The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

Eighth report of Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—Mr. Wahn.

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Sixth report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in both official languages—Mr. Serré (on behalf of the chairman).

[English]

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Fourteenth report of Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—Mr. Murphy.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister if we can expect more than this corporal's guard of ministers for the question period before it is over?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not think that question is a point of order at all and it should not have been raised under the guise of one.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIVATE INTERESTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he approves of the decision by the Liberal majority on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to bring down the guillotine on the hearing of representations from the private sector in regard to white paper on taxation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts about the question. The hon. member is asking the Acting Prime Minister to comment on the proceedings of the committee. I wonder whether a question asked in those terms is acceptable. The hon. member is knowledgeable in the rules of the House. Perhaps he might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it government policy to bring down the guillotine on the hearing of representations by the Finance Committee from the private sector on the question of the white paper?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): It is well known that the conduct of committees in matters referred to them is their own responsibility. I have no comment—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McIlraith: —to make—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIlraith: —about the conduct of the committee in its own work on matters referred to it. Any opinion I have on that subject would only be available in the House when the subject matter is being debated here as a proper item of business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am asking the Acting Prime Minister whether any instructions were given with regard to the length of the hearings for representations by the public?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. No government of which I am a member—certainly no Liberal government—would instruct the members of a committee. The only authority empowered to instruct a committee is the House of Commons itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he does not think that the Prime Minister has already done enough to destroy the parliamentary processes without inhibiting free discussion of this matter in this way?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a most improper suggestion by the Acting Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

UNITED STATES POSITION RESPECTING CONTINENTAL POLICY—INCREASED U.S. IMPORTS OF VENEZUELAN OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the not unusual absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources may I direct a question to the acting minister. More than a week ago I asked the minister a question regarding a letter which was sent to 25 United States senators from the office of the President of the United States. The relevant sentence in that letter which I asked him about was the following:

> The national security of the United States requires the conclusion of a comprehensive agreement with Canada with respect to all energy matters and the imposition of some quantitative limitations on the entry of Canadian petroleum pending the conclusion of such a pact.

The minister undertook to ascertain from the United States government whether or not the statement in this letter represented American policy. Can the acting minister now tell the House whether or not he has received a reply from the United States, and what is the nature of that reply?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe that at this point in time a reply has not been received but I would like to check that more accurately.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Has the Canadian government been informed or has it made any inquiries regarding the announcement yesterday by the government of the United States that they are increasing their importation of Venezuelan oil at a time when they are curtailing importation of Canadian oil? Also, can the acting minister tell the House, first of all, what is the size of these increases in imports of Venezuelan oil and whether or not this action is related to the American attempt to influence Canadians into accepting the continental energy policy referred to in the letter from the President's office?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know the size of the change in regard to Venezuela was not announced, and of course I certainly would not comment on the motivation behind the increase as part of the over-all policy changes going on in the United States.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Has the minister had his attention drawn to the statement of the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission in Washington last Wednesday in which he said that the United States is especially short of natural gas and electricity and the Nixon administration is using the carrot of a bigger market for Canadian crude oil to gain more Canadian natural gas and electricity? Also, is the department making any inquiries whether or not the Chairman was stating American policy as was indicated by the letter from President Nixon's office to which I have already referred?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would not read that as a statement of policy at all. Of course we have been aware for some time of the importance to the United States of various kinds of energy available in Canada, particularly natural gas, and have tried to be as aware of its value to the United States as possible in the course of our negotiations and discussions with them.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the Canadian government was either consulted or notified of this announcement?

Mr. Lang: I would want to check that, Mr. Speaker.

BUILDING OF PIPELINE FROM WESTERN CANADA TO EASTERN MARKET

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting minister this question. In view of the important and deleterious effect of the United States announcement yesterday regarding Venezuelan oil on the shipment of western Canadian oil, would the government give new consideration to making public any studies which have been prepared either by the department or by private sources of the advantages or disadvantages of building a pipeline to Montreal so that the Quebec market could be supplied with western oil?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I shall bring that representation to the attention of the minister, although I am surprised that there can be comment on the impact of the change when the size of the change is not known.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are absent, I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Indians of Canada met the cabinet and submitted a brief. Could the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether the government intends to create a separate Indian affairs department?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I can assure the hon. member that the recommendations made to the Prime Minister and the cabinet yesterday were very respectfully received. They were very interesting and very constructive. The government is going to address itself to the examination of the options suggested by the Indian leaders, including that kind of recommendation, but they are so wide-ranging that some time is going to be required, as the Indian leaders fully understand, to examine all the suggestions before any decision is made.

WIDENING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF CLAIMS COMMISSIONER TO COVER CLAIMS OF NON-TREATY INDIANS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a result of the discussions yesterday and previously, is the government considering widening the terms of reference of the Claims Commissioner to include claims of the native people—Indians and Eskimos—in areas of the north not now covered by treaty and which consequently cannot be pressed before the commission?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I note the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, and with respect, suggest that I could not add anything to the answer I gave a minute ago about the wide range of the recommendations made yesterday, all of which must be examined by the government before any pronouncement is made.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the claims that have been advanced, including those by the native people of northern Quebec, will the minister please put this matter before the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the government so that adequate study can be given to this very important and current issue?

ESTABLISHMENT OF CONSULTATIVE BODY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): In view of the fact that the Indian people yesterday made two suggestions, among others, of an immediate nature, one of which related to the creation of a new consultative body mutually acceptable to both the government and the Indians to deal with certain matters because of their urgency, would the minister agree to give that a priority position and arrange to have some statement made by the government on Monday or Tuesday of next week on its response to that request?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I could, of course, make no such commitment in my present capacity, but I shall be glad to draw the representation to the attention of the minister and ask him to provide a response at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can put the same question to the Acting Prime Minister who may have a little bit more authority.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The Acting Prime Minister has nothing to add to what has been said.

POLLUTION

ABILITY OF FOREIGN-REGISTERED SHIPS TO PREVENT OIL SPILLS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. With regard to the press conference held yesterday by Dr. Patrick McTaggart-Cowan concerning the inadequacies of many ships flying flags of convenience in being able to prevent pollution and oil spills, is the government taking steps to bring this matter before an international forum?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we did so in Brussels in November of last year. In addition, as I have advised the House from time to time, we are presently working on considerable and substantial changes in the Canada Shipping Act which will have the effect of bringing about the improvements that Dr. McTaggart-Cowan along with others, myself included, agreed with.

Mr. Aiken: Can the minister indicate when these amendments may be ready for consideration by the House?

Mr. Jamieson: I wish I could be precise, Mr. Speaker. I would question very much if it will be possible to have the entire legislation completed during the current session. What I would hope, however, is that we could table the changes or make them public in some way so that there would be time over the next couple of months for the various interests to comment on them.

CHEDABUCTO BAY—COST OF REMOVING OIL

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Are reports correct that the pollution from the Arrow will cost the people of Canada about $3 million?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no final figure or assessment has been possible yet because the work is still going on. I can certainly say that not all of the amount will be a burden that will have to be borne by the Canadian people. There is a very considerable sum that we know has been earmarked out of insurance funds to offset the expenditures. The legal people in my department and the Department of Justice are now examining other routes that we might take to obtain a larger percentage of compensation from those who are responsible, once the inquiry determines in law who those people are.

CHEDABUCTO BAY—PUBLICATION OF TASK FORCE FINDINGS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Will the research findings of the task force headed by Dr. Patrick McTaggart-Cowan be made public when the minister receives them so that we may have a chance to examine what we hope will be some important new knowledge?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are three companion efforts under way. One is the inquiry by Mr. Justice Hart of Nova Scotia into the cause of the grounding of the Arrow. Some of the evidence has been published already. Second, Mr. Justice Hart will then proceed to conduct an inquiry into the events that occurred subsequent to the grounding of the Arrow and, third, Dr. McTaggart-Cowan is preparing a very comprehensive report along with the other scientists who have been involved in this matter. I expect that the report in the third aspect will be available by about the first of September.

INDUSTRY

MEASURES TO ASSIST AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS FOLLOWING FREEING OF DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Inasmuch as the recent unpegging of the Canadian dollar will have the effect of providing further advantages for the sale of foreign automobiles in the country and hence further aggravate the depressed condition of the automobile industry in Canada, can the minister say whether any offsetting measures are being considered to assist Canadian automobile manufacturers in light of this development and the current slowdown in the sale of passenger cars in Canada which is affecting the employment situation very considerably?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may recall that we had a lengthy debate on this very point. Perhaps the hon. member did not receive the information he is seeking. It seems to me that if additional information is to be given at this time, it should be given to the House by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Mazankowski: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this matter was not dealt with in the debate. I believe it is a very urgent and pressing problem and I think that the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say to the hon. member that that is not a question of privilege. I suggest that the information the hon. member is seeking is of a very general nature. If he has not obtained the information which he believes he is entitled to, may I suggest to him that he might ask whether it will be given to the House by way of a statement on motions. The hon. member might like to inquire whether such a statement is being contemplated.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider making a statement on motions to the House very soon concerning this very urgent and pressing matter which affects many automobile dealers and employees across the country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the hon. member can find a way to ask a question to which I can answer.

Mr. Baldwin: That is impossible.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will try to bring my question down to that level which the minister can understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis: Does the minister consider it an intrusion on his responsibilities as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or on the responsibilities of any other ministers for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to go before the public and suggest that they buy foreign cars?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now rising on a question of privilege. Although I have suggested that a statement ought to be made on motions, the hon. member for Vegreville seems to consider the matter very urgent and the minister seems anxious to reply. Possibly by agreement the minister might be allowed to reply to the question which has been ruled out of order.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that the advantages that Canadian automobile manufacturers and auto parts makers have gained from the auto pact are well known. Even this year exports have increased by 7.7 per cent, as reported in yesterday's Globe and Mail. Another very brilliant article in the same paper reported on the tremendous progress which had been made by the Industry. This article was, I am told, written before revaluation. The effects of revaluation are not yet clear. I have consulted with a number of auto parts makers, but they do not know exactly. We think that because of the advantages gained, because of the progress made in previous years and because of the government's programs for general adjustment, etc., they are, I assume, in a position to cope rather well with the new situation. We are willing and eager to help if some of them get into difficulty.

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate the answer of the minister. In view of the fact that sales of domestic passenger cars have decreased by 20 per cent while sales of foreign passenger cars have increased by 27 per cent, does the minister not consider this a matter of great urgency?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is obviously argumentative. It is not acceptable in those terms.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister explain to the House what advantages there are to the auto pact in the purchase of Volkswagens as recommended by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I think we are engaging in a field of debate. I respectfully suggest to both hon. members that this is the kind of information which ought normally to be included in a statement on motions.

AGRICULTURE

AVAILABILITY OF PAPER ON SUPPLY

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since supply forms the basis of much of the current agricultural legislation, can the minister indicate whether the paper commissioned on supply and not reported in the official task force report can be expected in the near future? Also, will it be made available immediately to the members of the House?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when I understand more clearly what the hon. member is referring to I will see if I can obtain this paper from the task force. Following that, I will see whether it is the type of paper that should be made public.

GRAIN

PAYMENT OF ELEVATOR AGENTS FOR ASSISTANCE IN FILING OPERATION LIFT INFORMATION

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): My question is for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that elevator agents are expected to assist grain producers in the filing of necessary information for Operation Lift and in view of the fact that this additional workload comes at a time of year when the elevator agents already have a very heavy workload, can the minister indicate whether some reasonable remuneration will be made to elevator agents in recognition of their performance of these added duties?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the work involved in completing these forms was discussed with the various elevator companies. They gladly agreed to take on this work as part of their regular customer services.

Mr. Burton: Has this matter been discussed with the employees of the various elevator companies? Have any representations been received from any employees of elevator companies or employee organizations? If so, what has been the response of the minister or the Wheat Board to the representations?

Mr. Lang: No representations have come to my attention, Mr. Speaker. I will have to check to see whether any have been received by the Wheat Board or my office that have not yet reached me. Our discussions, of course, were with the companies.

[Translation]

DISCUSSION WITH PREMIER THATCHER OF BARTERING OF WHEAT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

Since the premier of Saskatchewan said that the minister was naïve regarding the present situation in Saskatchewan, has the minister had talks with Premier Thatcher about the barter of wheat against other commodities from foreign countries and has he taken a new approach to the problem?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): There have been many exchanges between myself and several of my colleagues and the government of Saskatchewan, and we have not revised our position in connection with the dangers involved in certain transactions which were suggested by Saskatchewan.

WHEAT BOARD DEMAND FOR REPAYMENT OF CASH ADVANCES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board following a question I asked him yesterday, now that he has had an opportunity to familiarize himself with the recent action of the Canadian Wheat Board in sending certain letters to farmers in connection with overdue accounts. Will the minister advise the House whether it is the intention of the Wheat Board to add interest on accounts due when farmers are unable to deliver wheat to repay their cash advances?

[Mr. Burton.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): It is not the intention of the Wheat Board to treat as in default and therefore as subject to interest charges anyone who has been delivering grain as opportunity presented. The board issued a press release affirming this situation on June 4.

Mr. Gleave: May we have a copy of the document or of the decision made by the Canadian Wheat Board? Further, will the board now write letters to those farmers of whom it demanded payment of principal and interest, pointing out to them that as long as they have wheat on hand they need not comply with the request which was made?

Mr. Lang: Without doubt there has been confusion raised in the minds of some of the producers. I will check to see whether the release by the board has adequately dealt with this confusion. It should be forcefully stated that the Wheat Board had intended to draw to the attention of producers only the amount outstanding from the 1968-69 crop year and has now affirmed that as long as producers are making deliveries they will not be placed in default.

PROVISION OF FOUR-BUSHEL QUOTA TO ALL ELEVATOR POINTS BY JULY 31

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Can the minister still guarantee a four-bushel quota by July 31 to all country elevator points?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): We have said a number of times that the four-bushel quota should be available to all producers for the crop year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN OFFER RESPECTING PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the offer made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in connection with a United Nations peacekeeping force in the Middle East, may I inquire as to the nature of the Canadian offer? Is one battalion now available or is a battalion ready on a stand-by basis? What is the extent of the offer?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I do not know any more about this offer than does the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I believe it would be preferable to await the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when no doubt further clarification will be possible.

Mr. Fairweather: May we be assured that Canada will respond to requests for peacekeeping in the Middle East or anywhere else only if they originate with the Security Council and after ground rules have been clearly established?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I understand that such requests generally originate with the Security Council.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Will the minister advise the House whether he has been consulted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ascertain whether sufficient forces are available to carry out any commitment which the Secretary of State might make or offer to make?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the hon. member's question is in order when he asks whether there has been consultation between two ministers. Perhaps the question might be rephrased.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. gentleman gave us to understand he was not aware of the nature of the offer. My question, naturally, is: are there sufficient troops available to carry out a commitment of the kind suggested? It has been indicated that there are not.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Even though you did not allow the question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will permit me to answer it. I would say there are sufficient troops to take care of the kind of operation envisaged. We have discussed on many occasions—the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of National Defence and the cabinet, as a matter of fact—what type of commitment could be undertaken, what facilities would be required and the number of troops likely to be involved. I am sure the kind of offer about which the Secretary of State for External Affairs was talking could be met by the resources available to us.

TRANSPORT

NOTICE BY RAILWAYS OF INTENTION TO ABANDON PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister use his considerable influence to request that Canadian National Railways extend the courtesy of informing a community well in advance of its intention to cancel passenger train service and not adopt a secretive policy as is being followed in cancelling the Toronto-Chicago service which is Sarnia's only international train service?

Mr. Speaker: It is obvious that the hon. member's question has been put in the form of a submission. He will have to assume that the representation has been noted.

Mr. Cullen: May I make a supplementary submission, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: According to the rules, the hon. member is only entitled to a related submission.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: It is related, Mr. Speaker. Would the government give consideration to the passing of legislation requiring the CNR and the CPR to return property to the people of Canada each time they reduce a service?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABANDONMENT OF RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICES—SUPPLYING OF EXPENSE FIGURES

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Bearing in mind the very large number of applications made by the railway companies to abandon passenger services, would the minister consider introducing amending legislation which would oblige the railways to supply all the figures with regard to expenses in connection with these applications for withdrawal of service?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): This question has been raised on previous occasions and the objections are well known to the hon. member. Figures are provided for the Canadian Transport Commission and are taken into account by that commission when decisions are made following public hearings.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS OF AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): As a means of throwing further light on the question of abandonment of railway passenger service, would the minister use his good offices to ensure that the annual reports of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are placed before the Transport Committee for consideration?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I answered this question a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, when I indicated that it is entirely within the power of the committee to set its own schedule. I understand there is an important matter now before the Transport Committee. I do not believe there will be a long delay in getting these other matters attended to once this subject has been dealt with.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EFFECT ON PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF FORCES ABROAD OF INCREASED VALUE OF DOLLAR

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Are Canadian Forces stationed abroad receiving the full benefit of the increased value of the Canadian dollar since it has been allowed to float? What is the situation as far as their pay and allowances are concerned?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): It is a floating situation, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLean: May I ask whether Canadian Forces abroad are being paid in Canadian dollars or whether they are paid in the currency of the country concerned at the rate of exchange current on pay-day?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I would have to check.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MONTREAL—BOMB EXPLOSIONS—CO-OPERATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE WITH OTHER FORCES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the Solicitor General in his capacity as the minister reporting to the House for the RCMP. Has he had an opportunity to check the serious allegations that the RCMP is not co-operating with other police forces in connection with investigation of the outrages in Montreal in the last few days?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Immediately I saw the story published in the paper I had this matter checked into and find—

Mr. Fairweather: Is it a canard?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it is. That is precisely the point, and today's newspapers so indicate.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—MEETING WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It refers to a question I asked the minister earlier this week regarding a meeting with the shoe industry, at which time the minister indicated he would be having such a meeting. May I ask whether the date for that meeting has been set and whether he will be attending that meeting with an agenda?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, the date as far as I know has not been set but I have asked that a meeting be arranged and I have heard noises to the effect that it was being arranged. Apparently the industry is as pleased to see the Minister of Finance and myself as we are to see the industry. The agenda has not been fixed. A report has already been published on the subject by the shoe industry but the meeting will be of an investigatory nature.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MINISTERS' ATTENDANCE ROSTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Government House Leader. I welcome him back to the House and I hope he notes that in his absence we made considerable progress. Has the government officially dispensed with the revised roster issued on October 20 last, because according to that list seven ministers are absent today, or does the government intend to dispense with this phase of parliamentary activity altogether?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the responsible departments the hon. member will realize that in particular several of my colleagues are attending the finance ministers conference at Winnipeg. I can assure him that the roster system will continue in force and that if he has any questions for any of the departments set down for today he can ask his questions.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, this question is prompted by the fact that we must be in a position to be able to prepare ourselves for this phase of parliamentary activity. Does the government intend to revise the list in light of the experience of very poor attendance as a result of the present list?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suppose we might review it in light of the experience of the very poor attendance of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Horner: The Leader of the Opposition is not responsible for any department.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Now that the government has seen fit to use closure in the committee hearings on the white paper on taxation, is this an indication that it is prepared to use closure in respect of the resulting legislation in order to get it through the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ALLEGED RACIAL DISCRIMINATION AT GOOSE BAY U.S. AIR FORCE BASE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, some days ago I directed a question to the Solicitor General regarding complaints by the National Association for the Advancement of Coloured Peoples concerning racial discrimination at the United States air force base at Goose Bay, Labrador. In view of the fact that Canadians have now expressed concern regarding the investigation by security police of the United States of Canadian girls who are dated by coloured servicemen, a fact which has now been confirmed by one of the American sergeants, I should like to ask the Solicitor General if he has looked into this matter and can give the House any report on the result of his investigation?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being quite thoroughly looked into. I am unable to confirm or deny the hon. member's allegations or the information he has but in any event I hope to be able to have a report on the matter brought forward. I regret it has not been possible to do so before now but it is simply because the report was not completed.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES RESPECTING U.S. GOOSE BAY AIR FORCE BASE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that the Solicitor General the other day said that only those matters relating to Canadian jurisdiction could be looked into, would the minister undertake to table the agreement between Canada and the United States with relation to the setting up of the U.S. air force base at Goose Bay?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if there is such an agreement between Canada and the United States I would be willing to table it, but I am wondering whether this agreement was undertaken during the war because at that time it would have been with the British government. I am not quite sure about this. Whatever document we have I am willing to table.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SALE OF HMCS "BONAVENTURE"—OFFER BY JAMES MARTIN—DISPOSAL TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. It has something to do with a floating situation which has been pegged. It concerns HMCS Bonaventure. Has the government received any offers for the HMCS Bonaventure?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I believe that through the Department of Supply and Services we have received a few offers. I do not know whether they are being actively considered. Some of them were quite challenging and involved things like bringing the Bonaventure to the western prairies.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, would the minister please state whether he plans to accept the offer of $500,000 by James Martin of Edmonton who plans to peg it at the west coast as a recreational centre?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think this question is in order. If the hon. member considers this to be a matter of urgency he might wish to ask the question at the time of adjournment.

[Later:]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that asked a moment ago by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. It is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister of National Defence give his assurance that the Bonaventure will be sold only to Canadian interests and not to some foreign power which may use it to add to its own naval force?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, it would be inconsequential if I were to give such an assurance because we have offered it for sale to many foreign governments.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WALK-OUT BY LINESMEN AND DOCK WORKERS —ACTION TO PREVENT SIMILAR OCCURRENCES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Transport. It deals with the wildcat strike called on the St. Lawrence Seaway which lasted for 36 to 40 hours and tied up 30 to 40 ships. What action is his department considering taking to avoid such an occurrence in the future?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, about the only thing we can do is ask any employees who are involved not to undertake wildcat strikes which are not known of until they occur.

Mr. Scott: Does the minister consider that any action will be taken by the companies to compensate them for the loss they suffered while their ships were tied up, probably due to the negligence of the department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF GOLD MINE, GERALDTON, ONT.— ACTION TO ASSIST COMMUNITY

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister without Portfolio from Windsor West. It was announced yesterday that the MacLeod-Mosher division of Lakeshore Mines in Geraldton, Ontario, will close its gold mining operation at the end of this month. More than 200 men will be affected by this closure and the economy of Geraldton will be seriously hurt. Company officials claim they are forced to close as a consequence of the freeing of the dollar. What steps is the government prepared to take to assist this community which will be so adversely affected?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being looked into not only by the Department of Finance but also by the Department of Manpower and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I hope to have further information for the hon. member early next week.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

COMMISSION CHAIRMAN, HARRINGTON LAKE AND OTTAWA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to congratulate him again for doing an excellent job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell: I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister can answer my question of last Friday and report on any progress in respect of unresolved Ottawa matters such as the Fullerton dispute, the takeover of Harrington Lake and the pollution in the Ottawa River?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am aware that pollution is a very important subject before parliament, I think it would be quite improper for me to seek to give a treatise in answer to a question on orders of the day.

Mr. Baldwin: We like you when you are improper.

Mr. Fairweather: Are you having a garden party for Mr. Fullerton?

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO CONDITIONS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the potentially explosive situation in the penitentiaries because of the conditions prevailing in some of these institutions across Canada and the recent suicide of a 19-year old at Prince Albert penitentiary, would the Solicitor General initiate a public inquiry into the conditions prevailing in penitentiaries and the increase in the number of suicides that have taken place there?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I welcome the members of the House of Commons committee on Justice and Legal Affairs who have just returned early this morning, I believe, from a tour of four or five of the institutions in the penitentiary service in western Canada. I have not yet had an opportunity to obtain information from any of them as to what they found, but I will take the hon. member's suggestion under consideration after I find out what the standing committee has learned on this matter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INVESTIGATION OF FREIGHT TRAIN DERAILMENTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, may I raise a brief point of order before I ask my question. I was a rather heavy smoker and I just gave it up, so when I rise in future it will be to catch Your Honour's eye to ask a question.

My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the extraordinary number of CNR freight train derailments in Newfoundland in recent months, in the latest of which a number of cattle ended up as hamburger, would the minister have his department investigate and report on these derailments in the interest of saving human lives in the future?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I say that once again there have been what we call usual discussions. I think it will be found there is general agreement with respect to today's debate under Standing Order 58 for the principal speakers for each party to be allowed 20 minutes and all the rest 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT AGRICULTURAL POLICIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave moved:

That this House calls upon the government to reverse its present policies which have deliberately depressed the agricultural economy of this country, causing excessive unemployment, lack of income, slow economic growth and little hope for the future, and this House urges the government to take positive measures to ensure a dynamic rural community as an essential component of Canadian society.

He said: In speaking to this motion, I may say that our objective is to bring to the attention of this House and also of the country the situation that faces farmers as well as the urgent importance of providing for the needs of farmers in this country. The recent revaluation of the dollar threw into rather sharp focus the need to take measures to protect the income of farmers and to see that they share in the opportunities for improving their standard of living within the Canadian economy. The fact that when the dollar was revalued the offering price of wheat immediately dropped some 6 cents a bushel throws into sharp relief what happens when the fiscal policies of this or any other government are controlled and directed toward objectives that often are not helpful to the farmer. The same thing happened with regard to the sale of beef. The revaluation of the dollar had a generally depressing effect on many parts of agriculture. There was intrinsically and basically good reason for the government taking the action that it did with regard to the relationship of our dollar to other currencies, but there is a great contrast between the haste with which they moved to protect the textile industry and their lack of action to protect the farming industry, more particularly the grain industry.

Undoubtedly, the same pattern will be found in our export trade. At the time the International Grains Arrangement was negotiated, and this was a transaction between governments, the minimum price established was $1.95½. The government of the day, the same government we have now, saw fit to support the price and to guarantee it to the farmers of western Canada for a relatively short period of time. They took good care to point out that it would be supported for a relatively short period of time. I say that at this time there are even better reasons for the institution of price support to bolster and maintain farm income even at that level, and this despite the fact that costs to farmers have increased since the agreement was signed. Indeed, the task force on agriculture recommended that we do away with the regular reports of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which reflect the cost of goods and services to farmers. Whether or not the task force was right remains open to debate. What they said was that the index is out of date and does not accurately reflect the real costs with which farmers are faced at the present time. In the light of these facts, surely there is excellent reason for supporting the price of grain, and indeed of other farm products, and for ensuring that the farmers remain at least on an even keel during this period of rapid transition.

I would say that the trade programs which we have followed have been ad hoc. From what I can see, there has not been a definite pattern in our trade programs. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), on coming back from a trip to New Zealand and Australia a year ago, I believe, announced to the House that New Zealand beef and meat products would have increased access to Canada. This is what happened. According to the information which I received from the Department of Agriculture, our meat products imports from Australia increased from 9,306,000 pounds in 1967 to some 29,388,000 pounds in 1969, and from New Zealand the increase was from 5,506,000 pounds in 1967 to 74,803,000 pounds in 1969. These are pretty substantial increases, and according to press reports much of this product is moving on through to the United States. I inquired as to how much was moving through to the United States, but was unable to get any figure.

Surely we ought to have a clear, constructive approach to our trade policies. Those in farming and agriculture do not suggest that we can build a fence around Canada, with trade patterns as they exist in this day and age. That is not possible, but we could have a constructive policy, and we could have an idea of where we are going. At a point in time when we are saying to the western farmer, "You cannot seed 29 million acres of wheat each year, or 24 million acres of wheat each year, or even possibly 20 million acres of wheat each year," we have looked with approval upon an increase in the importation of meat products into Canada. Those who are familiar with the economy of western Canada know that beef and pork, especially beef, can provide an alternative use for the land which farmers are advised must be removed from wheat.

We are advised by the task force that what acreage must be reduced. The government has instituted a very severe program to reduce the wheat acreage in the west. At the same time, the task force has advised the dairy farmer in eastern Canada, in certain instances, to move from dairy production into beef production. We know that there are two markets for Canadian red meats. One of those markets is in Canada, and the other is in the United States. These are the only two markets upon which we can depend. The United States is the export market which we can penetrate, but we do not advance our farmers' cause if we permit, and even more than that encourage, importation of red meats into our domestic market, then send some of those exports into the United States. This may eventually cause some restrictions to be placed on our export of red meats to the U.S. market.

It is about time we had a more clear definition of Canada's policy on this aspect of trade, as well as on other aspects. But at the same time, and to the credit of the government, we know they are providing credit facilities in an effort to find increasing markets for our grain and wheat. Again to the government's credit, they have negotiated toward a better tariff structure with Japan so that we can move more effectively into that market with our grain. Mr. Speaker, let us put together a more complete policy covering the whole picture, so that the farmer may have some confidence as to what his objective may be, what he may aim for, and where he may safely invest money which he has to borrow at high interest rates. Let us give the farmer a clear idea of the markets available to him.

Compare this policy which I have just described with the policy which is applied to the automobile industry, and it can be seen that there is quite a contrast. In the one, we have a trade policy which permits those who are investing to have a good idea of the market potential which has been reached by agreement between countries. As a result of that agreement with our southern neighbour, investors here can gear up to meet that market. But the western farmer who is advised by the government to move into beef production may say, "Wait a minute; what kind of imports from other countries must I compete against? What kind of costs am I to anticipate? How secure is the market?" These are questions the farmer asks himself when he tools up. What is the monetary policy of the government if I invest, and how far can I look ahead?

The government should look toward stabilizing income. Certainly, I think that it is the intention of the government, through the provisions of Bill C-197, to look toward a stabilizing factor in marketing across Canada. This will have a positive effect, but as against that when I asked the minister questions about the cash advance program I discovered that farmers who have followed this program are now facing demands for repayment, and have no way of meeting those demands. This is an inconsistency in policy which should be removed. We need a consistent approach to the type of farming which we hope to have, and to the type of capital organization that we desire in Canada. I am going a bit far afield, Mr. Speaker, but the task force on agriculture decided to deal with this aspect. It must have been within their terms of reference and they must have thought it important. Unfortunately, as I read the report of the task force I judge that they favour an increase in corporate farming, larger and larger aggregates of feed lots concentrated in certain places, and feel this would be a workable solution to the farm problem. I doubt very much that it will be.

The task force said that we should contemplate many farmers going out of farming. It talked about the older people retiring, and it talked about retraining the younger people who are in farming so that they may seek other jobs. I doubt that this is a constructive policy. It grieves me that such a policy should be proposed, and that the government may readily accept it, at a time when we have a high rate of unemployment, which is now running at about 6.5 per cent or 6.6 per cent of the labour force. I suppose if you include those who are in manpower retraining programs the level would touch 7 per cent. To suggest that we take people out of farming at this time, or at least until this economic factor is corrected, is simply not a realistic or practical way of approaching things. At a time when the problem of pollution is facing our cities and urban centres, it is impractical to suggest that we concentrate feeding and livestock activity near such centres. It takes ten times as much effort to look after the disposal of waste from a beef critter as from a human being. With 30,000 or 40,000 head of livestock in feed lots close to our urban centres the pollution in our streams and waterways would certainly be increased.

I do not think that this country appreciates the contribution of the individual farmer to its wellbeing. My serious advice to members of this House and the people of this country is to take a good hard look at what the individual farmer has done. Considering his contribution, we should take measures to see that the 400,000 or 500,000 who are left can survive and operate. I am not making a plea for subsistence farming, Mr. Speaker, I am making a plea for the ordinary farmer with workable amounts of capital who is ready to put his money and time on the line, who is ready to buck the tiger and feed the Canadian people. And they have been jolly well fed, Mr. Speaker.

The government seems to believe that the farmer can stand all kinds of competition without protection, that he can stand the winds of ill fortune and whatever is thrown at him and still come up smiling and survive. But he won't. I do not know how many of them will fail to survive the Lift program but I am sure it will be a considerable number. The government and the minister may consider the program a success but I am here to say to this House, Mr. Speaker, that the more it succeeds, the more it will fail and the greater will be the disaster.

I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) stated one day that the government had received the initial report of the task force some time in February. If this is so, I fail to understand why they consider doing in one year what the task force recommended they should do in three. It is unfair to force the whole impact of such a program upon the farmer in one short crop year when it would have been difficult enough for him to cope with it over a three-year period, which is what the task force suggested. In these programs the government should take into consideration not only its own objectives but the situation of the farmer. After all, farmers are people. As Shakespeare said, "If you cut me, do I not bleed?" This is where the short term ad hoc program failed to come to grips and failed to take account of the needs of the farmer.

Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that on the cost side the government has had some reports which offered it an approach to some of the needs of agriculture. The Barber commission report indicated that we should do something about the cost of machinery and made several suggestions. If any of these suggestions have been implemented they have not been reported to this House. One suggestion was for a reverse dumping duty but apparently the government has decided against this although this would have been a most effective tool.

Reports of the Ontario food commission stated flatly that there was payola—I suppose bribery is the proper term—in the wholesaling of food and food products of western—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I have to interrupt the hon. member since his time appears to have expired. He can continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Call it five o'clock.

Mr. Gleave: Fine, I don't mind. If it bores you, I am sorry.

May I make a correction, Mr. Speaker? I said the payola in western Canada, but I should have said eastern Canada since the Ontario food commission was investigating a situation that existed in eastern Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Shameful.

Mr. Gleave: They said flatly that there was discrimination against local producers in Ontario. I have no knowledge of any action by the federal government to correct this situation or to demand an investigation by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. The government should insist that these farmers at least have access to a competitive market, Mr. Speaker, not a controlled market. They are being denied the ordinary right of a Canadian to take their products into the marketplace and face those with whom they seek to compete.

I appreciate the House giving me this extension of time, Mr. Speaker, and in conclusion I want to say that these are the areas which require consideration—the over-all policy, costs, marketing and fiscal policy. A fiscal policy that throws hundreds of thousands of Canadians onto the labour market without employment has its effect on agriculture. Agriculture is the other side of the picture and if it is in a depressed state affects unemployed people in Brantford, say, and other places in Ontario.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): We, the members of the official opposition, certainly wish to support the motion put forward by the hon. member of the New Democratic Party on this opposition day. The motion indicates that the present policies of the government are far from appropriate to meet the present demands facing farmers today in all segments of the agricultural business. When dealing with agriculture policies, one is left wondering what actually is the basic policy of this government. When they took power six years ago they indicated in speeches before groups interested in the agriculture industry that they had the answers. Not only did the government have the answers, but it had the determination to make these solutions effective immediately. The government has been in power for nearly seven years and the agricultural industry of this country has had the opportunity to assess the results of this aggressive and dynamic approach to agriculture. Well, Mr. Speaker, although the government has been in power almost seven years I may say, without fear of contradiction, that every single segment of our agricultural industry today, with the possible exception of that engaged in beef and pork production, is in dire economic straits the like of which have not been experienced since the 1930's.

Mr. Olson: There are a few more exceptions, you know.

• (12:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: The minister should resign.

Mr. Danforth: So grave is the situation that some farmers must now decide whether they will seek and be able to obtain the credit which is necessary if they are to continue farming for just one more year.

Mr. McCleave: The government ought to resign.

Mr. Danforth: The policy of the present government and its immediate predecessor has been to lower tariff barriers that have prevented the importation of food from other countries. This is the government's policy and these barriers will be lowered on a progressive basis. It has said, and the process has already begun, that it will withdraw basic subsidies on farm products. Those subsidies have been built up over the years in order to make equal the lot of the farmer and those in other segments of the Canadian economy, and in order that his living standards might be the same as the standards of those who engage in industry. But the government has indicated that it will withdraw subsidies.

What has happened to the dairy industry of Canada, that industry which has always been the pride and joy of Canadians? What has happened to it? In the past five years we have seen the dispersement of, not of hundreds, but thousands of dairy herds in Canada.

Mr. McCleave: Shame.

Mr. Danforth: Farmers in Canada today are producing enough to meet demands only because, as a result of the research undertaken by the Department of Agriculture into methods of feeding and production, production per farm unit has increased. The government's dairy policy is almost beyond comprehension. Dairy farmers in Canada, especially those involved with the manufacturing milk side of the industry, are told not only how much milk to produce but are fined if they produce more than their quotas. This is the government's policy at a time when the consumers of the nation are paying the highest price for milk in the history of Canada and when we are importing powdered milk from other countries.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Shame.

Mr. Danforth: That if what is happening in the dairy industry, that industry of which Canada was so proud.

We produce the finest grain in the world and had a tremendous share of the international market. Yet the government is now bribing farmers not to produce grain. When I say "bribing" I use the word kindly, because I think that blackmailing would be closer to the truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: The government is bribing farmers with their own money.

Mr. Danforth: What has happened in the tobacco industry, that industry that is worth half a billion to us? The government is actively curbing the use of tobacco. I do not quarrel with that when health hazards are involved; but we must remember that Canada is one of the prime tobacco producers of the world. The industry is concentrated in regions of Canada where the technology of tobacco growing is second to none. Instead of condemning and selling an industry down river, is it not logical to expect the government to promote research in order that we might develop a tobacco acceptable to people which would not contain alleged harmful ingredients? This is not impossible and could be done through plant breeding and other processes. Our plant breeders with the Department of Agriculture are second to none and, if they were seized with this problem, I do not doubt that they could accomplish this. But they are not told to undertake this research, and I think the government ought to take the initiative in this regard.

What do we find in our livestock industry? Many farmers are being kept on the farm today only because they produce beef, poultry and swine.

Mr. Olson: What about corn?

Mr. Danforth: Since the livelihoods of so many depend on these commodities, you would think that the government would adopt promotional measures to make sure that these parts of the agricultural industry do not fall victim to the government's economic policies. By actually encouraging the importation of poultry, beef, pork, turkeys and even of eggs, the government is crippling the only segments of agriculture that remain on the blue side of the ledger today. I think the hon. member who preceded me was correct when he said that the agricultural industry in Canada cannot survive unless the government adopts a long-range policy that will encourage the long-range investments which are necessary if we are to carry on the type of agriculture that will meet the world demand, world prices and world competition. But this should be the task of the government.

What is happening in trade? By its actions, this government has demonstrated that it no longer thinks Canadian agriculture important. I say this advisedly. The government is doing two things which actively demonstrate my point. First, it is entering into trade agreements involving development in some of the minor nations under which we shall accept agricultural products in return for heavy equipment. Second, the government is adopting today what it calls a new policy of supply management, whatever that may mean. What the government means by supply-management is that it will curtail Canadian production to meet the needs only of our domestic consumption and our dwindling segment of the international market. When it talks of supply-management it is talking about restricted, regimented and directed Canadian farming. Formerly, such a policy was unheard of in Canada. Farmers were free agents. They ran their own businesses and, rightly or wrongly, made their own decisions. This government feels that farmers are no longer capable of making those decisions and that those decisions must be made for them. That is the basis of the legislation we are considering today, and that is not right. In a day and age when we import almost $1 billion worth of foodstuffs a year, the government talks of restricted farming.

If we had an additional $1 billion market for our farm products, we would not have this economic trouble today. An additional $1 billion worth of trade would be a means of survival for the Canadian industry. The government talks about restricted trade, restricted production and supply management. What are their solutions to these problems? The government says we should have this policy. We should not have as many farmers as we now have. There should be a policy whereby the farmers can be painlessly removed from farming. What an easy solution for the agricultural problems today! Take the farmers out of farming and the problems will disappear.

The world is going to need more food than in the past, especially proteins. Although Canada can produce an abundance of proteins, this government wishes to take the farmers off the farms and put them into the already large and sprawling cities. They will become welfare cases. The government talks about retraining. The average age of the Canadian farmer is in the late forties or early fifties. Are these the people we are going to retrain? Are we going to give them jobs at a time when we are suffering from our highest unemployment? It is ridiculous!

We in the official opposition not only support the principle of the motion before the House today, but we endorse it. I hope that after nearly seven years, one member from the government side will come forward with even one idea as to how the agriculture industry might be served by the present government. If that is done, Mr. Speaker, it will be a first for this government.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I was quite pleased when I had a look at the motion put this morning because it states a realistic view. It says that the agricultural economy of the country is depressed and I agree with that. Indeed, this is not the complete picture. One has only to travel a bit throughout the country to realize that farmers are also depressed, not because they are unable to make their farm produce or to better manage their herd, but because, on the one hand, the production costs are constantly increasing and, on the other hand, the net income is decreasing year after year.

Mr. Speaker, businessmen in our rural areas who are used to doing business with farmers also suffer from those conditions, because the farmers are unable to buy the materials necessary to the maintenance of their farm buildings. Consequently, businessmen are worried when they see the local industry losing ground like that.

Another factor that is responsible for the considerable increase of farm production costs is the steady increase of farm implement prices. The price of spare parts keeps increasing also, but we are hoping that following the Barber report the government will take the necessary measures allowing farmers to obtain farm machinery and spare parts at a decent price.

In the province of Quebec, there is a basic industry, namely the dairy industry. I would like to speak briefly on it because demonstrations are still taking place in that province. Farmers are not that happy with the government dairy policy for the dairy year 1970-71, neither were they indeed with the policy for the year 1969-70.

Mr. Speaker, more than 80 per cent of Quebec farmers are milk or cream producers, and more than 60 per cent of their income comes from the sale of dairy products or livestock of the dairy type, and so on. That production is truly consistent with the natural avocation of our farm community and its progress reflects the unquestionable ability of a great number of our farmers in this field. The dairy policy is therefore of utmost importance for the province of Quebec, and until very recently, I was really confident that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would agree to some changes in the dairy policy. But after his visit to Richmond, I am a little more pessimistic. However, I still ask in the name of industrial milk producers that the dairy policy for 1970-71 be reconsidered and improved so that farmers who are really engaged in dairy production, those who are going to be true producers, will receive an income in keeping with their efforts.

Therefore, farmers are not satisfied and for the progressive producers, the dairy policy represents a step backwards because of the penalty imposed on any production increase of output, even though such an increase is often required to ensure better use of resources.

The moment the government agreed to set a fixed budget for the dairy industry and allowed that policy to retain both its economic and so-called social aspects, it had to strike at the producers who were on the path of progress. This is indeed what it did. This move is a perfect illustration of the situation described earlier. It is unfortunate, because we were under the impression that we might gradually dispel the confusion already mentioned and which, once again, dealt a severe blow at the efficient and professional producers.

The price support policy of finished products at the same level as last year is not a true indication of the actual prices paid to producers. The cut in subsidies paid to producers and the penalty imposed on any production increase will seriously affect the income of farmers who are facing increased costs.

This summer, the cost-price squeeze will thus become even tighter, because in several fields, the prices of the commodities needed by the farmers to produce during a production cycle keep going up. The state may justify its decision by pointing out the imbalance between the supply and demand of dairy products. Such is the inconvenience of managing an industry solely through a pricing policy without due regard for that industry's economy of production. Such a method is likely to cause serious injustice to some categories of producers and to a professionnal group as a whole.

There is no doubt that agriculture is an essential industry in our Canadian economy, and it is extremely important that all levels of government take the necessary steps to ensure its survival and to give producers the assurance that, not only will they be able to earn a good living, but that they will have their due share of the national income and of the benefits of a "just society" in which I still believe. I am convinced that the government will sustain its efforts with a view to establishing a "just society" before it is too late.

Recently I had the occasion in Paris, "the City of Light", to witness a demonstration that amounted to a riot. I was astonished to see how fast things happened. In fact, at 2.10 p.m. everything was quiet and at 2.15 a full-scale civil war was in progress. Barrels of oil and gas were spilled in the streets and set on fire; store windows were shattered; in a word, it was havoc. I asked one of the demonstrators why he was behaving that way. He answered that he did not know, that he was acting on his leader's orders.

Those European leaders seem to share the views of some Canadian leaders. In fact, it was reported in Montreal recently that people obey certain leaders implicitly. That is dangerous. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary to take those measures designed to improve the lot of the workers, including the agricultural workers, so as to restore their faith in our country.

A census was taken of approximately half of Canada's farms. These are involved in growing wheat and raising livestock. They include some 20,000 commercial dairy farms and approximately 10,000 smaller farms, producing grain other than wheat. About 80 p. 100 of the country's arable land is in western Canada, most of it now given over to the production of wheat, rapeseed and flax-seed.

I saw the same thing in France. I visited vast expanses and I met peasants who are unhappy because they do not get a fair deal. They do not get the justice to which they are entitled and one gains the impression that there is a climate of dissent and that the farmers are dissatisfied.

In my opinion, the government, which has always been progressive and has always been able to take the required decisions at the most serious times, and I am convinced that the members of the opposition will agree with that, should immediately take action to further develop the economy as a whole and garantee a possibility of survival, particularly to the agriculture economy, so that young people between the ages of 18 and 22 now seeking jobs may have hope in our country and the faith they need because at that age if they are not busy doing good things they will do bad ones. That is the tendency that prevails now in the province of Quebec and in other provinces as well.

As a matter of fact, not too long ago, young people sitting in the galleries unexpectedly interrupted the proceedings of the House by their yelling and their shouting. And it is my opinion that if this motion is not seriously taken into consideration and if recommendations are not made and implemented, we are heading for a situation still more serious and more disastrous. It is likely that people will then be inclined to listen to the leader, without knowing why, and I think it is where it may become dangerous.

To turn back to agriculture and to prove that it is a basic industry, an essential one, I should like to quote a few figures. Total farming investments amount to about $22.4 billion, nearly $41,000 per worker, and break down as follows: 71 per cent for real estate, 18 per cent for machinery and 11 per cent for livestock and poultry. Crop fields cover a total of 174 million acres, of which 76 per cent are owned by farmers and 24 per cent are rented.

New capital investments amount to nearly $1 billion annually, that is approximately 8 per cent of the total of new investments in Canada. The Farm Credit Corporation, a government agency, is the main source for mortgage loans and it stands for two thirds of the total amount.

This means therefore that agriculture does not get its fair share, because farmers are obliged to mortgage their farm buildings to the Corporation for two thirds of their value.

In 1948 1,096,000 people were employed in agriculture, that is 22 per cent of the total labour force in Canada then. Today, there are about 546,000, that is 7 per cent of the total labour force.

Since 1951, the number of farm workers has remained more or less stationary at about 500,000 which, in 1968, was 18 per cent of the total labour force.

According to Mr. Furnis, an economist, the main change in Canada's agricultural economy since 1944 has been the increasing dependency of the non-farm sector on supply and services. About 338,000 people are now employed in food processing industries, tobacco plants, in the production of leather goods, machinery and fertilizers as well as in the wholesale trade of farm products.

About 18 per cent of all the products shipped by rail are farm products, thus proving the importance of agriculture. The transportation industry provides jobs for a great many workers. One fourth of all the products shipped through the St. Lawrence Seaway, are farm products. The consumption of gas, diesel oil and lubricants accounts for 17 per cent of the total sales of all fuel used by cars and trucks.

In the wholesale trade, 52,000 people which means about one person out of four, are involved in the sale of farm products, food commodities and farm supplies.

In 1967, agriculture accounted for $2.5 billion or 4.6 per cent of the gross national product which totalled at that time $54 billion. Agriculture is still the main primary industry of Canada, coming ahead of lumber, fisheries, mines and oil.

Employment in agriculture represented 7.3 per cent of the total, slightly more than its contribution to the GNP. That is characteristic of the industry, the average income being slightly lower in agriculture than in other sectors.

Last year, Canadian exports of farm products amounted to $1¼ billion, roughly 11 per cent of total exports, compared with 20 per cent in the early 60s. That means that we are losing rather than gaining ground in the field of exports.

Canadian farmers paid approximately $175 million in property tax last year, of which 60 per cent in income tax. It is therefore obvious that the property tax is very unfair.

To my mind, the buildings and the land should be exempted from tax seeing they are the work tools of the farmer. The doctor who goes around with his small bag to visit the sick pays taxes on his income. The income of the farmer can be taxed, but he should not be taxed for walking on the ground or going about on the roads. Yet, he pays taxes on his income as well as on his house.

In a just society, people should not have to pay taxes on their homes, because after all they have to live somewhere. The land and the buildings should also be exempt from taxes to allow the farmers to breathe and continue cultivating their land with a view to meeting the basic needs of their family without always needing subsidies, to the extent where farmers are said to be beggars, people who are always asking the state for something.

Therefore, we should not blame those who are hungry, who wish to live—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am afraid his time has expired.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member might be permitted to continue until one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues and the minister in particular, for their courtesy.

In conclusion, so as to allow hon. members to go to lunch, I should like to deal with a subject which was discussed during the last electoral campaign in the province of Quebec. I have said on three occasions in this House—and I hope that my colleagues have understood that I did so in a good Canadian spirit—that dairy farmers have been penalized as the previous speaker said—so that they would get discouraged and would curtail their production, while in another part of the country—and I want to be well understood because I have no resentment towards western farmers—the government has established another farm policy. This dual policy leads us to division at the political and national level.

In the prairie provinces, in an effort to induce farmers to curtail their wheat production, the government has decided to grant them a compensation. I am not taking exception to the fact that these people will receive money to cut down their production, however I would like very much that the same approach be used towards milk producers with regular dairy cows. The farmers are expected to produce less Mr. Minister. I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, for addressing the minister directly. I know that this is not in order, but I would like so much the minister to finally understand my argument.

If, in order to curtail production, a subsidy is granted to take the land out of production, why not grant one to the cow so that it would not produce milk? The cow belongs to its owner just as the land does. Thus I believe we would have a more consistent policy across Canada. That would prevent incidents such as those we witnessed during the last election campaign in Quebec, when some people advocated the separation of our province from the rest of Canada by saying: You see how right we are when we want to separate from the rest of Canada. In fact, whenever western people are concerned, the government is willing to compensate them, it pays them so that they will not sow, but when it comes to eastern Canada, it levies a tax so as to penalize production and efforts.

When people are not informed enough to see the facts in their true light, attempts are made to secure the votes of those who always think that the grass is greener in the neighbour's pasture.

That is the reason why I should like this situation to be corrected so as to avoid any misunderstanding and so that we may work together harmoniously. As for me, I believe in a great Canada and I think I have a right, as a Canadian, on the entire country. The very reason of my presence in this House is to stand for those principles and those ideas, but also to point out to the government the farmers' needs, in every area, in every province and in Canada as a whole and to make demands if necessary.

That is one of the reasons that prompt me to support sincerely the motion under study so that the government will understand that we do not object for the sake of objecting, but because we want to work as all other members for the welfare of society and Canada.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the motion and the speeches that have been made so far supporting that motion, I am in the awkward position of having to take the motion as it is written and of assuming that the hon. member meant what he said in the bottom. The motion reads: "that this House call upon the government to reverse—" I repeat the word "reverse" for emphasis—"its present policies which have deliberately depressed the agricultural economy". It is not within the rules of this House for any member to question the motives of any other member, so I am not going to do that. As both you and I well know, it is not within the rules of this House for one member to question the sincerity of another member, so I am not going to do that. Having said that, I have to assume that the hon. member is sincere when he calls upon the government to reverse its present policies respecting agriculture.

Having taken the motion as it is written, I would like to remind the hon. member that, for example, the Canadian government and the Department of Agriculture have undertaken a very extensive research program, the objective of which is to increase the efficiency and the productivity of Canadian agriculture. Of course, as a result of that, we hope to improve the income of Canadian farmers to make them more competitive in the domestic as well as the export markets. I ask sincerely, does the hon. member mean that we should reverse that policy?

We have a far-reaching program of grading and standards that are designed to improve farmers' returns through creating buyer confidence in Canadian products. That is also a very important part of the policies of the Department of Agriculture. Is the member asking that we reverse that policy? Mr. Speaker, we have a series of programs designed, and in effect, that are part of the over-all policy for the better utilization of livestock, poultry, crop seeds and so on, to promote superior performance. This is a very far-reaching comprehensive policy designed for the purpose of improving the seed and livestock that we have. Is the member asking that that policy be reversed?

We also have a crop insurance program that is a mechanism whereby farmers can protect themselves, with government assistance, against some of the vagaries of climate and other natural hazards that beset them from time to time. This crop insurance program has been built up over a number of years, and it continues to grow with other crops being added to the programs within the various provinces, and indeed with more provinces coming within the national program. Is the member asking that we reverse that program? We have a wide ranging policy dealing with a meat inspection system, and we have similar programs dealing with Canadian crops to keep them free of disease to which they would be subjected a great deal more if we did not have this kind of inspection system. Is the member asking that that policy be reversed?

We have provided protection for farmers against undue fluctuations in the market place with respect to many commodities operating under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. That act was not brought in by this government. I believe it was introduced about 1958 or 1959. There have been some modifications made since then, and I must say that the modifications have been improvements to the act. During the last ten years or so there have been many cases where the policy, taking its authority from this act, has been very useful in getting farmers over difficult marketing periods. Is the member asking that that policy be reversed? At the present time about $135 to $140 million per year is distributed to support the income of farmers from various commodities, but particularly dairy products. Is the member asking that we withdraw or reverse that program?

Throughout the years, and more recently within the last few months, we have made major changes to the Farm Credit Corporation's policy, the most recent being that we have allowed a wider range of their activities and functions to provide credit for such things as diversification and for debt consolidation. Is the member asking that that policy be reversed? I could continue enumerating policies for a long while, Mr. Speaker, but I will mention just a few more.

Some months ago we announced a feed freight assistance program that would be in effect for all of this year, from April 1, 1970 to March 31, 1971, paying a very substantial portion of the freight costs on feed that is brought from Thunder Bay into the eastern feeding regions, as well as from the prairies into British Columbia. Is the member asking that that policy be reversed?

We now have before the House Bill C-197, which has been introduced in response to the requests made over a long period of time by farmers, provincial governments and marketing boards. These requests go back at least 15 years according to my memory. Requests for this kind of legislation have been coming forward for perhaps even longer but, as I say, for about 15 years that I can remember rather vividly. Is the member asking that we reverse this policy decision? It is not a policy that is operative at the present time because certain members opposite seem to think that they can do a service to someone—I fail to see to whom—by talking this out and delaying it.

