, however, is in the case of Italy, on which orders were issued in 1904 for $546,283, whereas in 1900 the amount of such orders did not reach $60,000. While part of the increase is due to increased business generally, a very large proportion of it is to be traced to the increased immigration, and that the people who are coming to the country are finding profit in their labours may be inferred from the remittances which are being sent to the lands of their origin. Money orders issued in Canada payable in other countries :

1900	3,060,548
1901	3,631,969
1902	5,126,367
1904	7,946,337

These figures would by no means indicate all the money orders which our new settlers, temporary or permanent, have sent abroad, because, of course, our banks do a large business and our express companies do a very considerable business in this respect, but the figures showing such a remarkable growth in the issue of money orders are very suggestive as showing that the people who have come to Canada, whether permanent or temporary, are people who have found Canada a prosperous country, and who have earned enough to be able to send money abroad to the countries of their origin.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman made any estimate as to what proportion of these money orders are what you might call settlers' orders or temporary labourers' orders ?

Mr. FIELDING. It would be difficult to discriminate. In the case of the Italians, I think a very considerable sum would be temporary labourers' orders, because the Italians, as a rule, are not as prone to settlement as the peoples from other portions of Europe. It seems however, impossible to discriminate, except by taking the countries to which the money goes as an indication of the class of money orders. A considerable sum was probably sent by Italians, who are, as a rule, only temporary settlers ; but even so, that indicates that they have found profitable employment in Canada and are able to send abroad a good report of it.

It is customary in the budget speech to introduce statistical information showing the progress of the country ; but I shall refrain from doing that at present because it is not absolutely necessary, and because I desire to shorten the debate as much as possible. It will be sufficient if I say, with reference to the statistics of trade and commerce, the development of our banking institutions, the discounts in our banks, the transportation statistics of railways and steamboats, that all these classes of information go to show that Canada is continuing to enjoy a very large measure of prosperity.

With regard to the question of public loans, I am glad to say that we have only one temporary loan outstanding, namely, the loan of £600,000 sterling in treasury bills, which we placed a short time ago in London at the very satisfactory rate of two and a quarter per cent interest.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include the cost ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, but there is very little cost in temporary loans. That represents the rate to the bank. There may be some trifling charge in addition to that.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has that to run?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a six months loan to mature in September. We have the 4 per cent loan of 1875, £1,000,000 sterling, which will mature in London in November next. That is our only loan maturing this year. Next year there will be one of £2,500,000 and so on—large loans maturing down to the year 1913. In almost every year down to that date we shall have some loans falling due. After that there will be quite a long period during which there will be no loans maturing; but for some years to come, we shall have almost every year to provide for these maturities. With regard to the loan of £1,000,000 sterling at 4 per cent interest which will mature on the 1st November next, our present opinion is that it will not be necessary to go on the London market for a general issue of securities. The conditions are more favourable than they were, but the war in the East has unsettled the market for a long time; and it may be found advantageous to Canada to carry on our £600,000 sterling loan and the £1,000,000 loan about to mature by means of treasury bills for short periods until peace is proclaimed and the market is in a more satisfactory condition. Then, if necessary, Canada may go on the general market. In the meantime, we think it will be advantageous to use our powers in the way of floating temporary loans, but that question will be determined in the light of events that may happen.

Attention has been called for some time in this House and in the public press to the subject of the large amount of foreign currency, notably United States silver, which is in use in Canada, and the very general desire has been expressed that some step should be taken to minimize what many regard as an evil or what, at all events is objectionable. If there were reciprocity in that matter, I suppose there would be less complaint. If our brethren across the line would accept our Canadian silver as we do theirs, there would be no interest in either party trying to export the silver currency of the other, but we find that across the border Canadian silver is not generally accepted. There may be some exceptional community where it is taken, but as a rule, it is not taken in the United States unless in the immediate border towns, while United States silver is very generally taken in Canada. We have therefore come to the conclusion that it would be well to take steps to send it back to the United States. There was a movement of that character some thirty-five years ago, as hon. gentlemen may recollect, but perhaps no one wants to plead guilty of remembering so far back.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not.

Mr. FIELDING. But in the days of my distinguished predecessor, Sir Francis Hincks, the circulation of United States silver in Canada was regarded as very objectionable; and after long consideration, he determined to take steps to export it. And he did succeed in exporting a very large sum. From that time on, the circulation of United States silver, while pretty general, has not been anything like as large as in those days. Nevertheless, in view of all that has occurred, we think it desirable to take means for the shipment of it back to the United States. We do not desire that any one should refuse to take it, because that would interfere with trade; but we propose to provide that when that silver reaches the banks, it shall not be re-issued, and we propose to make an arrangement with the banks under which they shall ship it back to the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you the power to deport it?

Mr. FIELDING. I believe that when we get to the line, there might be a question as to our power. If a man on the one side of the line wanted to send the silver across to the other, a very delicate international question might arise; but I intend taking the risk, notwithstanding the judgment of the distinguished judge in the province of Ontario.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will the banks take United States silver at par from their customers under such an arrangement?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we do not think it wise to attempt to charge any discount on it, because that might interfere with trade, especially along the border towns. Our method will be to arrange with the banks that they shall take the silver at its face value and then send it abroad. We shall pay them a special commission for that service, three-eighths of one per cent, besides which we will pay the express charges.

Mr. FOSTER. What for?

Mr. FIELDING. For the banks' own services, and besides the commission we will pay them the money they would be out of pocket by the expressage. Of course this country will receive a very material profit—though I do not think I would recommend the transaction on that ground—in substituting Canadian for United States silver. While in the coinage of gold there is no profit whatever, because a gold coin has only its intrinsic value and the stamp adds nothing to that value, in the case of silver coinage it is otherwise. In the case of silver, the value of the coin is very much in excess of the intrinsic value of the same quantity of that metal. Therefore every additional dollar of silver which is put in circulation by Canada is a source of profit to our country. I mention that incidentally though I do not think we should enter into an operation of that kind entirely for the profit. Nevertheless the costs we shall incur in the exportation of the silver will be met ten times over by the profit which Canada will make in the increased quantity of United States silver which will be replaced by our Canadian coinage. But when United States silver is used in the purchase of good Canadian products and thus helps to make a profit for Canadian citizens, we do not prohibit its circulation.

Mr. FOSTER. If it does not, you do.

Mr. FIELDING. We propose to make the arrangement for one year, and my impression is that at the end of the year the quantity of United States silver in Canada will be so small that there will be no great profit in continuing the arrangement. But if experience shows that as we export the silver, it will come back very quickly, we shall only have to provide for continuing the arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. minister made any estimate of what amount of the United States currency is here ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is very difficult to estimate. The financial experts have very widely different opinions on that point. I find that in the days of Sir Francis Hincks, the amount in circulation ran from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000. But we are satisfied that there is no such sum in circulation in Canada at present. The highest estimate of United States silver in circulation in Canada given by a financial authority for whose judgment we have respect is $900,000. I ought to say that other financiers of excellent judgment think that this figure is too high. An estimate given us by one gentleman, whose name I do not care to mention, but whose opinion would command respect in this House, is that the amount is not more than $500,000. It will easily be seen that when two eminent bankers with the same source of information reach these widely different conclusions it is exceedingly difficult to make an estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. Was $900,000 the highest estimate received ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was the highest estimate made by any of the few whom we have consulted. Other bankers may place the figures even higher. But the highest estimate given by any whom we consulted was $900,000. The opinion which we are rather disposed to accept is that during the year the amount will not exceed $500,000. Of course, there is room for very wide difference of opinion. At all events, whatever the amount may be, every person in Canada who has United States silver and does not wish to use it has only to go to the nearest bank and get Canadian silver for it. The Canadian banks will not re-issue that silver ; but will, under arrangement with our department, send it abroad to the United States, and we will give them in return our Canadian silver. So, if, hereafter, there is any United States silver current in Canada, it will be because the Canadian people prefer to have it. If they do, we do not wish to interfere with their preference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you practically provide that United States silver can be redeemed at any bank in Canada, would not that rather have a tendency to increase the flow of it into this country ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see that anybody will have any object in bringing the silver into Canada for the purpose of getting Canadian silver for it. I cannot see where it will be a source of profit. The intrinsic value of the silver is the same in both cases, and on our side there is practically no discount on United States silver. The hon. gentleman's question is a perfectly proper one, but I think, that, on reflection, he will see that there is no inducement to parties to do as he suggests.

Now, I said in the earlier part of my remarks, that it would not be anticipated that there would be any extensive tariff changes this session, for the reason that it was well known that it was the policy of the government to have an inquiry into the tariff before extensive changes were made. That inquiry will be made by what is called the tariff commission, which is a committee, practically, of members of the cabinet. The advantages of a public inquiry will be quite apparent. True, we have in our possession, as every Minister of Finance must have, a large amount of information bearing on the tariff, which accumulates from time to time. Generally speaking, that information is given to the Minister of Finance privately—I do not mean necessarily to say confidentially. An individual interested in some branch of industry waits upon the Finance Minister and delivers himself as to his needs with respect to the tariff, and probably furnishes a document showing what changes, in his opinion, ought to be made. Sometimes information of this kind is given by deputations waiting on the minister. In that way we have a considerable fund of information. There is a decided advantage in having a public inquiry, so that if there be two sides to any question these two sides may be heard. It not infrequently happens that a manufacturer or producer comes and asks for something in regard to tariff changes which, when it becomes known to some other manufacturer or producer—not to mention the consumer—is regarded as objectionable, because of conflicting interests. There is a decided advantage therefore in having a public inquiry, so that the people who are interested in the tariff rates on one side or on the other, may know what representations are being made ; and, if they see fit to do so, may come forward and present their views. We had an inquiry of that character, to a limited extent, in 1897. Unfortunately, we were very much pressed for time at that stage of our affairs, and we were not able to make that complete examination over the whole country that was desirable. We were not able to go west of Winnipeg. In all the principal cities in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces and also in Winnipeg the commission held meetings and heard a great many people and received a vast amount of valuable information. Unfortunately we were obliged to return to Ottawa without going further west. That, of course, is something which we must avoid now. We must take care, in making the inquiry we are about to have, to hold meetings in all sections of the country, we must not fail to go out to that western country that we were not able to visit before. We shall, therefore, make it the business of the tariff commission :—to hold meetings in all the principal cities, possibly that 'principal' is a hard word to define, for they all think they are the principal cities of their several sections. Certainly that inquiry should be held in the capital of every province, and, in some cases, in other cities as well. In a great province like Ontario or Quebec, of course, it will be necessary to have several meetings; and in some of the smaller provinces it may be necessary to hold meetings in several places. However that may be, and without binding ourselves to details, it will be the policy of the government to have that inquiry made throughout the Dominion with the utmost care, with a view, if possible, to have the tariff brought before the House in revised shape at the next session. It is impossible to guarantee that; but it is our hope and full expectation that the work can be accomplished in time for the next session of parliament.

As to the points at which the meetings will be held that will be made known in the same public way as in the former inquiry. Every organization, or for that matter, every individual who wishes to be heard will have ample opportunity. In one case, no doubt the manufacturers' organization will be ready to present their views; in another case the farmers' organization will make their representations. And so with the miners, the fishermen and others, as the case may be. Care will be taken to afford opportunity for every class who wish to present their views to come and state in what respect they think, either that the tariff is right and should be maintained, or that it is defective and what changes they believe should be made.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the personnel of the commission?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), made the last inquiry. We have not reached a conclusion as to the personnel of the coming commission. But, naturally it will be composed of the ministers who are associated with what I may call the revenue side of the government. We have not yet reached a conclusion on that point.

While the details of the tariff must necessarily be open for consideration, and while we are not in a position to make any statement whatever as to what will be the duty on any partiiular article, we are able to state now, by repeating what was said a year ago, the lines upon which we think the tariff revision should take place. Speaking last year upon this subject. I announced that it was the intention of the government to so change the tariff as to adopt what was known as the maximum and minimum system. I do not wish to say anything new on that subject. I will content myself with reading what I said a year ago, merely to remind the House of the matter. In the course of the budget speech last year I said :

> We have to-day practically a maximum and a minimum tariff, if I may so describe it, and then we have the British preference below that again. It would be well that in the revision that may take place we should adopt that principle as it now exists and deal with it more in detail.
> I think it would be well for us to have a maximum general tariff and a minimum general tariff, and the British preference below that as we have it to-day. The maximum tariff would only be applied to those countries which pursue, if I may so call it, a hostile policy. I do not mean to say that they have any hostility to us, but simply that in the carrying out of their own affairs they adopt a trade policy which discourages trade with us. In that case, they cannot complain if we have a maximum tariff, and though we should guard against having an extreme tariff, we would be justified in saying that this tariff should be materially higher than the tariff which we are prepared to extend to other countries which are willing to trade with us on fair and reasonable terms.
> The minimum general tariff, which would correspond to the general tariff to-day, would apply to such countries as do not legislate commercially in a spirit of hostility to us—perhaps that is not happily expressed; let me say, to countries that adopt more moderate tariff views; low tariff countries. Of course where there are favoured nation treaties in existence they have to be considered, but the principal nations which to-day adopt a high tariff policy have not any favoured nation arrangement, and therefore I think our hands will be free in that respect. So, we would have a maximum tariff, as we have the German surtax to-day, to apply to such countries as do not manifest a disposition to trade with us. We should have a minimum general tariff to apply to countries that are disposed to trade with us, and then below that we would have the British preferential tariff to apply to the mother country and to such colonies of the empire as it may be expedient to extend the benefit of that tariff to. I think, sir, that on this line, guarding carefully against extortionate duties, but also making a distinction between the countries which wish to trade with us and the countries that do not wish to trade with us, we can devise a tariff which will be in all its details fairly satisfactory to the country.

That, Sir, was the statement which I made a year ago, and which the House and the country, it is not too much to say, have accepted. I do not need to enlarge upon it to-day, but merely to say that the lines we then indicated we shall endeavour to follow in the revision of the tariff as now proposed. But though we do not propose any extensive tariff changes there are one or two items that we do propose to deal with at once, because we have information that we think sufficient for the purpose. The items are not many, and they are not generally important, though no doubt each one is of some importance to the parties concerned. We propose to impose a duty on rolled oats of 60 cents per 100 pounds. That item is not specifically mentioned in the tariff now, it enters into a general classification with other things. We find that according to representations made to us, with the correctness of which we are satisfied, as the tariff now stands the duty on the raw material is actually higher than the duty on the finished article; therefore the change we propose will equalize the duties and remove that which the House will generally say would be an unjust discrimination.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all it does?

Mr. FIELDING. That is all, it equalizes the duty. On the quantity of raw material it will even then equal the duty which will be levied on the finished article, and will only prevent the discrimination which now exists.

Mr. FOSTER. And if the oats are bought here?

Mr. FIELDING. Then of course it has no effect. But I am told that there has been a large increase in the importation of rolled oats, and our own mills have been idle because of this discrimination in the duties, and we are desirous of removing the discrimination.

There is another item to which I invite the attention of the House. The duty on dry white lead was placed in the 5 per cent list many years ago, at a time when there was no establishment in Canada producing that article. There has now been established in Montreal a very large factory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the duty now?

Mr. FIELDING. It stands in the tariff at 5 per cent, at which it was placed many years ago at a time when it was considered almost a raw material, or what I might call a first process of manufacture; and there being no establishment in Canada for the manufacture of that article, no attention was drawn to it, and it remained on the 5 per cent list. But a large establishment employing a great many men has been erected in Montreal and is in readiness to go into operation. I am not sure but it is in actual operation at this moment, for the manufacture of dry white lead, and we see no reason why that establishment should not have the same degree of incidental protection or tariff advantage which other industries receive. Therefore we say that in order that there may be no unfair discrimination against it, and that it may be put on terms of equality with other manufacturing industries we are dealing with, we propose to make the article of dry white lead 30 per cent, subject of course, to British preference. This is connected, I may say, with the manufacture of lead in British Columbia. The House will remember that we have encouraged the lead industry out there by certain legislation. We are now producing pig lead in Canada, and the effect of this will be that the pig lead made in British Columbia will be brought down to Montreal and, under a corroding process, will be manufactured into dry white lead. The increase of duty on this article which is, I may say, the raw material of paint manufactures, will involve an increase at present of the duty on what we call white lead ground in oil; and we propose to make that, instead of 25 per cent as it now stands, 35 per cent. As respects other paints, we take no action at present, but leave that matter to be inquired into by the commission. But under this change, this factory I refer to, will go into operation, and it will then only have about the same advantage which we give to other manufacturing industries in Canada.

We make a slight change in the duties on cement, not a very important one, though the parties interested may regard it as important. The duty on cement is now levied per 100 pounds, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty. British cement and Belgian cement are imported in casks and barrels the weight of which is very considerable, and on which the duty at present is levied. But where cement is brought in from the United States in bags, the weight of the bag is so trifling that there is practically no duty on the package; but there is considerable duty on the package where the cement comes in casks or barrels from Britain or Belgium. In order to remove that discrimination we propose to put a tax of 25 per cent ad valorem on the bags which contain cement, which duty we think will equalize the conditions with respect to British and Belgian cement.

We propose a change with regard to the wines of South Africa. South Africa has given us the benefit of preferential trade. We are sending a considerable quantity of Canadian goods thither, but so far South Africa has not been able to send very much to us. The government of Cape Colony has represented to us that our preferential tariff, the preferential system which they have accepted, while it gives us an advantage out there, has so far not proved very useful to South Africa, because the things they have to sell are not purchased in Canada to a considerable extent. We, however, suggest that under this change they might be able to send us with advantage to themselves the light wines of Cape Colony and the sister African colonies. We admit the light wines of France at 25 cents per gallon. The wines of South Africa are somewhat stronger, and as our tariff is now arranged, would not come in at the same rate as the light wines of France. In view of the fact that we are sending a good deal to South Africa, and in view of the fact that we are desirous of encouraging reciprocal trade arrangements with our sister colonies, and as we desire to give them some opportunity to send their goods into Canada, we propose that the light wines of South Africa—not Cape Colony only, because, though the application comes from Cape Colony, we prefer to put it on a broader line—we propose that the light wines of the South African colonies forming the South African customs convention shall be admitted into Canada at the rate of 25 cents per gallon, the same rate as the light wines of France. How far this will encourage trade with South Africa, and how far it will substitute the wines of that country for the wines of other countries, is a question which the future will decide. But I think that as this suggestion has come to us from our brethren in South Africa, and as it will give them some benefit out of this prefenential system. I think the House generally will agree with me in extending that advantage to them.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the Minister of Finance whether Australia does not manufacture wines of about the same strength, and if so, is it the intention to discriminate in favour of one colony against another?

Mr. FIELDING. At the present time, yes, because Australia does not give us the benefit of any preference, South Africa does give us the benefit; therefore my hon. friend will agree with me that this is a proper discrimination. The colony of New South Wales formerly had a preference with Canada, but after the Australian colonies were united into a commonwealth, of course their tariff conditions changed and our preference ceased. I may say that we all appreciate the desirability of having preferential trade with our brethren in Australia, and we have taken steps to let them know that we are quite willing to make a preferential arrangement with them. If they are willing to make such arrangements with us, the item of wines will be one of the matters within our offer. But for the present, inasmuch as Australia does not give us a preference and as South Africa does, we propose to extend this benefit to the South African colonies.

The item of settlers' effects is one that has given some trouble during the past year, owing to a rather forced interpretation which some parties have been trying to give to the exemptions which we allow. We provide that settlers' effects shall be admitted free. It may surprise the House to know that the contention has been raised that a contractor coming across from the United States with a large amount of apparatus as a construction plant, is entitled to bring that in as settlers' effects.

Mr. FOSTER. He is an alien labourer.

Mr. FIELDING. He might not be. Whether he be an alien labourer or not we do not think he should bring his contractor's outfit in as ordinary settlers' effects and bring it in free of duty. We propose to strike out the item of settlers' effects and re-enact it in very nearly the same terms but with some changes so that it shall include the things which we all admit are properly settlers' effects, but that it shall not admit free of duty articles destined for sale in Canada or such things as contractor's outfits.

There is a provision in our Act for the temporary admission of machinery for the manufacture of sugar from the beet root, and there is also a provision for the admission of machinery of a class or kind not made in Canada to be used exclusively in alluvial gold-mining. It has been represented to us that this latter item is of the greatest importance to certain sections of our country, and notably to the Yukon, and that by extending this for a further period we would assist in the development of the Yukon. We propose therefore that both these concessions shall be continued until July 6th, 1906.

There is one other item which calls for remarks. In the last budget statement we proposed a change in the duties on British West India molasses, which was placed on the free list with the condition that it must come by direct vessel. It has been represented to us that that works a hardship on our sister colony of Newfoundland. Newfoundland sends out ships laden with fish to the West Indies which bring back molasses destined usually for the Newfoundland market, but whenever there is a surplus of that for the Newfoundland market the Newfoundlanders desire to send it to Canada, and it usually comes in by Halifax or St. John or other ports. Under the reading of our tariff as it now stands that would not be treated as a direct importation. We think it would be unreasonable to take an extreme view of this matter, having regard to the trade we already have with Newfoundland and having regard also to our desires to have the most friendly relations with our sister colony and the hope that some day she may see fit to join her fortunes with ours. We think under these circumstances that any suggestion Newfoundland may make with a view to improve our trade relations should be met in a good spirit and we propose to so amend that clause as to make it clear that molasses imported from any British country, although it passes through the colony of Newfoundland, when in the original package shall be deemed to be imported direct and shall be entitled to free admission.

These, Sir, are all the tariff changes which I have to announce to the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there anything with reference to cotton ?

Mr. FIELDING. Cotton? My hon. friend has not been reading some of the cotton reports in the press.

Mr. BERGERON. I am asking my hon. friend if he makes any change ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is nothing. Many representations have been made to us of course with reference to various tariff items. We have dealt with some of these as to which we are reasonably satisfied our sources of information are complete. As respects the others we think it will not be too much to ask them to wait until the meeting of the Tariff Commission when all these things will be looked into with the utmost care, and with a single eye to trying to do what is best for the interests of the country generally.

In conclusion, we may all I am sure be proud of the great progress that Canada has made in the past and we can be no less proud that the conditions to-day are of the most hopeful character. I do not think that business is quite as keenly active to-day as it was a year or two ago. It will be correct to say that there is perhaps a larger degree of caution amongst our business men than there was, but that on the whole the condition is wholesome. Our industrial concerns as a rule are in good shape. There may be a few exceptions, as to which we have to make inquiries and see whether or not their difficulties are caused by the tariff, but speaking of the conditions of the country generally they are exceedingly satisfactory as I think hon. gentlemen on both sides will appreciate. The outlook in every respect then is hopeful. The reports of the present condition of our crops in all parts of the Dominion are of the most encouraging character, and we have every reason to have great hope and great faith in the results of the present year's farm operations. From all parts of the country the crop reports are even more than usually favourable, and I think our industrial condition in the main is good. With every prospect of an abundant harvest on land and sea, with our industrial establishments fairly well occupied, with immigration flowing into the country as it is, with the eyes of the world centred upon Canada as never before perhaps to the same extent, with the record of the past, with the outlook for the future, there is no reason why every Canadian should not feel the utmost confidence in the future of the Dominion.

With regard to immigration in the Northwest, to that country to which so much attention is now given, I am sure it must be a source of gratification that the flow of immigration is large and continuous. I am aware that there is some discussion, perhaps a legitimate criticism, as to whether indeed we are getting too many people into that country, and as to whether or not there should not be greater discrimination. However that may be I will say that—and I am sure on reflection hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will have the same feeling—I have an abiding faith in the great powers of Canada and its institutions to receive and to absorb and to assimilate these people of all nationalities and make them instruments for the working out of a great future for the country. Nevertheless I appreciate the view which prevails I believe on both sides of the House that we should be particularly anxious to bring into that country a larger percentage of British immigrants. We are hopeful and have faith in the ability of the country to absorb the foreigner, but strong as our faith of that kind is it should not prevent our putting forth special efforts to bring into the country immigrants who are from our motherland. I am sure that in expressing that opinion I am but echoing the view of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) who in entering upon his new office, full of promise of great future usefulness in his administration of that territory will, I am confident, take that view put forth every effort that is possible on his part in order that we may build up that country and make it what we all hope it will be, a populous and properous part of the great Dominion.

When the House resolves itself into Committee of Ways and Means I shall move the following resolutions :

1. That it is expedient to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897, as amended by subsequent Acts, to the following effect :

Schedule 'A' is amended as follows :

Item 158—Strike out the words 'dry white and'

The following items to be inserted:

50. (a) Rolled oats, six-tenths of a cent per pound.

158. (a) Dry white lead, thirty per cent ad valorem.

158. (b) White lead ground in oil, thirty five per cent ad valorem.

Item 187 is repealed and the following substituted :

Schedule 'B' is amended by repealing item 455 and substituting the following :

Settlers' effects, viz.: Wearing apparel, books, usual and reasonable household furniture and other household effects; instruments and tools of trade, occupation or employment, guns, musical instruments, domestic sewing machines, typewriters, bicycles, carts, wagons and other highway vehicles, agricultural implements and live stock for the farm, not to include live stock or articles for sale, or for use as a contractor's outfit, nor vehicles nor implements moved by mechanical power, nor machinery for use in any manufacturing establishment; all the foregoing if actually owned abroad by the settler for at least six months before his removal to Canada and subject to rgulations by the Minister of Customs: provided that any dutiable articles entered as settlers' effects may not be so entered unless brought by the settler on his first arrival, and shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of without payment of duty until after twelve months actual use in Canada.

2. The exemption from duty of machinery and structural iron and steel for the construction and equipment of factories for the manufacture of sugar from beet root, authorized by section 11 of chapter 11 of the Acts of 1904, is extended from April 1st, 1905, to June 30th, 1906.

3. The exemption from duty of machinery and appliances of a kind not made in Canada for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining, authorized by section 12 of the said chapter, is extended from July 1st, 1905, to June 30th, 1906.

4. Section 18 of the said chapter is amended by inserting after the word 'production' in the fourth line the words 'or from any British country.'

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the apology which was made by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance I do not think he can be allowed to go scot free for coming down at this late date in the history of this session with his budget speech. He endeavoured to excuse himself on two grounds, one is absence for a month at the beginning of the session. That excuse is valid. The other was that it did not very much matter because he did not propose to make very large tariff changes. Now I think that is not grasping fully the idea of the importance of what is called the budget speech. In the past the budget speech has at times been mainly important because of its suggested tariff changes. To-day probably it is less a matter of importance than at any time during the history of this country in the last twenty or twenty-five years inasmuch as the forward step which has been taken by my friends opposite from the old abiding place of free trade to the trim and neat and new establishment of more thorough protection makes the matter of the budget speech of less moment to this country.

From this time out—and as long as hon. gentlemen opposite remain in their present frame of mind in that respect—the budget speech should be welcomed by this House as a means of discussing the finances of this country, and there were many expressions dropped incidentally by the Minister of Finance which would lead me to hope that he himself views it in that light. To come down to-day, after the session has lasted six months, in the middle of the dog days, when the House is thoroughly tired and the country even more so, after nine-tenths of all the expenditures which are contemplated for next year have been voted and have been more or less discussed, when it is absolutely impossible to fix the mind of the House or the country upon any fair discussion of financial matters; to bring down a budget speech at this particular stage of the session has no justification in necessity, is against all proper constitutional usage, and militates against what the annual financial review is specially meant for, a calm and thorough review of the financial status of the country and the contribution by both sides of the House of their best opinion and their best advice as to what is the proper financial policy for the future. If it were not showing a malevolent disposition I should almost venture to hope that if the Finance Minister ever offends in that way again, that the heat will be so great that he will have the absolute penalty for his dereliction of duty visited upon him almost instantaneously—not to the matter of utter death, but sufficient to frighten him from any such course in future.

As the Minister of Finance has not vaunted himself or his party unduly in his address, I propose to follow him in a very quiet and calm criticism of the various statements he has made. In the first place, we have about reached—for the present probably at least—the buoyant condition of revenue which has been somewhat striking during the last six or seven years. We are coming to the point now where, as we review the year before last, the past year and the year upon which we are entering, there is not very much to be hoped for in the way of increase of our revenues upon the present customs and excise basis. Therefore, the word of caution which was incidentally alluded to by the Minister of Finance deserves to be more than alluded to, deserves to be more than a word, deserves to be translated into an actual principle to guide the government and to guide it from this very moment forward.

My hon. friend has of course made his usual dilation on the surplus—I will say he did it with his usual fairness, because on the question of the surpluses I do not think he has ever been fair to the governments that preceded him. He calls the surplus of last year a magnificent surplus, and he was loudly applauded by those who sit behind him. The time was, if we wished to be reminiscent, when the strong men of the Liberal party questioned the right of any government to have a surplus at all. I cannot help but think that it was Nemesis close on the heels of the Minister of Finance when in a succeeding portion of his address he himself gave the very best possible reasons why he should not have a surplus. But a surplus he has,

and he calls it magnificent. It is a surplus that is more to the point than that; it is what you may call an accommodating surplus. You may view it from three standpoints; if you leave out certain items of adjustment in the public accounts the surplus will be so large; if you cease the charging to capital what the Minister of Finance plainly admitted never should be charged to capital you will have another kind of surplus; if you do neither of these things you will have a third kind of surplus, but whichever way you view it you will have a surplus. And so the conscientious thinker on the government side of the House who has scruples about any one of these three kinds of surpluses can still his scruples by throwing into the waste basket the kind of surplus he objects to and yet have a comforting assurance that there is still a surplus. The Minister of Finance said that unfriendly critics rather took exception to a surplus on any other ground than that all the expenditures of government should first be met and that then if there was any money left that was virtually and truly a surplus. The Minister of Finance dissented somewhat from that view of the case. Well, I will dissent with him from that view of the case, but only on one condition and that is, that you shall define by a strict and definite line what shall constitute capital expenditures and what shall constitute expenditures out of the revenue of the year. If you will do that and adhere to that in your appropriations and expenditures, then I grant you that it is possible to make a distinction between your capital expenditure and your expenditure on consolidated fund account, and have a true and unassailable ground upon which you can show a surplus and defend a surplus. Is that done by the government at present in power? In no way is it done by this government. If any one attempts in the appropriations or in the expenditures to trace out any definite line of demarcation between the one and the other he is landed into a maze out of which it is impossible for him to trace his way. He will have in one case a bucket which is charged to capital account; he will have in another place what you might look upon as a capital account expenditure—although this very seldom does happen—distributed to consolidated fund account. But, since our time and our administration the line of distinction between capital expenditure and expenditure on consolidated revenue account has become radically confused to the amount of millions of dollars per year, so that today it is not possible in any way to trace the defining line between capital expenditure and expenditure upon consolidated revenue account. When the Minister of Finance held that these might be circumstances in which you should apply money to capital account and so keep it in your books, I think I agree with him. But I rather think his comparison was not very happily chosen when he instanced the labouring man who was buying a house and said that he would pay for his house out of capital and charge it to capital account, when, if he was renting his house, he would pay his rent out of income and charge it to income account. The query would be where the labouring man would get the capital to pay for the house. Generally such a man buys a house with a very large mortgage upon it. Where does the mortgage come in? Does it go to consolidated revenue or income, or does it go to capital account?

When the Minister of Finance came to discuss the question of bounties he gave up his whole contention, for he immediately concluded that at least that was an item that was doubtful; he said that it might be fairly maintained that bounties ought not be charged to capital account.

Well, now I can conceive this: if the government undertakes to build a railway, the building of that railway, with all the costs and charges incident thereto from the time it is begun until it is finished, is a fair item to charge up to capital account and let the future users of the railway in the country carry their proportional charge of the burden instead of our paying for the whole out of income and making the cost of the construction of the railway a charge for the years in which it is being constructed, a burden placed upon the taxpayers who have the misfortune to reside in the country and pay taxes during these years of construction. That is a fair line which we may take, but the moment that railway is built and constructed and in operation and therefore finished, that capital account ought to be at once closed and the operation of the railway and the maintenance of the railway should thereafter go to income account, year by year, and should be placed against the revenues of the road. That is a fairly plain thing. We owned that railway. We had invested money in it. That is our capital investment in it, but when you pay an oil bounty or a steel bounty or a binder twine bounty and you pay it for ten years, have you any more interest in the binder twine companies or the oil company or in any of the companies than you had when you started to pay first? It is plainly a wrong method to treat that as a payment on capital account. It is a subvention or aid and you might just as well charge to capital account any of your subventions or aids to any of the steamship companies plying between different parts of this country or between this country and foreign countries. The capital that owns them at the first, owns them at the last. They make the capital expenditure. We do not make it. We simply give an aid or a subvention for the purpose of improving trade or commerce. So in regard to every dollar of our bounties. So in regard to every dollar of our railway subsidies. If Mann and Mackenzie raise their capital and build a railway they constitute a capital account, but when we give them a subsidy of so much per mile and they invest that in their railway we are not investing in a capital account at all, we are giving them an aid or a subvention for the purpose of helping to develop the resources and to advance the progress and prosperity of our country. No subsidy to a railway company and no bounties or anything of the kind ought by any possibility to go into capital account. I take that position, I take it fairly, I believe that is the proper position to take, and it is only when taking that well-defined position that we can make any distinction between capital and consolidated fund expenditures or come at the exact basis of what is a legitimate surplus.

Now, my hon. friend—and this is what I want the House to mark—argued that there was a class of expenditure which we ought to charge to capital account. The very moment he argued that—and I agree with him—that very moment he put the strongest argument to this House in favour of keeping your taxation simply up to the limit that is necessary to carry on your expenditures except those which are capital expenditures. But, if you keep your capital account to a certain and well-defined line there is no necessity for overtaxing the people. Only then should you tax to the limit of what is necessary to meet what you may call the current or consolidated fund expenditures of the country. So that, he argued himself at last into an exact agreement with the position of the older men of the Liberal party of years ago, who, upon the very same line, said that you ought not to take from the people more taxes than were necessary for the needs of economical government from year to year—not from decade to decade—but from year to year, evidently on the principle that there is a class of expenditure for the development of the country which it is unfair to call upon the taxpayers of any one year to meet, and as equal advantages go to the taxpayers of succeeding generations they ought to be in all fairness entitled to pay a proportion of the expense and to contribute to the upkeep.

But, when my hon. friend was talking about surpluses and vaunting his surpluses, did it not strike him that before him and after him there were some voices that might appeal to his ears for caution and fair play? Let us take, if you will, those years during which the Liberal-Conservative administration was in power in this country from 1879 to 1896, and turn to page 84 of the capital account and to other pages of the public accounts which show the expenditures and current revenue receipts and what might have been charged to capital account expenditures, and what do you find? That immense capital expenditures, amounting to scores of millions of dollars, were made in the building of a great Canadian line of railway. Look also at the columns in reference to the Intercolonial Railway and you will find that a great many millions of dollars were spent for the extension and upbuilding of the Intercolonial Railway. Look also at the canals which were then at their most expensive period and you will find many millions of dollars expended for canals. Now, Sir, add these three items, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Intercolonial Railway and the canals together and then come to the time when hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, when the canals were practically finished, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was entirely finished, in so far as subventions or aids go, and when the Intercolonial Railway was finished, in so far as capital expenditures were concerned, to a very large extent, unless some further extensions of the road were to be provided for as have since been provided for. But what I wanted to call the attention of the House to is that it would only have been fair in showing the less quantity of surpluses that we had during our administration to have called the attention of parliament and of the country to these three great items of expenditure and to have said: there is a reasonable reason as to why the surpluses of the Liberal-Conservative party were less and as to why their increase of the debt was greater. With these voices from the past mingle the voices from the future which my hon. friend has heard tingling slowly, tingling gently in his ears as yet, but which in crescendo note will grow in volume and grow in strength until he comes to the time when he shall have borrowed $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 to complete the great railway which this government has undertaken to build. The condition of things facing my hon. friend will then oblige any Finance Minister, who gets up before this House in future years, to show great increases in the debt and diminishing surpluses, because from this time on, in addition to the usual and regular outlays of the government—constantly increasing. I admit—there is to be at least one great public undertaking which will involve a capital expenditure of from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000. I just leave that criticism where it is, and I think it is a fair criticism to make.

My hon. friend next took up the question of interest, and he took credit to himself, in a modest kind of way, for being able to make the statement that whereas in 1897 $9,200,000 was the net interest paid and in 1903 $9,000,000, in 1904 it is a little less than $9,000,000. And he would fain have this House believe that it has been by some wonderful management of this wonderful government that this was brought about. I think that an explanation of the facts will set this matter very easily right before the country. Two things have contributed to it. In the first place, the older loans of this country naturally went at a higher rate, now money is cheaper. It happened so. I do not think even the most ardent admirer of my hon. friend would say that it became so because he and his party came into power. It also happened that during the eight or ten years—a part of which has just passed, a part of which is passing, and another part of which has to come between this and 1913—a very large amount of these old loans at high rates of interest have fallen in or will fall in; and such is the condition of the markets in the world—not brought about, I imagine, by any policy of the present government—that whereas 6 per cent, 5 per cent, 4½ per cent and 4 per cent were paid for the loans which were running, it is possible to take these loans up at their due date and substitute for them money which can be borrowed at 3 per cent and at 2½ per cent, or at certainly a little less than 3 per cent, all costs and charges taken in. Now, if my hon. friend had said that during the last few years more than $22,000,000 of 4 per cent loans have fallen in, replaced by money at 3 per cent; that more than $7,500,000 of 5 per cent loans have fallen in, to be replaced by money at 3 per cent; and that a certain quantity—not a very large amount. I suppose—of the six per cent loans have fallen in, to be replaced by money which can be borrowed at 3 per cent, he would have come to a total of nearly $30,000,000 on which, up to the present, he has had the benefit of a reduction of interest, because they fall in from the high rates and have been renewed at the low rates. That makes the difference; and if my hon. friend had had to pay on all that money the same rate that was being paid at the time he came into office, he would have about $2,500,000 more to add to his interest account during the past eight years.

But it goes further than that. It will be recollected that the late Liberal-Conservative government paid 4 per cent on saving and post office bank deposits, and after that 3½ per cent, but that after the hon. gentleman came into office he reduced the interest on saving bank deposits to 3 per cent and wanted to reduce it to 2½ per cent, but was baulked by the evident disinclination of the country to agree with his policy in that line. Since our time this hon. gentleman has been having the benefit of some $56,000,000 of deposits in the post office savings banks at ½ per cent and 1 per cent less interest than was paid by the government which preceded him. Any one can see that ½ per cent upon $56,000,000 of these deposits in a single year makes an item of $285,000. If he had paid the same interest on savings banks deposits that we paid, he would have the large item of $2,280,000 to add to his net interest account in the eight years. That added to the $2,500,000 above noted makes $5,000,000 and the hon. gentleman can have nothing to boast of from his policy or administration when he talks of the lowering in the amount of interest that is being paid. That criticism, given from a state of things as they are, effectually disposes, I think, of any vaunting with reference to the diminution in the net interest account.

We come now to the year 1904-5, and we find that the consolidated revenue expenditure estimate comes up to $62,200,000. The estimates of receipts come up to $71,200,000, which leaves about $9,000,000. And the hon. gentleman calls that his surplus. Again I say it would be a surplus if we had a proper distinguishing line, and had it adhered to, as between capital expenditure and expenditure on consolidated revenue account. But the matter assumes another aspect when he has to add to the $62,200,000 his $12,500,000 of so-called capital expenditure, including subsidies to railways and bounties to these different industries which are being subsidized by bounties. He then finds that his surplus over all expenditure diminishes from the $9,000,000 to a deficit of $3,500,000, or, with the sinking fund, he can charge a deficit of $1,300,000.

I am not going to be a prophet of any disaster, but it is quite possible that the buoyant point of our revenue for the present has reached its maximum or very close to it; and it is a pretty grave statement which my hon. friend makes when, with that stationary condition of revenue and a deficit on all expenditure of $1,300,000, he shows that the expenditure was greater by $5,000,000 than that of the preceding year, and shows an unexampled estimate of expenditure for the present year. While he shows that, he does not still think there ought to be any alarm taken. Yet he states, when he comes to speak of the business conditions of the country, that business men are using caution. So they are. And what business men use, I think statesmen may use as well as regards these phases and conditions of business and finance in the country at large. And I think it would have been well if this year the government, instead of launching out into expenditures at a rate unexampled and increasing in some departments to a most startling extent—if instead of doing that, they had, at this, the beginning of a new term, emphasized the era upon which they have entered with a reasonable and economical estimate, considering the state of the finances of the country and the future obligations we have undertaken, we might look with more confidence to the future. But instead, the hon. gentleman says it is impossible to curtail the expenditure.

The armouries must be built, the railroads must be built, the breakwaters and wharfs, the canals, the public buildings, must be built. Granted. But every man of business capacity cuts his garment according to his cloth; and the government has no right to refuse to exercise business precaution and cut its garments according to its cloth. When was there a time in the history of this country when you could not have said that it would be well to have an armoury built, in every county may be; to have a wharf built every mile along the rivers and coast-line of our country? When has there been a time when it could not have been argued that this policy would stimulate business? Still, who was ever wild enough to propose that we should launch upon the expenditure of millions or go further in that regard than our capacity would warrant—that we should do otherwise than build these works as we can overtake them, so as to keep our expenditure within our revenue?

I acknowledge to you, Mr. Speaker, that I myself was startled when this morning I made up a little table, which I am going to give to the House. It is a table of expenditures on consolidated account, contrasting 1896 with 1904. It would have been made still more impressive, if I could have taken the year 1905. But it covers the period of the first eight years that these hon. gentlemen opposite have been in office.

It will be seen that the increase in lighthouse and coast service was from $445,742 in 1896, to $1,275,016 in 1904, an increase of $829,274, or 184 per cent. And the increase in this service is almost entirely coincident with the coming into office of the present minister (Mr. Préfontaine). Let me take another one of this gentleman's departments. The ocean and river service spent in 1896, $181,451 ; and in 1904, $566,546, an increase of $385,095, or 210 per cent. And the fisheries, which increased 49 per cent is another of the departments in charge of this gentleman. Now let us take the whole Marine and Fisheries Department, three branches of which I have just given. Now, I doubt not that there are many men on the other side of the House, and I would not doubt that there are men even in the cabinet who had no idea that this great increase had taken place in just about three years.—In 1896 the Marine and Fisheries Department had an expenditure of $1,054,442. Last year, 1904, this expenditure had increased to $2,475,881, an increase of $1,421,438 or 135 per cent ; the large part of this increase being within the last three years. The table I have just given shows the relative expenditures during periods of eight years of this government and the previous government. It shows that in the year 1888, the expenditure of the late government was $36,718,494. At the end of eight years 1896, this expenditure had increased to $36,949,142, and an increase of $230,648, or 6-10 of 1 per cent. On the other hand, this government has increased from $30,949,142, which was the expenditure in 1896 under their predecessors, to $55,612,832—an increase of $18,663,690, or 50 per cent.

Now, I agree that, to a certain extent, increases are absolutely necessary ; they must be looked for as the country grows. But, even allowing for all that, we find here an increase which is perfectly abnormal, which, I believe, is unprecedented and is certainly unjustifiable as well. Nor does the last estimate laid on the table of the House for the present year, show any diminution in the rate of expenditure. It shows rather an increased rate of expenditure, and lays the foundation for still larger expenditures, from which it will be almost impossible, if not altogether impossible for the present government ever to recede. One trouble in all this is, I am afraid, that each department, more now than ever, is a law unto itself, each makes its own estimate, pushing on with an eye single to its own necessities, and does not take sufficiently into account the work of the whole and the immense added expenditure which it is entailing upon the country. The greater demands of the country, made necessary by the advancement and improvement which is going on, call for the careful consideration not only of the government and its followers, but of all the members of this House and of the country as well .

I wish I could believe that all these expenditures had been made for the development of the country, in accordance with the statement made by the Minister of Finance that the Liberal expenditures for the last few years have made for the development of this country. Well, have they ? I never knew that it would be possible to find in the province of Nova Scotia, for instance, the names of so many places where wharfs, and breakwaters, and piers could possibly be built, as I find in the estimate which has been placed before us this year. All geography needs to be revised, all knowledge by the most liberal-minded and best travelled has to be extended in order to grasp the almost infinite number of little places in the province of Nova Scotia where large expenditures are made, and I am bound to say, out of nine-tenths of which no corresponding revenue at all comes to this country, and very little corresponding advantage comes to the general development of the country. What is true greatly of Nova Scotia is true partly of other provinces. Quebec is a good second, Ontario comes in about even with Quebec; but taking size and population into account, Nova Scotia takes the cake, every time she gets the plum.

Now, Sir, I put on the order paper of the House a motion for a return of all these public works, what they cost, the revenue that we get from them, the amount of business that is transacted each year on every one of them. I have not that now, and consequently cannot well criticise these expenditures ; but that we shall have next year, and I propose to bring to the attention of this House and the country the facts of the case with reference to all these matters. Is it or is it not true that we are making unwise expenditures, and making expenditures which this Dominion government ought not to be called upon to make? After the warning of this year what do I find ? That the principle is even still more extended, and that there is actually a steamship subvention to a line of steamers to ply between Moncton and Petitcodiac, on the Petitcodiac river. That is about the most startling extension of the system of steamship subsidies that has yet met my view.

Well, Sir, has the money we have poured out like water on the Intercolonial added so much to the development of this country? $1,000,000 of a deficit last year, $2,000,000 of a deficit for the year which is just ended, with an unknown quantity for the years Petitcodiac river. That is about the most startling of all is the defiant apology, should I say—no, but the defiant assertion of the present Minister of Railways that he does not expect to see the time come when there should not be a deficit, and that he is not going to apologize for any deficit upon that road. Well, Sir, while I am on that point let me make one or two observations with reference to that road. A road situated as the Intercolonial is, running, the most of it, through a reasonably good country, some of it through a very rich country, commercially speaking, and in the way of transport, with a capital account that draws no interest and makes no charge upon its freight, for instance, with no interest therefore paid upon the investment. Take that road and then take this other fact alongside of it, that in the whole of the United States and Canada there is no great line of railway which during these last few years, has not shown an increase in its earnings over its expenditures, and which is not paying increasing dividends to its stockholders. And yet you have an Intercolonial such as ours, not ending any longer in a field, but ending in the great city of Montreal, to which it was brought with great cost and expense, running between Sydney, and Halifax and St. John, and the commercial centre of our upper provinces; yet you have the Minister of Railways piling up deficit against deficit, while all the time his hand is in the public till for capital expenditures, and by the million they are dispensed for what, in other roads is charged up against the income expenditures of the road.

Now let us be honest with each other. Is that a state of things which can last? Is it a state of things which ought to last? As business men let us ask ourselves. Is there a reason for it? Yes. And what is it, and who has given the reason? The Prime Minister himself has given the reason, the head of the government, the head of the party; his reason was given in the city of Toronto. He said it was not the fault of the men, the most of them, and I think he said all of them, able administrators who have had charge of the Intercolonial—not their fault that it had never met its expenditures and that deficit had been piled upon deficit—not the fault of the men, not the fault of the railway. Where was the fault? That it was due to a vicious system of management. Now, Sir, that is an important statement made by the head of a strong government. Million after million in deficits charged up to the general housekeeping account, million after million each year charged up to capital and the interest going to the general account; deficit after deficit, and now no apology for it, but a settling down into an acquiescent attitude that this state of things is really desirable, that it should continue, and that it is likely to continue, and the whole of it due to 'a vicious system of management.' Yet the government sits there and does not turn over its little finger to change that vicious system of management, and put a system of management in vogue and in work which will put that railway where it can well be put.

I make no extravagant claim for the Intercolonial, but I believe it is an assertion which can be made and sustained, that the road, paying no interest on its capital account, that road running through the country that it does, if it were decently managed, if it were half decently managed, would pay its way and be no burden upon the taxpayers of this country, and go on forever in its beneficent course as a great trade artery, affording cheap rates between the maritime provinces and the upper provinces. But, Sir, it cannot go on in this way. What is the blot? The blot is that it is under partisan management, that no man exercises business intelligence and business administration on that road. The road to-day is in the hands of heelers. From the time that it starts out with the first puff of its engine at Sydney until it is put under cover at Montreal, through every constituency that it runs, it is not the railway management that rules, it is the party interests that rule. There is no man who has it within his power to put business men into every department of the work on that railway and say to them: You are there because of your fitness to do the work, you go the moment you prove to me that you are unfit for your work. That is a system which cannot be challenged. If there were a man so placed and who took that fashion of administering its affairs and if there were not a strong government to back him, the moment that he said: John Jones is not fit for his duty and must go, all the party strength in the constituency to which John Jones belonged would be on the back of that man—no, but on the back of the member and the minister in order to have John Jones kept on pay, whether he did his work properly or did not do his work properly.

There is no man in that railway to-day who has the power to say: I want just so many men and no more for all the departments of this railway. He has to take what the party managers press on the member and the member presses on the government, and consequently you have the railway filled from one end to the other with the inefficient and supernumeraries. Can we not rise above partisan considerations in the management of that railway for the country's interest and for the interest of the railway itself? Can we not make it a rule that a man shall be placed in charge of that railway because of his competency to manage it and that he shall be ordered to manage it with business ability or take the consequence, and then say to him: Putting that responsibility upon you and making that demand upon you we leave you to say just the number of men you want and just how long you wish to keep these men according to their efficiency. Even with that proper patronage is not cut out. If your manager wants a man to fill a position, if you must have party patronage, then he indicates that he does need such a man, and if your representative of the county interested can furnish that man, able and ready to do the work, then the patronage is preserved and the object of patronage is subserved, but it is no longer vicious patronage; it is fair and reasonable, provided that you keep the manager in that absolutely essential position that he shall be the arbiter of appointment or dismissal. I can see a sardonic smile curving the lips of one or two gentlemen opposite. He says: That would not suit me at all; I want to put a man on when I want to put him on, whether Mr. Pottinger wants him or not, whether there is a place for him or not. Now, I say we have to get out of that system sometime in Canada or else we will never get where we should get in our administration. Are we ready to make an effort to get out of it now and make that effort on our own Intercolonial Railway? The trouble with that railway is, according to the right hon. gentleman himself, the viciousness of its management. Why not substitute a sane system?

I shall now take up one or two of the points noted by my hon. friend. As to his loan at 2¾ per cent I think he was fortunate in getting it at that figure, and I hope he may be able to run it along in the shape of treasury bills for a year or two at that rate.

As to the foreign currency, I am glad that an effort is being made to get rid of the currency which is now causing so much trouble and displacing so much of our own currency in our own country. I was somewhat surprised at the smallness of the estimate; I supposed it would be rather larger, but I imagine it is not so great as people who have not paid special attention to the subject would think it might be. What the minister proposes to do is to give the banks a premium for collecting that money. What does that mean? He makes it a point to the banks to take all that money at par it can possibly get because they will get ⅛ per cent on all of it. Now, what is the first effect of that? It is to take away what is at present a disability with reference to that currency. To-day the man who sees American coin floating about refuses it when offered to him if it comes in a large way because he fears his bank will not accept it or will charge a commission on it. Under this new arrangement a man will take it no matter how much is offered him because he knows he can take it to the bank and get par for it. The bank now has an inducement to take it because it gets ⅛ of 1 per cent on all it corrals and hands over to the government. To my mind that is open to this contingency; it will have the effect of making the trading public take more American money. They know that they can dispose of it at their banks at par. To-day there is a disposition against taking it because people do not know whether traders or banks will take it and fear possible trouble and discounts. This advises every one to take all that they can get as it as good as our own money. I am afraid that what the hon. gentleman proposes to do will not work out satisfactorily. I think that in addition to what he has done he should also make a stipulation that the banks should frown down the taking of this money and that in some way or other the public should be given the idea that if they pass this money in circulation they may possibly lose on it. The minister says that we can afford to do this although it makes the money as good as our own because it will aid the trading community. That is one way to look at it, but it is not the way to get rid of a foreign, alien and debased currency. No financier that I ever knew of ever undertook to get rid of it in that way. This would seem to me to invite it to continue in its course and to enlarge its current in this course. Every dollar of that money which keeps in circulation in Canada means a dollar of our Canadian money which is kept out of circulation, and a million dollars of Canadian currency put into circulation would mean a very large profit to this country. The only thing the minister does to decrease the currency is to say that for all you take of American token currency I pay you with a million dollars of our own token currency. That helps for the time being, but is it not trying to empty a stream which regularly flows back? The minister says this is being done as an experiment. A year will show whether or not the experiment will be successful, but in some way or other we ought to emphatically discourage the circulation of foreign and debased currency, more especially so when there is no possible way in which our currency can have the least circulation in their country.

Now we come to the tariff—and what shall I say of the tariff? Is there a sacred shrine which hon. gentlemen opposite have ever builded for themselves, in which they have installed their gods and said: These be your gods, O, Israel! and here we shall come and worship? Is there one single shrine that they have ever sanctified and filled and worshipped in that they have not within eight years demolished, from which they have not cast out their gods, and gone into what they used to call the old Canaanitish country and embraced their alleged false gods and brought them and put them upon a pedestal and bowed down to them to the very dust.

To-day, 1905, the Minister of Finance says: I cannot tell you what the duties will be, but I can tell you the principle upon which they will be based. A protective tariff! That is not enough. A maximum protective tariff! Even that is not enough. Add to it a minimum protective tariff! That is not enough protection. Add a retaliatory tariff! Well, that makes it about complete, and then for the sake of good neighbour-ship put a preferential British and colonial tariff in along with it. There you have the tariff principle of this government; plus bounties, plus dumping machinery. There you have it, the ne plus ultra of protectionism in 1905. And yet the same gentleman who brought this budget in to-day toddled around through Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and every other province he could get into, and swore up to the gods that if there was one base and bad thing it was protection. He got on the top of a petroleum oil can and shouted to his hearers to come to the defence of the poor light burners of the country against the foul exaction of the tariff upon oil. There sits opposite me—no, he has gone—there sat a moment ago the gentleman who declared that when he came to arrange a tariff the Liberals would not base it upon the principle of protection, protection must be destroyed. There sat the right hon. gentleman who said: who dare tell me that we must take money out of one man's pocket and transfer it to another man's pocket. And yet, what are the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister doing with their bounties? They are taking my money—I don't use any iron, except as a tonic now and then—they are taking my money that I have to earn out of my pocket and putting it into the iron-founder's pocket to help him to make iron for other people. They are taking my money out of my pocket—I do not use any twine—and putting it into the pockets of the binder twine monopolists in order that they may go on making binder twine for other people. They are taking the money out of my pocket and everybody else's pocket and paying it over in these different kinds of bounties, and yet the right hon. gentleman declared with unblushing face to his audience and a sunny smile on his countenance that when the Liberals got into power and reformed the tariff every vestige of protection should go out. Oh! it is a great temptation for me to become reminiscent to-day. These gentlemen wanted to make Canada a cheap country to live in. Is it cheaper to live to-day than it was in 1896? I do not need to invoke Bradstreet or Sauerbeck as an authority on that. Every man knows the answer to that in his own household. Is it a cheaper country to live in to-day? The answer is against the government. Have they found our great natural market which they said was an indispensable market; have they given us reciprocal trade with the United States of America? Look at the figures and look at their own humiliating recantation to this House, when after having tried to do what they stated they were absolutely certain they could do, they came back and declared that they found Uncle Sam not over well disposed towards reciprocity, and themselves convinced that this country hereafter did not need reciprocity anyway.

Mr. FOSTER.

Reminiscent again. Where is my old friend Sir Richard Cartwright? He is still a member of this cabinet. He thought he had headed the vessel towards a free trade port, but to-day he finds he is on board of a Kniaz Potemkine with insurgents in charge, steering for the revolutionary city of Odessa; the crew declared to be pirates, their officers ironed, and a revolutionary committee in charge.

Reminiscent again; a great country this we have. Why, there sits a gentleman, the very Minister of Finance himself, who in 1884, and in 1886, tramped Nova Scotia from one coast to the other, ferried over its rivers, not so well provided with wharfs as they are now; visited its ports which were void of breakwaters and piers; wandered through its wastes and outplaces that had no armouries and no public buildings, and prayed to every good citizen of Nova Scotia, for the sake of the future to arise like one man, break this bond that unites them with Canada and throw in their lot with the United States of America, which country was their natural market.

Reminiscent again. Where would we have been if the Minister of Finance had been as sincere as his professions; or as strong as his desires—and had taken Nova Scotia and with it New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island out of this confederation? Reminiscences: we mention one more of them. If in 1891, these gentlemen opposite had won the election into which they had put their whole force, and had concluded unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, where would have been this great young country which one night did not exist, which the next day appeared in the enlarged horizon of the right hon. gentleman and his government as a newly discovered nation. Do you need these reminiscences? There is nothing left which they set up which they have not demolished. There is no sweet morsel of the once Liberal policy which has not turned to ashes in their mouths. Are they of saner minds, of riper judgment now? Anyway, to-day they come to this parliament with principles of an out-and-out protective tariff. Not satisfied without making it protective, they are going to have it retaliatory; they are going to have a whip with a snap to it so that if any recalcitrant country under the leadership of such upstarts as Emperor Wilhelm or the Czar of Russia does what is wrong with reference to Canadian trade, they shall raise the whip and snap it and strike. Retaliation! Why, retaliation was once said to be the height of utter nonsense in matters of trade or tariff.

Well, there are other things I might say but, I do not wish to come back after six o'clock and I will ask my hon. friend the Finance Minister to bear with me a few minutes longer. When the hon. gentleman was taking the future into consideration did he think of certain things that he will have to do? It seems to me that there are certain things that did not come into his calculation. Right before him in the near future he has to make financial provisions on a gigantic scale. Between now and 1913 there are about $140,000,000 of loans now pending which will have to be met by reborrowings. In the space of seven years from now, no matter what the conditions of the country are, no matter what reverses may take place or what cycles of depression may occur, the Minister of Finance of Canada has to go into the money markets of the world and provide for $140,000,000 for the replacing of old loans.

That is startling in the first place, but he has not only to do that; he has to go into the money markets of the world within ten years and provide for fresh loans of from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 for that section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway which the government is obliged to build. That is, that within ten years time, or less, this government has to face the raising of $250,000,000, to $300,000,000 odd and more in the markets of the world. Anything is liable to happen and a prudent man must have an eye on contingencies. If cycles of depression come when these immense works are upon us, and if these immense national responsibilities have to be shifted do we stand in the best possible position with the revenue pledged up to its hilt for the current expenses of the country and with all these borrowings and deplacings of money by borrowing to be met by this country? Why, it would seem to me that some of the ministers, at least,—I do not know whether all of them—think it is as easy to deal with these mighty financial problems as it is to roll off a log. I was amused when my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), in some of the campaigns of last year, talked about the mere trifle that the building of this section of 1,900 miles was. Why, he said, it would not cost this country more than $14,000,000. One surplus will wipe it all off. That is one way and a rather original way to deal with a great financial problem, but the fact remains for the practical man that he has to face the borrowing of $100,000,000, or $150,000,000, with the revenue pledged up to its hilt and likely to be over-pledged by the largely increasing current expenditures of this country. These things are matters, which, it seems to me, put the financial condition now-a-days far ahead of the trade and tariff condition and make it the duty of this parliament to very seriously and very conscientiously review the whole position and set its sails so as to weather the breakers which are certainly ahead. No one has more hope in this country than myself, no one has greater confidence in it, but this is not a country which can afford to play with honest and economical principles of finance and government and it seems to me that we are going far towards that at the present time.

Mr. PATERSON. May I ask the hon. gentleman one question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. Does he think there will be no increase of revenue owing to the construction of that road?

Mr. FOSTER. May I answer my hon. friend by asking another question? Does he think he will get any revenue from that road for twelve years to come?

Mr. PATERSON. I think there will be a little increase of revenue from the construction of that road.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend cannot answer the question by saying that he will get any revenue from that road for ten years. All that time he is paying interest on the construction of the road when it is not earning and cannot earn a single dollar. It is sunk money until it gets beyond the point where it is completed and in operation and where the percentage is being paid upon it, and that will not be for at least ten or twelve years from this time.

Mr. PATERSON Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not understand me. During this time will there not be an increase in importations owing to the construction of the road and an increase of revenue from the people who will be brought into the country, and from the general prosperity and increased trade will there not be larger revenues secured?

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him another question? From now on to ten years hence, with our added population and with our added business, does he look for anything better than an increased revenue from customs and excise sufficient to meet the increased requirements of the country? If it does, I shall be heartily pleased but if it does it will be all it will do. I shall be very glad indeed if these hon. gentlemen are liable to meet all these extra expenditures out of revenue. But does my hon. friend take into account that he has created two new provinces now, and that he must provide for $618,750 for each or $1,237,500 for both out of his revenue this very coming year and that within a very short time he must raise that amount to $3,817,000? That will absorb some of the increased revenue that comes from increased importations owing to the increased business of the country. Does my hon. friend the Minister of Finance lose sight of the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden is coming down to this House with a scheme which will add $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 per year to the current expenses of the country—$3,000,000 at least, and that is $3,000,000 which is taken out of the revenue for which no plea can be put forward that there is an increased revenue or earnings or anything like in reference to it. Soldiers are important and necessary, but soldiers are non-producers. They are the protectors of the country but they do not contribute to its industries or to its production in any sense. Does he not also remember that when the road is built, costing $100,000,000 to $150,000,000, for the remainder of the leased period of fifty years this government has to keep that road in its betterments and improvements? Is it not an axiom amongst railway men, that, granted that you build a road, finish it and first cost is done with, in the next twenty-five or fifty years you will spend as much upon it for actual improvements and betterments absolutely necessary as the prime cost of the road? What is that to come out of? It certainly will not come out of what we get back from the Grand Trunk Pacific. It pays interest if it is earned and then only. That money is to be raised and is to be sponsored and fathered by the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am cutting short what I had intended to say but I shall add this and this only: My hon. friend was very quick to set forth to the people at large the favourable points, but there are some others equally true but not quite so favourable that he might have brought out. For instance, he might have said that the total expenditures in 1896 were $41,700,000, or $8.14 per head and that for the year 1904 the total expenditures amount to $72,300,000, or $13 per head. Now the total expenditures of the country on the per capita basis are nearly $5 per head greater than in 1896. In reference to the taxation of the country there is this that can be said:

In 1896 we took $27,200,000 in taxation from the people of this country at $5.46 per head. This last year we took $53,700,000 or $9.76 per head—an addition of $4.30 per head for every one in this Dominion over what was taken in 1896. These are things for the people to think of and things for this House to consider. You can go up to a certain point with the taxation of your country; but when you go beyond that, you overburden the country. When you exceed that, you are spending the people's money unprofitably and you are actually taking from their earnings, capital which, if not taken out, would be liable to reproduce itself ten, twenty, thirty, a hundred-fold. The axiom is as true as gospel that every dollar of unnecessary taxation you take from the people is so much extracted from their remunerative and productive capital, which otherwise they would employ in the constant processes of production and reproduction.

Yes, we are as a country prosperous today, but what are the reasons of our prosperity? Larger areas of lands cultivated, larger products raised from the land, and larger prices got for these products. The crops—that is the main reason, and the Finance Minister recognised that to-day. There is another reason—larger immigration and a better and more continuous settling of our own young people in our own Territories. We all hail that with delight. Provided the immigration is of the right character, we are glad to see it come; but I utter my earnest protest against what seems to be the desire to look to numbers mainly and to be a little too soft with reference to quality. You talk of assimilating these people. Take the immense immigration that went into the United States last year, more than a million, and divide it up into its eighty million, then take ours and divide it up amongst our five million—we have more comparatively to assimilate than has the United States. But we have not the same processes and conditions for assimilation as the United States. We must go carefully. We must pick and choose a little more. We must distribute these immigrants, when they come in, and let them mix among our own people, and in that way assimilate more readily with our people than if they are gathered into colonies, where they keep to their own faults and notions and certainly where they do not get a proper appreciation of their new conditions. Increased industrial productions and increased employment in those productions—these three explain the increase in our prosperity.

Now just as one passing reminder, given in all Christian charity, let me remind this House and hon. gentlemen opposite that eighteen years of Conservative labour and toil, of Conservative expenditure and achievement, laid the foundation for all the greatness and prosperity which these gentlemen boast of. And finally, after we built the house and cultivated the land, they have only become tenants of what was built for them, and are reaping where others sowed.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). Mr. Speaker, I listened with much pleasure this afternoon to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) delivering his budget speech. There were many items of interest that must be satisfactory to all members of the House, as well as to all citizens of the Dominion. I would not weary the House at this late stage of the session by speaking upon a question of this nature, were it not that I come from a city whose industries depend almost entirely upon the markets of the Dominion and of the world. The city of Brantford, which I have the honour to represent, is the third exporting city of the Dominion of Canada, so far as manufactured goods are concerned. At least that was the case until recently, and we believe it is so still. But, owing to the way the figures are assembled by the Customs Department, we cannot very well determine whether we hold the position that we held for several years up to three or four years ago or not. The nature of the constituency I represent must be my excuse for addressing the House upon this question. The city of Brantford, with a population of 20,000 or thereabouts, has 4,685 hands employed in its various manufacturing industries. So about 25 per cent of our whole population is actually engaged in the work of the factories. The wages that were paid in 1904 in that small city amounted to about $1,850,000. These figures, I think, will show you the reason why I am interested in this budget debate. I desire, in the first place, to join in the criticism made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), when he spoke of the delay which led to the bringing down of this budget speech during the closing days of this session. This, the most important business of parliament, is brought before us at the eleventh hour, when the House, after sitting for six months, is almost exhausted. This, so far as I know, is without precedent in the history of the parliament of Canada. True, the Finance Minister has given reasons why he did not bring his budget down as early as might have been expected. The first reason was that he was absent from the country. That, of course, is a reason. Whether it is a sufficient reason for this country is open to question. Another reason was that there has been a debate on the Autonomy Bill lasting for about four months. This was the second and, I think, the only other reason for delay given by the Finance Minister. I hear that it is the intention to close this budget debate to-night or, at the latest, to-morrow. Surely, during the four months when this Autonomy Bill has been before the House, two days might have been found in which to make the budget speech and lay before the country, the waiting country, the country that is deeply interested in the Finance Minister's pronouncements on this matter, the state of its affairs and the intentions of the government as to changes in the tariff. It is true that the minister has said that another reason why he did not bring down his budget earlier is that there were no special tariff changes. Then he proceeds to enumerate some small changes. I am not here to criticise these changes that have been announced. They are all, I believe, in the direction of increased protection. And I stand where I have always stood, ever since I began to take an interest in public affairs, as a believer in moderate protection, adequate protection, for home industry. And I desire to take this, the first opportunity that has been afforded me, to place that sentiment on 'Hansard.' I believe in adequate protection for the industries of this country; I believe in Canada for the Canadians.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is adequate protection?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Adequate protection, Sir, is protection that protects. If you ask me what clothing I am going to wear, I want to know before I answer what the temperature will be. When I know this, I know what protection my body will require against the cold. Adequate protection for this country means protection that will keep out the goods of foreign countries that are now flooding our markets and crippling our industries. If you will tell me what protection is necessary to keep out these goods, I will tell you what adequate protection is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is prohibition.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am coming to something that will interest the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) if he will keep his equilibrium for a little while—I am going to deal with market garden stuff before I get through. The Minister of Finance has given us these reasons why he did not sooner bring down his budget. I contend that these reasons are not adequate. It is true he has said there will be a few minor changes in the tariff, and other changes must wait. Other changes must wait until what? Until a commission sits to decide whether or not these changes shall be made.

What is going to happen in the meantime? What is going to be the result of this delay? That is not taken into consideration. No account is taken of the industries that, the minister knows, are to-day trembling in the balance. What this House and this country want to know from the Minister of Finance and his proposed tariff commission is whether the commission is to be a life-saving crew or a coroner's jury. The work must be done soon, or it will be a mere coroner's jury. This parliament has been in session for six months, and not a single stroke has been done by the tariff commission. Why, the Minister of Finance tells us that the tariff commission is not even constituted yet. And the Minister of Finance knows very well that, not from one or two centres, but from many, deputations have come to him telling him that it is a necessity of the situation that immediate relief should be given to many of the great industries of this country. And up to date the hon. gentleman has turned a deaf ear to these claims. And all that has been done this afternoon, in answer to the representations that have been made to him, is to put a duty of 25 per cent upon bags in which cement comes into this country—that is his sole answer to the various deputations that have come down to him and pointed out that several millions of capital invested in various lines of industry are trembling in the balance to-day. He tells us that he is going to appoint a tariff commission that will report, perhaps, in a year. How many factories will have gone down in that time? How many men will have been drowned, commercially and industrially speaking, before the government will decide whether they will or will not lend a helping hand? If the Minister of Finance were in his seat—and I hope he will be before I finish—I would give a list of industries in the small city of Brantford that have gone to the wall since he became Minister of Finance. In many cases these industries have appealed to this government to give them adequate protection. But in vain. And what is true of these industries is true of many other industries throughout Canada. I am not going to weary the House with a great array of figures; but I am here to say that I know, of my own knowledge, of several industries that are in immediate and urgent need of the promptest kind of assistance that the government can give. And, what is more, the Finance Minister knows of these industries as well. I have had the honour of attending one or two of the deputations that waited on the Minister of Finance and laid before him their difficulties and grievances and their request that he stretch forth a helping hand to them. And he rises here, calm and placid, and tells these gentlemen who have come to wait upon him and have shown him that millions of capital are in danger of being swept away: You must wait until our tariff commission sits and decides whether or not we will lend you a helping hand. What about the bankers of these gentlemen? What about the workmen in these factories? What about the proprietors of these industries? No sympathy for them—no help extended; the Minister of Finance simply tells them that they must wait until his tariff commission sits and investigates, and decides whether or not it is advisable to give them the help they need.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I were speaking those words of my own accord and out of my own heart and belief, there might be some reason for doubt in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. But I am going to tell them that the very same speech I am delivering now was delivered by my predecessor in office.

An hon. MEMBER. My hon. friend said a moment ago that many industries in the town of Brantford were suffering and almost going into decay for want of protection. Would he mention some lines of industry that are suffering?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am coming there in a moment. I was saying that the same speech I am delivering now was delivered by my predecessor in office in the year 1902, as found in 'Hansard' on page 1455 of that year. Mr. Heyd, then representing the same constituency I have the honour to represent, made a long and urgent appeal on behalf of the cutlery industry that was in the last throes of commercial ruin. Mr. Heyd spoke knowingly, I believe on that occasion he spoke the truth, he spoke of what he knew to be a fact; and further, he had the assurances of this government that they would give him a helping hand. I believe a deputation from that city waited upon the Minister of Finance, and if I mistake not, the Minister of Finance promised assistance, and that deputation returned to Bantford with the assurance that the industry would get help promptly. Now that is a fact that I am well aware of. They returned to the city of Brantford after having this interview, and reported to the shareholders that they would get help and get help promptly; but in the meantime they must put in $2 for $1 and save the industry until the government had time to move. What was the result, Mr. Speaker? The shareholders met, they put in $2 where they had $1, in the hope that this government, that this Finance Minister who spoke this afternoon, would redeem his promise. They put in $2 for $1, and what happened? The government turned a deaf ear, they refused to redeem the promise; and that industry, with upwards of $90,000 of capital, most of it Liberal capital, went down to its grave because the Finance Minister and others associated with him refused to extend that helping hand that they had promised to give that industry. No cutlery industry in Brantford to-day, the factory has been nailed up for two years, and upwards of $90,000 of capital, in a few hands, went down, and 75 employees were turned out of work because this government would not act as it had promised to act.

I charge here and now that at least one-half of that capital is chargeable against the very balance that the Finance Minister showed to-day in his favour. He showed a large surplus, he has earned part of it by importing cutlery and charging 25 per cent or 30 per cent, and letting this industry go down. If the minister would only deduct from his surplus the value of the industries he has ruined by his policy, he will find not only that his surplus has entirely disappeared, but that there is a very large deficit. Now that is a fact, Mr. Speaker. I know whereof I speak, because I was one of the unfortunate shareholders who received this report from the minister, and had faith, even though a Conservative, that this minister would carry out his promises, and I put in $2 where I only had $1, and lost them. The Minister of Customs smiles. Well, he says: So much better for the Customs Department. It received the duty upon cutlery at the expense of that industry in Canada. I want to say that there is one of the weaknesses of this government's policy. Their whole attention is bent on increasing the imports, and that is going to lead to the destruction of a large number of the industries of this country if it is not very soon checked.

Now, I am going to back that up with some figures before I get through. I have the blue-book showing that what I say is correct, that this government has steadfastly increased the imports from foreign countries, and it now comes down here and swells itself because it has a surplus, a surplus that is made up to a large extent of the life blood of the industries of this country. I am here to state that, because I know it to be true. The industries of this country are to a large extent living upon the impetus that was given them by the tariff of 1878 and down to the year 1896. There is scarcely a great industry in the city of Brantford, and the Minister of Customs knows it as well as I do, that was not established prior to the present government coming into power. That tariff was framed by Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Leonard Tilley in 1878, and that was the backbone of the manufacturing industries of this country, and from that time until the hon. gentlemen opposite took office there was a steady increase and growth all along the lines of manufactured goods.

Now it is true that protection never does make as good a showing on paper as free trade, and why is that? Large imports and large exports added together make a great showing. It is like comparing the work of a merchant and the work of a manufacturer. The merchant buys $100,000 worth of goods and sells them perhaps for $125,000, making a profit of $25,000. The manufacturer turns out $100,000 worth of goods, but he has to pay out a large portion of that in wages, though in that way he retains in the country that much money which otherwise would go out, and he is at the same time furnishing employment to a vast number of hands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned but one of the industries that have gone down under the management of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I have been asked by my hon. friend opposite to name some of the industries that are trembling in the balance. I want to tell that gentleman now that we have two binder twine factories in this city of Brantford whose life hangs in the balance to-day because this government has refused to listen to the urgent request of a deputation that waited on them since this House opened in January last. No one here can deny that statement. I hold in my hands a map showing the various places in which binder twine is manufactured in this country, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding about it, and no saying that this is a hole and corner industry, I will read where these factories are situated: In Walkerton, 1; Peterborough, 1; Ayton, 1; Montreal, 1; Chatham, 1; Brantford, 2; Toronto, 1; Kingston, 1; St. John, 1;—in all 10 factories. These factories have all been represented here by a deputation who waited upon the Finance Minister and told him the urgent need there is for immediate relief to the binder twine industry. And what have we got? Not a word of encouragement, nothing to enable them to say to their bankers to-day: Hold on a little longer and we will make it all right. Not a word of encouragement, but a cold blanket is thrown over their heads to-day in the shape of a tariff that promises no redress to this grievance. And as if that were not sufficient, this amount of capital which is to be wiped out and these workmen that are to be turned out of employment, what does this government do? It establishes in the Kingston penitentiary a binder twine industry further to throttle an industry that was already groaning under the burden of a free trade tariff. That is what this government has done, they have installed a binder twine outfit in the penitentiary at Kingston, manufacturing twine and selling it, I presume, at a loss in order further to hit an industry that is not receiving one iota of protection from this government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was established by the old government.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Well, I am not quite clear as to that, that when the old government went out there was a 12½ per cent protection on binder twine which the hon. gentleman's friends have wiped out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has not the hon. gentleman heard that the factory in Brantford paid 60 per cent dividend since this government came into power, and since the duty has been taken off?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I believe they paid 60 per cent; but I want to tell the hon. gentleman further that they did not make it by favour of the government's policy, but they made it out of the Spanish-American war. Now, then, I hope the hon. gentleman has got his satisfaction on that head. They made it out of a rise in the raw material, and they could sell part of their raw material at a higher price than the binder twine. My hon. friend from Peterborough (Mr. Hall), who sits near the hon. gentleman, can give him a few pointers as to whether the binder twine industry in this country is entitled to help. There is more than one Liberal newspaper advocating this to-day, and I am surprised to find that the Finance Minister came down to-day and made his budget speech without promising to give any help to this industry. No less a paper I believe than the 'Globe' a short time ago announced there would be and certainly the Brantford 'Expositor' has published several articles and no one would accuse it of being of Tory or protectionist inclinations but it has said there is every reason for this government to listen to the cry of the binder twine industry of this country. They have not done this, they have not given any help, they have not promised any help, and as far as we are able to ascertain that industry need look for no help from this government. They have simply announced that a tariff commission is to be appointed to ascertain whether or not help is needed. Whatever will become of these factories before the government and its tariff commission can act? There is little doubt that a number of them will be closed. Some are already closed and others will be closed without doubt before the government and the tariff commission can act, and I would submit that immediate relief is what is wanted and what should have been given. I contend that the Finance Minister to-day should have divided a little of that surplus, if he has one-half or one-quarter as much as he has claimed, with factories that are at present in need of that assistance. We are told very frequently in this House and in the country that this is an agricultural country. I do not know where the gentleman, who make that statement get their information but I am here to make the statement that this is no longer an agricultural country simply, that agriculture is not the leading industry as compared with the manufacturing industries of this country. That may be strange news to some but I believe it is the absolute truth. I propose to give to you a few items with regard to the production of manufactured goods in the Dominion of Canada; I propose to quote first from the very satisfactory finding of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture in his census report. I find that the capital invested in the manufacturing industries of Canada by decennial periods was:

1901	441,353,000

The value of the products produced by these factories at these periods was:

1881	$309,000,000
1891	359,000,000
1901	452,000,000

The wages paid were, in round numbers:

1881	$ 50,500,000
1891	78,500,000
1901	88,250,000

These figures show the vast strides that the manufacturing industry has made in this country in the past thirty years. The number of hands employed in these factories at these periods was:

1881	254,000

Thus it will be seen that the amount of manufactured goods that this country is producing at the present moment equals the produce of the agricultural, the mining, the fisheries and the forest industries within a very small trifle, there is a trifle of $30,000,000 between the produce of the manufacturing industries and all the other great sources of production combined. We are to-day a manufacturing country and the sooner the Minister of Finance and those associated with him waken up to the fact that we are an industrial country as well as an agricultural the better for the country and for the tariff and those who depend upon it. It is too late in the day to say we are a free trade country or a non-industrial country. We have gone too far in that direction already, we have embarked too many millions of capital in those industries and why is the voice of the artisan and the mechanic, labouring day after day the year around, not as much entitled to be heard in the councils of this country as the voice of the farmer, the miner or the lumberman? When it comes to cities it takes about 40,000 to elect a member of this parliament whereas in a country district it takes only about 15,000, about three workmen in the city to balance one farmer, miner, or lumberman in the country. That is one of the reasons why the Minister of Finance does not give that attention to industry that he is called upon to give. This country, to-day is in a state that requires, so far as I can read the signs of the times, immediate attention to its tariff.

I said that I was going to give you some figures with regard to the imports into this country. I accuse this government of being a government that imports too much from foreign countries. In doing that they make a big showing on paper with regard to trade and they fill the coffers of the government out of duties collected. It is true that the party opposite before they came into power promised that they would reduce taxation, but that promise along with all the other promises they made has gone by the board. It is true they may tell you they have reduced by a fraction of 1 per cent the general tariff on goods, but will they tell you how much they collected per head from the population by the customs duties? If they do and tell you the truth they will tell you that where the late Conservative government were taking one dollar from the pockets of the people they are taking just two. That is the actual fact and I am going to read the figures so that there may be no mistake about that statement, that the duties collected by the present government are just twice as much as those collected when the Conservative government were in power. The duties collected in the year 1896 were $20,219,637.32. In the last year reported, 1904, they were $40,954,349 or exactly $2 out of the pocket of every man, woman and child in this country to one that was taken out by the Conservative government in 1896. That is a quotation from the returns of the Department of Trade and Commerce and I believe will be found accurate.

I shall now give the imports of articles into this country. In 1896 when the government came into power there were imported :

Dutiable goods	$ 74,259,000
Free goods	38,525,000
Bullion	5,226,000
In all	108,000,000

In the year 1902 there were imported :

Dutiable goods	$127,955,000
Free goods	78,000,000
Bullion	6,000,000
A total of	212,000,000

In 1903 there were imported :

Dutiable goods	$143,000,000
Free goods	88,000,000
Bullion (nearly)	9,000,000
A total of	241,000,000

In 1904, the last year of which we have the figures, there were imported :

Dutiable goods	$156,000,000
Free goods	95,000,000
Bullion (nearly)	8,000,000
A total of	259,000,000

I want to point out one of the danger marks, as I see it. The imports have steadily and strongly increased all along the line ever since this government came into power, but what happened to the exports last year ? They dwindled nearly $20,000,000 in spite of the vast increase in imports. What does that mean ? It means that the balance of trade is between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 against us as compared with the previous year. How long can this government go on encouraging foreign imports to the detriment of our industries in order that they may fill the treasury and come down here and announce so much surplus each year ? I say they are sapping the life blood of the industries of this country by that course.

I admit that many of our industries are flourishing, but that condition is not due to the policy of this government. It is due to the policy of the Conservative government that believed in protection as a principle and not as an expediency or as an incident. No incidental protectionist is entitled to dictate a tariff policy to a protectionist country. In this twentieth century protection is an applied science, while free trade is, so to speak, is a fixed science. Free trade takes things as they were in the beginning, are now and ever shall be, but protection says that whatever duty is needed at the present time to protect and guard the industries of a country, that duty shall be applied. The Minister of Finance sits there calmly while millions of hard earned capital accumulated in the past years is swept away because he refuses to do his duty by the tariff, and he tells us that one of the reasons for not bringing the tariff down earlier is that there are so few changes in it. I arraign the Minister of Finance because he has not introduced more tariff changes. I cite to him the woollen industry. He knows that eight or ten woollen mills have been sold under the hammer during the past year and that millions of dollars of the peoples' investments have been wiped out at a single stroke. And his remedy is a tariff commission which shall report some twelve months hence ; he lets the man drown and then he throws out a rope or a pole. This government refused to listen to the plea of the woollen industry. They told the woollen manufacturers : You do not know how to manage your own business ; why don't you put in new machinery and make your mills up to date. I want to tell the Finance Minister—I regret he is not yet in his place—that the present tariff is no inducement to the banker to lend the woollen manufacturers the necessary capital to place their industry on a firm footing. What encouragement has the woollen industry to put in machinery when the government refuses to lend the helping hand that is necessary to enable the banker to see that there is going to be a balance on the right side. I have figures here showing to what extent the Canadian woollen industry has deteriorated for the last ten years, and I find that the output was actually less in 1901 than it was in 1891, in spite of the growing times we hear so much about. There is no growth in the woollen industry; it has steadily declined, and knowing that the government has year after year refused to help it. There is also the cement industry. That industry has been appealing to the government ; that industry has been closeted with the Finance Minister. I had the honour of accompanying a deputation representing twenty cement factories, which made representations to the Minister of Finance. They told him : We have invested eight million dollars capital in that industry within the past five years and we fear that 75 per cent of it will be lost if you do not give us more protection. If the Finance Minister looks around him he will see that many of these cement mills are standing unfinished to-day, because the foreign imports of cement are so great that the Canadian factories cannot find a market for their goods, and the bankers will not lend them money to complete their undertaking. This large investment in the Canadan cement industry is threatened because the Finance Minister says: You have help enough and you can live under present conditions. The Minister of Finance sets himself up as an oracle and he tells the cement people that 60 per cent duty—that is what he said it was—was enough. Well, the duty is 12½ cents per 100 pounds and at 350 pounds in the barrel it amounts to 50 cents per barrel. Let me give a brief history of the Canadian cement industry since it started five years ago. At that time the ordinary Portland cement—not as good as our own Canadian cement to-day—retailed in the city of Brantford at from $3 to $3.50 per barrel. To-day that cement, or better cement, can be bought for one-half the price or at from $1.75 to $2 per barrel. The Canadian cement industry has reduced the price to the farmers and large consumers of cement almost by one-half, and at the same time it is giving employment to a large number of skilled hands. It has shown great enterprise in the introduction of the most modern machinery to be found in the world and to-day the quality of Canadian cement is second to none. And what has the Minister of Finance done for this industry? He announced to-day that he will place a duty of 25 per cent upon each empty bag which cost 10 cents. He gives the cement industry a duty of 2½ cents on each empty bag. Now, these bags are returnable and the handlers of cement are either going to lose 2½ cents or they will fail to return the bag. I wonder which of these the Minister of Finance wants them to do. This great stroke of policy on the part of the Finance Minister may be a slight help to cement manufacturers, but if so, it will be at the expense of the handlers of cement. I myself handled American cement before the industry was established in this country, and I know that it was the invariable rule of the trade to return the bags, so that the cement was delivered at no cost for the package, but if it comes from a foreign country in barrels, the barrels cost 35 or 40 cents, the cement is no better and the barrel is useless afterwards. Hence it is that cement is sent in bags. These cement bags will be of no use hereafter if the Minister of Finance does not allow their return, and therefore the proposition which he makes to-day will afford no relief. But there are other important industries which are suffering for want of protection. I have mentioned the cutlery industry which is now wiped out. I have told him that there are two binder twine factories in my own city trembling in the balance, and I have pointed out that several other industries are feeling the pinch of the times.

A pottery industry that flourished in Brantford forty years ago and that has been carried on there unremittingly ever since until this year, is closed up and for sale.

There is another industry that stretched forth its hands to this government. Representatives of that industry came down at the same time as those of the cutlery industry and laid before the hon. Minister of Finance their plea. He turned a deaf ear with the result that that factory has been closed up. The hon. Minister of Finance does not appear to have returned yet and my time is getting short, but I must lay before the House a list of the factories that have gone down within my own knowledge in my own neighbourhood since the Minister of Finance took the seat he now occupies. I give him this list from the city of Brantford. I am not going to say that they are all due to the tariff. I do not think they are, but I say that many of them might have been saved if the government had done its duty. There were two pork factories. Most of the stock in one of these pork factories was held by 4,000 farmers who owned 4,000 shares of the capital of $250,000. They employed about 100 hands. This industry was wiped out in two years. There was also a pork factory carried on by private enterprise which went down at the same time thus showing that co-operation and private enterprise have equally failed to keep alive these industries. So, we find that $300,000 capital and 150 hands employed in these two pork factories have gone since the hon. Minister of Finance came in. A cotton mill, which at the time the hon. Minister of Finance took his seat employed 200 hands and was turning out a large amount of goods and shipping to almost all the markets of the world, has been for five or six years nailed up, not a wheel turned, not a door opened, not a single pane of glass to let you look in and see what is inside. There is an industry employing 275 hands and perhaps representing an investment of $150,000 or $200,000 of capital wiped out. A bicycle factory employing about 275 hands and paying the highest wages almost of any industry in Brantford has also been wiped out, a bicycle supply concern closed up and gone away, a cutlery works closed up and out of business, and a pottery closed up and out of business. There you have about eight large factories representing about $1,000,000 of capital closed up and about 1,000 hands thrown out of employment in the city of Brantford alone since the hon. Minister of Finance took his office. Now, you may say that Brantford must be a pretty poor place. I want to repeat what I said at the outset that it is the third manufacturing centre as far as exports are concerned to the markets of the world and in spite of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, in spite of the vain efforts of these hon. gentlemen to squeeze them out, there are industries established in Brantford that even the hostile efforts of the hon. Minister of Finance have failed to crush out. In the speech from which I quoted a few moments ago, made by Mr. Heyd in 1902, he read to the hon. Minister of Finance a resolution passed by the Brantford Board of Trade and he told the hon. Minister of Finance that seven-tenths of the men who passed that resolution were Liberals and friends of his own and that every one of these men asked that the government give to Brantford the increased protection that its industries needed. Mr. Heyd made a great speech along that line. The only trouble was that when it came to the vote Mr. Heyd voted against what he had spoken about. If Mr. Heyd had stuck to his guns, I presume I would not be occupying a seat on the floor of this House to-night, and that Mr. Heyd would still have been in this House, but he failed to get that measure of protection that the manufacturers of Brantford expected from him, that he had promised and that he said this government had promised. When it came to the decision in November last the workingmen of Brantford knew what side their bread was buttered on. It is true many of the manufacturers in Brantford are hostile to me politically. Many of them are friends of mine, but they do not agree with me on many points, but almost all of them have declared themselves to be in favour of a higher tariff and adequate protection for the industries of the country. Now, I want it to be distinctly understood, that, in so far as I am concerned, I do not want any high tariff wall for the sake of injuring any other nation. All I want and all I stand for is a measure of protection that is adequate for our own requirements. I do not believe, because the United States build a Chinese wall, that it is necessary for us to do the same, but where they take an unfair advantage, where they dump in goods here in spite of the dumping clause and injure our manufacturers it is the duty of the Minister of Finance to see to it that the tariff is raised. A large part of the exports to this country are from the United States. We have a balance of trade of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $90,000,000 against us as between Canada and the United States. We buy from them about $3 worth for every dollar's worth they buy from us. They do not trade fair and they are not entitled to any consideration when it comes to looking after our own industries. This country is becoming an industrial country more and more. Our farming products are a comparatively small item against our factory products to-day.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Yes.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. According to the Trade and Navigation returns for 1903 the exports from this country amounted to about $225,750,000. The farming products exported amounted to $114,250,000, or more than all the other products combined, the products of the sea, the factory, the forest and all other industries. How did that come about when the farming industry is not a protected industry in this country ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It arises in this way. The farming industry produces more stuff than we can consume as far as eatables are concerned and therefore the surplus goes abroad, but when it comes to the products of our factories and when we manufacture about $450,000,000 worth in a year we consume about $430,000,000 worth and only have about $20,000,000 worth to send abroad. There are the facts as shown in the statistics, in the census report, and in the blue-books. The total exports of manufactured goods have slightly shrunk during the past year. They were $20,000,000 last year but they are only about $19,000,000 this year showing an unsatisfactory state of things. We should be going ahead. This country is prepared to and can manufacture in many lines against all the countries in the world if it gets a fair show. We know what is being done in the city of Brantford and what is being done there can be done in other parts of Canada if we get a fair chance. There is no country in the world that can manufacture better or cheaper agricultural implements than we can manufacture in Canada. These implements are being sold in all the markets of the world. Every country under the sun has more or less Canadian farming implements, yet in spite of that fact and in spite of the well equipped factories we have and which can produce more than we want, nearly $3,000,000 worth of agricultural implements were imported into the Northwest Territories in 1903 and over $2,500,000 worth in 1904. There is money that should be kept in the country. Not a dollar of it should go to the United States. Every dollar of it should be retained to the workmen of this country. They are entitled to it. If we part with our money and get our goods we part with half our assets. I want to give to you, Mr. Speaker, an axiom that was given by that old, long headed statesman, Abraham Lincoln, when he first advocated protection in the United States, and it will show to this House better than any argument of mine exactly what happens under protection as opposed to free trade or a moderate tariff. Abraham Lincoln said: 'If this country wants a ton of pig-iron and it sends its money to Europe to get it, it has got its pig-iron but it has parted with its money.

If this country takes a ton of pig iron from its mountains and manufactures it, it has got both its money and its pig iron.' There is a proposition that no amount of logic of hon. gentlemen opposite can gainsay or resist. When you send your money abroad to bring in goods, you have parted with your money and got the goods, but when you manufacture the goods at home you have both your goods and money. You are better off and your farmers have a home market, and every one knows that the home market is the life of the farmer. Talk about your transportation facilities, you do not need so much of them if you have your market right at your own door. Why, the city of Toronto alone consumes as much farm products as are exported from the whole country. If that is the case, you can see at once the value of the home market to the farmer. You can see of what value these industrial centres that are springing up are to the farmers of this country. I submit it as a sound axiom that cannot be gainsaid, that the true policy for Canada is to protect it against the inroads of all foreign countries. Canada for the Canadians; Canada for home made goods; Canada for the bone and the sinew and the muscle of the artisans and mechanics of this country. There is nothing that can do so much for the workingmen, for the mechanics of this country, as to give them constant, steady employment, day in and day out, summer and winter, in the factories and various enterprises of industrial life in this country. That has been proved time and again. Much of the resources of Canada, much of its development and its material interests is due to that wise, statesmanlike policy which was introduced in 1878, which became the backbone of this country, and has been known ever since as the great National Policy. That was the remedy brought down to cure certain ills under which we were labouring, and we have need to return to the principles enunciated in 1878, and we cannot do it too quickly. Do not wait until our industries are closed down before you stretch out your hands to help them. Millions of capital will be wiped out before this Tariff Commission reports. Many mills which to-day are not closed are in a precarious condition. I do not wish to paint things worse than they are, but the rosy statement of the hon. gentleman this afternoon is not borne out by the facts. When the industries of this country are not receiving from the Finance Department the attention they should receive, our interests are bound to suffer. Only a few changes in the tariff have been brought down—only two or three, One I think dealt with the white lead industry, an industry new to the country, and it remains to be seen whether or not that industry will flourish. But, I submit, it will be far wiser and safer to maintain the industries already established by giving them a limited increase of tariff than by encouraging new industries. The hon. minister proposes to increase the tariff on pig lead from 5 per cent to 25 per cent and on ground lead to 35 per cent, taking no account of the mixed paint manufacturers, the main part of whose products is composed of this white lead he is dealing with. They will be heard from in this connection. He is causing a vast increase in the price of their raw material and gives them no increase on their manufactured product.

True, when we come to deal with the tariff one item falls against the other, but I contend that the tariff should be now high and now low, just according as the needs of the country require it should be applied, so as to meet the emergency of the moment and suit the times. We must have regard to our environment and our conditions, and if we do, we will give these industries I have enumerated a helping hand. If we had regard to our present condition, we would increase the protection to the cement industry and to the woollen mills, and we would give to the various other enterprises I have mentioned the increased duties called for. In this way we would retain to the workingmen of this country their daily bread; we would furnish them with the labour they so much need. While the hon. gentlemen opposite may say that this is an agriculture country and recommend all men to go on the farm, I submit, as a proposition that cannot be gainsaid, that in order to build up a great Dominion we must have a variety of industries. All men are not fitted for the farm or for trade. Some make better artisans and mechanics. And in order to have a variety of industries we must have these industries encouraged by the government, and I hold the government responsible for not having done and for not doing now what they well know should be done and done immediately. Petitions have come asking for greater protection. I have had in my desk for five months a number of letters from binder twine men requesting me to bring the question of that industry before parliament, but I was assured at different times that this government was likely to act in its behalf, and therefore did not press their demand. I say it is a little short of criminal negligence that millions of capital and thousands of hands should be turned out of employment and sent out upon the streets without their daily bread being provided because this government refuses to do what it knows to be its duty. That is a fact which the hon. gentlemen opposite cannot gainsay. They may say that binder twine should be free because the west wants it. But how much more would it cost the farmer if a cent or two were added to the cost. The average farmer would not pay more than 50 cents or $1 per year. Besides a very large part of the stock in these binder twine factories is in the hands of the farmers. I have been told by a binder twine manufacturer, who went into the matter very carefully, that at least 40,000 farmers hold stock in the binder twine factories in this country. Is there any more legitimate enterprise into which the farmers could go as a manufacturing enterprise? It is a simple thing that can be made easily and that is universally in use and is well understood. But still this government, for the sake of a few cents per head to the farmers, refuses to extend a helping hand to the binder twine manufacturers although there are ten or twelve establishments scattered all over the Dominion. There is even one as far west as Brandon, Man. The statistics of this industry will show at once its importance. Last year the total amount sold in Canada was 10,078 tons and the amount imported 6,647 tons, or 66 per cent of the total sold. You thus have an industry almost universal in the provinces of Canada asking for help, and this government does not pay the slightest attention to it. The same may be said with regard to cement and woollens, and I am here to utter a solemn protest against the inaction of the Minister of Finance in refusing to give that helping hand to the industries of the country which he so well knows they need. Let me point to these great industries at the Soo. Though the government saw the works shut down, though they knew that seven dollars per ton was demanded on the rails, they gave a deaf ear to the representations made them. What did the province of Ontario have to do? The province spent about $2,000,000 of public money in order to save these industries at the Soo, which this Finance Minister and his associates refused to aid.

What kind of a policy is that? Over $30,000,000 of capital invested in the Soo. The government knew what was urgently necessary, what they have been time and again told was necessary. Yet they refused to act. And it was only when the man was drowned and another man put in his place that they extended this promised help of $7 per ton on steel rails. I see that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) smiles at that. But, so far as I am informed, this is what occurred. These Soo industries went to the wall; the shareholders lost almost the whole of their investment—$30,000,000 of capital wiped out. The industries were re-organized, the Ontario government doing a thing that never should have been done, something that never was done in the history of this country before, lending $2,000,000 to resuscitate these works. And the industries could have been saved and this loss of capital avoided if the government had done its duty.

And now they come down with their boasted surplus—they claim $15,000,000. But I charge against the government a loss of $30,000,000 at the Soo; I charge against them the loss of all the capital in all the industries that have gone down, that are going down and that will go down because of the refusal of this government to do its duty and give the protection that is needed. And I lay at their door the suffering of the workman, the artisan and the mechanic, who has been driven out of his home, driven away from his native town, because this government closed its ears and refused to do what it knew to be a solemn duty—to extend a helping hand, as they might have done without injury to any interest in this country. There is no other way this country can live in competition with the great manufacturing countries in the world than by an adequate tariff; and the sooner this government, and men of all classes on both sides of this House, recognize that fact the better. There is no doubt about it, this country, if it is ever going to be great, must be great industrially as well as commercially and as an agricultural community. We must have this variety of industry.

And now, having dwelt upon the industries that I promised to speak of in the first place, I do not want to disappoint the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell), and refuse to discuss some little duty on market garden stuff. I believe the hon. gentleman has a record as a protectionist on this subject. I think I have read speeches of his asking that this government give a little attention to a proposition that he knows, and I know, is a most important one for this industry. I happen to represent an agricultural as well as industrial district. It is all covered by the lovely name of Brantford; but that is apt to be misleading. Brantford covers more territory than old London, if you count the district that is attached to it for Dominion election purposes. That is one of the beauties of the redistribution of last session. And so beautiful was that redistribution that the Canadian almanac this year cannot give the population of either the riding of Brantford or the riding of North Brantford. It is impossible to give them without doing somebody wrong, and so they leave them out. But this is only by the way. In the district of Brantford I represent an agricultural community that raises a large quantity of vegetables, just as the member for Centre York does. In the district of Scotland they grow, perhaps, as large a quantity of onions as are grown in any other county in Canada. Those people are suffering from a grievance, and they know it. They know that they need a protective duty. But they cannot get it. Last year, in order to squeeze these farmers who produce these onions and compel them to take half of what their product is worth, parties brought in American onions actually to the village of Scotland, where not one was wanted, but where thousands of bags were ready to be put on the market. And from Scotland as a centre, they distributed these imported onions in order that they might break the price to the farmer. Which they did. And so they bought for 55 cents, 60 cents, 75 cents, onions worth from $1 to $1.25 per bag. That was done. And how? Because the government does not give protection to the market gardener that he is so thoroughly entitled to. And the same applies to corn and many other articles that our farmer grows. It is a mistake to say that the tariff is only for the manufacturer, the artisan and the mechanic.

It can do a vast amount of good to the farmer. And, if properly applied in such a country as this, it can help all classes, and do it with an even hand. No one will be hurt if this country adopts a uniform high tariff sufficient to make every line of industry prosperous. In this it would but be doing its first duty to the citizens over whom it presumes to rule. The very first duty of a government is to see to it that the citizen of the country is enabled to earn his living, and to earn it in the best possible way and under the most easy circumstances compatible with doing an honest day's work for an honest day's pay. This government has not done that. This government permits goods to come in from foreign countries and overflood our markets. It is true they have brought down this anti-dumping clause, a clause that has done little or no good, insomuch that producers in the old country have petitioned that it should be removed at an early date. Why, under this anti-dumping clause, the exporter must make a four-fold or five-fold declaration. It is so intricate that the declaration necessary to be made covers a paper about six inches long, even in fine type. There are five classes of declarations ; and in order that you may come within the limits of that law, it is better to make them all. The government dodge about in every possible way and avoid the main issue of affording what the mechanics, the manufacturers and the farmers of this country need—adequate protection for our various industries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have already spoken too long ; but I wish to say a few words on the subject of the preferential tariff. But I do not intend to tread minutely over the ground over which the Finance Minister simply jumped this afternoon. If I remember his speech of last year, he gave the British people to understand that unless in the near future they reciprocated on this preferential business, it might be necessary to rescind his preferential tariff. I do not know what his views are on that subject to-day. The hon. gentleman did not vouchsafe to us any information on the subject of the preferential tariff. But it is an important matter in the interests of this country and of the empire ; and it seems to me that our Minister of Finance, even if we have reached the dog-days and the dying hours of the session, might have found time to give a few minutes to tell us what he is about as to the preferential tariff between Great Britain and the various colonies of the empire. Sir, this is one of the great questions that we should deal with. I may be told that I am a manufacturer, and, as such, I am opposed to preferential trade, because it might hit some industry in which I am engaged. Not at all. I believe that the manufacturers of this country are prepared to stand a fair share of the brunt with the people in order to assist the mother country and the colonies to trade together, and trade more abundantly than ever before—a policy extending to all parts of the earth where the British flag floats, to receive from them the goods they are ready to part with, they to receive from us the goods we desire to sell. There is a fair and square protection proposition that might be made. The Minister of Finance has had this in tow for several years, and nothing has come of it, except a number of changes. I believe the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) has stated that he stands for stability of tariff. I believe that he has stated that that is one of the great necessities of our industry. Still the hon. gentleman has made more radical changes in less time than any other Finance Minister in the history of the country. Some hon. gentlemen may ask : Where is the proof of this ? I will tell you in short order. In 1896 there was no preferential tariff. The Minister of Finance finally stumbled upon one, though he did not intend it. First he gave 12½ per cent on everything, thus changing the value of every article in the whole list, from the penny article to the thousand pound article—all having alike this preference of 12½ per cent.

That lasted a year, open to the world. Then he came down next year and changed the discount from 12½ per cent to 25 per cent, and at the same time plumed himself as standing for a steadfast tariff. Every merchant who has ever dealt in hardware knows the tricks of that trade. To change the discount is a game that the hardware man has always been accustomed to. Instead of changing the price of the whole line he changes the discount, but that changes the price of the whole line. So when the Finance Minister tells us that he represents a stable tariff, he is guilty of misrepresentation to that extent, because every time he changed that preferential duty he changed every article in the whole list ; from the beginning to the end of the schedules he changes every article in price. It went first from net to 12½ per cent, from 12½ per cent to 25, and from 25 it went to 33⅓, all within three years, changing the value of every article that is imported into the Dominion of Canada. Still he says he stands for a steadfast tariff. A steadfast tariff is good, but no tariff should be steadfast that is not good. Is it right to go on in evil ways because you have always been in evil ways? The sooner you change the better. In the same way, if you have a tariff that is not just to the industries of this country, that is not protecting the workingmen and the artisans, that is not retaining Canada for the Canadians, the sooner you change that tariff the better for this country, and the better in the long run will it be for the gov-vernment who controls the destinies of the country.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the duty of this government is clear. They should not wait another year to effect the changes that are necessary, the changes that we all know well should be given immediately. That binder twine industry should be helped immediately and forthwith; the cement industry should be helped immediately and forthwith; the woollen industry should be helped immediately and forthwith; and other industries I might mention with which the Finance Minister is familiar, should every one of them have the assistance they require right now. Do not wait until these industries have gone down, do not wait until the capital is lost, save it now. Let this government recognize its responsibility, and recognize it quickly. They have delayed from day to day to bring down the most important piece of legislation that comes before this House, and I say even now, while we are in the dog days, let them if necessary prolong the session for a day or two in order that they may save millions of capital, and that it may continue to employ in the industries of this country the bone, and sinew, and muscle of the Canadian mechanic and artisan, than whom there is no one who should demand better at the hands of this government or any other government.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of this House for a few moments while I consider the question of the tariff, in my view one of the most important questions that this government has to deal with. Now that the Minister of Finance has brought down his budget, I want to congratulate him upon his able address, and the skilful manner in which he has made the best of a bad job. I want also to congratulate the hon member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for Bantford (Mr. Cockshutt) for their splendid criticisms of the budget. I say that I regard the tariff as the most important question this House has to deal with, because we cannot expect to be prosperous as a Dominion unless we have a proper tariff. I want to put myself on record as opposed to the present tariff, because it is opposed to the interests of the masses of our people. The first plank in my policy is that of Canada for Canadians. I do not believe in a tariff policy which works for the interests of foreigners rather than for the interest of Canadians.

I have been all my life interested in farming operations and in the manfacture of woollens, and from that standpoint I think I have ample reason to complain of the tariff imposed against those industries. I propose to discuss the present tariff. I contend that the present tariff is opposed to the interests of the great masses of our people. The masses of our people are farmers, mechanics and labourers, and I consider that their interests are neglected by the present tariff. I am going to crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments in order to discuss some of the issues pertaining to my own district, and to the Dominion at large; I propose to compare the tariff on imports and exports, also the Canadian duty and American duty of farm stuff brought down by a return I asked for in this House which is official showing the imports of American farm stuff brought into Canada against our own Canadian farm stuff. In order to show the disadvantage that our Canadian farmers are labouring under as compared with American farmers. I shall take only a few items as samples of the whole, but those that I do give are fair samples of the whole list.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask any hon. member in this House, I care not whether he be a supporter of the government or of the opposition, if he can say that the farmers of this country are getting their rights under that tariff schedule. All I have to say is that any man who will say that is so hide-bound that he is ready to swallow his grandmother if necessary in order to save himself. Sir, I believe that we should have in this country a proper protection upon every industry. The professions are protected to a certain extent, the manufacturers are protected to a certain extent but from the comparison I have given it will be seen that the farmers, the mechanics and the labourers of this country, the people who are the largest taxpayers, who contribute the largest share to the up-keeping of this country, who earn their living by the hardest kind of toil are the classes of people who are not getting their rights under the present tariff, but are going to demand their rights in this country. I may state that I did not anticipate or seek the honour of becoming a member of this House. It has been a pleasure to me to be a member and I have no regrets at being elected, but I wish to inform you that my electors, knowing that I represent the interests of which I have spoken, tendered me the unanimous nomination of my convention. Before accepting that nomination I distinctly told the convention that I was opposed to the tariff upon the grounds that I have stated to-night. I distinctly told them that I wanted the privilege of supporting what I considered fair and just irrespective of party politics and that convention tendered me and gave to me without a dissenting voice their nomination. I am not so hide bound in my politics that I cannot distinguish right from wrong and I would not vote for what I considered was wrong as I believed many members, from a party standpoint in this House, I would not say on one side, but on both sides, do. I believe that the old time politics of this country are going to be a thing of the past. The younger members and the younger electors in this country are going to stand aside from their old time partyism and vote for what they consider right and just; they are going to demand their rights and I believe they will get them in a very short time. I know that I have the independent Liberals of my riding as well as the independen Conservatives to thank for my election, and I propose as long as I am a member of this House to carry out those ideas and to fight for a tariff such as our Canadian farmers and mechanics and labourers should have, but which they have not at the present time.

The first question I wish to discuss in detail is the pork question. In the years 1903-4, as shown by the return for which I asked in this House, there were imported into Canada 11,064,297 pounds of pork. We exported 210,634 pounds, or a balance in favour of the American farmers of 10,853,663 pounds. As I stated, the American duty against our pork is 5 cents a pound, a practically prohibitable duty against us. Our duty against their pork is only 2 cents per pound and, any hon. member of this House who knows anything of agriculture knows American pork can be produced far cheaper than our Canadian pork. While we in Canada producers of pork can produce more than we can consume, I ask if it is fair that the American farmer should dump this vast amount of pork into our Canadian markets and usurp our own Canadian farmers' market. The result is that this American pork is dumped into Canada, and consumed and in order to find sale for our own Canadian farmers' pork, our shippers are compelled to export our pork to the European markets. Now what I claim is that we should apply the same 5 cents per pound duty to their pork that they apply to ours, and give our Canadian farmers the Canadian market to themselves. I make the statement here without fear of contradiction that during the last few years there is not a farmer in the Dominion of Canada who has not lost one dollar per hundred on every hundred weight of pork he has sold. It is high time that we gave to the Canadian farmer the pork market of Canada, and thus enable him to avoid the loss which he is at present put to through having cheap American pork dumped into this country. Every man who knows anything about agriculture knows that pork can be produced in the United States a great deal cheaper than it can be produced in Canada. If it is right that other Canadian industries should be protected why should not the Canadian pork producer be protected to the same extent, and why should not the Canadian market be secured to him instead of it being left open to the American farmer.

The question of the protection of the bean-growing industry is a very important question with us in western Ontario, because there we produce this article in large quantity. The return which I have just read does not show that we have imported a very great quantity of beans during the last few years, but nevertheless there is in the Klondike, in British Columbia and in the Northwest Territories a large demand for this vegetable. The American farmer has the control of that market at the present time, and that is a state of things which this government should no longer permit. The great bulk of the beans grown in Canada is produced in western Ontario, while the greater quantity of American beans comes from California. The United States has a duty of 45 cents a bushel against our beans entering their market while the protection to the Canadian bean-growers is only 15 cents per bushel. Why does the American government maintain this duty of 45 cents per bushel, if it is not to protect the American farmer and to shut us out of the Boston and New York markets so that the California farmer may be enabled to pay the extra freight and get his beans in ahead of ours. If it is fair that the American market should be secured to the American farmer is it not fair that the Canadian market should be secured to the Canadian farmer? The California bean-grower today can ship his beans by boat freight to British Columbia at a rate of about 6 cents per bushel, and after paying the Canadian duty of 15 cents he can place his beans in the British Columbia market at a total cost of 21 cents per bushel. On the other hand if the bean-grower of western Ontario ships his product to the British Columbia market he has to pay from 50 to 60 cents per bushel freight and if you deduct 21 cents from 60 cents it shows that the American farmer has an advantage in our market of 39 cents per bushel. I see one of our British Columbia friends smiling over there; he thinks that possibly he would have to pay a little more for his beans if he purchased them from the Canadian farmer. I grant that, but if it is fair that he should be protected upon his lead, if it is fair that we in the province of Ontario should buy millions of dollars worth of lumber, shingles and fish which we buy from British Columbia and pay them their price for their products is it not equally fair that the British Columbians should pay the producers of Ontario a fair price for their products. I submit it is only fair-play that we should put the same duty of 45 cents a bushel against American beans as they put against ours ; indeed I would make the Canadian duty 60 cents per bushel and thus compel the British Columbia people to buy our beans.

Now, Sir, there is another important matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the House. I come from a corn-growing district and I enter my protest in this House to-night against corn being allowed to come into Canada free of duty. I say that that policy is a curse to the Canadian farmer ; I say that free corn while it possibly helps the large cattle feeder, is ruinous to the hundreds of farmers in Canada who produce corn and who should have protection. I have shown that over 15,000,000 bushels of free corn came into Canada in the last two years from the United States, and I make the statement without fear of contradiction that if 15,000,000 bushels of free corn is dumped into this country it must necessarily displace the consumption of 15,000,000 bushels of our coarser grains, such as peas, oats and barley. Our farmers are obliged to accept a ruinously low price for their corn whereas if we had protection they would get a fair and legitimate price. The American farmer has not only the privilege of sending his corn free into Canada, but he has an advantage over our Canadian farmer of at least 8 cents per bushel on freight rates, because corn can be shipped from Chicago to the vicinity of Kingston at from 4 to 4½ cents per bushel while the corn-growers of western Canada are compelled to pay from 10 to 12 cents per bushel freight to these points. That proves that the American farmer has not only the advantage of free corn, but that he has an advantage over the Canadian farmer of 8 cents per bushel in freight rates alone. If it is fair that the people of the other provinces should be protected upon their products of lumber and on their coal fields, is it not fair that we in western Ontario should be protected upon our corn fields ? I state here, knowing the truth of my statement, that in my district we cannot grow corn at the price we are compelled to sell it for at times. We were forced to sell our immense corn crop a short time ago at from 25 to 30 cents per bushel and no farmer can afford to grow corn in the province of Ontario at that price. Give us the same 15 cents per bushel duty that the Americans impose upon our corn, guarantee to our farmers that they will get from 45 to 50 cents per bushel and I state here that in the Essexes, the Middlesexes, the Lambtons, and other corn-growing districts we can produce and will produce every solitary bushel of corn that the Dominion of Canada requires. We imported 15,000,000 bushels of corn in the last two years ; guarantee to our farmers a price of 50 cents a bushel which they should have and we will grow 25,000,000 bushels if necessary. There is no farmer who is going to plant forty-five acres, sixty acres, or seventy acres of corn, as a great many farmers can do in my district, knowing that he may be compelled to sell it at from 25 cents to 30 cents per bushel. It is said by some people that we should feed the corn to the cattle. Well, while there are a number of farmers in my district who could feed from twenty-five to thirty acres of corn, there are hundreds of farmers who have good corn soil and who could grow corn to sell, but who have not the money to buy stock in order to feed it. That is one of the reasons why these corn producers there should be protected, and I trust and hope that the government will see fit to give to these farmers the privileges to which they are entitled. One other argument upon the corn question before leaving the subject. The present government expect our farmers to grow corn in competition with free corn from the United States. If they expect them to do that they should give them every advantage possible in order to enable them to grow corn more cheaply than they are now in a position to do. Nearly all of the corn machinery that has been manufactured up to a short time ago has been manufactured on the other side of the line and the government, while expecting our farmers to successfully grow corn in competion with free corn, put a duty of 35 per cent on every solitary bit of corn machinery that they bring into this country.

Now, I propose to direct the attention of hon. members of the House for a few moments to the wool question.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. How does it come that you get such a small price for your corn where you are living ? The hon. gentleman stated that corn was worth only 25c. cents. To-day I see this quotation from the 'Mail and Empire' from Chatham : No. 2, yellow American corn, 64 cents.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. Wright), whom I greatly regard, has shown a great deal of brightness in asking me that question and I must congratulate him upon having done so. I made the statement that two years ago the farmers in my district were compelled to sell their corn at from 25 to 30 cents a bushel. I make that statement now knowing whereof I speak and if the hon. gentleman still thinks that the question is one capable of dispute I shall be very glad to show him the price that the farmers are compelled to accept at the time to which I have referred. At the present time the corn crop is almost exhausted and that may account for the advance in price. But, I was giving the figure that they were compelled to take while free corn was coming into this country and which they will be compelled to take possibly in five or six months from now because the price of our crop is regulated by the immense crop which they may possibly have in the United States.

Now, as I stated a moment ago, I propose to direct the attention of the House to the wool question. I consider, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very serious question. This is a question which this government have neglected with the result that they are responsible for having practically wiped out of existence the wool and sheep industry which means millions of dollars to this Dominion. I am going to go fully into the wool question because I know whereof I speak upon that subject. Even the late lamented Sir John Macdonald did not grasp the wool situation as it should have been grasped. The Americans, during his term of government, imposed against our Canadian wool going into the United States a duty of 8 cents a pound. I give the late Sir John Thompson, who was Prime Minister of this country, credit for being the only man in Canada who grasped the wool situation as it should have been grasped. He said to the American government: if you do not remove that duty of 8 cents a pound that you have imposed upon our Canadian wool we will apply the same duty of 8 cents a pound to wool coming from the United States. What was the result? The result was that the United States duty was wiped out and we had between the United States and Canada for a short time free trade in wool. Wool is practically the only one of our farm products in regard to which we should have free trade between Canada and the United States.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the hon. gentleman tell me how the small quantity of wool that we shipped to the United States could have any effect upon the American import tariff?

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the hon. gentleman will listen to my argument upon this point after I get through I shall be very glad to answer any question he may desire to ask me. We had free trade in wool between the United States and Canada for a short time. The result was that New York and Boston buyers came here and bought our wool from our farmers at first hand and our farmers were getting from 23 to 30 cents a pound for their wool. That was only a short time ago. But, when the McKinley Bill was passed it imposed practically a fifty per cent duty against all our Canadian products and why I say our government are to blame is because they had not back bone enough to stand up and say: We will apply the same duty to the products of the United States. The McKinley Bill imposed on Canadian wool duties ranging from 10 to 35 cents a pound according to the grade. Neither Canada nor the United States can export their wool because we know that England is the raw wool market of the world and the result is that we manufacture our own wool.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the hon. gentleman mean that no Canadian wool is being exported at present to the United States?

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the hon. gentleman will come down to the front I will get his question. I cannot hear him.

Mr. CALDWELL. The hon. gentleman says that Canadian wool is not being exported to the United States now owing to the duty. There is a duty of 12 cents a pound on Canadian wool going into the United States and there is wool being exported every day or every week to the United States even with that 12 cents a pound duty.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the hon. gentleman had listened to the return I read to this House he would have known that I gave to the House the amount of wool that was imported from the United States and the amount of wool that was exported. The hon. gentleman says that there is 12 cents a pound duty on wool. I make the statement that there is a duty of from 12 to 38 cents a pound on wool going into the United States and that there is practically no duty at all upon American wool coming into Canada.

Mr. CALDWELL. The duty is based on the grade of the wool.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am sorry to say, while I do not want to be offensive at all, that the hon. gentleman must be very dense or he would have been able to have got at the question that I am trying to put before the House, and which I am trying to state as plainly and correctly as possible. Now, as I stated before, three-fourths of the wool they produce in the United States is termed a clothing wool that is a wool having a short fibre, while three-fourths of the wool we produce is termed a combing wool, because, this being a colder climate, we produce that grade of wool here. The American manufacturers want every solitary pound of our Canadian wool; they must have every pound they can get. Why did the United States government, knowing that the manufacturers wanted every pound of that combing wool they could get from us, impose that duty of from 12 to 35 cents per pound on our wool? Was it to help the manufacturer? No, it was to protect the farmer and I have a statement here showing that the Michigan farmer, not 45 miles away from the district in which I live, has been getting from 35 to 39 cents a pound for the very same wool that the Canadian farmer has been selling at from 12 to 15 cents a pound. Our Canadian farmer has been compelled to sell his unwashed wool in this country at 7 cents a pound and the result is that in my district where there were 100 farmers fifteen years ago who were raising all the way from 10 to 100 sheep on their farms there is not one farmer in 75 to-day producing the number of sheep that he was producing ten years ago.

Wool is a peculiar question from other products. It is one of the only things there should be free trade between the United States and Canada because neither the United States nor Canada can export wool to the old country. The United States wants all the Canadian wool that we can produce because all the wool we produce is termed the combing wool which is a long fibre which they want to work with their cotton. Three-quarters of the wool that the United States produce is termed clothing wool and is too short to be used with cotton.

When the McKinley Bill came in they placed a duty upon Canadian wools going in their to protect their farmer and not the manufacturers, according to grade from 12 cents to 30 cents per pound. There has been no duty to speak of on American short wools coming into Canada. They have been dumping their washed wools at from 12 cents to 16 cents per pound and our farmer has been compelled to sell his combing wool in competition to their short wools, or in other words our farmer has been only getting 15 cents for his combing wools and the Michigan farmer getting 35 cents for the same grade of wool. The result has been, it has wiped the sheep industry out of existence in the province of Ontario. The Ontario farmer would not raise wool at the price and the result is he has killed his sheep and sold them all. Had the same duty been applied upon the United States wools as they applied to ours, the duty would have only remained just so long as they could have scrached their pen through it. The result would have been had that been done that our Canadian farmers would be getting the same price that the Michigan farmer gets and the sheep industry which amounted to millions of dollars in the province of Ontario would have been reserved to the Canadian farmer. I make that statement, knowing it to be correct. I say that when that duty was applied by the McKinley administration, our government should have retaliated with a similar duty. Had they done so the American duty would have lasted only so long as it would have taken them to scratch a pen through it. But so long as we sit quietly by and allow these duties to be imposed against our own products, so long will our neighbours to the south make use of it. The policy of this government has wiped out the chief industry of this country, which amounted to millions of dollars and which, if it had been protected as it should have been, would be to-day an industry such as every Canadian would have a right to be proud of.

I want to submit to the House some statements regarding the manufacture of woollens in this country—another industry which has been wiped out by the policy of this givernment. The following is a statement showing the value of woollens manufactured, imported and entered for consumption in Canada, together with the duty collected thereon during each of the fiscal years from 1890 to 1904 inclusive ending June 30 :

Years.	Value	Duty.
1890..	$11,017,261	$3,157,599 54
1891..	9,962,846	2,963,356 00

1893..	10,946,224	3,309,389 01
1894..	9,493,629	2,876,873 17
1895..	7,952,932	2,527,564 06
1896..	8,670,691	2,759,133 78
1897..	7,125,748	2,263,882 59
1898..	7,985,847	2,438,089 72
1899..	9,803,197	2,298,579 90
1900..	9,801,565	2,745,814 50
1901..	9,944,105	2,556,335 78

1904..	15,159,383	3,953,913 32

In another sense, where it affects the labour of the country, the yardage that comes into this country, and which could be manufactured here by our own mills, to a very large extent, would equal 65 mills, each having ten sets of machinery. The labour employed would equal about fifteen hands to each set of machinery, totalling about nine or ten thousand operators in the mills. Also by the stoppage of these mills, and an undevelopment of the woollen industry, it affects the farmers in raising sheep for the production of wool, and the sheepskin pullers ; which all affects the employment of labour.

From a monetary standpoint, the government revenue last year would be nearly four millions of dollars, while in 1890, the value of woollen goods imported amounted to eleven millions of dollars, duty on which was over three millions, and the value of goods coming in under the preferential tariff was over fifteen millions, and the money collected was a little over three-quarters of a million more than it was in 1890. In the present case the duty being higher the government got nearly as much money as they did in the fiscal year of 1904. The consequence is that the government are not getting a great deal more in the way of duties, but there is nearly one-third more of goods coming in under the low rate ; which so seriously affects the mills and the woollen industry without any corresponding gain to the government.

However, Mr. Speaker, you can see by the schedule submitted that the woollen industry is contributing a large share to the expenses of the country; which is bearing on them more unequal than it does on a great many other industries which they claim are prospering under the preferential tariff.

I make the statement here, which I believe to be correct, as far as my knowledge goes, that there never were any goods made in the whole world for the price, which equalled in wearing qualities the goods manufactured by our Canadian mills from honest Canadian manufacturers. One yard of good honest Canadian woollen such as we were manufacturing previous to the enactment of the preferential tariff—which caused our mills either to close down or make a shoddy class of goods such as they did not desire to make—will wear out five yards of the shoddy imported to-day to the disadvantage of the working men and the labourers of this country, who are the class of people that have to buy cheap goods. This government should come to the relief of the woollen manufacturers. The policy they have adopted has wiped out millions of dollars of capital and driven 5,000 to 7,000 mechanics—who were good citizens, making their livelihood and spending their money here—into foreign countries where their labour is used in producing goods that come into competition with ours. I trust the government will do something to help that industry. Deputations after deputations have been waiting upon them with the view of getting some relief, but so far they have been turned down.

In my district we also grow a great amount of tobacco, and could produce millions of pounds. I was very glad to hear the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue state that he would take into consideration the tobacco question and see if he could not afford our farmers and tobacco growers greater protection. 'I want to give this government some credit for having helped this industry to a certain extent. But it is not fair that we should import millions of pounds of tobacco grown by the United States farmer and which come into this country practically free, when we are compelled to pay an excessive duty if we want to export any over to them. We can grow both the quality and quantity we get from the United States ; and therefore instead of importing that 17,000,000 or 20,000,000 pounds from that country, we should give our farmers in Ontario a chance to grow that tobacco and sell it in our own market. There are many questions relating to agriculture which I would like to discuss. But I know that hon. members do not wish to remain in this excessive heat longer than is absolutely unavoidable, so I will confine what I have to say to one or two points.

The first matter—upon which I shall have but a word to say—is the question of our cattle. Our farmers are hampered by the freight rates on stock. They do not get the rates that are given to our neighbours to the south. Our government should lend aid towards obtaining an equal freight rate with that afforded to our neighbours, thus giving our farmers the same advantage in the market that the Americans have.

And, now, just a word on the subject of cold storage. In the last election I had to face many glowing statements of what this government have done for the farmers in the way of providing cold storage facilities. Well, I can only say that I have never seen any adequate cold storage facilities provided by this government, nor any that came near being adequate. In Kent county, in which I have the honour to represent, in which I live, has a season almost a month earlier than any other portion of the Dominion. The report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries shows that we produced more apples last year than the whole of British Columbia, more than the whole of Nova Scotia, more than the whole of New Brunswick. We not only produce apples, but we produce peaches, grapes and other perishable fruits in vast quantities. This government should do something in order to enable the farmers to market their products, which have been largely going to waste. Millions of dollars worth of fruit have been lost in Kent county because there were no adequate facilities to take it to market. Practically the whole apple crop of that county went to waste last year because of lack of cold storage. Now, if this parliament can spend money lavishly to build railways and to give them to corporations, it can well afford to provide cold storage plants in the districts in which they are most needed and to give them to the farmers of this country. From the statements I have heard, and from what I have read in 'Hansard,' I infer that the cold storage plants that we have in this country are inadequate, they are not up-to-date. I was surprised to hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) advocating the old ice system of cold storage which has quite gone out of use in New York and other states where they produce large quantities of fruit. In those states they have adopted the up-to-date mechanical system. It is time that our Minister of Agriculture should wake up to the needs of the situation and adopt for this country the same system. He would then be doing something for the farmers, which they are justly entitled to and for which I think he would receive more credit than for many of the things he is doing at the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I trust that I have not worn out the patience of the hon. members of this House. If so I make ample apology. I do trust that the government will take into its serious consideration the interests of the farmers, the labourers and the mechanics of this country. The arguments that I have tried to set forth apply to the manufacturers in this country as well as to the farmers. Instead of importing $145,000,000 worth of goods from the United States as last year, at the least calculation $100,000,000 of that should have been produced and manufactured in Canada, thereby giving justice to the Canadian farmer, mechanic and labourer. I make the statement that there is not a mechanic or a labourer in this country to-day who should not have twenty-five positions at his disposal where he has but the one to-day. It was only the other day that a master mechanic told me of a certain article, a part of a hub that they were imoprting from Pittsburg and selling to the Canadian producer. He said that if our government put on this line of goods a duty equal to 1 cent each, his firm would at once establish a foundry and employ from the start 50 hands in the manufacture. And he assured me that the article would not cost the producer one solitary cent more than they are paying for it as imported. But while they could buy them at about the price they are paying for them now they did not feel disposed to build their establishments in Canada. I only produce this argument, Mr. Speaker, to show that we should have thousands of these concerns in Canada, manufacturing for Canadians what the Canadian consumer requires, instead of giving to foreign mechanics and labourers the advantages that out own Canadians deserve.

Thanking you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members for you kind consideration, I resume my seat.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). There seems to be a desire on both sides of the House not to prolong the debate on this budget. I will confine myself to a few words. I certainly would not be justified, considering the temperature of the chamber and the late period of the session, in inflicting on my suffering fellow-members on both sides of the House any considerable length of talk on this question.

I must congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on the splendid showing of the budget and on the clear and precise manner in which he has presented the same. I congratulate the hon. gentleman, and the government, and the country generally, on the prosperous condition which exists and the good financial situation of the Dominion. All this is a source of gratification to us regardless of our political leanings. In the course of the remarks of the Minister of Finance the question of American versus Canadian silver came up. In that connection, the subject of the mint occurred to my mind. I am pleased to say that we have under construction a building, which, when completed and all the paraphernalia installed, will be used for the purpose of coining our gold, silver and copper. It is needless to say that I fully appreciate the importance of this, and that I am thoroughly in accord with this policy. There is one word I would like to say with regard to the silver that is necessary to be used in Canada being coined in our Canadian mint. I think we should not only have half dollar and twenty-five cent pieces and smaller coins, but we should have the silver dollar coined in our own country, more particularly for distribution in the western part of Canada. Moreover, the coining of silver will be, as stated by the minister, a certain source of profit to the government. But apart from that altogether, the coining of silver necessary for use in Canada will consume a certain amount of the silver which is produced in Canada. I would also agree with the idea of coining gold in that mint. I think we should have our national Canadian $5 gold pieces, $10 gold pieces and $20 gold pieces. That is to my mind, if I may use the expression, the cleanest kind of money. Certainly it is money that, passing current does not get into the filthy condition of an ordinary bank note.

But I wished more particularly to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to another subject. We have in Canada at the present time a refinery refining lead as well as gold and copper. It is situated in my own district in the town of Trail, and I believe it is the property, for the present at all events, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Although it may be some time before we will begin to coin silver and gold in our mint at Ottawa, at the same time it is well to look ahead ; and I would suggest to the Minister of Finance, or whatever minister may have charge of the department dealing with this matter, that when the time comes that we are prepared to coin these metals in our mint, they should follow the system adopted by the United States, and purchase the refined gold and silver at its face value where it is refined, bearing the expense of its transportation from that point to Ottawa, if it is to be coined here. That system is followed out in the United States. You can get full face value for your gold and silver in Seattle and in Helena, wherever there are refineries. The producers of this refined gold and silver get the full face value, and the American government bears the expense of its transportation to Washington. I throw out this suggestion for the consideration of the minister, if he should think proper to purchase these metals from the refineries in Canada.

I wish also to congratulate the minister and the government on the view they have taken with regard to adjusting the inequality, in fact the anomaly, which existed with regard to the tariff on dry white lead, or what is known as corroded lead. That was apparent, and they have to my mind grasped the situation and acted upon it. I desire to thank them on behalf of the lead producers in my district for having taken that sensible view. We have our corroding works established in Montreal, where an American firm have invested between $150,000 and $200,000, coming into Canada with their usual enterprise and spending their money in putting up works there. They are now starting the production, they are already turning out a little. The machinery is new, and as is the case with all new plants, it takes a little time before they get under full headway. But they are met with this situation the present year, that, anticipating the probable adjustment of the duty on corroded lead, the mixers and grinders of paint in Canada have pretty well stocked themselves up with corroded lead, either from the United States or from the markets of London; and had the government delayed the adjustment of this matter until the commission had sat and considered it, even had the report of the commission been favourable, by the delay we would have lost the same amount of trade next year for our corroding works in Canada that we do lose and will lose this year.

Now I believe in giving credit where credit is due. In 1903 we came from my own district in British Columbia, where practically all the lead mining of British Columbia is carried on; we came to the government and asked for assistance to our industry. It is true that the consensus of opinion at first was in favour of imposing a heavy duty on lead and lead products coming into Canada. As was stated the other night by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), I advocated that, and I spoke upon the subject after the delivery of the budget speech that year, and pointed out the necessity of something being done in the interest of the lead mining industry. The government at that time, in their wisdom, did not see their way clear to meet our demands in respect of duties. We then presented to them an alternative proposition, that of a bounty. I am bound to say, and I can assure this House that I am speaking as the mouthpiece of the lead producers of the district I represent, that practically all the lead producers of the district I represent are unanimous in the opinion that the aid granted to that industry by the Dominion government in the shape of a bounty, was the best possible mode of dealing with this question, not only from the standpoint of the impetus which was given to the development of their lead mines, but also from the standpoint of the actual profits to them as miners of lead. They agree that it was the best policy that could be adopted by the government, and that no duties which could have been imposed, no matter how prohibitive, would have answered the same purpose and have produced the same good results. When we came here and represented to the government what would follow if aid was granted by them to that industry, we predicted that an impetus would be given to the industry. Let us see if that prediction has been borne out. In the year ending June 30, 1903, the year in which the Bounty Act was passed, the production of lead in Canada was, I believe, about 7,000 tons; whereas, for the year ending June 30, 1905, the fiscal year just passed, the production of lead increased to 27,000 tons, notwithstanding that during the winter of 1904 and the following summer we suffered a great deal from lack of water, and had to shut down certain of our large concentrating plants, and consequently were able to show a lesser production than we otherwise would. At all events, our showing of 27,000 tons this last year is more than triple the production under the aid granted by the government than it was in 1903.

Some one may say: Is it all due to that bounty being granted? I am not going to claim that it is all due to that, but I claim that the greater part of it was due to the bounty granted by the government and that next year we anticipate the output of 27,000 tons will be increased to 40,000 tons, so I think our contention that when we came to the government with regard to the impetus that would be given to the lead mining has been well borne out. We also stated that it would result in the establishment and the enlargement of refineries right in the lead producing district which would refine every pound of lead produced in British Columbia. That also has taken place. Not only are they able to refine the lead produced in British Columbia, but they are also refining copper, gold and silver in the same works. I have further stated and one of the most important things urged was that it would result in the establishment of corroding works in Canada, so that we would take our ore containing lead right from the mines and put it through the different process of smelting, refining and finally corroding, that we would be able to treat our product entirely in Canada and supply every pound of lead to be used in this country in any shape, lead pipe, paint, sheet lead or any other form. That has been further borne out. We have, as I say, our corroding works here, due, I must say, to the enterprise of a firm of Americans from Wisconsin, and I am pleased indeed to see that the government have recognized the advisability of remedying the inconsistency in tariff which existed with regard to the duty imposed on dry white lead.

There is just one other subject of which I propose to treat, and that one is a most vexed question. For some two or three years, both in this House and out of it, I have been an advocate of duties on rough lumber. This affects us more particularly in the province of British Columbia and I may say that I have been persistent in my requests to the different ministers of the government, individually and collectively; in fact, I may have at times constituted myself more or less of a nuisance by my persistence. This is not a pre-election advocacy with me; it never was. I am thoroughly convinced of the justice of the claim of the lumbermen of British Columbia. I am arguing this from strong convictions that I have on the subject myself. I told my people some years ago and I have continued to tell them that it was a position that I thought must sooner or later be dealt with by the government and the grievance remedied. The government have had delegations wait upon them in reference to this matter. Probably the largest, most representative and most influential of these delegations waited upon them during the present session of parliament. I had the pleasure of introducing the members of that delegation, along with my colleagues from British Columbia, to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Customs, and probably one or two other ministers. I believe I am not going outside the book when I say that the ministers who listened to the full arguments of those in the delegation felt impressed with the strength of their argument and the justness of their cause; I believe they did so. Evidently, however, even if I am right in assuming that the arguments made a strong impression on the ministers of the justness of their requests and of their cause, the government have not seen fit to make that one of the items to be dealt with at the present session of parliament. The reason I presume is that this is a question that is more or less far-reaching and one which they felt they would be justified in postponing until the meeting of the tariff commission to inquire into the tariff generally and to deal with that matter as with other matters. I cannot say that I agree with the stand taken by the government with regard to that. That is not saying that the government's stand is not right, but my view of it is that it is not a case where the lumbermen of British Columbia are asking for an increase in tariff at all; it is a case where the lumbermen of British Columbia —and I may say the lumbermen from Ontario and the maritime provinces and some from the Northwest Territories who were present in the delegation and were all unanimous in their requests—it was not a case of their coming and saying: We have a certain duty upon lumber that is not sufficient and we want you to increase it. The position is this, that on rough lumber entering Canada there is no duty at all, and this is where that falls most heavily. The provision in the Tariff Act, passed, I think, in 1904 the dumping clause, applies only to dutiable goods except, I think, with one slight exception. In our market for British Columbia lumber, namely, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, American lumber manufacturers, especially during the years of depression in building in the United States, find that they can dispose only of a portion, probably a considerable portion, of their products in the United States trade and to United States buyers. The balance of their lumber is on their hands and they wish to get rid of it. The result is that with good freight rates, in order to get rid of their stock, they put it on the market, particularly in Manitoba and in some portions of the Northwest Territories at prices below what they will sell at in their own country and below what the British Columbia lumber manufacturer can sell at; yet we cannot apply the penalty contained in this dumping clause to this case because there is no duty upon rough lumber. We find that condition facing us more particularly in years when the building trade is not over active in the country to the south of us, and it is as much to prevent this very dumping of lumber at what we call slaughter prices upon our own market as anything else that we desire a duty to be placed on rough lumber. Of course opposed to this propositions we have always found our friends from the Northwest Territoires and the province of Manitoba more particularly, and I am not attaching any blame to hon. members from that province with regard to that further than that I do not think they are taking exactly a fair view as between province and province.

Take the new province of Alberta; take that tract of country bordering British Columbia on the east; British Columbia provides for the Territory the natural market for its farm, its ranch and its dairy products, and the greater the lumbering industry of British Columbia the greater will be our purchases in the Northwest Territories. In addition a great deal of employment is given to the citizens of these Territories working in our lumber camps. Practically all the supplies used by these lumber camps: meats, eggs, butter, hay, grain, are the products of the ranches and farms of the Northwest, and all of these products are more or less reasonably protected by the tariff. We contend that as our neighbours to the east are enabled to supply our market with their protected products; they in turn should not object to a protective duty on the rough lumber of British Columbia which now comes into competition with American free lumber. It has been said, and for the sake of argument I will admit it—although the British Columbia lumber manufacturers will not agree with me—that the people of the Northwest would have to pay a little more for their lumber if a duty of $2 were imposed. But, Sir, we must all recognize that certain parts of our Dominion are so situated geographically, that they are bound to pay higher prices for articles which they themselves do not produce than do other portions of the Dominion. In British Columbia we have to pay more for the goods we consume and which are not produced within our boundaries than have the provinces to the east. That is because of the higher freight rates which we have to pay on goods sent to our distant province. Manitoba and the Northwest Territories are not lumber producing and naturally they must expect to pay a higher price for lumber than is paid in the lumber producing provinces. That is a natural sequence of our extensive territory and our geographical position. In the same way the people of British Columbia have to pay more for the products which they get from other parts of Canada than do the people in the eastern provinces. I am satisfied that when the tariff commissioners have taken all the facts into consideration, they will say that the case of the lumber manufacturers of British Columbia is a just case and that it should be acceded to by this government and this parliament. The argument has been advanced in former sessions of this parliament, that we should not impose any duty on lumber because it is one of the requirements of the new settler whom we should induce by all means to come to our country. I am in accord with that idea, but let us consider just to what extent a new settler would be affected even if he had to pay $2 more per thousand feet for his lumber by reason of a duty. The average settler who comes in practically without means, will not within the first three years require more than 10,000 feet of lumber, and at $2 per thousand it would mean all told $20. Of course $20 is $20 to a settler, but let us be fair. Let us look at all the rest of the things which that same settler has to get when he comes in the country. He has to have clothes to wear, farming implements to till his land, household furniture for his home, and a hundred and one necessaries of life. Single out any one of these articles that is free of duty. On all of them he has to pay duty, but his lumber is free. Whatever force there might have been in that argument some years ago, let me point out that it is not applicable now, for this reason: of the 65,000,000 feet of lumber that came from the United States to Manitoba and the Territories last year, only about 5,000,000 feet went into the portions of the Territories where the new settlers are going; the balance was used in the cities and in the reasonably well-to-do farming ranching communities of southern Manitoba. As settlement goes further back less and less American lumber will each year go into these new tracts of country, and so I say that whatever there was in that argument years ago, there is very little if any force in it now.