Mr. Horner: Who is delaying it?

Mr. Olson: But I know, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of this country and their representatives want this legislation to come forward in the House, so that it may be passed to committee and if necessary be amended.

Mr. Nowlan: Bring it forward.

Mr. Olson: They talk now about bringing it forward. Mr. Speaker, we have had that legislation in front of the House on seven different days.

Mr. Nowlan: Seventeen hours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if we can have order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Caouette: No, Mr. Speaker, I just want to know if the minister would accept a question.

Mr. Olson: If I have time at the end of my speech I will accept it.

Mr. Nowlan: We will give you time.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that hon. members opposite have become exercised at the mention of this question because apparently it has finally gotten through to them that the farmers of this country wanted this legislation a long time ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: They did not.

Mr. Danforth: In parliamentary terms, that is a gross misrepresentation.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I can tell by the way they respond that they have finally received the message. As I say, I could go on and on describing all the other policies that are in effect, including ones that the government inherited as well as the new announcements that have been made with respect to policy innovations and amendments to policy. But the motion asks the federal government "to reverse its policies" without saying which ones it should reverse. So, I have to take the hon. member at his word, and if farmers across the country know he is asking for all these policies to be reversed, then he will have explanations to make that will take him far longer than he has time in which to make them.

I feel hon. members do agriculture a disservice when they belittle the agricultural sector, and speak in the kind of tones and use the kind of words that we heard earlier today. I would like to remind hon. members opposite that agriculture is still one of the most important portions of our total economy. In fact, one-fifth of the total gross value of factory shipments from Canadian manufacturing industry is comprised of processed goods, the raw material for which comes from agriculture. The food processing industry alone employs over a quarter of a million workers. One-third of the freight hauled through the St. Lawrence Seaway is of agricultural origin, and about 18 per cent of all the goods moved by our railways comes off the farms. So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that hon. members opposite will not speak of agriculture any more in the disparaging tones that we heard today.

Mr. Nowlan: This speech is going to be an agricultural product. It will help a compost heap.

Mr. Olson: I am the first to admit that there have been some difficulties in certain sectors of the agricultural community within the last two or three years so far as markets are concerned. It is fair for us to examine these. The most important sector has been in the grains economy, and even there in wheat almost exclusively. In fact, if wheat and wheat alone, not even all cereals, is removed from the calculations of cash receipts to Canadian agriculture, these show an over-all increase in almost every other sector of the commodity groups. Let us look at some of the important statistics. For example, in 1968 dairy products brought the farmers $644 million. That was increased to $677 million in 1969. I do not say, Mr. Speaker, that $677 million is satisfactory. I do not even say it has kept up with some of the other changes in the commercial and industrial sector of the economy, but the disparaging remarks to the effect that everything has gone down just are not true. For example, hog receipts showed a marked increase in 1968 from $410 million to $461 million. But hon. members do not like to hear these figures. They want to paint the whole agricultural scene and everything in it black. But I think this is wrong—

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Get a new speech writer, Bud.

Mr. Olson: Poultry receipts, excluding eggs increased from $228 million in 1968 to $250 million in 1969, and egg receipts from $164 million in 1968 to $188 million in 1969.

If I may digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, there are some problems developing in the egg producing sector. It would appear that supplies are going to overrun the effective market demand fairly soon. If hon. members opposite want to do the agricultural industry a service they will get on with passing the marketing bill so that we can go ahead with the co-ordination of agencies involved in the marketing of eggs.

Mr. Horner: Bring the bill in, then.

Mr. Olson: Receipts from potatoes showed an increase of 10 per cent, from $61 million in 1968 to $67 million in 1969. Corn receipts were down slightly because there was a shorter crop year. They were down from $29 million in 1968 to $25 million in 1969. Then, we can turn to rapeseed receipts which increased almost 50 per cent from $33 million to $51 million in 1969. Flaxseed is even more remarkable, the receipts having increased from $26 million in 1968 to $57 million in 1969. Barley receipts went up from $85 million dollars in 1968 to $92 million in 1969.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but these are just some of the other important sectors of the agricultural industry. I should like to talk for a minute or two about the dairy industry, though I see my time is getting short. There have been some serious problems in that industry resulting from production overrunning effective market demand. The policies we put into effect on April 1 this year have already caused a remarkable improvement in that industry and we are beginning to see some daylight after the difficult years we had in the past.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members do not really mean what is said in this motion. If they want to reverse all of these policies, then we will have unwarranted and chaotic conditions in Canadian agriculture. What Canadian farmers want and have a right to expect, and what some hon. members opposite may have been talking about although they did not articulate or define it too clearly, is more advance planning—

Mr. Horner: You have it in your notes.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Crowfoot sits there making a lot of noise, and is probably going to make more in a few moments, but all this is really not relevant to the problems facing people in agriculture. I was saying that I think farmers legitimately are seeking and are entitled to as much planning, as much advance market forecasting and so on, as anyone is capable of giving them.

An hon. Member: Agreed; but can they participate?

Mr. Olson: The capability for planning has been enhanced considerably in the past few months. We announced some weeks ago that we were expanding the economic section of the Department of Agriculture. There are such things as Canfarm, a computerized system, to assist in making plans and to assess his operation, which is something that needs to be done. To say that nothing has been done in the past is not true. There have been outlook conferences in the past years where experts were brought in to try and project a year in advance what the market situation would be and what the production level ought to be to fit that situation. Perhaps this type of thing has not been publicized widely enough but the information has been circulated. In addition there is a further mid-year projection of the outlook conference published yesterday and this is expected to be helpful. There are other aspects of the market situation affecting Canadian farmers which result from decisions by other people and other countries. We do not have control over this situation, of course, but we must all respond to it.

I hope that members from all sides of the House, Mr. Speaker, will co-operate with the Department of Agriculture and the farmers in trying to improve the mechanics and the structure. These include such things as amendments to the Canada Grains Act, Bill C-197, the outlook conference and even some good advice that could come from the task force report published a few days ago. That kind of co-operation would do the farmers of this country a service rather than the disservice of these disparaging remarks which we heard from the Opposition earlier today.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I might say at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that I have never listened to a minister of agriculture give such a naïve speech about the problems with which he has to deal. A number of times during his speech I said that he needed a new speech writer. If he had written his own speech I know he could have done better because of his knowledge of the agricultural industry.

I wholeheartedly support the mover of this motion, Mr. Speaker. While I had nothing to do with the drafting of the motion, I should like to point out the wording, in part, is as follows:

> That this House calls upon the government to reverse its present policies...

I am not going to read any further than that. The minister was so confused about agricultural policy that he listed a whole host of policies that have been in existence for a long time in the Department of Agriculture. He mentioned agricultural research but this is not a present policy; it has been around for quite a while. He went on to list livestock, the record of the harvest of various crops, research into feed grains and crop insurance, which was introduced in 1960. He said the Agricultural Stabilization Act was introduced in 1958-59, but it was actually 1957. He mentioned the Farm Credit Act, but this was revised in 1959. He also mentioned debt consolidation and this is a present policy made necessary because of the mishandling of the agricultural industry by this government. He went on to mention feed grain assistance but this has been in existence since 1942, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Olson: 1944.

Mr. Horner: He could have mentioned a number of other things. He painted a vivid picture of how the opposition is holding up Bill C-197. But Bill C-197 has not been in this House since May 19, and as near as we can find out it will not be brought back until June 11. The minister talks about it going before the agricultural committee, but yesterday the chairman of that committee admitted he was having difficulty in getting a quorum. There has not been a quorum in that committee since March 26, and yesterday afternoon we sat for three-quarters of an hour waiting for a quorum. Most of the opposition members were there, it was government members who were not. Why rush this bill into committee when he knows that it cannot be dealt with without a quorum? The government has tried to tell the nation that we have been holding up legislation, whereas we have been examining it thoroughly in accordance with our duty.

Let us see whether Bill C-197 has been requested by the farm organizations. In my hand I hold a news release put out by the Alberta Wheat Pool, and this is what the president, Mr. G. L. Harrold, had to say on May 29:

Government Bills C-196 (Canada Grain Act) and C-197 (Farm Products Marketing Act) both provide for vague, sweeping authority to be vested with appointed officials. While the bills provide for consultation with, and opportunity for representation by agricultural producers, they fail to require direct policy participation by those most directly affected, the producers.

Canadian agricultural production is in the hands and under the management of about 150,000 owner-operators. They have demonstrated a desire and ability to manage agricultural production in Canada extremely well, and have rapidly improved the efficiency of the industry. Legislation affecting their markets is of extreme interest to producers. All such legislation should be based on the needs and desires of producers, who should have a direct voice in preparation and operation of such policy.

Bill C-197 will deny the farmers such a voice. The motion before the House indicates that the government ought to be prepared to listen to farmers. The government ought to reverse its present policies. What are some of them? Consider Operation Lift, which the minister did not mention. He skipped around it. It will bring about a drastic reduction in wheat acreage. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said that this program will encourage increased production of such commodities as rapeseed and flax. I question that, Mr. Speaker. This two-headed monster running our agriculture—on a previous occasion I referred to it as a cross-eyed rooster—is thinking negatively on questions of agriculture. The two ministers responsible do not want to understand the agricultural industry. They are merely following some of the policies laid down by the task force on agriculture.

Mr. Lang: Has the hon. member any new lines in mind?

Mr. Horner: If the minister will be quiet for a minute I will mention lots of new lines of policy. And what did the task force on agriculture recommend? It recommended that we establish a transition policy to keep farmers out of wheat production. On page 35 of the report, the task force recommends that all coarse grains produced in a given crop year should be sold in that crop year. When this question was put to the grain companies, they said the suggestion was ridiculous. Yet this is what the task force recommended. That task force was headed by five academics, four of them coming from eastern Canada who probably had never seen a wheat farm. There were two members from Quebec, two from Ontario and one, a Socialist, from the University of Manitoba.

In his speech, the Minister of Agriculture said pointedly that if we could solve our wheat problem we could probably solve the problems related to other commodities. The government thinks Operation Lift will help. That operation merely shows that the government is thinking negatively. It does not want us to expand any agricultural operations whatever, but wants us all to cut back. The minister talked about growth in the entire agricultural industry. The farmers, it is said, will be better off financially. How can they be better off if their production is to be curtailed? That shows how negatived is the government's thinking. Last year 4.5 million acres were taken out of production, and now those very same farmers are being penalized through Operation Lift. I say that because of the ignorant ruling which stipulates that July 15 is the cut-off date so far as summerfallow and forage is concerned. That ignorant ruling ought to be altered in so far as it applies to western Canada, because that is where most of our grain is grown.

The House is also considering Bill C-196, which we are told is to overhaul the grain marketing procedure. The committee was asked whether we had studied grain marketing in the United States. We said we had not yet done so but that we would. One of the elevator company representatives then said that we should only bring in a new grain marketing act after we have studied what a number of other grain marketing agencies elsewhere have been doing. The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) said that the government is setting up an extensive study program to find ways of modernizing the whole grain marketing and handling system. What are other countries doing in this respect? In his report for the Economic Council of Canada, published in January, 1970, Mr. Hudson has this to say at page 109:

Australia

Wheat Production and Disposition—The area in wheat in Australia increased every year except one since 1956 to reach a record of 10.5 million hectares in 1968—

That gives you some idea of what some of our competitors are doing, yet we have fallen behind. Between 1950 and 1954 we had something like 32 per cent of the international wheat market. In 1968, our percentage of that market had fallen to 17 per cent. We are not selling. We have agreed in the last few years not to sell, and this government will not agree to make sales in the future, because it has adopted a negative, hopeless attitude. This is what the report says at page 114 about the United States:

Wheat Production and Disposition—The area planted to wheat in the United States in 1967 was 23.9 million hectares (50 million acres), the largest since 1953, and 18 per cent higher than 1966 and the five-year averages for 1959/1963—

At page 122 of the report this is said about France:

As a result of high price supports, production has increased irregularly from an average of 9.4 million metric tons for the 1954/1958 period to 14.3 million tons in 1967...About 80 per cent of shipments of wheat out of France are to non-EEC destinations.

That gives us some idea of what our competitors are doing. The report says that the Argentine as well has markedly increased its wheat acreage.

I wholeheartedly support the thinking behind the motion we are considering, because it urges the government to take positive measures to ensure a dynamic rural community as an essential component of Canadian society. We are told that Bill C-196 will bring about a re-organization of our system of grain marketing. It seems to me that we are re-organizing our system before having studied how such systems work elsewhere. It is like putting the cart before the horse, and indicates negative thinking of the government. It cannot go quickly enough to wreck the agriculture of this country.

Mr. Olson: We are going too fast for the opposition.

Mr. Horner: At page 1 of the brief presented to the committee by the North-West Line Elevators Association and Pacific Elevators Limited, we find this:

R. J. Shepp, special advisor to the Grains Group attached to the Honourable Otto Lang, Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board envisaged in Winnipeg just a few weeks ago that the country elevator system will consist of only 20 to 40 country elevators—

This statement indicates why the people across the prairies ought to be concerned. The government has failed to take positive steps to ensure that there is a dynamic rural community as an essential component of Canadian society. The Minister without Portfolio had this to say about our grain handling system. I am about to read from a newspaper clipping:

• (2:40 p.m.)

"—the West is characterized by a profusion of small elevators located on closely-spaced railway branch lines," ..substantial improvements could be made that would both reduce the costs of handling and transporting the products and shorten the reaction time of the system in moving grain—

That is, if this whole system could be reorganized. There is concern all across the country. On page 5, the brief to which I referred earlier reads:

The licencing powers of the Commission are so broad that the industry feels that the Commission can make arbitrary decisions by way of licence to control the location of elevators and thereby affect the efficiency of the grain handling system and the very destiny of Western Canadian towns.

I might say that one minister has been very closely connected with those who presented this brief. He does not want Bill C-196 to be hurriedly dealt with by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. This morning, when the committee started to deal with a small amendment that added only three words, after a very limited amount of discussion the hatchetmen were rolled out. A motion was made that the amendment must be dealt with by way of a vote. We were told that we must move on. These are the steamroller tactics this government is prepared to use in committee. Any member of this House who is concerned with the negative attitude of the two ministers responsible for agriculture should watch very closely the willingness of the government to adopt constructive ideas presented from time to time in this House and in committees.

The minister can say, all is well and good regarding Bill C-197, but there is now a constructive amendment to this bill before the House. If it is accepted, I am sure that when the minister has enough nerve to bring Bill C-197 back into the House it will be dealt with rather quickly. The minister must not fail to give adequate assurance that Bill C-197 will provide for producer participation. As Mr. Harrold, the President of the Alberta Wheat Pool, has said, the producer should have a direct voice in the preparation and operation of such policy. There will be no hold-up in agriculture legislation if the producer is given that assurance.

Mr. Nowlan: Could I ask the hon. member a question? It is with regard to the situation the member encountered this morning in the agriculture committee when he moved this formal amendment. After 20 minutes of discussion, it was moved that a vote be taken on the amendment. I would like to know if this move was made because the government members thought they could not hold their quorum any longer, in view of the lack of a quorum since March.

Mr. Horner: That could very well be. I am not a member of the office of the Government Whip, but the rarity of the occasions on which a quorum has been present in that committee could very well be the reason.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Matane.

Mr. Roberts: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The Chair is not at liberty to permit another question.

Mr. Horner: It can be done with unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Does the House give unanimous consent to a further question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roberts: Can the hon. member tell me whether he and his colleague rehearsed their spontaneous questions and impromptu answers before they came into the House?

Mr. Horner: When like minds are thinking on a given subject, rehearsals and speechwriters are not necessary. We speak from the heart about what concerns us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I think the Chair was right in the first place.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I believe the demagogy indulged in by the previous speakers for the opposition shows that they are not sincere when they criticize the present policy. As far as I am concerned, I am not saying that there will be some improvements, but I regret this demagogic manner of tackling a problem that so seriously affects the agricultural population.

Maybe I am not as competent as some of the speakers who preceded me on the subject of agricultural policy, but I nevertheless believe that it is my duty to speak on behalf of the farmers of my riding and their association, the U.C.C., more especially as I find their claims are justified in fact and in law.

The problem may be stated as follows: both levels of government and all kinds of theoreticians have geared a large part of the labour market of my province to farming for economic reasons as well as in the name of a scale of mystic and social values. I say "geared" and the unfortunate thing in that planned economy is not so much the contempt shown for free choice as the unjustified taking over by governments of responsibilities implied in that planned economy. That is the problem, the whole problem.

When a government encourages a large proportion of the labour force to take up farming, I suggest that the authorities have no right to make the agricultural class pay for their lack of foresight. In a way, it is not even a financial problem, considering the huge investments made directly or indirectly, by the two levels of government for the benefit of the agricultural class, more especially as subsidies of all kinds are greater than the annual per capita income of farmers.

The plain truth is that after having encouraged a great number of people to take up farming, agricultural workers are less and less needed.

Such is the cruelty of a system aimed at stifling, by the mere inequality of the opposing forces, those who are completely defenceless.

I say that it is unfair to reduce grants in an irresponsible manner. I submit that responsibilities should be fully assumed and it should be readily admitted that the farming industry is no longer what it was, that it is profitable for a small number of farmers only. As for the others, they should give it up. The government should recognize that it is the sole responsible for the shaky situation prevailing and immediately invest huge sums of money to enable farmers to retrain.

In a word, the just society cannot tolerate any longer a farming policy which has remained constant through various political systems.

Agriculture is infinitely more sophisticated than has been suggested, and a number of those compelled to leave the farm will not likely be able to adjust any better to an industrial society. This makes the government's responsibilities only more tremendous.

I must say here incidentally that not only is it ill-advised but also indecent to tax eastern farmers more, while western farmers are getting more assistance. Both need help, and I think it particularly misleading to state that the subsidies paid in eastern Canada with respect to industry and exports are greater that those granted to western Canada. The farming community is involved. It must be looked after and that must be done without always taking into account the moneys given to others sectors of the economy.

In short, I want the government to admit it is the sole responsible for the present state of stagnation. If people must be retrained, nothing will be achieved by pushing them around. The just society requires that same society to pay the cost of correcting misguided efforts. Farmers must not be told that they must remain outside the affluent society and bear alone their misfortune.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I am asking the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) cordially but forcefully to make the cabinet understand that it is not enough to recognize the heavy responsibility to assume for a particular economic sector, but that it must admit that retraining is the prime responsibility of the government, all the more as history tells us that the people who settled on farms did so with the blessing of the governments.

However, we now find that the federal and provincial governments are reluctant to tell the farmers that only a small number of them will be able to live off the farm. They are reluctant to admit that the responsibility for this situation lies entirely at the government's door and that the latter will entirely absorb the cost of retraining.

I wish to say, finally, that from now on, agriculture will only be economic for those who can run their farms according to the sophisticated methods of our time. Keeping this in mind, I feel it is imperative for the federal government to consider not only granting subsidies, but also making the services of experts available to those remaining on farms.

Finally, I would like to congratulate the minister on the various measures he has taken in related fields. I must however deplore the demagogic attitude of the opposition, particularly the official opposition, which gave the sad performance of people more interested in stirring up passions than in acknowledging the acute problems faced by the government.

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): After listening to the minister speak in this debate, I am left wondering whether it is the intention of the department to put forward measures of real assistance to the agriculture industry or whether it is pursuing a policy of divide and rule, the policy being followed by this Government in so far as the Indian people are concerned.

The minister tells us that there are many who will concede that certain things have been done for the good of the agriculture industry. I am equally certain that there are many thousands of producers who will indicate areas in which nothing has been done by the department or by the government despite urgent need. I am sure the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) was pleased with the action of the Wheat Board in sending out letters on May 29 last demanding payment in connection with cash advances. I was pleased to hear the minister tell us today that instructions were issued on June 4 under which the letter was given a different interpretation. Of course, the farmers concerned have no possible way of paying back their cash advances, in view of the amount of grain they were able to deliver.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) recited a long list of things his department had done for the benefit of agriculture. Fair and good. They cannot be losers all the time. Nevertheless, other policies could have been followed in an attempt to bring hope to farmers now faced with acute financial difficulties. On May 13 a letter was addressed to me by the minister with regard to the Lift program in which he said that the program was designed to improve the cash flow to farmers with grain on hand. There are many farmers in the west who do not have grain on hand. The department's letter is an example of the attempt to divide and conquer the rural community of this nation. We are all well aware that agricultural rural areas throughout the nation are in dire need of cash. Nothing has been done under present legislation to make money available to producers, to keep the communities in which they live viable.

The minister tried to suggest that we on this side would reverse the trend which the government has introduced over dozens of years. But the motion is clear. It refers only to those policies which have deliberately depressed the agricultural economy—the policies which have caused severe unemployment and lack of income resulting in slow economic growth and little hope for the future of any engaged in the industry.

What of the report of the task force which has been filed in this House? A task force was set up in France recently to report on the state of agriculture in that country. But at least it considered the problems of the industry in a positive way, realizing what a great contribution agriculture was making to the good of the nation. This is not true of the task force report which has been filed here. It states that farm policies should be oriented to the efficient producer and suggests that the federal Department of Agriculture be renamed the Department of Agricultural Industry. Big deal. It looks as though some of these people had no real contribution to make to the work of the commission so they proposed renaming the department, believing this would solve the problems to be encountered.

The report also says programs are needed to stimulate demand in markets and potential markets. We in this group have stated many times that we have complete confidence in the Wheat Board but that the Board must be given the tools with which to do its job. Canada cannot expect to produce a good sales record consistently unless we establish trade missions abroad. Instead of resting on its laurels and on its past successes, the government should set up trade missions in foreign countries so that we may sell our products more easily. The returns will flow back to the producers.

The report also said that subsidies and price supports had failed to help farmers to become more viable and should be dropped as soon as possible. Mr. Speaker, anyone who has done any reading on this subject knows that Canada is the only grain exporting nation which does not look after its producers—the only grain exporting nation which expects its producers to subsidize the treasuries of other nations. The Minister without Portfolio must be well aware of this, but he has not suggested that a basic price should be established for grain sold domestically. Even though 25 per cent is about the maximum amount used domestically, the fact remains that the domestic price could be raised without undue harm being done to the economy.

The task force further recommended that young farmers who lacked the potential to become viable operators should be moved out of the industry through welfare programs, retraining and the provision of jobs in other sectors of the economy. The young farmers in this nation today are the very ones who have attended university in many cases. They have attended agricultural courses. They are the very people who will be taking over the reins of production. Yet here we find a proposal that many of them should be moved from the farms to the metropolitan areas where they will encounter poverty and a polluted environment.

I suggest that if this government does not intend to divide and conquer the agricultural economy it should look at the rural areas and realize that any report which suggests that we should break down the rural centres is performing a disservice to the nation. Another task force report recommends, for the farmers that remain, that there should be the provision of money to stimulate management training, sophisticated information processing systems, market and price forecasts and similar management tools.

In one breath the government says that our producers are producing too much and are too efficient, and in another breath the task force comes out with the suggestion that these people should seek training in order to do a more efficient job. How irresponsible and nonsensical can such recommendations be! Again, this makes me wonder whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government of the country are really suggesting to the agricultural producers that they should do their own thing and sell their own products even though there are already avenues open to them to look after the situation.

I am sure all of us appreciate the fact that Canada's agricultural industry is in a state of transition. At the same time, however, many millions of people throughout this world are in a starvation situation. Canada is faced with an increase in her bilateral food aid program. While this may take the form of outright payments in the form of local currencies, there is still a need for some concessional terms in respect of our produce. Again, we can refer to situations which exist in the United States. There they have concessional terms. With these concessional terms there is a requirement that those countries which produce wheat shall also produce commercial grain. This, of course, has resulted in Canada losing a great many of her markets.

We also know that today Canada actually lags behind the amount of $100 million in foreign aid programs. When we speak of cutting back in our produce while this situation exists, I am a little amazed. It would seem that in effect we are telling the people in these areas that we are not concerned about them even to the extent of concessional or bilateral aid and long-term credit programs.

There has been considerable debate in this House, particularly during the question period, about bartering our wheat. We all agree that the bartering of grain, if it affects the orderly marketing of grain, is not in the interests of our agricultural economy. At the same time, however, the United States has Public Law 480, title 3, which allows for the bartering of United States' grain to meet the needs of United States government agencies. If at any time this government could arrange the barter of grain with underdeveloped or even developed nations which would not affect the balance under the Canadian Wheat Board regulations, I suggest there is really nothing wrong in so doing. If it does not mean disruption of orderly marketing I should like the Minister without Portfolio to tell the House why he is so adamantly opposed to bartering in respect of grain.

There is another point which I think should be made absolutely clear. We heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) speak about opposition to Bill C-197. The New Democratic Party is absolutely in favour of a national marketing board. At the same time we want to make sure that the government of the day realizes there must be ample producer representation on that board. If the Minister of Agriculture, with all his great words of wisdom and criticism, today had stood up in respect of Bill C-197 and said there would be producer representation on the board, I am sure the bill would have gone to the committee, would have come back to the House and probably would be in effect at this time. That is, if the government had ever intended that it should come into effect in that way.

We have also heard many people say that there has been a belittling of the agricultural economy. If there is any basis on which the government can suggest that the opposition parties are trying to belittle the agricultural economy, the members of the government should stand in their places and say so. The fact remains that the government of the day is belittling the agricultural economy and the producers. Members of the government, particularly those from central Canada, when they make remarks about the agricultural industry in Canada generally are, in effect, belittling the agricultural economy.

I was pleased to hear the Minister of Agriculture say that agriculture is one of the most important industries in Canada. I wish he would tell some of his colleagues in the cabinet that agriculture is also important in Canada and that they should realize this fact if they do not intend to have a complete breakdown in our country at this time. We know there is an agricultural crisis in Canada. The government is also aware of this fact. When we look at the situation in central Canada of various implement manufacturing companies and automobile workers, and consider the vast amount of unemployment as well as the adverse effect this has on the agricultural economy, we should realize it is high time something was done to give some capital input to the farmers.

We know that Canada could immediately supply grain to some of her overseas markets. However, the same thing happens in that regard that has happened too often. There is a lack of selling capability on the part of our government. I suggest sincerely that if this government is really concerned about attempting to better the conditions referred to in the motion before us today, it should not be difficult for the government to do something about it. It seems to me this is the only way Canada could become credible in the eyes of the world.

I am not an economist, but I fail to understand why Canada does not have a more flexible credit payment arrangement for these other countries. In conclusion, I say there is an urgency in respect of co-operation with other nations of the world. It is not good enough for Canada to stand on her own so far as grain sales are concerned. There should be co-operation with the other grain exporting nations of the world. But Canada could lead the way instead of alone entering into a reduction program such as Operation Lift. There is no mention of this by other countries, but they have great words of wisdom for Canada in respect of her wheat reduction program. I am sure that in this context the Canadian farmers are not pleased with the action of this government.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak briefly in this debate. I hope to use this privilege to place on the record from a farmer's point of view some of the bright spots and some of the concerns that are affecting our agricultural economy. I may also make some suggestions for government action in regard to some of the problems that undoubtedly exist.

At the outset I wish to make it clear that I cannot support a motion which suggests that the government has deliberately pursued policies designed to depress the agricultural economy. It may be true that some policies have had, and are having, some unfortunate side effects on farmers, such as the battle against inflation, tightening of credit, balancing the federal budget and revaluation of the dollar. Certainly these were not deliberately aimed at farmers. On the other hand, the government has taken positive steps to bolster the farm economy. Cash advances have been doubled in the past year or two. The price of domestic wheat was pegged at $1.95½, so that farmers are assured of that price on wheat used in Canada for human consumption. On that point it should be noted that wheat was worth about that much 20 years ago. Now that the principle of a two-price system has been established, I call upon the government to raise the domestic price of wheat to $3 per bushel to bring it more nearly in line with the advance in price levels and costs in the past 20 years.

Canadian farmers, with few exceptions, are at the mercy of world markets where often prices are subject to manipulation and subsidies by various countries. We need effective legislation to allow farmers to organize their business on a nationwide basis so that they will have effective control of their production and, subject to the forces of competition, will have much more to say about the prices they receive for their products. There is legislation before the House at present, but I suggest it may need additional safeguards to make sure that producers themselves have some control over their marketing agencies.

The supplementary estimates for 1969-70 which were approved by the House a few weeks ago are indicative of the government's concern about agriculture. Out of a total of $200 million, over $150 million went to agriculture and $48 million was voted to cover the Wheat Board deficit in meeting the initial prices of wheat, oats and barley for deliveries in the 1968-69 crop year. Over $6 million of that sum was allocated to permit the Wheat Board to make final payments on Durum wheat deliveries.

If the government had been inconsiderate of the needs of farmers, this payment would not have been made; the Wheat Board Act would have simply required the use of that money to reduce the deficit from $48 million to $42 million, to the benefit of the federal treasury. The thousands of farmers who received those payments for Durum wheat are well aware that they did so because of a sympathetic and conscious government decision to that effect. On behalf of those farmers, many of whom have written to thank me for my part in promoting the government's decision, I wish to thank the government on this occasion for that very welcome addition to the cash receipts of the western grain farmers. There was an item of several million dollars in the same supplementary estimates for the Farm Credit Corporation. The corporation is now authorized to make loans for the purpose of consolidating burdensome short-term debts for land, buildings and equipment and to spread the payments over a longer term of years at much less than current rates charged by various other lenders.

The largest item in the supplementary estimates was $100 million to finance the wheat surplus reduction plan, commonly known as Operation Lift. While we can find some faults in this plan—as I have on occasion, notably in the debate on March 2—one must give credit to the government for being willing to use as much as $100 million for the purpose of trying to help farmers get supplies somewhat more in proportion to demand. It may well be that farmers will not participate fully enough in the program to earn all of the $100 million, but many in southeastern Saskatchewan and southern Manitoba are beginning to have a higher regard for this offer because weather conditions have prevented them from seeding wheat and thus the amount of land they will not be able to seed at all this year will be increased.

The point I want to make is that the government, in spite of its determination to control inflation by holding down government expenditures as well as by other methods, has been willing to devote over $150 million in the supplementary estimates for 1969-70 to the benefit of agriculture. This is not the action of a government which has deliberately set out to depress the agricultural economy, as suggested in the motion we are discussing this afternoon.

Many sectors of the farm economy are doing fairly well, as the Minister of Agriculture has already stated this afternoon. However, as he also said, the grain industry is in difficulty. Let me quote just a few figures for Saskatchewan, the main wheat growing province. In 1966 the income from wheat in that province, including final wheat board payments, was $629 million; in 1967 it was $642 million; in 1968 it was $553 million, and in 1969 it dropped to $318 million, about half the level of the wheat income in 1966 and 1967. Of course, this problem has largely resulted from a general decline in world wheat trade. It is quite apparent that a concerted drive for sales by the Wheat Board, supported by new government facilities, is starting to pay off in increased sales, which is the best way to solve our farm income problems.

A few days ago our dollar was set free in response to market pressures. It immediately jumped about four cents in terms of the U.S. dollar. The Wheat Board, in order to maintain our competitive position, had to immediately drop the price of wheat by six cents a bushel. The prices of other grains and export farm products have also dropped. I now call again on the government to support the price of export wheat at $1.95½, which was the agreed minimum in the International Grain Arrangement. The IGA is a government agreement which was broken by government action, but farmers seem to be expected to carry the burden. Now that the burden will be even heavier because of the revaluation of our dollar, it is more than ever the government's responsibility to support the price of wheat as stated in the IGA.

There could, of course, be some minimal benefits to agriculture as a result of the reduced prices of imports which should follow the value of the change in our dollar. I call on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) to take steps to ensure that any such reductions in prices of imports are fully and promptly passed on to the consumers of Canada, many of whom are farmers who probably have to purchase much more goods than the average consumer.

The task force on agriculture has now made its final report. Canada has never, under any government, had a comprehensive, national agricultural policy. I am sure the government will lose no time in devising, in close consultation with farmers and farm organizations, policies to promote a vital, progressive and economical agricultural industry in this country. I cannot agree with some of the things the task force has recommended but I certainly approve of their suggestion that farm policy should be directed toward improving the per capita farm income in Canada. Nearly half of our farm families are suffering from below normal incomes. I am sure that the government, with its demonstrated sympathetic concern for the welfare of agriculture, can be relied upon to produce long-term policies which will continue to benefit this important industry. I urge them to lose no time in coming to grips with this important responsibility.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I will not follow it with a motion and I do not raise it for the purpose of inviting debate. I do it because under the rules of the House I must raise it at the earliest possible opportunity. It involves an issue which I consider to be a breach of privilege.

I have just been advised through press reports and otherwise that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has issued a statement in Winnipeg with regard to the imposition of wage controls and other pertinent measures. I rise first to object strongly to this being done in a place other than this House and, second, to point out that in the face of a number of questions which were directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday and to the Minister of Finance the day before regarding this particular issue, and in respect of which there were in fact denials, the Minister of Finance now, without regard to what are his responsibilities to the House, has done what he said he was not going to do and has not done it in the House.

I raise this question now, although it probably will be our intent to raise it again at a later date, because I must now file it by way of a caveat to indicate my strong resentment at this course of action.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): What the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has just told the House is another example and a clear illustration of the problems that are inflicted on this country.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has raised a question of privilege which he qualified in two ways, first by saying that he was not prepared to move a motion—which of course makes the raising of a question of privilege clearly out of order—and second, which perhaps made the question of privilege partly acceptable, by saying that he was not going to pursue the matter now and that his question of privilege was based on indecisive and inconclusive press reports. It seems to me it would have been more proper for him to suggest that he would wait until Monday before pursuing the matter further. It is certainly out of order for any other member to allude to this matter as if it were a statement of fact.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) earlier today and thought it was pretty vacuous and vague. Now the Minister of Agriculture, after I have had a chance to utter about six words, anticipates and conjectures that there may be no question of privilege in what I am going to say. This confirms to me how vacant, vague and negative is the mind of the Minister of Agriculture on this occasion, if there is any mind there at all. I used to listen to the—

• (3:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Oh, get on.

Mr. Nowlan: The young man from Calgary South can always speak from his seat, where his brains are, but he very rarely gets up—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The Chair recognizes that there is nothing before the House at the present time but the motion. I would ask the hon. member to proceed with his speech within the allotted time.

Mr. Nowlan: I would be only too happy to proceed, but the point is that I was dumbfounded when the Minister of Agriculture stood in his place to raise a question of privilege on something I had not even said. If that is the type of prognosis we can expect from the Department of Agriculture—and it is corroborated when you have a Lift program, which is supposed to free so many acres from wheat, and then we try to find out how much wheat we really have—it is an indication of the mentality of the minister.

The first six words that I was able to get out before the heckle-reckle of the vegetable computers over there were that the statement of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was just another example of the uncertainty that there is in this land about government policy, including agricultural policy. We have statements made in this House one day, two days or three days ago and then in a press conference in the corridor at a press conference in Halifax or at a press conference such as was held in Winnipeg this afternoon we have statements that either complicate or run counter to the substance of statements in this House.

The best example of that was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who sits right in front of the Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps one has infected the other in their parliamentary prognoses. Anyway, the Minister of Finance stood in his place on Wednesday last and said no, there would be no change in the floating exchange rate when the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) asked that simple question.

I just love to hear from the hon. member for Prince George because the people of B.C. do not hear much from him at all. If he wishes to speak, I will resume my seat. So far as the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) is concerned, I have a few things to say to him. Do you want to ask a question, Otto?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is the minister rising on a question of privilege or a point of order?

Mr. Lang: Does the hon. member not realize that when a member asks such a stupid question with respect to what the rate of exchange for the dollar is going to be, he should expect not to be answered or to be answered in the simple negative?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. I would ask hon. members to come back to the subject matter of the motion. As the House realizes, this is taking up the time of the hon. member.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, it is my time, but I appreciate the problem you have. That problem is confounded and compounded when the Minister without Portfolio stands up and starts to rationalize the simple answer of the Minister of Finance to a question by the hon. member for Dauphin about a floating exchange, a flat exchange or a high exchange, which was the same answer the Minister of Finance gave to me in the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee when he said that the policies of the government are for the stability of the dollar. The Minister of Finance was caught out. He made a stupid answer to a very important question and now he is trying to weasel around it. But he does not not need the Minister without Portfolio to help him weasel. That minister has enough problems to weasel around Operation Lift and other agricultural programs.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in the quiet hours of Friday we are speaking on an opposition motion under the new rules, directing attention to the agricultural problems of Canada. Oh, there is another voice. Is that the voice from Algoma East? Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) walked out of the chamber we have not heard much. We heard some sound from the hon. member for Algoma East, but he is a nice fellow and we don't want to get him involved.

An hon. Member: You are all heart.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, I have a big heart. There is the member from Lanark. He preaches outside this House and makes noises inside the House, but he very rarely makes speeches inside the House. I don't mind hearing him. Actually, he can contribute. I have heard some of his speeches and they are not too bad.

This is a motion presented by one of my good friends in the NDP, although they are not my political friends. On this occasion I support as far as I can the principle behind this motion which is trying to direct the attention of the government to agricultural problems. Unfortunately, under the new rules—and I think Parliament should look at them in the context of the experience we have had in the last session or two—there is no vote on this motion. The bite is taken out of the motion. It is like a dog without a bark. That is why we have to try to make a little sound, so that people outside may hear. We hope others may listen and respond to some of the things that are said here today on agriculture, because if there was ever a basic industry of Canada that needed some response and a receptive hearing, it is the agricultural industry from coast to coast. I do not care whether you are representing the chicken interests of Fraser East or the apple growers of Annapolis Valley—all segments of agriculture are in trouble, are bothered, concerned and most uncertain about the future. And they are not helped by some government policies of the immediate past.

On that basis I have no hesitation in speaking to this motion. In doing so, I agree completely with what the Minister of Agriculture said earlier today, that the farmers of this land want some planning, some organization, some direction and some co-ordination. Of course they do, but they do not want to lose their voice. It is the only thing they have, other than the soil they work and the products they grow. They have a voice and a vote. The vote comes once every four or five years. But surely this Minister of Agriculture, representing a government that practices something called, in those long ago days, participatory democracy, does not want to take away the voice of the man of the soil who wants to contribute at least his voice to the direction of those policies?

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and to any government member of this House—and I have not yet had it contradicted—that Bill C-197 does in fact take the direct voice away from the farmer. I say "farmer," but let us not just talk about the farmer on the farm because Bill C-197 affects every individual and group involved in the agricultural community of Canada, right from the seed to the sale of the product. With respect to Canadians who live in the city and who think they are not going to be affected by the bill, I ask what happened to them when the Dairy Commission was set up? Did the price of milk go down? No, the price of milk went up and the price of other commodities has gone up.

If Bill C-197 could give co-ordination and direction, we on this side would be all for it. But we are also for producer participation at some stage in the formulation of the policies that affect the producer and the consumer. We are absolutely opposed to a bill superimposing on all segments of agriculture a board appointed by the government. No matter how well-intentioned or sincere the government or the minister may be, that is still bureaucratic control of a basic industry and we are not prepared to swallow the underlying principle of Bill C-197 without getting into a debate, not on semantics but on the question of whether this is socialization of the most sophisticated kind of the agricultural industry of Canada.

If the government thinks this type of bill is good for agriculture, it may soon ask why is it not good for another primary product. Why is this type of bill not good for the oil industry? Oil is another primary product. The government may well say, "Let us take it away from the Energy Board and put it under a marketing board." Let us speak about lumber in British Columbia. What would happen if they had a board which first of all determined who could grow the product or cut the trees, and then how many trees could be cut down? That is the purport of Bill C-197, Mr. Speaker.

I think the Minister without Portfolio is a young minister with some promise, although the promise has become tarnished with the responsibilities of his office and with the load of the Lift program—that is not meant to be a pun—which is unfortunately breaking the back of the young Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon. This is the time of year when he could have been marking exam papers at the law school of Saskatchewan. No doubt he would find that task much lighter than trying to support the Lift program.

The thing that amazed me and indicated his inexperience—just the same as the hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew (Mr. McBride)—was when he uttered a few comments on the whole parliamentary process, saying in answer to a member on this side of the House that there was a filibuster on Bill C-197. Regardless of the principle of Bill C-197 on which hon. members can honestly disagree, because my interpretation may be extreme and others may have an interpretation equally as extreme, let us look at the facts involved which make hollow and hypocritical the words of the Minister without Portfolio when he uttered "filibuster" a few minutes ago, and the words of the Minister of Agriculture when he said "filibuster" some time ago.

Mr. Olson: I said that sincerely.

Mr. Nowlan: That shows how sincere the minister is, if that is how he looks at it. But I am too good a friend of his in the House or away from the House—or I was—to accept his standard of sincerity. If that is his standard of sincerity, then I have to watch what I say to him outside the House because you cannot be serious, Mr. Minister—I say this through you, Mr. Speaker—in talking about a filibuster on a bill as important as C-197 when there have spent a total of 17 hours—

Mr. Olson: Seven days.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, no. Let me come to that, Mr. Speaker, and see if the minister disagrees with these facts. There has been a total of 17 hours, spread over nine weeks, ranging from a minimum of a half-hour debate to three or four hours of debate on any one day.

Mr. Lang: With no one saying anything new.

Mr. Nowlan: Seventeen hours spread over nine weeks! If the Minister without Portfolio had ever been exposed to Parliament before he walked out of the ivory tower of law school and got seated by the seat of his pants on the treasury benches, he would know what filibuster means. When I put to him, as I put to the minister, that the task force which they both swear by—or swear at, maybe—says that 10,000 agencies, committees and commodity groups will be affected by Bill C-197, and 120 marketing agencies will be directly affected by it, then I refuse to accept the minister's saying he was sincere when he said it was a filibuster on such a basic bill involving such a basic industry.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Olson: I should like to ask the hon. member if he is prepared to accept the responsibility and face the farmers if he will not lift the blockade on this bill so that it will get through the House this session.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am in no position to commit anybody, but I say to the minister that this bill has not been in this House since May 19.

Mr. Olson: It has been in here for seven days.

Mr. Nowlan: I say that if the minister has the guts of his convictions—or if he has any convictions, because he may not have any guts—and brings that bill to the House he may be rather surprised at what happens to it. We may get it into committee. Bring it here so we can talk about it. It has not been here since May 19. I can understand the Minister without Portfolio because he does not know any better, but the minister was very experienced in procedural debates when he spoke for the Social Credit Party. He is now seated on the treasury bench, so when he tells this House that he is sincere in saying there has been a filibuster on Bill C-197, I say that remark is as hollow as his policies on agriculture.

We have been in this House 138 days since last fall and have spent a total of 17 hours on Bill C-197, which I think is the most important bill affecting agriculture to come before any Parliament that I have been in. The minister has more experience than I have. I wonder if he would answer this question, Mr. Speaker. Has there been any more important bill on agriculture than Bill C-197?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, to stay within the rules of this House I have to ask the hon. member a question. I cannot reply to his questions during this period so I should like to inquire if he is now prepared to give an undertaking that his party will pass the bill if we bring it out again, because we have had it out seven different days already.

Mr. McBride: Answer the question.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew is good at talking from his seat, where his brains are. If he would get to his feet we might find that he has no brains. In answering the minister, who did not answer my question, I would say when the bill comes back I do not want to participate again in the debate. I do not know what other members of my party will do. For the last few days we have been asking you to get the bill back to committee. I ask the minister if he knows of any more important bill than Bill C-197. If he does and can answer that question—

Mr. Olson: I agree.

Mr. Nowlan: It is the most important bill on agriculture?

Mr. Olson: It is very important. We only bring in important measures.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Nowlan: I would point out, further, that if it is one of the most important and in 17 hours in this chamber over a nine-week period—the minister talked about nine days, but on one of those nine days there was a half-hour debate and the minister knows it, and let us not get into these canards of the Prime Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is not unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: It hurts.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has raised the question of the definition of "filibuster." He is right that I have not been in this House long enough to have witnessed some of the classic filibusters that have taken place, but I have been here long enough to hear a great deal of nonsense spoken by members opposite. I have also been here long enough to recognize, when hon. members opposite speak hour after hour on the same matter, repeating the same words, that they are accomplishing nothing except delaying the passage of legislation and delaying the business of this House.

Mr. Aiken: Is that your idea of democracy? Is that your idea of debate?

Mr. Lang: It is passing strange, Mr. Speaker, that we can see a situation where spokesmen for all parties express their support of the principle of the bill, which is the issue on second reading if I understand procedure correctly, and then they speak on and on and on instead of allowing the bill to go to committee where it can be dealt with clause by clause.

Mr. Danforth: We have had experience with some of your material.

Mr. Lang: I have heard questions this afternoon about where farmers stand on this bill. I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members a release from the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture of May 12 in connection with Bill C-197.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is a well-known rule in this House that when we are engaged in one debate we are not permitted to take part in another debate. Bill C-197 is not before us now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House clearly sets out the idea that hon. members question government policy in this field. Bill C-197 is part of that policy and certainly comes within the ambit of the language of the motion.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I was about to say in referring to Bill C-197 , which is part of government policy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister's remarks would still be out of order.

Mr. Lang: Hon. members opposite have raised the point as to where responsibility lies for the fact that this bill is not moving forward. Reference was made by hon. members opposite to the opinions of farmers on this issue. I wish to refer to this statement by the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture of May 12, which says:

> We are extremely disappointed that the opposition has moved an amendment to Bill C-197 asking for the establishment of an agency only upon a successful national plebiscite and election of agency members.
> We believe such a move is not at all consistent with their respective party policies of developing a national agricultural policy for Canada.

They go on to ask, "Why do you not allow the bill to go to committee, where it can receive study clause by clause and where representations may be made?"

Mr. Aiken: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Lang: After I have finished, if the hon. member does not mind.

Mr. Danforth: The minister will be finished shortly.

Mr. Aiken: I shall certainly ask a question then.

Mr. Lang: When the opposition moves a motion such as the one before us, it is of course showing that it is unwilling to look at the positive things the government is doing in terms of coming to grips with the agricultural problems of this country. I must say that the final words of the motion, that the government ought to "take positive measures to ensure a dynamic rural community as an essential component of Canadian society," are words that we agree with completely because they are basic to our whole policy in this area.

Hon. members opposite, however, insist on ignoring the many things we have done and are doing in our attempt to produce a dynamic agricultural society in this country. We are taking action on almost every front, and hon. members opposite know it. Recently, on another occasion I indicated the things which are being done from a financial point of view to assist the Canadian agricultural community at this time.

Reference was made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) to cash advances. The interest on those will cost the treasury of this country $12 million this year. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, brought in by a Liberal government will be costing the treasury the estimated $72 million to be spent in assistance to the agricultural industry. The food aid program, which the present government has significantly increased as compared with the program of the previous period, will amount to nearly $70 million worth of wheat and flour. The recent sale of about 22 million bushels to India is an example of what this program means in terms of moving our farmers' grain to markets abroad.

Also, within the last year and a half, annual additional credit facilities have been made available for the expanded marketing of Canadian grain. An item of $12 million appears in the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to allow for an aggressive grain sales approach by the Canadian Wheat Board. As a result of this, sales recently have been made to Peru, Syria, the United Arab Republic and, most recently, to Brazil. This will clearly and definitely assist in moving Canadian wheat and grain to markets. The movement of grain from the prairie regions will be at near record levels in the next several months and wheat and barley will be moving in record proportions. The movement of rapeseed and flaxseed has been very good throughout the year. The movement of rapeseed will reach new record levels.

This does not mean, of course, that the cash position of farmers has been put right or that our whole agricultural situation in the grains industry has been put right. On the transportation side, this government has recently witnessed the creation of the block system, with co-ordinators at Thunder Bay and Vancouver to ensure the most efficient use of the existing transportation system. We have stepped up the activity and participation of trade commissioners throughout the world who are involved in the wheat selling process. Hon. members opposite frequently seem not to know how much freedom of action the Wheat Board has, or about its agents throughout the world who are involved in the selling of wheat on its behalf. We have recently examined a report from the quota system committee. It has looked at the quota system which has a direct effect upon the efficiency and therefore income of the grain farmer. The system had not been looked at for many years and it deserved looking at. Action will be taken.

We have set up additional studies into the research facilities available. We have faced up to the question of inventory. Hon. members opposite are extremely unready to even face the question of whether it is right to ask what the inventory of grain and the level of grain storage in Canada ought to be. We saw that it was necessary to ask those questions and to have them answered. The government saw fit to make available $100 million to assist in the attempt of bringing down the inventory of wheat, which was particularly large, to reasonable proportions.

The sum of $100 million is not an insignificant amount, although hon. members opposite have referred to it as a small crumb. The Lift program will put many millions of additional dollars into the hands of prairie farmers this year. There will be a very marked reduction of wheat acreage and a marked increase of minimum maintenance and forage acreages to take up the money which is available under the Lift program. This money is in addition to the money which otherwise would go to the grain farmers from the expected sales of their products, because these sales of grain will be coming forward with ever-increasing vigour. In these ways the income position of farmers is being improved. But above all, we are facing the question of how to tackle these problems properly.

One of the major issues now before us for consideration is the question of the transportation and handling system. Yet once again, Mr. Speaker, I gravely fear that opposition members will be taking a negative and fear-sowing approach to this matter instead of attempting to see what ought to be the best approach to the issue of transportation and handling. Some of the references which have been made to the press and statements indicate that. Hon. members opposite surely must agree that we are taking the right approach. We say that we ought to analyse the cost of alternative systems of transportation to propose to producers, that they ought to know what the costs of the alternatives are, that we should in every way pass on to the producers the benefit which can flow from an alternative system. The producers have the right to know the differences between the existing system and the proposed system. Hon. members opposite would sooner see us remain static and never change. They do not want us to face the issue of studying the question at all.

I do not believe that is good enough. I do not believe the grains industry can afford to carry 500 million bushels of wheat above any commercial need at a probable cost to the industry of $50 million a year. Do hon. members opposite think that money should be thrown away and not go to the agricultural producers? I do not think those producers will want to throw away cents per bushel on an inefficient handling system if an efficient handling system is available to them. Surely hon. members realize that we are simply seeking the opportunity to present to producers an analysis of what alternatives are available and what the benefits will be.

I wish to underline that there should be no doubt about this. It is my firm belief that we must examine the alternatives in handling systems. We must analyse the possible costs and benefits to the producers. Because the producers will have to accept any changes in the system which may ensue, it is up to them to decide which system is right. It is also important that the benefits from a changed system flow back to the producers. The catalogue of what we are doing to solve the problems that exist should surely convince members opposite, as step by step it is persuading the farmers, that the government is trying to come to grips with the real problems facing the grains industry of this country. Surely this should make hon. members opposite want to withdraw words that appear in this motion which suggest that there is anything but the very best intentions on the part of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, will the minister accept a question? It relates to his statement about getting Bill C-197 into committee. Will the minister advise the House what amendments in principle, if any, the government will permit in the Standing Committee if the bill reaches that committee? I have never seen any amendments in principle allowed by the government.

Mr. Lang: I do not have the advantage of having served in this House very long. I certainly do not have the obvious advantage of the hon. member opposite. I thought the majority on a committee could approve any amendment.

Mr. Aiken: The majority in the committee are Liberal members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam).

Mr. Aiken: You are admitting that there will be no amendments.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Aiken: Of course you are.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to take part in this debate this afternoon as the representative of a western riding in which I am deeply involved in the economic welfare of agriculture. I wish to commend the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) who moved the motion and brought this serious problem of the agricultural industry to the attention of this House. I wish to read the motion to refresh the memory of hon. members:

> That this House calls upon the government to reverse its present policies which have deliberately depressed the agricultural economy of this country, causing excessive unemployment, lack of income, slow economic growth and little hope for the future, and this House urges the government to take positive measures to ensure a dynamic rural community as an esesntial component of Canadian society.

This motion is very basic in content. I compliment the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) for the very capable way in which he placed before the House the support of our party with respect to this motion. I also congratulate the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) and the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) for following up that support. Every member who represents a rural riding, regardless of his political affiliation, should support the motion presently being debated. It appears that the present government's agricultural policies, such as they are, are designed to provide cheap food at the expense of the producer.

On Monday last the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) announced the unpegging of the Canadian dollar. What will this do to our agricultural industry? If the Canadian dollar floats up to par, it will cost Canadian farmers untold millions of dollars per year. For example, if we sell 350 million bushels of wheat in the next crop year, it will cost the farmers $21 million if our dollar reaches par and remains there. The moment the dollar increased 4 cents, the price of wheat was immediately lowered by 6 cents a bushel in order to compete in world markets. If the dollar should rise even higher, wheat prices will drop still further. These facts apply to all other export grains such as oats, barley, rye and oilseeds plus the many millions of dollars worth of livestock or livestock products that Canadian farmers export from year to year.

I listened with interest this afternoon when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) listed the long catalogue of legislative items dealing with agriculture. Most of what he referred to goes back 10 or 12 years to the good Progressive Conservative agricultural legislation. No matter how good this legislation may be, we need more legislative programs to meet today's needs. On Tuesday of this week, as recorded at page 7602 of Hansard, I directed the following question to the minister:

> I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the serious plight of agriculture, a situation aggravated by the unpegging of the Canadian dollar on Sunday, may I ask when we can expect the long-awaited announcement on the government's over-all agricultural policies?

The minister replied as follows:

> There have been many policy announcements made from time to time and the aggregate of these announcements is the over-all policy, which may be amended again from time to time.