It was charged that we were not entitled to relief because a combine existed among the lumber manufacturers of British Columbia. Well, now, it is a moot point between Manitoba, the Territories and British Columbia, as to who was responsible for that. It is a question I am not going to argue to-night, because, if any grievance did exist against the manufacturers of British Columbia of that kind, that grievance has absolutely and entirely ceased now, because there is no combine. Now, I have spoken as long as I intended to. I have merely referred to this lumber question to place myself on record in this House. I know that I have placed myself on record before the members of the government. I know it is not a new thing for them to hear what I have said, but I want my constituents, and I want the people of British Columbia generally to understand that in so far as obtaining for them what I consider to be their just and proper due, that is relief for the lumber industry, I am heart and soul with them, and I intend to continue the good work, to do as I have done in the past, to do that which one man can reasonably be expected to do in order to bring about that result, and to get for them the adjustment of the duty on rough lumber that I think they are entitled to. In that respect I may say that I have been ably aided by the members from British Columbia as a whole. Now, I will conclude my remarks, begging pardon for obtruding myself into this debate and begging pardon of myself for having put myself up against the proposition of talking on such a hot night as this, but I felt I had a duty to perform, a duty to my constituents and a duty to myself, and I hope therefore that I may be pardoned for having troubled the House with the few remarks which it has been my privilege to offer.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John city). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend at this late hour in the evening, and also at this late period in the session, and especially under these very oppressive atmospheric conditions that we are suffering from now, to inflict anything at all like a speech on the House. We have heard to-night references made to the lumber, mineral, agricultural and manufacturing industries and interests in this country. I want also to make a reference to the maritime and shipping interest. The fact that I do not intend to occupy the time of the House to any extent, I think, will be shown when I state that I merely wish to refer to a statement and to what I think is an omission of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). The statement to which I wish to refer was made at the last session of parliament, and the omission to which I refer was, I think, made to-day in the delivery of the budget speech. Those of us who were present at the last session of parliament will remember that somewhere in the middle of June a motion was introduced by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), for the cause of whose long continued absence from this House, I am sure, we are all very sorry, and who, under these circumstances, has our sincere sympathy. He made a motion to this effect:

> That in the opinion of this House the preferential tariff should only apply to importations through Canadian ports.

In speaking to this motion he referred to the very many resolutions that had been adopted in support of it by boards of trade in the maritime provinces, and also by a conference of boards of trade held in Toronto. As a matter of fact, the agitation in regard to this matter has been quite widespread ever since the preferential tariff became law in 1897 or 1898. The local legislature of my own province also passed a resolution in favour of the idea which was embodied in the motion moved by my hon. friend from Cumberland last session. Since last session there was passed in the city of Halifax, Nova Scotia, on the 10th April last, the following resolution :

Whereas, a large portion of the goods imported into Canada now enter via foreign ports and are carried over foreign railway lines, therefore co-operation is asked from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the various boards of trade and other representative bodies in pressing upon the Dominion government the desirability of so framing the tariff that there shall be a customs preference on all goods which enter Canada direct from the country of their origin, also on all goods entered at Canadian ports when carried in British shipping.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution goes very much farther than the resolution which was passed by this House in June last, for it not only recognizes that the preference should only be granted in cases where Canadian ports are utilized, but also that there should be a sort of preferential treatment for all goods, not only ordinary goods coming from the United Kingdom, but all goods which are entered at Canadian ports ; and, further, the resolution introduced as an element to be considered, the flag that floats over the vessel that carries these goods. That is also, I think, a very important condition, and it was one that was brought into the discussion in this House last year. In the early part of January this year there was also the following resolution passed in the city of St. John on similar lines :

Whereas, a large proportion of the British goods imported into Canada are being received through foreign ports, very much to the detriment of Canadian commerce, and at the same time, under the present tariff arrangements, receiving the benefit of the 33⅓ preferential rebate ;

And whereas, British vessels are excluded from the carrying of freight from United States insular ports to ports in the United States.

Therefore, Resolved that this board is of opinion that all preferential rebates off customs duties which are allowed in connection with Canadian imports should only apply to goods that are imported through Canadian seaports, and in British registered vessels.

Now, Sir, I said that I wished to refer to a statement that was made by the hon. Minister of Finance in connection with a debate held last year in this House. That statement was made in reply to the argument which was presented by the hon. gentleman who introduced the resolution, and the hon. Minister of Finance said on that occasion :

I am glad my hon. friend from Cumberland has to-day brought forward this motion of which he gave notice some time ago, not that I expect that it can be adopted immediately as part of the budget of this year—but I feel that it is a subject on which discussion may do much good. . . . For my own part, I am heartily in favour of it, and if he decided to divide the House on it, I shall have pleasure in giving my vote in support of the motion. I hope that at no distant day—

I wish particularly to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to this :

—we may adopt it as part of our practical legislation. So while I do not say that this motion will receive the assent of the House and take effect at once——

That was last year.

—it is a move in the right direction.

I might also remind the House that on that occasion the right hon. the Prime Minister also took part in this debate, and among other things made the following remarks :

Upon the general principle of this resolution, there cannot be any difference of opinion. Even my hon. friend from Renfrew does not dissent from the proposition involved in the motion, and the argument he adduced simply was that until we had some accommodation for shipping in our ports, we had to use Boston and other American ports. In my judgment, at all events, the way to have better facilities and accommodation in our own harbours is to cheapen, as far as possible, all our trade to those harbours.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that those remarks made both by the hon. the Finance Minister and the right hon. the leader of the government contain in a nutshell all the argument that I, at all events, have to offer the House to-night. In fact, under those circumstances, I do not consider that any argument is required from me at all, because the members of the government, who are especially responsible for the tariff conditions of this country, have already, in the citations I have made, not only expressed their entire belief in the benefits which would accrue from the adoption of this policy, but have also stated that they are in entire accord with it and hope it shall soon become a part of the legislation of this country. Surely then I need only appeal to the Finance Minister and remind him of the statements he made in this connection last year ; and if I point to the omission in his speech to-night, it is simply with the intention and expectation that he will seize the opportunity while the budget is before the House, of so altering it that this preferential tariff, at all events, will only be applied where the goods are imported through Canadian ports.

For my part, I would like to go further. I would like to see more favourable arrangements made with regard to freight which is taken into our own ports than with regard to that which is imported through foreign ports. I think it is only a matter of patriotic duty that we should not only use our own ports as frequently and as much as we can, but that we should also educate those people shipping from the other side of the water, from whom we import our goods which carry the preferential rebate, that when they are looking out for ports to which to ship their goods, they will seek to ship them to a Canadian port.

With regard to the amount of goods which come into this country under the preferential tariff, I might say that we had from the Minister of Customs this year a statement as to their value. According to that statement, during the fiscal year 1902-3, there came direct to Canadian ports from the United Kingdom, $46,271,934 worth of goods, and for the fiscal year of 1903-4, $49,275,031 worth, showing a gratifying increase I am glad to say, and showing that the amount of these goods being imported into Canada through our own Canadian ports is increasing. From the United States ports, on the other hand, during 1902-3, we imported $12,796,772 worth of goods, and during 1903-4, $12,685,878 worth. It appears to me, therefore, that these amounts which we import through American ports are not so excessively large, and that, as far as the business is concerned, we should not be interfering very much with the present condition of things if we would apply the preferential rebate only on those goods which are imported through Canadian ports. I may say that if there was any disadvantage which importers in the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario or in the Northwest would suffer from the adoption of this policy—if they were put to any expense or indeed to any very great inconvenience by that policy, those of us who are interested more especially in Canadian ports might be a little backward in urging its adoption on the government. But so far as freight rates are concerned, what is the fact? Our importers can import their goods through Canadian ports, whether in winter or summer, at cheaper rates than they can through United States ports. As a matter of fact, the freight rates from St. John—and I presume the Halifax rates would be the same over the Intercolonial Railway or very close to them—the freight rates from St. John, Portland and Boston say to Toronto, are the same, while from New York—through which I am given to understand a good deal of our retail goods are imported—the rates are considerably higher than from any of our eastern maritime ports. I have the rates here for all the classes of goods which are imported. On class No. 1, the rates from our maritime ports are 36 cents per hundred pounds. From New York, on the same class of goods, the freight rates are 57 cents per hundred pounds. On class No. 2, the freight rates from our Canadian maritime ports are 32 cents per hundred pounds and from New York 49 cents. Class No. 3, the rates are 27 cents from Canadian maritime ports as opposed to 39 cents from New York. On class No. 4, they are 23 cents as compared with 27 cents from New York. On class No. 5, they are 18½ cents as compared with 22 cents; and on class No. 6, they are 17½ cents as compared with 19 cents. So that in every one of these classes the advantage in freight rates is with our Canadian ports. Is there any other disadvantage under which importers would labour by being compelled, if they wished to get the benefit of the preferential rebate, to use our own Canadian ports. I know of none at present. I believe that importers would be served just as thoroughly, quickly, easily and satisfactorily from our own Canadian ports as they are at present when importing through the port of New York. I am aware that business men, like others, get into a certain routine in doing their business; but if there were some inducement such as the one I suggest, and which both the Finance Minister and the First Minister spoke in favour of, then I would like to know if there can possibly be any reason whatever why such a scheme should not be adopted. With regard to the rapid supply of goods through Canadian ports as compared with, say, New York, I would like to refer to the letter which was read by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) when speaking on this point last year. This is a letter from the Allans, of the Allan Steamship Line of Montreal, and is to be found at page 5077 of 'Hansard' of 1904. It says in part:

> I may mention, so far as our Liverpool steamers are concerned, that we are now in a position to deliver traffic to Canadian houses as rapidly by our route as can be done by any United States port.

If that is true, I would ask hon. members, and especially the members of the government, what objections there can be for adopting the idea upon which the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland was based and which was approved by this House? What objection can there be to embodying this in the legislation of this country? I do not wish to argue the matter at length. I do not think there is really any necessity for it. Given the fact that there is as good accommodation to be obtained in our own ports as in others; given the fact that the expense not only is no greater, but actually is less for these imports in the interior of our country by using our own ports than by using others. I ask what reason can be possibly given why such a change as I now bring to the notice of the Minister of Finance should not be embodied in the law of the land? I hope that the minister will take into consideration the suggestion I make. I can imagine that in the multiplicity of the things that have been brought to his attention, he may not have happened to give this due consideration. But, taking the statement he made in this House last June,

I do not see how he can very well longer decline to embody this idea in legislation. We are now spending large sums of money subsidizing steamers to carry freight to and fro across the Atlantic. These subsidies are necessary because the business of itself is not sufficient to pay the steamers engaged in it. This proposal, if adopted, will help in this direction. It will help to make our Atlantic business more self-sustaining and will probably help us to reduce in the near future the subsidies which we now find absolutely necessary. I should be glad to hear the Finance Minister state that he will be able to re-consider this matter and will propose it as part of the law of the land that no preference shall be granted except on goods that are imported through Canadian ports.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I have placed on the table resolutions drawn in conformity with the announcements I made in the budget speech as to tariff changes, and I do now desire that they should be taken up. I shall be glad, as they are read to give any explanations that may be needed :

1. That it is expedient to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897, as amended by subsequent Acts, to the following effect :

Schedule 'A' is amended as follows :

Item 158. Strike out the words 'dry white and.'

That refers to the white lead and other articles of a similar character. By striking out 'dry white and' we leave other items at the present rate of duty, and we make special provision for that we strike out.

The following items to be inserted :

8. (a) Wines of all kinds, except sparkling wines, containing not more than forty per cent of spirit of the strength of proof, whether imported in wood or in bottles (six quart or twelve pint bottles to be held to contain a gallon), when the produce or manufacture of any British colony or territory in the South African Customs Union Convention, twenty-five cents per gallon.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is not that the same duty as now exists ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the rate is 25 per cent on wines up to 26 per cent of spirit. This enlarges the list to 40 per cent of spirit and includes the wines that come from South Africa.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. minister is not applying this to Australia ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. Australia has no to-day preference. I stated in the budget speech that we had taken steps to intimate to the Australian government that we were desirous of making a preferential arrangement with them. If they are prepared to make such an arrangement, there is no reason why the same privilege that is here extended to South Africa should not be extended to Australia.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Will the minister say whether this will or will not affect the Canadian product ? I am not sufficiently versed in wine as to know whether this percentage is what exists in the Canadian wines or not. We have a large industry in Brantford, manufacturing Canadian wines ; and if the duty is to be materially reduced, it may affect that industry. They control the Pelee island vineyards, where the grapes are grown that are manufactured into the wine in Brantford. This is a large industry and has been in existence for many years. I should hesitate to approve anything that would materially affect the output of wines of our own district ; for we can grow almost any quantity of grapes that may be necessary, and can supply a light wine that is most palatable, at a reasonable price. I do not know whether the proof here mentioned is the same as that of our Canadian wine.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not like to plead guilty to having knowledge of wines, any more than dose my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt). I think this change will not affect the Canadian wine. I have some knowledge of the Pelee island wine, and I think it will not be affected. This change will tend to bring the South African wines into competition in this country with the European product.

Mr. DANIEL. What are the South African wines—are they clarets, or are they more like ports and sherries ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not sure that I can give my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) the technical name. I think the South African wines would not be classed as ports, but more as clarets. They are described as light wines.

50. (a) Rolled oats, six-tenths of a cent per pound.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. What is the duty on rolled oats now ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no special duty on rolled oats. When our tariff was prepared, this article was not known by that name or in some way it escaped notice. For want of a better classification, it has been included under oatmeal, which is taxed at 20 per cent. We desire to mention it specially and to put it at the rate here given.

Mr. BARR. That is an increase ?

Mr. FIELDING. To that extent, an increase. The argumet used is that the quantity of oats used to make a barrel of rolled oats is 12 bushels. Oats are dutiable at 10 cents per bushel. Therefore the duty on the raw material of a barrel of rolled oats would be $1.20, whereas if it is classed as oat meal the duty on a barrel of rolled oats is much less than $1.20. The effect of this change will be to equalize the duty, so that the duty on the finished product will be about the same as the duty on the raw material.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Does this apply to package oats? There is for instance Quaker oats manufactured by an American firm at Peterborough. These are put up in two-pound pasteboard packages. Is that only to be subject to the same duty as the coarser grades that are put up in 100-pound bags? Does it apply on package oats the same as on the bulk article?

Mr. FIELDING. There has not been any distinction between the two, and for the present we do not make any distinction. But it is a fair question whether, on a fuller revision of the tariff, there should not be a distinction made between the smaller package and the rolled oats in barrels.

Mr COCKSHUTT. I think there should be a material difference between the small package and the large package.

Item 187 is repealed and the following substituted—

187. Cement, Portland and hydraulic or water lime, in barrels or casks, the weight of the package to be included, in the weight for duty, twelve and one-half cents per one hundred pounds; in bags, twelve and one-half cents per one hundred pounds together with twenty-five per cent ad valorem on the bag.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I wish to draw attention to a remark I made during my speech this evening with regard to the price of the package. Bags are always returnable, bags cost 10 cents from the exporter. Large amounts of American cement come into our section, and these bags when emptied are returned at the same price at which they come into the country. Now, I wish to know, if you leave this 25 per cent on the bags and if these bags are returned, is that duty refundable? If not, it will come out of the dealer who handles the cement, and will not be any help whatever in the way the minister anticipates, because the duty on that 10 cent bag will be 2½ cents. There are four bags to the barrel, that is about 350 lbs. Now four sacks are worth 10 cents each, or 40 cents, and the 25 per cent will amount to 10 cents on what is really the contents of a barrel. These bags are always returned to the factory and refilled. If these bags are not returnable they are practically a loss, because they are fit for no other purpose than for that which they were first used, no factory on this side will accept American bags. They will only take back the bags we send out.

Mr. PATERSON. Packages that come in from the United States or other foreign countries are charged duty. If they are returned and can be identified as the same sacks when they come back, they do not pay duty the second time, because when an article has once paid duty it becomes nationalized. A bag that has paid duty once is a Canadian bag. If the bag was made in Canada and went over to the United States, of course there would be no duty on it when it came back.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. No one would be able to say if this was the same bag when it came back. That would be a grievance. There are no marks on it to indicate that it is the same bag. It will be for the producer to keep track of these bags that come over to Canada and see to it that the same bags were again returned to Canada after being refilled. That is going to be a hardship on the dealer, if the proposition of the Minister of Customs is carried out. This 2½ cents per bag is going to come out of the dealer, because the bag is always returned, it has been the invariable custom of the trade to return the bags to the factory after they are emptied. There will be trouble in the administration of that phase of the tariff if it is going to be applied in that way. Certainly there will be a loss to some one if a duty is collected on a bag which is returnable.

Mr. PATERSON. I thought the hon. gentleman was saying that we give no relief to the cement industry at all. If the bags cannot be identified when they go out and come in, they will pay duty every time they come in, and I should think that would meet the hon. gentleman's wishes.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) perhaps does not understand that this free trade government, in making this concession to the cement industry in Canada, are protecting it to the tune of 2½ cents a bag.

Mr. FIELDING. Is my hon. friend opposing that?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I am in favour of protection. But the hon. gentleman is sailing under false colours, because he is a member of a free trade government and is throwing out this little sop to the hon. gentleman who sits behind him, the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Telford) who is largely interested in producing cement. I want to see all the cement used in Canada made in Canada, and I would like to see the duty made 25 per cent more on that product.

Mr. PATERSON. As explained by the Minister of Finance, there is this anomaly in the tariff. Cement was not shipped in bags when the tariff was framed in 1897. It came in from England and Belgium in barrels and casks, under a duty of 12½ cents per 100 pounds, the weight of the package to be included for duty. It only comes in from the United States in bags, therefore the English and Belgian cements is discriminated against in favour of the American article. This places them on an even footing.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I do not think the minister fully grasped the difficulty I pointed out. The Canadian purchasing these goods in Amercan bags for instance will pay duty the first time on that bag and if the bag is returned to the States, refilled and sent back to Canada, the bag will not pay duty providing it can be identified as the bag that had already paid duty. Well, that appears to me to be a very roundabout way of doing what the hon. gentleman says he is doing; giving 10 cents a barrel. I do not oppose that, I wish it were 25 cents instead of 10. As far as that is concerned, I quite approve of any move that will give more protection to the cement manufacturers. I think they are entitled to it, the industry calls for it, and the quality of the goods and the extent of the output justify the government in going further than they are doing. I fear the working out of this particular provision will not be satisfactory and will permit men who are unscrupulous in making statements to get their duty allowed where men of more conscientious scruples who will not swear that these are the identical bags that they used before, and therefore cannot make out the declaration, will not be able to escape the duty. This I do not think is right and in all fairness and in accordance with commercial practice the equivalent should be considered all that is necessary.

Mr. PATERSON. It does not depend on the declaration alone. If the bag comes back it must bear a customs mark that can be identified by the customs officers ; in addition to that we will have the declaration of the importer. If the importer omits having his bags marked by the customs officer he will have to pay the duty again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty seems to be this. The government wants to equalize the duty on cement imported in bags and on that imported in packages. If the suggestion of the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is capable of being carried out as the Minister of Customs says it is, it seems to me the object as explained by the Minister of Finance absolutely fails. You do not equalize the duty because the bag comes back time after time and the duty is paid only once. Do I make myself clear ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would work out that way if what the minister says is practicable can be carried out. You are paying the duty once, the bag is used a hundred times ; on the first occasion it pays duty and on the 99 other occasions it does not and therefore we do not equalize the conditions of the importation of cement from Britain and from the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Customs has spoken of the general practice with regard to packages, that is that a package once admitted on which duty is paid, if it can be identified as simply having passed the border and come back, is not liable to duty again. My impression is that in the case of the bag there will be such difficulty in identification as the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) suggests, and that practically the bag will have to pay duty each time, but the general principle as regarding packages is as stated by the Minister of Customs.

Mr. TAYLOR. It need not because the cement manufacturer in the United States will, export the goods to Canada consigned to themselves ; they will have agents who will make the entry and once they pay the duty on the bags they will collect these bags and ship them back to the United States, and when they come back to Canada the agent will make the declaration that they are the same bags as were returned before.

Mr. FIELDING. The agent has to satisfy the Customs Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. The customs cannot go back of that ; there is the declaration of the importer that these bags paid the duty once.

Mr. PATERSON. We go back of that, they have to be marked.

Mr. TAYLOR. The exporter will have the Customs mark them and they will come back, the duty 2½ cents will be paid only once, and the American cement manufacturers will take advantage of that.

Mr. PATERSON. I simply explained the general rule with reference to packages, and of course this comes under the general law. The principle on which we proceed with reference to packages is illustrated in the case of oyster kegs. A great many oysters come in in kegs and there are also brass fountains which are sent over to be filled with material and the idea is that when an article has paid duty once it becomes a Canadian article. If it was made in Canada and sent over there to be filled it would be Canadian goods returned, but if it is of foreign manufacture in the first place it must pay the duty when it comes in but then it becomes Canadian. If it goes out it is Canadian goods returned. But there must in all these cases be identification by marks made not by the man who sent the bags back but by the Customs officer.

Mr. LENNOX. If a request is made to have the bags identified, I presume the Customs officer will do so.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Then if the exporter from the United States or the importer desires it, he could have them marked and the result would be that there would be no protection at all to the Canadian cement manufacturers because these bags could have become nationalized as the minister has said and become a recognized means of carrying goods from the United States to Canada. Once they are identified they will not have to be identified again, and if a bag makes a hundred trips we get only the one hundredth part of 2½ per cent duty on each trip.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you think they will stand 100 trips ?

Mr. LENNOX. That is probably an extreme illustration but they will stand enough to render the duty merely nominal. What is to prevent the minister, if he is sincere in his conversion to the protective doctrine, from dealing with this in a straight forward and clear way and saying that if cement is imported from the United States in bags it shall pay a certain specific duty. It seems to me that in this matter the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have not been in harmony in entering upon the question and have been aiming in different ways. I do not think the Minister of Finance appreciated until the Minister of Customs explained it, that this manner of marking and identifying existed.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid my hon. friend will have to reconstruct the cement manufacturers because they have represented that the absence of duty on the bag is a serious disadvantage to them and we have removed it at their own suggestion. I have no doubt they would be much pleased to have a certain amount of duty. I do not know what my hon. friend would regard as a fair duty. If he makes an examination he will find that the duty on cement to-day is a pretty stiff one.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister say that when he explained this matter to the cement manufacturers they were satisfied ? Did he explain that the bags only paid duty once and that if they made a hundred trips there would only be one duty paid ?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not explain anything to the cement manufacturers : I did not suppose I could teach them their own business, and as they are a particularly intelligent class of people, judging by the deputation which favoured me with a call, I imagined they knew the general law respecting packages.

Mr. LENNOX. It is quite evident something will have to be reconstructed. The Minister of Finance said he expected the duty would be paid on every occasion the bag was entered, and there is no reason to believe that the cement manufacturers understood otherwise. I agree with the Minister of Finance that cement manufacturers understand their own business but the Minister of Finance did not understand himself that this rule would be invoked by the Minister of Customs. The only way to afford any reasonable protection is to charge the duty on the bag every time. The Minister of Finance wanted to know if I would reconstruct something. Well, we have reconstructed the whole cabinet on the principle of protection ; they are not all we desire yet but we hope to reconstruct them on this question so that we may have protection in fact as well as in name.

Mr. TELFORD. I understand that the cement manufacturers are satisfied with this provision, and I do not believe that there is a bag that comes back from the United States more than three times at the very outside.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Telford) is more cemented to his party than he is to his business. As a practical man he must know that a bag will stand more than three trips.

Mr. TELFORD. I said the bags would not come back from the United States more than three times, and I do not believe that even when they are sent to Canadian points they come back to our factory more than five or six times.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have handled cement but I have also capital invested in the industry and I know it needs protection. Whether this tariff change gives it protection or not, it is going to place the matter in very great uncertainty and cause a great deal of inconvenience. The goverment ought to now declare whether they will charge 2½ cents on each bag as it comes in and every time it comes in, or whether that charge is only going to be during the life of the sack. Some sacks will last 100 trips, others may not last five trips and some will be damaged the first trip. I understand the Minister of Customs to say that he proposes to have a custom mark on every bag for identification. An ordinary car will contain 100 barrels which represents 400 bags, and there were imported into Canada last year 780,000 barrels which in round numbers would be 3,120,000 sacks.

Mr. FIELDING. Was it all imported in sacks ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I do not think that any English, German or Belgian cement comes to Ontario, and the American cement is almost entirely imported in sacks. According to the Minister of Customs you would have 3,120,000 sacks to be marked and that will need a great deal bigger staff than you have now. The Minister of Customs cannot be serious when he says that each one of these 10 cent sacks is going to have an identification mark put on it. A man cannot go through a car and mark the sacks on account of the way in which they are piled up, and how and where is the marking going to be done? It is an impossibility. The cement is usually billed by the firm that sells it; it is marked at the laid down price on the track at the place where it is sold; it is quoted so by the cement manufacturer; he is the man that pays the duty, he is the man who will gather the bags and he is the man who becomes responsible and not the Canadian importer who receives it from him. The manufacturer will simply have an agent who will be ready to take this particular oath in order to pass these sacks and the man with conscientious scruples who desires to do the right thing will not be able to take that oath, and thus you will not have uniformity in the prices. It is for the government to say here and now whether or not they intend to levy the duty of 10 cents a barrel on cement. I hope they will do so, and I trust that they will charge the 2½ cents on each bag every time it comes in. If that is done the manufacturer, the importer and the exporter will understand it and no complications will arise.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman (M. Cockshutt) is making a strong plea for the American manufacturers.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I ask for a duty of 10 cents per barrel on cement.

Mr. MILLER. I met Mr. Daniel Knechtel, president and manager of the Hanover Cement Company, who was very desirous of having a larger duty on cement. I knew that one of the requests of the cement manufacturers was that there should be a duty on the sacks, and I had been informed that the sack would only pay duty on entering the first time. I asked Mr. Knechtel whether that being the case such a duty would be of any particular advantage or of sufficient advantage to be worth while. I have no doubt that if Mr. Knechtel were here he would ask for a much larger increase of protection than this will give, but he said in reply to my question that such an added protection as is being given now would be a very great advantage. He said that a large number of the sacks would not be returned, and that often times a contract was awarded to an American rather than to Canadian manufacturer on account of a difference of possibly a fraction of a cent upon the barrel. In this instance the manufacturer would no doubt like to have a much larger increase of protection, but he looks upon this as being an increase that is certainly worth while.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In my opinion the cement manufacturers of Canada do not need this protection at all. We have every facility in this country for manufacturing cement and it is an outrage and an imposition on the people of this country to impose any such tax upon them. I have been informed that the cement manufactures to-day are charging double the cost of manufacturing this article. I have got that from a direct source and I think it is practically a straight steal from the people of this country to impose any extra tariff on cement at the present time. The cement manufacturers of this country have every facility at hand and they ought to be able to produce and sell their cement as cheaply as in any other country. Why should we consumers of this particular material be imposed upon in this way? I do not think it is fair, looking at it from the consumers standpoint, particularly when the manufacturers are taking advantage of their position as I am informed they are doing. I was told by a cement manufacturer not long ago that they expected to make 50 per cent on the capital invested.

Mr. CLARE. He was trying to sell stock to you.

Mr. BARR. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) if there is a cement factory from one end of this Dominion to the other that is paying a dividend to-day? It is within my own knowledge that such is not the case; and if it is not the case, it seems to me to be a proper thing that there should be some protection afforded to this industry. We know that the Americans dump their surplus cement just as they do their surplus of other commodities to the disadvantage of the Canadians, and if this is continued the probability is that many of our cement works will be closed up, the result of which would be that the consumers would be obliged to pay higher prices. I do think, therefore, under these circumstances, that the existing conditions are most unfair. They will now endeavour to get back their bags, if they will stand the wear and tear of a number of trips to the Canadian side. I venture to say there is no reason why they could not produce bags that would probably stand 100 trips; and, therefore, whilst we have, in name, protection from the United States, it is no more than in name, and the result is that it will take an extra staff sufficient to eat up all the profits we get as far as that is concerned.

Mr. MILLER. I think my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) has been misinformed as to the facts. I do not think that there is a single cement factory in Canada which pays dividends of 50 per cent, or even of 10 per cent. I do not know of any that are really making any profit at all. What is the reason of that? We can and we do make as good cement in Canada as can be made in any other part of the world, and in some respects we have as good facilities. We have the raw material, the marl and the clay, of just as good quality and just as easily obtainable as they have in the United States; but in the United States, where they manufacture cement most largely, and particularly in the state of Pennsylvania, they have the rock out of which the cement is made, and the clay, and they have the additional advantage which is a very great advantage, of having the coal, which is a very large part of the cost of manufacturing the cement, at the door. So that they have the rock, the clay and the coal together. Our manufacturers have to import their coal, and the freight they have to pay is what adds very largely to the cost of production. It makes it utterly impossible for the Canadian manufacturer to manufacture as cheaply as does the American manufacturer. If the cement industry is to thrive in Canada, it must be protected to some extent. Of course, there is this to be said on the other side, that where the natural disadvantages are so great, it is a debatable question, I should think, as to how far the government ought to go in overcoming the natural disadvantages that exist.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Surely the cost of freighting coal will not be very much more than the freighting of the cement. It only costs 50 or 60 cents a barrel to manufacture, and they charge from $1.30 to $1.50 a barrel.

Mr. MILLER. I think that the hon. gentleman must have received his information from some of the prospectuses issued by the promoters of new companies, and if he will purchase stock in any of these companies, he will find that it is not such a paying business as he supposes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. These companies are capitalized at about three times the amount of money invested, and they are endeavouring to make a profit on that capital.

Mr. TELFORD. I know from personal investigation made last year out of ten or twelve mills in operation in Canada, not more than three companies paid any dividend. This year I believe a number will pay dividends, because we are able to sell cement for $1.50 a barrel at present, whereas last year we were selling it at from $1 to $1.20 a barrel, and many of us could not manufacture it at that figure. I made inquiries of a number of cement manufacturers in our own town, which is the centre of the cement business, and I ascertained that most of them were paying $1.25 and upwards a barrel as the cost of production. This year, however, a number of our manufacturers are able to manufacture for about $1 a barrel, and I understand that the cement company at Hull will be able to manufacture for less than that. Up to the present time I think we have had on it little enough protection, but I think the protection which the government is giving us on the bags will be quite sufficient to enable us to make reasonable profits. In so far as I am concerned, I do not want to see any additional duty imposed, because I believe if more were imposed the resultant increase in profits would induce a number of people to invest more money in new cement manufactories, as we have abundance of the raw materials out of which cement is made all over the province of Ontario. The reason we were in such straitened circumstances last year was simply because a very large number of people had been induced to put their money into cement. We were manufacturing more than the country could consume, and the consequence was stagnation. We could not dispose of our product, and we had to take less for it than it cost us to manufacture. The result of this was that a great number of us went behind. This year we are selling at $1.50 a barrel, and we expect to be able to pay a dividend. Many of the companies engaged in the manufacture of cement are over-capitalized. There has been a great deal of water put into the stock of some companies, and they expect to get dividends upon it, these expectations will not be realized, but those companies which are established on a cash basis will be able to pay reasonable dividends, except those that ran behind in previous years, and which have to make good their losses during the present year.

Mr. CLARE. The hon. Minister of Finance made a statement that the duty would have to be paid on all importations, no matter whether they came from the other side or not. If that is the intention of the hon. Minister of Finance, why not carry it out? If the statement of the hon. Minister of Customs is correct, then the intention of the Minister of Finance is not being carried out. A clause should be added to this providing that the duty shall be collected on every importation.

Mr. FIELDING. As far as the duty on the bag is concerned, we have done precisely what the cement manufacturers asked. Of course, they will be glad to have us do something more, but on that branch of the question we have done exactly what they want. They are aware of the law as to packages. How many bags will be returned is a question that is open to a difference of opinion. I have been informed that some bags are made of paper, and probably these will not be returned at all.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. They will pay no duty on these?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a question of value. There will be 25 per cent on the value, whatever it may be. How far this will be an advantage to the cement manufacturers may be a question to determine; but, at all events, on that point we have done exactly as they wished. We do not propose to change the law in respect to packages. The law applies to all packages, and the cement manufacturers are aware of it. I am told that many bags are made so that they can be returned. It may be that many bags are made of such material that they will not bear the strain of going backwards and forwards. However, the intention of the Minister of Finance is to be found in this resolution.

Mr. LAKE. I understand that the intention of the Minister of Finance is to put the British exporter on an equality with the American exporter. I would suggest that an easier way of doing that would be to take the duty off the packages altogether, and then increase the duty. Personally, I am opposed to any increase in the duty, but I think that the suggestion I have made is a good one—that if there is any question about the bags, take the duty off the packages altogether.

Mr. FIELDING. If we take the duty off the packages altogether, how many hon. members around him will approve of it ?

Mr. CLARE. Not many.

Mr. FIELDING. He says he does not want the duty increased, so my hon. friend is not prepared to give us any advice we could accept.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is to be regretted that any objection should be made by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). I think his objection has to do with the cost of cement, and what he says should not be allowed to go uncontradicted. I have some capital invested in cement, and I know how long it has been invested, and my investment has not yet returned me a cent. There is also a company which my hon. friend from Owen Sound (Mr. Telford) knows about, because it is located there, in which upwards of $60,000 of stock was subscribed from Brantford, and for which those who invested their money have never got any return. There is also a cement industry in the constituency of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and I hope he will see that it gets a protection of 10 cents a barrel. That is a protection which the cement industry badly needs. The hon. member for Portage (Mr. Crawford) says that cement can be produced for 60 cents a barrel. I would like him to tell us where he gets that information. No doubt he got it out of some prospectus of a company that was trying to sell stock. Cement has been sold by some factories at $1.75 per barrel, and still they have not as yet paid any dividend. It would be but a small measure of justice to grant cement manufacturers a further protection of 10 cents per barrel. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) says that they can ship cement in paper bags. Is the Minister going to brand these bags or not? Many of them would not hold out during one shipment, and if a man should order one carload in paper bags he will be very careful not to order another. The bags will burst and there will be more waste than will pay for the cotton sacks. Cement is not likely to be shipped at any cheaper rate in bags a long distance, and many of the bags will be sure to burst. There ought to be a fair understanding whether or not this 10 cents is to be levied on the imported article. I contend that it should be levied. The price of cement has been cut in two in the four years since Canadians have begun to manufacture it. It used to retail at from $3 to $3.50 per barrel, but now you can buy it at from $1.75 to $2 per barrel. Surely Canadian enterprise has done much for those who use cement. It has certainly given a better quality than we ever had before because the tensile strength of Canadian cement is higher than that of the cement in any other country. We have put into the business plenty of plant and capital and have all the requisites for producing this article at a very moderate price, still last year there were imported 780,000 barrels or 7,800 cars of cement, and that in spite of the fact that we have enough factories—many of which are not running—to produce more cement than the whole country can use. This item is the best in the hon. gentleman's tariff changes, and I hope no effort will be made to have it struck out.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There ought to be a limit somewhere as to the duty on cement. While strongly in favour of a duty on that article, I am only sorry that we cannot manufacture it as cheaply as it is manufactured on the other side of the line. Cement is billed at Hamilton at $1.55 per barrel, the duty is 43 cents and the freight 27 cents, leaving the net price to the American 85 cents. Surely our manufacturers ought to be satisfied with such a high duty and ought to be able to meet the competition from the other side. I do not think it is fair that the government should go any further than they have done in this matter. I must say that I know of other industries which need protection very much more than the cement industry.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I merely wish to say that the authority I had for making the statement I did is undoubted.

Schedule B is amended by repealing item 455 and substituting the following:

455. Settlers' effects, viz.: wearing apparel, books, usual and reasonable household furniture and other household effects ; instruments and tools of trade, occupation or employment, guns, musical instruments, domestic sewing machines, typewriters, bicycles, carts, wagons and other highway vehicles, agricultural implements and live stock for the farm, not to include live stock or articles for sale, or for use as a contractor's outfit, nor vehicles nor implements moved by mechanical power, nor machinery for use in any manufacturing establishment ; all the foregoing if actually owned abroad by the settler for at least six months before his removal to Canada and subject to regulations by the Minister of Customs : provided that any dutiable articles entered as settlers' effects may not be so entered unless brought by the settler on his first arrival, and shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of without payment of duty until after twelve months' actual use in Canada.

2. The exemption from duty of machinery and structural iron and steel for the construction and equipment of factories for the manufacture of sugar from beet root, authorized by section 11 of chapter 11 of the Acts of 1904, is extended from April 1st, 1905, to June 30th, 1906.

3. The exemption from duty of machinery and appliances of a kind not made in Canada for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining, authorized by section 12 of the said chapter, is extended from July 1st, 1905, to June 30th, 1906.

4. Section 18 of the said chapter is amended by inserting after the word 'production' in the fourth line the words 'or from any British country.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is this change made?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the item about molasses. If molasses be shipped to Newfoundland and then sent to Canada, that would be deemed a direct shipment, and that is why we added the words 'or from any British country.'

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the hon. the Finance Minister if he has forgotten all about the matter I have brought up?

Mr. FIELDING. The subject is a very interesting one, and one which, speaking generally, enlists my warm sympathy; but after the discussion last year, I heard other views advanced, which at all events showed there was another side to the question, and it is quite possible that in doing what we desire to do for the benefit of our maritime ports, we might raise other difficulties. We are reserving final judgment. If my hon. friend had the matter before him and had his attention directed to some of these difficulties, he would see that his proposition is open to some debate. I do not give the matter up. All I say is that there were some reasonable objections which suggested that the matter should be further considered.

Resolutions reported, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 190) to amend the Customs Act of 1897.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ADJOURNMENT — MILITIA MEDICAL OFFICERS OF DISTRICTS.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the government to bring down, perhaps on Monday, any correspondence and other documents in connection with the allowances made, I think under statute, to the principal medical officers of districts. Some question has arisen as to whether or not those officers who are members of this House are disqualified in any way through receiving the allowance or acting as principal medical officers. It is well the matter should receive some attention in the House.

If there is any correspondence with respect to the awarding of the King's medal for eighteen months' service in South Africa, I would like to have it brought down. Some question has arisen between the Department of Militia and the War Office as to whether or not this means eighteen months' service in South Africa or whether it means eighteen months' service including time going to South Africa.

May I also ask what business the government intend to take up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. I will call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the correspondence which the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) desires.

We propose to-morrow to take up a num- of the Minister of Militia to the correspondence which the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) desires.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 7, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

EMBARGO ON CANADIAN CATTLE IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE (South Bruce) moved:

That the sixth report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization be concurred in.

He said: I may explain to the House that this report refers to a question which is not new in this House, but has been dealt with by the House and by the present government in days gone by. I refer to the embargo on Canadian cattle entering the ports of Great Britain. This subject was fully discussed in the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, and a sub-committee was appointed to draw up a resolution bearing on the subject. That resolution was presented to this House a few days ago. In the discussion of this subject in the committee a few days ago it was made evident that the members of that committee considered this a most important question, and that they were very anxious for the expression of the opinion of this House on the subject at this particular time.

For the benefit of those who, perhaps, have not given much attention to this subject, I may briefly review the situation. The embargo referred to was a regulation passed by the British government, first in 1892 by Order in Council, on the occasion of an outbreak of contagious pleuro-pneumonia in the United States. The British government were afraid that, because of the trade in cattle between the United States and Canada, this disease might be communicated through our cattle to their own herds. Later on, the British government seemed to think that they had found reason for making the embargo more stringent and for referring directly to Canada ; and in 1896 the Order in Council was superseded by legislation providing that our Canadian cattle should be slaughtered within ten days from the date of their landing in British ports, and restricted the number of ports to which our cattle could be sent to seven for the whole Kingdom. From that time to this we have contended that this restriction upon the trade of our cattle was very unjust to Canada. The British experts found among our cattle landed in Great Britain three cases of what they held to be contagious pleuro-pneumonia. In that finding our own experts never concurred. Our expert contended that the cases found were not contagious pleuro-pneumonia, but an inflamation of the lungs arising from other causes. And, as a proof that our experts were correct in their conclusion, we have the fact from that day to this, although hundreds of thousands of head of cattle have been sent to the British markets and slaughtered there within ten days of landing, not one single case of contagious pleuro-pneumonia has been found in all these years and among all this large number of cattle. It would be hard to suggest evidence that would prove more conclusively the contention of the Canadian experts that no such thing as contagious pleuro-pneumonia exists among Canadian cattle.

Now, we object to this restriction on the ground that it proclaims to the world, in effect, that Canadian cattle are not sound, that they are liable to disease, so much so that they cannot be admitted into the ports of Great Britain on a par with the cattle of that country. For this reason, we claim that this embargo should be raised. If a rigid inspection is necessary, we do not object to that inspection being maintained. We have at present a rigid inspection constantly going on of our cattle entering these ports ; and we have no objection to this being continued, and to every precaution being taken by the British authorities to preserve their herds. We know from the history of the cattle trade in Great Britain and other countries that it is a very risky thing to trifle with diseases among cattle. There have been diseases among cattle and sheep of a very infectious nature and hard to stamp out, so that they have cost Great Britain millions before they were subdued. We, therefore, sympathize with the British government in their efforts to keep out disease. But, we say, let the rigid examination continue ; we are quite willing that our herds should be subject to that examination ; and, if they are found diseased, we are quite willing to submit to the exclusion. But, believing that we have in Canada a healthful climate and herds free from contagious diseases, we ask the authorities of Great Britain to remove this embargo at once, and thereby publicly declare to the world that Canadian cattle are free from contagious disease.

Again we ask for the removal of this embargo on the ground that affects ourselves. We find that when cattle cross the Atlantic it frequently occurs that they meet stormy weather, and so the animals arrive in a more or less bruised and damaged condition; and, as they must be slaughtered within such a short time the meat is often put on the market in a very improper and inferior condition. This is damaging to the reputation of our beef in the British market. Likewise, we contend that if the time were extended—or was made unlimited—during which our cattle could remain alive in the country, bruised animals would have an opportunity to recover from the effects of the voyage, and the meat could be placed on the market in proper condition, thus keeping up the good name of our meat.

Again we claim, that in the interest of our cattle raisers and in the interest of the feeders of Great Britain, the embargo should be removed. Occasions arise among the cattle raisers in this country when it becomes necessary for them to send cattle out of the country that are not in exactly a finished condition ; in fact a certain percentage of our cattle are always going out of the country in that condition. We must remember that these cattle have to be slaughtered within ten days after landing, and being in a half-fed condition, this meat which is sold of course as a Canadian product, tends to depreciate the good name of our beef in the British market. Now I am not an advocate of Canadians exporting unfinished cattle, but I will repeat what I have already said, that occasions will arise when such cattle are exported, there will always be a percentage of cattle going forward in that condition, it sometimes becomes necessary for farmers to send out some of their cattle in an unfinished condition; and we contend that on occasions of that kind the Canadian farmer should have the opportunity and the privilege of exporting those cattle in that condition ; and we know that on the other side of the Atlantic there are many feeders who are glad to get them. I may say in this connection that in speaking with our esteemed Governor General recently on this matter, who is himself a considerable feeder of cattle, he informed me that in all his experience in feeding cattle he had never had better cattle for that purpose than Canadian steers, and personally he would strongly approve of the embargo being removed.

Now I would say this also, that it would be greatly to the interest of the British people, and they are beginning to look at it in that light, to remove this embargo in order that they may get cheaper meat. We believe that this embargo tends to increase the price of meat to the British consumer, and I am glad to see that some of the people, at least, of the old country, are beginning to look at it in this light. I have here a cutting from a paper which says :

The Co-operative Union Congress of Paisley has protested against the embargo on Canadian cattle. Co-operative enterprises are virtually impossible under protection, and the Congress recognizes in the cattle embargo a protection measure.

It goes on to say that in the interest of the consumers this embargo should be removed that they might get cheaper meat. I have another extract from a Glasgow journal :

Leading Glasgow members of the cattle trade condemn the restrictions on the import of Canadian cattle as unjustifiable. An ex-chairman of the Glasgow Fleshers' Society says : 'What Glasgow butchers and Scottish farmers desire is that fat Canadian bullocks be allowed to enter our ports and be sent to rest on our pastures preparatory to being sent to market, and that lean animals be sold to farmers for storing purposes. There is no better class of cattle to be found than Canadian cattle after being rested on this side.

Now there is testimony from those who know as to the quality of our Canadian cattle for feeding purposes, and it is also testimony from those who are consumers of meat that they consider that the removal of the embargo would be in their own interest. Now I would just say, without expressing my own opinion with regard to conditions that now exist in the old country, that I consider it is rather unfair to Canada that Great Britain should retain this embargo against us. I am not going to complain on behalf of the Canadian farmer of the preference that has been given by our government to the manufacturers of Great Britain ; but I do claim that if there is any consideration at all to be given to any colony of the empire it certainly should be given to Canada. We see that our cattle and the cattle of the United States enter the ports of Great Britain on exactly the same terms, we have no advantage over the herds of the United States in this matter, their cattle as well as ours are placed under the same restrictions. Now I want to say to the people of Great Britain that I, as a Canadian British subject, think that this is unfair to us in Canada. They should consider our demand, a demand that we have been persistently making for many years. Our present Minister of Agriculture has done all in his power to remove this embargo, and is still anxious to do what he can in that direction, and I am sorry to say that hitherto he has met with little success. However, judging from information that I obtain from the other side, I think that times are now more encouraging, and that is the reason why I brought this matter up in the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. I think there is nothing to be gained by letting this matter drop, or by allowing the British people to forget that we consider they are doing an injustice to us; let us keep them in mind of it, and urge them to remove this embargo in our interest as well as in their own. There are one or two other articles here that I would like to read to the House to show the condition of public opinion on the other side of the Atlantic with regard to this question, and these articles are of a nature to encourage this parliament and government to continue their efforts for the removal of this embargo. I think the time is opportune, I think a change is coming over public opinion on the other side, and that there is a disposition on the part of some of their leading men to favour our contention and to consider this claim on the part of their premier colony. I find this in a Liverpool journal of a recent date :

The deputation which waited upon the president of the Board of Agriculture the other day to urge upon him the relaxation of the present rules so far as they related to Canadian store cattle, submitted an unanswerable case as regards the question of the healthiness of the beasts for which an exemption is claimed. The Canadian government and people have spent, and are spending, an enormous amount of money yearly in measures for the prevention of disease, and as a result of this attention the cattle of the Dominion are to-day amongst the finest and the soundest in the whole world.

A little further down I read :

All these considerations count for nothing, however, with a department which has convinced itself that as there must always exist a certain amount of what Mr. Fellows called——

There is something here that I will not read, I will pass over that, because it deals with politics in the old country, and I do not want to enter into that. I will read a little further down.

We were pleased to note that at the deputation to the Board of Agriculture Professor Boyce, of the Liverpool University, speaking from the point of view of veterinary medicine, gave it as his opinion that the restrictions might safely be removed if the government were to arrange for a system of inspection of animals at the port of arrival. Manifestly this is the proper and the straightforward thing to do, and even if the expense of carrying out such a policy were thrown on the importers it is scarcely likely that much objection would be raised. Certainly an absolute embargo for ever cannot be defended on any ground of reason or fairness.

That is the point I wished to bring particularly to the attention of the House.

namely, that it is now being conceded on the other side by influential journals such as this that there is no defence for the present embargo on any ground whatever, either in their own interest or in ours. Now I have this to say to members of parliament, to those who are farmers and those who are not, that I hope they will assist us in unanimously supporting this resolution. We expect some good will come from it. We know perfectly well that in this great country of ours the cattle industry is going to be one of our most important interests. There is no industry in the country to-day equal to it for the preservation of the fertility of our land in the older parts of the country, than the raising of cattle, either beef cattle or dairy cattle, especially beef cattle. This being the case, and looking to the future welfare of our farmers in the older parts of the Dominion, and even in the newer and rougher parts of northern Ontario and Quebec, I claim we are going to benefit our country very largely by pressing for the removal of this embargo. I think the time may soon come when it will be removed. However, I for one, as long as I remain a member of this parliament, will not be discouraged if we do not get it immediately, but I will continue to press our claims on the home government for the removal of this very unjust and unfair embargo.

Mr. R. BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). Mr. Speaker, on many occasions I have been asked by the cattlemen of Canada to introduce a similar resolution to that brought down from the Committee on Agriculture, but I have felt that it was rather a dangerous question to take up, because, if it were taken up, it would have to be dealt with on its merits, and if dealt with on its merits, I believed, that something might have to be said that would be unfavourable to gentlemen occupying high positions in the British government. It is a well-known fact that there is no disease in the cattle of this country, that there never was and that under the present arrangements, if continued, there never will be. The British Board of Agriculture, in 1892, simply goldbricked this country. They were playing a game with Canadian interests and they were using loaded dice in that game.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a pretty strong statement.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes, and I will prove it to the satisfaction of the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. Loaded dice!

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I say that the Canadian farmer, rancher and cattle exporter and the importer on the other side simply desire the liberty to dispose of their cattle as they think best. We have no cattle disease and we want the restrictions imposed upon that ground removed, or failing their removal, a frank acknowledgment on the part of the British government that the restrictions are solely and entirely for the purpose of protecting the home live cattle market, protecting the farmers of Great Britain, not against disease but against competition from this country. The British Board of Agriculture insist that it is the disease. I have no objection to them using that term, but I do demand that they will give the disease its proper name and call it protection and not pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Liberals of Great Britain are sailing under false colours there as they are here.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Under the existing law Canadian cattle are only allowed to land at one port in Scotland, Glasgow, and I think three in England. At these ports, within ten days of arrival, the cattle have to be slaughtered. As a result of these conditions the buyers are confined to a few butchers in the vicinity of the ports. I am giving a few of these facts at the beginning so that the House will be in possession of them. Prior to 1892 Canadian cattle were allowed to go into the interior. In 1892 one of the veterinary inspectors of the British Board of Agriculture claimed to have discovered pleuro-pneumonia in one of the animals that had been shipped to Glasgow. It is a strange thing that the disease should have been detected in one animal only which we disputed and where our veterinaries disputed. Out of the million and a half cattle that had been slaughtered in England and Scotland only one animal was even suspected to have this disease. I claim that the British Board of Agriculture have treated us very unfairly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that, perhaps he would tell us whether it was demonstrated that the suspicion was well founded, that even one animal was diseased?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No, sir, it was not. I will produce evidence, with the permission of the House, to prove that the animal landed in Glasgow was all right but that she got the disease after she landed there. It was an old cow that happened to be shipped over. This one animal contracted the disease after she landed in Scotland. That was the only case and that was the case that was used as ground for placing the embargo upon us.

Mr. SPROULE. There must have been some mistake in the history of the case, because it was stated that the disease was detected in an ox brought from Manitoba and taken over on the 'Monkseaton.' How do you turn it into a cow?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The ox taken over on the 'Monkseaton' is another case to which I will refer. Their own inspectors acknowledged the fact that they had made a mistake. I have the facts in connection with the animals sent over on the 'Monkseaton' here. But hhat I do feel is that the British Board of Agriculture know that we have no disease here, and that we have given them ample evidence of that fact. I would say in reply to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that even if two animals out of a million and a half were suspected of being diseased, that is no guarantee that there is disease in the cattle of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) to misunderstand me as contending that they were diseased because I think it was shown beyond any possibility of doubt that they were not cases of pleuro-pneumonia at all.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I claim that Canadian cattle shippers feel deeply the injustice that is being done. While views may differ as to the advantage to be derived from sending out of the country live and unfinished cattle to be fattened abroad, there is a unanimity of feeling that the embargo is virtually a declaration that disease prevails among Canadian cattle while there are none healthier in the world. This is the sting. It is an untruth on its very face and that untruth should be rectified at all costs. There are no politics in this question and all parties should unite in demanding the rights of the Canadian farmers.

Expert evidence from the best veterinary professors in the world proves our herds to be free from disease. I have before me the statements of the professors at McGill, of Prof. Smith of Toronto and of several professors on the other side of the Atlantic who certify that there was no such disease known in this country, and that this very animal was not afflicted when she arrived in Glasgow. I think I am safe in saying that the British Board of Agriculture, for the last fourteen years, have been and are at present perverting the facts by mean subterfuges and equivocal language for the purpose of continuing a system of protection, not against disease, but against competition in live stock from the Dominion of Canada. This has been going on since 1892. Efforts have been made by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to have the embargo removed but with no effect. A deaf ear has been turned to us on all occasions. I claim that their persistent ignoring of all evidence, their repudiating of all fair trade principles, their denials of justice to Canada, their dishonest and unpatriotic treatment of the Canadian cattle question prove them to be either wanting in statesmanship or false to the interests of the British empire, of which Canada is at least an important pillar, that they have proved themselves therefore to be unfit to hold the important position which they occupy in the British government, and that they should be overruled in their blind and unpatriotic course by the British people at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. BERGERON. In spite of our preference ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. In spite of our preference. I claim that they are continuing a system of protection not against disease, and I believe they are well aware of the fact. Now, Sir, there are many in Canada, including myself, who say let the embargo remain if a good sound reason can be given for it, but it might be well that I should first point out when and why the embargo was placed on Canadian cattle. In November, 1892, the British government issued an order requiring all Canadian cattle landed in the United Kingdom to be slaughtered within a limited time at the port of debarkation. Previous to this action Canadian cattle had been free to be moved from place to place in the United Kingdom, under those circumstances it was possible to hold them over from one market to another if prices were bad. There was also a considerable trade done in stockers, or what is known in England as half-fattened animals, which Scotch and English farmers bought, fed and finished. The ground of the British government's action was the alleged discovery of a case of pleuro-pneumonia in an animal from Canada that had been shipped to Scotland, and in connection with this case, after a thorough investigation having been made it was proved beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the animal had contracted the disease in Scotland after leaving the ship. Efforts have been made on many occasions since to secure the withdrawal of the scheduling order on the ground that pleuro-pneumonia was a disease unknown in Canada. It was also shown to Mr. Gardiner, the then president of the British Board of Agriculture, that the animal had contracted the disease after landing in Scotland.

It is a disputed question in this country as to whether it is better for this country to ship unfinished or to feed them here and send them over in a finished condition. There are differences of opinion about that. It may be that Canada's direct financial interests suffer little from the embargo, but this does not detract from the truth of the fact that the embargo is unjust, that it is suspiciously like a subterfuge ; if it does not diminish Canada's credit it certainly injures her reputation.

Great Britain claims that we have disease amongst our herds. Our reply to that is, that if it is a disease it should be given its proper name, namely, 'protection,' and not 'pleuro-pneumonia.' Canadians are the last people in the world to object to any government availing itself of any fiscal system that to it seems good, they are not in the habit of intruding their ideas into other countries' affairs. If Great Britain thinks protection in cattle is the proper thing, we are pleased to say that it is her business, but when a patent piece of protective legislation is devised, and Canadian products are decried in order to obscure the fact that the protection exists, a wrong is done us, which is quite in contravention of the boasted system of British fair-play that we have read and heard so much about in the past. The British government are within their rights in stifling competition, but they are not within their rights when they accuse us, the Canadian agriculturists, of a desire to sell diseased cattle to the British people.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it not a fact that the president of the Board of Agriculture in the old country has already stated publicly, and I think in a communication to the Minister of Agriculture that they did not continue the embargo because of a belief that there is any disease amongst Canadian cattle. That was stated in the Agricultural Committee by the minister this year.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think possibly the Minister of Agriculture will remember that the president of the Board of Agriculture did not make it quite clear that I had several letters from him which I would read to the House if the weather were not so hot. He claimed that he believed that we had got rid of disease and I have asked him: If we have no longer any disease in Canada why not remove the embargo? His reply was that he felt they could not very well remove the embargo at the present moment without doing the same for the United States, that it would be giving a preference to Canada that they could not give to the United States. The mother country, as my good friend knows, occasionally does a little flirting with Uncle Sam, and this is one of these occasions. On many occasions, as my hon. friend knows as well as I do, there is considerable flirtation going on and Canada provides the band. We pay the piper and the music comes high. I claim that it is a wrong done to this country quite in contravention of that boasted system of British fair-play.

There are many in Canada, including myself, who say if they wish to establish protection in England 'long may it remain if only a valid reason is given for it. Yet, why should the mother country stigmatize our cattle as unhealthy, and perpetuate what they know was an error from the beginning?

Mr. BERGERON. Are there any diseased cattle in the United States?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. There were at the time, but there are none in the western states now. There were some in the eastern states last year, but that was the foot and mouth disease, a different matter altogether.

Mr. BERGERON. I ask this because by our quarantine arrangements American cattle could come into this country unimpeded, and as the British government could not distinguish the American from the Canadian cattle that might have been the reason for the embargo.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. At that time there were no American cattle coming through Canada. Fortunately, such are the attractions of the country and the great possibilities of its development, that we have not suffered so much in our immigration as we might have done by the unjust aspersion thrown on the healthfulness of our herds and the safety of stock raising in a country where no cattle plague exists or can be introduced, or exist if the same vigilance is exercised in administrating the quarantine in the future as has been exercised in past years, as no doubt will be the case. Surely the time has come when we may expect, as a matter of simple justice that this embargo will be removed, and our live stock allowed entry to any market in the British empire—wherever the Union Jack flies—and all doubts be removed from the minds of agriculturists who would seek homes in Canada if they were assured that no ruinous cattle disease exists or can exist in the vast country, which in time, and a short time too, will not only supply grain, but animal food, and animal products and gold sufficient for a large portion of the inhabitants of the world.

Is there anything unfair in what we ask? The British government says: You have disease. I shall show you how this came about. We have proved to them that we have no disease, and yet our cattle are shut out. While that little flirtation is going with the United States they do not want to allow our cattle to come in again because they are afraid of giving some slight offence to our neighbours to the south. I think that I know old John Bull probably as well as any other member in this House. I have been doing business with him for over thirty years, and I would venture to say that there is not a particle of sentiment in any of his dealings. John Bull would buy from a Hottentot just as readily as from loyal Canada. With him, it is a well laid down principle that 'business is business,' this principle underlies all his transactions and always prevails.

I think it would be well, if the House will permit me to give a short history—and it must necessarily be very short—of what led up to the embargo, and to show the effect it has had on this country. The rapid development of the export live stock trade from the United States and Canada to Britain in the early seventies, naturally gave rise to considerable alarm among the live stock breeders, especially on some sections of England and Ireland, lest the trans-Atlantic competitors should render home production unprofitable, but more especially did the British farmer fear as well he might the introduction of contagious diseases, in which he had very bitter experiences: thus, in England rinder pest (cattle plague) was introduced in June, 1865—and by March, 1866, nearly 200,000 cattle had perished. It was carried thence to Holland and within six months 115,000 cattle were killed. Contagious pleuro-pneumonia from 1854 to 1860 killed over a million of cattle in the United Kingdom, worth at least $60,000,000. Foot and mouth disease in 1872 affected over 200,000 cattle causing a loss of over $3,000,000. Consequently it was to be expected that the time would come when an effort would be made to at least partially exclude these new and threatening competitors, and it soon became apparent that although on account of the existence of disease in the United States, an embargo was placed in 1879 on United States cattle, while Canadian cattle were free to enter British ports, and any market in Britain, it would require but a flimsy excuse to include the cattle of the Dominion in the schedule. This is illustrated by the following list of cases of detention of Canadian cattle from 1882 to 1892. I want to say right here that one of the most systematic courses of persecution was carried out on behalf of the British Board of Agriculture against the Canadian farmers which could possibly be imagined. they would seize our ships. Probably three or four large steamers a week loaded with cattle would land at British ports.

Some veterinarians would be sent from London to see if there was disease in our cattle. He would see the whole cargo. We were not allowed to sell them. He would have three or four slaughtered and their lungs sent to London for inspection, and in a day or two word would be sent back that there was no disease found in the cattle and they would be cleared. I maintain that the action of the British government in this matter is unfriendly, to say the least. Imagine a great and powerful nation like Great Britain allowing its Board of Agriculture to stoop to a subterfuge of that kind, in order to prevent competition from Canada. I think, Sir, that the time has arrived when the Canadian Government should say very plainly to Great Britain, respectfully and politely, but firmly, that Canada is no longer a nation in short clothes, that we have attained our majority, and that we demand our rights.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Better send a man-of-war over and take them.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes. In August, 1883, three cargoes of cattle from Quebec on board the ss. 'Oregon', 'Nepigon' and 'Anger Head' were stopped at Liverpool by the privy council inspector, as being infected—it was stated in the first place, with splenic fever, and subsequently it was reported that Texan fever was the disease from which they were suffering. However, after a careful examination of several animals that were slaughtered, they were pronounced free from disease. I have hundreds of these cases, but I want to cite just a few to show the determination of the British government or of its Board of Agriculture to exclude Canadian cattle at all costs. At Bristol, in August, 1883, it was reported that foot and mouth disease had been discovered among Canadian animals at that port. Inquiries, however, into the matter elicited the fact that the animals had been passed at Liverpool as being in good order, and that they had been deposited, on their arrival in Bristol, in a yard in which some cattle from Ireland had previously been placed; and it was in this way that the Canadian cattle caught the infection. But it was in 1884 that we met with the greatest fright that the cattle trade of this country had ever experienced. On the 22nd of February, 1884, the steamship 'Ontario' arrived at Liverpool from Portland, Maine, with a cargo of cattle and sheep, some of which were Canadian. They were found to be affected with foot and mouth disease, and immediately slaughtered. That was the only case we could ever find of Canadian cattle affected with disease being landed on the other side. We knew that some mistake had been made or that some trick had been played, and we immediately called a meeting of the cattle men, which was held at Toronto, and over which the late Alderman Frankland presided. We decided to send men to Portland to endeavour to find out whether or not this was the case. Before we did so, the government here cabled to the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, then the Canadian High Commissioner in England, to have the matter investigated, because we felt sure that there was no such disease in this country. I wish to give Sir Charles Tupper credit for what he did on that occasion. He took off his coat and rolled up his sleeves, and went to work with a will. On the following day, however, we received a cablegram from Sir Charles Tupper stating that the cattle had landed there with foot and mouth disease. We immediately started an investigation to find out how that disease had been contracted. We knew that when the cattle left here, they were free from disease, and we traced the disease to the fact that the steamer 'Ontario,' on her previous voyage to this country, had brought from England to Portland some forty head of prize cattle for breeding purposes. These cattle were found during the period of quarantine detention at Portland to be affected with foot and mouth disease; but in the meantime the Ontario had started on her return trip to Liverpool with the cargo of cattle and sheep above referred to, and they on the voyage contracted the disease from the infected state of the vessel, as the steamer had not been properly fumigated. The moment Sir Charles Tupper brought that fact to the attention of the British Board of Agriculture, these cattle were released, and the evil day was put off again. Canadian cattle were again detained in June, 1884. On the 16th of June in that year, the steamship 'Mississippi' arrived at Liverpool with a cargo of Canadian cattle. It appears that twenty-four beasts died on the voyage, and that the consignees slaughtered four of the remainder on arrival, as they showed signs of fatigue. The Privy Council inspector however, regarded the four animals as free from disease. On the 13th of November, 1890, the 'Linda' arrived at Newcastle with a cargo of Canadian cattle which upon landing were detained by the Privy Council inspector on account of suspicious symptoms shown by some of them. The cattle were released on the following day. It appears that the 'Linda' had an exceptionally rough passage, and that nearly 400 of the animals had been lost on the voyage. The rest of the cattle arrived in very bad condition. Every member of this House who knows anything about the cattle business will realize the expense and inconvenience resulting from the detention of several hundreds of cattle in the yards until these gentlemen had time to inspect them. Again, in December, 1890, the 'Corean' discharged a cargo of Canadian cattle, which were detained by the Privy Council inspector on account of suspicious symptoms presented by a dairy cow. The cow was slaughtered and the lungs were sent to London on the same day. They were found to be affected with tuberculosis, and the cattle were released on the 7th of December. On the 24th of May, 1891, the 'Lake Huron' discharged a cargo of Canadian cattle which were detained by the Privy Council inspector on account of the condition of one of the animals. This was slaughtered, and the lungs were sent to London. Upon examination they were found to be free from pleuro-pneumonia. It appears that the animal in question had been suffering from an old attack of tuberculosis which had become incysted, that it had contracted bronchial catarrh and had also developed fever. The evil day was averted, largely through the activity of the High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, and the veterinary officers of the Dominion, the chief inspector being in constant correspondence with the officials of the Department of Agriculture at London, between whom mutual confidence was established. However, the reported discovery by a local inspector at Dundee, of a suspicious case of contagious pleuro-pneumonia in a cow which was one of a cargo of cattle landed at Dundee on the 29th of September, 1892, on the ss. 'Monkseaton,' and sold on October 6th, along with another cargo of 685, also from Montreal on the ss. 'Huron', which landed on the 5th. The animal was ordered to be killed and the lungs sent to London, where they were examined by Professor Brown, A. Cope and the late Mr. Duguid, who pronounced it to be affected by contagious pleuro-pneumonia. Notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the High Commissioner at London, and the officials in Canada, the Animals' Order of 1892, by the Board of Agriculture was passed, and went into force on the 21st of November, 1892. The government of the day in Canada at once ordered a most thorough search and investigation to be made to determine if contagious pleuro-pneumonia existed in Canada. Another meeting of the cattle men was held in Toronto and was attended by all the cattle men in the country that we could reach. It was presided over by ex-Aldermen Frankland, who was a large exporter of cattle. The meeting decided to assist the government in investigating whether there was any disease in the country, and the following circular was sent out to all the veterinary surgeons in the Dominion of Canada:

In consequence of the action of the Veterinary Department of the Imperial Privy Council in ordering the slaughter of the cargoes of cattle on ss. 'Monkseaton' and ss. 'Hurona' on suspicion of pleuro-pneumonia, and in compliance with your instructions of 25th and 28th October, I have had a most searching and thorough investigation instituted. I have now received the reports from all the veterinary surgeons employed to make a farm to farm visit of inspection in all the districts whence the cattle forming the cargoes of these steamers came, extending from Brandon in Manitoba to Stanstead in the eastern townships of Quebec.

I have here a certificate furnished by Professor McEachren at that time to the government, which speaks for itself:

I have made a thorough examination of all the cattle in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean, and have not been able to discover a single case of pleuro-pneumonia that has ever existed in Canada nor does it exist at the present time among Canadian cattle. The action of the placing of an embargo on Canadian cattle by British government is certainly not justified on the grounds of disease, and it ought, in justice to this country be removed immediately.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

(Sgd.) D. McEACHREN.

I think it is established beyond doubt that there is no such disease in this country. The whole country was surprised to hear that even a suspicion of disease should exist, and all were equally determined to verify the allegation that there was any disease. With this object in view one of the largest and most representative meetings of cattle dealers and exporters ever held in Canada was convened at the Bull's Head Hotel, Toronto, immediately after the arrival of Dr. McEachren in that city, and at that meeting the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, that, in our opinion, no contagious pleuro-pneumonia exists in Canada, and that we present at this meeting do undertake to assist the government officials in every way in our power to make the investigation now proceeding effective.

G. F. FRANKLAND,
Chairman.

The following is a copy of a circular letter of instructions sent to each inspector :

Owing to a cow which was landed in Scotland from ss. 'Monkseaton' being suspected of pleuro-pneumonia, it is necessary to trace the animal to the farm from whence she came. From information received, it would appear that some of the cattle came from your district.

That was sent to our veterinary inspectors all over, and to prove my good faith I shall give a few of the names. Among others they were sent to Mr. McClure, veterinary inspector at Woodstock, Prof. Andrew Smith, the veterinary inspector for the province of Ontario, Prof. Couture, of Quebec, Messrs. Baker & McEachren, of Montreal, W. Gowan, V.S., of Galt, Ont., J. H. Wilson, V.S., of London, Ont., D. H. McFadden, V.S. of Emerson, Man. There are many others whose names I shall not take up the time of the House by reading, and to show the good faith of the cattlemen, I might add that they assisted these veterinary surgeons in every way possible in their effort to ascertain whether there was ever any disease in this country or not. After the most thorough investigation possible and inquiries covering the entire Dominion of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, no cattle diseases could be traced in this country except on one occasion, and that was a case over which the House will admit we had no control. On one occasion there was a shipment brought from Scotland to the quarantine station at Quebec, in 1886. This was the only time the disease was ever traced as having got into Canada, and I will show that it never got beyond the limits of the quarantine station at Quebec. It was promptly stamped out within the limits of the quarantine inclosure, not a trace of it being allowed to pass these limits, every hoof even suspected of possible contact being slaughtered and cremated. Not only did we have the cattle slaughtered and cremated, but the buildings were destroyed, the whole wood work burnt, and new buildings put up. The efficiency of the quarantine by which imported animals are allowed to enter Canada further warrants me in asserting that pleuro-pneumonia could not and has not entered Canada through them except on that one occasion. We have at St. John, N.B., Halifax, N.S. and Point Lévis, Que., quarantine stations, which secure the most perfect isolation from native stock, and where imported animals are detained 90 days, under the close daily observation of the local veterinary inspector. At Point Edward, near Sarnia, in Ontario, and Emerson, Man., similar quarantines are maintained and the regulations most rigidly carried out. Canada is in fact entirely free from that destructive plague, and there is therefore no reason why any embargo should be put by the Canadian authorities or Canadian cattle. Why that embargo is maintained is no doubt due to political reasons and a desire to protect English cattle.

If any argument were required to prove that no good grounds for placing or maintaining this unjust embargo on the healthiest cattle in the world, it is to be found in the fact that during the past few years between two and three million cattle have been exported from Canada to Great Britain and the United States without one single case of contagious pleuro-pneumonia having been established. Canada is to-day, as she always has been, entirely free from this destructive plague, and the British Board of Agriculture knows that well, yet for reasons that we know to be protection, the embargo is allowed to remain. Pleuro-pneumonia is a disease unknown in Canada. It has never existed, and does not exist at the present time.

There may be, and probably is, some undisclosed political reason influencing the British government in maintaining this purely protectional restriction against the exportation of Canadian cattle, otherwise it is difficult to understand it. But, let the political influence be what it may, it is difficult for Canadians to imagine any political consideration which could influence the imperial parliament to refuse a direct request of loyal Canada to abolish restrictions which are hurtful to our financial interests and offensive to our imperial sentiments. They appear to forget that Canada is no foreign country; we claim to be and we are, an integral part of the British empire, loyal to the core, with whole-hearted sympathy, with British aspirations. But, is it not like destroying our birthright, to steal our good name and to brand us as having within our borders cattle that are not fit to go to Great Britain or any other country ?

I would like to add just a few words to show the importance of this trade to this country before I take my seat. Not long ago our men were in South Africa valiantly fighting to maintain the supremacy of Britain in that country. And I have never heard a single case where these men did not receive the greatest possible praise. Well, Sir, at the very time when our boys were fighting for the British flag and the maintenance of British power in South Africa, the British War Office called for tenders for a supply of beef, and a clause was inserted in the specifications that would have excluded Canadian beef from competition. And it was only after our Minister of Agriculture had put his foot down—and, I understand, put it down pretty firmly—that that condition was removed from these specifications.

Now, let me give a few figures—only a few—to show the importance of this trade. I have already spoken of 1892 as the stocker year. That was the year when the embargo was put on. In that year, 1892, we shipped 99,235 head of cattle to Great Britain. In 1893, the number fell to 83,000. I need not quote the figures for the several years; but I may state, that, notwithstanding all drawbacks we exported to Great Britain in 1903 no fewer than 147,201 head of cattle. And I claim that, if there was no embargo against Canadian cattle, the number would have run up to two or three hundred thousand. Is it not clear that the time has arrived when we should say to Great Britain, as I have already suggested—respectfully, politely, if you will, but very firmly—that this stigma of disease must be removed and our cattle allowed to go into any country, over which the British flag flies ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL (South Oxford). The importance of this question is so great, that, even at this stage of the session, we may well afford time for the discussion of it. Although efforts have been put forth in this House, and although the press of Canada has directed its attention to this question, still up to the present time, we have failed to secure the object we have in view, in the removal of the embargo on our cattle. Everything combines to prove that this is an opportune time to renew our efforts, and an opportune time to continue this discussion. We believe that the merits of our case are such that when that case is presented to the British people they will be more disposed to consider the subject favourably. We are glad to know that British officials practically recognize that our cattle are free from pleuro-pneumonia. For some years they took the position, absolutely, positively, that our cattle were affected with this disease. We claim that now that they have practically recognized that that is not the case, they should, as has been suggested in this House, publish to the world their change of opinion. And we believe that if the matter is pressed by this House and properly presented to the British people they will recognize the justice of our contention, and, we hope, will remove the embargo which is so prejudicial to the trade of Canada. I have said that this is an opportune time for this discussion. You have only to read the speeches that have been delivered recently by the men who have been meeting our manufacturers on their visit to various places in Great Britain. Let me call your attention to a few words uttered by Hon. T. S. Brassey on a recent occasion :

> The trend of the policy of Great Britain was towards the reform of the tariff in the interest of her own people, and then to give a substantial preference to the colonies, sufficient to divert the stream of emigration from the United States and Argentine.

I might refer to other utterances of a similar nature. We know that the agitation in Great Britain in regard to the tariff is very largely due to the desire to encourage trade between the different parts of the British empire; and we also know that the preferential tariff inaugurated by this government has done a great deal to draw the attention of the British consumers, as well as the British public generally, to the trade of the colonies. And we believe, that seeing what has been already done by the Dominion government in order to foster trade between the colonies and Great Britain, they will be ready to recognize our claim on this subject of the cattle embargo. We contend that their position is strangely illogical in dealing with the embargo and thus hampering our export of the cattle trade. They have recognized that our cattle are practically—in fact I may say entirely—free of pleuro-pneumonia. We claim, therefore, that they should not hesitate to remove this embargo. We know, of course, that Englishmen are intensely conservative. They possibly think that the removal of the embargo might have an injurious effect upon their trade and so, through the operation of public opinion, injure the political party that was responsible for the change. But we do not believe that the removal of the embargo would very seriously affect the price received by British producers of beef. On the other hand, the privilege of allowing our cattle to be held a reasonable time after they arrive at English ports, instead of being compelled to be slaughtered within ten days, would result in our beef being placed upon the market in much better condition, and so would enable it to command a better price without seriously affecting the price that would be obtained by the English breeders and growers. Further, we believe, as was intimated by one of the hon. gentlemen who preceded me, that the privilege of allowing our cattle to be held after their arrival in Great Britain until they are more fully ripened would be a great advantage to our producers and would improve the quality and the reputation of our beef.

The importance of this industry to Canada has already been referred to. We are exporting now to the British market something over $10,000,000 worth of cattle annually. In 1903 the number exported, as has been stated, was 147,000 head. Last year the shipments were a trifle more, probably amounting to 150,000 head. We believe that with free entry into the British markets this trade would be developed immensely. We know that many farmers have not facilities for improving their cattle for the English markets, and if the embargo were removed their cattle would be more readily purchased in England for feeding purposes; both English and Scotch farmers would be glad to have our cattle and continue to feed them for a time until they were made fit for the market. I hope our government will succeed in getting this embargo removed. I think if this matter were pressed strongly on the attention of the English government they would be induced to yield to our request. Especially should we insist upon the fact that our cattle are free from disease, and try to get that fact more fully recognized by the English political leaders and the English press generally. We consider that it is unfair to Canada to exclude our cattle on the ground that they are affected by disease, when, as a matter of fact, they are not diseased, and when the embargo is kept up purely for the protection of the English producer.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The House is indebted to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. P. H. McKenzie) for bringing up this question, and to the hon. member for St. Lawrence division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), for the succinct history of the question which he has given to the House. I remember when these discussions began to take place in this House. The first was with reference to the action of Sir Charles Tupper, when he succeeded in disabusing the minds of the English people of the error that diseased cattle were being imported into Great Britain from Canada, under which error the English government had put the embargo on. At that time Sir Charles Tupper was High Commissioner for Canada, and he went down into the pens where the cattle were slaughtered, took off his coat and donned a butcher's overalls, and, in company with a veterinary surgeon, he made a thorough examination of our cattle; and, being a medical man himself, he was well able to do so. To that extent did he succeed in convincing the British people that there was no justification for the embargo, that it was removed. When it was claimed on behalf of the Conservative government in Canada that some credit was due them in this regard, I remember the discussion which took place in this House and when the Liberal members refused to give the government any credit. Some of the Reform members declared that it was of no use to the Canadian farmer to get this embargo removed, but it would rather be an injury to him ; that it would be better if he did not have the privilege, because he would then finish his beef in Canada and get a better profit from it. I think I can name some of the gentlemen who made that argument. Now, in 1892, owing to the fact that two of our cattle, as already mentioned, were taken into Great Britain and supposed to be diseased, the embargo was again put on by the British Board of Agriculture, and a further attempt was made in Canada to have it removed. I am glad the hon. member for St. Lawrence division, Montreal, has related to the House step by step what was done in this connection. I recognize that no one in Canada is entitled to speak with greater authority than that hon. gentleman, because he has always been interested in this question, and no one is better able to declare, as he has done, that everything in reason was done that could be done to convince the British people that there was no pleuro-pneumonia among the cattle imported from Canada. We remember the various steps that were taken by the Conservative government, through its officials, with Dr. McEachren at the head of them, to assure the British people that our cattle were healthy. Various veterinary surgeons were employed to go all over the country and examine the herds and send in their reports, and upon the strength of these reports we gave a certificate of health to the cattle going over. That was done for the purpose of convincing the British Board of Agriculture that we were being unjustly dealt with. I remember the long discussions that took place in this House in 1892 with regard to that. We had allegations made by the Liberal members that the embargo was placed upon Canadian cattle owing to the laxity of the quarantine regulations that were carried out by this government. American cattle were being brought to Canada under special regulations that were being carried out so as to ensure the freedom of Canadian cattle from disease.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. They were not brought to Canada, but were taken through Canada in sealed cars, I think, from Sarnia.

Mr. SPROULE. American cattle were passing through Canada, but the regulations provided that they should be examined at the border, at Sarnia. Then they were put in cars which were sealed up, and were accompanied through the country by an agent to see that they were not allowed to be disembarked while they were on Canadian soil.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were not those same cars frequently brought back into Canada and used for carrying Canadian cattle ?

Mr. SPROULE. They were cleaned out and disinfected by fumigation and otherwise. The contention from the government side was that the embargo was not due to any relaxation of the quarantine regulations or to the imperfect examination of those cattle ; that the regulations had been carried out to the letter as previously insisted upon by the British Board of Agriculture. The opponents of the government, however, contended that the British people knew that our regulations were imperfect, and for that reason did not remove the embargo. Our opponents promised that if there was a change of government, and if men took hold of it who had business habits and business experience, there would be little difficulty in getting that embargo removed. In 1896, when we went to the country, the people were told how much the Canadian farmer was losing by this embargo. They said the present government could not get it removed because they had themselves been instrumental in bringing it about, and they contended that if the Reformers were elected there would be no difficulty whatever in getting it removed. No doubt the present Minister of Agriculture joined in that campaign, and told the farmers how easy it was to accomplish this object if they only had business men at the head of the government. Well, the country made a change, and as soon as the new government came in they tried to get the embargo removed. They have been in power nine years, and have not made any great headway. They claim that everything has now been done that it is possible to do; nevertheless, the embargo on Canadian cattle still remains.

Well now at least he ought to admit that he is not able to accomplish any more than the Conservative government before him notwithstanding all the ability which he has represented to the Canadian people he possesses. These were the contentions that were put up. To-day we are passing this resolution. It is a report from the Committee on Agriculture. I agree with the report, if it accomplishes any good, but I am afraid it will not accomplish what we desire. But if it does accomplish that desire, I shall be very much gratified and I agree with my hon. friend that we cannot have it brought to the attention of the English people an hour too soon. But, there is another phase of the matter that is rather interesting and amusing to me. When the question was discussed by the Committee on Agriculture, quite a while ago, a delay was asked until we could have another phase of the question brought to the attention of the committee, but it was declared that it could not be kept waiting an hour or a day because it was important to have it reported to the House at once and to have the report concurred in by the House and sent across to the old country immediately. However, it was only presented to the House on the 26th of June and now on the 7th July we are moving for the adoption of the report. There does not appear to be such urgent need to hurry it up now notwithstanding the fact that it was represented to us in committee that it would be unwise to retain it a day or two longer. There was, therefore, not such urgent need as would justify the committee in pushing it through in such haste. The parties who have this matter in charge declared that the contentions which were put up were so valuable that they must take action in regard to them immediately, but they have not shown by their conduct that they really think them so valuable as they claimed them to be. What does the report say? It declares that this is a great injustice to Canada. I agree with that. This embargo, we believe, has been imposed under false pretenses. They pretend that there is danger of importing disease from Canada whereas that disease has never existed in Canada and it could not be imported from this country. It is an injustice to us because it is practically telling the whole world not to take cattle from Canada for breeding purposes because there is danger of importing disease. The British Board of Agriculture says: We will not allow cattle from Canada landed in Great Britain to remain for more than ten days because within that time they must be slaughtered at the port of entry. We think that is an injustice to the Canadian people. We have endeavoured to ascertain the reason for keeping on this embargo. We believe that this is entirely a protective measure in the interest of the British farmer and nothing more, and that the English people, who are not protectionists in principle, are afraid to admit that it is a measure of protection. Therefore, we are unjustly dealt with, it is done under false pretenses and it is a great injustice to Canada. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) said that there is no element of sentiment in John Bull's nature and that with him business is business from start to finish. Well, I think he is pretty correct in that. If the English people have an object in view they endeavour to carry it out. However, I want also in connection with that to refer for a moment to the trip of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to England in connection with this question. He went over there to look after the interests of the farmers of Canada and when he was pressing the suit of Canada he might have said that in view of the preference we have given to England we were entitled to a preference in the market of the motherland. But, what did the hon. Minister of Agriculture say? What he said was published in the papers and marked copies were sent over to Canada. I know that because I got one. He declared that we wanted nothing at all from England, that what we had given her we had given of our own free will, voluntarily and that we asked nothing in return. That is not business. My principle is, like John Bull's, if you give anything to any one you ought to get something in return. I think it was the duty of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to show what Canada has done and what Canada is doing for the British people, and in view of this consideration to ask that some concessions be made in favour of Canada. I regard that as a very proper and legitimate argument to present to the British people, and I do not think our Minister of Agriculture or our Finance Minster exemplified the highest type of statesmanship or business when they went over to England and said: What we have given we have given freely of our own motion and we do not ask anything in return. If I allow neighbours to cross my farm by a special route that makes it easy and convenient for them when I will not grant that privilege to the general public, if I have done something for my neighbours that I have not done for the general public and if I ask them to reciprocate that kindness by doing something, for me I would expect them to do it. I would expect some return from those parties to whom I had given this concession. I apply the same reasoning to John Bull because business is business with me. That is one of the proper and legitimate arguments that I should have plied him with to justify our request that the embargo be rescinded. I think the people of Canada will agree with me in that at the present time. I do not desire to say much more in regard to the present matter. But there was another proposition made at the committee and that was that the present hon. Minister of Agriculture with the Ministers of Agriculture of the various provincial governments be sent home as a delegation to wait on the imperial government and endeavour to get them to remove the embargo. Well, there may be some merit in that. I am rather inclined to think there would be and I think that it is worth while trying although I do not know that it would accomplish very much if we did not ply them with every argument that we have a right to ply them with. We want them to do something for every item that we have done for them more than we have done for the general public and the rest of the world. But, I think we ought to go farther. We ought to have some direct alliance with the Scottish farmers, and with a few of the English farmers who desire to get our cattle and finish them in their own country and also with the consumers there. There is a profit in it for them. It may be that they might co-operate with us for selfish purposes, but if we succeed in making the impression so strong upon the British government and the British people that they will remove the embargo that is all we want whether we succeed by virtue of their assistance or do it alone. We might also say to the English people. Your beef would be cheaper if our cattle were allowed to go over there and were given the freedom of your country. I do not think it would carry much weight with them because they might say: We ought to know better than you what to do in that regard. However, it would not be improper to say that. But, I think we ought to go strongly on this that there is an advertisement given to every nation in the world not to take cattle from Canada because there is danger of importing disease from there. Canada is Great Britain's first colony; surely she ought to do that justice to her own colony that she would at least remove that false impression that has been created in the eyes of the world. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence Division, Montreal, said this afternoon that there was no sentiment in the British people, and that at the very time they were sending beef to feed the army in South Africa where our own Canadians were fighting the battles of the empire they had a regulation in force prohibiting Canadian beef from being used. I heard it said in the House, but strange to say the hon. Minister of Agriculture knew nothing about it until a man from the Northwest brought it to his attention. I am just giving this as an evidence that with all the ability for which I give him credit, there is a possibility of him neglecting some things that would be of value to the Canadian people and especially to the Canadian farmers. I am willing to give him credit for every reasonable effort that he makes, and I do not wish to detract from whatever he is doing because he is making an effort to help the Canadian farmers in many lines, but while saying that I must say that the Conservatives have been very unjustly criticised regarding this very same question in the past. Very severe criticism was meted out to them for what they did, and hon. gentlemen opposite called upon the people to put in their places men of greater business ability who would accomplish a great deal more. But, the minds of the people must be disabused to-day of the impression that was then sought to be created, because these good business men have been trying and they have not been able to accomplish what they declared they could accomplish. We are still working on this vexed question and hope for success in the future, and if we can do anything to promote that success, I am sure it will not be amiss for this House to make an effort.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I ought perhaps to say a few words on this question before the motion is put, and, as I hope, carried unanimously by this House. I am glad that in this debate so far, practically no difference of opinion has been expressed. The hon. member for East Grey has been rather disposed to drag a little political feeling into it but I am sure that will fall by the way and not be noticed; I do not propose to notice it myself. This is not a party question in any shape or way.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. FISHER. It is a question on which the people of Canada I think are practically a unit, and the expression of the opinion of this House, now that the Senate has expressed its opinion a short time ago, may serve some good purpose. I have not myself been disposed to open this question and keep harping upon it. The government have made representations to the government of the motherland so that there could be no uncertainty in the minds of those in authority there as to the opinion and as to the feeling of the people of Canada. There have, however, lately been one or two occurrences in Great Britain which would lead us to believe that there was some uncertainty, and therefore I think that this is an opportune time for the removal of that uncertainty finally and absolutely. Not long ago the Minister of Agriculture in England gave expression to some words which indicated that he thought the people of Canada were on the whole satisfied with the existence of the embargo. I have before me his words and this part of his utterances is as follows :

He accepted his colleague's statement——

That was a statement contained in a despatch which I had the honour of recommending to council and which was sent forward through usual channels to the imperial government.

He accepted his colleague's statement that Canadians were not satisfied and would like the Act repealed, but this could not be the unanimous opinion in Canada for the Department of Agriculture of the Northwest Territories declared in 1902 that the prohibition of the admission of Canadian live cattle into England might prove to have been a blessing in disguise in developing feeding and the dead meat trade of Canada.

I looked up the reference in the report of the Department of Agriculture of the Northwest Territories and I found a paragraph in the report of 1902, page 55-56 which reads as follows :

Of course, opinions differ as to whether or not the embargo is a blessing in disguise. Some very excellent authorities state that the final effect of the embargo will be to force the Canadian farmer into grain finishing all cattle before export, and that it will also have a tendency to hasten the development of the dead meat trade. If either of these predictions is realized, and there seems to be every reason why they should be brought about, we may well characterize the action of the British authorities in this matter as a 'blessing in disguise.'

That utterance might perhaps justify the statement of the Minister of Agriculture the right hon. Lord Onslow, at Youbil, on February 8, 1905. Lord Onslow has since ceased to be Minister of Agriculture, and has been succeeded by the right hon. Aylwin Fellowes.

I venture to think that statement in the report of the Agriculture Department of the Northwest Territories would not meet with general acceptance even in the Northwest Territories, and still less in other parts of Canada. I venture to think that while some people may desire to develop the dead meat trade, a very laudable desire, while some people may consider that it is better for us in Canada to grain-finish our cattle and send them to England fully ready for slaughter—also a very good opinion and one in which I share—still that does not prevent us from seeing that the embargo is a detriment to the Canadian cattle trade and to the producers of cattle in Canada. It is true, I believe at any rate, that we ought to develop a dead meat trade with England. It is true, I believe, that it is in the interests of the Canadian farmers that cattle sent to England should be finished to the highest state of perfection before they are sent, but even so, as far as the live trade in cattle is concerned, the embargo requirement that our cattle should be slaughtered at the port of landing and within ten days, is and always will be, a detriment to our live cattle trade. Whether the cattle arrive in perfect condition or not, the fact that they require to be slaughtered at the port of entry limits them to those particular local markets. If the animal arrives in Liverpool, it must be slaughtered there, it cannot be sent to Leeds, Birmingham, Bradford or any other market. That limits our market to the ports of landing. In the second place it has to be slaughtered within ten days. That limits our owners to ten days' choice as to the date of slaughter and as to the conditions of the market. In addition to that frequently our animals arrive in England after stormy voyages in a condition in which they are not fit for immediate slaughter and they ought to be either put at pasture or fed for more than eight days before they are fit for slaughter if they are to obtain the best price. Under these circumstances and from these points I think that whether we develop a dead meat trade or a live meat trade, the embargo is a detriment to our trade and a financial injury to the people of Canada.

Certain statements have been made in regard to the course of this unfortunate affair. I must compliment the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) who has given us a very concise and succinct history of the occurrences. My hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. P. H. McKenzie) who proposed this motion also gave us a good deal of valuable information. I am going to confine myself therefore entirely to the present condition of affairs and say a few words simply on these points. In the first place I regret to say that one imperial Minister of Agriculture after another, first the Right Hon. Mr. Hanbury, second the Right Hon. Lord Onslow, and third the Right Hon. Aylwin Fellowes, have each and all of them declared most emphatically that as long as they and their government remain in power the embargo shall not be removed. Far be it from me for a moment to enter into political controversy or political struggles in England. I think we in Canada would resent it if the British people were to express opinions upon our political questions here for the purpose of influencing our elections. I therefore feel that I must speak with the greatest reserve and care in this matter because at the present time, with the political struggles that are going on in England, this question is undoubtedly a bone of contention in the political arena. What I say therefore I wish to have it fairly understood is not being said in any party way or sense as regards the political struggle in England to-day. It applies not to the present government, not to any future government but to the action of the people there. I am not going to attribute motives as to the reasons why the embargo is retained. We have the statement of the official head of the Department of Agriculture in England that Canadian cattle are not diseased, that it is not at the present time for the purpose of protecting English herds from the introduction of disease existing in Canada that the embargo is maintained. Mr. Aylwin Fellowes, I think it was in a late discussion of this in England said that he might bring it all down to the one word 'risk,' that they maintained the embargo because of possible risk if the embargo was removed, that disease might be introduced into Great Britain from Canada. For the purpose of discussing this word 'risk' and the possibilities attending its meaning I have to say a word or two in regard to Canadian animals. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has rightly said that when the embargo was put on in 1892 the Canadian Department of Agricultural contended and I think proved, that there was no disease in Canada, that it was a mistake on the part of the British veterinarians which caused the imposition of the British embargo. I am not going to set the opinion of one veterinarian against the opinion of another; but it is well understood, and no one knows it better than the English people, that pleuro-pneumonia is one of the most insidious and contagious diseases known in the animal world. On no occasion in any part of the world where pleuro-pneumonia has been found, have the cases been isolated. Outbreaks have occurred, and they have only been stamped out by the expenditure of vast sums of money and infinite pains and labour on the part of the authorities, and through a long period of fighting with the disease. It is an undoubted fact, which no one in England pretends to deny, that while at that time it was said that animals coming from a certain portion of the province of Manitoba were diseased, no disease could be found by the most strenuous efforts of our veterinarians; and if the disease occurred in Canada at that time, a most extraordinary and inconceivable condition of affairs has followed, in that the disease has disappeared of itself, without effort on the part of our veterinarians, without the expenditure of a single dollar on the part of the Canadian government to stamp it out, and without any spread of the disease at all. This condition of affairs is absolutely inconceivable; for the English veterinarians who maintain the embargo would be the first to say that wherever pleuro-pneumonia has existed it has cost vast sums of money and immense labour to stamp it out. This is an absolute proof that there was no pleuro-pneumonia in Canada at that time. Since then nearly a million and a half of animals have been exported from Canada to Great Britain, every one of which has been slaughtered in the English lairages under the inspection of the English veterinarians; and among all these animals they have not been able to find a single one showing the slightest trace of pleuro-pneumonia when slaughtered. If at that time pleuro-pneumonia existed in Canada, it is inconceivable that no animals since exported from Canada have been found to be affected by the disease, in spite of the utmost researches carried on by the English veterinarians and inspectors with the express intention and desire of justifying the embargo. In addition to this, we maintain a constant inspection of the animals in this country. We have a system of inspection throughout Canada which I may say, without boasting, is effective and complete. We have never had a single case of pleuro-pneumonia reported in Canada. Once in a while some one reports that he fears that it may exist. Immediately the Minister of Agriculture, whether myself or my predecessor, has always insisted on having a strict and rigid investigation made; but in every instance that investigation has proved that the disease was not pleuro-pneumonia, and pleuro-pneumonia could not be found. In addition to this, we have the fact that in 1897 the United States government, knowing thoroughly our conditions, and having had an experience some years before of an outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia in their own country, which it had cost them hundreds of thousands of dollars to stamp out, were ready and willing to enter into an arrangement with the Canadian government by which cattle from Canada could pass into the United States without let or hindrance. The United States have had bitter experience with pleuro-pneumonia. Fifteen or sixteen years ago they had severe and costly outbreaks of this disease in the eastern states; and when I proposed to them that we should practically abolish the quarantine between the two countries, the first thought that came to their minds was, can we dare to do it and keep ourselves free from pleuro-pneumonia ? Dr. Salmon, the head of the veterinary service of the United States, and the Minister of Agriculture, Secretary Morton, discussed the matter with me, and they made up their minds without any hesitation or doubt that it would be perfectly safe to allow Canadian cattle to cross the border into the United States without even an examination or inspection. This I consider to be a pretty conclusive proof, from our great rival in the English market, that they at all events were practically satisfied that the flocks and herds of Canada were absolutely free from this or any other serious contagious disease. Since that time the United States authorities have kept a constant watch upon the veterinary work of my department; we are in constant touch and communication with them. It is one of the features of our agreement that we should report to them immediately any cases of contagious disease in this country, and that they should report to us any cases in the United States. This arrangement has been going on for eight years, and in that time not one single question has arisen on the part of the people of the United States as to the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in Canada, or any trace of it. I think this is proof conclusive that the Canadian herds are absolutely free of this dread disease, and I venture to think that what the hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) has put before the House has proved conclusively that we have never in a single instance had this dread disease in Canada. Under these circumstances I contend that the idea expressed by the president of the Board of Agriculture in England, that there is even a risk to their herds in allowing Canadian cattle to be imported freely into the country, is not tenable. I venture to say one or two words more. It is a difficult question to deal with, no doubt. I appreciate that there are various interests in England which are complicating; I understand that the political situation there may need certain considerations. I venture to think, however, that, whatever side of politics the people of England may take, whatever their individual or class or local interests may be, there is a strong feeling there, as there is in the other parts of the empire, that the empire is one, and that all its parts ought to be closely and intimately bound together in the bonds of mutual respect and good feeling. I have been quoted as having said that the maintenance of this embargo is an unfriendly act on the part of the mother country towards Canada. I do not hesitate, Sir, here on the floor of parliament to repeat that assertion. I consider that the maintenance of the embargo by the mother country against Canadian cattle is an unfriendly act towards Canada, and an act showing a lack of consideration towards those bonds of imperial duty which ought to be just as dear to the mother country as they are to Canada.

I venture to think that if we are to be drawn to the mother country as we wish to draw the mother country towards us, every consideration ought to be shown by the latter not only to our commercial interests, but to our sentimental interests and feelings as well; and I believe that there is to-day no one thing which the motherland could do that would appeal more strongly to the sentiments and opinions of the people of Canada than to remove the stigma which to-day rests upon our cattle in consequence of the legislation of the motherland; and if the parliament and people of Great Britain wish to give an evidence of their feeling towards us, such as we have given on many occasions of our feeling towards them, they could do that in the best way by removing the legislation which imposes this restriction on our cattle going into their markets. There is another point I would like to say a word about. We hear a good deal—perhaps more in the motherland than anywhere else—of the food supply of the empire. That is generally held to be the wheat supply, but meat is just as important; and I think it is a short-sighted policy—a policy which does not show full consideration of imperial interests—which puts a restriction on the supply of meat to the motherland from a source at all times within the empire. We have to-day a large meat supply in this country—a meat supply which could be increased indefinitely if this embargo were removed, and which would at all times be available as being wholly within the empire and therefore not subject to any of the vicissitudes of foreign ocean shipping. I think it is in the interest of the solidarity of the empire and of the British food supply of the empire that arrangement should be made among its various parts to facilitate trade among them in food products and put them on a better footing as regards one another than foreign countries are as regards any part of the empire. Here is an opportunity of doing this in accordance with the demand of a very large number—I do not know exactly how large—of the electors of Great Britain; and I feel that in the expression of opinion on the part of the Canadian parliament, such as this resolution embodies, we have justice, equity and right on our side as well as a policy which is in the best interests of the empire at large. In view of the present circumstances, it is but proper and right that our parliament should so express itself by passing this resolution.

Resolution agreed to.

CONFERENCES BETWEEN SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have received the following message from the Senate:

Wednesday, 5th July, 1905.

Resolved, That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Masters in Chancery, to inform that House that the Senate has come to the following resolution, and to request that the House of Commons may be pleased to agree thereto:

That in cases in which the House of Commons disagree to any amendments made by the Senate, or insist upon any amendments to which the Senate has disagreed, the Senate is willing to receive the reasons of the House of Commons for their disagreement or insisting (as the case may be), by message, without a conference, unless at any time the Commons should desire to communicate the same at a conference.

That any conference between the Houses may be a free conference.

Attest. SAML. E. St. O. CHAPLEAU,
Clerk of the Senate.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. PREFONTAINE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 192) respecting the power of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. He said: The Bill is for the purpose of authorizing the Harbour Commissioners to expend the sum of $6,000 out of the revenue in order to help in the erection of a monument to the late Hon. John Young.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to erect it ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The citizens of Montreal. The Harbour Commisisoners are authorized to help to the extent of $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Why ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The citizens of Montreal consider that the late Hon. John Young was really the founder of the harbour. It was he who, with the late Sir Hugh Allan, initiated the works which have been continued for the last fifty years and have contributed to make Montreal the national port of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

HALF BREED SCRIP RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to know if we are going to have those papers with reference to the scrip which were promised ? We have not had anything for weeks. Although we all want to get away, I must insist on my right of having those papers before we go. I am just as anxious to get away as any one, and I hope the First Minister will call the attention of his colleague to this matter and have the papers brought down. They are not so voluminous that they could not have been prepared and laid on the table by this time. They need to be here so that some consideration be given them before the end of the session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall speak to my colleague and try to have them on Monday, and will also see about the reports called for by the hon. member for East Grey from the Department of Public Works.

Mr. SPROULE. The Department of Public Works has had ample opportunity to have them down before this.

PENSIONS TO INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has the hon. the Minister of Finance considered the advisability of introducing a measure to give old age pensions to the employees on the Intercolonial Railway ? On the 15th of March I asked if the government proposed introducing a Bill respecting old age pensions, which the Minister of Railways and Canals promised last year. The hon. the Minister of Finance replied that the subject was under consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will renew the question when the Minister of Railways is in his seat, I would rather he would answer.

SEAMEN'S ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 147) to amend the Seamen's Act.—Mr. Préfontaine.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see how we can go on with this Bill unless the Minister of Justice is here.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think my hon. friend will find that that is not necessary. I have here the Bill as re-cast by the Minister of Justice. I think that the amendments made will meet with the wish of hon. members on both sides of the House. In the Bill as introduced, section 1 was as follows :

1. Sections 7, 16 and 18 of the Seamen's Act, chapter 74 of the Revised Statutes, shall not apply to shipping masters or deputy shipping masters in British Columbia.

The great objection to this clause was that under its provisions inn-keepers, hotel-keepers and boarding-house-keepers could be appointed shipping masters and deputy shipping masters. I propose to strike out the figure '7' in this section, which will leave still applicable to British Columbia the law which provides that this class of people shall not be appointed shipping masters or deputy shipping masters.

Section 2 of the Bill as introduced provides as follows :

2. In that province, every shipping master may appoint any person as deputy shipping master, and every shipping master and deputy shipping master may, until fees therefor are established by the Governor in Council, receive any remuneration agreed upon for hiring or supplying any seamen for any ship.

That is changed to the following :

In the province of British Columbia every shipping master may with the approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, appoint not more than two deputy shipping masters to assist masters of vessels in the securing of crews.

So the objectionable words under which the shipping masters might appoint any person as a deputy is struck out. Not only does the law apply prohibiting the appointment of hotel-keepers, inn-keepers and boarding-house-keepers, but he is restricted to the appointment of two, and these with the approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Section 3, as it is proposed to be amended, provides :

Every shipping master and deputy shipping master may, until otherwise provided by the Governor in Council, take and receive from the master of any vessel any remuneration agreed upon between them for the hiring or supplying of seamen for any such vessel, not exceeding ten dollars for any seaman hired or supplied.

And section 3 of the Bill as introduced entirely disappears. The following is added as section 4 :

4. Notwithstanding the next preceding subsection the sum which the owner or master of a ship engaging or discharging a seaman in a shipping office in British Columbia may deduct from the seaman's wages under section 17 of the Seamen's Act, shall not exceed what it would be if section 16 thereof were in force in that province.

So that objections have been fully met by the Department of Justice. It is needless for me to go over the ground we have already gone when the question was under discussion on former occasions. I think that the Bill as proposed to be amended will be acceptable to the House.

Mr. STOCKTON. As I understand, the classes of people named cannot be appointed as shipping masters. But, if I caught correctly what the minister said, they can be appointed deputy shipping masters with the consent of the Minister of Marine.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No; the appointment of such people is illegal, and the sanction of the minister cannot make it legal. I will send the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stockton) the copy of the amendments that I have, and he will see the effect of them.

Mr. STOCKTON. Having read the amendments, I see that they meet the points.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister's position is that the prohibition against the appointment against this class of people is still in force?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that the amendments, as drafted, meet the objections that I had to the Bill.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Bill (No. 186) to provide for the regulation of wireless telegraphy in Canada—Mr. Préfontaine—was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE. (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This Bill is almost an exact copy of a Bill passed by the British parliament last year for the regulation of wireless telegraphy in Great Britain. It was forwarded to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the month of August last with the suggestion that a similar law should be passed for the Dominion of Canada. As it was towards the end of the session, the matter was postponed until this year. The House will remember that when the Fessenden Wireless Telegraphy Company asked for a charter and their Bill was before the Railway Committee, it was redrafted almost entirely on the lines of the law passed in England in 1904, so as to protect the public interest. The object of this Bill therefore is to give the government control of wireless telegraphy in such a manner as to ensure the greatest efficiency, and to obtain the greatest benefit to the public interest. Wireless stations, whether on ocean or on shore, must be licensed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who shall prescribe the conditions under which they may be worked. The Bill makes provision for instrumental installation. The importance of the Bill will be manifest to every one. At the present time the government is installing wireless stations on the Gulf of the St. Lawrence as aids to navigation. It is therefore important that these stations, which are under the control of and maintained by the government, should be protected, and that no other stations should be installed near enough to them to interfere with the public service. In the contract between the government and the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company, they are granted no exclusive privileges, so there can be no monopoly. But it stands to reason that if other stations were to be installed near the Marconi public stations which are maintained by the government, our stations would probably be rendered useless or ineffective. For that reason the Railway Committee unanimously inserted in the Fessenden Bill most of the clauses which are contained in this Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. Have the government any vessels fitted up with wireless telegraphy at the present time?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, we have four vessels equipped with the Marconi apparatus, the 'Minto,' the 'Stanley,' the 'Canada,' which is going to meet the 'Virginian' near North Sydney in a few days, and the 'Montcalm.'

Mr. BLAIN. What has been the experience of the government so far?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Most satisfactory. The last station that was installed by the Marconi Company was at Sable Island, and I received the first wireless despatch that was sent by this company from that noted spot on the ocean. It is called, as everybody knows, the cemetery of the Atlantic ocean. It will be no longer a cemetery, because the people on that island will henceforth be in communication with the rest of the world, and have already been so for ten days.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In view of the fact that the Bill was withdrawn last year because it was introduced at so late a period in the session, we must congratulate the minister on his promptness this year. Five months and eighteen days after the session commenced he has introduced his Bill, and we are now within three days of six months; so there can be no complaint this year on that score. As I understand the Bill, it is merely to provide that licenses shall be issued, that no person shall establish any wireless telegraphic station either on ocean or on shore unless he has a government license.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is all.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS OF SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That section 2 of chapter 4 of the Revised Statutes, intituled : An Act respecting the salaries of cartain public functionaries, and other annual charges on the Consolidated Revenue, be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words and figures :

The Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan, $9,000.

The Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, $9,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This resolution is to make provision for the payment of the salaries of the Lieutenant Governors of the two new provinces. It is proposed to fix their salaries at $9,000, the same as is paid to the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, and other provinces.

Resolution reported, read a first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 193) to amend the Revised Statute respecting the salaries of certain public functionaries and other annual charges on the consolidated revenue.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the minister know who is to receive this $9,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, we thought it would be wise first to get the consent of parliament to pay the money before we committed ourselves.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the same as the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba gets ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—COMPLAINT OF D. G. SEYMOUR, OXBOW, ASSA.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, may I bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) a complaint I have received from a settler in the west who says that he cannot find out the reason why he is not able to procure a homestead, Northwest sections 22 to 25, 1 west 2nd meridian? He seems to have complied, according to this statement, with all the requirements of the law and he attributes his non-success to the political partisanship of some person or persons unnamed. He is very earnest about it and I thought I would like to bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior, because it is not desirable that these settlers should have any ground for complaint of this character. This one may seem trifling at first blush to bring to the attention of the House, but I do not regard it as too trifling to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior and to ask him for some explanation later on after he has had an opportunity of looking into the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Might I ask the name?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The name of the man is D. G. Seymour, Oxbow, Assa.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee of Supply.

Civil government—Department of Trade and Commerce—contingencies—additional amount required, $1,200.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. Minister of Finance state why this additional amount is required ?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot speak as to the details, but I may say that I have been urging my colleagues to have the supplementary estimates contain a sufficient sum of money to close up the accounts for the year rather than to carry balances forward into the next year. In conformity with my request several have sent in additional appropriations. In this case it happens to be a small amount of contingencies.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers, $60,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. We want some explanation about that.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This item is to cover the repairs to two steam ice breakers under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The 'Champlain' was one of the ice-breakers secured by the department last fall and put in commission in the month of November. She maintained the ferry service between Murray Bay and River Ouelle. Two accidents happened to her. She first collided with another steamer, but fortunately was not wrecked and she continued the service during the winter. Then she was damaged in reaching the wharf at Rivière Ouelle due to the mismanagement of the mate, who has since been dismissed. In May or June this steamer was put in the dry-dock and thoroughly overhauled. The damages were ascertained and the repairs which are now finished cost $30,000. The other ice-breaker the 'Montcalm' was severely injured in the bow while breaking the ice at Cap Rouge, she is now being repaired and made stronger than when she came off the ways after being built. She will be in good condition to cope with the ice next winter.

Mr. BLAIN. Where was she repaired ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In the dry dock at Quebec, but the work was done by Messrs. Davis & Son, under the supervision of the officers of the department. The extent of repairs of this kind is hard to ascertain before the vessel is put into the dry-dock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The ice has not required any repairs, only the ice-breakers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The ice required a great deal of repairs, because it was all smashed up.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am glad to hear that. Speaking seriously, would the minister tell us briefly of what particular use this ice-breaking has been? I daresay it has been of use; I am asking for information.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have not the particulars here, but the ice-breaker has shown that we can maintain a service between Murray Bay and Rivière Ouelle, in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. Everybody knows that the north shore of the St. Lawrence has always been deprived of communication during winter except with horses and sleighs starting from Quebec or some other point. For years and years an agitation was maintained in favour of making experiments to ascertain whether it would be possible to maintain a ferry during the winter between Rivière Ouelle and Murray Bay. Sums varying from $10,000 to $15,000 were voted every year as subsidies to different navigation companies, but they have always proved to be failures, and two years ago it was found impossible to get any responsible navigation company to tender for that service. It was decided by parliament during last year that a sum should be appropriated for the construction of a boat to make the experiment as soon as possible. It has proven very satisfactory, especially if you take into consideration the fact that the winter last year in Quebec and the maritime provinces was the most severe in the memory of man; so that if winter navigation in the Lower St. Lawrence has been maintained during the last winter, it is certain that the problem is solved, a matter of great importance to Canada.

Lighthouse and coast service—maintenance and repairs of lighthouses and light-ships, $100,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This amount certainly needs some explanation. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has become a very important one, owing to the handing over to that department of different branches of work really belonging to it, but which had previously been controlled by other departments. Then the development which has taken place in the last ten years in navigation, the increase in the size of steamers and the consequent necessity of better protecting navigation, has necessitated a very large expenditure. I might say that for years—and I can cite many examples—the matter has been, to a certain extent, left aside. I might mention, for instance, that there exist to-day, although we have spent millions, a number of obsolete lighthouses which have not been repaired for fifty years, and are therefore not at all up-to-date.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Where are those lighthouses of which you are now speaking?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In the Lower St. Lawrence, along the ship channel. I can cite one in particular which has been reported to me and which has not been provided for, that is a lighthouse in the county of Portneuf, at Portneuf itself. Many cases have presented themselves in that way. An estimate was made of repairs to a certain number of lighthouses, and the amount in each case would be $300 or $400, but when we began the repairs on these by day labour we would find that we would have to spend $1,000 or $1,500. Many cases of this kind have presented themselves, and for some years the habit has been to overlap on the expenditure of the following year and to leave a certain amount of standing accounts. Last year when I brought my estimates before the House and explained this question, I really never thought that the deficit, that is the amount required to be taken out of the estimates of the following year, would be so large; and this year I gave instructions to my officials to make a thorough investigation of the different claims that existed for necessary work done in the different sections of the country in order to get a full statement of what was due and what was necessary to be paid. We discovered that it would need over $200,000 to cover the over-expenditure. In the first supplementary estimates that were brought before the House a sum of $75,000 was provided for. At that time I must say that we had not ascertained that $200,000 was due. Since that time we have ascertained that to be about the amount due, so in providing $100,000 to pay off these outstanding accounts, we are still leaving a balance of $25,000 that we have been able to pay out of other funds that were available for the same purpose. So this $100,000 will cover all outstanding liabilities, and I hope I will not be obliged next session, if I have still the honour to occupy this position, to make a demand of this kind, because I must admit it is not good business, and should not have been done. I am not personally responsible for it, because it was the system continued from year to year, and this will really cover all our expenditure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire about a matter that is perhaps not very closely connected with this, which has been brought to my attention by a correspondent. It is on behalf of some pilots of Sydney harbour. It seems that in connection with these pilots there has been for a long term of years a reserve fund collected out of the pilotage received, which has been kept for payment to the widows and orphans of deceased pilots, and I think for payments to pilots who were superannuated, who had ceased to be engaged in active work and had nothing to support them. A very considerable amount, as I understand, was accumulated, and in addition to that the pilots themselves started what was intended to be a mutual insurance company. Twenty-nine or thirty of these pilots are said to have paid in $50 each for several years. This was deposited with the treasurer of the Pilotage Commission. It is said that beneficiaries who are entitled to receive moneys out of this fund have not been able to receive it. I would like to ask the minister whether or not he has any information on the subject? Of course, it is not a fund directly under the control of the government. It is, however, as I understand, directly under the control of the pilot commissioners, and they are under the control of the government. It is quite possible, therefore, for the minister to obtain information on the subject and I bring the matter to his attention, because the complaint on behalf of the pilots has been made to me as a member of parliament, and I think it is a matter on which the House should be advised.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. My attention was directed to this matter a few days ago, and I have given instructions to prepare a report upon it. I have sent an officer to Halifax to hold an investigation into the wreck, and he is instructed specially to look into this matter and to report on the facts. I expect to receive the report on Tuesday or Wednesday next, when I will at once communicate the information to the hon. gentleman and the House.

Commercial agencies—additional amount required, $3,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to have the names of these agencies, where they are located, what the salaries of the agents are, what expenses are allowed, and what the special advantages of these agencies are.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that this vote is for any special officer. It is for the service generally. I think the information asked for by my hon. friend was given by the Prime Minister a few days ago. If it was not given fully, I will procure it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What do these commercial agents really do, and what advantage does the country receive from their services? What is accomplished? They perform, I suppose, such functions as are discharged by consuls, gathering information and transmitting it to the home government.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid that I have not that personal familiarity with this service that would enable me to answer as fully as the Minister of Trade and Commerce might desire. I imagine that a service of this kind is something like an advertisement in a newspaper: You are never quite sure how much of the trade you get is due to the advertisement, yet advertising is a good thing. These agents are sent to points where there is some prospect of developing Canadian trade. Necessarily at first their work is slow, and they meet with difficulties. They send their reports from time to time to the department, which are published and distributed. If my hon. friend asks me to give evidence that they do increase our trade, perhaps that is not easy to do. They are practically advertising agents for Canada, and in some cases I have no doubt their efforts considerably increase our trade, though at first they may not show much result. For example, we had an agent in Australia for many years, and while in the beginning his work was not very successful, it has ultimately resulted in opening up considerable trade. That is the theory, and I think experience will show that the work is worth continuing.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is Mr. Larke the agent in Australia?

Mr. FIELDING. There are two in Australia—Mr. Larke at Melbourne and Mr. Ross at Sydney, or vice versa.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I took occasion a short time ago to make myself acquainted with the information which must be transmitted by the consuls of the German empire to the home authorities from the various places in the world where they are stationed, and it is really surprising how thoroughly and systematically the information is collected and tabulated. These commercial agencies throughout the world ought to be of some use to us. It is possible that they are of more use than I realize. If the system is a good one, it will possibly have to be extended. To that extent Canada will probably have her own consular service throughout the world in respect to interests purely Canadian—our trade interests, for example. If we propose to do anything of that kind, it is proper that the agents should act on well-defined lines and in a systematic and thorough way, and should gather information of a practical and useful character in all parts of the world. It may be that all this is realized. I do not know whether it is or not. If it is not, it seems to me that there is a very good opportunity for work in the Department of Trade and Commerce in carrying out some such system as I have referred to. The details of what is accomplished by the consuls of Germany and the United States are easily obtainable, and I am almost certain that nothing like that work or equal to it is attempted by these officers, who are practically consular agents for Canada in foreign countries.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no doubt that these officers have much to learn, and that every day that passes will give them more experience and better results. In the effort to do a good deal in the way of reports, we find consular officers frequently introducing curious things into their reports. For instance, I have seen a consular report from Winnipeg giving particulars of something that occurred in Halifax, and I have seen one from the maritime provinces giving information of what occurred in western Canada. Therefore I am not disposed to complain of our agents if they do not do much in the way of reports. Their work is slow and uphill at first, but if they can show that they are bringing the products of Canada, to the notice of consumers in their respective countries, that is all we can hope for at first. It is a service which I think we shall have to extend. The imperial consular service is not a commercial service at all. Even if it were, it is not particularly devoted to Canada. I am inclined to think that, slowly and after experience, it will be a wise policy on the part of Canada to distribute these commercial agents over a wider area, even though we do not get immediate results. Like the advertising of the country, though you may not get results immediately, they shall come in due course.

Mr. BLAIN. The other day I read a letter from a friend of mine, residing in Japan, pointing out that our agent there was advertising in some of the local newspapers articles for which there was no sale in that country at all. Boot blacking was one of the articles advertised. This gentleman writes that there could be no possible sale in Japan for boot blacking, and he gives other items of articles advertised for which there is equally no market in that country. Yet there was no general advertisement of the kind of goods Canadians would find a market for in Japan. Those in charge of the department should see that the kind of goods likely to find a market in Japan should be advertised in the local papers of that country, and that money is not spent advertising goods for which there is no market.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not imagine that the agent would advertise in any one general advertisement all the products of Canada, but from time to time he calls attention to things for which a market might be had, and it is better he should err on the side of advertising too many than too few. Mr. Maclean, whom many gentlemen in this House know, is a gentleman of much intelligence and well informed in Canadian affairs ; and I am quite sure that if he advertised blacking, he also did not fail to advertise the more substantial products of Canada to which we attach greater importance. I do not know whether the reason the hon. gentleman's correspondent has for saying there is no market for blacking in Japan is that we do not make blacking or that the Japanese do not want it.

Mr. SPROULE. On their wooden shoes it would be very valuable.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

House resumed consideration of the motion made by Mr. Ross (Yale-Cariboo) for the third reading of Bill (No. 139) An Act respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company, and the amendment thereto by Mr. Foster.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Before this Bill is finally disposed of, I desire to make a further brief statement. I do not propose to discuss further the merits and demerits of this Bill. I think that in the Railway Committee and in the Committee of the Whole that feature of the matter has been thoroughly considered. The stand which I took in the Railway Committee I still adhere to. And I think that those of us who took that stand were thoroughly justified in so doing, not only as members of the House, but as representing the best interests of the people of British Columbia. It is true that hon. gentlemen from British Columbia have practically questioned the right of members from other provinces to interfere in the legislation pertaining to their province. But I may say here and now that I regard myself as a representative in the House in the interest of the people of British Columbia just as much as in the interest of the people of Ontario or any other province of the Dominion, and I contend further that I and others who spoke and voted as I did in the Railway Committee are more in line with the sentiment of the people of British Columbia than are the representatives of that province themselves. I made it a special study to ascertain the sentiments of the people of British Columbia on the subject of this road. I have done so by reading the published reports of board of trade meetings and other meetings, and by examining the newspapers published in the different cities and towns of that province. I find no newspaper advocating the diversion into the United States of that road—none, at any rate advocating the idea that the road should not be built wholly in the province of British Columbia. But I do find a very strong feeling that the road should be constructed in the Kootenay district to the coast on Canadian territory. And that is practically all that we have voted for. We have not opposed the construction of the Victoria, Vancouver and Eastern Railway. In the early meetings of the Railway Committee, the charter so far as it concerned the construction of that road into this Similkameen valley was passed by the committee practically with a unanimous vote, all parties being agreed that the road should be constructed, and constructed on Canadian territory. What we were pressing for, and what we were justified in pressing for was that the company controlling this enterprise should be bound to build the road from the Similkameen valley to the coast on Canadian soil. Not only did we ask that, but we asked that a guarantee be put into the charter which would insure this construction on Canadian soil. And that was the strong point in dispute in the committee. As we know the committee was very evenly divided on that question, as to whether or not this guarantee should be taken in the Bill. We remember that when the vote was taken it stood 60 for and 60 against the resolution. Practically the resolution was carried, because one gentleman went into the committee room who was not a member of the committee and polled his vote against the resolution—and that gentleman a minister of the Crown. Had he not voted against the resolution, the resolution would have stood 60 for and 59 against. So that, practically, the resolution demanding a guarantee that the road should be constructed from Vancouver to Princeton on Canadian soil was carried in that committee. Unfortunately it was not until some days afterwards that it was detected that one gentleman had voted who was not a member of the committee. His vote stands to-day recorded against that resolution on which he had no right to vote.

Mr. RILEY. Was his name on the list and was it called by the clerk ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, Mr. Speaker, his name was on the list, and it was called by the clerk. But the hon. gentleman knew or ought to have known, that he was not a member of the committee. Now, I desire to make myself plain. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), when formerly a member of this House, was appointed a member of the Railway Committee. We all know that he ceased to be a member of this House when he accepted the portfolio of the Minister of the Interior. And, of course, when he ceased to be a member of this House, he ceased to be a member of the Railway Committee. And, never having been appointed again a member of that committee, he was not qualified to vote at this meeting at the time when this vote was taken. I think I make that plain. Now, to establish the fact, which I have stated, that we who voted for that amendment demanding that a guarantee be obtained from the railway company that they would build from the coast into Princeton before they crossed the boundary line—demanding in fact a guarantee that the road from the coast to Princeton should be considered on Canadian soil—I propose to read some articles from British Columbia papers, which, to my mind, give the sentiments of the people of that province in a most straightforward and plain spoken way. Now, when I read these I think it will show that we who demand that that guarantee should be taken, were in harmony with the wishes of the people of British Columbia. I am going to read an article taken from the Vancouver 'Daily Province' of June 24, 1905.

Mr. D. ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. D. ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that the majority of the stock in the Vancouver Daily Province Publishing Company is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not aware of it ; I know nothing about it. And I do not think it makes any difference. I am going to read from a public journal, a journal which is read by the people of British Columbia and which, it seems to me, gives a most common-sense view of the full situation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. D. Ross) has asked me a question. I am not supposed to know who the stockholders of this newspaper are. I do not know what its political leanings are. I have not made any inquiries. It is not material to the case. The hon. gentleman (Mr. D. Ross) may know who are the shareholders, or it may be that what he says is only an insinuation as to the state of the case. Possibly he knows. If he does know he had better make a statement of the facts of the case. I fail to see any bearing it has on the question at issue and I think this House will come to the same conclusion when it listens to the article I now propose to read :

The Victoria, Vancouver and Eastern Vote.

It is a matter which will be found to be not without interest to speculate on the nature of the explanations which will be given by the British Columbia members in the House of Commons in regard to their votes in the Railway Committee on the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Bill, when they come back to their constituents. Every one of the seven gentlemen who have been sent to Ottawa to guard the interests of this province in matters of federal legislation has voted in favour of granting the Great Northern Railway all the privileges it demands in the construction of its road in the Similkameen, and every one of them has voted against securing from that company any guarantee that it will build direct to a British Columbia port and not make one of the cities on Puget Sound its western terminus. Mr. R. G. Macpherson, the member for Vancouver, and Mr. J. B. Kennedy, the member for Westminster, have adopted the same attitude and voted in identically the same way as Mr. Duncan Ross, of Yale-Cariboo, who had charge of the Bill, and Mr. W. A. Galliher, the member for Kootenay. They not only have not asked that the assurances which ought to be obtained and which are invariably required by business men to secure the interests which they represent in large enterprises should in this instance be furnished for the protection of the British Columbia coast cities, but they have explicitly stated that they do not want them. They are willing to trust the business interests of Vancouver and New Westminster to the good will of President James J. Hill of the Great Northern Railway. In the meeting of the Railway Committee it was left to representatives of other provinces to seek protection for British Columbia, and the efforts which were thus made were defeated with the assistance of the men to whom we have entrusted our business.

Mr. David Henderson, the member for Halton——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is he ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad I did it. I have no reason to go back on anything I did. I will begin the sentence again :

Mr. David Henderson, the member for Halton, assumed in the Railway Committee a position identical with that adopted by the 'Province' in regard to this road. No one, he said, was opposed to the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern if its intentions were to build from Vancouver through the Similkameen valley. If the company was sincere, though in its professions before the committee, let it accept an amendment which would guarantee the building of the western section of the proposed line. He proposed accordingly, that the powers conferred by clause No. 3, should not be made use of until the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern constructs its main line east from Vancouver, in Canadian territory, to Princeton, or some other point in the Similkameen east of the Hope Mountains, to be approved by the Governor in Council.

What could be fairer than this proposal ? It was only asking for a guarantee that the Great Northern would carry out the undertaking which Mr. Duncan Ross says it is the intention of the company to complete. If President Hill really proposes to establish his western terminal in British Columbia, why should he object to furnish a reasonable guarantee of his bona fides ? In any case, that the members for Vancouver and New Westminster declined to demand proper security from the Great Northern that it will build direct to a British Columbia port, makes them responsible to the people here should President Hill construct his line to Everett or Seattle. For it is owing to them that the Bill contains no provision which protects this province. The vote even of one of them would have secured the adoption of Mr. Henderson's amendment.

Mr. Duncan Ross assured the committee that construction would be under way from Cloverdale west toward the Hope Mountains in two months time. If so why should President Hill refuse to bind himself in a perfectly reasonable and business-like manner to do that which the country requires, and which he has no intention of evading ? Does not his refusal to be bound give reasonable cause for suspicion ?

Is this not the way in which Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Kennedy should have looked at the matter ? That they did not so look at it ; that they showed a willing and complete compliance with every wish of the promoters of the Bill and made no effort whatever to protect the people they represent would seem to indicate that their senses had been stilled by exceedingly powerful arguments on the part of those who held the brief for Mr. Hill's road. It is to be hoped that they will be able to give the people here some better reasons for their conduct than has been received by the 'Telegraph.' We fear however, they will not; and we fear even more that our predictions that President Hill will not build direct to a British Columbia port will be realized. If it is, Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Kennedy will be called to a very severe accounting by the people they have been elected to represent.

Now, where would we get stronger approval of the course we have pursued in regard to this Bill ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. Hon. gentlemen laugh. They can laugh here but possibly when they go back to British Columbia the laugh may be on the other side. The people of British Columbia will have something to say to them on their return as I read in this article. This is from a British Columbia source and gives the sentiment of the people of British Columbia. Any man can understand who has any knowledge of British Columbia at all that every statement contained in that article is reasonable, fair and correct, and just the view that the people of British Columbia would be likely to take on a question of this kind. Now, an hon. gentleman says that certain stock in this paper is held by a railway company. Well, here is another newspaper. I wonder if its stock is held by another railway company.

Mr. D. ROSS. Is it the Nelson 'Tribune' ?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, I am sorry to say it is not. Are there any quotations from the Nelson 'Tribune'?

Mr. D. ROSS. Yes, there are.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe I have some in my desk. I will read some if the hon. gentleman wants to get further sentiment, but I rather think that when I read an article from the Rossland 'Miner' the hon. gentlemen will not require anything from the Nelson 'Tribune.' This paper is published in the heart of the mining district where they know all about these divergences to the south and the effect they will have on the trade of British Columbia. Here is a newspaper representing the mining people.

Mr. D. ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that the Rossland 'Miner' is owned by the War Eagle Company which recently entered into an amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I may tell the hon. gentleman, if it is any advantage to him, that I am not aware whether the stock of this company is held by the War Eagle or any other eagle. I made no inquiry, when I saw this article which appears to be penned in the interest of British Columbia. If the hon. gentleman knows who are the holders of stock in this newspaper he ought to let this House know it if it has any bearing on the question. I do not know what position the War Eagle takes on this question, whether it favours these divergences or not; I have made no inquiry. I have simply been endeavouring to ascertain public opinion in British Columbia. I read these articles without making any inquiry as to who was the holder of the stock or as to what the political predilection of these newspapers is. I do not know whether this is a Liberal or Conservative paper. I do not know, as I have made no inquiry, in regard to the other paper from which I have already quoted. I know nothing about it whether the War Eagle holds the stock of this paper or whether it is held by the hon. member from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross). It may be that he is a stockholder in this paper as well; I do not say so; I know nothing about it, but I take this as an independent expression of public opinion in British Columbia and I will read you this article. It is headed

Firmness only Necessary.

This is from the edition of June 28.

Mr. TALBOT. Does not the hon. gentleman think it will be just as well to read a few of the salient points of that article without reading the whole of it?

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly it would be, but I believe the hon. gentleman will be the better for hearing the whole article read. I think it would perhaps enable him to arrive at a better judgment on the whole question. The hon. gentleman has not been present in all these discussions, and I am reading these articles for his benefit and that of others. This is the article headed 'Firmness only Necessary.' I presume the hon. gentleman thinks that I am speaking against time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am doing nothing of the kind. I expect this Bill will go through, and I am not going to prevent it. I am not going to prevent its third reading, but before it goes to a third reading I am going to place on record a justification for the action I have taken in this House, and of others who have taken the same stand.

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. member opposed the preamble tooth and nail, he opposed the very first clause of the Bill tooth and nail, and voted against it from start to finish. Such opposition was not necessary to cure any defect that might have been in it when it first came before parliament.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) that I have already opposed the preamble of the Bill and the first clause of the Bill, and I was absolutely justified in doing so. The reasons I gave were strong and pertinent. I said it was impossible even for the local men on that committee to determine what that clause meant, and the judgment of the committee was that the Bill should be referred to a special committee in order to interpret that clause. The committee fully endorsed the action I took, and it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman to say that I was taking a course contrary to the best interests of the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway.

Mr. GALLIHER. So you are.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well, the hon. member may have his opinion. The people of British Columbia do not value his opinion very highly, according to the information I have here. Perhaps when he goes back to British Columbia he may find a good many more that will tell him the same thing. But that is not to the point.

Firmness only Necessary.

The Great Northern Railway penetrates British Columbia by no less than seven different branch lines between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific coast. These branch lines are built as feeders to the main Hill system. They give the people of southern British Columbia competitive transportation conditions to a limited extent, but whatever advantage is gained thereby is more than offset by the diversion of Canadian trade and wealth across the border. Nobody in this section wants to see a railway monopoly in the Kootenays and Yale, and there is no good reason why there should be a monopoly. The just requirements of the country demand the closest kind of railway competition compatible with sound national principles. If, however, the Dominion government is foolish enough to continue to pander to the greed and rapacity of Jim Hill, by permitting him to drain this country of more than half its rightful industrial prosperity simply to build up foreign cities and a foreign transportation company, it will be guilty of silly timidity and crass stupidity. Hill will never build an all-Canadian line from the interior of British Columbia to the Pacific sea-board if he is permitted to skim off the cream of our trade in the most favoured localities while allowing wide intervening stretches that are not so rich, both east and west, to shift as best they may for the lack of adequate transportation facilities. If the Ottawa government is loyal to the best interests of southern British Columbia it will insist upon Mr. Hill building an all-Canadian line to the coast, and refuse to permit him to dodge in and out as he has in the past. It is the duty of parliament to consider the needs of the many settlers on and around Anarchist Mountain, in the upland country north and west of Keremeos, and the rich but rugged sections in the Hope Mountains, as it is to provide railway advantages for the easily approached valley districts. Hill will never build through the more remote localities unless he is forced to, but when he is once made to understand that he must take the bad with the good in an all-Canadian route, he will soon drop into line and be thankful for any terms that would allow him an additional share of the great transportation business of southern British Columbia.

I would like to know where we could get a stronger endorsation of the course we have pursued with reference to this Bill than is contained in that article of a newspaper published in the very heart and centre of the country that is to be served by this railway.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It does not touch Rossland.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nobody said it did. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) is getting beside himself, he is getting very anxious. He realizes that on his return to Vancouver he may have a good many things to answer for, and he is going to be sure of one thing, that is, that he stated here that this road is not going to touch Rossland. Well, if the hon. gentleman had his way, it would not touch Vancouver either, he may rest assured of that. It would not cross Canadian territory from Princeton to Vancouver, or to Cloverdale, he is determined that it shall not do that; at any rate, he has determined that no guarantee shall be obtained by this parliament that the road shall be so constructed.

Mr. D. ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that already thirty-six miles of this road has been built from the city of Vancouver, in Canadian territory, eastward towards Princeton?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am sufficiently familiar with railway construction in British Columbia to know that a railway has been constructed from Vancouver a distance of about thirty-six miles, I assume, just to a point where it connects with the Hill system. We are not disputing that at all, and if we can only get them to continue the road on Canadian territory through to Princeton, we are perfectly satisfied that they can build then to Keremeos or any other place in the United States they like. They can cross the boundary line. We do not pretend to prevent them crossing the boundary as long as they give us a Canadian line. We cannot prevent them crossing the boundary line, and have not sought to do so. But we want a guarantee from them that a Canadian road will be built. That is what we have been contending for, and I hope that even though that guarantee has not been obtained, the government will yet demand that it shall be so constructed. Now, I simply want to say, with reference to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who is not in his place to-night, that after hearing the statement made by the right hon. the First Minister on Wednesday night, I am prepared to withdraw the amendment. This is what the right hon. the First Minster said:

> Put this road on Canadian territory by all means. But I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the powers which are vested in the Governor in Council are ample, and the Governor in Council will exercise those powers in order to keep it, if possible, on Canadian territory, and it is only allowed to be diverted when that is necessary in order to avoid great difficulties of construction.

After having received that assurance from the Prime Minister, that the road is to be constructed on Canadian territory on those conditions, and after having received that justification of the position that we have taken all along, I say that I am now authorized to withdraw the amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto, and so far as I am concerned, the Bill will stand for its third reading.

Mr. STOCKTON. I will not detain the House more than two or three minutes. I look upon the question of transportation as one of the most important that this House can deal with, or will be called upon to deal with in future. The prosperity and progress of the country are wrapped up in this question of transportation. I would not have considered it necessary to have spoken at all, but, foolishly I think,—and I do not use the expression in any offensive sense,—some of the friends of this Bill have insinuated that those who opposed it in the Railway Committee were under the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that we were actuated in our conduct by the influence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I wish to repudiate these insinuations. But let me say, Sir, that so far as I view the matter the Canadian Pacific Railway Company measures up to the ideal of Canadian nationalism more than any other railway company in Canada. I do not wish to say a single word against any other railway company in Canada; I do not wish to say a single word against the construction of railways upon Canadian soil for the benefit of the Canadian people and the development of Canadian trade, but it did appear when this measure came before the committee that there was an effort, an under-current—I do not use the word offensively in the least—to make it a feeder to an American system of railway to the detriment of the interests of the Canadian people and of the Canadian railway system, and when that was made to appear I felt that as a member of this House and as a Canadian citizen that it was my duty as a public man to state that now and in the future my policy is and shall be when railway companies come here asking for corporate entity for the purpose of constructing railways that we must feel sure that the construction and the operation of these railways will be to the interests of the Canadian people, and that they shall not be used as bleeders to Canadian enterprise for the benefit of a foreign country. I am not going to further discuss the question to-night, I understand it is important that this Bill should have its third reading to-night and I am not here for the purpose of obstruction at all. I simply wish to put myself straight as a member of this House with respect to the transportation question, and to state that every effort of this House and of the people of this country should be that when Canadian money is spent for the purpose of incorporating railway companies to carry forward the business enterprises of this country that it should be in the interests of the people of Canada and not to the disadvantage of those people, for the benefit of those to the south of the boundary line. A statement was made here by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) the other day that there are seven lines now tapping the international boundary which will take the trade of this district of country to the United States. We cannot, as the Prime Minister stated the other day, prevent that, but when a railway comes here for the purpose of having corporate existence given it by the authority of this legislature we can stipulate that it shall be so built and so constructed that it shall inure to the benefit of the Canadian people

Amendment (Mr. Foster), withdrawn.

Bill read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 137) respecting certain patents of David Thomas Owen.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 183) respecting a certain patent of the Metal Volatilization Company.—Mr. McCool.

Bill (No. 185) for the relief of Isaac Pitblado.—Mr. Bole.

Bill (No. 178) respecting the Canada Central Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 179) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Turriff.

THE CANADIAN AGENCY.

On the Order :

House in Committee on Bill (No. 77) respecting the Canadian Agency.—Mr. Bickerdike.

An hon. MEMBER. Stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. I promised the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) that I would move the third reading of this Bill. It is a very small matter, I understand—only to correct an error in the French edition.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think there is more than that. I think the charter itself has expired, and we cannot amend it.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the government takes that position, I do not desire to press the motion, but I wish to carry out my promise to the hon. member from Montreal.

Mr. BRODEUR. I drew the hon. member's attention to the fact that the Bill was illegal because it proposed to amend a charter which had expired a couple of years ago. I asked him for some explanation, and he told me that he would look into the matter.

Order allowed to stand.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—to increase the salaries of A. W. Owen, chief clerk and accountant, $200 ; W. L. Magee, chief clerk, $200 ; C. Stanton, chief clerk, $200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $600.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Have these gentlemen been getting the regular increase from year to year ? If not, why not, and why are they now given an increase of $200 ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Owen, the accountant, entered the department in 1881, he became assistant accountant in 1888, and in 1896 he was promoted to a chief clerkship and was appointed accountant. Owing to the expansion of the business of the department, his work has doubled in the last few years. His present salary is $2,250. He has been getting all the statutory increases of $50 a year, to which he is entitled according to law; but, although he is an old employee, he has not reached the salary that men of his ability and capacity usually receive. Mr. Magee entered the department in 1870. He has been in charge of the registration of shipping and steamboats, inspections of masters and mates and engineers. He was promoted to the rank of chief clerk in 1892 and has acted for the deputy minister in his absence. His present salary is $2,250. This is a similar case and really more favourable.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. He reached that position four years before the other gentleman ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Like Mr. Owen, he was stopped for a certain number of years when at the head of his class and not promoted. Mr. Stanton entered the service June 1st, 1879, and has therefore completed twenty-six years. He procured his chief clerkship on the 1st July, 1901. He has charge of the English correspondence and supervision of the work in connection with the registration of shipping and of all matters connected with applications for want of foreshore water lots. His present salary is $2,000.