This is not good enough. It is what we have heard from this minister ever since he took office, as well as from previous ministers. There does not seem to be any co-ordinated policy. As far as agriculture is concerned, we have a piecemeal situation. From time to time there are announcements based on whatever the minister has in mind. From time to time some new legislative programs are introduced. These appear out of a blue sky. The Lift program was thrown at the farmers without first consulting them. Only two weeks ago the Premier of Saskatchewan, who does not lean to the side of the official opposition, stated on a television program that he had not been able to find five farmers in Saskatchewan in favour of the program. Why should members of the official opposition be criticized for condemning the government for their piecemeal, ill-conceived and ill-thought out agricultural program when a Liberal provincial Premier is so critical?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Southam: To add insult to injury, this afternoon the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) referred to a telegram he had received in connection with Operation Lift. I have received two such telegrams. I wish to refer to one received from Mr. W. G. Gilbey of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool Employees Association. This telegram points out the serious problem of the elevator agents in western Canada, who are trying to fulfil their duties as agents and assisting the government as best they can by moving all the grain they can before the end of the crop year, having to stop work to assist farmers to decipher the Lift program. In spite of the thousands of dollars that have been spent, and the hundreds of thousands of pieces of literature available with respect to this program, the farmers still do not understand the government's intentions or the rules and regulations. The elevator agents spend half their time trying to explain, and in some cases to excuse the government for its ineptitude.

Nevertheless, here is a bona fide complaint involving a thousand or so elevator agents. I suggest, as did the hon. member for Regina East this morning, that the government should take note of the situation and amend the regulations so as to compensate these people for the time required to administer this ill-conceived program.

Much has been said about the two bills before the House at the present time, C-196 and C-197. I support what my hon. friend from Crowfoot said this afternoon in criticism of the proceedings in committee this morning. I have the honour to be a member of that committee. We were dealing with amendments to Bill C-196 and we on this side were hoping to advance an important amendment which would have clarified an important point in the bill. Before there had even been a chance to debate the motion put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot, a member on the government side moved that the question be put.

This is the answer to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) when he talks about a democratic approach. To my mind, what took place this morning was one of the most undemocratic procedures I have ever witnessed—an attempt to steamroller an opposition which was only trying to do its duty. Perhaps that bill is not as controversial as Bill C-197, but if it is the intention of the government to follow a similar course with regard to that legislation I am sorry for the poor farmers because the legislation will fall far short of what the industry expects from the House of Commons or of what members of the opposition would like to see.

There are several things seriously wrong with Bill C-197. Some commitment must be forthcoming from the government with regard to certain of its principles. Producer participation must be provided for. If a commitment to this effect could be obtained from a spokesman for the government, we would be content. In the last debate which took place on the subject of agriculture a speech was made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), a government supporter, a member of the Standing Committee and a man very knowledgeable in the field of controlled production. He was seriously concerned about Bill C-197 and made critical comments to this effect in an article which appeared in the April issue of the Canadian Poultryman. I feel he was justified in making these comments.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) also expressed critical views about this legislation and advocated some changes in basic principles. There was a measure of altercation in the House the other night on the subject—some cross-fire during the debate—and once again the hon. member for Fraser Valley East was involved. The issue arose because the hon. member had accused the opposition of filibustering and had sent out some literature to this effect, literature which would mislead the average farmer because it suggested that basic principles were capable of being amended in committee. It is my understanding of the rules that this cannot be done; that the principles have to be agreed on by the House before a bill goes to committee for clause by clause study. In this case the official opposition is willing to co-operate with the government if the government is ready to be honest and fair with the agricultural industry with respect to the serious questions which have been raised.

Another basic principle, and I am thinking particularly of Bill C-197, is that there should be written into the legislation a right of appeal. There has been a misconception with regard to our demand for a producers' plebiscite. The demand is not that there should be a national plebiscite before the bill takes effect; producers in many areas have already had successful experience with provincial marketing boards. What is suggested, and I want to make this clear for the record, is that if an when this legislation becomes effective and a certain group of producers feel it is not acting in their interests, those producers should have the right to call a plebiscite within their industry and be permitted to withdraw in certain circumstances. I feel such a right should be granted under our democratic system in Canada. Here again is a matter of basic principle which should be agreed on before the bill goes to committee. Certain changes can, of course, be made during a clause by clause study but the basic principles of the bill may not be changed.

I could go on at greater length, Mr. Speaker, but I should like at this point to quote part of an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of June 2, 1970, with reference to Bill C-197. It says:

> Agriculture seems destined to become one of the most controlled industries in Canada.
> The days of the independent farmer making his own decisions and not checking with some bureaucrat, or reporting to some inspector to find out what he can grow and where and for how much, are numbered.
> This trend emerges in the findings of the federal government's task force on agriculture. Main principles of its recommendations call for sharp reductions in surpluses and those surpluses brought under control. If necessary there is to be a drastic reduction in production.

The general public is now beginning to understand the reason for the stand taken by the official opposition with regard to these proposals. We are in favour of legislation which would add to the well-being of agriculture, but if we are to maintain a democratic form of government and if people are to live happily under a democratic system it is essential that all sectors of the economy should have a right to be heard. The traditional channel of the expression of their opinion is their elected representatives in the House of Commons, where they can expect that their wishes and views will be translated into legislation likely to be of benefit to them. I trust the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister without Portfolio will take note of the principles involved in today's motion and will govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two about the motion which is before the House today. I suppose we should not be too surprised at the things which are said about agriculture by members of the opposition. We regularly hear a forlorn tale from them on the subject, though there are very few positive suggestions made. I often hear sad stories from one of the hon. members who spoke in the debate today; he is a very wealthy farmer from Alberta who tells us about the troubles he is having.

I am not saying there are no problems in agriculture. As long as the rains come late or do not come at all, as long as the sun gets too hot sometimes, as long as the winter frost is more severe than it ought to be, or as long as there is intense competition in world markets there will always be problems in agriculture. What really matters is not so much the problems themselves as the way in which we approach them. I am surprised by this opposition motion. A rumour has been circulated by the New Democratic Party that it is the progressive party in Canada.

• (4:10 p.m.)

An hon. Member: That is just a rumour.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Yes, as one hon. member has said, it is just a rumour. It is a strange rumour. It seems to me that the only thing that is progressive about the New Democratic Party is that when the government suggests the minimum wage should be $1.65, we can count on members of the New Democratic Party saying, "Let us make it $1.70". That is how original and progressive they are.

If there should be a government bill that would have the effect of giving away $50 million to somebody, the members of the New Democratic Party would say, "Let us make it $75 million." That is the extent of their progressiveness in Canada. In fact, the New Democratic Party is, on the political spectrum of Canada, far to the right of the Conservative Party of Canada. So it is not surprising that the motion before us today is one that would have the effect of throwing the whole agricultural program of Canada into reverse. They want to stop everything and go backward. It is not surprising but it is distressing that the New Democratic Party should be so unprogressive.

There are problems that need to be cured. There are problems in some of the agriculture industries in my riding and there have been problems in the past. On occasion winter frost has damaged the fruit trees in the Okanagan Valley. Also on occasion the federal government has come to the rescue with financial assistance. At the present time there are problems in respect of certain types of apples. They have broken down in storage for some mysterious reason. The federal government is carrying on research to determine what has caused that breakdown in storage. There has been excessive competition this year from international markets because of over-production of apples in other parts of the world.

There are problems involving the importation of cheap concentrate juices from Switzerland and other European countries. There has been the problem of synthetic juices being masqueraded as the real thing in the Canadian marketplace. I have directed the attention of the ministers concerned to these problems and they are being investigated at the present time. I have made many appeals in private to the ministers but today I am making the appeal publicly as well because I believe these things should be said in the House of Commons.

There are always problems in agriculture. This year the Department of Agriculture has a budget of $360 million to aid the farmers of Canada in various ways. This fact is completely glossed over by members of the opposition. I suppose it would be glossed over if the figure were $360 billion. They seem to regard any effort by the Department of Agriculture as being of no significance whatsoever. If any other industry in Canada required a $100 million assistance program in one year, I wonder whether there would not be questions asked in the country about the solidity of that industry.

I say that members of the opposition continually want to ignore the facts in respect of agriculture. They complain that people are moving off the farms as if this were some reversible process. It has been going on ever since this country was formed. In 1939, 31 per cent of our population received its livelihood from agriculture. In 1941 the figure had dropped to 27 per cent. In 1951 the figure was 20 per cent, in 1961 it was 11 per cent and in 1966 it was 9 per cent. The projection is that by 1970 it will be down to 3 per cent or 4 per cent of the population.

All of us have to face change from time to time. It is regrettable that members on the other side of the House resent the fact that the world is changing, that things are changing and that people must adapt to the change. I ask hon. members opposite what they would have the people of Canada who are engaged in agriculture do. Would they have them sit on the farms and starve because there are no markets for the products they produce? Would they have us ignore the improvements in efficiency and in new machines that are available? If we did this, I ask how long would these people survive in agriculture. The only way in which any agricultural industry can survive anywhere in the world, and the only way in which we can feed the hungry people of the world, is by having an efficient agricultural industry. This requires up-to-date and modern methods. Let us be practical about this and see what can be done about it. Let us see whether there is an opportunity to channel people into productive and useful employment in other areas of our economy.

I have heard the leader of the New Democratic Party sanctimoniously say that surely with the hungry people there are in the world we should be able to give away this food and find some way to dispose of these surpluses. Well, it is a pious thing, but the leader of the New Democratic Party knows as well as I and others that there are limitations in respect of the amount of food we can give away around the world. A while ago the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) mentioned that we are giving away about $75 million a year in the form of wheat flour and other wheat products. Our total food aid program this year will be about $90 million.

I should like to mention to the two members of the Conservative Party who are in the House this afternoon that this figure might be compared with the $10 million which represented the give-away in food aid when the previous Conservative government was in power. Yet we hear that we should do more. Of course we should, but the underdeveloped countries of the world are the developing countries. They are producing their own food products more efficiently.

Let us take India as an example. Now that India is producing nearly all it requires, if we were to give that country more than a certain amount it would mean that their own agricultural industry would not be able to dispose of the production it produces. We would destroy their industry and reverse the process of trying to help the developing countries sustain their own economies. There are other limitations. The very effective aid programs in the world in the past decade or two have produced some remarkable developments such as in the productivity of wheat and rice.

I am sure members of the House are familiar with these developments which have been made in many countries, which have helped them become completely self-sufficient in respect of the food they require. Yet we still hear sanctimonious statements such as those made by members of the New Democratic Party. They suggest that surely we can find someone who will dispose of our surplus food. They would seem to suggest that all we need do is find someone to take it and then find enough taxpayers in Canada to put up the hundreds of millions of dollars required to do it.

So I suggest to the members of the New Democratic Party who proposed this motion today and to other opposition members that it would be more reasonable to face the facts as they exist. These facts are that the population required to produce the necessary food in Canada is declining. So I say, let us turn the people into productive employment in other areas of our economy. Many jobs will be required in western Canada and in agricultural areas to absorb the rural population and the people who will be shifted out of the agricultural industry. Let us do something about this. Perhaps we should have looked at the $100 million we gave in the form of an emergency payment to the grain growing industry on the Prairies. Perhaps we should have decided to put this money into a long-term program to develop employment for these people so that instead of giving them a relief program for one year we would be giving them a program that would have long-term benefits in respect of employment year after year.

This is the area in which we must strive. There are good things that can be said about agricultural development in Canada and that need to be said. It is not just a matter of decline. We all know that the livestock industry is growing very rapidly and will need to grow if it is going to keep up with demand. We all know that the oilseed industry is growing very rapidly, and we will need all that production. But there is increased competition from abroad. The socialist states are beginning to become a little more productive in their economies and they will be more competitive with us. They will require less of our products. We are going to face increased subsidization of agriculture in some intensive manufacturing countries of Europe and elsewhere.

Let us face these problems realistically. Let us hear some constructive suggestions from across the way. Let us hear the ideas which the opposition has on how to tackle these problems, instead of hearing their condemnations and suggestions that all we should do is go in reverse. I hope that in the weeks ahead and in the session next fall we will not be treated day after day to cries of lament from the opposition who refuse to face the facts of life and refuse to face the economy as it exists today. I hope that we will hear some progressive and helpful suggestions from them. I sit on the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and I also listen to them in this House, but I seldom hear any such suggestions. I hope that in the months ahead we will have something along that line that will aid the people of Canada and especially the farmers of this country.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very timely that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) introduced this motion today because it covers a number of very important matters that affect the future of rural Canada. In the first place, the hon. member made reference in his motion to the fact that there are policies which are depressing the agricultural economy of this country. In the second place, he made reference to the economic impact of the situation facing the agricultural industry on other sectors of the economy as well as the total economy of Canada. He made reference to the fact that this is causing excessive unemployment, lack of income, slow economic growth and little hope for the future. Finally, he went on to urge the government to take positive measures to ensure the survival of a dynamic rural community as an essential component of Canadian society.

I was really quite amazed by the contributions made by the two ministers in the debate this afternoon. First of all, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) trotted out the same speech that he has made on I do not know how many occasions in the House. It is the same tired, old record about the things that the government is doing, and he simply cannot understand why the opposition does not appreciate everything the government is doing. He said the agricultural industry is doing quite fine. He trotted out a number of income figures.

True enough, he quoted a number of figures regarding rapeseed income, flax income, potato income and several other items on which in 1969 there was some increase. But regardless of these selective statistics which the minister used, he cannot escape the fact that the farmers' cash income in 1969, as shown by DBS, dropped by $167 million for Canada as a whole. For my own province of Saskatchewan it dropped by more than that amount, by $177 million. In Alberta it dropped by $77 million, and in Manitoba by $12 million. That of course means that there were other areas in Canada where there was some increase in the cash income. Nevertheless, I think it can be illustrated that across Canada as a whole there is in fact a very serious situation facing the agricultural industry, and this has profound implications for Canada.

Of course, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) tried to show the House that the government is moving on every front in dealing with the problems that face agriculture in rural Canada. He went on to say that a new quota system was recommended by a special committee. But of course he failed to make any mention of the fact that these recommendations were totally ignored when the government came forward with its program for the coming crop year. I could give other examples to illustrate the inconsistency of the Minister without Portfolio.

There is one particular matter that I drew to the attention of the House this morning which I think illustrates some of the approach and attitude of the government on many matters affecting agriculture. When I asked the minister if any consideration was going to be given to the elevator agents who will have to do a great deal of extra work in dealing with the administrative aspects of Operation Lift as it was introduced by the government, the minister informed me that they had obtained an agreement with the elevator companies to look after this particular matter. He gave no indication, in answer to my question on the matter, that there had been any consultation with the employees of the elevator companies or indeed the employees' organizations. According to my information, there is no question that the elevator companies do look after the permit books. With respect to the other forms, I am not familiar with the complete picture. However, I understand that there is a good deal of confusion and there is certainly a grey area which requires further examination.

I think the elevator companies and their employees are not happy with this aspect of the program. The fact is that the farmer does go to his elevator agent for advice. This is a time-consuming activity. The question might be asked: Why not use the PFAA man? The PFAA personnel have been designated as the people to administer this program. Why are they not the ones to act as liaison? Why is it that the municipal secretariat throughout western Canada who were asked if they would look after the job refused to do so? Finally, they secured some sort of an O.K. from the elevator companies and agreed to their employees looking after some aspects of this program. This is a further example of the administrative bumbling which has been a feature of just about every aspect of the government's agricultural programs over the past two years that I have been in the House.

I think it is timely that we have a debate on agriculture today in view of the fact that the task force on agriculture has at last produced its report or, I should say, at last the government has made the report public. There are many recommendations in this report which require a great deal of study. Time does not permit me today to go into all these matters. However, I would like to know why there is apparently a considerable degree of hesitation involved in its recommendations to deal with agriculture as an industry rather than from the viewpoint of the people who are making their livelihood in it, from the viewpoint of the communities and from the viewpoint of Canadian society as a whole.

I think there is still some redirection of emphasis required if we are going to find adequate solutions to what are admittedly difficult problems. In addition, as has been noted, there is legislation before the House at the present time on this matter. The Canada Grains Act is designed as a vehicle to enable the introduction of a protein grading system at some time. The government had this item on its list of legislation a year ago and it was not introduced. This year it was again on the list of legislation to be introduced but the government held off for months and months before introducing it. Apparently they had to carry on consultations with the Canada

Grains Council and other groups, following which they finally produced the legislation.

This idea has been kicking around for over 20 years but the government was not able to come forward with legislation until a very late stage in the session. Now it appears very doubtful that the legislation will be passed in time to be introduced effectively during the coming crop year. This is one of the most pressing needs in the total grains picture if, in fact, we are going to improve our marketing prospects in the worldwide picture. We also have the farm products marketing bill before us, again introduced at a late stage of the session.

There has been some controversy about who did what and who didn't do what. I do not intend to get involved in that question. I simply want to make it clear that my party supports the principle of this bill. We want to see it pressed forward. We feel some changes should be made in the legislation, but we are wholehartedly in favour of its principle. We feel there is need for machinery whereby farmers can be involved more effectively in the operation of the legislation.

It is also timely to discuss some of these matters today in view of the crisis which is faced in western Canada. Operation Lift can only be termed a disaster. There is a lack of guarantees and of underwriting with respect to some of the very unstable features in the agricultural situation of western Canada.

We have seen a great deal of administrative bungling by the government over the past two years. Examples have been given of it on many occasions in this House and I do not intend to go over that ground again. But it is important to know something of the government's approach, which leaves something to be desired. It seems that the government is taking the attitude, "We know what is good for you." This is best illustrated in Operation Lift, when the government devised its own program in fundamental variance to that which the task force on agriculture is recommending. This has become clear since publication of the task force report. Nevertheless, the government has bulled ahead with its program regardless of objections from every quarter in western Canada. In the marketing legislation bill the government is taking the attitude, "You are not going to have any say in your own affairs. We are going to do this whether you like it or not." Throughout this whole series of agricultural programs and other programs affecting rural Canada there has been insensitivity and callousness displayed by the government to the detriment of the public good.

I want to make specific reference to one matter involving exchange rates, something which has been debated during the current week. Certainly members of the NDP approve the government's measure in principle. We feel it is in the national interest that there be a floating exchange rate, but it does not solve all our problems. It simply provides new opportunities to deal with some of our serious economic problems. As I indicated in my statement on behalf of the NDP in reply to the minister's statement on Monday, there are of course problems. There are bound to be, in an economy as complex as Canada's. The problems created for the export industries must be taken into account. In his statement during the emergency debate on Tuesday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) indicated that consideration would be given to special cases where problems have been created. In answer to my question as to whether he considered the 6-cent drop in the price of wheat, which took place the next day, to be a special case that should be considered, the minister said yes. I welcome his statement in that regard and I hope he will come forward with action and a program to deal with this problem in the very near future.

This step is going to hurt western Canada. The farmers of western Canada should not be expected to bear the load of this particular policy when the policy is in the national interest. If it is in the national interest, and if problems are created in particular sectors, then those sectors of the economy should be compensated. I also note the impact that current conditions are having on the urban economy and indeed on the entire Canadian economy. In my own province of Saskatchewan, where there is a serious economic situation, we have experienced within the past year a decline of 18,000 in our population. This reflects the over-all state of conditions in the province. Retail trade, to take one economic indicator, was down by more than 9 per cent in the first three months of this year. In my own city of Regina well over 100 businesses were forced to shut down during the past year. Other centres in Canada are feeling the effects of this situation. Brantford, where the farm machinery industry is located, is affected. Oshawa, where a great deal of automobile manufacturing is carried on, is also affected.

I acknowledge the need for adjustment in agriculture. Technology and the economics of the situation dictate that change must take place. In the past this was always accompanied by a degree of hardship, suffering and privation. The only answer of some people is to depopulate the rural areas, to move farmers off the land. It seems to me that the task force has partly adopted this attitude. I agree that some changes have to take place, that some adjustments have to be made, but we must be concerned about the future of the rural communities of Canada. Much of our rural life is undergoing change. This change is taking place throughout all levels of the rural community. The entire rural pattern of life is breaking down. I am not referring to a change in the old traditional way of doing things; I am referring to the whole pattern of community life, of serving the economic and social needs of people. We must be concerned with this. Farmers and rural people today demand services of the same calibre and type as are enjoyed by urban people. Skills are involved in the provision of those services.

Many of our rural people centre their activities on communities which provide modern services, but we have seen many examples where farm machinery agencies, automobile agencies and other businesses dependent upon such communities have been forced out of business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in rising on the motion now before the House, which reads as follows:

That this House calls upon the government to reverse its present policies which have deliberately depressed the agricultural economy of this country, causing excessive unemployment, lack of income, slow economic growth and little hope for the future, and this House urges the government to take positive measures to ensure a dynamic rural community as an essential component of Canadian society.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I first wish to congratulate the mover of that motion, because I do not think that a motion has ever been so much to the point. It is useless to say that we, in the Ralliement créditiste, support such a motion.

[Mr. Burton.]

This afternoon, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) rose in support of a policy that I would term "untenable", I was quite surprised to hear him accuse the opposition of questioning the integrity of a government member. I wonder now, having witnessed all what happened in the farm sector in Quebec and in other provinces as well, if we should not challenge the integrity of a private member or that of a whole government.

Our farmers are so revolted that they no longer know whom to blame. The minister is defending his farm policy by pointing out the measures adopted, such as the studies, the inquiries, the surveys, the classifications to improve cattle, etc. He has even alluded to the Crop Insurance Act to which the farmers contribute. However, the minister is forgetting that the farmers do not only live from royal inquiries, scientific studies and technical surveys but from the production of their farm operations.

Today, we should deal with what the farmers are complaining about. Now that they have done what they were asked to do by great government technocrats, that is build up economic units, and now that they have gone into debts for several years to mechanize their operations or to increase their livestock in order to meet the government's requirements, the farmers are penalized for their good work.

This is how this government is rewarding those who are working towards our economic development. Here again, we hear some Liberal members say that the motion moved today is retrograde. I am wondering if it is not more so to destroy what has been built, to reduce to nothing our lands, to drive our farmers into the cities and to say to them: Go and ask for welfare—as it is done in my own riding and elsewhere, where more than 50 per cent of the farmers must apply for welfare—all in the name of reform. At least, the government should put an end to that nonsense and find more logical reasons.

What has happened to the requests, demands, representations made by the farmers here in Parliament, outside as well as inside, during committee meetings? I shall simply quote an extract from an article published in the farmers' paper of my riding called: La Terre de Chez-Nous:

Telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau.

In a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau the Quebec Federation of Industrial Milk Producers objects to the dairy policy for 1970-71 and asks that its enforcement be suspended immediately.

The producers, says the telegram, have given serious consideration to the problems of overproduction and, at their annual general meeting held on April 22 and 23, voted for a quota system in marketing. Therefore, they want new talks with the federal government—

At present all doors are closed.

I remember that last year, some farmers were still able to discuss quotas with representatives of the Canadian Dairy Commission but this is no longer possible because the door has been double-locked.

Consequently, the farmers call for the reopening of negotiations with the federal government in order to establish a fair and just dairy policy. Besides, here is the text of a telegram from the Quebec Federation of Industrial Milk Producers:

The Quebec Federation of Industrial Milk Producers, at its general meeting in Quebec City on April 22 and 23, 1970, objects publicly to the dairy policy of the federal government—Requests your intervention in order to suspend immediately this policy which unfairly penalizes the dairy producers of Quebec. These producers, who have just voted for the adoption of the quota system for their production are asking for new negotiations in order to establish a fair and just dairy policy, considering this new situation.

These are farmers from Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean. We must not forget that those from the Lower St. Lawrence and from Nicolet are making the same request and are against the government policy. I will not have time to read the whole article but I will say that not only farmers from Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean but also those from the province of Quebec as a whole are not satisfied.

When hon. members from western Canada take the floor in the House, they talk about wheat. It is natural since it is the West's main production.

As for us from Quebec, milk is our main product. Unfortunately, when it is the subject in the House, the members from Quebec remain seated or they rise to try to defend an indefensible dairy policy.

Mr. Speaker, it is about time to stop that nonsense. We must no longer remain silent, but show that we represent an area which needs to be defended. This is why I am speaking this afternoon, because once again I want to point out to the government the injustice that prevails in eastern Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec.

The minister said earlier that the government is paying about $140 million to help dairy producers. I wish he were in the House, because I would ask him to tell us how much money he takes from farmers through that penalty of $1.25 per hundredweight of milk.

One hand gives what the other takes back. Then, it is said that something was given. Why? Because farmers cannot stop the cows from giving milk. Indeed, the cows are not used to regulations. They give milk just the same and that is why farmers are imposed a penalty of $1.25 per hundredweight. When they get assistance, it amounts to 26 cents per hundreweight. The maximum is 56 cents.

However, when it comes to the penalty, farmers have to pay $1.25 per hundredweight. No small amount. It is absolutely ridiculous! I have no doubt that if western wheat producers had had to pay $1.25 per hundredweight, they would have marched on Ottawa with guns.

Western farmers are paid not too produce. I am not envious. I feel they should receive more money, and once again I ask the minister to think sincerely about that injustice. Subsidies are paid to channel production in another direction, and this is all right.

Western Canada receives a lot in proportion to its population. Indeed, the three Prairie provinces have less than 3 million inhabitants. They take advantage of the act providing assistance for grain marketing which gives them a large return in addition to another $40 million which they had obtained before receiving those last $100 million granted by the government. Even if they received $500 million, we would be pleased.

But the 6 million inhabitants of the province of Quebec should at least get a third or half of the assistance granted by the government. On the contrary, they are deprived of $100 million. They are penalized instead of being helped.

If milk producers were allowed a decent price, they would be ready to channel their production in another direction, although at the government's urging they made the mistake of getting into debt for 10 or 15 years to mechanize their operations and today they have to give up.

They are no longer in a position to pay their debts and the government, behind the scene, collects its $1.25 dollar at the source. It will not lose that amount.

This is the reason for the surpluses and our farmers want to take steps to streamline their production. The government should help them instead of stifling them. The government should pay them yet on their feet again instead of imposing new burdens on them.

What matters is that hon. members should appreciate this unbearable situation. People say: The Quebec farmers demonstrate and shout in the streets. No wonder that they indulge in such demonstrations when they are the victims of such glaring injustices. If the same thing were to be done in the western provinces, we would soon witness a rebellion, but in the province of Quebec, we are used to be abused, and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is expired.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, for a few moments this afternoon I should like to speak in this debate which concerns agriculture and the problems of rural people. Fortunately, many of the debates which take place in this House refer to agriculture and farmers. Although the percentage of farmers in our country is declining steadily and we are becoming an urban people, we must not underestimate the importance of this industry to our country. Surely many of us have a background related to the rural areas of Canada. Urbanization in our country has taken place in recent years only.

As our country changes, so must agriculture change. Many of these changes are catalogued and predicted in the task force report on agriculture. These changes will effect us all, especially the people living on the smaller farms and those of advanced years in life. The responsibility for smoothing this transition from farming to other jobs or retirement will fall on government, and especially the federal government. The Canfarm system, which is a farm management data system, is an example of co-operation between provincial and federal governments and universities to bring the advantages of technology to aid the practical commercial farmer. In the old days when a farmer had a half dozen cows, a few chickens and a team of horses this sort of technical assistance was not necessary, but it is today when you see more specialization and larger farm units.

However, for every farmer going into farming in a larger way and requiring tools like the Canfarm data system there are many more going out of farming. The federal government has just signed a new agreement with the province of Ontario for some $60 million over the next five years under the ARDA program. This program will give assistance in retiring marginal farms in many areas of the province. It will also consolidate small farms on good land, regroup them and lease them back or sell them to viable farmers with viable units. A good provision in this agreement is that many of these farms can be leased, instead of purchased, for a period of ten years. Improvements to the land can be made with ARDA funds. The big advantage of this program is that the farmer does not have to raise the capital for these farms but can simply lease the land at very reasonable rates for a period of years.

An important new provision in the Ontario-Canada agreement is that for special assistance to farmers retiring from uneconomic farms. There are so many areas of our country with farmers of advanced years who have not enough assets to retire on. If they sell their farm, often they do not realize enough out of it to buy a house in town to which to retire. The program, I hope and trust, will bridge this gap.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that our production technology has gone far beyond our marketing ability. We can produce too much food but we cannot sell it at a price that enables the producer to obtain a decent return on his investment, management and labour. All too often he does not even get reasonable wages, let alone anything for his management or as return on investment. I trust that out of the task force report on agriculture will come a comprehensive farm policy which will bring a better life for our friends and neighbours on the farms of Canada. Indeed, one of the reasons for establishing the task force was so that a comprehensive national policy could be designed comprising of new structures and plans for orderly marketing which would bring reasonable returns to producers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58 the proceedings on the motion before the House are deemed to have expired.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the House would agree to revert to motions in order that I might make a short announcement about the tragic situation in Peru. The message to the House is brief.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERU—ASSISTANCE TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. James E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House is aware of the tragic situation now faced by the government and the people of Peru in the wake of the devastating earthquakes which spread through that country a few days ago. Since that time the Canadian government has been examining on an urgent basis the requests of the Peruvian government for relief assistance in an effort to determine the quickest and most effective way in which Canada could come to the assistance of the victims of what will certainly prove to be one of the greatest calamities of this century.

Hon. members will recall that the Prime Minister indicated in this chamber a day or so ago the immediate cash grant of $25,000 to the Canadian Red Cross Society for relief purposes in Peru. The Prime Minister now wishes the House to know that the government has this afternoon authorized the immediate dispatch to Peru of six Canadian armed forces aircraft for use in ferrying relief supplies into the affected areas. Five of these aircraft are of the Caribou variety designed for operation in challenging airstrip conditions. The other is a Hercules transport which will act as a mother-ship for the navigational assistance of the Caribou. These aircraft will depart from their bases in Canada during the course of the evening and will be available to the Peruvian authorities immediately on their arrival in that country early next week. The government is continuing its examination of other means by which it can come to the assistance of the earthquake victims.

I wish to thank hon. members, Mr. Speaker, for their courtesy in permitting me to revert to motions to make this statement on behalf of the Prime Minister.

Assistance to Peruvian Earthquake Victims

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the government for seeking practical means of expressing in a practical way the humanitarian feelings of the people of Canada for the citizens of Peru who have suffered this catastrophe. I think that the Canadian people will be pleased to know that some of our armed forces aircraft have been dispatched to render aid in this situation.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party also welcome the statement that has just been made. I must say that we felt a bit embarrassed the other day when it was announced that only $25,000 was being given. This amount seemed terribly small in the wake of the tremendous suffering in Peru. We realize now that that was only an immediate response. As the seriousness of the situation was impressed upon the government, the government realized that the Canadian people wanted to do everything they could to come to the assistance of these people in Peru. This action has our support. The government will also have our support of any further steps it may take to help these unfortunate people.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm the business for next week. Monday will be an opposition allotted day. On Tuesday we will call first Government Order 87, third reading of Bill C-202 with respect to Arctic waters pollution prevention. This will be followed immediately by the completion of second reading and committee stage of Government Order 98, Bill C-215 with regard to the Elections Act. On Wednesday we hope to complete the Elections Act bill. On Thursday in any event we will call Government Order 6, Bill C-4 regarding the Corporations Act.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 8, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—MAKING OUTSIDE HOUSE OF PROPOSAL RESPECTING WAGE RESTRAINTS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in respect of which I gave Your Honour notice and also filed what might be called a caveat on Friday afternoon. It has to do with statements made by the Minister of Finance over the weekend in the face of his refusal to deal with the same matters in the House.

During the last week in particular a number of questions were directed to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and others. Today I have read and reread these questions and answers, and the only impression to be derived is that the government had no intention of making any announcement or moving toward any specific proposals to deal with the problems of inflation and unemployment. I have a number of these quotations here, but I will not take the time of the House to read them.

Mr. Trudeau: Why not?

Mr. Baldwin: They include questions and answers on June 1, May 25, May 29, and twice on June 4. The Prime Minister, it may be, did not have time over the weekend to read them, but I have read and reread them with some interest. In the face of this we have now witnessed the extraordinary spectacle of the Minister of Finance and other government people involved making proposals at the Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers in Winnipeg over the weekend in which they advocated very specific wage restraints and controls, with a hint that such may well be the subject of sanction and enforcement. Thus, what we heard during the past week in response to our questions was only an exercise in a sly and furtive form of deceit—an attempt to keep from this House facts and proposals it is entitled to hear at first hand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: This House and the country have been remarkably patient with respect to the government's stumbling and blundering. We in the opposition, because government members have sat silent and helpless—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —have attempted to obtain some idea of what the government proposes to do. The question of the wisdom or not of these proposals is irrelevant to the issue I am now raising. The sad and pitiful spectacle emerges of a government which does not know where it wants to go, and even if it did it does not know how to get there. We have known this for some time. The country is finally waking up to the fact.

There is a responsibility upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and others to be frank and honest in the House in connection with this serious problem. Solutions will not come about unless there is confidence and trust between government and Parliament and government and the people. Unless the government responds frankly to proper questions in the House, the present lack of confidence will increase in the country and the possibility of a solution will be even less than it is today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the Minister of Finance responds I have to mention that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also filed a notice somewhat along the same lines as the one which was filed by the hon. member for Peace River. Perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might be allowed to express his views before the Minister of Finance speaks.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me this opportunity to carry out the intention which I indicated to you in the notice I sent to your office this morning. I raise this matter as a question of privilege and I may say, Mr.

Speaker, that I am resolved to do it in what is sometimes referred to as a low key. Nevertheless, I feel that this is a very serious matter.

I draw Your Honour's attention first of all to words from May, which you have frequently drawn to our attention, as to the true meaning of parliamentary privileges which according to May, it is as follows:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each house collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions—

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that one of the rights without which we cannot discharge our functions in this House of Commons is the right not to be misled, the right when government statements are made to us to believe that they are true. If that situation does not obtain, not only are we prevented from the proper discharge of our functions but this House can well fall apart.

Sir, because I seriously ask you to find that I have a prima facie case of privilege I wish to make it clear that I am not alleging that there was a deliberate misleading of the House, and accordingly I am not asking you to find that there was deliberate misleading of the House last week. But I do assert, and I ask you to find, that what went on last week raises some very serious questions that ought to be gone into by a standing committee of the House.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already referred to a number of days on which questions were asked and answers were given. In order to pinpoint the matter I am content to confine my references to Tuesday, June 2, and Thursday, June 4. On Tuesday, June 2, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), after having asked about wage restraints, asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) if it was the government's intention to cover the entire field of other incomes, "particularly profits, interest, rents and prices." The minister's reply was:

> I had not thought of making that request of the provinces.

When newspaper reports persisted that something like this was going to happen at Winnipeg on Friday my leader, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, raised the matter again on Thursday, directing his questions to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister gave us various statements which made it clear that in his view what the Minister of Finance had said on Tuesday was correct, that the government had no thoughts along these lines.

An hon. Member: What page?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands pressed the matter with the Prime Minister, as reported at page 7714 the reply was:

> Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would save a lot of his time and the time of the House if he were to take the word of the Minister of Finance against that of a canard.

An hon. Member: What a word!

Mr. Trudeau: "Imposition of wage controls"—read the question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have done a lot of reading over the weekend. I am quite prepared to become a member of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for the purpose of this reference where we can go into the matter in full. The whole impression given to us was that the government had no thought of going to Winnipeg with proposals for wage restraints, wage controls, guidelines, or what have you. Hon. members are aware of the fact that even as late as Friday afternoon at least one Ottawa paper was still reporting that the Prime Minister had said this would not happen—

Mr. Trudeau: I did not.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh—touchy, touchy!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I said that at least one Ottawa newspaper was still reporting that the Prime Minister was saying this would not happen. The Press Gallery was only doing what we were doing, believing the answers we were getting from the government side of the House. Yet at Winnipeg a program of wage restraints or controls was announced.

I know, Mr. Speaker, before anybody mentions it, that it was announced in the form of an appeal from Dr. Young, the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission. I know it will be argued that this was not an announcement of government policy. But this is a fiction that it is getting pretty hard for any of us to believe. I draw attention to the fact that in a report in the Saturday Globe and Mail by David Crane from Winnipeg there are several references to Finance Minister E. J.

Benson and his remarks. In particular, I should like to quote the following:

> Mr. Benson said the decision to try a new approach, through wage and salary guidelines, was taken after the Canadian Labour Congress convention in Edmonton last month showed no willingness on the part of labour to support the voluntary restraint program of the Prices and Incomes Commission.
> It would be unrealistic to expect such guidelines would attract support from any substantial segment of organized labour.

Mr. Speaker, I know that two explanations can be advanced. One is the usual course of picking the exact words, the exact question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the exact reply, and saying, "See, it really was not incorrect; it really stands up if you examine it." I know that the other explanation or defence will be that the announcement was not made by the government but by Dr. Young.

Mr. Speaker, surely we are old enough around here to know that the Prices and Incomes Commission now speaks for the government. We are old enough to know that it would be impossible for the Minister of Finance not to have thought of these things on Tuesday of last week and yet by Friday be ready to agree with Dr. Young.

If I have gone a little farther than I intended in documenting the question of privilege, I ask Your Honour's forgiveness because I do not want to put Your Honour in the position of having to decide from the Chair today that, ipso facto, there was a case of deliberate misleading. But I do plead with Your Honour, because of the fact that there was all this confusion last week, because there is a real difference between what was said in the House and what happened in Winnipeg, to agree that we have a question of privilege, and that a committee should go into it. I go back to what I said when I first got to my feet, that one of our basic rights is the right not to be misled, the right, when the government makes a statement on the floor of this House, to believe it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If that right is destroyed it will be pretty hard for this place to carry on. In view of last week's developments I believe that the people involved should be asked to appear before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that we may go into this matter and clarify it. Accordingly, if Your Honour should rule that I have presented a prima facie case of privilege I would be prepared to move the following motion:

> That the apparent conflict between statements on income restraints made by the government on Tuesday and Thursday, June 2 and June 4, in the House of Commons, and the position taken by the government on Friday, June 5, at a federal-provincial conference of finance ministers at Winnipeg, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, so that the said committee may call witnesses and take whatever steps it deems necessary to clarify this situation.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the two previous speakers that it is important that the House be not misled.

An hon. Member: You do it all the time.

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid both of them have misled the House as a result of their inaccurate reading. They have misled the House by indicating that my answers in some way had been less than truthful. Well, Mr. Speaker, in order for them to establish a prima facie case it would be important for the hon. members to read the questions to which I gave the answers. As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicated, I have not spent the weekend reading Hansard, but I did—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —while they were talking look at the questions that were asked of me. In every case they were talking to the imposition of taxes on wage gains or to compulsory measures. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) on page seventy-seven twelve, in the right-hand column, is asking—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is page 7712.

Mr. Trudeau: It is seventy-seven twelve or 7712. I do not think there is much difference.

Mr. Sharp: They think we are misleading the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: He asked if there was to be "a proposal for imposing a federal tax on wage gains in excess of the guidelines", and so on. The next question he asked was a repetition. He asked about "a proposal for a tax on any wage gains in excess of the guidelines", and so on. The hon. member for Peace River lower in the same column asks about "any scheme for imposing wage and price controls".

Mr. Baldwin: Read it all.

Mr. Trudeau: If you flip the page instead of flipping your top you see that on page 7714 the Leader of the NDP comes in with another question "regarding the imposition of wage controls or the imposition of any tax on wage gains to keep them in line—".

There were not in Winnipeg, as far as I know, any such proposals. I fail to see how either hon. member can establish a prima facie case by saying, "No, we had no knowledge that there would be such an imposition", because in fact there was none.

Mr. Baldwin: There are no extenuating circumstances.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to go a step farther than that because I was asked a question earlier in the week about whether the government was going to make proposals with respect to wage guidelines and so on, and I indicated that the government was not. The situation is that Dr. Young is the head of the Prices and Incomes Commission which has done a very useful job in Canada in obtaining commitments on the side of business and has tried to obtain commitments on the side of Labour. As an independent commissioner he also approached governments, and I specify here not only the government of Canada but the governments of the provinces as well, and made a proposal which he presented at Winnipeg and which this government chose to accept.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And the government did not know of it before?

Mr. Benson: One of the things the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has tried to say is that the Prices and Incomes Commission is directed by the government of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And are they not?

Mr. Benson: This is not the case.

Mr. Orlikow: That is a lie.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, somebody has called me a liar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. No member has the right to say that another member, whether he is a minister or not, has uttered a lie.

As hon. members know, the Minister of Finance has the floor. If there are interventions which do not come to the attention of the Chair, it is difficult to call on the member to give an explanation or withdraw. As far as the Chair is concerned, the Minister of Finance has the floor. If someone rises and suggests that another member has told a lie he must, of course, withdraw that statement. If any member rises and does this, he will be in contravention of the rules of the House and called upon to withdraw. For the moment the Minister of Finance has the floor.

Mr. Benson: I wish to indicate that the intervention was by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Benson: I request that the hon. member withdraw that intervention.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am the member to whom the minister is referring. I recognize that the language I used was not parliamentary and I will withdraw it. However, I say to the minister that I do not believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the hon. member's right to believe or disbelieve statements made by other hon. members, although as a community we are required to accept the truth of statements by members.

Mr. Benson: The plain fact, Mr. Speaker, is that Dr. Young made proposals to each of the provincial governments and the federal government. The federal government chose at Winnipeg to accept those proposals. I reiterate that this is an independent commission. It is not controlled by the government. We did not make suggestions to the commissioners as to the proposals they should make. They consulted the government in the same way they consulted the provincial governments. I am pleased, for the sake of Canada, that all the governments to a degree are going to support the proposals of Dr. Young.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should not get involved in the substance of the matter referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Peace River. The decision to be made on the subject before the Chair is purely procedural. The Chair has to decide in the circumstances whether there is a prima facie case that ought to be referred to a committee or which requires action of some kind.

The matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is essentially the same as that raised by the hon. member for Peace River, except in the case of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre there is a proposed motion.

On examining closely the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River it appears that he has endeavoured in his notice filed with the Chair, which he has reiterated in the course of his presentation, to bring two aspects of the question before the House, namely, that certain statements, because of their nature, ought to have been made in the House and that replies given in response to questions in the House have misled and deceived hon. members.

The first point, namely, that certain statements ought to have been made in the House, is a question that has been raised from time to time over the years. It is a difficult problem, one that has tried the wisdom of many of my predecessors, and one for which I fear it is difficult to provide a solution.

It has been raised by hon. members during this Parliament on a number of occasions. I have ruled from time to time, whenever the matter has been raised, that it was not really a question of privilege which justified a motion being put to the House for debate and on which a vote would eventually be taken to decide whether the matter would be referred to a committee.

I must acknowledge my greater difficulty in dealing with the second point raised by the hon. member to the effect that replies given to questions in the House have misled and deceived members. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Peace River have indicated that they do not propose to suggest there has been wilful misrepresentation to the House. They suggested that the matter might perhaps be cleared up after further study by a committee of this House.

If the intent of the proposed motion were to establish a deliberate deception by a member or by members, the Chair must consider the often-cited statement on that point made by my distinguished predecessor, Mr. Speaker Michener, which is to be found at page 584 of the Journals of 1959, in the following words:

> In my view, simple justice requires that no hon. member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

If the Chair were to accept the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and if the matter were sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, what would be under consideration there except the conduct of a minister? I suggest that this is what would be under consideration, and that this could be done only by adopting the procedures and measures which have been suggested on a number of occasions by the Chair, particularly by Mr. Speaker Michener in the ruling to which I have just referred.

It does seem to me that implicit in the question raised by the hon. member for Peace River is a dispute or a misunderstanding arising between members as to allegations of fact. The Minister of Finance has interpreted the situation as he sees it. Obviously, he is in disagreement on this point with the hon. member for Winnipeg North, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Peace River. As stated in citation 113 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> A dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

I have to rule in the circumstances that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does not fulfil the requirements for a prima facie case of privilege and I cannot accept it to the extent of putting it to the House at the present time. I have to rule there is no prima facie case of privilege.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

REPORT ON WINNIPEG MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to the House on the meeting of the Federal-Provincial Committee of Ministers of Finance and Provincial Treasurers in Winnipeg last Friday and Saturday.

There were some significant developments during the course of this conference which have an important bearing on current economic conditions in Canada and which I would like to outline in some detail for the information of hon. members.

In my remarks to the conference regarding the economic situation, I reminded provincial ministers that the fundamental objective of the federal government is to halt the inflationary spiral of costs and prices in order to pave the way for a return to the path of strong but stable growth. At the same time I emphasized it is vitally important that we should remain flexible enough to meet changing conditions in order to maintain a sound economic balance.

As the provincial ministers were well aware, the necessity of maintaining flexibility was sharply underlined by the recent massive build-up of our foreign exchange reserves and the resulting decision of the government to allow the exchange rate to float above its fixed margins.

I advised the conference that we fully recognized that any appreciation of the Canadian dollar for an extended period of time would tend to add a further measure of restraint to the economy. I said that further restraint would not be appropriate and that we would offset by other measures any such restraining effects on the economy. Nevertheless, the problem of inflation remains a matter of fundamental concern. Nothing that has happened up to this point suggests that we can let up in our fight to break the inflationary spiral of costs and prices.

As I told the conference, there is a considerable danger that a continuation of the current substantial increases in wages and salaries will seriously undermine the initial progress we have made in slowing down the rate of price increases. Most members of the House will already be aware that Dr. John Young, Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, proposed to ministers that the federal and provincial governments join in supporting the adoption of guidelines to establish reasonable upper limits on wage and salary increases in present economic circumstances.

At their conference last February, the first ministers of the federal and provincial governments endorsed a set of proposals adopted at the National Conference on Price Stability. These proposals were aimed at establishing a yardstick against which to measure the reasonableness of price increases in relation to costs. I believe the agreement reached at this national conference has played a significant part in restraining the rise in prices to date this year. It has also restrained profits, which in the first quarter of this year were down 3.8 per cent from the total in the same period last year.

We have been greatly disappointed that the leaders of organized labour have declined to join representatives of other sectors of the economy in helping to work out the terms of an agreed approach which held some reasonable promise of being both fair and effective. For some time after the National Conference on Price Stability we continued to hope that organized labour—appreciating its own self-interest in the maintenance of strong and stable growth—would at least evolve some way of its own of co-operating with the national undertaking launched by the Prices and Incomes Commission. The attitude evident on the part of delegates who attended the recent convention of the Canadian Labour Congress in Edmonton now makes it abundantly clear that it is no longer realistic to expect such co-operation to be forthcoming.

At the conference in Winnipeg, the provincial finance ministers and treasurers generally indicated strong support for this new proposal put forward by the commission and all of those present agreed to put it before their respective governments for consideration. For our part, Mr. Speaker, I made it clear that the federal government is prepared to give its full support to the kind of wage and salary guidelines outlined by Dr. Young.

We agree the time has now come to establish a yardstick against which to measure the reasonablness of wage and salary increases in relation to productivity and other relevant factors in an effort to end the relentless and damaging cost-price spiral which continues to plague the economy. I acknowledged that it would be unrealistic to expect such guidelines would attract support from any substantial segment of organized labour. But these proposed criteria would provide important guidance for those in both government and private sectors responsible for decisions about granting wage and salary increases, as well as for mediators and arbitrators. Equally important is the fact that such guidelines would provide the Canadian public with a yardstick against which to judge the reasonableness of future wage and salary settlements in relation to the public interest.

We agree that in the interests of equity it is also important that provincial governments should intensify their efforts to curb the upward climb of rents in many urban centres and to use their influence to restrain increases in the fees of the professions. The success of the new program proposed by the Prices and Incomes Commission depends in a vital way on the degree of co-operation forthcoming from all levels of government, institutions, the private sector and the general public.

I want to make it perfectly clear that the federal government remains determined to break the back of inflation. We are hopeful that this further measure will prove effective, together with existing policies, in halting the cost-price spiral. If it does not, then the government is fully prepared to consider other measures which may have to be adopted to eliminate this threat to the well-being of our economy and of all Canadians.

The conference also dealt with questions involving the financial relationships between the federal and provincial governments, which have an important bearing on their respective fiscal positions and their impact on the economy.

I agree to accelerate by one month the payment to the provinces of taxes the federal government collects on their behalf. The practical effect of this proposal is to make available to provinces other than Quebec, which collects its own taxes, approximately another $150 million during the current fiscal year.

Our estimates for the current fiscal year originally provided for a payment to the provinces of $867 million for net equalization and estate tax payments. As a result of new statistical data which has since become available, it is estimated the payment for the current year, together with adjustments for 1968-69, will actually amount to more than $920 million. This represents an increase of around $60 million.

As a further means of easing the tight cash position of the provinces, I also proposed a change involving grants for technical and vocational training schools. After provision is made for capital grants during the current fiscal year, the credit remaining to the provinces for this purpose is approximately $150 million. I suggested that we should seek to work out conditions providing for the payout of the remaining $150 million credit in cash over a two-year period commencing in the current fiscal year.

Taken together, these three measures, plus some minor adjustments in other payments, would make available to provincial governments $300 million more than originally provided for in the current fiscal year.

In March, I anticipated a budget surplus of $250 million, which included an estimated drop in federal revenues as a result of imposition of consumer credit controls of around $50 million. Since it has been decided not to proceed with this measure, the surplus as calculated in the budget would be revised upward to $300 million. This would now be reduced to a surplus of $150 milliion on the basis of the developments I have just outlined.

In the budget, I estimated that our net cash requirement for the current fiscal year would amount to $525 million, excluding that needed to finance foreign exchange transactions. The net increase in the budgetary expenditures of $100 million, after allowing for the change relating to consumer credit controls, plus the further $150 million required as a non-budgetary item to cover accelerated tax collection payments, would increase our net cash requirements by a total of $250 million to a total of $775 million.

On the basis of the national income accounts, I estimated that the surplus in the federal sector, excluding the Canada Pension Plan, would decline from $570 million in the last fiscal year to $130 million in the present fiscal period.

Excluding the loss of revenue expected as a result of establishment of consumer credit controls, the federal surplus would amount to $180 million this year in terms of the national income accounts. The net effect of the budgetary measures which I have outlined would be to reduce this surplus to around $30 million. These figures may be altered somewhat by the detailed revision of the national accounts, but given the margin of error in those statistical estimates the basic situation remains unchanged.

This reduction in the projected surplus in the federal sector will provide an important new stimulus to the economy, which we consider to be warranted in the present economic circumstances.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to thank the minister for having sent me a copy of his statement in advance so that I could see what it did not include. A very important conference has just been held between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and his colleagues and their counterparts in the provinces. That conference covered more than one subject. Inflation and wage restraint did not represent the total scope of the conference, and to this extent the minister's report today fails to disclose what was the subject of the greater portion of the discussions at the conference, namely, the reaction of the provinces to the white paper on tax changes. I deliberately say tax changes and do not use the word "reform" because it is becoming more and more apparent as the public reacts that the public does not consider the proposals in any way a reform.

In any event, I would have liked the minister to indicate, in view of the attitude of the provinces to the white paper, what were their reactions to it. After all, it is absolutely implicit and goes to the very heart and core of any income tax system in this country that there be the closest degree of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces. At the moment it looks as though the federal government has decided to go into an orbit of its own and that the provinces, frankly, could not care less.

I will make the prophecy that it will be a long time before the white paper can be implemented if the present attitude of the government to the provinces in regard to these tax proposals is continued. There has to be a much greater modification of them and conciliation shown by the federal government toward the provinces and their proper aspirations in regard to our tax system.

Having said that, I want to turn to what was said in connection with the other part of the conference. I think it is quite right to say that we agree that the reaction of the provincial governments was in keeping with their responsibilities. After the provincial representatives have referred the matter to their colleagues and the provincial governments have taken an official attitude, I trust the provinces may be able to bring forward some suggestions that will assist in making the attempt to fight inflation more successful. I suppose that inflation is internally the most serious problem facing Canada today, though I would say it will be soon overtaken by the problem created by the increasing degree of unemployment.

I also feel it is unfortunate that organized labour, presumably through the spokesmen of the CLC and the CNTU, has so far failed to show any real initiative in making the fight against inflation a common cause. I would have thought it would be better on their part to participate in dialogue with the government in the fight against inflation, even if they do not agree with the views of the other side—and they are fully entitled to their opinions—instead of merely standing on the sidelines and taking what I suggest is a purely negative stance.

I come now to a further point, one emphasized by the Minister of Finance this afternoon. I refer to his insistence that Dr. Young acts completely independently of the government. I should like to know what is the government's stand. The country is facing the problem of inflation, and the responsibility of fighting it is the government's. Yet they are standing idly by, presumably offering Dr. Young as a sacrificial lamb in this instance.

I say that a degree of leadership is now called for on the part of the government of Canada. If this independent commission dealing with prices and incomes is unable to get all the parties together, is the solution merely to throw up one's hands? I would say that the duty of the government is clear. From this point on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must make every effort to get organized labour to participate with him and members of the cabinet in a meaningful dialogue in order to fight inflation. Let them get down to talking instead of insulting one another from a distance. I would say that this is the essence of leadership. If inflation is left as a problem for Dr. Young and his colleagues to resolve, the government is abdicating its own responsibility.

The minister indicated, as some slender reed of success or claimed success on the part of the Prices and Incomes Commission, that there has been a decline in business profits and that this was brought about voluntarily. The minister has to be much more credible than that. There is no evidence that in the first quarter of this year or in the first month of this year the decline in business profits has been attributable to voluntary restraint. All I ask the minister to do is to look at the figures for lagging retail sales, for auto sales and at the slump in the construction industry. Let him look at the wholesale decline in the issuance of building permits and the 40-odd percent decline in new housing starts.

Then the minister has obviously forgotten the decline in agricultural incomes that has now worked its way into the system and which is why we now see that business profits have declined. They have declined because they are just not there. To say that this has been the result of voluntary restrictions by businessmen, and is therefore evidence of the success or partial success of the Prices and Incomes Commission, I suggest is really stretching the point.

The minister claims that the government must now establish a yardstick against which to measure wage increases. You know, this being converted to the idea that wages must be somehow related to some productivity, is even later than Saul going to Damascus. This particular administration has a responsibility too. It cannot divorce itself from the actions of its predecessor administration which took us through the settlement in respect of the dock workers in Montreal and the seaway workers. These 30 per cent and 35 per cent wage settlements of course set the pattern. Frankly, I would suggest one would think that the workers in other industries had completely lost any sense of proportion if they did not go along with the same sort of settlement encouraged three, four or five years ago by the government.

The government says it intends to break the back of inflation but, strangely enough in our position, we find that inflation is international. We import inflation or at least it is influenced by other countries. In part in many instances inflation does come to us to the extent that we buy goods from countries where there is inflation. We have responsibility too. The hon. member who wanted to make a quip from his seat rather than from his head might look at the consequences of releasing the dollar.

The minister says that imports will come in in greater quantity and that therefore prices will be reduced. It is all very well to hope that this will be the result provided there is no inflation elsewhere, but if the countries with which we deal in such great quantities do not have any control over their inflation we will only be bringing it into this country. Particularly there is the comparison of prices. There is always, shall we say, the long-range goal of parity in respect of wages with the United States. If there should be high or severe inflation in the United States we will feel that push too. It all boils down, however, to unemployment at the end of the road in the decline of Canadian industry. This is where the problem lies. If we are to fight inflation by releasing the dollar and getting imports which crowd out Canadian production, of course there will be unemployment. And so we fight the fight.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West I am sure will not mind my reminding him of the provisions of the Standing Order. I always hesitate to interrupt an hon. member when he is commenting on a ministerial statement, particularly on such an important matter. There is, however, a Standing Order which provides that comments by spokesmen on behalf of opposition parties should be brief. I am taking into account the importance of the matter and the interesting comments of the hon. member, but I would ask him to keep in mind the limitations imposed by the Standing Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I was endeavouring to reply to an eight-page statement which raises important points. I trust that the importance of the subject will not be detracted from perhaps rather lengthy remarks. If the remarks hurt hon. members opposite, that is fine; they must bear with them. In any event, the burden is being placed on the backs of the workers of this country.

The budgetary proposals made by the minister, the accelerated payments, presumably will help the provinces. This is a once-in-a-lifetime measure. It is not a measure which can be re-used. He cannot go on accelerating things which he has not got. I hope this will help some of the provinces, but I repeat that it is not a long-term solution but is rather a stop-gap solution at the very best.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on page 4 of the minister's statement he says:

> I acknowledged that it would be unrealistic to expect such guidelines would attract support from any substantial segment of organized labour.

By these words the minister condemns his own policy. How does the minister propose to carry this policy into effect? Does he intend to do so at the point of a bayonet? Does he think he can make a labour force work when that labour force feels it is unfairly discriminated against and feels that the measures he has brought in are unjust? Surely the minister must realize that unless he has the co-operation of labour and that unless labour feels that the policies brought in affect not only them but other segments of the economy his policies cannot be made to work in a free society.

It is not necessary for me to remind the minister that we often give up one freedom in return for greater freedoms. We accept certain actions in the interest of society but we do this only when we think we are being called upon to make our contribution while other people are making their contribution as well. But when the minister brings in guidelines which apply to labour alone and points his finger at labour as the villain in the whole piece of inflation, he is simply condemning his own policy. He cannot in this way obtain the co-operation that is essential if we are to have any restraint at all in this country.

The comments of hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker, are very typical of how they treat a serious problem of this kind with flippant remarks. I think it might do them a lot of good if they would delay their remarks for a little while instead of sitting there and throwing these inanities into the air.

The government has created a bias against labour ever since it took office. If we go back and examine the record we can see that from the very day this government came into power there has been an attempt to point the finger at labour. In his last budget speech the minister virtually invited the employers of this country to put their people out on strike. We saw this again in the attitude of the Prices and Incomes Commission in respect of its unrealistic approach and cry that labour should co-operate when the commission knew that the kind of thing it was asking organized labour to do was impossible. The commission knew that the CLC could not say to every union in the country that it must go along with this. There are democratic principles involved in these organizations. They reach decisions on their own. Often they reject the advice of their leaders. The commission has asked the leaders of the trade union movement to do something or to accept something which they could not do. Now we see the culmination of this kind of arrangement.

The minister points out that there has been compliance and acceptance by the business sector. That must surely be the greatest misstatement not only of the day but of this whole year. What sort of voluntary acceptance was it that the Prices and Incomes Commission suggested? It asked business not to increase its profits to any great extent. As the hon. member who preceded me pointed out, one of the reasons business profits are not higher than they are now is not because of the admonition of the commission but because those businesses which were in a position to take a profit had already done so. It is simply because the economic climate is such that the profits in some sectors of the economy are not there.

We want to see something done about inflation. We recognize that it is a problem, although it is not the greatest problem this society has to face. Anyone who can recall the hungry thirties, the unemployment and the grief that were created, knows that certainly the degree of inflation we have today is not the worst problem our society has to face.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

But since we do have to take some action along this line I suggest to the minister that he accept the suggestion put forth at the conference by the government of Manitoba for an incomes policy that would deal with all forms of income, a policy that would look into professional fees, into rents, into profits and into the various ways in which people get their rewards in our society. Unless he does this, I cannot see any hope. But if he is prepared to accept the position of the Manitoba government, and if he is prepared to put forth to the country through Parliament a fair way of assessing and calling for sacrifices on the part of everyone in our society, then he will find that labour will be the first to agree with him.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are quite willing to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the government take steps to fight inflation and we recognize that the minister is sincere when he talks about his anti-inflation policy, but we have serious doubts as to the means he is taking to attain that goal.

First of all, we should get a clear understanding of what is meant by the words used. When the Minister of Finance talks about inflation, he refers to prices being inflated, for if we look it up in the dictionary, it is stated that inflation is an abnormal increase in available currency and credit beyond the proportion of available goods.

However, this is not the situation prevailing today. It is not that there is too much money in circulation in ratio to production for if this were so we could only advise that the government continue its fiscal policy in order to drain off such a surplus.

The present "inflated prices", a more appropriate description of the inflation the Minister of Finance would have us believe in, result from increased production costs. Before establishing the Prices and Incomes Commission, the minister should have appointed a commission to determine the causes of these "inflated prices", which would probably have made it possible to take more realistic action, more likely to correct the situation.

For example, a few years ago the government lifted all restrictions on interest rates on mortgage loans and now it is twice as expensive to finance construction projects generally.

That is an example of inflated prices which contribute directly to inflation.

Furthermore, the tax on building materials has inevitably caused inflated prices.

Those are two direct causes of inflation, or rather of inflated prices. If we really wanted to fight inflated prices, we should take measures against what causes them.

Each year, there is a gap of about 20 per cent between the goods available and the purchasing power of Canadians who want to buy those goods, and to buy them, they need wage increases which infallibly result in inflated prices.

Another source of inflation and inflated prices is the fact that Canadians lack purchasing power. The previous speaker suggested establishing minimum wages for all Canadians.

As reported on page 4 of his statement, the Minister of Finance thinks we should establish, and I quote:

—a yardstick against which to measure the reasonableness of price increases in relation to productivity—

This point is important to determine whether prices are at a normal level or whether wage increases will produce a proportional increase in production. Today, the high unemployment rate is still a factor of reduced productivity and therefore, higher retail prices of products.

We do not have enough time to suggest all the remedies to fight inflation. Unfortunately, we note that those applied by the government up to now have been completely ineffective. Indeed, it does not tackle the real causes of inflation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON ROME MEETING OF NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS AND SUBSEQUENT VISITS BY MINISTER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to report briefly to the House on the recent Rome meeting of NATO foreign ministers which I attended and on the visits I paid after the meeting to Yugoslavia, Roumania and Ireland.

First of all, I should like to table English and French texts of the communiqué and declaration issued by the NATO ministers with the suggestion that they be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

NATO Foreign Ministers' Meeting

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of communiqué and declaration referred to see appendix.]

Mr. Sharp: Discussions are already under way between various NATO members and individual Soviet bloc countries on such important east-west problems as the limitation of strategic arms, Berlin, and the Federal German Republic's relations with its eastern neighbours. At Rome, NATO ministers met to discuss what further steps the alliance and its members should take to promote improvement in east-west relations.

One possibility examined at Rome was the idea of a move in the direction of broader multilateral discussions, either in the form of a large conference or series of conferences, or a standing commission on east-west problems. Canada took the position that the idea of a conference at the right time and in the right circumstances would be most useful. We felt, however, that the actual decision to convene such a meeting should not be taken until an east-west consensus had emerged on the aims of a conference and on the subjects which could usefully be discussed, and until a conference had reasonable prospects of success. Similarly, we saw merit in the idea of setting up a standing commission, although we thought that the time was probably not yet right for it. It is our view that progress in the individual east-west talks which I mentioned a moment ago would be a good yardstick for determining when the time had come to broaden discussions out into a general multilateral forum. We must keep in mind the primary importance of moving ahead on the substance of outstanding issues.

Canada placed emphasis at Rome on the desirability of broadening the range of specific subjects under discussion with the other side. In 1968 and 1969, NATO had already indicated its interest in the possibility of mutual and balanced force reductions in central Europe, but as yet there has been no formal Soviet response. At Rome, Canada urged NATO to go beyond its previous position and make a clear and forthright offer to explore with the members of the Warsaw Pact how to start negotiations on force reductions. To demonstrate the seriousness of NATO's approach, we said that the alliance's offer should include suggested guidelines for the reductions, and a precise procedure for communications with the other side. A forthcoming, explicit offer of this kind would, in our view, have the best chance of obtaining a positive reply.

Our two main preoccupations in Rome were, first, to urge that the alliance adopt a positive but realistic position on the subject of multilateral discussions, with emphasis on the substance of the issues at stake and, second, to have NATO make a firm offer to talk on balanced force reductions.

In both of these respects, the outcome of the meeting was very satisfactory to Canada. On the first point, the meeting agreed that "in so far as progress is recorded as a result of...ongoing discussions—in particular on Germany and Berlin—the allied governments...would be willing to enter into multilateral contacts with all interested governments. One of the main purposes...would be to explore when it would be possible to convene a conference...." This reasoned, step-by-step approach to the question of a conference is in line with our own thinking. The communiqué also refers to the possible establishment of a permanent body in due course, as one way of starting multilateral negotiations.

On our second point, NATO's declaration on balanced force reductions explicitly invites interested states to hold exploratory talks on the subject and suggests four specific considerations which the allies would put forward in such talks. The Italian Foreign Minister was asked to transmit the offer to the other side, and in fact has already done so.

I think members will agree that the positions adopted by the alliance in Rome represent a clear step forward in the search for better relations with the east. I was also struck by the mood of co-operation and willingness to compromise displayed by all at the meeting.

We shall watch carefully for evidence that the other side is willing to respond positively. Early results may not be forthcoming, but in the months ahead Canada and other members of the Alliance will be exploring actively the prospects both for an eventual conference and for talks on balanced force reductions, so that the momentum which has now been developed is maintained.

While in Rome I called for the first time on the Secretary of State of the Vatican.

From Rome I went to Belgrade and then to Bucharest at the invitation of the Yugoslav and Roumanian governments. In Roumania, I flew over some of the flooded areas and was able to see for myself the desolation caused by the tragic national disaster that has taken place there, and to appreciate what it means in terms of human suffering and as a major setback to the Roumanian economy. On the way home I paid a brief official visit to Dublin.

In each case I had talks with the President, the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister on a wide range of bilateral and international questions including the results of the NATO ministerial meeting. I should like to table the communiqués issued on my visits to Belgrade and Bucharest. In Dublin the talks were less formal and no communiqué was issued.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the minister was kind enough to make a copy of his statement available, and I thank him for this courtesy. I must tell him that we have had a somewhat difficult time keeping track of his progression across Europe.

We were alarmed, falsely as it turned out, by the implications of France's alleged refusal to grant overfly privileges for the minister, only to be very much relieved by the Prime Minister's assurance that it was all a canard. No sooner had we checked our dictionaries to enable us to understand that word than we were having to respond to the minister's offer of a Canadian peacekeeping force for the Middle East. This generosity sent us scrurrying to the military experts to see, if the Canadian offer were taken up, whether enough troops would be left in Canada to enable us to assert our northern sovereignty or, as a matter of fact, any other sovereignty that the government has in mind to assert. When the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) was asked about the offer, he did not say it was a canard. He simply said he did not know anything more about the offer than I did. Perhaps we will learn a little more about this generosity as the week progresses, but I would like to submit to the minister that peacekeeping, of course, is a useful role for Canada provided the Security Council is able to establish clear and unambiguous ground rules for its operation.

The NATO ministerial meetings in Rome took place amidst ongoing initiatives—the Soviet and United States talks on strategic arms limitation, the Geneva disarmament conference, the initiatives in Berlin and by the Federal Republic of Germany, the proposal for Warsaw Pact-NATO meetings and the possibility, as the minister explained to us, of mutual force reductions. Personally, I think the minister is correct in hesitating about institutionalizing, by way of a commission, east-west problems. Surely, the world has institutions aplenty, but what seems to me to be lacking is the will to make these institutions work with any degree of effectiveness.

Brooding over NATO must be the paradox of partnership with the cruel and repressive government of Greece and the colonial posture of Portugal, which spends its fortune not on improving domestic conditions but on continuing its colonial African empire of Angola, Mozambique and Portugese Guinea. These are issues which will not die, despite how much easier it might be if we did not have to face them. Future historians of this age may well wonder if lack of communication procedures was not, in fact, the most obvious gap in the efforts that governments make to lessen the danger of conflict and war. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if NATO ministers do nothing else during 1970 than find a technique for east and west to talk, they will have accomplished something of very great value.

The contacts the minister made in eastern Europe can only be useful. It is to be hoped that Canada will soon be able to announce the dispatch of a Canadian ambassador to Roumania. We are in the embarrassing position of having a Roumanian ambassador here, and I think it is important that we clear up this anomaly. The flood which has caused so much death and anguish in that country evoked an obvious and speedy response from Canada, both in cash and in food. We hope that the generosity of this country, and of other nations, will find its way quickly to those in need and will not be diverted, as we have some reason to believe might be happening, into state agencies for use for their own purposes.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I could not help but be struck by the whimsical understatement in the one sentence in the minister's statement about his visit to Dublin: "On the way home, I paid a brief official visit to Dublin." I imagine the minister will agree that the Prime Minister of Eire has a little more on his plate just now, gracious as he would want to be to the minister, than visits from Canadian officials at this difficult time in that country.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to welcome the minister back to Canada from his European trip. I am particularly glad that he was able to pay visits to Yugoslavia and Roumania, and perhaps I should not forget to mention Ireland. These first two countries, while they are on the other side of the so-called Iron Curtain, can, like Canada, play a positive role in the complicated task of avoiding the disasters that would arise out of conflict in Europe or in the Middle East.

With regard to Roumania, I can only hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was not too embarrassed that there was no Canadian ambassador in Bucharest. I remind him and the House that Roumania is an important country. It has often shown an example to the world in its courageous stance of independence in relation to the super powers. If this absence of a Canadian ambassador in Roumania is due to what has been called "Trudeau austerity," as the minister seems to have hinted, it is a senseless manifestation of it.

To me the minister's statement on NATO smacked, as usual, of perhaps too much ministerial caution. While favouring a European security conference, the ministerial statement indicated that the conference should not take place until an east-west consensus had emerged on just about everything, or until the conference had a reasonable chance of success. I suggest that such hedging about of the proposal with preconditions may well mean that it will never come about. Would it not be better to risk failure than not to try at all? We think that the western allies should show their readiness to talk about anything that might lead to an end to the dangerous, highly armed confrontation in Europe. In our view, our attitude should be positively positive.

I am pleased that the proposals for a balanced forces reduction seem to have taken a step forward. They should be pressed with vigour and dispatch.

I deeply regret the absence in the minister's statement of any reference to the NATO situation vis-à-vis Greece. The NATO charter refers to the principles of democracy, individual liberty and the rule of law. These are supposed to be the keystones of the alliance. The foreign ministers of Norway and Denmark both raised the incongruity of these principles with the conduct of one of the NATO countries, namely, Greece. For two years, an iron dictatorship has held down the people of that country by torture and the denial of human rights.

Why was the minister so silent, as apparently he was, when this issue was raised? Are we to accept the suggestion that NATO is merely a military alliance? Are the words of the NATO preamble simply eloquent hypocrisy? If so, how can our government or any other government in NATO justify to its people, and particularly to its young people, continued adherence to an instrumentality which is used to cloak tyranny of the rankest type? I hope the minister will break silence and line up Canada with our Norwegian and Danish friends on the side of democracy.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RELEASE OF ACCUSED PERSONS FROM CUSTODY BEFORE TRIAL OR PENDING APPEAL

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-220, to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to the release from custody of accused persons before trial or pending appeal.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—PRE-RETIREMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 1,510—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. Has the Prime Minister received a letter from Mr. Daniel Bonnar, 100 Fraser Avenue, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, dated February 7, 1970, protesting in general the pre-retirement program of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and also the fact that men who were willing to continue work were forced to go on a pre-retirement allowance at sixty years of age?

2. What was the nature of the reply from the Prime Minister's Office?

3. Was a copy of Mr. Bonnar's correspondence forwarded to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so (a) what attention has been given by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (b) what was the nature of the reply, if any, forwarded by the Minister to Mr. Bonnar?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Prime Minister's office and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. Yes.

2. The reply, dated February 16, 1970, acknowledged receipt and informed Mr. Bonnar that his presentation had been noted and was being brought to the attention of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

3. Yes. (a) The Minister wrote to Mr. Bonnar on April 6, after receiving a report from the Cape Breton Development Corporation. (b) The reasons for the pre-retirement plan were explained.

RESEARCH—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Question No. 1,587—Mr. Robinson:

1. What research studies have been carried out by, or on behalf of, the Department of Justice during each year 1960 to 1969 inclusive?

2. What research studies are now being carried on and/or are contemplated during the next five years?

3. What was the cost of each of the research studies completed in each year 1960 to 1969 inclusive?

4. What is the estimated cost of each of the studies now in being or contemplated during the next five years?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1 and 3. See reply to Question 618 answered on March 11, 1970.

2 and 4. The planned Legal Research Section of the Department of Justice has not been established yet. Consequently, it is not possible to forecast what, if any, research studies are proposed nor to assign a cost figure to them.

NCC—ACQUISITION OF LAND FROM E. B. EDDY COMPANY

Question No. 1,619—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Has NCC acquired parcels of property from E. B. Eddy Company and, if so, which ones?

2. In each case, what was the price paid?

3. Does E. B. Eddy Company occupy land owned by NCC and, if so, what are the rental or other financing arrangements in each case?

4. Does NCC rent any land from E. B. Eddy Company and, if so, what are the financial arrangements?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes one parcel comprising approximately 6 acres in the City of Ottawa (bounded by Oregon, Booth and the Ottawa River).

2. $1,010,000.

4. No.

PUBLIC SERVICE—DAY-CARE CENTRES AND SPECIAL LEAVE FOR CHILDBIRTH

Question No. 1,630—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Is the government now considering the provision of day-care centers at the place of employment to assist the many female employees in the public service with small children?

2. (a) Is there now a provision for a male employee of the federal public service to have time-off with pay on the occasion of his wife having a baby and, if so, what is the basis for it (b) is there any provision for a female employee of the federal public service to have time-off with pay for the childbirth (c) is the government considering the grant of leave with pay for such women?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. No.

2. (a) Yes. Except where there is no provision in a collective agreement, a male employee in the public service may be granted special leave with pay up to a maximum of one day on the occasion of the birth of his child. This provision has come about as a result of negotiation in collective bargaining. (b) No. (c) No.

THE HAGUE CONFERENCE—RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENTS SIGNED BY CANADA

Question No. 1,705—Mr. Fortin:

1. Were the three agreements signed by Canada during the eleventh session of The Hague Conference ratified and, if not, for what reasons?

2. What action is the federal government taking to ratify the agreements concerning provincial legislative jurisdiction?

3. When is the next session of The Hague Conference to be held and what is the agenda?

4. What progress has been made in the studies of this subject mentioned at page 8298 of Hansard of May 5, 1969.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. As they are still under study, Canada has neither signed nor ratified the three conventions resulting from the eleventh session of the Hague Conference on Private International Law.

2. Two of the conventions (that on the recognition of divorces and legal separations and that on the law applicable to traffic accidents) are the subjects of detailed questionnaires sent to all provinces. No such action has yet been taken with respect to the third convention on the taking of evidence abroad in civil or commercial matters.

3. The twelfth session of the Hague Conference is tentatively scheduled for October 1972. The agenda will probably include as subjects (1) the responsibility of manufacturers for their products, (2) succession to property (especially as relates to the administration of estates) and (3) maintenance obligations relative to adults.

4. The studies concerning the conventions on the recognition of divorces and the law applicable to traffic accidents are well advanced. Study of the convention on the taking of evidence abroad in civil or commercial matters is at a more preliminary stage.

FEASIBILITY STUDY OF CANADIAN OCEAN-GOING FLEET

Question No. 1,740—Mr. McCleave:

1. Is there a feasibility study of a Canadian ocean-going fleet being made and, if so, has it been instructed (a) to regard the permanent sea-lift requirements of such Canadian corporations as MacMillan-Bloedel Limited, the Aluminum Corporation of Canada, the Canadian Pacific System and Imperial Oil Limited, as an existing Canadian chartered ocean-going fleet (b) to establish how many foreign flag ships are chartered now by these and other Canadian corporations?

2. Would the government consider extending to Canadian corporations the same tax treatments extended to corporations in other prominent marine powers such as the United Kingdom and Norway for the purpose of operating ocean-going ships?

3. Has the inquiry made a comparative study of current world labour rates and, as Canada now has no ocean-going fleet under its own flag, has the inquiry approached Canadian labour leaders to establish what rates and working conditions would be acceptable to Canadian seamen if Canada did have an ocean-going fleet?

4. How long has such inquiry been in progress, who are the personnel carrying it out, and when does it expect to make its report?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. As announced in the House of Commons on June 3, 1969, (Hansard p. 9380), a "Canadian Merchant Marine Feasibility Study" is being made and the terms of reference explicitly require the identification and quantitative forecast of major Canadian ocean-borne export and import trades.

2. The consideration of fiscal and other measures must await the findings of the study and an analysis of the cost/benefit effects upon the Canadian economy.

3. A detailed comparative analysis of labour costs is explicit in the terms of reference.

4. The study commenced about one year ago and the report is expected about September 30, 1970. As noted in the announcement referred to in the answer to question No. 1, the contract for the study was awarded to: Hedlin Menzies & Associates Ltd., Winnipeg, Toronto & Vancouver who have subcontracted parts of the study to

UNEMPLOYMENT—RESPONSIBILITY OF LEADER OF ORGANIZED LABOUR

Question No. 1,802—Mr. Robinson:

What degree of responsibility must the leader of organized labour assume for the growing unemployment and declining industrial production in Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): It is not possible to determine the degree of responsibility of any person or institution.

QUEBEC—NATIONAL PAROLE SERVICE

Question No. 1,803—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many parole staff (positions) have there been in the Province of Quebec for the years 1961-62 to 1969-70?

2. How much, on the average, has it cost to maintain each position?

3. How much was the total annual budget of the two National Parole Service offices in Quebec (including staffing) for each year 1961-62 to 1969-70?

4. How many cases has the parole staff had under their supervision in Quebec for each year 1961-62 to 1969-70?

5. How many cases has the John Howard Society or any other voluntary agency of Quebec had under its supervision for each year 1961-62 to 1969-70?

6. What has been the parole grant to the John Howard Society or any other voluntary agency for each year 1961-62 to 1969-70?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. Parole staff positions.

ASSISTANCE TO CHILDREN OF PRAIRIE FARMERS TO ATTEND UNIVERSITY

Question No. 1,896—Mr. Yewchuk:

Will the government consider giving social financial assistance to children of Prairie farmers who are currently experiencing economic difficulties in order to permit them to attend university in the next academic year?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The Canada Student Loans Act provides for assistance to all full-time university students who can demonstrate financial need. The criteria used in determining the amount of loan to be granted include the income of the parents of a dependent student. Thus, any change in the income of a student's family will be reflected in the amount of aid available to the student. Lending in the three prairie provinces under this program has shown an increase to date this loan year compared to the last full loan year (July 1 to June 30) as follows:

	1968-69 (whole year)	1969-70 (10 months to April 30th)
Alberta	$8,340,345	$10,744,249
Sask.	$6,564,848	$ 8,421,671
Man.	$3,448,789	$ 4,326,396

Question No. 1,911—Mr. Coates:

1. What has been the cost to the federal government for transportation provided to members of the government service who have participated in the negotiations presently underway between Canada and the Government of Red China in Stockholm?

2. What are the names of the persons who were required to fly to Stockholm for these negotiations, from what location did they fly to attend the meetings at Stockholm, on how many occasions and, in each instance, did they fly economy, first class or by government aircraft, either the full distance or a portion of that distance?

3. Were these transportation costs included in the $7,402 indicated by the government as the additional assistance provided to the Embassy at Stockholm in connection with the negotiations and if they were not included as additional costs, for what reason?

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Approximately $3,325.

2. (a) John M. Fraser; (b) Ottawa; (c) Five; (d) Economy class commercial flights for full distance in all cases.

NATIONAL PARKS—EXPANSION OF ACCOMMODATION FACILITIES

Question No. 1,922—Mr. Noble:

1. Is it the intention of the government to expand accommodation facilities to meet the requirements of an increasing number of visitors to the National Parks by acquiring suitable areas now available for such new park development?

2. In considering additional areas for National Parks, would the government give serious consideration to acquiring the area now available with the closing of the Meaford Tank Range?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. When the Department of National Defence declares land surplus, its potential for use by other governmental agencies is examined. Due consideration will be given to the park potential of the Meaford Tank Range.

Robidoux and Austin, currently working in Vimy and Beaumont-Hamel, hired as locally engaged employees by the Department of Veterans Affairs and, if so (a) on what date were they hired and at what salary at the time of employment (b) what was their respective salary at the end of December, 1968 (c) what is their salary at present (d) what other benefits are attached to their position at present, and are they similar to those they had prior to January 1, 1969 (e) what were their duties and responsibilities prior to January 1, 1969 (f) what are their present duties and responsibilities (g) what are their normal channels of communication within the Department in the discharge of their duties for submitting recommendations, suggestions or claims (h) what job security do they have?

Return tabled.

Mr. Crouse: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, concerning question No. 513 in my name on the Order Paper. It is a simple question concerning the procedure followed by the government. It has stood on the Order Paper since November 19 without being answered. I again respectfully ask, through you, sir, that the government endeavour to give me a reply to the question.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I have made representations to the Department of Public Works and I expect an answer soon.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING WAGE AND SALARY RESTRAINT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the federal government's policy to implement a restraint program against the wage and salary earners of this country as announced on Friday at the federal-provincial conference in Winnipeg. Any policy which seeks to hold down the incomes of one group of the economy, while leaving the incomes of other groups unrestrained, is discriminatory and inequitable and should be resisted by this Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo has filed the required notice and I have had an opportunity to give serious consideration to the proposed motion for the adjournment of the House. Under the terms of Standing Order 26 the hon. member suggests that this House should adjourn to consider "the federal government's policy to implement a restraint program against the wage and salary earners of this country." The hon. member goes on to argue his case by suggesting that such a policy "is discriminatory and inequitable and should be resisted by this Parliament."

There are a number of serious considerations which militate against the proposed motion. First, I remind the hon. member that the business which he seeks to displace is a supply motion under the terms of Standing Order 58, notice of which was given last Friday. In other words, we have already in actuality, set aside government business for the purpose of discussing a supply motion. I would find it difficult to pre-empt the supply motion in favour of a motion under Standing Order 26, even if under the provisions of Section 9 of Standing Order 26 the debate suggested by the hon. member for Waterloo might be postponed.

The second difficulty stems from the very nature of the subject matter proposed for discussion. Although it is one of extreme importance, and of national concern and interest, it seems to me it is one that will be the subject of continuing discussions and negotiations extending over a period of time. In such circumstances, I suggest that the Standing Order cannot apply.

The third difficulty I see in the motion as proposed is that it is rather in the form of a condemnation of a proposed government policy. A debate of this nature is normally put before the House by way of a no-confidence motion rather than by virtue of the provisions of Standing Order 26.

For these reasons, I do not agree with the hon. member's proposal that this matter be debated in the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—SUBSTITUTION OF CO-ORDINATED EFFORT BY FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS TO WORK OUT POLICY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Because of the obvious need for close co-ordination between federal and provincial tax policies, and because of the wide differences of opinion expressed in the conference during the weekend by the provincial and federal governments on the important question of tax reform, and because all Canadians are equally affected by provincial and federal tax policies, would the government seriously consider the possibility of substituting for its present proposals as listed in the white paper a co-ordinated effort between federal and provincial governments aimed at working out a policy in the best interests of all Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Ministers of Finance and provincial treasurers met in Winnipeg at the weekend. Three submissions were made by the provinces which had not been reviewed by the federal government up to that time. The Ministers of Finance and provincial treasurers agreed that we should analyse the submissions which had been made and discuss them at a later time. We intend to do this.

INFLATION—PROPOSED SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE LIMITATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a related question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. As the federal government has no plans to enforce the 6 per cent wage guideline which was outlined at the Winnipeg conference, and as the President of the United Automobile Workers, the body which sets the pattern for wage agreements on the North American continent, has stated flatly that his body will have nothing to do with the government's 6 per cent limitation on wage increases, does the government have any reason to believe that its present proposal in the form of the 6 per cent guideline has any better chance of success than various other proposals put forward to organized labour over the past year through the Prices and Incomes Commission? If it does so believe, what are the reasons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, these reasons are very simple to give. We believe in the democratic process and we believe that there is some merit in appealing to people when the public interest is at stake.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We think that by explaining—

Mr. Hees: You have one fan, at least.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I see that there is not very great support for this on the other side of the House. Apparently those hon. members do not trust democracy to work. They think you have to use a big stick and statutory measures to force people to act for the common good. On this side of the House we believe in taking the first step first and appealing to the people to use their own sense of voluntary co-operation in order to combat the evil of inflation. We hope that the people will understand what the public interest means better than the opposition does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the opposition is even more anxious for this approach to be successful than is the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as this is the same approach that the government has been failing with during the past year, time after time, I simply ask the Prime Minister, when does Alice expect to emerge from Wonderland into the hard, cold world of reality?

Mr. Baldwin: When is she coming forth from blunderland?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is, I suggest, argumentative.

INFLATION—MANITOBA PROPOSAL FOR RESTRAINT ON ALL FORMS OF INCOME

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance? In view of the presentation of the government of Manitoba to the federal-provincial conference in Winnipeg for a policy of restraint on all forms of income, including rents, profits, interest and executive salaries, can the minister indicate whether it is his intention to support and accept the position of the government of Manitoba in the interest of fairness?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the steps that were taken at the previous meeting of first ministers, and again at the meeting of federal and provincial finance ministers and treasurers, were to request that the provinces should take every step possible to make sure that rents do not rise too quickly and that professional organizations would be dealt with by them. There was general agreement that they should move in this direction, and many of them indicated that they had moved in this direction.

Mr. Saltsman: Can the minister assure the House that the proposed guidelines stated at the conclusion of the federal-provincial conference, and the indications the minister gave us today, will not be implemented until a committee of the House of Commons has had an opportunity to examine the entire proposal?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

INFLATION—PROPOSED SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE LIMITATION—CONSULTATION BY DR. YOUNG WITH GOVERNMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Although the minister has said that the government and the Prices and Incomes Commission are at arm's length, is it not a fact that at Winnipeg he was fully aware of the nature and details of the proposals by Dr. Young before he commenced his speech and made his statement?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Young, I understand, was in contact with all the governments before the meeting at Winnipeg for informal discussions in which he stated the suggestions he had in mind so that they could be considered before the meeting took place.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister seriously intend to leave the impression with the House that the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission does not consult very intimately with members of the government before he comes out with any proposal or policy? Does he expect us to believe that he acts completely independently and on his own?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is very difficult for the Chair to accept the question as asked. The question was asked in an argumentative way. Perhaps the hon. member would like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Hees: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I hate to be argumentative, so I will ask my question in a straightforward and unargumentative way. Does the Prime Minister intend to leave the impression with the House that the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission makes his decisions and comes forward with proposals and propositions to the Canadian public completely on his own, without very close consultation with ministers of this government before he does so?

Mr. Baldwin: Does he do it in splendid isolation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, there is consultation with the government. There was consultation with all governments before the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission made his February proposals to the private sector of the economy. He also consulted with business and with labour. He follows the same procedure with governments, including our own. His aim, I take it, is not to come up with a proposal which will catch the authorities by surprise. He wants to test them first. He wants to see how far they are prepared to support him. In this sense he has consulted us but he has consulted us with a view to seeing how we would react to one thing or another, and then he goes on and acts on his own authority.

INFLATION—PROPOSED SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE LIMITATION—APPLICATION TO OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Will the proposition that the 6 per cent ceiling be imposed on all increases be adhered to with respect to increases for old age pensioners?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, the question of old age pensioners was dealt with in a debate in the House not too long ago. The old age pensioners have the sympathy of this government and no government in the history of Canada has done more for our old age pensioners than we have in the past several years.

Mr. Hees: There speaks 30-buck Benson.

INFLATION—SUGGESTED LIMITATION OF BANK PROFIT INCREASES TO SIX PER CENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Inasmuch as five chartered banks have now reported profit increases averaging some 22 per cent, can the minister indicate to the House whether the government is considering imposing a 6 per cent limit on the profit increases of the chartered banks, such as is proposed for workers?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Of course not.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the meeting earlier this year of the Prices and Incomes Commission, the banks made an agreement with regard to restricting their profits. I trust that the Prices and Incomes Commission will make sure they are adhering to this and, if they are not, I trust that the commission will bring it to the public's attention.

INFLATION—PROPOSED SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE LIMITATION—APPLICATION TO POSTAL UNION DISPUTE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the support given by the government to the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission with respect to the recommendation for compulsory wage and salary guidelines, would the minister say if the exact timing of this announcement has anything to do with the current issue before Treasury Board involving the postal unions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not at all, Mr. Speaker.

INFLATION—ADOPTION BY PROVINCES OF SIX PER CENT LIMIT ON WAGE INCREASES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. As the provinces seem to have accepted at the Winnipeg meeting the request of the government for a 6 per cent wage increase ceiling, would the minister be prepared to tell the House whether the provincial governments have committed themselves to pass legislative measures to implement a 6 per cent wage increase ceiling?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at Winnipeg the Ministers of Finance indicated that they sympathized with the proposition, that they would take it back to their governments and report to the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

INFLATION—PROPOSED SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE LIMITATION—NOTIFICATION OF MINISTER BY DR. YOUNG

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Finance inform the House on what date the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission first informed him of his intention to present the proposal he presented to the Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers at Winnipeg?

Mr. Baldwin: Who spoke to whom?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was last week some time. I shall have to check and make sure of the exact time. The chairman of the commission approached our government at the same time as he approached other governments in this country.

Mr. Baldwin: Nuts!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How is the minister able to reconcile his answer with that of the Prime Minister, that the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission of course consults closely with government ministers? The proposal as put forward certainly would have been in that general area.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission came to the government and put forward his proposal just before the conference. I am not sure of the exact date, but I will check it. He informed us that he was approaching other governments at the same time.

Mr. Baldwin: How naïve do you think we are?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House when the government told the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to bring forward this suggestion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister seeks the floor on a point of order. He shall have the floor in a moment. Obviously, we are now entering the field of debate and perhaps we might go to another subject. Since the minister has risen on a point of order, I will recognize him.

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to point out to my hon. friend, as I did earlier today, that we do not give instructions to the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

Mr. Hees: Nonsense; we do not buy that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—USE OF CANADA ARMED FORCES IN PEACEKEEPING ROLE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he enlighten his colleagues and the House about his proposal regarding Canadian participation in a peacekeeping force in the Middle East?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I was in eastern Europe I was asked whether, if there were a peace plan or a ceasefire that involved peacekeeping forces, Canada would be willing to participate. I said yes, in principle.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I wonder if the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister be kind enough to indicate who was involved in these discussions when this feeler was put forth, in response to which the minister replied in a positive manner?

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister state whether he put this proposal as a Canadian proposal to the United Nations, and whether the United Nations has agreed with the idea of a peacekeeping force returning to the Middle East?

Mr. Sharp: As the hon. member knows, resolution No. 242 of the Security Council provides the framework within which a settlement of this conflict might be reached. Unfortunately, very little progress has been made. In so far as the question of a peacekeeping force is concerned, while it is important that the world should know that, in principle, we would be prepared to participate, I am afraid that it may be some time before we are called upon to fulfil that role.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

LISTS OF NAMES USED IN SENDING OUT PAMPHLETS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister consult with the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to find out just how the lists were devised by the commission for sending out these pamphlets that have been issued? I have received four pamphlets. I also have in my hand a pamphlet that was sent to a person who has been dead for four years. This is a scandalous waste of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I am sure that if the hon. member received four he needed four. However, I will refer the question to my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WEST COAST TOWBOAT STRIKE—PRESENT POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the towboat tie-up on the west coast of Canada. I direct the minister's attention to a reply he made, as recorded at page 7544 of Hansard. The minister indicated he might be making a statement to the House before the end of last week. Can the minister either give a direct indication of the situation at the moment or indicate when he may be making the statement to which he referred in his answer a week ago today?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I apologize for not having made the statement, Mr. Speaker. Events have been moving rather quickly on the coast. Any statement I might make in the House could jeopardize the proposed settlement. I can indicate, however, that the representative of the Department of Labour is meeting today with the unions to offer them the package proposal advanced by the employers over the weekend. I have no way of knowing whether that package is acceptable. I hope to know later today.

Mr. Barnett: I intended to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice but apparently he has been called out of the chamber. Perhaps the Solicitor General might respond to my question. I have received requests that the Minister of Justice intervene in the situation because certain union leaders have been incarcerated for contempt of court. I have been asked to request the Minister of Justice to intervene in this matter with a view to facilitating a better mood for completing negotiations. Can the Solicitor General indicate to the House the position the Minister of Justice might take on this question.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring this request to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I hesitate to ask the minister to do anything that could be interpreted as interfering with a prosecution that is before the courts.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MONTREAL—CO-OPERATION BY GOVERNMENT IN ENDING BOMB EXPLOSIONS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is for the Solicitor General. Can the minister make a report to the House on the government's co-operation in putting an end to professional terrorist bombings in Montreal?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what report can be given to the House on the matter. The three police forces directly concerned are working together to investigate these offences. It has never been the practice to give information about an investigation during the course of the investigation.

MANPOWER

CLOSING OF GOLD MINE, GERALDTON, ONT.—ACTION BY CANADA MANPOWER SERVICE TO ASSIST EMPLOYEES

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is supplementary to the question I asked last Friday concerning the closing of a gold mine in Geraldton, Ontario. What immediate action will be taken by Canada Manpower to assist the nearly 200 men who will lose their jobs as a result of the closing of this operation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have asked Canada Manpower counselors in Thunder Bay to go to Geraldton today to discuss the question with the employer and employees, and to make the services of the department available to those employees who are affected.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REQUEST BY ISRAEL TO UNITED STATES FOR PHANTOM JET PLANES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the recent NATO council meeting in Rome did the minister oppose the request of the Israeli government to the United States government for Phantom jets?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I made no comment on the subject.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—INCLUSION OF MONTMAGNY IN SPECIAL AREAS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Given the alarming situation now prevailing in the city of Montmagny, where 1,500 people are out of work, would the minister be prepared to recommend to his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to include the city of Montmagny in the special area of the district of Quebec, which would enable it to undertake works to provide employment to the greatest possible number of workers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member asked this question only a few days ago. If my memory is correct, the hon. member put the question to the minister himself. He is now asking another minister to request his colleagues to study the matter. I do not think that the question as put is in order.

Moreover, the hon. member has already drawn this issue to the attention of the House.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

I admit that I did put that question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but since then I have received representations. In view of the seriousness of the situation, I would surely have directed my question today to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but since the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has some responsibilities in this respect, I put the question to him for that reason.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY AUDITOR GENERAL AND PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the statement made in Winnipeg by the President of the Treasury Board that there will be further cuts by the federal government in hospital services, medicare and post-secondary education, will the minister recommend that the government set its own house in order first by following the recommendations of the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee to curb extravagance and waste in federal spending?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not acceptable procedurally.

REPRESENTATIONS BY BANK FOR INTERNATIONAL SETTLEMENTS CONCERNING RETURN TO FIXED DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the government, the Minister of Finance, the Department of Finance or the Bank of Canada received any representations from bankers meeting at the Bank for International Settlements urging Canada to return to a fixed exchange rate? If so, can the minister indicate what the response of the government is or will be?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is responsible for the exchange rate. I have received no such representation. I will have to inquire to see whether the various people mentioned in the question have received such a representation. I have not, nor has the government.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question. Can the minister inform the House whether the viewpoint apparently expressed by the Bank for International Settlements at its meeting also represents the viewpoint of Mr. Rasminsky?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that the question as asked is in order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERU—ASSISTANCE TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports over the weekend that Canada has sent some short landing and take-off aircraft to assist in the relief operations in Peru, can the minister inform the House as to the extent of the assistance Canada has now agreed to give to relieve what is probably the biggest, natural disaster in many years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I understand that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister made a statement on Friday last. The information I have is identical with the information he gave, so I do not think I can add anything at the present time.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Bearing in mind the tremendous number of people who sustained injuries in this disaster and need to be hospitalized, would the Prime Minister consider making available to Peru some of the 200-bed hospitals which I understand the Department of National Defence is keeping for an emergency?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We shall consider any request which is reasonable and which we can reasonably meet. I understand that the Department of External Affairs is in communication with our embassy there. The first leg of our assistance has taken effect, in the sense that some of our planes are now arriving in Peru. As to the other matter, I thank the hon. member for the suggestion, and we shall consider it.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF FRANCE TO GRANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS OVERFLY PRIVILEGES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): May I take this opportunity to make an explanation which I feel I owe to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. He has just left the House but perhaps he can read what I say in Hansard. It has to do with a question he asked me on Thursday about the reported refusal of France to grant overflight privileges to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I replied that there had been no such refusal, and my answer was correct; there had been no such refusal. But I went on to add, basing my assertion on information from the Department of National Defence, that no such request had been made. I am now told by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there was a request made and that the request was granted. So things ended up even more nicely than I then thought.

FREEING OF DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE—COMPENSATORY ACTION BY COLUMBIA CELLULOSE COMPANY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I asked a question, intended as notice for the Minister of Finance, concerning steps taken by the Columbia Cellulose Company Limited, which, incidentally, is one of the largest pulp exporters in Canada, to establish a Canadian currency equalization surcharge of between 5 per cent and 8 per cent on all its foreign sales of pulp in order to compensate for the effects of freeing the dollar exchange rate. Has the minister received any information about this practice? Does he know whether similar steps have been taken by other Canadian exporters, and what is the response of the government to action of this type by Canadian exporters?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Unfortunately, I was away at the end of last week and the question was brought to my notice only just before the question period began. I must look into the details. If it means that Canadian exporters have not been charging enough for their products, and that they can get more money for them, I do not think we can object. But I must look into the situation in order to understand fully what is involved.

FREEING OF DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE—OFFSETTING OF EFFECTS ON LUMBER AND SMALL BERRY INDUSTRIES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): My question is also related to the consequences of the decision to free the Canadian dollar. Is the Minister of Finance in a position to tell us whether legislation will be proceeded with before the recess designed to offset the serious damage which has already occurred to the lumber industry and to minimize the consequences to the small berry industry which also depends to a substantial extent on export markets?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): When we moved to the floating exchange rate, I undertook to look at some of the difficulties which might be expected to develop as soon as the rate had settled down. I do not see that we could possibly introduce legislation before the parliamentary recess.

Mr. Coates: In view of the strong objections to this step which the lumber industry has taken through its various associations, and the extreme difficulty in which it has been placed, may I ask whether the minister intends to take any action to help them to surmount these problems?

Mr. Benson: Not at the present time. Of course, when our dollar was undervalued exporters had a great advantage, and when it was brought back to a more normal level through the free play of the exchange market exporters enjoy a little less of the advantage which had been theirs. In some cases particular difficulties may arise and we are willing to examine those cases and ascertain what is involved. There are assistance programs administered by the Department of Industry, and they are much more numerous than they were a few years ago. But there is no intention to bring in legislation before the end of the session.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Has the minister received representations from industries such as the lumber industry, the pulp and paper industry, and so on, objecting to the move which has been made?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have received a good many representations from exporters with regard to the position of industries which will now be less favourably situated. I have also received congratulations from importers and consumers on the fact that the cost of imports will be lower. It will take some time to determine the over-all effect.

REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—MEASURES TENDING TO LOWER MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has any intention of announcing the removal of the 11 per cent tax on building materials as well as other measures which will tend to bring about lower interest rates on mortgage loans?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think the easing of the monetary situation has already resulted in interest rates coming down somewhat. The treasury bill rate last week was under 6 per cent for the first time in a long while, and there have been indications of other interest rates coming down somewhat. With regard to fiscal measures, if tax changes are to be made they will be announced in the normal manner in the House.

ACADIA FISHING COMPANY AND BOOTH FISHERIES—ASSISTANCE IN SETTLING STRIKE—PROVISION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Does the hon. gentleman plan to take any steps to assist in settling the strike of fishermen against Acadia and Booth Fisheries in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Does the minister intend to take any immediate steps to put into effect the recommendations of the Woods task force on labour relations that fishermen be given the right to collective bargaining?

Mr. Mackasey: This is always a possibility when these proposed changes are brought before the House.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour.

In view of the fact that for several months we have been promised a white paper on the Unemployment Insurance Commission, can the minister assure the House that this white paper will be tabled before the summer adjournment, and tell us if the document will be based on the findings of the Gill Commission?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Any white paper that I may bring forward on unemployment insurance before the end of the session would, of course, have to take into consideration the recommendations of the Gill report. I am still hoping I shall be able to bring in this paper before the end of the session.

MANPOWER

NEWFOUNDLAND—SPEEDING UP OF PROGRAMS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. At the risk of sounding parochial, may I ask whether the government would attach some urgency to government programs planned for the benefit of Canada's most easterly province so as to alleviate the unemployment situation there which appears to be getting worse instead of better?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Over the past days and weeks, various ministers have indicated that there is indeed urgency being attached to this matter and, in fact, a considerable amount of assistance has been given.

Mr. Lundrigan: A number of programs have been planned for that province but in the normal course of events it is bound to be some time before they can be implemented. We are now in the middle of summer and the unemployment rate is something like 20 per cent. In the circumstances, would the Prime Minister consult with his colleagues in the effort to speed up these government programs so that they might have some minor impact on the unemployment situation in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: This suggestion is very much in the mind of the government. Indeed, the proposals which the Minister of Finance made in Winnipeg on Friday involving the expenditure of some of our current financial surplus in various parts of Canada were thought up with a view precisely to making sure that our surplus would be spent in order to assist the particular parts of Canada which need help the most.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Department of Manpower and Immigration planning to modify its manpower programs in order to try to create some opportunity for people of upper middle age who are basically unemployable and largely untrainable owing to the lack of fundamental skills and education and try to modify—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is very general in nature, and I suggest to him invites a response from the minister which should normally be made to the House by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I finish my question and ask the minister whether he is planning to revive the Newstart program on a general level across Canada, a program which apparently had some relevance to people of upper middle age who are largely untrained and who need some basic skill?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to give the same ruling on the further supplementary as I gave on the first. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is much too general to be acceptable. He might follow my suggestion and inquire whether a statement will be made.

Mr. Lundrigan: I can certainly make an inquiry along those lines, but I was wondering whether the minister was going to reintroduce the Newstart program. However, I will ask whether the minister will make a statement on this very urgent matter.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will consider making a statement on the matter.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INSTRUCTION OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance with respect to earlier questions asked of him. Having in mind that the Prices and Incomes Commission earlier this year accepted from the government the responsibility to instruct the steel industry about steel price increases, how does the minister reconcile his statement now of non-instruction with the earlier action that was requested by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order. When a member asks a minister to reconcile one statement with another, it is obviously argument and not in order.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—INCREASE BEFORE END OF SESSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of statements made by the minister over the weekend, and again in the House this afternoon, expressing the government's sympathy for old age pensioners, may I ask whether the government is now considering an increase in the old age pension before the end of this session?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister then indicate how much all this sympathy is worth?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Thirty-buck Benson.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO RUMANIA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government taking steps to remove the anomaly to which he referred of Canada being unrepresented by an ambassador in Rumania, which is not only an important country but one which has recently suffered serious disasters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, we do not have an ambassador resident in Bucharest. The Rumanian government, however, as an indication of the growing relationship between our two countries, has decided to have an Ambassador resident in Ottawa. I told the Foreign Minister while I was there that as soon as my colleague the Minister of Finance gave me a little more money we will consider doing the same thing in Bucharest.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. Is the delay in sending a representative to this important country due, therefore, to the government's austerity policy?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from statements that I have made that the government considers it necessary, in order to promote the financial stability of the country, that there be a very close check on expenditures. As a result of the program put into effect last year, we did close some missions and we are not reopening them as rapidly as we would like. I am sure that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will respond affirmatively to our virtue in this respect.

PRIORITY OPENING OF EMBASSIES OR TRADE MISSIONS IN FRANCOPHONE COUNTRIES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is priority being given by his department to opening embassies or establishing trade missions in Francophone countries over other countries?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, but we are looking at our representation there just as we are in other parts of the world. There are a number of missions that we would like to open in due course and hope to be able to do so.

[Later:]

ESTABLISHMENT OF TRADE MISSION IN TAIWAN

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Spadina and is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the government of Taiwan has indicated great interest in having Canada establish at least a trade mission in Taiwan, does the minister have any intention of doing so?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to ask the Minister of Finance. Would he consider drawing the federal government's wage and salary increase restraint guidelines to the attention of the commission examining parliamentary incomes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister please state to the House why he did not attend the Liberal caucus thinkers conference this weekend in Edmonton? Could it be that he had a more pleasant task to perform?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

FREEING OF DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE—DISCUSSION AT FINANCE MINISTERS CONFERENCE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister inform the House whether at the meeting of finance ministers over the weekend in Winnipeg there was any discussion of offsetting measures or special problems arising from the change in government policy to a floating exchange rate?

[Mr. Ryan.]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did answer that question in my statement. If my hon. friend will read it, I think he will find the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE TO PROTECT PUBLIC TREASURY IN REFITTING OF HMCS "BONAVENTURE" AND GENERALLY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster) moved:

That the government has displayed its mismanagement and abuse of powers and has failed in its responsibility to protect the public treasury in relation to the refitting of H.M.C.S. Bonaventure in particular; and generally there has been neglect and default in carrying out programs and recommendations designed to protect the taxpayers of Canada from waste, extravagance and other abuses in the spending of government money and for these failures the government deserves the condemnation of the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have had a long afternoon of questions of privilege, statements and the like, and even though the hour is late I hope that this motion will commend itself to the members of the House. It may receive a mixed reaction from some, but I think all members on the treasury benches will welcome an opportunity to put their side of the case concerning the Bonaventure before the House and on the record. Personally, as a member of parliament, I feel that I have a grave responsibility to bring this matter forward for discussion, and I am more than pleased that my colleagues have agreed that it should be the basis for an opposition motion on an allotted day.

I never thought that the time would come, Mr. Speaker, when I would feel sorry for a civil servant. But I must admit I do now, because I feel that many of the civil servants who have been involved in the Bonaventure fiasco should have their day in court. I firmly believe that it can only be here, in this forum, which is the highest court in the land.

There are, as I see it, two general responsibilities with regard to the Bonaventure, and both are interrelated. I have arbitrarily called them the financial responsibility and the political responsibility. I think the financial responsibility has been dealt with quite well.

This responsibility on behalf of the taxpayers has been handled in the committee report that was released in connection with the Bonaventure inquiry. For the record, the report appears in Votes and Proceedings No. 122 dated May 13. I should like to take this opportunity to commend the members of the committee for the excellent work they did. I say this without any reservation. New ground was being broken. The members of the committee went into the full story. As one who has studied the report many times in minute detail, I can say that I believe they did a good job of which we should all be proud. They came up with an unanimous report as everybody knows. This is even more to their credit.

The political responsibility, the second responsibility to which I have referred, however, is still very much up in the air. A great deal should be said about this. In referring to the report, I should like specifically to draw attention to items 5 and 6 of the general conclusions and recommendations. Since these will form part of the basis for our motion today, I think I should read them. The first is item 5, which appears on page 775:

> The Committee recommends that the departments concerned determine the reasons why departmental officers involved in the refit performed in the manner they did and also to take appropriate action to ensure that such inefficiency be eliminated in the future. This will require changes to the system under which they work and may require disciplinary action in regard to personnel involved.