To increase the salaries of the following technical officers : E. E. Prince, $200 ; W. J. Stewart, $350 ; B. H. Fraser, $200, and J. F. Fraser, $200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $950.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Prince is commissioner and general inspector of fisheries. He was first appointed on the 1st of October, 1892. His present salary is $2,000. He never got any increase. Gentlemen of the committee are aware that men occupying a similar technical position in the provinces are paid as much as $3,000. The British Columbia commissioner of fisheries is paid $3,000. They have chosen a well qualified gentleman from the United States. In this case the government chose in 1892 an expert from Scotland. Mr. Prince occupied a chair in the Scottish University when brought to Canada.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I know Mr. Prince fairly well and think he is a good man. I do not see why you do not give him what you think he is worth. If you say he is worth a good deal more, why not give it to him ? He is at the head of his class and only getting $2,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We thought by giving him $200 this year, we were doing fairly well. Probably we might have given him more.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Has he had his regular increase ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No. Mr. Stewart is a graduate of the Kingston Military College. He is chief of the hydrographic survey. He entered the department in May, 1884. His present salary is $2,250. We are making the salary of this very capable officer $2,600. I may say that I have been up to the present unable to procure an officer capable of taking charge of a section of the hydrographic survey on the Pacific ocean. There are no qualified officers in Canada. There are qualified officers in England, but we could not get any one of them to take charge of a section at $2,200. Thus in giving Mr. Stewart $2,600, we are not extravagant. Mr. Fraser was a graduate of the Royal Military College and is assistant chief engineer. He joined the department in September 1889. His salary is $2,300. Mr. J. F. Fraser is engineer in charge of aids to navigation and commissioner of lights. These two gentlemen, having the same responsibility, will get the same increase.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite willing we should get through these civil government estimates to-night, but before attempting, at this time of the session, to make any criticism at all of some $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 expenditure, there is something to be said upon the matter. I do not want to have to say that to-night. If the government can take the civil government items and smaller items, I will endeavour to help them to get these items through as rapidly as possible. It is nothing less than an outrage to put $13,000,000 of estimates upon us at this particular stage. We have had, as an opposition, to stand that sort of thing year in year out. There are only two things to do. We must either have these estimates when we can have a fair and reasonable chance of discussing their merits or demerits, which we would have in an earlier part of the session, or we must take them up at such a juncture as this when we can give them but the merest perfunctory examination. That is not fair to the opposition. We have been promised a remedy over and over again but instead this delay grows worse every year. You want to adjourn next week and to put through $14,000,000 of estimates between now and then together with all the rest of the legislation which comes before us. There is not an hour within the last three months when the Minister of Militia might not have brought down the re-arrangement of his militia business and his large estimates in that connection and given us a chance to discuss them when we were here in something like a normal condition. He has chosen not to do it. He has absented himself from the House and not taken much part in its business ; and now, within two or three days of the end of the session, he comes down with a proposition which makes an entire change in our militia system and involves an addition of $3,000,000 or more to our yearly expenditure. This and many more matters of legislation are simply held over and brought in the last two or three of the dog days of the session. Now, that is not fair ; it is not right. In the interest of good business, I think the government ought to make a volte face on this subject and make us an absolute promise to do this kind of thing no longer. However, we must have a discussion of this question. If the minister wants to take it up to-night all right. But if he prefers, we can take up less important items and make progress in them, taking up the other discussion on Monday.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think there is anything 'outrageous' in these proceedings. I think we can challenge comparison with the record of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) himself as to the manner of bringing down supplementary estimates. If it were of practical value to enter into such a discussion, I could furnish evidence that the hon. gentleman is not in a position to volunteer advice to us on that question. However, I have not the disposition, nor are the atmospheric conditions favourable, to a discussion of that nature. I accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion. He shall have ample opportunity to discuss these items. In the meantime, we may take up civil service and other small items, the other votes to which he referred standing over until the next sitting of the House.

Charges of management—Assistant Receiver General's office :

Toronto, further amount required, $500 ; Halifax, further amount required, $600 ; St. John, further amount required, $700 ; Charlottetown, further amount required, $500 ; Winnipeg, further amount required, $1,050 ; Victoria, further amount required, $700 ; additional amount for printing Dominion notes, $20,000 ; additional amount required in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, $5,000, $29,050.

Mr. FIELDING. These votes for assistant Receiver General's offices are taken, not with a view to the distribution necessary to be made, but to permit the department to revise the salary lists in the assistant Receiver General's offices and to grant moderate increases to the members of the clerical staff. Thus I prefer not to indicate the officers to whom it is proposed to give the increases—though I have the names here—as I would like an opportunity for further revision. These clerks are doing very important and responsible work and they are not too well paid.

Mr. FOSTER. In each case there are a number of officers among whom these sums will be distributed ? About how many in each case ?

Mr. FIELDING. About three or four in each office. The increase will be about $100 to each. I feel sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) would regard these increases in every case as justifiable.

Mr. FOSTER. No objection.

Mr. FIELDING. As to the printing of the Dominion notes, our appropriation has been $110,000. This will increase the amount to $130,000. In the fiscal year 1903-4 the actual expenditure was $129,000, so this vote is necessary to supply what experience shows will be needed. The House is aware, as we had some conversation on the subject on the supplementary estimates of last year, that we have been making an effort to improve the condition of our circulation by issuing cleaner notes. And that, I am glad to know, is appreciated.

Mr. BERGERON. Why was not the whole amount asked ?

Mr. FIELDING. The estimate was prepared when I was not present. We might reasonably have anticipated this at the beginning.

Civil Government—Governor General's secretary's office—clerical assistance, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $500.

Mr. FOSTER. Why does the minister put in this proviso ?

Mr. FIELDING. Because of a lady who came out from the old country with His Excellency, and for whom we have made provision for the close of the year. This is to make provision for the coming year.

Department of Agriculture—to increase the salary of A. G. Doughty, Dominion archivist, to $2,200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $250.

Mr. FOSTER. When was Mr. Doughty appointed ?

Mr. FISHER. On May 16th, 1904.

Mr. FOSTER. At what salary ?

Mr. FISHER. At the lowest of his class as chief clerk, $1,900. But he is an officer of very special qualifications, and I do not consider that $1,950 is proper compensation for such a man occupying the position of archivist.

Mr. BERGERON. I know the gentleman, and I think he deserves twice as much.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was not the salary made more adequate when Mr. Doughty was appointed ?

Mr. FISHER. The late Dr. Brymner was chief clerk. When Mr. Doughty was appointed he came in at the bottom of his class. I left the appointment that way, but I take this opportunity to give him an increase.

Mr. FOSTER. What was Mr. Brymner's salary at the time of his death ?

Mr. FISHER. He was near the head of the chief clerks' class, and his salary was $2,350 or $2,400.

Mr. FOSTER. What are Mr. Doughty's qualifications ?

Mr. FISHER. He is a graduate of Oxford, an English gentleman who has lived fourteen or fifteen years in this country. He was in the service of the Quebec government as joint librarian and secretary to one of the ministers. He is the author of works on Canadian history, notably one on the taking of Quebec, which is quite a standard work.

Mr. FOSTER. What is his age ?

Mr. FISHER. About thirty-eight or forty.

Department of Agriculture—additional amount required for the promotion of a first-class clerk to a chief clerkship, $300.

Mr. FISHER. That is my private secretary.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is his present salary ?

Mr. FISHER. It is $1,600 ; and I propose to reduce the amount paid to him as private secretary, so that the salary will be the same. But he will be higher in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has this gentleman been in the service ?

Mr. FISHER. About eight years ; he came in when I became minister.

Mr. FOSTER. He came in as what ?

Mr. FISHER. He came in as my private secretary and second-class clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. This is pretty rapid promotion.

Mr. FISHER. He is a man of exceptional qualifications.

Mr. FOSTER. They all are that, you know. I do not question this gentleman's qualifications. But he came in as second-class clerk at a salary of—what ?

Mr. FISHER. I think that he was first private secretary and not in the service, and had a higher salary than the lowest of his class, which would be $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. This is very rapid promotion. When I came into office as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and afterwards became Minister of Finance, I thought I was doing very well when I put in my private secretary as second-class clerk at $1,100. Thereafter he simply went up with his grades and received the regular increase. But here you have a man who has been eight years in the service, and now you make him a chief clerk, which allows him to go to a maximum of how much ?

Mr. FISHER. Of $2,500 ; but it will take him ten years to reach it.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem to me that a minister ought to use his exceptional powers to put forward a certain man so rapidly. He may be a good man. But there are a great many good men in the service, in all branches of it, who spend every hour of the day in the work of the department. This man of course must be monopolized by the minister himself, he does not do any chief clerkship work, he cannot do that as long as he is kept employed as the private secretary of a busy minister.

Mr. FISHER. That is much harder work.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be much harder work in one way, and he may put in more hours; but, of course, there are also bright spots in his career that the man who goes through the daily routine of office work week after week and year after year, has not, and these are to a certain extent a compensation. It would seem to me that, commencing at the bottom of a second-class clerkship and getting up into a first-class clerkship, was a sufficient promotion. We must bear in mind that we have to act in view of a large service. These things are noted, they have a certain effect upon the service as a whole, and it makes not the best kind of feeling in the service for honest, capable and efficient servants plodding along every day, and who have not any of these nice outings that a private secretary certainly has with his minister. Their salary creeps up at the rate of $50 a year, with lapses sometimes between, and when they get to the top class they have to wait there until some opportunity arises by vacancy or otherwise, to get up into a higher class. When you take a young man and make him a chief clerk, and then your secretary—in my time that would be considered an extraordinary thing for a minister to do, but of course things move more rapidly now.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The permanent salary now, I understand, is about $1,900 ?

Mr. FISHER. $1,900, and $300 an allowance to make the sum of money he is getting now.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You are giving him a better position in the service and a better permanent salary ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Additional amount required for the promotion of three second-class clerks, patent examiners, to the position of first-class clerks, $550.

Mr. FISHER. I have found that it is impossible to keep patent examiners, who are technical officers, unless we give them higher pay. Within the last year I have lost two of the most efficient of these officers. Three of them are graduates of universities, with technical degrees, which has been the rule ever since I have been appointing patent examiners. I regret to say that within the last year I have had to lose some of the best men because they could not receive more than the ordinary statutory increase. I have three who have been appointed now for many years and who are working up slowly. I had five, two of them have gone, and I know that I will have to give these others this promotion. Later on in the same item I am asking for an exceptional special increase to several others. These were lower down and new arrivals in the service. I did not feel that I could give them promotion to a higher class, but I want to give them increases greater than the ordinary increase in the statutory allowance, simply for the reason that they are technical officers, and I cannot keep them at their present salary. One of them is getting $1,350, two others are getting $1,300. Two of them will get an increase of $200, and one $150. They will now all commence at the bottom of the first class at $1,500.

Additional amount required for the promotion of two junior second-class clerks to the position of second-class clerks, $400.

Mr. FISHER. These are two second-class clerks who have shown unusual efficiency, and I wish to give them promotion.

To provide for three additional junior second-class clerkships, E. A. Thomas at $1,100, W. A. Fraser at $1,000, transferred from outside service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $2,900.

Mr. FISHER. Ever since I have been in the office there has been practically two accounting officers, one with the department and one in Prof. Robertson's branch, dairying and agriculture. As the House knows, Prof. Robertson resigned a short time ago, and in the reorganization I thought it was better that the accounting should all be brought under one head. These men were in the outside service, not on the Civil Service list and not subject to the Civil Service Rules. I am bringing them in for the purpose of putting them on the civil service list. There are three of them. The two here mentioned are in the enjoyment of the salaries they are now getting in the outside service, and in bringing them in I felt that I ought to give them more salary, and therefore I had these words added, 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' as they do not come in at the bottom of their class.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. At what salary did they enter.

Mr. FISHER. I think they commenced at $600, or perhaps lower.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the salary of a man entering the service now ?

Mr. FISHER. A third-class clerk commences at $500 and works up. A junior second class commences at $800. Mr. Thomas was receiving a salary of $1,100, and Mr. Fraser $1,000; the other one was getting a lower salary.

To increase the salaries of patent examiners W. H. T. McGill, $150 ; M. L. Rush, $150 ; W. H. Withrow, $150 ; J. Kilgallan, $200 ; notwithstanding anything in the Civil Servic Act, $650.

Mr. BARR. What salary did these gentlemen receive before ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. McGill is getting $1,300 ; he will get $1,450. Mr. Rush is getting $1,250, Mr. Withrow $1,250, and Mr. Kilgallan $850. Mr. Kilgallan, although the lowest, has been the longest in the service, but he was not always a patent examiner. Mr. Withrow has been in since 1902, Mr. Rush since 1897, and Mr. Kilgallan since 1890. These are just in the same position as the patent examiners I promoted before, only they were not so high up in the service.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Does it not seem strange that out of seven items four should contain the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ?' It seems to me that it is time the Act was amended so that it would not be necessary to put these words in almost every item, I think that when we have these words year after year in so many items it makes the Civil Service Act of very little use. During the recess it would be well for the government to consider the subject and see if we cannot have the Act changed.

Mr. FISHER. Certain of them are technical officers and of course they have to be dealt with in a different way from the ordinary clerk in the service.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Cannot the Act be made to cover cases of that kind ?

Mr. FISHER. Possibly it might be. The other cases are those in which officers have been in the outside service and we are bringing them into the department.

Contingencies—further amount required, including M. A. Prentiss at $550 and S. Hunter at $550, transferred from outside service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,000.

Mr. FISHER. These contingencies are due to the fact that there are four temporary clerks who will come under the Civil Service Act in the accounting office. Two have not passed the Civil Service examination consequently these words have to come in. The others have passed the Civil Service examination.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Why do you take in those who have not passed the Civil Service examination ?

Mr. FISHER. Because these are two ladies who have been a long time engaged in this work. While they were in that service they did not require to pass the Civil Service examination. They were in the accounting branch to which the Civil Service examination did not apply. It would be unfair and bad for the service to dismiss them after they had been a number of years in the service and take on others who might have passed the examination. Therefore, I ask these words to be put in so as to bring them into the accounting office of the department which I think is better than the old arrangement.

Mr. BARR. Is there any hope of their passing the Civil Service examination, or are they to go on continuously without first passing that examination ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that I should say it, but I think they are over the age.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not wish to be unfair to any class of civil servants, but I thought it was necessary to have an explanation. I think we ought to have explanations of this kind in regard to all the items we pass. I do not think it always follows that because persons can pass the Civil Service examination they are good officers.

Civil government—Post Office Department—to provide for the appointment of Miss Mary Kennedy to a third class clerkship from 1st July, 1905, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $500.

Mr. FISHER. This is the appointment of a lady who has not passed the Civil Service examination and who is also beyond the age.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is her home in Belleville ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think so.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps so.

To provide a special increase of salary for the undermentioned employees from the 1st July, 1905, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act : Sidney Smith, controller of postal stores, $100 ; Wm. Smith, secretary, $200, $300.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a special sum voted for two special increases. What is the rule that is adopted in the post offices ?

For instance, take the post office in this city. Do the yearly increases go to deserving clerks who do their duty satisfactorily and have no reports against them ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any examination which is necessary to be passed by these clerks in order to secure an increase?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. For the statutory increase ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I mean.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that for two years back there has been. When I spoke I meant the examination for promotion from one class to another.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the authority for that ? I know that you should have an examination under the post office Act if you are going to promote a clerk from one class to another, but I do not know that there is any provision in the Post Office Act by which you make these clerks pass an examination as a condition of their getting their increases. Is that a regulation ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed it is a departmental regulation. It was adopted two years ago for the purpose of inducing ambition in the clerks and to promote efficiency so as to make them interested in their work.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the nature of the examination ?

Mr. FISHER. It is an examination on the duties of their office ?

Mr. FOSTER. An examination on the duties of their office. In the post office for instance, each clerk has his sphere of work.

Mr. FISHER. And also on the general post office regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to figure out how it would be possible to have an examination which would be clear and at the same time be indicative of anything on just the routine duties that the clerk is engaged in. Of course, I can very well see that if you are going to promote him from one class to another this examination may be necessary, but I can hardly see how it comes in while you keep the clerk to practically the same routine duties.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that there is a test. For instance, in the post office there will be a test in regard to sorting letters, and test questions will be asked in regard to post offices in the country, as to the knowledge of postal regulations, postal rates and so on, so as to make every clerk inform himself on the subject, a knowledge of which would enable him better to perform his ordinary duties.

Mr. FOSTER. I can hardly conceive it possible that you would keep a clerk there if he did not know the postal rates and have that sort of knowledge which is absolutely essential to any performance of his duties.

Mr. FISHER. The knowledge that the examination is coming keeps him up to the mark.

Mr. FOSTER. Who authorizes and carries out that examination ?

Mr. FISHER. The deputy Postmaster General supervises the arrangements for the examination and the heads of the branches carry them out.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the examination oral or written, or both ?

Mr. FISHER. Where it is in the form of questions, it is a written examination. Where it is what is called a case examination, the sorting of letters and that kind of work, it is actual performance.

Contingencies—engraving postal maps, $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for ?

Mr. FISHER. This amount is required for the engraving of copper postal maps. Heretofore these maps have been prepared by a lithographic process but changes could not be made in the lithographic plates. The advantage of engraving on copper is that when changes are required they can be made on the copper plates. These plates are the property of the Post Office Department and the maps produced therefrom are much superior in workmanship.

Mr. FOSTER. Who does this work ?

Mr. FISHER. The Toronto Lithographing Company and the Copp, Clarke Company have done some of it by tender.

Department of Finance—
To increase the salary of J. Fraser to $2,800, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act .. .. ..$	300 00
To increase the salary of T. C. Boville to $2,500, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	300 00
For one 1st class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act	1,900 00
For one additional 2nd class clerk.. ..	1,200 00
For three additional junior 2nd class clerks at $800, one notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	2,400 00
		6,100 00

Mr. FIELDING. There are two items here for increases of salaries notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act. The first one is Mr. Fraser, one of the oldest officers in the public service, who is the chief accountant of the Department of Customs. He was at the maximum of his class and the only way that any special recognition could be given of his services and of the responsibility of his work was to give him a special increase. We therefore propose to make his salary $2,800, which, I think, is only adequate having regard to his long service and the very responsible nature of his duties. He has been at the maximum of his class one year.

The increase to Mr. Boville is the case of another gentleman whose services are particularly valuable in the department and who in a few weeks hence will take up the duty of secretary of the department, the gentleman occupying that position having been obliged to retire owing to ill-health.

Provision is made for two additional officers in reference to whom the 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' clause is put in. In both these cases it is contemplated to have in the service gentlemen who although they do not possess the civil service certificate have that which for my purpose is better, that is practical experience as accountants in different concerns. In one case a gentleman who is to be appointed as a first-class clerk has had very wide experience in connection with government accounts and is an officer particularly adapted to our work. The other case is that of a gentleman who will enter the service in rather a subordinate position, but who has also had practical experience as a business accountant and in the work which it is intended they shall perform experience of that kind makes them of more value than that of young men just out of school who might possess certificates.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an additional second-class clerk.

Mr. FIELDING. We are proposing a small increase in the staff. The work of the department is growing and we must make provision for some contemplated changes. Some of the older officials are gradually passing away and we are getting in younger men. We must increase the staff occasionally.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Treadwell being superannuated ?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Treadwell, who has been absent for over a year, has been forced to recognize that owing to his ill-health he is not equal to the duties of his office and he will have to retire at an early date. Mr. Boville will take his place.

Department of Railways and Canals—
To increase the salary of L. K. Jones, secretary of the department, to $2,700 notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.. .. ..$	200 00
To provide for the promotion of J. L. Payne from a first-class clerk to chief clerkship, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	250 00
For the appointment to a first-class clerkship of H. F. Alward, a barrister-at-law, as assistant law clerk	1,500 00
For the appointment of two temporary clerks, to junior second-class clerkships at $800 per annum, one
F. W. Addy, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.....$1,600 00
	$3,550 00

Mr. EMMERSON. The first item is an increase of $200 for Mr. Jones, who has been secretary of the department for a number of years. He has been in the service, I think, since 1871, and has reached the maximum of his class. It seemed to me that in view of his long services and of his efficiency it was desirable to recognize that, and the only way it could be done would be by a vote of a special amount notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Has he had his regular increases ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He had reached the $2,500, the limit of his class. He is the secretary of the department, he acts as deputy minister during the absence of Mr. Schreiber and holds a very responsible position, and of course in consequence of his large and long experience in the department he is very familiar with the details of its working and is certainly a very efficient officer.

Mr. HAGGART. How long has Mr. Payne been in the department ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Payne was transferred from the Militia Department to the Railway Department in August, 1897.

Mr. HAGGART. How long had he been in the service before that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am speaking from memory, but I think it was in the eighties.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am of the opinion that it was later than that; I think we ought to have that information accurately.

Mr. EMMERSON. He was here I think in the press gallery. His first appointment was in 1893. He has performed the duties of private secretary to the minister since 1897, when he started with Mr. Blair. Previous to that he was private secretary to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and previous to that to Sir John Carling.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is his present salary apart from his allowance as private secretary and what is that allowance ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He has been getting $1,600 and $600 as an allowance. It is proposed to appoint him to this position, which will give him $1,900 and a portion of the allowance. It means an increase under the arrangement to Mr. Payne's salary of $150.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You propose to cut down the amount you give him as private secretary ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. To what amount ?

Mr. EMMERSON. To $500.

Mr. FOSTER. The amount is $600.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and I propose to give him $500 of that $600. Provision is made for $250 here. I think it is $1,650 plus $250, equals $1,900 and this plus $500 equals $2,400. Under the present arrangement he will be getting $2,300 if he were to continue to get the whole allowance of a private secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he a first-class clerk now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the maximum of a first-class clerkship ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $1,900.

Mr. FOSTER. What objection has the minister to letting him go on with his increases in the first-class clerkship ? He has quite a road to travel there, there is still nearly $300 for him to get in that way and you could pay him his secretary's allowance of $600. What is the necessity for this ? It is much the same as what the Minister of Agriculture has done. He took a man who had been only eight years in the service and made him chief clerk and gives him besides his allowance as private secretary.

Mr. FISHER. One half of it.

Mr. FOSTER. This man has been in the department eleven years.

Mr. EMMERSON. Twelve years.

Mr. FOSTER. Well twelve years. You are putting him up $350 in his class and then raising him to a grade higher. This is most extraordinary promotion. What is the necessity for making him a chief clerk ? The minister does not expect to go out and leave him unprovided for. The government expect to remain in power a few years yet. Why then do you make him this year a chief clerk when he has still $350 to work out in his first-class clerkship ? And besides that you give him the work of a private secretary, which does not leave him many spare moments.

Mr. EMMERSON. By reason of his experience and ability and knowledge, Mr. Payne is entitled to this increase. He is a very busy man. He has not the spare hours that are usually alloted to civil servants. From the earliest hour in the morning until the very latest at night, even during the hours this House is sitting, he is occupied.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the necessity for another chief clerk in the department ? You say that because he is efficient and a faithful servant you make him a chief clerk. You do this in order to remunerate him. But he receives a salary as private secretary of the minister besides receives the salary of a first-class clerk, which is all the department requires. But in order further to remunerate him, without showing that there is any necessity for another chief clerk in the department, you create him chief clerk. That seems to me curious logic. The law requires that the minister should first of all have a certificate from the deputy minister that another chief clerk is required. That is submitted to the Governor General in Council, and when you get their approval you ask for the vote.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend has omitted to say that before the certificate from the deputy minister is received and before the Order in Council is passed, you must have a vote by parliament. Mr. Payne is doing the work of a chief clerk. His duties require him to do work which certainly could only be required of one who has the qualifications for a chief clerkship. As private secretary of the minister, he has not merely to attend to correspondence, but the carrying out a number of transactions in connection with the department which are of a class that call for the qualifications of a chief clerk. As he does that kind of work, it seems to me that he ought to receive the pay it is worth. What we are doing is only fair and just and what has been done in the past, and is only a fair recognition of merit.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says that first of all, before he can change the theoretical organization of his department, he has to get the vote of parliament. I differ from him entirely. First of all he should have a certificate from the deputy minister showing the necessity for another chief clerk, and that should have the approval of the Governor General in Council. Then you get your vote for the purpose of enabling you to carry out that change.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon. friend is in error.

Mr. FOSTER. This is no question of Mr. Payne's ability as clerk or private secretary, in both of which capacities he is a very capable man. Is the minister going to use Mr. Payne during the coming years as his private secretary ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I take this ground. He is to be continued as private secretary. That will take all his time. The minister's work is quite enough for one man to attend to in that respect. That is, you are not going to employ Mr. Payne in the least as a chief clerk in the department.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a clerical error there, which I will point out. I attempted to make it clear that incidental to his duties as private secretary there is work connected with the department which requires the qualifications of a chief clerk which is the work of a chief clerk, departmental work, which Mr. Payne, because of his experience and familiarity with the department, is enabled to attend to, and thereby relieve the minister of a great deal of departmental work which he otherwise would have to attend to. I have found the value of Mr. Payne's services in that direction.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Payne may be the most valuable man in the world, but the law requires that before you make a change in the theoretical organization of the department, some reason must be assigned for it. The law requires a report from the deputy head of the department, confirmed by the minister and sanctioned by the Governor in Council. We have not received that information. We are not disputing the ability of Mr. Payne. You may have a hundred persons in the department with abilities that are not at all compensated by the pay they receive, but it is the duty of the minister first of all to know what is required for the purpose of carrying on the business of the department.

Mr. EMMERSON. I admire the persistency of my hon. friend. Last year he made this same contention. It was on that occasion mildly suggested that the preliminary step was to get the money voted, and after that, if the deputy recommended and the minister confirmed and the council confirmed the recommendation and it received the sign manual of the Governor General, the appointment would be complete. I understand that to be the routine; but if there were any question as to that, I may say that I have the recommendation of the deputy minister for this, and if it has not gone through council, I apprehend that it is because the money has not yet been voted.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the minister must know that before a vote is given some reason should be assigned for the change, but we are not given that. We are asked to make this vote because this person is thoroughly qualified and because, in the absence of the minister, he has to take upon him duties which devolve on a chief clerk. The first thing we should consider is the necessity for a chief clerkship at all in the department. We have not been given any information as to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as this depends on Mr. Payne's ability, I think that all who know him recognize that he is a man of considerable ability, and especially executive ability. I think there would not have been much difficulty about the matter if the minister, in the first place, had produced the requisites which the statute prescribes. The minister has justified it to a certain extent upon Mr. Payne's management, and apparently on the theory that the minister should be allowed to interfere as little as possible with the working of the department. Perhaps my hon. friend from Lanark might be willing to accept that, and let the item pass.

Department of Railways and Canals—for the appointment to a first-class clerkship of H. F. Alward, a barrister-at-law, as assistant law clerk, $1,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Alward, a graduate of New Brunswick University, and a barrister-at-law of the province of New Brunswick, has been acting as assistant law clerk since March, 1904. He is a very efficient official; I can say that, not only on my own authority, but on the authority of the deputy minister, and on the recommendation of the deputy minister he is made permanent in the service and a first-class clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. That gives the minister a legal staff ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It does not give it; we have it now. I found it in the department when I came there, and it has been continued.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, you found a law officer ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I found a law clerk and an assistant law clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. What has become of the former law clerk ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He went to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, in Toronto, and Mr. Hansard took his place. Mr. Alward takes the place of Mr. Hansard.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is keeping up the traditions of the department, and I suppose the object is to relieve the Justice Department of some of its duties ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I find the services of the law clerk very valuable in making researches without having to refer every little departmental matter to the Department of Justice.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, all matters of moment you refer to the Justice Department ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, yes.

Department of Railways and Canals—for the appointment of two temporary clerks to junior second-class clerkships at $600 per annum, one S. W. Addy, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,600.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is in the department what you might call permanent temporary clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. But you do not find any temporary permanents, do you ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are quite a number of these temporary permanent officers in the department. The late Mr. Ridout, the hydraulic engineer, was one.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister create two new second-class clerkships ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Instead of having the officers as temporary clerks we make them permanent. One is a young lady who has been in the deputy's branch and who is a very efficient typewriter and stenographer. The other is Mr. Addy, who has shown himself as a very efficient officer. He is from the city of St. John, a son of Dr. Addy there. He served with credit with the first Canadian contingent in South Africa, and on his return, was appointed to this department as a temporary clerk.

Department of Militia and Defence—to increase the salary of J. W. Borden, accountant and paymaster-general to $2,800, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $300.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a case of nepotism ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. It will require some explanation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The explanation is that Mr. Borden's duties have been increased. Under the statute passed last session, he is a member of the militia council. The Militia Department has grown very much, and its expenditures are largely increased. There is an enormous variety of expenditure, involving a study of the thousand and one orders governing pay. A special audit of the branch has been established, which, I think, is most important. Altogether, I think, that an officer of Mr. Borden's standing, who has been at the head of his class for seven or eight years should receive not less than $2,800.

Department of Militia and Defence—
To provide for additional clerks, as follows :
1 chief clerk..	$1,900 00
1 second-class clerk..	1,200 00
3 junior second-class clerks at $800 each per annum, including J. M. Brown, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	2,400 00
5 third-class clerks at $500 each per annum..	2,500 00
To increase the salary of E. B. Holt to $1,900 per annum, and of J. A. McCann to $1,700 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	200 00
To provide for allowance to secretary of Militia Council, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	300 00

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Taking these together with the item we have just discussed, there is an apparent increase of $8,200. It really means an increase of $2,200. A new chief clerkship has been created for the military branch, which is an increase; and at the request of General Lake and the officers of that branch, and on the recommendation of the deputy minister, I have taken this step. It has been proposed to promote Mr. Beard, now a first-class clerk who received $1,600 to the position. Therefore, the increase involved is not $1,900 but $300. The second-class clerkship will be filled by a promotion the addition involved being $300. In the case of the three junior second-class clerks, the increase there is $400, for we are promoting men from the third-class or temporary grades. In the same way, the five third-class clerks will be appointed from a list of temporary clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, do you fill up the list of temporary ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. Mr. E. B. Holt has been in the accountant's branch and will practically have the duties of assistant accountant. He has been in the service since 1882, and was formerly a banker. His present salary is $1,800. He is a very good man, and I think deserves this increase of $100, which will take him to the maximum of his class. Mr. McCann has been in the service since 1890, his present salary being $1,600. He is in the contracts' branch, a branch organized about a year ago, and is really doing the work of assistant director of contracts. These are men deserving of the increases it is proposed to give them, and giving these increases will add to the efficiency of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. It will increase the staff by ten clerks.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The permanent staff, yes. But I think there will be no more than one—certainly not more than two—actually.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister made a corresponding decrease in the vote for temporary clerks ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The vote in the main estimates will be reduced by $6,600 ; that is to say that amount will not be used and will lapse.

As to the allowance for the secretary to the Militia Council, that vote was taken because the gentleman who does that work, Mr. Jarvis, is obliged to work over hours and to give special attention to his work. It is work of very great importance. A great deal of the proceedings of the council are necessarily secret, and it is essential to have a man who can be trusted and who is thoroughly familiar with the work of the department. Mr. Jarvis is a chief clerk and has charge of all the correspondence and all the papers and documents of the department. As long as he does the work of a secretary he will receive $300 in addition, which will give him $2,700.

Contingencies—further amount required : clerical assistance, $1,000 ; printing and stationery, $500 ; sundries, $500.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the extra clerical assistance ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is special work which is required at certain times, in the way of copying, and particularly in revising regulations and orders. That work is going on now, and we require some clerical assistance for that purpose. Printing and stationery is increasing year by year, printing is increasing enormously in the Militia Department. The instructions are all printed, and I have not felt like restricting it.

Department of Customs—to increase the salary of the assistant commissioner of customs to $3,000, $200 ; to increase the salary of R. F. Farrow, accountant, to $2,450, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $200 ; to increase the salary of F. T. Bennet, chief statistical officer, to $2,250, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $200 ; to increase the salary of Alfred Morin, chief clerk, Seizures Branch, to $2,200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $200 ; total, $800.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the assistant commissioner ?

Mr. PATERSON. John Bain. Mr. Farrow is chief clerk and accountant, at the head of the accountant's department. Mr. Bennet is chief clerk of statistics, and Mr. Morin is chief clerk of the seizures branch.

Department of Inland Revenue—further amount required to increase the salary of Wm. Himsworth, chief clerk and secretary, from $2,500 to $2,600, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Himsworth is secretary of the department and has been there since 1868. His salary is increased by $200. There has been a mistake in putting it at $100 in the estimate.

Further amount required for promotion of three first-class clerks to chief clerkships, $300.

Mr. BRODEUR. These clerks are Mr. Shaw, Mr. Morin and Mr. Doyon, who have been in the service respectively from 1872, 1874 and 1876. Mr. Shaw is chief statistical clerk, and after having been in the service now for thirty-three years, I think he deserves an increase. He is taking charge of a very important branch. Mr. Valin has been in charge of the financial accounts of the department. Mr. Doyon is in charge of weights and measures, gas and electric lights accounts, a very important branch, with regard to the administration of which I intend to make some important changes.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you three chief clerkships now at your disposal ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, we have only two chief clerks in the department. In some other departments there are as many as eleven.

To provide for the appointment of one second-class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. My private secretary is leaving very soon, and I intend to replace him by a young man who is a graduate of a university, but who has passed the age limit, and I have to take a special vote to cover his case. He is above thirty-five years of age. I think it is better to put his name in the vote, Ernest Desaulniers. He does not require to pass the civil service examination, being a graduate of Laval University.

Department of the Interior—to increase the salaries of the following officials: P. T. G. Rothwell, $200 ; P. G. Keyes, $200 ; G. U. Ryley, $200 ; notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $600.

Mr. FOSTER. What are these officers getting at the present time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Rothwell is getting $2,500, and it is proposed to raise him to $2,700. He is the law clerk of the department and has been in the service since 1883. Mr. Keyes is getting $2,500. He has been in the department since July, 1878. Mr. Ryley has been 23 years in the service. His salary is $2,450, and we are increasing it to $2,650.

Department of the Interior—to increase the salary of Jas. White, geographer, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $200.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. White, from the 1st of July, will be getting $2,050; it is proposed to raise him to $2,250. He was in the employ of the geological survey from the 28th of January, 1881, to the 1st July, 1899, when he was transferred to the Department of the Interior and appointed geographer.

Department of the Interior—to provide for one promotion to a first class clerkship, $225.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is this ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Surtees. He entered the Department of the Interior in 1885.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary is he getting now ?

Mr. OLIVER. $1,275. This gives him $1,500.

Department of the Interior—to provide for the promotion of T. W. Hodgins to a junior second class clerkship, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $192.50.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Hodgins has been in the service for over eighteen years. From the 10th February, 1887, to the 24th April, 1896, his services were divided between the Department of the Interior and the House of Commons, where he was employed in the library. Mr. Hodgins is attached to the secretary's branch of the Department of the Interior, he is 54 years of age and in view of his long period of faithful service it has been decided to give him a junior second-class clerkship. The sum of $607 was provided for in the main estimates and this additional sum will increase his salary to $800, the minimum salary of a junior second-class clerk.

Department of the Interior—to provide for the promotion of three third-class clerks to the junior second-class, $650.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the explanation of this ?

Mr. OLIVER. To promote three third-class clerks, Misses Ida Dunlop, Edith Dunlop and M. B. Williams, who have been employed since 1901, to second-class clerkships.

Civil government—Department of the Secretary of State—
To provide for one additional third class clerkship..	$500 00
To increase the salary of P. Pelletier, chief clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	200 00
Department of Public Printing and Stationery—
To increase the salary of John Foran, housekeeper..	100 00
To increase the salary of W. McMahon, Superintendent of Printing, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	200 00

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is a housekeeper of printing and stationery ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a man who takes care of the Printing Bureau.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is his salary now ?

Mr. FIELDING. $800.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And the other one ?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Pelletier is getting $2,405, and he will get $200 additional. He has been in the service since 1888.

Civil government—Department of Public Works—
To provide for payment of chief engineer at the rate of $3,500 per annum	$ 100 00
To provide for payment of chief clerk of engineering branch and of parliamentary estimates and appropriations at the rate of $2,800 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	300 00
To provide for salary of N. M. Mathé, 2nd class clerk, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..	1,200 00
To provide for payment of chief architect at the rate of $3,500 per annum..	300 00
To provide for the payment of the salary of $1,200 granted by parliament for the fiscal year 1904-05 to H. J. Guppy, second class clerk, in full, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	83 33

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any special explanation of these ?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) is not here, but I have some recollection of some of these things myself. The first item, providing for the payment of chief engineer, refers to Mr. Lafleur, whose salary is $3,500, which is not out of proportion to the position of a professional gentleman who is the chief engineer of a great department. The second item is to provide for an increase to a gentleman who is also an engineer, and who has the particular duty of caring for the estimates of the department. This is Mr. Steckel who is referred to. I am told that Mr. Mathé is still in the civil service. There must be some special reason why they require a special vote, but I have not been advised as to that. The next item is to provide for the salary of Mr. Ewart, the chief architect, a professional gentleman of very high standing, and I do not think it will be believed that his salary is too high. The last item appears to be necessary by reason of a difficulty. I think the officer referred to, by one day, failed to connect between two years, and, technically, he could not get the benefit of his promotion. This is to overcome the difficulty. The matter was dealt with by Order in Council some time ago, and this item has been introduced accordingly.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up on Monday after private Bills ?

Mr. FIELDING. We should like to be free to take any business that now arises. I think the Minister of Militia purposes giving his militia statement, and then we will have the Tariff Bill and estimates generally.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 10, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 191) respecting the Joliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Railway Company.—Mr. O. E. Talbot.

SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GEOFFRION moved that Bill (No. 149) respecting the South Shore Railway Company be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for further consideration.

Mr. HAGGART. There must be some reason for that.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. This Bill came before the Railway Committee the other day and was rejected, in the absence of the solicitor of the company. That railway now being in the hands of a receiver, it was thought by the committee that this extension of the delay which was asked for by the company would benefit the company and not the creditors ; it has, however, been ascertained since that this amendment is going to benefit the creditors of the company, and it is with the consent of those who were opposing the Bill that this motion is made.

Mr. SPROULE. When that Bill was in the committee it seemed to me that there was a decided impatience on the part of the committee to hear any discussion regarding it. As soon as the preamble was read it was declared lost. I argued strongly, in the absence of the hon. member who had charge of the Bill, that a delay should be given until the member who had charge of it was present. As a matter of course, delays have always been allowed heretofore under such circumstances. But I frankly confess that I think that during the present session, at least, that committee is not doing its full duty. Very often it displays an impatience that is hardly consistent with logical and proper work. On the same day another Bill was summarily disposed of in a way that I would not expect from the committee.

Motion agreed to.

MEMORANDA FROM MILITIA COUNCIL.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved for leave to lay on the table of the House a memorandum by the military members of the Militia Council; also a memorandum by the finance members of the said council.

Motion agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that the rule be suspended and that these papers be printed. I hope to have these memoranda printed in order that they may be in the hands of all the members when the militia estimates are under discussion. I have had a large number typewritten, but I think it would be desirable to have them printed.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS TO FILL VACANCIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to introduce Bill (No. 194), which is along the lines of the legislation which has been adopted in the province of Ontario; and it is designed to provide that a writ shall be issued within a reasonable period when the seat of any member becomes vacant by death or otherwise during a parliamentary term. In the province of Ontario there was a delay, I think, on one occasion of about eighteen months, during which a constituency remained unrepresented. It was owing to the scandal that was caused on that occasion that this legislation was passed in the province of Ontario. In this parliament we have had somewhat similar experiences, although not quite equal to that in the province of Ontario. If I remember rightly, the St. James division of Montreal remained vacant for more than a year, because the government did not see fit to take the necessary proceedings for the election after the Speaker's warrant had been issued. The Bill I propose to introduce reads as follows:

1. Section 8 of the Act entitled An Act respecting the House of Commons, being chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, is amended by adding thereto the following as subsection (3):

3. In case the seat of any member of the House of Commons is vacated for any cause, if the writ for the election of a new member has not issued within after such vacancy occurred, it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to issue the writ forthwith; which writ shall be addressed to such person and be dated and be returnable on such days as he shall determine; and all courts, officers and persons shall give full effect to the writ so issued.

2. Section 9 of the said Act respecting the House of Commons is amended by inserting after the word 'writ' in the second line thereof the words 'or the said clerk may himself, pursuant to the provisions of the next preceding section, issue said new writ.

3. Section 10 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, is repealed and the following section is substituted therefor:

(10.) Every writ for an election shall be addressed to such person and be dated and be returnable on such days as the Governor General determines, or as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery determines, in cases where such clerk has authority to so determine, pursuant to the Act respecting the House of Commons.

(2.) It shall be forwarded by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the person to whom it is so addressed, and shall be transmitted to such person by mail unless the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall otherwise order.

(3.) It shall be in the form 'A' mutatis mutandis.

(4.) Section 11 of the Dominion Elections Act 1900, is repealed and the following section is substituted therefor:

11. The person to whom a writ is addressed, as hereinbefore provided, shall be the returning officer at the election to which such writ relates; provided always, that if the person to whom the writ has been addressed refuses, or is disqualified or unable to act, the Governor General, or the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, where such person had been nominated by him, may appoint another person to be such returning officer.

These amendments in the Dominion Elections Act are made necessary by the amendment in the House of Commons Act to which I have referred. It is very probable that in accordance with the general practice it would have been better to have made these amendments to the two Acts by separate Bills. However, as all these amendments relate to the same subject, I can as readily bring them to the attention of the government by introducing them in one Bill as by dividing them into two, and therefore I have departed a little from what I think to be the better practice in presenting this Bill to the House and especially to the attention of the government.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA—ROADS AND ROAD ALLOWANCES.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 195) respecting Roads and Road Allowances in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman give a brief explanation of it ?

Mr. OLIVER. This is merely to place formally in the hands of the government of the new provinces the same authority in regard to roads and road allowances as that which is now held by the government of the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—TRADING STAMPS.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 196) in amendment of the Criminal Code, 1892. He said : The aim of this Bill is to do away as far as possible with the mischief connected with the trading stamp system. It has been introduced at the request of the Retail Merchants' Association and other associations of a similar character of the province of Quebec, and is designed to apply to the gentleman who disposes of the stamps, to the merchant who uses them and to the customer who seeks them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By making their Act a criminal offence?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. By making their Act a criminal offence.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

On the Orders of the Day being called :

Mr. OLIVER. I beg to lay on the table a further instalment of information asked for by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in regard to half-breed scrip. I may say that the balance will be down to-morrow.

THE NIXON CASE.

Mr. OLIVER. In reply to a question by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in regard to the Nixon case, the questions asked in regard to the transactions of the sub-land agency cannot be answered at this office as the returns from the sub-land agencies do not come into the central office. I have now another investigation going on at Macleod. I have issued instructions that the information asked for by the hon. member for North Toronto shall be procured at Macleod as it is the only place at which it can be procured.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. minister what kind of an investigation it is that is going on at Macleod? Is it simply into the accounts?

Mr. OLIVER. It is of a similar character to the one held before, but I have issued special instructions to inquire into the particulars as to the weight of responsibility resting upon the father and son especially in regard to those town lot transactions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—BOARD OF INTERNAL ECONOMY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some time ago a reference was made to the proceedings of the Board of Internal Economy of the House of Commons. I suggested at that time that during all the time I had been a member of this House, since 1896. I had never observed any report or any statement of the proceedings of that committee and I asked that these might be brought down. I think it was promised that that would be done, but it apparently has been overlooked. May I direct the attention of the chairman of the board, or the Prime Minister, or the Speaker, or whoever is responsible, and ask that these proceedings be brought down and laid on the table of the House for the last ten or fifteen years ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have been for a longer period in the House than my hon. friend and I am not aware that such a report has ever been brought down. I will bring the matter to the attention of the chairman.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a long report brought down last year and it will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For one year or a number of years ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was a report in regard to the classification of the officers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I suggested was that, as this is a committee of the House of Commons, and we usually have the reports from the committee of the House in regard to their proceedings, it would be only right that we should have a report from this committee and we should have it in the regular course every year. It does not seem to have been the practice in the past but I respectfully submit that it should be the practice in the future.

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been done twice.

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with that I think a statement should be made out before we come to the supplementary estimates on the expenses of the House, and I should like to see a tabular statement of the officers of the House and the duties to which they are assigned. They are our officers, we pay them and as my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said, we seem not to have much knowledge as to what is being actually done. I think we should have the information which has been asked for by my hon. friend and a statement of the officers of the House and the duties to which they are assigned.

Mr. BELCOURT. In reference to that matter the qualifications of the officers of the House are stated in a report which was laid before the House last year. The hon. gentleman will find in the sessional papers of last year the full list of the officers of the House with their titles. I do not know that their duties are detailed, but their duties may be inferred from their offices.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the special point that I want to get at. We know that we have a lot of officers, that we pay them money, but we would like to know what their duties are and how they are distributed.

Mr. BELCOURT. There was a classification made last year and that classification appeared in the report to which I have just referred.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE CANADIAN AGENCY.

House in committee on Bill (Bill 77) respecting the Canadian Agency.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Mr. BRODEUR. I said the other day, that it was my opinion that this Bill should not pass and for the following reasons. Some two years ago a charter was granted to this company under the name of the Canadian Agency, giving them very extensive powers and making provision that they should place a deposit in the hands of the Finance Minister, which if it were not made within a year the charter would lapse. The deposit was not made as required by the Bill and so the charter expired. They are now asking parliament to amend an expired charter, whereas the regular procedure would be to apply for a new charter. I think this Bill should be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I move that the committee rise.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose.

Mr. BICKERDIKE moved that the said Bill be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

PROVIDENT FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION LIMITED.

On the motion of Mr. Gervais the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Provident Financial Association, Limited, were read a second time and agreed to.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Consideration of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 58) respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Lamont.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lamont) would tell the House whether the charters referred to in this Bill carry with them land grants or not. If my recollection is right this Bill proposes to renew and extend 11 or 12 railway charters under one title. In the committee there was no discussion upon the fact that all these charters were being renewed and extended and it was not made clear as to what roads were being dealt with as a result of this legislation. The objection which this House has always shown towards extending land grants to railway companies should be remembered in this case. The House is entitled to some explanation as to what the Bill involves.

Mr. LAMONT. So far as I know there are no lands grants to any one of these branch lines to which this Bill refers. This Bill passed the Railway Committee and this House some time ago, and the Senate made an amendment to section 4, the amendment setting out the names of these branch lines in extenso.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that the only amendment

Mr. LAMONT. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Amendment read a second time and agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Mr. STAPLES asked:

1. Have applications been made for or on behalf of the following half-breeds: Norman Ouelette, Frank Ouelette, Adeline McIvor, John Boucher, Joseph Delorme, Madame Urbain Delorme, Madame B. Gagnon, P. Ducherne, Charles Pruden, Andrew Gibouche, Miss Rosalie Lesperance? If so, what was the result in each case?

2. Is the government aware if the scrip allowed any of these half-breeds has been purchased by any other parties ? If so, by whom ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Applications for half-breed scrip were made by the following persons : Norman Ouellette, Frank Ouellette, John Boucher, Joseph Delorme, P. Ducherne and Madame Urbain Delorme.

There is no record of any applications by Rosalie Lesperance or Adeline McIvor.

The applications of Norman Ouellette, Frank Ouellette, John Boucher, Joseph Delorme, Madame Urbain Delorme and P. Ducherne were disallowed. Andrew Gibouche received scrip for $160 in 1876 as head of a family.

No definite information can be given respecting Madame B. Gagnon or Charles Pruden unless names of patents are furnished.

2. Answered by No. 1.

MIDDLE FORK FALLS.

Mr. HERRON asked :

1. Is the Middle Fork falls of the Old Man river located on the S.E. ¼, section 28, tp. 7, r. 2, W. of 5th M. ?
2. Has the government disposed of it by sale or lease ?
3. If so, to whom, on what conditions if leased, what term of years, and price ?
4. If sold, at what price ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.
2. No.
3 and 4. Answered by answer to No. 2.

PICTOU CATTLE DISEASE.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD asked :

1. Is the Department of Agriculture pursuing an investigation and making experiments to ascertain the cause of the disease known as the 'Pictou cattle disease' ? If so, when, and under what conditions ?
2. What progress has been made in ascertaining the cause, and has it been determined whether it is contagious or not ?
3. Has any remedy or cure for the disease been found ?
4. If investigation has disclosed, or is likely to disclose, the fact that the disease is caused by cattle eating that weed popularly known as 'Strutting Willie,' would the department favourably consider the proposal to render assistance to secure the eradication of the weed in the districts affected ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Agriculture) :

1. The department has, since October, 1903, been conducting an experiment station at Cloverville, county of Antigonish, with the object of ascertaining the cause of Pictou cattle disease.

2. Much valuable information has been secured, and while it would, at present, be premature to make a definite statement, the results of the experiments so far indicate that the disease is not of a contagious nature, but that it is due to the ingestion, under certain conditions, of the weed known as Ragwort, or, locally 'Stinking Willie.'

3. The work at the station above referred to has been almost altogether in the direction of determining the cause of the disease with the hope of being able to devise some practical method of prevention. Incidental experimental work, however, would appear to indicate that benefit may result from the use of certain medicines in the early stages of the disease.

4. The department has not considered the matter.

MAILS—LOWVILLE TO MILTON.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. Who is the contractor for carrying the mails from Lowville to Milton ?
2. What is the distance for each single trip, and how many trips per week ?
3. What is the yearly cost of this service ?
4. Has this contract been renewed recently ?
5. If so, were tenders called for, or was the contract renewed without tender ?
6. If tenders were called for, was the lowest tender accepted ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Postmaster General) :

1. John W. Colling.
2. Seven and a half miles, six trips per week.
3. $213.22 per annum.
4. Yes, from 1st October, 1905.
5. The price was originally fixed by tender and, as the inspector reported that the rate was a fair one, the contract was renewed from 1st October, 1905.

MAILS—HAMILTON AND KILBRIDE.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. Who is the contractor for carrying the mails between Hamilton and Kilbride ?
2. What is the distance for each single trip, and how many trips per week ?
3. What is the yearly cost of this service ?
4. Was this contract let by tender ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Postmaster General) :

1. William Small.
2. Fifteen and a quarter miles—six trips per week.
3. $197.
4. Renewed with present contractor from 1st October, 1905. The price was originally fixed by tender and the inspector reporting that the price was a fair one, the contract was renewed from 1st October, 1905.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY APPEAL IN RE 4 EDWARD VII., CHAPTER 31.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

Referring to 4 Edward VII., Chapter 31, and the judgment of the Supreme Court that said

Act is ultra vires, and also to the suggestion of counsel for the Grand Trunk Railway Company upon the argument of the matter in the Supreme Court to the effect that there is no limit of time within which the company, if unsuccessful, would be bound to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and that the provision as to proclamation and bringing of the Act into force is therefore ineffective; and referring also to the fact that this company now states its definite intention to apply for leave to appeal in November next, setting forth reasons for the delay in the meantime:

1. What action, if any, does the government propose to take in the meantime?

2. In the event of allowing the delay proposed, what action will the government take in case the company then fails to apply as proposed, or to take all the necessary steps for having the matter finally, and in due course of procedure, disposed of?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice.) I wish to call attention to the fact that there is an evident misprint in this question. As the question reads it says that the Act was found to be ultra vires. The decision was that the Act was intra vires of this parliament. With that remark I would like to add that the railway company interested, not having made an application during the present sitting of the Privy Council for leave to appeal from the judgment of the Supreme Court have given an undertaking that they will apply at the November sittings. When that question is disposed of, of course it will be the duty of the government to see to it that effect is given to the expressed intention of parliament.

POSTMASTER AT CHELSEY, ONTARIO.

Mr. BARR asked:

1. Is the office of postmaster in Chelsey, Ontario, vacant?

2. If so, at what date did it become vacant?

3. If filled, at what date, and by whom?

4. If not filled, why not?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Postmaster General). The Chesley post office, Ontario, is not vacant. Mr. Richard Lillico was appointed postmaster on the 6th instant. The office became vacant on the 5th May, 1904, owing to the death of the postmaster.

CONTROVERTED ELECTION.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from two of the judges selected for the trial of election petitions pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate and report in the matter of the election petition for the electoral district of Nicolet, by which the said petition was dismissed and the sitting member declared duly elected.

MORNING SITTINGS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That, commencing with Wednesday next, and until the end of the session, the House shall meet on that day, and on each subsequent sitting day, at eleven o'clock in the morning; that, in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall also be an intermission every day from one to three o'clock p.m., and that government orders shall have precedence at all such sittings, members having still the right to ask questions on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

He said: I would like to add the following words which are not in the notice:

And that when this House adjourns on Friday next it stands adjourned until the following day at eleven a.m.

That is to say the House is to sit on Saturday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I presume there are no railway subsidies to come down this session?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are no railway subsidies to come down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And I suppose practically all the government business is now on the order paper?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Practically all the business of the House is before us with the exception perhaps of certain resolutions of which I am not permitted to speak at this moment.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose there would be no objection to, say on Monday, giving time to run through the order paper and wipe off the notices of motion? There are a number there that we would like to get through so as to get the returns.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is Monday, it would do just as well to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. There will be one or two more by next Monday and it could all be done by one sweep.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well.

Motion as amended, agreed to.

LAND TITLES ACT, 1894, AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 162) to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.—Mr. Oliver, read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that we have had any explanation of what this Bill is.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 1 is merely to say in the simplest terms that the Land Titles Act now in force in the Territories shall remain in force until replaced by a Land Titles Act to be passed by each of the provinces now to be organized.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it that you need this in view of the provisions of section 15 of the two Autonomy Bills which we have been debating? There may be a perfectly obvious reason, but I must confess that I do not see it now.

Mr. OLIVER. I fancy the reason is that there has to be not only legislation by the province to take over the question of land titles, but there has to be an adjustment of what is called the assurance fund as between the provinces and the Dominion, and therefore special provision is made in that regard. The purpose of the section is not so much to say that the provinces shall substitute provincial legislation for Dominion legislation as it is to say that the legislation of the provinces shall take effect upon and after an arrangement has been arrived at between the provinces and the Dominion in regard to the assurance fund and other matters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will tell me what is the position under the Bills we have passed ? I am not very familiar with the Land Titles Act. I presume it has reference to and deals with the transmission of titles to real estate in the Northwest Territories at the present time. Then does it not follow that the legislatures of the new provinces under the provisions of the Bills that we have passed would deal with that subject as a matter of provincial legislation and if that is the case is it not a little inconsistent to say that we shall authorize the Governor in Council to repeal something which the provincial legislatures, according to my view, would have the right to repeal ? Does not this, in effect, repeal pro tanto, section 15 of the Autonomy Bill ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At the present time under the Land Titles Act of the Northwest Territories the assurance found is in the hands of the Receiver General. That is a fund which is of course available to both provinces. At the present time the Dominion of Canada is the custodian of that assurance fund, and is responsible for any claims that may be made against it and the intention is to provide for an orderly transfer of the whole of the affairs over to the two provinces so that the matter may be dealt with in such a way that the two provinces may take out of our possession all that fund, we, at the same time, relieving ourselves or responsibility in connection with it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the object. The difficulty is that the language of this section goes a great deal further and authorizes the Governor in Council to repeal legislation as to which we have already conferred jurisdiction on the legislature of each province. The legislature of the province in the future will deal with this matter as a matter of property and civil rights, I suppose ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, we are at the same time reserving to the Governor in Council power to deal with the same matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have to deal with the provision so far as we are custodians of this fund.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I draw attention to is that we give to the Governor in Council power to deal with a subject which we have already entrusted to the provincial legislature of each province, and we do that in perfectly general terms.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will look into that.

Mr. OLIVER. It is absolutely necessary that this government having the responsibility of this insurance fund, which is to provide for any mistake which may occur in the transfer of titles, should not have to depend for its control of the fund upon legislation by the province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Bill went that far only, I would not have a word to say, but it seems to me that it goes a great deal further.

On section 2,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the object of this section ?

Mr. OLIVER. This section is to provide for the release from registration of Dominion lands which have been made subject to registration in connection with irrigation works under the Irrigation Act, provided the irrigation proposals fail either to be carried out or fail after having been constructed, in which case all rights revert to the government ; and this is merely a provision that the registration, which in the first place is necessary, shall revert also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You do not give to the grantee any opportunity of defending himself. You apparently provide that the Minister of the Interior may ex parte declare that the rights shall determine. That is a rather unusual power to confer on a department. In a court of justice any citizen of the country is entitled to appear and make his defence against any attempt to deprive him of what had hitherto been his rights. This seems to contemplate an order made ex parte by the Minister of the Interior which shall have the effect of absolutely enjoying a privilege which has hitherto been enjoyed. Is that not rather a stringent provision ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is an arbitrary authority which is provided under the Irrigation Act. This merely follows the terms of the Irrigation Act in so far as the removal of registration is concerned. The first part of the clause states the conditions which under the Irrigation Act result in forfeiture, and the latter part merely says that the conditions being thus and so and the forfeiture having occurred, the registration is released.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you mean that there is already a provision in the Irrigation

Act which is practically the same as the first part of this section ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, why do you repeat it ?

Mr. OLIVER. So that it shall be clearly understood in this Act under what terms the registration shall be released.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As I understand, the Northwest Irrigation Act provides that any one who wishes to carry on irrigation works may acquire the right to cross lands by simply giving notice, and that notice, when registered in the land titles office, operates as a right. After the Minister of the Interior declares that the right to carry on these works is forfeited, we go one step further and declare not only that the rights shall be forfeited, but that the registration shall be cancelled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I understand it correctly, by serving a notice you create an easement for the purposes of irrigation, and the right to absolutely determine the irrigation grant in respect of which this easement is created already exists in the Department of the Interior ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And this is to give the Department of the Interior the same power over the easement that it has over the irrigation grant, and to deal also with the registration ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Section agreed to, Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—THE SESSIONS OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. GEORGE FOSTER (North Toronto.) Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I want to call its attention to a matter which I brought up on Friday last, and which I then intimated to the Minister of Finance I would bring up again on Monday. There has been placed on the table, after the House has been in session for about six months, an estimate which totals up to almost $14,000,000. That is a little more than one-sixth of the total very large estimate for the year. It has not been possible for us to enter upon the discussion of these estimates until to-day. It is proposed, that if possible, this House shall finish its labours within a very few days ; at least that is the hope, that is the assumption; and pressure comes from all sides to effect that end. Under these circumstances, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the government will see and will quite well know,—because he has made most vigorous protests against cases far less flagrant than this during his time in opposition,—that there can be no such thing as fair or efficient criticism and discussion of these items. The matter would be somewhat different if another consideration did not obtrude. Many of these items are exceedingly large, and some of them mean the introduction of entirely new policies, policies which if authorized now will not end with the estimates of this year, or even with the yearly repetition of the amounts which are found here, but which, from the very nature of the case, tend to grow and to involve larger expenditure. Now, as I said on Friday—and I hope I did not say it in too strong a way—there has been no time within the last four months—no extended series of days, at least—in which one of these matters, the militia policy, might not have been introduced in this House, discussed and passed upon. But, for one cause or another, not to be understood by the unsophisticated persons on this side, but possibly quite clear to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that very subject, initiating a most important policy and fraught with grave results for the future of this country, is left unproposed and undiscussed until the closing hours of the session. In the Department of Agriculture new policies are propounded, or extensions of policies are proposed which run, in prospect, into very large expenditures, the needs for which may well be very carefully considered by this House.

Now, see what we are asked to do in merely going over these estimates. We are asked to take up a set of estimates which occupy 24 pages, which have in them 150 main items, and which involve the voting of no less than $13,414,973.45. It may be said that 150 items are not very many. Well, they are fewer than 200, fewer than 500, fewer even than 1,000. At the same time, 150 is a very considerable number of main items for this House to discuss and criticise. But this only tells a little part of the story. These main items are divided, and many of these subitems deal with separate cases of expenditure. I find, in cursory examination, for instance, that there are 98 items to be discussed under public works—capital and revenue expenditures. When you come to harbours and rivers, there are 213 items. One cannot but feel joy at the recent discovery of ports and harbours, and of important national waterways, which, up to the present time have smiled in the sun or have glided along on their way to the ocean unnoticed, but which, in these later days have been lifted from their native obscurity to the attention and favour of this government. And in no province has discovery been more prolific or more extended than in the province of Nova Scotia. There are 91 separate items for harbours and rivers in the province of Nova Scotia. There are 63 for the—I suppose we must assume smaller—province of Quebec, with its less littoral extension; 37 for the comparatively unimportant province of Ontario; 4 for the tight little Island of Prince Edward; 1 for the province of Manitoba—which has been somewhat recalcitrant in certain matters of late; 1 for the Northwest Territories (for which, by the way, important provision is being made in another sense); 6 in British Columbia, and 1 in the immense Yukon ;—making a total of 213 items of harbour and river improvements, which alone, if we are to be a sensible body and if we are really to look at public money as a public trust and to deal with it upon the principle that it shall be expended only where adequate returns may be expected, would take three or four weeks of the time of this House to thoroughly and properly discuss. Then, there are 25 general items in public works. So we have a total of 336 different items under public works.

Now, I find in these supplementary estimates—which ought to be the very small end of the annual expenditure—under civil government an extra vote of $50,911 : justice, $33,000; agriculture, $148,000; quarantine—which belongs to the Department of Agriculture—$175,000; immigration, $30,000; militia, $1,734,000. For the Intercolonial Railway, including the Prince Edward Island Railway, there are items amounting to $2,204,861; for the so-called National Railway, the Transcontinental, there is an opening item of $2,353,000; for canals, $207,000. These three latter items are on capital account. For canals, on income account, there are items totalling $61,300. On public works —capital accounts $645,000 ; public works —income account—$2,349,000. And let me pause at the last item to say that in the time of the Liberal-Conservative government we were most vehemently denounced for annual expenditure on public works which in no year amounted in total to so large a sum as this. Then in the Marine and Fisheries Department we have certain little extra items. For instance, ocean and river service, $365,000 ; in another department, of the Marine and Fisheries Department, an item of $715,000 ; in still another, $264,000 ; and in still another, $800,000. This makes a total of $1,400,000 of supplementary estimates for the Marine and Fisheries Department alone—all to be charged to income account.

I know and pay tribute to the inventive faculty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but with all his inventive faculty he has not yet found out a way to distribute any of this description of expenditure to capital account. However, he has years ahead of him, he is still young, and with his ingenuity, with these necessities pressed upon him for showing or keeping a surplus, by the vigorous use of his faculties, he will find out sooner or later some way in which a proportion of this may be attributed to capital expenditure, so that the magnificent surplus may still be had. I find that Indians call for $97,000 in this final closing hour of the session; that for lands and miscellaneous in the same department, we have a sum of $528,000 asked for, all but $100,000 of this on consolidated revenue account. Then we come to that bright spot, that oasis in the administrative domain of this government, the Intercolonial Railway, which calls for $1,250,000 on account of consolidated fund expenditure. And all these and some others added go to make the amount, as I said, of nearly $14,000,000.

Now we all agree, it is absolutely impossible there should be any disagreement, that a state of things like this is not conducive to good administration, that it is not consonant with a proper parliamentary check and control over the expenditures of the country ; that there is not in it a single favourable element towards that contribution and consensus of wisdom and experience which a parliament like this, sent from every part of our country, combines within itself for the solution of what is best to be done with the amount of money we have, and to retain reasonable control of it. I do not think the Prime Minister himself, fertile as he is in expedients and in reasons for palliating crimes like this—I do not think even my right hon. friend will be able honestly to get a reason for this kind of thing. I know one thing he will say : You did it yourselves when you were in power. Now may be he will not say that after I have brought it to his mind ; but if he does say that, there are two considerations I would like to urge upon him and the House ; one is that we did it to a very small extent, that we did it against the combined and vehement protest of the right hon. gentleman, then the leader of his party in opposition, and all the men of his party with him. They declared that it was not a proper condition to be imported into parliamentary expenditures and expropriations. Now since these gentlemen have come into power this practice has grown, prevails to a limited extent with all governments, I suppose—there are circumstances which will always make it necessary that there should be some fringes of expenditure to be provided for well up to the very last days of the session, no fair-minded man objects to that. But there is every difference between that and this deliberate keeping back of a vast quantity and a very material proportion, one-sixth of the whole in this case, of the estimates of a great expenditure contemplated for the current year—a great difference I say between these fringes of expenditure which must be provided for, and such an amount as this.

Now what happens ? Here we are. There is no good in bringing down estimates to parliament at all unless it is to ask its advice upon them. I presume we will all agree upon that. No one now assents to that old and long established principle of action, that all a parliament had to do was to register the decrees of the government, or the executive. We are living in an age where more and more it is theoretically declared and held that public expenditures should be initiated by the government and should be submitted for fair and efficient discussion to the House of representatives who have the final authority in the matter. Now can we undertake any such discussion of these estimates at the present time? That cannot be done. The Prime Minister may say, well, you have got the time ahead of you, go on and discuss. That is very easy to say, but with the country as it is, what is the use of discussing if we cannot gain the attention of the country? Will the Prime Minister say: Well, if the country does not care, why should you? That will not be an answer that any statesman will give, I am sure. But the country, after six months session of a parliament whose days have been long drawn out, inevitably loses interest and spirit foregoes any careful attention of what is going on in the House. Nothing but a tremendous sensation could gather and fix attention of the country upon what parliament would do from this to the time of prorogation. No opposition and no government could carefully discuss and instruct the public with reference to its view as to public expenditures, unless the country were in a condition where it could fairly well take cognizance of the position that we take, and of the views that we set forth. Now that is absolutely impossible. The country is not in the mood to listen to criticisms at the present time, not in a mood to listen to anything which government or parliament may do at the present time. Nor is the House prepared to do it. It is not physically prepared to do it, it is not mentally prepared to do it. So there are just two things that happen. You have to have the opposition roped in with you and to assent to these expenditures, which is unfair; or you simply put the opposition where they must wash their hands of the entire thing, and with reference to such estimates brought down in such a way simply to throw the whole responsibility upon the government. But if physical powers endure so long, it is open to us to have a promise from the government that they will not be guilty in that particular and to that extent again. Well, that is a harsh way in which to make an opposition act. And so, look at it from whatever light you can, it is unfair, it is not according to the principles of good government, and cannot be excused upon any principle whatsoever.

Now this is the situation in which we are. We have to let these things go through sooner or later. There can be no fair discussion or criticism of them. Then we may be told: Well, where is your opposition to them? Where are your resolutions? And where are the particular points that you raised in reference to them? As they are non-existent it may be supposed that there is no basis for them. Therefore the opposition have joined with the government and they have no case before the country. That may be said, and unfairly be said. I do not think I have treated this matter in an unfair way, I do not think I have treated it in a heated way. But in some way or other is it not necessary that these things should be put a stop to? Is it not necessary? And what is to prevent the government just now from crying peccavi! in a good honest tone, and declaring that they never hope to be pardoned again if they do the same thing after having been let off this time. In some way the attention of the House and the country must be called to it; therefore I beg leave to move that for the motion which is now being put, the following be substituted:

> This House desires to enter its earnest protest against the action of the government in keeping back until the closing hours of the session, estimates amounting to nearly $14,000,000, one-sixth of the total for the year, and thus precluding any fair and effectual criticism with respect to the proposed public expenditure, and continuing a practice highly prejudicial to the public interest.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, in so far as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asserts the principle that we should all labour to have proposed expenditures brought before the House at the earliest possible time, we need not take exception to his views, but I am inclined to think that he magnifies the difficulties of the situation and makes the matter certainly very much more grave than there is any reason for regarding it. Let us look at the facts. The House has been in session for several months and has been engaged for some considerable time in the discussion of matters which were regarded as of the greatest urgency. We regarded these matters of sufficient urgency to give them priority over all others, practically speaking, and hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have themselves excelled us in that, because they have repeatedly told us that these matters that have been engaging the attention of parliament were matters of the greatest importance, far exceeding anything we have been dealing with in recent years. Therefore, no apology, I presume, will be needed for having occupied the attention of the House with these great measures, even to the disadvantage of some other things. So I think there has been no particular ground for complaint in that respect. If the House has not been called upon to deal with supplementary estimates until the present time, in the meantime the House has been busily employed, and this has been one of the most arduous sessions within my personal experience.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Even if we were discussing some other matters, why could you not have brought these estimates down so that we should have them before us?

Mr. FIELDING. It might not be so easy to bring them down as my hon. friend seems to think. My hon. friend has had no experience in the preparation of estimates. The hon. gentleman who sits beside him (Mr. Foster) has had some experience, and I think we will have to hold him accountable for his own practices of former days rather than for the precepts of to-day. I think we can fairly make comparisons between the present and the time when the hon. member for North Toronto was in office. Although the hon. leader of the opposition may regard this as unimportant, and although he has not been guilty in this sense, I think that the hon. member for North Toronto should be a little more considerate, knowing the difficulties that always arise in bringing down estimates of this kind. Then, it is worth while remembering that although the aggregate of these estimates is considerable, there are few matters contained in them that can be regarded as being new. Most of these are matters with which the House is quite familiar, and if a particular expenditure in a particular case may call for information, the general class of expenditures is well known and the principles involved in them do not require very much time for investigation, because they have been well understood by the House. For instance, we propose to expend several millions of dollars on the Transcontinental Railway. Can anybody say this is a new proposal? Was it not expected that we would come to the House and ask for something to expend on that railway, and has not the House for several years been fully seized of the whole question? Have we not fully considered this policy? Have not parliament, the government and the country decided to go on with the construction of the Transcontinental Railway; and, if so, who shall say, when you come to vote the amount, or ask for the sum necessary to carry on the work for the coming year, that there is anything held back? I think hon. gentlemen will find that there is very little in these estimates that they cannot understand. Of course, if they are determined not to understand, even if we were to stay here for six months, some hon. gentlemen opposite would say they had not sufficient information, but I do not think there will be any great difficulty in obtaining whatever information is necessary to them to understand all these matters. True, my hon. friend from North Toronto is manifesting a lamentable want of knowledge about the geography of the lower provinces. There was a time when my hon. friend would confess to an intimate knowledge of that—when he would hardly speak so contemptuously of these little places in the lower provinces for which appropriations have been made. There was a time when he had some knowledge of the splendid region—

Down where the Skoodawabskoosis
Flows into the Skoodawabskook.

There was a time when the names of places in the maritime provinces were more familiar to my hon. friend than they are at the present time; but though the time has come when it is necessary that he shall speak the names of other places to a larger degree, he should not deny us the pleasure of bearing in mind those so-called little names of the lower provinces. Nor can he expect us to sympathize with the idea he advances, that because these are little places in the lower provinces, therefore, they are not entitled to consideration. It may surprise him to know that they do not require wharfs and piers in the inland districts of Ontario and the Northwest Territories, but it will not surprise other people to be told that wharfs and piers are usually constructed where there is a coast line and that, as there is more coast line in the maritime provinces than in the Northwest Territories, there is more occasion for wharfs and piers to be built. I remember in an inland district of my own province some years ago being honoured by an address presented by the people. The writer of the address was a humorist, and he said that the people in that section would never call upon the government for money for the establishment of lighthouses. He was quite correct. My hon. friend fails to take due account of the fact that in the maritime provinces you have this extensive coast line and that there is need of these improvements. If my hon. friend is of the opinion that these works are of no importance, I want to take exception, and I want to say that these things are as important to these respective communities as are the larger works which exist in other places. The aggregate amount of the expenditures proposed in these estimates for works of this kind in Quebec and the lower provinces is very moderate, and it is because they are set out in detail, because each item is particularized and because each piece of work is set forth, that my hon. friend, measuring entirely by the space which they occupy on the sheet of the estimates, tries to convey the impression that there is something very alarming in these appropriations. Each one of these little appropriations is as useful and as important to the community in that part of Canada as our expenditures in other parts of the country, and expenditures of this kind go as far towards making the people happy and contented in that portion of the country as larger works in other directions; and in these cases you may be able to accomplish a great deal more with an expenditure of $200,000 or $300,000 than in another case with an expenditure of $1,000,000. In regard to the militia expenditures, I understand that there was a postponement of the debate by mutual consent. I understood my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to say some days ago that by mutual arrangement there was a postponement of the discussion, and therefore I do not think we should be complained of because that matter comes in now. My hon. friend also speaks of the main estimates. I would say to my hon. friend that these estimates were prepared in November or December last. The House met in January, and as a consequence the estimates for the coming year were prepared either in November or December. Is it a marvellous thing that since the time these estimates were prepared we should have better information ? Is it a marvellous thing that since last December or November, when we asked to do a certain thing, we should have received new light and later information showing the necessity for a larger appropriation ? Is it a marvellous thing that a work that was viewed with less favour then should present itself more forcibly to the mind of the government now ? Since we have been detained by unusual circumstances to a much later period that usual, and since the House has been busily occupied with other important work, I do not think there is much ground for complaint because of the fact of bringing these estimates down now. I, therefore, say that the hon. gentleman has very little ground to complain, first, because we have been busily employed; secondly, because the main estimates were prepared many months ago ; and, thirdly, because it is always difficult, if not impossible, to foreshadow appropriations, and I appeal to the experience of all governments when I say that you must bring down very considerable sums in the form of supplementary estimates at a late period in the session. I do not know that it would be profitable to go into that question or to make a comparison with the sums that hon. gentlemen opposite have brought down. My hon. friend says that even if they did we should not remind them of it. Well, that is the privilege of the opposition. It is equally the privilege of the opposition to say some foolish things, and it is a privilege that hon. gentlemen opposite have enjoyed to the fullest extent ; but I think that any one who has any idea of the practical working of a government in a country like ours will realize that it is not possible at the beginning of the session to foreshadow all the appropriations that are necessary, and it would not be unreasonable if, towards the close of the session, supplementary estimates had to be brought down.

I admit that the House should have the greatest possible opportunity to discuss public questions of this kind, and if any hon. gentleman desires information I am sure every minister will feel it his duty to give it. I have no doubt that after the lapse of a few-days every item in these estimates can be quite as fairly considered as if they were before the House for a length of time. I do not wish to be understood as opposing the general contention of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that it should be the business of governments to try to bring down their appropriations at an early stage of the session, but the reasons that have accounted for the present delay are fair reasons which I think the House ought to accept.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont). The reasons for the delay in bringing down the estimates may be fair, but the Minister of Finance has not mentioned them. In reply to my question his answer was that I never had the privilege of bringing down estimates and did not know how difficult it was to deal with the matter. That is true, but every argument the Minister of Finance has used would be an equally good argument for bringing down the whole $75,000,000 of main estimates just one week before the session closed. The hon. gentleman said we can get all information required, but he knows that after a session of six months the House is weary, and my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says that the country is weary too. I do not know as to that, but I do know that members on both sides are weary of this protracted session which has extended into a season of the year when the heat has been absolutely oppressive in this chamber. It is impossible to get men to stay here, not to speak of asking them to take an intelligent interest in the discussion of these estimates. The Minister of Finance has given not a word of reason for bringing down these estimates at this time. His friends throughout the country have been saying that the opposition have unduly protracted the session ; but suppose the session ended a month or a week ago these estimates must have gone by the board, if the statement of the Minister of Finance is to be relied upon. There are 605 items here altogether, and I venture to say that nine-tenths of them are not urgent and might just as well have been postponed until the commencement of another session. Any items which are urgent must have been known to the officers of the government and could have been submitted months ago. The Minister of Finance says by way of illustration that the Transcontinental Railway is not a new matter. It is not ; it has engaged the attention of this parliament and the government for two years, and the appropriation with regard to it could have been brought down three months ago just as well as now. The government is not dealing fairly by the parliament or the country in this matter. When we look over the long list of appropriations for rivers and harbours and other similar works it must be conceded that very little discrimination was exercised by the Finance Minister, or else the Department of Public Works must have submitted a most extraordinary sup-plentary estimate. Does the Finance Minister take the estimates of all these departments and bundle them before Council and bring them down to the House, or does he exercise any discrimination. Has he laid any restriction upon the various departments? Has he exercised his judgment and criticism upon each one of these items, as it is the duty of a Minister of Finance to do in his capacity as guardian of the public treasury? I do not know whether he has done so or not, but I do venture to think that the estimates as they have been brought down do not justify the belief that the Finance Minister has in this respect done his duty.

The session has been prolonged and has reached a period in the summer when members on both sides are very unwilling to remain here—government supporters are willing to remain for the purpose of voting and the members on this side are unwilling to remain for the purpose of criticism. If the session is protracted very much longer I do not know how we can expect the members to remain and attend to public business. I would bring to the attention of the Prime Minister the fact that certain legislation was promised four years ago but never enacted. I refer to the promise then made that there would be a provision inserted in the statutes with regard to the attendance of members of parliament in his House. The lack of attendance during this session has been very disgraceful. There are men in this House who have not shown up to perform their public duty for more than ten days or twelve or fifteen days and that practice is becoming very prevalent. I venture to think that some such measure as that which was discussed four years ago should be placed upon the statute-book without delay. I have already mentioned to some members of the government a suggestion which I will take the liberty of repeating: We might with very great advantage begin the sessions of parliament earlier than we do. In Canada, there are roughly speaking two seasons: the late autumn, winter and early spring season in which little business is transacted by nine-tenths of the people; it is so to speak the leisure season. Then there is the seasoa of spring, summer and early autumn which is the busy season for the great majority of our people. Since I came to parliament in 1896, occasionally the session commenced in January, a few times in February, and at other times in March. It has occasionally ended as early as the middle of May, but the session of 1903 extended until the 24th of October, after occupying a period of 7 months and 12 days. The difficulty about beginning the session earlier, as I understand from the remarks of ministers, particularly of the Minister of Finance, is that our fiscal year ends on June 30 and that the various departments cannot get their reports and accounts ready for parliament earlier than about the middle of January or the first week in February. Is there any special reason why we should not change our fiscal year, making it end on March 31st, as in England, instead of June 30? Does the minister say there is?

Mr. FIELDING. No, there is very much to be said in favour of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that Sir Richard Cartwright when Minister of Finance beween 1875 and 1878 attempted some movement of that kind. I do not know that of my own knowledge. I would suggest that the government should take into earnest consideration the project of changing the financial year, making it end on March 31 instead of June 30. If you did that what would follow? You could begin the session of parliament early in November and every one of the departments would have a month more after the close of the fiscal year to prepare for the work of parliament than if we begin early in January under present conditions. If you did that you could always bring the session to an end by the 1st of April or 1st of May at the outside. I do not profess to know every thing or even to know very much about the possibility of doing this, but it strikes me it might be done and so we could begin our public duties here in the early part of November and continue those public duties during a portion of the year when there is very little business engaging the majority of people in this country, we would accomplish two good results: In the first place we would be utilizing the time of the people when it is not otherwise occupied and in the next place we could, I believe, undoubtedly bring into public life in this country representative men from all parts of Canada who shrink at the present time from undertaking public duties, and we all know that is a very desirable thing from the standpoint of either side of the House. I venture to make this suggestion now because I might not have an opportunity of doing so before the end of the session. I sincerely trust that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and their colleagues will take the matter into consideration because it is becoming absolutely unbearable that we should, year after year, spend our summers here in the city of Ottawa attending to public business which it seems to me might just as well be transacted at a much more convenient season.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the motion with which he has concluded I have only this to observe at the present moment: I agree that we have brought down the supplementary estimates rather late in the session and that they are of considerable bulk. I understood that the hon. member's complaint was not so much as to the amount of the estimates, that he reserved his remarks upon that subject; his remarks were directed chiefly to the fact that it was in the sixth month of the session that these estimates were brought down. My hon. friend says that we should all endeavour to make the session as short as possible and I agree that we would be absolutely without any defence at all for bringing the estimates down at such a late period under ordinary circumstances, but I think we can find a very good reason for it, without attempting to take shelter behind the practice of our predecessors which I would not under any circumstances be guilty of as he well knows. I think our action can be defended upon its own merits and not upon the former delinquencies of our predecessors. My hon. friend concentrated his remarks chiefly upon two items, the estimates of the Departments of Militia and Public Works. He made some criticism with reference to the estimates for the Transcontinental Railway and the Intercolonial Railway also. The Intercolonial is one question which my hon. friend knows from experience it is difficult to deal with and I am sorry to say it is not any easier to deal with it at this time than in his time. But I may say that the estimates of the Intercolonial Railway and the Transcontinental would have been brought down earlier but the fact that the militia and public works estimates could not be brought down at an earlier stage. My hon. friend has said with regard to the militia estimates that we are inaugurating a new policy and that is very true. Since we are bringing in a new policy we must give the House an explanation of the reasons which have induced us to inaugurate this departure in our militia policy. As the Minister of Militia, who will bring up his estimates as soon as we go into Committee of Supply, will explain, this matter has been engaging the attention of the government for some time; our mind has been made up for two, three, or even five or six months but we have been corresponding with the imperial authorities to have their final answer as to the proposed policy and I do not know if up to this moment we have received the final answer we are expecting. The Minister of Militia informs me we have not. This has been the reason why we did not bring the matter up before, but finding that the despatches which we expected from the imperial government on this subject to complete the correspondence have not yet come to hand we thought it advisable to take parliament at once into our confidence and explain to them the policy we intend to initiate. This is the reason why we waited before bringing up this matter.

With regard to the estimates of the Department of Public Works, my hon. friend is aware that estimates for this class of work are prepared during the session: the supplementary estimates for the Department of Public Works are always prepared during the session. I need not call the attention of the House to the fact that when we met, the minister in charge of that department was not in his seat; he was away for his health and although we expected that he would soon return to his usual work we were unfortunately disappointed in that expectation. The new minister therefore had to be appointed and to go to his constituents to be elected, which took up four weeks of his time. Under such circumstances the estimates of the Department of Public Works could not be proceeded with. These circumstances, I think, fully explain the delay in preparing the estimates of the Department of Public Works. It seems to me this explanation should be sufficient to satisfy my hon. friend that there is good reason for bringing down the supplementary estimates so late this year.

I may say to my hon. friend that I am as anxious as he is that we should expedite the work of the session and put a stop to the inordinately long sessions of late years. If our hon. friends opposite are willing to join hands with us, and I am very glad to hear the leader of the opposition express his readiness, we ought to have earlier sessions and short sessions. I think we can find ways and means of devising shorter sessions than we have had. The suggestion which has been made by the leader of the opposition with regard to an earlier summoning of parliament is one that has much to commend itself to our judgment. Some two years ago, if I remember rightly, the idea was thrown across the House by a gentleman who is no longer a member of the House, Mr. Boyd of Manitoba, that we should meet in November instead of after New Year's, that is that we should meet before New Year's instead of after New Year's. For my part that is a suggestion in which I altogether concur. I think we could do nothing better than to have it understood by the unwritten law of parliament that this House should be summoned to meet say in the first or second week in November with an adjournment at Christmas, and then go on with the session's work. We would then have a possibility of closing before Easter. I do not think we can do that next session because it will require some preliminary work. First of all we will have to change the fiscal year. That I know is a matter which has engaged the attention of the Minister of Finance for some time, and he looks upon it favourably and it can be absolutely anticipated. There is another reason why we cannot meet early this fall, that is because, as was announced by the Minister of Finance, a commission of inquiry is to sit with regard to the tariff.

But if we cannot meet early next fall, we can meet early after New Year's, and if we do, we can take another step which will make it possible to meet in November, 1906. Such being the motive which impels both sides of the House, I think we can contemplate for next year an early session of parliament and a shorter session than the present one. There is another thing that I would suggest for the shortening of the sessions ; I have discussed the matter informally with my hon. friend on the other side of the House. Early next session we should have a committee to revise the rules of the House, which have not been revised since 1876. With these three reforms—an earlier meeting of the House, an earlier preparation of the government business, and a revision of the rules—I think the session should not at most exceed four months.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like to add a few words to what has been said by the Prime Minister, with special reference to the militia estimates. I have read what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said on Friday evening during my absence with reference to myself and I must say that I was surprised and pained to find the hon. gentleman referring to me in the way in which he did. He made personal remarks which I think were entirely uncalled for, and which were not calculated to improve the amenities which should exist between members on opposite sides of the House. I shall not make any special reference to those personal remarks of the hon. gentleman, but I will hope that in his own mind at least he will amend them. What he said with reference to the militia estimates not having been gone into he repeated to-day. If I understood him aright, he said that there has been no time within three months when we might not have had a discussion of the militia estimates. If my hon. friend has reviewed what has taken place during the session, he could have hardly made that charge seriously. The militia estimates were brought up for the first time on the 1st day of February, and at that time the hon. member for North Toronto took exception to those estimates being gone on with to any great extent because the militia report had not been laid on the table of the House. I agreed to that, and one or two estimates were left over for a full discussion. But there was a discussion at that time upon the militia estimates lasting through some hours and occupying some fifty pages of 'Hansard .' After the 1st of February it transpired that this government had made an offer to the imperial authorities to take over the fortresses of Halifax and Esquimalt, and to accept all responsibility for their control and maintenance. Immediately after that, the hon. member for North Toronto made a motion for the papers with reference to that matter. I informed him then, and from time to time across the floor of the House and privately, I informed him that the correspondence was not concluded. On the 6th of June a question was asked with reference to these papers by the hon. member for Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) and I gave him this answer :

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) moved for the papers some time ago and his motion carried. The correspondence was not concluded, and the other day I asked him in the corridor whether he wanted those portions of the correspondence that had already taken place or would he wait until the correspondence was concluded. I would prefer waiting, and he said that was quite satisfactory to him. I have been expecting daily an answer with regard to the expenditure involved and so on, and it would be convenient to postpone the discussion until the supplementary estimates are brought down, when I shall lay all the papers on the table.

Again, I said in answer to another question from the same hon. member :

There will be a large item in the supplementaries to provide for the taking over of these garrisons ; and when that time comes down, I propose to lay all the correspondence on the table and have a general discussion.

Two or three days before Friday night last, when the hon. member for North Toronto made the reference to me of which I complained, I crossed the floor of the House, sat down beside him and said to him : 'I am sorry to say that that correspondence is not yet completed ; I cannot wait any longer; I will bring it down such as we have it, and we will take the matter up and discuss it at the earliest possible moment.' That was said to him within one week. To prove that I have done all in my power in this matter, I will refer the hon. gentleman to the papers which were laid upon the table of the House last Friday and printed. He will see there several telegrams which have been sent at my suggestion by His Excellency the Governor General to the imperial authorities urging them to forward their answer. Here is one of them, dated the 14th of June, from Earl Grey to Mr. Lyttelton :

Referring to my despatch No. 186, Minister of Militia has asked me privately when may answer be expected ; it will help him in statement he wishes to make in House of Commons.

Again on the 23rd of June, from Earl Grey to Mr. Lyttelton :

Referring to your telegram of 8th February, Halifax garrison, recruiting of Canadian permanent force to relieve Royal garrison regiment has gone until now; its accommodation in existing barracks is attended by serious inconvenience. Under the circumstances Minister of Militia asks when Royal garrison regiment may be expected to be withdrawn and its place taken by Royal Canadian regiment.

So I think the House will see that I was doing everything in my power to secure the answer from the imperial authorities which would complete the correspondence and would enable me to take up the discussion. It was agreed on more than one occasion across the floor of the House that the whole question of the militia would be discussed at once. There is no new matter in the main estimates for this year; they are precisely the same as those of last year, with scarcely any increase. The new policy, if it be a new policy, is involved in the new estimates, and these were kept back in order to have the answer from the imperial authorities.

Now, I think that it is only right, in justice to myself, that I should make this explanation. I think my hon. friend and the House will understand that I am not chargeable with undue delay in this matter. But, while I am on my feet, I may reply to the strictures of the hon. gentleman as to the possibility of having brought this subject to the attention of the House at any time within the last three months. Since March 22nd, last, when the discussion on the Autonomy Bills was begun 73 out of 108 days have been occupied with those Bills. This leaves 35 days during which the militia estimates might have been discussed. And, during these 35 days, there were many discussions of private Bills and public Bills and orders. So that, even if there had not been the difficulty to which I have referred of not having the correspondence completed, there were only 35 days when the government might have brought in a discussion of this matter. Well, let me remind my hon. friend and the House that during that time, four different discussions have taken place upon items of militia estimates. In some of these the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) took part; the militia policy of the country has been illuminated by the hon. gentleman himself taking an interest in it. Now, I welcome the hon. gentleman to the discussion of militia matters. In fact, I was beginning to look upon him as a guide, philosopher and friend. You can imagine then, Mr. Speaker, my feelings when I turned to 'Hansard' of Friday last and found the reference to myself of which I have spoken, and which I will still refrain from reading to the House.

So far as my interest in the business of the House in concerned, perhaps I may be permitted to say a word. If interest in the business of the House can only be exhibited by long and frequent speeches, then I do not take very much interest in that business. But I do not think that is the only test to be applied. This is my twenty-ninth session in this House. I first entered in 1874. I have appealed to the electors of my county eleven times, and have been sustained ten times. And this is the first occasion upon which I have been charged with want of interest in the affairs of the House or with remaining away from the House when I should have been present.

Mr. FOSTER. Before you put the question, Mr. Speaker, I have two or three words I wish to say. Some of the arguments advocated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) have been well disposed of by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). It is true that the government ship has sometimes bowled along with all sails set and making the best speed. But there were seasons of calm, when the breezes did not blow, and when the steam power which the government is supposed to apply when necessary might have been applied by bringing down some of these items for discussion. I do not agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) that there are no new things in these estimates. Of course, we are working on the same lines of expenditure and under the same departmental heads. But almost every expenditure brings its own new questions. We cannot conclude that because the expenditures are on the same general lines, therefore, we are passed the period of discussion concerning them. The Transcontinental Railway, for instance, certainly was known, as the hon. gentleman says. But I do not suppose that he holds that, because we have had a debate upon the Bill and because the policy of building that road has been established by legislative enactment, therefore, the hundreds of millions that are hereafter to be appropriated are beyond discussion, and conference and criticism as to the way in which they shall be spent. To settle a great line of policy for the country is one thing; to dispose of the money to carry out that policy is another thing. Every time that the Transcontinental appropriations are brought up, there must be discussion of the proposed expenditure, its advisability and the manner of carrying it out.

Now, it was not a very extraordinary piece of finesse on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he endeavoured to impute to me the despising the day of small things in the maritime provinces. Such a retort was thought very effective in the debating school of our youth. I have tried it there often myself, as no doubt, my hon. friend has. But, after all, it does not go so far in a House of Commons, or any representative body. The day of small things will never be forgotten by myself, nor will it be by any sensible man. But there is measure to be preserved in all things; and I think that, probably, in these matters due proportion has been somewhat overlooked. Nova Scotia has an extended sea-coast. So has New Brunswick. But, while there are 91 harbour and river appropriations in Nova Scotia in these supplementary estimates, there are only 9 in New Brunswick. And, for Prince Edward Island, which is swept on every side by the sea, there are only 4 harbours which seem to have attracted the attention of the Minister of Finance. I do not suppose that hon. gentleman (Mr.

Fielding) thought for a moment that I did not know that the Northwest could hardly have as much need for harbours and piers as those provinces on the sea-coast. His suggestion on that point was again one of the little effective things used in the debating school; but he must have been smiling inwardly when he used it against me on this occasion in the House of Commons.

Now, with reference to the militia question, I am willing to say that probably it is not one member's business to criticise another member for not being in the House and attending to his duty. Probably we had better all leave that to the constituents of each member. It may be that, in that, I transgressed the rule of good taste and proper debate. I am ready to subscribe to the general principle that, if the constituency will not take care of its member in that respect, it is not much use for me to bother my head about him. As to the papers themselves, everything the hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) has said about the papers being called for, about his communication with me, and about the papers being brought down, is perfectly true.

Those things took place. There is, I admit, an excuse, perhaps, for the policy of the departments being delayed. But after all the delay, we have not got a final answer. But that is not to say that the Minister of Militia was not looking for that final answer, and that we would not have been pleased to get the final answer. So I have done about as well as I could with reference to these two things. I am glad the Minister of Militia has an abiding sense of my technical military administration; so we will cry quits now and wait till the next case comes up. The Minister of Finance says it is the privilege of an opposition to say foolish things. Out of the experience of the heart the mouth speaketh. It does not need my friend's old colleague and former co-worker, who has lately been elevated to a seat on the bench which I hope he may long live to adorn—it does not need his classical expression to be brought to the mind of my hon. friend to-day to quicken that sense of the foolishness of an opposition, to the effect that the gentlemen who at present occupy the government benches did talk a lot of unmitigated rot during the time they were in opposition.

Now with reference to shortening the session. I do not know of any insuperable difficulty in the way of the suggestions that was made by the leader of the opposition, from being carried out. I daresay when they come to be thought over some objections will crop up that we do not think of at present. But there cannot be any good reason to prevent this House from meeting in those months of the year which are the least disadvantageous to business men, and more pleasant for the work of the session. I believe that will be found somewhere between November and March or April, An objection that always has been brought up when that time was mooted, was the intervention of the Christmas holidays. But it is easy to have a short intermission and then to get back. My experience is this, I will give it for what it is worth to the Prime Minister, he may have more of it and richer than I have had, because I have never been Prime Minister—my experience is this, that the session will, as a rule, be long or short in proportion to the preparation made by the ministers themselves for the business, as they are prompt in their work, and keep their hand continually on the business and push it through. If the members of a Prime Minister's cabinet do not exercise diligence to get their work in order as they ought, you will never shorten the session, it will dawdle on, and in the end it will result in what so many of our sessions do result in. One golden rule for a Prime Minister—I do not know whether the present Prime Minister put it into execution or not—is this: The cabinet minister who does not come up to time and have his estimates prepared when they ought to be prepared, and his work ready for the House when it ought to be ready, fire him. If that were the rule and stuck to, you would either have a great disappearance of cabinet ministers from this government, or you would have prompter business and short sessions. But is it not reasonable to think that if the sensible leader of a government and the sensible leader of an opposition were to put their heads together in order to get business carried on promptly and efficiently, they could reduce the length of the sessions of this parliament to four or five months, at the very furtherest?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will try to do my share.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will also do his share. I have no doubt the Prime Minister will try to do his share, but I have much doubt with reference to some of his ministers. I am afraid some of them are procrastinators, the Minister of Customs for instance. Now I have no desire to press my motion. I introduced it in order to call the attention of the House, of the government and of the country to what I consider an abuse, to what is admitted to be an abuse, and if it would conserve in any way a better arrangement for the future, I think I should press my motion to the point of a vote. But I am willing to withdraw it after what has been said, and let it go as an expression of our opinion, so far as the principle is concerned, of the necessity for the estimates and the business being brought down more promptly in order that the sessions may be made as short as possible. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with the leave of my seconder and of the House, I will withdraw my motion.

Amendment withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Militia and Defence—chargeable to capital—for purchase of ordnance, arms, rifle ranges, lands for military purposes, reserve stores of clothing, equipment, &c., and for fitting up rifle ranges, $1,225,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I presume it will be more convenient to discuss, so far as can be done in a general way, the whole of the militia estimates, including the supplementaries that were brought down on Friday last. I wish to say, before proceeding with the discussion, that I asked the military members of the Militia Council a short time ago to prepare a memorandum, which they have done, and which to-day was laid on the table of the House, and will be printed. I have placed a copy of it in the hands of a number of members, I am sorry I have not been able to give one to every member. I think over fifty have been distributed to various members of the House. This memorandum deals with the general policy respecting the development of the militia. I think it will be found to be a very interesting document, and I shall have occasion to refer to it during my remarks. I have also had prepared by the accountant who is the finance member of the militia council, a statement in considerable detail of the whole of the various estimates for the current year. I think this paper will also be found of great interest. It has been ordered to be printed, and I shall have occasion to make some quotations from it also.

I suppose it is scarcely necessary, Mr. Chairman, to speak of the objects or the necessity of a militia force. That is a matter which was settled many years ago, and as to the importance of which there can be no question. However, during the last seven or eight years a very much greater interest has been taken in military matters in this country owing to the circumstances that have arisen within the country itself, such as the very great development of the country, and the events which have occurred outside of this country in which the empire has been interested. The war in South Africa has been one and the war which is going on to-day between Russia and Japan is another of the matters which causes all countries, even the smallest and the weakest, to pay more attention to the question of defence than they have done before. I may add too that what is transpiring to-day in the war to which I have just referred is an object lesson which teaches the weaker countries that their case may not be as hopeless as it might seem when they consider the smallness of their population and their comparative poverty. The first object of a militia force is the maintenance of the civil power in the country. Its second object is to defend the soil of the country against invasion. The question may be asked : Is it possible to make a militia force such as ours, which is a purely voluntary force, an efficient one ? Is it possible to make such a force one such as could be relied upon in the hour of trouble, in the event of a severe attack from without or serious troubles within ? Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that it is ; in fact, I have very little doubt that it could be made effective. We have in Switzerland an evidence of what can be done in the way of perfecting a militia force. That country has an army, which is a militia army of perhaps 250,000 men, which is said to be one of the most completely equipped in every sense of the word of any army in the world. But, it will be answered that the militia force of Switzerland is one in which compulsory enlistment exists. That is true. That is the essential difference between the condition in Switzerland and the condition in Canada. Anglo-Saxons have not been in the habit of submitting to compulsory military training, and certainly at this moment we cannot consider the question from that point of view. The question then is this : Can a voluntary militia service such as ours be made efficient? I answer that question again in the affirmative. I might appeal to history to prove the truth of my assertion. I will not do more than refer to what transpired in 1776, in 1812, during the Fenian invasion of 1866 and 1870, to what occurred in the Northwest and particularly in the later rebellion of 1885, and I may add the bravery of Canadian troops who served in South Africa also as evidence of the fact that the Canadian people are made of the right kind of material to make an army. It is true that during the earlier times to which I have referred, the militia of this country, or rather of the different provinces which make up this country, were under the guidance of the imperial army. There were garrisons in various parts of Canada in those days and up to 1870 or 1871. The imperial army was the backbone of the force in those times and supplied the staff very largely and the departments which go to make up a properly constituted army. But, during the Northwest rebellion of 1885, the militia of Canada, under the Canadian government, carried out all its work without, I believe, any assistance whatever from the imperial army and succeeded in subduing what at one time certainly was a very formidable rebellion. Now, what are the important things to make the militia effective ? I would say first a sound administration which is the sine qua non and, of course, I must add sufficient money in order to carry the various plans and schemes recommended by the administration into effect.

Recent wars have shown that it is absolutely necessary in order to have an efficient force or an effective army that all the departments and all the branches of the army should exist in peace which would be required in war, that they should not only exist but that they should be actually utilized and used, that in other words in everything except numbers the peace establishment of the army or of the militia should contain within it all the elements necessary to take its place as an effective force in time of war, that it should be, in fact, a nucleus in every respect of all the departments which go to make up the whole and to make an effective force. If I may say so, that is the course which we are endeavouring to pursue in Canada and that is the direction more than any other in which advancement has been made during the last five or six years. I referred a moment ago to the fact that in the earlier part of last century or up to 1870 or thereabouts the militia of this country was dependent upon the imperial force stationed in North America for all the departments, for all the staff for everything except men more or less trained which go to make up the army. We have in recent years, as I pointed out, taken the important step of assuming responsibility ourselves. One after one of the garrisons which were stationed in North America in 1867 at the time of confederation has disappeared until now the only garrisons remaining are those at Halifax and Esquimalt.

We have now taken the last step in completing the assumption of the responsibility on the part of Canada for the defence of this country by offering to relieve the imperial government from the responsibility and maintenance of those two garrisons by supstituting Canadian garrisons and paying the bill for their maintenance. Perhaps this would be a convenient time—as this is really the most important departure involved in the estimates we are now discussing—perhaps this would be a convenient time to discuss what has happened. Those who have read the papers laid on the table of the House—which I regret are incomplete but which are sufficiently complete to justify the government in asking a vote for the maintenance of these garrisons—those who have read these papers will observe that in the Order in Council of the 20th of January, 1905, reference is made to the Colonial Conference (1902) in these words :

It will be within the recollection of Your Excellency that at the Colonial Conference held in Lonodn, 1902, the suggestion was made by the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Secretary of State for War that the various colonial governments should contribute some portion of the cost of the maintenance of the imperial army and navy. The Canadian ministers present, for reasons set forth in the memorandum printed in the report of the conference, expressed their inability to concur in that suggestion. They at the same time acknowledged the propriety of the Dominion, as it advances in population and wealth, making more liberal provision for the purpose of self defence, and they stated verbally the willingness of the government of Canada to assume the responsibility of garrisoning Halifax and Esquimalt, and to this extent relieving the imperial government of the cost of protecting the Dominion. They now deem it expedient to renew this offer in a more formal and precise manner.

It would be convenient to make a brief reference to the events of 1902 at the conference in London referred to in this minute of council. The exact proposal which was made by the Secretary of State for War was not that a sum of money should be directly contributed, but that Canadian troops should be trained especially for service abroad. I will read from the official publication a portion of the remarks of Mr. Brodrick at the conference :

Now your time is of value, and I do not want to enlarge on the many other features which are put before me by my military advisers on this subject, but what I would ask is this : that out of this very large number of men who are only trained in some degree in the colonies we must look, even if it were for only one in four, to be specially trained and to be held in readiness for such an emergency

The emergency referred to was of course war.

I propose that these men should be trained with a liability to over sea service, that they should realize they are a part of the army reserve of the imperial force, that their services are absolutely pledged in the event of the government to which they belong proffering assistance to the imperial forces in the emergency. I would ask that they should receive such training as might be agreed upon between our military authorities and the government concerned, and that they should be fully organized and fully equipped with a view to acting together and drilling together in the battalions or regiments with which they would take the field.

I shall also read from a memorandum by the Canadian ministers concerning defence, which was practically a reply to the statement made by Mr. Broderick and also the statement made by Lord Selborne, who I should state asked for a contribution in money, so that in that respect his proposal was different from that made by Mr. Brodrick. This is a part of the memorandum :

The Canadian ministers regret that they have been unable to assent to the suggestions made by Lord Selborne respecting the navy and by Mr. St. John Brodrick respecting the army. The ministers desire to point out that their objections arise, not so much from the expense involved as from a belief that the acceptance of the proposals would entail an important departure from the principle of colonial self-government. Canada values highly the measure of local independence which has been granted it from time to time by the imperial authorities and which has been so productive of beneficial results both as respects the material progress of the country and the strenthening of the ties that bind it to the mother land. But while, for these reasons the Canadian ministers are obliged to withhold their assent to the propositions of the Admiralty and the War Office, they fully appreciate the duty of the Dominion, as it advances in population and wealth, to make more liberal outlay for those necessary preparations of self-defence which every country has to assume and bear. That the taxpayers of the United Kingdom should desire to be relieved of some of the burdens which they bear in connection with military expenditure is quite reasonable. Canada, in the development of its own militia system, will be found ready to respond to that desire by taking upon itself some of the services in the Dominion which have hitherto been borne by the imperial government. What has already been done by Canada must give assurance of the disposition of the Canadian people to recognize their proper obligations. In the early years of the Dominion an understanding was come to between the imperial and Canadian government that Canada should expend about $1,000,000 annually on her militia system. From time to time that expenditure has been voluntarily increased, and at present—apart from the special outlay in connection with the maintenance of the garrison at Halifax, the Dominion is expending about $2,000,000 annually on her militia. . . . .

In conclusion the ministers repeat, that, while the Canadian government are obliged to dissent from the measures proposed they fully appreciate the obligation of the Dominion to make expenditures for the purposes of defence in proportion to the increasing population and wealth of the country. They are willing that these expenditures shall be so directed as to relieve the taxpayer of the mother country from some of the burdens which she now bears, and they have the strongest desire to carry out their defence schemes in co-operation with the imperial authorities and under the advice of experienced imperial officers so far as this is consistent with the principle of local self-government which has proved so great a factor in the promotion of imperial unity.

Mr. FOSTER. If I understood the minister aright, Mr. Brodrick's proposition was that the one in four should be held capable for and liable to service abroad, if such were proffered by the Dominion government ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no power outside the Dominion government which could send that one in four abroad ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What struck me was that the answer of the Canadian ministers went on the assumption that that would trench on the rights of the Dominion government to complete independence in the matter. I do not take it that Mr. Brodrick's proposition meant that there should be any call by a British minister, but that only if occasion arose in the empire for a contribution to defence by Canada if the Canadian ministry decided to proffer assistance, then, that the men who would go abroad would be a trained body.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That, I think, is in effect what Mr. Brodrick intended.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I did not understand the position taken by the minister, that such a proposition would derogate from the absolute control of Canada over her militia system and her own men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course, under the militia law of this country it would be impossible to organize such a force. It has always been open to anybody in Canada to volunteer for service abroad, but it was not under the militia law of that day, nor is it under the militia law of the present day, competent for the government of this country to compel anybody who may belong to the militia of Canada to serve abroad. It always has to be a question of voluntary service, and we felt—I may say that I felt, at any rate, and I still think—that it would be undesirable to create, even if we could in this country, a special force. I thought it would interfere with the welfare of the militia as a whole to create, even if we had the power to do so, a special service which would receive special favour, which would be ear-marked, to use Mr. Barton's expression, for service abroad. I may add that I have here a report which was submitted to the conference from the War Office by a very distinguished officer, Lieutenant-Colonel E. A. Altham, C.M.G., Assistant Quartermaster General at Headquarters, dealing with the whole question of service in the colonies and what assistance might fairly be asked for from the colonies. In that part of his memorandum which refers to Canada he says :

> It may, therefore, be concluded that the best way in which Canada can co-operate in imperial defence is by making her militia an efficient force. It is more important that the Canadian ministry be strongly pressed to take this reasonable precaution than that they should maintain contingents for general imperial service.

I am reading from the papers relating to the Intercolonial Conference, page 55. Of course, the writer goes on to say, at the conclusion of this paper, that he would hope that a small force might be contributed from Canada, but what I have read seemed to me to have a very direct bearing upon the condition of things here, and seemed really to support very strongly the view which the administration took at that time and still holds.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the permanent force that is now established be the force called out in case of strikes ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. At the expense of the country instead of the municipality ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Militia Law of Canada passed last session provides that the permanent force should be called upon first in any case of riots or trouble.

Mr. BERGERON. And at the expense of the government ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No ; always at the expense of the municipality.

Mr. BERGERON. The same as it was formerly ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Just the same. There is this difference, though, that in the case of the permanent force there is less expense involved.

Mr. BERGERON. It would only be the transportation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Probably. Now, to return to the organization of the militia. The militia of Canada is composed of the staff, the permanent force, the active militia and the reserve militia. The reserve militia exists only in name to-day. It is only the population between 18 and 60 behind the enrolled active militia which may be called upon to some extent, perhaps to a very considerable extent, in the event of severe stress. The staff may be considered to be a part of the permanent force. The staff, I suppose, might be called the thinking part of the organization. The permanent force is the teaching part of the organization. The prime object of the establishment and maintenance of the permanent force is the education of the active militia of the country, while at the same time it performs certain garrison duties. These duties it has been doing for some time now, especially in Halifax and Esquimalt, and a considerable part of the time and attention of the permanent force will be devoted to those purposes. I may add here that a depot of the permanent force would have had to be created in the province of Nova Scotia even if we had not decided to take this step of taking over the garrison at Halifax and relieving the British government from all expense in connection with it.

Mr. TISDALE. Could you not have utilized the regulars for instruction there ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No ; that attempt has been made on several occasions, and has never worked well.

Mr. TISDALE. You have given up the idea of utilizing them altogether ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, it has never succeeded. In the same way in British Columbia it would have been necessary to establish a depot so that you may place against the expenditure involved in establishing two, it is true, very much smaller depots in Nova Scotia and British Columbia.

Beginning at the top, on the 1st of February, when we had the first discussion this session on militia items, I discussed very fully the reorganization of the Militia Department at Ottawa and I do not propose to enter into that now at any length. A militia council was organized under the new law which was passed at the last sesssion. That council was organized in November last on the lines very largely of the army council of England. We have always felt it to be desirable that the two forces should act in concert in peace as they would in the event of war, at any rate on this continent. We have thought it advisable to follow the lead of the British army in this respect. I believe, and those who co-operate with me agree, that the establishment of this council has been a very great advantage to the militia. It has promoted co-operation and co-ordination of the different departments, and continuity of service. The difficulty in old times was that different generals came with different views, that nothing was recorded, and that each new general seemed to think that it was incumbent upon him to start out with some new policy ; and expense and sometimes serious loss was involved in these changes. At any rate, the advantage of a consistent development along a certain fixed line of policy was not secured. Now the heads of the four principal departments—the chief of the general staff, the adjutant-general, the quartermaster general and the master-general of ordnance—the four military members, meet with the minister and the deputy minister and the financial member of the council, at least once every two weeks. It has been our custom to meet once a week and sometimes oftener, with, I believe, the very greatest advantage to the country and to the different members of the council. They are in touch with each other, they are able to talk matters over and to exchange ideas, and everything of importance which takes place at that council is made a matter of record ; so that at any future time my successor, whoever he may be, will have the advantage, so far as it is an advantage, of reading what was done, and of learning the reasons which induced us to come to any particular conclusion or to change any particular line of policy.

I have said that the permanent force is the source to which the active militia must look for its training and education. The distribution of the permanent force is a matter of some importance. I said something not long ago about a chain of military depots from Halifax to the Pacific coast, and I was promptly quoted in some of the newspapers as having said that we were going to create a chain of forts. Nothing so serious as that was in our minds. The idea was to have these depots distributed in such a way as to accomplish two purposes—first, in the most convenient way, the education and training of the active militia, the officers and non-commissioned officers, and secondly, to give the greatest amount of service in assisting to maintain order within the country. I referred to the development of the idea. We had established depots in the east, and when the province of Manitoba was created, a depot was established there. Two new provinces are now being created, and depots will be established there. We have taken over Esquimalt, and so there is a depot in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by a depot?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the name of a small permanent force or a garrison.

Mr. SPROULE. I wanted to know if there was anything more than a force—if there were any supplies or ammunition kept at a depot?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course, it is the duty of a permanent force, wherever it may be, to guard any supplies which may be deposited at that particular point.

Mr. SPROULE. What I desired to ascertain was whether it was the policy of the government to have in every province a separate depot where there would be a permanent supply?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is now. At every one of these depots, or adjacent to it in the military district, there is a supply of arms, ammunition and clothing.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. Does the minister intend to establish a depot in every province of Canada?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not necessarily. My hon. friend is so near Halifax that I trust that the depot there will answer.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. We have a great deal of confidence in the militia of that province.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. With regard to the active militia, it has a strength now of something under 50,000. There has been a considerable increase in its strength during the last ten years.

Mr. FOSTER. Before my hon. friend leaves the permanent force, I would like him to show in what way these depots serve the educational purpose?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The officers of the active militia are sent to the depots to take a course of instruction, which is known as the short course. There are several courses of instruction each year. So far as there is accommodation for the officers, they live in the barracks. If there is not accommodation for them there, they receive an allowance from the Militia Department to indemnify them for their expenses. I may say that the most important problem which the department has to solve is really how best the officers of the active militia can obtain the necessary education. As a rule, they are business men engaged in the active callings of life, and it is very difficult for them to break away from their business engagements and give a few weeks much less months, which would probably be necessary to enable an officer to become thoroughly qualified.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The establishment of depots means the distribution of the permanent force in different parts of Canada?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And, incidentally, these depots will serve as training schools for officers and non-commissioned officers of the active militia as distinguished from the permanent corps?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. The only places where there will be anything more will be at the two forts, Halifax and Esquimalt, though these will be used as training schools also?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly. I fear that in my anxiety to avoid taking more time than is absolutely necessary I have failed to make my explanation as full as hon. members desire, and so may have defeated my own object. Perhaps it would be well for me to read from the memorandum which has been handed to me by the military members of the council.

Mr. TISDALE. That is the report the hon. minister has already distributed among some of the members of the House?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. STOCKTON. I would like to ask the minister a question. I did not fully understand his explanation this afternoon. I understand that the fortresses at Halifax and Esquimalt are to be handed over to the Dominion authorities, and that the Minister of Militia is to take possession and control of them for the Dominion of Canada. Does that include merely the fortresses, or does it include all the equipments connected with the fortresses; for instance, the guns and stores and all the other military equipments?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Unfortunately, as my hon. friend will have observed from the discussion, the arrangements between the imperial government and this government are not complete. The Canadian government offered to relieve the imperial government from the responsibility of maintaining those two garrisons. Exactly what that means has not been defined, but I assume that it means that the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt will be maintained effectively as garrisons. My hon. friend is aware that these are important naval stations, and he may wish to know how far, in the direction of maintaining them as naval stations, we propose to go. I am not able to answer that question, because it will be a matter of subsequent negotiations. But, speaking in a general way, I should think that the government would expect to expend what money is necessary to maintain and hold against all comers those two fortresses.

Mr. STOCKTON. One reason why I asked the question was this : I understand that since negotiations were entered into between this government and the British government, and since this government had consented to take charge of those fortresses, the works at Esquimalt had been, to a large extent, dismantled by the imperial authorities and a lot of the material sold. I do not know whether the information is correct or not, but I understand that purchasers came all the way from San Francisco to purchase the metal and material of that kind that was to be sold by the imperial authorities before they vacated the fortress. If that is so, we can readily understand that it would be very much better for this government to make the purchase itself, and allow everything to remain in statu quo, than to let the fortress be dismantled and then go to the expense of renewing the equipment.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have heard such stories as my hon. friend mentions, both as regards Esquimalt and Halifax.

Mr. STOCKTON. I did not understand that with respect to Halifax, only to Esquimalt.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have seen the same story published in the newspapers with regard to Halifax. General Lake, the chief of the general staff, visited Halifax not long ago and was instructed to inquire into everything connected with that fortress, and he assures me that there is not a word of truth in the story ; and I fancy that there is no truth whatever in the story with reference to Esquimalt. It does not seem likely that the imperial government, after agreeing to hand over these fortresses to Canada, would sell anything that was of use or was required for the purpose of equipment. The British government is in the habit of selling obsolete guns and obsolete equipment to get rid of them. It might be that they wished to get rid of some obsolete equipment in these fortresses, or something of that kind.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the minister if he has any information with respect to the amount of money that has been expended by the British government in Halifax and Esquimalt, and the probable expenditure per annum that Canada will have to make ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would suggest that we had better push on with the statement as rapidly as we can, and later on, when we reach the stage of considering the items, I will try to answer all the questions my hon. friend may desire to put. At six o'clock I was discussing the question of the permanent force as a teaching agency, and was looking for a quotation which I wished to make from the memorandum which I laid on the table prepared by the military members of the council. I will proceed to read that :

> As regards the two former, the establishment of the permanent corps, as at present authorized by Order in Council, is 1,995 of all ranks. The establishment of the active militia as authorized by Order in Council is 46,000, to which should be added the batteries of field artillery and the ammunition park nucleus authorized by special general order of 9th May, which raises the total to about 47,000 men. . . . . On the militia forces of the Dominion as a whole must necessarily fall the two main duties of support to the civil power and defence of the country against foreign aggression.
> In addition to this duty, which it shares with the whole of the active militia of the Dominion, there falls to the permanent corps, in which term may be included the permanent staff of the militia, the additional duty of being the instructors of the active militia, of maintaining the standard of military knowledge in the country, and of furnishing that permanent element in the garrisons of the forty-five naval bases already mentioned, which is necessary for their protection against sudden attack, as well as for the preservation of their valuable armament and works of defence. This latter duty is in its essence merely a continuation of the duty imposed upon the permanent corps by article 28 of the Militia Act of 1886.
> In considering these several duties, and in framing a policy with regard to the militia calculated to enable that force to fulfil them, the military members have had to consider all three requirements from the point of view, not merely of what was in the military sense best, but what was also from a national point of view financially and politically possible. . . .
> In considering the establishment of the permanent force it must be borne in mind that the creation of those, indispensable adjuncts to an armed force which are known as the departments of an army, those branches which are responsible for feeding it, equipping it with munitions of war and stores of all kinds, for paying it and for providing for the care of the sick and wounded, is in the Canadian militia of only very recent date. The same is true of the engineer arm. So far, indeed, both the engineer arm and these departments are almost in their infancy, and if the militia force is ever to be in a condition to take the field and remain there, it will be necessary that proper provision for the instruction of the active militia in these directions should be provided for.
> As the raising of this force proceeds, it will be necessary, in view of the magnificent distances of that country (that is the Northwest), to provide additional schools of instruction besides the squadrons already mentioned at Winnipeg and the 'Strathcona Horse,' if they are not to be out of reach of the units they instruct. This increase to the permanent corps, say four squadrons of Canadian Mounted Rifles will of necessity be gradual, for it should, as already stated, follow the development of the active militia and not precede it. At the same time, it should not be forgotten that here, if anywhere the enormous influx of population containing, as it does, a large proportion of aliens brings into special prominence the duty imposed upon the militia of supporting the civil power—a duty which in that country, at first at any rate, would be more efficiently performed by a permanent body of troops.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will pass as rapidly as possible over several items to which I desire to call attention. Before leaving this question of education I wish to say that the idea of a permanent central camp for the teaching of the officers of the active militia has not been abandoned, that further investigation has been made and that I am informed by the chief of the general staff that he hopes to be able to make a recommendation to me within a few days. He would have done so before this, but he has been engaged visiting the camps of instruction. I believe the choice lies between a site north of Ottawa known as Kazabazua on the railway line and a point to the westward near Pembroke known at Petawawa at either of which points sufficient land can be acquired at a very reasonable cost.

I was about to say something about the active militia but will only say now that we have not given up the idea of obtaining within the near future a force of at least 100,000 men who will be efficient and effective if required. The number of men, however, to be enrolled and trained annually is to be larger than was expected when I last discussed this matter in the House. It had been hoped a year or two ago that perhaps a maximum of 40,000 of the active militia might be sufficient to be expanded into a force of something over 100,000. I am now advised by General Lake that it will be desirable—and those who read the memorandum will observe what he said there—that the force should be between 50,000 and 60,000 in order to ensure its being suddenly increased or enlarged to 100,000.

Mr. TISDALE. I notice there is no recommendation about that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. Let me say in regard to the active militia that the experience of the present year has shown that the camps have been, as far as the quality of the men is concerned, the best camps we have ever had, and that the companies have been recruited in most cases to the full strength without difficulty. I hear on all sides the highest commendation of the working of the efficiency pay plan by which, although the pay nominally remains the same as it was before, 50 cents a day, there is an increase beginning with the first year of enlistment of 20 cents and increasing during three years by 50 cents giving the militiaman at the end of the third year and as long as he chooses to remain or his services are required, $1 a day, this extra pay being given only upon the condition that he is efficient in every way, that his behaviour is good and that he has attained certain proficiency in the use of the rifle. I believe that this expenditure although it involves a very large increase in the total vote, is the best investment that has been made in the militia up to this time. The same thing is true of the permanent force. The newspapers have stated that we have had great difficulty in getting recruits. That is not true. On the contrary we have no difficulty whatever and the quality of the material which is offering is very much better than we have ever had before.

Mr. TISDALE. How many attended the camps?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not able off-hand to give that information. The camps are not all concluded yet, but the percentage is very large. I understand that the attendance has been between 30,000 and 40,000. I now would like to be permitted in the fewest possible words to refer categorically to some of the improvements and changes which have taken place in the force within the last few years. I have already referred to the Militia Council. I have referred to the creation of higher commands; if not to-day, I have done it on a previous occasion.

The Royal Military College has been discussed during the present session and I have much pleasure in saying that we have now about thirty Royal Military College graduates in the permanent force and we have applications for a large number in addition, so that shortly we will have in the force between forty and fifty officers who are graduates of the Royal Military College—a most desirable result. Then I wish to refer to the creation of departments. The intelligence, engineering, ordnance and navy service corps and the medical services have all been created within the last few years. A militia pension law has been passed and has done very much indeed towards promoting the best interests of the permanent force, because it now ensures to a man who desires to follow a military career a living in the declining years of his life. Then, there are the limit of the tenure of command, the creation of a reserve of officers, higher educational standards for officers and opportunities of attending the staff college in England. A school of musketry has been established, rifle associations have been established all over the country both civil and military, and a school of gunnery is being established in Quebec. In connection with rifle shooting I may refer to the fact that the Militia Council were waited upon a few weeks ago by a deputation from McGill University asking that a special grant be made to enable students at McGill to meet certain expenditures incident to their taking advantage of the rifle range within four or five miles of Montreal. We passed certain regulations applying to all the universities in Canada and are asking the committee to vote $4,000 to aid students in universities to become proficient in rifle shooting.

Mr. FOSTER. What will that $1,000 do for each one ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $4,000. When we come to the financial side of it, I will be able to tell my hon. friend exactly. I have an estimate on that point. The Ross rifle factory has been established and although we have not received any of the rifles yet, I believe 1,000 have been distributed to the Northwest Mounted Police and some 500 to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. There are 9,000 or 10,000 practically ready to be issued to the militia, but we have not yet taken delivery of them. I am informed that the rifle is a very good one and compares favourably with any rifle in the world.

Mr. TISDALE. Has it been finally passed on and accepted ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. The improvements are complete ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mark II is a decided improvement on mark I, and has been accepted and a special rifle agreed upon as a pattern. An inter-departmental committee has been appointed as between this department and the Department of Public Works for determining the plans upon which military buildings should be constructed. That is resulting satisfactorily, and I have here certain plans which have been adopted for armouries of different sizes, which we hope to be able to apply according to the requirements of the various districts.

Even if it is late in the session I think these matters are of sufficient importance to justify our taking a reasonable time to discuss them. In view of the large and increasing expenditure on the militia I have been trying to ascertain some means by which we would be able to very largely increase the possibilities of getting efficient troops in the event of their being required, without too great expense to the state. It is not a new idea. In England and in Australia efforts are being made to enlist the support of the local authorities in the schools. In Australia the government of the different states have met the Minister of Defence of the Commonwealth and have come to an agreement as to certain things which should be done partly by the local authorities and partly by the central authorities in connection with the education and training of the boys in the schools, in rifle shooting and military physical exercises. We might look hopefully in this direction and I intend—I have done it to some extent already—to communicate with all the governments of the provinces and ask them to send representatives to meet the Militia Council here at a convenient time to see whether we cannot agree upon some basis by which we should adopt some uniform plan throughout Canada for educating and training our youth in the schools. I will not detain the committee to mention the details of my idea further than to say that in the normal schools some provision might be made by which each male teacher of a certain grade should acquire certain military qualifications. I have been much interested in an article in the 'Nineteenth Century' magazine by the Right Hon. the Earl of Meath who is devoting a great deal of intelligent attention to this subject, and as what he says cannot be improved upon I will take the liberty of reading one or two extracts:

> If there be no chance of obtaining conscription, which I do not want, nor of obtaining the adoption of the militia ballot, what is to be done? Something must be done, or it is absolutely certain that if we are at war with any great power we shall find ourselves in a very awkward position. It cannot be said that the present Secretary of State for War has been very successful in solving the problem. The objections to adult compulsory military service may be summed up as follows: (1) the infringement of the liberty of the adult citizen; (2) the interference with his industrial pursuits; (3) the disorganization caused to trade, commerce and agriculture by the withdrawal of men from their prosecution; (4) the moral objection to the housing of large numbers of men in barracks. None of these objections would be applicable to the training of lads during the educative period of their lives. The liberty of boys is always restrained with universal consent. They are not asked whether they will learn to read or write, but are compelled by law to submit to tuition. What would be the hardship of requiring our lads to perfect themselves in another branch of knowledge, that of being able to use the rifle ? It would be exceedingly popular. The lads would like it. They would not attempt to run away from it; they would look upon it as a sport. Such training could be given so as not in the least to interfere with their preparation for the business of life. On the contrary, the discipline and healthy exercise would improve their health, strengthen their moral and physical fibre and add to their professional, industrial or labour value when they attained to manhood and entered on the serious business of their lives. If it be considered inadvisable to make shooting with a rifle a compulsory subject in our schools like reading, writing and arithmetic—though why it should not be placed on the same footing as the latter subjects it is difficult to understand—then at least let it be encouraged by the government and by the school authorities; and let facilities be given to all healthy boys over fourteen to render themselves under proper supervision and guidance, efficient in this manly exercise.
> If training in youth were made universal, not only would the adult male be capable of taking his place in the ranks, but, what is of still greater importance almost, the spirit of patriotism and the sense of duty would be quickened in the nation and in time of difficulty young men would rush to the ranks and compulsion would be unnecessary. Moreover, by the training of young men no military caste or profession would be created which would desire war. There are a number of people who are terribly afraid of militarism. Now if I felt in the smallest degree that any suggestion made by me would increase the danger of war I should certainly not advocate it, but I feel perfectly certain that the very reverse would be the case. Foreign newspapers assert that we are much more likely to go to war than any other nation, from the very fact that so large a proportion of our population know that under no circumstances could they suffer in their bodies by war. Whether that be true or not it is difficult to say, but if every lad were trained to arms and taught that it was his duty, if necessary, to volunteer for the service of the country he would think twice before he went to a music hall and waved a British flag with a view to create a war simply and solely for the sake of glory. He would have to take part in that war, and he would think twice before he rushed into it. In other words, there would be much less chance of militarism if our youths were trained to arms and knew in some degree what war meant, with all its horrors. There would indeed, be much less vicarious pseudo-patriotism which calls for war, and which, when blows are struck, is willing to shelter itself behind the professional army. The sense of duty and moral responsibility would be quickened.

What do we see taking place in Japan? The spirit of Japan has been an object lesson to the world and it is to be hoped that we are learning from it. It is not altogether to the military efficiency of the Japanese army, in the sense of great preparations, that their success has been due.

The success has been attained in great measure in the schools of Japan. Ever since the revolution in 1867, day by day 'Bushido,' or the spirit of chivalry, has been taught in the schools—a system which includes the inculcation of patriotism, obedience to authority, and self-sacrifice. The children are taught that the individual is nothing, and that the state is everything.

I have read too within a day or two an article upon practically the same subject by Lord Roberts. I have here a quotation which I shall read.

> I maintain that it is the bounden duty of the state to see that every able-bodied man in this country, no matter to what grade of society he may belong, undergoes some kind of military training in his youth sufficient to enable him to shoot straight and carry out simple orders if ever his services are required for the national defence.

I shall quote further one or two words on this important subject from Lord Roberts in a letter written on the 9th day of June:

> For these reasons I am convinced that it is a matter of the highest importance not only to the regular army and the auxiliary forces of this country, but to the empire at large that rifle shooting should be made a national pursuit and skill with the rifle a national accomplishment in the same manner that archery and skill with the long bow were so considered in the olden days in England. . . . In the United States a national board for the promotion of rifle practice has been formed and plans were approved last year for the encouragement of rifle shooting in the state militia throughout all civil and military schools and amongst all civilian adults by which to quote the words of a circular signed by the Secretary for War, it is proposed 'to educate our young men and boys over fifteen years of age to be an army of expert rifle shots,' and it is believed that, by this way, the United States will within a few years have more than one million men who will have for practical purposes on the line of battle nearly all the requirements for the most efficient soldiers in the world.

And again in the same letter:

> I am satisfied that unless some system of obligatory physical training and instruction in rifle shooting be enforced in all schools and colleges and amongst the youth of the country generally, up to the age of eighteen years, we shall be compelled to resort to conscription in some form or another. . . . The proposed system of rifle clubs and physical training must prove the greatest possible benefit to the nation for they would greatly tend to increase the intelligence of the masses, develop their physique and inculcate habits of order and discipline besides providing a reserve of efficient marksmen.

And so I might go on but I shall not detain the committee. I would commend to any hon. gentleman who is interested in this subject this letter of Lord Roberts which is published in the 'Times' and also in the 'Daily Telegram' of June 12 last.

I propose at the earliest possible moment to have a conference with the representatives of the different provinces to see whether anything can be done in this direction. I intend to do this before another session of parliament comes around. I would perhaps feel disposed to make another suggestion if I were not afraid of being misunderstood and misreported, but I think at the risk of being misunderstood and being charged with having made the statement that I am in favour of conscription, I would go a step further and suggest for the consideration of the committee whether the young men of Canada under the age of 21 who have not yet seriously begun the work of life, might not fairly be asked to give free annual trainings in the militia to the country or an equivalent. If they receive a training which I hope to be able to arrange for in the schools it might not be necessary, but it seems to me that it might not be too much to ask of them that prior to the age of 21 something of this kind should be done by the young men of the country. I think it would only be necessary to put the matter properly before them in order to secure that something will be done which will not cost the country very much money and which will give the country a force the very best it could possibly have and out of which in the future the militia can be recruited at the very minimum of cost.

Now, Sir, I come to the consideration of what is perhaps next in importance to the considerations which I have already presented to the committee, the question of matériel, arms, ammunition, equipment and so on. While I do not think it would be prudent to go too fully into this, nor required that I should do so, I would like to repeat what I have said in this House before that I will be glad at any time to have any hon. member come to my department or go and visit the militia council and there get any information which we can give him with reference to these matters. There are some matters with reference to the militia, connected with quantities of rifles, ammunition, &c., which it is not desirable to discuss in parliament, but we will welcome to the department representatives from the opposition or supporters of the government who wish to be informed. We will always be glad to give them any information in our power. With regard to artillery, one of the most important arms of the service, I may say this much that we have ordered in England the latest and best gun, the 18½ pounder. These guns are now being manufactured and delivery will begin within a very short time. Then certain 7·5 and 4·7 and 6-inch guns as well as other guns which have been considered to be necessary by the military authorities have been ordered and are in course of being delivered. I have already spoken of rifles. I think there are orders for 15,000 or 20,000 rifles placed with the Ross Company, and I believe that in the course of a very short time rifles will be delivered at the rate of at least 1,000 a month and it is proposed to go on ordering these rifles until such time as we shall have secured sufficient, certainly up to the point of 100,000, and I should hope a much larger number. For these artillery guns, the artillery limbers, wagons, &c., are being manufactured in this country. The ammunition is also being manufactured or will shortly all be manufactured in Canada.

Mr. TISDALE. For these different ranges and sizes ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For these different sizes. Clothing, saddlery and equipment are all being manufactured in Canada so that at the present moment—and I think this is an interesting fact and one of which we should be proud—of the large vote of $1,225,000 for matériel every cent is being expended in Canada except that for artillery which is manufactured in England. So that out of the $1,225,000 annually expended all but $500,000 is being expended in this country.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister give us an idea of the comparative cost of the Canadian manufacture and that of the British army ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The department usually gives the benefit of the duty less the one-third preference off, as compared with the war office prices. We have in the department the war office prices, and on those the comparison is made, so that the prices are partically set by the department. The Ross rifle costs, under the contract, $25. I understand that the war office price for the new rifle is between $21 and $22, and that the rifle manufactured by the trade at the war office price, with the expense of importation added, would cost very nearly as much landed here as we are paying for the Ross rifle. In the saddlery and clothing, I think there is very little difference.

With regard to the manufacture of larger guns, the committee will be interested in hearing that several large English concerns are looking into the advisability of offering to establish a factory in Canada, and if the requirements of the government were sufficient to enable us to make a contract for a term of years, there is no doubt that a factory would be established. I myself feel strongly that we ought to encourage the establishment of such works in Canada. If we are going to have an effective militia force, we should have one entirely self-contained and self-reliant. No one can tell what accident might arise in time of war. Communications with the mother country might be cut, and if we are going seriously to consider the question of taking the responsibility of our own defence into our own hands, it seems to me absolutely necessary that at the earliest possible moment some such step should be taken. One other thing should be done. Explosives are not manufactured in Canada. The materials out of which cartridges are made are not manufactured here. The government have an offer at the present moment from a party who is willing to take up the manufacture of cartridges at some point to be agreed upon in the province of Ontario, and to bind itself to manufacture explosives—cordite or whatever may be required—for its own factory and for the government factory. I believe that some result will come from this, and perhaps before very long.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is it the intention of the department, in addition to the guns mentioned, to supply quick-firing machine guns, such as the Colt gun and the 'Pom-Pom' ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, some of these are included in the order that has been made—I am not able to say the number.

Mr. FOSTER. I am a little hazy as to how the minister will evolve that 100,000 of an active militia out of the present 47,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I have stated, the advice which I have received is that we should have more than 47,000—perhaps 55,000. The material would be supplied from rifle associations and from men who had passed through their three years' service in the militia and are on the reserve. Of course, it would be necessary to establish a reserve. That has not yet been done, but it will be done; it can very easily be done. In the meantime, we have material in the rifle associations from which we can draw, because the members of all these associations sign a promise when they join them to enlist if required to do so by the government. So that I do not think there would be any difficulty in obtaining the extra 40,000 or 45,000 men, fairly well qualified, good shots, and with some military training, to expand the force to at least double its size.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to call the minister's attention to a statement made in paragraph 22 of the memorandum which he has brought down in reference to the establishment of a cavalry corps at Fredericton. That paragraph says:

To begin with, the instruction of the mobile mounted forces has to be considered. No portion of the garrison force, already alluded to, can undertake to instruct mounted troops. There already exist two squadrons of mounted men, viz: (1) one squadron of Royal Canadian Dragoons; (2) one squadron of Royal Mounted Rifles, quartered at Toronto and Winnipeg respectively. A large increase has recently taken place in the mounted troops of the active militia along the portion of our frontier south of Montreal. The existing squadron at Toronto is too far removed from this portion of the country to offer a satisfactory centre of instruction. It is therefore, proposed to create an additional squadron of Royal Canadian Dragoons for instructional purposes, and to locate it at or about St. Johns, P.Q., when the latter place is vacated by the infantry school of instruction, for which provision will shortly be made at Montreal. Another portion of the country where the inhabitants make good horsemen, and where there is a long frontier thinly settled to be watched, and hardly sufficient troops available for the purpose, is New Brunswick. It is proposed eventually to replace the infantry school of instruction, removed from Fredericton to Halifax, by a third squadron of Royal Canadian Dragoons, to be located at Fredericton. This addition to the cavalry is not, however, proposed to take place in the immediate future.

I may say that I do not like the look of the word 'eventually,' nor the expression 'not proposed to take place in the immediate future.' When the minister made his statement in reference to the proposed reorganization of the permanent depots on the 6th June, he coupled without any distinction St. John's, Quebec and Fredericton as places at which it was proposed to establish cavalry corps in substitution of infantry corps. On that occasion he said:

I will read the statement I have here because there is no object in keeping it back. This statement comprises the whole of the depots; those proposed as well as those now in existence.

Then follows a statement of the points at which the different corps are established, and at which it is proposed to establish others. The last item is:

Royal Canadian Dragoons; one squadron each at Toronto, Ont., St. Johns, Que., and Fredericton, N.B., the Royal Canadian Dragoons would replace the infantry regiments which are at present in these depots.

Mr. FOWLER. You will continue the depot at Fredericton?

Sir FREDERICTON BORDEN. Yes, but for cavalry instead of infantry.

Later on the minister stated:

I am told that from a strategical point of view Fredericton is an important point at which to have the cavalry station.

I may say that the people of Fredericton took that statement of the minister as a definite announcement that they were to have a calvary depot at Fredericton in the near future. I fear that when they read the indefinite statement that has been made to-day by the minister in this memorandum, they will be somewhat disappointed. The present statement, unlike the statement which was made on the 6th of June, is very indefinite with respect to Fredericton, from which the infantry corps has been removed to Halifax, but it is very definite with respect to St. Johns, Que., where it is proposed to establish a cavalry corps and from which point the infantry has not at present been removed. The infantry depot at Fredericton, I think, was established in 1884, and Fredericton has ever since been recognized as the military centre of the province, and the people there, will, I fear be somewhat apprehensive in view of the very indefinite statement which is contained in the memorandum to which I have referred. I would therefore ask the minister what is meant by 'eventually' and 'in the near future,' and whether it is proposed, in the event of the cavalry corps not being established in the near future, to replace the men who have been removed to Halifax by others in the infantry corps at Fredericton?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I remember perfectly the statement which I made, and I made it in good faith. I do not know that there has been any departure from that intention. I noticed to-day for the first time that particular portion of the memorandum to which my hon. friend has called my attention with reference to the cavalry at Fredericton. While I do not wish to speak positively without consulting General Lake, I think my hon. friend may rest quite easy that until a cavalry school is established there a depot of infantry will be continued. The troops were removed from Fredericton to Halifax because there was an urgency for it, and Fredericton was the nearest depot to Halifax. But I do not wish to speak any more strongly than that. Before the session ends I will be glad to give my hon. friend, in the House or out of it, some assurance upon the point as to what we intend to do. There is a distinction between Fredericton and St. Johns, Que. St. Johns is the centre of a very large cavalry district. There has been great activity within the last two or three years in the enrolment of cavalry regiments, in fact it has always been an important cavalry centre, much more so than Fredericton. But I think that the idea was to make Fredericton a cavalry depot because there were special strategical reasons why the cavalry should be there, and it was also intended to encourage the formation of cavalry in the active militia.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. Referring to article 27 in the memorandum, would the minister tell me what is the difference between militia artillery and horse artillery.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He means by that the active militia, I suppose. It is desirable to introduce into the permanent corps horse artillery to be used with the cavalry in the Northwest Territories.