Then, item 6 is as follows:

> The Committee fails to understand why the Deputy Ministers of National Defence and Defence Production, realizing that the cost of the refit of the Bonaventure was, month by month, getting out of control, did not order an "on-the-job" investigation.

Those are the two pertinent items on which we base our motion. For an authority in respect of this motion I should like to refer to Dawson on "The Government of Canada". This is a reputable political book. It is not one of these political histories written by Pickersgill or LaMarsh. He is an oracle.

An hon. Member: Or Trudeau.

Mr. Bell: Added to the list is another well-known historian who is now in this Parliament. The following words, which appear on page 219, I believe are pertinent in this regard:

> The minister can never afford to forget—

I shall deal with that later.

> —that he will be expected to defend and justify his department's policies before Parliament and the country, and yet at the same time he realizes that those policies must be technically and administratively sound if they are to meet the need which has called them into being. Success in administration, said Walter Bagehot, "depends on a due mixture of special and non-special minds—of minds which attend to the means, and of minds which attend to the end."

I interject here to say that in this case the minister who has primary responsibility also has the background of the two minds. He has the full civil service background. In fact, he is the number one leader of the civil service establishment and, of course, he has made the big jump into active politics. He is a member of the treasury bench. He is the oracle of everything that is right and wrong in this country. I continue the quotation:

> Inasmuch as the minister is politically responsible for everything done in his department, he is given supreme authority, and he therefore has the power to overrule any of his civil servants at any time. They, for their part, give the best advice they can; and if the minister persists in disregarding it —as he has a perfect right to do—they must then acquiesce, and bend all their energies to the problem of making the best of what they are convinced is a mistaken policy. The minister has the privilege of overruling his civil servants even although it involves the making of blunders, and the minister also has the privilege of defending those blunders in Parliament and suffering, if need be, for them.

I think, because it is of further significance, that we should look at the Glassco Commission report which some people may think is more up to date. I refer to Volume 1 at page 32, under the heading "Unlimited Liability" of Ministers. The report reads:

> Concurrently with the development of the "public" service concept, it has become established that direct accountability to Parliament and to the public is imposed only on ministers. Public servants continue to be answerable for their honesty and competence to their ministers, through the ascending scale of their departments, but they bear none of the political consequences of their acts.

> Since the emergence of this principle, it has been accepted that ministers are accountable for all the administrative acts of their departmental staffs.

There are many quotations which could be added to these. It is also pertinent, in establishing the basis for this debate, to point out that the Financial Administration Act, Part I, Organization, deals extensively with these responsibilities. To give an idea of how the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) would become involved—and I am sure he knows about this—I should like to quote, for example, section 5(2)(f):

> such of the provisions of any other Act respecting any matter in relation to which the Treasury Board may act for the Queen's Privy Council for Canada pursuant to subsection (1) as may be specifically—

Then, we have section 6(b) which reads:

for the establishment of general administrative standards of performance and respecting the assessment of the performance of portions of the public service in the light of such standards;

I hasten here to add that it is for this reason that, at the moment, I think the President of the Treasury Board is the minister responsible to Parliament for the situation which now exists. This responsibility is separate from any previous involvement he may have had. I should also like to say for the record that it is well known the President of the Treasury Board was the Minister of Industry from July 25, 1963 until May 8, 1969. I believe this is correct. The Parliamentary Guide seems to indicate that is so. That is the background of the responsibility which I feel is unanswered here.

I should like to place on the record one other matter which I believe has some significance in respect of my interest in the Bonaventure. It will also indicate to the House that this matter was not suddenly sprung on the government, but goes away back. If the government is not aware of the way this whole business developed, I would point out to hon. members that everything is recorded in the debates for that period.

We might go back to the first reference I could find which is in Hansard for January 24, 1966. At that time I asked a question about the decision in respect of the repair and refit of the Bonaventure. Then, on February 3, the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked further questions concerning the Bonaventure. He was informed by the present minister that the bids had been opened. The contracts were not formally awarded until later, but he established that the bids from the Montreal shipyards were $5.7 million and $5.8 million and that the bid from the Saint John yard, which at that time we thought was away out of line, was $8.5 million. The minister went on to other questions.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South, now the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis), did not have any doubts at that time about where we were going. He put interjections on the record, even before the contract was let, which indicated there would be a severe escalation in costs. A supplementary question asked on February 3 by the hon. member for Calgary North, now the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness), has some significance in this respect. He asked the minister:

As a supplementary question, what proportion of the five million odd dollars is on the firm price basis?

The minister answered:

I have not got the figures here but I was told it was the major portion. If the hon. gentleman wishes to know, I will ascertain precisely.

That was when the first reference was made to the $5 million. A question was asked whether this was a major portion, and of course the minister acquiesced.

Let us go on to other references in Hansard, so that the background on this can be established. The minister, in reply to another question, referred to good accounting practices. He was taken up on that by the hon. member for Pictou, now the member for Central Nova (Mr. MacEwan). I do not know what the minister meant by "good accounting practices". Then, of course, we had the little interlude when the minister was considering the contracts, and rightly so. He had quite a few weeks in which to go into the tender bids extensively before he officially awarded this contract. We had also the strange interlude when it was discovered that, before the bids had even been requested, the navy had been told the contracts were going to go to Quebec. Here was an odd situation. At least three firms had tendered for this contract, but previous to the call for tenders, the navy had started plans to go to Quebec city. I will not be sidetracked on that. The minister had talked of clairvoyance, but he thought it was after the fact.

There is only one other reference in Hansard that I think is important. On April 27 of the same year, the minister announced the formal awarding of the contract. At that time, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asked:

Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Do any of these contracts have any contingency clauses such as those often contained in building contracts, as a result of which padding can take place often to the extent of 10 per cent

He spoke of 10 per cent; I do not know what the amount was finally. He went on:

If so, to what percentage do they exist?

The minister answered:

Mr. Speaker, these contracts do not contain contingency clauses.

So, that is the story. It establishes my interest and I hope also makes it clear to the House that there was a long history to the whole Bonaventure issue, long before the committee report was made. To repeat what I said here today, I want to give everybody an opportunity to take part in this debate. I feel it is extremely important that we air this matter in Parliament and that the minister give us his full story.

I think that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) must, on behalf of the government accept full responsibility for the Bonaventure matter. He should rise in his place today and tell us the whole story, as he knows it, from the very beginning in 1966. He should start with the original tendering and the award of the contract that he made, as minister of defence production, in 1966. He should deal with the first contract escalation, to which I did not refer but it is all in Hansard, from $5 million to $8 million. Perhaps I had better put that on the record because that was a matter in which I became involved.

Before the ship had left Halifax to go into the St. Lawrence, we heard there was going to be an even further escalation of the cost. I asked a question with regard to that and the minister was straightforward at the time. On April 22, 1966, I asked this question:

> Will the minister check into reliable reports emanating from Halifax this morning as the Bonaventure left Halifax with Department of Industry officials aboard, that the estimate will probably go over $8 million?

I can only say that at that time the contract had escalated to $8 million. Therefore, there is an extra responsibility on the minister since he knew in the early days of this contract that the cost was escalating and he should have, if he did not, called in his officials. He should tell us of the various conferences he has had with them, whether this matter was referred to him by his civil servants and, if so, what was the action. The minister should deal specifically with items 5 and 6 of the committee report to which I referred. He should report on the inquiry that he said has been under way in the department. On television the other night the minister referred to some sort of an inquiry having been inaugurated, unless my facts are incorrect.

It is incumbent upon the minister to give us the whole story for the following two reasons: first, because of our established tradition that a minister should stand behind his deputy and his other civil servants, as I have outlined in the quotations I brought forward; and second, and just as important, because there must now finally begin an accounting of the government's action regarding the two recommendations which were passed unanimously by the Public Accounts Committee.

I look forward to hearing the minister's reply as I move this motion, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I, too, would like to hear the minister's statement on the remarks made by the previous speaker. I will try not to cover the same ground covered by him. I find that the motion before the House is an extremely interesting one, particularly as it deals with protecting the public treasury from spending by the government. The motion, as I see it, deals with the important problem of planning, supervision and efficiency in government expenditures. I feel this is a very timely topic, especially in view of the government's present austerity program. I feel it is our job as elected representatives to insist on efficiency in government and to demand that the taxpayers' money be spent without waste and in the best interests of the nation generally. I might add that there will always be disagreement among the various parties as to the priorities for public spending and the emphasis which should be placed on certain government programs. However, there should be no disagreement when it comes to demanding that inefficiency and waste be eliminated wherever it exists. There is no doubt that there is abundant evidence to show that large amounts of public money have been wasted because of inefficiency and lack of co-ordination in a number of government departments.

The Auditor General is the watchdog of government spending. His annual reports are the basis upon which the Public Accounts Committee is able to check into some of the expenditures being made by the various government departments. It was through the Auditor General's report that the Public Accounts Committee investigated the expenditures made on the refit of the aircraft carrier Bonaventure and eventually turned up the mess of ineffectiveness and incompetence which existed in the letting of a number of contracts.

This investigation resulted in the 41 page report of the Public Accounts Committee which was presented to this House about a month ago, and which was a biting indictment of the slipshod and haphazard methods used by the Department of Defence Production in both estimating and letting out a number of contracts with regard to the refit of the carrier.

As a member of the Public Accounts Committee for the past two years I have become convinced that the Auditor General's department is a real safeguard in keeping an eye on government spending. However, it is apparent his department is in need of a sharp expansion if the whole field of government spending is to be adequately covered. It seems to me that the making of reports on the obviously foolish types of expenditure is only part of the problem. The losses to the nation from imperfect accounting procedures are no doubt substantial, and proper financial control programs are essential in every department; but again, I feel this is only part of the problem. To date, Mr. Speaker, no department has been set up to appraise the benefits the nation receives, or does not receive, from government expenditure programs. Potential losses in this respect could be immense.

In fact, it was the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) who told this House just a year ago how costly the lack of co-ordinated action had been so far as the Canadian taxpayers were concerned. He pointed out that since 1963 we had spent over $1 billion on various programs to help eliminate regional disparity and, because of the lack of co-ordinated action, he estimated we had wasted about half of that amount. Perhaps, as an economics professor at the University of Toronto has suggested, this country should have an Economist General in addition to an Auditor General. I presume his duties would be to report fully upon the effectiveness and the value of the various programs which have been set up to assist various aspects of our economy.

It seems to me that it should be of the utmost importance to appraise adequately the results which are being achieved by our various programs. This knowledge of costs and benefits would be of immense value in reassessing the programs, or directing financial resources to other types of resource development. However, one thing is crystal clear in the field of public expenditures. We must insist upon the right of full disclosure and the right to criticize foolish expenditures. As this task is too great for any ordinary member, it is essential that adequate agencies be set up to do the job, and that they be allowed to carry out their duties free from interference or coercion. This is absolutely essential in our democracy and I am certain the general public will insist that this type of scrutiny continue, and expand, as it is in the interests of Canadians generally.

I have made some very general remarks about public expenditures and intend to follow them up with a few examples of departmental expenditures to show how essential it is for governments to keep a constant and careful check on their various departments. However, first of all, I would like to comment on the work of the Public Accounts Committee which delves into the reports submitted by the Auditor General.

In my opinion, the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons is doing a good job. All of the members of the committee, regardless of party, are interested in stopping foolish expenditures, and are desirous of seeing improved supervision take place in those departments requiring it. If the government and the departments concerned will accept the recommendations made by the committee, I am certain that most of the slipshod methods of estimating and the letting out of meaningless contracts will be avoided. This will also save vast sums of money for the public treasury and avoid embarrassment for both the government and the departments concerned.

It would appear that, over the years, many of the recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee have been ignored. A good example appears in the list provided on June 19, 1969, in the committee's fourth report. From this it is evident that a majority of the committee's recommendations have been ignored. I can well understand how a department might have difficulty in accepting all recommendations, because once a certain accounting system is set up it is difficult to make too many changes. However, once an inefficient procedure has been pointed out by the committee, there should be no repetition of that mistake which in most cases was responsible for excessive waste in the spending of public funds.

I should like to refer to the committee report that I have just mentioned. It points out a number of recommendations made by the committee to the government, many of which had not been carried out by the various departments at the time that report was published. The list is headed, "Summary of the Positions of the Recommendations and Observations of Your Committee," and I quote:

The following is a summary of the positions of the recommendations and observations of your Committee contained in Appendix 1 of the 1967 report as of June 5, 1969:

A list of a number of categories and items follows, and shows their disposal by the government. We find that a total of 55 recommendations were set forth by the committee. Ten of these were referred back to the Auditor General, and two were withdrawn by the Public Accounts Committee itself. This left 43 recommendations which had been made to the government, and I think we could consider them as the actual recommendations of the committee. Out of this total no action, to the date of the report, had been taken on 14 of the recommendations. The executive had indicated disagreement with another 14 of the recommendations. Progress had been made on six of them; five of them had been implemented; two of them had been partially implemented; one was soon to be implemented, and in another case the action taken was not satisfactory to the committee. If the Public Accounts Committee is going to do an efficient and effective job, its work must be recognized by the government to a greater degree than is indicated in this report. I want to point out that the members of the Public Accounts Committee come from all parties in this House and every member, without exception, is interested in seeing that Canadians get full value for every dollar spent.

I should like to go back to one of the items mentioned in today's motion, Mr. Speaker, and that is the Bonaventure. This is a good example of the weakness and inefficiency of one or more government departments. I was a member of the Public Accounts Committee which examined the expenditure on the Bonaventure refit, originally brought to our attention by the Auditor General. I was astounded at how ineffective and inefficient were the terms of a number of contracts. Slipshod and haphazard methods had been used in the drafting of contracts and I believe this eventually resulted in excessive spending of the taxpayers' money. I do not wish to point to any individual in government but I feel that this example should be a lesson to members in this House, and to the government in particular, that the departments concerned should carefully check procedures when letting out contracts. If we are to get better value for the money we spend some tightening up will have to be done. I never thought when first dealing with the refit of the Bonaventure as we discussed it in committee, that it would lead to the revealing and shocking departmental procedures used in the spending of the taxpayers' dollar.

If I may, I shall pick out one or two examples to illustrate how slipshod methods used in letting out contracts led to public money being wasted. One of the best examples is the small contract dealing with the briefing room chairs. This matter has been raised in the House before, but in raising it again I want to point out that, while the amount of money involved is small, the disturbing thing is that such a slipshod and haphazard method could have been used in any department of government. I believe this aspect of the matter disturbs every member of the House.

The committee found it very difficult to establish the real cost of moving the briefing room chairs. After a great deal of work, and after hearing testimony which proved to be incorrect, the committee found that the Davie Shipbuilding Company, which had the initial contract, had moved the chairs out in May of 1966 because, it was stated, they required the area for the purpose of conducting electronic tests. Later we found that two separate contracts for the same chairs were let out by the Department of Defence Production. This information angered every member of the committee. It makes one wonder what type of accounting system the department has,—

Mr. Harding: —when two contracts are let out for the same job, each in a different amount. I will not go into the numbers of the contracts. The subcommittee was told that the cost of moving the chairs off the Bonaventure was high because there had been a great deal of difficulty in unlatching them from the briefing room floor. It was said that it had been necessary for workmen to crawl between the floor and a false ceiling to enable them to get at the nuts and bolts which attached the chairs to the floor so that they would not slide around in heavy weather. This explanation sounded logical and the committee accepted it, until we went to Nova Scotia to check the Bonaventure ourselves. Then, we found that it was not necessary to crawl anywhere to unlatch the chairs, all that had to be done was to tilt them forward and lift them up.

As I said previously, members of the committee were angered to find that someone had attempted to fool them over what the committee thought was an excessive cost for removing these chairs from the ship. One thing led to another, and then we found that there were two contracts; the job had been paid for twice. One of the committee recommendations was that the $4,173 paid under the last contract be returned to the government. This is a small amount, but it indicates the slipshod method by which contracts are let.

The committee then examined the cabins in detail and found excessive charges for repairs made to them. Sheets were drawn up by the department and given to the Public Accounts Committee showing why certain repairs were made to furniture in the cabins. Different reasons were given by various witnesses, but finally we were told that the sheets did not mean much—

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Your Honour, and I thank hon. members of the House. I will not impose too much upon their generosity. Before concluding, I wish to make one or two points about the furniture repairs. In my opinion, they were excessive. Also, this matter involved some poorly drawn contracts and despite the assurances that have been made, I suggest the public interest was not being watched. On examining the matter further we found that there were verbal agreements that certain repairs had to be done. Certain conditions were set down on sheets, but we were told there was an understanding that repairs over and above those specified on the sheets would need to be carried out in the cabins. If that is an example of the type of estimating that has been going on in this particular department, I say something ought to be done. Members of the House should insist that action be taken to correct this situation.

Before sitting down I wish to make one more point. I know other hon. members wish to take part in this debate. It is not only the matter of the Bonaventure that upsets me and other members of the House. Anyone examining the report of the Auditor General, and I have attended numerous meetings of the committee, will find listed department after department and item after item in which there has been gross over-estimating of costs. Goods have been bought before the department has examined them. I am thinking of a case in which a number of buses were bought from a newly established company which was manufacturing them for the first time. The result was terrifically heavy repair costs for the government. How in the world any department could accept delivery of a number of buses that it had not inspected properly is beyond me. That is the type of business administration we deplore. It must be corrected.

I also wanted to speak about the fire which took place on the hydrofoil. The failure to set up proper and adequate fire protection systems on the vessel resulted in the loss to the Canadian taxpayer of many millions of dollars. Consider, also, Expo 67. There, the public purse was not as well protected against many of the expenditures made as it might have been. If certain steps had been taken at the proper time, certain sums of money could have been recaptured for the public purse. The Auditor General's report deals with item after item after item coming under a number of departments.

In concluding, I sincerely urge the government to adopt many of the Glassco Commission recommendations which have not yet been adopted. We ought to go much farther in that direction in order to make certain that the people of this nation obtain as full a return as possible for public money spent. I am convinced that ministers of the government responsible for the over-all programs of government spending will need to insist on a far greater degree of efficiency than the report of the Public Accounts Committee and other information coming forward to members of the House during the present session has shown to exist at this time. May I thank hon. members for their indulgence in allowing me to speak for a few minutes longer.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the motion under consideration reads in part as follows:

That the government—

—and I would add that none of the governments which followed one another protected the Canadian people. I continue reading the motion:

—the taxpayers of Canada from waste, extravagance and other abuses in the spending of government money and for these failures the government deserves the condemnation of the House.

The motion deals with the refitting of the H.M.C.S. Bonaventure which normally would have cost $5 or $6 million but which has cost $17 million to the treasury. This is why the parliamentary committee carried out an investigation on these expenses which are but a pure and simple squandering of public monies.

When this matter was considered by the parliamentary committee, a check was made of the works carried out on the Bonaventure, as evidenced by the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts No. 20, chaired by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales).

In October 1966, 52 chairs were removed from the deck of the ship and transported to the naval overseeing store for survey. A little further in the report we can see pictures of those 52 chairs. They are arm-chairs which look very much like airplanes seats.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I quote from the Minutes of Proceedings of the committee:

> On completion of repairs or renewals, chairs are to be transported from store to ship and resecured to deck in briefing room.
> The price quoted to perform the work of this serial number was 1,040 man-hours at $3.95 an hour with a labour charge of $60. plus a 7½ per cent mark-up on materials used, for a total of $4,173.
> In the early stages of our investigation prior to visiting H.M.C.S. Bonaventure in Halifax, the Committee was led to believe that the job description contained on this serial number was, in fact, an accurate description of the work to be done.
> The justification for this large expenditure of funds was, according to testimony, due to the fact that the chairs were bolted to an inclining floor.

When the Bonaventure was visited, the members of the committee—

> —found that this previous testimony was totally inaccurate and grossly misleading. In fact, the chairs were not bolted to the floor, and were neither unduly heavy or awkward. Further evidence on board the ship indicated that there was a short route to the deck.

As I said a while ago, certain photos were published, as well as fairly accurate estimates of the cost of repairs to that famous ship.

For instance, renewal of two drawer pulls on a wood secretary cost $123.10. The cost of renewal of two hinges on the drop-leaf of the wood secretary—a small board which is dropped to make a small secretary—amounted to $186.60. Hinges are expensive these days! Refinishing the drop-leaf of the same secretary cost $530. It therefore cost $839.70 to repair a nice little wood secretary. It must have been some beauty, Mr. Speaker.

And the government complains about inflation! This is a shameless waste of public funds.

$96.50 were spent to renew the mirror of a small medicine cabinet, of which we have a photo and which we see in very ordinary houses. To renew a door-knob cost $61.90. The total cost of repairs amounted to $258.20. Such waste is unbelievable.

The lock of a wardrobe was repaired; material cost $6 and labour, 28 man-hours, $146.80.

A berth drawer was also repaired—a bed with a drawer underneath it, as we have often seen. Here are the details of the repairs: one missing drawer to be replaced, $300.40; two drawers to be refinished, $346.40; one drawer handle to be renewed, $61.90. The total cost amounted to $708.70.

The committee found out all these things while visiting the Bonaventure. Repairs cost $17 million and I believe the government is willing to sell it for $250,000. And even at that, a buyer has yet to be found!

The expenditures amounted to $17 million, which means the Canadian people were robbed of at least $8 or $10 million. And I must say it is not only in the Defence Production Department that such things happen, but in other departments as well.

Let us take for instance the Department of National Defence. A few years ago, it was discovered that our servicemen had a supply of fatigue clothes for 1,000 years to come, paid by the Department of National Defence and the Defence Production Department.

Mr. Speaker, at that time the Auditor General of Canada had warned the government against such extravagance, but the government never paid heed to those warnings. Why? Because by negotiating such purchases and awarding repair contracts, the government indulged in patronage in order to help friends not only of this government but also of previous governments, of 1965, 1963 and 1962. Indeed such patronage existed when I first came here, namely from 1946 to 1949.

No wonder people are seen to stick to the government and to act as its propagandists or publicists. Such things went on in the two political parties which succeeded each other in power since Confederation.

In the broadcasting field for instance, the Auditor General did not beat about the bush when it came to making recommendations to the government. The Glassco Commission did exactly the same thing. For instance, in paragraph 54, some remarks are made about the CBC's revenues and expenditures. Here is an extract from the report:

Salaries and wages paid for work not performed.

In previous reports, we have referred to payments aggregating approximately $450,000 per annum by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to employees for scheduled hours during daily or weekly tours of duty which were in excess of the actual hours of attendance.

And this happened at the CBC, an agency that I like, but I like even better still to acquaint the Canadian citizens with it.

The payments were made in accordance with the provisions of the various union agreements and the Corporation regarded payment of compensation calculated in this manner as proper—

—still, the work was not done—

—having regard to the effect of scheduling requirements for its present studio facilities, the availability of artists, the exigencies of actuality broadcasts and the nature of broadcast program production.

Mr. Speaker, fantastic amounts are spent by the CBC. In fact, this year, this corporation will cost the Canadian taxpayers 191 million dollars. There was a time, during an elections period I know, when CBC employees made hotel reservations in Montreal, in Quebec and in Trois-Rivières totalling $48,000 and these rooms were never once occupied. Reservations were made, bills were paid with the taxpayers' money and the rooms were not even occupied. So much for the employees of the CBC. But surely somebody is responsible for such a state of things. It helps to make us realize all the difference between state agencies and private business. If a private company were to be under such management as the public sector there would not be one company left in business today for they would all be bankrupt.

The government is not bankrupt because it could not care less about expenditures, the people of Canada are paying. When funds run out, it gets more money by raising taxes. And that is the way public monies are spent.

I can hardly believe that no one is responsible for such excessive expenditures, for such abuses. I have here the Auditor General's report. Paragraph 72 is enough to convince anyone that there is still much waste. I quote:

72. Indirect compensation to chartered banks.

It is not an expenditure, but it amounts to the same thing and Canadians do not know anything about it. Most hon. members do not either.

[Mr. Caouette.]

And to go on with the quotation:

It continues to be the practice of the government to maintain large balances on deposit with the chartered banks, receiving interest only on balances in excess of an aggregate interest-free amount of $100 million.

In other words, the government does not earn any interest on $100 million on deposit in a chartered bank. It starts earning a small interest if the deposit exceeds $100 million.

Interest amounted to $20.1 million in 1968-69. The average effective rate was 5.64 per cent.

In proceeding that way, the government is losing large sums of money. If the chartered bank where the government has a savings deposit is entitled to multiply that deposit by 14 under the Bank Act, since any savings account in a chartered bank constitutes a reserve in the Bank of Canada, we can easily imagine the unlimited powers of the banks, while the government, to please bankers, exempts them from paying interests on such a fantastic sum as $100 million!

Let us see what is happening in another area. According to the estimates of June 1964, the National Arts Centre was to cost $18,223,-000. The estimated final cost reached $46,426,-000, exceeding the original estimate by $28,203,000.

The accumulated out lay to March 31, 1969 was $43,779,000 which was provided for by annual appropriations of the Secretary of State.

I would bet anything that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) was not even aware of it.

Of that amount, $39,631,000 pertains to the construction of the Centre including the underground garage—a building complex which was to cost $18 million—and $3,463,000 to consultants' fees. Those who supervised the work and made sure that plans were followed were paid $3,463,000 as fees.

Mr. Speaker if this is not an outright gift to political friends I can no longer make head or tail of politics.

An additional amount of $1,000,227 was spent since the end of the year. This is in addition to full-scale political patronage through which people are granted amounts of the order of $3,463,000. No wonder some people stick to the system. And if attempts are made to direct their thought to other things, to get them interested in something serious, it is absolutely impossible, because they are totally dependent on the system. It pays them at the expense of the population.

Is it any wonder that young people rebel right in the heart of Montreal and touch off bombs by the half-dozen? The powers that be will wake up the day those bombs explode under their seats, and in the meantime they will have done very little to prevent such incidents. In many cases, they will perhaps have deserved their fate. The people will not be fooled with impunity.

Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that I abhor terrorists; however there is another type of terrorists who dig into the taxpayers' pockets and could not care less about people. If we meet these people, they make fun of us. Whether members or ministers, most of them are on their knees before political organizers who make the others work and keep for themselves the money handed out right and left by the government! A sum of $3,463,000 in fees paid out to consultants! Things are going from bad to worse.

As I said earlier, no wonder our young people are rebelling against society, when it has reached the point of wasting public monies as it has done with the $17 million ear-marked for the refit of the Bonaventure! How much did the silent partners of electoral fund make out of it, particularly those of the Liberal party now in power? It was even reported that some Americans had contributed to the Liberal electoral fund. We were told that big companies also contributed to the electoral fund of the Conservatives who, once in power, are at the mercy of their silent partners. What can they do? They put up with it and the Auditor General in turn calls them to order. But one day will come when Canada's young people will call everyone to order and this through violent action unfortunately. Some people will bear the responsibility for this violent action. This is a salutary warning to all representatives of our political parties. You can fool all the people for some time; you can fool part of the people all the time; but it is impossible to fool all the people all the time. The day of reckoning will come.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their generosity. I shall not make ill use of it because some members want to speak on this same subject of extravagant and wasteful expenditures.

Refitting of HMCS "Bonaventure"

Under the heading "Higher costs of procurement in Canada" the following appears in the Auditor General's report:

In August 1962, the Department of Supply and Services contracted on a target-incentive basis with a Canadian manufacturer on behalf of the Department of National Defence for 434 Mark NC 44 Mod. 1 torpedoes, at an estimated cost of $8,747,000, or approximately $20,200 each. The price included the cost of pre-production engineering, tooling and testing.

The contract was awarded without competition—

—This is known as free for all for the government. No tenders are called.

—to the only Canadian supplier, notwithstanding the knowledge that earlier in 1962, this supplier had tendered prices to the United States government for the United States model of this torpedo, the Mark 44 Mod. 1, that were 40 per cent higher than those of the successful United States tenderer. Deliveries were completed in 1965 at an estimated cost of $7,962,000, or $18,300 each, but the contract has not yet been settled.

It must be about to be settled if it has not been yet. Mr. Speaker, in the Auditor General's report, paragraph 113 reads as follows:

Hydrofoil development program—

By September 1969, $48.5 million had been expended, an increase of $3 million during the preceding twelve months—

In its Fourth Report...presented to to the House on June 20, 1969, the Public Accounts Committee expressed concern that the Treasury Board had not been provided with a proper estimate of the probable overall cost of the project at the time initial approval was sought and urged the Treasury Board to investigate cases where it subsequently becomes apparent that proper estimates were not provided. The committee found that a good deal of money was expended on research which was a duplication of efforts in other countries and felt that greater reliance on the experience of other countries could have effected large economies in the program.

The ship, commissioned as H.M.C.S. Bras d'Or—"Golden Arms"

—in July 1968, underwent foil-borne trials during the summer of 1969. While we understand it performed satisfactorily, a segment of the main foil developed cracks and must be replaced. In December 1969, the Treasury Board approved further expenditure of $2.2 million mainly for operation and maintenance, including the cost of the replacement of the main foil segment which the department has estimated at $450,000.

We have spent half a million dollars to repair the broken foil and $2.2 million for maintenance only. The Treasury Board knew how to find the money needed for that purpose.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The Treasury Board is not short of funds for favouring financial election backers. However, when Montreal postal employees request a salary adjustment, a modest expenditure compared to such shameless squandering, they are told they are unreasonable and uncooperative about fighting inflation. They are accused of all the sins of the world.

A plan has even been brought forward for putting straitjackets on union members, asking that they do not demand increases of more than 6 per cent a year. The government is unwilling to pay workers in proportion to work done. That it cannot accept. However, it does not matter if government expenditures reach $100 million. There is no stinting there. But when it comes to helping workers, they stay up whole nights stubbornly telling union leaders they are unreasonable.

And at the same time, the same government, the same Treasury Board are telling banks and finance companies to increase their interest rates.

For instance, last year, banks were boasting about profits from 20 to 30 per cent higher than before.

Did a government member object to that increase? Of course not, but they object to workers asking for salary increases in excess of 6 per cent a year. Therefore, there is one law for the poor and one law for the rich. That is how the government is acting towards Canadian citizens.

I shall now deal with the cancellation of a project, and I quote:

Cancellation of Northumberland Strait Crossing project.

In 1956 the Province of Prince Edward Island asked the federal government to examine a proposal—

I went there last year.

—for the construction of a causeway across Northumberland Strait as an alternative to the existing ferry system. During the next several years studies were made which resulted in the conclusion that a permanent crossing involving a combination of causeway and bridges was feasible.

Everybody knew it was feasible. This proposal would have been helpful to the citizens of Prince Edward Island. In effect, more tourists would have come to visit that province and New Brunswick as well. I keep on quoting:

Early in 1962 approval in principle was given to the Department of Public Works to proceed with the project, with the stipulation that a combined causeway-tunnel crossing to handle only road traffic be investigated.

After further consideration the project was cancelled officially in February 1969.

[Mr. Caouette.]

So this project was looked into for seven years; the time necessary for studies at a university. Therefore it is beyond doubt that the possibility of building a causeway across Northumberland strait was looked into by university people. I quote further:

In the meantime a substantial number of payments had been made for land required for the approaches to the proposed crossing and work had proceeded under a number of contracts for the construction of the approaches for both highway and railway traffic.

Costs incurred in connection with the project to March 31, 1969 may be summarized as follows:

Consultants did not cause the causeway to be built there, but they were experts. They put their knowledge at the service of the nation.

Consultants—consortium	$10,817,000
—others	519,000
Construction of approaches—
—to that famous causeway—	4,998,000
Acquisition of land	422,000
Miscellaneous	188,000

This must be for the coffee break in the morning and in the afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, $16,944,000 has been spent for the building of a causeway which it has been decided not to build.

Some assistance has been asked of the government for the building of approaches to James Bay, where many new natural resources could be found and developed. But the government is not interested. It is none of its business.

To build a causeway, then not to build it, to undertake a feasibility study, to promise at election time to have it built and then not to build it, all that cost $17 million. The government can afford to do that. The money is paid to people actively engaged in election campaigns.

This concludes my remarks. I would have many more comments to make about government expenditures, but I will let others have their say. However, I repeat that Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of such things. The friends of the party—political favour seekers, government supporters, contributors to campaign funds—are having a field day, but it will not last forever.

Older members may not be in the House in two, five or six years from now, but younger members will still be here. I ask members of all parties to consider seriously the situation because Canadian youths, not only young Quebecers, will lose faith in us. I visited four western provinces last week and I think we must be on our guard. Let us not take risks as we have done until now. Let us be honest administrators. If we cannot get elected by honest people without the money of those who contribute to campaign funds, we shall be defeated by others who will not necessarily be contributors to election funds and that is why I ask all members of Parliament to seriously consider the situation and tell the government what is happening, as the Auditor General of Canada was not afraid to report the facts.

However, the government does not take notice. It ignores the recommendations of the Auditor General who writes his report, throws light on wrongdoings, abuses and waste. The government does not want to see what is happening.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the government does not do something, others will. It rests with the government, whether it is Liberal, Progressive Conservative, Créditiste or something else, to put its administration in order and to check its expenditures before others do it. We must see to it that each dollar collected from taxpayers is used to provide services to Canadians and make sure that integrity—and especially the administrative integrity—prevails in Canada. Thus the electors will be satisfied with our work.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), began his remarks with a background of philosophy of ministerial responsibility largely crystallized from Mr. Bagehot. As a consequence of this and because of my previous experience he asked me to give a blow by blow account of the incidents concerning the refit of the Bonaventure on the assumption that I had as full knowledge of the facts as perhaps anybody else.

On the government side we take no exception to the doctrine of ministerial responsibility as enunciated by Bagehot. We indeed accept the fact that public servants are responsible for their actions not to the House but to the executive—to the ministers—and are answerable not to the House but to the ministers. As a consequence, it is the ministers who must accept both real and technical responsibility for the actions of the civil servants and/or the departments for which they are administratively responsible.

However, in this matter there is an implication of a concept of continuity of government and government departments. The person who is responsible on a day to day basis for his department is the minister. In the case of the Bonaventure we are dealing with the administrative responsibility of two departments, namely the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services as successor to the Department of Defence Production. I think it would be much more appropriate if the minister having responsibility for these matters and for the people involved were to reply to the invitation issued by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, rather than myself. Later in this debate the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) or one of my colleagues on his behalf, and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) will be answering for the administrative responsibility they hold in relation to these two departments and their connection with the Bonaventure refit.

In so far as the remarks made initially by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster are concerned, I have had a look at Hansard and particularly the series of questions and answers back in 1966 relating to the Bonaventure. I believe that anyone who reads the full text—not all of which was quoted—of these questions and answers will be satisfied in this case, firstly, that the terms and conditions of the contracting and the nature of the contracts in question were fully explained, and that at no point was there either an apparent or real misleading of the House.

When subsequent allegations appear to be different from one's earlier understanding, one is always concerned that there may have been some misleading. But having reviewed the record I am satisfied that no such situation existed in respect of the present circumstances. In so far as the motion itself is concerned, I must thank the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster for having been extremely gentle with the government. While the words of the motion on the Order Paper are highly condemnatory and are in rather intemperate language, he was sufficiently reasonable not to endeavour to adduce any evidence to support the motion.

However, while I am grateful for his consideration and gentleness, I must also thank him for providing me on a supply or opposition day with an opportunity to place on the record what is probably not very exciting material but which, rather, is an account of the various measures the government has taken in recent years to improve or increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the public service. The changes the government of Canada has introduced to increase efficiency and effectiveness in the public service fall into three general categories. First, the adoption of a new approach to management; second, changes in organization to achieve this end; third, the introduction of new approaches and procedures in the fields of administrative management, planning and budgeting.

After a quarter of a century of large-scale government in Canada we finally have learned that you cannot achieve efficiency, effectiveness, probity and prudence in the spending of public funds by piling regulation upon regulation. For too long Treasury Boards have sought to achieve these desirable ends by controlling departments and by telling them in ever greater detail how to manage their affairs. The end result of this process, unfortunately, has been not only to achieve probity and prudence in public expenditures but also to erode those qualities of creativity and enthusiasm which are essential to effective management and administration.

We in the present government are trying to change that. We are seeking to provide ministers and their departments with the authority and the machinery with which to better discharge their responsibility to the cabinet and to this House for the effectiveness of their programs and the efficiency of their administration. This means that they will be doing their own evaluation of the effectiveness with which their programs achieve the government's objectives. They themselves will be applying the tests of efficiency with which their programs are administered. To this end the departments of the government of Canada are introducing the internal operational audits which are required to support its operation.

This does not mean that having delegated responsibility to departments, the government can or will simply hope for the best. We, the collectivity of ministers, remain responsible for the effectiveness and efficiency with which departments discharge the responsibilities which have been delegated to them. So we in turn must establish mechanisms for reviewing the performance of departments; for reviewing their evaluation of their programs and their administration.

The principal change in organization which has been made to this end has been the designation of a single agency, in place of four or five, to act for the cabinet in reviewing administrative management in the public service. This agency, the Treasury Board, is responsible for ensuring that methods for evaluating the effectiveness of programs and the efficiency of administration are developed and applied throughout the government of Canada. It is responsible for ensuring that the best possible organizational forms and staff development techniques are employed throughout the public service. It is responsible for ensuring that high standards of probity and prudence continue to apply in the expenditure of public funds. And it must do all this without usurping the responsibilities of operating departments.

The second major change in organization was to separate the Treasury Board from the Department of Finance, as recommended by the Glassco Commission under the chairmanship of the late Mr. Glassco. This has had the effect of enabling one minister to concentrate his undivided attention on economic policy, and another to concentrate his attention on the continuing evaluation of programs and administration. In a country the size of Canada, with a government as large in scale and as diverse in activities as ours, this change was essential if both functions were to be performed well. In addition to these changes in organization, and again as a consequence of the change in the philosophy of management in the public service, substantial changes have been made in our approach to planning and budgeting and to administrative management.

Let me say something first about the changes the Treasury Board has introduced and is still introducing in administrative and personnel management. We are seeking, essentially, as I have said, to develop techniques for the evaluation of departmental performance as a substitute for regulating or controlling it. In the field of organization this means encouraging departments to review their organization and participating with them in the evaluation of the proposals which are made. No government has, I think, engaged in more wide-ranging reviews of organization that this one. Indeed, members opposite have sometimes criticized us for concentrating too much on these searches for increased efficiency.

In the field of personnel management we have innovated even more. We have introduced collective bargaining into the public service on a massive scale, giving to public servants in one fell swoop the rights and privileges enjoyed by other workers across Canada. We have revolutionized the classification system. To give one index of the scale of the change and of the simplification, we have reduced the number of position classes from 200 to just under 70. We—here I mean the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission together—have introduced new programs for the development of personnel, including the training of developing executives, the career assignment program, language training and programs for educational leave; and we currently are engaged in developing a program for the interchange of personnel between governments and between government and industry.

In the field of administrative transactions, as in the field of organization, we are similarly seeking to substitute the evaluation of departmental performance for its regulation. By administrative transactions I mean the inputs into administration—accommodation, contracts for construction and services, travel, the acquisition of materials and supplies, and the system for accounting for all these public expenditures. If we are able to establish norms or standards by which departments ought to be guided in their administrative transactions, and if we are able to develop along the department's techniques for evaluating performance against these norms, we will have found a substitute for the regulations of the past. I might tell hon. members in passing that I am just now in the process of establishing a special administrative policy branch in the Treasury Board secretariat for the purpose of speeding up these developments.

I have spoken so far of the principal elements of administration—organization, staffing and the other administrative inputs. Over and above all this is the evaluation of administrative efficiency generally. Here again the Treasury Board is seeking to develop new approaches and new techniques. In a few pilot projects we are identifying units of output and then measuring the cost of producing these outputs, both over time and as between administrative units. I would not pretend that these have progressed as far as we would like, but I do know that we are advancing with energy and enthusiasm.

Finally, let me say something about the changes we have introduced in our approach to planning and budgeting. In our work in this field we have been guided by the proposition that an expenditure budget is nothing more or less than a bundle of programs and a bundle of administration for executing those programs. If we have the best combination of programs for achieving the government's goals, and the most efficient administration for executing the programs, we will have given the taxpayer the best return for his dollar.

The job of reviewing programs and administration must be done, of course, both by the government and by this House. It can only be done in the light of the objectives of the government. It is for this reason that our first reforms were to introduce a more meaningful classification of expenditures in the estimates and to incorporate into the estimates statements of objectives. Then, to ensure that this chamber would be better able to examine the expenditures budget, the government proposed referring the departmental estimates in every case to a Standing Committee equipped by its nature to examine these estimates in detail.

These were our first steps. Our next ones were designed to improve the reviews within the government of the efficiency and effectiveness of public expenditures. This is not something that is achieved in the short span of weeks during which expenditure budgets are produced. In that interval we are seeking to achieve more limited objectives, to review our programs with a view to ensuring that there are sufficient resources available to accomplish high priority objectives even if this means eliminating some of the low priority programs. We also endeavour to make sure that only those resources which are essential to the implementation of the government's programs are allocated to departments.

We have been prepared to be rigorous in our allocation of resources to ongoing programs, as hon. members discovered last year when we cut both expenditures and the numbers of civil servants. Our rigour was such, indeed, that the opposition complained that we were harsh and heartless. Put rather blandly, hon. members opposite have not always supported our efforts to protect the taxpayers of Canada.

The evaluation of the highest and the lowest priorities and the annual allocation of resources does not, however, complete the process of evaluating program effectiveness and administrative efficiency in government. What is required, and what has been lacking, is a continuing program of evaluation. This we have started to do in an orderly way. We have begun, as I have said, the evaluation of administrative efficiency generally and we have adopted new approaches to the evaluation of administrative and personnel management.

In addition, we have begun systematically to review in a fundamental way some major areas of policy. Certain of the major policy reviews are now in the public domain, such as the reviews of defence policy, of external policy and of income tax policy. Others, such as income security, are still under internal analysis. But in addition to all these major reviews we are beginning in an embryonic way systematically to examine the effectiveness of individual programs. We are not sure how successful we will be. So far we are sure only that new techniques are required and that old habits of thinking will have to be re-examined. But I am confident that only in this way will governments be forced to review the costliest element of public administration, the programs themselves.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will give hon. members an overview of the measures we have adopted for improving effectiveness and efficiency in the government of Canada. I am sure that to most it will have seemed a technical, indeed a less than absorbing review. But if you want to debate efficiency in public administration, you have to be prepared to get right down to the measures which are required to achieve it.

It is, of course, much more spectacular to make general and unsupported charges. One can wax eloquent and use extravagant prose in a case of this kind. But the job of this House, I suggest, is like the job of this government: to examine seriously, carefully and rigorously the operations of departments to ensure that they are performing their duties effectively and efficiently. It is not spectacular work. It rarely makes headlines. But it lies at the heart of protecting the taxpayers, as the hon. member who proposed this motion put it, "from waste, extravagance and other abuses in the spending of government money."

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question? I ask the minister if he is going to leave these public servants, the two deputy ministers and the other senior civil servants, undefended and blackened across the country in the eyes of the public.

Mr. Drury: The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is an emphatic no. As I mentioned at the outset of my remarks, this task will be done by the ministers having administrative responsibility for the departments in which these officials are performing their duties.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. gentleman leaves the chamber for his dinner I must say that never before have I seen a situation where a man—I suppose one might as well be frank—who has one way or another been seriously charged by events, has stood up in the House of Commons to address himself to it and has dismissed it as lightly as we witnessed within the last 15 or 20 minutes. As a matter of fact, I am rather stunned—even appalled—that the minister would treat so lightly the overhaul and repair of the Bonaventure and still think that the House and the people of the country are going to accept his walking away from it that easily. In connection with that, and because of the minister's remarks, before I finish my intention in this debate I am going to move an amendment to the motion that is now before the House and I hope we will debate its merits before the day is over.

The history of this matter is pretty clear. It has been dealt with by the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). My entry into the debate is occasioned by a very real concern for the situation that has developed, in which the inference is quite clear from the question just asked of the minister with respect to individuals whom the committee in the performance of its duties saw fit to name. The minister cannot blithely walk away with a lecture to this House on administration. He cannot walk away from his responsibilities in this matter. Indeed, had it been my responsibility, the motion would have been much stronger and I have no hesitation in advising the minister that my contribution to the debate will be strong.

The motion seems to have struck the minister in such a way that he felt a simple lecture to the House on the discharge of responsibility would meet the occasion. Again, so that the remarks I intend to direct to this matter will be clearly understood, I say at the outset that I welcome the non-partisan way in which the committee approached the overhaul of the Bonaventure. In a sense it is regrettable that committees have to look at matters so long after they occur, so that in the final analysis all they can do is make a little noise about whether moneys were spent properly. If committees were able to examine programs in the course of implementation, they might save the public a great many dollars and cents. The committee's report was presented in a non-partisan way. While I personally regret that the committee saw fit to single out individuals, my great regret is that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury)—who was the minister responsible at that time—did not take steps that would have prevented or precluded a committee of this House finding it necessary to remove from the minister this function of, I suppose you might use the phrase the reward for good, or discipline for indifferent, action. Mr. Speaker, might I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock this evening many in this chamber were regretting, and members of the public in the galleries were chuckling at, what I can only describe as the blatant arrogance of the President of the Treasury Board, I am sorry he has not reappeared this evening. Before dealing with an amendment which I wish to propose, if the President of the Treasury Board feels he will escape responsibility for the necessity of this motion by acting in a casual and offhanded manner, I suggest he is wrong.

The context of my intervention in the debate on the motion is based in large part on the acceptance of responsibility by ministers of the Crown. I see the minister has come back to us. Perhaps, after all, the government does take the motion seriously, Mr. Speaker, because I see the Government House Leader (Mr. Macdonald) has not left the chamber although I am sure a game of tennis or something like that would have attracted him more. If we are to take a lesson from the President of the Treasury Board—

An hon. Member: You forgot the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans).

Mr. Forrestall: I think this is his night to be in attendance.

Mr. Kierans: It is the attraction of the speaker that entices me.

Mr. Forrestall: I will pass that remark on to the merry monk. To return to my earlier remarks, Mr. Speaker, I regret that the President of the Treasury Board, in his capacity two or three years ago of Minister of Defence Production, permitted the situation to develop which culminated in a committee of this House viewing the matter so seriously as to name names. Whilst I regret this, the responsibility for the situation must strongly attach to the President of the Treasury Board. I regret equally, as indeed must the people of this country, that the government has not yet concluded an investigation into the procedures followed in the repair of the Bonaventure.

It is particularly regrettable, as the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster said, that the minister did not ask for an exhaustive investigation, particularly since there was evidence to show that not only were costs for this contract to go up but there was no way of knowing by how much they would go up. Indeed, when the work began we were told in different ways that the costs would increase, and it must have been evident to the minister that costs were almost out of hand, particularly at the end of the seventh and eighth months of the overhaul program.

Answering the allegations of the motion, the minister this afternoon spoke in a manner that quite frankly I do not find acceptable because he shrugged off his responsibilities on to his colleagues. The President of the Treasury Board smiles. I suggest he is perfectly aware of the serious act of omission he committed, and he will not be able to hide behind the collective responsibilities of his colleagues in cabinet. The tradition that individual ministers were responsible for the acts of their subordinates goes back, if my history is correct, to precedents set in the 1850's and 1860's in Great Britain. At that time, admittedly, a minister could be expected to keep a very close watch on the actions of those who served under him.

This is not the situation today and I do not think that is really what we are talking about. We are not concerned about it today. Circumstances change. Ministers must be as much concerned with events in front of them as with events behind them. We on this side of the House recognize that. But the minister has not changed over the years, as was made clear in his intervention in the debate this afternoon. This is the ultimate responsibility for the acts of those who served under him. Having acquired knowledge of this matter, the minister failed to act appropriately and failed to institute inquiries into the procedures being followed. I think he is perfectly aware of what I am talking about. The tradition of ministers accepting responsibility for the acts of their subordinates is clear. I could refer Your Honour, for example, to the debates which brought about the establishment, in large measure, of the civil service as we understand it.

I will not allude to what happened in 1909 and the debates that led up to the formation of the modern civil service because I am sure that in his reading the minister has come across them. I am sure he is aware of the traditions and practices of the British House. What is important here is that having been made aware of the situation, the minister failed to do anything about it. Since then the government has failed to correct the situation. The minister in no way this afternoon addressed himself to his omission. He in no way lent the traditional protection to those who served under him. He owes them that protection. In no way did he do anything to protect or reassure senior civil service officials that they would not be casually "docked" if someone bothered to look at their records.

An examination of this particular case reveals some pretty glaring misadventures. I have no sympathy for those who act wrongly while in the service of others. When such people are in positions of high trust, the offence is all the more glaring. As I say, I have no sympathy for such people, although I have sympathy for those who in certain circumstances might be charged with wrongful acts but are completely innocent.

Whether the minister wants to accept responsibility is neither here nor there. The minister has failed to give people who must work in the service day after day an opportunity to defend themselves against the direct or implied charges that have arisen from the report of the Standing Committee. The committee urged the government to take immediate action. It has been suggested that an inquiry is now in process. It may or may not be in process. The minister did not answer that question this afternoon, but left it hanging. Not only did he leave it hanging; he saw fit to treat in a callous and casual way another minister by implying that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) is the minister who knows most about this matter. If that is so, perhaps the former Minister of National Defence ought to share the responsibility for what has happened.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

At any rate, the President of the Treasury Board casually said this afternoon, "I did not have anything to do with this, really. The present minister will have to answer." I do not see either of those ministers or their representatives here this evening. Perhaps they are here and we shall obtain some answers. This motion is not directed against the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) or the Minister of National Defence.

The President of the Treasury Board cannot avoid his direct responsibilities in this matter, as he tried to do this afternoon. He cannot say that he was not responsible for acting in connection with something that happened a few years ago. He did nothing. Indeed, he chose to leave the matter to a committee of this House which after a fairly thorough investigation found it necessary to be highly critical of procedures followed by public servants who were instrumental in awarding contracts under which tax moneys of the Canadian people were spent. I therefore wish to move an amendment to the motion, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). I should like to address myself to argument in support of this amendment. First may I read the motion and then discuss it. I move—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member proposes to amend the motion I must bring to the attention of the House that the hon. member is the seconder of the motion and obviously cannot amend his own motion unless he has the unanimous agreement of the House, which apparently is not forthcoming.

Mr. Drury: No, it is not.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot amend his own motion. The hon. member will have to request one of his colleagues to move it, if the amendment is to be moved later this evening in the course of debate.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: I accept that ruling, Mr. Speaker. I say that with deference to Your Honour. I do not know which rule of the House states that I cannot move an amendment to a motion which I have seconded. Undoubtedly there is such a rule. I have no hesitation in accepting Your Honour's ruling.

In the few moments I have left I wish to state that as long as the President of the Treasury Board has responsibility for the expending of public funds, the minister cannot expect other than condemnation by this House. My own condemnation is very strong. As long as the minister fails to act on the situation as it now exists, he cannot expect to be rid of that condemnation. In the public realm six senior civil servants have been charged. They have no recourse to defence and no recourse to a forum to which they can present their side of the situation.

I think it is regrettable that the President of the Treasury Board allowed this situation to develop. It is a matter of even deeper regret that he allowed it to continue once it became known. I think it is deplorable and unforgivable that the minister has not seen fit to take a public position either of discipline or of defence. The fact that time has passed and the minister has now assumed other responsibilities does not mitigate his responsibility. Indeed, the office which the minister now holds as President of the Treasury Board ties him closer to his initial failure to act in this regard.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) who could not be in the House today for this debate because he is attending a meeting of the NATO nuclear planning group of which Canada again this year became a member on rotation. This group normally meets twice a year. The current meeting is being held in Venice today and tomorrow. My colleague will then proceed to Brussels to the spring meeting of the Defence Planning Committee of NATO on June 11. In his absence today on this important item of public business he has asked me to speak with regard to his responsibilities as Minister of National Defence. I welcome the opportunity to speak this evening and to set forth on his behalf his response, which I make clear I am pleased to support.

There are two points to be made before dealing with the details of the committee—report two assertions of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) which should be contested. I got the impression from the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) that there is an element of personal vendetta in their presenting this motion. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East suggested that in some way the President of the Treasury Board could have gone into other departments to discipline employees who are not his direct responsibility. The rules of public administration are clear; they have been clear for a long time. Ministerial responsibility attaches to the specific office, the person occupying it from time to time, and not to any individual. It is the minister currently holding the office in question who answers to the House for the acts and omissions of his public officials. The matter in issue refers to acts and omissions which have occurred in the past as well as the present.

It is improper for the hon. member to say that the President of the Treasury Board is evading his duly in failing to discipline the employees of the Department of National Defence, for which department I am responding this evening, or those of the Department of Supply and Services for which my colleague will respond.

Mr. Bell: If that is the theory, you change departments if you get into trouble!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps the hon. member was in trouble with his own party by putting this motion which appears in his name. Perhaps the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) will agree that the position of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster should be changed.

Mr. Bell: We do not call for resignations in our party.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It would be improper for the President of the Treasury Board to deal with this part of the motion. It was absurd for the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East to suggest that the President of the Treasury Board should go into other departments for which he does not have responsibility and engage in the disciplining of employees.

Secondly, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and other members commended the committee on its work in this regard. They then condemned the censuring of a number of public servants including several serving officers of the Maritime arm of the Canadian armed forces. I suggest they cannot have it both ways. If they did not wish specific individuals to be named, they could have prevented it. This committee, unlike other Standing Committees of the House, does not have a government majority.