I was about to remark that the expenditure upon the militia last year ending June 30, amounted in round numbers to $4,000,000. The estimate for the present year amounts to $1,000,000 more. The memorandum which I laid on the table prepared by the accountant estimates that $150,000 more will be required during the financial year, to train the whole of the militia.

Mr. TISDALE. Does that estimate cover the 5,000 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A little less than 3,000. That will have to be increased. Now the increases are first in the pay at headquarters and the district staff. There is an increase of $43,000, partly due to the increased pay, and chiefly due to the large increase in the number of officers. For the permanent corps there is an increase from $475,000 to $1,100,000 an increase of $625,000, chiefly due to taking over Esquimalt and Halifax. As regards Esquimalt, we have been in the habit of paying one-half the cost of maintaining that garrison which was $110,000. This year we are paying $220,000, or whatever the amount may be. The balance is chiefly for the garrison at Halifax.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will be the total increase in he permanent force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The total increase this year will be something less than 3,000. But to carry out the plans of the Militia Council, we require an increase of a little under 4,000. We are taking power in the Act to increase to 5,000, because we thought that, as parliament absolutely controls the vote, it was desirable to take sufficient authority to increase the number up to the requirements of the next long term of years. That is why the number was fixed at 5,000. But there is no immediate intention of going beyond 4,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the present number ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The number at the present moment is about 1,900, and that includes some 300 sent to Halifax. So the nominal number now would be between 1,400 and 1,500.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And from 1,900 you are increasing to 4,000 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To 3,000 during the present year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it that the increase from 1,900 to 3,000 more than doubles the cost ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I said 1,900, but this estimate really includes the expense of a portion of this 1,900. The first estimate brought down, which was $475,000, was to pay for about 1,000 men.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then what is the meaning of making the number 1,900 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are now at Halifax about 300 or more of our men.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These are newly recruited ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So that the real increase is from 1,000 men ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is not inconvenient for the minister to explain matters as we go along, I will ask now for an explanation as to the Halifax garrison. It seems that some 300 of our men have been sent there. Have an equal number of the imperial troops been withdrawn, or what is the exact situation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not able to explain that exactly. But the papers laid on the table include a despatch from the imperial government suggesting that we should begin to recruit immediately, as they do not intend to continue maintaining their regiment at Halifax. That is, they will not keep it up to strength, but as the men's time expires they will allow them to go. That was two or three months ago. We acted on that request. I do not know how many of their men have gone, but I assume that as large a number as we have sent have served out their time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is in command there ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Sir Charles Parsons. There has been no change yet. I think that really that is where the difficulty comes in. I may say that since the papers were laid on the table a communication has been received upon the question of relative rank. This is being considered by the Militia Council ; and I fancy that when an agreement is reached as to the relative rank of imperial and militia officers the transfer will be made very quickly thereafter. I do not really know the contents of that despatch, not having had an opportunity yet to read it carefully.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, what I am trying to get is the practical situation at Halifax—how long it is likely to continue as at present. Sir Charles Parsons has been in command of the imperial forces there. We send down 300 men under command, as I understand it, of Colonel Drury. These replace, perhaps, a certain number of men of the imperial army—that does not matter. But what is the relation at present of Colonel Drury and the men under his command to Sir Charles Parsons and the men under his command ? Is Colonel Drury under command of Sir Charles Parsons ? And are the men under Colonel Drury regarded as part of the imperial force under command of Sir Charles Parsons ? What is the practical situation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The practical situation, as I understand, is that the conditions have really not been disturbed. Sir Charles Parsons is still in command of the garrison. But we have sent troops to Halifax under Colonel Wadmore and subject to Colonel Drury, who are co-operating with the imperial forces and are commanded by Canadian officers. So that there are two separate parts of the garrison at Halifax, you may say—one commanded by the imperial authorities and one by the Canadian authorities.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that the situation amounts to this : There is an imperial force at Halifax under command of Sir Charles Parsons and also a Canadian permanent force under command of Colonel Drury. But it does not seem to me that any situation of that kind has been contemplated. I suppose there is no practical difficulty, however, up to the present time with regard to the matter ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. None whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it were in time of war, I suppose the senior officer, whoever he might be, would take command ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are these Canadian troops—in the imperial barracks ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If they are in the imperial barracks, and not under command of Sir Charles Parsons, the situation may develop into a comedy situation if we are not careful.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I see no difficulty so long as they are friendly.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Has Colonel Drury one of the higher commands ? Is he in command of the Nova Scotia district, as in the case of the higher commands in Ontario and Quebec ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Precisely.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Would he not then have supreme command in the province ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He will have. Until the negotiations between the imperial authorities and ourselves—which are entirely friendly—are concluded, we are not insisting on these fine points. We are getting along with the utmost friendliness. We sent the troops to Halifax on the suggestion of the imperial authorities, and we expected that the garrison would be handed over to us by the 1st of July.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The men have gone there, and a situation has developed which was not provided for exactly, and the minister is trying to work along with it as best he can until matters are arranged and what has been contemplated is carried out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Canadian troops at Halifax are in the same position as the rest of the militia—just as the militia might be sent from anywhere to Halifax or Esquimalt. They are not attached to the imperial troops in any way at the present time. Among the papers laid on the table is a letter, dated 25th May last, from the War Office, which says :

> War Office, London, S.W., > 25th May, 1905.
> Sir,—I am commanded by the Army Council to inform you that it is observed in the 'Canada Gazette,' G. O. 65, dated 14th April last, certain officers of the Canadian military forces have been appointed to the command of districts in the Dominion.
> As it is presumed that the Halifax command will shortly be incorporated in the maritime provinces command, to which Colonel C. W. Drury, C.B., R.C.A., has been appointed, I am to request that the Dominion government may be asked to inform Major General Sir C. S. B. Parsons, K.C.M.G., as soon as his services are no longer required, so that he may return to this country. . . .
> I am, &c.,
> (Sgd.) R. H. BRADE.

I infer from that letter that there should be no difficulty; it is only a matter of unforeseen delay that the exchange has not been carried into effect. Sir Charles Parsons has manifested the very greatest interest in the Canadian militia during the whole time that he has been in Canada, has been most sympathetic, has co-operated in every possible way and is doing so at this moment, so that we have asked Sir Charles Parsons if he would not remain in Halifax for a few months after the transfer takes place in order to further co-operate and assist our officers in getting full charge, in getting initiated, if I may so speak, into that important command. So, I do not apprehend any difficulty whatever.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the hon. minister if the imperial authorities will hand over the armament and equipment of the Halifax defence to Canada without payment or anything of that kind ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That matter has not been discussed at all, and I think that perhaps I had better not offer an opinion. I feel quite sure we will be treated in a most liberal and considerate manner by the imperial authorities. Some reference in the papers has been made to the stores and things of that kind but no reference has been made to the heavy armament. I should rather think that it might be taken as a matter of course that the armament, being there, would remain. It will probably remain the property of the imperial government but I do not apprehend that any difficulty whatever will arise on that score. As far as the stores are concerned, clothing, equipment or anything of that kind, if we take them over it will be at a fair valuation. If we do not wish them they will be removed by the imperial authorities.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you mean armament such as the big guns on Macnab's Island, at York Redoubt and the forts on the Dartmouth shore where there are some very heavy and modern guns? Some of these works have been constructed within the last two or three years. I refer particularly to the fort at York Redoubt. Does the hon. minister anticipate that the guns will be left in charge of our troops, that our troops will man these forts and that the defences of the city will be kept practically in the condition they are at present ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, that is the expectation.

Mr. FOSTER. The same at Esquimalt ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was suggested to me by a very high authority at one time in informal conversation that if Halifax ceases to be a naval base there would be no great object in keeping up the elaborate defences which exists at present, that they have been maintained there because Halifax has been a naval base and that if the base is to be transferred to Bermuda there would be no reason why they should be continued.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN You will observe in the papers which have been laid on the table of the House a telegram. I think that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition asked some question in the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did on one occasion earlier in the session.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, on the strength of that discussion a cablegram was sent to the Governor General. It is amongst the papers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it amongst the papers which have been furnished to us ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not observe it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is only a brief one and I will read it :

February 24th, 1905.—Referring to your cable of 11th instant, general officer commanding was not authorized to begin dismantling present defences of Halifax.

My information is that there is no intention whatever of abandoning Halifax as a naval base, but that it will be used in a different way from what it has been. I think it is the intention and expectation of the imperial authorities that Halifax shall be preserved in all its strength and importance.

Now I was referring to the increases as between this year and last year and the principal increase is in this very matter of the permanent force. I think I might read an extract from the memorandum prepared by the financial member of the council.

Allowing 1,400 troops for Halifax during 1905-6 the cost would amount to $850,000; and 350 for Esquimalt, about $200,000. After the first year the annual cost should not be so heavy as the charge for barrack and hospital equipment applies to the first year only, while the item for clothing would be reduced to about $80,000, the estimate for 1905-06 being practically a two years' supply of the ordinaary clothing and a three years' supply of great coats and necessaries. The annual cost of say 1,800 men at Halifax and Esquimalt should not exceed the following :

The total is given as $1,000,000.

The estimates of the War Office for Halifax and Esquimalt, 1905-06, the number of troops being 1,389 and 362 respectively, are as follows :

The total is given as £181,168 equal to $881,684. I presume the difference in pay will account chiefly for a difference of some $150,000. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), when the estimates were under discussion before, asked for information in regard to this very point. I do not know whether that statement contains all the information they require or not, but I think I was asked in addition to this what the cost of maintaining the forts in good condition would be. I have a statement here from the chief of the general staff who says that from $100,000 to $125,000 would be the additional amount.

Mr. TISDALE. That is all ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. I must say, however, in fairness to him that his estimate of the cost is rather higher than that of Mr. Borden, the accountant, but not matterially different. His estimate is from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 to cover all expenses including maintenance of the forts in good condition.

The memorandum continues:

The actual strength during 1904 was on the average a little over 1,000 all ranks. It is expected that during 1905-6 it will reach nearly 3,000 as about that number will be required. For the month of May last the actual strength was 1,650. There are some proposed additions to the active militia principally in the Northwest. At present there are only the following corps :

12th Manitoba dragoons, 5 squadrons, at Brandon and vicinity.

The Canadian Mounted Rifles, 2 squadrons in Alberta.

13th Field Battery, at Winnipeg

90th Regiment infantry, 8 companies, at Winnipeg.

The proposal now under consideration is to augment this force by the following :

28 squadrons mounted rifles at various points.

1 field battery at Calgary and Edmonton.

14 companies infantry at various points.

1 engineer company at Winnipeg.

1. Canadian Army Service Corps company at Winnipeg.

Field batteries, of which there have been 17 for a number of years, will be increased to 24, and, if the one proposed for the Northwest should be organized, to 25 in number, they will be formed into brigades of two batteries, and eventually of three, with an ammunition column.

A corps of guides is in process of organization. It will consist of intelligence officers to the number of 106 scattered over the whole Dominion, and 79 guides. There will be one chief intelligence officer for each of the higher commands, and one district intelligence officer for each of the 12 districts. Each district will be divided into sub-districts with an intelligence lieutenant and guide in each.

The reorganization of the headquarters and district staffs, which has been carried out to make the organization of the militia similar to that of the regular army, has necessitated new appointments as a result of new branches having been created, and consequently some additional expenditures have been incurred. It must be explained here, however, that the $43,751 shown as an increase for this head of service must be reduced by about $10,000, the value of quarters, fuel, light. forage, &c., which a large number of officers of the district staffs have received in kind hitherto, but for which they will receive a cash allowance hereafter, their pay and allowances having been consolidated in every case.

The principal item in the pay and allowance vote is the pay of the permanent force which for 1905-06 is estimated at $1,100,000, being an increase of $625,000 over the amount voted over 1904-5. This increase is partly due to the 2,000 additional troops which will be required next year and partly to the liberal increase in pay authorized towards the close of 1904, which applies to the whole permanent force. The rates of pay authorized last November for the permanent force are considerably higher than those formerly in vogue as the following table will show :

	At present. Per diem.	Formerly. Per diem.
Lieutenant Colonel..	$5 00	$4 00
Major..	4 00	3 50
Captain..	3 00	2 82
Lieutenant..	2 25	2 00
Sergeant Major..	1 50	1 25
Sergeant..	1 00	0 80
Corporal..	0 80	0 70
Private..	0 50	0 40

In addition, substantial increases are given to those who have three or six years. A sergeant major, for instance, receives $2 per day and a private 75 cents after six years, and other ranks at the same rate.

In connection with subhead (d) of the pay and allowance vote, some explanations are necessary.

The regulations governing allowance to corps of the active militia have been amended. Formerly a regiment of infantry of eight companies, received, if a city corps, $320 for command pay and drill instruction, which amount was paid to the officer commanding the regiment. If, however, the regiment was a rural corps and of the same strength, it received $520, of which $200 went to the officer commanding the regiment, and $320 to the captains of the companies.

The vote for the annual drill has been already discussed. I do not think I should detain the committee further, because there will be a great many questions to ask on the different items, but it is only fair to say that the amount to be voted for the year 1905-6 which is approximately $5,500,000, will need to be increased by at least one-half million dollars more in the near future in order to carry out the plans which are referred to in the memorandum laid before the House. That extra one-half million dollars will be required to increase the active militia up to 50,000, and to make it fully effective, and to increase the permanent force to 3,000. The total expenditure would then be about $6,000,000. That seems a pretty large sum of money but when we look at the increases in other departments of government and consider the general development of the country; then in view of the responsibilities which we have assumed and which belong to us in a country possessing such great natural wealth, and now that we have resting upon us the additional responsibility of developing an immense territory and taking care of millions of population, I do not think it should be considered that that expenditure is too large. In 1867, when the revenue of Canada was $13,000,000 we began with a militia expenditure of about $1,000,0000 or one-thirteenth of the total revenue of the country. The militia expenditure to-day is $5,500,000, still not more than one-thirteenth of our gross revenue. I do not mean to say that it would be fair to lay down the rule that because we began with a militia expenditure or one-thirteenth of the total revenue we should keep that ratio up, but I do think we should keep it up until we have reached the point at which we have created an effective and an efficient defensive force for Canada. Whether that will be $6,000,000 or more I canont say, but I should think it will not go very much beyond that sum. I do not think that the ratio between one and thirteen as to the revenue, will be increased in the expenditure on the militia. I hope that before we have reached a revenue of $100,000,000, one-thirteenth of which would be about $8,000,000, we shall have reached the maximum which will be required for our militia force.

I wish to make one additional observation with reference to rifle shooting which is one of the most important considerations and one of the best means by which we can get the most for our expenditure in this direction. The whole question of rifle ranges and rifle shooting is being considered by the Militia Council and it may be that I, or whoever is Minister of Militia, will ask at the next session or at some session in the near future for a lump sum with which to construct rifle ranges as rapidly as possible in every part of the Dominion where they are really needed. I should have said that in this expenditure of $5,500,000 we have not included about $800,000 which has been voted to the Department of Public Works for armouries and other militia buildings. We have decided upon certain plans for buildings which I think are of an economical character and which will be sufficient for the requirements. I hope in the near future we will be able to begin a system of building company armouries, or perhaps armouries for two or three companies jointly, so that we will have our militia comfortably housed in buildings which will not only afford store rooms for arms and equipment, but which will have a lecture room where the young militia men of the country can meet in the evenings and listen to lectures upon military or other useful topics.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In reference to this question of armouries it is very comforting to know that all this is being done, but I would call attention to the fact that the drill shed at Sherbrooke has not yet been attended to and the regiment is in need of it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to it; I think he intends to go on with it. Now I have to apologize for the long time I have occupied and for the very disjointed character of my remarks, but I hope I have been able to give the committee some information and I shall be very glad to answer any questions in regard to the different items.

Mr. TISDALE. I am sorry indeed that from all the circumstances which were explained satisfactorily on both sides of the House at the commencement of this debate made it unavoidable that at this late date we should discuss this subpect which is of such great imortance to the country. It is now an old saying that it is comparatively useless to attempt to interest the House on this subject, but when the discussion as so often happens, is put off until so late in the session, it is still more difficult to interest the House or the public. I do not mean this as a lecture to the House or the minister. We have important changes in the system, we have an enormous increase of expenditure of which I do not complain if it is well applied, and if the object in view is successfully attained, yet it does seem unfortunate that it is always under some disadvantage, at a time of some stress and near the breaking up of the session that we have to discuss militia matters. It is particularly unfortunate this year because of these important departures of which I have spoken from the system under which we progressed reasonably well. We are now confronted with a much larger rate of expenditure with, I am free to admit, the chance of a larger force and a larger establishment. The question of expenditure with which the minister dealt last is probably the most serious one to the country. The expenditure I said was enormous, it is enormous compared with what we always have been in the habit of considering necessary; it is enormous compared with the amount that under the Conservative administration we managed to get along with. That is no reason why it should not be larger if we are sure and certain that we are proceeding on safe grounds and in such a way that we will be certain to get value for our money. I shall not go back further than two or three years ago when during the term of command of Major General O'Grady-Haley, my hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) startled us and the country by bringing down a militia estimate of $3,500,000. He was fair enough then to state as he stated to-night that at least for some years he could hold out no hope of lessening the amount brought down for years to come. While I was addressing the House shortly then as I am doing to-night, I agreed that the expenditure, if the minister was certain his scheme as then outlined (which contemplated a force of 100,000 men, including the reserve) with the establishments that were necessary on the lines that have since been carried out, was not unreasonable, but I call the attention of the House and of the country to-night to the fact that we have over $6,000,000 now asked for, and we must add half a million to that for the buildings which as the minister has said are provided by another department, so that we have over $6,500,000 asked for this year, and I think there is not much hope of decreasing that amount. I will venture the statement that if this scheme is carried out as outlined by the minister in his speech to-night—and I am glad he did not cut it shorter because all of us have not had the advantage of seeing this very full statement of accounts and very good statement from the Militia Council, under the chief of the general staff, of the outlines of the proposed continuation and completion of that defensive scheme for the country—I am not at all prepared to agree with the hon. gentleman that he can carry out the scheme for $6,500,000 or say $6,000,000. He must not forget that it is fair criticism that less than three years ago he was just as confident that the $3,500,000 would be sufficient. I then warned the minister that I was not as confident as he was that with that amount of $3,500,000 he could carry out his plan as he had outlined it providing, with the reserve, a first line of defence up to 100,000 men. I reminded him then as I must remind him to-night that the very fact that he has been given such a free hand, the very fact that his political opponents from the time that he had entered into his office had given him a very easy time in the way of criticism, that both sides in the House had been wonderfully generous to him in the way of granting money, made the responsibility resting on him even greater. Let me say that to-night I am one of those who would cheerfully take the responsibility of voting even this large sum. At the same time I have my doubts whether he has proceeded altogether in a prudent way, with such prudence as I am of the opinion he might go. In a general way the criticism I make is that it seems to me, to use an old expression, to be rather putting the cart before the horse. I shall explain that presently. It is a fair criticism that he has changed and inside of three years is asking for more than double the amount of $3,000,000 which he then said was sufficient. He may be able to give an explanation; an explanation may be possible, but yet it does seem to me that this enormous increase, this continuous increase and change in these schemes is alarming.

It is of a nature that I think the members of the House and the country as a whole ought to study carefully. I am one who am willing to vote liberally for these purposes. I think Canada has always been worth defending. The country to-day is on such a line of expansion, it has such vast capabilities, and its prospects are so bright and sound and prosperous that we can afford to be very liberal in providing for as good a defence system of citizen soldiers as any country in the world should reasonably desire. But my hon. friend stated to-night in his opening remarks, truly and fairly, that under our former system, we were in a position to utilize the services of the trained officers of the imperial army, so that we largely escaped the expenses of a staff and many things of that sort. In other words, we trained our militia by means of the large experience of officers of the British army, so that while we had not the same personal control over them that we might have under other circumstances, our men were always able to give a good account of themselves. I am not going to criticise the new departure further than to say that the minister has, in my opinion, gone too fast, not making sure, as far as human foresight can do so, that the lines he is laying out are sound ones before asking us to go further. And here I want to say that, having offered my criticisms in regard to the Militia Council, and having been overruled, I intend, as far as I am able, to assist, in every fair and reasonable way, to develop that system, to see if we cannot make it better than I thought possible last year. The weakness of the hon. gentleman's scheme, which is now appearing, is that he is building too much on paper. He is providing for staffs of officers scattered throughout the country, without being able to explain to us how, in case of actual trouble, he is going to have the men forthcoming to meet the exigencies of the occasion. If we can create under and in connection with all these auxiliary establishments a force of men trained to shoot and to perform simple military movements, it will be a magnificent force, though the auxiliary establishments and staffs are large enough to defend Great Britain, where a large force of several hundred thousand volunteers exists to-day, besides 500,000 regulars at the least calculation. Now, I think too much money is being expended. I am not going to criticise the details, but am speaking generally. We have these stations, auxiliary forces and establishments on paper. They are crystallized, I think, fairly well; yet how many militiamen have we? We generally muster about 35,000 men in camp. This machinery is sufficient for 500,000. Now, it seems to me that before we are asked to grant $6,500,000 for these 35,000 active militiamen and 3,000 permanent militiamen, the minister ought to show that he can muster the 100,000 he talks about. Three years ago, when this scheme was projected, General O'Grady-Haley, then in command, showed how it would work out. His proposition was, if necessary, to have some conscription. My hon. friend then failed, as he has failed to-night, to show where the men required to make up the full force would come from.

He suggested rifle clubs, and he said the enrolments in these clubs numbered 28,000. I venture to say that he could not muster to-day more than 14,000 or 15,000 out of the total enrolment of 28,000 in these clubs; and any establishment of the militia at all events outside the cities you must discount by at least twenty-five per cent for those who fail to turn up in camp. Not that I think that our boys will funk, but because the changing nature of our population is such that you must allow at least twenty-five per cent off the enrolment for actual muster. I think the hon. gentleman should have gone slower. But first I may say that I commend many things in him. He is active, energetic and earnest as Minister of Militia. He has the courage of his convictions too, especially in coming to this House and claiming the sums of money necessary for carrying out of the work as he thinks it ought to be carried out. He is supported by the patriotism of hon. gentlemen opposite as well as by the patriotism—and the good nature—of hon. gentlemen on this side. I am proud of the House for its readiness to vote money that is deemed necessary for these services; I am proud of the country that the people are willing to pay. I am not inclined to find fault with large expenditures for militia if the money is wisely spent. I am not inclined exactly to find fault with what the minister is doing. But I would warn him and those behind him—for these hon. gentlemen are especially responsible for the actions of the minister—that the people, while they are perfectly sound on this question, and while they are not stingy, are wisely economical and want to get the worth of their money. And we on this side will not be without our share of blame if we allow these expenditures to be undertaken without a fair understanding of what they are required for and a reasonable assurance that the country will be benefited in proportion to the expense involved.

It seems to me that before going into this expenditure, the hon. Minister, of Militia, his Militia Council, and the chief of general staff, should work out into a more practical shape the scheme that they have outlined. They say they want 60,000 enrolled men. Then, they are to have 40,000 more who, in time of stress, will fall at once into line. Now, 100,000 men are not too many in proportion to the establishments of one kind or another that, wisely or unwisely, we have provided for. When I speak of establishments in the sense here intended, I mean these auxiliary institutions which are so necessary in time of war to take care of, to clothe and feed, the army—without which in fact, an army in the field would be useless. It is easy enough, when the money is voted, to organize these establishments for men with the technical training can easily be found for the various departments of work as honourable positions and good pay go with appointment. The minister has been diligent and successful in organizing these several services; the work was both pleasant and easy. He had but to select from many applicants to fill the honourable and well paid positions necessary though he had to select men with special education and training for work both responsible and important. But the minister must be careful not to go too far with this part of the work. Of the six and a half million dollars to be voted, less than a million goes for the training of these 40,000 men of whom I have spoken. We must maintain due proportion in all these parts of the service. The advisability of building all these armouries may be open to question. Of course, sufficient cover for the arms must be provided—that is one of the first things, for too much care cannot be taken of the expensive weapons which the evolution of modern arms has enabled us to put in the hands of our militia. While all the auxiliary services can be organized if the money is there to pay for them, I want to see a more practical assurance that the 100,000 men will be forthcoming, without which all this elaborate organization will be too much. The minister will be obliged to depend upon more than the rifle clubs. These show an enrolment of 28,000. And it is clear that of this enrolment a considerable proportion will not be ready to fall in line when called upon. Of course, the value of these rifle clubs is beyond question, and I think the minister is particularly to be commended for his willingness to work in with the provincial authorities. That discovery or invention is a good one. But, even with the rifle clubs, the minister does not show that he will have the force of men that he has estimated. Let him show that the men will be forthcoming, and I for one will be ready to vote this increased expenditure. But I do think the minister should make his plan more complete before he asks for so much money. The minister's scheme as presented has too much on paper and too little in strength of actual men behind the guns. There is too much spent on auxiliary institutions, though some of them like the school of musketry are invaluable, as nothing can be more important than to teach our young men how to handle a rifle. Of all the lesons that militarism—if you like to call it so; patriotism, I call it—has to teach, there is none clearer than that while the first strong defensive power of a country is patriotism, the second is the spread among the people of the knowledge of how to shoot; and the third is the knowledge of the simplest possible form of formation—easily learned by sensible men like our militia—how to spread out and how to gather together again, for in this knowledge, to a great extent lies the power of victory in a modern battle. Let us have more instruction, but let us have less fuss and feathers. The staff are increasing—and on that point I will talk as plainly as on the other. I know the officers of the militia and the boys of the rank and file in the country. And I know that if there is one thing more than another that will increase the force and encourage the men who form it, it is a little sympathy from the staff, instead of so many orders. The men of active force ought to be able to feel that the members of the staff are their friends and brothers, instead merely those who order them about and find fault if they fail to do right or as the staff thinks right.

Now I would suggest to the minister that he revise these estimates and cut out unnecessary and not at present required expenditures, and then we will vote them more willingly. Put the officers and men into a condition that they can be mustered. Increased pay undoubtedly will help that along. Let a little more of the money be spent among the chaps who stand behind the guns, instead of upon those who invent the ways of organizing and teaching the troops. In the first place, drill them all. If we are going to have a force that is worthy of the name, have all the corps full, and a few over. I like the letters the hon. gentleman read. I say that in this country under free institutions, where general education prevails, we have a right to expect that our young men will volunteer in sufficient numbers to defend the country; if they do not, we shall have to try some other plan. But I am satisfied that under a proper system there will be no trouble. Then evolve your plans to have your 40,000 reserve. Drill 60,000 men next year in the camps, and that will satisfy members of parliament who think on this subject, and feel on it as I do. I do not object to voting money if it is honestly and successfully expended on the militia. But do not let us have any more politics in the militia, not even a suspicion of politics The Minister of Militia should be strong enough to turn down his fellow members of the cabinet when they attempt to interfere, and if he does that, he will have the support and respect of the members of this House. If we want a successful defence force, that must be done. I have supported the minister sometimes when I thought I was going a little further than I ought. I know he has had difficulties to meet, he has been unduly influenced. I have made these few general remarks because I thought they needed to be brought to the attention of the minister and of the government. If the country once gets the idea that militia matters are not improving, and that we are not working up as rapidly as we should to the consummation the minister has outlined, there will be a row about paying these large sums.

Lastly, I wish to speak of one more matter, with regard to which I am sorry to say I have to disagree with the minister, and that is the taking over of the defences at Esquimalt and Halifax. I look upon that as a serious matter, and I am opposed to it from top to bottom. I think it is a mistake from a financial point of view, and worse than a mistake from other points of view. I am only expressing my own views on this matter, and I intend to express them frankly. I think I would be justified in saying that this action is a distortion of the principle of not voting money unless we spend it ourselves. We must remember that we are a colony of the British empire and not an independent country. Now I see no justification for this action on the principle that the government has laid down, the principle that for defensive purposes any money we vote or men that we arm must be under our own control. I say this action of the government in taking over these fortresses is a distortion of that principle. There are cases where the expenditure for defensive purposes is twofold, imperial as well as colonial, and those two ports afford the best illustration of what I mean. What is the use of maintaining them? Why, it would be folly for us to expend one dollar on either of those ports except as naval bases for the imperial navy, towards which we contribute not one cent. Nevertheless the whole power and strength of that navy is behind us, and we can rest easy, no matter what country may attack us, or I might almost say, no matter what combination of countries may attack us; because on the sea Great Britain is practically the mistress of the world. Great Britain, until very recently, paid all the expenses, manned, built, armed and maintained those fortresses. Latterly we have been contributing something to one or both. The minister explained that the Canadian government did not agree with the British government. The British government was satisfied if the Canadian government would put the militia into proper shape, they would accept that as a sufficient contribution. Then came the question, either at that time or subsequently, of the maintenance of these two forts, and the question of a direct contribution from this country. The British government, as I understand, stated that they would be perfectly satisfied if the Canadian government would contribute £200,000 sterling, $1,000,000 a year, and the British government would continue, as they had done, to keep those forts in a state second to none in the world, paying all the expenses. Our government, as we all know from the minister, declined to do that and said: No, we will take them over and man and maintain them ourselves.

It is a distortion of principle and financially it is a loss to us because I am satisfied that $2,000,000 a year is the very least we can calculate on for the expenditure that will be necessary. Take the expenditure for arms and equipment of that kind; we must commence right down at the bottom and if in five or ten years from now we have not spent a very large amount of money on that account I would be very much surprised. Whatever government is in power they must keep the defences up to the standard maintained by the British government. The new departure in the British navy has made it more important than ever that these posts shall be well maintained because the navy is in future going to be held largely in depots across the sea and it will only be in times of war that the ships of the navy will be found at outlying ports or rallying places. These two forts will be maintained for what purpose? Not for the defence of Canada alone, but as the two great strongholds on the Pacific and Atlantic ocean for the defence of the empire. I say we cannot defend these posts nor arm them even if we were prepared to spend the money as efficiently as Great Britain could, because to-day forts are used almost entirely to help one navy to defeat the ships of another. The day has passed when forts are used for anything else unless it may be in the case of a fort like Port Arthur where millions of pounds and hundreds of thousands of men were engaged in making it impregnable. It would be better for Canada and better for Great Britain that the defence of these forts should remain in the hands of the imperial authorities because Great Britain would know of her own knowledge what amount of money was spent for the changes in projectiles and in the great guns, and we know how rapidly they are advancing in these respects and the immense expense which it involves. Then Great Britain has the advantage of men trained in the larger school of knowledge and experience. I say it is little Canadianism on our part to be afraid that we are not asserting ourselves properly if we join hands with the mother country and contribute with the British government towards the maintenance of these defences, allowing them to take over these forts and defend them. In the second place an important consideration is the economy of it because of the fact that there would be $1,000,000 saved for our militia and other purposes. Lastly, this new arrangement destroys the last link of the connection that has been so long maintained on this continent with the British army and the British navy. I have received a letter from an old militia officer who like myself has been long retired from the service, who, unlike myself, has been a very strong reformer and supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite and I will read a few words from it in regard to this very matter. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that there is a very strong feeling throughout this country in opposition to this arrangement as far as I have been able to gather it. People have not been shouting about it but thinking men are not favourable to it. Last year there was a difference of opinion. The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence thought he was right in regard to the Militia Council but a great many people doubted it and they also differed from the view of the hon. minister in regard to taking over these defences because they look upon these stations as depots of the empire. The defence of Canada is more important to us than it is to Great Britain but the defence of Great Britain and the empire is more important to them and to Canada than anything else, and to say that to join hands with Great Britain in the defence of these important posts, the only ones on this continent, on the Atlantic and the Pacific, is derogatory to the independence of this great colony is something that I cannot understand. I do not believe in the policy of the hon. gentleman on this question, and I am satisfied that the people of the country will not agree with that policy. Now, this gentleman writes:

> It is a long time since you and I had either interview or correspondence re militia——

I may say that he dates back forty or fifty years ago, the same as I do in the militia service of this country. He is a retired officer.

> —so I hope a few lines on the new policy will not be out of place. As far as I can understand both the new Bill and the proposition in regard to Halifax and Esquimalt, I hope every loyal British Canadian in the House will oppose both for two reasons; first, Canada has no force fit to replace the present garrisons, and the country has not been told or given an idea of the cost of maintaining the works at the two fortresses in their existing state of efficiency, nor the cost of the up-keep of the new garrisons if the exchange is effected, which I hope it will not be, for that brings up my second reason, viz.: That it will be a bad day for the feelings and loyalty of Canada when it is known that there is not a Union Jack on a flagstaff, nor a British soldier or sailor in the Dominion. Then comes another point—the increase of the permanent corps to fill their places. I am surprised that Dr. Borden was not more considerate for the feelings of the Rev editor of the 'Globe,' who, when Lord Dundonald proposed the enrolment of the very number advocated by the Militia Council had daily fits of frenzy and convulsions induced by Lord Dundonald's militarism.

There is an expression from an old reformer and an old officer. They are my sentiments also and I agree with him when he says that it would be a bad day for Canada when this charge takes place. I would not like to see the day when the Union Jack would no longer float from a flagstaff here. We have our Canadian flag, it is true, but we will no longer have the British soldier. I believe, as I have had occasion to say before, that there is no material for a fighting force to be found anywhere in the world better than the Canadians. I believe also that the people of Canada are too large minded to have any idea of their self-importance being hurt by leaving the control of these depots to Great Britain and joining with her in the expenditure. I think we would be glad of the opportunity. We are too large-minded to believe that we have the knowledge or will have for years, whatever our military attainments may be at the present time, and with the education imparted in our schools they will improve, there is no doubt, but at the present time we have not the experience or the knowledge or the opportunity nor are we able even to go to the expenditure that the imperial government would necessarily assume in the defence of these ports. In conclusion, I say that this proposal is another blow at the joint defence of the empire by Canada and the British army and the British navy. I quite agree that our participation outside of Canada should be voluntary, but we must know that even if we put our whole population under arms we would be nowhere if we had not the British navy and the soldier to fall back on. We adopt the British uniform with pride, we consult the British war office and endeavour to get the best of their men to teach us; we should have a close union with the mother country in the defence of the empire. If I gave the name of the old veteran whose letter I have read it would astonish some of you, and I join with him in the statement that it will be a sorrowful day for Canada when the Union Jack and the uniform of the last British soldier disappear from Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I shall not say much on this subject because I am not a military man. I can only speak from the standpoint of the man on the street to whom the Minister of Finance has alluded more than once in another connection. It is interesting to one who has been in this House for some years to remember the criticism made by the Liberal opposition on the militia expenditure when the Conservative party was in power, and to compare it with what the Liberal government is doing to-day. I remember when the Liberals used adversely to criticise an expenditure of $2,250,000 on our militia, and I remember how they declared that we were a peace loving and an agricultural people and that the cities were driving us into this extravagant outlay. I remember how they declared that militarism was a detriment to the progress of the industrial life of Canada. But, since the Liberal government came into power the militia expenditure has increased from $2,413,000, to, we may say, $6,000,000. Inside of ten years there has been an increase of about 300 per cent, and yet the political predecessors of the men who now support the government, denounced an expenditure of two and a quarter million dollars while the Liberals of to-day sit there calmly voting $6,000,000, and think it is all right. I do not wish to imply that I am absolutely condemning the defence scheme the minister has mapped out, or the expenditure proposed, because I believe that as time goes on we must in the fulfilment of our duty recognize that there should be an increased expenditure on our militia. I am merely referring to the unfair criticism made by the Liberal party against the Conservative government which expended only one-third of the present appropriation. The principle of making militarism part of the curriculum of high schools or colleges I do not altogether approve of. There is quite enough now to attract our young men from the farms without adding to it what will undoubtedly be an additional attraction. We must also remember that it is from the agricultural and industrial classes that we hope to draw our best men in the hour of need, and that class will get little benefit from the expenditure of this money, because in the main not more than ten or fifteen per cent of these young men ever get to the high schools or colleges—perhaps not more than eight per cent go to colleges. I see that the minister is smiling at that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was smiling at something else, but I may say that it was not intended to apply the scheme simply to high schools. It will be applied to all schools so far as it can be and at the earliest age possible.

Mr. SPROULE. That would remove part of my objection, but there still remains the important consideration that this would be another attraction to take the youth of our country off the land. Civilized communities generally are now making an effort to keep the young men on the farms, and this proposition will I fear militate against efforts in that direction. I agree with every word said by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) in regard to the scheme under which we propose to take over the defences of Esquimalt and Halifax. I consider that a very unwise proceeding. These forts are not alone for the protection of Canada in the east and in the west, but they are outposts of the empire; they afford protection to British commerce on the high seas and the very fact that Britain has one of these outposts on the Atlantic and another on the Pacific, always in touch with the imperial army and navy, through which means warships can be readily brought into communication with them, is a stronger deterrent to those who might contemplate attacking us than could possibly be any scheme under which Canada would alone undertake the control of these fortifications. There is a great deal in what was said by my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) when he referred to the fact that the constant improvements in armament which require ever increasing expenditure, could better be looked after by the imperial army than by us. If we are to keep pace with these always changing devices in the art of warfare and defence, it will cost us a great deal more money than the ministre has foreshadowed to-day. In that regard the scheme is defective. I would be much more in favour of giving the contribution asked for by England to support these stations, than I would be of adopting the policy which the government proposes. It is true that we would have no voice in the expenditure of that $1,000,000 a year, but if others can expend that money to at least as good advantage as we can it is not unreasonable that they should do so, so long as they are a part of the British empire. I think our money wou'd be spent to better purpose, and that we would be much more in touch with the imperial forces and with the British empire at large than we possibly could be under the scheme which the minister and the government now submit.

Then I do think as well that this will indicate to the outside world a little warning of our patriotism. I would feel disposed to go a little further than the minister has proposed to go. He intimated, I believe, that at the Colonial Conference the first proposition of England was that we should have a certain number of men to go to any part of the world to fight the battles of the empire. That is exactly my view of it. I say that the strength of the empire consists of the aggregate of her elements combined and she will not afford the same strength against the warring elements of the outside world if those elements are divided into a hundred centres as she would if you concentrate the forces of these hundred centres into one, and the knowledge the world would have of our system, that we might on very short notice transport our contingents from every colony to any part of the world where the empire was engaged in defending her flag, would be a deterrent against attacks on the flag and a powerful influence in controlling nations that might be disposed to attack some part of the British empire which they thought comparatively weak or helpless or equipped with an inefficient military system. I think that the day the British flag is hauled down at Malta or Gibraltar or anywhere else that day will be equivalent to its being hauled down in Canada, and so long as we are a part of the British empire we ought to be prepared to uphold that flag in any part of the world. If we are doing less than that we are doing less than our duty. Although I am not in any sense a military man and know little about military affairs still I give these as the views and sentiments I entertain in regard to the most efficient expenditure of money for military purposes and the maintenance of the most efficient force we can possibly keep up.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would ask the minister what provision, if any, exists for granting the indemnity in case of casualties in camps of instruction? I know there are certain regulations authorizing courts of inquiry, medical boards, &c., but I would like to know if there is any fixed indemnity for the family of a man who loses his life in a camp of instruction. I ask this because a trooper of the 13th Scottish Dragoons was killed at La Prairie camp last year. I understand representations were made to the department and more or less correspondence indulged in, but as far as I know without any result. Another casualty resulted at La Prairie this year; a trooper of the 7th Hussars was run over and killed. If there is no provision of the kind I mention would it not be wise to fix a standard, a certain amount to be paid in case of death while in camp of instruction?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think I know the case to which my hon. friend refers. A board I think investigated that case and a report was made. I do not think it was a case that would warrant us in asking for a vote. Matters of that kind have to be dealt with by a vote of parliament, there is no other way to do. In this particular case the young man's father and mother were both living, and it did not appear that any one was dependent on him. Not only that, his life was insured and his father received the benefit of that insurance so that after looking carefully into the question and all the circumstances, which were very sad, and looking at it with as sympathetic a view, as I could, I did not feel that we were justified in asking parliament to vote any gratuity to the young man's family.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like also to ask the minister in connection with the personnel of the provincial commands whether the allowance granted to the principal medical officer of one of these commands would interfere with his seat in the House of Commons, that is his accepting of an allowance in connection with the position of principal medical officer? As the minister is aware there has been a little discussion on this matter, and it has been referred to the Department of Justice and the minister and the Deputy Minister of Justice have given it as their opinion that a principal medical officer can sit in the House of Commons and draw that allowance. It is mentioned as an allowance and in my opinion the case would be exactly the same as any regimental commanding officer who receives an allowance for the care of arms, accoutrements, &c., and I would like to know whether any definite decision has been come to by the department, and if not when such a decision can be arrived at and when any medical officer situated in that position will be informed as to the result of that decision.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. One day last week the leader of the opposition asked for papers with reference to this case and as my hon. friend from Sherbrooke was not in the House at three o'clock I sent the papers to the leader of the opposition. I am not able to give my hon. friend an answer beyond what is there, but I am quite prepared to say, speaking for myself, that I cannot see any reason why it should not apply to the case of a surgeon who happens to be a member of parliament. The idea of the $350 was to reimburse the surgeon not for his time but for his actual expenses in connection with the position. He goes to camp we will say twelve days out of the year and during that time he is paid, but during the whole year the principal medical officer is liable to be called upon to do services of various kinds in connection with the military duties of the district in which he lives and while technically under the law he might not be able to accept the $350, I cannot see in all fairness why he should not be allowed to receive that because he is doing the same kind of work in connection with his duties as a man who is not a member of parliament does. I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not here because it is really a matter more for him than for me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a matter more for the Minister of Justice perhaps. The papers which were brought down indicate the opinion of the Department of Justice. It would be unfortunate I think to place in the militia regulations any provision which would interfere with the presence in this House of men who are active in the militia. The conditions of to-day are very different from those twelve or fifteen years ago. There were in the House at that time more men connected with the active militia than there are at present, and the discussions on military matters were participated in by more men of practical experience then they are to-day. I have no doubt that circumstance will be recalled to the Minister of Militia when he considers that subject.

We have before us the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Militia on this question, who seems to have been inspired with a very sincere and earnest belief from the commencement that the hon. member for Sherbrooke should cease to act as principal medical officer and should be placed on the retired list by reason of this very provision. In order that no injustice may be done to that gentleman, let me read his communications and place them on 'Hansard —I am reading from the documents brought down this afternoon. The first is a communication of the 7th of November from Col. Vidal for the general officer commanding the Canadian militia to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, which is as follows :

1. Lieutenant Colonel A. N. Worthington, A. M. C., is principal medical officer for military district No. 6.

2. As principal medical officer he receives an allowance of $300 per annum. (See paragraph 903, R. and O.)

I may say that this paragraph No. 903 R. & O. was published in the 'Gazette' on the 28th of October, at the time of the recent campaign, and a few days before the last general election :

3. At the recent election, this officer was elected member for the city of Sherbrooke, and a ruling is now requested, for the information of the Director General Medical Services, as to whether he can, under such circumstances, retain his position as principal medical officer.

(Sgd.) B. H. VIDAL, Colonel, for Officer Commanding Canadian Militia.

The next communication is from the Deputy Minister of Militia to the officer commanding the militia :

The Officer Commanding the Militia.

Under the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 11, section 9, subsection (a) this officer would be disqualified if he should accept pay or other emoluments as P.M.O. Subsection 4 of the same section provides that if it be stated in his commission or other instrument appointing him that the appointment did not carry pay with it, and of course if no pay were issued, the appointment would not invalidate his seat in parliament.

(Sgd.) L. F. PINAULT, Colonel,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

The gentleman has no doubt whatever on the subject, although, as I shall point out in a little while, the Department of Justice had little doubt that the decision should be in the very opposite direction. The next is a communication from Col. Fiset, dated the 14th of November, 1904 : to the adjutant General :

1. As the allowance for P.M.O. goes into effect only from the 1st of November, 1904, Lieutenant Colonel A. H. Worthington has not yet drawn any part of his allowance as P.M.O. for No. 6 military district.

2. I am of the opinion that the above named officer does not know that such allowance has been granted, and I beg to recommend that he be notified by higher authority of the dilemma in which he stands at present, and directed to resign his appointment as P.M.O. for No. 6 military district, and be transferred to the reserve of medical officers retaining rank.

Well, it seems to me, in view of the subsequent opinion of the Department of Justice on this question, that that is rather a curious communication.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like to say that I knew nothing of these.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister need not have made that explanation ; I quite understand that. But that does not take away the force of my criticism that this is a very curious communication and a very pretty little arrangement. The next letter is as follows :

Headquarters, 6th November, 1904.
D.O.C. M.D. No. 6.

The Adjutant General.
Lieutenant Colonel A. N. Worthington,
P.M.O. M.D. No. 6.

Be good enough to inform Lieutenant Colonel A. N. Worthington, A.M.S., P.M.O., M.D. No. 6, that it will be necessary for him to resign his appointment as P.M.O. and be transferred to the reserve of medical officers retaining rank. This course is necessary under the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 11, section 9, subsection (a), in consequence of his having been elected to a seat in parliament.

By order,
(Sgd.) B. H. VIDAL, Colonel,
Acting Adjutant General.

Then comes a letter from Col. Worthington to this effect :

Sherbrooke, November 19th, 1904.

Sir,—I have the honour to state that I have this day received a communication from the acting adjutant general requesting me to resign my appointment as P.M.O. on account of my having been elected to a seat in parliament, this course being necessary under the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 11, section 9, subsection (a).

I would respectfully ask if section 17, subsection (c) does not exempt me from resigning.

Should it not be so considered, I beg to state that as I have served my country for many years without any remuneration, I shall be pleased to continue to do so and request that I be allowed to retain the appointment of P.M.O.

In the event of this request being disallowed, kindly accept my unqualified resignation from the active forces of Canada.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.)A. N. WORTHINGTON,
Lieutenant Colonel A.M.S.,
P.M.O., M.D. No. 6.

Then there is a communication from the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Minister of Justice, to Col. Pinault, Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, which is of a formal character, as well as a communication from Mr. Fraser of Sherbrooke to the Minister of Justice, directing his attention to the circumstances of the case ; a letter from Mr. Fitzpatrick, Minister of Justice, to Col. Pinault of the 22nd of November sending forward the letter of Mr. Fraser ; a further letter of November 19, from Mr. Fraser to Mr. Fitzpatrick, respecting the same matter, and arguing as to the construction of the section ; a letter from Col. Pinault, dated the 23rd of November, 1904, to Mr. H. R. Fraser, Sherbrooke, the gentleman who has already been in communication with the Minister of Justice. That letter is as follows :

Sir,—The Honourable C. Fitzpatrick has referred to me for reply your letters of the 18th and 19th instant, relative to Lieutenant Colonel Worthington, M.P., drawing pay or allowances as P.M.O. for No. 6 military district while a member of parliament.

In my opinion if Lieutenant Colonel Worthington draws the allowance which the regulations provide for principal medical officers, he will thereby become disqualified to sit in parliament. See Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 11, section 9, subsection (a).

Then there is the following memorandum :

Headquarters, 22nd November, 1904.

From the D.G.M.S. to the Adjutant General.
Lieutenant Colonel A. N. Worthington,
P.M.O., M.D. No. 6.

1. I have the honour to request that the services of Lieutenant Colonel A. N. Worthington, A.M.S., be retained as principal medical officer for No. 6 military district.

2. The above named officer is willing to forfeit the allowance of $300 per annum granted by R. and O., paragraph 903.

3. He is one of the ablest officers in the medical services and performed excellent work in South Africa. It would be a great loss to the service to be deprived of his experience.

4. Please find herewith draft for G.O. effecting same.

(Sgd.) EUG. FISET, Colonel,
Director General Medical Services.

Then, there is a letter from Col. Worthington to Col. Fiset, in which he says in effect that he gathers from this communication that he, Col. Worthington, can legally hold his position of chief medical officer without drawing the allowance pertaining thereto ; and he incloses a copy of an opinion from his legal adviser, Mr. H. R. Fraser, and asks that the opinion of the Minister of Justice should be procured as to whether or not he is disqualified from drawing, as principal medical officer, the allowance of $300 referred to, should he become a member of parliament. Col. Fiset, on the 5th of December, 1904, sends a communication to Col. Pinault, Deputy Minister of Militia, in which he asks him to obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice as requested by Col. Worthington. And upon this, there is the following communication from Colonel Pinault to the adjutant general :

It is considered that if Lieutenant Colonel Worthington draws the allowance referred to, he vacates his seat in parliament. That is his own business.

Rather a curt way of dismissing a matter relating to a gentleman who served his country in South Africa on two occasions. A very remarkable way to deal with a respectful request from such a gentleman that a statute in which he is interested should be referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion. Quite a singular tone for any official of this country to adopt with regard to a gentleman in the service who makes a proper request concerning a matter in which not only he but all the people of the country are interested. Colonel Pinault continues :

As regards referring the question for a ruling by the Department of Justice, it is customary to refer only cases about which there are doubts. If you hold a contrary view to that expressed in the first paragraph above, the case will be referred, otherwise the reference cannot be made.

Has not Lieutenant Colonel Worthington already consented to perform the duties without pay, and is not this action on his behalf inconsistent with his application ?

(Sgd.) L. F. PINAULT, Colonel,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Then comes a communication from Colonel Worthington, in which he again reiterates his request that the question should be submitted to the Deputy Minister of Justice. And finally, on February 10th, Colonel Pinault does submit to the Department of Justice the question which has been under debate since the previous November. Then, on March 2nd, Colonel Worthington writes a letter on the subject, asking that the matter should be expedited. On March 15th the Deputy Minister of Justice, in a letter addressed to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, gives his opinion as follows :

Ottawa, 15th March, 1905.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant—303-8—and of the letter of the 10th ultimo to which you refer, submitting for opinion the question whether Lieutenant Colonel Worthington, M.P., who is principal medical officer of military district No. 6, would be disqualified from sitting in parliament if he should draw the allowance of $300 which is provided for principal medical officers in the regulations.

In reply I beg to state that the Minister of Justice is of opinion that the $300 a year provided for by the regulations is an 'allowance' within the meaning of section 17 of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, and that the receipt of it by Colonel Worthington would, therefore, not disqualify or render him ineligible to sit and vote as a member of the House of Commons. The minister, however, does not think that the point is entirely free from doubt, and, as it is not incumbent upon you to advise Colonel Worthington in the matter, he thinks that you should not undertake to advise him officially.

He had undertaken to advise him already, and had informed him that he could not sit in parliament and receive this allowance.

The courts might take a different view as to the effect of the statute and Colonel Worthington in that event should not have any recourse to the government or parliament to indemnify him.

Subject to the above the minister thinks that Colonel Worthington may be left to his own advice as to the course he should adopt.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd) E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, Ottawa, Ontario.

This allowance is not intended, as I believe, to be a salary, but an indemnity for certain expenses which the principal medical officer must undergo in performing the duties which are incumbent upon him. There is no good reason why he should not receive that allowance as well as any other, if it is intended for the purpose I have just referred to. The statute to which reference has been made, the Independence of Parliament Act, section 17, says :

Nothing contained in this Act shall apply or extend to render ineligible or disqualify as a member of the House of Commons :

(c) Any officer of the militia, or militiaman, not receiving any salary or emolument out of the public money of Canada, except his daily pay when called out for drill or on active service, or allowances, or sums paid for enrolment, and any pay or remuneration allowed him for the care of arms or for drill instruction.

The word 'allowance' is used in the section as well as in the regulation. Therefore, I should be inclined to concur in the opinion of the Department of Justice as given, though the deputy minister says that the point is not free from doubt. But I would suggest that it is important to make such a point free from doubt. The position taken by the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, and, following his lead, to a certain extent, by the Deputy Minister of Justice, would put upon Colonel Worthington, or any other gentleman holding the position of principal medical officer, the burden and risk of settling such a question. That is, he is to sit and vote in parliament and run the risk of having a suit brought against him by some irresponsible individual to test the question of the construction of this statute. I submit to the Minister of Militia that the matter should be made absolutely plain. If he desires to have gentlemen in parliament who are prominent in militia affairs, and who have filled positions such as that which has been worthily filled by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington), a few words added to the statute would set the matter at rest. And, in doing so, we should not be going as far as we have gone in many cases where we have passed Bills to indemnify members who though they have remained within the letter of the statute, have not been within the spirit of it. I mention the matter at this time, because it has been brought up more than once during the session, and because it seems to me that the attitude adopted with regard to it by the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence is not one which, on the whole, has been satisfactory.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is only fair to the deputy minister to say that I feel absolutely certain that there was no intention on his part to do anything adverse to the interest of Colonel Worthington. I think that hon. gentleman himself will bear me out in that view. I happen to have learned a moment ago that the whole question arose through the desire of Colonel Fiset the Director General of Medical Services, who is a warm personal friend and admirer of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington), to protect that hon. gentleman. And it was through Dr. Fiset that the deputy minister was brought into the matter. There was no intention whatever to do anything adverse to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Worthington's) interest. I am glad to be aware of that fact and to state it to the committee. This is the first I have heard of this correspondence.

I sympathize very much with the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington). I was medical officer myself for many years in my own province, and received whatever fees pertained to that official, while being also a member of parliament. During the recess between sessions I examined men for the schools and received pay for it, whether properly or improperly ; I thought I had a right to do so under the Independence of Parliament Act. But I would say in support of the opinion of the leader of the opposition, that if, in order to remove all doubts, it is necessary to make some amendment in the Independence of Parliament Act, it should be done at once ; and if my hon. friend will indicate the words that he thinks should be introduced, I will ask the Minister of Justice to take the matter up at once. I agree about the importance of having as many military men as possible in the House, and particularly men who have taken such a keen interest in military affairs and who have distinguished themselves so highly as the hon. member for Sherbrooke has done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think what the minister has said is very satisfactory. I have no criticism to make upon the action of the Deputy Minister of Militia, except in so far as his conduct appears in the correspondence to be, I thought, rather curt, and not actuated by a very friendly spirit towards my hon. friend from Sherbrooke, nor was it such a spirit as might be expected to be evinced toward a man who had had the distinguished public career and performed the public services which the member for Sherbrooke had performed. However, we will let that pass. I will be glad to send to the Minister of Militia the amendment which I think should be made in the law to cover this case.

I would like to say one or two words about the main subject we have been discussing this evening. I realize that the conditions are not quite the same as they were in 1896-7, because we have at the present time, or there is proposed to be now, a permanent force of 3,000, and the permanent force at that time I believe was about 800. Let me point out to the Minister of Militia that upon the statement which he has brought down to parliament, in 1896-7, there was an expenditure of $2,413,651, while during the coming year he proposes to expend $5,493,102.50. To that is to be added, I suppose, a certain sum in the supplementaries for next year, one amount that is mentioned being the sum of $150,000 for annual drill. Therefore we will assume that the total estimate for the year will run up to nearly $6,000,000. Well, we are to have a larger permanent force now, a permanent force more than three times as large as we had in 1896-7. But when you come to look at the number of men who will be drilled this year as compared with 1896-7, the difference does not appear to be so great. According to the statement which the minister brought down there were drilled in 1897, 36,298 men, and there were also included in the force that year 3,471 horses. In the year 1905, according to the estimate which the minister has brought down, there will be drilled 43,983 of all ranks, including 7,640 horses. That is exclusive of the permanent force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Where does the hon. gentleman get his figures ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On page 9 of the statement where it is said : 'The numbers called out for training this year exclusive of the permanent force, are as follows.' Then it gives the totals of men and horses that I have mentioned.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If my hon. friend will look at the last page of the statement he will find the figures for 1896-7 as being 36,298 men, and on the same line he will find the number for 1904-5. But these are the establishments. We have not given the numbers called out for drill in 1896-7, we have only given the establishment, and opposite that is placed the number called out for drill in 1904-5.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that to be last year, meaning the fiscal year 1904-5.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is necessary to understand the militia term for 1896 in order to find out the exact number.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let us take then the comparison of the establishments. There is a difference of about 6,000 men. In 1896-7, there were 36,298 ; in 1904-5—I took that to be last year, and I thought that 43,000 referred to the present year, but that apparently is not so. The establishment is something different from the number of men called out. Well, let us take the 49,000 ; you have then an increase of a little over one-third in the establishment. But you have an expenditure of $2,413,000 as compared with about $6,000,000. Well, I concede at once that you must make a very important addition to the $2,413,000 on account of the addition to the permanent force, and taking over the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is one other item to which I call my hon. friend's attention ; in 1896-97 the item for arms, ammunition, &c., was $745,965, whereas, in the present year, it is $1,225,000 or nearly double.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nearly $500,000 more, I observed that. But, after all, you must rely in the end upon the men whom you call out and train and upon the men who, as the hon. minister says, will be available in addition to them so as to make up what he calls, I think, his first line of defence, 100,000 men. Is there not a very much greater advance in the cost to the country of the militia service at the present time than there is in the number of men annually trained now as compared with what was accomplished in 1896? Then, there is another circumstance that struck me very forcibly as to which I would like to have some explanation. As I understand it the theory of the Department of Militia is this: You are to train a certain number of men, between 40,000 and 50,000 every year and you expect, in the event of necessity, to call out 45,000 or 55,000 more men who will be to a certain extent untrained, who certainly will not have the training that is to be found among the men who go into these camps every year and who in that way increase their daily allowance from 50 cents to 75 cents.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. All the active militia will get $1 a day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean $1. But the idea of making that increase is that you will get men to attend the camps year after year and therefore, if there is any advantage at all in that increase of pay, it will be found in this, that these men year after year, up to a certain number, will attend the camps and in that way they will require a better training than hitherto. I observe on pages 8 and 9 that there is a considerable difference between the training establishment of each battalion called out for training in 1905 and each battalion called out for training in 1904. That is what is intended, is it not?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the difference is in the number of officers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe that and that is what I want to call attention to. In 1904 the standard was 420 men and in 1905, 353. The memorandum goes on to state:

> The principal difference between the two is that in the training establishment of this year the number of captains is reduced from 16 to 8; the number of lieutenants is reduced from 24 to 16; the number of sergeants is reduced from 48 to 32; and the number of corporals is reduced from 48 to 24 in each rural regiment of infantry.

What I am asking is entirely for information because I do not profess to have very much knowledge in regard to the matter and I only state my view as one who would like to be considered a man of common sense, if I may include myself in that class, but who does not know very much about the subject. You have 40,000 or 50,000 men whom you are training and you expect to make up your establishment by adding 50,000 men who have practically no training. But, while you are training these men you are reducing the number of officers. It would strike me that this is the last item you should reduce because you should keep or increase the number of officers so that you will have a sufficient number of additional trained officers for the additional number of men who would be called out in time of trouble.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are officers enough in the companies, as stated in that memorandum, for 100,000 men.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is the case it meets my difficulty, but I did not understand you had so large a proportion before.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That was arranged under the Dundonald establishment and very properly, I think, with the view of having a very large number of officers in the second line, the expectation being that the central camp would be established and that these officers would be given opportunities of training there. The camp has not yet been established and they have been left out for the time being.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, that is quite satisfactory. Naturally, as that was not explained in the memorandum, I took it for granted that what formerly had been regarded as only a sufficient number was now being reduced. The hon. minister says the reason that the number of officers is not only sufficient for the number of men who are being trained annually but is also sufficient for the additional men necessary to make up the full quota of 100,000. This being so, my criticism and objection are fully answered.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question in regard to the treatment of men injured in camp. I know a young man who is now in the Toronto General Hospital and who was injured in the camp at Niagara. He will be laid up for quite a length of time. What provision is made for such cases? I understand that the department generally pays the expenses but what is done further I do not know.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is the pay of rank and subsistence allowance in cases of sickness arising in camp limited to sixty days and if a case goes beyond that it has to receive special treatment. Sometimes we come to parliament and ask for a vote and sometimes the cases can be dealt with by Order in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. As the injury in this case will certainly be of a permanent character, I would like to know if there is provision made in the form of a pension or anything of that kind.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a pension for active service, but it does not apply to camp. Of course, men going into camp have to take a certain amount of risk, but where a special case of hardship arises the minister will come to parliament and ask parliament to deal with it.

Mr. SPROULE. Then he gets the ordinary pay of his rank during the time he is ill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He gets $1 a day and subsistence.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that cover medical assistance or has he to pay for that out of his allowance?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The pay of his rank and subsistence are the only provision.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee but a very few minutes, but the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence will recollect that earlier in the session I made application to have the papers brought down in connection with the grant of the King's medal to the soldiers who had done a second term of service in South Africa. I am afraid the hon. minister considers this a dead letter, but I can assure him that a great deal of interest exists in the minds of Canadians who had this second term of service and for that reason I would like to bring it to his memory and to the notice of the committee. I think that the present time is perhaps very opportune for doing so because we see in the papers daily that the commander in chief, Lord Roberts, intends visiting Canada shortly and this would be a very suitable time to bring the matter again before him. The order granting this second South African medal, general order No. 110 of November, 1902, reads as follows :

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to approve that a second war medal, bearing his effigy, shall be granted in recognition of the services renderd by the troops in the latter phases of the campaign in South Africa, and to reward those soldiers who, by their long service in the field, have brought the war to a successful termination.

Section 3 goes on to state who shall receive this medal and in consideration of what services. It says :

Provided the claims are approved by the commander in chief a medal of silver will be issued to all officers, &c.

(a) Provided they were actually serving in South Africa on or after the 1st of January, 1902.

(b) That on that date they had completed 18 months war service or subsequently completed such service before the first of June, 1902.

I think the Canadians who did a second term of service in South Africa conform to these requirements, and I am told by very good authority that these claims were approved by the commander in chief and recommended to the War Office. As to whether these Canadians were actually serving in South Africa on or after the 1st of January, 1902, there is no doubt whatever, and the only question which arises is as to the interpretation of the phrase : 'That on that date they had completed 18 months' war service.' In my opinion the War Office has placed a very illiberal interpretation on these words, in holding that they required a Canadian to do 18 months' actual service in South Africa. The war service of a citizen soldier of this country should begin from the time he lays down his professional or other duties to enlist in a regiment for active service abroad. No matter whether the first few weeks of that service are spent in Ottawa for purposes of organization or in Halifax for embarkation, his term begins when he enters the service of the empire and when his South African pay begins. The War Office was pleased to grant two other medals in Canada. After the Fenian Raid it was pleased to grant two other medals in Canada. Then there was no distinction drawn between the home guard and those who actually served at the front ; in fact a great many men who never left their homes were recognized in this respect the same as the men who fought at Pigeon Hill. After the Northwest rebellion there was no such illiberal interpretation placed on war service and actual service in the field or at the front, other service, because every one under arms in and west of Port Arthur got the Northwest medal. In both these instances medals were given to Canadians for simply protecting their homes and firesides, and it is strange that when from a mere matter of sentiment or patriotism Canadians go to the other end of the world to fight for the empire, they should not receive this acknowledgment. I do not wish to criticise the department for I believe it is not responsible. I am sure the minister has done a great deal to carry out the wishes of the men who have not received this medal, but I do think that if the medal claims' list had been forwarded directly from the commanding officers to the War Office without being sent back with instructions that they were not entitled to this medal, more prompt action would have been taken as it was without the province of the department to adjudicate on matters of an imperial nature, being simply the channel of communication between these officers and the War Office. I think the present time would be opportune to bring this matter to the attention of the commander in chief, especially as we hear he is likely to visit Canada, and I trust that the Minister of Militia will do so because at least 25 per cent of the Canadians who went out in the latter stages of the campaign and who were instrumental in bringing the war to a successful termination are interested in this matter.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This question has been before the House on at least three occasions, and two years ago I read to the House the papers on the subject which my hon. friend will find in 'Hansard.' My hon. friend (Mr. Worthington) is quite correct in saying that this is not a matter for the Canadian government at all; it is absolutely and entirely a matter for the Imperial War Office. The granting of the King's medal depends upon the Queen's medal having been previously earned, and no one not already in possession of the Queen's medal has the right to the King's medal. The question as to the recognition of service on shipboard and service in Canada getting ready to embark for South Africa, is purely a question for the imperial authorities and in their regulations they distinctly state that length of war service in South Africa must be a qualification for the Queen's medal. On two or three different occasions representations from different sources have been forwarded by me through the Governor General to the Colonial Office and in each case the most explicit and distinct refusal was given. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Worthington) is entirely mistaken in supposing that Lord Roberts ever recommended the granting of the medal. The Imperial Yeomanry and the Australians were treated in precisely the same way as the Canadians. I refer my hon. friend to 'Hansard' of 1903, pp. 10491 and following for a full statement of the case and copies of all the correspondence on the subject. I propose to read one letter from Mr. Chamberlain to Lord Minto:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Your Excellency's despatch No. 278 of the 22nd August, transmitting a copy of an approved minute of your Privy Council.

I had forgotten that the government of Canada had gone so far as to make it a subject of communication from the Privy Council of Canada and gave it all the force and weight that might convey.

On the subject of the bestowal of the South Africa medal and the payment of the war gratuity to the members of the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th regiments, Canadian Mounted Rifles.

I have to acquaint you, for the information or your ministers, that I have submitted the question to the consideration of the Secretary of State for War, but that he, after careful consideration with his military advisers, has decided that no relaxation can be made of the date limiting the grant of the medal or war gratuity.

I have to add that the rule has been adhered to in the case of all the imperial troops who landed in South Africa after the 31st of May, and of the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th battalions of the Australian Commonwealth Horse.

And so on. I could give the telegrams from the War Office, but I think that should be quite sufficient to satisfy my hon. friend that we did all we could, and that it is no use to try to do any more.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Of course, when you read the last part of that letter you are confusing the last contingent, who arrived after peace was declared. I am contending that it is necessary a man should have first of all the Queen's medal, he could not help getting it after putting in a claim of this kind, because he would get that after his first twelve months' service. I have been told that a great many imperial officers got this medal who were not in South Africa for eighteen months; they were absent going to Ceylon and St. Helena with Boer prisoners, and were in practically the same position as we were in going to and from South Africa.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. In regard to the somewhat extended remarks of the minister and the large estimates involved by the increase of the permanent force—a step, by the way, of which I entirely approve—I would like to ask whether it is the intention to do anything towards the improvement of the accommodation of the military school at Quebec. Quebec occupies an important position as a military district. Two years ago I was obliged to qualify as a field officer. I went to that school—No. 5 infantry school—and I found it a very serious drawback for the officers who went there to qualify to have to look all over the city for a boarding-house or for lodgings. This was a very serious drawback, and when my course was over I drew the attention of the department to it, and I think there is quite a voluminous correspondence between the District Officer Commanding of Quebec and the department, drawing the attention of the department to this deficiency. Last winter some thirty-five or thirty-six officers of different rural corps of the district of Quebec qualified. They were under the same drawback. The Militia Department has a very fine building and plenty of land right in the heart of the city of Quebec in connection with that regiment, and I would appeal to the minister and to his department that a certain sum of money should be devoted from the numerous millions we have voted here for the enlargement of that school. A man who wants to become efficient in military matters should be right on the spot, and should not only follow three or four hours of a technical course each day, but should have drill constantly under his eyes in the way of guard-mounting, forming of pickets, &c. The only expense would be the extension of the building to give accommodation, probably twenty or twenty-five rooms, a mess room and instruction rooms in the one building. It would not be a very large expenditure, and I would appeal to the minister to find his way clear to enlarge that school in order to take advantage of the spirit we now have in our province. All young men have to battle against a certain drawback and difficulty, that is a full knowledge of the language, but still, on the whole, as General Lake was kind enough to mention when he visited the camp at Lévis this year, our camp was as good as any in the Dominion of Canada, and I think the Minister of Militia could not spend a few hundreds or a few thousands of dollars in a more useful way than in extending that school for the purpose I have indicated, so that young men who are willing to qualify and become good, efficient men, willing to be an example to those under them in the way of knowledge and discipline, could have rooms and lodgings at the school in order to be there from morning until evening, so that they could take advantage of every move and word of instruction that could be given to them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I beg to say to my hon. friend that this request is a very proper and reasonable one. I will look into the matter at once; in fact, the hon. member has pressed the question on my notice already, and something is being done in that regard. With reference to what he has said about increased interest being taken in military matters in Quebec, I am able to testify to that fact, and I am very glad to notice that such is the case. The camp at Lévis this year, I heard from General Lake myself, was one of the best in the whole Dominion.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Taking advantage of the statement of the minister that he would be glad to answer any questions asked him in connection with this matter, I would like to ask whether he has experienced any difficulty in keeping up the numerical strength of the permanent force, or does he anticipate any difficulty when that force is increased?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Then I would ask another question. Is it according to the military regulations, or the militia rules of this country, practically possible for a young man of energy, ability and talent, entering as a militiaman, by application of the talent that he may possess, by industry, perseverance and good conduct, if he has natural ambition, is it practically possible for that man to attain any of the higher positions in the military service of his country?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is. I have much pleasure in telling my hon. friend that it is absolutely possible, and that only a very short time ago I remember two appointments being made of men who enlisted in the ranks. I have known some cases where perhaps very worthy men had endeavoured to secure positions by using influence from outside, which I think was a very undesirable thing to do, and which I think was objected to by the officers, because I am told by the officers in command of depots that if that kind of thing were permitted it would absolutely destroy all discipline in the depot. I am not thinking of any one in particular, but I know that that has happened. If men will go on simply attending to their business, without indulging in log-rolling, and bring themselves to the notice of their officers in the proper way, by attending to duty, they are absolutely certain if they have the necessary education, of course, to eventually secure promotion.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am very glad to get that statement and that information, because I know that in some parts of the country a different impression prevails. I do not think anything could be more detrimental to the best interests of the service and to the young men of the country were any considerable portion to feel that because they do not perhaps occupy a certain social position they could not rise to the highest position to which their talents and education should call them in the military service of the country. In the continental armies, and in the British army I believe, a different system practically prevails. I have seen it stated that it was to that fact, to the indignity that had been heaped upon him by his brother officers, that Sir Hector Macdonald, who had risen from the ranks to occupy an important position in the British army, was driven to a suicide's grave, that many other men had suffered in a similar way, and that many worthy men had been prevented from rising in the service simply because of their social position; and I think it would not be in accordance with the genius and spirit and character of our people if anything like that prevailed in the military service of our country.

Mr. GERVAIS. Before the discussion closes I wish to say a few words by way of explanation on behalf of the Deputy Minister of Militia. From the discussion which has been going on for half-an-hour one might infer that the Deputy Minister of Militia had been interfering with the Department of Justice by giving an opinion outside of his departmental relation. As a matter of fact, in the correspondence which has been filed in regard to the question of the resignation of the hon. member for Sherbrooke as principal medical officer, it is shown that the Deputy Minister of Militia never interfered with the Department of Justice and never gave an opinion outside of the Department of Militia, but merely gave an opinion to Mr. Fiset, who was the medical director general in the department. When the Deputy Minister of Militia gave his opinion outside of the Militia Department, it was not, as Mr. Newcombe has said in his letter of March 15, 1905, of his own motion, but at the special request of the Minister of Justice. To support my statement, I will read the following letter:

Ottawa, November 22, 1905.

Dear Col. Pinault,

I send you herewith letter which I have received from Mr. H. R. Fraser, Sherbrooke, re the right of Dr. Worthington, M.P., to accept certain pay as a medical officer in No. 6 district. I have told Mr. Fraser that his letter has been sent to you. Will you be good enough to send him the necessary answer.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) C. FITZPATRICK.

Later on, we find another letter from the Minister of Justice, reading as follows:

Ottawa, November 22nd, 1904.

My Dear Col. Pinault,

Herewith additional letter from Mr. H. R. Fraser re Dr. Worthington.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) C. FITZPATRICK.

Therefore I say that in the month of November, 1904, it was at the special request of the Minister of Justice that Colonel Pinault, the Deputy Minister of Militia, gave any opinion in relation to the question raised by the hon. member for Sherbrooke as principal medical officer for district No. 6. I have read these two letters to show that no blame is to be attached to the Deputy Minister of Militia in this connection, and that the statement made by Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, in his letter of March 15, 1905, is not borne out by the fact.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What statement is that?

Mr. GERVAIS. I will read Mr. Newcombe's letter:

Ottawa, 15th March, 1905.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant—303-8—and of the letter of the 10th ultimo to which you refer, submitting for opinion the question whether Lt.-Col. Worthington, M.P., who is principal medical officer of military district No. 6, would be disqualified from sitting in parliament if he should draw the allowance of $300 which is provided for principal medical officers in the Regulations.

In reply I beg to state that the Minister of Justice is of opinion that the $300 a year provided for by the regulations is an 'allowance' within the meaning of section 17 of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, and that the receipt of it by Colonel Worthington would, therefore, not disqualify or render him ineligible to sit and vote as a member of the House of Commons.

Then, this is the statement I refer to:

The minister, however, does not think that the point is entirely free from doubt, and, as it is not incumbent upon you to advise Colonel Worthington in the matter, he thinks that you should not undertake to advise him officially.

As a matter of fact this statement of Mr. Newcombe is not borne out by the letters. When Colonel Pinault advised Mr. Fiset, the general director of medical service, as well as when answering the Department of Justice, he did so at the special request of the Department of Justice. I am making this statement to show the House that no blame should be attached to Colonel Pinault, who has the highest regard for the hon. member for Sherbrooke as a medical man.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not making any comment on the Deputy Minister of Militia except so far as I read statements from these letters. I have either read or referred to every letter on this file. Long before there was any letter from the Minister of Justice or from the Deputy Minister of Justice, Colonel Pinault made this memorandum on the 7th of November, 1904, the very first letter on the file to which the hon. gentleman has now referred:

Under the Revised Statutes of Canada, chap. 11, section 9, sub-section (a) this officer would be disqualified if he should accept pay or other emoluments as P.M.O. Sub-section 4 of the same section provides that if it be stated in his commission or other instrument appointing him that the appointment did not carry pay with it, and of course if no pay were issued, the appointment would not invalidate his seat in parliament.

Mr. GERVAIS. If the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. R. L. Borden) will permit me, I would like to ask him a question. Has he allowed for the fact that the letter he has read was addressed to Col. Fiset, who is a fellow officer in the same department with the writer of that letter. It is a letter intended for the exclusive use of the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What of that? That has nothing to do with what I am talking about. My point is that the deputy minister made up his mind immediately, without consulting the Department of Justice.

Mr. GERVAIS. For the use of his fellow officer, not for the use of the public. As a matter of fact, when Col. Pinault was making that statement to Col. Fiset, he was doing it for the benefit of Col. Fiset; he was not taking the responsibility of deciding whether Col. Worthington was right or not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Surely, the hon. gentleman does not expect that this opinion was not to be acted upon. If he does it can only be because he has not examined the file carefully; for it was immediately followed, on November 14th, by a memo. of Col. Fiset to the same effect, and this was communicated to Col. Worthington on November 16th. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) need not endeavour to pull the wool over our eyes, even at the instigation of any gentleman who may be making these suggestions to him. I say that without any intention to be offensive. The object of Col. Pinault's memo. on November 11th is perfectly obvious. And I might make some comments upon this, which I did not intend to make, but which I shall make if this discussion is much protracted. Because, there is an evident intention in this correspondence, which can be easily read between the lines. I endeavoured to be very moderate in my remarks, as I do not desire to be unjust to any one. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) thinks this opinion was not intended to be communicated outside the department, he has not read the file. It was communicated to another officer, and then to Col. Worthington in the ordinary course.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) if he makes no difference so far as responsibility is concerned for an opinion whether that opinion is to be sent to a fellow officer or is sent to a person outside the office ? In a law office, for instance, one partner often consults another upon some question that arises. Surely, the hon. gentleman will draw a distinction between an opinion given by a lawyer to his partner and an opinion given by a lawyer to his client.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from St. James division (Mr. Gervais) has made the very best he could of a very bad case. He has got a little mixed in his facts through not reading the file. I will not press him further, because I know how I should feel if I were in the position in which he now is.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would ask the hon. gentleman to show me in what way my facts are not borne out ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. First, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) said that the Deputy Minister of Militia had given no opinion on this question until he was asked to do so by the Deputy Minister of Justice. He was not so asked until February, and he gave an opinion in the November proceeding. Then, the hon. gentleman says that the Deputy Minister of Militia gave his opinion for the private information of some person without any idea that it would go out of the department. As a matter of fact, as the first three documents on the file will show, this opinion was sent in the ordinary course by the deputy minister to another officer of the department for the purpose of being communicated by him directly or through still another officer to Col. Worthington, and it did go to Col. Worthington on November 16th, long before the Minister of Justice or the Deputy Minister of Justice had come into the matter. So the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) is not very well up in his facts on that branch of the case.

Mr. GERVAIS. The documents on file will show I am correct in my facts.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I would dirrect the attention of the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) to the matter of the promotion of men in the ranks to be commissioned officers. I have in mind a case which, if it is illustrative of the position in the force throughout Canada, indicates a condition of affairs which, in my opinion, is not conducive to the best interest of the militia. Personally, I do not profess to know much about militia matters. But it does seem to me that one principle ought to be recognized in our militia, and that is that any Canadian who develops an interest in militia matters has the right to an opporunity to rise to the highest position in the militia service. I am aware of a case in which certain members of the permanent force have been disposed to discriminate against a young Canadian whose record in the militia is above reproach, whose private life has been such as to command respect and whose whole career entitles him to commendation. I submit to the minister —whose management of the department, every one, no matter what his politics, will admit, is the best that has been shown by any Minister of Militia in the history of the country—whether he should not give careful attention to a system which would permit discrimination by any commissioned officer against any man in the ranks. There may be gentlemen who have reached positions in the militia force who choose to say that a non-commissioned officer, because he did not happen to be born in a certain condition of life, is not entitled to the emoluments that go to a commissioned officer. The question of how the word 'gentleman' is to be defined may depend upon the views of each individual. I merely call attention to a case which has come under my own observation indicating an abuse which, where it exists should be stamped out in the interest of our militia system, so that any young man, no matter what his position in life, may freely aspire to the highest position in the militia service.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. E. M. Macdonald), I have only a word to add to what I have already said. I shall be glad if my hon. friend will put me in possession of facts which will show the existence of such a condition of things as he describes. Because, if there be such a condition of things, I would take the very strongest means to put an end to it. There should be no bar to respectable, well-behaved zealous and qualified men, I do not care what their walk in life, to rise in the militia service. So far as I am concerned, I propose to see that the door shall be open to all. But, while I say that, I wish to repeat what I have already said—and I am not referring to the case which the hon. gentleman (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) has in mind, though I know of that case. But I know of cases—one at least—where a persistent attempt has been made by certain influential people in favour of a man occupying a rather high place in society in his own province, to force me to admit him as an officer though his record was not what that of an officer ought to be.

I looked up the record and I found that the report was absolutely correct, and that he was not a desirable man to whom a commission should be given. The officers are in a very difficult position. The Canadian permanent force is in a different position from the regular army. In the latter, men go into the field of battle, and when one distinguishes himself on the field he is given a commission at once, or shortly afterwards, for distinguished services. Opportunities in Canada are not nearly so great, and it is necessary for a man to rise in a different way. I am afraid sometimes they think they see a short cut to get a commission by log-rolling and bringing influence, political or otherwise, upon the minister. I think it would be subversive of discipline if anything like that were permitted or encouraged. As I said a moment ago, a man or a non-commissioned officer will serve his own interest best by attending to his duty and working out his salvation as best he can, instead of asking his friends to bring influence, political or otherwise, to bear upon the minister to get him a commission.

Mr. HERRON. I do not know whether the minister is aware of the trouble that occurred at Macleod a year or two ago. In that case I am afraid it was political rather that social distinction which had an influence, and caused a geat deal of trouble in the Mounted Rifles of Macleod. I hope that has been made right, because I consider that one gentleman was treated very badly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I remember the case, that has been made right.

Military properties—for an armoury for 5th Royal Scots, Montreal, $30,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is for the construction of an armoury for the 5th Royal Scots. The property is to be handed over to the government. The regiment is contributing about the same amount as the government. Several gentlemen in the city of Montreal whom I need not mention, have contributed a considerable sum of money to enable this regiment to have their armoury. A very fine armoury will be built for the two sums.

Grants to rifle associations—further amount required, $4,000.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I desire to bring to the notice of the minister the need for a rifle range in my own constituency. Four or five years ago the Militia Department undertook, at the request of some gentlemen who were very much interested in the matter, the construction of a rifle range in my constituency. There are several considerable large towns in my constituency, there is a good deal of military spirit there, and a large number of young men are exceedingly anxious about this matter, and they have been looking forward during these years to having this rifle range constructed. I have received assurances from the department on several occasions during the last four years that some steps would be taken to provide it. But I have made up my mind that the rifle range is farther away to-day than it was four years ago. I have been pointing out to these young men that I had been from time to time conveying their request to the minister, because they seem to think that I was not doing all I could. I would like the minister to make a statement as to whether it is the intention of the department to proceed and construct this rifle range. I know that plans were prepared in the department some time ago, I know that these plans were not acted upon, I know also that these plans were changed ; and I know, further, that these plans were still further changed. I do not know exactly where the matter stands now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. A. Johnston) wrote me a few days ago and I have made inquiries. I am bound to say that I supposed that rifle range was completed last year. I am told that the land has been selected, and that work is to be begun immediately.

Royal Military College—further amount required, $2,000.

Mr. TISDALE. What is that for ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For the purpose of facilitating the instruction in railway construction it is proposed to lay down in the college grounds a few hundred feet of standard railway track.

Dominion Arsenal—further amount required, $65,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is for an additional number of cartridges.

Defences of Esquimalt—further amount required, $110,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have voted $110,000 in the main estimates in addition to this $110,000. It will cost $220,000 a year. The imperial authorities are to continue the maintenance of the fortress at Esquimalt until July 1st.

For preservation of site of Old Fort at Louisburg, Cape Breton, $5,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The old historic fort at Louisburg is gradually disappearing and the provincial government of Nova Scotia suggested that if we would vote a certain amount they would vote a similar amount for the purpose of trying to some extent to restore or at any rate preserve whatever may be of interest there at the present moment.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence if any representations have been made to him in reference to a drill hall at Minnedosa. I may say that I noticed in last session's estimates that there was an item for the Brandon drill hall and also for a drill hall at Virden. Both of these are in the constituency of Brandon. The hon. ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), I know, wrote a letter to the captain of the squadron located in Minnedosa, the 12th Dragoons, promising that there would be placed in this year's estimate an amount for the construction of a drill hall there. They have a very efficient company of dragoons who carried away the major portion of the prizes at the fall competition in Brandon last year, and I notice in to-day's papers that they have done the same thing in the camp which closed last week. I hope that the hon. minister will place an item in the further supplementary estimates if we are going to have any this year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That will not be necessary. There is a lump sum in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for just such works as these. I remember the fact of the place being brought to my attention and I can only promise that I will look into the matter and of course we cannot do them all at once but I will give it my sympathetic attention.

Public Works—chargeable to capital—Harbours and rivers (Marine Department)—additional amount required for a new dredge plant for the ship channel in the River St. Lawrence below Quebec, $150,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are we not going to have an explanation of these ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This is just a continuation of a vote which has been taken in the main estimates of $100,000 for the same object. With $150,000 I think we will be able to have that dredge ready for work during the season 1907. It is for the lower St. Lawrence.

Additional amount required for permanent piers in Lake St. Peter and other places in the ship channel, River St. Lawrence, $160,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is the continuation of a vote of the same kind for piers on Lake St. Peter which will constitute permanent lights.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did you not put this in the main estimates ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We could not because the plans were not completed.

Ocean and river service—to provide for repairs to steamer 'Quadra,' $30,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This item should be changed and I would move to strike out the word 'Quadra' and insert the word 'Montcalm.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it a clerical error?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is a clerical error because the 'Quadra' has been provided for in the supplementary estimates of 1904-5.

Motion agreed to.

Scientific institutions and hydrographic surveys —Department of Marine and Fisheries—further amount required for hydrographic surveys, $114,500.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is to provide for the hydrographic survey on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. This is to do the work that used to be done by the Imperial authorities, who have delivered it into our hands. I must say that this is one of the most important services in which we are engaged. We are going on with these surveys on the Atlantic coast. We have had great difficulty in getting a proper organization for the Pacific coast, but that will be provided for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think you had an item for this in the main estimates ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, I think it was $45,000. At that time we had not organized.

To provide for the purchase or construction of a steamer for hydrographic surveys on the Atlantic coast, Gulf and River St. Lawrence, $75,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. At the present time we are doing this work on the Atlantic coast with the steamer 'Gulnare' which was employed generally in another service but the work had to go on and we took her from the tidal service and employed her to do this work for this season. On the Pacific coast we have no boat, we could not secure one but we intend to purchase one.

Construction of marine hospital at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, $6,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will this be maintained by the department ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

To provide for expenses of Fishery Commission, $15,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are two special commissions included in this vote. The most important one is in connection with the salmon fisheries in British Columbia which I promised would be appointed when I was in British Columbia last fall. The governor of the state of Washington has appointed a commission whose names have been forwarded to us and which will act concurrently with the Canadian commission to endeavour to decide on regulations which will be applicable to both countries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will they investigate ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The salmon fisheries and the best periods for close seasons, &c. The Americans have enforced practically no regulations in the past and the industry has suffered greatly for the want of an understanding between the two countries.

Mr. BLAIN. How many Canadian commissioners will be appointed ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Probably five, who will be chosen from the best people we can find, but the chief work will be done by Professor Prince, the Dominion Commissioner of Fisheries and Mr. Blacock the Fishery Commissioner for British Columbia.

Management and expenses of government educational fish curing establishments—the proceeds of the same to revert to the appropriation, $12,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We intend to proceed in this matter as the Department of Agriculture did in reference to butter and cheese factories.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are these establishments ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. One at Souris, in Prince Edward Island. We propose to treat codfish.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood you were making experiments with regard to curing herring ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We intend to test an improved mechanical process in the curing of codfish.

Construction and maintenance of experimental works for the reduction of dog-fish, $60,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We would like to hear something about this vote.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is provided that $50,000 will be spent in maintaining these establishments in the maritime provinces, and $10,000 in British Columbia. From the information we have already acquired we hope that the results of these experiments will be successful.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was stated by a member from British Columbia last session that they profitably made use of these dog-fish for commercial purposes, without assistance from the government. Has the minister investigated that ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, and the result of the investigation is that the concern which was conducting these operations threatened to close up their works, and we found that they were in a very bad financial position.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the minister any opinion as to whether this vote had anything to do with their threatening to close up ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have agreed that we will guarantee the British Columbia concern against loss to the extent of $10,000 for the operations of the year. I may say that in British Columbia it is absolutely necessary to maintain works of that kind on account of the large salmon packing concerns. It is necessary that all the debris from these factories should be gathered and treated for fertilizing purposes at a certain point. This factory has been in operation for the past two or three years and has had very poor success, and it stands to reason that in helping them through we are helping the salmon fisheries, because if something of this kind was not done I am quite sure we would be obliged to establish works of this kind in order to protect the public health.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should the government go into the business of treating salmon offal. I thought the salmon business was a very profitable one and did not need assistance, although it might be necessary to provide for the disposal of the dog-fish.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They are doing both. I have seen in the nets thousands and thousands of dog-fish caught and they are put back into the sea. When we have these reduction works there is an inducement for these fishermen to keep them, and that is what we are attempting to do in British Columbia as in the maritime provinces.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Has the department taken steps to inquire whether or not these dog-fish can be canned as other fish are and a market found for a considerable number in that way ? I would ask if a proposition of that kind has been made to the department looking to the establishment of a canning factory for dog-fish ? The matter is well worth looking into.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is going on at the present moment in a small way and we intend to carry on the experiments on a larger scale. We are having some of these dog-fish prepared and packed sent out to different countries to find if possible a market for them. That is done in some other places and people who have tried dog-fish flesh have found it to be wholesome and there is no reason why we should not prepare these fish as they do in other countries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do I understand that the minister intends to try it on members of parliament first ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If they want to try it it is their own business, but I do not want to impose it on them.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Might I ask how many reduction establishments the minister intends to arrange for in Nova Scotia and whether they will be in various parts of the maritime provinces ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. At the present moment it is more of an experiment than anything else. This year we propose that there shall be two in operation, one at Canso and one at Cape Sable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There have not been so many dog-fish this year ?

Mr. FIELDING. The debate scared them off.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, there is a very small number of them this year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps if you just made believe to have these establishments they would not come around the coast.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We would not spend the money then.

Lighthouse and coast surveys, further amount for Parry Sound, buoy depot, $15,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is to provide for the administration of the Parry Sound buoy depot which was established last year.

Salaries and allowances lighthouse keepers, $25,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is to provide for the salaries of the new lighthouse keepers that may be appointed in the course of the year and also to provide for an increase of salary for the lighthouse keepers all over Canada from the Pacific to the Atlantic. It has been represented to me, and I have come to the conclusions that the representations were well founded, that the lighthouse keepers were not paid what they were entitled to and orders have been given that a general list should be made of the lighthouse keepers in the different parts of the country and that we will try to adjust their salaries so that they will be sufficient. Some are paid only $50 a year and others $300. Of course those who are paid $50 have little to do and others who are paid $300 have to devote nearly all their time to the work. Others are paid more than this because they are on islands far from settlements, and have to provide themselves with every necessity of life. It is a matter which deserves the attention of the government and of the department and I think the amount of $25,000 is not an excessive amount to provide for the new lighthouse keepers and also for equalizing their salaries. Of course whatever will not be required will be returned to the treasury.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, including apparatus, $675,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is the most important item of my supplementary estimates. It is to provide for a renewal of the greater number of the most important lights on the route of the St. Lawrence, and also to provide for better lighting on the lakes and on the Atlantic coast. The amount which will be required to perfect this service will be about $2,000,000, according to the reports of my officers. We have reduced the amount to $675,000, which will cover all that we can do during the present season. Some of the apparatus are very complicated instruments, and it takes a very long time to have them constructed, installed and put into operation. Most of the apparatus are not built in Canada. We have to secure them from the best makers in England and in France. After these installations have been made, the St. Lawrence route from the ocean will be almost completely equipped, and Canada will compare with any other country in the world in this respect. As a result, we think the insurance companies will reduce their rates more and more from year to year. We have already in 1904 obtained a reduction of twenty per cent, which amounts to about $750,000 of saving in one season on the cargoes and hulls of steamers. We think we should obtain a reduction of fifty per cent, and when we do, our ports will be on the same footing as the ports of New York, Boston, Newport News, and all the Atlantic ports of the United States. I may say that every item of this vote of $675,000 has been recommended by the Lighthouse Board, the Shipping Federation and every one connected with navigation. I think that with this expenditure, made chiefly on the St. Lawrence route, very little will be required in the next few years to complete the work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much of this is to be expended on the St. Lawrence, and how much on the lakes?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have not the details here, but if my hon. friend will allow me, I will lay on the table to-morrow a statement of the exact division of this expenditure, giving the location of each lighthouse, the kind of apparatus to be installed and the estimate for each.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the minister if in this list he will be good enough to include the lighthouse which he promised two or three years ago at the village of Bronte? It will not cost more than $200 or $300. I think I had the promise of the hon. gentleman on two or three occasions. On one occasion, when I explained the necessity of the work, he admitted that I had made out a good case, and I hope he will now give me the assurance that I can take home with me, that this lighthouse, which is very urgently needed, will be constructed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am glad to assure the hon. gentleman that, as I said last session, as soon as the pier which is being constructed by the Department of Public Works is finished, the light will be installed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad to hear that, only I regret that the Minister of Public Works is perpetuating the construction of the pier to such an extent that I fear we shall all be 'oslerized' before he gets through with it. However, I am delighted to receive the promise of the hon. minister.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I wish to bring to the notice of the hon. minister the importance of placing storm signals at some of the lighthouses, especially the more prominent ones on the headlands. At present storm signals are placed in the harbours, and are for the benefit of seamen contemplating going to sea. Storm signals at the lighthouses would be of very great advantage. They would serve as notices to seamen to make for shelter when a storm is approaching, and would indicate the direction from which it is approaching, particularly at night. Any mariner, I am satisfied, would agree that they would be a great assistance to shipping, and I hope the hon. minister will bring the matter to the attention of his officers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may state that wherever it is considered necessary to install these storm signals, it is done. Of course, I do not know the special case to which the hon. gentleman has referred, but whenever a storm signal is asked for and it is decided by the Lighthouse Board that it should be provided it is provided. If the hon. gentleman will let me know where any are required, I will attend to the matter with pleasure.

Further amount for wages and building new ice boats, $12,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is to provide for these ice boats and for the renewal of some of them between Cape Tormentine and Summerside.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You do not need these if you have a proper steamship service.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We shall not be able next winter to have a proper steamship service, and we have to provide for what is considered to be necessary.

Subsidies for wrecking plant for the maritime provinces and British Columbia, $20,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where do you propose to subsidize a plant in the maritime provinces?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. At the present time North Sydney is the point considered most favourable. In British Columbia, I think it is Vancouver. The matter will be decided later on, because tenders will be asked.

To provide for the maintenance of vessels employed in patrolling the waters in the northern portion of Canada, also for establishing and maintaining police and customs posts on the mainland or islands, as may be deemed necesary from time to time, $65,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is the ordinary amount to provide for the crew of the 'Arctic' who are to remain in Hudson Bay, and to provide for the relief boat which will sail by the 20th of this month to carry to that expedition coal and provisions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the annual cost of this? And how many posts are provided for?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think that is mentioned in the report of Major Moodie, published in the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries; but I will ascertain the facts and give the information to the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is for the purpose of maintaining jurisdiction?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

To provide for the construction of a patrol boat for the Northwest Mounted Police in the Hudson bay, $40,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. After the Arctic expedition shall have been finished, the 'Arctic' will be brought back. It is the intention of the department, jointly with the Mounted Police Department, to maintain a patrol boat on Hudson bay, and this is to provide for its construction. This boat will be constructed by Canadian labour, and it is expected that she will be sent out next season.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will she do?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. She will be used by the police for their work on Hudson bay and James bay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there anything practical to be done?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The police will look after the policing of that vast section of country. They will see that the customs duties are paid, that peace is maintained and that the laws of Canada are respected.

To provide for the organization of a naval militia and expenses in using the cruiser 'Canada' as a training ship, $10,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How is the mutiny developing?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The mutiny is out of sight. We have replaced the men who left the service on the 'Canada.' The boat is being used in assisting an effort to establish transatlantic postal service in a shorter time than at present.

Some resolutions reported.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We may proceed with the Bills that are on the order paper. We will then take up supply. The bulk of the estimates remaining are those of the Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 1 o'clock a.m., Tuesday.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 191) respecting the Joliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Railway Company.—Mr. Piché.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 197) to amend the Adulteration Act.—Mr. Bergeron.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I beg to lay on the table a further instalment of the papers in connection with the scrip inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. minister if that fills the whole request ?

Mr. OLIVER. That fills the whole request as far as we understand the direct request. Of course, these requests touch a large number of other files, which, if the hon. gentleman insists, we will have to produce, but it will mean some 200 or 300 individual files, which, as far as we can judge, are not necessary to the answering of his question. We believe we have answered his question fully with these papers which are now in his hands.

Mr. FOSTER. I will try to go over these as soon as possible, and if there is anything missing I will let you know.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on proposed motion of Sir Frederick Borden for the second reading of Bill (No. 170) to amend the Militia Act.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Mr. Speaker, we have had two discussions on this Bill, and at the last one it was understood that it would go over until the explanations were made upon the militia estimates. I hope that these explanations were so satisfactory that the Bill may now take its second reading without discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. The mass of information that was placed before the House has made it impossible for me, with the other work I had on hand, to give it the careful attention that I would otherwise like to have done.

There are certain things which I notice with reference to this which seem to me to be at least worth very careful consideration.

The first thing that strikes me is the immense disproportion between the officers or staff and what you might call the working part of the force, whether it be the active militia or the permanent corps. In 1904 the total estimates for headquarters' and district staff pay amounted to $81,249, while now it is estimated at $125,000, being an increase of $43,751 or an increase of about 50 per cent. As to the working force which this tariff is chiefly to guide and command we find that the annual drill provided for is $700,000 in 1904-5 and $635,000 in 1905-6, showing a decrease of $65,000. I think the minister said that probably a supplementary vote would have to be added for drill purposes for the year 1905-6 which would make the total $50,000 more than it was in 1904-5. Well, officers are good ; they are indispensable, but officers alone can neither fight the battle nor gain the victory. It is the men who are under them who have to do the fighting and either win the victory or stand the defeat. I am not too sure of my ground, on account of my lack of knowledge of militia matters, but it would seem to me that there has been an inordinate increase in the head while the body has been left to get nearly as slim as before. The minister says : that is true to that extent, but we are going to increase the establishment of the active militia up to 100,000 ; we are going to have 55,000 or 45,000 drilled almost at once; we are going to gradually increase that until we have an active militia effective of 100,000 and when that takes place we will need all these officers and all this staff to provide the directing and the drilling machinery. The criticism I make is much in the line of that made by my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). I think the head has been pushed forward a little too quickly and a little too extravagantly, and that the body has been left to follow along a little too slowly. If I read anything out of the Boer war and the Japanese-Russian war, taken in connection with our own position in Canada, it seems to me the lessons we read are something like these. Canada has no business aiming at in the future and laying lines at the present time with any idea of organizing an offensive force; the furthest distance the men in authority in Canada have the right to go is to appeal to the people and to prepare the machinery and to take measures which will put Canada in a good defensive position. I do not imagine that there is any jingoism latent or displayed in Canada which would ever think of Canada undertaking offensive operations. What we want to do is to organize for the defence of Canada on her own soil. The lesson that has been taught in the recent wars is that the defence of the country is comparatively much more easy now than it was supposed to be in past times, and that if you have a really formidable body of men who are somewhat used to discipline and understand the use of arms, it is a very enormous undertaking for a people of 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 to enter a country of one-tenth or one-fifth of that population and wage a successful war of subjugation. That reinforces the idea I started out with, that all that we should attempt to do in Canada is to put our forces into a fairly and reasonably secure defensive position. There is another thing taught by this last war, and that is that if you have an equal body of soldiers on each side contending for mastery, that army which has the least efficient and defective big gun service will be wiped out. As a layman it seems to me that before you can get where the small arm will have any marked effect, you have got to overcome the power of the long range gun. That was proven in the battles between the Japanese and the Russians. Every great conflict was largely fought as between the heavy artillery of the two armies, and it was when the heavy artillery had done what it was supposed was its perfect work, that the small arm came into play. I am led to ask myself this question: where does Canada stand in both these respects? A scheme on paper does not amount to very much except as pleasant to look on. What we want is an effective service. Suppose that to-day a call to arms were sounded in Canada, where would we be in the matter of effectiveness; how many men are there actually able to rally to the colours, obey commands and shoot straight if they were called to active service at this particular moment. If you raise 30,000 men and put them into the field, where in the name of Heaven would you get a supporting force of big artillery to afford a shelter under which these men would do their ultimate effective work. Is it not on these two branches of our force that our money ought to be chiefly expended and that our efforts ought to be chiefly directed? So far as we in Canada are concerned if ever we are attacked by an enemy it will be on the land side. So long as Britain retains her power and so long as we and Britain retain the relations we now have—and that will be as long as we live and as long as many generations after us live, I fondly believe—so long as that is the condition of things Canada has little or nothing to dread on the side of the sea. Granted that your British fleet is at its base under the present arrangement, such is the state of intelligence and so widespread is information gathered and so quickly sent, that it would be impossible for any power on earth to send a fleet to operate against Canada before the British fleet could be at our ports to give us effective assistance. That power that could most easily do it would be the United States of America, and from all seeming circumstances now the United States is the last power with which we would be embroiled in anything of that kind.

Even in the case of the United States it would be impossible for things to reach such a pass that she could send a fleet and land an army on our shores before a British fleet, with knowledge of the fact and with swift sailing powers, would be here to give its proper assistance; and apart from the United States no other nation in the world could do it. Russia is practically eliminated from the Pacific ocean at the present time, and it will be many a long year, maybe a century, before a Russian fleet will be a menace to any power on the Pacific ocean. The Japanese fleet, the United States fleet and the British fleet will be the controlling naval forces there. At the present time there are not any seeming dangers from either Japan or the United States. Britain is in absolute alliance with the one and has a friendly alliance with the other, that of amity and perfect good feeling. Eliminating that, then, it does not seem to me that it is wise for Canada to spend much of her money or time in looking for a fleet down to the range of common sense—what can we do with a fleet? If there is a menace from a fleet like that of Japan or that of the United States—and they are the only two who could menace us—it is absolutely impossible for Canada to put up a fleet which could cope with either. The better way, it seems to me, is to maintain the present relations between Great Britain and Canada with reference to the fleet. If we think we are able to do it, and feel enough pride to do it, we ought to co-operate closely with Great Britain in the matter of naval defence, putting that branch of the work on Great Britain, and making our contribution to the expenditure if it is necessary, in connection with Great Britain, as we can afford to do, in order to sustain our proportion of it so far as we possibly can. I come back, then, to this, that it is on the land side that we must be prepared to defend ourselves; that we can only hope to defend ourselves in Canada by means of a large militia, and that every effort should be bent towards having a large and active militia force, not less than 100,000 at the very least, and gradually building up a reserve behind that. I suppose reserve means men who have passed through drill and service, and are laid off the active service and fall into the reserve line. That will gradually widen and strengthen itself as the years go by, and as the less active men fall out of the active service and go into the ranks of the reserve. That you cannot force; it will be fed from the active current of the militia. But what we ought to strive to do is to get at least 100,000 good rifles in the active militia—well drilled men; not men who have necessarily passed much time in barracks. I do not think modern or future warfare will take that much into account. I believe that under the new conditions the useful men will be those who have resources and adaptability in themselves, who are not unused to the word of command, who have some knowledge of grouping and discipline, and who know how to handle and take care of guns. That to my mind should be the prime effort, and every dollar that we spend on useless furbelows, on too expensive staff management, with too high salaries, and every dollar that we spend on expensive armouries, is so much taken away from the strength of the force. Armouries will never fight for us. They are good in their way; they provide a home and an incentive to the men; but, after all, if you are to choose between armouries and men for the purposes of defence, until you get the proper line of defence, you had better dispense with some of the armouries, and put so much more money on the men. When you get 100,000 good men in Canada on an active service footing, then, if you have the money, you can spend a little more on armouries, on making the men more comfortable, on increasing the recruiting interest. I know that it is a good argument to say that if you have these things, you encourage men to become militiamen. So you do; but I want to keep the proper proportion between the two. I wish to state—and the statement coming from me will not cause much dismay, because I am not an authority, I am not a Lord Roberts—that my belief is that Canada to-day, if the crisis came, would be found to be mightily poorly prepared to face it. How much ammunition have you behind your force of 30,000 odd to engage in a year's conflict with an enemy? How many rounds per day have you behind the 30,000 or 40,000 men, and what have you back of that to replenish your stores? What great guns have you to protect and cover our militia force? It is there where we ought to put our money and not in other things. That is not a very well considered criticism, but it is my criticism, and it is all included in this one single sentence: make sure of the essentials first, until every Canadian can feel that he has at least a militia force of 100,000 men behind him who are ready and able and efficient to undertake the defence of Canada; that he has behind that force a covering power of guns which will enable it to do its work without being slaughtered at long range by an enemy superior to us in long range guns and in the methods of handling them. Let us be sure of that first, and after that we can go on with the other parts of our service in a more expensive way. Now, I would have taken, and eagerly taken, the offers of the British government to take hold of Esquimalt and Halifax, and keep those two ports in an efficient condition, as the British government and naval authorities know how to do, and are able to do, without one thought of the expense or the expert power and ability that are necessary, replacing the worn-out or the superseded article with the new invention which in power and range and accuracy overpowers it and renders it useless in a conflict. That they could have done and would have done, and we would have been at less cost and expense than we shall be put to under the present arrangement. These ports are naval bases, if they are anything. They are no good to us in the way of defence unless they can be defended against an incoming enemy, and the only defence against an incoming enemy from any sea line would be an efficient fleet. They are the bases for the fleet, and if danger on the Pacific or the Atlantic threatened those who read the signs in Great Britain could place in either of these seaports a fleet of vessels which would find their active and sympathetic bases ready and open for them; and thus we would be protected in our two great frontier ports. $1,000,000 would have done that for us. $2,000,000 will not in the near future do it for us under our own management; and we will not do it so efficiently. More than that, I confess to the sentimental objection that it is with sorrow that I see the last British tar and the last British soldier go away from the shores of Canada.

I do not want them in the interior parts of our country where our police and our militia will do the work as well and better and more sympathetically, but I do not want to think that we have any spirit in Canada, be it of bravado, foolish bravado or a mock independence, which would lead us to a policy which would say: Let Great Britain go; let her flag cease to float over this country; tell it to the nations everywhere that we have not left in Canada from this time forward a single link of defence co-operation with the old British empire to which we belong. Tell it and your prestige sinks at once; tell it and the menace heightens and grows from that time forward for the nations will think: Ah, then, Canada and Great Britain are not as they used to be; we have an unprotected country to deal with now. It was a tower of defence for us that those outside knew that if one single Canadian interest were touched the heart of the British empire would throb to its centre sympathetically to defend that interest. That was something for us, and it was something for us to feel that we had the hand and power right here by us to clasp our hand in the defence of the country and in the general strengthening of the country against insult and menace from abroad.

On those two counts I criticise the policy of the government. I think they were wrong in believing that they would be becoming less independent if they agreed to a co-operative agreement with Great Britain. That would have been done under their own proffer, no proposition was made to the Canadian government by which a British war minister could take out of Canada one soldier unless the Canadian government proffered assistance or the man volunteered for himself. That is not a slaughter of independence; that is no argument that we would not keep our self-respect and it would be a good thing for Britain to feel that in her righteous wars—if they should ever come and they sometimes will—she would have the backing and interest of her colonies behind her, and would have distinctive cohorts of those colonies fighting in her ranks under the flag for the common benefit. If that is a benefit to the empire at large, it is equally a benefit to us here in Canada to feel that whilst we give of our smallness to the extent of our ability in Britain's righteous wars, at our own will, voluntarily and only voluntarily, we will have in return for that the feeling that Britain and Britain's colonies stand side by side with Canada in any just and righteous quarrel for offence or defence. Therefore, I think it would not have been a matter of insuperable difficulty to arrange for Canadian militiamen, being to a certain extent so drilled and so formed and so arranged by the rules and regulations here, that if that occasion ever arose as it did in 1899, there would be a body of 10,000 or 15,000 or 20,000 men, if Canada thought the quarrel just and if the Canadian soldiers desired to go, who would go to help Britain do what? Make herself strong for Canada's own defence, for it is absolutely true that the defence of the colonies is in proportion to the strength and power of the British empire as a whole, and when a part of it is menaced in any quarter of the world it weakens the defence of Canada and every other colony of the British empire. Now, 'them's my sentiments,' and I have given them in a rough way. This is my criticism and I still counsel the Minister of Militia to pare down in so far as the expense of the headpiece is concerned, not that we do not need it and need it efficient, but let us be very sure that we have not more of it and that it is not more expensive than we now require. Build up the body which actually does the fighting. You may have the highest paid officials possible; you may have the most splendid officials you can get, but that does not make the military spirit and fervour amongst our people. We have got to cultivate the militiaman himself, that is the body in which you have to evoke enthusiasm, and that you have to interest in the defence of your country. It is not altogether the best way to do this to make too expensive a headpiece for the military system of this country. I am sincerely sorry that we did not take the offer of the British government to keep up these two ports of Esquimalt and Halifax and I shall be extremely sorry if we do not put the best of and the strongest of our efforts on the line of the active militia and of the gun service necessary to make them effective.

One word more. I hope that permanent force will be kept down just as small as it possibly can be. We cannot keep a large standing army. If you keep 2,000 and if this is all that is necessary for your instruction, what great good is another thousand of expensive men who are kept within barracks all the year going to be? For fighting, for battle, they would amount to very little, but they would cost a great deal, and what you would spend on a couple of thousand permanent force, not absolutely necessary for teaching purposes, would go a long way towards filling up the ranks, the shadowy ranks at present, of that 100,000 active militia which everybody admits we ought to have.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax.) I am encouraged to offer one or two observations this afternoon, because yesterday afternoon I had the pleasure of hearing from my friend from East Grey certain observations which he said were not technical nor derived from any military knowledge, but simply from the observations of a man who had been accustomed to exert common sense. Of course those who have spoken on highly military topics dealing with all the technicalities belonging to that profession occupy a higher region than that any which we can hope to penetrate. But when it comes to common sense perhaps individuals conversant with the ordinary affairs of life may be able to offer some observations which will assist us in the formation of an opinion as to the practical means for the defence of the country in which we are all interested. I for one come from one of the places which have been mentioned, and I have had some opportunity of observing both the British army and the British fleet, and I have also heard a great deal about them in former times from those fully conversant with the operations of both army and navy. With regard to the observations of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) he is the exponent of a new system of tactics. He has said a great deal about the expensiveness of the head, that it is too far in advance of the body, &c. Of course my friend is alive and he has a great advantage over others who have preceded him and who are dead. But if I remember there is one who was considered quite an adept in war and something also of an expert in tactics, that was Emperor Napoleon. He said: Good God, my victories were all made in my head. I had carried at the end of my arm my head and I gained my victories whilst the others were going about; all my attacks were formed in my own mind and executed mechanically by others whom I had intrusted with the duty of carrying out my instructions. My hon. friend said that safety consisted in defence.

Well, the authority I have quoted, said that safety always consisted in being the attacking party—be the first to begin the battle. Now, referring to modern history, which is within our ken, I would ask my hon. friend from North Toronto on what part of the Boers' land they conducted their defence. I would ask him in what part of the Japanese territory the defence of the Japs is conducted. Why, these people knew what modern skill and science said to the practitioners of the art of war that safety lies in carrying the attack as far away as possible from the home position. What do we see in the history of America? America was wrested from the power of Great Britain by the French fleet under the Count De Grasse; and the control of America was wrested from France by Rodney in the West Indies, when he fought the French fleet off St. Eustatia, thus enabling him to break the French fleet and establish Britain's control of the ocean. These operations were conducted at the utmost distance from the home line.

Well, I take it that the present action on the part of the government is not voluntary. I believe it is due to the action of the British government in withdrawing both the troops and the fleet from Halifax. The fleet is withdrawn because it is considered that the home fleets are not adequate to the control of the situation in Europe. So, they are carrying out the plans of some of the modern statesmen in England. I am sorry to say that England to-day is under the guidance of fourth-class statesmen. They would concentrate Britain's power to cover the Mediterranean and to meet any menace on the part of Germany. They carry out a policy that will enable the fleet to protect the British Islands and British trade. They are prepared to move the fleets from Halifax and the West Indies and concentrate them in a strategic position to cover the home line. What would become of us in the event of war? Suppose we gave our million to build new ships—for it is confessed that about half the British navy is obsolete, rotten and worthless, and about half their guns no good, so that it will require a vast expenditure of money to bring the navy to a state of efficiency and give proportionate control with the fleets of Europe—suppose we give our million or two million, or whatever it may be, and war came on. The ships would be withdrawn, and we should be left to improvise a navy, as well as an army, and take such means as are necessary to defend our own country. If we had a guarantee that the British government would defend us—if we knew that was part of their policy to defend the colonies; or if we had some insight into what their military and naval program for the future is, then my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and even I, might be able to form an intelligent opinion as to how we could assist that policy. But without that knowledge we are completely in the dark. Canada would be left, as the provinces were in old times, to defend ourselves as best we could. That is what took place in what was then Canada. And the same took place on the maritime shores of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I remember hearing, when young, the details of the noble actions fought by the privateersmen of Nova Scotia who took their lives in their hands, fitted out their own vessels, fought both the Americans and French, and protected our shores, when an important portion of the British fleet was withdrawn to the coast of the United States the West Indies and elsewhere. And so it may be again. Great Britain may not be able to give us adequate military and naval forces; and we are wise looking to the future to commence what may be the nucleus of a permanent force. I know quite well from history and otherwise, what a native force of riflemen can do. For instance, there were the 1,500 Kentucky riflemen, who in New Orleans combatted the best regiments of Great Britain, veterans of the Peninsula, commanded by Pakenham, a lieutenant of Wellington himself. These men kept back the 42nd, the 28th, the 95th and other veteran Peninsular regiments that were thought to be invincible. And what they did such men can do again. The most formidable force known is a body of military men in ambush lying prostrate and in irregular order. If I were Minister of Militia—which I will never be—I would begin by putting the troops under my command through evolutions of the sort necessary in actual warfare. I would not have them go about the cities in scarlet uniforms and flashy toggery, marching up and down, forming fours and so on. I would send them out on expeditions such as they would require to go upon in defending the country. I would give them practice in the sort of guerilla warfare that would make them most formidable against a regular regimental force.

Now, on the subject of great guns—and I talk of that because while my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is a small armsman, he is a great gun also—I would ask that hon. gentleman what resemblance there is between Canada and the Boers' land. I want to ask him if we have any of these mountains that exist in that country. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is here and he can describe the topography of South Africa. And what resemblance is there between Canada and Manchuria. Where have we the mountains like those from which, in that country, the great guns were played. Now a military man like my hon. friend from North Toronto would go into the field and apply tactics totally different from those that seem to be followed by all other authorities in modern war. Well, I think he would be as much at sea as others who have unsuccessfully attempted to defend countries in different parts of the world. For my part, I would rather take one who has had experience in war than a man, who, however well versed he may be in the literature of military affairs, however, he may have studied the details of battles and sieges, whatever he may have learned, from books, of ammunition and transport, however skilful he may be in casting accounts and making tabulated statements of expenditure so as to show the exact cost for every man—I would rather have a fighting sergeant from one of the regiments, than my hon. friend from North Toronto with all his knowledge and experience.

Mr. FOSTER. If I may be permitted a word I would just say that I should sincerely deplore it, from a patriotic standpoint, if by any means this speech of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) should become known on the other side of the line; for they would certainly send a commission to yank him over there and take command of their forces.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I do not know that my speech would do more damage than that of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster).

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). I regret that I was not here yesterday to hear the words that fell from the lips of the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden). But I suppose I have had a partial repetition of them to-day by the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. W. Roche). Now, this Bill is to bring before us a proposition to increase the standing army of Canada to 5,000—that I understand is the proposition in a nutshell.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To increase the permanent force.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In so far as the increase is rendered necessary by the acquisition of Halifax and Esquimalt, I may say that I endorse it. I have formerly stated that I would much prefer to see the Canadians constituting these garrisons sent to Gibraltar or Portsmouth or some other part of the empire, and that the British regulars might still have remained in control of these centres. However, it is not necessary to enter into a discussion of that aspect of the case, I have presented my views on that subject on a former occasion. I am more and more a believer in a full partnership union of Great Britain and her colonies, and until we become full partners in a political, in a commercial and in a military organization of the British empire some arrangement, possibly the same arrangement, must be continued in force, and our assistance to imperial defence will be more or less auxiliary rather than co-operative.

Now, I have always opposed, as the House knows, any large standing permanent force in the country. The permanent force occupies three positions. It is here as an educational institution, which is undoubtedly its primary object, or supposed to be. Now let us take the educational establishments in the city of Toronto. There are universities and high schools in that city that train upwards of 6,000 students. In those educational institutions the professorial staff and assistants of every description, do not number anything like as many as do the officers, instructors and men of the permanent military institutions in the city of Toronto; and the cost of the maintenance of the educational institutions of Toronto for training upwards of 6,000 young men, is nothing in comparison with the cost of training these militia officers and men in the country. Then in addition to being schools of instruction, the permanent force is also used as a police force. Well, Sir, I am on record in this House for many years as against the use of the militia of this country as a police force. I maintain when any municipality has been organized, the government should insist upon its preserving law and order within its own boundaries, and that the militia should not be called upon in any sense except in case of actual civil war, or a condition verging upon it, when the municipality absolutely loses control; then only should the militia be called out. I object furthermore as a taxpayer in my own locality where the people are all law-abiding, I object seriously to having a permanent force in this country which can be shipped around from point to point to do police duty. That is not what the men were enlisted for, that is not what they were intended for. When these municipalities have a little local riot in their midst, they call out the volunteers and pay them 50 or 75 cents each per day, whereas if they had to engage constables they would have to pay them $2 or $2.50 a day. Take a young man out of a dry goods store, for instance, and send him away to do military duty, and you only give him 75 cents a day, or possibly less; whereas if the municipality had to engage that same man as a special constable, they would have to pay him $1.50 or $2 for being used in that way. Therefore, I say, I am opposed to our permanent corps being used as a police force.

Then there is another aspect in which we should regard the permanent corps for defensive purposes, that is as a sort of nucleus of a centre whence we can get instructors in a sudden emergency. There is a good deal to be said on that aspect of the case. I do not know but that I would be willing to sanction a certain amount of increase in the permanent force provided we could not attain a similar object in a better way. But there must be no spasmodic system about the militia. There should be a military system in this country so organized that it would go on from year to year and generation to generation, automatically so to speak, and that we would not be called upon in case of emergency, to get a little rush on for a year or two and then fall back again into the old routine. How is it that our force is now kept up to its present position, to a large extent? Why, it is by the self-sacrifice of the officers, officers who have paid their own money for training, who give their time in the annual camp, give their time in the recruiting of men, and in drilling them. Go down to the drill shed any evening, and you will find the finest young fellows in charge of these corps, giving their time every night for their own advantage and for the instruction of the boys throughout the city who belong to the various corps. These young men, I say, are sacrificing their time and their means, and they are undoubtedly one great factor in preserving this force up to its efficient state.

I also believe that there should be a permanent corps in the Northwest, a centre of mounted men, because our Northwest is peculiarly fitted for the raising of horses and for the raising of the feed for horses. I will take this opportunity of again urging upon the government the propriety of endeavouring to induce the imperial authorities to establish horse breeding establishments, not under the auspices of the Minister of Agriculture of Canada, nor under any other Minister of Canada, but under some independent board, perhaps a joint board composed of imperial and colonial officers under the management of some independent body. I would like to see large areas set apart for the raising of horses especially for mounted work. Undoubtedly if Canada is ever called upon to engage in a contest with our cousins across the border, that war will be waged to a large extent by the assistance of mounted troops. I would urge as an additional reason the fact that Britain, in the South African war, called on Canada for large numbers of horses. She may call on Canada again for large numbers of horses, should she become involved in another war. I would therefore instantly urge upon the government the advisability of setting apart enormous ranches in the Northwest where horses could be raised, and where farmers and horse breeders might have the advantage of a superior stock for the improvement of their horses. I shall not here enter into a detailed statement of my idea of what the military system of the country should be, it is on record in the 'Hansard' for many a year. In the first place, I would have all the boys in the country after the age of 12 years taught to drill. The fact that a boy is taught to turn to the right, and turn to the left, and turn about, when he is a mere lad, gives him a facility that he will never lose when he grows older. When the Prime Minister shouldered his musket, not the Saskatchewan musket, but the Fenian Raid musket, long years ago, he became so proficient that he would now shoulder it automatically. In the same way, if you train a boy when he is a lad he never forgets it. Train him to handle a lacrosse stick as a lad, and he remembers it until he is 60 years of age. Train him to catch a ball as a boy, and he will never forget it. Therefore I would give all boys in connection with the universities and the senior clubs and in all schools after twelve years of age a preliminary training along these lines. I would like to see the rural school boys trained.

In this connection let me point out, as I pointed out before, that there should be men from every company of the rural militia, or the volunteer militia, that there should be at least one sergeant in a country district in each township, or in a range of townships, set apart whose duty it should be to visit the public schools at certain intervals during the year and give the boys lessons in drill. There will be no harm in giving the girls drill also. Give them two or three lessons in sighting and bringing the rifle to the shoulder and in firing a few rounds at a target from a miniature rifle and in a very few years under a system of that kind, so far as training the boys in ordinary squad and company drill and so far as training them to sight rifles are concerned, the preliminary education of an army of riflemen would be accomplished at a minimum of cost to the nation. The hon. Minister of Militia is gradually progressing along these lines and I commend him for what he is doing in this direction. Then, having drilled them in this way, having proper instructors for drilling them, not from the permanent corps, but selected from amongst the sergeants in the militia companies, let the boys, as they get older, be formed into companies and let the companies be formed into regiments, batteries or squadrons as the case may be in every county in the Dominion. For the training of officers I would send these young men to the military schools as cadets, not as soldiers under military discipline, although they would necessarily be under a certain amount of military discipline while attending these schools. The result would be that a captain would be a cadet, a private would be a cadet, a sergeant would be a cadet and each would stand on the same footing; it would be an educational institution rather than a military institution. I would give to these boys the same freedom as that which is accorded to their brothers who attend universities and colleges giving literary, medical and legal courses, the same opportunity for self-control and for the development of manhood in their training. Let them go in as cadets and train them to handle a squad, battalion or squadron. When you have a boy of fifteen years of age who is capable of standing in front of a regiment—and there are many boys who have been quite capable of handling a company at the age of fifteen—he is a bigger man than if he stood in the ranks as a private. I would have every man in the ranks stand out in front of his squad and drilling them. Not only to be commanded but to command, should be the principle upon which we should go. Every man from the private up should be trained to command as well as to be commanded. Then he will not be a mere machine and he will be fitted to take his place in action. These young men should receive a certain amount of training before they go into these military schools. At the present time two or three weeks are lost in training boys to form and turn when they should have learned these movements in the public schools. If you adopt the system which I propose you will be able to turn out 100 young men where you are now only able to turn out ten fairly well trained to take command. A system of encouraging these young men to go on from step to step should be adopted, but the great point I make now is that you should begin their military education while they are young and admit them to the military schools as cadets. A boy of fifteen years of age can leave his home and attend the military school for three months whereas a boy of twenty years of age cannot do it so easily. Young men should not be forced to give up three months of their time to attend military schools when they have reached a period of their lives when the necessary time cannot so well be lost as it can five years earlier in their career.

Another incentive in addition to that one is that what he learns young always comes back to the boy again. I would urge upon the hon. minister the advisability of reducing the age for allowing officers in. When I was honoured with the command of the regiment with which I was so long connected I encouraged every one of my officers to enlist boys of fifteen and sixteen years of age so long as they were able to fill the jackets, and I can say without fear of contradiction that no other regiment in the Dominion of Canada has ever stood so well as the old 45th. Let the boys begin their military training at an early age. One-fifth of the boys that climbed the heights of Alma were under twenty years of age. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) told how Napoleon had won his battles. Bonaparte won his fights not because of his training at all, but he won his battles because he led the young free men of the army of France against the old fossilized systems of Europe which had begun in the dark age of tyranny and superstition which had crushed Europe under their heel. The same system has kept Russia down. Bonaparte did not go around parading with ikons but he went around with boys who were capable of taking the field. That is why Bonaparte won his battles and not because he went around with an army organized on a system long out of date. I maintain that there should be twelve days of drill. I think twelve days is ample. Train the boy in forming and turning, give him the position with the rifle, let him practice it so that he can shoot off each shoulder, let the boy feel that he has confidence in handling the rifle and when the boy is twenty years of age give him twelve days in camp and with all due deference to those who have no use for the militia on active service let me say that I would have no hesitation in taking lads of that kind into an engagement under any conditions. Reference has been made to artillery and rifle shooting. Like Conan Doyle I have faith in the lad who carries the gun. Artillery has a splendid effect morally. It demoralizes the opposing force but it does not disable it. I have looked into the records as carefully as I could of the results of the war between Japan and Russia and they prove that in the engagements which took place and in which there was heavy gun fire three out of four of the men engaged were bowled out by rifle bullets. After all the weapon on which we must rely is the rifle and while artillery has a demoralizing effect, yet given 20,000 or 40,000 or 50,000 men along the Niagara frontier who are used to the rifle and who can pick men off at a thousand yards, it will take twenty times that number to oppose them. I believe in the use of artillery, I believe in the use of cavalry but as a defensive or as an attacking weapon I think the rifle is the weapon above all others upon which we must rely. I do not know that it is necessary to take up the time of the House any longer. The 5,000 men the hon. minister says, are necessary owing to the taking over of Esquimalt and the Strathcona Horse in the Northwest Territories. I would just merely, in passing, again urge upon the hon. minister the importance of the educational side of the military schools. I think that all these permanent schools should be less military and more educational, more like a university or college and that above all those attending them should not be employed as a police force. I would again urge upon the hon. minister to use his influence to do away with that system. The question has been largely discussed and I am glad to say that in the militia service we are doing away with a lot of those little petty tyrannies and restrictions which used to be enforced. In the old days our camps would be surrounded by men with fixed bayonets waiting to arrest some poor unfortunate fellow who had been out a little late with his girl or spending the evening with the boys in town. They would run him in and the result was that there was always trouble. But once the system of garrisoning the camp with sentries all around to arrest men who happen to be out a little late was done away with, the records show that men left to their own freedom are always prompt in returning and that they come in sober and steady. They are always in early. In the old days we know that one of the practices was for the men to deliberately stay out in order to try to elude the guards, to raise ructions in the camp to turn everything upside down.

I would again urge on the minister, and with special reference to the permanent corps, that wherever it is possible these restrictions should be relaxed. Let the men be as free as the Lord intended they should be free ; let them not be subject to petty restrictions from sergeant, corporal or officer, who may want to exhibit a little brief authority. Let these restrictions be removed ; let the men, although soldiers, still be free men, and I am satisfied that there will be no cause for complaint on the ground of discipline. Discipline never was and never will be tyranny ; discipline is education ; discipline is polish ; discipline is refinement—restriction is the reverse of all that. Although there are one or two points in this measure that might call for criticism, I am not criticising adversely, nor will I enter into any lengthy discussion at this late period of the session. I urge upon the minister the advisability of cutting down to the lowest possible point the permanent force and to spend the money in developing our youth and in training our rural lads, who go out once a year for ten days to do service for the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Although I have forfeited my right to speak, I hope the House will permit me to say a very few words. I think all will agree that the remarks which have fallen from the gentlemen who have just addressed the House are entitled to consideration. I am exceedingly glad that the opportunity has arisen for the House to hear the views of the hon. members for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and for Halifax (Mr. W. Roche). I do not disagree very materially with the remarks made by my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes), and, as he was not here yesterday to hear it, he will be glad to know that a special effort is to be made in the near future to arrange some common basis by which all the schools in the Dominion can be some how or other brought within the range of the influence of military training and rifle shooting.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said that he disagrees with our policy in taking over Halifax and Esquimalt, and, as I understand him, he disagrees from a sentimental point of view chiefly, because he states that he looks upon it as severing another link in the chain which binds us to the mother country. That has always been the story. From the earliest days, when this country began to agitate for responsible government, that objection has been offered. It was the objection offered last year when we amended the militia law, so that if we choose we could appoint a Canadian as commander in chief of the Canadian forces and be no longer bound to appoint an imperial officer. I do not think there is anything whatever in that objection. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asked : Are we going to let Great Britain go ? Certainly not. But, Mr. Speaker, we are going to let the tax-payers of the British Isles get a little relief from paying the bills which Canadians ought properly to pay. That is all we are going to do. Is that going to disturb the sentimental or the real loyalty or patriotism between this country and the motherland ? It certainly is not. Did the hon. gentleman reflect upon what the proposal of Mr. Brodrick was ? Mr. Brodrick's proposal was that one in four—which would be 10,000 men in the Dominion of Canada—should be specially trained and equipped, and that it should be understood that these men should be set aside for oversea or foreign service, subject, of course, to the will of the parliament of this country. I repeat what I said yesterday, that I objected on the ground that I thought it was a pity to create any special force in this country, and that it would lead to jealousies between that force and the ordinary active militia. I am to-day still strongly of that opinion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says that things could have been so arranged on those lines that there would have been a force ready in Canada in the event of a repetition of the occurrences in South Africa ; in the event of Canada wishing at any time in the future to assist the mother country in a foreign war. Will not that end be even better served by increasing the efficiency of the militia generally ? If such a crisis should arise, it would be necessary that there should be a volunteer force whether we train that special 10,000 for foreign service or not, because, under our law, we could not compel any of our militia force to serve abroad. Now we are perfecting, or trying to do so, our militia ; and it will be much easier, I apprehend, in any time of future stress or trouble, to obtain a well drilled and efficient volunteer force out of the militia for such service than it was four or five years ago, when we had an opportunity of doing so, and did it so cheerfully. Therefore, I think that the objection of my hon. friend to our plan is not a real one. I think I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to say that if we were able to do so, he would be in favour of our giving a sum of money to assist in the maintenance of the British fleet. Well, Sir, it seems to me that it is infinitely better and infinitely more in accordance with constitutional methods that we should give that assistance by maintaining the naval bases at Halifax and Esquimalt, which have no other reason for their maintenence than the fact that they are naval bases. And naval bases for what ? For the British navy. It seems to me that the difficulties of my hon. friend are answered at once. We are actually doing the thing he would wish us to do, and we are doing it upon Canadian soil, and we are doing it in such a way as to meet with the approval of all self-respecting, self-reliant Canadians ; of all men who are unwilling that the British tax-payer, over-burdened now with taxes, should expend money for maintaining fortresses as naval bases on Canadian territory. I do not find any fault with what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) said with regard to the militia. On the whole, his criticism was exiedingly fair, and we are agreed as to the object to be attained. He agrees with me that it is desirable we should have in Canada a force of at least 100,000 well trained, well equipped and efficient men. But he did criticise the disproportion, as he said, between the head and the body; between the staff and the main body of the force. I am perhaps not more than he is an expert in these matters, but I have had more to do with studying the question, and I can assure him that to-day the various staffs which make up the general staff of the Canadian militia are far below that of any similar organization—even taking the 50,000 force we now have in Canada—when you consider the large number of teaching depots—7 or 8—which we have, and which are the sources from which the education of the active militia is to be obtained.

The cost of the whole staff of the country, I understand, is about $80,000 out of the many millions which we are spending upon the militia in training, in maintaining depots and in the purchase of matériel. I think this is the smallest possible amount that would be sufficient for such a purpose. A head which is not well balanced, which is not complete, which, so to speak, does not possess all the bumps, is not very much good. You must have every branch, in embryo it may be, upon which you can build an army fit for the field; and you must have these officers constantly engaged in their duties, and gaining a constant experience which will enable them in time of trouble to take the field with advantage. The hon. gentleman has said that this should not be an offensive force. Certainly not. The very name of the force, militia and defence, implies what it is—a force, first, for the maintenance of the civil power in the country, and, secondly, for the purpose of repelling invasion.

Another question asked is, what have we got in the nature of heavy artillery? As I explained yesterday, it is not proper that details of that kind should be given; but I mentioned that guns have been ordered of the very greatest power and precision, and some of them have been delivered—guns which would be absolutely sufficient for the purposes required of them. Orders have been placed ahead for at least three years. I may say that there has been a delay in the delivery of the Ross rifles; but they are now being delivered, and I hope that by the time we meet again a very large number will have been delivered. We are to-day manufacturing 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 rounds of ammunition annually where a few years ago we manufactured 1,000,000 rounds. By working double time we are able in our government factory to manufacture 18,000,000 rounds of small arm ammunition in the year. Then, we have other reserves, and our reserves are increasing.

Mr. FOSTER. How many rounds do you use in the year?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000. I wish to say before sitting down that I have been greatly encouraged by the sympathetic manner in which this question of expenditure upon the militia and the work we have been trying to do has been met by gentlemen on both sides of the House. It augurs well, I think, for the success of the militia that a discussion so important as this, in which, if hon. gentlemen were anxious to look for opportunity of criticism, fair or unfair, they could no doubt easily find it——

Mr. BERGERON. Like the old times, when my hon. friend was in opposition.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was not one of the sinners, though. I say it augurs well, and I hope I shall be able to appreciate the treatment which has been meted out to me in this respect by trying to make myself worthy in the future of a continuation of the same treatment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. With the hon. minister's permission, I would like to mention a little matter which I forgot. He will remember that a year or two ago the idea of encouraging regiments other than city regiments to send representatives to the Dominion Rifle Association meetings was talked over; and it was suggested that each regiment should select in its own way two of its crack shots, whose expenses to the meetings would be paid by the Dominion government. Has the minister taken any steps in that direction?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not; but since the hon. gentleman has mentioned it, I will see that the matter is brought to the notice of the Army Council.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 52) to amend the Franchise Act, 1898.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is the Bill as to which I think I had some correspondence with the Minister of Justice early in the session?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it answers the purpose which both of us had in view.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, exactly.

Mr. BERGERON. How will this affect Manitoba?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I apprehend that it will not prevent a subpoena being issued to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to produce the original list.

Section agreed to, Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—BALLOT BOX FRAUDS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which to my mind requires some explanation from the government. I had hoped to bring this matter to the attention of the House at an earlier stage of its sittings, but have not found an opportunity of doing so without interfering to some extent with the regular proceedings of the House, but the matter is of such importance that I feel warranted, even at this late stage, in calling attention to it. I have heard since I have been in this House many charges of very serious irregularities, of fraudulent or I might say criminal conduct on the part of those supporting the government in an endeavour to maintain themselves in power in this parliament. Corrupt as these charges have been in the past I believe I am safe in saying that during the last federal election held on November 3rd last an attempt was made which was partially successful to commit a greater fraud, a greater crime politically, than had heretofore been attempted by those on the other side of the House, or in fact by anybody, I refer to what is commonly known as the bogus ballot box fraud.

Prior to November 3rd, when the last federal elections were held, and just after the premier had passed by the force of those behind him his famous Transcontinental Railway Bill, and the not less iniquitous gerrymander Bill neither of which I am safe in saying found very much favour in the province of Ontario, very great activity was displayed on the part of the premier of the province of Ontario in his visits to the capital at Ottawa. It was not an infrequent thing in the latter days of last session and prior to the elections to see the then premier of Ontario visiting Ottawa, but prior to that time it had been a rather rare occurrence. As the result of those frequent visits and his association with different members of the government a rumour became quite rife in the country that some bargain had been entered into or some understanding arrived at between the premier of the Dominion and the late premier of Ontario by which it was stated that in the coming federal elections on the 3rd of November, the goods of the province of Ontario were to be delivered by the Hon. G. W. Ross to the premier of the Dominion. That report was published in newspapers throughout the Dominion, it was repeated and while of course I am unable to say and would not undertake to say whether such an agreement was actually entered into or not, I am safe in saying that although I followed the reports in the public press in that matter very carefully, I have never yet seen a public denial from any authentic source that such a bargain did exist. After the declaration of policy and of principles so frequently made in this country by the leaders of the Liberal party, and if I am not mistaken by the right hon. the Prime Minister himself, that provincial politics should be kept entirely distinct from federal politics, that there should be no intermingling of one with the other, it is hard to believe that such an arrangement or attempt as that to which I have referred and which was given expression to in the public press would be contemplated, much less entered into between the right hon. gentleman and the late premier of Ontario. But, Sir, the evidence which has come to hand since that rumour became current is such to my mind as to remove any doubt that might exist as to an arrangement of that kind having been made. I do not know whether it was knowledge of the disfavour with which the Transcontinental Railway Bill was received in Ontario, or the feeling of resentment against the unfairness and injustice dealt out to them by his famous gerrymander Bill that caused the right hon. gentleman to make an appeal to the premier of Ontario for help in the last federal election. It is impossible for me to say that, in fact it occurs to me now it may have been the force of habit on the part of the right hon. gentleman, because, if I am not incorrectly informed, this is not the first occasion on which the right hon. gentleman has turned his attention to the provincial premiers for help. It may be as in the case to which I refer the price that has been paid altogether too high for the shop worn goods that he has received, but nevertheless the facts remain that on this occasion there appeared to be a very strong alliance between these two premiers. I hesitate in believing that such an agreement existed because of this further fact. It is acknowledged, I believe, that the right hon. gentleman who leads the government is one of the keenest observers of political events perhaps in this country to-day, and I do not think he would feel overflattered if I observed, the keenest observer in the Liberal party.

That being the case surely the right hon. gentleman could not have failed to know the fact that at the time when this arrangement is said to have been entered into, the ex-premier of the province of Ontario was practically discredited by the people of his own province. Evidence was given of that —sufficient, ample evidence—on January 25, last. I cannot understand how, in the face of that, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could expect the ex-premier of the province of Ontario to carry out such an arrangement without resorting to some such means as those to which I am referring. The Prime Minister, (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could hardly have failed to see the position in which the ex-premier of Ontario stood. No doubt he recognized the fact that the ex-premier had run many political races in that province and had been successful. But I am bound to say that in nearly all the races that the 'old war horse' as he was called, had run, he had finished the race with some blemish which very materially lessened his racing ability—such blemishes as the blemish of West Elgin, the blemish of Waterloo, the blemish of Manitoulin Island and the 'Minnie M.' and others altogether too numerous to mention. But, while the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) may have noticed these blemishes upon the 'old war horse,' no doubt he also noticed some of the perfections which he and the party he led in Ontario had attained. It is amply proven by the records of the courts that the Liberal party in the province of Ontario, in the matter of switching ballots in the matter of stealing ballots, in the matter of burning ballots, had arrived at a state of perfection. They had even gone further and had arrived at a state of perfection in the manufacture of the ballot-box itself. So while the right hon. prime minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) may have noticed the imperfections on the one hand, he may have noticed these perfections on the other. And it is to the perfection attained in the manufacture and use of bogus ballot-boxes that I desire to adress my remarks this afternoon.