Mr. Bell: There is a man who has it both ways.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The chairman of that committee is not a government member.

Mr. Hees: The Liberal party has a majority.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The government does not have a majority. The number of opposition members and the number of government members is equal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The chairman of that committee is a member of the opposition. If the member for Dartmouth-Halifax East is going to censure someone in this regard, he should censure the presiding officer of that committee. I do not intend to do so. I say on behalf of my colleagues that we regret this procedure of making specific attacks on individual public servants. The President of the Treasury Board set out the theory in this regard, to which we adhere. Public servants do not respond to Parliament; they respond to the minister responsible. That is the position on behalf of the government in this regard. I hope other committees of the House will not indulge in the same practice which was condoned by the hon. member for Wellington in allowing an attack on individual public servants.

The Standing Committee on Public Accounts is a very important and essential committee of this House. The third report of that committee, which has been presented to the House, refers extensively to the Bonaventure refit. The report to which I have referred deals with the midlife improvement and refit of the Bonaventure. Construction of the Bonaventure commenced in the United Kingdom in 1942 during World War II. The ship was not completed in time to see service in World War II and work was suspended shortly thereafter. The hull was acquired for the Royal Canadian Navy in July, 1952. The ship was completed in a United Kingdom shipyard and commissioned by the Royal Canadian Navy in 1957. Prior to the refit the ship had been in service continuously except for periods of minor refit and repair.

The refit, which began in 1966, was its first major refit and the project included improvements and replacements of certain systems to maintain its reliability and operational capability. At that time it was expected that the ship would remain in service until 1975, if not longer. However, it was decided last year to retire the ship from service in 1970. This decision, with a number of other changes, resulted from the recent defence review and the need to restrict defence expenditures to the 1969 budget level for the following three years.

It was a difficult decision to make, but it was a forces-wide reduction. After a searching re-examination of Maritime Command's operational commitments, it became a choice between taking the Bonaventure out of commission or reducing the fleet by a number of destroyer escorts. It was decided that it was preferable to retain the destroyers. By taking the Bonaventure out of commission the department was able to free $10 million to $12 million annually for these other needs.

The proceedings of the committee leading to this report and the report itself have received a great deal of public attention. The report refers by name or position to certain officers of both departments and implies that they were deficient in the performance of their duties to the degree that disciplinary action may be required. The principles are clear. Disciplinary procedures have been established in accordance with the law of the Parliament of Canada for both the public service and the armed forces.

Mr. Woolliams: What about the minister?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): These are designed to ensure the protection of the individual from injustice as well as to protect the interests of the public. Parliament has been diligent in its protection of these rights, even though an hon. member opposite may be facetious about them. The Minister of National Defence is responsible in his department to ensure that discipline is administered in accordance with the procedures established by the law of this Parliament. In view of the allegations contained in this report, which reflect on certain officers of his department, he considered it essential to deal with these matters today, and I do so on his behalf.

The report states, on page 775, paragraph 6, under "General Conclusions and Recommendations":

> The committee fails to understand why the Deputy Ministers of National Defence and Defence Production, realizing that the cost of the refit of the Bonaventure was, month by month, getting out of control, did not order an "on the job" investigation.

The Minister of National Defence and I have been unable to find any evidence before the committee which would support such a statement. Regular production meetings were held at the shipyard. The two deputy ministers arranged to have a monitoring committee composed of officials of the Department of National Defence, the Department of Defence Production and Treasury Board review costs on a continuing basis. A review was made in the shipyard by officials from both departments and Treasury Board staff before the principal increase in the estimates for the project, amounting to $3,770,000, was approved on December 1, 1966, by Treasury Board. A further increase of $800,000 was subsequently reported to Treasury Board in June, 1967, bringing the original $8,000,000 estimate to $12,570,000. I think it will be clear that every effort was made to keep the costs under control.

At page 788 of the report, in the section on item X-427, the committee states:

> It is inconceivable to the committee that representatives of the Department of National Defence and Defence Production would present as facts such false testimony regarding details surrounding the movement of briefing-room chairs.

I wish to deal with this aspect in so far as it relates to National Defence employees. Captain T. W. Maxwell, Maritime Systems Engineering Section of the Department of National Defence, who was not involved in the Bonaventure refit beyond the preparation of certain specifications relating to conversion of systems, endeavoured to obtain information for the sub-committee from various sources in the department. The information he gave the subcommittee on the briefing-room chairs was given in good faith and during the course of subcommittee hearings conducted informally and of which no minutes were kept.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am glad to see we are winning the support of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Forrestall: You are winning nothing. We shamed you into it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There are the hon. members who commended the committee for attacking this serving officer.

Mr. Forrestall: Who attacked a serving officer?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Captain Maxwell sincerely regretted that he had given the committee incorrect information, and when he became aware of his error he reported it to the committee.

Mr. Woolliams: You are confessing your own weakness.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Is the hon. member referring to this serving officer as having confessed? I think that is shameful. Reference is made to this on page 532 of the proceedings of the main committee. Further, on page 794, under the item X-1237, the committee reports that evidence was given by Captain Maxwell and Mr. R. D. Wallace that this contract was largely required because of the need to secure lockers in position on board ship. The report goes on to say:

> The committee, when visiting the Bonaventure, discovered that this information was inaccurate and, in fact, many of the lockers were not secured to their frames and those that were had not been secured in the manner described.

According to the evidence on page 603 of the proceedings, Mr. Wallace did not provide the information referred to in the report. The evidence on pages 603 and 604 given by Captain Maxwell was that part of the reason for X-1237 was to bolt lockers aboard ship. Captain Maxwell stated specifically, and I quote from the proceedings: "I do not think that I ever implied that the locker work was a large proportion of X-1237." The necessity to fasten lockers aboard a sea-going warship should be self-evident notwithstanding the fact that some were temporarily unsecured when the committee visited the ship some two years later in Halifax following its return from a lengthy operational trip.

The minister advises me that he has looked into this very carefully and he is convinced that Captain Maxwell did his best to assist the subcommittee in its investigations. Captain Maxwell did not have personal knowledge of all the detailed items in which the subcommittee was interested. He obtained information as quickly as possible from various sources in the department, and in these circumstances there is always some possibility of error in dealing with detailed questions some two or three years after the work was done.

The report on page 792 made some criticism of Captain Lynch concerning the detailed records on furniture repairs. Captain Lynch was responsible for overseeing the whole refit and in the matter of furniture repair he concerned himself with the over-all operation rather than the details. The committee reports that Captain Lynch cancelled item X-337 which would have required an expenditure of $550,499 for the repair of furniture. This was replaced by items X-782 and X-784, totalling $206,861. There were comprehensive specifications covering the refinishing of furniture. The work orders were supplemented with diagrammatic and oral instructions. The evidence before the committee indicates that these were adequate for those concerned with the work. It would appear that the committee's criticism of Captain Lynch relates to the fact that the work orders for furniture repairs were not amended in writing to include the supplemental instructions so that they could be readily audited by the committee. I can understand the committee's concern in this matter. This raises the general question of records adequate to the job and those satisfactory for a later, detailed investigation.

We appreciate the need when dealing with public moneys to keep records in sufficient detail to satisfy a subsequent review of the expenditures involved. In this particular instance it is agreed the detailed record available to the committee was difficult to follow. Every effort will be made to provide better records to the fullest extent possible. My colleague, the Minister of National Defence, was deeply disturbed that the report reflected unfavourably on some of his departmental officials who appeared as witnesses before the committee. He carefully reviewed the evidence and the performance of the officials concerned. He has satisfied himself that there are no grounds for disciplinary action against the personnel involved, and asked me to say this today.

I wish to turn, now, to some other aspects of this report. I would like to comment on the estimated cost of this refit. The committee, in its report, recognized that the Bonaventure refit was the first of its kind in Canada and was of such unprecedented magnitude that it would pose some difficulties to the Defence Department. It was also one of the early contracts using a new system of awarding such contracts by competitive tender. The committee, however, believes that a large number of obvious items could have been included before the tendering process and that greater efforts should have been made to determine and define the amount of work to be undertaken before seeking public tenders.

I agree that the effectiveness of competitive bidding is enhanced when as much work as possible is defined before seeking tenders. The two departments, before receiving the report, had gone into this question and had worked out revised procedures which will improve performance in this respect. None the less, there is no practicable way prior to opening the ship, particularly a ship of this size, of determining in full the precise nature and scope of the work to be done. So an allowance has to be made for "work arising" or "unknown work" in the tendering process. The allowance for this in the tender call was 200,000 hours of labour and 10,000 hours of drawing office time. The departmental estimators used their best judgment, but in the absence of previous experience or historical data to assist them their estimate was concededly too low.

As for the new work introduced after the tender call, it was decided in the course of the refit to do additional painting, based on surveys as the work proceeded—certain work which would improve living conditions and some improvements to safety and operating features. We became convinced of the advisability of doing this work only as the refit proceeded. These deliberate decisions were based on defence priorities at the time, as any additional costs of the refit had to be met by transfers from other items within the total defence budget and were not in addition to it.

Estimates on repair and refit contracts on destroyers and smaller ships, with which there has been long experience, have been good. On some 45 repair and refit contracts in the last two years, contract prices were well within the estimates.

The original Bonaventure refit estimate of $8 million was based, firstly, on the procurement of government-supplied material, secondly on known shipyard work, and thirdly on provision for refit work arising. The completed program costs consist of $10,290,-090.74, the contract price as shown on page 778 of the report, and the items "direct cost of government-supplied materials by naval stores, $2,068,000.00" and "freight and sales tax, $150,000" included in the table of figures on page 779, giving a total of $12,508,090,74.

If indirect costs are to be added, as they were added by the committee in arriving at the total amount, such as the $1,074,000 estimate for crew salaries, as they are on page 779, they should also surely be added to the original $8 million estimate. The converse of that would have been the suggestion that serving crews should have been discharged for the interval. Moreover, a tabulation of this kind, to be consistent, should deduct the estimated ship operating costs for the 16-month refit period when she was not operating, which would more than offset the indirect costs attributed in the table.

I appreciate the need for committee examination of public expenditures. I share the concern of the committee over procedures. We keep these under continuous review with the object of incorporating improvements which experience reveals to be desirable. I think it is fair to say that the energy demonstrated by the committee in this particular case will undoubtedly result in closer scrutiny of refit operations in the future, indeed of all government procurement operations.

In closing, may I repeat my statement that I hope we will not again see the naming of specific members of the public service or members of the armed forces as was done in this particular case. After all, the minister responsible, on whose behalf I am speaking tonight, takes full responsibility for those officers and I give my support for the efforts that they made, using their best judgment in the circumstances, in making this refit. As I say, I hope such naming will not occur again in the committee's work.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I came into the chamber after the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) had commenced to read this well prepared speech made up for him by someone, I think I probably know who. Thus, I am not in a position to comment upon it from its beginning. In any event, I have not risen tonight to deal with the bits and pieces of the Bonaventure affair or of any of the other numerous instances brought to the attention of the House of Commons by the Auditor General of extravagance, of wasteful expenditure, of bad administration and so on during the past several years. As a matter of fact, I think what is involved here is a much more important question of principle, namely the principle of ministerial responsibility for what goes on in any department of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harkness: I will come back to this point in a moment, but it is the main reason I have risen to my feet tonight and the chief subject about which I am going to speak.

I think there has been a deliberate effort on the part of the government to shift their responsibility on to members of the civil service at various levels. This is something I resent quite strongly, having myself been a minister of three departments. When I was minister of a department I was prepared in every case to take the responsibility for anything that any of my officials did. Apparently the present government is not prepared to take that responsibility. In my view this is the real principle at issue as far as this motion is concerned.

Before I deal with this matter I should like to say that in my view the escalation in cost of the Bonaventure refit is very much less than the escalation in cost of a number of other projects initiated by the present government. As an ex-minister of defence, I resent to a considerable extent the fact that the general public thinks that perhaps the worst example of bad administration, of expenditure of public funds on useless purposes, has been the case of the Bonaventure. As a matter of fact, in the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee last year I personally insisted on going into the affairs of Expo, which is a far worse example of what I am talking about than the Bonaventure. In this particular case the total commitment of the federal government to begin with was $40 million. In the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs we were never able to find out what the final cost of Expo was, but it ended up that the federal government had to pay somewhere around $300 million. This is an escalation that is far higher than that in the case of the Bonaventure, one which the Canadian people should keep in mind.

Then there is the case of the Arts Centre. I recall quite well when this project was first presented to the House of Commons that it was supposed to cost in the neighbourhood of $9 million. Then when all the estimates, and so on, came in the government said it was going to cost $18 million. It ended up costing $45 to $50 million, an escalation of five times or more. One of the examples that hurts me most is that of the hydrofoil. When I was Minister of National Defence I was very loath indeed to authorize a start on the experimentation and construction of the hydrofoil, and did so only after I had been assured that the cost would not exceed, under any circumstances, $11 million to $12 million. That was to be the absolute maximum. The cost has now risen to some $50 million odd. The only conclusion I can draw is that the present government has been extremely lax in seeing that the people's money is spent in a reasonable way. The people responsible for this are not the deputy ministers and the various other people down the line. The people responsible are those who sit on the treasury benches at the present time and the people who have sat on those treasury benches by and large ever since 1963.

At this point I should like to pay a tribute to the members of the Public Accounts Committee. I have not been a member of that committee for the last 2½ years, but I was a member before that and for most of the period between 1945 and 1957. The Public Accounts Committee, above all others, is the committee which performs a great service for this Parliament and the people of Canada in examining the accounts of the government. We might say it acts as a brake on excessive expenditures by the administration and things along that line. I believe the Public Accounts Committee has rendered a great service to the people of Canada in presenting its report in this regard. I do not want anyone to think that my ideas are any different in that respect. However, I think the Public Accounts Committee in recommendation No. 6, which appears at the bottom of page 775 of Votes and Proceedings for May 13, pointed the finger in the wrong direction. Recommendation No. 6 states:

> The committee fails to understand why the Deputy Ministers of National Defence and Defence Production, realizing that the cost of the refit of the Bonaventure was, month by month, getting out of control, did not order an "on-the-job" investigation.

The people who should have ordered that investigation were the then Minister of Defence Production, now President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) who at that time was Minister of National Defence. They should have ordered the investigation. As a matter of fact, on the basis of my experience of about six years as a cabinet minister I know that none of my deputy ministers at any time could have ordered such an investigation unless I told him to do so.

This is the great difficulty so far as this question is concerned. I know it probably is beyond the bounds of possibility to accept that in this present Parliament the government members on the Public Accounts Committee would agree to a unanimous report which condemned their own ministers. I recognize that this probably is the situation. Nevertheless, this is what the Public Accounts Committee should have done. The Public Accounts Committee at that time should have condemned the then Minister of National Defence, the then Minister of Defence Production and Industry, and so on, because they were the people responsible for this situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harkness: If any on-the-spot investigation was to be made, it would have had to be ordered by the ministers. No deputy minister could on his own order an investigation of that kind. It is nonsense to think along such lines. The fact that these investigations did not take place and the costs escalated to the extent they did is the direct responsibility of the minister, now President of the Treasury Board, who at that time was in charge of defence production and industry, and the hon. member for Trinity who at that time was Minister of National Defence.

That is where the responsibility lies, and not on the deputy ministers. I take great exception to an attempt being made to place on deputy ministers and other lesser officials in the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production the blame for the mess in respect of the Bonaventure. The people responsible for this situation are the ministers. They should stand up and accept that responsibility. I heard a good deal of the speech the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) read in respect of this matter. I think I have a fairly good idea who prepared it for him, and so on. Perhaps he was speaking for the Minister of National Defence of that time. As a matter of fact, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) shares some responsibility because while he was not in charge of the department he was the associate minister for a good part of that period. The President of the Privy Council should have said that the ministers of this government are responsible for the mess and that they are sorry for it. Instead of that, ever since the Auditor General's report came out people have been trying to place the responsibility on the deputy ministers and other officials of these two departments.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hees: Resign!

Mr. Harkness: I take a great deal of exception to that. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) when this debate was instituted, there is no question about ministerial responsibility in our system. He read some excerpts from Mr. MacGregor Dawson's book. I have some quotations here but I shall not take the time of the House to read them. The hon. member also referred to some excerpts from the Glassco Commission report. I shall take time to read only one excerpt from the Glassco Commission report in order to demonstrate the fact that the principle of ministerial responsibility is completely entrenched in our parliamentary system. If we do not continue with a system of parliamentary responsibility, and if ministers try to slough off responsibility to deputy ministers or officials, our system will fall to the ground and we will be left with practically nothing. This is my great objection to the position of the government to this date. I have really heard nothing in this debate in respect of ministers saying, "I will take the responsibility".

Mr. MacEwan: They haven't got the guts.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): How can the hon. member say he has heard nothing in this debate, when he accepts that he has been absent for most of it?

Mr. Harkness: I did not hear what the minister said.

Mr. Hees: He had an attack of wind.

Mr. Harkness: I shall return to the Glassco Commission report in respect of the conduct of government in this country, under the heading "Political Accountability of the Executive Branch". I shall quote from page 32.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What volume?

Mr. Harkness: Volume 1. You do not need to think that I do not know what I am talking about.

Mr. Hees: He is beginning to realize that you know very well what you are talking about.

Mr. Harkness: The Glassco Commission report states:

> Concurrently with the development of the "public" service concept, it has become established that direct accountability to Parliament and to the public is imposed only on ministers.

I repeat, "only on ministers".

> Public servants continue to be answerable for their honesty and competence to their ministers, through the ascending scale of their departments, but they bear none of the political consequences of their acts.

They also do not bear any of the financial consequences of their acts. In other words, under our system the ministers are responsible for all the mistakes made by members of their departments. If they are honest about it, they must come into the House of Commons and accept that responsibility. As a matter of fact, if the situation is bad enough they should resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What did you do in 1963?

Mr. Crouse: At least he had integrity.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Harkness: I followed my furrow in 1963, and I only wish that a lot of members of the present government had done the same thing subsequently. But they have not.

Mr. Hees: Thanks for the straight line.

Mr. Crouse: There is no integrity on that side of the House.

Mr. Harkness: Undoubtedly the general situation is this, that an attempt has been made, so far as the government is concerned in this case, to shuffle off their responsibility to deputy ministers and to other lesser civil servants, serving officers and people along that line. I do not think that this is going to wash with the Canadian public, nor do I think it has washed with this Parliament. The government has a subservient majority. I have no doubt that if this matter came to a vote—as it happens it is not going to come to a vote because today does not happen to be a voting day—the government side would carry the vote. There is no question about that because, as I say, they have a subservient majority. But if the people constituting the members of this assembly were asked, on a sort of secret ballot, to indicate what they thought in connection with this matter, I have not the slightest doubt what the verdict would be. I do not expect the Liberal members supporting the present government to get up—as they would if they were independent in their views, but they are not—and condemn the government. As I said earlier, it would be too much to expect that to be the case.

Mr. Woolliams: They only do that in caucus.

Mr. McKinley: Once a month, for three minutes.

Mr. Harkness: Nevertheless, the basic issue in this whole matter is ministerial responsibility. I am very much afraid that if the present government continues to evade what should be their responsibility in connection with every executive act of the government, our present system of government will disappear. I do not know what will supplant it, but I am sure it will be much poorer.

The reason I am so concerned about this matter is that, as I said, the basic principle of ministerial responsibility is being evaded in this case. I do not think it should be evaded. I think that of the ministers who are responsible for these departments the only one who is still on the treasury benches is the President of the Treasury Board. The hon. member for Trinity has left the government. There is no question in my mind whatever that the present minister, who is an old friend of mine—we served together in the war, and so forth and so on—

Mr. Drury: Especially "and so on."

Mr. Harkness: —and had a very pleasant time, but he is still in my view, in spite of all, evading his responsibility.

Mr. MacEwan: Resign!

Mr. Harkness: When I was interrupted by the President of the Privy Council I was going to say that the greatest example of this in recent times was the Crichel Down case in Great Britain, in 1954. I will explain later how I happen to know something about it. In any event, here was a case where a piece of land had been taken by the RAF for war purposes and when the RAF had no more use for it, the department of agriculture, a great bureaucratic organization, particularly in the U.K. at that time, thought they could run it better than the former owner. He kept on trying to get back control of the land, without success during the time the Labour government was in office.

Then the Labour government was defeated and the Conservatives came in. He went on for another two or three years trying to get it back. Eventually he raised so much hell that the matter became a big question in Parliament. Sir Thomas Dugdale, who was the minister of agriculture, although he really knew nothing about what had been going on because he had been given bad advice by his officials—this came out in the public inquiry which was held—was not really personally responsible. But in that Parliament the idea of ministerial responsibility was so firmly ingrained that Sir Thomas Dugdale insisted on resigning, and he did. As a matter of fact, this is what should happen in this Parliament.

[Mr. Harkness.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: I thank hon. members for their indulgence. I will not keep them very much longer. As I was saying, the Crichel Down case is the outstanding example in recent times of a minister who really did not know what his officials were doing and who nevertheless took the responsibility and resigned as a result of it. As I started to say earlier, the reason I know something about the case is that the minister's successor came over to visit me. He was minister of agriculture when I held the same office here in 1957. I got a whole rundown on the case.

If we are going to continue parliamentary government, of which the basic ingredient is the responsibility of the executive to the Members of Parliament, then ministers will have to accept responsibility for what their officials do, whether or not they know anything about it. In fact, it does not make a bit of difference whether or not the officials have done something without the minister's knowledge, the minister still has to take responsibility for it. If he is not pleased, it is his job to fire the official who has not done a good job, or transfer him somewhere else. But so far as Parliament is concerned and so far as the people of Canada are concerned, the minister must take the responsibility. If he does not do so, our system is going to disappear. As I said, that is why I feel so strongly about this matter.

I will conclude by saying that I think the only good effect that can come from this debate and from the Standing Committee's public investigation of the matter would be for an effective measure to be taken. I put it to the government that they must take effective action to prevent the waste of public money, which has been apparent in this case and which has been apparent in a number of the other cases I have mentioned. If this is not done, the whole idea of trying to give more life to members of the House of Commons and to the House of Commons as a whole will come to nothing.

The only way in which the members of the House of Commons can exert any real influence on administrative actions of any kind by the government is through committees. The Public Accounts Committee is a good example of this. If attention is not paid to the reports of committees, if they are just filed and nothing happens in regard to them, there will be less and less interest among members in this House and less and less interest of the public in the operations of this Parliament; and our responsible, parliamentary system of government will go down the hill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in response to the motion which is before the House, and in response to several of the remarks that were just made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness), I welcome this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House some of the cost-saving practices and some of the improved, and I might say improving procedures that are now being implemented in my department. I would like not only the House but also the Canadian public to know that the procedures we have instituted are designed to protect the public treasury. What is of even more importance, Mr. Speaker, is that some of the results we have achieved have in fact protected that treasury and have saved the taxpayer's dollar.

Also, as the refit of the Bonaventure was referred to specifically in the motion before us, I would like to speak about a number of matters raised in the third report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which is, of course, their report on that refit. I think at the outset it would be useful for all of us to put the Bonaventure refit into what might be called historic perspective.

Mr. Dinsdale: Hysteric perspective.

Mr. Richardson: The methods and the procedures which the Canadian government has used to handle major ship repairs have been evolving and changing, and I believe improving, over many years. In the post-war years before the Bonaventure refit there was no competitive bidding; in other words, there were no firm contracts. Prior to the Bonaventure refit it was the practice of the Canadian government to negotiate the price and to rely in those days only upon cost-plus arrangements. Because of these unbusinesslike procedures that were in use prior to the Bonaventure refit it was decided to introduce competitive bidding and the writing of firm contracts between the government and the successful bidder.

The Bonaventure was the first major refit in which there was competitive bidding and a firm contract, and because of this—because it was the first—I would say that it is understandable that government personnel may have lacked experience regarding estimating the total amount of work on a project of that size. However, the change to competitive bidding and to a firm contract was a step in the right direction and, as I will point out, the government's contracting procedures have continued to improve right up to the present day.

I have indicated in these remarks, Mr. Speaker, that I am responsible for a department that is vitally concerned with the efficiency of government, and I welcome the interest shown by members of the opposition and by the Standing Committee in improved procedures and cost-saving practices. I am pleased to be able to say that some of the recommendations made by the Standing Committee for improving the government's contracting procedures are already in effect in my department and this, I believe, is the answer to what the hon. member for Calgary Centre was speaking about a moment ago. For example the first general conclusion and recommendation made by the Standing Committee is:

> That greater efforts should have been taken to determine and define the amount of work to be undertaken in the refit, prior to the seeking of public tenders.

Quite apart from the hearing on the refit of the Bonaventure, I established last fall, now some time ago, an interdepartmental study group to press on with our program of procedure improvements so as to prevent, or at least to minimize cost overruns on ship conversions, repairs or refits, and to ensure that all work that could be indentified was put in the specifications for the original tender call. This task force studied cases where cost overruns had occurred. They established the causes for such overruns and then developed a working procedure to reduce or eliminate these overrun difficulties.

The final report of this task force was given to me last March. It is several pages in length and covers in detail the procedures to be followed to achieve time, cost and performance objectives in the carrying out of refits, repairs and emergency docking of naval vessels. The Department of National Defence and my department reached agreement on implementation of the proposals contained in the report and these proposals are now in effect in my department. I believe that members of the opposition and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts would be interested in this report. In fact, if they would read it I think that they would be encouraged by it because it is, I believe, a clear indication that within the Department of Supply and Services we have in some respects been thinking along the same lines as the Standing Committee. We have been trying to improve our contracting procedures in a manner fully consistent with some of the recommendations of that committee.

At the time of the Bonaventure refit when we were introducing competitive firm price contracting for ship construction and repair, it was found that in many ways my department, the user departments and the contractors were not fully experienced in working within the rigid conditions laid down in the contracts. Since that time we and the other concerned parties have gained considerable experience and have developed techniques that enable us now to have these contracts completed successfully, on time and within budget.

As evidence of that statement, Mr. Speaker, in the last three years, of 33 ships purchased for civil departments all but one were delivered on schedule or ahead of time. The actual shipyard costs amounted to $14,079,000 against a budgeted cost of $14,505,000. As another illustration of how we are continually improving our estimating and programming practices, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services handled 25 naval ship refit and repair contracts during the fiscal year 1968-69. The total budgeted figure for all 25 contracts was $4,668,000. The total final contract price was $3,755,000. This means that owing to detailed cost estimating and tight negotiation the contract prices were some 20 per cent below our budgeted figures. In 1969-70 the total budgeted figure for 20 refit and repair contracts was $3,495,000, with a total final contract price of $2,959,000. The contract prices for that year were some 15 per cent below our budgeted figures.

The examples I have just given are mainly in the area of ship construction and repair but are illustrative of the results of our system improvement program. There are many other examples that could be given where changes and improvements are providing better estimates and substantial savings in the cost of the goods and services which the government buys. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my remarks up to this point have established that the system improvements in the area of government procurement are in a continual process of improvement.

Turning now specifically to the Bonaventure, the contract—as do all refit and repair contracts—provided for a fixed price for the known work and a firm chargeout rate for labour and overhead. The committee expressed concern that the chargeout rate for labour and overhead was renegotiated. However, Davie Shipbuilding Limited was not obligated to deliver more than 200,000 hours of "work arising" at the original rate of $3.95 an hour. In view of the committee's concern I have consulted the Department of Justice, who have fully confirmed the legality of the department's action in this matter. Perhaps I should add that the new rate was not unreasonable. It was, as shown in the committee's report, only a few cents higher than the rate bid by the two competing yards for the first 200,000 hours of "work arising". The average chargeout rate by Davie was thus well below the rates originally bid by the competing yards.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that in its extensive report the committee did not mention what seems to me to be an important fact. At no place did the committee indicate that an over-all audit of the total contract with Davie Shipbuilding Limited was carried out by the audit service branch and that it was determined by that audit that the over-all profit before taxes was below 10 per cent of the cost.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Richardson: Gladly.

Mr. Woolliams: I take it from his argument that the minister is trying to evade ministerial responsibility. But apart even from the overexpenditure can you, as a minister of the Crown with a lot of say, particularly in western Canada, say that the government was right in stating, "Spend all this money, and when we get through we will either sell it or scrap it"?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, we are talking of two separate matters.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, answer that question.

Mr. Richardson: At the point in time when the refit was undertaken there was a plan to keep the Bonaventure in service for a much longer period of time. Then we had a full defence review in which expenditures were held back, and one of those was the Bonaventure. It is a very logical and progressive conclusion. That is the answer to the question.

Mr. Dinsdale: There is not much logic there.

Mr. Richardson: I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, that the total profit as determined under audit was under 10 per cent. In other words, the over-all profit was not unreasonable for a fixed price contract. My colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), has spoken of officials in the Department of National Defence, and part of what he has said also applies to officials in the former department of defence production. In particular he has dealt with the committee's general conclusion No. 6, in which the committee indicated that it failed to understand why the Deputy Minister of National Defence and the Deputy Minister of Defence Production did not order an on the job investigation. My colleague has pointed out that the two deputy ministers discharged their responsibility in this respect by having the project monitored closely by an interdepartmental committee and by having a special on the spot review of the project undertaken at the time of the request for additional funds in the fall of 1966. Surely this is the answer to the charge made just a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Two other officials of the former department of defence production who are mentioned specifically in the report are Mr. R. D. Wallace and Mr. L. E. St. Laurent. Mr. St. Laurent's estimating has been criticized, but in appearances before the standing committee he has pointed out that his final estimating work was in the category of summaries and not in the itemized figures. Mr. Wallace was the division chief responsible for the contract with Davie Shipbuilding, and the committee report indicates that he misled the committee in respect to the manner in which lockers and briefing-room chairs were secured on the ship. My information is that Mr. Wallace was one of a group of officials who met with a subcommittee of the Public Accounts Committee and was present when certain explanations were advanced by officials for the cost of removing these furniture items. Mr. Wallace was not, however, the person who gave the explanation to which the committee later objected, and subsequent testimony of other government officials before the committee clearly exonerates Mr. Wallace in this respect.

With these comments, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the House that I intend to continue to give most serious consideration to the matters raised by the Standing Committee and to any of the constructive observations made on both sides of the House in the debate today. As I have pointed out, some of the committee recommendations have already been implemented.

I would welcome a further opportunity either in the House or before a committee of the House to give additional information. In particular, I would be glad to provide more information on the improved procedures and cost-saving practices which have been put into effect and which are continuously being put into effect by the Department of Supply and Services.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, we have really been honoured in this debate as a party because we have seen three cabinet ministers participate. That is almost unique in this Parliament. But there is a reason why these three cabinet ministers have participated—it is because they are in trouble and they know it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, Hoot Gibson is over there and he is hooting, hooting, hooting. Owls go out and sit in trees. If hon. members opposite want to participate in the debate they should stand up; and if they do not, they should shut up.

Mr. Speaker, a former president of the United States, Mr. Harry Truman, had a sign on his desk and that sign is what the opposition is talking about: it said, "The buck stops here". That is what we say: the buck stops with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and nowhere else. The President of the Treasury Board was desperately concerned about the civil servants named by the Public Accounts Committee. Apparently the committee did a terrible thing to these people. But, Mr. Speaker, the reason they were named by the Public Accounts Committee was because those gentlemen did not do their job. There is no other reason. Had there not been incompetence in government, $17 million would not have been spent on the Bonaventure and no public servant in Canada would have been named in any Public Accounts Committee or in any Auditor General's report. Their names are there because the President of the Treasury Board did not do his job.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: And because he did not do his job, he should no longer be President of the Treasury Board. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) says we are carrying on a vendetta. Yes, we are carrying on a vendetta, but not against the public service of Canada: it is against the incompetent cabinet ministers sitting on the treasury benches of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Our vendetta is aimed at the squandering of $17 million of the taxpayers' money on the Bonaventure. We are carrying on a vendetta against a government unwilling to face its responsibilities. They are playing musical chairs by suggesting today that since the President of the Treasury Board is no longer the Minister of Defence Production, he should not be blamed for what happened, or that since the Minister of National Defence was at that time the associate minister of national defence, he ought not to be blamed. I say these men are responsible, and if they had accepted their responsibilities they would have submitted their resignations to the Prime Minister.

I listened to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson). He is a man who should be keenly interested in protecting the taxpayers' dollar, as should the President of the Treasury Board. As a matter of fact, his department more than any other can assure the taxpayer that tax money will be spent properly. I suggest that when a man like that comes into the chamber and categorizes $17 million misspent on the Bonaventure as "historic perspective," he ridicules his position has gives little or no guarantee to the public of Canada that that mistake will not be repeated again and again. That is what worries me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: It is not historic perspective that we want, Mr. Speaker: it is action.

Mr. Dinsdale: History repeats itself.

Mr. Coates: We want guarantees for the taxpayers of this nation that we shall not see one Bonaventure misadventure after another. There is no guarantee in the type of statement made by the Minister of Supply and Services. We heard the tripe and gobbledegook spoken by the President of the Privy Council, but we did not hear anything about such a guarantee.

Mr. Gibson: The hon. member is wandering.

Mr. Coates: There goes the hoot again. It goes hoot, hoot, hoot. You can anticipate his hooting. Every once in a while you hear a hoot like an owl's. They say the owl is old and wise. Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) is a wise old owl, because he hoots all the time. We are not interested in owls; we are interested in the taxpayer and the way tax dollars are spent.

Mr. Dinsdale: The government does not give a hoot about taxes.

Mr. Coates: We hope the government will give more of a hoot, in the days ahead, for the Canadian tax dollar than it has in the past. A new program was proposed to the provincial premiers in Winnipeg over the weekend. I am wondering whether we can obtain some kind of guarantee that the government will peg wasteful government expenditure at 6 per cent for the next year. If we obtained that kind of guarantee from the government we would need less and less in the way of guarantees from labour in this country.

Mr. Gibson: What chapter is that?

An hon. Member: Hoot, hoot!

Mr. Coates: If the hon. member could read, I would give him the chapter and verse. But all he can do is hoot, hoot, hoot.

An hon. Member: Like an empty vessel.

Mr. Dinsdale: An empty vessel makes the most sound.

Mr. Coates: We face a national strike in the postal service and the government refuses to budge from its fixed position. It is said that the government's proposal to the postmen would cost an extra $41.5 million over 30 months, and that the union proposal would cost $51 million over 24 months. How long would it take the government to meet the union proposals, in terms of the money it has wasted? For starters we can look at the misadventure of the Bonaventure. Altogether $17 million has been paid out on a ship that is now up for sale and is likely to wind up her days as a floating crap game.

Mr. Gibson: What page is that?

Mr. Coates: Is it not time that the minister or ministers responsible were keelhauled or scuttled? Let us take a look at another government spending fiasco. An estimated $18 million National Arts Centre winds up costing $46 million. Here we have a $46 million chunk of culture, with prices out of reach of the working man in Ottawa and performances out of reach, through sheer distance, for millions of Canadians from coast to coast. Let us take a look at the $16 million spent on the beginnings of the P.E.I. Causeway.

An hon. Member: That was a shocking waste.

Mr. Coates: Anybody who visits Prince Edward Island should look at the area where they built railway tracks to Northumberland Strait. Indeed, we have been told that although we wasted $17 million on the Bonaventure, we can reclaim $500,000 if we sell the ship as scrap. I wonder how much these rails, which cost us between $16 million and $17 million, on the edge of the Northumberland Strait would fetch if they were torn up. I walked down that railway line. I thought I might as well. As a taxpayer I thought I might as well walk along those tracks to see how $16 million of my money had been spent. Well, I did not get my share of enjoyment out of that $16 million. Unfortunately, the people of British Columbia do not even have a chance to see the rails.

Mr. Dinsdale: Neither do the people of the Prairies.

Mr. Coates: That is all you can see; there are two rails leading to Northumberland Strait. The government did not sink New Brunswick and it has not succeeded in sinking Prince Edward Island.

An hon. Member: Perhaps the present Premier will sink it.

Mr. Coates: Yes, perhaps the present Premier will sink it. He is driving the province very hard. But he has had a tremendous amount of assistance from our friends across the way.

Mr. Dinsdale: Birds of a feather.

Mr. Coates: Who are all hooting together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Those are only a couple of reported items. I wonder how many cents an hour they would represent to a postal worker who feels he is being short-changed by this government. Next year's report by the Auditor General will probably have a special chapter on the Montreal mail trucking farce in which the Post Office set out to save money but has had to pay out more then $2 million in buying trucks, settling broken contracts, paying for extra security and so on.

So I ask again: Is the government going to peg its expenditure wastes at 6 per cent, or might it be that the minister responsible for the Bonaventure in the area of defence production or for government spending in general will, after we have looked at the grim, total picture, be given their marching orders? It would be mighty good news for Canada if that were done, but I doubt if it will be.

I should like to refer to a CBC program entitled "Encounter" on which the President of the Treasury Board appeared on April 11. He was interviewed by Ron Collister, Charles Lynch and Pierre O'Neil. What I like about this program is that the minister talked of a tight ship. The way the expenditures on the Bonaventure went, I think the only fellow who was tight was the President of the Treasury Board.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: He was spending money like a drunken sailor.

Mr. Coates: There could be no doubt about that. When talking about this tight ship, the minister said:

> The government is turning rather more attention to what I would call effectiveness as distinct from efficiency—

I do not argue with that.

> —that is making sure that what we are doing is producing the result that is really needed—

I do not argue with that. Apparently the main result the government wants is unemployment. They are doing it with an effectiveness that beyond a doubt is better than has been done by any government in Canadian history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: At the present time 550,000 Canadians are unemployed. If unemployment is the main goal of the government, they are both effective and efficient. This seems to be their main goal. In this interview the President of the Treasury Board referred to the Auditor General. Although the minister thinks the Auditor General is a great fellow, he thinks he would be a lot better if he wrote with invisible ink in an invisible pen. That is really what the minister wants. The minister thinks if the Auditor General used invisible ink in his invisible pen he would have the kind of report that is required. In this interview he said to Mr. Lynch:

> I wonder myself whether the Auditor General should cast himself in this role, or whether we should look for really another kind of person to be Auditor General—

I know the kind of person the President of the Treasury Board would like as Auditor General. There used to be a radio program called "The Shadow Knows". That is the fellow he wants to be Auditor General.

An hon. Member: The Green Hornet.

Mr. Coates: No, not the Green Hornet. He wants "The Shadow" and he wants him with an invisible pen with invisible ink so that no one in this country can find out about the misadventure of the Bonaventure. I wish to refer to an editorial which appeared in the Cape Breton Post. This refers to another stage in the career of the President of the Treasury Board. I quote:

> One example is the suggestion by Hon. C. M. Drury, Minister of Industry, in a Montreal speech that the government should print its own newspaper and insert its own programs into the CBC. This sounds incredible, coming from a man of Mr. Drury's presumed intelligence.

That, Mr. Speaker, would be the fantasy of all fantasies. I would love to see the programs that the President of the Treasury Board would prepare for the CBC. Alec Guinness starred in a tremendous movie entitled "Tight Little Island". I think the minister would keep repeating that movie on the CBC so no one would ever find out about the Bonaventure. The movie was about a ship that sank with a cargo of scotch. The men of the island went out in rowboats to get the scotch from the ship. They had quite a party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Never on a Sunday!

Mr. Coates: I do not know whether there was any scotch aboard the Bonaventure, but a lot of people had a mighty big party at the expense of the taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Coates: I would like to say more, Mr. Speaker, but one of the members of the NDP has been trying to get the floor. I will let him take over.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the offer of the hon. member. I appreciate it more because it was not offered by the previous speaker.

This is really a sad state of affairs. After meeting for a number of months the committee prepared a very detailed report on a very large expenditure. It is sad that opposition members have to raise this subject on their day rather than having the committee report presented in the ordinary way. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) defended this action. He would have had this same opportunity had he allowed the committee report to be presented in the normal fashion. All opposition members are concerned about our inability to supervise the estimates and expenditures of this House. Some hon. members will remember the days of the old type of estimates when we could understand exactly what was happening. I must admit this was not true when I came to this House; it was more complicated then. The new system of estimates is even more confusing. One of our responsibilities in an economic sense is to scrutinize all expenditures. After a great deal of time and effort the committee unanimously presented a report. The government covered up that report.

I was not impressed by the speech of the President of the Privy Council because I am aware that he was reading someone else's document. He was not giving his own point of view or that of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux). I was shocked at the speech of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). This man has had it both ways. He was a senior civil servant. I am sure he remembers the Currie report. It may be true that somebody took the blame for him at that time. I do not know whether he had the responsibility or whether it was the responsibility of someone under him. I am sure he was able to transmit to those responsible the difficulty that developed at that time. I am sure he did something about it.

Although this is a democratic process, I do not entirely agree that the minister has to take the responsibility. This only works when the minister is willing to do something to those responsible for the neglect that occurs. It is all right for the minister to stand in this House and say, "I take full responsibility". There was an expenditure of $17 million on the refit of the Bonaventure. It did not need to be refitted; it would not have sunk with an additional three years' service. What does it mean to the Canadian people when the minister makes such a statement? Does it assure them that the same situation will not occur in the future?

The President of the Treasury Board did not say anything. It was interesting to watch his officials in the gallery. They were amused. I am not sure what they were amused about. They may have been very pleased with the speech they had written for the minister, they may have thought he was doing very well, or perhaps they were laughing at Parliament or its members. Then again, though I do not suggest this very seriously, they may have been laughing at the minister himself.

The minister has a responsibility for considering the average Joe who is getting damn poor results from the expenditures we are making under the tender system. The work on the West Block was another wonderful example of underruns and overruns. Every time the contractor got an underrun he put the money in his pocket, and whenever he got an overrun the government paid. We all remember the Arts Centre. The estimated cost was $9 million. In the end it exceeded $47 million. Expo was supposed to have cost $40 million. In fact, it turned out to be $300 million. Would anybody like to guess how much it will cost us to hold the 1976 Olympics that are not supposed to cost us anything. My guess is that $50 million will be very cheap.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson), who is new in his department, did tell us he was giving some consideration to this problem, and I am sincerely grateful for that. People are making estimates in connection with government contracts without having the faintest notion of what they are doing. They are not competent. Every major estimate has proved to be so far out that it might as well not have been made. The minister sought to tell us we were not doing badly on the basis of 10 per cent plus cost. That may be the opinion of some people but it does not seem to me we should be counting on overruns at 10 per cent plus cost. It reminds me of the days when the country had to depend on operations of that kind. Surely that is not the case today.

This country is not getting full dollar value for the work we are contracting out. The Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) has found this out. His tender system was so bad that the man who already owned the trucks and operated under a contract refused to tender on it again. It seems to me that if anyone was in an advantageous position to tender, this operator should have been. He did not wish to be involved in the tender system. In my opinion the tender system is not honest, it is not competently managed and the government should come up with a new one.

The cost of refitting the Bonaventure was estimated at $8 million. Then somebody came along and made an offer of $4.5 million. There were other tenders of $5 million and $7.5 million. Mr. Speaker, in these circumstances the only bid worth considering was the $7.5 million bid; otherwise one has to assume that those preparing the estimate were stupid or that the man who volunteered to do it for $4.5 million was stupid. Nobody in his senses would grant a tender for an amount which is just half of the estimate. Today, the real facts are available. The estimate was $8 million but the cost turned out to be $17 million. Where does this leave a government which accepted a $4.5 million bid?

I have seen this happen both ways. There is another facet to this question which has not been discussed. I can remember the end of the Arrow program and the decision by the Department of National Defence that it could no longer pursue this national endeavour. I know many people who were very proud of the fact that Canada had one aircraft carrier. I am also aware that there are many pilots in the air force today flying the CF-105 who realize that this plane, with a 200-mile radius, cannot go anywhere unless it has an aircraft carrier to support it. It has no value unless it is flying around in Canada close to a gas station.

Many people still do not like to see the end of "The Bonnie" The Canadian public are fairly generous and they have shown this quality on many occasions, even when they have not been asked. I am sure that if we asked them to agree to give the Bonaventure as a gesture, to Australia—which might be able to use it, since Australia already has a ship of the same type—they would willingly give consent. It would be a gift worth making to a sister dominion. I strongly urge the government to consider this proposal rather than letting the ship go to some art dealer in Toronto who would take it through the Seaway. The government would probably have to spend another $50 million to widen the Seaway for that purpose.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't put ideas into their heads.

Mr. Peters: The committee worked very hard. Every member gave of his time and effort to the fullest extent. The report is a good report. For his part, the Auditor General was most diligent in helping to assess the accounts with the staff he had available. The government appears, sometimes, to be very stupid. Let them not be encouraged by the fact that they have a majority which will clap for them no matter what they do. Let them take the advice of the Minister of Supply and Services tonight and redesign the whole tender system so that we do not continually get into trouble of this kind.

There must be a way of arriving at a better tender system to ensure that this kind of thing will not happen again. From this point of view the lesson of the Bonaventure is one well worth learning. If we are capable of designing new methods of estimating expenditures in advance and of controlling expenditures so that they remain within the estimate, if we are willing to eliminate the practice of allowing business people to decide for us how much we should pay for whatever we are buying, we shall be able in the end to say "Thank you" to the Public Accounts Committee and to the Auditor General. Moreover, many people will appreciate the efforts of a government which, having made a bad mistake shows us it is willing to change the whole of its procedures to ensure that the same mistake is not repeated again as it has been repeated hundreds of times in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

COMMUNIQUÉ AND DECLARATION FOLLOWING ROME MEETING OF NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS

FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ

The North Atlantic Council, meeting in ministerial session in Rome on 26th-27th May, 1970, reaffirmed that the alliance remains indispensable to the security of its members and makes possible their common search for progress towards a more stable relationship between east and west in which outstanding issues dividing Europe can be resolved.

2. Ministers again stated their determination to resolve these problems through a process of negotiation. They recognized that for their part, this search for peace must rest upon a spirit of genuine partnership, the maintenance of the defensive strength of the alliance, and the practice of full and timely consultation.

3. Ministers agreed that it will not be enough to talk of European security in the abstract. The causes of insecurity in Europe are specific, they are deeply rooted in conflicting perceptions of state interests, and their elimination will require patient endeavour. However, the allies, for their part, remain willing to negotiate, in any suitable forum, those concrete issues whose resolution would enhance the security of Europe. The success of efforts to pursue genuine relaxation of tension will be a test of the willingness of all interested countries to deal meaningfully with real issues of security.

4. Ministers affirmed that to endure, peace must rest upon universal respect of the sovereign equality, political independence and territorial integrity of each European state, regardless of its political or social system, and for the right of its peoples to shape their own destinies, free of the threat of external intervention, coercion or constraint.

5. Ministers, recalling their earlier statements on the subject, examined and approved a report on the situation in the Mediterranean, prepared by the Council in Permanent Session which they had requested in their meeting of December 1969. Having regard to the conclusions presented in this report, they found reason to reiterate their concern with regard to the situation in the area. They stressed again the importance of full and frequent consultation among the allies on this question and the necessity for continued vigilance. They instructed the Council in Permanent Session to continue their close review of the developing situation in the Mediterranean and to report fully thereon to ministers.

6. At their April 1969 meeting in Washington, ministers agreed to explore with the Soviet Union and the other countries of eastern Europe which concrete issues best lend themselves to fruitful negotiations in order to reduce tension and promote co-operation in Europe and to take constructive actions to this end. The council thereafter conducted a detailed study of those issues, and at their meeting in December 1969, ministers declared that allied governments would continue and intensify their contacts, discussions or negotiations through all appropriate channels, bilateral or multilateral, and that they remained receptive to signs of willingness on the part of the Soviet Union and other eastern European countries to engage in such discussions. Progress, they said, in these discussions and negotiations would help to ensure the success of any eventual conference, in which, of course, the North American members of the alliance would participate, to discuss and negotiate substantial problems of co-operation and security in Europe.

7. Ministers expressed satisfaction over the launching or continuation of the whole range of talks and negotiations, initiated by members of the alliance, which they have been actively promoting during the six months since December 1969. At the same time, numerous other east-west contacts have been pursued. The allies have consulted and will continue to consult closely on all these initiatives and contacts.

8. With the support and understanding of its allies, the Federal Republic of Germany has initiated talks with the Soviet Union, Poland and the GDR in order to improve the situation in central Europe. The allies consider this to be encouraging. They express the hope that these talks will yield results and will not be compromised by the presentation of unacceptable demands. The efforts being made to solve outstanding problems and to achieve a modus vivendi in Germany which would take account of the special features of the German situation, represent an important contribution to security and co-operation in Europe. The ministers express the hope that all governments desiring to contribute to a policy of relaxation of tension in Europe will, to the extent possible, facilitate a negotiated settlement of the relationship between the two parts of Germany and the development of communications between the populations.

9. The ministers noted with satisfaction that the four powers, in the framework of their rights and responsibilities for Berlin and Germany as a whole, began discussions on 26th March about improving the situation with regard to Berlin and free access to the city. They express the hope that the difficulties which exist at this especially sensitive area of the east-west relationship could be overcome by practical measures and that Berlin would be enabled to make its full contribution to economic and cultural exchanges.

10. The conversations between the United States and the Soviet Union aiming at the limitation of strategic armaments, which began last November at Helsinki, have been continued at Vienna in April. Ministers welcome these talks, the outcome of which is so important for the security of Europe and the future of humanity.

11. On the occasion of the coming into force of the Non-Proliferation Treaty, ministers reemphasized the importance they attach to limiting the spread of nuclear weapons as well as to measures for genuine nuclear disarmament. They noted with interest the efforts now under way to exclude mass destruction weapons from the sea-bed and to deal with the problem of control of biological and chemical weapons. They expressed the hope that further progress on disarmament measures, with appropriate safeguards can reduce the arms burdens borne by all.

12. The members of the North Atlantic Alliance have, over a number of years, proclaimed their interest in arms control and disarmament measures which facilitate a gradual elimination of the military confrontation in Europe. Ministers recalled the declarations issued at Reykjavik in 1968, and at Brussels in 1969. They noted that up to now these declarations had led to no meaningful reply.

13. The allies have nevertheless carried out intensive studies on mutual force reductions in accordance with the directions given by ministers in December 1969. Ministers examined the detailed report presented to them by the North Atlantic Council in Permanent Session. This has been of great value in clarifying the complex issues involved. Ministers gave instructions for further relevant studies which would guide policies and explorations in this field.

14. Ministers, having examined all these developments, both positive and negative, and having taken note of the report on the procedures for negotiation which they had commissioned from the Permanent Council, stated that they were ready to multiply exploratory conversations with all interested parties on all questions affecting peace.

15. In so far as progress is recorded as a result of these talks and in the ongoing talks —in particular on Germany and Berlin—the allied governments state that they would be ready to enter into multilateral contacts with all interested governments. One of the main purposes of such contacts would be to explore when it will be possible to convene a conference, or a series of conferences on European security and co-operation. The establishment of a permanent body could be envisaged as one means, among others, of embarking upon multilateral negotiations in due course.

16. Among the subjects to be explored, affecting security and co-operation in Europe, are included in particular:

(a) the principles which should govern relations between states, including the renunciation of force;

(b) the development of international relations with a view to contributing to the freer movement of people, ideas and information and to developing co-operation in the cultural, economic, technical and scientific fields as well as in the field of human environment.

17. In addition, ministers representing countries participating in NATO's integrated defence programme attach particular importance to further exploration with other interested parties of the possibility of mutual and balanced force reductions and have therefore issued a declaration on this subject.

18. As a first step, Ministers requested the Foreign Minister of Italy to transmit this communiqué on their behalf through diplomatic channels to all other interested parties including neutral and non-aligned governments. They further agreed that member governments would seek reactions of other governments to the initiation of the comprehensive programme of exploration and negotiation which they envisage.

19. Ministers reviewed the first report from NATO's Committee on the Challenges of Modern Society and welcomed the progress made in the six months since the committee was established as a demonstration of the value of allied co-operation on the urgent problems of human environment. Intensive studies now in progress will contribute to national and international action on a broad range of environmental issues, including such pressing concerns as air and water pollution.

20. Minister reaffirmed the view that the benefit of the alliance's work in mankind's environment particularly could become a basis for broader co-operation between east and west in this field of ever-increasing importance. They considered that this could be ensured either through existing international organizations providing a useful framework for enhanced co-operation or by any other appropriate method.

21. The next ministerial session of the North Atlantic Council will be held in Brussels in December, 1970.

DECLARATION ON MUTUAL AND BALANCED FORCE REDUCTIONS

1. Meeting at Rome on 26th and 27th May, 1970, the ministers representing countries participating in NATO's integrated defence programme recall and reaffirm the commitment of their nations to pursue effective policies directed towards a greater relaxation of tensions in their continuing search for a just and durable peace. They recall, in particular, the invitation they have previously addressed to the Soviet Union and other countries of eastern Europe to join them in discussing the possibility of mutual and balanced force reductions.

2. The objective of the work on which their representatives have been engaged has been to prepare a realistic basis for active exploration between the interested parties at an early date and thereby to establish whether it could serve as a starting point for fruitful negotiation. Such exploratory talks would assist those concerned in developing in detail criteria and objectives for substantive negotiations to follow at the appropriate stage in a forum to be determined. They would also provide tangible evidence of the readiness to build confidence between east and west.

3. Ministers invite interested states to hold exploratory talks on mutual and balanced force reductions in Europe, with special reference to the central region. They agree that in such talks the allies would put forward the following considerations:

(a) mutual force reductions should be compatible with the vital security interests of the alliance and should not operate to the military disadvantage of either side having regard for the differences arising from geographical and other considerations;

(b) reductions should be on a basis of reciprocity, and phased and balanced as to their scope and timing;

(c) reductions should include stationed and indigenous forces and their weapons systems in the area concerned;

(d) there must be adequate verification and controls to ensure the observance of agreements on mutual and balanced force reductions.