Now, the matters to which I have referred, to the extent that they have occurred in the province of Ontario and in regard to local parliament, more particularly concern the people of that province. But that to which I would call attention today, the actual use of the bogus ballot-box by the candidates supporting this government in the last federal election, is one which affects this parliament and this Dominion as a whole. In this matter, I speak not from surmise, not from imagination but from the sworn testimony which I hold in my hand, given in the courts of the province in the investigation of this matter. What I say, I say by the book. The evidence which I have here is not the only evidence of the perpetration of this crime, this fraud upon the electors, during the last campaign. I have here another piece of evidence—the bogus ballot-box itself. And, if the sworn testimony is not sufficient to remove all doubt, I think an inspection of this article will be enough to take the wrinkles out of the skin of the most hidebound Grit alive.

Just prior to the last federal general elections—about three days before polling day—came to my attention that a conspiracy had been formed between certain Liberal candidates at the then approaching election to steal, by means of this bogus ballot-box, certain of the ridings of the province of Ontario. When that information came to me, naturally I felt more or less alarmed, for I was told that the riding I had the honour to represent, the riding of West Hastings was one of those selected to be plundered by means of this machine. I am not at all surprised that West Hastings was one of those selected for plunder. It would be perfectly useless to depend upon the operation of such a machine as this in a riding that was known to be Liberal. It could only work to its fullest advantage in such a riding as West Hastings or the riding of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Avery) which had always—or at least for many years—consistently returned a Liberal-Conservative to this House. Such ridings would be particularly suitable for the use of a machine of this kind. Upon being informed that this fraud would be attempted, I put myself in communication with the different persons and employed every means I could to ascertain the facts; with the result, that two days before the election I succeeded in having divulged to another gentleman and myself the whole scheme. The information was given to me, I may say, by an official of this government. Perhaps I should explain exactly what I mean when I speak of this gentleman as an 'official.' The government, of course, have the right to provide the machinery by which elections should be carried on. The man who divulged this conspiracy was one of the deputy returning officers of that election—part of this election machinery. Now, I think, I may, in fairness, give the House the statement of that gentleman showing the scheme as divulged to me, inasmuch, as it is all repeated and sworn to in the evidence I have given.

The facts brought out in the evidence and by this official of this government are these: The Liberal candidate in West Hastings, one Byron O. Lott, and the Liberal candidate in Frontenac, one W. J. Shibley, with others had entered into a conspiracy by which certain ridings—for it was not confined to these two—were to be stolen in the way I have intimated. The whole scheme had been divulged to this deputy returning officer by Byron O. Lott, himself. The names had been given to him of certain deputy returning officers throughout the ridings who were to manipulate these bogus ballot-boxes. Our informant further stated, and I know it to be a fact, that his brother—for the deputy returning officer who divulged this scheme was the brother of Byron O. Lott himself—Byron O. Lott had, on three occasions before this, been the Liberal candidate for the local legislature for the province of Ontario, for North Hastings, each time meeting with defeat. It was a well known fact in that part of the country that during the interval between these elections he was almost constantly at the seat of government in the city of Toronto; he could be seen almost any day of the week in consultation with ministers there, and hobnobbing with them around the house of assembly. His attentions were not confined to ministers, but he was bound to keep in good company, and on many occasions he might be seen with those two notorious Liberals, Vance and Sullivan, and no doubt received from them a part of the education which enabled him to perfect this scheme. At any rate, it is sworn to by his brother that he received such information as led him to perfect this box, he received that information in the office of Vance, in Toronto. The ballot box that was devised there differed a little from this one. It was worked with a catch on top of the box, by simply pressing it down the spring was released, and the false compartment of the box worked either one way or the other. That did not work well, it made too much noise, and it was too suspicious an article altogether. So they concluded that they would improve upon that, and the result of their improvements was the box which I produce here to-day.

That box was produced in the following manner: Mr. Lott and Mr. Shibley visited Watertown, in the State of New York, and there entered into a bargain with a tinsmith to manufacture a certain ballot box according to a design which they would furnish. They furnished a design, but the mechanic was unable to perfect the machine owing to his not having seen a genuine Canadian ballot box, and he desired to see that before he could perfect the machine. Accordingly these two worthies visited the deputy sheriff in the city of Kingston, who was the returning officer in the late election, and procured from him one of the genuine ballot boxes which they took to Watertown and put into the hands of this mechanic. This ballot box was exhibited in court, and it had drawn upon one side of it the form which the inner compartment of the bogus box was to take, in other words, a model of the bogus ballot box. When that was placed in the hands of this mechanic, after some labour, he produced this bogus box. While the box was being made—and I may mention this as it came out in the evidence—while this box was being perfected several visits were made by these candidates to Watertown for the purpose of seeing how the tinsmith was progressing with his work. On one occasion when the manufacturer thought that he had it just about right, and they made an inspection of it on one Sunday afternoon, Mr. Lott worked the box and put a few ballots through it, and turned to the manufacturer—that is sworn to—and said. 'I don't think that will quite do yet; the false compartment you have in this box for hiding the genuine ballots is not quite large enough to overcome the majority I will have voting against me in West Hastings, so you will have to make it a little bit larger.' And the sworn evidence is that the compartment was enlarged accordingly.

At that stage of the proceedings another gentleman appeared upon the scene, and he, together with Byron Lott's brother, was sent to Watertown to complete the negotiations. Some twenty boxes had been made for the county of Hastings and Frontenac, and these men were sent over for the purpose of paying the money and to provide means for the transport of these boxes to Canada. When they had paid for them, the boxes were shipped from Watertown to Ogdensburg, and there the Inland Revenue inspector of this government took the boxes in hand, smuggled them across the river, and sent them by express to their various addresses in the province of Ontario. These boxes landed at their destination in the county of Hastings and Frontenac, and were delivered as Liberal campaign literature. Just at this point when the ballot boxes had been received and placed in the hands of this deputy returning officer, the matter leaked out. He divulged the whole scheme and who were in it, and concluded that the best thing he could do in order to free himself from any further connection with it was to deliver up the remaining ballot boxes. Six of them had been delivered to him, and four others had been sent further north in the riding to another very estimable Liberal who occupies the position of police magistrate in North Hastings, Mr. Samuel Harryet, an officer of the local government. Mr. Lott, the deputy returning officer, concluded that the best thing for him to do would be to divest himself of the care of these boxes, and he accordingly delivered them up to messengers who were sent up there. They were conveyed by these messengers to Belleville and placed in the hands of the police.

Now when that discovery was made, I took every available means of advising the public generally, and particularly the Conservative candidates of the province of Ontario, of this conspiracy, and of this attempt to steal their ridings. A telegram was sent, signed by myself and two others, to every riding in the province of Ontario giving as good a description as we could by telegram, warning our friends against their use, and describing how the bogus box could be distinguished from the genuine box. I do not know how effective the efforts taken by myself and others were in preventing the use of these boxes in the province of Ontario. I know that our efforts were not wholly successful, because it has been proven in court and convictions have followed that the boxes were in actual use. As an investigation has only been held in the two ridings, it is impossible for me to say how far our efforts were successful, or to say in how many ridings in Ontario these fraudulent boxes were used in order to return members of parliament to support this government.

The matter having been divulged in that way, it was at once taken up by the press and nearly every newspaper, I think, in Canada had something to say about the bogus ballot boxes, some going so far as to say that it was merely a Tory trick, and attributing the whole thing to myself. But others took a more serious view, and claimed that the perpetrators of this crime should not go unpunished. The Liberal papers all over the province of Ontario, when the matter first came out, insisted that these men must be punished, that justice must be done though the heavens fell, and they could not use too strong language to encourage the prosecution of the parties who had used these boxes. But at that time, although that publicity was given to it, although the names of the witnesses, the sources of information and the evidence were wholly given in the public press, not a single move was made on the part of this government to capture the criminal or to prosecute them. But, fortunately one of the newspapers—I say fortunately, because the criminals would not have been punished otherwise,—was bold enough to attribute the invention of the whole scheme of this bogus ballot box to myself and I very promptly took proceedings in the criminal courts for libel against the publisher. I may here say that I think the 'Globe' newspaper is entitled to a little more than passing attention from me in regard to its remarks at that stage of the case. The 'Globe' newspaper, after denouncing me, after crying out for the punishment of whomever might be guilty and after the investigation had been started by me for criminal libel and the evidence was coming out day after day, showing conclusively beyond any question that the whole scheme originated with the Liberal party, that it had been worked out by the Liberal party and that the Conservative party had nothing to do with it except to discover the crime, began to crawfish and take back its statements which it had been making previous to that time.

An hon. MEMBER. That is characteristic of the 'Globe.'

Mr. PORTER. Yes, it is characteristic of the 'Globe.' It very fequently says things one day and takes them back the next. But, after the evidence had gone so far as to show beyond question who the guilty parties were the 'Globe' changed its tone and began to offer apologies. It was just a few misguided Liberals who had gone into this, not the better element of the rank and file of the Liberal party, and all such excuses as this, no doubt with the hope of toning down the strong feeling of resentment that existed in the minds of the members of the Liberal Conservative party because of the insinuations that had been made against them. But, just at that time the 'Globe,' in a fit of virtue such as attacks the 'Globe' occasionally, thought that it ought to devote a little more attention to me, and surprising to say it devoted nearly half a column of its valuable space to advising me as to the way in which I should prosecute my personal action for criminal libel against the newspaper, and it went so far as to say that it would be an abuse of the process for me to select the quorum before which I should try my case. They said that I should not have taken a case like this before such a magistrate as Mr. A. F. Wood, a gentleman who had occupied a seat in the legislature of the province of Ontario for many years, the oldest magistrate in the county of Hastings and a gentleman whose character and reputation were beyond reproach. Justice would not be done, so declared the 'Globe,' and it said that I should have taken my case before the police magistrate. Let me say to the 'Globe,' which is probably aware of the fact, that the very tribunal, the police magistrate to whom it advised me to take my case in order to have this crime investigated, is to-day under a $20,000 bond to answer an indictment found by the grand jury of the county of Hastings against him for complicity in this very crime. If that had been done neither I nor the people would have been able to have had this crime investigated, and yet this is the advice that the 'Globe' gave and if it has not become aware of this, before now I hope it will take occasion now to apologize for its threats on that occasion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Did the 'Globe' not suggest how Shibley could escape too?

Mr. PORTER. I believe it did. The scheme, as further divulged to me and as was shown in the further investigation of this matter, was that by the simple manipulation of the handle of this ballot box just as many Liberal votes could be given to the Liberal candidate as the deputy returning officer operating the box saw fit to give, and just as many Conservative votes could be switched or consigned to oblivion and would not be seen unless the ballot box itself were cut open for that purpose. It may be said and it has been said by people that this box could not be worked without the aid of a dishonest deputy returning officer, and that it could not be used without having the ballots such as those which are supplied by the government for the purpose of holding these elections. As to the first objection, let me answer it in this way: It cannot be used without the aid of a dishonest deputy returning officer and the sworn evidence shows that there were dishonest deputy returning officers in the Liberal party who were willing to use it and who did operate it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) be good enough to name the returning officer or deputy returning officer who did use that ballot box?

Mr. PORTER. Yes, his name is Hawkey.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Any one else?

Mr. PORTER. The evidence does not show any one else who is sworn to have used it. There are the other deputy returning officers whose names I have given. Lott says that the box was given to him, that he was instructed how to use it and that he entered into the conspiracy to use it. In regard to the supply of the ballots, the evidence shows that at polling subdivision No. 1, in the township of Clarendon, Frontenac county, when the deputy returning officers came to count the ballots he had 25 more ballots than he had been charged with, and it is a strange coincidence that the 25 extra ballots should be furnished at the very poll where this bogus ballot box was used. There is another little piece of evidence in connection with the supply of ballots, and I would like to call attention to it. If reference is had to the revised 'Hansard,' page 911, some very pertinent questions will be found to have been put by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and which were answered by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier.) The questions asked by the hon. member for East Grey are these:

1. What is the custom of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery in issuing the blank ballots used in the Dominion elections? How many ballots are contained on each sheet of paper?

2. Is the paper on which the ballots are printed issued direct from the Printing Bureau to the several returning officers throughout Canada, or does it go through the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?

3. Are the sheets of ballot paper carefully counted before being sent out, and is a record kept of the number of sheets sent to each returning officer? If so, under whose supervision was this done?

4. After the issue of the sheets of ballot paper to the several returning officers for the last Dominion elections, was any complaint made to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, or to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, by any returning officer, or by his subordinates, or by any printing establishment, that the requisite number of sheets of paper for such constituency or constituencies had not been furnished, or that the actual number of sheets was less than that which the returning officer was credited with having received?

5. If so, in what constituency or constituencies did this occur, and what action was taken on such complaint?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. The main principles are: (a) To deal with no one but the returning officers. (b) To have no broken packages. The ballots are issued in sheets of four and two according to the sample which I lay on the table.

2. The ballots are issued direct from the Printing Bureau to the returning officers throughout Canada without the intervention of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

3. The sheets are carefully counted before being packed. They are sent out in closed packages of three sizes only, viz.: Packages of 2,000 in fours and of 1,000 and 500 in twos. The packages are not opened after being counted. The smaller packages are used for uneven or broken thousands. The counting is done in the bindery, after cutting, by skilled hands and under the supervision of the foreman of the bindery. The packages are then finally closed and posted up.

4. After the issue of the ballots, applications were received by the King's Printer from returning officers where the supply was insufficient. In all such cases the additional ballots required by the returning officers were sent to him, but always in whole packages. No ballots whatever were sent to any printing office, but they were sent out in sealed bags by registered post to the returning officers. No communications from others than returning officers were entertained.

5. Two complaints were made that the count of the ballot paper was wrong. One was from South Lanark, the other was from Ottawa. In the case of South Lanark no additional supply was asked for. It was a question of count. In the case of Ottawa an additional quantity of 1,000 ballots was delivered to the returning officer.

Then I find by a further reference at page 1342 of revised 'Hansard,' this question by the hon. member for East Grey:

Mr. SPROULE asked:

1. Adverting to the answer given by the First Minister on Monday, February 13th, regarding the method of issuing blank ballot papers to returning officers, what was the date of the complaint received from the returning officer in South Lanark?

2. What was the date of the complaint received from the returning officer in the city of Ottawa?

3. When were the additional thousand ballots sent to him?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. The letter making the complaint in relation to South Lanark was dated October 29, 1904.

2. The complaint of shortage made at Ottawa was by telephone one or two days before October 31.

3. The request for additional ballots was made on October 31, and the additional 1,000 was sent on that date.

In that connection I want to refer to the evidence; I shall not read it, but I will be pleased to hand it to any one who desires to do so. Philip Lott swore in the investigation before the courts, that his brother Byron Lott had endeavoured to procure ballots for use in the election and to have them printed at the printing office of the Bancroft 'Times' at Bancroft, in his own county; that he had tried to have them printed elsewhere but that they could not print the ballots in such a way that detection would not be easy, and that on the 27th day of October he left his home telling his brother he was going to Ottawa to procure the ballots here. It will be noticed that the answer of the right hon. the Prime Minister is that a request was made for ballots two or three days before the 31st of October, which would be along about the 28th of October. If you will take the trouble to turn to the register of the Russell House, Ottawa, you will find upon that register the name of 'B. O. Lott, Stirling,' registered on the very 28th day of October. There may be nothing in it, but it is a very singular coincidence that this man Lott who could not procure the ballots in his own county stated that he was coming to Ottawa for the purpose of procuring these ballots, and that on the very day he arrived here the request is made, and that 1,000 extra ballots are furnished to the returning officer here and Byron Lott goes on his way. That is practically the history of the bogus ballot box and of its attempted use in the county of Hastings and its actual use in poll No. 1, Clarendon—Miller in the county of Frontenac. I am happy to be able to state that the efforts made to steal these elections were entirely unsuccessful. It has been said—reiterating to a large extent what the 'Globe' said—that the persons who were engaged in this nefarious transaction were not of the better element of the Liberal party, that they were a few of the lower scum so to speak. Now, just for fear that that opinion should be still entertained by any one let me make a short reference to some of the individuals who according to their own sworn testimony were implicated in this affair, and then I will ask the country to judge whether they were of the better element of the Liberal party or not. Take the first one, Byron O. Lott himself ; three times Liberal candidate in the local legislature and finally the Liberal candidate for the Dominion government. W. J. Shibley, Liberal candidate in the interests of this government in the county of Frontenac. Joseph Hawkey, deputy returning officer poll No. 1, Clarendon—Miller, who was a part of the machinery supplied by this government to carry on the elections. Philip Lott another deputy returning officer at Springbrook poll in the county of Hastings, John Bremner, editor and proprietor of the Bancroft 'Times,' a liberal newspaper in North Hastings. Samuel Harryette, the police magistrate of North Hastings appointed by the Ontario government and also Liberal organizer for that portion of the province. R. E. Harpell, school teacher, general agent of one of the leading insurance companies of the province. Frank Reiley, professor Regiopolis College, Kingston. Edward Ruttan, the financial agent and confidential friend of W. J. Shibley, the Liberal candidate. Thomas Whalen, the collector of inland revenue at Prescott for this government. I might go through the long list ; there are some seventy different witnesses called in this case, and nearly every one who was able to testify as to any part in this conspiracy was an adherent of the Liberal party. But just here there is one other person that I do think I ought to mention. I mention that gentleman's name more particularly on account of the rumour that has been current for some time that there was a possibility, yea there was a probability that that gentleman might, with the late premier of Ontario, be taken into this government. I refer to the Hon. George P. Graham, of Brockville. At the time of this election and at the time of this conspiracy he was a minister of the Ontario legislature. I am bound to say in all fairness to this gentleman that when he was put in the witness box and sworn, he denied any knowledge or any connection with this matter. I am bound to give him the benefit of his denial. But there are one or two circumstances in connection with it that I think he should have taken occasion to explain and which he has never yet explained. They are these. He was a minister in the Liberal Ontario government ; he was as he swore the organizer for that portion of the province of Ontario in the federal elections on the 3rd of November last, where this conspiracy and this fraud was perpetrated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Graham was not a minister at that time.

Mr. PORTER. I stand corrected ; it was later that he became a minister. He was a member of the Ontario legislature and he was the organizer for that portion of the province where that fraud was perpetrated. It is a strange thing that he should be occupying the position with the government that he did. It is strange that he should be filling that position, unless the explanation be that there was such a bargain or arrangement between the premier of the province of Ontario and the Prime Minister of Canada, and he was called in to help to perform the bargain. I cannot account for it in any other way. But there is one thing which I think he should explain, and that is this. The evidence discloses that on the last visit made to Watertown, when these boxes were paid for, and when the arrangements with regard to shipping and smuggling them across the river were completed, when Shibley and Riley were on their way home, instead of going directly across to Kingston in the usual way, they went down to Ogdensburg, crossed the river to Prescott, took the train going west, and dropped off at Brockville. Mr. Graham swore that they were strangers to him. They called on him, first the one and then the other, on Sunday night, got him out of bed, and held a conversation with him occupying between three-quarters of an hour and an hour, and he swore that the only material part of the conversation which he could repeat was that he advised them to carry on the election honestly and fairly. Now, it is a little singular that he did not swear that either of these gentlemen suggested that they were going to carry it on in a dishonest manner or resort to the perpetration of such a crime as has been shown to have been committed; but, without any suggestion of that kind at all, this hon. gentleman volunteers to advise these men to carry on the election in the part of the country they were running, in an honest and straightforward way. I think these two circumstances at least call for some explanation from Mr. Graham, and I hope he will take the first opportunity that is offered to make an explanation. Now, I will take the liberty of showing the House, as far as I can from the description that was given in the court, how one of these fraudulent ballot boxes is operated. The instruction given to the deputy returning officer, after opening his poll, is to display the box, as I am doing, to show that there is nothing in it. Then he proceeds to lock his box. Now, it is locked, and he is ready for business. Now, I will hand three ballots to an hon. member (Mr. Blain) and I will ask him to hold them up as if he were going to vote. He marks the three ballots for Borden. They are put into the box. I hand three ballots to another hon. member (Mr. Schaffner). He marks them for Laurier and they are put into the box. The result of the poll should be three for Borden and three for Laurier. Now, I open the box, and take out six ballots, which I find marked: five for Laurier and one for Borden. Let me show how that is done. I have a ballot which I will mark for Mr. Borden.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PORTER. The whole thing is operated by simply moving a handle so that the ballot goes into a secret compartment in the ballot box. The ballots which the hon. members marked and which were put into this box did not go into the ballot box at all, but into this secret compartment. The box was loaded with the other ballots before the hon. gentlemen started to vote, although it was displayed, and on inspection there appeared to be nothing in it. That is all I have to say in regard to that matter, except that I would like to know from the government what they propose to do in regard to this crime which has been committed—whether they will make any effort to prevent a repetition of this sort of thing, or will allow the law to remain as it is, so that similar ballot boxes may be fraudulently used. I think it is a matter for regret that we have not been able to reach those who were engaged in this crime.

One, Byron O. Lott, perhaps the principal factor in this enterprise has left his country no doubt for his country's good, and is now sojourning in California where the Canadian law will not reach. W. J. Shibley the other Liberal candidate is basking in the sunshine in Washington and is also out of reach. Hawkey, the returning officer, is in Chicago and cannot be reached, and I think the government is much to blame in this matter when the facts came out at so early a stage, in fact the day of the elections, for not taking prompt action to see that the perpetrators of this crime were punished. Through their dilatoriness these persons have been allowed to escape. Fortunately they have not all escaped and some are still under bail. I shall not mention their particular cases because that would not be fair as they have not yet been tried, but those to whom I have made reference have been tried with the exception of Mr. Harryett, and I think it is not improper for me to mention their cases here. I would like to know whether the government intends doing anything in this matter or not. Of course I recognize this fact that the government has laid down a principle which seems to control its actions in matters of this kind where dishonesty and fraud and crime are actually committed. That policy which has been followed by this government in some instances is one rather of reward for such things than condemnation. It has been a policy of approval rather than a policy of disapproval. I need scarcely mention the cases referred to here recently, the Thessalon postmaster, a clear case of theft, the case of Nixon in the Northwest, another clear case of theft, yet the man was appointed to another office with a greater salary. I need not refer to the case of Jackson, who was guilty probably of as great a crime as any one, and who was rewarded with the appointment of British agent of this government, nor need I mention others to which I could refer. I hope, in fact I believe, that after the disclosures that have been made the government will see that that sort of policy, that that principle is no longer recognized and that in contradistinction to that it will endeavour to encourage honesty in its officials, as well as in those holding positions of trust such as those I have referred to, as those appointed by the government as part of the machinery to carry on the elections in this country.

Mr. M. AVERY (Frontenac). I would like to say a word in regard to the question as I was mixed up in it by having the ballots stolen from me. I think that this government should take some action to punish these men. We have the record of Lott going to the people of this country repeatedly but the people refused to elect him. He comes back again to West Hastings and tries to get in there by means of the fraudulent boxes. The government should take some action and punish such men when they have the chance and the proof that they have now. This man Lott took an active part in the first election I ran, a by-election in Addington. He was down there handling money and he admitted afterwards that he had bought many a vote; at one house he had bought five votes and two of these voters when they came to the poll could not mark their ballots, and Lott who was one of the scrutineers at Mountain Grove saw that they cast their votes for me. He was using money and was there as a part of the politcal organization for the Liberal party. This man wanted to run again and to represent the people of this Dominion and he would have been elected if he could have worked these boxes with success. Mr. Shibley is a friend to the government here. They gave him a position before he ran to buy cattle for the government to send west. This government paid him well and he went through my riding with government money paying big prices for cattle and then he became my opponent. This is the kind of men I have had to run up against and I think the government should take some action and keep these men who are so anxious to get jobs from becoming candidates. Mr. Shibley was going around before the elections saying, as all Liberal candidates say, that he was going to run a fair election, but he was travelling all over the country arranging the ballot box frauds, and working schemes two or three years ahead so as to get elected by buying cattle with government money. The returning officers appointed by this government are I consider part of the machine, because I went to the returning officer before my election and asked him not to send out Hawkey to No. 1 poll, Clarendon, but to send some honest man who lived in this country as deputy returning officers. I also stated that he had other men, Carl Taylor and Connolly, who were leaving their homes and going to the back country to act as deputies when they had quite competent men in the locality to carry on the elections. But no, Sir, my advice was of no avail. The returning officer, Mr. Franklin said that Mr. Shibley was the man who selected these officers and that he must abide by his decision and he would not recall Hawkey but sent him out to this poll. 125 ballot papers were given him by the returning officer but when he got back after the close of the poll he said he had only received 100 ballots, and the returning officer changed the number accordingly. I had a man sent down there to look over these ballots and he found there were 101 ballots in the box; evidently Hawkey had in his possession a book of 25 extra ballots. If we have to run up against such men as this during every election campaign and the government let these offences go by without punishment, I think that the sooner the people turn out this government or any other government that permits men to commit such frauds the better. We have had case after case and instead of punishing these men the government apparently think they must reward them with good positions as in the case of Jackson and several similar offenders. I think to-day that if these men had not got off and left the country they would have had government positions, both Shibley and Lott. I think it is time for this government when talking about purity and putting down corruption to take some action themselves and show the people of this country that they mean what they say. I hope this matter will be looked into. This man Carl Taylor who was so active in my election is to-day carrying the mails for the government by stage and the returning officer probably will get some position too. I think the government is in duty bound to take up these cases as they have been so well exposed and state if they are going to punish these fellows and not give them positions under the government at the country's expense.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I regret very much that the member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) did not think it at all necessary to extend to me the courtesies which are usual in cases of this sort, that is to give some notice that he intended to bring this before the House. That is the sort of courtesy I have invariably received from gentlemen on the other side. It does not seem to me that this is a question as to what the government is going to do, it is to a larger extent a question of what the government has done. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) says that the government is to blame for not having taken prompt action to punish those connected with this fraud. Let me point out what occurred, I have no doubt that the facts are fresh in the hon. gentleman's memory; but, in his desire to give an exhibition of his skill in the manipulation of this ballot-box, he forgot to state the facts Let me draw his attention to the fact that on the morning of election day, he was approached in connection with this matter by Mr. Williams, the returning officer, and he was then asked what the facts were in connection with the alleged fraudulent ballot-boxes. And I will read from a letter written by that officer dated November 7th, in which he gives the result of his efforts with the hon. member to induce him to assist us in taking action in this matter:

> On the morning of election day Mr. Porter handed to the chief of police of this city a ballot box with a movable partition worked by a wire handle on the top of the ballot box, so that by turning it one way the ballot deposited through the hole in the cover would go into the main part of the box and by turning it the other way it would go into a small compartment between the hole in the cover and the end of the box nearest thereto.

I went and examined the box and saw that it was not any of the boxes issued by me, and shortly afterwards saw Mr. Porter on the street, who told me that five such boxes had been seized in the hands of a deputy returning officer whose name he declined to disclose to me.

That does not look as if the hon. gentleman was very anxious to proceed with the matter. The letter goes on :

I told him that I thought it was his duty then and there to declare from whom he had got the ballot box, so that proper proceedings might be taken if any sufficient evidence were forthcoming, and he informed me in reply that all things would be done in good time, but for the present he declined to give any information in regard to the place from which the ballot box had been seized or in whose possession it had been found.

And now he stands up in the House and denounces the government for not proceeding in the matter.

Mr. PORTER. If the minister will permit me. The statement as to the conversation between the returning officer and myself is quite correct. But half an hour or three-quarters of an hour later, after consultation with my friends and considering of the matter, I thought it would be best to give the facts, and I announced from the platform publicly the name of the gentleman who had given me the information.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the conversation as given here is correctly reported, as I understand ?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have another little bit of evidence that my hon. friend (Mr. Porter) will have occasion to explain. The hon. gentleman said that this occurred on the 4th of November. On the 7th of November, without any suggestion from the hon. member or any attempt on his part to draw the attention of the Department of Justice to it or to begin proceedings in prosecution of the people connected with this infamous fraud, the Department of Justice sent an officer of the Dominion police, Inspector Chamberlain, to Belleville. That officer attempted to find the hon. member (Mr. Porter), but he was absent. Not content with sending the inspector, I sent the Commissioner of the Dominion Police himself, who went to Belleville on the 10th of November. I also thought it necessary to instruct Mr. Shepley, K.C., of Toronto, to prosecute everybody engaged in the fraud. Both these gentlemen went to Belleville on the 11th, and there met the hon. member for West Hastings ; and here is a report from Colonel Sherwood, Commissioner of Police :

That evening, the 11th, I went to Belleville, and the following day met Mr. Shepley and with him saw Messrs. Porter and Corby, and from them heard some of the particulars. But Mr. Porter said there was more in possession of the solicitors who were looking after the matter for him, Messrs. Blackstock and DuVernet.

Again declining to give the information he had. So here again we do not appear to have had very much assistance from the hon. member for West Hastings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He referred them to his solicitors.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes ; but in a criminal matter of this kind, where speed may be a matter of the utmost importance, it is not usual for one to rest satisfied by referring the officers of the law to his solicitors in a distant city. These parties were in or near Belleville, and it was in Belleville that these proceedings must be initiated ; and they ought to have been proceeded with at once. I am dealing with the cnarge that the government were to blame for delay in this matter.

Mr. PORTER. Perhaps the minister will permit me to say a word in answer to that. He, perhaps, has overlooked the fact that my action for criminal libel was then pending, and it was in the hands of my solicitors. I think I took a perfectly proper way of dealing with the matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the important matter here was not the hon. gentleman's case of criminal libel ; the important matter was to find the guilty parties and put them in jail. The matter of criminal libel was only secondary. I must confess that I have always been at a loss to understand why he was so taken up with his criminal libel case and so little interested in finding the persons guilty of this fraud.

Let me show just what the government did in connection with this matter. I have already told of the instructions given to the Inspector of the Dominion Police, the Commissioner of Police, Colonel Sherwood, and Mr. Shepley, to prosecute this matter vigorously. The result was that warrants were issued for Lott, Shibley, Reilly, Thomas Woodland. Lott was the defeated candidate in West Hastings, Shibley the defeated candidate in Frontenac, Reilly, a school teacher and Woodland an excise officer of the Inland Revenue Department in Wiser's distillery. Lott was arrested on Monday morning and gave bail. Ruttan, one of Shibley's workers—he was the one who received the ballot box at Kingston—was also arrested. So was Hawkey, the deptuy returning officer at Clarendon and Miller. All these men, with the exception of Shibley, Lott and Hawkey, were proceeded against. So that every man connected with the transaction, so far as we know, has been arrested and committed for trial. These others escaped the country, notwithstanding that they were under bail—all but Shibley.

Mr. PORTER. Shibley was not arrested.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No ; he evaded arrest, and escaped from the country.

Mr. PORTER. And Hawkey also.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let me see. Lott was arrested and he gave bail. Shibley escaped, and I see that Hawkey also escaped. All the others were arrested. So in what respect did the government fail to do its duty ?

Mr. PORTER. That is the very point—Lott, Shibley and Hawkey, the deputy returning officer, the principals in the transaction, were allowed to escape. Several days elapsed and they were not arrested. Why not ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why did not the hon. gentleman assist the government on the morning of November 4th by giving the information when he was asked for it ? Why did he not give it on November 11th when he was asked for it ? Why did he not assist the government, instead of merely trying to make a case which he could discuss here in parliament? Now, as I have shown, every man connected with these frauds was either arrested or a warrant was issued for him and he was obliged to leave the country. And, so far as Lott is concerned, he was not allowed to escape, he jumped his bail. He went before the magistrate, who obliged him to give bail of $2,000 ; and he forfeited that bail and left the country. Is the government responsible for that ? In what way can the government be held responsible ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did Shibley and Hawkey leave the country ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot say ; he could not be found when the officers went to arrest him. The warrant for Shibley was issued, and immediately Inspector Chamberlain proceeded to Frontenac county for the purpose of finding him. But he could not be located—the warrant was not executed. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) says that the ballot boxes were used. I will refer, as the hon. gentleman does, to a closed book beside me and say : 'The evidence will be found here' ; but I think I can show by the statement of Colonel Sherwood that, in his opinion, not a single one of these ballot boxes was used in this election. I shall read now from his report, and I will put Colonel Sherwood's word against the statement made by the hon. gentleman :

> Of the twenty false ballot boxes brought into the country, fifteen have been recovered, and none of them were put in use, one is supposed still to be in Lake Loughborough, from which nine were recovered, and search is being made for the four which were sent to Bremner and alleged by him to have been delivered to Harryett.
> My own opinion is that none of the boxes were used, notwithstanding the positive assertion by two scrutineers at Ardoch that one was used by the deputy returning officer there, they saying it was quite different to the others issued by the returning officer, but inquiry goes to show that several different patterns were given out.

That man Hawkey, it appears, was a resident of the city of Chicago. Now the only complaint I would have to make in connection with this election is that this man Hawkey was employed as a deputy returning officer. It is unpardonable that this man, who was a stranger to this country, should have been employed in the performance of such an important duty. But with that single exception, there is not a word to be said against the conduct of the election, there is not a word brought out in the trial which goes to show that either the returning officer or any one of his deputies, with that single exception, was in any way connected with these ballot boxes. I further state that there is nothing in the evidence which goes to show that a single one of these ballot boxes were used. The information I have from the inspector is that every one of these ballot boxes had been accounted for, with one exception.

Mr. PORTER. The evidence shows that there were twelve of these boxes shipped into the county of Hastings.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) will read the evidence, we will be better able to appreciate it.

Mr. PORTER. The minister states that there was no evidence that the bogus ballot box was used. Here is the evidence of Mr. Thomas Tapping :

> Q. Where did you get that ballot box from ?—A. The court house, Kingston.
> Q. What division is that ?—A. Clarendon and Miller, No. 2.
> Q. Your division ?—A. Yes.
> Q. From whom ?—A. Mr. Grant, caretaker of the court house.
>
> Q. Was that ballot box used in your poll ?—A. It was not.
>
> Q. You have examined one of these trick boxes ?—A. Yes.
> Q. What do you say ?—A. I can't say it was the same box, but it was similar in every respect.

The box that was used was similar to the bogus ballot box in every respect, and that is corroborated by another witness.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). The accusation made against my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter) that he was indifferent to the prosecution of those engaged in this outrageous attempt to defraud, I am in a position to deny. I know that Mr. Porter was exceedingly anxious, and immediately on learning that the fraud was being perpetrated, he came to Toronto and consulted some of his friends. We found that the government were taking no action at the time. The suggestion was made that Mr. Duverney should be employed to conduct this case, and I was present at a meeting at which Mr. Duverney was engaged to see at once that these men were arrested and every one connected with the fraud punished. Mr. Duverney gave his opinion that the only way in which to proceed was by the way of a criminal action. Against the wishes of those who were rather incredulous of the result and afraid to take the risk, that course of Mr. Duverney was pursued. It was necessary to raise private funds for that purpose, and it was with private funds that most of the evidence in connection with this matter was procured. I say that in my judgment, had it not been for the private prosecution of these men, they would probably have been allowed to escape. But the proceedings came to a point where they were put into Mr. Shepley's hands on behalf of the government. I desire to say this to exonerate my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter) from the charge that he deliberately delayed proceedings.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As to the statement that on private funds alone the prosecution was entered, I may say that I paid accounts myself and I paid the witnesses.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a very few words in regard to the matter that is occupying the attention of the House. I think my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) has presented the case to the House in a very moderate and judicial manner. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice criticised the hon. member for West Hastings for not giving notice. I made some inquiry in regard to this and I find that it is due to a misunderstanding between my hon. friend from West Hastings and myself. He spoke to me on the subject and he understood me to answer that in a matter of this kind it was not necessary to give any notice. It is certainly not necessary under the rules of the House, but it is always desirable, and upon this misunderstanding between my hon. friend from West Hastings and myself must be placed the neglect to give notice in this instance. The Minister of Justice criticised the hon. member for West Hastings for not giving certain information when he was asked to give it on the 3rd of November and he treated in a very casual way the circumstances that at that time there was a proceeding in a case of criminal libel outstanding. Of course, that is one way to look at it, but in a proceeding of that kind great care must be taken and it seems to me that the hon. member for West Hastings took a very proper and fair course in giving the information which he did on a subsequent occasion and in afterwards referring counsel employed by this government to his own solicitors, upon whose advice he was acting in that case. However, these are mere details. The real question is, after all, that to which the hon. Minister of Justice addressed himself, and that is, whether or not the government in this case exercised a reasonable amount of diligence in dealing with what undoubtedly was a very grave conspiracy on the part of certain men to deprive the people of certain constituencies of this country of the right to return their representative to parliament. Now, it will not be denied that this matter was made public on the 2nd or 3rd of November. In some of the newspapers of the country there were references to it on the 2nd of November and the Toronto 'Globe' referred to it on the 3rd of November. Notwithstanding that it appears, as I understand the statement of my hon. friend from West Hastings, that no detective, no officer of the government, appeared on the scene or took any action until about the 18th of November.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, on the 7th of November.

Mr. R. W. BORDEN. Well, I may be mistaken in that regard. I understand from my hon. friend (Mr. Porter) that no officer appeared in the riding until the 18th of November.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On the 7th of November there was an officer looking for Mr. Porter in the riding—Inspector Chamberlain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good. At what time did any officer of the government first communicate with Mr. Porter?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On the 7th of November an officer left here for the purpose of being in Belleville. He arrived the same night and on the 8th he called on Mr. Porter in Belleville, but found him absent, and on the 9th of November Mr. Shepley appeared on the scene with his commission. On the 7th of November the officer was in Belleville and Mr. Porter was found to be in Toronto.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The unfortunate part of it is that two of the men mainly implicated have been allowed to escape and it does not appear that any warrants had been issued for their arrest until—I do not have the exact date.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. About the 11th or 12th of November. I have not my papers here at the moment but I think it was about then.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, the dates are of some importance.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have sent for my papers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood from the hon. member for West Hastings, in asking some questions during the progress of the debate, that no warrants were issued for these men until about the 16th or 18th. However, the Minister of Justice can give us the exact dates. The important point after all was that two of the men were allowed to escape, and another important point is the fact that the bail in this case was fixed at $2,000 while, as I am informed by my hon. friend the hon. member for West Hastings, bail in the case of the police magistrate Haryett was fixed at $20,000. One would have thought that Lott was the man who should have been bailed in a sum of something like $20,000 and that the bail of the police magistrate might possibly have been fixed at a somewhat smaller sum. It is of course very easy to criticise. There may be some reason which is not apparent to me which would explain this, but at all events it is obvious that the bail fixed in the case of Lott was perfectly inadequate and as a result he was enabled to leave the country and to escape prosecution or punishment in company with two other men who were not arrested at all. It does not seem to me that the result can be regarded as at all satisfactory. In so far as the details of the dates are concerned I have no personal knowledge. All I am dealing with at this moment is the result. There are two or three circumstances in connection with this matter that seem to call for some comment and one of these is the circumstance that ballots were delivered from the printing office in the city of Ottawa upon a mere telephone message. It must be remembered that no scheme of this kind can be worked successfully so as to defeat the will of the people unless a supply of apparently genuine ballots is at hand, and unless deputy returning officers are appointed who will be unscrupulous enough to lend themselves to such a conspiracy. It appears that upon the same day, as far as we can judge, on which Lott made a visit to Ottawa, after unsuccessfully attempting to procure these ballots in another way, 1,000 ballots were delivered upon a mere telephone message to some person or persons unknown who were presumably acting on behalf of the returning officer or his assistants in the city of Ottawa. I do not know how that may be. I would suppose that ballot papers demanded in excess of those originally supplied would be given out only upon a written requisition signed by a responsible person—that would be by the returning officer—and that an exact record of their delivery, the person to whom they were delivered and the reasons why they were delivered would be kept in every case. We do not seem to have that certificate and it seems a remarkable loose way of transacting business and one which lends itself to the perpetration of frauds of this kind, and to the successful carrying out of a conspiracy such as this. As to the extent to which this conspiracy was successfully carried out, let it be remembered that it is only a matter of conjecture. It is very probable that only a portion of this fraud has made itself apparent and that much more remains below the surface. There is one matter to which the Minister of Justice alluded in terms of somewhat severe comment, but he did not go far enough. It appears that a man named Hawkey, against whom a warrant was issued after he left the country, did not even reside in the riding for which he was appointed deputy returning officer. The returning officers have been declared by very eminent authority to be officers of this House and to be punishable as such. They should be respectable men and men above suspicion. I would not think it wise or right that a strong partisan should be appointed, or that the appointee should be a man who would lend himself to either one political party or the other in connection with any proceeding in an election. It appears that the returning officer for Frontenac saw fit to appoint his deputy returning officers upon the nomination of the Liberal organization of that riding. I submit to the Minister of Justice, I submit to the members of the government, I submit to gentlemen on that side of the House, that this was a most extraordinary and outrageous procedure for that returning officer to follow. He should have appointed the deputy returning officers, not because they are nominated by one political organization or the other, but because they are fair and honest and competent. That is the only reason which ought to actuate him in making such an appointment. Not only did this Mr. Forsythe, the returning officer for Frontenac appoint his deputy returning officers upon the nomination of the Liberal committee, but he insisted upon appointing one who was a non-resident in the riding and who was brought from the city of Chicago no doubt for the very purpose which was to be subserved by these bogus ballot boxes. The Minister of Justice has spoken of that as an outrage. It is not only an outrage so far as the appointment of Hawkey is concerned, but it seems to me that the Minister of Justice might have said that it is an outrage to appoint as returning officer any man who has no higher conception of his duties than Forsythe seems to have had. This man, Hawkey was brought from Chicago, brought for a criminal purpose beyond doubt, and brought for a purpose connected with these very bogus ballot boxes which were certainly used in one polling district at least. And when the Conservative candidate for the riding objected to the appointment of Hawkey because he came from outside the riding, the answer which he got from this man who should be an impartial servant of parliament was : that Hawkey must be appointed because forsooth he was the nominee of the Liberal committee. It does not seem to me that partisanship, that unfairness and what I might call connivance, could go further. I venture to think that the government of this country in appointing such a man as returning officer make themselves—without design it may be—a party to this conspiracy. Let them appoint Liberals if you like, but let them appoint men who are above suspicion. There are many Liberals in every riding in this country who are above suspicion, and who would be trusted by their Conservative opponents just as they would trust any Conservative in the land. Appoint such men and we have no criticism, but appoint a man like this Frontenac returning officer who has no higher conception of his duties than that he is to make himself the tool of the Liberal committee in the riding, and you lend yourselves—I do not care whether you are Liberals or Conservatives—you make yourself parties to just such a conspiracy as was partly carried out in these two ridings. Let every hon. gentleman upon the treasury benches bear in mind, that when the government of Canada consents to the appointment of violent partisans who are willing to put aside for political purposes those principles which undoubtedly they would adhere to in private dealings—unfortunately we know there are such—the government is lending itself to some extent to the perpetration of exactly the frauds which have been described by my hon. friend (Mr. Porter). I regret very much that the action of the government, however well intended it may have been, has resulted in the escape of the three men who above all others should have been placed upon trial. I refer to Lott the candidate, Shibley, another candidate, and Hawkey, the deputy returning officer brought from Chicago for a very obvious purpose. The Minister of Justice has given the dates in order to show the diligence which he believes the government exercised in the matter. After all the best comment upon it is the fact that notwithstanding all this supposed diligence the three criminals most deeply concerned in this outrage on the liberties and rights of a free people have been permitted to escape from Canada and are now enjoying themselves in the United States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have had an opportunity of looking at the report prepared by the Commissioner of Police, and I wish to be exact about the dates. On the 4th of November the interview took place between Mr. Porter and the returning officer; on the 7th of November the returning officer wrote* the letter which I quoted, to the Hon. Mr. Scott; on the same day inspector Chamberlain left for Belleville, arriving on the 8th; on the 11th of November Mr. Shepley and Mr. Sherwood went to Belleville for the purpose of taking proceedings and the warrants were not issued until the 19th of November. I was wrong and my hon. friend was right as to that. The reason assigned by Mr. Shepley was that he awaited the result of the criminal libel proceedings so that he might get the information necessary to enable him to issue a warrant.

Mr. PORTER. I want to make a reference to one or two statements made by the Minister of Justice in answer to my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) stated that the expenses of this investigation in which all the information was brought out and upon which the police force employed by the government acted, were paid for by private individuals and not by the government as should have been the case. The answer given by the Minister of Justice was that the government had paid all the counsel and the witnesses. In regard to that statement I desire to take issue most emphatically with the minister. A large number of the witnesses in that investigation were paid for by myself, and Mr. Duvernet the counsel who was employed in that case was paid by private individuals and not by the Crown.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At whose instigation were the warrants signed?

Mr. PORTER. At my instigation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Was the hon. gentleman the complainant?

Mr. PORTER. I speak of the criminal libel case, the only one in which I was interested.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was speaking of the warrants in connection with the matters complained of.

Mr. PORTER. What I wish to point out is, that in regard to these warrants there was no investigation; the parties were simply brought before the court and bail taken. There were no witnesses, and there was no counsel except Mr. Shepley, who is employed generally on behalf of the government. The witnesses in the first investigation, where the facts were brought out, were paid for by myself, and counsel was paid by private individuals.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With the libel suit we had not anything to do, and I never contended that we had.

Mr. PORTER. When the trial took place before the high court of justice at Belleville, the witness and the counsel engaged at the trial were not paid for by this government, but were paid for by the Ontario government under the leadership of Mr. Whitney; so that that statement of the minister is not borne out by the facts. I desire to refer to just one other matter which has been mentioned by the Minister of Justice. If I understood his statement correctly, he said that all the ballot boxes that had been imported for these fraudulent purposes had been accounted for except one, and, pointing to the one which

* Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

I have here, he said that one was now accounted for. I did not hear the statement, but I am told that is what he said. I wish to say that the ballot box which I exhibited here to-day was one of the six given up by the returning officer and produced in the trial of this case. It is not the lost ballot box at all.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland, Ont.). I think the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) is entitled to more credit in this matter than the Minister of Justice is disposed to give him. East Northumberland adjoins West Hastings, and I am satisfied that if I had not got information on this subject from the hon. member for West Hastings, the election in East Northumberland would have been stolen from us. I got a telephone message on the subject and met at Trenton, and I had to send hired men all over the riding to prevent this iniquitous scheme being perpetrated there. I am satisfied that the two missing ballot boxes are in East Northumberland to-day, perhaps buried in some lake or pond in that riding. Mr. Lott must have been in pretty close touch with the government of the day. If he was not, why did he telegraph to Mr. Graham, the organizer for eastern Ontario, when Mr. Mulholland and Mr. Farley, two prominent Reformers in East Northumberland, came to Ottawa to interview the government—I suppose to get a certain amount of money with which they thought to defeat me. They decided at the convention that they wanted $10,000—$2,000 to pay off old scores, and $8,000 to defeat me; and Mr. Lott telegraphed to Mr. Graham that he must pay attention to these two gentlemen when they arrived in Ottawa. If the government was not in touch with Mr. Lott, why did he telegraph that to Mr. Graham? I am satisfied that one of these ballot boxes was used in East Northumberland. If it was not, there was a good deal of that $8,000 spent in one polling subdivision, and I am satisfied they intended to use it in another polling subdivision called Wooler, but we gave the scrutineers notice, and those men, I suppose, kept the money in their pockets until then instead of spending it intending to use the box. They then made things hot with the money. This matter deserves serious attention, and something should be done to prevent such iniquities being prepetrated on the free and independent electors of Ontario.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (East Hamilton). I happen to know something of the facts connected with the initiation of these proceedings, and I do not hesitate to say, from my knowledge, that if it had not been for the expenditures undertaken by private individuals—and I say this, although I have not incurred a cent—there would have been no prosecution whatever. The whole inquiry from the first was the result of money expended by the hon. member for West Hastings and friends of his, and but for that, there never would have been a step taken—and I say it to the shame of the government—for the prosecution of this case. The government, when they did proceed, took advantage of everything that had been done at the expense of private individuals, and used it to make an appearance of prosecution of the chief criminals, for it was little else. What did the government do? The hon. member for West Hastings has been taunted here to-day with having proceeded before a particular tribunal and with not having proceeded before another tribunal. The government proceeded before that other tribunal, and what was the result? Bail for the principal criminal in the trumpery sum of $2,000, and he has escaped to the United States. I have no doubt that the gentleman who advised the hon. member for West Hastings knew what was likely to happen in that regard, and acted wisely and prudently; and if the government wants to do its duty, it will now reimburse those who put their hands in their pockets, and did their duty to this country in instituting proceedings against the men who were guilty of this conspiracy.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration—further amount required for salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount does that make in toto?

Mr. OLIVER. It makes $178,200. This is to provide for appointments and for increases of salaries since the main estimates were prepared, and to pay the salaries of employees whose salaries it was intended to charge to miscellaneous and contingent expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this include any new appointments in the way of agents and employees?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the new employees are:

J. H. Stanford, Quebec	900 00
Mrs. S. M. Geddes, clerk, Ottawa	512 50

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand what all this business is at Vancouver. It seems to me you are putting in a superintendent at $2,500 and a staff amounting in all to, I think, four men.

Mr. OLIVER. There are two medical officers and one clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. Two medical officers and one clerk for a detention hospital in Vancouver. Is that a new institution there ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is a new institution caused by the legislation of last session and the demand for more care in the admission of immigrants. This provides for the hospital and the inspection of vessels arriving.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new building or is it rented, or what ?

Mr. OLIVER. At present we have no hospital building, we are using the Canadian Pacific Railway building.

Mr. FOSTER. Where do these immigrants come from?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course all vessels landing there, whether they come from American ports or from China or Japan or Australia are medically examined there and detained if the conditions require it.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand that the minister has anything to do with anything else than immigration. This is a vote for immigration and it is not intended out of this vote to pay for anything but what is absolutely necessary for immigration purposes. Where do your immigrants come from and how many of them come in from Pacific ports and land at Vancouver ?

Mr. OLIVER. This inspection has only recently been established during the last few months, and there are no figures available at present?

Mr. FOSTER. Before we can grant a large amount for this, we want to know who is coming. Are they Chinese? No, they are excluded by a prohibitory tax. Are they Japanese? No, there is no Japanese immigration to our country. Are they from the Philippine Islands or where are they from? The minister must have some groundwork before he asks for the establishment of a detention hospital with this expensive staff.

Mr. OLIVER. As I said this arrangement has only recently been instituted on account of the legislation and the general feeling of last session that it was necessary to take more care to guard against the introduction of immigrants who might convey disease, and therefore the establishment was made. We are not able to give any satisfactory returns as yet of the number coming in but there are people who come from the Pacific ports of the United States to Vancouver, some from Australia and some also from Japan. Of course immigration from China is discontinued under the prohibitory tax, but there is no such tax on Japanese and there is a considerable employment of Japanese, I venture to say.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the figures of immigration last year? No minister can make an establishment unless he founds it on something that has been and then make it sizeable with what is likely to be. What is the 'has been' on which the minister is putting up an expensive establishment at Vancouver?

Mr. OLIVER. This establishment was organized some three months ago. Before that time, no record was kept, there was no attempt at any record in regard to the entry of immigrants at the port of Vancouver. The establishment was placed there not because of the volume of immigration but because it is the port through which immigrants may enter or do enter from the Pacific, and it is placed there in response to the generally expressed feeling as I understand it at the last session of parliament that greater care should be taken than had previously been taken as to the introduction of diseased immigrants into the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot understand that and I do not think the minister has made any case at all. Do you mean to say that the Immigration Department does not keep a record of immigrants who come in? You give us statements every year and our statistics are based upon your statements. How many immigrants came in at Vancouver last year and from what ports ? The United States immigration does not come in to any extent by these ports, it comes in from the interior of the country, I suppose 99 per cent of it. It is not amongst the United States immigrants that we look for diseased persons. Those are clean-limbed and healthy like our own people. Where you will get disease is among those from those far-off regions which you seem to be scouring in the centre of Europe, among the Molokans and Syrians and Arabians, and Mesopotamians. They will have all sorts of diseases, but they come in on the other coast. It was a surprise to me. I had an idea there were no immigrants coming in from the Pacific. How many Japanese have come in as immigrants. What are the figures for last year? What are your records for the Pacific coast?

Mr. OLIVER. I said a moment ago that up to three months ago we had not kept records of entries at the Pacific coast.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, if the minister will give us the records for the last three months. That is an admission surely. We have been paying three-quarters of a million of dollars to maintain a department and it has not kept a record of an immigrant that has come in from the western coast.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give at the moment, the record for three months. But, as I have said, provision is made for the reception and treatment of immigrants at the port of Vancouver, not so much because of the volume of immigration, but because that is a point to which immigration comes from all the countries bordering on the Pacific ocean.

Mr. FOSTER. Who comes ? How many of them ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have the returns of the officer we have recently sent, and I cannot give the figures at the moment. What has been done is in response, as I understand it, to a strongly expressed wish of the House that the ports of Canada should be effectually guarded against any introduction of disease by immigrants, and not with a view to the total number of immigrants.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total amount of salary it is proposed to pay ?

Mr. OLIVER. For the port, $6,300.

Mr. FOSTER. Would it not be well for us to take a sensible view of these matters for a moment. The minister proposes to provide a six thousand dollar establishment in Vancouver and Victoria for medical examination of immigrants, and he has not in his department a record showing that a single immigrant comes into these ports. Would it not be a sensible way to have a customs officer, or some other officer enumerate the immigrants who come in ? This officer could be called upon for further information if any immigrants did come. In that way you could find out whether such immigrants were coming as to make a medical inspection necessary or not. But that way does not suit the minister, nor is it in accordance with the traditions of the department. According to these traditions, we are to rush into an expenditure of $6,300 before it can be shown that there is any need for the expenditure of a dollar.

Mr. OSLER. Is the medical inspection made on the vessels that come in ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is made at the wharf.

Mr. OSLER. There is a health officer there already.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a quarantine establishment, but that is not under control of this department. This department deals with diseases that are not quarantinable diseases.

Mr. OSLER. In all my recollection of debates in connection with keeping out undesirable immigrants, I do not think that Victoria or the Pacific coast ports were mentioned once. There is no immigration coming into Vancouver, or into Victoria—there are no lines of immigrant vessels. This government pays a health officer there; and, if the minister would refer to the other department, whichever it is, that pays that officer, he could find out how many diseased persons were stopped at that port, and that would be valuable information in connection with this item. But it seems utterly absurd to appoint two doctors, a superintendent and two clerks to stop a possible immigration at points as to which the government cannot show that one single immigrant comes in. And, if there is anything in this line to be done, I will be bound that the health officer has ample time to do it.

Mr. INGRAM. The First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) told us the other day that three Chinamen came into Vancouver, and we passed certain votes to assist in looking after this immigration. So, this must be in addition to any other expenditure in connection with Vancouver and Victoria.

Mr. FOSTER. That had slipped my mind. I remember that we had a conversation about an expensive staff appointed in connection with a possible Chinese immigration. So, you have a quarantine establishment with an up-to-date outfit and an expensive staff; you have the staff in connection with Chinese immigration and expensive officers connected with it; and here is another expensive establishment at points at which, so far as the minister can tell us, there is not a single immigrant coming in. But this is just a sample case of what we meet in these estimates. And I will have to do in this case what I will have to do in others. I move to strike out $6,300 of this vote inasmuch as the minister has not shown any need for this expenditure at Vancouver and Victoria.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I may be able to throw a little light upon the necessity of having these health officers in Vancouver and Victoria. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) said that there was no immigration going into British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I never said that.

Mr. MACPHERSON. But I understood the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) to say that.

Mr. OSLER. I said there was no immigration—no volume of immigration. I said there were no steamship lines. Of course, immigrants may come in occasionally in the ordinary ships. But, as a matter of fact, Vancouver is not an immigrant port.

Mr. MACPHERSON. We have a great many people coming into Vancouver and Victoria who come from the Asiatic side of the Pacific, from Australia, from the north and from the south. Further, we were made a dumping ground by American steamboats companies who left upon our shores many people whom the United States would not keep and who were undesirable immigrants, as many of them were diseased. The examination of these people was a matter for health officers. I think it is for this reason that these health officers have been put on. And they have stopped scores and scores of people from landing in Canada who otherwise would have remained here and become a charge upon the people of British Columbia. People come from Japan who are troubled with trachoma, also from China, and people perhaps who would not be kept out by the $500 tax. They come from Australia also. Now, we in British Columbia must receive protection against these diseased immigrants, and I say that if an officer of the department succeeds in keeping one such man out of the country, his services are worth all the money that we pay him. I am not defending an excessive expenditure, but I do say that for the past six months the people of the Pacific coast have been protected better than ever from an influx of the offscouring of humanity.

Mr. OSLER. The statement just made by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) shows that there is somewhere a record of the work done by these officers, men who were appointed before an estimate for their salary was brought down in this last week of the session. It appears from the statement just made by the hon. member from Vancouver that these men have been drawing pay for the past six months. Now, if they have been appointed illegally by this government, surely the House is entitled to more than a vague statement to the effect that they have been instrumental in keeping people out diseased with trachoma. Surely there ought to be some record of the work these men have done, surely the government must have a statement on which to base the appointment of these men six months ago. As to the statement that diseased immigrants are coming in, I must say that I have been in pretty close touch with what is going on in the shipping world at Vancouver, and I have never yet heard of one case of trachoma coming in on the Pacific coast.

Mr. FOSTER. When were these men appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. Their salary began on the 1st of May this year.

Mr. FOSTER. When the House was in session. Well, that is another example of a certain way of doing things—appoint your men first, set up an establishment costing $6 300, and then, when you get it nicely going, come and ask parliament for money to pay for it. The minister has not given us a figure, he has no information in his pocket or in his head, he cannot tell the port from which one immigrant comes, or how many came in. We know very well that the stream of immigration does not come in from that side. Ships are coming in to every port of the Dominion, and is the minister going to keep an officer in every port because perhaps some man will come in with a cross eye, or may have some trace of disease about him ?

Mr. OLIVER. Vancouver is an important port.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) has told you that if you keep out one diseased man you have the worth of all your money. But now the whole thing is out. It is a mere matter of patronage, in order to appoint men and pay them salaries, without any warrant from this parliament at all, no stream of immigration that warrants it, where you have health officers, provincial and otherwise, where you have a quarantine department, manned by this government, where you have another department costing from $2,000 to $3,000—you have all these things, and yet the money which is supposed to go to bring immigrants into this country is put to uses like that.

Mr. OLIVER. I think those of us who were here last session of parliament, and heard the discussion on the complaints with regard to the admission of immigrants into Canada afflicted with diseases which were not quarantinable—I say those of us who remember that discussion, showing a general agreement on both sides of the House, will think that sufficient has been established to justify the appointment of these two officers. There is a quarantine establishment at Victoria under the control of the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of keeping out certain classes of disease and taking stringent measures to that end. It was not against those diseases that complaint was made in the House last session, it was against diseases of an entirely different character, and it was thought that the interest of the public required that these diseases should be guarded against as well as those which were quarantinable. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) finds fault because I am not able to give him a statement of where the immigrants come from, how many have arrived, and how many have been excluded by reason of this provision. His complaint might be reasonable if this system had been in operation for a considerable length of time. But the facts are evident, Victoria and Vancouver are the only ocean ports on the Pacific coast, and to those ports come traffic and travel from every other port on the Pacific coast. Under these circumstances, if there is any port in Canada that should be protected against the introduction of that class of disease against which those complaints were made last session, then Victoria and Vancouver are those ports above all others. The volume of immigration is not the question. The possibility of the introduction of disease is the question, and there is no question that at these two ports Canada stands in the greatest danger of the introduction of the classes of disease against which the strongest complaint was made here at the last session of parliament. As a result of that complaint, measures have been taken strictly in accordance with the unanimous view of parliament at that time. These measures have been taken such a short time ago that it seems to me that the demands for information and the criticism which is offered on the subject are hardly fair or just, and I think my hon. friend will hardly press his criticism when he considers the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister is not the guardian of the health of this country. As Minister of the Interior administering the Department of Immigration he administers the immigration and that alone. It is none of his business to search every port on the coast of this country and to provide an establishment at every port at which foreign ships are arriving, to prevent certain diseases from coming in. He administers the Immigration Department. He toots for immigrants ; he has his men in certain parts of the world bringing in immigration. It is his duty to look after the health of the immigrants he introduces into this country and yet he tries to justify himself because it is possible that people having these diseases will come in at Victoria and Vancouver. It is not his business to take the money that we vote for immigration and apply it to the general health of the community at every port in the Dominion. The hon. gentleman says that he thinks he has made out a case. What case ? Suppose he asked us to vote half a million of money to put a pork packing establishment into operation, that he would go to work and say that he had a splendid establishment, that he had got everything from the killers to the prime curers and that if you asked him if there were any pigs or hogs anywhere in the vicinity he would say that he did not know that there were any; he would provide his establishment for curing before he had thought of finding out whether there was anything to cure. Here he is setting up an expensive establishment costing $6,300 and he has not a shred of a condition on which to base it. Where do your immigrants come from ? You know where you agents are ? Have you immigration agents in China or Japan or in any of these countries bordering on the Pacific? Have you an immigration propaganda in that direction at all ? It all lies in the other direction and to the south of us and it is those immigrants which you are bringing into this country from your agencies whose health you are instructed by parliament to look after, and it is that alone. There is a provincial board of health to look after the health of the people in certain respects. There is a department of quarantine in connection with the Department of Agriculture which looks after the general health conditions, and the legislation which was passed last year was that in the case of immigrants which you brought into this country you should take care that those suffering from certain diseases were not allowed to come in and become citizens. Now, without a shred of evidence, without a single condition on which to base it, without any vote from parliament you have gone ahead and set up your $6,300 establishment of officers, you have done it since the 1st of May, parliament has been in session and you have never informed parliament of the fact. I never heard of such a thing being done by a minister in my time.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that the discussion of last year dwelt so strongly upon the division of duties between the different departments of government as it dwelt upon the absolute necessity of excluding disease, and disease of the kind which is not subject to quarantine. Disease is something that does not wait for acts of parliament or for votes of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. And if there were a condition existing such as that which was complained of last year, surely the government would be falling short of its duty if it did not provide against that condition. That was the impression left by the discussion of last year. As to the propriety of this duty being laid upon the Immigration Department, I think my hon. friend will agree that there is no question about the propriety of the duty being laid upon the Immigration Department as far as the eastern or Atlantic ports of Canada are concerned. That being the case, I take it for granted that it does seem reasonable that the same provision which is found necessary at the Atlantic ports might very well be applied to the Pacific ports being in exactly the same line as dealing with a class of diseases not provided for in the quarantine regulations. I need not repeat that it is through these ports, by ships sailing from ports on the other side of the Pacific, that we must reasonably expect disease, and the fact that the government, or its department, is actively engaged in bringing in immigration from certain countries does not relieve it in any degree from the duty of protecting the country from diseases that may be introduced by people from countries other than those.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister of the Interior show me any authority he has for taking in his charge, even suppose he had a vote, the general health of the country outside of that which appertains to his stream of immigration and that alone ? The hon. minister should be here to-night asking for a Bill of indemnity. What right had he to take the people's money ? Last year this estimate was brought down and these details were spread on 'Hansard.'

You are asked what you propose to do, how you are going to use this money and you get a vote for that use and nothing else. You had no more right to spend it for anything else than you would have to buy a piano and put it in your own house at the public expense. But here, without any legal authorization at all you have assumed to take the general health of this country into your charge and, without the authority of parliament you have put an expensive establishment on the other side against the introduction of general diseases. The minister ought to be asking for a Bill of indemnity. That is the proper thing for him to come for instead of this $6,300.

Mr. OLIVER. I must say that I think the distinctions which the hon. gentleman draws are altogether too fine for the ordinary citizen.

Mr. FOSTER. They are too fine for this kind of work, no doubt.

Mr. OLIVER. It seems to me, from what I recollect of the discussion in parliament last year, that inasmuch as the Immigration Department was chiefly concerned with the bringing of people to the country the duty was therefore laid upon the Immigration Department of keeping out the diseases which through the efforts might be brought into the country. The Immigration Department being only charged with the duty of protecting the country against diseases which might come by way of immigrants brought in through its exertions as an Immigration Department, is its official action to be paralyzed at each port as soon as it comes into contact with an individual who has arrived at that port not through the exertions of the Immigration Department? Surely my hon. friend will not argue that. If we are called upon to establish at Halifax a detention hospital for the purpose of caring for the diseased immigrants who arrived there are we not reasonably expected to care for other people who arrive at the same port subject to the same disease, whether they arrive at that port through our exertions or not ? The country expects the Immigration Department at the port of Halifax to guard against certain diseases and to care for the cases of disease which come to that port no matter by what means they arrive there. These persons are just as liable, if not more so, to land at Vancouver and Victoria as at Halifax and St. John. There being no other department of the government charged with protecting Canada against these diseases, it is natural that the Immigration Department which discharges the duty on the Atlantic should also have that duty on the Pacific. The judgment of the House last year was that these diseases should be guarded against at the ocean ports ; it was the disease which was to be guarded against, it was not a question of the division of duties between the departments or discrimination between different classes of immigrants. The estimates may not be for the proper department, but the point is that the government is making provision to guard against the introduction of disease.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is entirely wrong. Is he minister of immigration or minister of disease ? What is his legal authority for acting in this way ? It is the law the minister should be guided by and not what he thinks was said or left unsaid. He says that because he is Minister of Immigration he is authorized to fumigate these immigrants and inspect them, and that therefore because parliament has specifically granted him this authority he can extend it to the case of disease all over this Dominion. Such a thing has never been heard of. It is the Department of Agriculture that has the health of this country in charge and the minister cannot show a shred of law to justify him. Even if it were within the jurisdiction of the minister looking after immigration he has no vote for it and no authority.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I agree with the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). If the minister will look up the Public Health Acts, 1868, and amendments, he will find that the Governor in Council has power to deal with this matter and that the Minister of the Interior has no power to exercise the authority which he has undertaken. The Health Act provides for the inspection of any passengers who land at any port in Canada from any steamship or in any way, and it gives the Department of Immigration nothing at all to do with the matter. The provisions of the Health Act are carried out under the quarantine law and there is a quarantine officer and a medical health officer in every maritime port. When the Minister of the Interior supplements those officials by appointing other officers to deal with trachoma he is altogether outside of his power. He will not find in the statute which created his department any authority for asking this vote to-night.

Mr. OSLER. If there had been any emergency, which there has not, we could forgive the minister even if he had acted irregularly. But the hon. gentleman is not able to point to one single diseased immigrant who was turned back. Why is it that on the 3rd of May while this House was sitting there was such an urgent demand to make these four or five political appointments. The minister is right in saying that the House expressed itself strongly on this subject, but there was not a single suggestion that diseased people were coming in at Pacific ports. The Minister of the Interior has these five men illegally in his employ today at the expense of the country. It is extraordinary that the minister should press this vote after this has been called to his attention. What are the names of these men whom he has appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. I gave them before. Dr. J. N. Milne, superintendent medical officer, Vancouver, $2,500 ; Charles Patterson, clerk, $900 ; J. A. L. McAlpine, medical officer, $1,000 ; Dr. Monroe, $1,000 ; Thomas Elliot, $900.

Mr. OSLER. Have reports been received from them ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. Have you seen the reports ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but my officer informs me they have been received.

Mr. OSLER. These men have been appointed for two months now and reports have been received from them in connection with this important matter of keeping out diseased immigrants. These men were appointed hurriedly as a matter of great necessity, and yet it is not worth the minister's while to examine their reports and see whether they are of any use to the country. It is most extraordinary.

Mr. OLIVER. In view of what was said last session I expected a very strong commendation especially from gentlemen on the other side, for the vigorous action taken by the government in regard to this very matter. I had no expectation of being challenged on this vote, and if I had I would have armed myself more fully with facts and figures.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let the item stand until you get the information.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it matters greatly whether the figures are 5 or 100. It is so plain that to our Pacific ports comes the whole trade of the Orient, and knowing the nature of the diseases which prevail in the east, it must be within the judgment of every person that if there is any place in Canada we should guard it is these very ports.

Mr. FOSTER. There the minister has given his case entirely away. He has placed it on the basis of health and no other. He says that because these are great ports, with a great many arrivals and departures, particularly arrivals, he has a right to constitute establishments there and to usurp the work of the Department of Agriculture. Is the minister going to put his establishments at every principal port of this Dominion where ships come and passengers alight ? If at one for the general reason of health, then at all for the same reason. The minister is confined, by his Act, by his vote and by the discussion in parliament, to immigrants ; but he has taken up a piece of work which he has no authority to take up, he carries it on with money that was not voted for that purpose, and now he wishes to father it on a department which has no business with it unless it is in connection with immigrants.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister tell us what instructions are given to these special-medical officers? Is it their duty to examine every one who reaches Victoria or Vancouver in a vessel, or is it not ?

Mr. OLIVER. All second-class and third-class passengers are examined.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite agree with what my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says with respct to the control of the Department of Agriculture over the health of Canada. At the same time, if the hon. gentleman will look at the Act respecting immigration and immigrants, chapter 65 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, he will find that section 24 provides :

> The Governor General may, by proclamation, whenever he deems it necessary, prohibit the landing in Canada of any criminal, or other vicious class of immigrants designated in such poclamation, except upon such conditions for insuring their re-transportation to the port in Europe whence they came with the least possible delay, as the Governor in Council prescribes.

If, as a result of the immigration policy adopted by the Department of the Interior, undesirable immigrants are brought in, it seems to me that the responsibility for dealing with these immigrants rests with that department. It seems to me that we ought to go further if, as a result of the transfer to that department of the control over immigration, diseases which are peculiar to immigrants are brought in. Then it is proper for the government by proclamation to place the charge of that whole matter under the Department of the Interior, and I am informed by the officials that it was under this particular provision of the Act that the matter was transferred to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we have another feature imported into the matter. The Minister of Justice has read a clause which applies exclusively to immigrants, and it seems that it requires a special proclamation. Has there been such a proclamation ?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that there has been.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the proclamation? We must see that.

Mr. OLIVER. I haven't it under my hand.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we had better let the item stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Perhaps my hon. friend from North Toronto will allow it to go through on the understanding that the proclamation will be brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. I feel very strongly on this matter. In the first place, this arrangement is being applied to immigrants, and without any vote of parliament. Surely we must keep down to some rule. There is not a shadow of evidence before this House to justify it. The minister himself cannot say that any immigrants come in there. In fact, the assumption is that they do not.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Does the hon. gentleman know that in the last five or six years three or four thousand immigrants have come into the port of Vancouver?

Mr. FOSTER. I look for my authority to the Minister of the Interior, and he has no record of them.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The fact remains that the immigrants have come in.

Mr. FOSTER. We have not that from the department. From what countries does that immigration come? I am satisfied that people drift in from Australia and elsewhere; you may call them immigrants if you like; but this legislation refers to immigrants in a special way—the immigrants that form the stream of people who are brought in to settle on the vacant lands of Canada. I do not doubt that passengers have come in.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman splits hairs on this matter. Our province has been deluged with Japanese, and if we had had preventive officers such as are appointed to examine these people, the result would have been very different for the province of British Columbia. It would have been much better for us as a people not to have been deluged with these hordes of yellow men from the other side of the sea, whom we did not want. Many of them have come in diseased, and have been a menace to our white population in British Columbia. I am glad that these people cannot now land on our shores without being thoroughly examined, and deported if they cannot be cured of the disease.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no Act of parliament which gives this jurisdiction to the Minister of the Interior. His only jurisdiction is over pauper or destitute immigrants, whom his officer may refuse to allow to come into the country. If they are diseased at all, it is his duty to call upon the medical superintendent or upon any English-speaking physician at his quarantine station.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That refers to quarantine diseases.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Trachoma and syphilis are not quarantined.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no power given to the Interior Department to appoint a medical officer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How would it be with respect to deportation? I would like my hon. friend to bear in mind that I am now speaking from my general knowledge; I have no special knowledge with respect to this matter, but it seems to me that there is a clear line of demarcation between the quarantine and the returning of immigrants. The quarantine authority has only the right to quarantine the particular person with the disease, to isolate him from the rest of the community, but so far as the immigrant is concerned, as I understand the intention of parliament was to protect Canada against the undesirable immigrant and to allow him to be deported. There is a distinction between quarantine and deportation.

Mr. HAGGART. But that deportation applies only to the Immigration Department, it only applies to pauper or destitute immigrants.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does it not apply to diseased immigrants?

Mr. HAGGART. No, this is the section:

> The Governor General may, by proclamation, whenever he deems it necessary, prohibit the landing of pauper or destitute immigrants in all ports or any port in Canada until such sums of money as are found necessary are provided.

It goes on to provide, where there is disease for such vessel being visited and superintended by the medical superintendent or any inspecting physician of any port or quarantine station. There is no jurisdiction at all in the Immigration Department to appoint a medical officer. He can refuse to allow a destitute or pauper person to come in. That is within the power of his department. Where there is disease then he has to call upon the superintendent or medical officer of the quarantine station.

There is another thing which the minister has not attempted to explain. These parties were appointed two months ago and have been paid. How are they paid? Out of the general immigration vote?

Mr. OLIVER. General vote.

Mr. HAGGART. What authority has the minister to pay them out of the general immigration vote? The fact that he comes here and asks for their payment by a salary voted by this House shows that he has no right to take it out of the general immigration vote. You appoint these men and you have no authority under any Act of parliament to do so. There is no jurisdiction in your department at all.

Mr. OLIVER. It seems to me it must be clear that the department which is charged with the duty of bringing in immigrants is in the nature of things charged with the duty of seeing that these immigrants are fit and suitable persons to become citizens of this country.

Mr. HAGGART. The law provides how you are to do it and that alone.

Mr. OLIVER. As I judge from the discussion of last year the House was not satisfied with the administration of the law as it then stood. It was very much dissatisfied with that administration and asked for some better or more vigorous administration looking to the exclusion of these immigrants. Now I am not learned in the law, but I think it is fair to suppose that if this department is charged with the duty of dealing with immigration, unless it is expressly prohibited from caring for the physical condition of the immigrants who come in, it is its duty to so care for them. I have every desire to meet all questions that may be asked, but it seems to me that the time has almost arrived to call attention to the fact that at the last session the Department of the Interior in its immigration branch was most strongly condemned on the floor of this House by members of the opposition because of its having permitted the entrance into the country of people having certain diseases and that to-day it is being as strenuously condemned by the same members of the opposition for having taken the action demanded at the last session. If there is one disease more than another that this country should be guarded against it is the disease of leprosy, and it is the disease of leprosy that is most apt to come in by the Pacific coasts. What my friend from Vancouver said, that the prevention of the introduction of one case of disease would justify all the expenditure which is made at this port, I am satisfied will be upheld by every man living in the Pacific provinces, if that disease is of the kind I have mentioned which is most likely to be introduced at that port.

Mr. DANIEL. With the appointment of special officers on the Pacific coast to look after special diseases such as trachoma, I think nobody will find any fault, and I think the Minister of the Interior has got into this little difficulty to-night because he has said that it was not immigrants that he was looking after, but the ordinary passenger traffic of the port. I am quite satisfied that in many cases the ordinary quarantine officers might not be the most suitable for detecting very slight cases of trachoma and perhaps some other special diseases. Leprosy is one disease which the ordinary quarantine officer is supposed to detect when it is present. The disease is not frequent and I feel quite sure that the ordinary quarantine officer is quite capable of detecting it or at least quite as capable as any special officer whom he might obtain in Canada would be. The minister, however, stated that they were not immigrants, that there was no special immigration coming in to the port of Victoria.

Mr. OLIVER. If I said so I did not intend it.

Mr. DANIEL. I quite agree with that idea that in so far as trachoma, and perhaps one or two other special diseases of that kind are concerned, it is the duty of whatever authority has it in power to appoint special medical officers for the purpose, because I do not believe the ordinary quarantine officers are generally able to look after that matter in a proper way. The only point of dispute that I can see is that for the quarantining of the ordinary passengers that come and go in the vessels who are not especially classed as immigrants would come under the control of the regular quarantine officials of the port, but at the same time if there is any great passenger traffic on the Pacific coast of people who are subject to those diseases, I can very well understand it is the duty of some one to appoint such special officers as the country would have confidence in as being able to detect special diseases, such as trachoma, and some others. This has been found necessary on the Atlantic coast, and I have no doubt that the appointment of these special officers there has been of very material advantage in preventing these people from coming in and bringing disease into the country.

Mr. OSLER. The Minister of the Interior insists that the opposition are now taking a stand against the position that they took last year. I say that that is not the case, but that they stand as strongly as they did last year in favour of due precaution in this matter. And, apparently, what the opposition has said has compelled the government to recognize the need for greater precaution in admitting immigrants into Canada. But what the opposition object to is the expenditure of $6,300 when the minister cannot show that the officers appointed are needed. Of course, it is possible that at some time diseases may come in at these points; but the minister knows nothing about it coming in now. There are more immigrants, ten times over, coming across the bridge at Niagara than come in at Vancouver and Victoria. There are more immigrants, ten times over, coming from Lewistown across the lake to Toronto than come in by these western ports. Is the minister going to appoint a quarantine staff at Niagara and at Toronto to keep out diseased persons?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Ontario government can look after that.

Mr. OSLER. And the British Columbia government have the same power with regard to Victoria and Vancouver. It is manifest that the officers appointed have been appointed against the law—there is no authority for their appointment, even if their appointment were necessary, and no necessity has been shown. If the minister could show any need for precaution at these ports, the House would be very glad to vote $1,000 to put on an extra medical officer. Then if, on the report of that officer, the necessity was shown to exist for greater expenditure, both sides of the House would willingly join in voting it. But to come down here with an estimate of $6,300, and no reason to give for it except by harking back to the fact that the opposition last year showed that there was laxity in the keeping out of diseased people, is altogether unreasonable.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I would ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to point out the Order in Council which would justify the appointment of these medical officers. I have a volume of these orders here. I think the hon. minister will find neither in the statute-book nor in the Orders in Council any authority for these appointments.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. These Orders in Council were collected, I think, in 1886, at the time of the revision of the statutes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. In 1888.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The benefit derived from this discussion will be to oblige us to look into this matter more closely. Speaking for myself, I must say that I am better informed on this subject than I was. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. McLean) will find that section 24 of chapter 65 of the revised statutes, to which reference has been made, has been amended in such a way as to make the proclamation applicable, not only to immigrants, but to any undesirable person coming in. I stated on the authority of the officials of the Immigration Department that the appointments referred to must have been made under this amended statute of 1902.

Mr. HAGGART. The statute of 1902, to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) refers, applies to individuals, as I understand it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think it would be necessary to have a proclamation for each individual. The intention, as I understand it, is to provide that the Governor General may, by proclamation, regulate incoming immigration or prevent any undesirable person from entering Canada. I apprehend that the change in the law was an extension to make it apply to other persons than immigrants. The criticism of my hon. friend from Toronto would be unanswerable if there were only the other sections of the law, but with this change, I think the appointments are authorized.

Mr. HAGGART. As I understand it, the law gives the Governor General power, by proclamation or order, when he thinks expedient or necessary, to prohibit the landing in Canada of any immigrant or other person who is suffering from any loathsome, dangerous or infectious disease or malady, whether he intends to reside in Canada or to depart. Then the Governor General may make other conditions—may admit the persons for a period or a time that he may have hospital treatment, after which it may be determined whether he may be allowed to enter or not. I think it is a proclamation that applies to each individual.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister will allow this item to stand over until he brings the information that he ought to give, and will come down either with some reason for voting this money or with some confession that he assumed that this expenditure was necessary, that will be satisfactory. He may have had an indefinite idea that because of something that was talked about it was necessary for him to make these royal appointments of his at the expense of $6,300 in one establishment, even while parliament was sitting and without any vote of parliament having been passed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand my hon. friend to ask for a copy of the proclamation or order under which the appointments were made?

Mr. FOSTER. I would like that. But, more especially, I would like to be informed what is the condition which makes this establishment necessary? He has not told us that. He can go on and talk about general principles from now to doomsday, but that does not give us the special reason for passing this particular vote. If ministers will not take more care to keep themselves within the law and to treat parliament properly, they must expect these little contretemps. The minister might as well acknowledge and withdraw it. There will be a lot of talk about it if that is not done.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) to take upon themselves the responsibility of saying that this item shall not pass until certain papers are brought down. That being the case, and they assuming the responsibility, I am quite willing that the item should stand until it suits their pleasure to let it go through.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the item stand or reduce it by $6,300.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to be perfectly clear as to the information the hon. gentleman wants. And, by way of finding that out, I will just go over the position as I understand it. Some years ago the Immigration Department became aware that, with its efforts for the introduction of immigrants into the country, some parties were coming in who were suffering from disease, or who were otherwise undesirable. Under the law, as shown by the Minister of Justice, provision was made for the appointment of medical officers at certain points to prevent diseased people from coming in.

From time to time these votes were passed by parliament, there was no fault found with the appointments that were made, no question of the authority of the minister to make them or to pay the money. That condition of affairs has prevailed for some two years. Now, in answer to the very strong demand made by the opposition last session, the government has taken upon itself further to increase this means of preventing the introduction of disease into that country. And to-night we are told that the item cannot go through, because there is no authority for it, although a similar vote has been going through parliament for the two previous sessions. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen are going beyond the mark when they demand in the third year of a certain vote being placed before parliament, the authority for its introduction. Now the only point is as to whether it is proper to appoint such medical officers at Vancouver and Victoria ; on that point we will have to take issue with our friends opposite ; when they say that the province of British Columbia is not entitled to be protected against oriental diseases to which they are liable, then I say we have to take issue with them. We understand thoroughly that they ask for the postponement of this item because they object to the protection being given to the province of British Columbia which has been accorded to the eastern provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot sit in my seat and hear the minister make a statement like that. Why can he not be fair and honest in the matter ? What is the use of him saying that either I or my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) ever took the position that we were opposing this vote because we did not wish the Pacific coast to be protected against disease ? Now I ask the minister that.

Mr. OLIVER. Because this vote contains items of an exactly similar nature to which they do not object.

Mr. FOSTER. I raise the point of order that the Minister of the Interior made a statement with reference to myself and the hon. member for West Toronto, who can look after himself, the statement being that I opposed this vote because I was unwilling that the province of British Columbia should be protected against disease. I deny that, I never took that position, and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his statement.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say the hon. member made the statement, I said that was the position which he took, and I will give him a proof of it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is no way of getting out of it. The minister knew exactly what he intended to say, and what I intended to say. Now he attempts to excite, by this small trick, the susceptibilities of British Columbia against my hon. friend from West Toronto and myself. We are both of us too old to quail before a trick of that kind. I ask the Minister of the Interior to disavow his statement of my position.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman is under the impression that I said that he said he was opposed to giving British Columbia protection, then I will withdraw my statement, because he did not say that. But as to that being his actual position, I will take the trouble of placing the proof upon 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOSTER. Go ahead.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman has taken the responsibility of opposing this vote of $6,300 for the purpose of establishing machinery for detention hospitals at Victoria and Vancouver, he has in fact moved to strike it out, when on the same page of the same estimate which I placed upon the 'Hansard' at his request, is an almost precisely similar vote for the same protection at Halifax and Quebec; and he does not move to strike out these votes in regard to Halifax and Quebec, has raised no question as to their legality, but confines his opposition to the votes for Vancouver and Victoria.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is wrong. Who raised the question as to whether Halifax and St. John should be protected ? I had no knowledge of it until the minister told me what he proposed to do with reference to Halifax and St. John.

Mr. OLIVER. At the beginning of the discussion on this estimate, I read out these votes for Halifax and Quebec, within his hearing.

Mr. FOSTER. Then if he read these out and they were for Halifax and St. John, I did not know it. If that is so, it is all right. But suppose they were for Halifax and St. John. My point was entirely as to whether the minister had a right to have this medical inspection with reference to immigration, and I asked him to show what immigration there was coming into other ports. If he cannot show any immigration coming into St. John or Halifax, then I will vote against any officers being appointed to look after pauper and diseased immigrants at those points. If he can show that there is a necessity for making these hospitals, then I will vote for them. But the minister knows that he has not given a shred of evidence as to any necessity for inspection on that side.

Mr. OSLER. I do not suppose it is worth my while trying to explain the minister's statement, because the House knew exactly what I meant and what he meant. I stated that if it was necessary, if there was disease to be checked, I would consent to the vote, though it was illegal, and I will do so now. But when the minister, a responsible man in this House, presents an estimate for a new expenditure and is not able to give the House a solitary word of explanation, are we to be brow-beaten because we object to that? It is not the expenditure we object to, it is the minister's inability to give this House any reason why this vote is necessary.

If it is not necessary to go to this great expense at Victoria and Vancouver and if there is no need for it under present conditions, then, it is a wrong estimate to put in whether it is under the proper department or not. The hon. minister knew perfectly well when he stated that I was against this vote for British Columbia that he was stating something that I never said and did not intend to say. I will vote for any amount which may be necessary to keep British Columbia ports free. In the discussion of last year the government were blamed for their negligence in failing to look after pauper and diseased immigrants coming in at Atlantic ports. I do not believe this has been sufficiently provided for yet. It has been shown that large numbers are still coming in. I think that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated the other day that 1,000 men were suffering from trachoma in Montreal alone. These people have been allowed into this country by the carelessness of the government in carrying out the proper regulations. If it is necessary to vote $60,000 to keep British Columbia pure I will vote for it with the greatest pleasure, but when the hon. minister comes here with a $6,000 estimate and will not give us any information as to why the money should be voted, when he knows nothing about it, when, although these men were appointed months ago and have sent reports to this government, he has not thought it worth while to look at these reports, when he cannot say whether one single man has been detained on account of disease by those persons who have been appointed, I think it is the duty of this opposition to object to that vote until we have some explanation.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I would like to ask the hon. minister what section of the Act of 1902 would justify the Minister of the Interior in appointing these men or would justify this House in passing this sum of money?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My information is that there is a printed order or printed regulation which he will get from the officials of his department, and as I understand it is agreed that this item is to stand over to enable the minister to produce a copy of this order or these regulations.

Mr. OSLER. And also to supply the information upon which he bases this expenditure of money.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The minister will do that.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glad to hear the hon. members for North and West Toronto disclaim any antagonism to the interests of British Columbia in regard to this vote, but I do not think they have bettered their position by demanding the evidence of the possibility of the introduction of diseased people at the ports of Vancouver and Victoria. I think when they declared this vote would not go through until such information is forthcoming they thereby showed their willingness to do exactly what I took upon myself to say was the necessary consequence of their attitude; that is to say when they question the desirability of providing against the introduction of disease at two such ports as Vancouver and Victoria I do not think there is any room for argument.

Item allowed to stand.

Department of the Interior—Dominion Astronomical Observatory—to provide for the salaries of technical officers and clerks, $13,780.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for?

Mr. OLIVER. This is to provide for the salaries of technical officers and clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. Are all these new men with the exception of Messrs. King and Klotz?

Mr. OLIVER. They are all old employees.

Mr. FOSTER. Where have they been employed?

Mr. OLIVER. They have all been employed in the same department.

Mr. FOSTER. Here in Ottawa?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. In the astronomical department?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the estimates for these been dropped in the survey?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they have been dropped out of the survey and put here.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are they to have their habitation?

Mr. OLIVER. Their work is in the Dominion observatory at the experimental farm.

Mr. FOSTER. You are simply moving them from their former place of employment to the new place out there?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the policy of the department as to the Toronto observatory? I think there was a promise of a building there. What is the exact position of matters as regards the astronomical and meteorological department there, or is it entirely a meteorological department there ?

Mr. OLIVER. The observatory at Toronto is under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It has nothing to do with the Interior Department.

Mr. FOSTER. It is entirely meteorological ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Geological Survey—to pay Mr. Frank Nicolas, from July 1, 1905, one year's salary as editor of the Geological Survey publications, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, or the Act respecting the Departmen of the Geological Survey, $1,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a new work altogether ?

Mr. OLIVER. The director is not here, but I think it is. This is practically a new appointment.

Mr BERGERON. Who did that work before or how was it done ?

Mr. OLIVER. In the absence of the director I cannot actually say, but I think it may possibly have been done by the director or the acting director.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new appointment?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Why do you say 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.'

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Nicolas is not a member of the civil service.

Mr. BARR. Is he too old or has he not passed any examination ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think he has passed any examination. He is employed as the editor of the Geological Survey publications. This is not technically a branch of the service.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the use of saying 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to give the particulars in the absence of the director.

Mr. FOSTER. Make a note with regard to that and bring the information and the item can pass.

Government of Northwest Territories—expenses in connection with Northwest Land Titles Office, including salaries of registrars and other persons employed in such offices, $25,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The registration is under the Torrens system and the registration offices are called land titles offices. The Dominion pays the salaries and collects the fees. Eventually this service will pass under the new provinces. The vote was $39,000 last year but we think $25,000 will be sufficient until the provinces take charge.

Grant to Yukon Local Council for maintenance and repairs of roads, $100,000.

Mr. OLIVER. This is the only vote this yeear, and last year the vote was $134,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any supervision by this government over that expenditure ?

Mr. OLIVER. The accounts are audited by our Auditor General.

Mr. BERGERON. What guarantee is there that they spend the money for that purpose ?

Mr. OLIVER. The commissioner is an officer of this government responsible to us and he is president of the Yukon council.

To pay Major Z. T. Wood additional living allowance as acting commissioner of the Yukon Territory, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,000.

Mr. OLIVER. Major Wood has been acting governor since the resignation of Mr. Congdon and it was thought proper to give him this allowance over and above his pay.

Mr. BERGERON. What is his regular salary ?

Mr. OLIVER. $2,400.

Mr. BERGERON. Does he get a living allowance in addition ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think he gets anything more than rations as a police officer and as such he is not under the control of the Interior Department. It was thought that having to occupy a different house and assume different duties as acting governor it was justifiable to give him this amount.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has he been acting governor ?

Mr. OLIVER. Eight months.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a bonus then ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not a bonus on his salary. It is on the assumption that by virtue of his position of governor he had to assume additional obligations.

Mr. FOSTER. Distinguished visitors would be entertained ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. It was not thought well to increase his salary but it was believed this allowance ought to be made by reason of the higher position he occupied.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is fair. Who is to assume the ermine ; is it——?

Mr. BENNETT. Billy MacInnes ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. W. W. B. MacInnes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he been already enthroned ; I suppose we would have heard the salute of the guns here if he assumed office ?

Mr. OLIVER. He has reached Dawson.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary does he gather ?

Mr. OLIVER. $6,000 salary and $6,000 living allowance.

Mr. FOSTER. My ; what a bonanza.

Mr. HERRON. Major Wood has been an officer of the police force for a great many years and an excellent officer he is. I do not think this allowance is too much.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear.

Dominion Lands—further allowance required to salaries of outside servants, $34,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What vote has been taken already for this year ?

Mr. OLIVER. $156,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the total vote last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. $147,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you require the enormous addition of $42,000 for salaries here ?

Mr. OLIVER. This is to pay salaries for services in the Northwest connected with the settlement of the lands and also a certain portion of the outside service at Ottawa. It is rendered necessary by reason of the increase of work resulting from the increased settlement. As the population increases there is of course a great deal more work in getting the titles of the lands, and cancellation, and proving patents and so on.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, what do you propose to do with the extra $42,000, an increase of nearly 30 per cent ?

Mr. OLIVER. The new appointments are :

C. T. Spence, clerk, Ottawa, $1,200; William Lamb, clerk, Ottawa, $1,200 ; B. T. Haanel, clerk, Ottawa, $1,500; C. H. Bennett, clerk, Ottawa, $540; A. E. Smith, clerk, Ottawa, $500; Captain Powell, timber inspector, High View, $1,200; J. Seale, homestead inspector, Dauphin, $1,200; S. P. Porter, homestead inspector, Regina, $1,500 ; W. R. Ridington, homestead inspector, Lloydminster, $1,200; W. H. White, homestead inspector, Fort Saskatchewan, $1,200; F. Kennedy, homestead inspector, Fort Saskatchewan, $1,200; D. C. McNab, homestead inspector, Brandon, $1,200; W. M. Thomson, sub-agent, Fort Qu'Appelle, $360; F. J. Houser, sub-agent, Humboldt, $300; D. K. Weber, clerk, Battleford, $720; R. E. A. Leach, inspector of agencies, Brandon, $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the Mr. Leach of whom we have heard so much?

Mr. OLIVER. He is at Macleod.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he at liberty ? He was in jail.

Mr. OLIVER. He is at Macleod now investigating the Nixon case as inspector of agencies.

Mr. FOSTER. What was he getting last year?

Mr. OLIVER. He was only appointed this year.

Mr. FOSTER. What was he doing last year?

Mr. OLIVER. He was not in the government employ.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he the author of the thin red line?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know, I am sure.

Mr. FOSTER. That is rather a good kind of man to make an officer out of.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What does Leach do?

Mr. OLIVER. He is an inspector of land agencies.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is a new office?

Mr. OLIVER. There was an officer who was an inspector of land agencies and Crown timber officer as well. Owing to the increase of business, it was thought well to leave Mr. Stephenson with full charge of the timber business and give Mr. Leach the land agencies.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Mr. Leach been in the enjoyment of this?

Mr. OLIVER. Since the 1st of January.

Mr. FOSTER. You appointed him, then, before you got the vote?

Mr. OLIVER. Apparently.

Mr. FOSTER. Have all these gentlemen whose names you have read been appointed? They are all now at work?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they are all now at work.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, you appointed about $34,000 worth of clerks that you had not any vote for, and then you come down, without telling us anything about it, to get this vote through. The minister is travelling fast on the road to perdition—I mean political perdition.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Smith Porter is one of those mentioned. Has he been given an increase of salary?

Mr. OLIVER. It is a new appointment.

Mr. LAKE. Did he hold an official position before?

Mr. OLIVER. I am told that he had been in the employment of the government at some time previous, but I cannot say in what capacity.

Mr. OSLER. The minister is making appointments of new men at large salaries in the older districts of the country. For instance, at Brandon and Regina he is placing homestead inspectors, though I venture to say that there is not a homestead within many miles of either of these towns that has not been settled, and therefore the new man seems to me to be as useless as a fifth wheel in a coach.

Mr. OLIVER. The home of the Brandon inspector may be at Brandon, but his employment may be anywhere in the Territories. I could not say where this man is employed at the moment, but his duties are not confined to any particular district.

Mr. OSLER. You might as well appoint an inspector at Ottawa, and send him up there. The appointments should not be given to us with the man's place of residence. They should be for the district to which he is assigned. If he lives at Brandon, he must be nearly half the year travelling, and when he is, it costs enormous travelling expenses.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that he is on duty at present in the Yorkton district. This is the way the homestead inspection is made. A list of lands for cancellation, we will say, and a list for inspection prior to the issue of the patents, is sent in from a certain district of country. The idea is to get as many of these together as possible, so that when the inspector is sent out, he can cover all these demands with the least possible amount of travelling; and it does not follow that he will be confined to any particular district or start from any particular point.

Mr. OSLER. How many homestead inspectors are there altogether?

Mr. OLIVER. Twenty-four.

Mr. OSLER. How many live in cities away from their districts?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that this Mr. McNab, who is stated as residing at Brandon, is employed in the Yorkton district—not in the Brandon district.

Mr. OSLER. What arrangement have you for paying the expenses of his travelling. To go from Brandon to Yorkton and back, with sleeping cars and meals, costs $25 or $30.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. member is under a wrong impression. The information I have received is that Mr. McNab was a resident of Brandon when he was appointed to the Brandon agency where his services are not now required. He is now employed in the Yorkton agency where they are required and the transfer does not involve that expense of residence in Brandon and work in Yorkton.

Mr. OSLER. You have a new man in Qu'Appelle, a new man in Regina and another one somewhere else, new men in the old districts.

Mr. OLIVER. The Regina district extends north of Regina to a point, I think, beyond Davidson, on the Regina, Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway, and also extends a long way to the east, west and south. My hon. friend knows that in that country there has been probably the largest amount of settlement during the last year or two.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. How long was Mr. McNab engaged in Brandon before going to Yorkton, and what is his christian name?

Mr. OLIVER. G. C. McNab; he was appointed on March 1, 1905.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That was the first appointment?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What was his employment before his appointment?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am not sure whether this was the same McNab who was employed in Marquette all the year of 1904. He came from Brandon I think and was one of the employees of the Minister of the Interior at that time. He was engaged for eight months in organizing in Marquette, and I would be interested to know if he was the same man. I also desire to call the attention of the minister to the fact that he has made a new appointment to the district of Dauphin. There are already two homestead inspectors for the Dauphin district, Mr. Thomas Young and Mr. McGregor. Mr. Thomas Young and Mr. McGregor spent the major portion of last year, not in locating homesteaders, but simply as campaigners for the Liberal party. I am not speaking from hearsay, but from my own personal knowledge. Thomas Young had so much time upon his hands that he spent the entire fall in making a personal canvass with or without the Liberal candidates in Dauphin and Marquette. He was under salary at the same time, in fact Thomas Young was the gentleman who resigned from the position of homestead inspector two years ago and was the candidate for the Liberal party at the provincial elections there. I drew the attention of the Prime Minister to that case at the time, and asked what he was going to do and I intimated exactly what I thought was going to take place, that is that they would allow the gentleman to resign and reappoint him after his defeat. He was defeated at the election, but he resigned only on the 12th of July, and on the same day he spoke on the same platform as myself. After his defeat he was reappointed and his salary was increased from $1,000 to $1,200. Young has been a busy worker on behalf of the Liberal party. He makes no bones about it, and the same thing may be said with regard to Mr. McGregor. This loading down of the service with all these homestead inspectors is not so much to cater for the incoming population as to cater for votes on behalf of the Liberal candidates. These men wield enormous influence on the foreign element. They practised intimidation in my own district and challenged nearly every Galician. Thomas Young stood at the poll on election day and told the Galicians that if they voted for me they would not get the patents to their lands. At the same poll was stationed a mounted policeman from Regina as well as a Galician interpreter. Every foreign elector had to pass these men. They were threatened with conscription. The mounted policeman stood there with his side arms and threatened them with conscription if they voted for me. Young threatened them with the withdrawal of their patents if they voted for me, and the interpreter did the interpreting for them. I do not think it is at all necessary to have the service loaded down with these homestead inspectors when they have so much time on their hands that they can indulge in personal canvass on behalf of the Liberal candidates. I drew this to the notice of the minister last year. First I brought it to the notice of the Commissioner of Immigration, who said it was not right. I told him the man was engaged in a personal canvas and he said he would notify him to stop. I brought it up in the House and the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) promised to issue instructions which would apply to all other officials of the government. I do not know if the instructions ever reached the man, but they had no effect on him, because he was engaged in a personal canvass, as was pointed out here in a previous discussion, within a month he was arrested on a charge sworn out by a Galician, of bribing him with $300. He was engaged in my district on a Sabbath day with $700 in his pocket going around bribing the foreign electors. I think it is simply disgraceful that a party that made such loud professions in a pharisaical manner when in opposition against the civil service taking part in elections should have loaded up the service as it is doing by appointing new officials when the officials already employed have not sufficient work to keep them engaged but are engaged as organizers on behalf of the Liberal party, something so well known in that country that it has become a public scandal.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to put this matter to the Minister of the Interior who has heard the statement made by a member of this House. I myself have no doubt as to that statement being perfectly true. What is the position of the Minister of the Interior with reference to this matter? Is he going to make appointments to offices and pay the officials out of the public money and then allow them to leave their duties and undertake such duties as have been explained to us to-night? He is a new minister coming in and we would like to have him state his policy with reference to that matter for if he is going to do that he will have to justify something which I think as a member in opposition he would have taken very strong ground against, and if it is right in one case it is right in another. What has been said is cause sufficient why the minister should be asked to state his policy with reference to his employees.

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to the vote before the committee I can only say that I am not personally familiar with the conditions in the eastern part of the Territories and Manitoba and have not been in control of the department long enough to have knowledge of the circumstances. I can speak however with some authority for the western part of the country and I can assure the committee that the increase of requirements in regard to homestead inspectors in that part of the country has been very great and has not been more than met or perhaps has not yet been fully met by the appointments which have been made.

Since taking office recently, I have been very strongly appealed to for the appointment of still more homestead inspectors on the ground that there was great delay in securing the proper operation of the Lands Act in certain sections of the country, because of the impossibility of getting inspections made as promptly as they should be made. I do not know that it would be to the point to read the committee an essay upon the duties of the homestead inspector or upon the length of time required to cover a comparatively limited area of country where the conditions are such as to require a number of inspections either for cancellation or patent. The Northwest Territories is a very large country, and settlers have of recent years been going into practically every part. So the increase of the duties of homestead inspectors and of the area to be covered has been very great. The homestead inspector's duties are possibly the most important duties of any officers of the government in connection with the settlement of people on the land. It is upon the inspection made by the homestead inspector that all the duties between the government and the settler, as well as the absolute rights of the settler, are decided. Now, the time required for the duties of the homestead inspector cannot be judged simply by the number of inspections that he makes. Because if a settler has seen fit to go out from settlement a hundred miles or more, has put in his three years and proved up his homestead, he has a right to demand that the inspection of that homestead shall be made and that the patent shall issue to him ; and, until that inspection is made, the patent cannot issue. In such a case, the inspection of the homestead would involve a drive of 200 miles on the part of the homestead inspector. Of course, I am speaking of an extreme case, but it illustrates the point I make, that the number of inspections does not necessarily show the work done by the inspector. The number of inspections for patent may be demanded at once, and if the inspection is delayed—as it may be—from month to month, perhaps for a period of six months, the settler has great reason to complain of hardship ; and does complain accordingly. So, while I have no criticism to offer to either of the objections that have been made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as to the alleged actions of certain homestead inspectors ; and while I have nothing to say in defence of such actions if the allegations are correct, I still maintain that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, speaking from my personal knowledge as well as what I have learned in the department, the increase of homestead inspectors is absolutely justified by the department ; and on that I ask the House to vote the item. As to the policy of the department in connection with these officials, I have had occasion to say here before, and I take the opportunity of saying again, that while it is not the business, or the right, or even the privilege, of the government or any department of the government to interfere with the right of the citizen to exercise his franchise or to perform his duties as a citizen ; on the other hand, I think it will be the view of the department that the best service that an officer can give to the department and to his political party, as well as to the country, is to attend carefully and well to the duties assigned to him.

Mr. FOSTER. I should not expect anything else than that the minister would say that the best thing an officer could do would be to attend to his duties. I think we can all agree to that. But when the minister is asking us to vote salaries to his officers, and when we ask him whether these officers shall be kept at their work, or whether they shall be free to leave that work and engage in electioneering in the way reported here by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), does not the minister (Mr. Oliver) think that he should give us an answer ? We are not voting $2,200 to Mr. Leach, for instance, that he may go electioneering. We vote that money that he may do homestead inspection. The minister himself has given the very best reason why this should be insisted upon. He is calling here for $42,000 worth of more men. He says the homestead inspector's business is very important. Well, are not these all the greater reasons why these homestead inspectors should attend to their work? Mighty tender is the government as to interfering with the citizen's right to vote ; but not so tender in the cases of the hundreds and hundreds of Conservative office holders who have been dismissed simply because they had the temerity to vote, because they stood upon a platform, because they went to Conservative meetings and listened to a Conservative speaker. There is no tenderness for these, but we are called upon to deal very tenderly with the homestead inspector, even though he makes it his duty to go out and work for days and weeks against the Liberal-Conservative candidate in an election, threatening voters and all that kind of thing. We are not paying the salaries to these men to do party work. Will not the minister agree with that ? We are paying salaries to these men to do their work in the department. Well, will not the minister say that in such gross cases as these that are brought up the officers shall be required to attend to their official duties and leave electioneering alone ? Cannot the minister make that statement before we are asked to vote the salaries for these men who have been notoriously engaged in this electioneering work ? Shall we pay salaries for that kind of work, or will the minister give us the assurance, as he ought to do, that these men will be kept at their duties and not allowed to attend to electioneering ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am placed in a somewhat difficult position by the manner in which my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has stated his case. If I make the statement that this is desired, I thereby acknowledge the allegation against the officers of the department over which I have been placed. If I do not accept the statement made, I am contravening the rules of parliament. Now, I do not want to do one or the other. I do not wish to accept the accusation of improper conduct made against officers of the department over which, for the moment, I preside, without giving those officers an opportunity to be heard. Therefore, I do not wish to make such a declaration as the hon. member wishes me to make. I am bound to accept the statement made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), and it is not my privilege to question that statement.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will the minister say that he would allow his officers to go around campaigning and electioneering when they ought to be attending to their duties, and will he dismiss them if it can be proved that they have been guilty?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot pledge myself in fairness to turn out an officer of the department on the accusation that he has been guilty of certain actions.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I will make the offer to the Minister of the Interior that I made last session to his predecessor, but which he did not see fit to accept. I have in my desk affidavits to prove every assertion I have made here to-night, that these very officials were actively engaged in canvassing prior to polling day and on polling day. The hon. gentleman need not fear that I am going to ask him to take my word for it, because I have affidavits from six or eight men to prove the very accusation I made here to-night against these officials.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course I cannot undertake to administer this department retroactively, I have trouble enough to administer it presently and prospectively. I have stated to the committee, and now repeat, that the policy of the department will be that officials of the government shall attend to the business for which they are paid, and in doing so I think they will best serve the government, the party and the country. But I cannot lay down the principle that because they are employed by the government they shall be deprived of their rights as private citizens. I cannot go further than that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not going any distance at all. Suppose we take the collector of customs in the city of Toronto, suppose that in the late elections that gentleman had left his office and, during the month that these elections were on, had gone on platforms up and down the streets canvassing, trying to get votes, trying to intimidate votes, do you suppose there would be any justification for that? But he would be able to do all that in the exercise of his rights as a private citizen. All the pledge the minister will give us is that so long as he administers his department he will see that officials shall do their work, but he will not deprive them of any right that a private citizen has. That means that these men can be set to work electioneering, and he will not interfere with them. Here is one of his officers who did everything an officer should not do, and there is one of his colleagues in this House, a brother member, who says that he will prove it if he is allowed an opportunity. Now what will the minister do with those men?

Mr. OLIVER. I have stated what I consider to be the best policy for the government to pursue. To ask me to condemn officials of the department in advance is something that I do not think he should ask me to do. He expects me to give judgment as to what shall be done by me on a future occasion which has not yet arisen, and in regard to circumstances of which at present I have no knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister is not asked to do that at all. He is simply asked whether he will assure the House, when he asks them to vote money for a public servant, that that public servant shall busy himself about his own work and shall not actively interfere in elections. There is only one answer, will the minister give that answer?

Mr. OLIVER. There is more than one answer, because there must necessarily be a difference of opinion as to what constitutes this objectionable activity on the part of any person in the exercise of his rights as a private citizen. I have said already, and I say again, that it is not the part of the head of a department, or of any other man, to restrict improperly the rights of citizenship. As to just where the rights of citizenship end and the duties of the official begin, that must always remain to some extent a matter of opinion and argument.

Mr. FOSTER. What is your opinion?

Mr. OLIVER. I will always be ready to give my opinion on a case when it arises, but nobody should ask me in reason for an opinion, in regard to a case that has not arisen.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose we should say when you were asking us for money that we will wait until we are satisfied in reference to that special instance before we vote the money. We have as good a right to our position in that respect as the hon. minister has. The hon. minister has an idea that this is all his own business, that it is not the country's business; that it is all the party's business and that it is not the general business of the country with which we are engaged. This money comes from the taxpayers of the country. The minister comes and says: I want a certain officer. Parliament has a perfect right to know the duties of that officer. He says: I want a certain amount to pay that officer. We have a perfect right to discuss it and we can pass it or not as we think proper. Before we give our sanction to the appointment of this officer we have a perfect right to know what his duties are to be. Then, a simple question I would ask is, whether, if we give a vote for a homestead inspector, the minister's policy is to keep him at work on the country's business or whether he is going to allow him, when a canvass takes place by candidates for members of parliament, to take an active part in that canvass against one of those candidates. As the ones who hold the money we have a perfect right to an answer from my hon. friend. It is the country's business and not any individual's business.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite at one when the hon. gentleman says that it is the country's business. I do not know from what utterance or action of mine he gathers the idea that I consider it my business, or that I am undertaking to handle the country's money without the country's will being expressed. I am here in my place asking the vote of the House for these items subject to the rejection of the items and the condemnation of myself by the House for having placed them before it. That surely is not ignoring the opinion or will of the House or wish of the country. In regard to the right of the House to say that a man shall not be appointed, or that his salary shall not be voted, or that the House is not satisfied in regard to what his duties shall be, I have done my best to inform the committee as to what the duties of these gentlemen shall be or what they will be expected to do and I have already pointed out that the requirements of the case are such that, to the best of my belief, we need all the men for whom we have asked salaries in the interest of the settlement of the country and of the satisfaction of the settler. If that position is not satisfactory, if that is a matter of argument, of course, it is for our friends to take the opposite side and to do in this case as in the case for the vote of the detention hospital at Victoria, take the position that the amount shall not go through or that it shall be dropped. But, having given the full information that I have given in regard to these men, in regard to their salaries and in regard to their duties, then, as my hon. friends have talked very plainly, it is of course necessary that I should talk as plainly to them, and they must take the responsibility before the country of refusing to give that money which is necessary to the public service to secure the satisfaction of the settlers upon their homesteads.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I understand the argument aright it is that we are merely asking the hon. minister whether he believes that people holding public positions are justified in going about and taking an active part in politics or whether he is prepared to pay them for their services if they do so.

Mr. LAKE. I think that no one on this side of the House has any idea of interfering with the rights of any private citizens in the country. What we object to is that a man who has special authority and special standing conferred upon him by virtue of his official position, an official position that is paid for by the people of the country, should use that authority and that standing in the interest of one party or the other. We wish the hon. minister to say, whether, if at some time in the future it is proved that an official is using his position in the interest of one party or the other, he will dismiss him.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say, as I have said before, that I will have to take each case as it comes, and that I will have to give judgment on the question as it exists or as it arises. I absolutely cannot in justice to the officials of the department, or in accordance with justice, tell the committee beforehand what judgment shall be given in regard to a case that may arise in the future.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. Minister of the Interior is very much more delicate about telling us what he will do under such circumstances than his own leader was. I am sorry that the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is not here to-night for I will give him the credit of having given a straight cut answer as to the policy of the government in regard to officers interfering in elections. He did lay down a definite statement of the rule that he said would guide himself and his colleagues in dealing with these officers. He did not talk all around the question or quibble or try to evade a straight cut question put to him, but he did give an answer as to what he would do. I will have to admit that the policy which he laid down on more than one occasion has been sadly departed from, but at any rate, when he was asked the question, he gave a straightforward answer. He did not say: I will see what will be done, I will investigate and give my judgment accordingly, or talk about the exercise of citizenship and a whole lot of nonsense such as we have heard from the hon. Minister of the Interior to-night. The right hon. gentleman told us that he would consider it as an act of partisanship on the part of any officer of the government to take an active part in politics. He said that any official would be allowed perfect freedom to go and exercise his franchise by voting for the candidate of his choice, but that was the limit which the government would allow. Further than that if he indulged in canvassing, or if he was seen on a political platform, or if he was in any way engaged as an active political partisan, the right hon. leader of the government said that he would have an opportunity of devoting his whole time in the future to politics by being dismissed from the service. That was the policy of the hon. gentleman's leader. Cannot the hon. gentleman give just as straightforward a reply as that? We are not asking that any official be decapitated; all we are asking is to be allowed an opportunity of proving our case and if we can bring sufficient evidence to convince the hon. minister that his officials have been partisans, will the hon. gentleman say that he will allow those men to devote their whole time in future to politics by dismissing them from the service? The hon. gentleman knows what a wonderful influence land and homestead agents and other officials have over these new arrivals in the country. He knows that a great many of these people are unacquainted with our laws and institutions, and that until they have been in the country for several years they will be afraid of intimidation on the part of these officials. I think it is only reasonable for the opposition to insist, when a whole host of new inspectors are being appointed, that these men shall not be permitted to engage in the same kind of political work as that in which their predecessors have engaged instead of devoting their time to the service of the country for which they are paid.

Mr. LAKE. I commend to the Minister of the Interior, the language of the Prime Minister uttered in the House on 1st September, 1896 and reported in 'Hansard' page 505. The right hon. gentleman said:

I have no hesitation in saying at this time that if an officer in the service chooses to be a politician, he shall be given every opportunity by the government of being a politician. What is the cause of the abominable practice that has been stigmatized in the States that to the victor belong the spoils? Why was it that after every presidential election attended by a change of parties in power, the whole civil service was cleared off, the whole body of servants of the government were forced to resign or be dismissed? The reason is obvious, the reason is that every officer under the American system was an active politician, and being an active politician it was quite natural that when the opposite party came into power the man who had been an active politician could not be a trusted servant of the government whom he had opposed. Now when we find an officer in the civil service, however good a servant he may have been, however faithfully he may have discharged his duties, but who has been an active politician, who has taken part in the elections offensively and actively, and before the eyes of the whole community that official has become a scandal in the eyes of the community, and I have no hesitation in saying he cannot be trusted to render faithful service to this government. When there is a government officer he may hold his opinions, I don't care what they are, they may be Liberal or Conservative. I do not care, but when he is seen on a political platform, when he is actively or offensively prominent as regards party candidates, that man has taken his life in his hands, and no one can have a word to say if he is dismissed from the service.

On the 15th May, 1903 ('Hansard' page 3200) the Prime Minister also said:

Again take the case of Mr. Jonasson. Mr. Jonasson, I understand, is one of our officers. I do not know in what capacity, but he is in the pay of the government. He ought not to take any part in any politics. I say deliberately that for my part I feel as strongly now in 1903 as I did in 1896 that when a man has taken a position in the civil service, he should take no part whatever in politics. He becomes an officer of the public, receiving the pay of all parties, he owes his services alone to the position which he occupies. If he wants to vote, let him vote, but let him exercise his franchise in a way that will not be offensive to anybody.

Will the Minister of the Interior endorse the position taken by his leader, and say that his future action will be governed by those views?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. OLIVER. The position taken by the Prime Minister is a very proper one.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister will be glad to have that endorsement.

Mr. OLIVER. It is worthy of endorsement, but I cannot give a decision until I have heard both sides, and it would be unfair and unjust to deal with an official simply on the accusation of a member belonging to an opposite party and without investigation. I do not think I could administer the department effectually or satisfactorily if I were to do that. I am sure that if my hon. friends opposite and I were outside the House they would permit me to take some of their accusations with a grain of salt. In view of certain actions of the Conservative party in the last elections I fear their denunciation is not quite sincere. I have a distinct recollection that during the contest last November a gentleman blew in on the train to Edmonton, magnificent in regalia with clerical robes of the most pronounced type, arrayed in purple and linen and with a follower to act at his beck and nod. He spoke Russian, announced himself as a priest of the Russian church, and he came to convert the Russian settlers of my district to the Conservative faith.

Mr. BENNETT. Was he a government employee?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is the point then?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, he stated that he came at the request of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) amongst others, and that he carried in his pocket some $300 of good Conservative money.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If the minister and I were outside this House he doubtless would allow me to characterize that statement by saying that I would like to take it with something more than a grain of salt. I never met any official of the Russian church, I never conversed with any official of the Russian church, and if any person made such a statement to the Minister of the Interior, he made it out of whole cloth and it is absolutely foundationless.

Mr. OLIVER. I would suggest that if this story must be taken with a grain of salt, the accusations against government officials in the last elections must be taken with two or three grains of salt.

Mr. BARKER. Does the minister say that he knows his story to be true?

Mr. OLIVER. It is true as I told it.

Mr. BARKER. Do you know it to be true?

Mr. OLIVER. I am told what occurred. There was a large amount of interesting literature circulating amongst our Russian friends, printed in the Russian language, and that literature contained certain remarkable promises to the effect that if the Russian electors voted for the Conservative party and if that party were successful it would give them new farms in case they settled on bad ones, and build schools and churches for them. I noticed that one of the names appended to this remarkable circular was that of W. J. Roche of Marquette.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is evident that the Minister of the Interior is trying to obstruct his own estimates and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FIELDING. We have been having a very pleasant evening and I did not think my hon. friend would get tired of the battle so soon.

Mr. TAYLOR. The heat in the chamber is intense, and while the opposition are willing to pass the estimates to-night the minister is obstructing.

Mr. FIELDING. If the opposition is willing to pass the estimates they disguise their purpose very well.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not so. This side of the House is not chargeable with the obstruction, but the minister has been obstructing his own business for the last half hour, instead of saying, like the Prime Minister, that an official who is paid by the people must attend to the duties for which he is paid.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not rise to participate in the debate, but to suggest to my hon. friend that if we have been wasting time we had better now proceed to business.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree absolutely with the Minister of Finance, that we should proceed now to business. All would have been passed an hour ago if the Minister of the Interior straightly answered this simple question: Is it the policy of your department that these men shall do their work, and not engage in political canvassing? The minister has not answered that yet. He will not say that that is the policy of his department. So long as he takes that position, he cannot expect to get his estimates through. Now, what are the facts of the case? The facts are that the employees of the Minister of the Interior in Manitoba and the Northwest, nine out of ten of them, during the last Dominion elections were nothing more nor less than electioneering agents. That we all know, and when the facts are brought home, by affidavits and otherwise what is the use of the minister shutting his eyes to them? What we wanted to do was to bring about a better state of things under the new minister, and we thought he would gladly say that he would see that the officers did the work for which they were paid. He will not say that, but he excuses them—for what reason? Because elections are soon to be held in the new provinces, and I venture to say that the same things will be done there unless the minister interferes. What Sir Wilfrid Laurier said was that public servants might do their voting and hold their political opinions as strongly as they liked, but they had to keep out of the political canvass, or he would let them stay there. All we wanted was that the minister should say that his policy in this respect would conform with the statement of the Prime Minister. Such was not the position of the late Minister of the Interior. He knew no scruples in that respect. His men in office were his creatures; he authorized and incited them to do everything men could do in order that the Liberal party should be advanced and the Conservative party retarded. They engaged in active political work of every description. Are we going to continue that sort of thing? I for my part say that we are not, and the minister will have immense trouble in getting his estimates through if he takes the ground that his officers need not attend to the duties for which they are paid, but may engage actively in political contests. Take the case of this man Leach. He was an organizer and heeler of the Liberal party in Manitoba; he is now under prosecution for a disreputable piece of business. If the accusation is proved, his qualification for the office is that he did good political work for the party in Manitoba at the last election. Part of this vote, I suppose, is to pay Mr. Nixon. Who is he? He was a defaulter who stole the public money. He has been convicted of it by this very man Leach, although an attempt was made to throw the blame on a boy. Mr. Leach and Mr. Nixon are both to be paid out of this vote, and who are they? Active political workers. These are the kind of men who are given appointments as rewards for political services, and the four men who were mentioned by the hon. member for Marquette are active political partisans who have worked as hard as political partisans could leaving their duties for which they are paid out of the public money while doing that political work. Surely the minister does not at this stage justify a proceeding of that kind. Surely if he wants to get his votes through, he can say that his policy in that respect will be in accordance with that of his leader. That would let the whole vote go through so far as that phase is concerned.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman is willing to let the vote go through, we will let it go; but I wish to clear his mind on one point. He has used certain language in regard to Mr. Leach, who is now a homestead inspector. I have never met Mr. Leach and do not know him at all ; but I want to say here and now that the fact that Mr. Leach or any other man has been an active supporter of the Liberal party is not going to debar him from employment in the Interior Department so long as I am the head of that department.

Mr. HERRON. If the hon. minister finds it difficult to draw the line between the political work of a partisan and his work as an official of the government, I can draw his attention to one government official in his own district, whose name has been mentioned in the last few moments, I declare most specifically that that man has been engaged in politics purely and simply for the greater portion of his time, during the last five or six years. That was Mr. Nixon Macleod, and further than that he stood in the poll and challenged voters from morning until night on election day. He travelled around canvassing, and he has done so for months. Before the last election he resigned or took leave of absence. He was travelling in the country a month or so before the elections and gave people to understand that he had left the employment of the government, but he was back in the office immediately after the election.

Mr. LAKE. I suppose we are to understand that the minister practically refuses to give any assurance that he will prevent these officials from using their position for political work. I wish to ask his policy in regard to these lands which are occasionally sold to settlers as a second homestead subject to cultivation conditions. He brought down a return the other day showing 250 or more persons to whom lands had been sold at prices varying from $1 to $3. I notice that only two sales apparently had been made during the present year and I would like to know whether these sales are to continue and upon what system he means to make them.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not sufficiently familiar with the working of the department to give as full an answer as might be desirable, but I understand that sales are made only in special circumstances, some of such circumstances being where there is a fraction of a quarter adjoining a homestead, that is a quarter section may be broken by a lake or by a break in the survey or by a river or for some other reason, and inasmuch as it is less than a quarter section it is not liable to be taken as a homestead, not being of sufficient acreage. In such a case I understand it is frequently considered a proper policy to sell that fraction to an adjoining homesteader. Another case is where a homesteader who has practically completed his residence and other conditions is not, owing to a death in the family or some other reason, able to absolutely complete them. In such a case the land has been sold to him at a price proportionate to the amount of time he should properly spend to complete his conditions. Then sometimes when a man has exhausted his homestead rights and cannot get an entry on homestead land we may find him when the survey comes along squatted or settled on unsurveyed land. He has no right to that as a homestead, we do not like to eject him from it, if it is in occupation, and on the completion of residence conditions we sell it to him at a dollar an acre or such other price as is thought suitable.

Mr. LAKE. I do not think any of these three classes of cases comes within the scope of my inquiry. The return brought down shows an entirely different class of cases and in order to point to the exact case I refer to I shall give the answer of the Prime Minister to a question I asked him in the House. I asked :

1. When did Henry Entenier enter for his first homestead ?

2. Has Mr. Entenier entered for a second homestead, or obtained from the govenment any land since that time ? If so, what is its location, at what price, and under what conditions did he receive it ?

To this the Prime Minister replied :

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. On May 31, 1893.

2. Mr. Entenier has not entered for a second homestead. Upon report of homestead inspector that only a portion of the land in their homesteads was cultivable in consequence of early frosts, caused by the lowness of the land, and because of hail in some years, settlers in the Kroneau district (of which Mr. Entenier is one) were allowed to purchase each an additional quarter section, subject to ordinary cultivation conditions. He bought the SE. quarter section 14, township 15, range 17, west of the 2nd meridian, at the regulation price of $3 per acre, payable one-fourth at time of purchase, the balance in three annual instalments, with interest on any unpaid balance at five per cent per annum.

I do not find Mr. Entenier's name on this return; it possibly has been omitted through error. I have information to the effect that land in the locality of Kroneau, this very land, is worth $13 an acre and that sales have taken place in that neighbourhood at that or a higher figure, but that a number of these special privileges were given to people in that neighbourhood. It will be readily understood that this places a great deal of power in the hands of a homestead inspector for his report alone is necessary to make a very large grant, practically a bonus of money to individual settlers, and I think it is a power that should be exercised with the greatest care. I want an assurance from the minister that he will exercise the greatest care in dealing with this particular question and I want really to know his future policy with regard to it. It is difficult to see why one man should receive his land in such cases for $1 an acre and a second for $3, but I suppose reasons may be given for it. I would like to know whether the minister intends to continue that system.

Mr. OLIVER. The case or cases mentioned by the hon. member are of a class included in the classes to which I referred, although I did not mention that particular class. Of course it is on report of the homestead inspector that the homestead is of absolutely inferior quality that a homesteader is given permission to purchase an adjoining quarter to make up a farm, which is the purpose of the department in arranging with settlers. The statement made by the hon. member (Mr. Lake) that the land in this district is of a higher value than has been represented to the department is worth considering, and certainly it is not the policy of the department to grant lands of a superior character at the inferior prices. Although the occasion arises because of the character of the original homestead rather than of the character of the adjoining land that is purchased. So far the government has not placed the price higher than $3 per acre. If the original homesteader has a poor homestead—that is one not suitable as a farm—and wishes to purchase an adjoining quarter-section which is good land, the government would be inclined to sell at $3 per acre.

Mr. LAKE. That would be limited to the adjoining quarter-section ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not necessarily, but to an adjacent quarter-section. But the privilege —it is not a right—would be granted much more readily regarding an adjoining quarter-section than an adjacent one.

Mr. LAKE. If that were generally allowed, there would be many applications from men who took up their homesteads in a hurry and now find their land of inferior quality. It is a pretty dangerous thing, after a man has obtained the patent to his homestead, to give him an entry for an additional homestead. I can conceive of cases where it would be a good thing to relieve a man of his first homestead and let him go off and take another where the land was of better quality. But to allow him first to obtain his patent on his homestead and then to go a short distance away and take a new homestead—that would need to be allowed with the greatest caution. In fact, I should be inclined to doubt that it ought to be allowed at all. I would like to ask the minister if the Canadian Pacific Railway patents have all been taken out yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not all.

Mr. LAKE. How long is it likely to be before they are all out ? Because there is the question of the exemption from taxation.

Mr. OLIVER. I am given to understand that the patents are practically all issued for whatever lands have been chosen by the Canadian Pacific Railway that have been surveyed. But they have selected some areas where the lands are not surveyed, and, of course, the patents cannot be issued until survey has taken place.

Mr. LAKE. I hope the minister will see to it that early survey takes place wherever the Canadian Pacific Railway has selected lands, for he must bear in mind that, if the present interpretation of the law carries, there will be twenty years' exemption dating from the issue of the patents.

Mr. OLIVER. The company has made their selections and, of course, it will be the business of the department to see to it that surveys are made as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) suggests.

Mr. LAKE. There is another question which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. Statements have been made in the Northwest Territories that a number of bogus entries have been made for land and that these lands have found their way into the possession of land companies, which is a hindrance to settlement. I have here an extract from the Grenfell 'Sun,' of May 19th last, as follows :

> Mr. Stevenson, Dominion lands agent, has been inspecting the land offices in Eastern Assiniboia. He states that large numbers of settlers are going into the southeastern portion of the Territory, and scores of applications for homesteads are being made. He found that many homesteads are controlled by land companies, who applied for them under fictitious names and paid the entry fees. As an inducement to settlers to buy lands purchased from the railway company, they guarantee to get them the free homestead. When sales are effected on these conditions the companies make an abandonment of the homesteads selected, and their clients then make entry for them. The department will take action to have the homesteads now held in this way released by refusing to grant extension when the time for completing expires.

I do not know whether any report on the subject has been made by Mr. Stevenson, but I am quite convinced that there have been cases of this sort—in fact, I think I may say that there are some within my personal knowledge—in which men were able to go to a land company and buy lands from them, getting them at a specially low figure on condition that the land company would obtain from them the right to make a homestead.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge at the moment of the condition referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). Of course, it is an objectionable position ; and, after the statement has been made, it would be necessary to make a very careful inquiry into the matter. Of course, there is considerable room for such a condition arising because of the desire of the department to show every leniency to the settler to give him a reasonable extension of time in the fulfilment of his homestead duties. Of course, this is only with a view to encouraging the actual settler. Still a company might, by careful manipulation, secure to itself advantage which is supposed to be given only to actual homesteaders.

Mr. LAKE. There is still another question I wish to bring up. I wish to get some idea from the minister as to a class of cases concerning one of which I have had a large number of papers placed in my hands. It was a case in which a widow had applied for a homestead entry which was granted her. I understand that under the law the minister may decide under the special circumstances of such cases, whether he considers the woman applying is the sole head of a family or not. In this particular case, I understand, the woman was a widow, but had no family. I know another case where a widow has been refused a homestead entry. I would like to know in what way the minister decides these cases.

Mr. OLIVER. The rule is that the department requires the applicant to make affidavit that she has minor children dependent upon her before she is entitled to a homestead entry. And if the woman to whom the hon. gentleman refers has made a homestead entry, the supposition is either that she has made an improper declaration or that my hon. friend is not fully aware of the extent of her family.

Mr. LAKE. There are a large number of papers in this case, which is that of James Moore. He married a widow who had obtained entry as being the head of a family. But he produces evidence to show that she had no family when the entry was granted. It seems to be a case where the parties have fallen out, and he objects to her getting the homestead. Does the minister know of this case at all ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I have not heard of it.

Mr. LAKE. Then I understand that the minister makes it a definite rule that a woman cannot be granted a homestead unless she is a widow with children, that is a rule of the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is a rule of the department, so I am informed.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that based on the law ? In the United States I know there are quite a large number of women who are regular farmers. Now if a woman wants to take up a homestead and farm, surely the minister will not debar her from doing that.

Mr. OLIVER. The department does not recognize the right of a woman to take up homesteads except in this exceptional case. In the United States I think they permit an adult female to homestead as well as a male.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to know if the minister intends to reopen the land office at Macleod ?

Mr. OLIVER. I issued instructions the other day to have that subagency reopened.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary does Neil G. McCallum receive ?

Mr. OLIVER. $1,500.

Mr. FOSTER. And S. G. McKee ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is not a homestead inspector. He was employed temporarily in the Yorkton office, but he is not employed there now.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the item presently under discussion, $34,000, be reduced by $2,700, the salaries of Thomas Young and Neil G. McCallum ; it having been proved here to-night that these gentlemen prostituted their position, left their duties, and undertook the work of public canvass in the most offensive and partisan way during the last election ; and that we cannot get from the minister a statement as to whether that policy is to be pursued. This is the only way we can protest against it.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not know there was any accusation against McCallum.

Amendment negatived; yeas, 17; nays, 39.

Mr. FOSTER. It is now twelve o'clock and we have to resume to-morrow morning at eleven, and a committee at ten. I think we ought not to sit any longer.

Mr. FIELDING. We have made so little progress—I am not attempting to distribute the blame anywhere—but I think we might now sit for an hour and dispose of some work.

Mr. OSLER. Under the circumstances, when $14,000,000 in appropriations are brought down at this time of the session, we should be given time to discuss them at least to some extent. So far I think the time has been well spent, we have passed very large sums already. We have shown to-night that these appointments resulted in partisan interference in the last elections to an extent that is simply appalling. We have the Minister of the Interior distinctly refusing to give any pledge that this sort of business will cease in the future. He is distinctly telling the officials of the government that hereafter the harder they work for the party the greater their reward will be. If he stated it as plainly as I have stated it, he could not state it more plainly than by his absolute refusal to disclaim any responsibility. We have had these estimates thrown down our throats at this time, and I do not think it is fair at midnight to force any more of them through the House.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I do not think that members on this side of the House who have sat here from night to night for six months, are in a position to receive lectures of this kind from the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler). He may be fresh and prepared to sit here for a long time; but those of us who have made it our duty to be here almost every night since the beginning of the session are not disposed to take the advice of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Finance Minister for a great many years, you will find, if you go through the records of those eighteen years, that in the last days of the session they brought down a great many supplementary estimates. It has been the rule of every government that ever was in Canada, and he is not in a position now to lecture this House or the government on account of bringing down the supplementary estimates. They have been on the table now for over a week, a great many of them are revotes or votes to finish work already started. There are scarcely any new works provided for in these $13,000,000 that are not perfectly defensible and there is no reason why the House should lose this whole evening because of the little tu-penny ha'penny criticisms that hon. members on the other side of the House have indulged in. These hon. gentlemen have kept the House and the session for over six months, they have been fooling away the time and their own newspapers, the Toronto 'World' and the Montreal 'Gazette,' have denounced their course. Now the hon. member for West Toronto after all this, after he has been away for two or three weeks——

An hon. MEMBER. Months.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And when he has not spent one-half of the time here, lectures the House. I think it is a downright shame.

Mr. TAYLOR. The opposition are not as numerous as the members supporting the government, but they are not prepared to take abuse.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, do not give abuse.

Mr. TAYLOR. The two hon. members who last spoke have been indulging in abuse of my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler). Even the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) charges the opposition with having kept the House here for six months.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. I make the statement that if any hon. gentleman will take up 'Hansard' he will find that two-thirds of the time have been occupied by hon. gentlemen supporting the government and not by the opposition. It is the duty of the opposition to criticise the actions of the government and we are not going to be lectured. We are prepared to stay here for another six months.

Mr. CAMPBELL. So are we.

Mr. TAYLOR. At the same time we are prepared to facilitate the closing of the session, but if we are going to be abused by hon. gentlemen like the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken that is not going to facilitate the closing of the session. The government might as well understand it now. If they cannot control their supporters and keep them from abusing my hon. friend from West Toronto they must take the consequences. My hon. friend has been away for a couple of weeks but that is no more than is the right of any hon. gentleman if it suits him to go away. But, while he is here he has a perfect right to make any statement that suits him and he has a perfect right to say that the government has no right to bring down these supplementary estimates at this period of the session, a thing which was never done by the government of which my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was a member.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Look back in the 'Hansard' and you will find that that was the case every year.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman may contradict me after I take my seat but I do not want him to interrupt me now. You can look through the records of 'Hansard' and you cannot find that when my hon. friend from North Toronto was Finance Minister, he ever came down with a half of $13,000,000 of supplementary estimates. Every government has to come down with a small amount of supplementary estimates, but in the time of my hon. friend parliament was never confronted in the last days of the session with $13,000,000 which is something unprecedented in the history of this parliament. Yet, because hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have attempted to raise their protest at twelve o'clock at night with the temperature at eighty and having to meet again in the morning, and have said it is time to quit, they are to be insulted by hon. members supporting the government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We do not want to insult any one on that side but we do not propose to take any insults either. We have been sitting all evening here not saying a word and listening to the abuse and vilification that have been indulged in by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter). We could have replied, but we did not want to prolong the session, to his abuse of the Ross government and to his charges about switching and stuffing ballots. If there ever was a party in this country that ought to be ashamed to mention stuffing ballots it is the party opposite that sent Chamberlain up to the Northwest. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) and all the other members from the Northwest are familiar with the facts in connection with sending Chamberlain up there to instruct them how to stuff ballots and to switch ballots. We know that they have been doing the same thing all over the Dominion. The last time they held an election, in 1896, they had their agents all over the country instructing their friends how to stuff and to switch ballots. Yet, we have sat here all this evening listening to hon. gentlemen opposite and then the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) gets up and says they are not going to be insulted. Mr. Taylor, you can bear this in mind——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CAMPBELL—that we can sit here just as long as you can and if you do not wish to be insulted——

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the point of order ?

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order is that the hon. gentleman should address the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman. I would say to the hon. member for Leeds that if he does not wish to be insulted he must not insult this side. We will stand a good deal but we are not going to stand too much from those fellows.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Leeds has been a member of this House for 23 years and he has never yet insulted an hon. member either supporting or opposing the government. I think that has been his record, and he never makes a statement that he cannot corroborate. The hon. member for Centre York stated that my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) occupied the whole evening. The hon. gentleman left the House at six o'clock and took the 6.45 p.m. train for home. He only occupied a little while in the afternoon, only a very short time considering the importance of the case with which he dealt. But the whole evening has been spent by the hon. Minister of the Interior obstructing his own estimates and when at 12 o'clock my hon. friend from West Toronto, one of the most respected members on either side of this House, enters his protest hon. members get up and insult him. I think that at this hour we should suspend the sitting, go home, get a little sleep and be ready to proceed with business in the morning.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we had better pass a few items in good temper and then we will consider the question. We have not done much work. I do not say the debate has not been proper, but I think we should before adjourning make a little further progress.

Mr. FOSTER. If we had some other minister to deal with we could make some progress, but we cannot make any progress with the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FIELDING. Pass his estimates and we will give you the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. FOSTER. He is worse. We may stay here scrapping for another hour, and I think we might as well get some sleep and come back.

Mr. OLIVER. In reply to what the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has said in respect to my position or my statement here I say there is no foundation for having understood me to say what he said I said.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the policy of the government in reference to odd-numbered sections ?

An hon. MEMBER. Never mind.

An hon. MEMBER. Obstruction.

Mr. OLIVER. At the present time I am not able to announce the policy of the government in regard to odd-numbered sections.

Mr. FOSTER. There you are again ; we cannot get any information.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a very important question that has arisen by reason of the selection of railway lands having been practically completed. The completion has been so recent that the government has not been able to decide upon a policy in regard to the odd-numbered sections, but it will engage our attention just as soon as the parliamentary work is done.

Mr. LAKE. I would like the assurance of the minister that there will be no sales of land en bloc made, or no sales of land to any but the actual settlers.

Mr. OLIVER. There will be no sale of land en bloc to any one and in so far as the interval between now and next session is concerned there will be no sales of land to any one but actual settlers.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to hear that. I wish that the same system had been adhered to years ago. I remember the case of a client of mine in a business way making application about three years ago. He of course was a citizen of this country, not a foreigner and not an outsider in any way, but I made the application of the Department of the Interior to know whether they would sell any lands at all or not. I received a statement from the Department of the Interior to the effect that it was not the policy of the government to sell lands en bloc, and that that policy would be adhered to. I sent that information to my client and he bought land from other sources paying from $4.75 to $5.50 per acre. But he had not completed his purchase before an immense block of land was sold to the Saskatchewan company composed partly from the United States and partly of persons intimately interested nearer home. That is not fair treatment to the citizens of Canada. Not more than two years ago I made an application for two young men from the province of New Brunswick, who had gone west and trecked for 150 miles and taken up homesteads; I wanted to know from the government whether they would sell adjoining or adjacent quarter sections to these settlers. I was answered that it could not be done, but here in an official return I find hundreds of names, many of them foreigners, in whose favour this very thing has been granted. These two young men from New Brunswick had to pay $6 an acre to the Canadian Pacific Railway to make up the farms they needed while others were able to buy adjacent lands from the government at from $1 to $3 per acre. Why should not the people of Canada get just as good treatment as foreigners? why should not these two young men who went that distance to make homes for themselves in their own country have the same advantage as these foreigners? If there is any rule that the department adheres to, what is it, or, is it a fact that certain influences are brought to bear by which certain people can get land from the government at $2 and $3 an acre while others must go elsewhere and pay from $5 to $6 an acre. It is an injustice.

Mr. OLIVER. The fact that out of the thousands and thousands of homesteads that have been located there have been only the small number of sales given in the return, is proof that sales have been made only under exceptional circumstances. There may have been misrepresentation and misunderstanding, but otherwise the sales have been made only upon such circumstances as every member coming from the Northwest knows, justify the sale. As to the case of the two young men, the principle is that a quarter section each would not be sold to them in addition to the homesteads, because the land available for homesteading in that section of the country would be reduced by that amount, and it is most in the interest of settlement to hold the even-numbered sections for homesteads. If any one wishes to enlarge his area the odd-numbered sections are purchasable. That condition will be changed in the parts of the country where there are no railway land grants, and the railway companies now having made their selections it will be possible for the government to deal with the odd-numbered sections in these areas. I am not able to say what the government will do in the matter, but I have no doubt that the views expressed by the hon. gentleman in regard to the treatment of homesteaders in these areas will probably be met. The transaction with the Saskatchewan Land Company has been so often threshed out in this House that it is unnecessary to repeat the story now. The company acquired railway land granted to a railway company which up to that time refused to take it off the hands of the government as being unfit for settlement. In making that arrangement with the Saskatchewan Land Company the government was able not only to secure the settlement of a considerable area of even-numbered sections, but they also secured an amicable settlement with the railway company which at the time had entered action against the government in connection with their land grant.

Mr. FOSTER. It is now half-past twelve and I must make a protest against proceeding further.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) refuses to let the items pass——

Mr. FIELDING. I won't put it on the ground of the hon. gentleman refusing to let the items pass. I would prefer not recognizing that the hon. gentleman could refuse.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no necessity for putting it in that way, and if I tried I could not refuse.

Some resolutions reported.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 198) for the relief of Agnes Hedevig Helga Salusbury Trelawney.—Mr. Campbell.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.25 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 12, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

BILLS PLACED ON ORDERS.

Mr. BICKERDIKE moved:

That owing to the advanced period of the session Bill (No. 149 from the Senate) respecting the South Shore Railway Company and the Quebec Southern Railway Company; and Bill (No. 191) respecting the Joliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Railway Company, be placed on the orders of this day in the Private Bills for consideration of Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FAST MAIL SERVICE.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I may be somewhat out of order, Mr. Speaker, but the House will pardon me on account of the importance of the announcement which I have to make. I have this morning received a telegram stating that the royal mail steamer 'Virginian' was forty miles off Cape Race at half-past eight o'clock, Atlantic standard time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

ARBITRATION WITH THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 199) to amend an Act respecting an arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Explain.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under the Act passed in 1880 for the purchase of the Rivière du Loup branch it was provided that if any difficulties arose between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway they should be referred to arbitration. (Statutes of 1880, chapter 80, clause 29, page 17.) There is a similar provision in the Act passed in 1899, confirming an agreement for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. (Statutes of 1899, chapter 46, page 95.) Arbitrators have been appointed to adjudicate on the differences between the two companies under these two agreements, and an Act passed in 1904 (chapter 16) giving the arbitrators the powers of a superior court to summon witnesses and appoint clerks, and so forth. The Bill I now introduce proposes to amend the Act of 1904, chapter 16, by giving the arbitrators power to make separate awards on the different points of dispute. There are several points in controversy between the government and the company, and the Bill is to make provision that the arbitrators may make their award on each point if they so choose, instead of a general award for the entire case. I think this is a step in the right direction, and the Act is introduced at the request of the arbitrators. There is also a provision in this Act which provides that the Chairman of the Railway Commission, who was appointed third arbitrator before he took his present position, will not be disqualified, as he would be under the Railway Act, 1903.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the minister who is leading the House say whether any proposal has been made to the government by the Grand Trunk Railway or the Grand Trunk Pacific looking to the repurchase of the Intercolonial Railway, or running rights over it ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE

Mr. FIELDING. No ; there are no such negotiations.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the arbitration finished its work, and is it now ready for making the award ?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand they are now ready to make a report on almost all the points in dispute between the parties.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time.

CONFERENCES BETWEEN SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) The Senate has passed a resolution with reference to conferences between the Senate and the House of Commons in the event of any differences arising. The present practice as to conferences is very cumbersome, and the Senate has appreciated the desirability of making other arrangements, and has passed the following resolution, which has been sent to this House for concurrence. I am sure the House will gladly concur. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Fitzpatrick :

1. That in cases in which the House of Commons disagree to any amendments made by the Senate, or insist upon any amendments to which the Ssnate has disagreed, the Commons is willing to receive the reasons of the Senate for their disagreeing or insisting (as the case may be) by message, without a conference, unless at any time the Senate should desire to communicate the same at a conference.

2. That any conference between the Houses may be a free conference.

Mr. FIELDING moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to inform their Honours that the Commons have agreed to the foregoing resolution.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

TIMBER ON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. SCHAFFNER—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What is the government's mode of procedure in dealing with the sale of timber and timber limits under the control of the Indian Department as to (a) sale by tender; (b) sale by public auction ; (c) choice between different tenderers ; (d) bonuses, ground rents and other fees ; (e) when and how such bonuses, ground rents, &c., are collected ; (f) whether any licenses are in arrears, and if so to what extent, and who are the licensees ?

2. How many timber licenses are now in force throughout Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, and when was each issued ? Are any of these in arrears ?

3. When a tender for the sale of timber or a timber limit is accepted, is immediate payment of the amount tendered necessary as well as bonuses, ground rent, &c. ? Have all such been dealt with in this way ? If not, what are the exceptions, and why ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). 1. (a) Timber and timber limits are sold under (b) Section 3 of the Timber Regulations of the Indian Department; (c) public auction, or by tender, after public notice is given. The highest tender is accepted. (d) When limits are sold bonus is required to be paid, also ground rent, $3 per square mile, and license fee, $4. Ground rent is paid by the licensee thereafter annually before the 30th November and (e) renewal fee of $2; (f) There is only one licensee in arrears. The license was originally granted to Messrs. Klock & Co., who transferred it to the Molson's Bank, the present holders. The amount claimed to be due and payable to the department is about $7,000.

2. There are no licenses in force in either Manitoba or the Northwest Territories.

3. No license can issue to cut timber on a limit until the bonus, ground rent and license fee shall have first been paid.

TORONTO ISLAND FOG-HORN.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Prefontaine) to what I may call a fog-horn nuisance adjacent to the city of Toronto. It appears that the old fog-horn on Toronto island has been abandoned and dismantled, and that under the auspices of the government a new fog-horn has being invented for use in all parts of Canada. The location of the fog-horn has been changed from where the old one was to the pier at the eastern gap. The new fog-horn makes very much more noise than the old one did. I presume that the minister is glad to know that, because the more noise a fog-horn makes I suppose the greater success it is considered to be. But I am informed that this fog-horn is in operation at times when there is no necessity for it, for the purpose of experimenting for the benefit of other parts of the country. It is heard when the sun is shining and when it is possible to see for miles out upon the lake. The island during the summer months is occupied by many people as a health resort. Large numbers of the citizens of Toronto have gone there for many years, and many of them have built expensive houses in the neighbourhood of this fog-horn. The result is that if this nuisance is not abated many of these people will have to leave the island and sacrifice their properties. But the difficulty extends further than to the residents of the island. It extends to the mainland. The general hospital of Toronto has perhaps 350 or 400 patients and the hospital authorities have complained seriously to me in regard to this nuisance. The residents of the whole city are also very much annoyed by the continual blowing of this fog-horn hour after hour and day after day when there is no necessity for it. The residents do not object to the fog-horn operating when it is necessary for the protection of ships on the lake, but they do object to it operating when it is entirely unnecessary and for experiments being carried on there for use all over Canada. They say that if it is necessary to carry on these experiments it should be done away from such a centre of population as the city of Toronto. There are two suggestions I would like to make to the minister. One is that when it is necessary to operate this fog-horn for the protection of shipping there should be some sort of deflector put behind it to throw the sound out on the lake, and to prevent, as far as possible, the sound going over the city to disturb the whole 250,000 people of the city of Toronto and to cause them to lose their rest. So far as the experimenting is concerned, I would like the minister to assure me and the city of Toronto that that will be put a stop to by the removal of the experimenting station to some place not so thickly populated as the city of Toronto. I would like to read a letter which represents the sentiments of the people who live on the island. It is as follows:

July 10th, 1905.

A. E. Kemp, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I have been requested by the residents of Toronto Island to call your attention to the fact that we have lately been subjected to great annoyance from the use of the fog-horn established at the eastern gap at the Island.

We are well aware that it is necessary for the protection of navigation that a horn should be used at this part of the island during foggy weather, and we have no desire, in this letter, to raise any objection to the proper use of the station for this purpose.

Lately the fog-horn has been in active operation morning and night, in season and out of season, and, on several occasions when there was very little, if any, appearance of fog it has continued to blow its loudest blasts to its fullest capacity.

You can readily understand how this must affect the rest and comfort of the residents on the island. Quite a number of people treat the island as a health resort and go there with their invalids for quietness and rest. To these people the island, for the future, will be a forbidden district, if something is not done to moderate the use of this fog-horn.

It is said—but with what amount of truth we cannot say—that the station has lately been used as a testing station for fog-horns, more than for actual navigation purposes.

We would be greatly obliged if you would have this matter looked into, and, if this is the case, would have the Marine Department give instructions that the station should only be used for the protection of navigation and that the further use of the horn, for any other purpose, would be strictly prohibited.

I inclose a clipping from the Saturday 'Telegram' regarding the foregoing. If it is necessary for you to have a petition from all those who object to what we consider a common nuisance, I shall be pleased to procure one for you.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE N. MORANG.

The clipping to which the gentleman refers appeared in the 'Evening Telegram' of Saturday, July 8, and is as follows:

Music of the Fog-horns.

Will be kept up for two months' longer.

Lovers of music in the city will be pleased to learn that the bellowing of the fog-horns at the eastern gap will continue for the next two months. Early and late, day in and day out for months, the fog-horns have been keeping it up.

'They blow all the time, rain or shine', said a resident who lives in the vicinity of Ward's this morning.

A 'Telegram' reporter paid a visit to the scene of the uproar this morning. Mr. McKelvey who is in charge of the station for the government, said that the fog-horn blew at night only when there was a fog. the blowing during the day when it was clear was for the purpose of testing horns to be used by the government at their different stations in the Dominion.

The Canada Fog Signal Company, of which Mr. Northey is the head, supplies fog-horns for the government and test their horns at this station.

'How long do you expect to keep it up?' Mr. Northey was asked this morning.

'Oh, about two months,' was the reply. 'For testing purposes we blow as little as possible, generally between 2 and 5 in the afternoon. The Dominion government is making an effort to secure the best fog-horns available the one which can carry the farthest. The horn at this station has carried as far as 30 miles.'

You can easily see, Mr. Speaker, that if the testing is to be kept up for two months or during the whole summer vacation, the nuisance will be a very serious one. I hope the minister will assure me that the testing will be taken to some other place. I understand that my hon. colleague from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has had representations made to him on the same subject.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (South Toronto.) Mr. Speaker, I desire to supplement what the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has said with reference to the nuisance, which his remarks have fully covered. Referring to the location of the fog-horn at present in use, I may say that it is about central of a very long pier half a mile in length. The marine men find great fault with the location, because being in the centre of the north pier it is not of that service to navigation that it would be if located at the end of the pier.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries.) As regards the location of the fog-horn, I surmise that the place was chosen by the officers of the department after they had studied the question properly; but if it is necessary to go into the matter again, I will with pleasure look into it. As regards the experimenting, I fail to see that that can be helped at present. These fog-horns are manufactured in Toronto, and they must be tested, and the testing can only be done conveniently at the point where it is done now. Very strong steam power is required to make the test. It might be arranged that the testing should take place only at certain hours. But the nuisance, I think, is magnified, and it is something which to a certain extent cannot be helped. The experimenting will go on for a fortnight or three weeks longer, but I am willing to give instructions that it be done at such hours that it will not disturb the people too much. This experimenting is a necessity that we must try to bear with for a little while longer. It would be out of the question to build a special testing place away from the city of Toronto; it would be too costly. Under the circumstances, therefore, I hope that the people of Toronto will patiently put up with the nuisance, if it is such, and if we regulate the hours for the experimenting, I think the nuisance will not be so great as to justify a complaint.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois.) I might call the attention of my hon. friend to another experiment which has lasted a great deal longer, and if it is the desire of the government to punish Toronto, I do not see why Montreal should be punished. For years there have been complaints of the noise made every hour by the whistles in the Lachine canal, which crosses a part of the city of Montreal. Representations were made on this subject some years ago, and I believe some regulations were adopted, but instead of these being followed, the power of the whistles has increased; and now when a boat comes into the Lachine canal she can be heard all over the city of Montreal. The object of the whistling is to secure the opening of a drawbridge or lock at not more than ten or fifteen acres distance, but it makes enough noise to waken everybody in the city of Montreal, and the more representations that are made the more noise the whistles make. They seem to be experimenting as to how loudly they can blow.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do they whistle in both languages?

Mr. BERGERON. They whistle in the dual language for sure, because they make a terrible noise. I am very serious in the matter. It may be quite proper on the lakes or in a fog to use these whistles, but I do not see their necessity in the city of Montreal. I think the matter belongs rather to the Department of Railway and Canals than to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If there are regulations, I think they should be put in force, and if there are none, I think there should be regulations which will prevent these whistles blowing in such a way as to awaken the whole city of Montreal.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals.) The subject referred to by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has certainly never come before the department since I have been connected with it. If I had received any complaint on the subject, I would be only too glad to have the matter remedied if there was a grievance. I do not wish to assume the role of a lecturer to the House, but it seems to me that on matters of this kind, instead of consuming half an hour or an hour of the time of the House of Commons, particularly at this stage, hon. members could accomplish quite as much and be quite as effectual in their complaints, by writing letters to the department. I am sure the officials of the department, if not the head, would be only too glad to pay the strictest attention to complaints of that character, and give them prompt attention.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I will end with a motion. This matter is far more serious than I have been able to impress on the mind of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. A number of the gentlemen who spoke to me in regard to the matter were considering the advisability of taking out an injunction against the government, as would certainly be done if a private individual were responsible for the nuisance. A legal gentleman informed me that an injunction could be obtained against the manufacturer of the fog-horn to prevent the experimenting.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would suggest that they move to St. John, where they would never see a fog-horn.

Mr. KEMP. Does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries say that he will not prevent a nuisance that could be prevented by me if a private individual were concerned? The people at the island are practically having their property confiscated if this nuisance is not abated, for they will be obliged to leave the island. The answer of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not be at all satisfactory, for it is ridiculous to say that the 250,000 people of the city of Toronto are going to be disturbed by this kind of thing and that a number of the residents on the island are going to have their property practically confiscated by the continuance of this nuisance. I think the minister ought to say that he will have the experimenting carried on at some place where there is no population or a small population.

Mr. FIELDING. And the manufacture?

Mr. KEMP. Not necessarily the manufacture. It does not follow at all, it does not make any difference to me whether the manufacturing is done in Toronto or twenty-five miles from Toronto, but I want to impress on the minister that it is a more serious matter than he has drawn from any remarks I have made on the subject. It is the experimenting part of it that is objected to.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD. I would have dwelt at great length in opening had I thought the minister would have taken the matter in the manner he has. It is a serious matter. The superintendent of the Toronto general hospital, one of the largest hospitals in Canada, waited upon me to see if this nuisance could not be abated on behalf of the hundreds of patients in the hospital. It is not a matter to be lightly treated or joked at. The minister made a proper remark that these matters should be settled by correspondence or interviews had with the members of the government. I have a letter from an alderman in Toronto in which he states in reference to this nuisance :

> The Mayor wrote the Department a month ago.

So a month ago the mayor of Toronto wrote the department regarding this nuisance. It ill becomes the Minister of Railways to make the remark he did in regard to the manner in which this subject was brought to the attention of the House. Alderman Church continues :

> To-day the city council asked the government to remove the station to the country.

I do not know if that communication has reached the government, if not, it will. I point out these matters to show that the question is a serious one and that the inconvenience to the people by the nuisance is much greater than the inconvenience which would be caused to the government by removing the nuisance to some other place.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto.) I can only from personal knowledge confirm everything that has been said by my friends from Toronto. The nuisance is intolerable and even if it is necessary to have this done for testing purposes I am quite sure the test is carried beyond necessity. That fog-horn goes for hours and hours day and night. It is not a question of a factory in Toronto but of the health of the people in this heated weather. To invalids in hospitals and private houses it is probably as great a nuisance and as dangerous a thing as could possibly exist, and I am quite sure it is not necessary to carry it to the extent it is being carried on and at all events during these dog-days I am satisfied the minister ought to see that the inconvenience is stopped.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that the Crown ought not to insist on rights—I trust that hon. gentlemen will not think I am trespassing on the attention of the House. I observed one of my hon. friends from British Columbia making some observation upon my rising. Let me assure hon. gentlemen they will not facilitate the business of the House by remarks of that kind.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I hope the hon. leader of the opposition is not referring to me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was, because I thought the hon. gentleman made a remark when I got up.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I beg to assure the hon. gentleman I made no observation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg his pardon, it was some other hon. gentleman then very near the hon. gentleman. My remarks will be directed to whoever was responsible. I am going to occupy the attention of the House only a moment, and it is for the purpose of saying that although the government may technically be in a position that no injunction can be obtained against them in respect of this nuisance I think the government in justice and fair-play should not insist in a matter of this kind upon rights which a private citizen would not have. What would be regarded as a nuisance if committed by a corporation should not be insisted on by the government. When we hear of a fog-horn carrying thirty miles being operated within a mile of a hospital, it seems to me that instructions should be given by the department to abate the nuisance. When we learn that a communication has been sent by the city of Toronto to the department a month ago and apparently no steps whatever have been taken on that communication up to the present time, I would venture to suggest that the members for Toronto were quite right in bringing the matter to the attention of the House. I think if the Minister of Marine should have this fog horn brought in somewhat close proximity to his office and operated there for week or two, while he was endeavouring to perform some of the arduous duties of his department, he would perhaps awaken to a realization of what is endured by the citizens of Toronto.

Mr. EMMERSON. Just think what they have to endure in Halifax.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. From the St. John horn I presume ; it hardly carries that far. Members of the government are so accustomed to blowing their own horn that they desire to continue this fog-horn at Toronto, The blowing of their horn does not affect the country whereas the blowing of the fog-horn at Toronto has a somewhat serious effect.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I will undertake to find a firm in the town in which I live that will manufacture all the horns the minister requiries for the coast of Canada, and if hon. gentlemen think that the noise made by testing these fog horns offends the ears of Toronto I will undertake to say that we will not make any complaint in the town of New Glasgow for all the fog-horns we are asked to make. We are accustomed to the hum of industry down there and we will not make any complaint.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Bill (No. 192) respecting the powers of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal—Mr. Prefontaine—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a recommendation from the Harbour Commissioners ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries)—Yes, there was a recommendation from the Harbour Commissioners some time ago. They thought they had the power to appropriate a sum but on consultation with the department of Justice it was ascertained that they had no power under the law.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I saw something of this in the papers. Are not the board of trade and the chamber of commerce co-operating ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is the citizens of Montreal who are moving in the matter and as the late Hon. John Young was connected with the harbour of Montreal, the Harbour Commissioners have been asked to appropriate the sum of $6,000. The monument, it is supposed, will cost about $20,000. The balance of the money will be furnished by the citizens of Montreal and different bodies. The monument is to be erected within the limits of the harbour.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—PENSIONS FOR INTERCOLONIAL EMPLOYEES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I desire to take advantage of the presence in the House of the Minister of Railways to repeat a question I asked on the 15th of March last :

> Does the government intend to introduce at this session the Bill respecting old age pensions, that the Minister of Railways and Canals promised last year to introduce?
> Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The question of pensions for the Intercolonial Railway workmen is under consideration.

I would ask the Minister of Railways if that matter has been considered since, and if so, with what result?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The matter has received consideration, and a Bill has been prepared; but in view of the legislation before parliament it was found impossible to carry the matter through this session. The House was so engrossed with the Autonomy Bills that it seemed impossible to get an opportunity either to introduce a Bill or to carry it through. Under these circumstances I felt that it would be better to defer the Bill until next session. Since that question was asked by my hon. friend, a delegation from the railway employees of the Intercolonial Railway met a committee of council, the matter was gone into, and it was found impracticable to pass a measure this year.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will the minister give the House an assurance that the Bill will be introduced and pressed through next session ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I gave the delegation the assurance, and so did the Prime Minister, that the Bill would certainly be introduced, if not this session, at any rate next session. Personally I am very much interested in it; that is to say, I am much in favour of it, and it is with great regret indeed that I had to forego the privilege of introducing the Bill this session.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Dominion Lands—Further amount required for contingencies, advertising, etc, and salaries of extra clerks at head office, $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote and the one we were discussing last night, which stood over, are very objectionable votes. A very large amount of money, in this case $34,000 for the first sub-item, is put down as a lump sum for salaries for the outside service. The present Minister of the Interior does not seem to feel any obligation upon himself in the matter of making appointments before he has the votes. He makes the appointment entirely irrespective of whether he has the authority or not in the money vote; and the whole of our discussion last night did not seem to bring to the minister the least glimmering of the idea that he was stepping outside the bounds in making appointments before he had consulted his vote. Well, then, it gives a lump sum, and that lump sum is for salaries to officers. Now there is no check and no guard upon the department at all in that respect, up to the limit of the vote; so the only thing we can do in order to make that vote as definite as possible and to guard the expenditure, is to ask the minister to give us an itemized statement of every officer and employee in that first sub-item whom he proposes to employ and pay out of that vote, so that it may go upon 'Hansard,' and then we may be able to keep the minister to his vote as it was really given to him on the explanation to parliament. The same thing holds with reference to the item that stood over. I object to these large lump sums given to a department or a minister under cover of which the minister is able to do almost what he likes with reference to the extension of the service, without even consulting the department with reference to a single detail. It would have been better if the minister had had some copies of the statement made out and laid one on the table of the House, and then read it over so that it could go into the 'Hansard..

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The new appointments I read last night. They are :

C. T. Spence, clerk, Ottawa, $1,200 ; William Lamb, clerk, Ottawa, $1,200; B. T. Haanel, clerk, Ottawa, $1,500; C. H. Bennett, clerk, Ottawa, $540; A. E. Smith, clerk, Ottawa, $500; Captain Powell, timber inspector, High View, $1,200; J. Seale, homestead inspector, Dauphin, $1,200; S. P. Porter, homestead inspector, Regina, $1,500; W. R. Ridington, homestead inspector, Lloydminster, $1,200 ; W. H. White, homestead inspector, Fort Saskatchewan, $1,200; F. Kennedy, homestead inspector, Fort Saskatchewan, $1,200; D. C. McNab, homestead inspector, Brandon, $1,200 ; W. M. Thompson, sub-agent, Fort Qu'Appelle, $360 ; F. J. Houser, sub-agent, Humboldt, $300 ; D. K. Weber, clerk, Battleford, $720 ; R. E. A. Leach, inspector of agencies, Brandon, $2,000 ; J. W. McLeod, clerk to inspector, Brandon, $900 ; Miss Brennan, clerk, New Westminster, $420; C. Menu, clerk, Winnipeg, $900; Albert Helmer, assistant inspector ranches, Calgary, $1,200 ; J. E. Stauffer, forest ranger, Calgary, $900; C. B. Munroe, clerk, Calgary, $900; J. E. Reilly, clerk, Calgary, $720; Miss E. Wright, clerk, Yorkton, $480; Norman Fisher, clerk, Regina, $780; H. Lyons, clerk, Regina, $780; Ralph Nichol, clerk, Regina, $600; Stanley O'Hara, clerk, Regina, $600; Miss J. McArthur, clerk, Prince Albert, $480; W. N. A. Deyl, clerk, Edmonton, $780.

Total, $27,460 for new appointments. From this deduct the amounts provided in the main estimates of 1905-6, $4,750, reducing the amount to the net sum of $22,710.

Mr. FOSTER. You have already voted for the outside service new salaries amounting to $4,750.

Mr. OLIVER. Provision was made for that amount, but it was not sufficient; so this provision cancels that provision.

Mr. FOSTER. That is cancelled ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is cancelled.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, with reference to the remainder of the money.

Mr. OLIVER. The following are the increases in salary :

T. R. Burpe, assistant commissioner, Ottawa..	$ 200 00

Mr. FOSTER. That leaves a balance of about $5,000 or $6,000 for the minister. What does he propose to do with that?

Mr. FOSTER. Then, after the hon. minister has covered every earthly place he can think of, he wants $10,000 more given to him for what may possibly occur. Does not the hon. minister think that is rather a large amount? I quite agree that there should be some come and go, but it seems to me that $5,000 is sufficient, when you have entered your year and made your final examination of all the services under your control. What I am aiming at is what the hon. minister should wish to have and that is a working amount.

Mr. OLIVER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that as the Minister I am very anxious to keep down the estimate too, but I have been called to account very vigourously by members on the other side of the House by reason of having incurred expenditures without an authorization of the money; in fact, the hon. gentleman was pretty vigorous along that line last night.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. And as a matter of fact the increase of requirement owing to the rush of settlers during the past few years is very great and it must be met; otherwise, very grave injury will result. I cannot say, of course, that $10,000 will be required or will be used, but the best opinion I can get is that in order to be safe we had better ask for that amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not disposed to insist upon that part of it so long as we know definitely just where we are and what is contemplated now, and if there is a margin of $10,000 we will hold the hon. minister responsible for it at our next session. This is a very large increase. I am quite willing to admit that the extension of settlement calling for patents extends the work of the officials over very large areas. If we had time I should like to ask in the case of every one of these what was the reason for the appointment and what was the district to be covered, but I do not feel that we have time at present to do that. What I am after is to get definiteness in the matter and to impress upon the hon. minister that he must confine himself to moneys for which he has a vote. If any extraordinary thing arises that the world will not wait a few days for he should get a Governor General's warrant, if it is possible, but we ought to stand close to the parliamentary authorization of these votes. Now, the next item is:

Further amount required for contingencies, advertising, &c., and salaries of extra clerks at head office, $15,000.

Just on that point. I do not want to go over the ground that I went over last night, but if the hon. minister, after sleeping over it—I do not know that he could have slept much last night with the conscience that he had—feels disposed to acquiesce in what we asked on this side of the House that he should stand by the right hon. Prime Minister's declaration in reference to these officers I think it would facilitate business; otherwise we must bring in a motion and debate that very important question. We cannot go on voting money for officers who enter the field against any party in this Dominion and endeavour to prevent the people's will from having its just indication at the polls.

Mr. OLIVER. The position taken by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, I take it, necessarily governs those who are associated with him in the government.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. minister last night refused to be governed by it.

Mr. OLIVER. No, I hardly agree with the hon. member in that particular. I do not see that it would be possible for me to place myself in the position which the hon. member desires I should be placed in. Having slept over the matter, and I can assure him I had a very good sleep last night, I do not see that I can alter my position. It is regrettable that there should be a difference of opinion between the hon. member and myself as to what position I should take in regard to the administration of the office which I hold, but I am sure he will agree that it is not possible we should always agree as to what should be my action in that office and therefore we will have to agree to disagree.

Mr. FOSTER. That being so there is no use wasting more time on it just now. We will have to introduce a motion and debate the question in the House. Now, in reference to the items of the second sub-item.

Mr. OLIVER. The sum of $85,000 was included in the main estimates for 1905-6 in connection with the vote for contingencies, advertising and salaries of extra clerks at head office, and it is necessary that an additional amount of $15,000 be voted. The additional amount is $15,000, making the total appropriation $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the vote last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. It was divided into two, contingencies and salaries of clerks at head office and advertising. For the year 1904-05 the sum required was contingencies, main estimates, $37,100, supplementary estimates $1,200, salaries and extra clerks at head office and advertising, $38,500, total $87,600. According to the above figures the total amount of the estimates for 1905-06 exceeds this by $12,400. The increase is chiefly in the homestead inspectors' expenses, office contingencies, advertising, homestead and mining regulations, and appointment of extra clerks at head office.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of that vote is for contingencies and how much for other purposes ?

Mr. OLIVER. This statement has been placed in my hands ; statement showing the sums included for the above service in main estimates for fiscal year 1905-6, also sums considered necessary for another year according to present conditions in each case. Contingencies, homestead inspectors' outfits, travelling expenses (main estimates, $12,000) considered necessary for 1906, $16,000, increase, $4,000. The total increase of contingencies is $9,000. The total vote is $45,000 and we are asking for $54,000, making $9,000 increase. In the homestead inspectors there is an increase of $4,000, total, $16,000 ; rangers $4,000 no increase. Dominion lands and Crown timber agents $16,000 in the main estimates, $20,000 asked for, increase $4,000. Travelling expenses superintendents of mines, inspectors of agencies and others, $2,500, no increase. Printing and stationery, $7,500, $8,500 asked for, increase, $1,000. Miscellaneous, freight and express charges telegrams, &c., $3,000, no increase. Advertising, inserting mining and homestead regulations, advertising sale of timber berths &c., $12,500 in main, $14,000 asked for, increase $1,500. Salaries of extra clerks at head office, $32,000, an increase of $4,500. That makes up the sum of $15,000 asked for in the estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a very large increase in the extra clerks in this city. I suppose the minister could not have investigated this himself, but must have taken the report of his officers.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. It would not be possible for me to know personally.

Mr. FOSTER. Why are these extra clerks necessary ?

Mr. OLIVER. The patents are now falling in in very large numbers and their preparation is one considerable cause of increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not your patent printed and the blanks filled in ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are fifteen different forms of patent, and although they are printed there is a great deal of filling in. That is only one reason for the increase.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the others ?

Mr. OLIVER. The records of all the land and mineral transactions are kept at the head office and they are increasing very rapidly causing a great deal of extra work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some time ago I brought before the attention of the House a complaint made by Mr. D. G. Seymour, of Oxbow, Assiniboia. Perhaps the minister has not got the information with regard to that, but I draw his attention to it again. Mr. Seymour says he has been very badly treated in connection with a location for homstead entry. If the minister will ask one of his clerks to look at the 'Hansard' of ten days ago he will see I gave full particulars of the case then.

There is another matter as to which I have a communication which I wish to bring to the attention of the House, and it is with regard to the settlement of the railway belt in British Columbia. I have not had an opportunity of investigating the subject mentioned in this letter, but I will read it to the minister and possibly I may get an opportunity of investigating it while it is receiving the attention of the department. My correspondent, of whom I know nothing except that he writes very intelligently in regard to the subject, says :

I write you with the hope that you may see your way to call the attention of the House to certain existing abuses under the present Dominion Crown Timber Regulations which are retarding the settlement and development of that portion of the province of British Columbia known as the railway belt. I desire to lay before you the following facts :

Settlers are being refused entry to lands for homesteads under the plea that such lands are portions of timber berths and cannot be entered for without the consent of the lessees, though the merchantable timber has long since been cut off said lands. The result is that thousands of acres in the vicinity of Kault in the district of Yale have been purchased by the holders of the timber leases, with the assistance of the officials driving off the settlers. These lands are among the most valuable in the railway belt and were recently timber berths, but are now being offered to the public, without any further clearing having been done, at $25 per acre by the officers of the Columbia River Lumber Company. It would be interesting to know what they paid for them. The same thing is being attempted in this district of Northeast Kootenay between Donald and the southern end of the railway belt, a distance of some fifty miles on the west side of the Columbia river, by the same clique of land grabbers.

This state of affairs could not exist without the connivance of the Crown timber inspector for British Columbia, and the homestead inspector for British Columbia, and I submit, demands investigation. I would suggest that the Crown timber regulations for the railway belt in British Columbia should be so amended that it would be the plain duty of the Crown timber inspectors, after portions of a limit had been denuded of merchantable timber, to declare said lands open for entry, and that all applications to purchase said lands should be advertised at least sixty days before the application could be received by the government ; and said advertisements and notices should contain the price offered by the would-be purchaser. In all cases, I submit, the homesteader should have the first right. None of the lands should be purchased for at least five years after being thrown open.

Under the agreement between the government of British Columbia and the government of Canada, dated 1883, 'the government of Canada binds itself that all the lands in said belt shall be open to settlement on the same terms and conditions as theretofore existing in the province of British Columbia.' That agreement, it appears to me, clearly gives the homesteader the first right even before a timber lease.

Under the present working of the regulations the homesteader has no show if, as is apparentlay the case at the present time, the Crown timber inspector and the homestead inspector act in the interest of scheming speculators.

I think that you will agree that the matter demands investigation, and if these lands near Kault have been acquired by speculators with the fraudulent connivance of the government officials, said sales should be cancelled.

I do not know anything about the subject ; but, as the letter seems to be written by an intelligent man, who professes to know that of which he speaks, I take the only course open to me, of bringing the matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Would the hon. gentleman object to give the name of the writer?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Though I see nothing in the letter requiring the name to be withheld, I am not authorized to give it ; but I will write to the gentleman and inform him that his name has been asked for in parliament, and if I obtain his permission, I will give his name to the Minister of the Interior.

With regard to certain immigrants detained in Halifax because suffering from trachoma, I will not say anything at present, but I will hand to the Minister of the Interior, a letter which has come to me and which he will be good enough to return to me after he has looked into the subject.

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that when a timber lease is granted, the lessee has all the rights in the area subject to this condition, that when an application is made for a homestead within the area on the ground that such homestead has been denuded of timber, and that the granting of the homestead will not injure the timber still remaining, an inspection is made by the department and the homestead is granted according to the rules of the department. It used to be that in the railway belt a dollar an acre was charged for homestead lands, but now they are free there just as they are in the Northwest Territories. That is the policy pursued by the department. If there has been a collusion between the officials of the department and a certain company, that is certainly a very objectionable matter, and on the statement which has been placed before the House by the hon. member, it will be my duty to make careful inquiry into it to see that no such arrangement is carried into effect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know anything about the company ; I did not know what its name was, nor did I know of its existence nor who composed it. Therefore I cannot say anything about that. Might I ask, so far as the railway belt is concerned, what are the regulations in regard to timber rights ? Under what conditions would any citizen of the country get a timber berth in the railway belt ?

Mr. OLIVER. The timber regulations which apply to the Northwest also apply to the railway belt of British Columbia, which is administered by the Department of the Interior. The procedure is that when any person desires to acquire a timber lease, he makes application to the department to have it advertised. He gives such a description as he can of the area required. An advertisement is then inserted for one time in the nearest newspaper, giving the are of the limit, the location, and the date and hour when tenders for the work will be opened in Ottawa. Printed slips are also sent out to parties who may be supposed to be interested in timber limits. The idea is to give as much publicity as possible at the minimum of expense, to the fact that the sale is about to take place. On the day appointed tenders are opened in Ottawa, and the limit is awarded to the person who offers the highest bonus. The lessee pays so much rental, and I think also pays a royalty on the timber that is cut. The person who pays the highest bonus is awarded the license. All the conditions are equal to everybody.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the lessee receive it for a certain term, or is he allowed an unlimited time in which to clear the timber off ?

Mr. OLIVER. In the letter of the law he only gets it for a year ; but the custom is to renew the license year by year so long as the licensee pays the rent and complies with the other requirements which the government lays upon him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there an investigation held?

Mr. OLIVER. As I have said, whenever any person applies for a limit, we make an investigation, but it has not been the practice to investigate of our own motion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Regarding the granting of the right to cut timber on a limit, the law in the province of Ontario is that when a man secures a limit he cuts what timber he likes. But the time has come when the government should define the minimum size to be cut. That is the only way in which we can keep our forests as a perpetual source of supply and profit. Such a policy is in force in the countries of Europe and has been very successful, and if we do not adopt such a course, in a short time we will not have sufficient timber to supply the needs of the country.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that the regulations under which the lumbermen work do not warrant them in cutting timber under a certain size. There is the forestry branch of the department which is being got under way with the view of looking towards the preservation of our forests.

Further amount required for protection of timber in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and the railway belt in British Columbia, and tree culture in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, $10,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the policy of the government with reference to the Riding Mountain timber reserve? Some time ago I informed the minister that I would bring the question up in supply. It appears that the government did contemplate at one time altering the boundaries of Riding Mountain. We had a great deal of discussion in a previous session with reference to the boundaries, especially of township 19, range 19, which is included in the present boundaries of that reservation. The Canadian Northern Railway Company selected some of their lands in that township and handed over some of them to the Manitoba government, and the balance, I believe, to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. All three have sold to individual settlers certain lands in that township notwithstanding the fact that it is contained within the area of the timber reserve. These individual purchasers are having considerable difficulty in securing their titles owing to the fact that the Dominion government have taken the position that the Canadian Northern had no right to dispose of the lands; but it appears that the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) admitted in this House that the Canadian Northern had the right to make their selection in that township and was anxious that they should take other lands outside the township in exchange for these, so that he might lock up this township as a special reserve. Some 25 to 30 half-breed families have located in the neighbourhood of Deerwater lake and a number of good Scandinavian settlers from the States have purchased land in that township either from the Manitoba government or these two companies. They have paid one or more instalments and have made improvements, but still it appears they cannot get any assurance that their titles will be recognized by the Department of the Interior. It would be well, should the government decide to inclose that township within the timber reserves, to notify those people or else throw the country open for settlement. There is very little timber in that country as it is largely cleared, but it has splendid agricultural lands. I have many communications from half-breeds and individual purchasers, Scandinavian settlers, who are anxious to know in what position they are likely to be. One of these settlers has spent some $2,000 already, and of course is very anxious not to lose all that money.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not had time to go fully into the question, and since it has given my predecessor a good deal of trouble my hon. friend will admit that it is not one which I can settle without some considerable inquiry. My own view is that if these people have settled in a township along the outskirts of the reserve, and if the facts are as stated by the hon. member, they should be confirmed in their holdings; but I am given to understand that their location is considerably within the reserve. That being the case, while it would be a very great hardship to the settlers to have to remove, their remaining on the land in the very heart of the reserve would render it impossible to keep that section intact as a timber reserve and would prejudice the preservation of the whole area as such. I understand that some arrangement has already been made with some of the land owners to give them an exchange of land. If we cannot allow them to remain on the land without seriously prejudicing the general public interest in the reserve, we will have to make the most equitable arrangement we can at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) said last session that he had everything cleared up with regard to that township except one point. He had arranged with the Canadian Northern Railway Company for an exchange of land. He was to give them lands outside the reserve in exchange for those inside it, but there were some individual purchasers that he still had to deal with. The land is not on the outskirts of the reserve. Although it is devoid of timber, it is within the timber area. If the hon. gentleman says it is impossible to allow these people to remain on their lands, I might read to him a letter written to me on March 16th by his deputy minister concerning a communication I received from Mr. Chriss Larson, who was one of the Scandinavian settlers :—

Ottawa, March 16, 1905.

Dear Dr. Roche,

I duly received your letter of the 2nd instant, inclosing one from Mr. Chriss Larson of Danvers, Minnedosa, Manitoba, who is desirous of acquiring certain lands in Township 19, Range 19, West.

In reply I beg to state that it will not be possible for the department to allow anybody to locate within the Riding Mountain Timber Reserve, and I understand arrangements are now being made with the railway company from which lands have been purchased in the reserve to have exchanges effected so that no lands within the reserve will be disposed of for settlement purposes. I am sorry that Mr. Larson should have had any difficulty with regard to the land which he would like to secure, but as the proper protection of the timber areas in the west is one of public importance, I have no doubt that you will agree with me that it would not be possible to permit any one to locate within these reserves, as it would be quite impossible to exercise proper supervision towards their maintenance if once we permitted any one to locate within these timber areas.

I return Mr. Larson's letter herewith.

Yours truly,

W. W. CORY,
(Deputy Minister.)

I have forwarded this letter to Mr. Larson expressing my regret that apparently his title was not going to be recognized. Should this prove to be the case, I desire to say that one of the hon. gentleman's officials, Mr. White, appeared up there last year and informed the half-breeds, who were located there, that the lands were going to be handed over to them and he also informed the Scandinavian settlers that they would have to vacate their settlements. This was in the latter part of September and these half-breeds all have locations in that township. It may have been done for a purpose, in fact no doubt it was, but I was present in court and it appeared that as a result of the advice given by Mr. White, the timber inspector who told the half-breeds to go on and take possession of the property, one of these men actually went to a field and took up Larson's potatoes. Larson had purchased from the government but the half-breeds had appropriated this land, as the result of the advice of the government officials and then he was arrested for having stolen the potatoes. I was present at the trial and I shall read a portion of White's evidence. He said :

I told them, the two Andersons that they must give up the property by order of E. T. Stevenson——

That is the Crown Timber Agent at Winnipeg.

—as it was to be left in possession of the Breeds and I told the breeds to take possession of the property and make any improvements they saw fit.

This is the sworn testimony of a government official in September last. The government had decided to allow the breeds to take possession. Do they intend to turn the Scandinavians off and the breeds off as well or did they only desire to keep the breeds off until after November 3 ? The breeds are anxious to own the land and so are the Scandinavians. Surely it is not the policy of the government to discriminate against any class of settlers in that way. Either the reserves should be maintained intact or homesteading should be permitted. I might also say that the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) caused his inspectors to go through that country and report on the entire matter of the reserve about a year ago and the report was to the effect that this timber reserve should be maintained intact and no settlers should be allowed to settle as fires would break out in the forest and great destruction would result. Notwithstanding this report this question has been kept dilly-dallying along and these settlers are in a state of uncertainty as to whether they will be allowed to locate there permanently or not. I think this question should be easily answered by the Minister of the Interior, are these half-breeds to be allowed to take possession of the land, are the Scandinavian settlers to be turned off the land, or what possible disposition is to be made of the land in view of the fact that the Canadian nation has properly selected its land there and disposed of it to individual settlers, amongst whom are some men of means who have come from the United States. I do not think it is at all right to have the question remain in a state of uncertainty for such a very long time. I wrote the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) on the subject last September, and he replied on September 7 as follows :

My dear Sir,—Replying to your letter of the 1st instant, I have now before me the question of the squatters in township 19, range 19, and expect in a few days to deal with the matter and give instructions as to what action should be taken.

As this was on the eve of being settled on the 7th of September and the minister then expected that in a few days he would be able to give instructions surely now, some ten months later, the government ought to have a policy on the question and not keep these breeds in uncertainty as to whether they are going to be allowed the land or not.

Mr. OLIVER. What would the hon. member suggest?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I suggest either one of two things, either the people should be notified that this is to be maintained as a timber reserve and entirely closed up to prevent the destruction of our forests there or these people should be allowed the privilege of homesteading in whatever area the government decides to open for settlement. I understand that this township 19 range 19, is an agricultural section with very little timber but if the government find, after receiving the reports from the inspector, that they can throw these townships open with safety to the reserve, let them do so. Some of these half-breeds have been there for two years, there are some 35 families of half-breeds there and as a matter of fact if the government would decide what is to be done with these lands and they are not allowed to settle there, they would pick up and go west, but they are kept in uncertainty as to whether they will be permitted to remain there or not. One policy or the other should be decided upon and the matter settled.

Mr. OLIVER. As the statement will show the House, this certainly is a very difficult and intricate question and one that involves very material rights of individuals and without going into the matter personally I would not wish to make myself responsible for any action that has been taken. My desire is to protect individual rights where it is possible to do so, and this will be done if it possibly can be and public rights still be maintained. I understand that the member wishes to have the matter settled at the earliest possible date. I am quite at one with him in that, but as I stated to the hon. member for North Toronto it has not been within the bound of possibility in the short time I have been in charge of the department that I should give attention to this and some other intricate matters to which I should give attention in order to reach an intelligent and satisfactory settlement.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Can the minister say whether instructions were issued by the department to the effect that these half-breeds were to be allowed occupation of the lands, because I have read the sworn testimony of an official of the government who says he was sent from Winnipeg to notify the Larsons to vacate because these lands were to be occupied by the half-breeds. He surely did not do that off his own bat.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot imagine that any instructions of that kind were issued from this office and I suppose it will be the contention of the hon. member that if such instructions were issued in any way they would hardly come under my notice at this time. I think I can safely say no such instructions were issued from this office or with the knowledge of the minister. In regard to the rights of the half-breeds I rather imagine that their position is rather different from that of the other settlers. If I am not mistaken the half-breeds were in occupation before the lands were declared a timber reserve.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Some of them went in within the last 18 months.

Mr. OLIVER. They are not then in a different position from the other settlers and will not be treated in a different manner. If they were there before the reserve was created it would complicate the matter. If the half-breeds and Scandinavians went in at the same time they will both be treated in the same way.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that no instructions were issued from this office. But Mr. White does not say so; he says he got instructions from the Winnipeg office which is subordinate to this office, and if instructions were not issued to White at all, it places him in an awkward position when in the sworn testimony he says that he was sent and :

I told them they must vacate by order of E. T. Stevenson, who was the timber agent at Winnipeg; that land was to be left in the possession of the breeds and I told the breeds to take possession of the property and make any improvements they saw fit.

There are other settlers in that timber reserve, there are Galician settlers there who have been there for five or six years. There are Galicians in this district at sections 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 18, 20, 22, and 24 in township 20, range 32 and section 18, township 20, range 21. There are many scores of Galician settlers in this reserve, but these lands have heretofore been exempt from homestead entry so the government should either tell these people that they are not allowed to remain there or they should be given the privileges to enter for their lands.

Mr. OLIVER. Are they scattered through the reserve or simply living in the district?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. As to this particular section of the reserve I do not know whether they are in settlements or not, but they have been there between four and five years and last November they were assured they were to be allowed entry for section 9, but they are certainly within the area of the timber reserve.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I may be out of order, but I want to call attention to the fact that the temperature in this room is 80 degrees at the present moment. I think some one is neglecting his duty. If the Minister of Public Works will make inquiry he will find that in the clubhouses on the other side they can regulate the temperature during the summer months to any point they please.

Mines Branch—To provide for the expenditure connected with experimenting the smelting of iron ores by electro-thermi process, $15,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I have a memorandum here containing the information which I will read if desired, but it will be printed in the report.

Some hon. MEMBERS. That will do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought a report appeared in some of the newspapers a little while ago to the effect that this system could not be applied on a very large scale.

Mr. OLIVER. They have not been making any serious experiments. There was an investigation held in Europe last year, and as a result of that investigation we ask for this sum of money for the purpose of making a thorough experiment in this country. This work is being carried out under the direction of Dr. Haanel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior who is the director of the geological survey at the present time.

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Bell is the acting director, no director has yet been appointed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long has he been acting director ?

Mr. OLIVER. Ever since the death of Dr. Dawson, about five years ago. I may say that this vote has nothing to do with the geological survey vote.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know it has not, but I want to mention the geological survey, because year after year, we have been going on without any regularly appointed director. It seems to me that is rather a curious condition. Dr. Dawson, a very able man to whom this country owed a great deal and whose memory we all respect, was director at the time of his death. Since then there has been no director, but one of the officials of the department has been merely acting as such. I do not know anything about the qualifications of Dr. Bell, or of any other man in the department ; but it would seem to me that it is the duty of the government to make some regular appointment. If Dr. Bell has been acting director to the satisfaction of the government during the past five years, if he has been able to carry on the administration of the department during that time in a satisfactory manner, one would suppose that there ought not to be any great hesitation in appointing him. On the other hand, if he has not been conducting the affairs of the department in a satisfactory manner, it seems to me it is the duty of the administration to find some one who can do so. I see no reason whatever why this temporary and tentative condition of affairs should be allowed to continue for a period of five years in respect of a work that is so important to the people of this country as the work of the geological survey. I would like the minister, before his estimates are finally passed, to make a statement to the House as to why this period of five years has been allowed to elapse without making an appointment, and whether it is in contemplation at once to make a permanent one.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to this matter, the importance of which I fully recognize, I am unfortunately in much the same position as in regard to some other matters in the department—I have not had time nor opportunity to deal with the question. The ex-minister who was in charge of the department since the death of Dr. Dawson, had not seen fit to appoint a director to the office, I have assumed that he must have had good reasons for taking that course, and I am not in a position as yet to question the reasons he may have had. I may say, however, that I quite appreciate the importance of the position, and of having a responsible director at the head of the survey. I beg to assure the committee, that the matter will have my best attention at the earliest possible moment, and that a permanent appointment will be made. Beyond that, I am not able to make any statement. I have not been able to get in touch with that branch of the department sufficiently well to enable me to form an opinion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I appreciate that. It is a reflection, I think, on Dr. Bell to keep him in that transitory position, the position of acting in a department where he might reasonably look forward to a permanent appointment. To keep him there for five years is neither fair to him nor to the department, nor to the country. If, as I said, he has been able to administer the affairs of the department with a reasonable degree of satisfaction during the past five years, that circumstance would entitle him to every consideration at the hands of the government. If, however, that is not the case in the opinion of the administration, there is nevertheless the same good reason why that post should be filled at once. If there are any good reasons why Dr. Bell should not be permanently appointed, I would suppose that these same good reasons would have been sufficient to prevent the government from continuing him in this temporary position for five years. I would suppose that a man who has been in charge of that department for five years ought, unless there are some extraordinary circumstances of which I know nothing, to receive the permanent appointment. Five years is a considerable time in the official life of a man at the head of the Geological Survey; and if there are any such reasons known to the late Minister of the Interior as those to which the present minister has alluded, I think it is right that they should be known to the House. But I cannot conceive that any such reasons existed, otherwise they would not have warranted the continuance of Dr. Bell in the position which he now holds during the period which has intervened since the death of Dr. Dawson.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to be understood as suggesting any reasons reflecting at all on Dr. Bell. I might suggest, however, that this is a very technical and scientific position, and it might take some time to decide by experience as to Dr. Bell's fitness for the position of director; and supposing that the late minister's decision were against him, it would take a great many years to find some one as satisfactory to take that position.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Having been in touch with the Geological Survey for a great many years, and realizing the ability of Dr. Bell, I cannot but re-echo the words which have been uttered by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I can assure the hon. minister that Dr. Bell is a man of very high standing, not only in Canada, but throughout the world. He is one of the most prominent scientists that there are in the civilized world, and I am satisfied that if the hon. minister will only investigate the matter thoroughly he will find that he is a capable person to fill that position. I sincerely hope that he will reach a decision before long, because Dr. Bell has been unfairly dealt with. By reason of keeping him out of this position he has been unable to accept a more remunerative position, and in many other ways he has been unfairly dealt with by keeping him in the position in which he is at the present time.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Dominion Lands—Further amount required for surveys, $100,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The extent of the surveys were not known when the treasury board met, and the $500,000 of the main estimates will have to be increased.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. How much was spent last year altogether?

Mr. OLIVER. $750,000. This year the main estimate was $500,000 as it was believed the extensive surveys made in the past would render some surveys unnecessary this year. However, this $100,000 will be required, making in all for the year $600,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are the surveys ahead of settlement?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes and no. We have no means to define where settlement is going. In some parts it is ahead of the survey and in some parts the survey is beyond the settlement. There have been surveys made many years ago in parts of the country where there still is no settlement.

Construction of water works and sewage system, Banff, Northwest Territories, $95,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Will that be the total cost?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is the government constructing this?

Mr. OLIVER. Banff park is under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, and in connection with the springs and other attractions as a health resort a town has grown up. The government owns the town, the land being merely leased and consequently the town is not in a position to build water works and a sewage system. It is proposed to put in a system which will supply the town including the hotel. A revenue will be derived from it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the income pay the expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. It is believed that the income from the Canadian Pacific Railway hotels and the equipment around the park under direct supervision of the government will more than pay the interest on the cost.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under what title do the residents of the town hold their leases?

Mr. OLIVER. It is an annual lease subject to renewal if the conditions are complied with. The object of the government at the time was to preserve the character of the park as an ideal summer resort.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the extent of the town ?

Mr. OLIVER. The park is fifty miles in length and ten or fifteen wide and the town would not occupy more than a quarter section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What policy do you intend to follow if the town should grow ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot speak as a minister but as the representative of the district it was my opinion that some arrangement should be made to give a title in the limited area occupied by the town as an encouragement to the erection of the better class of buildings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the intention is to encourage the development of the town the minister's idea would be the correct one; the town itself would then take charge of works of this kind.

Advance for seed grain to needy settlers in the west, $7,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much was expended last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. Between $5,000 and $4,000. The crops of these settlers were destroyed by hail last year and we supplied them with this seed. The government takes a lien on the homestead as repayment for the loan.

Mr. OSLER. Have the debts for seed grain been wiped out or cancelled ?

Mr. OLIVER. They have not all been wiped out, but they very largely have been. Speaking generally, they are wiped out.

Mr. OSLER. Why not have them all wiped out ? If the people are not able to pay now, they will never be able to pay.

Mr. OLIVER. The government of course can at any time collect by enforcing the lien against the land ; but that is liable to be construed to be a very serious hardship.

Mr. OSLER. I quite agree with that. I speak not with the idea of enforcing them, but with the idea of getting them wiped out. It is not right to have these liens hanging over a settler for years, and I think it would be better to wipe them off entirely and get rid of them.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a very proper suggestion, and so far as I know I will act on it. I have no desire to have these matters hanging ; but while we do not want to be hard on the settler, we have never been permitted by parliament to relieve the settler from the obligation.

Further amount required for engraving, lithographing and printing maps of the Dominion and the Northwest Territories, $11,800.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are these maps printed ?

Mr. OLIVER. This estimate includes the following details : map showing even numbered sections in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, homesteaded, sold, &c., $2,500; map showing odd numbered sections in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, granted to railways, &c., $2,500 ; mounting 1,000 copies of even numbered sections map, $800; printing and binding economic atlas, $6,000; total, $11,800.

Mr. BERGERON. I received the other day an atlas which I think is very interesting. I was told yesterday in the department that it was only a sample, and that it was not decided that more would be printed. Do I understand that that is the case ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is under the immigration branch. I think an appropriation has been asked for a larger number to be printed, and as soon as they are, they will be available for distribution.

Mr. BERGERON. At the commencement of the session I had some copies from the Department of the Interior by the courtesy of the deputy minister, and I sent some to the schools in my county, where they have been very much appreciated. The atlas is the most modern geography of Canada to be had, and is looked upon as a very good thing. If it does not cost too much money, I would urge my hon. friend to have a good many of these issued, so that they can be given to members of parliament to be sent to the different schools in their counties.

Mr. OLIVER. I think provision is made for an additional number to be printed, and I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion. I do not think they could be put to a better use.

Immigration—further amount required for salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister give us in the first place a tabulated statement of all the agents and employees whom it is proposed to pay out of this amount ?

Mr. OSLER. In connection with this estimate, although I do not want to take up the time of the House at any length, I wish to state that I have been requested by the Toronto District Trades and Labour Council to submit to parliament certain facts which they allege in connection with the Canadian immigration office in Great Britain. They have sent me this memorandum, which I dare say has been sent to the government, but I have been requested to read it, and I therefore do so:

Whereas the Dominion government has, from time to time, declared that it was its desire to oust the Leopold agency from the same building occupied by the Dominion government immigration agency, in London, England;

And whereas charges were made on the floor of the House of Commons last session that officials of the government agency at London were in league with this same Leopold, which charges were denied by Hon. Mr. Sifton, then Minister of the Interior, who invited information that would substantiate any such charge;

And whereas the Dominion government agency at London is under the charge of W. T. R. Preston, who has at various times shown his animosity towards organized labour and who has flouted the well-founded protests of organized labour against the unfair and dishonest tactics of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and Louis Leopold, who professes to be supplied with information respecting thousands of vacancies discovered by the said association;

And whereas these vacancies exist only in the minds of the members of the said association, as has been proved by immigrant after immigrant who has been deluded into coming to Canada by the promises of immediate employment made by Leopold, on the promptings of himself and the members of the said association;

And whereas this council has evidence in its possesion, both of the connection of the government agency, at London, with Leopold and of the connection between the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and Leopold;

Therefore be it resolved, that the Dominion governmetn be requested to make immediate investigation into the charge hereby made that immigrants are deliberately and knowingly sent from the office of the government, at London, to the Leopold offices in the same building, and that copies of the statements of the immigrants concerned be sent to the government along with this resolution;

And be it further resolved, that copies of this resolution and of the said statements be forwarded to the members for the city of Toronto in the House of Commons, with a request to have the same ventilated in the House of Commons at the earliest opportunity.

In that connection there are corroborative statements from Colin A. Gunn and Wm. A. Moore, to the effect that the Leopold Agency is run in connection with the Canadian immigration office, both being in the same building. I think it may be assumed that whether these charges are absolutely true or not there is certainly something in them. This Leopold Agency does business under a name which would lead the public to suppose that they were under the direct control of this government and were acting for the government. Their office is immediately above the office of the Canadian immigration office in London, and it is stated very strongly that when an emigrant or an inquiry goes to the government office, the inquiry is referred to and the emigrant is sent upstairs to the Leopold Agency. Leopold is the man who really gives the information, and the Leopold Agency gets a very large commission from the steamship companies on all emigrants it sends to Canada. I am told that a man who makes an inquiry at the Canadian immigration office is sent upstairs to the Leopold office. I took particular pains to find out whether that was the case or not by writing to my confidential agent in London last year, and I have a report that it is the case. Therefore, I can directly, from personal knowledge, confirm one of these charges. The modus operandi is that this office upstairs persuades the man to come to Canada, and it sells him a ticket by a certain steamship agency. It is stated that this agency is the agent for the Allan Steamship Company, but that I do not know. When the ticket is sold to the intending emigrant the agent is paid a commission by the steamship company of from $5 to $12, and perhaps more. There is an inducement to send an emigrant to Canada whether he is fit to come to this country or not, because it is immaterial to the agent what emigrant he sends so long as he gets his commission. This agency has absolutely no interest in Canada ; its only interest is to sell a man a ticket and send him out here, whether he is fit or unfit. The accusation is made very distinctly that the Canadian government agent is in partnership with the emigration office upstairs.

That statement is repeated over and over again, and the fact that the two officies are so close together and that the immigrants are sent up from the Canadian office to the upper office gives very considerable justification for the suspicion. From my own knowledge I can say that we have undesirable immigrants sent out here through that agency. I have in mind a case which came under my notice within the last month of a very undesirable immigrant, a doctor by profession, who evidently had gone down hill. He came here as he stated to me with the distinct information from this agency that any doctor coming into Canada could practice in any part of Canada without further examination. Here is a man who was probably not a success in the old country, a professional man, a man not able to make his way there, but he thought he could come out here and practise medicine anywhere. He wanted to go to British Columbia and thought probably any doctor there would be able to make a living. I think that it is the duty of the government not in any perfunctory manner, but very strongly, to see that there is no connection between the Canadian government immigration office in London and any steamship office or any steamship agent, and I am quite sure that there is a great deal of truth in the statements that have been made. I am not making the statement that there is truth in the statement that the amount is divided beween the Canadian agent and this particular agency, but the inference is quite natural that that is the case, and if it is the case as stated very openly and very clearly in this resolution which has been passed by the Toronto District Labour Council, I have pointed out that it is in the interest of this particular agency or of any other agency to send to Canada the most undesirable immigrants because they get their pay the moment they have sold a ticket whether the immigrant they send here is good, bad or indifferent, or whether or not the immigrant they send here has to be sent back by the steamship company. It opens the door for the admission into this country of the worst kind of men. I am not referring to diseased men, but to a class of men who may be landed on our shores who are unsuccessful, who have been unsuccessful in the old country, men whom their friends may send out here in order to get rid of them, and there is no way of stopping that except by a close supervision of the offices in London and by seeing that there is no connection whatever between the Canadian office and any private agency, steamship office or immigrant agency. I know further from my own knowledge that most undesirable immigrants are being sent out; men who have probably been failures in their own trades in England are sent out here on the promise that they will get immediately situations, artisans, skilled men who have been brought up at trades for which we have no opening in this country. Naturally these are men who have perhaps not been very careful of themselves in the old country, men who have skill in some particular branch of trade that we do not have in this country. It is easily seen how with that combination of Canadian government emigration office and private emigration office upstairs, which to all appearance is a part of the Canadian government emigrant office we can have people deluded by promises not made by our own agents it is true, but made to these unfortunate men who go there believing that they are our agents, and I have shown you how it is a money-making business for these people to so delude people and send to this country bad immigrants who are entirely unsuitable, and I hope the Minister of the Interior will make a point of looking into that matter and seeing that, as far as possible, this evil is stopped.

Mr. OLIVER. The matter has already been brought before the House not only this session but last session.

Mr. OSLER. True, but nothing has been done, and it may be said that the same thing is going on now.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course I have not been sufficiently long in the department to become familiar with all the facts, but I can assure the House it is the policy of the department to encourage the immigration of people who have a knowledge of agriculture and desire to engage in it, but it is not the policy of the government to encourage any such enterprises as was mentioned by the hon. member. If any such enterprise exists it is entirely illegitimate and it is entirely outside the operations of the department. Apparently these parties are taking advantage of the situation to give improper information to people. This is directly contrary to the policy of the department, and it certainly will be the effort of the department to abate the evil as thoroughly as possible and at the earliest possible moment. At the same time there are difficulties which I am sure my hon. friend will recognize, that there are abuses and evils which we may not be able to remedy, and to remove all cause of complaint, but I can assure him every effort will be made.

Mr. OSLER. The matter was brought before the House very strongly last session and yet nothing has been done. It was again brought before the House this session, but nothing has been done. The London agency is not an agency where you get agricultural immigrants; the farmers do not go there and there is only one way to check this, and that is to see that the Canadian emigration office is not practically a branch office of private emigration concern whose sole profit is to send any man to this country no matter how undesirable he may be. That is the onus, that is the charge upon the government, and it is their duty to take steps and to stop undesirable immigration to this country.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call the minister's attention to the fact that although the vote for immigration has been increasing tremendously in the last four or five years, this year he comes in with a very largely increased amount for salaries. The whole vote for salaries is $187,000, for agents, employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries. Now, how long is the minister going on with this increase of salaried work? What is the policy of the department with reference to that, or is there no policy decided upon yet? A great many people think that with reference to immigration there are two cardinal evils. Whilst you get a very large vote for immigration, you are certainly dispensing an immense amouut of that vote on salaries of officials who are scattered everywhere. Another large proportion of that vote goes to advertisements, and then as a result of both these things, you are getting in a large number of people—and it looks now as if the number would continue to increase—a great many of whom, although good in their several ways, are not exactly the kind of people we would best like to have in our country which we want to build up as a homogeneous country, and whilst the process of assimilation will go on to a certain extent there is a point beyond which the digestive apparatus will not be sufficient to digest the mass that is thrown into it. As I said before, it seems to me that we ought to be a little more careful as to the character of the people and their distribution when they come in. Now, it does look to me as if we were approaching very closely, maybe entirely, to that point when, instead of making larger increases for the propaganda on immigration, we can afford to draw in these expenses rather than increase them. The best accretion to population and the strongest accretion we will get from this time out, is that stream which is drawn by what you may call attraction, the immigrants that have already come and made their homes with us, writing back to their friends. It is that process of attraction, through information, and actual settlement, and news going back from the new to the old country, which is drawing these large streams of immigration. That is one thing that is now commencing to act with great power. The other thing that is acting is a condition of things which lies in the fact that to-day those lands are well known, their extent, and their richness, and their productive capability are well known; and you may say that Canada to-day probably offers to the land seeker of the right type the very best field in the world. Take climate, and productivity, and easiness of conditions, and easy and inexpensive acquisition of lands sufficient for the immigrant to settle upon—all these things mark out Canada, as they become known, and they are becoming widely known. Now, the question is whether we have not gone as far as we should go in this matter of active propaganda by means of these diversified and multiplied agents. Has the minister or the department looked into that side of the question, and if so, what have they thought of the matter? One of the easiest things, as the minister will find out, is to add to the clerks and immigration agents. The pressure is interminable, and it is a constant struggle, I imagine, to bear up against it. It is a different thing and a harder thing to keep these men up to their work and to make sure that they are giving good work for the pay they are getting. But with reference to the first point I mentioned, what is the idea at the present time of the department over which my hon. friend presides, and his own idea, if he has formed any, with reference to the policy of the future in this respect?

Mr. OLIVER. The remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Foster) are quite appropriate. The fact that the immigration expenditure is increasing from year to year deserves careful attention, and I beg to assure the hon. gentleman that it will receive the most careful consideration at my hands. At the same time, the House and the country are aware that the campaign of publicity which was entered upon some years ago by the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior has been productive of very substantial results, results which are great materially, and morally as well. It is not so many years ago since the hon. minister himself, standing on this side of the House, would scarcely have used such sweeping commendation of the resources of Canada as he has used to-day, or if he had, he would have received a very faint endorsation from the large majority of members of this House. The campaign of publicity entered upon by the immigration branch of the Interior Department some years ago has not only revealed Canada to the world, but it has revealed Canada to Canadians themselves, and has thereby been of great advantage to Canada, morally as well as materially. When a policy has been so successful as this policy has been in all its particulars, and in every branch, it is less subject to criticism. But my hon. friend will understand that to undertake to lay down a contrary policy from that which has hitherto been followed, is a serious responsibility not to be entered upon without most careful consideration, even by those who disagree with that policy, and still less by those who do not disagree with it. In regard to the character of the immigration and a possible change of direction of immigration effort, I think it is reasonable to say that as conditions change the direction of effort may very well be changed also. In the days when the Northwest Territories of Canada did not attract even the attention of Canadians for settlement, it may have been necessary to look further afield for settlers than is necessary to-day, when the Northwest is attracting the attention of people all over the world, the best people in the world, and it is admitted universally that we have the best things to offer, the best field in the world. Under these circumstances, it is quite proper to consider the desirability of adapting our future efforts to the changed conditions; and while the same energy may be necessary in attempting to secure the best class of immigrants, the effort may very well take a different direction from what it did when the country was not so well known.

The policy of the Immigration Department, as I have understood it, has been to enter upon a campaign of publicity to get before the world the advantages of the Northwest as a field for settlement, to give the best possible facilities for the placing of settlers upon the land, and for handling their dealings with the government to the best advantage to these settlers. That has been the policy of the department in the past, it is the policy which has been successful and it is the policy which will be pursued in the future. Alterations in that policy in detail may be made according to changed conditions, but I think I may go as far as to say that it would be my effort to continue the vigorous campaign of publicity which has been carried on and to carry on the system of facilitating settlement, the placing of settlers upon the land and providing all possible advantages in connection with their dealing with the government. Whether it shall be necessary to still further increase the requests to parliament for funds or not I cannot say. I am sure that while it is the desire of the government, as it is the desire, certainly, of myself, that all duties shall be discharged with every attention to economy and efficiency, I am still assured that the government will not hesitate to take the responsibility of asking parliament, and I am sure that parliament will not refuse the request if it shall be seen necessary to still continue the work, for a large appropriation in the interest of immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say to my hon. friend is that from this time on he will find parliament, whilst disposed to do everything which is reasonable, fair and necessary for inducing proper immigration into this country, more and more opposed to the multiplication of a vast horde of employees, the utility of which from this time on will be more and more doubtful. But it is impossible to discuss that question now. The hon. minister will have some time to think over the whole matter and I hope he will be able, although it will be a heavy undertaking, to make himself familiar with the work so that when we meet next session we may be in a better position to discuss the question with a full knowledge of the subject. In the meantime I beg to move:

That this vote be diminshed by the amount of $900 being the salary of Robt. Nixon who has been reported upon examination to have been guilty of embezzlement of public funds and malfeasance in office.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the motion and in regard to the general question I think it is very proper to move in the direction in which the hon. gentleman has moved. If we are to have publicity, if we are to have the handling of the facilities given to the immigrants, if we are to deal with them satisfactorily in the difficulties of their settlement, we have to have officials and we have to have money to pay these officials. It is not a question of how much money is required or how many officials are required. It is how much need there is for the money and how much need there is for these officials, how the money is to be spent and how the officials conduct themselves. To quote a case in regard to a certain official or set of officials, is, it seems to me, a proper way in which to criticise the action of the department. With that I have no fault to find, but on the general question of necessity of large expenditures, I am afraid that the time has not yet come when it is possible for the government to declare that it will, without further consideration, reduce or cause to be reduced that expenditure. We still have a large area to fill up. We still have large requirements, we have railways under construction and the success of these railway enterprises depends upon people settling on these lands at an early date. It is therefore necessary that if we are to slacken in our efforts it shall be not now, but in the future so that the best interests of the country shall not thereby suffer.

Mr. FOSTER. Next session we will, I hope, be able to take up this vote at a reasonable time. I would like, and I think the House would like, when we are paying $187,000 for salaries to individuals in this way, to have a very full report of the work of each one of these gentlemen and the success which has attended him. They are scattered all over Europe, America and Canada and we will require next year a pretty detailed statement in the form of a report as to just what results are being received from the services of these people, more particularly in reference to those whom you may call propagandists, who are sent to France, Denmark, Austria and other places. We want to know just what is coming in for the amount of money that we are expending, and whether there are some regions that are being cultivated that we might drop out and others that we might perhaps add. This House is in favour of having people come into Canada just as rapidly as is consistent with two things: our power to assimilate them and the quality of the immigrants who come to us.

Mr. STOCKTON. The hon. Minister of the Interior has stated and properly so that there has been a campaign of publicity in the department over which he presides for some time past and that in consequence of that the prospects in Canada for those wishing to seek new homes have been painted as brightly as possible. There is naturally a desire in centres of population for people to come here and become Canadian citizens. Now, is it not possible that we have cultivated that campaign of publicity so greatly that the time has come when we should exercise a little more care as to the quality of the immigrants brought into the country? I have a feeling—it may be entirely wrong—that we are not having the same care as to the quality of the immigrants brought into the country, not the same inspection as they have in the United States. I know that a large number of these immigrants come into the country at the port of St. John. I am aware that the officials of the Interior Department are of the opinion that the inspection of and supervision over immigrants coming into this country are better than the inspection of and supervision over those coming into the United States. I do not agree with that opinion, Mr. Chairman. Prior to Confederation the upper provinces charged $1 per head upon immigrants coming into this country. It was not paying immigrants to come here, but there was a charge per head levied upon those coming in. In New Brunswick a charge of 50 cents per head was made upon immigrants coming into that province. I may be entirely wrong. We have large areas of country, but we want no immigrants who will not assimilate with the general Canadian population, and I call the attention of the minister to the fact that greater care must be exercised towards the quality of the immigrants coming in. The quantity may be desirable, but the quality is more desirable still.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I renew a question I put to the Minister of the Interior yesterday as to the policy of the government in regard to bonusing steamship companies. In the light of past experience, does the minister think it is a wise policy for this government to continue?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a very important question. This bonus forms a large portion of our immigration vote and it will certainly have to be the subject of very careful consideration. It was the policy of the late government continued by the present government, and I do not feel myself in a position to make a declaration on the policy now. I recognize the importance of it as well as my hon. friend, and in connection with other immigration matters I will give my best attention to that point and be able to make a statement later.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The reason I renewed my question is that the minister stated a moment ago that the immigration policy of the government was in all particulars and in every branch a great success. He seems rather uncertain now as to whether the steamship bonus is a success or not. But because it has been continued for some years he says he will hesitate before doing away with it. In 1904 he seemed to think that this steamship bonus was not a very good thing and so far as that is concerned he had his mind made up. I quote from 'Hansard', 1904, page 323. The Minister of the Interior gave great praise to the government for sending farm delgates to the old country and he said:

> I think we all agree that the system previously followed of resident agents in the old country was very largely a failure.

That is one feature of the policy of the government that met with his condemnation then:

> We must admit that the practice of paying the companies a steamship bonus was largely a failure.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) was strongly convinced in 1904, not so very long ago, that this bonus was a failure. Has the acceptance of office so modified his views that in 1905 he did not know whether to continue or discontinue that failure. He said further:

Both these systems were failures for obvious reasons, I believe that by bringing in contact with the agricultural population of the British Isles successful farmers of this country there is a reasonable possibility of securing that class of immigrants we most desire. In fact I think that a very large part of the money that has been hitherto spent for immigration purposes in the old country, both in the employment of permanent agents there and in paying bonuses to steamship companies, was money absolutely thrown away or worse than thrown away.

Has the hon. gentleman modified his opinion on that since he has become Minister of immigration? The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) put a question with reference to this matter this session, the minister's reply shows the following bonuses:

Bonuses on immigrants from United States	$14,428 25
Bonuses to steamship agents and sub-agents and immigration societies on British immigrants	43,220 63
Bonuses on Icelanders	2,104 81
Bonuses on domestic servants	1,088 00
Bonuses on immigrants from Great Britain at $2 each	246 00
Bonuses to philanthropic societies on children from Great Britain	2,608 01
Bonuses on immigrants from continent of Europe	35,316 66
Total	99,012 35

While I cannot condemn the bonus given to immigration from the United States or Great Britain I do think there is too much discrimination shown inasmuch as the government are paying one pound sterling for each immigrant from continental Europe and only $1.75 or $2 for those coming from the British Isles. In regard to this new contract which the government have signed with the North Atlantic Trading Company to bring immigrants from continental countries, I notice that the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' an organ supporting the government, publishes a cable from the 'Evening Globe' of London, England, referring to the contract in the following language:

London, June 26.—The 'Evening Globe' referring to the contract between the Canadian government and the North Atlantic Trading Company, says we can only assume the new contract has been negotiated without a proper consideration for the existing arrangements between the mother country and Canada. It is simply unbelievable that the Ottawa parliament should openly flout and scorn the surplus population of the United Kingdom, as unsuitable for Canadian purposes.

The deduction drawn by this paper is that there is a discrimination in favour of immigrants coming from Galicia, Roumania and these other countries as against British immigrants. I refer to the contract between the Canadian government and the North Alantic Trading Company, the members of which we do not know. I do not know whether it was Mr. Preston representing the government in the old country or whether it was the department here that entered into this contract, but probably the minister will give us information on that score. I understand a copy of the contract has been sent to my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson). I desire also to endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Stockton) with reference to the quality of the immigrants we are getting. Many of these immigrants are of a most undesirable class and they have been induced to come to this country through the offer of that bonus. As the Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech a large amount of money has been sent home by immigrants to the motherland to bring the friends out to settle in this country, and these are the very best immigration agents we could have. A great deal of the crime committed in Winnipeg has been attributed to the foreign residents of that city, and I shall read to the House the finding of a jury in Winnipeg and the rider to that verdict in connection with the murder of a citizen by some of these foreign immigrants:

'We the jury empanelled to inquire into the death of George King find that the deceased George King came to his death by and from blows received by him from one or more Galicians on Sutherland street in the city of Winnipeg on Tuesday, January, 7, 1905, and we recommend that Fred. Swreda, Ivan Roga, Fred Roga, Roman Censor, Chnad Lasaruk, Stevan Stodola and Benko Slobotian to be held for further examination.'

To this verdict the jury added the following rider: 'And this jury wishes to place on record its opinion that it considers the importation of undesirable immigrants from Southern Europe, of which we find so many amongst us in this province and in Winnipeg in particular, to be most undesirable and should be discontinued in the best interest of this country. We find that most of the serious crimes such as we are called upon to investigate this evening are committed by this foreign element in our midst.'

The following are the names of the coroner's jury. D. A. Ritchie (foreman), W. J. Kennedy, P. Bowman, J. Willoughby, C. W. Brown, W. A. Williamson, C. Todd, S. Elliott, J. A. Parks, H. C, McQuarrie, T. S. Hallam, G. E. Tuck, A. H. Turner and R. H. Hanlay.

I have read the names of the members of the jury. It is an opinion, not from a party point of view and it shows how necessary it is for the department to exercise more discrimination in the character of the immigrants they bring here.

Mr. OSLER. Who negotiated that contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company

Mr. OLIVER. The original contract was made by the High Commissioner and the revised contract was made two years ago by Commissioner Prescott on behalf of the Department of Immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the company with whom the contract was made ?

Mr. OLIVER. Some time ago I stated to the House that there were certain features of the contract which it might be undesirable to make public, that I would be willing to place it in the hands of the leader of the opposition or any of his followers, and that if they then demanded its production, it would be laid on the table, but that we did not think it desirable to publish it. I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, knows the terms of the contract, and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) might consult with him.

Mr. FOSTER. Was any authority given Mr. Preston to enter into such a contract ? What is its duration, what are its terms and with whom was it made ? I always am suspicious of those contracts, involving public expenditure, which are made by officials of the department and cannot be submitted to parliament.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman would be good enough to consult with his leader on the subject, I think it would be better.

Mr. FOSTER. May not the questions I put be answered ?

Mr. OLIVER. Unfortunately not.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the name of the company ?

Mr. OLIVER. The North Atlantic Trading Company. If the hon. gentleman, on the responsibility of his leader, will insist on the contract being produced, I shall produce it.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to sit on a heap of dynamite with a fire near it. What are the terms of the contract ?

Mr. OLIVER. The company received one pound per head on immigrants passing through their hands from all countries of Europe except France and Belgium.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it take in Turkey ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, nor Italy.

Mr. FOSTER. All these states along the border between Russia and Turkey ?

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman will confer with his leader——

Mr. FOSTER. All countries except France and Russia in Europe.

Mr. OLIVER. Not including Turkey, Greece, Italy and Spain. It includes Austria, Germany, Russia, Denmark, Norway and Sweden and Holland—the countries in fact from which it is desirable to draw immigration but whose laws do not permit the activity of a foreign government securing immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. No limit to the amount ?

Mr. OLIVER. In no country is the amount to exceed 5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is for one company?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. Has that company an agency in London ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, its headquarters are in Amsterdam.

Mr. OSLER. Is Mr. Leopold not their agent ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, he has no connection with it.

Mr. FOSTER. What authority was given to Mr. Preston to make the contract ?

Mr. OLIVER. He was not the original maker of the contract. The original contract was made by the High Commissioner, but the revised contract was made by Mr. Preston.

Mr. OSLER. Is it on the same terms as the original ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not exactly. The same bonus is paid but the new contract contains a limitation with regard to the number of a certain class of people.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. I heard the minister say he had a contract with a company and that France and Belgium were excluded. What is the reason ?

Mr. OLIVER. Those countries do not prohibit the activity of foreign governments, and we have our own agents there as we have in Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the duration of the contract ?

Mr. OLIVER. The existing contract is for ten years from the 28th November, 1904, and it may be terminated on four years' notice.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the first one made by the High Commissioner ?

Mr. OLIVER. Under the late government for many years a bonus was paid on certain immigrants. In fact the bonus at that time covered wider proportions than the present one, as far as the continent is concerned. A bonus was paid to the local agents who did nothing but sell the tickets, who did not even distribute the literature provided by the government. The department is very anxious to attract settlers, and in order that satisfactory work might be done, some six years ago the matter was discussed with the leading steamship agents. In the contract it was provided that all the publications and other government advertisements would be circulated by these agents, and in the case of Scandinavia a special inducement was offered by way of a grant of seven hundred and fifty pounds, provided the syndicate fulfilled certain conditions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With regard to the terms of the document, I do not know that there is much in it that is not already published in the press. Here is what appears in a telegram to the 'Times':

The government entered into a ten years contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, of Amsterdam, to embark upon an extensive plan of immigration work from Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Finland, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Luxemburg, and Switzerland. The government will pay the company a bonus of one pound for every man, woman, and child of the agricultural class and every domestic servant over 18 years of age arriving in Canada from any of the countries named. From Galicia, Bukowina, and Poland the number of immigrants in any one year on which a bonus will be paid is restricted to 5,000. For special work in Norway, Sweden, and Finland the company receives an additional grant of seven hundred and fifty pounds annually for three years.

I do not know that there is anything in the agreement that may be regarded as confidential or not desirable for publication which is not contained in that telegram. I do not see any great objection to placing the contract on the table.

Mr. OLIVER. The impression I had was that the publication of the names of the persons with whom this arrangement was made might lead to embarrassment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not in the contract I have.

Mr. OLIVER. The difficulty is that some of the continental nations have placed great obstacles in the way of immigration, and it is quite possible that some of these people, in trying to serve Canada, have got themselves into difficulties and we should not allow them to do so.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that immigration desirable?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been considered so. It comes from Germany, Switzerland, Austro-Hungary, Russia, Denmark and Norway and Sweden.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen some of these people dressed in furs when we were having a temperature from 85 to 90 degrees, and it struck me they were not very desirable.

Mr. FOSTER. What conditions are imposed on these immigrants? Of course it would be in the interest of the syndicate to bring in as many as possible. The quality of the individual makes no difference to them provided they get paid.

Mr. OLIVER. The agent questions each individual as to his occupation, and the immigration from the countries mentioned is restricted to the agricultural population.

Mr. AMES. Suppose any are found suffering from disease, have we any arrangement for a refund?

Mr. OLIVER. In such cases the bonus is not paid.

Mr. AMES. The bonus is not paid until the immigrants have arrived and are accepted as such?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. How many have been deported already?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not got that information.

Mr. OSLER. How long has the contract been running?

Mr. OLIVER. Since 1903.

Mr. OSLER. How many have come in under the contract?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the information under my hand.

Mr. OSLER. How much has been paid by the government?

Mr. OLIVER. We paid last year $87,000 on continental immigrants which covered the immigration for three years.

Mr. OSLER. Can the minister say about what proportion of children there are coming in under the present contract? Under this contract this country might be used as a dumping ground for all the waifs and strays of the continent. You might have to pay a man and woman for bringing out 10 or 12 children under that.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no arrangement to accept children except as members of families.

Mr. OSLER. How can you tell with that class of people?

Mr. OLIVER. We cannot, we have to accept them.

Mr. OSLER. It is the same with regard to whether they are farmers or not. There is one important point in connection with this contract. The minister said it was practically a renewal of the old contract What is the date of the first contract?

Mr. OLIVER. The first contract was made about 6 years ago and I am satisfied it was for a term of 5 years.

Mr. OSLER. Made by this government. The minister led us to believe that the renewal contract was practically the same as the original.

Mr. OLIVER. There are certain limitations.

Mr. OSLER. There are certain limitations and one of these limitations is the key to this whole question. The minister stated by a slip, apparently, that in the old contract the bonus was simply for agricultural people. The whole difference between the two contracts and the essential difference is that this is a contract for anybody. All they have to do is to say that they are agricultural people.

Mr. OLIVER. That is all they ever had to do.

Mr. OSLER. Under this, a man and his wife, a man and a woman may come out here with eight or nine children, they say they are agricultural people and how can you tell ?

Mr. OLIVER. The renewal contract was exactly the same in the original as in the present contract.

Mr. OSLER. Did it include children ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. OSLER. As to most of these immigrants being agriculturists what evidence has the minister to that effect ? Is there any evidence to show that these people have gone on to farms ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course I have not the evidence here, but every one who resides in Manitoba or the west who knows that country is aware that there is a very large population from the continent of Europe settled on farms and that the proportion found in cities is very small.

Mr. OSLER. Are those the people brought in under this contract ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. OSLER. Because I can tell the minister that in Toronto the increase in the number of these undesirable immigrants is so enormous that it is attracting the attention of everybody, and I see a statement was made the other day that one particular class have I think quadrupled in the last two years and they expect to have a percentage of ten per cent of the population of the city within the next five years.

Mr. OLIVER. What class ?

Mr. OSLER. That statement was made by one of the Rabbis of the Jews. Those are not the people I am referring to but all over Toronto there is a class of people, small in statue, with yellow beards, who are going around the town simply as hawkers. York Street and two or three other streets are simply infested with these people, living 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, in a house, and you cannot go into any part of the town without seeing these people going around for bones and rags. I venture the statement that of the thousands of these who have gone into Ontario you will not be able to find one half of one per cent on the farm. These are the people I feel confident on whom the government of this country are paying the bonus.

Mr. OLIVER. What nationality.

Mr. OSLER. Oh the Lord only knows, but they are the most undesirable looking men. If the minister comes to Toronto and takes any one street he will find these people over the whole place, I may say by the thousands, and they are the most undesirable looking men you can get into this country. I say that none of these men are going on farms or into farm work. If these are the people who are brought in under this contract the country is being deluged to an extent that is alarming. I think a ten years' contract of this kind is a mistake. It is true that there are limitations for four years, but the four years will soon slip by and then there is practically the balance of the ten years during which the government cannot get out of the contract. The immigration policy of the government may entirely change before ten years, and I think altogether, as far as we have been able to get information as to the contract, it is most undesirable.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it is altogether fair to hold this particular contract or the Department of Immigration responsible for the presence of this particular class of people who seem objectionable. Everybody knows that when the immigrants reach the continent of America by whatever port they come, those who are city people go to the cities. There is no doubt that the cityward tendency is strong in regard to certain races and nationalities. The people alluded to by the hon. member are, I understand, known as Syrians. They do not come within the range or scope of operation of this contract at all, and I think it would remain to be proved that this agreement or this Department of Immigration is in any way responsible for their presence in the country. They are a money making people who possibly are able to pay their passage in the ordinary way and they go to the towns as they naturally are town people and not country people. But the people who come from Austro-Hungary as well as the Scandinavians, the Germans and the Russians, are as every one who knows the west is aware, essentially agricultural and their one object in life is to get on land of their own. The proportion of these in the towns is very small and of those who are in the towns their residence there in the large majority of cases is of the most temporary character, until they can get sufficiently ahead to get out on their own land.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How is it that the government entered into a ten years contract in regard to a matter of this kind ? I do not know that they have any more authority to enter into a ten years contract than into a 100 or 1,000 years contract. The proper course would be to enter into a contract such as is authorized by the appropriations of parliament. It may be a desirable thing to have a contract for a number of years; but if so, it should be submitted to parliament in the first instance, and the authority of parliament obtained. This contract is obviously quite unauthorized.

Mr. OLIVER. The same remark would apply to the contract made six years ago by the commissioner. If any impropriety has been committed, it is not greater now than it was then.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As if two wrongs would make a right. I want to call the minister's attention also to the circumstance that this contract has provoked a good deal of adverse comment in Great Britain. For example, one English journal has said :—

The Canadian government now is reported by the 'Times' to be about to plainly advertise to the world that Canada estimates every German, Russian, Scandinavian or Italian worth three Englishmen or Scotchmen, by granting, so the 'Times' says, a bonus of a pound per continental immigrant against seven shillings and sixpence only per British immigrant.

Another journal says :

The Englishmen want an answer to a plain question. Does Canada estimate one Pole or Russian worth three Englishmen or Scots for the upbuilding of the Canadian nation?

Then follows the explanation which the minister has just given. It is in these words :

An official explanation is made in the press from the office of the Canadian Immigration Commissioner to the effect that Canada passes over one pound per head for the continental immigrants because the North Atlantic Trading Company does its own advertising and publishes its own literature in seven languages, and generally carries on its own propaganda, all of which the Canadian government pays for in England.

I think that is substantially the explanation the minister has made. But there is this observation made in regard to it :

To this statement the reply is made by the Allan and other steamship lines that far larger sums than the North Atlantic Trading Company will spend, has for many years past been spent in the British empire immigration propaganda without any special immigration bonus. Such expenditures are common practice among all European and American steamship and railway concerns, but that in no way can justify the government in the payment of three times as great a bonus on continentals as British settlers.

There seems to be force in that criticism. It is very unfortunate if the government has contrived to spread abroad in Great Britain the idea that immigrants from the continent of Europe are preferred in Canada to immigrants from the British Isles. I know that many immigrants from the continent of Europe are very good immigrants, especially those from the Scandinavian countries, who, I think, are found to do very well in our Northwest, as well as in the northwestern part of the United States; and there are other nations who send us very good immigrants. But after all, immigrants from the British Isles should, I think, not be placed behind those of any continental nation; other things being equal, I would think they ought to be preferred. But this arrangement, on the face of it, certainly does seem to give the preference to the continent of Europe, notwithstanding the explanation that has been made by the Minister of the Interior. I would like to ask the minister if he can tell, taking the period for which he has the last return, how many immigrants have come in from the British Isles and how many from the continent of Europe?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the return here, but I am informed that the total immigration for the last fiscal year will be about 150,000, in about three equal parts, from the continent, from Great Britain and from the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. How many of these go to the States?

Mr. OLIVER. The government has no means of finding that out. I have no doubt that a great many of these immigrants do go over to the States. When we remember that there are over 1,000,000 people born in Canada who now live in the States, a large majority of whom are citizens in that country, we can hardly expect to prevent some of our immigrants from crossing the boundary line.

Mr. BERGERON. But is anything being done to prevent these immigrants for whom we pay, going over there, and if they do, do we get the money back?

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister state the names of that company? Is it a steamship company or is it an aggregation of steamship companies, or is it simply a syndicate which goes into this business? If it is a syndicate, what hold has the minister upon the amount of advertising it must do? It is not sufficient to say that if they do not advertise they will not get the immigrants, because you are giving a large consideration, between $1.75 and $5, for the sake of sowing information. We may be getting a large number of immigrants, and they may not be carrying on a campaign of publicity to any large extent. What guarantee then has the government as to the campaign of publicity?

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose, in the first place, the best guarantee is the number of settlers coming out under their auspices. But besides that, the agreement requires that the company shall submit vouchers for the year of the expenditure in publicity, in advertising and printing, up to $15,000; as a matter of fact they have submitted vouchers up to double that amount.

Mr. BERGERON. Is Mr. Preston a member of that company ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is not supposed to be. He is not a member of it, with the knowledge of this government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are they a steamship company, or a syndicate ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are a syndicate of steamship agents.

Mr. HERRON. What is the policy of the government with regard to placing these immigrants ? It is generally supposed in the Northwest that where a large number of these people settle, it has the effect of driving our own people out of the settlement. I do not know whether it is a positive fact or not, but it is generally stated throughout the Northwest Territories that we are getting a large class of settlers of that kind and that they have the effect upon our present settlers to which I have referred. If we are getting that class of settlers there I think surely it is time the policy of continuing to spend our money so freely to bring that class of people in should be changed.

Mr. OSLER. I will move on going into supply, seconded by Mr. Ames:

That in the opinion of this House it is advisable to give notice of the government's intention to terminate the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company in accordance with the terms of that agreement.

On the amendment (Mr. Foster) being put,

Mr. FIELDING. This is undertaking to pass judgment in regard to a case, which, I understand, is still under investigation and it is rather a curious form of procedure. Hon. gentlemen may form their opinions as to the matter, but to undertake to say when it is still under inquiry that this man is to be dealt with in this way is not reasonable. I think it is hardly fair and I do not think the hon. gentleman has before him the information which will justify him in reaching a conclusion.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no hesitation in saying that the evidence is absolute on the report of such who was appointed by the minister himself that Nixon embezzled $400 or $500 of the public money, that stubs disappeared, that receipts were withheld, that books were destroyed, or lost, that alterations were made in applications and that a number of other things were established without a shadow of a doubt on the statement of Mr. Leach himself. If the government propose to carry on the investigation still further well and good; let them drop the salary of this man in the meantime and drop him as an officer until he clears his skirts of that which Mr. Leach reports him guilty of, but as long as the government keeps this man in this position so long will there be warrant to make a protest against it. There is a similar one coming on in reference to the postmaster at Thessalon.

Mr. FIELDING. Shortly stated my hon. friend's contention is that we must find a verdict on a subject which is at present under inquiry.

Mr. OSLER. In the meantime do not give him public employment.

Mr. FIELDING. If he is in the government employment and his actions are the subject of inquiry that inquiry must be completed before he is dismissed.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister says: We want this man kept in the government employment, but it is not the kind of employment as that in which the money was stolen and after all this malfeasance in office takes place and before the minister has his skirts cleared he appoints him and is now asking us to give a salary for another appointment. Keep your man off until he shows himself to be honest and do not try to foist upon us a man whom your own officer informed us was guilty of malfeasance.

Mr. FIELDING. The general principle that a man is obliged to show himself honest is not a correct one. Some one must show that the man is dishonest. The presumption is not to be against the man especially in a matter which is at present under inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. Did my hon. friend ever read the report of Mr. Leach?

Mr. FIELDING. I heard the discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. But you never read the report. The report is as clear as pen and ink and the English language can make it. The only thing that can be done in fairness by the government is to suspend the man until the whole of the facts are brought out, but instead of doing that you want to come down and get a certificate that he is a right and proper person to be entrusted with a public office.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend need not sign the certificate. We will not hold him responsible.

Mr. HAGGART. A charge is made against this individual which the government has thought of sufficient importance to justify it in holding this investigation. The general principle is that the person under suspicion is suspended until the inquiry is completed whether he is found guilty or not. Has this person been suspended?

Mr. FOSTER. No, he has got more salary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not understand from the hon. Minister of the Interior when we were discussing this question that any further inquiry was to be held; in fact, he carefully guarded against saying that any further inquiry was to be held. If the inquiry has been completed the evidence shows that he is guilty; if it has not been completed he should not have been appointed to another office.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked a number of questions with regard to returns in the office which could not be procured here and we had to get them at the office at Macleod. We therefore sent Mr. Leach out to get these returns and to make such other inquiry as I have already stated.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) negatived; yeas, 25; nays, 51.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the resolution be carried?

Mr. FOSTER. No, Mr. Chairman, we are just now coming to the main point which was under discussion yesterday, that without a vote the minister has put on an establishment of $6,300 in official salaries alone in Vancouver and Victoria while the House was in session and that it is unquestionable that he has no authority in the law to do that. We have not had from the minister to-day an answer to this.

Mr. OLIVER. It was stated yesterday that there was a proclamation bringing into effect the Act authorizing this action to be taken. I have here a report of the committee of the Privy Council approved on the 15th August, 1902. Will it be necessary to read it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I would like to have it read:

Mr. OLIVER (reading):

On a report dated 26th July, 1902, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting with reference to the provisions of the Act, chapter 14 of 2 Edward VII., intituled an Act to amend the Immigration Act, and in view of the large numbers of immigrants who are now coming from foreign countries to Canada and to the United States via Canadian ports, that it is expedient and necessary that a proclamation be issued forthwith, in accordance with the provisions above referred to, prohibiting the landing in Canada absolutely of any immigrant or other passenger who is suffering from any loathsome, dangerous or infectious disease or malady, whether such immigrant or passenger intends to settle in Canada or only intends to pass through Canada to settle in some other country and whom the Minister of the Interior or officer to whom he entrusts the matter, considers should be absolutely prohibited from landing in Canada for medical treatment, only for such period as such minister or officer may deem reasonable and sufficient to effect his cure, and authorizing such minister or officer to take such action at the expiration of such period, if any such immigrant or passenger so permitted to be landed for medical treatment is not then cured of the disease or malady from which he is suffering as may be necessary and as can be taken under the provisions before referred to, to return such immigrant or passenger or to compel him to be taken on board the vessel from which he was so temporarily landed, and having so returned him or compelled his return to such vessel, prohibiting his being again landed in Canada.

The minister therefore recommends that a proclamation in such terms be issued forthwith and that the Minister of the Interior be authorized to give any officer to whom he may entrust any action arising under such proclamation and the provisions before referred to, such instructions as he may deem advisable and necessary for the conduct of such action in accordance with the terms and intention of such proclamation and provisions.

The committee submit the same for approval.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister now give his legal authority for undertaking this business as Minister of the Interior, rather than leaving it to the department under which the public health is?————. While the minister is waiting to answer that, will he give the information he was not able to give last night as to the number of immigrants that entered at Vancouver and Victoria, and as to the number of cases which have been treated by his officers that were appointed, from May up to the present? Tell us the conditions which made it necessary that a costly establishment of that kind should be maintained there?

Mr. OLIVER. I need not read the names of the steamers, but on September 28th (from Australia), 3 deported; October 16th, Japan, 1; October 18th, Japan, 4; October 24th, Japan, 2; November 1st, Japan, 2; November 1st, Japan, 5; November 4th, Japan, 5; December 1st, Japan, 1; December 1st, Japan, 1. From the 24th of September to the 30th of April, 1905, 78 persons were deported at Victoria. From September 29th, 1904, to June 27th, 1905, 236 persons were detained and 43 deported at Vancouver.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister able to show his legal authority for undertaking this work as Minister of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. I understood that what was wanted was the Order in Council placing diseased immigrants under the control of the Interior Department, and that I have given. This is the third time a similar vote has come before parliament, and I never suspected that it would be necessary to produce the line and letter of the authority. If the hon. gentleman requires more information on the subject, of course I will have to procure it.

Mr. FOSTER. Although it is a good thing to see that the health of passengers coming into this country should be carefully looked after, and that no infirm and unsuitable persons should be allowed to remain, yet I take the position that this is not a matter that the Minister of the Interior, in conducting his immigration work, was supposed by this parliament to do. The whole trend of the discussion last session was with reference to the immigration which was under the control of the Department of the Interior, and that where immigrants came to Canada in large numbers we should have as cheap and as effective machinery as possible to see that only suitable immigrants were admitted. But we find that in the interim the minister establishes expensive machinery on the Pacific coast, where there is no current of immigration, where passengers come and passengers go, but which cannot be referred to as ports to watch the flow of immigration that comes. It was naturally expected that this efficient machinery would be placed at the Atlantic ports. The minister has broadened that idea into the view that he is to look after the public health of the country, and whereever there is a possibility of any passengers coming into Canada he is to put on separate machinery to see that certain undesirable persons are not allowed to come in. We have a Department of Public Health expensively run and most liberally equipped to do that, both at our Atlantic and Pacific ports. Yet we have the Minister of the Interior butting into that general administration as to the health of the country, and putting on an independent and somewhat costly establishment of his own. In the interests of economy, why should not the enginery that is there at present, with maybe some slight addition, if necessary, do that work ? That is a point which I wish to make, and I think the minister entirely misapprehends the intention of parliament when he undertakes to go outside of protecting this country from the immigrants he is bringing in with reference to these diseases. It is not economical, that is certain. For Chinese immigration he has two or three high-priced officials. I protested against their being kept on to the First Minister, and he thought, even though there was Chinese prohibition, that it would be wise to keep them for the present. Then we have the quarantine establishment and the customs officers ; so that it would seem to me that with these agencies, with a slight addition if necessary, all this could be done, and the minister would not be looking after a portion of the public health which I do not think parliament understood he was to take charge of, thus duplicating what is being done with efficiency by another department of the government.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not quite understand the position the hon. gentleman takes today. He asks what authority the Interior Department has for undertaking this work. I quoted the document which expressly gives the authority to that department. That was made not in 1905, but in 1902, and it seems rather late in the day now to make a protest on legal or technical grounds, while of course protests on grounds of policy or economy are always in order.

Mr. FOSTER. What machinery had the minister up to 1905 ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not the same machinery on the Pacific coast that we have on the Atlantic, but it is the same class of work. The hon. gentleman is objecting to operations on the Pacific coast which we endorsed on the Atlantic coast. We are administering for both coasts in regard to the health of the public. The hon. gentleman admits that the Department of the Interior under this Order in Council is entitled to take measures on the Atlantic coast, to deal with this particular class of diseases, but he says that we are not entitled to do that on the Pacific coast, because there is no immigration there. As a matter of fact, we have had to place a bar or penalty of $500 per head, to prevent immigration of a certain class at these very ports ; and is it not natural to suppose that the opening which existed in the industrial life of British Columbia for Chinese, is now just as large for Japanese, and is being taken advantage of by Japanese very much as it was previously by Chinese ? That is immigration, whether it is the result of the efforts of this department or not, and the efforts which we have made to check the introduction of diseased persons into the Dominion of Canada on the Atlantic coast are just as necessary and are just as much within the jurisdiction of the department in regard to the same class of diseases coming in on the Pacific coast. The Department of the Interior, having been charged specifically with that duty by Order in Council so many years ago, took up the question, and last year received the strongest condemnation from hon. gentlemen who last night condemned it for taking the very measures which they condemned it last year for not taking, Under these circumstances, I think the vote that has been placed in the estimates is a just one, and there is no alternative but to allow it to pass.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister does not seem to grasp the idea that the objection is not on the ground of policy at all ; it is a question of carrying out the law. The hon. gentleman says, why don't you object to the vote for St. John, Halifax and Quebec, which is similar to the one for Vancouver ? How do we know that the minister has been carrying out the law there ? The law says that he has no power over an immigrant unless he is a pauper, to return him ; and if he is diseased, he has to follow a certain form—not to employ expensive officers at $2,500 a year and to establish expensive staffs ; but he is to employ a medical officer or apply at the quarantine station for the purpose of getting a report upon the case. What we object to is not a question of policy, but a question of carrying out the law as laid down. If it is necessary that the hon. gentleman should have further powers, change the law, instead of proceeding entirely contrary to what the law directs.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. minister proceeding in the same way in Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal? Erecting separate medical boards; and if so, who are the officers in each of these and what are their salaries?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the main estimates under my hand.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman make a note of my question? I am anxious to know how he is proceeding in these places. I suppose he is using the machinery he finds there and is not making each of these boards a separate medical faculty —giving one man $2,500, another $1,000, another $1,000, another $900 and so on,—making in each place an absolutely independent staff. That is a good way to get rid of public money, but is it desirable to do that? Does the law give the hon. gentleman the power to do it? He has the power to deport, but he goes to work and erects a college. He founds a university in one of these places and he equips it with all the medical appliances and power and wisdom. How far is that going to carry us if the minister does that everywhere?

Mr. OLIVER. I object entirely to the hon. gentleman's conclusion. The department has the authority the hon. gentleman read a few minutes ago.

Mr. HAGGART. Could we not have the explanation in concurrence?

To provide for the completion of the work of constructing pavilions and wharfs; and for the purchase of lands, taken for park purposes, Thousand Islands, River St. Lawrence, $3,350.

Mr. OLIVER. This is to make certain park improvements on the islands in the St. Lawrence, which are a part of the Indian reserve.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is in virtue of an arrangement made by the late Conservative government representing Canada and conferring with representatives from the State of New York who made the same arrangement on their side, namely to make a park for the visitors of Canada and the United States. The Americans carried out their arrangement two or three years before we did ours.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the minister will invite us all down.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. This is a first-class job.

To provide a further amount for legal expenses, $5,000.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. STOCKTON. What were the expenses before this?

Mr. OLIVER. This $5,000 is a special sum to provide for the legal expenses in a test case regarding the Indian lands at Oka.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that still going on?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

To provide an additional amount for expenses treaty 9, from which payment may be made notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $1,200.

Mr. BARR. Who gets this?

Mr. OLIVER. Instead of employing outsiders to negotiate a new treaty north of the height of land in the province of Ontario, it was thought more desirable to take members of the civil service in the Indian Department, and as this was giving them special work, we thought it right they should receive some extra consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. What are they to do?

Mr. OLIVER. The present Indian treaties for the province of Ontario do not extend north of the height of land. There is a very large area of that province, north of the height of land, extending to Albany river and James bay which is coming into notice by reason by the Grand Trunk Pacific survey. Amicable arrangements have been made with the Ontario government to negotiate a treaty with the Indians?

Mr. HAGGART. Who are the parties appointed?

Mr. OLIVER. One is D. C. Scott, accountant of the department, and the other is Mr. Stewart, assistant secretary of the Indian Department.

Mr. BARR. Do they act in conjunction with representatives of the Ontario government?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. McMartin represents the Ontario government.

Mr. BARR. Is it expected this treaty will be carried to completion?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Indians—New Brunswick—to provide a further amount for salary of Indian superintendent, $100.

Mr. STOCKTON. Who is superintendent in New Brunswick?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Farrel. It is proposed to increase his salary from $500, which he now receives, to $600.

Indians—Manitoba and the Northwest Territories—to provide further amount for implements, $765.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the vote already made for Indians in the west?

Mr. OLIVER. The total vote in the main estimates for this purpose is $820,992.

Mr. FOSTER. What was expended last year?

Mr. OLIVER. The appropriations amounted to $873,299. The last Auditor General's Report is for 1903 and that gives a total expenditure of $804,098.50.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an increase of nearly $100,000. The minister had better give an explanation of this.

Mr. OLIVER. The greater part of the increase this year over the expenditure of two years ago is in these items of the supplementaries which amount to $79,000. Of this the big sum is for the rebuilding of the industrial school at Qu'Appelle, $35,720.

Mr. OSLER. What was the expenditure of last year?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not the returns of the actual expenditure of last year.

Mr. INGRAM. When this was up on the main estimates, I asked the minister the reason for the non-publication of the reports on the Assiniboia and Moose Mountain agency.

Mr. OLIVER. I stated before that the reason of the lack of report from that particular agency was the death of an inspector of agencies before he had made his report for the particular year under consideration, and that the inspector appointed in his place was not able to complete his inspection and report upon it between the date of his appointment and the date when it was necessary to have the report in for publication.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister before stated that that was all the explanation he had to make, and it is not satisfactory now as it was not then. I shall read a letter in connection with that which has been received to show there was something wrong with the report and that that report has been suppressed for a purpose.

Indian Mission,
Sintaluta, N.W.T., 3rd June, 1905.

Dear Sir,—I notice the reference to this reserve—Assiniboia—in the proceedings of the House of Commons of the 25th ultimo. I have to say positively that Mr. Oliver's explanation is incorrect. Mr. Leveque died, but Mr. Graham, the new inspector, was here in the end of April, 1904, for a whole week and perhaps more, and made a minute inspection of the reserve. He must have sent a report thereof to the commissioner, for he made uncomplimentary reference to two ex-pupils of Regina school, which through the commissioner came to the ears of the late principal, Mr. Sinclair. Mr. Sinclair (as he told me) hotly repudiated the reference to his ex-pupils as unfair and unjustified.

In regard to Moose Mountain I may be permitted to make a remark. The agent in his report says the inspector 'made a general inspection of the stock and audited the books.' What is that but an inspection? Where is the report?

I am, dear sir, yours sincerely,
REV. E. MACKENZIE.

P.S.—There is no school on this reserve, and so Mr. Graham had the reserve alone to inspect.

E. M.

That in connection with some other private information goes to show that this report was sent in and suppressed, and it matters not whether the inspector died or not, that report should have been published in the annual report and it should not have been suppressed.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that there is possibly a misunderstanding. Each year the inspector of agencies compiles a report for publication in the blue-book of the department, which my hon. friend has had before him, and which lacks the report from that particular agency as he says, and lacks it for the reason I have stated, but whenever an inspector makes an inspection of an agency he makes a departmental report upon that inspection, which is received by the department and placed on file for reference, but is not published in the blue-book. The blue book would be altogether too cumbersome if these reports were published, but the report of the departmental officer on his investigation to the department is on file in the department and can be placed on the table of the House for public information if the hon. gentleman so desires.

Mr. INGRAM. That is what we would like to see.

Indians—Manitoba and the Northwest Territories—to provide a further amount for provisions, &c., $8,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are these bought by tender?

Mr. OLIVER. The policy of the department is to purchase by tender after public advertisement. But there may be occasions when the department runs short, and they have to buy small quantities.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it that you are so far off your calculation in your main estimates? You come down now with $100,000 a few months afterwards.

Mr. OLIVER. The main estimates were prepared about nine months ago, and at the time the department had not absolutely decided as to the character of the building. But having now decided as to what sort of building is wanted, and desiring to build it as soon as possible, we ask for the additional sum. This is all for buildings. The school house was burnt a year and a half ago.

Indians—British Columbia—to provide a further amount for boarding and industrial schools, $3,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is this sum of money to be spent?

Mr. OLIVER. This is intended to assist the management of the Clayoquot Roman Catholic boarding and industrial school and to place a hot water heating apparatus in the school. The management of the school, without any assistance from the department, has added very largely to the accommodation for pupils, and has spent about $5,000 over and above the work done by pupils. Our inspector reports that the building is a splendid one for the purpose of an industrial school. An estimate of the cost of heating apparatus is $2,500, of which amount it is proposed to contribute $1,500.

Indians—British Columbia—to provide a further amount for miscellaneous, $3,916.

Mr. OLIVER. This is made up of several small items. One is $300 to provide for the construction of a road at the Coqualeetza Indian reserve. The Indians of the Coquitlam reserve, in British Columbia, have asked the department to grant them assistance towards the construction of a piece of road from the Coquitlam main road to their reserve on Coquitlam river.

To provide an amount to assist the Dominion exhibition at New Westminster, B.C., $500.

Mr. OLIVER. This is to enable the Indians to take part in the exhibition.

To provide an amount to purchase additional land for the Pemberton Band of Indians, B.C, $3,115.18.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian reserve commissioner at British Columbia had great difficulty in obtaining any unoccupied agricultural land for the use of the Indians at Pemberton. However, 1,223·9 acres were allotted by Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. A. W. Vowell, the present Indian reserve commissioner, has an additional lot of 10,040 acres. This land consists of mountain range and to a limited extent of thickly wooded valley. The Indians for a great many years have been pasturing their cattle on a tract of land belonging to the Roman Catholic bishop of New Westminster. The said tract contains 313 acres of land, all prairie and of excellent quality. It is advantageously situated for the Indians in Pemberton Meadows, between two of their reserves numbered 1 and 2. Should this land fall into the possession of any person who would not allow the Indians the privilege of pasturing their cattle thereon they would be in a wretched condition. White settlers have lately been attracted towards that section of the boundary and as time advances the land will necessarily increase in value. This property has been offered for $3,115.18, which sum represents the original purchase, surveying taxes and interest to date.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was it purchased from?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware from whom the bishop purchased it in the first instance.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I do not mean that. It is 813 acres?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Between $4 and $5 an acre?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Towards the erection of a monument to Champlain at St. John, N.B.,—revote, $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was Champlain?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend is so lacking in geography, I am afraid we will discover he is lacking in other points.

Mr. FOSTER. On a point of geography is it?

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

JOLIETTE AND LAKE MANUAN COLONIZATION COMPANY.

Bill (No. 191) respecting the Joliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Company—Mr. Piché—considered in committee, read a third time and passed.

SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 149) respecting the South Shore Railway Company and the Quebec Southern Railway Company.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a very important Bill; what is the object of it?

Mr. GEOFFRION. This Bill is from the Senate, and was considered in the Railway Committee of the House this morning and reported as amended. There are two important sections in the Bill; one asking for an extension of time to complete the road, which is a most important provision, especially if the road is going to be sold; and a second clause, providing, as the road is under a receivership, the promoters ask permission to have the sale made by direction of the Exchequer Court, and have the same effect as if the railroad were sold by the sheriff in the province of Quebec.

Mr. HAGGART. This gives power to the Exchequer Court to make a very unusual sale. It seems to be a most extraordinary thing. Can the Minister of Justice explain?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was not at the committee and know nothing about the Bill at all.

Mr. HAGGART. Neither was I.

Mr. EMMERSON. This Bill was considered by the Railway Committee to-day. The law in Quebec, as was explained by members of the bar of that province, is that the two railways mentioned in this Bill could be sold by sheriff's sale and a good title could be passed. But under the present conditions these railways are in the hands of a receiver, and it was deemed that there should be some provisions whereby a sale could be made of these two railways in accordance with the conditions and terms that may be determined upon by the Exchequer Court, and that a good title can be given to the purchaser in that way.

Mr. HAGGART. How will that affect bondholders, who have no knowledge of this.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is in the hands of the Exchequer Court. They are to receive notice as directed by that court. Under the law of Quebec there are exceptional privileges with respect to the sale of such railways, and if there are bondholders they must be presumed to have knowledge of the law of that province. The present Bill provides for notice to them and to all others; notice which perhaps they might not have if the road were sold under the laws of Quebec. The Bill was very fully considered. Several members of the bar of the province of Quebec went fully into the matter, and a provision was made whereby the interests of the creditors would be protected by the courts.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the bonds are issued under the authority of a Dominion statute. This is a sort of confiscatory legislation to place the bonds under a different tenure from that under which they were issued, declaring that they shall occupy the same position that they would if issued in the province of Quebec as to the right of sale. It may cut out the bondholders altogether.

Mr. EMMERSON. It cannot do that.

Mr. HAGGART. A sale in the province of Quebec does cut out the bondholders. This gives to the Exchequer Court the power of exercising the same rights as a court in the province of Quebec. A sale in Quebec is an absolute sale. If these are the facts, this is confiscation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, the bondholders who are secured by mortgage on the two railways contract with respect to the law of the province of Quebec, but they do not contract with respect to the provisions of this special Act for the purpose of effecting a sale. It seems to me, therefore, that a very good reason should be given for departing from what is the ordinary law of the province and enacting special legislation. There can be no possible objection to a sale under the law of Quebec ; but that is not the case with which we are met. The case with which we are met is a proposal to enact special legislation under which the conditions of a mortgage are varied. The mortgage gives a first lien. The persons who are interested as bondholders under that mortgage would have the right to conduct the sale, I suppose, under the law of Quebec as under the law of any other province, and the proceeds of the sale would be distributed under the terms of the mortgage. But we are altering the conditions very much by this statute, and I would like to hear some reason as to why that is necessary. Is not the law in the province of Quebec under the conditions of the mortgage sufficient for all the purposes of its enforcement ? If it is not sufficient, what is the reason, and in what respect is it wanting ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. The bondholders cannot suffer any prejudice under this Bill if it passes. They have had knowledge of this question, which has been debated before in this House, and all they want is proper notice. We provide for all the proper notices. Clause 2 provides for notices to be given to the creditors, and I think we can safely trust the Exchequer Court to give the proper notices.

Mr. HAGGART. You give to the courts the power to give such a title as would be given in the province of Quebec ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. We have a law already to give power to the Exchequer Court to take possession of the road and proceed to a sale. If the Exchequer Court has a right, in the province of Quebec or in any other province, to take possession of a road which cannot be operated and proceed with a sale of the road, we want this parliament to give that sale the same effect that it woud have if it were a sale by our sheriff. Otherwise it would be useless to have the law. The sheriff has a right to give a clear title to the road. The Exchequer Court has the same right by a law which we have passed, and we want the court to give as good a title as the sheriff would give in our province. The Bill provides for the proper notices to be given, but we are ready to say that notice shall be given for one month in the 'Official Gazette' of Quebec, in the 'Canada Gazette,' or in any other way that the court may decide. Under these circumstances, I do not think that the bondholders can suffer. They can attend the sale and buy the road if they want to. If the bondholders could take the road and not operate it, there would be some very important roads in the province of Quebec not operated, simply because the bondholders would not operate them. We want a law to force the bondholders either to buy the road and operate it, or to sell it ; and if it is sold, we want a clear title to be given ; and if we give the Exchequer Court power to proceed to a sale, we want it to have the power of the sheriff or any court in the province of Quebec to give a clear title.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not see this Bill on the order paper at all. I do not know how it got there.

Mr. EMMERSON. By a special motion passed to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a Bill from the Senate which was referred to the Railway Committee, and these clauses which were inserted in it by the Railway Committee alter the whole character of the Bill. We have a right to see the Bill printed, so as to know exactly what it is. I do not suppose one member of the House knew that it was made a special order for to-night.

Mr. EMMERSON. This Bill was reported by the Railway Committee.

Mr. HAGGART. When was it reported ?

Mr. EMMERSON. To-day ; and the Railway Committee made a recommendation to the effect that the House should suspend the rule and place the Bill on the order paper for to-day. That motion was moved by the acting chairman of the Railway Committee and was adopted.

Mr. HAGGART. It would be necessary to set two rules aside. First of all, the report of the Railway Committee should not be adopted on the same day that it is presented to the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. The House concurred in the recommendation of the Railway Committee.

Mr. HAGGART. Unless the rules of the House were set aside, they could not concur in it the very day it is introduced.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was one of the recommendations of the committee, and a motion to place the Bill on the Orders of the Day was made in the regular way and passed by this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How was the motion made ? I was not aware that any committee had power to recommend the suspension of the rules of the House. The House is supposed to judge of the expediency of suspending its own rules and no committee has the right to interfere or make any suggestion. In doing so, it would go beyond its jurisdiction. Was it a separate motion ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That the report be concurred in ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That the rules of the House should be suspended with respect to two Bills. That was considered by the Railway Committee this morning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as I am concerned, I was very much misled because I examined carefully the order paper this afternoon to see whether or not there were private Bills on it, and found there were none. A motion of that kind ought to be brought more specially to the attention of the House when it is made. I heard nothing of it until this moment, and was very much surprised to find the House discussing two private Bills which were not on the order paper at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not discussing the principle of the case but am only stating what was actually done. The acting chairman of the Railway Committee presented a report of the committee, which was read at the table, and a motion was immediately made by the chairman of that committee to the effect that the rules of the House should be suspended for the purpose of permitting those Bills to be placed on the order paper for to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. Was the report read ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We should have a pretty full explanation. I am not at all satisfied that this Bill should pass. A contract has been made and certain persons—I do not know who they are—invested money in the bonds of this road. They are entitled to have that contract carried out according to its terms. Should we pass a Bill of this character, we will be altering the terms of that contract. It is perfectly obvious that every one interested in this road, in its bonds, or in the concern in any way, should be given an opportunity to be heard before that contract is altered. The contract is one that can be enforced according to the law of the province of Quebec ; but if we pass this Bill, we are to all intents and purposes altering that contract in respect of the remedies for its enforcement. Whatever arguments may be made, as to the inconvenience of non-operation of a railway, there is something more than that, that is that a contract once made between a railway company and those who have put their money in it, ought to be regarded as sacred and should not be departed from unless for better reasons than we have heard from the hon. gentleman supporting the Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no interest whatever in the Bill except as one who observed its passage through the committee. As I understand the situation, under the laws of the province of Quebec, these two railways could be sold at sheriff's sale and the position of the bondholders would be subject to that law.

Mr. HAGGART. Were the bonds issued under the authority of a Dominion charter or of a provincial charter of the province of Quebec ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Under the authority of a provincial charter, and they are subject to the provincial law. The only reason why the regular procedure under the law of the province would not be followed is that in the meantime, under an Act passed two sessions ago by this parliament, these railways were put in the hands of a receiver, and there was some question with respect to the right of sale by a sheriff. This Act will enable the sale to be had under the direction of the Exchequer Court, all the rights of the parties being protected. Their interests would not be affected because the sale would be the same as if it were made by the sheriff under the Quebec law. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) heard the discussion in the Commons, as also did my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Stockton).

Mr. BERGERON. I objected to that measure altogether.

Mr. EMMERSON. I took exception to it myself until certain amendments were made. The promoters of the Bill were there and explained it, and the committee reported as I have said. They recommended the Bill with certain amendments. It seemed to me that those amendments protected the interests of the creditors more fully indeed than would be the case if the sale took place under the sheriff, as provided by the laws of the province of Quebec.

Mr. OSLER. I assume that this is the Bill which created such a disturbance in the money markets of England. More cables were sent over in connection with this proposed legislation than any passed in this House for some years. The proposal in the original Act was one that startled the English investing public, and the protests were strong and loud. I received notice this morning that there would be a meeting of the Railway Committee, but there was no memo. as usual stating what business was to be done. I assumed therefore that it was just a formal meeting to close the business of the session. I think the Bill should be printed and laid before the House so that hon. members might understand what it means and discuss it fully. It is a most extraordinary thing to bring down a Bill that is not even printed, but just patched up with scissors and paste, and which none of us know anything about.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I do not see why we should delay this Bill. It is properly before this House. A motion was made this morning that it should be taken up this evening, and if these gentlemen were not in the House that is not our fault. If they attended to their duties a little better, perhaps they would know what is going on. A motion was put, and properly put before the House, and adopted. What more do you want ? As to what the leader of the opposition said, that we are breaking a contract, I do not see where or with whom we are breaking a contract. Supposing we took the other remedy, and proceeded to the sale of that road by the sheriff in Quebec, would we break contracts with anybody ? We would have a right to proceed to a sale of that road by the sheriff and would not thereby break a contract with anybody. I repeat that we are given by law the right to proceed to the sale by the sheriff in Quebec. We want that court to have the same power to give to the sale the same right and effect as a sale by the sheriff. We would not be breaking contracts with anybody any more if we proceeded in the Exchequer Court than if we proceeded with the sheriff's sale in the province of Quebec ; it is the very same thing, and I have not seen any good reason given yet for not adopting this Bill.

Mr. BARKER. It seems to me that what is attempted in this Bill is likely to cause very serious and grave dangers to securities in Quebec. Nothing is more sensitive than the money market, and if you cast any suspicion upon the bonds or debentures of a province like Quebec, or any other province, you will do an injury beyond calculation to every other interest in that province. What have we here ? The Railway Committee was called this morning, and I never saw such a notice issued before. At the same time that we were called together for the Railway Committee we were called together for another committee. There was not a word upon the Railway Committee notice as to what the procedure there would be, and I never before saw a notice issued from the Railway Committee in which the business to come before us was not stated. It was not done on this occasion. When we come to the business of this House we find the order paper laid before us containing everything that is to come up in the House, but there is not a word about this Bill upon it. A gentleman, in the course of the proceedings to-day, makes a motion that this Bill may come up, although it is not upon that notice. Does anybody suppose that this is the way that the rights of people living in Great Britain, France, Germany or anywhere else, where these bonds are dealt with, are to be frittered away ? Are these gentlemen to say: We will pass this Bill to-night without the ordinary notice ? Are the government going to sit here and allow this ? Is that the way that the business of this House with regard to most important matters affecting the financial interests of the Dominion and the various provinces is to be conducted ? I think, in the interest of the whole community, the House should stamp upon any attempt of this kind. There is not a gentleman in this House who had the slightest idea that this Bill was to come up to-night. The Orders of the Day do not contain a reference to any private Bill whatever, every gentleman was left under the impression that there were to be no private Bills brought up to-night, and yet we have this Bill brought before us; and it is a most extraordinary circumstance that these two things should occur on the same day—the committee called as it was called in the morning, and this Bill brought up to-night without a private Bill being mentioned upon the order paper; and we are asked to submit to having this forced through. I say it is a most extraordinary thing for the government to permit any such proceeding to take place. It is not a question of the interest of these particular bondholders: it is a question of the interest of every financial undertaking, every commercial undertaking, not only in Quebec, but in every other province of the Dominion, that this thing should not be treated in this way. I would ask the Finance Minister how he looks upon such a case as this? Is it likely to conduce to the value of Canadian securities that a thing of this kind can be done? In the most irregular proceedings of the legislatures of the western states, I do not believe such a thing would be attempted; and yet, here in the parliament of Canada, we are expected to submit to it. I say it ought not to be tolerated for a moment. The committee called at ten o'clock in the morning, a form of notice issued that has never been issued before; not a word is on the order paper about this Bill coming up, is made in the course of the day, and the Bill comes up to-night. We are told to-night it will not make any difference, that we are not altering the position of the bondholders. If we are not altering the position of the bondholders, what is the Bill for? If they are leaving the bondholders just where they were, they do not require any Bill of this kind. The hon. gentleman must be altering the status of the bondholders or he would not ask for this Bill.

Mr. GEOFFRION. What an argument!

Mr. BARKER. I can only say that if I held railway bonds bought under particular conditions under the law of Quebec, and I found out that a gentleman was introducing a Bill here to enable that enterprise to be sold under other conditions than those under which I bought the bonds, I would consider my rights were being interfered with; and that apparently is the position in this case. I submit that we are entitled to call upon the government to stop this and not allow the Bill to proceed.

Mr. EMMERSON. The same notice that was received with respect to the Railway Committee this morning by other members of the committee was, I presume, the notice received by myself. The first intimation I had of the meeting of the Railway Committee was obtained from a notice which I found on my table this morning when I went to the office. I attended the meeting of that committee, and these two Bills were brought under consideration—this particular Bill and another one. They were considered, as I have stated already; the committee, through its chairman, made a report with respect to it, that report was read in the House, was received here, and a motion was made immediately after eleven o'clock, and I think the motion recited the fact that in consequence of the lateness of the session these two Bills should be placed on the order paper for consideration to-day. This was done in the House, and it was the action of the House. The order paper, of course, had been printed and placed on the table before eleven o'clock; this motion was made after eleven, and it was done within the knowledge of the House. I was here myself and heard it, and other members might have heard the same thing. No one objected. The Speaker of the House spoke distinctly with reference to it; but if there is any inconvenience or want of knowledge on the part of members, it might be a matter for consideration whether the Bill should not stand over.

Mr. BARKER. I understand the hon. gentleman was at the Railway Committee—will he say if the motion to ask this permission to place the Bill on the order paper, was carried before the chairman of the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. I am informed it was not.

Mr. EMMERSON. I heard it read by the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal (Mr. Piché). Immediately after the Bill was ordered to be reported some members started up from their seats, when the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal, came forward and read his motion and moved it; it was seconded and put. It is true that some members were leaving their seats, as frequently occurs in the Railway Committee; but it was before the committee had separated, and before its proceedings were finally brought to a close. Then it came up in the House afterwards in the way I have described.

Mr. FIELDING. I have to confess that I have no more knowledge of this Bill than my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). It has been brought before the House in what seems to be a regular way, that is to say, the rules of the House appear to have been suspended, and probably a majority of the members were not aware of the nature of the Bill when that suspension was moved—for one, I was not. I do not mean to say that that would necessarily change my judgment of the Bill. An earlier Bill of a general character relating to the same subject has been on the order paper for some time. I am aware that it has been the subject of a good deal of contention. At an earlier stage of the matter representations were made to me on behalf of some bankers against it. Subsequently an officer of the Bankers' Association waited upon me and said that he thought judgment had been hastily formed, and that he was not authorized to continue the objections which had been raised. Still there were objections to the Bill. Now we are informed that the former Bill has been changed in its shape so that, instead of being a general Bill, it is a private Bill. The statement has been made by the promoters that the objections to the former Bill will not lie against this one, in other words, the Bill has been rendered unobjectionable. I hope that is the case. I think the House is entitled to reasonable notice, and an opportunity of understanding the Bill; therefore I would suggest that after it has been discussed, and before it is finally disposed of, it shall stand over and be printed, so that a reasonable opportunity may be given to all concerned to know what it means.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the first place I would like to suggest to the hon. gentleman who made some reflections that those objecting to the Bill do not attend the House, that he himself is not a very brilliant example of attendance. I have been in this House during every minute of the session to-day, with the exception of about ten minutes when I was detained in my office in connection with some public business, and during that time it appears this motion was passed. I never heard of it. I looked at the order paper carefully this afternoon to see whether private Bills were coming on, and I found there was no reference to any private Bill on the order paper. I would like to know whether the bondholders have been notified, and whether they have consented. That is the first thing we want to know with regard to this Bill. Can the hon. gentleman give us information with regard to that?

Mr. GEOFFRION. I have not officially consulted the bondholders, but I have spoken with various commercial institutions, for instance, the great railway companies of the province of Quebec, and some of the most important banks in Montreal, and the only objection which they had to this Bill or to the Exchequer Court Bill was that in the latter they thought proper notices were not given to the bondholders. I told them that I was ready, as promoter of the Bill, to see that all proper notices were given, and I say now that I am ready to provide in the Bill that the sale shall be advertised during a month in the Quebec Official Gazette and in the Canada Gazette, also leaving to the judge the power to order any other mode of advertising. They seemed to be satisfied with that assurance; every one I met seemed to be satisfied, because they knew that unless we took this remedy of the Exchequer Court to have the road sold, the only other remedy that is left to us would be a sale by the sheriff, which is, I admit, the more costly, and would entail a great deal more expense than the sale which we wish to obtain by the Exchequer Court. In the province of Quebec we can proceed to the sale of the road by the sheriff, and attain the same end exactly. But we want to take this remedy, because if we proceed by this mode and sell by the Exchequer Court, the road can be run at the same time; whereas if we proceeded to sell by the sheriff in the province of Quebec, the operation of the road is stopped, it may be stopped for several months, and the hon. gentleman can imagine what harm that would do to some localities. The bondholders, those that I have seen, do not object to that, and I have seen some very important commercial institutions, besides. The only suggestion they had to make was a provision in the Bill that would guarantee proper notices being given. I told them I would give them every kind of guarantee they wanted.

Mr. OSLER. Are the proposed guarantees embodied in the Bill, as to consulting the bondholders?

Mr. GEOFFRION. All we can do in a Bill like this is to give proper notices of the sale to the bondholders, and they can attend the sale and bid on it. But surely we cannot go to the bondholders and say we will guarantee that they shall get their money. We want to proceed with the sale of the road, and then the bondholders can come and buy the road if they see fit, or force it up by their bids. What more guarantee can we give? We cannot give any more guarantee than we do in a sale by the sheriff.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. member thinks that his own personal guarantee is going to be sufficient. He says: I will give all the guarantee, and I will do so and so.

Mr. GEOFFRION. My hon. friend (Mr. Osler) is simply playing upon words. Perhaps if he were to express himself in French he might afford me occasion to play on his words.

Mr. OSLER. I am sorry I am not able to express myself in French. But this is a most irregular proceeding. As the hon. member expressed himself, I understood that he had consulted banks, consulted commercial institutions, consulted everybody but the people whom he ought to consult, that is the bondholders. I have never seen an Act passed in this House that did not protect the bondholders, or require their consent to proceedings for a foreclosure of the road. I have not seen this Bill. We are asked to pass upon a Bill that is not printed, not one in five members of this House knows what is in the Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Bill contains a provision for all notices to be published under the direction of the Exchequer Court. I will also say to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that there was a gentleman before the committee who claimed to represent the creditors of at least one of the roads. I do not know what creditors, or what kind of creditors.

Mr. BERGERON. It was Mr. Brosseau, a creditor for $60,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. He was there, and gave some reasons why the Bill as amended should pass.

Mr. OSLER. It is not long ago since there was a road in a somewhat similar condition to this, I think, the Kingston and Pembroke, which required some new legislation, some rearrangement; and I remember that it required a fight to provide that the consent of a portion of the bondholders should be required. Now this Bill may be all right, and I am not saying that it is not, but I am saying that this Bill is introduced into this House for the purpose of carrying out the object of a Bill to which there was an objection raised all over the country and in all the financial centres of England. There were cables sent from all the financial centres of England protesting against this Bill. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I understand, realized to a very considerable extent the force of these objections and was not in sympathy with the Bill. Now a Bill to accomplish the same object is introduced.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) is mistaken. That was in respect to another Bill, a Bill referring to the sales not of these particular roads, but of all railways in Quebec.

Mr. OSLER. But it was for the same purpose.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was not the same Bill that was before the Railway Committee to-day. That was a public Bill. This is a private Bill.

Mr. OSLER. That was a public Bill to accomplish the same object for which this private Bill was presented to-day and that public Bill so shocked the sense of the financial world that the government withdrew it. To accomplish the same end a private Bill is introduced irregularly to this House. A notice was sent out this morning to the members of the Railway Committee saying that there would be a meeting of the Railway Committee at 10 o'clock. That notice did not, like other notices, state the business to be done. Of course it was my duty to attend, but I took it that it was to be merely the formal winding up of the Railway Committee's business. Since I have been a member of this House the notices sent out on every occasion have contained a list of the Bills to come before the Railway Committee. Whether that was left out purposely or not I do not pretend to say; I do not assume for a moment that it was, but it was unfortunate. Following that is this Bill which has been brought into the House irregularly and attempted to be put through without the knowledge of many of the members of this House, without the usual notice and without the usual formality. I agree with the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that it would be a very vicious thing under all these circumstances and considering the objections that have been made by financial interests to adopt the government Bill which would perhaps have accomplished this object——

Mr. EMMERSON. That was not a government Bill to which the hon. gentleman refers. The Bill was proposed by a private member and it stands on the order paper yet.

Mr. OSLER. It was a public Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. A public Bill and in no way under the control of the government.

Mr. OSLER. It could not have been passed, I should think, without the consent of the government. I think it would be very unfortunate if this Bill were to be rushed through the House as it is proposed to do this evening, and I am very glad indeed that the hon. Minister of Finance has said what he has said, that this Bill should be printed so that hon. members might have an opportunity of studying it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I objected to the Bill to which reference has been made, because it made provision for the exercise by the Exchequer Court of certain powers in the province of Quebec. I had no special objection to the exercise of those powers, but I thought the Bill should be applicable to the whole of Canada. This Bill is more objectionable, because it does not deal even with the whole of the province of Quebec but only with a particular case. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion) who is promoting the Bill whether or not the bondholders have consented. Or is it not correct that the bondholders are objecting to this Bill?

Mr. GEOFFRION. I must admit that I have not consulted the bondholders, for the very good reason that I do not know where to find them. I do not know who are the holders of the bonds.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that some effort should be made to find the people who have invested money in this road and whose rights will be materially altered in this Bill. I consider it a very extraordinary answer to say that the people interested have not been consulted because we do not know where they are. I think that until we find out where they are we should not propose to deal with their rights. The section which we are now considering, does not, it is true, affect their rights so much as the next section. But taking the Bill as a whole my hon. friend will not deny that their rights are very seriously altered. It may be that in the end this Bill will work out to give them the same justice that they would get under the law as it exists at present. I am not satisfied of that. The hon. gentleman says that he can go now to the province of Quebec and have these railways sold by the sheriff. No one is objecting to his doing so. Let him go ahead and do it. If he means by that suggestion that this gives him no more rights than he has at the present time why is he pressing this Bill in this House? All persons interested may avail themselves of the remedies which exist under the laws of the province of Quebec ? It does not lie in the mouth of any hon. member of this House to raise any objection to that. I have no possible ground of objection to the working out of that result. But, when we find in a clause of this Bill that the effect of the sale is to alter conditions which are prescribed in the contract, when we find that liens are wiped out and that rights are very seriously interfered with, it seems to me that it is a very singular answer that the persons whose rights are affected cannot be found and therefore have not been notified. Suppose my hon. friend had invested in some property in Germany and should suddenly discover that the German parliament had passed a law depriving him of certain remedies which were his under the terms of the contract; would he think it would be a very good answer that the law was passed interfering with his rights because the people interested in promoting that legislation did not know where he was and therefore could not give him any notice ? That is just the situation which is presented to this House. In the first instance we want to know whether the bondholders consent. If they do consent that is an end to the question. If they do not consent then it remains for this parliament to consider whether or not their rights are preserved by the terms of this Bill and whether this legislation is in the public interest, having due regard to the rights which were preserved to them under the terms of the contract.

Mr. EMMERSON moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. OSLER. It is understood that this Bill is to be printed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Bill is entirely new and I think it ought to be printed.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Galops canal, removing shoals below lock 28 in the St. Lawrence river, $5,000.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This expenditure becomes necessary by reason of the representations of the transportation companies to the effect that there are dangerous shoals which resulted from the operation of forming the new bank at this point. The cost is estimated at $5,000.

Lachine canal—installing electrical appliances for operating gates, weirs and bridges (revote $5,000), $7,000.
Electrical installation (revote), $6,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost of the electrical appliances on the Lachine canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $161,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Are they working satisfactorily ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was not completely satisfactory and some new tests are being made which it is believed will be an improvement.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the electrical apparatus on the Soulanges canal is working perfectly. Is it not the same on the Lachine canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The construction of the gates on the Lachine canal are somewhat different from those on the Soulanges canal, so that the same apparatus can not be used in the same way. One lock will be completed next week, and that will determine the action of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. The other locks on the Lachine canal are still worked by hand power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Trent canal—to complete surveys, $28,000.

Mr. KEMP. What is this for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A survey of the whole system from the Georgian bay down to the lake.

Mr. KEMP. Has not that been done before ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. Last session $11,000 was voted for these surveys.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is the total cost of these surveys to date ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Twenty-one thousand six hundred and fifty-eight dollars up to the 31st of May. There have been sections surveyed but there never has been a continuous survey of the different routes. Gentlemen who favour Port Hope, as well as those who favour other places, claim that the surveys have been made with a certain object in view, and I promised the House that I would secure the services of an outside engineer who would be in no way biased and who would make a complete survey of the two or three different routes suggested, and also of the routes from Lake Simcoe to Georgian bay. The survey is in charge of Mr. E. J. Walsh. I saw him last evening and although he has not yet completed his report the work is in progress.

Mr. KEMP. This would make a total of $50,000 for surveys altogether. Did I understand the minister to say that no complete survey had ever been made of the Trent canal, on which we have already spent millions of dollars ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There have been detached surveys, but three different routes have been suggested, one to Cobourg, one to Port Hope and one to Trenton. Each of these is said to have merit, and the object here is to have full and complete surveys and reports as to the feasibility and desirability of each route. The same is true with respect to the outlet from Georgian bay down to Lake Simcoe.

Mr. KEMP. I understand the object is to determine which is the best terminus on Lake Ontario, and also the best terminus on the Georgian bay.

Mr. EMMERSON. And the best routes to follow.

Mr. KEMP. Why, that canal has already been built.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not from Simcoe to the Georgian bay.

Mr. COCHRANE. I wish to tell the minister——

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps I should say to Brighton.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not want the minister to put words in my mouth. So far as Brighton is concerned, and although that was brought against me in the last election, I never was selfish enough to want public moneys spent in East Northumberland if it did not benefit the whole of Canada. I want to tell the minister that that canal is completed almost across the township of Seymour for 12 miles below Rice lake to Healey's falls, and if it was brought in the way it was intended the terminus would be on the Bay of Quinté and not on Lake Ontario at all. If the canal is going to be of any use the terminus should be on inland waters. When the hon. minister gets his surveys, there ought to be some other question taken into consideration than the construction of the canal to an outlet on Lake Ontario. The question whether the barges that will navigate the canal will be able with any degree of safety to go down to the St. Lawrence in the open lake or whether they should go down on inland water, is as important as the saving of a few dollars on the construction.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is required to complete the surveys to which I have referred, and also to complete the surveys on other sections, for instance, on the Holland river, on the Black river, from Lake Simcoe to Sutton, from Rice lake to Trenton, and from Rice lake to Port Hope.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister say from Lake Simcoe to Sutton?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. That is the joke of the season.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a memorandum which was got up before the last election; it is of no practical use now. What we want to know is : What is the probable terminus of the Trent canal ? Is it on the Bay of Qunite or on Lake Ontario ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is to be determined by the surveys, which are not yet completed.