4. As a first step ministers requested the Foreign Minister of Italy to transmit this declaration on their behalf through diplomatic channels to all other interested parties, including neutral and non-aligned governments. They further agreed that in the course of their normal bilateral and other contacts member governments would seek to obtain the responses and reactions of other governments. Members of the alliance will consult further regarding the outcome of their soundings with a view to enabling the alliance to determine what further individual or joint exploration might be useful.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 9, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HALES—REMARKS BY PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL CONCERNING CHAIRMAN OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to rise on a question of privilege. It concerns the improper and incorrect remarks made by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), the President of the Privy Council, concerning myself as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the members of that committee. These remarks were made in my absence and I therefore raise the matter at the earliest opportunity available to me. I might say, Your Honour, that I was attending to a very pleasant duty, that of our son's graduation.

The question is whether these remarks constitute a breach of privilege and contempt of the House by the hon. member for Rosedale. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to be Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the third report of that committee is presently on the order paper awaiting concurrence. The House may either concur in the report or reject it.

The hon. member for Rosedale spoke of that report during the debate on the opposition motion yesterday and of myself as chairman of that committee. In part he said, as recorded on page 7864 of Hansard for June 8, 1970:

> The chairman of that committee is a member of the opposition. If the member for Dartmouth-Halifax East is going to censure someone in this regard, he should censure the presiding officer of that committee. I do not intend to do so.

If the minister had stopped there and had said no more I would not have risen on a question of privilege. But he went on to say, and this is what gives rise to the question of privilege:

> I hope other committees of the House will not indulge in the same practice which was condoned by the hon. member for Wellington in allowing an attack on individual public servants.

Your Honour, I did not condone that any more than any other member of that committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: It was a unanimous report presented to the House, and the minister has no right to point his finger at me and say that I condoned that practice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: I believe this is a reflection on the committee and on myself as chairman of that committee. As such it is a breach of the privileges of the House and, specifically, a breach of Standing Order 35.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The precedents are clear and therefore I do not propose to do more than refer Your Honour to pages 123, 124 and 125 of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, seventeenth edition. Among the precedents found to constitute contempt and breaches of privilege are reflections on the character of the Speaker and accusations of partiality in the discharge of his duty, reflections upon the conduct of the chairman of committees, reflections upon the impartiality of the chairman of ways and means, reflection upon the conduct of the chairman of a standing committee. I do not propose to take the time to read all of Standing Order 35 but simply to quote this very important part:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of...nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof. No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

The hon. member for Rosedale, by his words reflected upon the vote of every member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Upon Your Honour ruling that there is a prima facie breach of privilege I shall move, seconded by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid):

> That the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Wellington for having given me notice of his intention to raise this question of privilege. As I pointed out to him, I said quite specifically, last night that I did not intend to reflect upon him in his capacity as chairman of the committee. I am pleased to repeat that in the House. I regret if this matter has caused him any embarrassment. Therefore I make it quite clear that I agree that one should not comment on the conduct of the chairman of a committee. I hope the House will remember that for future circumstances.

I might say, however, that it is entirely within the right of the House and any member of the House to criticize the collective decision of the committee and, whatever the hon. member may say about the decision of the committee generally, I do not think that is a question of privilege. I certainly apologize to him for any reflection upon him personally.

Mr. Baldwin: We will make something of you yet, Don.

Mr. Speaker: Having heard the hon. member for Wellington who raised the matter as a question of privilege and the comments made by the President of the Privy Council, I would think that there might not be too much purpose served by sending this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The hon. member has raised a very good point and the references he has made are quite in order. As the President of the Privy Council has himself pointed out, it is not competent on a member to cast reflections upon the chairman of a standing committee of the House in the performance of his duties. The minister has indicated that that was not his intention, and by his words I think he has satisfied the hon. member for Wellington. I do think that in the circumstances we would not be assisting the House very much in the pursuit of its work if we referred this matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Hales: Sir, I accept the apology of the President of the Privy Council.

POST OFFICE

CONTINUING DISRUPTION OF SERVICE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 26 I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter involving the administrative responsibility of the government and one which requires urgent consideration. The matter is the continuing disruption of the postal service, a situation which is seriously affecting the national economy and the Canadian people.

Mr. MacEwan: And admitted by the Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough has filed with the Chair the notice required under Standing Order 26. The subject proposed for discussion by the hon. member is "the continuing disruption of the postal service". Obviously, in the hon. member's own words the problem posed by him for an emergency debate has been in existence for some time and is a continuing one.

It is hardly necessary to remind hon. members that the postal situation has been the subject of interventions in the House over a prolonged period of time. On February 18 last a motion in the name of the hon. member for Sainte-Marie was allowed for the purpose of discussing the postal dispute in Montreal. This debate ranged far and wide and provided an opportunity for the discussion of difficulties in postal services quite beyond the limits of the dispute in Montreal. Since then the hon. member for Hillsborough has initiated a number of adjournment debates on the subject of the postal services. In that sense it would be hard to rule that we have before us a problem that is of the nature of a new and sudden emergency.

Hon. members will realize that this kind of decision is somewhat difficult to make. We have here a situation which has been continuing for a time. I think I must bring to the attention of hon. members that under the provisions of Standing Order 26 there can be only one debate on the subject. I am not, of course, suggesting that the debate we had in February was on this subject. I agree that it was not. But we must take into account the circumstances as they exist today when the motion is proposed.

My understanding of the situation is that there is to be a resumption of negotiations, and it seems to me that this might not be the ideal day to have the debate which perhaps we will have some day on this difficulty if it continues. As I say, there can be only one debate under Standing Order 26 and if we have one today, as hon. members realize, it would be the last one that we would have on this subject. It is incumbent on the Chair to choose the most appropriate day for such a debate. The time and day on which we have such a debate must be the most conducive to the submission of constructive suggestions on the part of hon. members in respect of the matter on which the debate would be held.

In the circumstances as they exist today, taking into account all the conditions and taking into account the requirements of the Standing Order and precedents, I would not think that this would be the ideal time to put to the House the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hillsborough.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—IMPOSITION OF WAGE AND/OR PRICE CONTROLS—APPLICATION OF SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE TO POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is actively considering the imposition of wage and/or price controls at the present time? I direct this question to the Prime Minister because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is reported to have said in Montreal yesterday that this matter is actually being studied and that an announcement is to be expected within a few days.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my office has been in communication with the minister, who I see is in the House now, but this is not government policy, nor did the minister announce it in the terms which are quoted by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Minister of Finance, who I suppose is the expert on the existing guideline policy of the government, whether the guideline policy of the federal government limiting wage increases to 6 per cent applies to the wages and salaries of the Post Office employees which are now under negotiation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government, having accepted these guidelines, will have to take cognizance of them in its settlements with its own employees.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that there is no guideline policy in effect?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the opposite of what I said. I said that the government, having accepted these guidelines, will have to take cognizance of them in dealing with its own employees.

An hon. Member: And what does that mean?

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether this does not mean that in fact there is no collective bargaining, nor room for collective bargaining? Also, does the government intend to proceed directly and impose a limit, in accordance with these guidelines, upon the Post Office employees who are negotiating? In other words, does the government intend to end the pretence that there is actually collective bargaining going on?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is not a pretence that there is collective bargaining. There is bargaining going on at this very moment, or there will be very shortly, in respect of a number of issues as well as the one of the so-called pay package. I think the government recognizes and I am sure the Council of Postal Unions will recognize that there is greater freedom to bargain in certain areas than in others. In the matter of the pay package there is very little freedom.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister to clarify the statement he made a moment ago in view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, according to this morning's Montreal Gazette, made two statements. First, he said that an announcement will be forthcoming in a few days. Second, when asked whether the government was preparing price and wage controls the minister said:

> I believe this is what they are working on in Ottawa at the moment.

The Prime Minister said that the minister was not correctly quoted. Are both statements incorrect? I ask the Prime Minister specifically whether the government is working on mandatory wage and price controls, and will an announcement be made in the course of a few days, as suggested by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition that it was not government policy and that we were not working on mandatory wage and price controls. I indicated that communications which my office had with the minister disclosed that he was not properly quoted in the context of what he said. The minister may want to explain to the House that he did not say it in those terms.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to allow the minister to accept the invitation of the Prime Minister. Will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell the House what he did say? In view of the confusing statements made by ministers in recent days, could we have this statement clarified?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to allow the minister to make a statement on a statement that was made outside the House, except on a point of order or alleged question of privilege. It has been a long-standing practice in the House that questions can only be directed to the Prime Minister on whether a statement made outside the House represents government policy. I suggest this rule should be enforced even today.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Can the minister tell the House whether the government is making a study of mandatory price and wage controls, and does he expect an announcement to be made in the course of the next few days?

Mr. Speaker: The question can be asked of the minister only to the extent that it is within his own administrative responsibility. I agree this can be embarrassing, but I do not think the question can be asked in those terms.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The confusion is only normal. Now that the President of the Treasury Board has indicated that the guideline on the postal negotiations in terms of salaries is 6 per cent, is this guideline also going to be applied to other collective bargaining negotiations in which the government of Canada may be involved in the course of the next few months?

Mr. Drury: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question to the President of the Treasury Board is supplementary to an earlier question. In view of the urgent public appeal made by the Postmaster General for an early settlement of the postal dispute, will the government make a reasonable offer to the postal employees, one that might be counted on to bring about an early settlement?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We shall be reiterating what I think is a very reasonable offer again this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister make not just the same old offer but a reasonable one?

Mr. Drury: We have, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Now that the government has established wage guidelines applicable to the postal employees, does the President of the Treasury Board, in the hope that a settlement of the postal dispute will be reached, intend to impose any communications guidelines on the Minister of Communications, or will that minister continue to make spontaneous speeches and discourses on the negotiations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INFLATION—SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE—INCREASE IN DIVIDEND PAYMENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance who has just assured the House that the 6 per cent limitation on wage increases for civil servants is now applicable. Is the government taking cognizance of the fact that figures just issued show an increase in the dividends of banks and financial institutions amounting to some 30 per cent for the first six months of this year, 14 per cent by mines and 8½ per cent generally for all dividend payments? Is the minister taking similar action with respect to this large increase in dividends inasmuch as he is imposing a 6 per cent limitation on civil servants?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The figures published recently also show that profits were down by 3.8 per cent in the first quarter. With regard to the figures of banks and other commercial institutions which have made an agreement with respect to guidelines, I would expect that Dr. Young would see that they are living up to their undertakings in that regard.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In light of the statement the minister made yesterday, as reported at page 7839, to the effect that the banks have made an agreement with respect to restricting their profits, may I ask the minister if it is not correct that the only restriction is that they should keep the spread between deposit interest rates and lending interest rates at a constant ratio, and that there is no restriction in the agreement with respect to bank profits?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

INFLATION—IMPOSITION OF MANDATORY PRICE CONTROLS ON INDUSTRIES

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): My question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Are the officials of his department working on plans for the imposition of mandatory price controls on the industries of this country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The answer given by the Prime Minister applied to the whole government. With reference to what I said in Montreal, this is a clear case of amplification without justification.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I was referring to the discussion which had gone on in Winnipeg. It may be that by a slip of the tongue I said "Ottawa" instead of Winnipeg, but it is amazing that this was the only reporter who placed that interpretation on what I said.

FINANCE

RETURN TO FIXED DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Have the banks brought pressure to bear on the government for Canada's return to a fixed exchange rate as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): There was a question raised yesterday as to whether the Bank for International Settlements had brought pressure to bear on Canada with regard to a fixed exchange rate. I was in contact with the governor of the Bank of Canada whose representative was at those meetings, and such is not the case.

EFFECT OF ANTICIPATED INFLATIONARY PRESSURE ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Since the government professes to believe that the action it has taken will curtail inflation, what steps is the government taking to eliminate at least that portion of increased interest rates which is caused by anticipated inflationary pressure generally?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I believe interest rates have gone down. As a matter of fact, one of the chartered banks announced a reduction in its prime rate yesterday. There are also indications that our anti-inflation policy is having some effect. Figures published as of now will show a decline in the cost of living in the last month.

INFLATION—INDEPENDENCE OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ROLL BACK PRICES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. It refers to the minister's statement yesterday that the Prices and Incomes Commission is independent of the government. Can the minister reconcile that statement with the claims of his colleague that action by the government has resulted in the Prices and Incomes Commission effecting some price rollbacks in certain products and services?

Mr. Speaker: I cannot accept the question because it is asked in the form of an argument and I do not believe it is acceptable from the standpoint of procedure.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I put it this way, then? Is it possible to ask the minister to reconcile a position he took with another fact?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member and to the minister that when a minister is asked to reconcile one statement with another it becomes a debate or an argument.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN PUBLIC HOUSING RENTS AT HAY RIVER

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising from a question I asked in the House on May 27 which was responded to at the time by the Parliamentary Secretary in the absence of the minister. On that occasion I asked whether the minister would investigate what appeared to be a scandalous situation at Hay River in the Northwest Territories resulting from an increase in rent charged old aged pensioners in public housing projects from $69 to $109 a month. Could the minister indicate to the House whether an investigation of this matter has been made, and can he announce the results to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the problem does not come directly under my jurisdiction, but rather under that of the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I passed the hon. member's question on to him, and he indicated that he would reply personally in the House. I believe he is not in Ottawa today.

[English]

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

AGREEMENT ON TERMS OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. Now that the western supporters of the government have decided to support the proposals of this party for greater freedom of action and participation in voting in the House and less of the mailed first treatment, would the Government House Leader not support the terms of reference to the Committee on Procedure and Organization that we suggested, and bring them forward so that they will be in effect by next session?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the principles of his party to which the hon. member refers relate to the question of whether the hon. member for Halifax or the right hon. member for Prince Albert is leader of that party, and I think that is a question they should solve themselves.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question that I will address to the Prime Minister since the contrite mood of the President of the Privy Council has not carried forward to the question period. Would the Prime Minister make a statement in connection with the alleged resignation of seven ministerial assistants because of the autocratic rule of the Prime Minister? If that is not correct, would the Prime Minister deny the first part of the question? The second part, of course, is undeniable.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly look into the matter. Could I have the reference that the hon. member was reading from?

Mr. Baldwin: I wrote it myself.

Mr. Trudeau: I thought it was a product of your research staff.

POLLUTION

OIL PIPELINE SPILLAGE NEAR FORT McMURRAY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it relates to pollution in the north. Would the minister investigate the destruction caused in the area of Fort McMurray by an oil pipeline burst spilling a large quantity of oil into the Athabasca River, which leads to Lake Athabasca and hence into the Mackenzie delta?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are investigating this matter and I will be glad to report to the hon. member as soon as I have a report from my department and the National Energy Board.

Mr. Woolliams: When the minister is having this situation investigated, would he be prepared to send government experts into the area to examine this problem with the idea of using the experience that may result from this destructive leakage in the pipeline and its effect on the ecology in the north?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that suggestion.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF PROPOSALS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister still hold to the timetable that the implementation of the tax changes proposed in the white paper must be completed by January 1, 1971?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said from the beginning that although that was the target date we were completely flexible about it. We wanted everybody to have the opportunity of being heard and to have ample time to draw good legislation when people have been heard.

COMMUNICATIONS

GRANT TO INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS MACHINES TO BUILD ELECTRONIC COMPONENT MANUFACTURING PLANT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. In view of the minister's expressed interest in the development of a Canadian controlled computer and communications industry, would the minister inform the House whether he was consulted by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion prior to his announcement of a $6 million grant to International Business Machines Corporation to build an electronic component manufacturing plant in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is not in order. It might be in order for the Order Paper; perhaps the hon. member would consider putting the question in writing on the Order Paper.

POLLUTION

OTTAWA RIVER—ACTION UNDER CANADA WATER ACT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now that Parliament has passed the Canada Water Act, which gives the government all the power it needs to deal with pollution, would the minister take the next opportunity on motions to outline what steps he and his department plan to take to clear up the massive pollution that one can see simply by looking at the Ottawa River from the back of the Parliament Buildings, pollution that is caused by industry dumping pollutants into that once clear body of water?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that suggestion, but for the hon. member's information there is another part to Parliament, the Senate, which has not yet passed the bill.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have I the assurance of the minister that as soon as that august body passes the bill his department will get on with the job?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is hypothetical.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MIRAMICHI RIVER—PRESENCE OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES—PAYMENT FOR DAMAGE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry on June 4 in the House that the department has already spent $500,000 to control toxicity from plant waste of Heath Steel Mines spilled into the Miramichi River, would the minister give the most recent figures on the amounts spent by the government in this area and inform the House whether the efforts of his department to clean up this pollution are having any effect?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since the first question seeks detailed information I think it is the kind of question that should normally be placed on the Order Paper; I think the hon. member will agree with that.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I might put as my first question. Since the spillage of acids into the Miramichi was due to a construction fault in the piping of a private firm, is this firm going to pay for all the damage caused to the ecology and fisheries resources as well as for cleaning up the area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I certainly hope so, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS—FUTURE DEVELOPMENT—HOLDING OF HEARINGS AT INGONISH

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the large-scale protestations from the local residents concerned in regard to the hearings on June 24 with reference to the future development of Cape Breton Highlands National Park, would the minister give consideration not only to holding hearings at Sydney but also at Ingonish in Victoria county, where the local residents would be most affected by any proposed changes?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will see if it is possible. It has been decided that the hearings would be held in Sydney, and I think it is easy enough for people to get to that city. However, if it is absolutely impossible for them to do so, perhaps we can arrange for a hearing on the site. Nevertheless, I would prefer the hearings to be held on neutral grounds such as the city of Sydney.

SHIPPING

WEST COAST TOWBOATS—MANNING AND SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Since there has apparently been agreement between the parties involved regarding new proposals for manning and safety in the British Columbia towboat industry, is the minister planning to make these proposals public, as he indicated earlier?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I expect to do that tomorrow.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION IN APPLICATION OF SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Having stated yesterday that the government supported the move of the Prices and Incomes Commission to set a limit of 6 per cent per year on wage increases and that the provinces have recognized the merits of that principle, can the minister tell us how the federal government intends to enforce that wage freeze if the provincial governments refuse to deal severely with those who will grant higher wage increases, as the Ontario government is doing at the present time?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any of the provincial governments have refused to co-operate with the wage guidelines policy put forward by Dr. Young.

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—IMPLEMENTATION OF BARBER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would he make a statement on motions some time before the House recesses on June 26 indicating what progress the government has made with respect to the implementation of the various recommendations of the Barber Commission report in connection with high farm machinery costs and the escalating prices of farm machinery repairs?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): As I have pointed out on a number of occasions, the final report of the Barber Commission has not yet been submitted, and part of it will include an inquiry into the costs of both repair parts and services. Inasmuch as we have not received it yet—and I am not sure we will receive it by the end of this session—it would be difficult for me to give an undertaking that I would make a statement on the matter.

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the 40 per cent decline in the construction industry this year, an industry which could provide many jobs, is the government considering the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Speaker: This question was asked yesterday. Unless there is a change since yesterday, I would not think the question would be in order today.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps I could phrase my question in this way: has the Minister of Finance carried out any studies weighing the benefits of having people earning salaries subject to income tax against the disadvantages of having an industry in a slump and not able to pay the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question in its new form seems to be rather argumentative, but the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we continuously look at what is happening in the economy. I should like to indicate, as I did yesterday, that if the government makes a change in its fiscal policy with respect to tax rates this would be announced in the House.

AIRPORTS

REDUCTION OF STOPOVER CHARGES AT CERTAIN POINTS—APPLICATION TO EDMONTON AND HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Could the minister indicate, in light of his announcement of greatly reduced technical stopover charges on flights in and out of Goose Bay, Gander and Ottawa, whether or not similar surveys are being conducted at the Edmonton and Halifax international airports?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the study is comprehensive in its nature. These were the ones in which the airlines indicated they had their greatest interest. But I may also inform the hon. member that arrangements were completed today to spend about $1 million on the Halifax airport for additional baggage checking facilities and for paving the second runway so it will be ready for this kind of thing if it comes.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, while the minister is being very eloquent with regard to what he is doing in Halifax, would he also see to it that Air Canada comes up with a few extra flights for Edmonton?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, one each for myself and the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTENSION OF GANDER RUNWAYS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of Transport whether there are any immediate plans to extend the runways at Gander beyond the present 8,900 feet which does not permit the handling of large international traffic?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that this is a question which would normally appear on the Order Paper.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that St. Scholastique and Toronto are perhaps of greater importance in the international sphere, but certainly this question deserves an answer. It is an urgent matter for the east coast of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I have no doubt that it is urgent and in view of the hon. member's comments it could be considered at the time of adjournment. That is the purpose of the Standing Order.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—PROPERTY TAX INCREASE IN MUNICIPALITY OF GLOUCESTER—REQUEST THAT MINISTER ATTEND MEETING

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): In view of the anticipated 25 per cent increase in property taxes in the Municipality of Gloucester, I wonder whether the minister along with Dr. Young will attend the meeting there tonight to explain to those people the 6 per cent guideline for restraint?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): There is nothing I would rather do than be there but it is physically impossible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT FOR DISPLACED CANADAIR WORKERS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

We have heard that 2,700 Canadair workers in Montreal will soon be laid off. If the minister is aware of this situation, could he tell us if he has taken the necessary measures to provide jobs for these 2,700 people, or if he and his colleagues will make representations to foreign countries in order to negotiate aircraft construction contracts so as to neutralize the effects of this massive lay off?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this question was asked a few days ago, roughly in the same terms.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, would the minister say if he answered the question that was asked a few days ago?

Mr. Speaker: I believe an answer was given. Of course, I am not sure whether, in his mind, the hon. member was satisfied with the answer, but indeed the question has been asked.

HARBOURS

COME-BY-CHANCE, NFLD.—BENEFITS TO PROVINCE UNDER FEDERAL AGREEMENT TO BUILD WHARF

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a recent statement by an official of his department to the effect that the federal government agreement to build a $16 million wharf to serve the planned refinery at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, is contingent on certain additional benefits guaranteeing more revenue for the province of Newfoundland and, if so, what are the additional benefits?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that this question could be placed on the Order Paper. Again, if there is urgency I will not fail to ensure that it receives priority if the hon. member wants to have it considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Carter: The question is of very great importance to the province of Newfoundland because this refinery plays a very great part in the future economic prospects of that province and the future sources of employment. I think the minister was prepared to answer the question with your permission, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to withdraw from the position I adopted a moment ago, but perhaps with agreement the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would call the hon. member's attention to your own ruling that a minister can only answer within the competence of his own department. I suggest that the question be directed to the Minister of Public Works when he is next in the House.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBLE NATIONAL STRIKE—ADJUSTMENT OF GOVERNMENT OFFER IN ORDER TO SETTLE DISPUTE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of a report that has been made public, since we were asking questions about the postal situation 10 or 15 minutes ago, to the effect that the negotiating team for the postal workers intends to stay in the bargaining room until a settlement is reached, will the government reconsider its position and make the kind of offer that might get this matter settled?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The government side is also prepared to stay.

FINANCE

INCREASED EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question relating to the increase in equalization payments to the provinces of approximately $50 million during the current year which he announced over the weekend and to which he referred in the House yesterday. Does that include equalization payments to the province of Quebec?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it covers all provinces receiving equalization payments. I do not have the breakdown in front of me. I believe my officials are in touch with the various provinces to indicate their calculations at present, and it is hoped that a final figure will be worked out very soon. As my hon. friend knows, statistics are continuously coming in with respect to equalization.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Finance seems to have this matter somewhat on his conscience. Would he make available to us the statistical calculations upon which his figure is based?

Mr. Benson: I will take this up with officials in my department. As my hon. friend knows, having formerly been a premier, it is a very complicated calculation but I will provide him with information as soon as the final figures are calculated.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister not agree that when he gives a figure to the House it should be one that he is able to support with existing statistical information?

Mr. Benson: Based on our present estimates the figure is correct and we think it will be in the area I indicated to the provinces. The additional money that is going to the provinces is not on my conscience. I think they really need it.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—USE OF CERTAIN FACTORS AS JUSTIFICATION FOR WITHDRAWAL OR REVISION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance to the one asked earlier by the member for Dauphin about the timetable for implementation of the white paper on tax reform. Regardless of any basic objections to the white paper that come from this side of the House or from other Canadians, is it not a fact that the unpegging of the dollar, the shaky stock market and provincial objections are going to be used as reasons for the federal government to withdraw in total or revise in part the proposals in the white paper before the committee reports?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since the white paper was issued I have continuously said that we want submissions from all interested parties. Submissions are coming in, and of course they will receive consideration.

Mr. Nowlan: That really was not my question. You have got all the submissions you can handle, in fact more than the committee can handle because it has imposed a time limit. My question was, are the factors of the unpegging of the dollar, the shaky stock market, and the recent provincial objections on top of all the other objections going to be used by the government as reasons to withdraw in toto or revise in part the proposals before the committee reports?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the proposals are before the committee. I have said that there will be revisions. I will be appearing before the committee before it finishes its work, and I will be indicating our feelings with respect to various matters to the committee, to aid its members in coming to a conclusion. I do not think any of the factors the hon. member mentioned should argue against developing a tax system which is fair and equitable in Canada.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since a number of members of the Quebec Assembly have hesitated a long time to take the oath of allegiance to the Queen and since the premier of Quebec has stated that the matter of changing this tradition would be discussed during this session, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has discussed this matter with the premier of Quebec or if the federal government has any objections to changing this tradition?

Mr. Speaker: I fail to see in what way this question comes under the administrative jurisdiction of this government or even that of the Prime Minister, but he may wish to answer the hon. member's question.

[English]

ELECTIONS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY REFORM OF EXPENSE SYSTEM

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. Are steps being taken to constitute the special committee to study reform of the election expenses system as recommended by the Barbeau committee?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had put forward for comment and suggestion a draft order of reference to be made by the House, and I must confess I have not had an opportunity to consult back on it. I understand there were some objections to it, but I hope to consult within the next day or two so that notice can be given of it and it can be placed on the Order Paper.

NATIONAL PARKS

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Could he indicate what progress is being made and when he expects an agreement to be signed between the province of Newfoundland and his department with the regard to the estabalishment of the Bonne Bay park in western Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the federal government's position is still the same, and we are prepared to sign an agreement with the government of Newfoundland for the development of a second national park. On the other hand, we must wait until that province has set the boundaries of the land to be used for that purpose before we may enter into the agreement.

We hope that the agreement will be finalized within a few months.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REINSTATEMENT OF SUGAR REBATE TO CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question was to have been directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs but since he is not in the House may I direct this timely question to the Prime Minister. Would he please state to the House whether his government plans to reinstate the sugar rebate to the Caribbean?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To reinstate what?

Mr. Paproski: To reinstate the rebate on sugar to the Caribbean.

Mr. Trudeau: I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: Would the Prime Minister please see if he can sweeten up the pot a little?

COMMUNICATIONS

INTERFERENCE AND OVERLAPPING ON SHORT-WAVE RADIO BANDS

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has his department received representations regarding the allocation and policing of shortwave radio bands used for intercommunication by police, industry and Great Lakes ships?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will have to make some inquiries, Mr. Speaker. I do not know of my own personal knowledge.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): While the minister is looking into this, would he also ascertain what steps are being taken to rectify the considerable problem of interference and overlapping on these radio bands?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBLE NATIONAL STRIKE—COMPONENTS OF SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether or not the 6 per cent guideline as imposed or as applied in connection with negotiations in the Post Office includes a calculation of what are normally considered to be fringe benefits? In other words, does the 6 per cent increase include a calculation of the monetary value of fringe benefits in addition to any wage increase, or is it simply the wage or salary increase?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion mady by Dr. Young was that the 6 per cent figure should include all wage and monetary fringe benefits.

AIR TRANSPORT

ROUTES GRANTED TO TRANSAIR—REVIEW OF DECISION BY CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. On April 14 he indicated he had received three appeals concerning the granting of a franchise to Transair for routes from Toronto to Winnipeg via Sault Ste. Marie. What action has he taken with regard to these appeals, has he reached any decision, and if there are documents available would he be prepared to table them?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a judgment was issued last week in the normal course. I understand it is not normal to table such documents in the House although I would be glad to do that. The gist of them was an instruction to the CTC to review the matter and hold public hearings by September or certainly prior to the start of the fall schedule of the airlines concerned.

TRANSPORT

MARITIME PROVINCES—PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and is a follow-up to a question asked him on May 22 with reference to the publication of the first report of the federal-provincial committee on transportation in the Maritimes. Has the minister had a chance to consult his provincial counterparts? If so, has he had their clearance and when may we expect publication of this report?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I made inquiries of the provinces. I am not sure whether all of the answers are back, but I think the gist of the report has already been made public. I held meetings with the trucking association in the Atlantic provinces last week and they made some proposals to us relating to the recommendations in this report and they are being examined. I will look into the matter still further and if there is any impediment to releasing the report I will be glad to look into that so that my hon. friend can have it.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Is the committee still meeting and, if so, has the minister been in consultation with reference to further recommendations coming from them?

Mr. Jamieson: The committee is still meeting with regard to the proposals they have already advanced to us. They are discussing those with us. It is my intention to invite the provinces and incidentally, to add the province of Quebec, to maintain this as an ongoing committee. I hope they will accept.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT FOR DISPLACED CANADAIR WORKERS —NOTICE OF MASS LAY-OFFS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to orders of the day, I think that the hon. member for Charlevoix is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Asselin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As you said a moment ago, my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning Canadair has actually been directed to the Minister of Labour who referred it to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, as reported at page 7680 of Hansard.

I asked that question in order to determine what the minister and the government intend to do in order to prevent the forthcoming lay-off of many workers at Canadair, as a result of a lack of work.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I would want to tell him my officers have been in touch with this situation for some time. They have made available for services of the department to the workers to be affected. If there are any further details I will be happy to look at the record and advise the hon. member later.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the minister be prepared to ask his officials to check whether the province will enforce his legislation so that every employer who wishes to make mass lay-offs has to give a 90-day notice? In other words, will the officials of his department check whether that notice has been given to the province by Canadair?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to inquire and advise the hon. member of the notice that has been given about these proposed lay-offs.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, moved first reading yesterday of a bill to amend terms and conditions of the Criminal Code as it relates to bail, and he has given quite a news release on it. We have not yet received the bill. It would seem to me, when the minister gives out these public statements, that surely the opposition and all Members of Parliament—it is really a question of privilege—should at least have the bill to be able to examine the terms and conditions to see if what the minister had to say was pure windowdressing or represented real amendments.

Mr. Speaker: I will look into the matter raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. I have no information on whether the bill is available for distribution. Obviously it should be. The proper steps will be taken to give effect to the hon. member's suggestion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPOSIT OF WASTE, PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS OF WORKS, SHIPPING SAFETY CONTROL ZONES, ETC.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-202, to prevent pollution of areas of the Arctic waters adjacent to the mainland and islands of the Canadian Arctic, be now read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to make some comments now, and later to move an amendment which has already been moved at the report stage but which Your Honour felt would be better moved at third reading. I make these comments because of the unavoidable absence of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), who has done such a notable and yeoman service to this House and the country by his contributions on this subject both in the House and in committee.

It is not my intention to delay this bill since it is designed to prevent pollution of the Arctic waters adjacent to the mainland and the islands of the Canadian Arctic. We unanimously recorded our vote in support of this bill in April. I should like to think that was a great day for Canada, a day when Canadians stood together and in effect said to the rest of the world, "We are not satisfied that international law can safeguard the delicate ecology of the north, and until it can and does we have to take affairs into our own hands".

In recent times in this House and outside we have heard the Post Office described as a sleeping giant, though possibly the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) may not wish to make that comment at the present time. We have heard the Arctic described as a sleeping giant, and I might as well go on record as saying that the world is a sleeping giant when it comes to the question of pollution. But when even this government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can rub the sleep out of their eyes, then perhaps in the refreshing dawn of enlightenment the world can take encouragement that people everywhere will be sufficiently roused so that in the future countries like Canada will not be forced to take the law into their own hands to deal with pollution. This is what Canada is doing now in this bill.

It is unfortunate that we have been forced into this action. I hope that our concern will act as an example to the rest of the world, and that man may soon cry for a halt in his race to self-destruction through pollution and environmental breakdown. I believe, as do other members of our party, that our legislation respecting pollution is a patchwork and crazy quilt effort. Because of this it is desirable, indeed imperative, to bring all efforts and measures to combat pollution under the coordination of one department or agency which, in keeping with the governmental language of the 1970's could be called Environment Canada.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

This piece of legislation, Bill C-202, originated with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have other legislation involving the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, the Department of Transport as well as other departments that wish to get into the act. There are too many holes in Canada's antipollution net and I, for one, do not wish to be shunted from one minister to another minister, from one department to another department and from one bureaucrat to another bureaucrat, to find out who is doing what, when and how to control and combat the pollution menace. I wish to see one minister responsible, one department involved. I wish to know that our questions may be directed to him and that the concern of the people of Canada may be made known to that minister and his department or agency.

The world has reached a stage when scientists question our very future and predict possible environmental breakdown. This stage has been reached because there has been no global vision; even now it may be too late, but I believe we must project ourselves into the future if only to build our defences against any possible catastrophe that may eventually overtake all of us.

We have discussed at length the sovereignty issue. The history of events in this House, and statements made by the Prime Minister and others outside the House, indicate beyond the shadow of a doubt that the government has been and is reluctant to make any clear, unequivocal statement regarding Canada's traditional claims to possession of the lands, waters and ice of the Arctic. I do not understand why there needs to be or why there should be such a mental block. I do not understand why even the Prime Minister, in announcing this piece of legislation, found it necessary to say, and I quote:

> This is the first bit of legislation—it is not an assertion of sovereignty, it is an exercise of our desire to keep the Arctic free of pollution and by defining 100 miles as the zone within which we are determined to act, we are indicating that our assertion there is not one aimed toward sovereignty but aimed toward one of the very important aspects of our action in the Arctic.

My hope is that the government will make a strong statement on the Arctic sovereignty issue. Perhaps it has that in mind and that was the reason the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) made his statement in this House on April 16. I shall refer to this later when I put my amendment before the House. We did have this alternative, Mr. Speaker. Leading statesmen of this country, prime ministers and ministers charged with departmental responsibility have, over a period of 80 years or more, made statements which indicate beyond any possible doubt that this country does have sovereignty, within the meaning of the word, over the islands, the waters and the ice of the Arctic.

I should like to think, Mr. Speaker, that far more good could have come about, not from legislation in this form with its complexities, its hesitations, and its refusal to make clearly and certainly the claims which have been asserted, but from the simple reassertion of our claim. It was more than a year ago that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), myself and hon. members from the New Democratic Party began to press the government and the Prime Minister to make this clear, simple reassertion, that we continue to claim what we have always claimed in the past.

I should like to think that if the government had brought a joint resolution reasserting that fact into this House and the other place over a year ago, it would have had the unanimous support of this House and the other place as well as the citizens of Canada. At that time, when it was so very important, the government would have been able to present to the United States and other countries involved, the fact that Canadians stood together in reasserting their claim to uninhibited an unlimited sovereignty over the islands of the Arctic, the waters between the islands and the waters between the mainland and the islands.

I think that simple declaration, passed as it would have been without hindrance or objection in this House, would have been a most impressive document so far as the world is concerned instead of this miserable, puling attitude which the government has taken. We supported the legislation because we had no other choice, and because we had no other opportunity to assert in legislative form what we thought ought to have been brought forward. But I venture to say that if our ideas had been accepted, this country would have had a much more potent weapon with which to approach international negotiations.

Despite what has been said, and I will not traverse ground that has been gone over before because these matters have been debated in the House and in committee as well as throughout the country, we do not know what the government's position is with regard to certain of the waters between and around the Archipelago in the Arctic. Does it have a claim with regard to territorial sovereignty? Does it assert that claim because these waters are part of the maritime belt and constitute the territorial waters of Canada? Does the legislation claim that these are the internal waters of Canada or must we assume, from a certain vagueness of attitude, that there is a considerable vacuum with regard to certain of these waters.

Let me make it plain that more is involved than the mere question of waters, important though the question of waters is. The 1958 convention at Geneva, a convention to which this country is not a signatory, involved very important issues. If these are territorial waters, there is one position to be taken; if they are internal waters, there is another position to be taken. What about the passage of nuclear submarines, whether on the surface or under the waters of the Arctic? If these are internal waters, no foreign submarine may go through the waters because the sovereignty of Canada over these internal waters will clearly permit Canada to prevent passage of such submarines. If they are territorial waters, then there is a limited right on the part of Canada, as there is on the part of any coastal state, to say that there may be innocent passage only. Innocent passage has been defined as relating not to the character of the vessel but to the character of the passage. The same thing applies to the air above the waters. If they are territorial waters, there are certain rights which the coastal state may exercise.

It is all very well, for example, for the United States to make allegations, as it did recently in this controversy, about the high seas and the rights of nations. I am not being overly critical of the United States, but I can recall that when the United States felt its territorial security was threatened by the establishment of missile bases in Cuba, it did not hesitate for one moment to lay down a rule of quarantine that prohibited the passage of vessels of a country with which the United States was not at war through certain waters which can only be characterized as being part of the high seas. I do not criticize the United States. It felt its security was threatened. But I think it is somewhat hypocritical of the United States now to challenge not only the very limited nature of this bill but all that has been done to establish the unchallengeable supremacy of our sovereignty in the area. This is very important. Consequently, the bill leaves more questions unanswered than are answered.

The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, an all party committee, brought down one of the finest reports that the House has seen during the present session. It went north to study the situation, heard witnesses and heard legal opinions. It established beyond doubt something that all Canadians know: that Canada now has and always has had sovereignty in the area, a sovereignty established by every possible test of occupation and usage. We have provided services for the people. Also, since that area is contiguous to and part of the continental shelf of North America, it belongs to that part of North America which constitutes the closest national state. I submit that international law says that our sovereignty cannot be challenged. Former Prime Minister Lester Pearson, an expert in his own right in international affairs, made this categorical assertion in Edmonton a few months ago.

The purport of our amendment is clear. I think the government would have been much more successful if it had not attempted to be so devious. I think the present course was forced on the Prime Minister and the government because they waited too long. They were too timorous. Only when they were finally goaded into acting did they come forward with this legislation. If the government had brought forward a resolution one year ago asserting our claim to sovereignty in the area, we could have avoided the problems that I envisage will haunt us.

I like to think that this country will gain and hold the respect of others; that it will become a leader of nations by setting an example that the use of force is not necessary, and in this way more and more people in the world will live in peace and in harmony with one another. I think the ultimate settlement of this problem must be through an international conference, a conference of the nations which are involved in the Arctic particularly, but which would not exclude other nations. Because of what has happened and is happening in the Arctic, special and unique problems have arisen.

I know that discussions are going on with regard to meetings, but I do not know how far they have progressed. I think that the Soviet Union, the United States, the Scandinavian countries, including Iceland, and this country must necessarily be parties to such conference. I do not think we ought to exclude other parties, because the future promises great things as a result of a co-operative method of developing and using the north. I should like to bring something to the minister's attention. Perhaps he could comment on it when he participates in the debate. Beginning on June 28, there is to be a conference in Malta under the chairmanship of Mrs. Elisabeth Mann Borgese, the daughter of the famous novelist Thomas Mann, entitled "Pacem in Maribus". It is not a conference which, as I understand it, is being sponsored by nations; it is being sponsored by individuals, which I think will be very useful. It will clarify certain complex matters relating to the oceans. If ever there was an important matter to which the public's attention ought to be directed, I submit that this is it. The conference hopes to establish some kind of continuing body which may feed information to the United Nations committee on peaceful uses of the seabed.

I wish to quote from an interesting article which appeared in the June 3 issue of The Christian Science Monitor:

> It is not practical, says Mrs. Borgese, to think of handling these questions separately—for example, to start out with a single problem, such as pollution.
> "A group of nations, of course, could go together on a specific pollution issue," she says, "and every move in this direction is welcome. But if you take the pollution issue as a whole, on a global basis, it divides the developed from the developing nations."
> (The role of the third world, or underdeveloped nations, is the biggest political issue confronting the United Nations seabed committee.)
> "In fact," says Mrs. Borgese, "we don't have a strong East-West ideological division here. The Soviet Union and the United States see eye to eye on the problem. It's really between the developed and the developing nations."

I presume that this country will be represented. If there are no plans for representation now, I hope that steps will be taken to see that we are represented. I do not know whether there is an intention to send a parliamentary delegation. A small group from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development could participate in this meeting. Such participation might have some useful purpose and aid the deliberations of this House.

I do not know what tomorrow holds. Your Honour does not know what tomorrow holds.

In this fast moving world, no one can predict the future. Of course, with this government we know we are going to have inflation in this country for a long time. Forty years ago we did not know that man would be blasting off to the moon in our time, that man would have devastated cities and Pacific islands with nuclear explositions, that man would be communicating via space satellite, that man would be threatening to pollute himself out of existence, that man would be transplanting human hearts, and a hundred and one other marvels and evils we have seen in our time.

How can anyone stand up today and say what will happen in the future? The only certainty, it seems, is that the population of the world will double in approximately 30 years. We know that the problems of today, if not checked or overcome, will be compounded. Beyond that, we cannot even guess. If we look at the vast uncharted space of the Arctic, can we deny with certainty that it will not be used for all the evil intentions of man? Is it too far removed from reality to suggest that it will become the next nuclear testing ground? Will it become the garbage dump for nerve gases and other toxic materials that cannot be allowed within a thousand miles of our cities? Will it be the no man's land of the next war to end all wars?

Will there be a population shift to the Arctic just as there was from Europe and Asia to North America and Australasia? If it is not feasible to bring the resources from the Arctic to the present centres of population, is it not better to move the people north to be near those resources? I am not talking about today, but about the future and no one can say today that these things will not happen. Will the Arctic become ringed with great domed cities where man will survive in a controlled environment? Of course we cannot say what is to happen. But I like to look to Canada as being a country that is to lead the world into the 21st century.

In order that this country may attend international conferences armed with the strongest possible weapons, I propose to move this amendment. It may not conform to all the requirements and rigidities of our present procedures. I propose to quote statements made in this House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). I hope, in light of these statements, that the government will be willing to accept this amendment. When referring to this bill on April 16, 1970, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

> This bill aims at meeting a real and imminent problem and provides for the exercise of a limited form of jurisdiction. This exercise of jurisdiction for the purposes of pollution control can in no way be construed to be inconsistent with a claim of sovereignty over the waters between the islands or otherwise. Similarly, the exercise of sovereignty over an area of the sea extending 12 miles from shore in accordance with the provision embodied in another bill that will shortly be under discussion cannot be said to be inconsistent with a claim to sovereignty beyond 12 miles.

We fear that close and detailed study of this bill has suggested ambiguities and invited doubts. We fear that the principles of the bill might well be inconsistent with the principle that unequivocal and specific sovereignty exists. I do not always agree with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is one of the few occasions when I have accepted his words. I, therefore, move:

> That all the words after "now" be left out and there be substituted therefor the words "re-committed to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development with an instruction to amend the bill by adding thereto, immediately after clause 27 thereof, page 23, the following:
> "Savings
> 28. Nothing in this act shall in any way be construed to be inconsistent with Canada's rightful claim of sovereignty in and over water, ice and land areas of the Arctic regions between the degrees of longitude 60 and longitude 141."
> and by renumbering clause 28 of the bill, page 23, as clause 29.

I like to think that long after we have gone there will be those who will remember this Parliament for having assumed responsibility over the Canadian Arctic, not only for the sake of Canadians but for the world, in the name of responsible development of the north and of humanity everywhere.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the President of the Privy Council rising with reference to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River? The Chair has reservations about the acceptability of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. If this is the purpose of the minister, I wish to hear him.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is on the question of order only, not the question of substance. The point of order was raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Forest), and in a moment he will be referring to the authorities in more detail. The basic point is that the bill does not deal with the question of sovereignty in any sense, but deals with pollution control. The substance of the argument is that the question of territorial sovereignty does not arise in any way in the bill. Therefore, the subject matter is beyond the bill and for that purpose the amendment is not relevant. I wish to emphasize that the bill, as the House knows, among other things gives the government control of shipping within a distance of 100 miles of the Canadian territorial waters. By that provision alone, it should be evident that the question of sovereignty is not raised in this bill.

It is purely a question of pollution control jurisdiction. The bill does not say that Canada claims sovereignty over an area of the high seas a hundred miles beyond Canadian territorial waters. The government would make it clear that, in taking a position against the acceptability of the amendment, on procedural grounds it is taking no position with respect to the various arguments the hon. member put forward on the question of sovereignty. This is an important question. The hon. member seems to think that the protection of the Arctic would be brought about by a simple resolution of both Houses of Parliament. The government takes a different view, believing that pollution can best be prevented and controlled in Arctic waters by a bill of the kind now before the House creating an administrative regime and providing for criminal penalties. The position we take on the amendment is that not only would it delay the passage of the bill but that it would go beyond the scope of the bill as adopted on second reading, and we therefore submit it should not be accepted. My colleague the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Forest) will be elaborating on this point and referring to the authorities.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not propose at this stage to go into all the technical aspects of the amendment. I simply appeal to the minister, and to the minister piloting the bill through the House, to take into consideration the fact that this amendment does not purport to assert any claim to sovereignty over and above that which Canada already asserts. It is simply a saving clause. If I may use an expression common in the legal profession, it is one which makes it clear that the bill is without prejudice to the maintenance of those claims which Canada has, in the past, asserted. It is advanced in the honest belief that if you have a valid and reasonable claim and you fail to re-assert that claim in any document or deed relating to it, you might be held to have repudiated what you had claimed in the past. All the amendment purports to do is to say that no language or proposals in the bill shall be deemed to constitute by Canada an abandonment of claims which have been made in the past. If the government cannot accept this simple amendment, I have no great hope for what they intend to do in our north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with the acceptability of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and which is very much similar to the one which the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) introduced Wednesday last, at the report stage. The Chair then expressed some reservations on the acceptability of the amendment.

Contrary to what the hon. member for Peace River said a while ago, I do not believe that the amendment is more in order on third reading than at the report stage. The hon. member for Oxford appreciated it, I believe, when he withdrew his amendment. However, another attempt is now being made on third reading.

Wednesday last, that is on June 3, some hon. members started building up procedural arguments and I simply wish to complete the list of the recognized authorities on amendments, particularly those introduced on third reading. I should like, for instance, to refer the Chair to pages 571 and 572 of May's Parliamentary Practice, and I quote:

[English]

The procedure on the third reading of a bill is similar to that described in relation to the second reading, but the debate is more restricted at the later stage, being limited to the matters contained in the bill.

[Translation]

I skip a few sentences to come to the end of the citation. I quote:

[English]

As the debate on third reading should be confined to the contents of the bill reasoned amendments which raise matters not included, in the provisions of the bill are not permissible.

[Translation]

I shall not read the summary of that question in full but only two paragraphs of Beau-chesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 4th edition. I should like to quote paragraphs 1 and 3 of citation 203 which read as follows:

It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the House the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

And I now quote paragraph 3:

An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved.

I shall quote now citation 406 which sums up the rules regarding amendments to public bills:

Amendments are out of order if they are

(a) irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope, governed by or dependant upon amendments already negatived;

I shall quote now citation 418:

All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

I do not want to extend my remarks any longer. I think that the Chair is well aware of the rules of procedure about amendments to bills on third reading. Now, it seems obvious to me that the amendment, as introduced, brings in a new element. It raises the issue of sovereignty in a bill dealing with pollution and the means which the government may use, under this legislation, in order to prevent pollution in Arctic waters. Therefore, it is not consistent with the aims of the bill now before us.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has proposed to the House by way of amendment to the motion for third reading of Bill C-202, now before the House, the following motion:

That all the words after "now" be left out and there be substituted therefor the words "re-committed to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development with an instruction to amend the bill by adding thereto, immediately after clause 27 thereof, page 23, the following:

28. Nothing in this act shall in any way be construed to be inconsistent with Canada's rightful claim to sovereignty in and over water, ice and land areas of the Arctic regions between the degrees of longitude 60 and longitude 141.

The arguments put forward by the hon. member in support of the acceptability of his motion are interesting, but I have some doubt as to whether it would be in order for the Chair to accept them. According to my understanding, the hon. member has proposed by way of amendment a motion instructing the committee to insert a declaration of principle asserting Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic. He indicates this is being done in a negative way as a saving clause, but even if it is done in this way it seems to me the hon. member is going beyond the terms of the bill.

There has been protracted discussion on this point ever since the bill was introduced for second reading—questions as to whether this was an antipollution bill or a sovereignty bill—and the hon. member for Peace River, together with a number of his hon. friends, proposed that it should be changed in such a way as to go beyond the terms of the proposed legislation before the House. As the hon. member who has just spoken pointed out, this amendment was proposed originally by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) in practically the same terms as are used in the one which is now under discussion, and the Chair expressed reservations at the time. I doubt very much whether the amendment should be accepted in those terms. It does seem, if only indirectly, to seek to bring within the four corners of the bill a declaration of a principle which, to my way of thinking, is not there at the present time.

I have been referred to citation 418 of Beauchesne's fourth edition as follows:

All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the Bill.

I fail to see how I could ignore this long standing precedent and say that the hon. member's amendment, which does seek to introduce a new declaration of principle, is acceptable.

I would also refer hon. members to the very cogent and learned ruling of the Deputy Speaker reported in Votes and Proceedings for June 4, page 937, when a similar amendment was proposed for the consideration of the House. The learned and respected Deputy Speaker referred the House to Beauchesne's fourth edition, particularly citation 418, and also to May's seventeenth edition, page 572. I suspect that this is where the hon. members who have participated in the debate got their wisdom and knowledge. I would find it difficult to disagree with a ruling so clearly expressed by the learned Deputy Speaker, and I am honoured to have the opportunity to confirm the ruling that he made at that time and to say that it applies on all fours to the situation we now have.

I regret, in the circumstances, that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River cannot be put to the House.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion on which I have risen in the House and felt a little fear and trepidation. Having just learned of the sterling qualities of the Deputy Speaker, I am rather abashed at having to speak in his presence. I wanted to indicate the wholehearted support of the New Democratic Party for the subject matter incorporated in this bill, as we have indicated on other occasions. I also wanted to take a moment to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and I will not attempt to duplicate his eloquence in expressing his aspirations for the development of northern Canada, aspirations which I am sure all of us share.

There seem to be some matters related to this bill which should be drawn to the attention of hon. members before it receives third reading and passage through this House. It would seem to those of us in the New Democratic Party that a logical companion piece to legislation establishing a 100-mile pollution control zone in the Arctic would be legislation establishing a similar zone for the east and west coasts of this country. I also submit that the establishment of these zones represents and even more immediate need on the part of Canada, in terms of protecting our maritime environment, than do parallel provisions for the Arctic waters.

There exists at the present time off our east and west coasts a clear and present danger from the devastating effects of pollution, as the wreck of the Arrow off Cape Breton Island amply illustrates. In this regard I should like to cite the statement made to the Commons by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) during the debate on the committee report on Arctic sovereignty. In opening his speech, the minister said that the "totality" of the pollution problem in the world today was a more serious and immediate problem than the potentiality of pollution in Canada's northern areas, since given even the greatest possible technological advances, and even if the decision were made to employ ships for the transportation of oil through northern waters, it appeared that it would be some time—according to the minister, perhaps years—before such voyages could be accomplished.

Nevertheless, and somewhat inexplicably, the minister has supported the wholly commendable action of establishing a 100-mile pollution control zone in the Arctic. At the same time he describes, to use his own words, the "strongly emotional and appealing" approach of taking unilateral action on the matter with respect to our east and west coasts as being in many ways futile in the face of overwhelming opposition by other countries. I suspect that the main thrust of the government's reluctance to incorporate provisions in this bill to establish a 100-mile pollution control zone along our east and west coasts is based on just the sort of argument that was mustered by the Minister of Transport in his speech during the debate on Arctic sovereignty. That is to say, the government believes that because of overwhelming international opposition any such attempt would be futile.

I should like to submit two sets of counter arguments to the approach taken by the government. The first set of counter arguments is based on international law as it stands today; the second set is based on the practicalities of the situation. First, I should like to examine this idea of pollution control zones off our east and west coasts in the light of existing international law. The existing body of international law is composed largely of custom, multi-national accords, agreements, conventions and treaties. But a very strong case has been made on numerous occasions for the use of unilateral national action as a spur to the development of international law.

In this regard, I should like to quote two or three passages from a statement made by three professors of international law from the faculty of law of the University of Toronto, Dean R. St. J. MacDonald, Professor Gerald L. Morris and Professor Douglas M. Johnson. These professors described Canada's action in establishing a pollution control zone in the Arctic as an "initiative of striking importance and relevance in the context of dynamic, creative development of international law". They went on to say:

> It exemplifies the unavoidable resort to unilateral action by a national government faced by the inability of the international community to remedy a critical situation affecting its essential interests.

Let me take a moment or two to provide hon. members with some background to the subject of international action in respect to pollution by oil from ships, since it has relevance to what I am saying. International concern with the problem can probably be traced to the Washington conference of 1926, but the main progress in establishing international standards in this area has taken place since the second world war. The main responsibility has rested with the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, although other agencies of the United Nations have been concerned in a peripheral way.