Mr. HAGGART. You have no information in the department from the surveyors that would enable you to give an opinion on the subject as yet ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not as yet.

Mr. OSLER. I think I can give the minister a little information. If he will go to the Prime Minister's office, he will find there a copy of a telegram which was sent about the middle of October to an hon. gentleman who was a member of the government a very short time—I do not know whether he was sworn in.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. He was sworn out.

Mr. OSLER. The Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, in his candidature of Durham, very nearly captured the constituency.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a great pity he did not.

Mr. OSLER. A pity for the boodlers; I agree with the hon. gentleman. It is fortunate for the interest of the country that the government did not get greater support than they have. The Prime Minister had a habit—I hope he finds the utility of it now—at any great meeting of having a telegram sent to himself if he was the hero of the evening—if not, to one of his friends who was. At an opportune moment he would have the telegram brought in by a boy, as in the old tale of the doctor who had his boy run into church and have him called out as if he was wanted. This is an old game, but it can be repeated too often, and the Prime Minister repeated it once too often on that occasion. Mr. Aylesworth said he had a telegram stating that a survey would be made and the Trent canal would be built to Port Hope. The consequence was that Port Hope was very nearly captured. I attended one meeting on behalf of the present member, and I had not been in the hotel five minutes before some of the townspeople came to me and said to me: 'If you go on the platform, for goodness sake, don't say anything about the Trent Valley canal, as the Prime Minister has sent a telegram promising to build it to Port Hope.' When the telegram was produced however, it was only one of the usual vague ones to the effect that provision would be made to have a survey to Port Hope. That is the origin of this vote, which is costing the country a good deal of money. The minister says that he is going to have a survey made from Lake Simcoe to Sutton. Nothing could be more absurd than that, and all other points of survey which the minister has mentioned I venture to say are equally absurd. The real reason for this vote is to carry out the election promises which the Prime Minister made in November last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can very well understand why Mr. Aylesworth was defeated if my hon. friend went into the constituency. The promise was made in this House last session by myself, in answer to some remarks made by the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Ward) on that occasion, that a survey would be made from Rice lake to Port Hope, a survey to Trenton, and also possibly a survey to Cobourg. That was long prior to any telegram that could have been sent in October by the premier or any one else. That promise was made publicly in this House, and accordingly some time before the elections of 1904 the services of an engineer of repute were engaged, and parties were sent out, So that the pretty little story of my hon. friend, which was not even dramatically told, has no foundation.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the minister to say that three surveys were to be made from Lake Simcoe to the Georgian bay ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Three, as I understood.

Mr. BENNETT. I can only say that from the knowledge there is in the department, a survey of a route by way of the Severn river would be the height of absurdity, because it has long since been conceded that a route from the Georgian bay or Matchedash bay, by way of the Severn river, is altogether out of the question. I think the deputy minister would not advise the minister to waste money on a survey from a point near Barrie to the southern part of the Georgian bay; I think that has long been exploded. There has been a survey from a point near Orillia to a point near Waubaushene, and that has been accepted by the ministers in the past as the only probable if not the only possible route. From all I have heard, I think it would be a sheer waste of money to have a survey of a route by way of the Severn river, and an equal waste of money to have a survey from Kempenfeldt bay on Lake Simcoe to the foot of Nottawasaga bay. There the water is so shallow that the money required to be spent on jetties would go a long way to connect the waters of Lake Simcoe with those of the Georgian bay. There is only one proper route, and that is to utilize the North river, coming out near Waubaushene, where there is a splendid protected harbour, from a point near Orillia. I hope the minister will have that route surveyed and early next year put under contract.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) made some representations to the department with respect to some particular route. I would ask him if that is the route ?

Mr. BENNETT. I assume he would favour the one in his own constituency.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Apparently, judging by what the hon. member from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has just said, what is the best line for the railway depends on where you are yourself located. He assumed that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) would advocate the route, a portion of which takes in his own constituency ; and no doubt we may apply the same rule to him and conclude that he is governed in his view of the best location by the interests of his own riding. I submit it is not at all absurd to talk of joining Georgian bay with Lake Simcoe through Nottawasaga bay. You can utilize the river and thus save a great deal of excavation work usually necessary for canal purposes. It would be well worth taking a survey there before determining what route that canal should take to reach Georgian bay from Lake Simcoe. I would strenuously urge on the government the necessity of having such a survey, because I am by no means in accord with my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) that the cheap route is the one he suggests. I agree with the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) that we should utilize Nottawasaga bay and join Georgian bay with Lake Simcoe.

Mr. KEMP. Out of this $50,000 can you make the survey from Nottawasaga bay to Lake Simcoe which the hon. member for Simcoe speaks of.

Mr. EMMERSON. The vote does not include that survey.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the survey be made this season ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Survey parties have been out some time and are out now.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not understand the hon. minister to bring down any appropriation for a survey from Healey's Falls to Presqu'isle harbour.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend treated the matter so lightly, I thought he was not serious.

Mr. COCHRANE. If we can judge by the joking manner of the hon. minister, there is no seriousness in any of these votes. If he wants to have the cheapest and best route, it is very important that he should have that route from Healey's Falls to Presqu'isle harbour, which is one of the best natural harbours in Lake Ontario, surveyed. I am not advocating that route because I know nothing about its cost or feasibility, but I know that the outlet in Presqu'isle harbour would be one of the best natural harbours on Lake Ontario and be at the head of inland navigation. It is connected with the Bay of Quinte by a canal and gives facilities to barges to go to Montreal. Eight or nine miles south of Healey's Falls there is a dam and locks, and the hon. minister will remember that a deputation from East Northumberland asked him to grant some money to aid the construction of a bridge there because of the difficulties created by the canal. At that place there are about eight miles between Healey's Falls and the Bay of Quinte that are navigable after you leave Healey's Falls, so that the number of miles is reduced very materially from Healey's Falls down to the Bay of Quinte and I hope that when the surveys are made Brighton will be the outlet of that long talked of canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer was directed to make an exploratory survey down to Brighton. With respect to the route suggested by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), there does not seem to be sufficient data in the department to warrant my asking a vote this session to have the surveys made.

Mr. KEMP. Is the cost of the survey for the improvement of Holland river included in this $28,000 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Improvements on east branch of Holland river to Newmarket, $100,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to be expended in connecting Lake Simcoe with Newmarket, a distance of about 10 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Taking the east and west branches, about $300,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the difference in the level between the river at Newmarket and Lake Simcoe and how many locks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Forty-five feet difference as to the level and about 5 locks.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the depth of water ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would make it six feet uniform, with the other Trent valley water—six feet on the mitre sill.

Mr. OSLER. Does the minister intend pumping water from Lake Simcoe to fill those locks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineers have made the survey and say it is a perfectly feasible route, which will be of great advantage to that section of country as well as other sections along the Trent valley. At Peterborough last year I had deputations asking that the Trent valley waters and their tributaries and Lake Simcoe and its tributaries be made navigable so as to gather in the products of those sections. Gentlemen engaged in manufacturing industries contend it would be very advantageous to connect as far as possible the agricultural districts with these Trent waters.

Mr. KEMP. Has that particular survey been completed?

Mr. EMMERSON. That particular survey has been made, but the final report has not been received. I have an interim report in respect to it as to its cost.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And as to its feasibility?

Mr. EMMERSON. And as to its feasibility.

Mr. KEMP. Is the $300,000 sufficient for the work according to the information at hand?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the maximum cost; it was estimated approximately by the engineer at $328,000, including contingencies and all other items, adding 10 per cent to all estimates he had furnished. This was only an approximate estimate, but he said that would be the maximum limit and that it would be minimized later on.

Mr. BARKER. What will be the distance by water when the canal is completed from Newmarket to Lake Ontario?

Mr. EMMERSON. The distance from Newmarket to Lake Simcoe is 10 miles, but I presume my hon. friend means from Newmarket to Trenton or Port Hope. I can give an estimate: it is 10 miles from Newmarket to Simcoe, and then we have Balsam lake, and the stretch from there to Peterboro' and then Rice lake ; I shall give the figures in a moment.

Mr. BARKER. What is the distance by rail from Newmarket to Lake Ontario at Toronto?

Mr. BENNETT. Thirty-two miles with two lines of railway.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to know the distance the other way.

Mr. EMMERSON. The great advantage to be derived from doing this work on the Holland river, as pointed out to me by the people interested in the industries to which I have referred, is that it would enable them to get their raw material down cheaper to Peterboro' and to those points in that way than by rail, as they are practically precluded from doing so to-day. I give this simply for what it is worth, but these were the representations of the business element of Peterborough.

Mr. KEMP. Of Newmarket?

Mr. EMMERSON. The matter came first under my notice at Peterborough. Since then a deputation from Newmarket and vicinity came here and made further representations more than confirming all that had been said by the gentlemen of Peterborough.

Mr. BENNETT. In the absence of the Postmaster General one feels rather constrained from saying anything in regard to this. If ever there was a proposition made in parliament for an utter, sheer waste of public money it is certainly this desperate last political move of the Postmaster General in North York. Any one who knows the political chances of the Postmaster General in North York, seeing the turnover that riding gave in the last local election, will readily understand why the Postmaster General is pressing on his colleagues for this wasteful expenditure of money. What are we embarking on? An expenditure of over $320,000, for the minister's figures are $328,000, is to be made on what? The Trent valley canal, if it is ever to be of use, will be of use mainly as a through waterway, and yet before it has been opened at either end into Lake Huron or Lake Ontario we are wasting nearly $350,000 in making what can only be simply a ditch between Lake Simcoe and Newmarket. One living in that vicinity who knows anything of the situation has only to consider it to see what i means, and I for one protest against the government launching out into this expenditure. There is one consolation from a political standpoint, it shows the desperate straits to which the Postmaster General is reduced, because the respectable element of that riding will condemn this and it is certain grafters who have been driven out of the buildings at Toronto and now want to fasten on the vitals of Canada with some scheme for expenditure in North York who are securing this work. Any day you can see great crates of metal boxes for files, &c., being dumped into the departments from where? From the Postmaster General's town, Newmarket. They are sold by the $10,000 worth without tender. Go into any town or city and you will find the post office boxes made in the Postmaster General's riding paid for by the country at two figures; you see the boots, the articles worn by the post office employees away down in St. John and Halifax bought from small jobbers in villages in the Postmaster General's riding. Why is this done? To make for him a little political leverage, and it shows the desperate straits to which the Postmaster General is driven. I regret the Postmaster General is not here; had he been I might have had some spirit to say something, but in the absence of the Postmaster General it is like jumping on a corpse, and I for one refrain from doing so even at such an opportune moment. I say that the expenditure will never redound to the credit of the minister or the government, and the best thinking people of the riding of North York will look at the whole thing as one of the most preposterous and absurd expenditures any government in Canada ever undertook. Look at the face of it. You are going to take raw material to Peterborough. What raw material are you going to take to Peterborough? Timber? Let me tell the minister that all the territory adjacent to this ditch, which I suppose will be built and will be known in years to come as Mulock's madness or Mulock's mulishness—no, it will not be called Emmerson's folly, because it will be conceded that he was forced into it by the Postmaster General—is a country which has been farmed for a hundred years and there is not a stick of timber around it. What folly it is to talk of shipping grain from there to Montreal by water. Such a thing will never be heard of. You are only 30 miles from Toronto. The minister has been imposed upon and has been over-credulous in listening to the Postmaster General. Let the Postmaster General peddle some more cheap supplies out of the riding and, out of the great wealth given him, let him spend a few more thousands in a fight there and not spend this public money in this stupendous folly.

Mr. EMMERSON. I referred to a delegation that came from Newmarket. My hon. friend has in a very undignified way referred to them as grafters.

Mr. BENNETT. I know the crowd.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend says so and he gives them that name. One of the most eloquent spokesmen and strongest advocates was the gentleman who represents that riding in the Ontario legislature, Mr. Lennox. He gave facts and figures, and pointed out the necessity for this work. He strongly contended that it would be greatly in the interest, not only of his section of the riding he represented, but that it would be of incalculable benefit to the districts through which the waters of the Trent flow. The hon. gentleman can be very valliant in the absence of the Postmaster General. I do not think anything he has said detracts in the least from the merit of this work.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, what trade does the minister suggest will come to Newmarket? Does he suggest that these piles will be floated down into the town of Newmarket, that they will be brought down by the Trent canal? What is there to be brought down? The minister cannot answer that question.

Mr. EMMERSON. I repeat what was said by the delegation. They pointed out many ways in which trade would be promoted, and named particularly many agricultural products that required a cheap mode of transportation. The same thing was said by representatives of the cereal company at Peterborough, who contended that by reason of the cost of transportation they were handicapped in their industry to such an extent that they even had to go to the United States, as they are nog doing, and bring over oats from that country.

Mr. BENNETT. What the minister says proves my position. The cereal company wished to have cheap communication, they wanted competition with the Grand Trunk. At present they bring their American oats from Midland over the Grand Trunk Railway, which has no competitor. If this canal were opened to Georgian bay it would be a competitor with the Grand Trunk, and in that way the company could get cheaper oats. The minister has forgotten their argument. I know that this company was within an ace, a little time ago, of building an elevator at Midland for this very trade, to elevate their oats there and handle them down, but they found the rates on the Grand Trunk would not pay them to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The object of this grant is to open up the Holland river from the Georgian bay to the town of Newmarket, and then to Aurora.

An hon. MEMBER. And finally to Richmond Hill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think it will go as far as Richmond Hill. At any rate, it is about nine miles from Newmarket to Lake Simcoe, and an expenditure of about $300,000 opens up the Holland river and makes that a navigable stream as far as the town of Newmarket and on to Aurora. It will benefit and open up that country, and give them an outlet to the Georgian bay, and an outlet to the Trent Valley canal. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) says that it is only a few grafters who want this canal. Now, Sir, the facts are that one of the largest and most respectable delegations that ever appeared before parliament came down advocating this scheme. Mr. Lennox, the Tory member in the local House, as the Minister of Railways has pointed out, was the chief spokesman on that deputation, which contained some of the most prominent Conservatives as well as the most prominent Liberals in that county. On that delegation were from 100 to 150 men, not only from Newmarket and Aurora, but from North York and all the municipalities throughout the county, advocating that canal. I think when they hear of the words spoken by the member for Simcoe they will not feel complimented by the terms he has used towards them to-night. He is very ready to cast slurs and insinuations when the Postmaster General is not present. I venture to say that if the Postmaster General was here to-night the hon. member for Simcoe would be as quiet as a lamb, and would not open his mouth. He is very bold when his opponents are away. I heartily approve of this work. I am sorry to say that it does not touch the county I have the honour to represent. But knowing the circumstances, knowing the trade that will be developed, the large number of factories now located at Newmarket and Aurora that are forced to bring their logs and material in to supply their factories——

Mr. BENNETT. Where do they get their logs?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They tow the logs up the canal from the Georgian bay ports, from any place where they can get them. They can also get their products out more readily by having the benefit of the home stretch on the Trent Valley canal. It is a work that will confer enormous advantage on the people of that northern part of the country, at a comparatively small expense, and I am amazed that any gentleman on that side of the House would have the assurance to get up here and speak of a work of that kind in the sneering manner the hon. gentleman has adopted. He evidently does not know the conditions, or else he is regardless of what he says in describing them, and misrepresenting them to the House. I say that no estimate has come down to the House this session that will confer anything like the advantages upon the people in that section as this comparatively small expenditure that is going to open up the Holland river and give communication to these two large and promising towns.

Mr. BENNETT. The remarks of the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) show his business capacity and his brilliant ideas of trade. Now, that hon. gentleman, with the great knowledge which Providence has given him with such unsparing hand, has pointed out that the result of the construction of this canal from Lake Simcoe is going to bring about changed results in lumbering operations in the northern part of Ontario, logs are to be cut at points on the Georgian bay, then they are to be towed down this canal, to cross Lake Simcoe to Newmarket and Aurora, and there be manufactured into lumber. Now that is a brilliant idea to be evolved out of a brain far more diminutive than that of the hon. member for York, the gentleman who has been, ever since 1896, knocking at the door of the cabinet to be taken in as a member. Why, the logs taken on the shores of the Georgian bay could be cut into lumber there, and then they could be shipped out by railway or water. But this brilliant business man suggests that after cutting these logs they are to be towed down through this canal, taken to Aurora and Newmarket, sawn into lumber there, piled again on to vessels and towed back to Georgian bay, and then taken around to Buffalo. A gentleman who has such hazy ideas of business must have a scarcity of business knowledge.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, if I have not any brains to spare, I cannot borrow any from the hon. member for Simcoe. He thinks all the brains are under his hat, but he has mighty few to spare. I did not say they were going to cut lumber at Newmarket.

Mr. BENNETT. You said that they were going to tow logs there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are going to tow logs but not to cut them into lumber. If the hon. gentleman knew anything of the circumstances he would not say that. There are factories at Newmarket which use large quantities of logs, making them into woodenware of different kinds. The Kane Company there use enormous quantities of logs although they do not make them into lumber. They do not want the logs for lumber, but they do want them for the woodenware that they manufacture. There are other factories that will use this canal when it is built and it will give them an outlet to the Georgian bay which they very much need. There is no doubt it will be a great advantage and the fact that 100 or 150 of the best men in the country, Conservatives and Reformers, came down and advocated this work, shows that they know what they want and which they will have, notwithstanding the insulting remarks made by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. OSLER. May I ask the hon. minister how far the report he has goes ? Has he the elevations of Newmarket and Aurora officially ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a difference of 45 feet between Lake Simcoe and Newmarket.

Mr. OSLER. How about Aurora ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not got that.

Mr. OSLER. There has been a great deal of chaff, and now it seems that this canal is desired, because, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) said, they want to tow logs. There is a very extensive manufacturing concern in Newmarket, but there is no guarantee that that factory will remain there a month. Any one conversant with business knows that if that factory at Newmarket had to be located again it would not be located at Newmarket. It is not a town that is suitable for a factory such as this, and there is no guarantee that it will remain there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is the guarantee of $100,000 worth of plant.

Mr. OSLER. As a matter of fact that factory makes a great many of its products out of hardwood logs. If you can tow a hardwood log up-stream it is something that has never been accomplished before. In regard to deputations, I do not think they should cut any figure. We know that they can always get a deputation of 100 or 5,000 people to come and ask the government to spend money for any object at all. There is no part of the country I am more familier with than the section between Aurora and Newmarket and Lake Simcoe. I was born within a few miles of there and for twenty odd years I have lived in the summer at Cook's Bay, where this canal is to enter. I have driven every summer along the road passing through Newmarket and Aurora and I have gone up at least twice a week for three months every summer for the past twenty years. I make this statement : that in summer at Holland Landing and at Newmarket there is often hardly enough water in the river to allow the boys to bathe, and passing by the railway track between Holland Landing and Newmarket you find that the boys put up a mud dam across the river so as to give them open water of a sufficient depth to bathe in. I make that statement from my knowledge, from having travelled through that country for the last twenty years at least twice a week in summer, and I say that a more absurd proposition was never put before this House for the expenditure of public money. It is impossible to carry it out. In years gone by Lake Simcoe was perhaps the centre of the lumber manufacturing industry. There were enormous mills at Belle Ewart and Bradford. The logs were towed from Lake Simcoe to Bradford and Belle Ewart. I suppose that the last log that was towed on that lake was towed 15 or 20 years ago. Every mill has been pulled down or burned down if it was possible, and there is not a foot of lumber tributary to that lake. Newmarket is 30 odd miles from Toronto, with an electric railway system running freight and passengers, with the Grand Trunk Railway besides, while it is probable that the new James Bay road will go close to the town, and the idea of spending $300,000—and we know it may mean $600,000—to open a channel between Aurora, Newmarket and Cook's Bay is absurd. Cook's Bay is very shoal. For 15 years I have had a steam launch on Lake Simcoe and there is no one except a person who has been brought up on the lakes who can run a boat drawing three feet of water into Cook's Bay in the direction of this canal. I would no more think of allowing my family to go in the direction of this proposed point of junction of the canal with Cook's Bay without trained captains than I would think of allowing them to go out in a canoe on Lake Ontario. The thing is absurd. It is so great a joke that it is an astonishing thing that any one would put on paper the suggestion to put such a canal in such a place. If the hon. minister will read the interim report which he has it will probably give us some information, and at all events enable us to judge upon what grounds the minister recommends this expenditure of $300,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have merely an estimate.

Mr. OSLER. The estimate must be based about something, and I think it is due to this committee when the hon. minister proposes to expend $100,000 as a preliminary and $300,000 on the work, that he should read the report and let us see how far the survey has gone.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the hon. minister to say that he had a report which said that this scheme was entirely feasible and practicable.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no interim report of that character.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. minister said that the feasibility had been settled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By a report, I think.

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer reported to me that it was feasible, but I have no formal written report. He gave me in conjunction with his verbal report an estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. Whose report is it?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is the report of Mr. Walsh, the engineer in charge.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you no report from the deputy head of the department as to the feasibility of this scheme?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is in charge of the special engineer appointed to make these surveys.

Mr. HAGGART. But the department is responsible. He is the servant of the deputy head. You surely have a report from the deputy head as to the feasibility of the scheme?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have a report and an estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not care about the estimate.

Mr. OSLER. Your first estimate ought to be as to the quantity of water that can be obtained.

Mr. EMMERSON. The canal is to be of the same standard as the Trent canal, distance about 10 miles and the width 60 feet.

Mr. HAGGART. You said 45 feet.

Mr. OSLER. The difference between the level of Lake Simcoe and the level of Lake Ontario is about 200 feet, and the height of land between Lake Ontario and Lake Simcoe about 700 feet.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are 20,200 cubic yards of rock at $6, $121,200; lock sills, $1,440; iron, $400; lock gates, $36,000; dredging, 172,088 cubic yards at 16 cents, $27,534.08; earth excavation, 220,666 cubic yards at 22 cents, $48,546.52; high level wooden bridges with approaches, four bridges at $5,000 each, $20,000; clearing 20 acres, $500; fencing 3,680 rods at 90 cents, $3,312; right of way and flooded lands, 150 acres at $40, $6,000; dams (estimated) $20,000; unwatering, $5,000; canal bank protection, $4,000; miscellaneous items, $5,000; add for contingencies 10 per cent, $29,893.26; total, $328,825.86. The above estimate is only approximate and will be subject to revision upon the completion of survey.

Mr. KEMP. How is the canal to be supplied with water?

Mr. EMMERSON. By the stream, of course.

Mr. OSLER. What stream?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Holland river.

Mr. OSLER. The Holland river flows into Cook's bay through one of the biggest duck marshes in the country and then there is about two miles of a deep river with a muddy bottom and with such weeds that no row-boat can go up except at day light. So full of weeds is this for two miles that the little launch I had there for years and used occasionally to take the boys up to play cricket, had to be taken off because we could not turn without getting into the rushes. From the junction of the two branches of the Holland river, one branch going to Bradford and the other to Holland landing and Newmarket, there is a little rill with so scant a supply of water that often in the summer-time driving up there I have seen the boys put a dam across it in order to get enough water for them to bathe in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is just as well to change this appropriation to build a summer hotel on the duck marsh.

Mr. BENNETT. That is about right.

Mr. OSLER. I was driving the other day to a fishing camp and I saw on one side of a field a little sawmill built over a gully about 6 feet deep, and the floor of the sawmill was about 6 feet above the level of the ground. I asked the driver what it was and he told me that some crazy chap thought he was bringing water up to run a sawmill about 6 feet above the level of the ground where there was no water except the spring and then the water never got within four feet of the mill. The building of this canal is on a par with that, except of course it will be at much greater cost. There is no water to supply this canal when it is built.

Mr. EMMERSON. Holland landing is quite near that point and it was one of the original termini of the transportation from the Georgian bay down to that section.

Mr. BARKER. How many years ago ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not remember exactly. I do not think the weeds to which my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) refers are a great barrier to the carrying out of this work.

Mr. OSLER. Yes, because from Cook's bay to the junction of the two branches of the river there is quite a lot of deep stagnant water, but from that point to Holland landing must be about six miles. The minister says that Holland landing was formerly the beginning of navigation. During the war of 1812 the British government required an anchor on the northern lakes and they started to draw the anchor by ox team to Lake Simcoe, but peace having been declared during its transit that anchor is now the main ornament in the Holland landing park, and it is ten miles away from any navigable water. There was no navigable water in 1812, so that the minister must be referring to a very long time back. The other point which I mentioned is that Cook's bay is shoal, gravel heaps, great masses of stone, and it is practically unnavigable because I have fished for bass over that place for the last twenty years and I know something about it. The thing is an impossibility.

Mr. BARKER. I have some little knowledge of that district, and I know that the lumber trade at the south of Lake Simcoe practically ceased 25 years ago, I recollect very well a gentleman named Schrieber who lived at Belle Ewart the southern part of Lake Simcoe, and who stayed there until there was no more trade and the rails were taken up. Within ten years I have seen the old ties lying there and there is not a rail down to Belle Ewart and no track. The old steamer that used to ply there, the 'Emily May' is lying there sunk, and the only lumber which has for many years been manufactured in that part of the country was some that was manufactured until recent years at Bradford. The talk of building a canal there in connection with anything like a trade in timber or lumber is absolute nonsense. The hon. minister need not go outside of his own department to find out all about that.

Mr. KEMP. It seems to me that the most serious part of this matter is that the minister has not got a report from a competent engineer as to the way in which it is proposed to supply this canal with water. He is not aware of the fact that the Holland river is on a level with Lake Simcoe, and that it will be necessary to raise the water in the locks sixty feet high. There are no streams to furnish this canal with water. The engineer says nothing about that. We are committing ourselves to an expenditure of $328,000, perhaps more, because nothing is said in regard to the approach to this canal at Cook's bay, which is very shallow. Is it not an absurd proposition to ask this House to commit itself to the construction of a canal of this kind, when it is proved that there is no water to supply it unless it is pumped sixty feet high to the highest part of the canal, which is an impossibility.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed by the engineer that there is ample water for the purpose. I had no formal report, and the engineer was not to make that report until he had the surveys completed. That water is supplied by storage reservoirs.

Mr. OSLER. Newmarket is supplied with wells and with ponds, so that I take back all I have said.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not suppose that my hon. friend would take back anything, he has so much wisdom concealed about his person. But that does not affect the statement of the engineers to myself with respect to there being an ample supply of water, which could be utilized by means of storage reservoirs. The dredging for the purposes of the reservoirs is all provided for in the estimate.

Mr. OSLER. Is the navigation of Cook's bay also included ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The unbusinesslike part of this matter seems to be that the minister comes here and tells us that there is a report, but he does not produce such a report. I do not think he ought to ask parliament to vote this sum of money unless he has a statement from an engineer detailing the information on which he can act. We get crumbs of information as to what the engineer says can be done ; but what we want is some responsible person to declare on his reputation as an engineer that this is a feasible and a practicable work, and we have not got that. I do not think the minister should ask for this vote when he has nothing to present to the House but a very fragmentary statement of some oral report made by the engineer. The engineer either has or has not made a sufficient examination and survey to enable him to say whether this work is feasible and in the public interest. If he has made such a report, the minister should bring it down to the House. If he has not made such a report, the minister should not in the meantime ask for the appropriation. That is the businesslike way to look at it. I think the minister would do well to withdraw this vote until he has that information to present to the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given the committee ample information. It does not detract from a report because it does not happen to be in writing. The information which we get from engineers must necessarily at times be oral. The survey was not completed. I wanted to know the approximate cost of the work. The survey was pending, and an approximate estimate was given. Upon that report, that the work was feasible, and that its cost would not exceed $328,000, I am justified, it seems to me, in order to expedite the work, in asking parliament to vote $100,000 towards it. To await the final completion of the survey would mean delay, and there is no necessity for that under the circumstances. I think the House would be justified in voting the money.

Mr. KEMP. May I ask the minister if there is included in this vote a provision for the storage reservoirs to which he refers ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. KEMP. The estimate does not say that.

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand that it provides for everything—concrete work, dredging in Cook's bay and all the work necessary for utilizing this stream for ten miles.

Mr. OSLER. The report of the engineer which the minister read did not mention these reservoirs.

Mr. EMMERSON. I mentioned earth excavation, dredging and dams, which are all included.

Mr. BENNETT. How many feet higher is Aurora than Newmarket, and how many feet higher is Newmarket than Lake Simcoe or Cook's bay ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The survey does not go to Aurora, as I understand.

Mr. BENNETT. Then this work can only be carried to Newmarket. It is not intended to go to Aurora ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is intended to cover ten miles from Newmarket to the lake.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister a plan of the work that he can lay on the table of the House ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not. I stated to the committee that the survey has not been finally completed.

Mr. BARKER. I ask the minister to give me the distance from Newmarket to Trenton, as against the thirty-two miles to Toronto ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About 218 miles.

Mr. BARKER. They are going 218 miles to get to Trenton, instead of 32 miles to reach the lake at Toronto. What is the distance from Newmarket to Waubaushene, or wherever you are going to strike the Georgian bay ?

Mr. BENNETT. I think that arsenal of information, the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) should really come to the rescue of the minister.

Mr. INGRAM. The Public Works Department promised, in submitting their estimates to the House to give all the necessary information about them, stating what the actual cost will be. The hon. minister cannot say that this work is so urgent and important that it must be done at once. Let the matter stand over until fuller information be got and a plan laid on the table, so that we may all know what the government intend doing. This work will never be completed for the figures he has given. It is absurd to suppose that he can build dams for $20,000. He said nothing about Cook's bay dredging.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that was provided for in the dredging, the total cost of which would be $48,546.52.

Mr. W. WRIGHT (Muskoka). Is this to be part of some comprehensive scheme? Is it the beginning of a canal which is intended to be extended to Toronto or is to finally end at Newmarket? In the latter case, the expenditure will be one of the most useless ever undertaken. You might as well throw the money away. What benefit would it be to the country to open up a canal four or five miles up the Holland river? I protest against this expenditure unless the canal is to be extended to Toronto.

Mr. EMMERSON. It has never been proposed to extend it to Toronto.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How do you get the water which is to be stored up in these reservoirs?

Mr. EMMERSON. From the streams above.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What streams ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not sufficiently familiar with the names, but there are streams above there.

Mr. OSLER. There are no streams above there.

Mr. INGRAM. We have a statement by a gentleman who knows the country well, and yet, in the face of that statement, the hon. minister persists in saying he will get water from the streams running above. If we had a written report of the engineer, we would know.

Mr. OSLER. Look at the map and you will find that the height of land is within three or four miles of Newmarket and that there is a little stream, the Holland river, running to Newmarket and about ends there, and that a few miles down, the streams begin running into Lake Ontario, so it is practically the height of land.

Mr. EMMERSON. The distance from Newmarket to Georgian bay by the Severn river is approximately 80 miles.

Mr. BARKER. Then you would have to go around into Lake Ontario for your local traffic ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If there are no streams, of what utility will be this reservoir ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer advises me that there are streams and plenty of water for the purpose of this canal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are the storage reservoirs to be situated ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the plans. I have simply stated what I had; and pending a final report I asked parliament to vote $100,000 on the ground that it will not cost more than that and that it is a feasible undertaking.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not feasible unless you can have these storage reservoirs.

Mr. EMMERSON. In that case the work will not proceed; but if we were to wait for a final report, it would be impossible to start this season.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Inasmuch as the country has survived the non-existence of this work the last 150 years, we might wait a few months for further information. I would like the minister to state where the storage reservoirs are to be situated. They must be located in accord with the position of the stream.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think it is important for me even to know where they are to be located. What is sufficient is to know that there is ample water for these reservoirs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the canal is about ten miles in length. Are there to be any in the lower five miles or are they all to be in the upper ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume they will be in the upper portion, from the necessities of the case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are to be fed by streams and we have them located within five miles; but we have a gentleman in this House from that part of the country who says there are no streams there.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have the assurance from the engineer that there are streams.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He did not say how many, did he ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not ask, I was content with the general statement, with the assurance knowing that before the amount could be expended, before the department would act upon it, the report of the engineer with the plans would be in the department and then action would be taken but not until then. In the meantime, in order to avoid delay, a vote for this amount on account is being asked from parliament.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What time of the year did the engineer make the surveys ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They were commenced after the last session, I think in August or September.

Mr. KEMP. I think it is undesirable for this committee to pass appropriations on such vague information as we have before us. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) was brought up in that part of the country and travelled over it in summer twice a week, and knows the country as thoroughly as we know the walk between here and Wellington street. The hon. gentleman has said that the purpose is to supply this canal with water by storage reservoirs, these reservoirs to be supplied by streams. I am informed that in summer there is only one little stream which has a little trickle of water going through it, about four inches wide, although at certain places it spreads out. The engineer has given some information with regard to this, but I cannot conceive that the engineer has said to the minister that it is practicable to operate that canal, to open and close the locks continuously during navigation. I do not think the engineer could have gone that far.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have stated that he did.

Mr. KEMP. I did not understand the minister to say that the engineer had stated that there was sufficient water.

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that there was ample water for the canal and I made that statement on the report of the engineer.

Mr. KEMP. But the engineer has not put that report in writing.

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that.

Mr. KEMP. I think it is unreasonable that this committee should be asked to pass such a large appropriation as this on the information we have before us.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. I do not think water would be at all necessary for this canal; there will never be any boats there and there will be no use for it. I do not know that we need haggle about water.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not change the appropriation and make it a ship railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. Hon. members opposite all seem to know so much about this. We have learned from the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that he had a launch up there for fifteen years, that he went around in that launch and he has made certain statements with respect to the depth of water he found at different points. I have great respect for that hon. gentleman and his knowledge and memory, but I have, as counter to that, the exact statement of the engineer as to the ample supply of water for all purposes and as to the feasibility of this work. That necessarily must be confirmed by a written report from him and before any action would be taken with respect to the construction of the work; that report accompanied by plans would necessarily be in the department. Pending that, I think I am justified in asking parliament to vote this money notwithstanding the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite. The engineer had no interest in making the representations that he did to me. I know my hon. friends indulged in a little by-play and the leader of the opposition is facetious and wants a ship railway. He remembers the one that was started down near Amherst under the former administration and he suggests that we should have one here, but that is aside from the question altogether. There is the proposition and there is the statement of the approximate cost, there is the report to me, not in writing it is true, but to be confirmed before further action by a full and complete report in writing that this is feasible, that it can be carried out and that the cost will not exceed a certain sum.

Mr. OSLER. With all due deference to the minister, I think he is paying very little respect to the members of this House when he asks an appropriation for a work to cost $300,000, when the engineer has only reported verbally. He does not condescend or think it is worth while to ask the engineer to put in writing a report, and this House is asked for an expenditure of $300,000, although the survey was begun last August. The Minister of Railways is, I think, acting in a most cavalier manner towards the House. He says in effect: I have given you enough information—but he has not given us any, and he does not think it worth while to get a report in writing from the engineer. This matter should not be disposed of as if it were a matter of a few dollars.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not regard the statement of the engineer, which doubtless occurred in conversation, as equivalent to the report we ought to expect on the survey which has been in progress for nearly a year. There is really no report whatever. It is true that armed with a mere casual conversation the minister has the advantage of being able to make it fit every difficulty presented by this side. It would be much better if we had an exact statement as to the details of the scheme. If the survey is sufficient to justify this vote there should have been a written report, if the survey is not sufficiently advanced then the minister should delay the appropriation. The only suggestion in answer to that has been the possible delay. I venture to say that no one in this House will imagine that the interests of this country will suffer by delay from this time until next January or February in respect of this canal. That country has got along without it for 100 or 150 years, and I do not think any crisis will result from delaying this vote until January or February next when that information can be before this House. It looks as if there was something behind it which has not been disclosed to the committee, otherwise this information would have been brought down in the regular way and submitted to the House.

Mr. KEMP. May I ask the Minister of Railways if he is not willing to postpone this vote until we are able to get a report covering the whole ground?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not see the necessity. There has been no argument advanced to convince the committee that it would not be advisable to pass a vote for this amount on account of this work, which vote would not be expended until the necessary information was given to the committee, a plan accompanied by a full and ample report. I consider that it would be delaying the work unnecessarily.

Item carried on division.

Trent canal—surveys for dams taken over by the Dominion government, $6,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to amend that by making the item read this way: 'Surveys for dams proposed to be taken over by the Dominion government.' Negotiations were commenced some months ago with the Ontario government while Mr. Ross was premier, and they are being continued under the present government. The officials of the Department of Railways and Canals have arranged with the Ontario government to take over these dams.

Mr. HAGGART. Are you paying anything for the dams ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, but we assume the cost of maintenance and repair. They are above Healey's Falls, on the waters of the Trent Valley canal. We assume liability for their maintenance.

Mr. OSLER. I have an idea that these dams are practically private interests, they are dams to increase water powers, built in a private interest altogether; and private interest is endeavouring, through the Ontario government, to transfer these to the Dominion government.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are in the public interest. If that canal goes to Trenton it will be absolutely necessary to have these waters conserved. It is a question whether they should be conserved at the expense of the Ontario government or at the expense of the government of Canada. The waters must be conserved to aid in the navigation of the Trent Valley canal. The arrangement has been fully gone into, officials of the Railway Department were in Toronto within the past fortnight carrying out negotiations. But the arrangement has not been finally completed by an Order in Council of the Ontario government.

Mr. HAGGART. How many dams are there ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are 15 or 20. They were built by the Ontario government in connection with lumbering operations, to raise the water in those streams.

Mr. BARKER. Are these dams on the Trenton line or on the Port Hope line ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They are not on either line, they are near to the Muskoka lakes, at the north end.

Mr. HAGGART. Are there any conditions attached about keeping them in repair ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We are abliged to keep them in repair, and we will have to employ men to look after them and regulate the water.

Welland canal—electric lighting and power plant, $40,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is required to pay for work done during May and June; it is in excess of the sum of $100,000 voted for 1904-5. There has been a change from the original scheme to one installing a high voltage line from Thorold to Port Colborne. Under the original idea the sum voted last session would complete the work; but it was subsequently determined to construct an elevator at Port Colborne and to use electricity in the work of the elevator; therefore it became necessary to expend more money.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Where is the power generated ?

Mr. EMMERSON. By the Cataract Power Company.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. How much are you paying per horse-power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Only for what we use.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to know the rate per horse-power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have a contract for 550 horse-power, I think we pay $14 per horse-power.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am glad to get that information in connection with the generation and distribution of power from the falls to the province of Ontario. I am glad to hear that the government is getting power at $14, because a proposal is being made in Toronto to charge $40 per horse-power generated at the falls and transmitted over the new line, and this may have a bearing on what we will have to pay in Toronto for horse-power of this character. Did I understand the hon. minister to say that it is only $14 per horse-power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My memory was that it was $16, but I am assured by the engineer that it is $14.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That is from the Cataract Power Company ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Chambly canal—to strengthen banks, $6,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The unexpected weakness of the banks showed itself just in May and that is the reason for our not making any provision in the main estimates. It is found necessary to spend this amount.

Chambly canal—to macadamize road west side of canal, $4,800.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do we macadamize the road ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is for macadamizing 2¼ miles of road in addition to the 1¼ miles which have already been done. This amount will complete it.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this the tow path ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it is the road.

Mr. HAGGART. Why are you macadamizing the road ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This road is on government land and this work was commenced some years ago. There has been an amount voted each year.

Lachine canal—walls, St. Gabriel basin, No. 1, $12,500.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the whole amount of the work at St. Gabriel basin ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to rebuild the walls in St. Gabriel basin No. 1. The wall around the basin was built in 1873. It consisted of cribwork and it is rotten above the water line. It is proposed to build it in concrete. The total estimate of the cost of a wall 4 feet high is $12,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a new work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is doing the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It has not been let yet.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it going to be done by contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Trent canal—contribution towards construction of a bridge across McLaren's creek, $2,500.

Mr. HAGGART. How do you become liable for McLaren's creek bridge ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is asked for as a contribution towards the construction of a roadway across the swamp at McLaren's creek in the county of Victoria in order to shorten the distance below the town of Lindsay and the village of Fenelon Falls some three miles. The original appropriation was made on the ground that the water had been raised in consequence of the construction of a dam above Bobcaygeon and this made it necessary to raise the road by bridging causing a very great extra cost for the construction of this road. The work is to be done by the municipality. This is only a contribution. The estimated cost of the whole work is $5,500, the department contributes $2,500 and the municipality provides the rest. This was provided for on a former occasion, but the municipality failed to carry out its undertaking and the contribution was not paid over. Certainly it will not be paid over now unless it does its part. I would like to amend the item by substituting the word 'road' for the word 'bridge.'

Mr. HAGGART. As this is nearly the last item for canals I wish to direct the attention of the hon. minister to a very similar case that occurred in my own constituency. There is a petition from the council of North Elmsley and South Elmsley asking a contribution for keeping in repair a road near the Poonamalie dam. By the erection of the government dam there the road is flooded to such an extent that the municipalities are put to great expense to keep the road in order. The engineer of the department has reported that the government ought to be liable for a contribution towards the repair of that road, as the building of the dam entailed this extra expense on the municipalities. Deputation after deputation has waited on the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do you mean they waited on me ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, sir.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. HAGGART. I accompanied a delegation at one time to see you—I beg pardon, I think it was Mr. Blair.

Mr. EMMERSON. It must have been.

Mr. HAGGART. At all events I have stated the facts. The engineer has reported that the erection of the dam has entailed the extra cost on the municipalities and yet nothing has been done by the government. I suppose it is because a part of the road is in South Lanark and the other part in Leeds and Grenville that the people have not got justice.

Mr. BERGERON. They got cold justice.

Mr. HAGGART. That is all they got. There is another matter I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. Last spring the Poonamalie dam was washed away, causing considerable damage to persons below who had their buildings swept away, and a delegation waited on the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. I remember that.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister intend to compensate these people, or as an alternative will he recommend that a fiat may issue for a petition of right so that the justness of the claim may be tested in the courts. It is stated by the government that the break was caused by force majeur, that the government is not liable. That is ridiculous in view of the fact that this old dam was erected in 1832, and as the lake is 25 miles long and some miles wide it would take an extraordinary freshet to raise the water over three feet. I understand the Minister of Justice said there was no liability, but will the Minister of Railways recommend the granting of a fiat to enable these people to sue the government ?

Mr. EMMERSON. With reference to the roads in the townships of North and South Elmsley, I have never heard of the matter before, but I will have the reports looked up and if my hon. friend will drop me a note giving me the particulars, I will be glad to go into the question. As to the other matter, the damage was caused in the spring of 1904; the question was looked into at the time, and I referred the papers to the Department of Justice. I think their opinion was that the government was not liable, but the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is a fair one. I will get the papers and with the concurrence of the Minister of Justice I will be quite willing to have the legal points settled by the Exchequer Court as to the liability of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not satisfactory, the Minister of Justice refused to grant a fiat.

Mr. EMMERSON. So far as our department is concerned I would have no objection.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood from the parties that they have been refused a fiat.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think I have been consulted in the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Railways says that he is willing if the Department of Justice would concur, that would be sufficient.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it would be simple justice to the parties to give them an opportunity to prove their claim at law. I have no desire to be a bar to that.

Mr. AMES. In the main estimates for the Department of Marine and Fisheries we noted that certain dredges which were being constructed were being charged to capital account, and the Minister of Finance explained at the time that this was customary. In this case you are constructing dredges and charging them to income, which seems to me to be the proper way. There seems to be a lack of uniformity between the two departments in this matter. In the Railway Department dredges are charged to income and in the Marine Department to capital. One or other system should be followed.

Mr. EMMERSON. This vote is for repairs or the rebuilding of a dredge and is properly chargeable to income, while the dredge in the Marine Department was a new dredge in connection with construction work.

Cornwall canal—rip-rap face stone between the locks, $7,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this work done by the employees of the government?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is done by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Who got the contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. W. M. Lacey, of Prescott, the lowest tenderer.

Contribution of the government railways to the faculty of McGill University towards the foundation of a school of railway transportation in general in connection with the faculty of Applied Science, $2,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this an annual contribution?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. The great railway corporations—the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Northern Railway have entered into an arrangement with McGill University for the creation of a railway department. The Department of Railways was approached on the matter, and it seemed to be fair that the government railways should make some contribution to this chair or department, which must certainly work out great good for the young men of this country, giving them an opportunity such as has not existed before in Canada of getting a technical railway education.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is a very good object; but I might remind my hon. friend that besides McGill University, which is a first-class university, we have in Montreal a school called the Polytechnique School of Laval University, where a great many young men are studying in the same branches. A demand may be made there for the same purpose, and if the principle is adopted in this case, it will be hard for my hon. friend to refuse it in others.

Mr. EMMERSON. When this matter was brought to the attention of the department I entered very fully into that feature of it. I thought the government railways would not be justified in contributing to one institution and not to others. Principal Peterson approached me on the subject first. I pointed out to him that this would be opening the door to demands from other institutions in different provinces, and before I consented to submit this to parliament I had an assurance from him that every other university in Canada would concur in this vote, which would not be used as a precedent for a contribution by the government to any other educational institution. This is not a grant to the university; it is given to a committee formed by the several railways, which have representatives on the committee. The government is to have, if we wish, one representative. They have made arrangements whereby a special technical training will be given in the science department of McGill Universitiy to any student who wishes to fit himself for railway work.

Mr. KEMP. What is the total amount that is being contributed for this purpose?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company gives $5,000, the Grand Trunk Railway Company gives $5,000, the Canadian Northern Railway, I think, $2,000, and the proportionate amount which I thought was fair from the government railway system was $2,500.

Salaries of engineers, draughtsmen and extra clerks, and messengers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to provide for the following increases, G. A. Mothersill, $100; W. L. Leslie, $100; R. S. Reid, $50; M. O'Neil, $50, $300.

Mr. AMES. Is this G. A. Mothersill the same gentleman who about eighteen months ago was appointed special commissioner to inquire into the claims against the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railroad, and whose report prepared after several months of careful investigation was for some reason not acted upon, but another report substituted?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Mothersill was sent down to inquire into the bills against the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. Later on there did not seem to be sufficient evidence and a justice of the Superior Court of Quebec was appointed to go and take evidence in respect to these very same claims.

Mr. AMES. Was not Mr. Mothersill's report complete and satisfactory?

Mr. EMMERSON. The evidence did not seem to me quite complete. He is not a lawyer, and there seemed to be lapses in it.

Mr. AMES. Were some claims thrown out by Mr. Mothersill which should not have been thrown out ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; there was no question of the kind. There is only a question of having a record of the claims that could be legally taken into consideration under the law.

Mr. AMES. As you are giving this man an increase of $100, evidently you regard him as a valuable officer.

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly ; but he is not a lawyer, and might not be fully qualified to hold an investigation and get all the facts, because of his want of legal training. That, however, should not militate against him as regards his qualifications for his duties in the department.

Mr. HAGGART. What salary is he getting now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This will give him $2,100.

Trent canal—staff on dams taken over by Dominion government, $3,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Do the Ontario government pay $3,000 for the staff ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Have the government taken the precaution to disclaim responsibility for any damages that occurred before these were taken over ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes ; there can be no question about that.

Mr. HAGGART. In taking over those dams from the Ontario government, you should get them absolutely without any claim for easement.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes ; that is made very clear.

Additional to pay persons employed permanently in the public service, and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for and in connection with passing vessels through the canals of the government of Canada, from midnight on Saturday to midnight on Sunday, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,000.

Mr. AMES.

Mr. HAGGART. Why this increase of $2,000 over last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is due to the increase in wages. We have been obliged to add to the wages of the men on all the canals. Last year we provided $18,000, then we had supplementaries this session to round out the total of last year.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount of the supplementaries in all ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $20,000 was the amount last year. The extra amount to increase wages came to about $2,000. Some increases were made last summer, but since then we have made further advances. That is to say, certain classes of the men were increased last year, but I went over the whole list and have made additional increases since then, and since the main estimates were prepared and submitted to parliament.

Intercolonial Railway—working expenses $1,250,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the usual vote only it is increased. The amount last year was $6,500,000. Now we provide in the main estimates $7,000,000 and we will have to take in addition to that, owing to increased wages, $1,250,000, and I am in hopes that it will not be necessary at the next session for parliament to ask further supplementary estimates.

Mr. BERGERON. This is nearly $2,000,000 more than last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, we had to ask for nearly $2,000,000 in the supplementary estimates during the present session.

Mr. HAGGART. What has this to do with supplementary estimates ? It is for the ordinary running expenses of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not desire to have a supplementary estimate next year. This is to guard against that.

Intercolonial Railway—strengthening bridges, $150,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total expenditure in this service ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total expenditure to April 30th, 1905, in strengthening bridges was $1,144,048.37.

Mr. HAGGART. That will complete the whole scheme ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total estimated cost is $1,828,011.74.

Mr. HAGGART. Three or four sessions ago we were given information that $800,000 would cover the whole amount. How is it that it now runs up to $1,800,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I gave the figures last year and gave the details. Now we are asking $150,000 to expend on account.

Mr. HAGGART. This is necessitated by the increased size of the locomotives. How do you run over the bridges at present ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We do not put our heavy locomotives on certain sections of the road where the bridges have not been strengthened.

Mr. HAGGART. One of these is at Sackville where the heavy locomotives run.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was not sufficiently strong, it was found to be too weak.

Mr. AMES. The day before yesterday I had an opportunity of examining the new bridge over the Restigouche at Metapedia, which replaces a bridge previously in use and I noticed that the iron structure of the old bridge had been piled up at one end of the new bridge and was lying there. What disposal is made of the old material in such cases?

Mr. EMMERSON. That material is there under an arrangement between the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick. It is proposed to utilize that material in the construction of a highway bridge. There is an item in the estimates referring to the matter. It is an interprovincial bridge. The custom as between Ontario and Quebec has been for the federal parliament to make appropriations to the interprovincial bridges and the appropriation which the Dominion government proposes with respect to this particular bridge across the Restigouche at Metapedia is the old structure. The provinces will bear the expense of erecting it and putting in a sub-structure.

Mr. AMES. Not only there, but at numerous points along the Intercolonial Railway there are piles of old 60 pound rails which have been replaced by the present heavy rails. These rails are now covered with rust and each successive season they grow rustier. I would ask whether any attempt is made to dispose of these rails while there is still value in them ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Very recently I did offer those rails for sale by tender. Tenders have been received but no sales have been made, for the reason that I wanted to confer with some officials at Moncton before concluding any arrangement.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What offer did you get for them ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think it would be proper for me to disclose that information, particularly as the offers have not yet been acted upon. Notices were sent to everybody in the maritime provinces, in Montreal and Toronto, who would be likely to want those rails. We also put up posters in the stations along the line.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. How many tons have you ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot speak from memory. These include not only the rails we have fit for use, but also scrap rails and scrap material of other descriptions.

Mr. KEMP. Were advertisements inserted in the public press ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think so. I think public posters give sufficient publicity. I find that when you begin to advertise in newspapers you have to cover a very wide field.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the minister, after the expenditure of this $150,000 for strengthening bridges, how much will he require to complete the strengthening of all his bridges ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $683,000.

Mr. BARKER. How does that come about ? Last year the hon. gentleman asked for a vote of $385,000. He spent all that except $142,000. He has already taken this year a revote of that $142,000. He told us last year that in addition to that $385,000 he only required $280,000 to complete all his ing $150,000, so he ought to be able to complete everything with $130,000. Now, it seems that we shall have to give him $683,000. The hon. gentleman's predecessor told us in 1902 that it was estimated that $100,000 for five or six years would strengthen every bridge except in the Oxford, New Glasgow and Cape Breton divisions, where they did not intend to strengthen. After that statement votes were asked for from year to year until we were told at length that they wanted $1,750,000 for what at first only required $600,000. Last year, the hon. gentleman told us he wanted in all $1,750,000. There were $385,000 then voted; and they only wanted $280,000 more out of this $1,750,000. Now the hon. gentleman tells us that we are $683,000 still away from the end.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said last year that the total estimated cost of all would be $1,828,011, exclusive of Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton divisions.

Mr. BARKER. At page 6284 of 'Hansard' last year Mr. Ingram asked this question :

> The total now is $1,759,000. That will include the $385,000 that the hon. gentleman is now asking for. Am I correct in that ?
> Mr. EMMERSON. And the $280,000 which is contemplated later on.
> Mr. INGRAM. That includes the $280,000 ?
>
> Mr. EMMERSON. That includes the $385,000 which is now being voted, and as I understand it, the $280,000 which I gave as necessary for the years 1904-5.
> Mr. INGRAM. So that we have it now that the total cost is actually to be $1,759,000, which includes the item which you or somebody else expect to ask for next year of $280,000 ?

Now the $385,000 is gone, we are voting now $150,000 out of that $280,000. That should only leave $130,000 for the future, yet the hon. gentleman tells us that he wants over $600,000 more.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not see that the statement I made last year conflicts with my present statement. There was an item of $285,000 to which I made reference.

Mr. BARKER. Then the 'Hansard' has got you wrong; it was $280,000?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total cost to the 30th June, 1904, was $1,119,652.55. I gave the details with respect to that. Then there was expended to the 30th April, 1905, to strengthen bridges, $36,676.80. There was the credit of the Restigouche bridge amounting to $24,395.82. The total expenditure to the 30th April this year was $1,144,048.37. The total estimated cost of strengthening bridges exclusive of the Oxford and New Glasgow and the Cape Breton divisions as given last year and as given now is $1,828,011.74.

Mr. BARKER. Is the hon. gentleman reading from the figures he gave last year?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. I have the figures here in 'Hansard.' I do not suppose those are the exact figures he had last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a transcript of them.

Mr. BARKER. At page 6285 of 'Hansard' of last year, Mr. Ingram says :

> Mr. EMMERSON. $1,759,000.

There is no use going any further into it. There is the statement made explicitly. We have gone on from a start of $600,000 for this purpose and we have got up to $1,759,000, and we are about as far back as when we started six years ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that perhaps we are not so very far apart.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Only about $1,000,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The amounts I read do not take into consideration the credit. I find that the amount was $422,000 and then we provided in the main estimates for 1905-6, $142,000.

Mr. BARKER. That is the revote of the $385,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but the total was $422,000, and then we provided $142,000, which left $280,000. That is the amount that was revoted in the main estimates of 1895-96.

Mr. BARKER. That $280,000, you told us last year, would finish everything. I think we should have now from the hon. minister a definite statement of every dollar which is required for the future. The deputy minister knows exactly what it is. This work has been going on for years. The deputy minister, as the chief engineer of these railways, knows within a very few dollars what all these works will cost. They are bridges in existence and not speculative matters. You can tell us within a very few dollars what is required to finish the strengthening of these bridges.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given that information to my hon. friend. I have told him that we require $1,824,000 to do the whole work, exclusive of the Oxford and New Glasgow and the Cape Breton divisions. I have told him that we have provided of that amount, $1,144,048.37. Now the difference between these amounts would be upwards of $600,000. Before all the bridges are brought up to the standard there will be required on the Intercolonial Railway that sum.

Mr. BARKER. That does not include the New Glasgow and Oxford or the Cape Breton divisions ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Or the Drummond County Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, it includes the Drummond County.

Mr. BARKER. I would like the hon. minister to take his statement in 'Hansard' of last year, wherein he spoke about $280,000 more and explain that in connection with what he says now that he wants $600,000 more.

Mr. EMMERSON. What I stated last year was in respect to certain bridges that had been named and the balance required was $280,000.

Mr. BARKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman could have understood what he was answering last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. I named the bridges. I have the figures here now showing the amount and showing each particular bridge, but the whole amount, which goes back some years previous to my being in the department, is included in the expenditure of $1,144,000 and in the estimate of $1,828,000.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman listen for a moment while I again refer to 'Hansard' of last year ? Mr. Ingram, trying to do what I am doing now, said :

Mr. EMMERSON. $1,759.000.

He assented to that. Then Mr. Ingram says :

That is to be the total cost of strengthening the bridges on the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Exclusive of the Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton Railways.

What can be clearer than that $1,759,000 was to do it all, and he had previously stated that to make up that $1,759,000 he would want the $385,000 which he got voted last year, and the $280,000. Now, that $385,000 is either spent or included in the main estimates of this year. That only leaves $280,000 to be provided, he is now taking $150,000 of that $280,000 and there should only be $130,000 for the future. Yet, he tells us that he will require $683,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is only $69,000 difference, according to your statement, between us.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the item pass ?

Mr. HAGGART. Wait a minute; the minister is anxious to explain it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have explained it very fully.

Engine house, &c., Riviere du Loup, $45,500.

Mr. BARKER. We have been having this vote for some years, will this finish ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Total estimated cost $258,712.28 ; total amount expended to 30th of April, 1905, $152,050.56, main estimates (revote) $36,000, and this item $45,500.

Mr. BARKER. How much will you want in future ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $25,000 on the total estimated cost.

Mr. BARKER. That will cover everything.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, according to the estimates.

Increased accommodation at St. John, $50,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is for the engine-house, electric lighting, bridges, loading platform, car shop, addition to baggage room, addition to train shed and additional track. The amount required to finish up all this work is about $124,000 after the expenditure in 1904-5. In the main estimates we have $35,000 leaving a balance of $89,000 and on that I am asking $50,000, leaving $39,000 to complete.

Mr. BARKER. Will that $39,000 finish ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes according to the details given to me.

Increased accommodation, Pictou, $42,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have $57,500 in the main estimates, and we are asking $42,500 now, leaving $56,500.

Mr. BARKER. That will cover everything at Pictou.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Increased accommodation at Ste. Flavie, $9,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. Total estimated cost, $133,500 ; total expenditure to 30th April, $84,000. We have in the main estimates $35,000 and $9,000 here, leaving a balance of $5,500.

Double tracking parts of line, $50,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The section between Richmond and Rockingham (2½ miles) is estimated to cost $47,768 ; Bedford Bridge to Windsor Junction (5 miles) estimated cost $112,200 ; Rockingham to Bedford Bridge (4½ miles), estimated cost $112,000. Bedford Bridge, $45,000, or a total in round numbers of $317,000. This amount of $50,000 is required to pay on account of contracts entered into for double tracking between these points. The management has in contemplation double tracking the line between New Glasgow and Stellarton on account of the congestion at that point, estimated cost, $46,000 ; from Point Lévis to Chaudière curve, a little over 7 miles, estimated cost, $163,000 ; from Moncton to Painsec Junction (7¼ miles) estimated cost $167,000. That makes a total of $693,000. We expended up to the 30th of June 1904 $97,057, leaving a balance of $59,690. The estimated expenditure in 1904-5 was $100,000, leaving say $496,000. We have in the main estimates $100,000, which would leave $396,000 to complete these works. We are putting on that $50,000. That will leave a balance of $346,000. But I may say that while these are the proposals, the carrying of them out is not an immediate necessity, and therefore I only ask for this sum of money. The main difficulty arises between Halifax and Windsor Junction. Perhaps the next in importance, so far as congestion in traffic is concerned, is between Stellarton and New Glasgow.

Mr. KEMP. What about the section between Windsor Junction and Truro?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think there is the same necessity.

Mr. KEMP. Is this all the double-tracking that is intended to be made the next few years?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is all that is in contemplation—28½ miles.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is charging to capital for this double-tracking about $25,000 a mile. How is that work being done?

Mr. EMMERSON. By public tenders and contract.

Mr. BARKER. Is there anything exceptional about this work that an extra track should cost $25,000 a mile?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will bear me out in the statement that on account of rock work, skirting the Bedford basin, and the straightening out of the curves, the estimate is certainly not an excessive one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course I do not know anything about the cost, but there are very great difficulties of construction.

Mr. BARKER. Are there several contractors, or are all the contracts in the hands of one firm?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are three different contractors.

Increased accommodation at Truro, $50,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the main estimates for 1905-06 we have $50,000; we require $166,500, and we are now asking for $50,000 of that, leaving a balance of $116,500 after this estimate.

To increase accommodation at Moncton, $50,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The total expenditure to the 30th of April, 1905, was $613,523. The main estimate this year was $110,000. After this main estimate we will require $300,000, and we are asking $550,000, leaving $250,000. That is taking into consideration the enlargement of the yards and the shops which will have to be carried out in view of the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific will necessarily come there, and the present is an opportune time for enlargement. We thought it advisable to secure some land in connection with it, and I think the management secured land at a very reasonable figure as compared with charges for like property elsewhere.

Mr. BARKER. Is that bought on joint account?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; it has nothing to do with the Grand Trunk Pacific, but having regard to the future and to the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific will come there, it will be necessary for the government to have ample room for its own railway purposes.

Increased accommodation at Halifax, $50,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. We would require to carry out all the contemplated improvements and additional facilities at Halifax, after the provision made in the main estimates, $802,737. After this vote there will be $752,000 to expend.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. BARKER.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Mr. GEO. H. PERLEY presented the first report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, on the suppression of tuberculosis in Canada, as follows :—

The Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed for the purpose of considering what further steps should be taken and what suggestions can be made in the direction of the suppression of tuberculosis in Canada, with power to send for persons, papers and records and to report, have the honour to report as follows :

1. The Canadian Association for the Prevention of Consumption and other forms of tuberculosis, and various organizations of the same character in Canada, and prominent medical men were invited to make such suggestions as they might deem advisable on the question which was the subject of reference to this committee, and valuable suggestions and a large amount of information have been received, and have been made use of by your committee.

2. Until quite recently tuberculosis was regarded as generally hereditary and incurable, but modern discoveries have established that it is a communicable disease, and to a large extent curable as well as preventable.

3. There is in Canada a permanent corps of consumptive invalids, numbering at least forty thousand persons, of whom over eight thousand die annually. In the provinces of Ontario and Quebec it is an ascertained fact that the deaths from tuberculosis alone are more than twenty-five per cent greater than from diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, measles and whooping cough combined. Apart from the humanitarian considerations involved in the question, the financial loss alone entailed upon Canada by such an annual mortality is enormous, estimated by competent authorities at over $8,000,000 a year, which makes it imperative for the state to adopt the best possible measures of prevention and cure.

4. The problem of tuberculosis involves a social movement which does not affect one province, but all provinces ; one district, but all districts ; one class, but all classes in the community, in country as well as in town. It is a movement of so wide a character that, for it to have adequate practical results, the co-operation of the central government is absolutely essential.

5. The principle involving the interference of the Dominion government for the suppression of diseases of this kind was recognized immediately after confederation, and is embodied in the statutes of 1868, 31 Victoria, chapter 63, from which the following is extracted :

(7.) Whenever Canada, or any part thereof, appears to be threatened with any epidemic, endemic, contagious or infectious disease, the Governor may, by proclamation, make such regulations as he thinks proper and necessary to prevent the introduction of such disease from beyond the limits, or to prevent its spread within the limits of Canada, and otherwise protect the public health, and he may, from time to time, revoke or amend the same, or make others in their stead in like manner, and may impose penalties, forfeitures and punishments for the breach thereof, and such regulations shall be published at least twice in the 'Canada Gazette,' and the production of copies of the 'Gazette' containing such proclamation, shall be evidence of the making, date and contents of such regulations.

(9.) By such regulations the Governor in Council may appoint for any specified time, one or several 'Central Boards of Health' and may name the members thereof, and also such medical and other officers and servants as he may deem necessary to assist such boards, and the powers and duties of the said boards shall be such as are affixed to them by such regulations, and may be exercised by any number of the members thereof mentioned in the said regulations, as constituting the quorum thereof; and the powers and duties of such boards shall cease on the revocation or at the time of the expiration of the regulations aforesaid.

(10.) When, and so long as such regulations are in force, it shall be the duty of every municipal corporation or county sessions within Canada to organize a local board of health for the limits of their respective jurisdictions, and such local boards or any three members thereof, shall have power to act under the regulations aforesaid, and the direction of any central board of health, designated in such regulations, and the duties of such local boards of health shall be to enforce generally all sanitary measures required, and to carry out the regulations of the Governor in Council, and such orders as may be issued by the central boards in pursuance of the provisions of such regulations.

(11.) In the case of municipal corporations or county sessions neglecting or refusing to appoint a local board of health as aforesaid, or in the absence of any such authority in any locality, the Governor in Council may nominate persons within the limits of such municipal corporation, county or locality, to constitute such local boards of health.

6. The problem of preventing and curing the disease is exceedingly complex and necessarily entails a very large expenditure. The work may be taken hold of by the Dominion government or by the provincial and municipal authorities with the aid of the Dominion government.

7. In the opinion of your committee the federal government should be prepared to contribute yearly to each province a considerable share of the annual cost of dispensaries, inspection, the erection and maintenance of sanatoria and whatever other agencies may be found necessary to secure the desired end ; the province, municipalities, individuals and benevolent associations contributing the balance ; the federal government to prescribe the condition upon which the several institutions shall be entitled to their share of the subsidy and also to have the right of inspection of each institution and of its books at any time, and also power to withhold its contribution in respect of any institution not fulfilling its requirements.

8. Your committee further suggest that unless the Dominion government feels prepared to take hold of the matter itself, a conference should be held at as early a date as possible, between the federal and provincial authorities, for the purpose of determining the best action which should be taken in the premises.

9. Your committee suggest that the recommendations embodied in the present report be presented to the government by a joint delegation of both Houses ; and that their attention be again called to the resolutions passed unanimously by the Senate and by the House of Commons respectively, of which copies are hereunto annexed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. C. EDWARDS,
GEORGE H. PERLEY,
Joint chairmen.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the acting Postmaster General to the fact that according to the regulations, the members of this House have the franking privilege for ten days previous to the opening of the session, and that it ceases on the day the House prorogues. It seems to me rather unjust that the franking privilege should not continue for some days after the session, and I would like to hear the opinion of the acting Postmaster General upon the subject.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say to my hon. friend exactly what the arrangement is, but for a long time there has been an arrangement by which the franking privilege is allowed for a few days after the close of the session—I think it is four or five days. I am not aware that any change is contemplated or has been asked for.

THE NIAGARA FRUIT GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG. I wish to repeat a request which I made several weeks ago, that any correspondence which has taken place between the Niagara Fruit Growers' Association and the Minister of Agriculture be laid on the table. May I ask the minister whether he will be able to obtain it before the end of the session?

Mr. FISHER. I am speaking from memory, but I think we found that there was no official correspondence at all in the department. I will inquire, however, and let my hon. friend know in the afternoon.

GRAIN INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 174) to amend the Grain Inspection Act as regards the selection of commercial grades and samples—Mr. Fisher—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This Bill was introduced in the Senate by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), and he asked me to take charge of it in this House. It is a small amendment, which has been asked for by the Board of Trade of Winnipeg, the Grain Growers' Association and various other representative bodies. The Grain Standard Board is a board with a considerable number of members. Occasionally, according to the season when this board ordinarily meets, it is not able to get in the samples of grain from the different sections of the Northwest to be decided upon. This amendment provides that a special meeting of a small committee of the board may be called for the purpose of dealing with samples which do not arrive soon enough to be dealt with at the ordinary meeting of the whole board. Simply a matter of convenience for the board and the trade, both the growers and the dealers in grain.

Mr. THOS. GREENWAY (Lisgar). I do not regard the suggested amendment to the Bill as of very great importance, because I do not see much necessity for a standard board. Having established the grades of wheat, I think that they ought to remain standards for the province as they are fixed by law—No. 1 Hard, No. 1 Northern, No. 2 Northern. The difficulty with the commercial grades is the principal difficulty we have to meet in the operation of the present Act. I think it would be perhaps a good plan to do away with the commercial grades entirely and throw all below the standard samples into a general grade of milling wheat for Manitoba. As hon. members, especially those from Manitoba, know, there was a good deal of trouble last year in the operation of the present grading system. That trouble was mainly due to the very great difference in price, and spread between No. 2 and No. 3 Northern. For instance, I have in my possession two certificates for the same car of wheat shipped out by a neighbour of mine. That wheat was examined by two special inspectors, and I suppose the one was ignorant of what grading the other had given. One made it No. 2 Northern and the other No. 3. The difference which that made to my neighbour on that day was $99, there being 1,100 bushels of wheat in the car and a 9-cent spread between No. 2 and No. 3 Northern. I may say that the season began with a 3-cent spread. That, I believe would be a fair spread in price. It is a mystery to the ordinary mortal how that spread comes to be fixed, how it is manipulated. This morning, on looking over the market quotations, I found that the spread in price between No. 3 and No. 2 Northern at Fort William is 17½ cents. The hon. minister will see the difficulty we experience in the operation of this Act, from the illustration I have given him of a single car. Should it happen that a farmer shipped a carload which he thought was No. 2 Northern—and many farmers can tell the grade as well as a grain inspector—he would find that instead of there being a difference of $99 as in the illustration given—a difference just based on the judgment of the inspector; he says it is not quite good enough for No. 2 and I shall have to make it No. 3—the difference in the value of the wheat the moment the stamp is put upon it is now over $190. I am therefore afraid that although a good deal of care and attention was given to the drafting of this Act, it will not work out very satisfactorily unless we adopt some other system. I notice that the Grain-Growers' Association, among others, have suggested that we might get over the difficulty by having a No. 3 Northern extra. That change was made by the standard board last autumn when fixing the grade as between No. 4 and No. 4 extra. That only made a difference of two cents, as the spread is not very wide. I know something of the system of the other side of the line, and the system I suggested in the beginning is that which they have in force. They have their established grades. No mixing is allowed in those. I do not think that the established grades ought to be mixed. We are proud of our Manitoba No. 1, and we think a good deal of our No. 1 Northern and No. 2 Northern. These remain as they are on the other side of the line, except that their samples are not quite as high as ours. The remaining low grade wheat, of which we shall have more or less every year on account of the vastness of the territory in the Northwest, we should combine in one to be called Manitoba milling wheat. When a farmer has what he thinks is No. 2 and the inspector grades it No. 3, there may be a difference of one or two cents per bushel in the actual value, but I am at a loss to know why we should have such a system in Canada. Why not sell wheat the same as other farm produce ? Why should there be any manipulation in connection with the business which renders possible such an injustice as the one I have referred to ? For a long time the legislation in this House has been along the lines of promoting the interest of the farmer in handling his own wheat, providing means by which the transportation companies were compelled to build loading platforms, so that the farmer would load his own wheat and ship it out to his own order and handle his own business. Legislation points in that direction, and I think it a good thing. What I wanted to get into the Act was something more along this line, still promoting the idea that the House had in view of providing those facilities for the farmers handling their own grain. I might mention, to show the importance of the matter which I have suggested to the committe, that the crop for the first eleven months which was inspected in Winnipeg was, in round figures, 40,000,000 bushels—the first eleven months of fiscal year ending 31st May. Of that grain 10,119,000 bushels was No. 3 Northern, showing the great loss which the farmers of the Northwest have sustained by the manipulation of the spread in price in the way I have indicated. I went over it carefully with a gentleman who knows something about the grain trade the other day, and he and I agreed that the farmers, on that item alone, had lost at least half a million dollars last year in the value of No. 3 Northern wheat. We have been paying attention to some things which promote the interests of the agriculturist, but there is nothing of greater importance than the great crop which is being brought out from year to year from the Northwest. The calendar year which closed the last day of last month saw handled altogether about 60,000,000 bushels of wheat, and a most conservative estimate for this year, in view of present prospects, is that that will be increased by over 50 per cent.

Mr. BRODEUR. 25 per cent grade No. 3, will that be expected every year ?

Mr. GREENWAY. No. We are talking of a very special year. Last year, I may say for the information of hon. members, was an off year in Manitoba. In a great many districts, on account of the rust the crop was poor. That is why the low grade wheat made about 25 per cent of the whole. I was just showing that last year we had 60,000,000 bushels of wheat, worth about $40,000,000 to the producers. And this year, according to the most conservative estimate, we are to have about 90,000,000 bushels, worth about $70,000,000. Now, I would urge upon the Minister of Agriculture that these suggestions I make are worthy of his very careful consideration, because of the importance of this industry. And, important as this industry already is, it is plain that it is only in its infancy. We shall have, in the near future hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat, for we have only a little patch of four or five million acres presently under crop. I hope the minister will include in his Bill, in furtherance of the facilities which shall be given to the farmer to handle his own grain, something to the following effect :

The Governor in Council may appoint, in connection with the warehouse commissioner's office, an officer who shall be regarded as the agent of the shipper of any grain of his own production who may choose to avail himself of his services, for the following purposes :

Advising shippers as to the inspection given and reasons therefor——

If a man ships out a car of wheat which he believes to be No. 2 northern, and it does not grade up to No. 2 northern, he should know the reason why.

Return the shipper a portion of the inspection sample, when required, and in every way in his power advise with the shipper as to the best disposition of the car, as to cleaning——

For instance, there may be too much dirt in it:

—handling in treatment, or advisability of bringing the matter before the board of survey.

This appeal to the board of survey is provided for by the law.

He shall have access to the offices of the transportation companies for the purpose of taking up unusual delay in the transit of any car, or loss by leak, or bad order, or accident. He shall also be afforded all access to the office and records of the grain inspection. The shipper desiring to use the services of such agent must advise him promptly of the car, number, date of shipment, quality, loaded grade shipped for, name and address in full of the shipper and consignee, together with destination, and shall perform such other duties in this connection as may from time to time be assigned to him by Order in Council.

If that were done, it might have the effect of removing a great deal of the irritation presently existing between the grain grower and, sometimes the grain dealer, sometimes the inspector, on account of the differences which I have pointed out. I do not wish to detain the House any longer upon this subject at this time. Perhaps, on some future occasion, I may have something to say about the general provisions of the Act. Now I would desire for the purpose of trying to get a little better satisfaction than under the present system, that we should adopt some such amendment as this.

Mr. BERGERON. If I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway), this is not an amendment to the Bill which is now before us?

Mr. GREENWAY. No. It is suggested as an addition. The present Bill remains as it is.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I am very glad indeed that my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has spoken as he has on this question. The House and the country know that he is an authority on all questions in regard to grain production and the grain trade in Manitoba and the Northwest. The question which he has brought up is one of the utmost importance. Everybody in Canada realizes and recognizes fully that every facility should be provided to make the production and handling of grain a success. The enormous development of our west is largely due to the fact that we have there to-day immense wheat production and the possibility—nay, the certainty—of steady and enormous increase of wheat production from year to year. Nothing that we can do to facilitate this great industry should be left undone; no lack of attention should be allowed to mar our opportunities in this regard.

I confess that some of the things my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) has said surprise me. That there should be a difference between No. 2 and No. 3 in the market of 17½ cents appears to me extraordinary and inexplicable.

Mr. GREENWAY. The prices at Fort William yesterday were, for No. 3, 87 cents; for No. 2, $1.04½.

Mr. FISHER. This is a difference of something like 20 per cent in price as between the two grades. I do not know whether my hon. friend pointed out the difference between No. 2 and No. 1.

Mr. GREENWAY. It is one or two cents.

Mr. FISHER. A difference of a few cents between No. 2 and No. 1, and of 17½ cents between No. 3 and No. 2 is an extraordinary condition of affairs. I cannot believe that it is due to anything in the grading of the wheat; it seems to me it must be due to the manipulations of the market; whether in Canada, whether in the United States—which, after all, is the great wheat market of the continent—or whether in the British market, I do not know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the practical difference between No. 2 and No. 3?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose we would generally have to take the market value as showing the practical difference——

Mr. GREENWAY. It is about 3 cents, I should say. The present quotations in Liverpool show a difference of 7 cents per cental, or about 4½ cents a bushel.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that the difference is under 5 cents per bushel. I suppose we may take that as the fair difference in the actual price. Yet the market price with us shows a difference of 17½ cents. Now, I do not understand that my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) attributes this to bad grading or to anything in relation to the inspection.

Mr. GREENWAY. I pointed out a case where a difference of opinion as to the grade made a difference of $99 in the returns for a car of wheat.

Mr. FISHER. But the fact that a certain car had been graded No. 3 instead of No. 2 would not in itself make such a difference. I do not understand that this difference in the market of 17½ cents is a legitimate difference due to anything in the quality of the wheat. In fact, the remarks of my hon. friend from Lisgar would tend to show that it is simply something connected with the market conditions, and not with the value of the different grades. The best proof of this is that while there is a difference of 17½ cents at Fort William there is a difference of less than 5 cents in exactly the same grades when the wheat reaches Liverpool. Therefore, this can hardly be any reflection upon the inspection or grading.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. But the instance quoted shows that a mere difference of opinion between two officials made the difference in the grading of the wheat.

Mr. FISHER. But that has nothing to do with the difference in the cash returns between the two grades, which is what I am now considering.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, but it would seem to indicate the great necessity of paying attention to the grading between No. 2 and No. 3, if a farmer is to realize on his wheat 12 cents per bushel less than he would realize on the Liverpool quotations.

Mr. FISHER. There is no question about that. Any evidence of inefficiency in grading or inspection would be a reflection upon the inspection and ought to be carefully looked into. I may say in that connection that the chief inspector, Mr. Horne, at Winnipeg is a man who has enjoyed, I believe, the full confidence of all classes who are dealing in wheat in the Northwest and Manitoba. I have not had the advantage of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Horne, but I know his name very well and have heard him spoken of by dealers, by farmers and by those who have on the floor of parliament in former sessions discussed this question, and the universal testimony is to his extreme efficiency, his perfect integrity and reliability. Under these circumstances I would be quite willing to acknowledge at once that the grading is of the utmost importance, but I would not like to accept any reflection upon the character of the inspection or the success of the grading of the wheat at Fort William and Winnipeg.

Mr. GREENWAY. My amendment does not do that.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no, I understand that. A remark was made which indicated that about 25 per cent of last year's crop would grade down very low, probably to No. 3, but I understand that this is not in any way an ordinary case.

Mr. GREENWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. FISHER. Of course the seasons differ very much, and one of the difficulties connected with the grading of our wheat and its inspection is the changing of the standard samples from year to year. I do not propose to discuss that but there is no doubt it is a difficulty in the way of inspection and grading. If any means could be got to overcome that difficulty and to establish a fixed standard of No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, &c., which could be applied every year, my own opinion—and I do not consider that opinion worth a great deal as I am not very familiar with the western trade—but still my own opinion has always been that it would tend to a better inspection and a more satisfactory grading of our wheat. There may be difficulties in the way or the present system would not have been adopted and I am only expressing my own personal view which perhaps is not worth very much. The crop varies very much in quality in different seasons ; last year happened to be a bad one, and a great quantity of it graded very low. No doubt that makes it very much more difficult for the inspectors. I have no doubt whatever that the complaints arising from inspection will be greater when there is a poor crop than when there is a good one. In regard to my hon. friend's proposals he has suggested that an amendment should be added to this Bill which would authorize the appointment of an officer connected with the grain standards board at Winnipeg, who should act as a sort of agent or representative of the growers of wheat, the men who grow and ship the wheat themselves for inspection. I have had the advantage of consulting Mr. Horne on this question and I can see no serious objection to something of this kind being done. There may be some little difficulty in working it out and assigning the duties which such an officer should perform, but I am told that these could be overcome and that the probability is that such an officer in the office at Winnipeg could be of the greatest service to the growers of grain in the way that has been outlined by the member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). This being the case I am sure the department would be only too glad to make the experiment to see whether, in this way or in any other way, these facilities could be created for the benefit of the farmers who are raising this splendid crop of Canada. I am told, however, that an actual amendment to the Act is not required for this purpose. Clause 53 of the Inspection Act, chapter 15 of the statutes of 1904, gives power to the Governor in Council to make regulations of all kinds for the guidance and government of inspectors and generally such as are deemed necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of the Act according to their true intent and meaning and for the better attaining of its objects. Under these circumstances I can say to my hon. friend that it is the opinion of the government that no amendment for this purpose is required, and that the department will be ever ready to try and see that what he desires and what he has proposed here is worked out in the interest of the grain growers, those who are themselves, as grain growers, shipping their wheat to Winnipeg for inspection and for grading. I do not know that I need say anything more than that. I am very glad indeed that the member for Lisgar has brought this up. I think in bringing it up he has performed a service for the grain growers of Manitoba and the west, and I am very glad to find that the department is able to meet his views if they can work out the details and I can assure him and assure the House on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) that he is ready to try to do this. As for other amendments I may say that at this late date in the session it would be inadvisable for us to undertake such an important task as the discussion of general amendments to this Act. It is working, on the whole, I think, fairly well. There may be some little hitches here and there, but I may say that this Act was passed as the result of a long and careful discussion in this chamber and that it was only framed after a committee of the House had investigated the whole conditions of the trade. Representative men had been brought here and information gathered of great importance and value and this Act was the result of the most careful investigation and labour. Under these circumstances I think we had better be content with the slight amendment asked for here, asked for as I said to begin with by the Winnipeg Board of Trade and then by the grain boards and other interests as a slight modification that would facilitate the work of inspection, but I think we should leave the amendment of the Act for the future.

Mr. BERGERON. That would not remove the evil of which the member for Lisgar has spoken.

Mr. FISHER. The amendment in the Bill now before the House is simply to facilitate the work of the grain standard board. The grain standard board is rather a large body and there are some sections of country from which they do not get samples at the general meeting. I pointed out that without any amendment to the Act, the minister can meet the proposals of my hon. friend, but that as far as other matters are concerned, it would be better to leave it until we can have a full and free discussion in the early part of the session.

Mr. GREENWAY. I would ask the minister if it is the intention to provide for what I have suggested by Order in Council under the powers given in the present Act.

Mr. FISHER. That is what the minister seemed prepared to do.

Mr. GREENWAY. Perhaps we ought to say a little more on this subject. The Agricultural Committee will remember that we had before us gentlemen from the experimental farm who had been making experiments as to the relative value of different grades of wheat, having received them from Mr. Horne. That was done also some time ago by the Territorial government and I had the pleasure of receiving a number of bulletins somewhat similar to that which has presently been issued by the experimental farm here on that subject, and it was shown that there is very little difference in the value, 2 or 3 cents would cover all the difference in values from No. 1 to No. 4. The minister has issued a bulletin of which I have a copy here in which the same thing is undertaken to be shown, and it bears out the result of the experiments at Regina. I think these experiments should be continued. I fancy that gentlemen who are engaged in the milling business in Ontario—I see my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell) here—do not quitet understand the value of No. 3 northern wheat or they would not allow it to be sold at Fort William at 87 cents a bushel and pay $1.04 and $1.04½ for No. 2. We know that it makes very excellent flour, and that there is no such difference and cannot be any such difference, and if I am asked why it is that there is such a difference I am forced to reply that I do not know. We have never known of such a difference before nor have we known until this year of the existence of an option market in the city of Winnipeg. Whether that has anything to do with it or not I do not know. These things have existed on the other side of the line but I think that this is the first time that they have got into working operation in Winnipeg or anywhere else in Canada. Whether the option market is responsible for this difference in the price I do not know, but I am afraid it is, and if this parliament could do anything to remove the disadvantage under which the farmers of the west labour by reason of this difference in the price of different grades it should be done.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any subject which could better engage the attention of this House than the question of the inspection of grain. I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) are sufficient to prove that to the committee. He has pointed out that experiments carried out under the auspices of the territorial Department of Agriculture and of the officers of the experimental farm all go to prove that there is an extremely small amount of difference in the actual value of the milling products of different grains. There appears to be a very heavy loss indeed to the wheat producers of the Northwest and I am only sorry that this question has been brought up at such a late period in the session that it will be unable to receive the consideration that it is entitled to, but I hope it may be taken up earlier on another occasion. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Lisgar is quite in the right direction and I am very glad to hear that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is prepared to act upon it. I hope he will do so in time for the next season's shipment of wheat from the Northwest Territories. As regards the Bill which is now before us, I think the figures given by the hon. member for Lisgar, prove the necessity for this slight amendment which is proposed in the Bill. While we are willing to admit that the present system of sale is not a perfect one, and I believe that it would be better if it were possible to have a sale according to actual samples; that is to have the wheat sold on sample——

Mr. GREENWAY. A sample market for the lower grades.

Mr. LAKE. Yes. While we are unable to alter the whole system at the present moment I think the present proposition is a step in the right direction to facilitate the making of commercial grades where that is felt to be a necessity, and it is frequently found to be a necessity owing to the extreme variation in samples of wheat in the country due to different climatic conditions.

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Chairman. I just wish to endorse every word that my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has said. There is no question that is of more importance to the wheat growers of the west than this one. Every time I have met my constituents of late there have been complaints of the way in which, as they put it, they are robbed in the lower grades. When we see the results of the tests that have been made between the bread producing qualities of the lower grades as compared with the higher grades it is evident that the farmers of the west are not receiving a proper price for the lower grades of wheat. I do not know exactly where the difficulty lies but I know that the farmers are very anxious to have this proposition of my hon. friend from Lisgar carried out, and a man appointed who will be able to look after their interests as wheat-growers. I wish to endorse every word that has been said by him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reference to the difference in price between No. 3 Northern and No. 2 Northern that is entirely exceptional this year. The usual difference is 5 cents a bushel between 3 and 2 Northern but owing to the establishment of the option market in Winnipeg 2 Northern is the only grade that can be delivered. If a man sells wheat 2 Northern is what he sells and he cannot deliver 3 Northern. The price of 3 Northern is about right but the difference is due to the fact that there is not enough of 2 Northern to supply the demand and then the option market is purely speculative now as far as 2 Northern is concerned. I do not think there are millers in Ontario buying 2 Northern. They cannot do it because 3 Northern is very much better value, and there is a difference of only about 5 cents. This will continue notwithstanding the passage of this Bill until the market is adjusted by the new crop, or until the option for July wheat is settled and then probably 2 Northern will come down.

Mr. GREENWAY. Why could they not make it a 3 Northern delivery under contract?

Mr. CAMPBELL. You cannot advance the price of wheat beyond its value. If you put 3 Northern up to $1 or $1.10 the people would not use it. You would only drive the millers to using other grades. No. 3 Northern is on the usual basis. It may be exported to the markets of the world. It is upon an exporting basis, but 2 Northern is away up at a fictitious value and that will continue until the market for July wheat or until the options are settled.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Without wishing to cast any reflection upon the present inspector, Mr. Horne, or any of his assistants, I would like to give an instance of the fallibility of these gentlemen on certain days owing to the mood they are in. Not very many years ago I had an arrangement with the Lake of the Woods Milling Company under which they undertook to give me 3 cents a bushel more than the local price, as they did not have an elevator at the point where I was shipping from, for my wheat. I was threshing and I loaded one car and shipped it in to them. The next morning I got a telegram from that company saying: No. 2 Hard rejected for smut; best price 48 cents a bushel. I had two more cars that I was loading at the time and I went to the Ogilvie Milling Company who had an elevator and a buyer at that point and I asked the buyer to come and give me a quotation for a couple of carloads of wheat. He said: We will give you 53 cents for your wheat. I sold these two cars at 53 cents to the Ogilvie Milling Company. That was a difference of 5 cents a bushel. The wheat shipped in all of these three cars was all out of the same field. It was a year when there was practically no difference in the wheat, it was all No. 2 Hard, but we had more or less smut on the wheat. I took the numbers of these three cars of wheat, went in to see Mr. Horne and asked him if he could give me the grading of the two cars I had shipped to the Ogilvie Milling Company. Instead of being graded No. 2 Hard rejected for smut, these two cars which came out of the same field were graded No. 2 Hard. That made a difference of 5 cents a bushel that I had lost on those cars and 3 cents a bushel making 8 cents a bushel or $56 a car, that I lost on those cars of wheat. Mr. Horne could not give an explanation. There was a little smut in all of the wheat that year, and there was some smut in the wheat he had graded for the Ogilvie Company No. 2 Hard. That shows that there was a difference in the minds of the inspectors. I am not throwing any reflection upon Mr. Horne, because I consider him a very good officer. It just happened that at that particular time he had been doing the grading. My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) is asking to have a man appointed who would be in charge of my grain and if we had had such an officer I could have wired to him regarding the rejected car to send it to King's elevator and have it cleaned and graded. There was, however, no one whom I could depend on to represent me and I was so disgusted with the first car on which I lost eight cents a bushel, that I sold the last two cars at a loss of three cents per bushel. If there was a man at Fort William or Port Arthur acting in the interests of the farmers he could have re-graded the wheat after having it cleaned, and I would have been saved the loss. Mr. Horne and I could really see no difference in the wheat, yet it cost me a loss of eight cents a bushel on the car. I endorse everything that has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Greenway). In my part of the country we are not largely in wheat growing, but still there are farmers in my district who each year ship two or three cars of 1,000 busheds per car, and because of instances of the kind I have spoken of, my neighbours are so disgusted that we simply sell our wheat and have practically stopped shipping it. An officer such as that who is recommended would save us thousands of dollars every year. I would like to point out to the minister that for this position we want a first-class man who is above suspicion. The salary does not count at all because $50 a car saved on 20 cars would mean $1,000 and it would not take very much saving of that kind to pay a good salary to this official. I would recommend that politics be left out of the appointment of this gentleman altogether, and that we should get the very best man in the Dominion of Canada for the office no matter what we have to pay him. We are growing this year 90,000,000 bushels of wheat and I dare say there is a quarter more land broken this year than is now in cultivation being broken up in the Territories and Manitoba, so that we will have over 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in a very few years. It will be seen then how necessary it is to appoint the very best man that can be appointed to this office.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At this late stage of the session I do not think it is wise to say very much on any subject, but I cannot refrain from stating that I endorse everything that has been said by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). I believe that the appointment of a gentleman such as he suggests would be in the interest of the producers in the west. There is no doubt but that there have been more or less abuses in different ways, possibly not on account of any wilful fault or anything of that kind, but may be through lack of judgment. It means a good deal to the farmer to say that 1,000 bushels of his wheat should grade No. 2, instead of No. 3 Northern. Indeed it would amount to $175 on a car of 1,000 bushels, and that loss might be incurred just through the mere judgment of the inspector. the sample of wheat may almost be up to No. 2, but if the inspector has a slight doubt about it and he puts it into No. 3, it entails a loss of $175 on a car of 1,000 bushels, while the difference in real value might be only one half cent a bushel. I notice in this bulletin issued by the department of Agriculture that where tests have been made the flour from No. 3 made one pound of bread more than the flour from No. 2 Northern, which would go to prove that flour from No. 3 Northern is stronger than the flour from No. 2 ; it took more water in mixing and naturally produced more bread. But of course, these experiments will be continued and they may vary more or less according to the sample. At all events there is something not right about this wheat business and I am inclined to think that the reason mostly lies in this option market. There may possibly be a premium on No. 2 Northern at the present time, but if that is the result of this option market which we have in operation in Winnipeg at present there should be something done to wipe that out if it is going to create and continue a business condition of this kind. I have had considerable experience in the grain business in the western country, and there are other abuses which might well be remedied in the interests of the producer. In the matter of transportation there has not been much heard of a grain blockade during the past two years, but a year ago last fall I knew of instances where the wheat had to stand on the track between my own district and Fort William for three months at a time. I shipped some wheat myself and it was over three months before I got my returns from Port Arthur. I have known cars of wheat to stand on the track a few miles from where I live for three months before being moved and the farmer was practically helpless in the hands of the railway company. Even last fall I have known wheat to stand on the track for six weeks. At points where there was no railway competition the farmers were held up and not given cars for as long as six weeks at a time, and the wheat was on the track waiting for shipment. At Neepawa where we had two railways, we could get all the cars we wanted, but 10 or 15 miles away the farmers could not get a car. It is in these directions that an effort should be made to help the farmers out, and the appointment of an officer such as that recommended would be of great value to us. This is an important question to us in the west, a question which is growing more important every year, and nothing deserves the attention of this House more than the providing of facilities for the grain trade of the west.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved third reading of Bill (No. 160) with respect to the Northwest Territories.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which is this Bill ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill as already explained, refers to the Canadian Territories of the Northwest which are not covered by the Autonomy Bills. It was asked to stand I think, because the hon. member for Simcoe wanted to say something and I accordingly held it over. If there is any reason, I will let it stand further.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it is all right.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a third time and passed.

INSPECTION OF WATER METERS.

Bill (No. 188) respecting the Inspection of Water Meters.—Mr. Brodeur—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). This Bill from beginning to end follows the provisions of the Act respecting the Inspection of Gas Meters, with some necessary changes to meet the difference of conditions.

On section 3—inspectors,

Mr. BRODEUR. The Gas Inspection Act provided that the inspectors of weights and measures should be appointed as inspector of gas meters. In this case we provide that any officers in the employ of the Department of Inland Revenue may be appointed inspectors of water meters.

On section 7—re-verification,

Mr. BRODEUR. Gas meters have to be inspected every five years, and the same provision is made here with regard to water meters.

Mr. McCOLL. I would like to ask the minister if he has taken into consideration the question of the charges for meter rates that the owners sometimes make. In the town where I live, some of the cottages which are supplied by the company with water are closed during the winter and sometimes the meter rent will amount to more than the bill for water supply.

Mr. BRODEUR. The department has no control over that. This Bill provides simply for the inspection of the meters. It does not interfere with the contracts between the companies and the purchasers.

Mr. McCOLL. It occurred to me that it might be proper for the Bill to regulate the charges. I have heard the right of the companies to charge meter rent at all questioned. For instance, the contractor supplies water at a certain price per gallon; he puts in a meter for his own protection, to measure the water consumed. Is it right for him to charge rent for that? Why should not the department regulate that matter, and say that no meter rent shall be charged? I may say that the companies object to the consumer putting in his own meter—I am speaking more particularly of electric meters. They insist on putting in their own meters and sometimes the rent they charge amounts in a couple of years to as much as the value of the meter.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am afraid that the department could not undertake to regulate contracts entered into between individuals and companies. What we provide for in this Bill is that the machines used for the measurement of gas, electric light or water shall be properly inspected and verified. Section 12 of the Bill provides that every consumer may purchase his own meter provided it is duly verified.

Mr. INGRAM. In a town where they have not the meter system, it would not deal with them at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. This applies to cases where the water is supplied on a flat contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The contention of the minister is that the Bill does not impose the obligation on any one to use a meter; but wherever a meter is used, it must be inspected.

Mr. KEMP. Has the city engineer of Toronto, or any other official of that city, consulted with the department in regard to this Bill?

Mr. BRODEUR. We received one communication from Toronto, but not from any of the city officials.

Mr. KEMP. I ask for the reason that I have received a telegram from the city engineer of Toronto asking me to send half a dozen copies of the Bill.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will not ask, then, that the Bill be read the third time to-day.

Mr. KEMP. That is what I would have asked the minister, and I am glad he gives me the opportunity to inquire into the matter.

Mr. BRODEUR. I move to reconsider section 4.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am a little doubtful whether in its present form this section would give the department power to inspect the water meters in existence. I therefore move to amend the section as to make it read 'no meter shall be used which has not been verified and stamped,' and so on.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Upon whom is to fall the burden of the fees allowed under this Bill?

Mr. BRODEUR. Meters cannot be used until they have been inspected and stamped. Generally in the first instance the fee will be paid by the manufacturer. After the meter has been put in use it must be inspected once every five years, and a fee is chargeable for that inspection. That fee, I suppose, would generally be paid by the consumer or the person in whose possession the meter is.

Mr. INGRAM. Whether the meter is found correct or not?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What are the fees?

Mr. BRODEUR. They range from 75 cents to $6, according to the size of the meter.

Bill, as amended, reported.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue), moved that the House concur in the amendments made by the Senate in Bill (No. 76) to amend the Inland Revenue Act. He said: Two small changes have been made in this Bill by the Senate. In section 24, subsection 1, the sixth line is struck out. In section 25 we declare that the person removing spirits without the authority of the department, shall incur a penalty. But in the section determining the penalty, it speaks not only of the removal, but also of the delivery. For clearness the words 'and delivered' are struck out in section 244 of the Inland Revenue Act as amended by this Bill.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—TRADING STAMPS.

Bill (No. 196) in amendment of the Criminal Code, 1892—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The Criminal Code, 1892, is amended by inserting the following sections immediately after section 526:

526a. In this section—

(a) The expression 'trading stamps' includes besides trading stamps commonly so called, any form of cash receipt, receipt, coupon, premium ticket or other device, designed or intended to be given to the purchaser of goods by the vendor thereof or his employee or agent, and to represent a discount on the price of such goods or a premium to the purchaser thereof, which is redeemable either

(i) by any person other than the vendor, or

(ii) by the vendor in cash or goods not his property, or not his exclusive property, or

(iii) by the vendor elsewhere than in the premises where such goods are purchased, or which does not show upon its face the place of its delivery and the merchantable value thereof, or is not redeemable at any time;

(b) The expression 'goods' means anything which is merchandise or the subject of trade or manufacture;

(c) The expression 'every one,' 'vendor,' 'purchaser,' 'merchant,' 'agent,' or 'person' includes any partnership, or company or body corporate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I beg to move to amend clause (a) by omitting the last paragraph beginning with the words 'or which does not show.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we ought to have, what we have not yet had, a statement as to the reasons for this legislation, and also the legislation of the provincial legislatures which has been enacted on the same subject. I understand from some circulars which I have received, but only in that way, that the courts of the province of Quebec have come to a different conclusion upon the constitutional question from that which has been arrived at by the courts of Ontario. I think we ought also to have a statement as to the reasons of policy which have induced the government to make this a crime.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I can give a statement with respect to the position of the litigation but as to the other matter, I think we will have to rely largely on the general outcry which has been raised in the community for this change. In Ontario and Quebec, legislation has been passed which would have, if valid, for effect the object which this Bill has in view, but in Quebec the matter has been the subject of consideration in the courts, and the result has been that the Superior Court of Quebec decided that the provincial legislation was intra vires of the power of the provincial legislation, but the Court of Appeal differed from that and found that it was a matter affecting trade and commerce and was not within the purview of the provincial legislature. The question I understand now stands for final adjudication by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we ought to have some statement on the question of policy. I have a perfectly open mind on the question, but would like to know the reasons which have induced the government to introduce the legislation, I think the House is entitled to that. On the face of it of course trading stamps are a perfectly innocent contrivance and no more to be created into a crime than any other kind of device to induce trade to flow into a particular channel. There may be good reasons for enacting this legislation. I know there is very strong feeling against trading stamps in many quarters, yet when we propose to create that into a crime which has not hitherto been a crime and which in its nature is no more a crime than many other methods employed in business in this and other countries, I think we should have a statement as to the reason.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to explain to the House just who are asking for this legislation and the reasons for its enactment. Let me say that I have no particular personal interest in the subject. This legislation, Mr. Speaker, is demanded by all the merchants and traders of Canada. That is quite a broad statement, but I think I have documents here on file which will bear it out. First of all, all the boards of trade of the country have been consulted as to whether or not in their opinion this commercial evil should be abolished, and in answer to that request I may say that all the boards of trade have declared themselves against what they call a commercial pest, a commercial nuisance, a commercial conspiracy in restraint of trade. As light is always coming from Toronto I wish to read first a resolution of the board of trade of that city, which is as follows :

The Board of Trade of the City of Toronto.

Extract from the minutes of a council meeting held March 28, 1905, re trading stamps :

Whereas the use of trading stamps being considered injurious to legitimate trade,

And whereas the legislature of this province having passed an Act prohibiting the use of said trading stamps ;

Therefore be it resolved that the council of this board urge the Dominion government to pass such further legislation as may be found necessary to prevent the use of trading stamps in Canada.

Carried.

F. G. MORLEY,
Secretary.

Then there is another resolution passed by the Board of Trade of Halifax, reading as follows :

Resolved, that the council of the Halifax Board of Trade hereby urges upon the Dominion parliament the adoption at its present session of such legislation as will render illegal the issuing, distribution or sale of trading stamps or cash receipts, and provide also for the punishment of persons transgressing such law.

Then here is a resolution from the Board of Trade of Edmonton :

Edmonton, Alberta, N.W.T.,
2nd February, 1905.

Secretary the Federation of the Retail Dealers of Montreal.

Dear Sir,—At a full council meeting of our board, held to-day, the following resolution was unanimously passed :

That the Edmonton Board of Trade is in hearty accord with the Federation of the Retail Dealers of the city of Montreal, in the action it has taken to suppress the trading stamp companies, and it is trusted that the Dominion government will pass legislation declaring illegal the issuing, distribution and sale of these so-called trading stamps.

Yours faithfully,
F. FRASER TIMS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Then I find another resolution of the Board of Trade of Berlin, Ontario, reading as follows :

Berlin, Canada, February 1, 1905.

N. Nightingale, Esq.,
Assistant Secretary,
25 St. Gabriel street, Montreal.

Dear Sir,—I beg to advise you that a meeting of the council of the board of trade was held last night and the following resolution was passed relating to trading stamps :

Resolved, that the Board of Trade of the town of Berlin request the Dominion parliament to pass a law declaring illegal the issuing, distribution and sale of trading stamps, and that the form of petition sent the board by the Federation of Retail Dealers of Montreal to be signed by our merchants be referred to the mercantile committee. The petition will no doubt be signed by our merchants and forwarded to you in due course.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) H. J. SIMS,
Secretary.

There is another resolution passed by the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild as follows

Resolution adopted by the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild at a special meeting held for the purpose on Friday, 3rd February, 1905:

Whereas the Federation of Retail Merchants of this city is about to present a petition to the members of the Senate and House of Commons praying for the passage of legislation to prohibit the sale or distribution of trading stamps or cash receipts, and

Whereas the pernicious effects of the use of trading stamps have been recognized wherever they have been introduced, a number of cities and states of the United States having by law restricted or prohibited their sale, and

Whereas the by-law prohibiting the trading stamp business, adopted by the city of Montreal, is being attacked in the courts and thus a considerable time may elapse before a final decision is reached as to the city's power to prohibit trading stamps, during which time the trade of the retail and wholesale merchants will continue to suffer by the operations of the trading stamp company,

Therefore, resolved, that this guild unanimously supports the petition of the Federation of Retail Merchants and hopes that in the interest of a great majority of the merchants of Montreal and other cities where the trading stamp business has secured a foothold, parliament may be pleased to grant the prayer of the said petition.

(Sgd.) L. E. GEOFFRION,
President.
J. Stanley Cook,
Secretary.

Then I have similar resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Kamloops, B.C., by the Board of Trade of Victoria, B.C.—

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. And every other centre.

Mr. GERVAIS. That is true, but I think it would be better for the information of the House to mention the Boards of Trade that have passed resolutions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I take it for granted that they have all passed resolutions. Suppose they have, why should this be made a crime?

Mr. GERVAIS. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to follow the course of my argument?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. GERVAIS. I will first explain to the House at whose request I am speaking, then I intend to offer a few technical or legal remarks, and then I shall complete my speech by advancing some moral and commercial reasons why this proposed legislation should become law. I have also resolutions passed by the Chambre de Commerce of Montreal on the 8th of February, 1905, signed by Joseph Haynes; by the Brandon, Man., Board of Trade, passed on the 9th of February, 1905, signed by K. Campbell; by the Board of Trade of Vancouver, B.C., dated February 13th, signed by Wm. Skene; by the Montreal Wholesale Dry Goods Association of the Board of Trade, passed at a special general meeting held for the purpose on February 13, signed by J. Stanley Cook; by the Board of Trade of the city of Quebec, signed by E. Levasseur, and by the Three Rivers Chambre de Commerce, signed by J. A. Peltier. I have also a resolution signed by the Montreal Board of Trade as follows

Montreal, February 18th, 1905.

H. P. Nightingale, Esq.,
Assistant Secretary,
The Federation of the Retail Dealers of the city of Montreal ;

Dear Sir,—As the result of the consideration of your circular letter of the 30th ultimo, and of the representations of the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Association and the Montreal Wholesale Dry Goods Association, all with regard to the desired suppression of the trading stamp system, the council of this board, at its meeting of 15th instant, adopted the following resolution :

Resolved that the council of the Montreal Board of Trade hereby urges upon the Dominion parliament the adoption at its present session of such legislation as will render illegal the issuing, distribution or sale of trading stamps or cash receipts, and provide also for the punishment of persons transgressing such law.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
(Sgd.) GEORGE HADRILL,
Secretary.

There is another resolution passed by the St. John Board of Trade which I shall read:

St. John, N.B., February 20, 1905.

Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright,
Minister of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa.

Sir,—I am instructed by the council of the St. John Board of Trade to advise you that this board heartily supports the action of the Federation of the Retail Dealers of Montreal in their effort to obtain from the Dominion government the passing of a law against the sale and distribution of trading stamps, and we urge upon the government the necessity of amending the present Criminal Code in such manner as to declare illegal the issuing, the sale and the distribution of said trading stamps.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. E. ANDERSON.

There is another resolution passed by the Board of Trade of Peterboro, Ont.

Now, I may say that I have in my hand many petitions signed by wholesale and retail merchants throughout the Dominion of Canada praying this parliament to pass such legislation as will make it a misdemeanour, as it is called in the criminal code, to print, issue or circulate trading stamps. In these resolutions the commercial interests of the country declare themselves as being against this commercial evil. I will take, for example, a resolution passed by the St. Mary's branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada. Let me say that I have over 60 of these resolutions which have been adopted by retail merchants, the smaller and weaker merchants of the province of Ontario, and these retail merchants have declared themselves as a unit against the system. The St. Mary's branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada say in their resolution:

March 3, 1905.

To the Honourable Senators and Members of the House of Commons of Canada.

Honourable Sirs,—

On behalf of the members and electors of the St. Mary's branch of 'The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada,' doing business in the said constituency, we desire to submit to you the following resolution:—

Whereas—There has been introduced into this country by so-called Trading Stamps and Coupon Companies, and by a few individual merchants and manufacturers, a system by which these companies and persons furnish to merchants and to customers, a number of stamps or coupons, to be given to cash purchasers in proportion to the amount of goods purchased, which stamps and coupons the companies and individuals afterwards redeem from the purchasers, by giving them certain showy articles. The value returned to the customers is estimated at about one-half or one-third of the stated value of the coupons or the price paid by the merchants for the stamps.

Your memoralists submit that the whole system is pernicious, and a large profit is claimed by the Trading Stamp and Coupon Companies, and no adequate return is made, either to the merchants or their customers. It is an imposition upon trade for the purpose of inciting false competition, encouraging many merchants to raise the price of their wares to meet this speculative craze on the part of many purchasers, and it leaves the customers entirely in the hands of these companies, or persons, to place whatever price they may choose upon the wares these companies or persons carry in stock, as they are paid for by the merchants and customers who purchase these stamps before the articles are delivered.

Some merchants and manufacturers adopt this system who are entirely indifferent to methods of commercial morality, and by their adoption other merchants follow much against their inclination, in order to strive and preserve their trade, and thus business is demoralized and the welfare of the public is endangered.

Your memoralists therefore ask that the Criminal Code be amended in such manner as to declare illegal the using, the sale, the receiving, and the distribution of trading stamps, coupons, and all other similar devices.

F. W. HUTTON, President.
W. A. McINTYRE, Secretary.

In regard to this resolution I might say in comment, that the memorialists use precisely the same words that were used a few years ago by Chief Justice Field of the Supreme Court of the United States. A similar resolution has been adopted by the branches of the retail merchants association, amongst many others the following cities and towns of Ontario :

At one o'clock, Committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. GERVAIS. When the committee took recess at one o'clock, I had finished quoting the resolutions passed by the Board of Trade and by various other commercial bodies in Canada. The consensus of opinion expressed by all these bodies goes to show that from the point of view of wholesale merchants, commercial agents, bankers and traders, the trading stamp is a nuisance and a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Now, who are the parties opposing this legislation ? Who are the men who have engineered that commercial nuisance ? They are but a handful, about half a dozen throughout Canada. Who are the parties to the suit, as we say in court; who are the parties interested in this case ? You have on one side all the traders of the country, and you have on the other side three or four men who are reaping a golden harvest from this illegal and immoral trade. Now, I will try to explain to the House what is the bone of contention, what is the cause of action. To avoid misunderstanding, I will define a trading stamp according to my own contention; and later on I will quote a definition of a trading stamp given by the American and English Encyclopedia of Law. First of all, I give as my definition of a trading stamp the following : A trading stamp is a kind of paper money which may be issued by any one, even by a schemer without capital, under such circumstances as to result in a conspiracy in restraint of trade, in fleecing the merchants' customers, and in a continuous violation of the accepted principles of sound currency. Now, Mr. Chairman, permit me to give a short sketch of the legislation relating to trading stamps. In a few words, I will show the committee what has been the Canadian provincial legislation in relation to trading stamps, and what is the foreign or American legislation in relation to the same matter. We find that only two provincial legislatures have passed statutes to prohibit the use of trading stamps. I quote first from the statutes of Ontario of 1901, chapter 26, the Municipal Amendment Act, section 41, which says that by-laws may be passed by the councils of cities, towns and villages:

41. For prohibiting the giving, selling, distributing or receiving of trading stamps, coupons, or other similar devices, and for prohibiting the giving, selling or dealing therewith by any person, firm, or corporation engaged in trade or business.

(a) No such by-law shall apply to any merchant or manufacturer who places in or upon packages of goods or delivers to the purchasers of goods sold or manufactured by him, tickets or coupons to be redeemed by such merchant or manufacturer either in money or merchandise,

(b) No such by-law shall come into force or take effect until after the 1st day January, 1902.

Later on, in the Ontario statutes of 1903, the Consolidated Municipal Act, chapter 19, section 41, provides that by-laws may be passed:

For prohibiting the giving, selling, distributing or receiving of trading stamps, coupons, or other similar devices, and for prohibiting the giving, selling or dealing therewith by any person, firm, or corporation engaged in trade or business.

(a) No such by-law shall apply to any merchant or manufacturer who places in or upon packages of goods or delivers to the purchasers of goods sold or manufactured by him, tickets or coupons to be redeemed by such merchant or manufacturer either in money or merchandise.

And finally, in 1905, the Ontario Legislature has passed the following amendment :

27. Clause 'a' of paragraph 41 of section 583 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, is repealed, and the following substituted therefor :

A. No such by-law shall apply to any merchant or manufacturer who places in or upon packages of goods, or delivers to purchasers of goods sold or manufactured by him at the time of such purchase, tickets or coupons, which bear upon their face the place of delivery thereof, together with the cash or merchantable value of the same, and are redeemable at any time, and only by the merchant or manufacturer giving them and only at the store or factory where such goods were sold or purchased.

The Quebec legislature, in 1903, passed an Act, chapter 39, giving certain powers to the councils of cities, towns, villages and parishes. Sections 1 and 2 of this Act provide :

1. The municipal council of cities, towns, villages and parishes may pass by-laws for prohibiting the giving, selling, exchanging, distributing or receiving of trading stamps, coupons or other similar devices, and for prohibiting the giving, selling or exchanging the same by any person, firm or corporation; and, by every such by-law, may provide that any person infringing the same shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty dollars, and imprisonment not exceeding three months in default of payment.

2. No such by-law shall however apply to any merchant or manufacturer who places in or upon packages of goods, or delivers to the purchaser of goods, sold or manufactured, tickets or coupons to be redeemed by such merchant or manufacturer either in money or merchandise.

One may see at a glance that the Ontario law and the Quebec law are quite similar. As a matter of fact, the Quebec law is a reprint of the Ontario law. By the provincial laws of Ontario and Quebec, authority is given to the municipal councils of cities, towns and boroughs to pass by-laws to prohibit the giving or receiving of trading stamps. That is the state of provincial legislation on the subject of trading stamps up to the year 1905. Permit me now to quote some foreign laws in relation to the same evil.

When I speak of foreign legislation in relation to trading stamps, I refer to the laws of certain states of the United States of America. The trading stamp evil has never existed ouside of Canada and the United States ; therefore, except in these countries no special legislation against trading stamps has been necessary. The trading stamp scheme was originated in the United States about 10 years ago, and was imported into Canada about the year 1900. I said a moment ago, that a number of the states of the United States had adopted legislation to prohibit the use of trading stamps. Among the state legislatures that have adopted such laws are those of Rhode Island, Alabama, Maryland, Massachusetts, Vermont, Virginia and New York. The same principle has been adopted in the district of Columbia. As a specimen of these laws I may quote the statute passed by the legislature of the state of New York, in the year 1904. This law is chapter 657 of that year, and is called an Act to amend the penal code relating to the issue and redemption of trading stamps, or other devices. And, according to that statute, the use of trading stamps is forbidden, unless redeemable and the value in money shall be printed on the face of the stamp. Then it provides that persons who sell or issue trading stamps shall redeem them in money or goods at face value. Section 4 of the law provides :

Any person or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour.

No special punishment is enacted in the statute. We have to refer to the penal code of the state of New York to ascertain what the punishment is for issuing or redeeming trading stamps. Turning to article 15 of the penal code of the state of New York, annotated 1903, I find the following:

A person convicted of a crime declared to be a misdemeanour, for which no other punishment is specially prescribed by this code, or by any other statutory provision in force at the time of the conviction and sentence, is punished by imprisonment in a penitentiary, or county jail, for not more than one year or by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or by both.

A few words now about the state of jurisprudence as to the constitutionality of these special enactments against trading stamps. In the province of Quebec, it has been held by the court of appeal of that province that the law of the province empowering the city council of Quebec and the city council of Montreal to pass a by-laws to prohibit the use of trading stamps was not constitutional, on the ground that it is within the exclusive jurisdiction of this Dominion parliament to enact any law relating to trade and commerce, under article 91 of the British North America Act. But we find that in the province of Ontario the court of appeal on a reference of the provincial government has given a contrary decision. But, if my memory is good. I believe that during the month of February, 1905, Judge Morgan, in Toronto, held in accordance with the dictum of Ontario Appellate Court, that the law of Ontario prohibiting the use of trading stamps was not unconstitutional, as it related to a subject within the jurisdiction of the Ontario legislature, but held that the by-law passed by the Toronto municipal council and the Ontario law of 1903 were defective and he granted an injunction against the application of said by-law

Now, let me refer for a moment to the state of jurisprudence on this subject in the United States. For I know that my hon. friend and opponent will say that these state laws prohibiting the use of trading stamps have all been declared unconstitutional, and will raise the objection of unconstitutionality against this proposed Bill. But Mr. Chairman, the argument is wholly inapplicable to the present measure. If these state laws have been declared unconstitutional it is because they were passed in direct opposition of the 14th amendment to the constitution of the United States, passed and adopted in 1865. But the very argument against the constitutionality of these several state laws is the strongest argument in favour of the constitutionality of the Bill here proposed. As you know, the constitution of each of the states of the United States is a written constitution and strictly limited. The legislature of any state of the union has no power to deal broadly with matters of trade and commerce. We have no such limitation. The parliament of the mother country has not imposed any restriction upon this parliament in its power to regulate matters of trade and commerce. It has not declared what shall be deemed matters of trade and commerce; who shall be parties to a commercial contract; what shall be the form of such a contract; or what shall be the cause of its nullity. There is no danger that this law will be declared ultra vires, for we have full power to regulate our trade and commerce for the benefit of our merchants and traders. There is no danger in this case that the imperial law of 1865, which declares that the colonial laws may be void for repugnacy will be applicable to this Bill.

Let us now come to the special reasons and motives why this Bill should pass. I have stated that indirect taxation and direct loss are the results of this felonious and fraudulent device and that it operates to the detriment of bona fide traders, and creates a monopoly. No doubt every one in this House knows how this trading stamp business is worked. With five dollars capital a man can go into it. He does not need any bank account. All he requires is about 50 pounds of stamps, which may cost him $2.50, and he is then equipped for the enterprise. The trading stamp people will not go to every trader and merchant, because that would kill the scheme and there would be no profit in it. They will go exclusively to Mr. A, Peter street, dealing in groceries, D, on Notre Dame or Yonge street, dealing in jewellery, then to F, on Jarvis street, dealing in hardware. Then they will make a contract with these parties by virtue of which they will buy from the trading stamp people, who bind themselves not to sell to any other merchant in the same lines of business as those with whom they have made contracts. What is the result of it all ? The result is that these trading stamp people are creating an outrageous monopoly in favour of A, D and F, to the detriment of bona fide merchants living within a stone throw of these other establishments.

You may say : After all what is there wrong about that ? That is one of the ten or twelve natural inalienable and imprescriptible liberties laid down by the law of nature. These include civil and religious liberty ; and when traders issue such stamps they are simply enjoying that natural liberty of trading which is declared by James Lorimer as inalienable and imprescriptible. But there is such a thing as abusing a natural right. There is no reason why these companies should not issue trading stamps so long as they do not discriminate and endeavour to discredit and depreciate the business of those who are not their customers. These trading stamp people, who have made contracts for the sale of their stamps, have to bind themselves to certain conditions. The first condition, as I said, is that they will not sell any to a neighbouring merchant. They further bind themselves to send out canvassers who will visit each house in the district and interview each wife and show her the advantage of dealing with stores which give those stamps. Here, for instance, is a synopsis of the usual conversation :

Agent.—Well, Madam, have you heard that Mr. Peters, the grocer on the corner, is now giving trading stamps?

Wife.—Is that so, what does it mean?

Agent.—It means that they are giving gifts by the bushel ; are you dealing with Peters ?

Wife.—No, I am not.

Agent.—Well, it is too bad, who is your grocer?

Wife.—It is Mr. Jones.

A. Well, the goods of Jones are no good ; he makes no gifts. Go to Peters, the man who gives trading stamps.

And the little wife, without consulting her husband, will go to Peters and will buy worthless articles. The result is that an outrageous monopoly and conspiracy in restraint of trade is created against bona fide grocers and others in favour of a few petty trading stamp people. This use of trading stamps is very demoralizing. It is demoralizing in this respect, that it teaches the poorer people that they can get something for nothing. And in a utilitarian age such as ours, it is an outrage to teach the poor people that they can get something for nothing. A second bad effect is that these trading stamp people hold out temptations to our retail merchants to robbery and other dishonest practices. Competition is so keen nowadays that a net profit of 5 per cent is a good profit. What then is the result of the use of trading stamps ? The result is that the profits of every dealer are going into the pockets of the trading stamp people. How can the retail trader make compensation for the loss on trading stamps except by robbing his customers, or going into bankruptcy and then making his creditors the losers. I am not drawing too gloomy a picture of the condition of affairs. I might give names and dates to show that in the city of Montreal and Ottawa poor people are being deceived by the scheme of the trading stamp people. You know what are the results which follow the issue of any paper money. Poor people think that the moment they have a bit of paper in their hands bearing a stamp, it is negotiable and may be given in payment for something. That is why I say that the use of trading stamps is utterly demoralizing to the people as it induces the poorer classes to think they can get something for nothing, that they can get something for money paper, for fiduciary or representative paper money. The trading stamp business is a direct violation of any accepted principle of currency. On referring to the American and English encyclopedia of law, I find that the definition which is there given of a trading stamp is very misleading, that it is purely and simply a hypothetical rather than a real genuine and practical definition, and I will not accept for a moment that definition which I find at page 442 of volume 28 of the English and American Encyclopedia of Law.

It is very strange that the State, that the central authority, which is over-jealous about its control of currency, should be so negligent as concerns the issue and circulation of currency by private individuals, as it has been in this case. You know as a matter of fact that nobody in the land can issue a bank note except a state bank properly authorized by special Act of this parliament under certain conditions both as regards the subscription of stock and the keeping in its coffers of a gold reserve and the placing of a deposit in the hands of the Finance Department of this government. You know I cannot issue a bond, I cannot issue a debenture, I cannot issue a share in a company, unless I have filed with the Secretary of State a memorandum of agreement, a memorandum of partnership disclosing the amount of the capital of the concern, the names of the subscribers, the names of the directors, the amount of capital paid and so on, and I cannot issue a debenture unless I comply with certain strict conditions. But in this case what do you find ? You find capitalless people,—if I may be permitted by the rules of English grammar to coin a new word—you find capitalless people who are starting the issue of paper money without any authorization whatever, without any guarantee as to their means or as to the reserve. I declare it an outrage to permit trading stamp people to issue so called paper money with a fictitious face value of one hundred per cent when it has but a value conceded by them of 5 per cent and a real and genuine value of only 1 per cent.

Is it not apparent to every one that the circulation of any such paper money may have a very detrimental effect amongst the people ? What is the result ? The result is that should this Bill become a law tonight you will not find in Canada perhaps more than one person, that is one merchant in the city of Montreal, who will stand up to-morrow to pay the coupons which have been issued by the carload. All the other people will have gone, will have spirited away as was the case when the Quebec legislature passed its provincial law empowering the municipal corporation of Quebec to prohibit the issue of trading stamps. The next day the ten concerns which were dealing in trading stamps had disappeared. It was just as in the spring after a late snowstorm, the snow all melts away. They had gone and nobody could be seen in Quebec to give by way of redemption the showy articles they had been promising for months to the foolish intending purchaser. What occurred in the city of Quebec is what will occur throughout the cities of Canada if this Bill becomes a law. Some trading stamp schemers having felt their position very weak and felt the opposition to their practice so strong that not more than eight days ago one of them, when he saw that the Minister of Justice was about to introduce a Bill felt unwell and thought fit to publish in the Montreal 'Herald' a written guarantee under his hand and seal stating that as far as the trading stamps issued by his house were concerned, they would all be paid even if this Bill becomes a law. That all goes to show that my contention is right, that the issue of those trading stamps is the issue of—I will not say of paper money, full paper money—but of a kind of paper money. It is a sort of paper money which is put into circulation by irresponsible people, by unknown people, for the sole purpose of deceiving by false pretenses the unwary intending purchaser.

The opponents of this Bill will say : It is all very well, this Bill is in favour of abolishing monopoly, of maintaining morals among the people, of maintaining sound principle in so far as the currency of money is concerned, but the great argument of our opponents to this Bill is that the hon. Minister of Justice is invading natural liberty, invading that inalienable principle of freedom of all kinds, even freedom of expatriation since 1872. Well, I will answer this. If you take the 8 or 10 codes which are now in force in the different provinces of Canada and in the 65 states doing business around the world, you will find that those series of codes are purely and exclusively sets of rules invading the ordinary natural liberties of man, but these invasions upon natural liberties have been accepted and declared essential and necessary for the sake of all, for the sake of the masses, for the sake of the people, for the sake of the state; it is only a question of whether or not in this exceptional case there are sufficient grounds for interfering with this trading stamp enterprise. If you consult the authors who have written on anti-commercial combinations in restraint of trade you will find out that the circumstances under which that great trading stamp scheme is worked are directly in opposition to commercial practice and I say that this Bill instead of interfering with liberty of trade is an effort to make the trade of Canada perfectly free.

Instead of working against liberty of trade it is working in the direction of liberty of trade. This Bill should be accepted as it is. It should not be made a party question, because, as my hon. friends from Ontario know, the merchants in the towns of that province have joined with the merchants of the province of Quebec and other parts of Canada in urging the abolition of this trading stamp pest. I repeat this is not a party question. It is a national question, and it is a question which should be agitated in the interest of trade by hon. members on both sides of the House. No trader has any regard for political considerations in advocating the passage of this Bill. We should be fair to every man who is interested in the commerce of Canada and try to free our traders, our wholesale and retail merchants from that commercial usage which has been called the trading stamp nuisance. This parliament, some years ago, prohibited the importation of the San José scale and why should we not try to prevent that American commercial evil, coming from the United States of America, from taking root in our country? Mr. Chairman, who are the parties at issue? Who are the parties to the action, because we are the jury of the country? You will find on the one hand all the traders of all classes and on the other hand you will find a few schemers. They are only a few schemers headed by a few lawyers. We have the commercial interests of the country and the universal consensus of opinion in our favour.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, perhaps, the hon. Minister of Justice will explain to us what this Bill is meant to do?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To give effect to the speech which we have just heard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought there were some amendments.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I am going to strike out some words. I beg to move:

That lines 19, 20 and 21 'or which does not show upon its face the place of its delivery and the merchantable value thereof, or is not redeemable at any time' be struck out.

Mr. KEMP. What would be the effect of that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That the law shall not apply provided the stamp shows on the face of the stamp what the value of it is.

Mr. BARR. Would not the effect of that be to restore the right?

Mr. PORTER. Will that not have the effect of preserving to these trading stamp people or people occupying a similar position just exactly the thing we are trying to do away with by this Bill?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In what way?

Mr. PORTER. For instance, if a manufacturer of cigars or soap puts a band upon his product in that way and it is delivered to his customer, if this clause is stricken out some people will be able to speculate upon that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How?

Mr. PORTER. Whereas, if they are obliged, according to the terms of the original Bill, to state the value, to name the place of delivery and the place of redemption and to state that it is redeemable at all times that could not be done.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The intention is to interfere to as small an extent as possible with legitimate advertising, because, after all we must admit that what we are now doing is to declare ordinary advertising a criminal act. What is intended here is to enable advertising to be done within certain limits, at all events what we desire to reach is the trading stamp as it is issued by the merchant to be redeemed elsewhere than at the place of business of the merchant who issued it. It is perfectly legitimate for a gentleman, for instance, who is manufacturing soap, to put a label on his soap provided the label is redeemable by himself. I do not see anything wrong about that. That to which we object is that it should be dedeemed at some other place by some other person than the man who issued it.

Mr. PORTER. Do I understand the hon. minister to mean that if a manufacturer makes an article and puts a band upon it it is legitimate advertising if it is redeemable by him alone at a certain fixed value?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If this Bill remains as it is, it would require him to put upon that stamp the amount for which the stamp shall be redeemable. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. BARR. Could he say that it would be redeemable by so much soap, or so much trade, or so much cash?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Any way he pleases.

Mr. BARR. Then, I am afraid that we are just opening the door to all the iniquities from which we have suffered in the past. We have had almost every class of the community asking that this evil should be removed. Not only the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but all the other provinces of the Dominion would have legislated this evil out of existence years ago if they had had the power to do so. We find that this is nothing more than a gambling institution under which people are led to believe that they will receive a certain amount, and as they are, as my hon. friend said, anxious to get something for nothing, they gather up stamps believing that they will be able to get an article of value in exchange for them. But at the end of the season they go to the place where these trading stamps are to be redeemed, and they do not find what they want. They find that they can get certain things that are not worth 25 cents on the dollar. The result is that they have to take trash of that kind or nothing. It has been contended by some people that this sysem is on a par with giving 5 per cent discount. I submit it is nothing of the kind, and I am afraid that if we pass this legislation in this way a person will be able to go into a store and get trading stamps for say 5 per cent of the value of the goods purchased. That trading stamp is to be redeemed within a certain time. People go to the place where it is to be redeemed, and finding they have not just what they want, the result is that after having made their purchases they get very little, and I am afraid that that matter will still be in the same position if this proposed amendment is adopted and that they will get very little for their discount. The country demands that this practice should be put a stop to. I have received a number of letters and telegrams from retail and wholesale dealers and from several others in my riding asking me to support a Bill that will not permit this practice to continue, with some slight modification in deference to the law, but to support a Bill that will root out the evil entirely. I believe that by passing such a measure we will be doing justice to the country. This is a most undesirable way of advertising. There are plenty of legitimate methods of advertising; a merchant can offer 5 per cent or 10 per cent discount to attract customers, but under the form we have had these trading stamps used, the system has been a fraud and will continue to be a fraud unless we legislate against it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think those who criticise the Bill understand the effect of the amendment upon it. I do not care very much whether the Bill goes through in its present form or not. But I must insist on an amendment to add after the word 'vendor' in the first paragraph the words 'or manufacturer.' For instance, a soap manufacturer sells soap by the car lot to the retail dealer who sells it to the general public, and the purchasers come to the retail dealer to redeem the coupons which the package contains and which has been put in at the factory, and the retail dealer sends the coupon to the manufacturer for redemption. I think there is no harm in the world in the soap manufacturer doing that, but this Bill will prevent it.

Mr. PORTER. That may be a good provision, but I object to striking out these three lines.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let us know what effect it would have on the Bill to do that?

Mr. PORTER. It occurs to me that it would destroy the object of the Bill if we were to do that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What bearing can it have upon the section?

Mr. PORTER. I may illustrate by saying that the Bill originally passed by the Ontario legislature contained the following:

> Provided, however, that this Bill shall not apply to any merchant or manufacturer who places in or upon packages of goods or delivers to the purchasers of goods sold or manufactured by him, tickets or coupons to be redeemed by such merchant or manufacturer either in money or merchandise.

In order to evade this provision, those who dealt in trading stamps formed themselves into a partnership and had a central depot at which these coupons were redeemed. That is the reason why the amendment in the statute of 1905 was made, and on the passage of the amendment a new by-law was made by the city of Toronto providing against the formation of such combines. If we omit these words from the Bill they will be able to do the same thing as they did in Toronto.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If there was any combine such as is referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) it would be met by sub-paragraphs 2 and 3 of this section. The words which I ask to have omitted would legislate against the soap manufacturer who puts the tickets in at the place of manufacture and who redeems them. He would be required by virtue of these words to mark upon that label the date of delivery and the place of business, and I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. KEMP. Is the coupon redeemable in merchandise or cash?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Anything a man chooses to give for it. Generally they give umbrellas or sticks or something like that.

Mr. PORTER. I believe that leaves the door open to perpetrate the very frauds which I complained of. If there is no fixed value upon that coupon there is nothing to prevent misrepresentation, and when the holder of the coupon goes to have them redeemed he does not get the value at all. It seems to me there can be no reasonable objection to the manufacturer putting the redeemable value upon the coupon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move that the words 'or manufacturer' be inserted after the word 'vendor' in paragraph 1.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I am totally opposed to these so-called trading stamps; they are a nuisance; but there is a legitimate branch of business carried on by retail merchants which ought not to be prohibited. For instance, a grocer places a lot of crockery in his window, each article being marked at a certain price, and when the customer purchases 25 cents worth of goods he gets a coupon value for 1 cent. When enough of these are collected the customer goes into the store and can buy any article in the window with the price of the article marked upon it. That is perfectly legitimate and it ought not to be prevented.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is not prevented by the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is a discount.

Mr. BERGERON. This amendment seems to be intended to meet the case of the soap manufacturers, but I understand there is a custom among dealers in flour who are not manufacturers to give these tickets or coupons and that class of business would not be covered by this amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would not be covered by the amendment.

Mr. BERGERON. Then those merchants have no protection ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It seems to me they ought to be protected.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it not unjust to protect some and not others?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We had better discuss the whole clause and hear the objections, and perhaps I may move that the committee rise, and when we come to consider it again I will be able to meet the objection. It must be admitted that it is novel legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. Almost everybody admits that there is an evil which needs to be corrected ; the point is how to correct it. I was going to ask the Minister of Justice if his resources were not equal to the task of correcting that evil without making it a criminal offence. What is the objection to your soap dealer or any one else who puts one of these coupons in a package, which is to be redeemed afterwards by himself, saying in what it will be redeemed ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If you leave the words in, he will be required to say that.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the objection to his saying that ? There must be a definite value attached to that coupon, otherwise it would not be an inducement at all.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think I had better ask the committee to rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, in order to give me an opporunity to consider the points which have been raised. It seems to me that I would require to provide not only for the case of a manufacturer, but also for the case of a wholesale merchant. One difficulty which ought to be considered is that there are a great many of these trading stamps out now. The question is whether we ought not to fix a time when this Act shall be enforced, so that those now out will be redeemed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not heard very much commendation of this measure from the treasury benches. The only member of the government who has expressed himself is the Minister of Justice, and I gather from his remarks that he is absolutely opposed to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I want to say immediately, so far as this legislation is concerned, as well as all legislation of a similar character, that personally I am absolutely opposed to paternalism.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see that my view of the hon. gentleman's opinion is exactly accurate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am introducing the Bill on behalf of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so. The hon. gentleman has to perform a duty as Minister of Justice, although he is not at all in sympathy with the measure he is introducing, and he gives the best explanation he can. He does not exactly damn it with faint praise ; he damns it with a very straight expression of his opinion that it is not good legislation. It goes a very long way, there is no doubt about that, and it is very unusual. At the same time, I believe, if we may rely upon what we have heard from my hon. friend from St. James division (Mr. Gervais) there is a very strong public opinion against the so-called nuisance which has arisen from the use of trading stamps. I do not know that I exactly apprehend what is being done. If I do, it is something like this. Men who are the proprietors of these trading stamps go to some man in a particular business and prevail upon him to sell the stamps.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not to sell them, but to buy them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I intended to say 'buy.' They prevail upon him to take these trading stamps, and to pay them a certain percentage of the cash receipts which he receives for goods for which the trading stamps are given.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The stamps are redeemable at their place of business. There are different kinds of trading stamps.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The merchant gives these stamps away, and the proprietors of the trading stamps redeem them, and in that way they gain a considerable profit. They take in effect a part of the profit of the retail dealer, giving to the general public certain articles, and keeping a shop for that purpose. It is alleged, with what truth I know not, that the articles delivered from that shop are not up to the mark, and that the people who take these trading stamps get less for their money than they would get if these trading stamps were not in existence.

Mr. BERGERON. And still they go back to them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And still they go back to them. If you propose to deal with matters of that kind by criminal legislation, you must in the end treat as a criminal every man who in any way seeks to make a livelihood by trading upon the credulity or folly of other people. That is about what it amounts to.

Mr. GERVAIS. That is done in every country in the world.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not opposed to the Bill, but I do say that if this parliament undertakes to carry out that principle to its fullest extent, it will have to increase the criminal code four or five times over, and in the end it will find that it is undertaking a contract which it is absolutely impossible for any human legislature to carry out. It may be that this evil is of so exaggerated a character that we must depart from the usual course of legislation. There seems to be a great outburst of public opinion against it; but looking at it simply from the standpoint of principle, I do venture to think that we have undertaken something that we cannot carry out to a logical and legitimate conclusion.

Mr. BERGERON. Something else will spring up.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Something else will spring up, as my hon. friend says. It is merely a sort of compulsory advertising, as I understand, and no doubt it leads to great abuses; but I believe there are at the present time, in trade and commerce in Canada, the seeds of just as great abuses. There are other devices of a similar character which are not so widespread, and it would be absolutely impossible for this parliament to deal with those abuses and remedy them, because they are abuses which are not recognized as coming under the criminal law, but are due to the fact that people will be careless and foolish and gullible, and think they are getting good bargains when on the contrary they are making very bad ones. Eventually you may have to crush out departmental stores—I am not saying they are an evil—or prevent these stores from having bargain days—you may have to do any number of things if you are going to proceed along this line. While I am not proposing to offer any opposition to the Bill, I think its provisions should have careful consideration, so that we may know where legislation of this kind will lead us to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This legislation does not require the commendation of the government. It carries its own commendation. The applause which greeted it from hon. gentlemen opposite shows conclusively that there is greater objection to this trading stamp business than would appear at first sight. It is a form of compulsory selling, and above all things it is a lottery. Of course we cannot protect poor humanity against its own follies in every case, but there are some cases in which the legislators in every civilized country have undertaken to protect people against themselves. Nearly every country prohibits lotteries. In Canada we have been obliged to make the laws against lotteries more severe, and we have legislated against bucket shops and other devices of an equally shady character.

I was impressed by the numerous delegations which waited on the government regarding this measure, and I was particularly impressed by this consideration that poor people, the wives of mechanics, whose incomes are not large, are induced to buy beyond their legitimate requirements in order to get these stamps; and when they have enough to make a book, they can go to a store and get a chromo or a glass jar or something of that kind for which they will pay double the value. This is why we have thought it advisable to support this measure; but at the same time, we could not undertake to legislate as my hon. friend suggests, because that would open the door to other abuses. There are some forms of abuses, such as lotteries and speculations in bucket shops, which are so glaring and far-reaching that parliament ought to interfere and put an end to them if possible, and this comes within that category.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. It has come under my notice this last week, and the report is current among the people, that this measure would become law. Consequently those who have a certain amount of stamps are anxious to have them redeemed as soon as possible. These stamps are collected mainly by women; and if one has not sufficient to fill her book, her neighbour will give her what she has and then she will try and get them redeemed. But when the woman goes to the store, what is the story they are put off with? The storekeeper will say: We are nearly out of goods. We expect a consignment next week. In consequence of being put off in this way, the holders of these books have come to the conclusion that these trading stamp parties have no intention of getting any more goods, but some fine morning will take wing and fly away, and there will be no means of collecting the value of the stamps.

Mr. KEMP. Certainly some remedy should be applied to this abuse. These trading stamp companies, small and insignificant as they are, are permitted to do what no other kind of financial corporation can do. They are permitted to circulate money. This trading stamp resembles a postage stamp. They are sold at $5 for $100 face value. The merchant hands them out to his customer and they get into circulation that way. When a customer gets $100 worth he can go and exchange it for some article valued at from 25 cents to $1. He never gets anything worth $5. A greater evil is this, that a great amount of these stamps are never redeemed. Very few people can get $100 together. The people who have been deceived into taking these stamps are generally poor people, and it takes them a long time to collect $100. Where the tremendous profit of the trading stamp companies comes in is due to the fact that the stamps are never redeemed. Then, as the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) has just pointed out, when people present the stamps at the store, they will be told that the store is out of goods but some are expected in a few days, and in the end the trading stamp agents get away without paying anything. I am in favour of our doing something to put a stop to this abuse.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Any danger from the principle of lottery is preserved by this Bill. It is perfectly possible still for any man, who is a vendor of goods, to give out a trading stamp, and redeem it in his own store. That leaves the lottery principle still untouched. If this Bill is based on the idea of putting a stop to lotteries it should go further and prohibit trading stamps given by the vendor himself for redemption at his own place of business. I would recognize legislation against the principle of lottery as very wise, but it does not seem that this legislation proceeds on that basis. It is not framed from the standpoint of the purchaser but from the standpoint of the ordinary vendor, and its object is to prevent the trading stamp proprietor from receiving a portion of the vendor's profits. I am not objecting to that. The evil may be so great as to require legislation, but let us understand the principle on which we are acting. If it is intended to prohibit lotteries, we should go further.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not now dispute anything stated by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden). But we are dealing with an evil that exists. It may be that, if we dealt with all covered by this principle, we should go further than we are now going. But we are now dealing with a lottery which has invaded every city and town in Canada, in the form of these trading stamps. The object of this legislation is to reach this form of lottery ; and we think we have done it and will stamp it out. If any other evil——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way does the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) say the principle of lottery is involved ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It induces people to pay money with the prospect of a chance to draw a prize.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps I do not understand the system.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let me repeat the concrete example which was brought before us by the delegation that waited upon us. The gentleman who is directing the system in this country—I will not give his name—has his stamps printed. He sends these stamps to a merchant, saying : You must buy from me ; I will give you a hundred dollars' worth of stamps for $10. If you do not deal with me, your neighbour will. Of course, what one man does, the other man must do. These stamps carry a certain discount on purchases. Well, here is the wife of a wage-earner, who wants to get a certain article and for that purpose collects trading stamps. She goes to a place of business where these stamps are given. There she is induced to buy things that she does not want. It was represented to us that the wife of a certain man, a good mechanic, went to a store and bought three bottles of a proprietary remedy—I think it was Castoria—which she did not need and which she did not remove from the store. But she got three trading stamps to put in her book, and with her collection of trading stamps she got a bracket, a mirror, a rocking chair or something of that kind. That is a lottery—the person pays money for a chance to draw a prize.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I have had a little experience in the trading stamp business, and I think I can speak with some authority on the matter. The idea which seems to prevail in this committee is that we wish to protect the buyer. As a matter of fact the man we should protect, and whom this Bill will protect, is the merchant. In a certain town, let us say, there are certain merchants. The trading stamp man comes along, and goes to one of these merchants, John Jones, and says : If you take my trading stamps, I will give you full control of the system, and the people will come and buy from you because you will give them trading stamps which will mean a premium to them. The merchant's neighbour John Smith does not get a look in on the scheme at all. The result is that people who have been buying from Smith in the past go and buy from Jones. In Vancouver the system became a perfect nuisance. The merchants were buying trading stamps and virtually handing over the profit of their business to this trading stamp vendor. The result was that we had many failures in Vancouver. The system was nothing more or less than a piece of blackmail—that is all the trading stamp business is. Merchants felt obliged to give trading stamps in order to hold their customers, because people purchased only from firms that gave trading stamps. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) suggested that it was only the poorer classes of people who looked for trading stamps. I have been in business for twenty-two years. I never gave a trading stamp in my life—refused to do it. But others gave trading stamps, and I found my trade leaving me in certain quarters. But among those who went to buy on the trading stamp basis there were just as many rich people as poor. It is the desire of everybody to get as much as he can for his money—and a very laudable desire it is.

We should pass legislation which will wipe out this evil, which is nothing more or less than blackmail.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As a matter of fact the gentlemen who came to protest against this system were the retail merchants themselves. In Montreal the merchants have carried on this agitation for a year or so. It is not so much the consumer upon which pressure is brought by Mr. Wilder to buy these stamps but the merchants. And the merchants protest because what they pay on sales through these trading stamps represents their fair profit in an honest deal.

Mr. BERGERON. Why do they buy them ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because each is forced to do so. What do these trading stamp people do in Montreal, for instance ? They will go into a certain district—let us say St. James' or St. Mary's. There they will choose a certain grocer, a certain shoemaker, a certain druggist, and so with other lines of trade, and will agree with these dealers as to the issuing of trading stamps. But the merchant who buys the trading stamps and distributes them among the public loses thereby the honest profit he would have made. I rose mainly to call attention to the fact that the immense deputation that came to Ottawa from Montreal and other cities of the province of Quebec headed by my hon. friend from St. James' division (Mr. Gervais) was composed not so much of the consumers as of the retail merchants who are being exploited by this trading stamp business.

Mr. CROCKET. I would ask the Minister of Justice if he sees anything in this system on which a prosecution could be based for obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, or for conspiracy in restraint of trade, or for violation of any other provision of the criminal code as it is to-day ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have never considered the question sufficiently to be able to give an answer.

Mr. CROCKET. I would ask one further question : Under the provisions of this Bill, will it be legal for the merchant to issue a trading stamp redeemable on his own premises ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. But it is criminal for them to issue a trading stamp redeemable next door ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On his own premises, and provided it has on the face of it the place of issue and the value.

Mr. CROCKET. Then, it appears that all this great concern for the poor innocent consumer simmers down to a scheme to protect merchants, and not the people at all ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Both.

Mr. MACPHERSON.

Mr. COCHRANE. You allow the merchant to issue a trading stamp payable on his own premises, and he can hoodwink the people in that way if he pleases. The whole anxiety is for the man who sells and not for the man who buys.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have some amendments to suggest. The first is to meet the point raised by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) :

For sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph (a) substitute :

(i) by any person other than the vendor, or the person from whom he purchased the goods, or the manufacturer of the goods.

For sub-paragraph (2) substitute :

(ii) by the vendor, or the person from whom he purchased the goods, or the manufacturer of the goods.

Insert after paragraph (a) the following paragraph :

(b) An offer printed or marked by the manufacturer upon any wrapper, box, or receptacle in which the goods are sold, of a premium or reward for the return of such wrapper, box or receptacle is not a trading stamp within the meaning of the section.

Add the following clause at the end of the Bill :

2. This Act shall not apply to any trading stamp issued by a manufacturer or vendor before the first day of November, 1905.

Mr. DEMERS. Does this Act as amended cover the case where the stamp is given in connection with work done ? I would cite an instance. The Slater Shoe Company black your boots and give you a coupon which is worth five cents on the purchase of boots from that firm.

Mr. BERGERON. That is very immoral.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you take one of these coupons you will go to the penitentiary.

Mr. DEMERS. There may be other manufacturers in other lines who do this, but I would like to know from the Minister if he has provided for this case ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think it is provided for in the Act.

Amendments (Mr. Fitzpatrick) agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Before you report the Bill I have a slight amendment to propose, as this is a Bill to amend the Criminal Code. The amendment I propose is to section 523, and is practically the Bill (No. 67) which is before the House, but which has stood on the understanding that another Bill was to be introduced which would include the amendments to the Criminal Code. The section, 523, which I propose to amend deals with intimidation and is as follows :

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable on indictment or on summary conviction before two justices of the peace to a fine——

It has been held by the police magistrate of Toronto on two occasions that he has the option of saying whether the man shall be tried on indictment before a jury or on summary conviction. I think the plain meaning of the section is that the accused shall have that right, but in order to make that matter plain I propose to insert the words 'at the option of the accused.'

Mr. FOSTER. How will it then read :

Mr. GUTHRIE (reading.)

Every one is giulty of an indictable offence and liable on indictment or on summary conviction before two justices of the peace to a fine at the option of the accused to a fine not exceeding so and so.

Mr. BERGERON. That is very clear, the magistrate should be dismissed.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The conviction still stands, and if it comes up again probably the ruling will stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that amendment is already covered by the section, but if there is any doubt about it, as I understand there is, we should make it plain. It is quite apparent to me that the option of trial by jury is not in the hands of the magistrate but of the accused.

Mr. BERGERON. That magistrate ought to be dismissed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You cannot do that; he is too good a man.

Amendment (Mr. Guthrie) agreed to.

Bill as amended reported.

SUPPLY—NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY CONTRACT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the course of the discussion of the contract entered into by the government with the North Atlantic Trading Company, I stated that I would move a resolution seconded by Mr. Ames that:

In the opinion of this House it is advisable to give notice of the government's intention to terminate the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company, according to the terms of the contract.

I did not intend to say anything at all but simply to move the resolution. However a paper has been put in my hands this morning in which there is an article which throws considerable light upon this company. The North Atlantic Trading Company, as I understand, is simply a combination of agents or individuals and is not a shipping company.

In other words, it is a company without assets. It is in no sense of the word a shipping company. It is a syndicate. The government entered into a contract to pay this syndicate for 10 years £1 a head for every immigrant, man, woman and child, that it brought to Canada. I pointed out yesterday that a man and his wife might bring to Canada from any portion of Europe eight, or ten, or twelve children, or as many children as they could gather. and that the government would be obliged to pay this trading company £1 a head for every one of these immigrants. In the first place, ten years is too long a time to enter into a contract in connection with immigration, because our policy may change long before the expiration of that period. A paper published at Winnipeg, 'The Voice'—that sounds like a pretty thoroughly popular paper—has an editorial and gives a quotation from a correspondent, which probably throws some light upon this move. The paper is dated the 7th July. The editorial states :

Apropos of a subject which is creating both interest and discussion in British newspapers at the present time, the following extracts from a letter written by a well informed English Trades-Unionist to a friend in Canada, may, in some degree, have the effect of ultimately securing more light upon, if not culminating in putting the North Atlantic Trading Company "out of business" in the matter of an apparently "soft snap" in so far as the bonus question is concerned—a subject which certainly requires more explanation than our Canadian people are in possession of.

I shall not read very much of these extracts. The writer is going over the Auditor General' Report, and he wonders why this large sum of money has been paid in years past. Then he goes on to say :

What I cannot understant is why all these advances should be repeated year after year and why there should be advances made to a few continental sharks to strengthen their hands in sending most undesirable people (as a rule) out to Canada, and that, too, at $5 a head, while only $1.50 per head is given for British and Irish emigrants. But the most serious part of the whole subject is that everybody in the business here who takes any interest in the North Atlantic Trading Company seems to know that it does not earn the money it receives either for bonuses or for literature.

This is a point I wish to draw the attention of the House to, because it seems to be a most important and a most serious one :

I saw a correspondence between a continental agent and the head of his firm in Liverpool the other day which indicates that the North Atlantic Trading Company spends very little money in literature and advertising, or with other agents, to get business for it, and it is almost certain that it does not book the passengers itself. The general opinion among steamship people here is that the company gets the names of people who book to Canada from all parts of Europe, puts in the names and claims the bonus, and I, myself, believe that that opinion is well founded. You must see that this might be troublesome business for the Canadian government.

Then it goes on to the political aspect of the affair. Now, if it is the case that a bonus is paid by Canada to a company which is merely a syndicate of shipping agents, it means that these agents simply receive the names of these immigrants who are brought over to Canada through no enterprise of this Transatlantic Trading Company, because they own no boats, and that for every immigrant they get £1 a head. That is a most probable thing under this agreement. It is almost a certainty under that agreement, as I understand it, because the agreement has not yet been submitted to the House. The government have agreed, as far as it has been explained, that they shall pay to this syndicate £1 for every immigrant that the syndicate sends, and, as the syndicate have no ships, and as they merely send them through whatever ship they may name, the natural inference and certainty would be that this syndicate would combine with the steamship companies, that the steamship companies would give the names of their passengers to the syndicate, and that they would divide the £1 per head in whatever proportion they might think best, they getting £1 per head for having done nothing and for having accomplished nothing. The inducement under the contract, as it has been represented to us, is an inducement to send a most undesirable class of immigrants from the continent of Europe with no restriction whatever. There is no restriction as to age. You may bring in a ship load of 1,000 immigrants, among whom you may have 200 children under six months of age, or who may be a year old and, although I do not say this of a certainty, I think that children under a year old are brought free with their parents. If that is the case, we are paying a bonus of £1 a head for those whom the shipping companies carry for nothing. We have no restrictions as to the ages of the immigrants, no limitation whatever, except the limitation that not more than 5,000 may come in one year from a particular section of the continent, and we have no limitation as to the character of the people who come. All they have to say is that they are farmers, and we know how very simple that declaration is, especially when it is made, as it probably will be made, by people who do not understand the language in which the declaration is written. During the next ten years we may bring in hundreds of thousands of immigrants and pay £1 a head for them, although these people are simply going over to the United States. Canada is giving a bonus of £1 per head to bring in this class of people. When I referred to the matter yesterday, I had no idea that a condition such as that set forth in this correspondence and in this editorial existed. I did not realize how far the contract went, and how thoroughly it was open to fraud upon the government of this country. The contract, I say, having ten years to run, is, I think, a most injudicious one to be made, because in ten years the policy of the country may change entirely in so far as immigration is concerned, and especially as regards immigration from the distant parts of Europe which this contract reaches. I do not wish at this stage of the proceedings of the House to take up time in doing more than calling the attention of the House to these conditions, and I feel that it is most desirable that the government should give notice to terminate that contract at the earliest possible period they can—that is four years. I think that a ten years' contract of that kind, even if it were guarded as it is not guarded, is too long a contract to make with a corporation of this kind, and therefore I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Ames :

That in the opinion of this House it is advisable to give notice of the government's intention to terminate the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company according to the terms of the contract.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure that the House and the country will be pleased to see the active attention that hon. members on the other side are giving to the question of immigration at this time. The people will wonder how it has happened that after a period of seven or eight years of apparent sleep on the question they have at last wakened up to the fact that there is immigration and that it requires attention.

Mr. BENNETT. How about your Galician friends ?

Mr. FIELDING. How about the Ephesians also ?

Mr. BENNETT. The minister used to abuse them pretty freely.

Mr. OLIVER. As a member of this House I have always given a good deal of attention to the subject of immigration and I was always ready to criticise the methods and policy of the government in that respect. It is very strongly within my memory that I have never had the support of members of the opposition in my criticism. One would suppose that the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment did not know that from year to year for years past we have been voting sums of money specifically for the purpose of paying $5 per head for all immigrants arriving from continental Europe. This has been within the knowledge of the House and the country for years. The people in respect of whom this money was paid may have been desirable or undesirable, but there never has been a word of objection until now towards paying this one pound per head. What difference does it make whether the pound per head is paid to one agency or the other, as long as we are satisfied to accept these immigrants. I believe that when the Conservatives were in power they paid one pound per head just as we have been doing, and this being the policy of the government for a number of years it is peculiar at this late date that some hon. gentlemen should discover that this is being done. It has been in force for all these years and it is no more objectionable to-day than it was before.

The contract with this Atlantic Trading Company was made six years ago and the reason for it is because the government of Canada is prohibited by the law of Holland, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Prussia, Denmark, Norway and Sweden, from pursuing an active emigration policy in these countries. If we are to carry on any emigration effort in these countries we must do so by means other than direct agents of this government, and so we have to depend upon some outside agencies. If we depended upon the steamship companies, it is just as much to their interest to send passengers to the United States as to Canada so long as they get the passage money. Then, if it is in our interest that there should be an immigration campaign in continental European countries, it seems to me that the contract has some commendable features. We do not pay any more under this contract than the Conservative government paid in respect of these same immigrants.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister tell us what the Conservative government paid for these immigrants in 1895 ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am given to understand that they paid the same amount.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister had better think it out; he is not correct.

Mr. OLIVER. I may be mistaken, but I have reason to believe that bonus money was paid by the late Conservative government.

Mr. INGRAM. Away back in the nineteen, but that was stopped by reason of an agitation in this country assisted in by the Liberal party.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes; I notice that there was no agitation from 1896 until the present session of 1905 against this bonus system which prevailed under the Conservative government as well as under this government. My position is that by the arrangement made with this North Atlantic Trading Company the government was sure that there would be an active campaign on behalf of emigration to Canada carried on in these continental countries with which the government itself was prohibited from acting and without any more cost to the government than it was incurring before. I fail to see where the objection to this contract comes in. If there is any objection to the class of people brought here by this agency I could understand it, but without that there has not been presented a fair and reasonable objection to the contract. If gentlemen will move that immigration from certain European countries is not desirable, or if they say that immigration from none of these countries is desirable, we might have reason to carry out their views and abolish the contract. It remains yet to be argued that it is not desirable to take measures to secure immigration from these countries, and so, this contract must be successfully attacked on other grounds than have been made known up to the present.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is one point about this which the Minister of the Interior does not take into consideration, and as the Prime Minister was absent when I mentioned it yesterday, I will call it to his attention now. I learned yesterday for the first time that there was a ten years' contract involving a payment for an indefinite number of immigrants brought into this country to the extent of one pound per head; that that contract had been entered into by an official of this government, and that it might cost us anywhere from $20,000 to $50,000 a year I now ask the Prime Minister how it is possible, that an official of the government could, without any authorization from parliament, bind this country by a ten years' contract to pay that large amount of money. If it had been done on the authority of the government it is bad enough, provided there was no appropriation directly for that purpose. If it were a matter of urgency and the government took the responsibility of making the contract until parliament assembled it would have been the duty of the government to lay that contract on the table of the House and to get the authorization of this parliament for it and of its continuance for ten years. That is a serious feature in connection with this thing. The government would have no right to do this, much less an official of the government. It is stated that perhaps it would not have been wise to have laid this contract on the table of the House, but no reason of that kind can have force in authorizing an official of this government, without the sanction of parliament to commit this country to a ten years' contract. The Minister of the Interior does not seem to think that this is at all a serious matter.

You cannot make a steamship contract for one year or for five years unless you get the authorization of parliament and get the vote of money to pay for that contract. Not for a single year do you do it, but every year the steamship subsidies come down, and they have to be explained and to be voted by parliament. In the case of a large contract, the contract itself may have to be approved by parliament. But here is a case where an official of the government bound this country to a ten years' contract. No matter what changes might take place in those ten years, he has pledged this country against any reversal of its policy. Five years afterwards this government might come to the conclusion that it did not want any of this class of immigrants, but there is the contract which binds the government, through its official, and I suppose the country as well. There is the serious proposition to which I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister and this House. That is not constitutional; it is not right; it seems to me unheard of. In the case of the Yukon Railway, so called, the contract was made without the authorization of parliament, but just as soon as parliament met, a few days afterwards, that contract was laid on the table of the House. We had to go into a discussion of the ways and means, and, as it turned out, that contract was not authorized by parliament, but was rejected. But here is a contract made by an official for ten years, with nothing laid before parliament, with no authorization by a vote nor by the adoption of the contract itself. With reference to the other part of it, the Minister of the Interior has, it seems to me, very indefinite ground on which to go. In the first place, he is not dealing with a responsible company, like a great steamship company. He is simply dealing with a syndicate made up of a number of shipping agents, who are affiliated it may be with the shipping companies. These agents came to Mr. Preston, I suppose, and said something like this—

Mr. OLIVER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If he will change the name to Lord Strathcona—

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to change it to Lord Strathcona. There are two contracts, neither of which we have seen. One, it is said, was entered into by Lord Strathcona. That ended, and this one was entered into. But there are, as was admitted yesterday, great differences in the two contracts. In their conditions they are different. The one with Lord Strathcona—arranged by him, I do not know whether by the authority of the government or not, but I imagine it would be—lapsed, and this other one took its place. So that I am not going to substitute the name of Lord Strathcona for that of Mr. Preston. Anyway, whether it was Lord Strathcona or Mr. Preston, neither of them has any right to enter into a contract binding this country to the payment of money for a series of years unless the government authorizes them to do it, and the government should only authorize them to do it with the consent and authorization of parliament. With whom is the Minister of the Interior dealing? Not with a great steamship or trading company, but with a number of men who individually were shipping agents, and who formed themselves into a syndicate while running this kind of business. He has no thorough ground for regulating the kind of literature they send out. When this department of the government makes up its literature and sends it out, it knows what it is doing. What hand has it over the literature sent out by this syndicate? Does it prepare the literature? Does it revise the literature?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. OLIVER. I might point out that under the laws of these countries this government cannot send any literature into them without bringing about international complications.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of the Interior revise the literature they have issued? Does he know what they have issued? He does not. Does he know how much they have issued?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. We know what it costs. They have to submit vouchers of the cost.

Mr. FOSTER. But these vouchers are simply what they state are their own payments, and they do not come under any direct supervision, and there can be no statement made as to the kind of literature. The minister admits that we have no efficient supervision over it at all. As to the amount of literature we depend upon the bills they send in, and for which they furnish vouchers as having been paid. We know from instances that have taken place again and again, that no payment of public money is made simply on the authority of a voucher, which tends to show how much the person interested has paid, unless there has been an investigation to show that the goods have been delivered. Where is the evidence in this case to show that the goods have been delivered? They will present a bill to the Minister of the Interior for $10,000 worth of literature. The minister simply says, where is your voucher? They present it and he pays the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. This government does not pay for the literature these people issue. They pay for it themselves. Their contract with us is that they shall issue $15,000 worth of literature each year. They submit vouchers showing that they have issued it, but we do not pay for that literature.

Mr. FOSTER. You pay for it in the fact that you pay a pound a head, and you include the payment for the literature in the pound. We come back to the old question. They are to expend so much in literature; the department knows nothing of the literature; has no supervision over it. The department does not know that the goods have been delivered. It pays the bills, that is all. Who is the inspector who sees that the goods are delivered?

Mr. OLIVER. The goods in this case are the immigrants, and we pay the money on the delivery of the immigrants.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the narrowest point of view to take. What is that literature that is paid for by this government? Two things: it is to bring the one immigrant who reads the literature at first, who is influenced by it and who comes; but there is a greater field for the literature than that.

It is the cumulative effect of it, and you must know that it is distributed, if you pay for it, in order that we may have, not only the present, but the cumulative effect. I asked the Minister of the Interior whether they distributed the literature or not, and he appeared to think that when an immigrant comes out that is a delivery of the goods. But the whole argument for the wide dissemination of the literature is not what it simply brings in during one year, but the cumulative effect of that from year to year. The minister does not know that a single sheet has been distributed. The extract which was read by my hon. friend from Toronto opens up another phase of the case. That is the statement of a man who presumably knows what he is writing about. He says it is just as easy as falling off a log for these men to get from their shipping agencies the names of the people who go to Canada, and then make their claim of £1 per head. All that is necessary is that these people should come from within the geographical bounds covered by this contract. What means has the Minister of the Interior at his disposal to prevent that? The policy is a bad one, irrespective entirely of the zone from which these immigrants come or the class they belong to. Take the £1 per head, there is no condition governing the payment except that they shall be agriculturists. Children in arms are taken just the same as adults, either male or female, and £1 per head is paid upon them. You have no security at all, other than the word of the syndicate, that these people are agriculturists. Is there any test applied to show what kind of agriculturists they are? You have not even any check as to whether an immigrant is an agriculturist or not. You pay the £1 per head, provided the individual is presented and he is shown to have come from that zone and claims to be an agriculturist, or a domestic, or such other class is allowed to come. Then when you get them here, what is the guarantee that they will settle in this country on the farms? We do not want agriculturists to settle in our cities and earn a precarious livelihood by working at day labour. We do not want agriculturists to flood our cities. In every respect this is a most unguarded and most improvident arrangement. Then we have the fact that the government have made a 10-year contract and have never laid it on the table, and we have not got it until this date—the whole procedure is most extraordinary. We ought to have both contracts —the one made by Lord Strathcona or which he was instructed to make, and the one which Mr. Preston made, whether instructed or not. In any event, the government must take the responsibility. We are asked to pay each year upon a secret contract, the policy of which we had nothing to do with. While we all desire immigration of a proper kind and are willing to pay what is necessary, we have not money to burn, or waste, or throw away.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It so happened yesterday that I could not be in the House, or I would have taken the trouble this morning to inform myself on the points raised in the discussion. I cannot give my hon. friend all the information I would like at this moment, but I will endeavour to do so at a later date. The remarks of the hon. gentleman deal with two sides of the question—the constitutional and the practical. With regard to the constitutional side, I may say at once that if I had been aware of this debate I would have taken the trouble to inform myself as to the points I have in mind. On more than one occasion the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) gave the House the particulars of the system of immigration which was being followed on the continent and in the British Islands. I agree with my hon. friend that a contract passed by the government for the payment of money is not, under our constitutional system, binding unless ratified by parliament. The contract should be laid on the table, because it cannot be binding until it is ratified; and it can be binding only from year to year as the appropriation is voted. If a contract is passed for ten years entailing a yearly disbursement of money and is ratified by parliament, it is binding, but it is not binding unless the moneys are appropriated from year to year. I am safe in saying that from year to year the money necessary to pay this company has been voted by parliament with full knowledge of the terms of the contract. Certainly, on more than one occasion, the ex-Minister of the Interior explained that this money was paid to a syndicate in Bremen or Hamburg. If my hon. friend insists upon the contract being placed on the table, of course his request will be complied with.

I now come to the practical side of this contract. It was first introduced by Lord Strathcona and was then continued by Mr. Preston on the terms agreed to by Lord Strathcona. The main question is whether the contract was a provident one or not. According to the statements made in the letter read by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Foster) and published in the newspapers, it is open to serious objection, but I would observe to the hon. gentleman that the allegations stated in this letter are not confirmed. It is stated by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that this letter discloses the possibility that this syndicate is not earning the money paid it, that it is not making any effort to get immigrants from the northern part of Europe, but simply takes the bookings of the companies and sends the names to the government to be paid. If that be the case, it is a fraud on the government. To draw money for every one of these persons would be an absolute fraud upon the country, and, for this reason, if for no other, the contract ought to be put a stop to without further notice. But I do not understand that these facts are stated absolutely and as being beyond controversy. I gather from the statement made by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that there is something to be investigated. Of course, a statement such as he has made ought not to pass unnoticed. It is the duty of the Department of the Interior to investigate the matter and see whether the facts are as alleged or not. But as to the effect of the contract, I assume that that contract has been carried out, that the syndicate has lived up to the conditions to which they bound themselves. And, in that case, the contract is one by which, in my opinion, Canada must profit. Under the late government, for some years, we had a policy of so-called assisted immigration. But this policy was found objectionable, and it was done away with during the '80's. If I remember aright another policy was introduced to give some premium to steamship companies according to the number of immigrants they brought in. This, I believe, was the system we found in force when we came into office. For this was substituted the contract made with this company. We have to deal with it on the issue whether it was a good contract or not. For my part, I think it was a good contract, if the conditions are faithfully carried out. The thing we are most concerned in is not to have immigrants, but to have a good class of immigrants. I take issue with the hon. gentleman who said that we have no guarantee that these people will settle in Canada. We can have no absolute guarantee to that effect with regard to any people. There was a time when Canada suffered from the American policy in this matter, so that immigrants who landed at our ports did not settle with us, but went to the United States. I do not think that is the case to-day. I believe that most of the immigrants who come to Canada with the intention of settling here remain here. The question is are they a good class of immigrants, or are they not. For my part I think the best class of immigrants we can have are those from the northern part of Europe—the British Islands, of course, Scandinavia, France, Switzerland, the northern part of Italy and the Danubian provinces. Some objection is taken to the fact that we pay this money not only on adult immigrants but on children. For my part, I do not find fault with that. The immigration that comes in families is the best we can have. The man who comes with his wife and children is a better immigrant than the one who comes alone. Not that I would discourage the immigration of single persons; but the man who comes with his family is the one likely to prove the best immigrant. And the person who comes here in childhood is almost sure to be brought up to be a good Canadian. For these reasons, I do not find fault with the payment of £1 per head not only for adults but for children. The only question then, is whether £1 is too much or not. That is a debateable question. The point is not new, for I speak with absolute knowledge when I say that the question of paying £1 per head has been discussed on this floor more than once, and up to this time no fault has been found with the amount. So, I can only say to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that, in my opinion, the motion he has made is altogether too drastic. He says at once that the government should give notice to put an end to this contract. Well, I do not think he has given good reason for that action. But since the policy has been challenged, and since the hon. gentleman has made on the authority of the correspondent of a newspaper, proposed the very serious charge that the contract is abused, we must look into the matter and do it without delay.

Mr. OSLER. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is right. I, personally, make no charge. But I say that the way in which the contract is drawn makes it almost a certainty that it will be carried out in this way. And I do not see how the government could find out the facts or check anything of this kind that was wrong. As to the immigration of children, I agree with what the right hon. gentleman says, as to children coming with their parents. But there is nothing in this contract to prevent the sending to this country of waifs and strays from everywhere, and £1 per head is paid on each of them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that the great objection to the contract is, as the Prime Minister practically admits, that what has been charged in some western newspaper, can actually be carried out. It is quite open to the syndicate, under this contract to obtain the names of immigrants coming from certain countries in Europe—these contractors are shipping agents and have the best means of learning who are coming—report the names to the government and draw £1 per head for these people. In other words these contractors get £1 per head for simply collecting the names of people who are coming to Canada. The contract is certainly open to that. It is beyond all question that immigrants would come to Canada from these countries in any case, for the eyes of the whole world are turned to Canada. So, when these contractors learn the names of these people, they can sit confortably in their offices and draw a salary for doing nothing except making and reporting a census of these immigrants. The very admission that it is possible under the terms of the coneract, to do this is the very best reason why the government ought to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Toronto and cancel the contract and make a better one.

An hon. MEMBER. It can only be cancelled after four years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the government could at least give notice, and be ready to cancel the contract at the first opportunity that offers. There is no doubt that these gentlemen would be willing enough to continue it after the end of four years, if the government desires to do so for it is a very comfortable contract for them. The Minister of the Interior says that these contractors circulate literature descriptive of Canada in these countries. Well, if the Canadian government is not at liberty, under the law of these different countries, to circulate immigration literature how is it that this syndicate is able to do it? I think it will be found that the efforts of the syndicate in the circulation of this literature are very small. Does the Minister of the Interior, know, that as a matter of fact they do circulate this literature. What is his evidence ?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe there is evidence in the department to that effect. And I may say that there is a vast difference between the activity of a government in securing immigration against the law of a certain country, and a steamship agent doing the same thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not familiar with the laws of these countries. Perhaps the Minister of the Interior is familiar with them. But I venture my opinion that he will not find much difference in these laws in that regard. I think you will find that their laws provide that no person shall seek to induce any citizen of these countries to leave his home permanently and become a resident of a foreign country, and it does not make the slightest difference whether this is done by an official or an employee of this government. How can it make any difference ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not learned in the law, but I think it will strike my hon. friend that there is a very great difference between one government breaking the law of another country and of that law being broken by citizens of that same country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not speaking of that. The hon. gentleman has not caught my point. I say the law of the foreign country will provide, if I understand aright, that no person shall attempt to induce a citizen of that country to permanently leave that country in order to become a resident of another country. The hon. gentleman says, if I understand him, that the syndicate can circulate this literature in these countries although this government cannot do it by its own officers. I will venture to say he will find that the law prohibits as much in one case as in the other.

Mr. OLIVER. In the case of the illegal circulation of literature by a citizen it is a matter to be regulated within the limits of that country by the law of that country, but the circulation of literature in one country by the government of another country is a matter of international law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is plain that I have not yet made my point clear to the hon. gentleman. I was speaking of the possibility of any literature being circulated, of these men accomplishing their work, and I said I did not think it was likely because the same prohibition which would prevent the government from doing it, would prevent the individuals and they would not be any more enabled to break the law of their country than would the Canadian government. The acts of the government and the Minister of the Interior have exactly the same effect as if they sent their own officials there, because they hire some one to do that which their own officers cannot do.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the point, they do not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They hire these men to do it and pay money for it. I venture to say that if an official went into one of these countries and was arrested for employing these agents and he defended himself on such a distinction he would not succeed very well. He might be protected by another principle of international law, but not the principle now laid down. If he hires some one to do that and pays them money for the accomplishment of their work he renders himself amenable to the law of the foreign country. However, that is neither here nor there. What I am discussing is the probability of these men circulating this literature in these countries. I do not think it is likely because the laws of the country prevent it, and there would be no supervision over this work under this contract. The wise course it seems to me would be to give notice of the cancellation of this contract and to cancel it at the earliest possible moment. If the government could give any assurance to parliament that that is not done which my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has suggested, if they could give under the terms of the contract, any assurance that there is any safeguard, any supervision, that it is not possible for these men to sit down quietly in their offices, make a census of the people leaving for Canada and make a demand on this country, if they would show that this is not possible or probable under the terms of the contract. I would advise the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) to withdraw his motion and let the government consider the matter and perhaps deal with it next session, but if the government cannot give such an assurance surely it is a wise thing for parliament to take action.

The hon. gentleman has spoken of the quality of immigrants. I venture to say once more that so far as the quality of immigration is concerned, we would be well to encourage immigration from the British Isles and the United States. I was told a very striking circumstance yesterday, that is to say that a certain Bible Society in Winnipeg has applications this year for copies of the Bible in 32 different languages and dialects. That indicates the nature of the immigration coming into Canada at the present time. We need not be much perturbed about the quantity of the immigration coming to this country in the next 20 or 25 years; the thing to which we want to give attention is the quality, and as far as possible it is desirable to make that immigration homogeneous, to have it come from the United States of America and the British Isles. I do not deny as I said yesterday that there may be an excellent quality of immigration which will come to us and which is coming to us from other countries, but our efforts should for the most part, perhaps altogether, be directed towards immigration from the British Isles and from the United States of America. Both of these countries can send us exactly the same kind of people as we have here at the present time, people acquainted with British institutions, because whether our citizens of Canada are of French or British descent they are all well acquainted with the institutions under which we have been living for the past 100 years. Those who come from the south are familiar with exactly the same institutions and it is to secure those people that in the main our immigration policy should be directed. It is a matter for regret that an impression has been spread abroad through the British Isles that we desire immigrants from Europe rather than from the British Isles. I do not charge that upon hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, but I do venture to think that the making of this contract and the very curious discrimination they have exercised in respect of immigration from continental Europe, as distinguished from immigration from the British Isles, is calculated to leave in the minds of the people of Great Britain and Ireland a very unfortunate impression. That also is an additional reason in favour of the motion which the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has proposed. I sincerely trust that the government will at the very earliest possible moment do away with this contract and take the opinion of the House as to the conditions under which contracts of this kind, if they are necessary, should be entered into. The right hon. gentleman has referred to the constitutional aspect. I am bound to say that up to this session I never heard of any contract of this kind. I would not be prepared to say that I have not heard the sum of $5 mentioned as a bonus paid on immigrants from continental Europe, but I cannot recall at this moment that I ever heard it, and I have not the slightest recollection of hearing it. I would not be prepared to say that I have not heard it, because one cannot be expected to recall all the tedious debates of the last 4 or 5 years, but as to any contract extending for 10 years and containing the conditions which this contains, I am absolutely sure I never heard of it until two or three weeks ago. I mentioned to the Minister of Finance yesterday that I thought the contract with the elimination of one or two words at the end might safely be laid on the table of the House. I am still of that opinion and hope the government will see fit to do this at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). My hon. friend, I am glad to know, has been able to give a very good certificate as to the class of immigrants coming in to the Northwest. I refer to the application for the Bible in 32 different languages. If the efforts of this North Atlantic Trading Company have resulted in filling the west with people whose earliest desire is to have the Bible in their own language, I think that is a very good commentary on the character of the people. As to the particular point on which my hon. friend dwelt, as to whether the literature was distributed, I asked the Minister of the Interior to give me a document if he could but it was not at hand. My recollection is that amoung the papers I handed to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, necessarily in a confidential way, there was a document from one of the continental countries complaining that agents of Canada were distributing literature, and taking exception to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was a protest of some kind.

Mr. FIELDING. I asked my hon. colleague to show me the document, but it is not at hand. However, my own recollection of it is that it was a protest against the propaganda which some persons were undertaking on behalf of Canada, and that would indicate that the shipping company, of the syndicate, whatever it may be, have probably been doing the work, but whether they have been doing it as fully as hon. gentlemen desire is a fair question to consider.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any samples of the literature that they have distributed? Are they obliged under the contract to give samples of their literature?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not answer that question.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand, since the hon. gentleman has asked the question, that they do submit samples of their literature.

Mr. FOSTER. Could the hon. minister bring the samples down?

Mr. OLIVER. I will find out later on.

Mr. FIELDING. The document to which I have referred is on file and it is a protest against the distribution of literature by shipping companies and also against the Canadian government. I would judge from the discussion that the latter part is not correct, that the literature has been distributed entirely by the shipping companies. Now, my hon. friend says that this is not a contract with a reliable and reputable steamship company. Certainly not. Your reliable and reputable steamship company would not undertake such work ; it is not its business. He says that the contract is made with a syndicate of shipping agents. True, and that is just the class of persons who would be able to do this business, people whose business it is as shipping agents to gather in persons from all parts of the continent who may wish to come. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition referred to the misfortune of the impression having gone abroad that Canada was discriminating in favour of continenal immigration and against immigration from Great Britain. It is a misfortune, but it was not due to anything that has been done by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior or by the government ; it is due to an erroneous statement of the facts cabled over to Europe by some person who had an interest in misrepresenting the policy of this government. It is not due to any act of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, but due to false telegrams which have been sent over to Great Britain by some persons who had an interest in misrepresenting the facts of the case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Could the hon. minister read some of these false telegrams ?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. leader of the opposition did not read them ; why should I ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister said there were false telegrams sent over.

Mr. FIELDING. I say that false telegrams have been sent over to create the impression that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has referred to. It arises out of these erroneous reports of the case which have been sent over. I have no doubt that if I had time I could find them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We would like to see them.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) knows where to find them. He can find them as easily as I can.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have many false reports been cabled over?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the reports cabled over of the discussions which have taken place in this House have failed to convey a correct statement of the situation and that they have created the erroneous impression to which my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have only read the report in one paper, the 'Times,' and I think that is a perfectly truthful summary of the contract.

Mr. FIELDING. Exactly, but if in sending that summary anybody should say that the Canadian government paid £1 per head for a continental immigrant and only a few shillings for a British immigrant, and failed to give the explanation, that would be a false and grossly misleading telegram. What are the facts of the case ? We pay $5, according to the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, to the foreign company for every immigrant upon the condition that the foreign company shall pay all the expenses of the administration of the business. They have to pay for the literature, for printing and advertising, whatever it may be, they have to pay for all the services, but for every immigrant we get from the British islands we pay a great deal more than £1 because we pay the expenses of our officers in Great Britain. We pay the expenses of an energetic propaganda in Great Britain and if you make an analysis of the case it will be found that we are paying for the British immigrant fully as much as we are paying for the foreign immigrant and a great deal more. Therefore, the erroneous impression is due to the imperfect reports of the discussions which took place and to the imperfect statement of the policy of the country. I entirely concur with hon. gentlemen opposite in the view that we should give the preference in our efforts to bring in British immigrants. I am heartily in favour of that and yet if we were to adhere too strictly to that I doubt that we would be able to fill up the Northwest as rapidly as we would desire. For many years in the mother country there was a condition of great prosperity, but just now and for the last two years there has been some depression of trade. Up to about two years ago nearly everybody in England who was industrious had ample employment at good rates, and while that condition of prosperity continued it was not reasonable to expect that you could induce British citizens to hurry away from the motherland and come out to Canada. But, of late, unhappily, there has been some depression of trade in the mother country and when that condition arises there is, of course, a greater number of unemployed and there is a greater disposition on the part of Englishmen, Scotchmen and Irishmen to go abroad. Arising out of that condition we are able to get a larger percentage of British immigrants than we were able to get in previous years. I still think that we ought to put forth our greatest efforts to bring British immigrants to Canada. We want the Northwest, while filling it up with the industrious of all classes, to bear the stamp of the British people, of the British character, from the beginning. We all agree to that, but while agreeing to that and following that policy closely, we must recognize the fact that if we were to limit ourselves to British immigrants we might have difficultiy in getting even a moderate number to come. My earnest advice to the Department of the Interior would be ,while giving preference to the British immigrant, not to fail to take advantage of every reasonable opportunity of bringing in immigrants from the continent of Europe, if they are wisely selected from those portions of Europe where people can be found who are naturally adapted to make prosperous settlers in Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I just answer a question asked by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and say that it is some four or five years ago, I am credibly informed, since the Agricultural Committee was fully informed in regard to the then existing contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company by the then commissioner of immigration ?

Mr. WILSON. Who was the commissioner of immigration ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Pedley, and that there was placed before that committee a large quantity of the samples of literature then being circulated by the trading company.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox.) Mr. Speaker, I have been a pretty constant attendant at the Agricultural Committee and for some years I have taken a good deal of interest in this immigration question, but I have not the faintest recollection of ever having heard of this contract until the latter part of this present session. I just want to say a few words. I regret very much that I have not been in the House to hear the discussion which has taken place. There is one thing I would like the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to explain and it is why he not only pays for adults from Great Britian only $1.75 per head while he pays $5 per head for immigrants from the continent, but why he will pay $5 for every man, woman and child from the continent, while he only pays 87½ cents for children from Great Britain and Ireland. The government not only say that one continental immigrant is worth three Englishmen, or three Irishmen, or three Scotchmen, but they say that one continental child is worth six children from the British islands.

I do not think there was any member of that Agriculture Committee who ever understood until this session, that we were paying $5 per head for these immigrants, and we only learned it this year by accident when we happened to question Mr. Scott, the immigration commissioner, as to why he paid so much for getting immigrants from the continent and so little for getting British immigrants. Now, during the last three years there have left Great Britain and Ireland, 737,000 native born British subjects, and of these we have not got one in six. And yet we are making these extraordinary efforts to get people from continental Europe. If I had the documents here that I have in another place, I could show that many of these immigrants are most undesirable, that they have become a burden on the people of the country, and that the inspector of insane asylums reported in Toronto last winter, that 10 per cent of the occupants of the asylum in Brockville were of the immigrant class. I could also show that in Toronto they have been obliged to turn away from the city immigrants who have been in this country less than six months. This is the class of people we are spending so much money to bring to this country. It should be our effort as far as possible to keep up the moral and physical standard of our people. It is true we have large quantities of vacant land which we would like to have settled, but as Dr. Douglas, a Liberal member of this House said some years ago : He did not see why we should be in such a hurry to give our land away to the paupers of Europe. From what I know of the Minister of the Interior, I believe that if he were at liberty to express his personal opinion on this contract it would be very different from the ministerial statement he has made to-day. Over and over again he has told us in this House that he was glad changes would be made in the immigration policy, because any change must be an improvement on the existing conditions of things. Why is it that we are giving large grants to hospitals in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories when we are giving no similar grants to hospitals in Ontario and the other provinces. Is it not because we are bringing into that country a class of people who have to be taken care of at the public expense, and because we think it is unfair to burden the people out there with their maintenance. I regret that on account of a misunderstanding on this side of the House we are not at liberty to discuss in full the particular details of this contract. I fail to see why any government should allow any minister of the Crown to make a contract for ten years and which contains the provision that four years' notice must be given before it can be cancelled. There is one clause in that contract which I think I shall refer to because I went down to the department, and the minister said I could take whatever notes I thought fit and he went further and stated that if we insisted, as a matter of course, he would lay it on the table of the House. We have not insisted yet, and therefore we cannot discuss it as fully as we like. However, there is one very peculiar clause in that contract under which in giving this $5 a head for Galicians and some others, their number is limited to 5,000. Why is that? If they are undesirable settlers for this country and we are anxious to get them, why do you limit the number to 5,000? I am also told that our immigration agents in the old country are at the same time agents for the steamship companies. That we have known for a long time, but I have learned now that as soon as the immigrant is landed on the vessel these agents are paid $8 a head for every one of them who buys a ticket worth $20. That is a bad principle. I am in full accord with the resolution before the House, which asks that this contract should be at once cancelled because I think we can get all the immigrants we want without paying $5 per head for most of those who come to us from some of the continental European countries.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Mr. Speaker, when you left the chair at six o'clock we were discussing the class of immigrants who were brought into this country, especially in connection with the contract made with the North Atlantic Trading Company. I want to call the minister's attention to one feature of that contract which I think is the very opposite of what it ought to be. It provides that the company shall furnish the government each month with a statement of the number of immigrants who have arrived from those countries, showing the number from each country. It seems to me that the very opposite should be the case—that it should be the duty of the company to show the government the number of immigrants who have been brought into this country through their instrumentality. Instead of that, this company is to receive a pound a head for every immigrant, man, woman or child, that comes from any of these countries, if he happens to belong to the agricultural class, whereas for every man or woman who comes from England the government pays $1.75 a head, and for every child 87½ cents. That is to say a child from continental Europe is considered worth six times as much as a child from any of the British islands. Another reason given by the government why they pay so much to this company is that the company does the advertising for itself, whereas the government advertises in Great Britain and Ireland and the United States. I find in the Montreal 'Star' of July 4 a despatch from the Allan Company referring to the statement made that this company does all its own advertising, as follows:

> To this statement the reply is made by the Allan and other steamship lines that far larger sums than the North Atlantic Trading Company will spend has for many years past been spent in the British empire emigration propaganda without any special immigration bonus.
> Such expenditures are common practice among all European and American steamship and railway concerns, but that in no way can justify the government in the payment of three times as great a bonus on continentals as British settlers.

I think that ought to be satisfactory. We all know that all these companies that are carrying passengers put forth very great efforts to get them. So great are the efforts that I am told by men who know that they are prepared to give to any immigration agent a bonus of $8 a head for every passenger who will pay $20 for a ticket, in addition to whatever bonus they get from the government. Then, we are holding out to these people greater inducements than I believe are held out by any other country at the present time, unless perhaps Australia, which, besides giving land, gives a certain amount towards paying the expenses of the immigrants going to Australia; but our country is so far superior to Australia that the report of our commercial agent in that country shows that, comparing the immigration going into the country with the number leaving it, there is a minority of about three thousand during the past year. Now, I think this is a matter worthy of the consideration of the government, and I am not so anxious to make political capital out of it as I am that we should view it from a national standpoint, so that we shall not be so anxious to get European settlers of such an inferior class that they become a burden on the country when they come here as to offer any inducement, let alone such a large one as we now offer. In the Toronto 'News' of yesterday I find a despatch stating that about 100 Molokans arrived in Winnipeg in a state of destitution. They did not intend to come to Canada, as I understand, but intended to go to the United States, where some of their fellow countrymen are; but they have got as far as Winnipeg and are there now in such a destitute condition that they are becoming very troublesome to the immigration authorities there. It is said by the government that the class of immigrants we are getting is a very desirable class. I dare say some of them are, but I am afraid a very large number are not. In order to prove my statement I shall quote from the reports of some of the associations in this country. I have a report from the Baron de Hirsch Institution and Hebrew Benevolent Society of Montreal, a society which I think cannot be spoken of too highly. They are not only extending a great deal of charity to their fellow countrymen who come to this country, but they are doing it in a business-like way. Besides helping those who are now located and become active settlers in our country, they make provision to educate the children of those people, and they are spending a very large amount of money. The following is taken from the report of the Baron de Hirsch Institute for 1904 :

The flow of immigrants during the past year has been continuous. In the first six months —2,277, and in the past six months—1,690, appearing before your committee for advice or assistance.

The work of handling this large number ; of obtaining employment for them ; of settling them in our city ; of placing them in other parts of Canada ; or of sending them to join their relatives or friends who have already settled in the United States, has devolved upon your committee, with the assistance of the immigration office, supplied by the Jewish Colonization Association of Paris.

Your board here desires to state that were it not for this philanthropic representation of the Baron DeHirsch fund, it would be impossible for this work to be continued here by us in Montreal.

It must also be remembered that the numbers thus given by no means represent all the Jewish immigrants who come to Canada, although to a large extent the new arivals do come under the auspices of your board. It is estimated that of the total number who have been under our supervision, 2,606 settled in Montreal ; 818 went to other parts of Canada ; 553 to various other places, and 10 returned to Europe making a total of 3,967.

It will be seen from the balance sheet attached, that in dealing with this large number of cases your board has expended for

Local cases	$2,652 83
Foreign cases	4,236 35
Transportation	1,485 90
Burials	471 20
	8,846 28

This is the assistance they have given to the grown persons who came under their notice and applied to them for assistance. Here is what they did with reference to education :

During the last school year 446 boys, and 437 girls, a total of 883, were admitted to the day school.

The monthly average attendance for the year was 579·6 and the number in attendance in the school at the closing of the session was 318 boys and 320 girls, a total of 638.

The children are, by birth :

Roumanian	270
Russian	125
Canadian	102
American	62
English	25
Austrian	24
Other nationalities	30
	638

It does look to me as though, if there are any institutions that have gone about doing business in a business like way, it is this one. In educating these children and making them fit to become good citizens, this institution is doing a work we cannot value too highly.

I wish to read a short report from another society in Montreal—the annual report of the Charity Organization Society of Montreal for the year 1904. From page 11, I take the following :

Nevertheless it is wise for us to see that as long as the inspection of our government is much more slack than that of the United States, of necessity many undesirable immigrants are thrown upon us, and no small numbers of these, we regret to say, come upon our charities for support.

This is a matter which has been up in this House before, namely, the conduct of our government with reference to the immigrants rejected on our shores by the American immigration authorities. Last year the Americans rejected almost 3,000 as being unfit to enter their country. They were left here, and we deported, if I remember right, about 359. It is pretty difficult to tell exactly what number we did deport. The other night, when this matter was up, I had four different statements that I presented to the minister and his deputy and the superintendent of immigration, and they could not reconcile them. But I take it for granted that probably 359 were deported out of all we rejected ourselves and these 3,000 which were rejected by the United States on our shores. This is very serious. It is all important we should be very careful as to the kind of immigrants we allow to land on our shores and become citizens of our country. We have a good country and I think a good class of citizens, and I hope we will be able to keep our good name and the good quality of our people.

In Toronto, a very large meeting was held last winter of all the associations to discuss what should be done with the undesirable class of immigrants who came here and became a burden upon the people. At that meeting all the charitable societies were represented. I take this report of the proceedings from the 'Mail and Empire' of February 1, 1905 :

Associated Charities urge stricter supervision. Meeting largely attended.

Nearly all the Toronto charitable organizations were represented at the meeting, including the Toronto Relief Association, the Frances Willard Home, the Fraternal Societies' Association, the House of Industry, the Jewish Benevolent Society, the Toronto City Mission, the Bible Women's Toronto Mission Union, the St. Vincent de Paul Society, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and the Church of England Deaconess' Home.

This meeting was presided over by a clergyman who informed the audience what they were called together for. The following resolution was passed unanimously :

Moved by Mr. Goldwin Smith :

That in view of the fact that undesirable immigrants are entering Canada, this meeting most earnestly desires to urge upon the attention of the Dominion government the importance of the strictest examination of all immigrants coming to Canada, and the rejection of all such as would tend to lower the moral and physical well-being of our Dominion ; and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the government, with a statement of the facts which have been brought before this meeting.

This is a matter well worthy the attention of the government. What attention the government gave it I do not know. There were a good many statements made at that meeting, some of which I shall give you.

Twelve shillings to the master of a workhouse in England for every immigrant he would have sent to Canada.

This is a pretty poor place for us to get immigrants.

Reverend Father Minehan, of St. Peter's church, instanced a case where the master of a workhouse in England received twelve shillings for every inmate he succeeded in having sent to Canada. Such immigrants as these usually become habitués of our police courts. There was, he believed, no reason why England should not look after her own indigents and ne'er-do-wells.

Mrs. Cummings, representing the National Council of Women, also protested against the misleading information given in England in regard to high wages in Canada. Girls were promised $20 per month as domestic servants, and were naturally disappointed and dissatisfied to find wages decidedly less when they arrived here.

I do not know who the agents were that made these representations or who the government agent was that went to the workhouse superintendent and induced him to send out inmates from that institution at a bonus of twelve shillings per head. These are matters which should be investigated by the government. I think that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) should pay strict attention to this. I remember how very pronounced he was in his views on this question when he was not a minister, and I can give some quotations from speeches he made in this House at that time. At the meeting to which I have referred, the Reverend Canon Welch was also present, and spoke as follows :

Reverend Canon Welch protested against the misrepresentations of the steamship companies' agents in Great Britain, who induced too many clerks and city men to come to Canada, expecting high wages here, and no difficulty at all in getting good positions in stores or factories. That afternoon an English immigrant who had applied to him for aid, had told him of receiving a circular in England promising $40 per month wages on farms in Canada at all seasons of the year.

Now, of course, I cannot tell who sends these circulars out. I suppose the government cannot tell. But I think it would be worth the government's while to make an investigation of these complaints with a view to preventing the making of false representations to the people, thereby bringing them to this country, disappointing them, and leaving them dissatisfied so that they wish to go back to their own country and give us a bad name. Here is another extract I have :

Poor immigrants—A tax on Toronto.

That the city has gone as far as it should go in extending charity to helpless immigrants is the opinion of Dr. Sheard, Medical Health Officer.

During the last three months applications of one kind or another have been made for admission to the city hospitals from immigrants who have been in the country only two or three months. Most of them are Englishmen, and some of them are very ill. Apart from the sick we are also receiving numerous applications daily from individuals who appear to be nothing more than tramps, with a cough or cold or other chest trouble. Five or six presented themselves yesterday, were refused admission, and were referred to the house of industry.

Now, I would ask the minister how these people get into this country—these people, who, after they have been here two or three months, are paupers and so ill that they must seek admission to a hospital. We are supposed to have a rigid inspection of immigrants at the port of landing. But the facts prove that the inspection is not effective, that many immigrants come in who, within a few months become charges on our cities, especially the cities of Montreal and Toronto. If the minister wishes to answer now, I will give him an opportunity to do so.

Mr. OLIVER. I am willing to answer if the hon. member (Mr. Uriah Wilson) wishes me to do so. I can only give him the answer which must suggest itself to his own mind. People coming to a new country and living under new conditions are more liable to illness than are people who are more acclimatized in that country and accustomed to those conditions. Therefore even though none but perfectly healthy immigrants be admitted at our ports, there is greater liability to illness amongst them than amongst those whose home is here. But, besides that, as I said the other night, I am satisfied that a great many of the people who are complained against, especially those in the cities, are not immigrants who have come to our ports or been dealt with by our agencies. They are essentially city people, who will go to cities, no matter what port they come to. And, as many of the people who are coming to our ports go to the United States, we have reason to believe that many of the people who come through United States ports come to our cities.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. These people pass for immigrants, and apparently, have recently arrived. And they tell the officers that they have recently arrived. Of course, I do not accuse the minister of making a misstatement, but I doubt if he himself is in possession of the facts. The examination of immigrants at our own ports is not sufficient. The examination that should be insisted upon is the examination at the port of embarkation. We are told that the steamship companies have no interest in bringing over only people who cannot pass the inspection here, because they do not want to bring people to this country and then take them back. But the steamship companies are so anxious for business that I believe that they are willing to bring them here and take their chances of passing them through when they land on this side. But if these immigrants were inspected before they were allowed to embark, we would save ourselves and them some trouble and it would not be necessary to support these people as paupers when they arrive on our shore. This account from which I have quoted goes on :

Dr. Sheard gave as an instance the case of one applicant who had been in the city five months, and for three months of that time had been in the General Hospital. He says he does not give an order for admission to a consumptive sanitarium unless the applicant has been in the city at least one year. The City Relief Officer fully agreed with what Dr. Sheard had said, adding that a very large number of persons arriving from the old country were both ill and penniless.

Dr. Sheard is an officer of the city of Toronto, and ought to know something about this matter. Another authority is quoted in this article :

Mr. Thomas Southworth, of the Ontario Colonization Immigration Bureau, says that most of the Londoners who come to Toronto are of a very worthless type, and that many of the undesirables are sent out by persons interested in ridding themselves of them. He said it was the opinion of immigration experts that the inspection point will have to be at the place of embarkation and not of debarkation.

Now, this is the statement of the official of the Ontario government whose business it is to investigate these things ; and he shows, I think, very conclusively, that there are a large number of these people who are not desirable immigrants and never will be. Then, we have the statement made by Dr. Bruce Smith, provincial inspector of asylums, who says that 60 patients out of 600 in the Brockville insane asylum have been traced to the immigrant class. I think that is a pretty strong case against the class of immigrants we are getting in this country. It seems to me that it is up to the minister to insist that his officers shall be much more particular in their inspection. I see that my friend, Mr. Preston, the chief immigration agent in the old country also has had something to say recently. By the way, this officer has had his wings clipped. Mr. Preston, used to have full charge of immigration in Great Britain and on the continent of Europe and reported direct to the department here. Now, I understand, he has to be guided by Lord Strathcona and to report to him. I do not know the reason for this change, but whatever it may be, I think the House is entitled to know it. Mr. Preston, it seems, is in favour of buying large tracts of land in Ontario, dividing them up into fifty-acre farms and getting European settlers to take them. He made a speech in London which is reoprted in the Montreal ' Star ' of March 25th in which he said :

The all-British cry is nonsense and must be abandoned. The continental farmers, whether Slav or Germanic, are among the best in the world.

I should favour the purchase of great tracts of land in Ontario. These I would divide into farms of fifty acres each, and would settle a continental family on each farm. In a few years the country would be absolutely free of weeds and in an ideal state of cultivation.

Mr. Preston, so far as I have information, has always been in favour of giving aid to immigrants coming to this country. He advocated at one time the government paying their fares, bringing out people who could not pay their own fares. He has been from time to time in favour of giving one kind of assistance and another. So far as I am concerned and I have always taken the same stand, I am opposed to bonuses of any kind on immigrants. I felt if a man has come to the years of manhood and has not made money enough to pay his way to this country or has not established a character good enough to have a friend advance the money nine times out of ten he will not be a desirable immigrant and consequently I am entirely opposed to any such system as is indicated by Mr. Preston or any other by which we will give a bonus on immigrants coming to this country. I think I am backed in that by the present Minister of the Interior who is reported in ' Hansard ' of 1899, at page 8523, as saying :

Now, it would be a very simple matter to overcome any particular settlement in the Northwest by a foreign population. Every settlement in that country stands in danger from that influx of population, if it is not checked. The whole of the Northwest Territories stands in danger.

Then at page 8524 he said :

It is said that those people settle where other people will not, but in my part of the country they settle where other people have settled, and where other people would settle in larger numbers, were it not for these Galicians. In fact, where these Galicians have settled, some of the others have moved away.

An hon. MEMBER. Why ?

Mr. OLIVER. Because they are not desirable neighbours.

In 1901 he made another speech which is reported at page 2937 of 'Hansard.' He said :

In regard to the Doukhobors, I wish to say, speaking of course without having such an intimate knowledge of them, but speaking on the general principle, that any people who are too good to conform to the laws of this country are too good to live in this country, and we do not want them at any price.

And at page 2939 he said :

There is no question that the people of the west feel more strongly on than this immigration question, and there is nothing that they more earnestly resent than the idea of settling up the country with people who will be a drag on our civilization and progress. We did not go out to that country simply to produce wheat. We went to build up a nation, a civilization, a social system that we could enjoy, be proud of, and transmit to our children. And we resent the idea of having the millstone of this Slav population hung around our necks.

The other night when the Solicitor General was speaking he told us that only 47 per cent of the people in those two new provinces are British and I do not wonder that the new minister, then the hon. member, was very much dissatisfied with the steps being put forth to bring this class of people to this country. I wonder if he, as Minister of the Interior, will continue to make this effort to bring this most undesirable class of people to this country or if he has in the meantime changed his opinions and thinks that these people have become desirable simply because they returned him to parliament by acclamation.

In 1902 the present minister made the following statement, at page 3739 of 'Hansard.'

Our social system, our political system, our religious system are those which we have inherited and under which we are trying to improve ourselves. Then if it is worth while to organize all these systems for the purpose of improving ourselves in this country, it is surely worth while to take means that our efforts shall not be to a certain extent rendered useless by the introduction of an element into our population which will have a contrary effect.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who said that ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The present Minister of the Interior. I wonder if this is still his opinion. My own impression is that it is, because I think I know him pretty well, although I do not expect him to get up and express that opinion in the House.

He said further :

If you will fill those prairies with people of different ideas, different aspirations and different views from our own, you are simply placing yourselves under a yoke; you are swerving your country from that destiny which your fathers intended it, and which you fondly hoped you were achieving.

I say that every undesirable settler who enters the Northwest, who is, we will say, inferior to ourselves in his knowledge of government, in his ideas of liberty, is a detriment to this country.

I am sorry to say that as directed to the British Islands, to the mother country, or to the mother countries if you like, it has been a pronounced success. I think I am safe in saying that up to date it has been a dismal failure.

He told me the other night when I was speaking on this question, because I particularly asked him what changes had taken place, and he said that so far as he knew that that same system is going on now that was going on then, and it is as big a failure I presume in his estimation tonight as when he made this statement, and we are looking forward to the time when this hon. gentleman during the recess will alter this system, change the course of things and turn matters into a channel which he favoured at that particular time, because I think it is most desirable we should put forth a good deal greater effort to get more than one in six or seven native-born British citizens who leave their own country to come here instead of going to other parts of the world. I have a good deal of faith that he will make an effort at least to secure a larger percentage of British rather than continental immigrants if his colleagues do not sit on him too heavily. He went on to say :

I am given to understand that a new system is being adopted in regard to immigration from the British Isles. I am not familiar with the details of that system, but I will say that there is no possibility of adopting any system which could be less effective than that which has prevailed during the past years. I am satisfied that any system that is adopted will be an improvement.

These were the sentiments of my hon. friend the minister away back in 1902.

Mr. LANCASTER. There was no autonomy then.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. minister is all right in reference to immigration. I believe his heart is in that country and that he desires to make that great Northwest what it ought to be. Therefore, I am looking forward in the next two or three years to a decided change in the policy of the Immigration Department and an improvement in the class of immigrants who are allowed into this country. But, I will give you still another quotation. You will find this in 'Hansard' of 1902, page 3741 :

Let me say further that it appears to me to have been a mistake in the past to have spent so much money as we have in paying bonuses to steamship companies for the conveyance of immigrants, and for this reason: we made the steamship companies by this means our immigration agencies, and it did not make any difference to the steamship companies what the character of the immigrant was, who he was, or where he was from, so long as they got the bonus. It seems to me, from my point of view, that this is a most undesirable system, and a most undesirable ex-expenditure, and I would ask that it be not continued.

At that time we were spending on immigration, $494,841.55. What do you suppose we were spending last year on immigration? —no less than $972,426. My hon. friend has come into the government at the right time, I hope, to put a stop to this. If these were his sentiments when we were spending about half the money we are now spending it is time he came in, it is time he took action and it is time we saw some result, and we certainly will look forward to the next session of the House for quite a reversal in the expenditure and for an improvement in the character of the immigrants who are landed under his direction. I have not got quite through yet. I want to give my hon. friend the full benefit of what he said in so far as I have it because I want to stir up his pure mind by way of remembrance. I am very anxious on this matter and while I regret the very large expenditure of money, I do not regret that half as much as I regret the class of people we are getting. We can replace the money but if we have a degenerated race dragging us down instead of lifting us up we cannot repair the damage. If you will look at page 6562 of 'Hansard' 1903, you will find that the hon. minister said :

Since I have had the privilege of being a member of this House, I have taken the view that indiscriminate immigration was anything but a desirable policy for this country, and that selected immigration was by all means the policy we should follow.

Then at page 6563, he said :

There is no need for depending on the less desirable class of immigration, when we can certainly get the more desirable class. It cannot be any longer a question as between immigration of an undesirable class and no immigration.

We are, therefore, not dependent on picking up settlers wherever we can. We are getting settlers of a most desirable character, and every undesirable settler tends to keep out a desirable one.

Then at page 6565 he said :

Let me inform the House that there are already in the Northwest some very serious social and political questions arising from this indiscriminate immigration, which, if they continue to increase will do this country, in the west and in the east incalculable harm.

And at page 6566, he said:

And we stand at the mercy of these people in their thousands—in their hundreds of thousands, and in their millions, at no distant day.

I think that is a very strong admission that up to two years ago at least we were getting in a very undesirable class of immigration because at that time the hon. Minister of the Interior was pleading that this policy be put a stop to and that we should be more particular in seeing that the immigrants who are allowed to enter into this country are of a class who would make good settlers and a class that we would be prepared to live amongst ourselves. We do not want to get a lot of people into any part of the country that we would be ashamed of, or that we do not want to neighbour with. We are all made of the same clay, but there are the differences of habit, early training and the associations of generations and I think the time has come when we should put an end to this kind of indiscriminate immigration and when a very strong effort should be made to get native born Britishers into this country instead of foreigners who are strangers to our language, to our political and social usages and to our religious system. We want as far as possible to have men of our own race, men who, we believe, will help us to make of this a great nation and fulfil the destinies that providence has in store for us.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior if he can give us, or if he has not them with him, if he could bring them down before we concur in the items, the figures of immigration into this country from the geographical zone which is set off under that contract, the number of immigrants that have been brought in from that zone for the last three years and also if he will give us the figures as to the number of heads upon which the £1 per capita has been paid.

Mr. OLIVER. I have exhausted my rights in regard to this question, but as there have been some pointed statements in regard to the subject of the motion, if I may be permitted, I do not wish to make a speech, but merely to read from the records certain facts in regard to the matter. Speaking for myself, if I may be permitted this opportunity, I will say that everything apparently comes to him who waits and that having been alone in this House for many years in advocating a certain class of immigration it is certainly with pride and pleasure that I find that at last I have the support of the opposition in this House with reference to these views.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will you carry them out now that you have a chance?

Mr. OLIVER. The point I wanted to draw attention to was as to the knowledge of the existence of this arrangement against which this motion is made. I find that before the Agriculture Committee in the year 1900, evidence was taken regarding immigration and the following was given by Mr. Smart in answer to a question by Dr. Sproule :

We have since then made an arrangement with the Transatlantic steamship companies to undertake the work generally. We have hopes that even in Germany they will be able to do some work which the government cannot do.

By this arrangement we give a bonus to them on settlers coming from certain countries; the conditions being if a man is an agriculturist and possessed of $100 in addition to his transportation.

There is a misprint here, and the word 'Trans' is printed instead of 'North'; otherwise there is a direct statement as to the existence of an agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company, and the hon. member said he had never heard of such a company before.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a steamship company you mentioned?

Mr. OLIVER. It says the 'Transatlantic Steamship Company,' but every one knows there is no Transatlantic Steamship Company. That is a misprint. There is no doubt that an idea was conveyed to the members of the Agriculture Committee at that time in regard to an agreement between the government and a certain company exactly in line with the agreement against which the motion is being made to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. The distinct impression left on the committee was that this was a steamship company and that, having ships and other facilities at their disposal, it was believed they could more effectually take charge of immigration than could agents.

Mr. OLIVER. That makes no difference to the point at issue. The question was as regards the nature of the agreement as between this government and that company, and the reason for having an agreement of that nature.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the conditions the same in this and in that?

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions are stated in answer to Dr. Sproule:

We have hopes that even in Germany they will be able to do some work which the government cannot do.

At the conclusion of that answer Mr. Wilson spoke, so that he was present then. In regard to the statement of the leader of the opposition that he had never heard of this bonus of $5 per head, I find it stated in the report—this is not, of course any reflection on the memory of the hon. gentleman but it is a reflection on his knowledge of the transactions of the committees of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the first place, I did not say that.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I understood him to say so. I find the following in the report:

Mr. Wilson. You did not say what the bonus is for Galicians and Doukhobors?
A. $5 per head.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I understood there was a steamship company of that name, but now it is a trading company and not a steamship company. I would like to ask if they were paying $5 per head at that time on every man, woman and child of the agricultural classes?

Mr. FOSTER. A man with $100.

Mr. OLIVER. Let me deal with this point first, and I will deal with the other later. As to a knowledge of the literature that was distributed by this company, I find in the report of the proceedings of the Agricultural Committee of 1902, page 350, under the heading 'Emigration Propaganda in Great Britain and on the continent':

On the continent, literature has been distributed in the shape of little leaflets in many foreign languages. These are distributed by the hundred thousand throughout the continent. In this statement I have made a summary of the year's work, and in doing so I have as I stated last year dealt generally with the work because as we progress from day to day members of the committee ask for information in detail, and I cannot very well anticipate that but I simply generalize to the committee, and if anything further is required that can be supplied in answer to the questions put by the various members of the committee.

Again, on page 297, in answer to a question by the chairman:

Of course we give a bonus of a pound a head.

Again, on page 298:

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). They would be looking for treason, I suppose?
A. Yes, certainly, and these packages would be thrown into the waste paper basket. As far as the German government is concerned it is determined that no one shall undertake any active work in that country to induce Germans to leave there. This is one of the pamphlets and of these 500,000 were sent out last year and fully 450,000 reached their destination.

Mr. BARR. By whom were they sent out?

Mr. OLIVER. They were sent out by the North Atlantic Trading Company. On page 16, in the second edition of the report of the Department of the Interior, 1900, there is a report from Mr. W. T. R. Preston, inspector of agencies in Europe, to the Rt. Hon. Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a trading company or a steamship company?

Mr. OLIVER. It is a steamship agency company.

Mr. FOSTER. They say it is a steamship company.

Mr. OLIVER. I read the follwing extract from the report of Mr. Preston to the High Commissioner:

That the policy of a general distribution of the continental bonus had failed to meet the expectations that were freely indulged in upon the inauguration of the policy is almost evident through the comparatively small number of foreign emigrants from Europe during so many years, when the department was apparently putting forth strenuous efforts with the object in view. It is true that during the past three years the number has considerably increased, but they have been very largely from a certain section in relation to which your lordship effected a special agreement, and by which it was confidently expected at the time that favourable results would ensue, it still left the practical results of the bonus policy in operation since 1882 an unknown quantity.

Taking all these phases of the European question into consideration, the conviction was strengthened in my mind that the bonus system, to be effective, should be in a form and under a policy by which self-interest would prompt the utmost unanimity and cordiality among those likely to participate in its receipt, not to say anything about the undesirability of parties receiving Canadian money, who were either personally unfriendly or indifferent to Canadian interests. By the adoption of the policy which I had the honour of recommending to your lordship, I think the influence of the unfriendly and the indifferent will be minimized—they will, at least, not be able to exert an influence under the guise of Canadian agents. The changes suggested were subjects of earnest negotiation and many conferences between your lordship and the Department of the Interior, and the persons with whom the arrangement was finally completed on the continent. One result of the new policy is that at this date advertisements are appearing in nearly one hundred European newspapers regarding the advantages offered by Canada to intending emigrants. In at least eighty per cent of the localities where the newspapers are circulating, no newspaper publication about Canada had previously appeared. This, I am told, is only the beginning of what will be carried out on a larger scale. With the cordial cooperation which I have every reason to believe will continue between London, Ottawa and the syndicate with which the new arrangement has been effected, I am hopeful a policy which finally received the approval of your lordship and the Minister of the Interior will have an important bearing on the diversion of a considerable portion of the restless stream of foreign emigrants, which so far as gone largely to the United States, towards the fertile lands of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

Therefore the facts have been before the country officially all these years, and the terms of the contract, as everybody knows, could have been on the table of this House ever since the beginning of this session, on motion to that effect. In answer to an individual request, it was not in my judgment such a document as should be placed upon the table; but on a formal order of the House there would have been no alternative, but that order had to be obtained on the responsibility of some one making a motion. If it is not there, it is not the fault of the government, nor is it due to any desire on the part of the government to withhold any information on the subject.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this question. I remember very distinctly the question being put to the gentlemen who were before us, and I remember the impression that was left on the committee, that the government were then paying $5 a head, but for agriculturists only, and each agriculturist was to have $100 in cash. An immigrant who was an agriculturist to begin with, and who could bring $100 of cash with him, gave evidence of his industry, his economy, his energy and his worth to the country. Therefore the committee regarded it as not an exorbitant figure to pay for that class of immigrants. Is that the class of immigrants who are coming to-day, and for whom $5 a head is being paid? Are young children or infants in arms bringing $100 a head? There is no comparison between the two classes of immigrants. If we could get good agriculturists who could bring $100 a head with them, by paying $5 a head to assist in bringing them here, Canada would be well satisfied, and there would be no complaint whatever. My understanding of the contract at that time was distinctly that it was with a steamship company; and if the report is looked over carefully, I think it will be found that it was said that the competition for immigrants was so great that unless we secured the assistance of the steamship companies, we could not get our share. It was for that reason that Mr. Preston advocated employing the steamship companies to work in our favour. Another feature referred to by the minister was that we were not allowed to distribute immigration literature in those countries, while these companies had their own means of doing it. Reference was made to that in a suceeding year, when we were told how much they distributed and how their success was largely due to their method of carrying on the work. Now, we find that this is simply a booking company. The question is, is this contract a provident one? I am quite sure that no one who gives any attention to the class of immigrants we have been getting in the last few years will say that it is a provident contract. Why do I make that statement? Because a large percentage of them drift into our hospitals and almshouses and become charges on the generosity of the people as soon as they reach Canada. As the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson) showed, we allowed to come into Canada 3,000 immigrants who were refused admission to the United States on acount of being diseased, and out of these only sent away a little over 300—one out of every 10. Is it any wonder that our hospitals in Montreal are filled, and our charities are taxed to the utmost, that employment cannot be found for those who are here, and that hundreds of them sometimes exist on the charity of the people? Not at all. The hon. gentleman said he fought this matter for years, but did not get the help of the opposition. The hon. gentleman must have a bad memory, for he will find, that when he made that speech attacking the immigration system, I supported him and condemned the policy. I said that the question was not how rapidly you could settle up the country or how many people you could get into it, but how to keep those who are there under favourable conditions of civilized life. Several times since I have attacked the system and have drawn attention to the fact that many diseased immigrants were being allowed to come into the country. Trachoma was very prevalent in the country, brought in through these diseased immigrants. It was reported from Montreal, from Toronto, from the eastern townships, and from other parts of the country. I drew attention to these facts, and time after time spoke against the system. The government always declared that they were exercising very stringent supervision over the immigrants who were coming in, that these immigrants were obliged to undergo a careful inspection and examination, but notwithstanding that, they were coming in in large numbers, and were obliged to submit to the treatment as soon as they arrived in the country. Was it true that they were subject to careful inspection?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Who says yes? It would not be any medical man for he would know better. Now, the great boast is the number of immigrants coming into the country. I remember distinctly that the last year the Conservative government were in power they spent nearly $120,000 on immigration, and they were attacked most viciously because of their extravagant expenditure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They had no results.

Mr. SPROULE. They had very much better results than we have to-day. Last year we paid within a fraction of $100,000 in bonuses in assisting these people to come here, and in addition nearly $900,000 to pay the other expenses. We are expending this year nearly a million dollars on immigration, and look at the class of immigrants we are bringing in, a large percentage are fit only to go to our poor-houses, asylums or hospitals. Look at the hundred Molokans stranded in Winnipeg to-day. They cannot get any employment and are living on charity. How did they get into the country if our immigration system is so stringent? How did it happen that we had a thousand Russian Jews stranded in Montreal winter before last, who were fed by charity? We were led to believe that only agriculturists, agricultural labourers and domestic servants were to be brought in.

I went up to Toronto a few weeks ago and on the train there were several of these immigrants. I asked them if they belonged to the agricultural class, and they said they did not. They were making for North York where they were told they would get work among the farmers. I asked them if they had ever worked on the farm and they said no, that up to the time they had left London they had never even seen a farm. What were you doing in London, I asked? Oh, any odd chores we could get; we were out of work nearly all the time. Did you ever drive horses, I inquired, or harness horses? No, they knew nothing at all about farm work. Yet these evidently were the good agricultural labourers which this government promised our farmers they were bringing out here; but they were certainly not of the class at all suitable for agricultural work. If they did not get work in Toronto, they would drift on to Winnipeg. What use would these people be out on the prairie? Our immigration policy has been for years a most unwise one. I have carefully followed the reports in the newspapers from year to year concerning the class of immigrants that have come to this country; and as far as I could see, the government have been acting as though it did not matter what kind of people were brought out to our Northwest Territories. They might be Galicians or Doukhobors or Russian Jews or Poles or any other nationality in the world. Evidently all that the government appeared to seek was to have a large number come out entirely regardless of their quality and their suitability for this country. I have always thought it much more important that we should keep our good lands for the settlement of good immigrants. The government would not pay a man from Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick $5 to settle in the Northwest, but it would pay $5 a head to bring people out from northern Europe who know nothing about the conditions of our country. And the agents might pick up twenty or thirty children and add them to the party,—children taken out of the poor-house,—and get paid for them at the rate of $5 a head. Under that contract, that could be done and no one would be the wiser; and then we would hear the usual boasting about the large number of people who are coming into the country. The policy of the government is undoubtedly a bad one, and the sooner it is put a stop to the better. Money has been voted year after year, the greater part of which has been absolutely wasted. The commissioner we have on the other side, notwithstanding all we have been told about his ability, is not the best man for the place. There are many rumours about Mr. W. T. R. Preston which I shall not mention because rumours are not to be depended on, but they are not to his credit. When it was announced to-night that Mr. Preston would in the future do his work through the High Commissioner, I considered that a very wise and proper step to take. From what we know of the man, he is not one I would like to trust. The contract in question is most improvident and unwise. The syndicate can take the bookings of the people going out from the northern continent of Europe or any other part and get paid the bonus per head on them. I remember in Ontario there were agents paid for taking people to Manitoba. What did they do? They would go around among the families who were known to be going to the west and invite them to join their party, and a commission was paid on these additions to their party. That was brought up in the House and ultimately put a stop to. We have the same thing being done in Europe only on a much larger scale. While some of these people may be desirable, a large percentage from northern Europe and the continent are not desirable settlers at all for Canada to-day.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey.) In a great deal of what the hon. gentleman has said I quite agree. To import immigrants who are in a poor state of health and likely to become inmates of hospitals, is certainly not a good thing for the country. But I do not think we should object to bring out immigrants simply because they have neither money nor experience. In my own town of Hanover, I have known many instances of Germans brought out by the assistance of their friends——

Mr. SPROULE. No one ever objected to Germans. They are all right.

Mr. MILLER. They landed in this country without money except what enabled them to get to their destination, and that was contributed by their friends. But it was astonishing how quickly they adapted themselves to the ways of the country. They learn our language quickly and it is wonderful how soon a German immigrant without a cent in his pocket, will suit himself to his surroundings. He will work in a factory, or at any other work obtainable and in an incredibly short time will be the owner of his own home and be found cultivating his own little vegetable garden. The Germans are among the best farmers we have and they are among our most enterprising manufacturers. We have towns in Waterloo county and in my own county of Grey almost made up of German people. Nearly all of our large furniture manufacturing concerns in Canada are owned by German Canadians. Again I would point out that there is in this country a great dearth of farm labourers. The scarcity is bound to become more hardly felt as a great many people will be required on the railway work about to be begun in the Northwest. Within the last few weeks I was visiting a friend in the county of Leeds, near the town of Brockville. He is a farmer well able and willing to pay for properly skilled farm help. A few weeks ago he had in his employ for some weeks a man who had recently escaped from the lunatic asylum in Brockville—certainly not a desirable person to have working about one's place. But he took this man because it was utterly impossible to obtain any other help. That hand having gone away, he engaged a man who had recently deserted his ship in the port of Montreal—a sailor who knew nothing about farming; but my friend took him and was glad to get him because he could get no other help. It seems to me that if we bring into this country from the British Isles or Germany or perhaps some other parts of Europe as well, men who are in good health and have good characters and are willing to adapt themselves to the ways of the country and learn how to do the work, we will not be doing a bad thing for the country and particularly for our farmers who are hardly in need of agricultural labourers. I quite agree that there are perhaps some countries in Europe from which it is not desirable to bring immigration.

But I do think that the more German people you can bring into this country the better it will be for us. As to the Doukhobors and Galicians I know that many people in Canada are prejudiced against these classes. But I have talked to Rev. Dr. MacDougall of the Northwest, who has had, perhaps, as great an acquaintance with these people as most Canadians, and he spoke very favourably of both Doukhobors and Galicians as men who would make good Canadian citizens.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). Jibes have been thrown across the floor of the House at the names, and because of the admission into Canada of Buckovinians and Galicians. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) this evening has made allusion to the number of immigrants coming from certain portions of Europe and to their undesirable qualities. Also he made a few observations about the laxity of the inspection by Canadian government officials. I do not know the character of the inspection made in the port of Montreal. These immigrants from these countries generally come by the port of Montreal or the port of Halifax. Now, I do know of the extreme rigour of the inspection made at the port of Halifax, and I also do know of the condition of the people who arrive on the steamers of the Hamburg-American line at that port. I shall not make any observations of my own; but I took the opportunity of writing to the company to know about the condition of these people who arrive and also of the precautions taken to have them delivered in this country in the very best condition, and to reject those who were subject to disease. Here are the letters I received:

Hamburg, January 7, 1904.

William Roche, Esq.,
Roche's Wharf, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Dear Sir,—We duly received your favour of the 23rd ultimo, contents of which had our careful attention.

As regards the medical examination of immigrants over our line, we beg to state that we feel convinced there is no line in any country that could be more careful and more scrupulous in this respect than we are. Our passengers undergo such examination firstly in our controlling stations on the German frontier, then again at Ruhleben (a place near Berlin, where we have also erected a controlling station), and for the third time at Hamburg, shortly before the ship's departure. All doctors concerned in the examination of our passengers at these different places, have our strictest orders to detain every passenger who is not absolutely sound or does not comply with the requirements of the American and Canadian immigration laws. If passengers of ours, nevertheless, arrive on the other side with some disease, there is no other explanation for such an occurrence than that some have contracted the disease during the voyage on board the ship.

We can assure you that on our part, and on the part of all our employees, all possible endeavours are made to avoid such occurrences as are mentioned by you. Nevertheless we would always appreciate it, if you would never fail to report to us the result of the medical examination at yours. As general remarks like those contained in your favour of the 23rd ultimo do not give us any material for further investigations into the matter, we would ask you, however, to let us know in all similar cases full particulars of passengers' names, kind of disease, &c., that we may be in a position to go fully into the matter, and to enable us to find out whether, and if so, by whose fault, anything has been neglected here.

We remain, dear sir,
Yours truly,

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE,

(Sgd.) AD. STORM.

Hamburg, April 6, 1904.

William Roche, Esq.,
Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Dear Sir,—We duly received your favour of the 21st ultimo, and are greatly surprised at the exceedingly high number of passengers of the SS. 'Barcelona' detained at yours on account of trachoma. We altogether fail to understand this event, as, in fact, we do all in our power to exclude passengers suffering from said disease from transportation. For this purpose, all foreign immigrants have to undergo a most careful medical examination at the German frontier, and then again in Hamburg every one of our passengers is examined before embarking. The physicians have strict orders especially to have a watchful eye upon trachoma, and you may be assured that no one whose eyes are found to be not in order, obtains transportation. Consequently, we consider it to be entirely out of question that as many as fifty-eight passengers of one single steamer should have had trachoma, and we would ask you to try your very best with the authorities that in future we shall be protected against similar measures on the part of the medical inspector.

Kindly let us know the result of your endeavours, and oblige, dear sir,

Yours truly,

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE,
Abtheilung Personenverkehr.
(Sgd.) AD. STORM.

That shows that there is no laxity on the part of the inspectors at the port of Halifax.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I intend to speak for only a few minutes, but it is necessary that I should reply to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), who has endeavoured to convince this House that the opposition were notified some years ago of the contents of the agreement which has been referred to, as the purport of that agreement appeared in the committee's report; and he took the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to task because he was ignorant of what was in that report. I propose to read a few extracts, and the hon. gentleman will be seen to have certainly misrepresented the contract in his speech, if he was referring to the same contract. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) if there is more than one contract?

Mr. OLIVER. There is that with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. BARKER. Is there another?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no doubt there may be others.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) was taking the leader of the opposition to task for not knowing the contents of this report. Does he not know what contracts there are?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what information the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) wants. There are certainly other contracts on earth; there are other contracts between the department and other people than the North Atlantic Trading Company. But there is no other contract of the department in regard to immigration from the countries mentioned other than that with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. BARKER. I will read a few extracts. Mr. Smart, who was then deputy minister, was being examined in 1900.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the same year.

Mr. BARKER. He was examined by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and he gave this reply:

The only restriction, therefore, that the department has placed on the individual settler (European) is that he be possessed of not less than $100 in cash, besides his transportation to Canada and, that he has followed agriculture as an occupation in the past. That is the arrangement under which we pay bonuses now in Europe.

Is there a word of that kind in the contract? Yet, the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) said that the leader of the opposition and hon. gentlemen on this side ought to have known what was in the contract.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Barker's) pardon; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) certainly conveyed that impression to the House. Examining Mr. Smart, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked:

Q. That would not apply to Doukhobors or Galicians ?
A. This is a new arrangement only recently made.

Evidently referring to this contract.

We had done away with the agent bonus system, that is giving bonuses to steamship agents. We found that they practically did little or no work ; that if a man wanted to come to Canada they sold the ticket to him, but they put forward no effort to induce him to come. We have since made an arrangement——

Now, will the hon. minister listen to this:

—with the Transcontinental Steamship Company who undertake the work generally. We have hopes that even in Germany they will be able to do some work which the government cannot do. By this arrangement we give a bonus to them on settlers coming from certain countries, the conditions being that a man is an agriculturist and possessed of $100 in addition to his transportation.

That was a misrepresentation of the contract, not the representation of the contract. I shall give the hon. gentleman a word or two more. This is by Dr. Sproule again ; he seems to be after the department pretty sharply. Referring to some letters, the question was :

I think these are the Doukhobors the letters refer to.

And the answer of Mr. Smart was :

Well, they——

That is the Doukhobors.

Well, they are in colonies of probably 2,000 each. Of course we have given strict instructions in regard to the matter and the arrangement with the steamship corporation.

This syndicate of agents is a steamship corporation, according to the department.

That they are not to encourage in any way the immigration of any but the class we have named and so far as we know they are adhering to that.

It did not end with that. Mr. Pedley was called by the committee, and was examined by Dr. Sproule as follows :

Mr. SPROULE. The steamship companies——

—following up the lines that Mr. Smart had brought forward—

—are they not paid?

And here is the answer of Mr. Pedley on behalf of the department :

Their agents of course are paid the bonus. We do not pay it to our agents, we do not pay it to the immigration agents but to the steamship companies.

Is that not emphatic and clear ?

That information obtained at the point of starting is supplemented by information obtained at the point of destination. These immigrants arriving in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories are subjected to an examination by our officials there. They are followed, they are kept track of, until, in the opinion of the department, the bonus is earned.

Now, if the hon. gentleman intended to convey to this House the idea that under that examination there was the slightest information given of the contents of the agreement we have been referring to, I do not understand the English language. There is hardly a term of the agreement which is not the very opposite of what is stated in that examination.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask the minister whether he will take steps before the prorogation of this session to have that contract, which has been entered into for ten years, laid before parliament and get its approval of the same ? The Prime Minister has stated it is not legal in its present shape. I suppose it is the intention to have it legalized ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is as follows——

Mr. FOSTER. I think we will have to have an answer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I told my hon. friend the contract was legal, but not binding until it was ratified by parliament from year to year by the money being voted. I can see no objection to having a contract brought down at the present moment.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister will bring down the one that preceded this, we will have the two for comparison.

Amendment (Mr. Osler) negatived, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Railways and canals—chargeable to capital—Intercolonial Railway—Rolling stock, $850,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Would the hon. minister allow that item to stand a little while and go on with the others ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). Yes.

Item allowed to stand.

Increased accommodation and facilities along line, $80,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Explain.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is for improvements at different points estimated to cost $83,000. But, we are asking for $80,000 which it is thought will complete the requirements.

To put railway between Indiantown and Blackville into condition for operation, $25,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How long is this railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the Indiantown branch. It runs from Derby Junction up to past Millertown and across the river to Blackville. It was built by a former administration and a portion of the line was not worked consisting of some trestle work and a bridge. This is to connect Millertown with Blackville on the Canada Eastern section of the Intercolonial Railway. Now that the government has acquired the Canada Eastern section this money is required to repair this section which has not been used.

Mr. AMES. Will that complete it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total will amount to about $79,000.

Mr. AMES. You do not intend to get the line into operation this year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, we cannot expend more than $25,000 this year.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Branch line Cardigan to Montague bridge, $95,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This work is under contract. There were $75,000 in the main estimates and this is supposed to complete.

Mr. A. MARTIN. What is the length of the road?

Mr. EMMERSON. Six and a half miles.

Mr. A. MARTIN. How much per mile will it cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $21,000 a mile.

Mr. A. MARTIN. It is $28,000 or nearly $30,000 a mile. What was the cost of the branch from Charlottetown to Murray harbour?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not remember that, but the total cost of this work as set out in detail is $195,123. The work was let by contract on schedule prices.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Does not the minister think that that is an enormous cost for a narrow gauge road? Does the minister know that in 1873 when there were no steam shovels and no such improvements in construction machinery as we have to-day; when rails cost $50 or $60 a ton instead of the $20 a ton they will cost on this road if the Intercolonial Railway rails are used; does the minister know that thirty years ago the original cost of the main line of the Prince Edward Island Railway was only $16,500 per mile as compared with nearly $30,000 per mile for this railroad to-day. It is exactly the same thing with the Belfast branch. This is all very astonishing and it requires explanation. I have here the estimate made by the Railway Department for the Belfast branch when it was proposed to be built——

Mr. EMMERSON. Does the hon. gentleman say that the cost of the Murray Harbour branch is $30,000 a mile?

Mr. A. MARTIN. It is $28,000 or $30,000 a mile.

Mr. EMMERSON. You are including the Hillsborough bridge?

Mr. A. MARTIN. No. If I included that it would be $50,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The deputy minister tells me the cost is about $21,000 per mile.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I have here the report made by the Department of Railways in 1899, when the surveys for this road were completed and the first mile is only estimated to cost $6,500 with rolling stock and everything added, and the average cost per mile is estimated at $10,445. When you place that against an actual cost of $28,000 it is very strange, especially when the main line only cost $16,500 per mile thirty years ago. Now, all this huge expense is charged against the province and this road should not cost more than two-thirds of what it has cost. I have nothing to say at all against the building of the road, am strongly in favour of it, but the people of the province think it strange that all these large sums voted for this road should be charged against them.

Mr. EMMERSON. As to the Montague branch of which my hon. friend is speaking, I need only say that the estimate was made by the departmental engineer as to the cost, and tenders were invited publicly and the lowest tender was accepted. The figures correspond with the estimates made by the department as to the cost of the road. The hon. gentleman says that this is in strange contrast to the cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway when originally built. I am sure that the character of the road we are now building is entirely different from that of the original road. The cost of $16,500 a mile did not apply to the whole road.

Mr. A. MARTIN. That was the cost of the road fully equipped, as it was handed over to the Dominion.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I may say that this short piece of road crosses two deep gullies, one at the head of Brudenell, near Howatt's Hills, and the other near Montague; and in consequence of the two bridges thus made necessary, together with deep cuttings and high embankments, I presume that this short piece of road will cost very much more per mile than a longer road would.

Mr. OSLER. What is the necessity of building the road?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The commercial necessity. It has been asked for for years, and hon. gentlemen opposite said that the present government were slow in building it.

Mr. OSLER. I am not opposing the building of the road, but when the Intercolonial system is admitted by the Minister of Railways to be an absolute failure, there should be very strong reasons given before further expenditure on capital account are incurred.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. There are strong reasons, and what I have stated are the reasons why it is costing so much per mile—more than the Murray Harbour railway cost.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I do not think my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) objects to the extension of the canal system in Ontario, because the canals do not pay; neither does the argument hold good in this case. I do not blame the government for the expenditure on this short line so much as I do for the cost of the line built two years ago. I agree with what my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has said in regard to the costliness of this line; but that does not prove that the line built to Murray Harbour should have cost over $28,000 per mile. Everybody will be struck with the high cost, because the estimated cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific through the mountainous region of New Brunswick, a road which is to have easy grades, is $28,000 a mile, while this is a narrow gauge road, and not to be compared with the Grand Trunk Pacific. It appears to me that there is something wrong about it somewhere.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am strongly convinced of the necessity of this road, though the character of the country through which it runs is such that the work is expensive.

The estimate made was not excessive; the quantities were arrived at and the work of excavation was figured out at schedule prices. Then, public tenders were asked, and there was no one who would undertake to build the road at a less figure than the successful tenderers, whose figure, I may say, corresponds with the estimate made in the department. I am not going into a discussion of the cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway. The work was done years ago, and I am not familiar with it; but in a general way I know that in character it in no sense compares either with the road that was built to Murray Harbour or with this present line. It may be that this road is of a higher class than the circumstances of the case demand; but I am of course in the hands of the officials of the department. I asked them to make a survey and estimate of a road that would meet the requirements of the case. They did so, and this is the result. Another thing to be remembered is that on the Prince Edward Island Railway a forty pound rail was used, whereas we are using a fifty-six pound rail. Then, the bridging on this short line will cost considerable, enhancing materially the average cost per mile. The excavation is to be done at the ordinary prices that obtain to-day under like circumstances and after public competition. There is no extravagance, so far as I have read the specifications or have any knowledge respecting the road.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I may say that I quite agree with the hon. minister about the necessity for this road. What does he intend to do with regard to the New London branch and some other short branches?

Mr. EMMERSON. We had a survey made, and the conditions did not permit of our proceeding with these at once. There are some reasons why some of these branch lines should be built, but having this particular work on hand, which is costing so much, and having also the Vernon River branch under construction, I could not recommend to my colleagues the carrying out of the other schemes at present.

Mr. A. MARTIN. There is great necessity for the New London branch. It is on the north side of the province, which is sadly in lack of railway communication and harbours. We have a very thickly settled population. There are 55 to the square mile in Prince Edward Island, whereas the average in the whole Dominion is about 1.5 per square mile. The produce of our province must be shipped early in the season and our people require access to the markets as quickly as possible. The late government proposed to expend $300,000 per year until the whole of these branches would be completed. There is the branch from Royalty Junction to Rustico, a large Acadian section, without any good harbours or railway communication. This branch should be proceeded with without delay. On the south side of the province you will find there is urgent need for a line from North Wiltshire to Victoria.

Increased cost of accommodation at Georgetown, $6,500.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Some three or four months ago when the item for the Murray Harbour branch railway was under consideration, the junior member for Queen's (Mr. McLean) and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) made some statements, which, I think, greatly misled the House and created a very wrong impression on several members of the committee, including the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). These statements were made with the intention of showing that the cost of the Murray Harbour Railway was excessive and that there was something very wrong about it. In order to create that impression, the cost of that piece of railway was greatly exaggerated. They compared it with the old line built on the island some thirty odd years ago. That old line, they said, cost $8,000 per mile whereas the Murray branch cost upwards of $30,000 per mile according to their statement. These figures were exceedingly inaccurate, as I shall prove to the committee. And as these statements have been circulated throughout the country, as they have appeared in the maritime newspapers, I consider it my duty to set the matter right, and I consider it due to those gentlemen themselves, who made these mis-statements, whether intentionally or not, that the matter should be put in its true light. Let me first take the cost of the Murray Harbour Railway. The following are the items:

Land and damages	$	96,423
Clearing, &c.		6,586
Grading		303,135
Public and private road crossings, fencing		52,573
Culverts, bridging and riprap		154,431
Rails and fastenings		153,097
Tracklaying and ballasting		57,680
Station buildings, turntables, &c.		83,102
Telegraph line		4,464
Engineering and inspection, &c.		60,750
Legal expenses		20,674
	$	992,916
Extension of line towards wharf		38,479
Total	$	1,031,395

Or $20,920.79 per mile.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The Minister of Railways acknowledged it was very much higher than that.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. That is the actual cost of the work, for it has been finished, and was taken off the contractor's hands last November.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) has stated that there are a number of wooden bridges on that line that must be replaced with steel bridges.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. But I give the total cost of the road as it has been taken over from the contractor. And in this total of cost land damages are included, which amount to about $2,000 a mile. When we compare this with the old road we must allow for that, because in the cost of the old road land damages are not included. The hon. senior member for Queen's (Mr. Martin) was much fairer than the other members to whom I have referred. He stated that the cost of the old road was about $16,000 a mile. That is about correct. The contract price for the road was $14,840. But afterwards some extras were added, which increased the cost. A report made by Mr. F. Shanly, which was brought down in 1875, shows, in round figures, a cost of $17,000 a mile. So the cost of the new road to Murray Harbour was less than one-quarter more than the old road. Is there any reason why it should cost one-quarter more ? It appears to me there are good reasons. It is a very much better road in every respect than the old road. For instance, it is about one-third wider. On the new road the width of the embankments is 16 feet and of the cuts 20 feet, while on the old road the width of the embankments is 12 feet and of the cuts 14 feet. This increased width of itself would add more than one-third to the cost of the road. Then the character of the road is much better, being up to the standard of the Intercolonial. The masonry of the culverts is better. The ballasting is very much better. The stations are better. Besides all this, the Murray Harbour branch has been built through a much rougher and more hilly country than the old road was, necessarily adding greatly to the cost. Now, as to the old road, it was never suggested that it cost too much, or that there was anything wrong in connection with it. And when we compare the two we find that this new road has cost less, taking the character of it into account. Therefore, the statements that have been freely made that the cost was excessive and that there must have been something wrong about it, are altogether foundationless. I think it is the duty of the gentlemen who made these statements to make an explanation to the committee.

Mr. A. MARTIN. On January 23rd last certain questions were put to the minister on this subject. In the first place, it was asked :

What was the total expenditure in connection with the Murray Harbour branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway up to 1st January, 1905 ?

And the answer of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) was :

Mr. J. J. HUGHES.

Total expenditure in connection with Murray Harbour Branch Railway to January 1, 1905, is $1,018,711.93.

The minister was further asked how much more had to be expended on the work, and he stated that the following work remained to be done : station terminal facilities had to be completed ; water tanks had to be erected and rolling stock provided. The cost of these works was estimated at $561,-253.93. Further, he said, there were three temporary wooden bridges which had to be replaced with iron or steel, probably during the current year, and the estimated cost of this was about $8,000. Now, add these three items together and you have a total of $1,-587,964. If we divide this by fifty miles, I do not think it will give a total of $20,000 a mile, but a total of a good deal more over $30,000 a mile. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) is an adept at figures, but I will give him time to revise his artthmetic in this case.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I do not need any time for that ; my calculations do not need revising. I am comparing the cost of the new road with that of the old road. We ought not to charge to the new road the cost of iron or steel bridges, because the comparison would then be unfair, for the simple reason that there were no iron or steel bridges on the old road when it was finished. The Murray Harbour branch, as it stands, has cost what I have stated.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Which is correct, the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) or the minister ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The minister is correct and so am I, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Martin) knows it.

Mr. A. MARTIN. There is a difference of over $500,000.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If the bridges that the minister speaks of are built, of course, the road will cost more than it has cost up to the present time. The hon. gentleman surely can see that if he wishes to.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) tries to contradict the statement I made, but I think he only succeeds in showing the correctness of it. I have taken the figures furnished in this House by the Minister of Railways himself. I suppose the officials in the Railway Department furnish the minister with correct information. Certainly, I am bound to take the figures furnished by these officials rather than the figures furnished by the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes). And I do not think I can sit here and be lectured by the hon. gentleman when I have the minister's figures to prove the correctness of my contention. If I have been misled by the minister that hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) can contradict his own figures. But I am sure he will not do that, for he has no interest in doing so. But we need not wrangle about this. I only called attention to the great discrepancy in the cost of the two roads, a discrepancy which, I believe, has never been explained. I think it is something that has not been explained. The greater width of the embankments on the main line of the Prince Edward Island Railway may account for some of it, but it would not make up the difference.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I wish to ask the minister for some information with respect to a return of the 30th of June referring to land damages incurred by Thomas Curley, Charles Mitchell and others of Village Green, Prince Edward Island, for lands expropriated for the Murray Harbour branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway. The men claim that they were misled by the superintendent of the railway and in consequence of the representations made to them, they accepted and signed agreements for their land and received a very much less amount than they were legally entitled to receive. The minister brought down all these letters and also a statement made by W. A. Weeks who was sent to investigate this matter at the instance of the department. In this statement to the general manager of the railway, Mr. Pottinger, Mr. Weeks says:

> Some who held out and went to the Exchequer Court received much larger sums. It transpired that others who did not appeal to the court and, even before the judgments of the court, were offered much larger sums than those Village Green people. They, therefore, considered that they executed their conveyance under mistake of the real conditions, and are at least morally, if not legally, entitled to increased awards.

These gentlemen have been applying to the department for the last five or six years with reference to this, and I thought it was my duty to bring the matter to the attention of the minister across the floor of the House, because the representative of the department after this investigation was made reported that these men were legally entitled to receive compensation for the lands taken, and I will ask the minister to take the matter into consideration and do justice to these people. There is no doubt they did not receive what they were legally entitled to receive and according to their own representations the amounts they received were accepted under a misapprehension of the facts.

Mr. EMMERSON. Of course I am confronted with this difficulty. These parties were paid certain sums of money and accepted them. I am quite aware that there is some dissatisfaction because of that, but this is one of the matters to which I intend to give attention when I go to the island in a few weeks, as soon as I can leave Ottawa.

National Transcontinental Railway—to pay Grand Trunk Pacific for surveys, plans, field notes, &c., taken over by the commission, with interest at four per cent to August 1, 1905, $352,379.52.

Mr. OSLER. Would the minister explain that, please?

Mr. EMMERSON. These surveys were made by the Grand Trunk Pacific east of Winnipeg towards Lake Abitibi. The National Transcontinental Railway commission negotiated with the company with respect to these plans and surveys and the data secured by their engineers. After a considerable time they concluded, on the advice of Mr. Lumsden, the engineer—and I think the returns are before parliament as to the negotiations—that it would save a good deal of money to have these data and they agreed to pay the actual expenditure with interest from the date of payment up to the time when the amount should be paid, that is the 1st of August was fixed because it was supposed we would not have the Supply Bill through in time to make an earlier payment than the 1st of August in all probability. The commission secured the services of two very competent accountants, one being a Montreal accountant, Mr. Turcotte, of Kent and Turcotte, and Mr. Bell of the Railway Deparment.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Why, after the Grand Trunk Bill was passed did the government not themselves put surveyors in the field and not trust to the Grand Trunk Pacific? Were they not as capable of having engineers in the field, locating their own railway, and why should the government take that information second-hand?

Mr. EMMERSON. These were surveys that were made before the Bill was passed. It will be in the minds of hon. members that the Bill was passed in 1903. The Grand Trunk Pacific people had sent out survey parties in order to expedite matters as they thought, and they made these surveys. As soon as the Bill was passed and assented to last year the commission was constituted and organized and they did put surveying parties in the field and then it was that the other parties stopped, but all this surveying had been done before the board was constituted and was in a position to take any active steps with respect to surveys.

Mr. OSLER. What is the date of the first expenditure on these surveys?

Mr. EMMERSON. 1903.

Mr. OSLER. Is that the date of the first expenditure by the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BRODER. Does that survey locate the road?

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, no, these were preliminary surveys. But it was decided that it would be a greater saving to the Transcontinental Commission to accept these surveys and to pay their actual cost than to go out independent of these altogether and traverse the same country.

Mr. OSLER. How many miles does this cover?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is all contained in the report. I do not carry it in my mind, the report is before parliament.

Mr. OSLER. I take it these surveys were made by the Grand Trunk Company when they had in view the building of a line in connection with their own line from North Bay to Winnipeg, and now the government have taken over that part of the road.

Mr. EMMERSON. Only a portion of that survey was purchased.

Mr. OSLER. The government have undertaken to build that part of the road now and the government have taken over the Grand Trunk expenditure on it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. Not all the Grand Trunk expenditures, because the Grand Trunk made surveys along a route that will not be followed by the present location or approximate location of the Grand Trunk Pacific. My hon. friend has clearly stated the position with respect to the Grand Trunk's intention to go down to North Bay. For a certain distance the preliminary lines surveyed by the company are of advantage to the Transcontinental, but as you approach North Bay, that portion of the surveys made by them would be of no value to the Transcontinental and therefore the expenditures on that part of the line that would not be of value to the commission were not assumed. Very great accuracy was observed by eliminating those portions.

Mr. OSLER. The principle of reimbursing the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for surveys that are useful is quite right, but it is almost useless for the opposition to say anything at this late period of the session, because, to bring down an estimate such as this at this time of the session, is hardly less than criminal. It is impossible that it can be intelligently criticised. We ought to have the fullest information and we ought to have the report analysed in connection with this item. We ought to know exactly what these surveys cost and whether they have been used in the location of the line. If not, to a very great extent, the money has been thrown away. But, at this particular time it is almost criminal to suggest that there can be any intelligent criticism of an item such as this. The principle of payment is right but we ought to have the fullest information.

Mr. EMMERSON. That information has been before parliament for some time. The accounts and the report of the chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden, have been presented to parliament.

Mr. OSLER. Will the hon. minister kindly read that report?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the report. It was laid on the table and printed long ago.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How long ago?

Mr. EMMERSON. Two months ago.

Mr. BRODER. There was only what is called a preliminary report printed.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is an interim report up to the 1st of March or April.

Mr. BRODER. It is only a small affair.

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, it is a full and very accurate report of the proceedings of the commission from the time of their organization down to a certain date.

Mr. OSLER. Is that the report recommending the payment of this money to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is incorporated in that report.

Mr. OSLER. A statement showing where the money has been expended?

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer points out that certain portions of the line are surveyed and that plans, surveys and data were prepared which were of advantage to the commission and which saved the commission a like expenditure.

Mr. OSLER. Can the hon. minister tell me what length of line these surveys cover?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sure my hon. friend would not expect me to carry it in my memory.

Mr. OSLER. I would expect the hon. minister to have the information before him. What is the distance from the point where these surveys begin to Winnipeg? Is it 350 miles, or $1,000 per mile for the survey? It is no use criticising it, I know quite well.

Mr. EMMERSON. When that information has been laid before parliament and hon. members have had an opportunity of having a copy of the report, surely we have gone as far as we could be expected to go and while I would be most happy to afford information to my hon. friend I would point out to him that he had the same opportunity to read that report that I had.

Mr. OSLER. If the hon. minister cannot give that information, having had the report before him for all these months, if he has forgotten all about it and cannot tell anything as to the distance or the nature of the report he must not accuse me of not remembering it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would not expect my hon. friend to carry it in his memory any more than I could carry in mine. But, I would have the report before me if I had been particularly interested in having the data as my hon. friend is.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. You should have it in your portfolio.

Mr. OSLER. Is not the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals particularly interested in having the information ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I read the report and I was perfectly satisfied with it. I studied it.

Mr. OSLER. I did not. Will the hon. minister kindly tell me about how many miles are covered by this survey? Is the distance 350 miles ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think about 420.

Mr. OSLER. About $1,000 per mile ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am only speaking from memory. I do not lay claim to a memory that is of the strength that would carry all these details. I do not think I should be expected to. Certainly, if I am expected to do so I realize my own weakness in that respect and frankly acknowledge that I do not remember the details. I remember the general features, I remember the analysis of it, I remember the effect of the recommendation and the conclusion reached by the commission.

Mr. OSLER. I should have thought that the hon. minister, when bringing up an estimate like this, would have had the report of the commission before him. I am not objecting to it, but I want the information. How far has this survey gone ? Of how much use is this survey of 400 miles costing about $1,000 a mile? What balance is likely to be required to finish that survey ? The hon. minister has no information about that at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. That will all have to be surveyed. That has to be tested and it is being tested by the commission to-day. But the cost of the surveys now being made by the commission in that locality are appreciably less, aye, less by a greater amount than the figures which represent the sum that is to be paid to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for the data which they were able to furnish.

Mr. OSLER. Would the hon. minister tell me anything about the cost of the surveys of the road.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, the commission deal with that. I do not deal with that.

Mr. OSLER. The cost of the survey formed a very considerable portion of the estimated cost of the road. When the government gave us the estimated cost I suppose they had the estimated cost of the surveys per mile.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. Before this item carries I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to give me some information as regards a certain claim put in by the Trans-Canada Railway Company for surveys made along the route which is now going to be followed by the Transcontinental Railway. I see a very large item is being voted to refund to the Grand Trunk Railway Company the cost of surveys made by them. I have no fault to find with that, but I would like to know what is going to be done for the Trans-Canada Railway Company which has been the pioneer of this road. I think they did more than the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in laying out this route and that they furnished the material for the discussion in and outside of this House. I travelled all over Canada and out to the coast in the interest of the Trans-Canada Railway and addressed nearly all the chambers of commerce in regard to the project. They spent over $60,000. Part of that was spent north of Lake Superior and they do not expect to get a refund of that particular money. But, over $50,000 of their money was spent for actual surveys and they did good work which is now useful to the Transcontinental Railway. I would like to know what is the intention of the government on that particular point.

Mr. EMMERSON. I recognize that the Trans-Canada did make surveys for the eastern section of the line between Quebec and Winnipeg. That company claimed—and I think the claim is acknowledged by the commission—that the surveys and the data which they have furnished have been of very great value. The matter has been under consideration, but since the contention was placed before the government through the medium of the commission, there has not been an opportunity to deal with it. It is still the subject-matter of consideration on the part of the government.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. How is it that the government has arrived at such a prompt decision with regard to the claim of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that nothing has been done for the other company ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Because the data of the Grand Trunk Pacific claim was placed in the hands of the commission early last autumn and a thorough investigation was had. The claim of the Trans-Canada did not reach the commission in time; it certainly did not reach the government.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. It was in last fall.

Mr. EMMERSON. It certainly did not come under the notice of the government because it is not many weeks since it came under my notice and when it did I referred it to the government for consideration. There has not been an opportunity of having it analyzed or considered as it should be.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister intend to build this section of the road between Winnipeg and Quebec; is that still the policy of the government?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, that is the policy of the government and that policy will be executed, and more than that I would say to my hon. friend that it will be built not merely to Quebec but to Moncton.

Mr. OSLER. What surveys have the government?

Mr. EMMERSON. There have been preliminary reports published by the commission. I understand that later reports from the district engineers have come to the commission and that it has been demonstrated that with regard to the line between Winnipeg and Moncton, a line of the highest standard can be secured over the whole route. Through the province of New Brunswick a splendid line, no better in Canada, can be secured.

Mr. OSLER. Would it not be wise for the government to publish the reports of the surveys in view of the statements that have been made?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Osler) cannot have been in the House this session and not know that the report has been submitted to parliament.

Mr. OSLER. Up to what date?

Mr. EMMERSON. Up to the first of April or May.

Mr. OSLER. The report of the commission?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. Some of the more prominent features of that report have been published in the newspapers and a pamphlet containing the report has been printed by parliament. The location surveys have not been had.

Mr. OSLER. They are the main thing.

Mr. EMMERSON. The location surveys are now being had at different points.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the minister tell the number of miles these surveys cover?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot remember the exact figures but I can state approximately. Surveys have been had covering an area 400 miles east of Winnipeg. It does not merely mean that one preliminary line was run but there have been perhaps 1,200 miles of preliminary line run and the results obtained have been satisfactory. Preliminary lines were run through the 400 miles area with the intention of securing the best available route. Based upon that data the location surveys are being made. The commission by paying out this amount saved very materially in their expenditure.

Mr COCHRANE. How do you know that?

Mr. EMMERSON. I know it from the report of Mr. Lumsden, chief engineer, who is a gentleman having a very high reputation in his profession; personally I would not be expected to know anything about it.

Mr. INGRAM. Would that 400 miles east of Winnipeg include the branch from Port Arthur?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Does it mean that no survey is necessary between Winnipeg and 400 miles east?

Mr. EMMERSON. As I understand it they will make their location surveys on the data of these preliminary lines.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I looked into this question somewhat and I understand that the Grand Trunk Railway have surveyed from Winnipeg to North Bay. The Transcontinental Railway Commission took over the surveys that were in the immediate zone of the Transcontinental Railway only for about 450 miles east of Winnipeg. The road, when 400 miles east of Winnipeg branches off to North Bay. They only took the surveys from Winnipeg to that junction. There has been a statement made here that this has cost $1,000 a mile, I think it has cost about $800 a mile for these preliminary surveys and when you consider that it cost probably from 15 to 20 cents a pound for taking in supplies for the surveyors, it appears to me that the cost of the surveys is reasonable. I think it was a wise thing for the government to do, to take the plans over; they were carefully prepared by the Grand Trunk Railway Company; they suited the purpose and it will save time.

Mr. INGRAM. Now that the hon. gentleman has given this matter a great deal of consideration, would he tell us whether it was the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the government that bought the supplies?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The Grand Trunk Railway Company bought the provisions and paid for them, and there are tons and tons of provisions cached in that country to-day for the government surveyors who will go over this course locating the line.

Mr. INGRAM. That will never be used.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. That will be used. They are absolutely necessary, and will save the government the expense of purchasing. We have practically paid the Grand Trunk for them, and they are very necessary for the work.

Mr. INGRAM. I am very glad the hon. gentleman brought this question up, because there is a rumour going the rounds that a large quantity of provisions have been bought and will never be used, and that this country is paying for them in order that these gentlemen may derive a large profit on them. If that statement is not correct, perhaps the minister will give it an emphatic denial. It is a common charge and rumour.

Mr. EMMERSON. And will my hon. friend take the responsibility of making such a charge?

Mr. INGRAM. I will take the responsibility of stating that such a rumour is in circulation in the public press of this country.

Mr. EMMERSON. You can get any kind of rumour circulated if you wish. It is the easiest kind of thing to start some rumour, like creating a man of straw to throw snowballs at him.

Mr. OSLER. What steps did the government take to verify the values?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was not the government that did it; it was done by the commission under the advice of the engineers. The quantities were all analyzed, the vouchers were all obtained, the accountants went thoroughly into the matter, and the commission were satisfied that the transaction was a reasonable one, and that they were getting full value. My hon. friend, I am sure, is fair enough to accept the conclusion of these gentlemen. I am sure that their written report, signed by themselves, and audited by reputable auditors and accountants, must be more satisfactory, and must be accepted with greater credence, than a mere idle rumour in some newspaper, a rumour that may be started with an ulterior motive.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Hamilton stated that he had given this matter a great deal of consideration, and I understood him to say that it was the Grand Trunk Company who bought these provisions and made these surveys, and that the government had taken them over. The minister says it was the commission that bought the provisions.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I said that the commission took them over from the Grand Trunk Company, who had them cached at different points along the route. The commission purchased them from the company, but had nothing whatever to do with the original purchase of these supplies.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What commission did they allow?

Mr. EMMERSON. No commission. They took them over at the actual cost.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, the Grand Trunk Company had the entire control of ordering the provisions, and were not influenced in any way by the commission? Is that it?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Grand Trunk Company made the surveys and put the provisions there before the commission was organized.

Mr. INGRAM. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend make that statement, because it is deliberately charged that a large quantity of provisions were bought, some of them in the city of London, at prices that were unreasonable, and that the quantities were so large that many of the provisions will spoil. If the statement made by the minister gives the facts connected with the purchase of these provisions, I am very glad to hear it, and I hope it will put an end to the rumours. As for a member of this House speaking of rumours, how else are we to deal with matters of this kind? Am I to go through the other provinces of the Dominion to ascertain personally what is going on? What guides me if not the public press of this country? It is by reading the newspapers that I obtain a good deal of the information which I do, and it is a part of the duties of this House to ask whether these rumours are correct or not. I am glad to have the answer of the minister, if it is correct; if it is not correct, he will suffer in consequence.

National Transcontinental Railway—construction, $1,000,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you let a contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. This is an amount asked for by the commission, and they hope to be in a position to let contracts this autumn. It is estimated that before the 1st of July, 1906, they will require $1,000,000, and they have asked for that amount.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. On what section?

Mr. EMMERSON. They will be in a position to commence on the eastern section. They expect to have the railway through New Brunswick and through portions of Quebec under contract before very many months.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can we expect another report from this commission before the 1st of July, 1906?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is an interim report to be followed by another report down to the 1st of July, 1905. Then there will be a report for the year to the 1st of July next.

Mr. BLAIN. Will they continue to report in the same way?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

National Transcontinental Railway—terminals, right of way, $1,000,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The principal terminals here referred to are those at Winnipeg and Quebec. It is thought desirable that provision should be made for a terminal at Winnipeg. In the judgment of the government, it is most desirable that a road, being owned and operated by the government from Moncton to Winnipeg, should have a terminal at Winnipeg owned and controlled by the government. It is the policy of the government to own and control the terminal at Winnipeg and also at Quebec.

Mr. INGRAM. There is a rumour that the Canadian Northern are trying to enter into some arrangement for joint terminals and a union station at Winnipeg.

Mr. EMMERSON. If there are any such negotiations they are not known to the government, and the government is not a party to them. On the contrary, it is the policy of the government to own and control the terminal at Winnipeg in connection with the transcontinental and the eastern section from Moncton to Winnipeg.

Mr. INGRAM. Would it be a union station ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The government would own and control and have its own terminal in connection with the eastern section.

Mr. OSLER. The Winnipeg terminals are going to cost an enormous sum, and they will be used by the Grand Trunk Pacific in connection with its western line.

Mr. EMMERSON. And its eastern as well.

Mr. OSLER. In other words, this is another enormous bonus to the Grand Trunk Pacific. The main expenditure on a line by a private company from Winnipeg west would be the terminals, and the government are going to build them for the Grand Trunk Pacific, and will only charge a proportion of the 3 per cent on them. What terms have been made with the Grand Trunk Pacific for the user of that station ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am strongly convinced that it is in the interest of Canada that we should own the terminal. Having regard to the future, it is in the interest of the people, who own the line from Moncton to Winnipeg, to control the terminals.

Mr. OSLER. The minister is quite right, but he has arrived at that conclusion a little too late. The most valuable terminal is at Port Arthur.

Mr. EMMERSON. The terminal at Port Arthur is not a part of the Transcontinental system.

Mr. OSLER. It should have been, because it is the best terminal.

Mr. EMMERSON. The government could not very well own the terminal at Port Arthur unless they owned the road down to that.

Mr. INGRAM. About the terminals from Winnipeg to Moncton, what about the terminals from Winnipeg west ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific. They will build it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are we to understand that the government will construct and own at Winnipeg the terminals which will answer, not only for the purposes of the line east of Winnipeg, but also the purposes of the Grand Trunk Pacific west of Winnipeg ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The idea is this. In so far as the eastern section is concerned, the terminal will be directed, owned and controlled by the government. At the same time, in order to meet the requirements of the Transcontinental, the terminal there would of necessity be quite sufficiently complete to enable the proper connections to be made between the eastern and western sections, and the use of which by the company for its western section must necessarily be upon terms.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would suppose, if you were to treat this line as one railway from Moncton to Vancouver or Port Simpson, that the terminals of the line at Winnipeg would be constructed in connection with this as a through line. You would not have at Winnipeg one terminal for the eastern section and another for the western. You would have the terminal for the two lines. Either the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway or the government would construct and own this. As I understand, it is the policy of the government to have those terminals at Winnipeg and to be occupied under terms to be arranged between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is correct.

Mr. INGRAM. That would mean the terminal within the corporation of Winnipeg ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I would hardly be in a position to answer that just now.

Mr. INGRAM. My point is this : Suppose that the Mackenzie and Mann system and the Grand Trunk Railway system agreed to build a union station just beyond the limits of Winnipeg and Moncton in which the government control the terminal point, what position is the government in then ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The government can control it. The establishment of any terminal by any private railway corporation can only be carried on under the approval of the Railway Commission. The orders of the Railway Commission are subject to revision by the Governor in Council.

Mr. INGRAM. So, if it were of advantage to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Mackenzie and Mann systems to have a union depot, the Railway Commission will have the power to say what the government should contribute towards it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) misunderstands the point. If the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railways were to unite upon a policy with respect to the terminals at Winnipeg, they could only act in carrying out that policy with the approval of the Railway Commission. But the Railway Commission's orders are subject to revision by the government. Necessarily, then, if the policy adopted were antagonistic to the policy of the government, the government would review the commission's decision and arrange that the policy of the government should be carried out.

Mr. INGRAM. To the advantage of the government ?

Mr. EMMERSON. To the advantage of the people of Canada as represented by the government.

Mr. INGRAM. But suppose it should turn out to be to the advantage of the government, what objection would there be to having a union depot with the others ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Speakng for myself, personally, I believe it would be a disadvantage for the people to have this joint action. But I believe it would be to the advantage of the people to have the Dominion build the terminals and control them and to give the use of them, upon terms, with these other companies. I can understand that that would be a reasonable plan and would be of advantage not only to the people of the Dominion, but to these railway companies as well.

Intercolonial Railway—Rolling stock, $850,000.

Mr. BARKER. We would like an explanation of this.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is required to purchase the following :

	Estimated cost.
14 locomotives	$ 308,000
360 box cars	360,000
25 refrigerator cars	35,000
5 second-class combination cars	60,000
1 observation car	8,000
4 side dump cars	4,000
1 rotary snow plough	15,000
10 wing elevator snow ploughs	30,000
20 vans	26,000

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Where is the observation car to be used ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In the Metapedia valley, in connection with the tourist travel in the summer.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is it estimated that the locomotives will cost each ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The freight locomotives, with modern headlights and everything complete, about $21,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are they to be made in Canada ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. I submit this amount $850,000 for the purchase of this rolling stock. But, though I have apportioned it as I have read, I would like to reserve this point: That if we find it desirable we may get more box cars and perhaps not so many engines. I made a statement in respect to the necessity for additional locomotives. I would like to have an appropriation to secure 25 locomotives. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) submitted a statement showing the average number of locomotives per mile on the different roads. I have submitted that to railway men and they do not coincide with the idea that it is a proper criterion. I have a report from the superintendent of motive power showing the very strong necessity, apart from any figures and averages, for acquiring additional motive power. We have been face to face with a shortage of motive power on the Intercolonial Railway. This was emphasized last winter during the snow blockade. We hope that may not be repeated, but it is always necessary to be armed against such possibilities. I have been particularly struck with the fact that the Intercolonial Railway has been obliged owing to the shortage of locomotive power to take its passenger engines on the Sabbath to move freight trains that have stood for hours and days at stations. I have had repeated complaints from the Lord's Day Alliance because of the necessity of using these passenger engines for the movement of freight on the Sabbath. Throughout the maritime provinces there is a very strong feeling as respects Sunday trains. The people are very strongly prejudiced against Sunday trains, and without discussing whether in the prejudice they are right or wrong —in my judgment I think they are right——

Mr. OSLER. It is very inconvenient, at all events.

Mr. EMMERSON. I admit it is a very great inconvenience but I have a very great respect for the Canadian Sabbath, and I think no one who has travelled throughout the United States and observed the want of a Sabbath there and contrasted that with the conditions in Canada—whether it is because of my early training—whether it is because of the prejudices that have grown up with me, I certainly have a great deal of sympathy with the feeling that there should be at least no unnecessary movement of trains on the Sabbath, I am not an extremist on the question, but there are those in Canada who feel that there should not be a movement of freight trains on the Sabbath day, and I think it is due to them from this parliament and from the government of the day that their feeling in this respect, their education in this respect, should be respected. Unless we have more engines, if we are to come measurably within meeting the conditions along the road of the Intercolonial Railway we will be under the necessity of utilizing our passenger engines on the Sabbath for freight purposes. I have felt the want of motive power very much, it hampered the trains last winter and added very materially to the expense. It is often asked: Why is it that the Intercolonial Railway does not show a better result? I shall place before the committee, in order to have it appear in 'Hansard,' information which can be found in the blue books but which I wish to emphasize before the committee and before the public in this way. I wish to contrast the methods pursued on the Intercolonial Railway with the methods pursued on other Canadian railways:

Earnings per train mile, Intercolonial Railway.

1902	$ 0.93
1903	0.99
1904	0.97

Earnings per train mile, Grand Trunk Railway.

1902	$ 1.43
1903	1.46
1904	1.53

Earnings per train mile, Canadian Northern Railway.

1902	$ 1.74
1903	1.60
1904	1.91

Earnings per train mile, Canadian Pacific Railway.

1902	$ 1.08
1903	1.93
1904	1.95

These figures demonstrate the fact that the earnings per train mile on the Intercolonial are practically not half of the earnings per train mile on the Canadian Northern or on the Canadian Pacific, and very much below any of the other lines. On the Canada Atlantic, of which I also have a statement, the earnings per train mile were:

1902	$ 1.27
1903	1.43
1904	1.34

Let us compare the expenses per train mile on the Intercolonial Railway and on other railways.

Expenses per train mile, Intercolonial Railway.

1902	0.91
1903	0.97
1904	1.11

This is a question of average. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) dealt with the engine question from the standpoint of averages.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And very effectively too.

Mr. EMMERSON. Effectively as far as figures speak. I am not calling that in question, but figures demonstrate one thing and actual results and experience teach a very different lesson. In so far as the number of engines on the Intercolonial Railway is concerned the returns show that they have more engines on the average per mile and we all know that there are engines and engines, and that a large number of those engines that are returned and numbered in the total of the Intercolonial Railway are engines of an obsolete type. Very many of them are small, perhaps 43, or 45 or perhaps 50 ton engines and they have been in use for a great many years. From time to time these engines are replaced as far as they can out of maintenance. From time to time we build engines in the shops to replace them, but necessarily, taking the conditions prevailing on the road into account, we have to keep in use quite a large number of them. If the total number of engines on the Intercolonial Railway were of a class such as those we have secured from the Kingston Locomotive Works during the past year, even with the same number of engines on the Intercolonial Railway, there would not be the necessity for this vote. One of the latest engines that we have received from the Kingston Locomotive Works is an engine of 187,000 pounds and it is one of the largest engines in use in Canada, and certainly the largest that has been constructed in Canada. I speak on the authority of the men who handle these engines, I speak on the authority of their experience of the engines which we secured from the Kingston Locomotive Works during the past year or two when I say they are of a type that is not equalled on this continent. They have the Baldwin engines. It is not my purpose to detract in any way from the manufactured products of any company, but I want to say that if you go down to the Intercolonial Railway, speak to the locomotive engineers and ask them as to the engines that are most satisfactory and produce the best results, they will tell you that the engines owned and operated by the Intercolonial Railway, constructed in the Kingston Locomotive Works, are of the highest type and bring about the best results. I think this is certainly very much to the credit of a Canadian manufacturing concern. They do not build as many engines in the Intercolonial Railway shops as I think they should. They do construct them, but this is a work that is gone on with when repairs are slack. Whether it is because of prejudice on the part of the men I cannot say, but they will all say that these engines which are turned out from the Intercolonial Railway shops are superior to any engines on the Intercolonial Railway which have been manufactured by American locomotive concerns. I speak of this because it is information that came to me from the men themselves. It is a description of the conditions prevailing on that road, and I feel that it is due at least to the committee that I should give this information, and that it is due to the Intercolonial Railway that the explanation should be made. But they certainly require the engines and I would be very glad if we did not have to purchase so many, because if we did not I could ask for an addition to the number of box-cars. We need them very much. Any one who has had any experience of the eastern provinces during the past winter will realize that there was a very great cry all along the Intercolonial Railway for box cars. We could not supply the demand. The Intercolonial Railway last winter was obliged to decline to enter into a contract with the Allans and the Grand Trunk Railway Company to accept export traffic by way of St. John and Halifax because we could not meet that provision in the contract which required us to furnish box cars to go off our line in order to secure this traffic along the line of the Grand Trunk Railway. The Intercolonial Railway lost that traffic. We were not in a position to meet the requirements of ordinary business transactions along the line of the Intercolonial Railway for the want of that class of rolling stock. Then, it is a very easy matter to get up and talk about the large expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway. While it may appeal to a certain prejudice in the country there is one thing that we must realize and that is that Canada owns the Intercolonial, that Canada is obliged to operate the Intercolonial and that the point is as to how it can be most economically operated. On that point I am bound to accept the judgment of the officers. There are very many of them who have been there for the last 25 years, and I submit to their judgment when they say that it would be economy to have this additional rolling stock, that it would be to the advantage of the Intercolonial Railway if it had additional engines, that they should have a better class of box cars and more of them, and that if we were provided with these large capacity cars they could be sent over the Grand Trunk Railway and other railways to gather traffic for the Intercolonial and also meet the requirements of the local traffic and earn more money. When they tell me that, I feel I am bound to ask parliament for a vote to do this, because, if you have a road you must operate it and should operate it to the best advantage. You must deal with conditions. I am sadly disappointed as to the results of the past year. I have determined at least to make the effort, up to the extent of my strength, during the present year to bring about a different result on the Intercolonial Railway.

I think that a different result can be secured if parliament places us in the position—I do not mean to say that the whole deficit can be wiped out in one year, but I do say it can be minimized. I shall endeavour to have that analysis made soon, and particular attention paid to the number of employees at the different points in the different workshops. We have these machine shops at Halifax, Richmond, Sydney, Stellarton, Moncton, Riviere du Loup, Lévis, Chaudiere and all along the line. They are a necessity, but an analysis of the work they are accomplishing has not been made very recently, and never entirely to my satisfaction. That analysis will be had and I feel that there certainly can be a very material improvement made with respect to the Intercolonial Railway. I ask that this vote of $850,000 shall be given to provide rolling stock. I have pointed out what at the present moment seems to me to be a proper division of the different classes of rolling stock, and I hold this in reserve : that if it is found possible to do without locomotives and to substitute box cars in their stead to some extent, that the money shall be expended in that way.

Mr. BARKER. I shall endeavour to say what I have to say about this item of $850,000 in as few words as possible, and without entering into a general discussion of the working of the railway as the minister would seem to desire to do. There is nothing which shows more clearly the outrage of bringing down estimates in the last hour of the session than this item for additional rolling stock at the expense of capital. To properly criticise this it would be necessary to go over the stock accounts for several years past to see what he has been buying and how much of his rolling stock is lying idle or is out of existence at this moment. The minister conveniently leaves that to the very last hour of the session and then he asks parliament to vote the money. As to the average number of locomotives upon the Intercolonial Railway, I am quite prepared to admit that the number of miles to a locomotive is not a conclusive test. But I did not give just one average. I took three other railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway, which possibly because of certain traditions the minister might not consider quite fair, and I also took the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Railway. He has on the Intercolonial Railway, in proportion, about two and a half times as many locomotives as the Canadian Northern and about twice as many as the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Canadian Northern counts in that the operation of certain railways where they only run one train a day.

Mr. BARKER. I will deal with all that. The Grand Trunk Railway Company is a very favourable comparison for the minister. I do not suppose any one will dispute that the Grand Trunk Railway has a large and very varied traffic. It has branch lines, all kinds of local traffic, through traffic and everything the hon. gentleman can claim to have on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. They have a double track and they do not have to allow their locomotives to stand on the sidings.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman has more locomotives than the Grand Trunk Railway comparatively. He said in his speech the other day, without knowing what he was talking about—I say that without offence, he did not know because he went to a railway man since to find out something about it—he said he wanted seventy-five more locomotives ; he did not consider, he did not work it out,——

Mr. EMMERSON. I wanted the twenty-five we have got and I mentioned fifty in addition to that.

Mr. BARKER. The hon gentleman said nothing about fifty or twenty-five ; he was speaking of the difficulty of working the traffic last winter through the snow and he said he wanted for the traffic in future seventy-five more locomotives than he had. Last year he obtained twenty-two locomotives at a cost of $512,000, and he is asking now $350,000 additional, although he has already got more locomotives than the Grand Trunk Railway in proportion to their mileage. In the last five or six years the Railway Department has been lavishing money on locomotives. His predecessor (Mr. Blair) came down for enormous sums to buy locomotives, buying them in the States, buying them in Canada, building locomotives ; he should have enough now to be thoroughly equipped in the very best manner. But the Minister of Railways wants more locomotives, and as long as he is allowed the money by this parliament he will continue to want more ; he is a perfect Oliver Twist in that respect. The hon. gentleman seems to take some comfort out of the cost of his train mileage, but he could double that if he wanted to by runnning twice as many trains for the same traffic. The reason the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk are lower in the cost of train mileage is that they are trying to earn money ; they are not trying to waste it.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are higher per train mileage. What I said was that our earnings were lower.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, the earnings are lower per train mile. The difficulty with the minister is that he is running more trains than would an ordinary railway for that traffic. The Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway take care to load up their trains fully ; the minister is running his trains for purposes other than trying to earn money.

Mr. EMMERSON. We are running to try to accommodate the people.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, regardless of cost.

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, that is the whole thing. If the minister tried to make this road pay he would be competing with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway in the respects he mentions. I am not able to go into the car stock book list year after year for the last five years, but I have figures here which will tell what he has been doing and the hon. gentleman and his officers know it. Up to 1901 the interchange car mileage counted against him, which indicated that in the interchange of cars with other companies he was using the other companies' cars to a greater extent than they were using his. But since 1901, since the country has been loading him up with cars, it has gone the other way, and in 1902 the minister having taken money out of capital to build cars, he earns $16,743 in lending cars to other companies. He was getting this revenue on cars which we were paying for out of capital account.

In 1903, how much did he make ? $111,-436 for car mileage paid to him by other companies for the use of his cars on their lines over and above what he paid them for the use of their cars on his lines ; and he deducts that amount from his working expenses. How much did he deduct last year, with his deficit of one million and a half? Up to the 30th of June, 1904, he deducted from his working expenses $112,-551.17 for the use by other companies of these cars which are bought at the expense of the people of Canada. He has too many cars; he is overloaded. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk and all other competing lines are using his cars, and he is asking for more. He wants $360,-000 now for more box cars, and as he is not quite sure that he wants these fourteen locomotives, he is giving you a hint that he may take that $380,000 and buy box cars with the whole $740,000. I do not know how much he will make in that way towards his working expenses next year. That is what the hon. gentleman is doing with the money voted on capital account ; he buys cars, more than are needed, and virtually rents them to others. Has he been keeping up his own cars ? In 1901, the department had 364 cars absolutely out of service, actually dead and broken up ; in 1902, he had 575 dead and out of existence ; in 1903, he had 585. He cuts down expenses by not rebuilding his old cars, and gets new cars from capital and credits their rental against expenses. It is true that in 1904, after this matter was talked over and over again, the number was cut down to 268; but he had about a million dollars deficit. That is the way this road is being managed. Is it any wonder that the operation is going to the dogs? The hon. gentleman has now finished his last year (June, 1905), and what is his deficit?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the figures.

Mr. BARKER. In all seriousness, I think it is about time that hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been so generous with money that does not belong to them, should in caucus or somewhere else tell the minister that he has got to stop this sort of thing. We have been going on year after year until it is perfectly frightful to think of the amount of capital that has been expended on this road, for steel rails, for bridges, for every imaginable thing, and there is no end to it. The hon. gentleman got a million dollars last year for rolling stock. This year he wants $1,548,500 and he will get it. Hon. gentlemen opposite are representing the people of Canada here, and they should see that the manner in which the Intercolonial Railway has been managed for the last seven or eight years is a positive disgrace, not only to the minister who is responsible——

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. What do you think should be done?

Mr. BARKER. I think it should be managed in a proper way. If necessary, turn out the political management and have the road managed without any political interference whatever, and it can be worked, if not at a profit, at least without loss. It has been done before, and it can be done again. Does the hon. gentleman know what occurred two or three years ago in connection with buying ties? The whole thing was disclosed here. The number of ties required for the Intercolonial was from 500,000 to 550,000 in one year. In one year they bought 1,300,000 ties, just three months before the elections. All the figures were laid before this House. If hon. gentlemen opposite were shareholders in a company managed in this way, the president or manager would not remain there one hour; but because it is the public money that they are spending, these gentlemen allow any amount to be expended which the government choose to ask. Some day or other there must be an accounting. This thing will be inquired into, and there will be an exposure. There must be something radically wrong in it all; there must be not only extravagance, but worse than extravagance. In no other way could these enormous deficits occur. A few years ago there was a good deal of boasting of surpluses, but there had been none. The government replaces worn-out rails with new rails and charges the change to capital, and thus shows a surplus. The Grand Trunk could make 20 per cent if it did that. The hon. gentleman or his predecessor professed to have made $200,000 or $300,000, but it was done by manipulating the charges. The hon. gentleman has been brought to book to some extent, and now when he tries to show what his earnings are, he is from one to two millions on the wrong side. He confesses this year he is $2,000,000 to the bad up to the end of June. He said it was at least $1,800,000 and that he thought it would go up to $2,000,000. Has he any more comforting assurance to give us or is it going to be more than $2,000,000? He laughs and apparently would rather think it a joke if it did exceed $2,000,000, and boast that there never had been such a deficit before. On the question of cars, it must be evident to every business man that when the department has so many cars that it can get more than $100,000 from other companies for the use of them, we ought to stop buying any more. He actually deducts in those two years from his working expenses $223,000 received from other companies for their use of cars bought with the capital of this country.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. It seems to me that the criticism indulged in annually by the hon. member for Hamilton with regard to the Intercolonial Railway is based on the assumption that the Intercolonial Railway should be treated in the same way as a company railway.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly, so far as its operation is concerned.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Let me remind the hon. gentleman that his former leader, the father of confederation, was quite willing to agree that the Intercolonial Railway should be constructed and operated as a government work, and the reason he agreed to that was that the people of the maritime provinces might be brought in closer touch with the central portion of Canada, and should be guaranteed this means of communication for all time to come, to be managed as a government work. He tells us to-night that we should not have any additional cars on that railway to keep pace with the development of the country, because these cars are used by other railways. I submit that the argument he uses supplies its own answer. If the object of the Intercolonial Railway is not to promote interprovincial trade, if it is not that we may have the products of the maritime provinces carried to other portions of Canada and return products brought back, I do not know why we have this interprovincial railway at all. If, when we do get west, other companies use our cars, my hon. friend complains.

Mr. BARKER. You do not seem to know what it means.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I know what it means perfectly. The car mileage is the mileage paid by other companies for the use of the cars belonging to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BARKER. This is in excess of what is paid by the government for the cars of other companies. If it were within $20,000, there would be nothing to say. But the excess is $100,000.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. That is not an answer. If the Canadian Pacific Railway has a large amount of grain to move from the west and they approprite the Intercolonial Railways cars, what would my hon. friend do? He knows that the only remedy would be to make them pay the car mileage. He proposes that instead of properly equipping the Intercolonial Railway for the trade of the maritime provinces we should instead use the cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway down there and pay the company mileage. That is the policy he puts forward as a statesman as a solution of the difficulty he says exists. When my hon. friend criticises the Intercolonial Railway for not charging sufficiently high rates——

Mr. BARKER. I have not said a word about that.