In 1954 an Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization convention laid down penalties for pollution of coastal waters through the discharge of oil by international shipping within a 50-mile maritime zone. A 1962 IMCO convention extended this zone to 100 miles. The shortcoming in both conventions, which this legislation we are now debating takes into consideration, was that they permitted the state affected to take action only after the release of the oil. There was no provision in the conventions for a state to take preventative action. Moreover, only a minority of nations have ratified these two IMCO agreements.

At the Brussels conference of IMCO in November 1969, the Canadian delegation, to its eternal credit, argued very forcefully for the establishment of a convention offering an effective method of environmental protection for coastal states. The delegation, however, was unable to persuade a significant number of states involved in the conference to support its position. It was within this context that I believe the Canadian government finally decided, and in my opinion entirely justifiably, to take unilateral action in respect to pollution control in Arctic waters.

In the document by the three Toronto law professors to which I referred earlier, Canada's action in preparing the legislation on Arctic waters which is before the House was explained in the following words:

> Finally, the Canadian government decided to take unilateral action in the expectation that its proposed legislation would meet critical national needs in the Arctic and at the same time galvanize the international community into a realistic study of the dangers and problems involved. It was believed that these dangers and problems had developed with a speed that international law has been unable to match.

It continues:

> The Canadian initiative should be seen, we believe, as the result of two kinds of failures in the international community: the failure of international law to develop first order principles to govern the protection of maritime environments, and the failure of shipping, industrial and other user states to negotiate agreements for the establishment of institutions, procedures and administrative rules to deal with the problems of risk bearing and distribution of loss in the light of greatly magnified pollution hazards.

I should like to cite one other highly relevant passage from the statement by the three Toronto professors of international law. Their statement presents the following argument:

> Although the international law of the sea provides no exact precedent for the unilateral action of the Canadian government, it is easy to discover highly relevant principles underlying widely accepted practices, claims and decisions. The 1958 Geneva conference on the law of the sea confirmed the general acceptance of the concept of a contiguous zone, within which the coastal state may exercise exclusive authority for limited, designated purposes in a zone within modest limits and contiguous to a narrowly conceived territorial sea. The concept was accepted, no doubt, not only because the limits of the contiguous zone were modest, but more specifically because they were appropriate to the problems and functions envisaged. It may therefore be argued that a pollution zone is not less acceptable because of spatially less modest limits if these limits are wholly appropriate to the problems of pollution and the function of environment control.

It was undoubtedly with arguments of this kind in mind that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made the following statement, which was quoted in a recent issue of "International Canada". He said:

> We are ready for the opening of the Canadian Arctic for development, and that development is one of our great national objectives. It is with this in mind that we have stressed the desirability of keeping the Arctic waters open for innocent passage. We will do what is necessary for this purpose.
> We do not believe that the passage of ships which threaten the destruction or deterioration of the coastal environment can be considered innocent under any interpretation of international law. We have made clear to the world that while Canada welcomes the use of the Arctic waters as a transportation route for the vessels of all flags, the Canadian government will ensure that these waters are used for peaceful purposes and by ships complying with required safety standards.

In short, it can be argued with a good deal of force that the action Canada proposed to take in establishing a pollution control zone in the Arctic, far from representing an unacceptable infringement of the principles of international law, represents a welcome and invaluable initiative in that field. The government obviously accepts this position. If that is true of the Arctic waters where commercial traffic is non-existent, except on an experimental basis at this moment, how much more true is it of the waters off the east and west coasts of our country?

There is in existence now off our east and west coasts a clear and present danger of great damage being done to Canada's marine environment and coastline from pollution by oil from ships. The danger far exceeds that in the north, despite the special ecological conditions which apply in the north, and despite the additional navigational hazards represented in the north by Arctic ice, because of the immense volume of traffic in the waters off Canada's east and west coasts. The danger confronting us has been emphasized by the director of the Science Council of Canada, Dr. Patrick McTaggart-Cowan, who is heading the task force charged with the responsibility of cleaning up the oil spill from the tanker Arrow in Chedabucto Bay. Dr. McTaggart-Cowan said, in somewhat unparliamentary language but very expressively:

> This flags of convenience business is one of the sloppiest damn things I ever saw. If the commercial airlines ran their business like the tankers do, you'd be crashing a DC8 every week and the world would say "stop it".

The dangers confronting us have also been emphasized by such maritime disasters as the wreck of the Torrey Canyon off the coast of the United Kingdom and the wreck of the Arrow off Cape Breton Island. Therefore, the practical situation confronting us, the obvious dangers inherent in the operation of large numbers of inadequately constructed and equipped tankers off our east and west coasts, demands that Canada, for her own protection, take the same action off the east and west coasts as she is contemplating for her Arctic waters in the legislation now before the House. Indeed, the danger to her marine environment off her east and west coasts is greater and more immediate.

Moreover, it can be argued that because of the greater and more immediate dangers constituted by the shipping traffic off our east and west coasts, failure to establish claims to a pollution control zone extending one hundred miles off each of these coasts may very well weaken our claim to the establishment of such a zone in our Arctic waters. Those opposed to our action in the Arctic may very well say to us, should we not act in a similar manner off the east and west coasts: "If you were really serious about the danger to your environment represented by the operation of shipping in your Arctic waters, why have you not taken some similar action in Canada's coastal areas where shipping now operates?" I submit to the government that that is a very real danger should this legislation ever be disputed, and I would commend to their attention the desirability of establishing pollution control zones off our other coasts similar to that contemplated by this legislation for our Arctic waters.

In conclusion, I should like to express once again on behalf of my colleagues in the NDP our wholehearted approbation of the legislation as it now stands, even though we would have liked to have seen some of its provisions extended to other areas of this nation.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): In rising to speak on third reading of Bill C-202, it is not my intention to delay the passage of this legislation. Since the introduction of this bill, the official opposition has carried on a vigorous campaign in the House of Commons urging the government to make a clear, unqualified declaration of Canada's sovereignty over the lands and waters of the Canadian Arctic. The campaign was mounted when it became clear that the government itself had sown the seeds of doubt in Canada and the international community by procrastinating and by refusing to take a stand on this issue. The Arctic region, so long regarded as Canadian, is in our view about to be lost through default by this government.

We expressed our concern over Canadian rights in the Arctic at the time of the experimental voyage through the Northwest Passage by the giant Humble oil tanker, the Manhattan. This concern came to a head when the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, comprised of Members of Parliament who had made a close study of the issue, recommended that the government claim sovereignty over northern land and waters which traditionally had been considered as belonging to Canada. The government resisted efforts to have the committee report brought before the House for discussion, and although the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) eventually won the fight on a motion that the House concur in the committee report, it is a matter of record that the motion was talked into adjournment by the government.

Some Liberal members have asked why the official opposition takes such a strong stand on the question of Canadian sovereignty. I might say it is because of a threefold concern we have which cannot be brushed aside by the government's arrogance. We believe, first of all, that the Canadian citizens of the north must be protected from exploitation, that development of the Canadian north must remain in the hands of the Canadian people, and that it is Canada's responsibility to prevent an ecological disaster that could affect the people of this country and indeed the people of the world.

I spoke on this bill when it was first introduced in this chamber. I attended the joint committee sittings. The bill purports to deal with pollution control on the one hand and with Canadian sovereignty on the other. We are now aware from studies of other bills, for example Bill C-203 and Bill C-204, that the government is not asking Parliament to assert sovereignty over any waters beyond 12 miles in our Arctic. However, these are waters over which most Canadians thought we had claimed sovereignty for many years.

I ask the government, why have we now changed position? I ask, what waters are we now claiming as our own? What waters will be classified as high seas? Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we on this side are not critical that the government has gone too far with this legislation; we are critical that the government has not gone far enough. How will these proposals, as spelled out in the bill, be enforced without declaring sovereignty? For example, under this bill will we be prohibiting tanker voyages in the Arctic? The bill calls for a line measuring seaward from the nearest Canadian land a distance of 100 miles. I wonder why the government selected 100 miles? Why didn't it take 50 miles or 150 miles? In spite of all the questions that were raised in committee about this 100 miles, I submit we have never received an adequate answer. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), or the minister guiding the bill through the House today, will give us some explanation.

This bill, like the amendments to the Fisheries Act, gives permission to pollute. That is right, Mr. Speaker. It gives permission to pollute since its terms do not apply to any water quality area designated under the Canada Water Act. By fragmenting authority between this bill and the Canada Water Act, by amending the Fisheries Act plus the Canada Shipping Act, I submit we so divide authority that we make effective pollution control in Canada next to impossible. At the same time, we place a bureaucratic nightmare on the shoulders of our hard-pressed industries who find themselves unhappy partners with the federal government in pollution control, with the industries paying the bill.

When it comes to declaring sovereignty, I cannot help but wonder what happened to change the views of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on this matter. The Globe and Mail, in September, 1969, carried an article headed "Ice Pack Defined as Land in Canadian Bid for Rule." It began with these words:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said yesterday Canada will seek to persuade other nations to accept the ice pack of the Northwest Passage as land for the purpose of establishing Canadian sovereignty in the area.
> The Prime Minister told students at a high school forum that the proposal, first advanced by External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, was one of several Canada would advance in seeking to establish its sovereignty in the Arctic.

Later, on his return from that trip, the Globe and Mail carried another article which read in part:

> In a press conference, after a three hour cabinet meeting, Mr. Trudeau declared that his government was giving "a high priority" to the sovereignty statement, which is expected some time this fall.

Those are our views, Mr. Speaker. We believe sovereignty should be declared over the islands in the Arctic. We believe sovereignty should be declared over the water between those islands. Obviously, the Prime Minister shares our views, although he referred in his statement to this water as the ice pack; but whether it be ice pack or water the logic is the same. It is this vast area of ice and water and land which we claim should be established without any doubt in the minds of all Canadians as Canadian territory.

We must be mindful of our responsibility to the native people of the north, the Indians and the Eskimos, who stand the risk of being exploited by commercial plunderers before they can be said to have even benefited from today's enlightened society. Their living conditions, if we are to listen to the proposals and representations they are making to us from time to time, are wretched. They have the highest mortality rate among Canada's native people. Infant mortality in the north is four times the Canadian average, and the death rate of Eskimo children up to the age of four is 13 times the national average. Even in 1964, the average age at death of the Eskimo was 32.3 years.

If Canada does not assert its claims to sovereignty, then these people are exposed to the risk of being bulldozed out of existence, or left with the scars of exploitation that already disfigure the permafrost of their land and threaten to eliminate the northern wildlife upon which they depend for existence. I ask you, Sir, can we ignore the rights of these people so that a more affluent society should benefit? The answer of course is no. But they can be protected only by a clear declaration of Canadian sovereignty.

In the view of the Official Opposition, northern development must remain in Canadian hands. While a good many people are today greedily eyeing Canadian resources, we do not for one minute intend to be a party to any give-away of these resources without a true inventory of Canadian needs for the future. There are many who say that the north is Canada's future life blood. Therefore, it is for Canada to discover and develop the north. If there are vast resources of oil, as exploration indicates, it is for Canada to regulate the growth of its development. Without Canadian sovereignty being asserted we will have every Tom, Dick, and Harry eager to stake a claim to the north and to engage in unregulated off-shore drilling in Canadian waters. I submit Canada alone must exercise pollution control over the Canadian Arctic. It cannot be left to the United Nations; it cannot be left to shipowners; it cannot be left to oil companies or any other body. It is, I submit, Canada's responsibility alone.

Already Canada has been exposed to needless danger by a government that, at the least, has been extremely haphazard in its approach to the pollution menace. It was the Official Opposition that pointed out to the government that the Manhattan, on its first voyage, carried twice as much oil for fueling purposes as that carried as cargo by the ill-fated Arrow which broke up in Chedabucto Bay, Nova Scotia, earlier this year. Those of us who live in that province, and certainly many who live outside it, are well aware of the tremendous damage that was done to the fisheries and the entire ecology of the area by that mishap. Scientists have been warning us of the dangers of pollution, pollution of the land, of the air and of our water. Doubts have been raised as to the very future of mankind unless we show some respect for nature and the environment in which we have been given the privilege of life.

The risk of a Torrey Canyon disaster hangs over all of our heads. The best insurance policy in the world would not and could not possibly compensate for the damage to our environment if a disaster of the Torrey Canyon magnitude happened in the north. A disaster of that proportion would upset the delicate balance of nature in the Arctic and might lead to a complete ecological breakdown. It could reach out to every man, woman and child on this earth. These are some of the threats posed by new scientific and technological advances. However, I believe if a technological society is to continue, technology itself must be put to work to clean up its messes. On the land and in the water, a Canadian presence has been established in the Arctic by Canadian explorers, Canadian police, Canadian courts and Canadian commerce.

Those who object to Canadian sovereignty of the Arctic waters argue that the Northwest passage should be regarded as an international waterway because it connects two sections of the high seas. However, international law has established that a passage between high seas is international only if it has been used, frequently and without serious challenge, by international shipping. This is not the case with the Northwest passage.

Sovereign control of the Arctic does not imply interference with innocent and peaceful passage throughout the waters of the north. But it is for Canada to determine and ultimately decide what constitutes innocent passage, and Canada must retain the right to make and enforce regulations which protect our national interests. In my view, a vote against Canadian claims of sovereignty is a vote against Canada, its people and against humanity itself.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in moving third reading of this bill, I do not have much to add except to thank hon. members who, on second reading, voted unanimously for this bill to set up a hundred-mile area for the control of pollution in the Arctic.

That unanimous gesture on the part of the House of Commons has done much to help Canada on the international level, towards the humanitarian purpose proposed by this bill. Because of the special problems in the North and also for the benefit of the native peoples of the North, it was imperative for our country to act immediately instead of waiting for a catastrophe, for ships have always started navigating in that area and the North will soon be open to shipping.

During a trip to Washington where I discussed problems pertaining to the North and other related questions. I found that American politicians were particularly impressed by that unanimity.

I should like also to make a few comments on what was said by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). On several occasions, he suggested that our Canadian sovereignty was not established over the Arctic islands, the continental shelf or the waters surrounding the Arctic islands. On several occasions in the House it has been clearly proven that our sovereignty had been established for a long time in that respect.

The hon. member mentioned explorations for oil on the Arctic islands and the continental shelf. I would just like to point out to him that at the present time, in our Canadian North, anyone who wishes to carry out explorations for oil on the Arctic islands and the continental shelf, must ask the Department of Indian Affairs and Nortnern Development for a permit for that purpose. Such permits are now held by American, French, German and Japanese firms.

The only question that remained to be solved had to do with the limits on our territorial waters and my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) brought forward a bill that leaves no doubt about that. It provides that Canadian territorial waters extend 12 miles off from shore. That bill had a very clear objective: the prevention of pollution on the high seas, because we knew it was impossible to come quickly to an agreement at the international conference level, after the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) had met the Secretary General of United Nations in September, to know if we could make rapid progress in that field in international circles. Following the international conference on the law of the sea that was held in Brussels in November, it became quite obvious that Canada could not expect an early conclusion of any international agreement on pollution control on the high seas. We took unilateral action by asserting our jurisdiction in matters pertaining to the policy concerning water pollution up to a 100 mile limit off our coasts. We are still willing to find an international solution to this problem. The first international conference on pollution on the high seas will be held as early as 1970 and Canada, thanks to the unanimous consensus of the members of the House, has taken a very important step towards the development of international law in this field.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I thank—

[English]

I should like to thank all members who participated in the debate for the unanimous vote on second reading and quite obviously they will do the same on third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO CONSOLIDATE AND REVISE

The House resumed from Thursday, May 28, 1970, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-215, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members to the House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, you will be happy to know that my remarks will be very short and, I hope, very significant this afternoon. When I spoke on this bill about ten days ago I mentioned that it dealt with the franchise of electors who choose the members of the House of Commons, and I said that there should be a companion bill dealing with that other august body, the Senate. We in the New Democratic Party have been on record for a long time as saying that the Senate should be abolished. If it is not abolished in the near future I think it should be an elected body. Reform of the Senate as it is presently constituted, is beyond question. No amount of young blood or joint committees of the House of Commons and the Senate to deal with questions of poverty and guaranteed annual income will rid it of the stain of political patronage. I think the Senate has to become significant, and publicly and politically acceptable. New qualifications should be required for it and it must adopt a new image. Having said that, I hope my friends on the other side will note my remarks and the government will act accordingly in the near future.

I should like to remind the House that in my last speech on this particular bill I gave credit to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) for bringing forth changes in proxy voting. Now prospectors, students, fishermen and mariners will be permitted to vote. I hope in his wisdom and liberality the minister will include railway construction workers, loggers and longshoremen. These men should not be deprived of their right to vote, even though they do have the opportunity to vote at the advanced polls. I think it is even more important that the President of the Privy Council should include the inmates of our penal institutions. In the past, so many people have considered such inmates as a breed apart from other Canadians. By incarcerating a man, not only do we strip him of his personal freedom but we strip him of his civil rights as well. If we are to make these men dignified, responsible and integrate them into society, the least we can do is allow them to vote so that they can take their rightful place in society.

Last week I had the privilege of travelling across parts of Canada and visiting penal institutions. The indelible impression left on my mind is that there is a need to create a proper relationship and understanding between the inmates of our penal institutions and the general public. It is necessary to make those inmates feel they are part of the community. I think that giving them the right to vote would be a step in the right direction.

My third point relates to reducing the voting age from 21 to 18 years. My party has been on record for some time as approving of this principle. I expect the government hopes to gain some advantage from the one million new voters. The leaders of the different political parties will face a challenging time in bringing to the new voters of this nation their political platforms. This will be one of the great challenges of the next general election. Today, our young people are much better educated than in the past about political matters, and the question that arises in my mind is this. Have those young people accepted their responsibilities and are they sufficiently socially mature to vote? In other words, have they graduated from childhood to adult status? At present, a person acquires adult status automatically when he reaches the age of 21. He is then allowed to vote, to enter into contracts, to hold real property, to undertake jury duty, to marry without parental consent, to drink beer and to establish a separate domicile. These are his rights.

By lowering the voting age to 18 years, will we also lower the age at which our young people can assume these other rights? Will an 18-year old be allowed to serve on a jury, to enter into contracts and so on? In other words, will these rights be given to 18-year olds automatically in future? I entertain serious doubts about this matter. It seems to me that they should earn their adult status. Perhaps I could draw an analogy between young people and those who wish to become Canadian citizens. A person becomes a Canadian citizen only after he has learned one of our two main languages. He must have some knowledge of the history and geography of our country and possess evidence of good behaviour. In other words, he must have no criminal record, must appear in Citizenship Court and, after submitting evidence of his fitness to be a citizen, he takes the oath of allegiance and becomes a Canadian. Why should we not require something similar of our 18-year olds? They should prove that they are worthy of adult status, that they are of good behaviour, that they are willing to accept responsibility and are socially mature.

What criteria would govern the granting of adult status? These young people I submit, ought to contribute their time and talents to the public service. Thousands of choices are open to them. Of course, we must provide jobs and opportunities for them; but this should not be difficult because there are 700,000 young students who want summer employment. Instead of being a burden on the government, we could provide these young people with the opportunity to be useful. For instance, if a young man is an artist, he could contribute his time and talent by decorating public and private institutions. If he is an athlete, he could teach youngsters to play hockey, baseball and skiing in the winter. If he is the cultured type, he ought to play in a youth orchestra or participate in some drama group. Other young people could serve by conducting tours, by helping to clean up our pollution problem, by helping crippled children or elderly adults, by baby sitting for young married couples and so on. They could perform services like these and, after a time, they would earn their adult status.

Of course, they would have to show evidence of a record of public service and good behaviour. Perhaps they could appear before a court similar to the citizenship court and bring forward two or three witnesses who would testify to the truth of statements concerning their public service. At that time they could be given their social security card, which would be an indication that they had graduated from childhood and assumed adult status and responsibilities. Then, such young people ought to have the right to vote. A young man could then perform jury service, enter into contracts, hold real property, marry without parental consent and so on. This is my own view, Mr. Speaker, and is not a view which is totally acceptable to the members of my party.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gilbert: Nevertheless, it is a view that I think should be put forward because, when you reduce the voting age from 21 to 18 years, you are imposing on young people a social responsibility. We must make sure that they are ready to assume that responsibility and are mature enough to vote and participate in the affairs of the community.

My last point relates to election expenses. My colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has set forth the position of my party on election expenses and on the necessity of implementing the recommendations of the Barbeau Commission. I submit the time has come for us to take active steps to implement the recommendations of the Barbeau Commission concerning election expenses. I submit that the bill relating to that subject ought to have preceded the bill we are discussing.

I read "The Shape of Scandal" by Richard Gwyn. It deals with the trying time the government faced as a result of scandals during the early and middle 1960's. In the epilogue are two paragraphs bearing on the subject of election expenses which I should like to read to hon. members. The author writes on page 242:

> Only one element of the content of the scandals deserves lasting concern and that is what Pearson, after the publication of the Dorion Report, called, "the sinister and growing involvement of crime in politics." The connecting link appeared to be the election fund. The traditional system of fund raising and fund spending by both the major parties has in the past been based upon an obsessive and impenetrable secrecy. Rarely has this secrecy hidden anything more ominous than the understandable wish of business firms to conceal their political affiliations from their customers, some of whom are bound to be supporters of the unfavoured political party. Nevertheless, as demonstrated by the winter scandals, secrecy is an invitation to misuse and, to the public, it invites the assumption that misuse is commonplace.
> The importance of money in elections has been consistently over-rated, particularly by the professional organizers who approach the subject with the reverence of acolytes. Under-financed parties, such as Réal Caouette's in 1962 and John Diefenbaker's in 1963, have been able to rise above empty war chests, while over-financed parties, such as Pearson's in 1963, run the risk of arousing public resentment. Nevertheless, as the realistic Israel Tarte said of Laurier's victory in 1896, "Elections are not won by prayers alone." At election times money is a useful adjunct to virtue, but the present system of collecting has outrun its usefulness.

> The solution is relatively obvious and has already been effected by the Government in Quebec. A proportion of the election expenses of all the national parties should be paid out of the public treasury and all election expenses should be subjected to rigorous control and scrutiny. As the Toronto Daily Star commented, "Having the taxpayers pay the bill of political candidates may seem a strange and unpleasant idea at first sight. But it is surely preferable to having the tab picked up by people like Lucien Rivard."

I hope that the President of the Privy Council will be very active in setting up the committee to consider election expenses. I hope he will do this forthwith. On that note, I end my comments on this particular bill. I will have more to say at the committee stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to take part in this debate on Bill C-215, whose purpose is to modernize the Canada Elections Act and to pronote democracy in this country.

Democracy is a form of government which originated after monarchy, that is after the period when kings and queens inherited the throne through succession. In democracy as we know it, the people become their own king and appoint their representatives through elections.

All citizens are equal in a democratic election. Each citizen has only one vote to cast in the ballot box and the majority decides which members are elected. It is the principle of one man, one vote. In an election, this principle of the citizen's equality and quality constitutes the basis of democracy and it must be respected by everybody.

Why should a member of Parliament have to make his backers known? Why does this obligation not apply also to political parties with considerable campaign funds? Why are privileges granted to the powerful and refused to the little, the weak, the members of small political parties or still to independent candidates who are always free to express themselves during an electoral campaign? Why not require of the large political parties that they reveal the sources of their campaign financing? We ask the question as bluntly as possible in order to avoid any misunderstanding.

Why are the small political parties compelled to disclose the names of the contributors to their compaign funds, while the two large ones do not have to do so? Why is it possible for the large parties to conceal the names of their backers? We are asking that question merely to know why the principle of equality among citizens is not enforced as far as the obligation to disclose the sources of compaign funds is concerned?

This is not the first time that the question is raised and remains unanswered. Indeed, the same unacceptable excuses are given and the people who are always asking the same questions are far from satisfied. They know how to get information and are quite aware that as far as the excise tax is concerned, there are some injustices.

We do remember that at a certain time the Canadian government passed a legislation to levy new taxes. All taxpayers were supposed to pay to the federal government the tax provided in the new legislation. But through amendments and withdrawals of some customs tariff items, we managed to establish a favoured list. The best example of this is to be found in Bill C-198, that was passed on June 23, 1966. I take the liberty to quote some excerpts of that bill according to which would be exempted from the federal 12 per cent sales tax:

(f) tractors...for use exclusively in the operation of logging, such operation to include the removal of the log from stump to skidway, log dump, or common or other carrier.

Nothing was forgotten. In fact, the article even added this, that can be read in the text, and I quote:

(h) machinery, logging cars, cranes...blocks and tackle and wire rope—

All these articles were also deleted from the famous taxable machinery list. While loggers still pay the federal sales tax on powersaws, special iron-capped shoes, and iron helmets, the wearing of which is compulsory, the lumber company which buys equipment is only required to sign a form and forward to the government to get back the 12 per cent excise tax. All mining and oil companies which develop Canadian resources enjoy the benefits provided for in the item which appears on page 6076 of Hansard for June 7, 1966, and I quote:

(e) gasoline-powered and diesel powered self-propelled trucks...for off-highway use exclusively at mines and quarries.

The following were also exempt from the famous tax:

(j) machinery and apparatus, including drilling bits...for use in exploration for or discovery or development of petroleum, natural gas or minerals.

While those companies are exempt from the famous 12 per cent tax, the worker who uses the tools essential to the maintenance of his machines always has to pay it. Once again, we have a double standard. And oil companies, forestry development companies and mining companies are just the ones we suspect of contributing to the old parties' campaign funds.

As regards income tax, the situation is the same: one rate for the worker and a different rate for the companies. As far as I am concerned, most of the injustices that Canadians have to suffer at the present time have their origin in campaign funds. Because they contribute to the latter, exploiters of all kinds successfully press for the passing of the legislation of their choice and in the manner that is most profitable to them. The present scarcity of money, which is an invention of the banks that wish to increase their interest rates, is a further example.

Recently I gave a copy of the Canadian Constitution to a young man of 19. He was quite surprised to learn that, according to the Constitution, the central government has the right and the duty to fix interest rates. However, he did not see why banks are now increasing their rate of interest. Proofs in hand, I explained to him that conditions had changed since the Canadian government gave up its rights in this regard by passing on March 21, 1967, Bill C-222 respecting banks and banking.

In passing this bill containing a very precise section in that connection, the government was simply giving up its rights and privileges regarding the establishment of interest rates.

Though this bill was sponsored by the former Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), under the Liberal government of Mr. Pearson, I shall never forget that on March 21, 1967, 60 Progressive Conservative members preferred to abstain from voting and did not take part in the division. Therefore, for all these reasons and many more, I suspect also that banks contribute important amounts of money to the campaign funds of the old parties.

On the occasion of the reform of the Canada Elections Act, I think it is necessary not to request an explanation but to call for the final suppression of this unjustified practice whereby the big political parties are free to collect funds for their campaign treasury without having to disclose the identity of the contributors. This is clear! We demand that the big political parties be compelled to give the names of all the firms that contribute to their campaign funds as well as the total amount of their campaign expenses, as it is the case for political parties that are financed almost exclusively through public subscriptions, by passing the hat at public meetings or coffee klatches.

Equality in this respect between small and large political parties would be a sign that hon. members really want to respect the equality of citizens in all of their acts during a democratic election in view of electing new members.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to answer us. He will find a way to make all political parties produce the names of the contributors to their campaign chests. Under a democratic system of government the election of members of Parliament by the people perhaps reflects the best the image of the people, because they choose their members amongst the very people who make up the nation.

In a democracy, the people choose their representatives from among themselves. Those elected automatically become the official representatives of authority. That is why all citizens should be better acquainted with their real power to choose their own representatives. That is also why electoral laws should give citizens every possibility to make the best possible choice of their future representatives. The Canada Elections Act should therefore do away with all practices that make it possible to exercise undue influence on the voters' will and that is why it is necessary to reveal the names of all those who contribute to elections funds covering advertising, canvassers and other election workers. There is no way of getting this information now as far as the major political parties are concerned, perhaps because our present legislation does not demand that it be revealed.

However, when one sees now the ministers behave towards some privileged groups, one is lead to believe that these groups are involved in some way in election funds.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help noting the utter flexibility of our ministers in connection with their activities in the legislative field.

For instance, during the same week, allegedly to fight inflation, the government has proclaimed that no wages shall be increased by more than 6 per cent yearly and has decided to raise the minimum wage from $1.25 to $1.65 per hour, i.e. an increase of about 33 per cent. Those are inconsistent measures.

In the past, the lists of Canadian Forces electors were always kept secret. Now, under the provisions of item 61, one may have a furtive glance at them. When you read item 62, however, you discover that this privilege is hereby cancelled.

It may seem odd, when all the lists of electors are made public, that every conceivable effort should be made to conceal the names of our gallant soldiers, ready to shed their blood for their fellow-countrymen.

Since the Valcartier base is located in the Portneuf riding—which I have the honour to represent—there are more than 500 military personnel entitled to cast their vote in Portneuf. Under the previous act, the lists of Canadian Forces electors were unavailable, even to the members of the House. And the election officer of the riding, who is one of my friends, made no bones about telling me: "I have the lists in a file but I am not entitled to let you see them."

It is quite all right to keep secret a list of 50 names, but questions should be asked when 500 names are concealed.

As a matter of fact, the ballot papers on which members of the armed forces are to vote change size, pattern and colour in the process. And the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) was a witness to the fact while attending a judiciary recount.

I do not know if that should be called a transcription or a transposition, but anyhow this method has already resulted in changing electoral results. I have in mind the case of the Sherbrooke riding during the June 1969 election. On election night, the Creditiste candidate was first elected but following the results of the military vote, he was beaten. When time came to recount the votes, the judge phoned Ottawa to obtain the list of Canadian Forces electors who were entitled to vote in Sherbrooke. But he was simply told: Your Honour, this is impossible, the list is confidential. The judge was being asked to pass judgment on a list of names he had not seen, and on ballots of a doubtful origin. I do not know whether this was done for honour or dishonour but, in any event, I doubt that this procedure was regular; I would even go so far as to say the Creditiste member for Sherbrooke may have been defeated by strangers.

Indeed a childhood friend of mine, still in the army and who lived in Portneuf at one time but who has now been living in Montreal with his family for some 25 years, is still entitled to vote in Portneuf.

Worse still, in the last election, he was being treated in an Ontario hospital and was approached by another soldier who went to his bedside to make him vote for a Portneuf candidate. There was no witness in the patient's room. It was the month of June. It is recalled that the weather was beautiful, which explains why the witnesses waited out in the street. You have there as many opportunities for manipulation. Even in a hospital bed, one could already "play" with those famous ballots.

Now, as ridiculous as it may seem, the most deserving citizens are beyond the reach of publicity in national elections. The ordinary citizen assumes his responsibilities of full citizen through his franchise, by participating in public affairs, the economic activity of his country, but soldiers are not entitled to see their name on the list of electors.

In the summary of the main amendments published on page 7419 of Hansard for May 27, we read the following in item 61:

A candidate or his accredited representative will be authorized to inspect, in the office of the returning officer, the list of Canadian Forces and Public Service electors, entitled to vote under the Special Voting Rules...and make extracts therefrom—

Yet, item 62, at page 7420 of Hansard for the same day, reads as follows:

The list of Canadian Forces electors prepared by each commanding officer is no longer open for inspection by candidates or their representatives—

• (4:50 p.m.)

So those lists are prepared by commanding officers. From now on, they will not be open for inspection.

Under items 61 and 62, of the Summary of the main amendments, should I, at the time of the next election, ask the returning officer for my constituency to examine that secret or semi-secret list of electors, and make extracts therefrom that could eventually prove me right, the returning officer could refuse my request by resorting to item 62 and deny me a privilege granted under item 61, to know the electors in my constituency.

Is it not legitimate for an out-going member to know the electors of his constituency, even before the election, especially in the case of those who have enough courage to expatriate themselves in order to defend their fellow-citizens, their member of Parliament and their minister? If so, why not say it exactly, without hiding anything?

[Mr. Godin.]

Mr. Speaker, I call for the deletion of item 62, in which the broader provision included in item 61 is cancelled concerning the list of Canadian Forces electors.

I also request that the list of Canadian Forces electors be given the same publicity as those of residing electors in a constituency where a general or by-election is held.

I leave the drafting of the motion to that effect to the efficient staff of the House of Commons.

I hope that the government members also consider the possibility of introducing an amendment to Bill C-215, in order to make the carrying of the identification card compulsory. Other countries have such a card. We would just have to imitate them. Unfortunately, we choose to imitate others even when they do wrong. The time has come now I think to imitate them when they do something right.

In short here are my suggestion. First, I do agree with the reduction of the voting age to 18. Whether we admit it or not, a lot has been asked in the past of our young people. It is the young people in general who have cleared our land. In fact, they cleared the Abitibi area for instance. Some years ago young people went abroad to defend Canada and today again young people are expecting a lot from us who have nothing now to offer them. We offer them to clear the land and to build Canada. We ask them to defend their country in times of war but in times of peace we have nothing to offer them.

I know the young people and I know that they lack patience. If, being older, we tolerate a policy of trial and error on the part of governments, I know that those under 20 will not accept it for very long. By extending to them the right to vote, we are simply giving them the opportunity to make known their wishes and to compel the government to act.

Furthermore, as I said before, contributions to electoral funds should be made known to the public.

The list of electors in the armed forces should also be revealed to the public and finally a compulsory identification card should be carried at all times. If we want to increase the confidence of the Canadian people in our parliamentary institutions, we will have to do everything possible to avoid fraud with regard to the exercise of the franchise. Studies have already been carried out in that respect. Time has come to discuss them and to effect the required changes since honest elections are the basis for a just society.

[English]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, by the time someone of my distinct lack of seniority rises to speak in a debate such as this, the minister who is piloting the bill must worder why in heaven's name we do not all sit down. Since he has had the courtesy to come into the House, I thought I would let him in on a little opposition strategy. Debate is initially an attempt to impress upon the government through rational and cogent argument the virtues of the opposition's case. If the government does not then immediately accept the rationality of those arguments and make the necessary amendments that will incorporate our thinking in their bills, we adopt the tactic of the Chinese water torture, that is of repeating our arguments incessantly until hopefully the minister, out of sheer horror at the prospect of having to hear them again, decides to adopt our suggestions. It is in the noble cause of reducing the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to a quivering mass of jelly that I dedicate these few remarks.

This is the first appropriate opportunity I have had publicly to thank the chief electoral officer, Mr. Duhamel, for the extremely competent and eminently fair way in which he conducted the Selkirk by-election. Though it is not particularly relevant to the bill, I should like to put that on the record. He did a wonderful job under sometimes difficult conditions. I should also like to draw the attention of this House to the exemplary conduct of the returning officer for the Selkirk constituency, Mr. Grant del Bigio, whose impartiality was unquestionable and whose accessibility to the candidates and their agents left absolutely nothing to be desired. In all of this, I might add, he was most ably assisted by his wife, who is both charming and competent.

At the risk of sounding unctuous, I wish to say that the legislation before us is not really an appropriate vehicle for partisan speeches. All hon. members must be equally concerned to ensure that the electoral laws of this nation provide the greatest possible opportunity for electors to exercise their franchise with the minimum possible opportunity for the abuse of that privilege and right. I mention these truisms only because the bulk of the remainder of my remarks will, in the interest of brevity, be devoted mainly to a discussion of what I consider to be shortcomings in this legislation which, on the whole, represents a considerable improvement. In short, my remarks are offered in the spirit of constructive criticism. I hope that hon. members will accept them in that light, and that when we come to the Committee of the Whole House debate we will give consideration to at least incorporating the principles of the suggestions I am about to make into the legislation.

One of the major considerations in any electoral law should be that of ensuring that it eliminates to the fullest extent possible any artificial inequities between individual candidates and between the various political parties contesting an election. It is in the interest of the proper functioning of the democratic system that members be elected, in so far as is possible, by the exercise of a rational choice by the electorate on the basis of such considerations as the candidate's ability, training, experience, the merits of the program which he and his party espouse, and the quality of leadership that his party displays. We should, for example, seek to eliminate the effect that the amount of money available to a candidate can have upon his fortunes at the polls.

I would reiterate the point made by my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) that there is a need for a companion piece of legislation to this reform of the electoral law which will regulate election expenses. This need still exists, despite the fact that the Barbeau committee report on election expenses is now so old it is growing whiskers. I understand that the President of the Privy Council contemplates taking action on this question shortly, and I welcome the undertaking. However, I think it would have been more appropriate to introduce that legislation prior to the bill we have before us.

However, there remain means that we can employ within the context of this bill to reduce the effect of financial disparities upon the outcome of an election. This can be done by reducing the length of time allotted to campaigns when an election is called. I understand that the standing committee examined this problem at some length and reached the conclusion that the type of machinery—such as permanent voters' lists—which would be necessary for a reduction in the length of campaign time would be prohibitively costly. However, I do not feel like giving up on the idea yet, and I hope that the committee stage of this bill will provide an opportunity to seek means of achieving the highly desirable goal of reducing the length of time devoted to campaigning.

Another principle that should govern the drafting of electoral law—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order; it being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Shipping—Safety standards of foreign-registered ships operating in Canadian waters; the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin)—National parks—Request for development of facility in light of pollution of Lake Erie; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Violent disturbances—Montreal—Bomb explosions—Co-operation by Royal Canadian Mounted Police with other forces.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR REMOVAL OF VESSEL CAUSING POLLUTION

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved that Bill C-39, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act (prevention of water pollution), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe a minor error has arisen, although perhaps we should deal with it later, when we find out whether there are more speakers on the bill than there is time available. I do not think that the committee on Health and Welfare is the right committee to which to send the bill. It should more properly be sent to the transport Committee, but perhaps we could rectify this error later. In any event, my Bill C-39 would amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act and insert after clause 15, a provision which would make it possible for the minister to order the owner of a vessel which has gone aground and is causing pollution to remove the wreck or to have it destroyed, and to order that the owner of the vessel or cargo pay the full costs of such actions. Section 16 of the act as it now reads permits this to be done only in the case where the wreck in question is obstructing navigation. The purpose of this amendment is to enlarge the minister's scope so that the same powers will be granted to him to permit the removal of wrecks or other vessels when they become a danger from the point of view of pollution.

[Mr. Rowland.]

This matter has a fairly lengthy history. It first came to my attention when a vessel of the Holland American line, sailing out of Rotterdam, grounded and eventually sank off the west coast of Vancouver Island on January 3 1968. This vessel was the MS Schiedyk. It had on board 150 tons of heavy diesel fuel, 120 tons of light diesel oil, and a certain amount of lubricating oil. The payment of the cost of cleaning up the pollution damage that resulted from this wreck was by the government of Canada; in other words, the taxpayers of Canada. The purpose of the amendment to the act I am proposing would be to shift that burden of cost from the government and taxpayer to the people who should be responsible, namely the vessel owners as well as the people who own the cargo of that vessel.

Hon. members will recall that in the Canada Shipping Act amendments, which were considered a little over a year ago, the government attempted to introduce a provision similar to this. Those amendments were in Bill S-23, which came before the Senate in 1969. The particular clause in that government measure which would have had the effect of my amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act was clause 24, which was unfortunately struck out by the Senate committee on transport and subsequently by the Senate itself. The Senate did this after hearing representations from shipping interests, the International Chamber of Shipping and other such bodies and their Canadian equivalents. The debates, which are most interesting and which I recommend to hon. members, are in the Senate proceedings of the committee on transport and communications Nos. 6, 7 and 8 of February 27, March 6 and March 13 of 1969.

It was decided by the Senators that as the provisions of clause 24 of Bill S-23 would cause Canadian law to be somewhat out of line with the legislation of other states, it should not be passed until the international organization which concerns itself with such matters, namely, the International Maritime Consultative Organization, dealt with the matter at their meeting in Brussels in November of 1969. The meeting was held, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) represented Canada. He made a statement at this meeting in which he put forward Canada's view, and the line of argument which is behind both my amendment today as well as clause 24 of Bill S-23 of last year.

Unfortunately, at the meeting of the International Maritime Consultative Organisation in Brussels there were many states represented, some of which have no coastline but large oil interests, and some of which have coastlines but also have extensive shipping interests. Naturally, these states are less concerned about oil pollution at sea than we are. The results of pollution coming from a tanker was absolutely liable, regardless of fault, for the Canadian position that the vessel owners as well as the cargo owners should be made not accepted by the majority of states there. Some progress was made at that conference, but I think it is clear that the Canadian view did not get very far at the meeting. Let me discuss for a moment why we did not succeed. The arguments put forward, which are contained, by the way, in the Senate references which I have given the House, suggested that the nature of marine insurance would make it impossible to apply unlimited liability upon a shipping company. This argument was put forward at length. It is one that I have considered and that I reject. I would be very surprised indeed if the insurance business, which is a flexible business—we have all heard that Lloyds will insure anything—cannot find some way of insuring vessels at sea for the ultimate consequences of any shipwreck or disaster at sea. I am quite sure that if the industry put its mind to it, there is a way of insuring vessels regardless of the limit of liability. Certainly, in the case of commercial aircraft the liability of the insurer is almost unlimited. One instance which I was given showed that $80 million was paid by Insurance Companies for one airline disaster. If they can find it possible to insure a single aircraft for up to $80 million, I think it is incredible that they should argue they can only insure a ship up to a total upper limit of $10 million to $15 million.

So, I reject their argument because I think if we insist upon the idea first of a limitation and second of liability only in case of fault, we will make it quite impossible for the innocent people who may have marinas, fishing camps, or who may be commercial fishermen, all those people who live along the shore and gain their livelihood from the sea, to collect from these large oil interests. Thus they will suffer from the disasters rather than the people who I think should be responsible for the costs, namely the shipping and oil companies.

It was suggested that perhaps a voluntary organization of shipping interests might be the best way to deal with the problem. It was mentioned to the committee and elsewhere that the Tanker Owners Voluntary Agreement Concerning Liability for Oil Pollution would satisfactorily take care of this particular matter. I think that the existence of such an organization does not make such legislation as I propose unnecessary. In my opinion, it is quite essential for us to have absolute liability, and to have it without necessarily requiring proof of fault on the major oil carriers.

The argument was put forward that ultimately the consumer will have to pay for any increase in cost, if the cost of shipping oil is increased and that this is bad. I submit that the consumer of oil is precisely the one who should pay, not the taxpayer, not the general public, not the people who happen to live along waterways which are frequented by these enormous vessels, but the people who use the oil. If the insurance is going to be expensive for such carriage of oil, well, that is tough; and if it increases the cost of oil, that is tough, too. However, why should the people who use that oil not bear that cost and risk? I say the people who use that oil, but naturally the company will pay in the first instance, and then will pass on the cost to the consumer. But why should the general public be responsible for the clean up, and why should little people be subjected to disaster simply because of this legal difficulty which oil companies and shipping interests see?

There is a second point which is most important here, and which is especially important to Canada's northland. If we continue with our present way of placing the risks on others than the oil companies and others than the consumer, we distort the costs of shipping by sea as opposed to shipping by pipe line. I think hon. members can appreciate the point, that if we allow the taxpayer to bear the cost of cleaning up oil pollution and do not put the cost where it should be, on the shipper or oil company, then we have created a subsidy, a sort of hidden extra benefit for the oil company that intends to ship by sea. The pipeline, which perhaps might be an alternate and better method of transporting oil is not given this, subsidy and so the cost comparison, which may involve hundreds of millions of dollars or even billions of dollars, is severely distorted.

I think we should reject the arguments put forward by the shipping interests, although I must say they were most interesting and ingenious, and go back to the position of Canada prior to the Brussels meeting at which, as I have stated, we unfortunately failed to have our views accepted. It is, therefore, my purpose in moving this particular amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act to do precisely what should have been done last year with Bill S-23, clause 24.

As it happens, my Bill C-39 was written in 1968 before I had any knowledge of last year's government bill. Nevertheless, the way things have turned out, perhaps my bill is as valid as ever. Had Bill S-23 been passed in its entirety and not been amended by the Senate, then perhaps my bill would have become redundant. However, there are two events which have occurred since then. One was the rejection by the Senate of the clause I mentioned. The second was the failure of Canada to succeed at the International Maritime Consultative Organization meeting. Therefore, this particular amendment once more becomes one of considerable validity.

I cannot in all fairness see why we should except oil and shipping interests from the cost of pollution, an exception which makes pollution something to be borne by the public, just as the results of an act of God must be borne by the public. Pollution such as I have described results from some human action, such as somebody putting oil on a ship and somebody else having that ship go from A to B. The suggestion that if the ship is cut in two by another ship, or hits a rock through no fault of the owner, the captain or the company, then that is an act of God, the costs of which should be borne by others, is obviously absurd. Human direction has been given to put that ship where it may get into difficulty. It is only logical to assume that the people who initiate such action, the person who puts oil on board, and the shipping company should bear the cost of any subsequent cleanup. We are not dealing with small sums of money. We are dealing with enormous figures. I understand the sinking of the Torrey Canyon led to cleaning up costs of something in the neighbourhood of $12 million to $20 million. The Santa Barbara disaster off the California coast, which was not caused by a ship but by oil seepage from the seabed, led to property damages estimated at $1 billion. We are in an area in which there is tremendous cost.

I think that only by forcing all shipping lines and oil companies which transport oil by sea to take out the appropriate and necessary insurance are we ever going to make sure that we really do get around the difficulty posed by these disasters. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that this particular bill will not be talked out, and that it will be possible to amend the motion so as to send it either to the committee on environmental pollution or the committee on transport, rather than to the one on health and welfare as the motion now reads.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, once again I find myself in the peculiar position of rising to address myself to a motion moved by the hon. member and being in agreement with the principle but having a few questions at the back of my mind about the practical realities of the bill itself. I appreciate the hon. member's remarks about what seems to be the intent of government. I think the intention of the government is clear, and I think it is a step that we can not only support, but upon which we can urge the government to move more swiftly. If the hon. member's bill has that effect, then he has done a good service indeed. However, Mr. Speaker, there are some things in the bill that surprise me because the hon. member is a seafaring man.

I do not know whether his yacht is still in our delightful province, or whether he has it en route to British Columbia. However, I am tempted by the lack of his awareness, at least as indicated by what is in the bill, to say that while the hon. gentleman does have some knowledge of bathtub races and concrete boats,—he is somewhat of an expert in the latter thing—he has not addressed himself in his bill to the practical reality of ownership of a vessel or its cargo at the time of an accident to the vessel.

It must be borne in mind that accidents with vessels on the high seas, in coastal waters or in our ports are not deliberate things. They are indeed acts of God and the owners of these vessels have taken—perhaps what is no longer valid in terms of the dangers from pollution—reasonable precautions to insure and protect themselves against loss. I think all of us are aware that this has presented the very difficult problem, in terms of pollution particularly, in the first few days of an accident of determining just exactly who does own a vessel, just exactly when a vessel is abandoned, just exactly when ownership changes from one party to another party or from first parties to second or indeed even third parties in connection with the insurance of cargo.

Many ships sailing around these days carry cargo which is worth a lot more than the ships themselves. This is one of the points the hon. gentleman was trying to make, and I agree with him. In some cases the insurance on these vessels is relatively low, and in terms of the total value of the vessel and the cargo, the greater amount is on the cargo.

This question is there, and I believe all of us on this side would have wished that the hon. member might have attempted to address himself to the problem of ownership by perhaps changing the emphasis of what he is seeking to achieve. I suggest he might have done that by seeking enabling legislation authorizing, and indeed directing, the Department of Transport or other agencies to take what action is required to immediately remove the effect of the pollution or whatever the difficulty happened to be. He could then come along and hit them, as he has quite properly done, with a provision for financial responsibility. There may be other practical reasons why such an approach cannot be made, Mr. Speaker, but it suggests what we can do within hours of the occurrence of an accident.

The explanatory notes to this bill refer to a shipping accident. They indicate that four months passed between the time of the accident and when it was finally cleaned up. In Nova Scotia, we have just experienced a disastrous accident and all Nova Scotians are aware of the sorry and dreadful state of affairs which obtains when such a disaster is not swiftly and effectively dealt with, particularly when it involves oil. The emergency should be dealt with within hours, not days or weeks. It is to this point that I think comment should be and hopefully will be directed by those who are working diligently on the preparation of a report on the Arrow disaster in Chedabucto Bay in Nova Scotia.

Speaking personally and not for my party, I believe that in cases such as the Arrow and the Torrey Canyon, where we are talking in terms of massive bulk carriers of 250,000 or 500,000 tons—I understand that Lloyds of London in the last year or two have introduced insurance provisions for a one million ton tanker—our action immediately following an accident is vitally important. No amount of organization, laws, regulations and up to date equipment are going to prevent an accident. The accident curve is real and those who believe accidents can be prevented are whistling in the dark.

It is my belief that stretching from the tip of Vancouver Island north, crossing into the Arctic, across the Arctic and down the eastern coast, we should have a series of "fire stations" if you will. These should be staffed by highly trained, skilled personnel headed by a scientist or a man highly trained in the techniques of combating oil pollution. The crew should be trained in the effective use of the latest and most adequate equipment available to deal with pollution. Such crews should be stationed along our coasts at convenient intervals, but not more than 150 miles apart. Perhaps the stations should be under the jurisdiction of the armed forces with the crews on duty 24 hours a day, even if they stayed there for months and months without, we hope, ever being called upon.

The cost of maintaining these stations, compared with the losses resulting from an accident of a supertanker the size of the Manhattan is infinitesimal. These tankers are no longer dreams but are realities on the high seas. I think it is regrettable that the hon. member did not address himself in the bill to more practical considerations of this nature because that is something we support.

It is regrettable that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) was not able to persuade other countries of the advantages of this proposal and the absolute necessity for it. I hope there is no member who would wish to talk this bill out, because we would take some pleasure in supporting it although, as I have mentioned, it is deficient in that it avoids one or two practical realities.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this particular measure I think it must be said that, as a result of the Arrow catastrophe, we all recognize this is a very important bill in principle. It is also important for the reason expressed in the explanatory notes to the bill itself.

First of all, I should like to state that the Navigable Waters Protection Act is presently being considered and will be amended to cover such situations in the future. In making this statement, it is only fair that I make reference to many other items that have been taken up in this House and which concern over-all anti-pollution measures in Canada.

One such important measure considered in this session is Bill C-203, an act to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act. This deals with extending the fisheries limit from three to 12 miles. Another is Bill C-204, an act to amend the Fisheries Act which enables the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) to act on a continuing basis on water research in order to prevent pollution. The Minister of Fisheries can now act before the fish die instead of waiting until dead fish are found. A good example of this occurred in Newfoundland a short time ago when the Minister of Fisheries caused a company to close down its operations until such time as the water pollution was cleaned up. This measure prevented the further death of fish in that particular area.

Another important piece of legislation in this session is Bill C-202, an act to prevent pollution of areas of the Arctic waters adjacent to the mainland and islands of the Canadian Arctic. This bill will have far-reaching effects in an anti-pollution program.

One thing that has come out of the Arrow disaster, Mr. Speaker, is that by and large the international community, not just Canada, is lacking in research and in practical procedures for the cleaning up of oil pollution in water. This is probably one of the most important reasons why we should prevent oil pollution instead of facing the situation after the spill has occurred.

I think it is only fair to point out that Canada is one of the countries leading the world in the study of oceanography. When the members of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works about a month ago visited the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, we learned that the institute had begun studying oil pollution in offshore waters. The hon. member sponsoring Bill C-39 will probably be interested to learn that Victoria will be the site of one of the major research centres in Canada. Its activities will cover the western provinces of Canada, embrace much of the Yukon and Northwest Territories and cover all of British Columbia and its offshore waters. He is one member who will probably derive a great deal of satisfaction from the establishment by the federal government of this research institute in Victoria, British Columbia.

[Mr. Hopkins.]

I commend the hon. member for his interest in protecting the offshore fisheries of British Columbia. In the past he has displayed an interest in protecting the inland waters of British Columbia. We in this House recognize that British Columbia is a very beautiful province, but no matter whether we live in central, eastern or western Canada, we are Canadians first. We must work together in the common interest of protecting the beauty of our country.

The Institute of Oceanography at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, sponsors vessels which undertake research in the ocean. In this regard a great deal of co-ordination and co-operation is going on among federal departments such as the Department of Transport, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. These departments co-operate with the provincial agencies concerned. The importance of checking oil spills was brought home to the members of this House by the oil spill on the east coast of Canada. What happened demonstrated that this country and other countries in the world lack the necessary technology to deal with such spills. I submit that it is important for the government of Canada to put more money into research devoted to solving this problem. If we want to continue playing a leading role in the field of oceanography and research of the seas, we must be willing to safeguard the sea. We can only do that by using all our scientific knowledge and by giving the scientists the necessary tools with which to do their work.

In this country, as well as in other countries, scientific programs involving research into fields such as these and into atomic energy have been most expensive to carry on. When governments spend large amounts of money on certain projects, the people naturally look for results. Often the results of this research are not immediately apparent. I think the people of Canada must learn to be patient and not expect something to happen on the spur of the moment. They must be willing to accept the necessity of long range programs which will enable us to handle problems like these.

I am delighted to learn that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) will seek to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act and to do that which Bill C-39 seeks to do. We have been talking about the west coast; I see that the explanatory note to the bill refers to Vancouver Island. I think it is also important for us to consider Bill C-187 in this context, the bill respecting inland water resources in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The subject matter of that bill will also be the concern of the research institute to be founded in Victoria, B.C.

While considering this matter we must also remember the Canada Water Act, which is really a water management act. It is mainly concerned with inland river basins and water quality management, and complements the amendments to the Fisheries Act. The Fisheries Act amendents will cover those areas of Canada that are not covered by the Canada Water Act which was read the third time last week.

We have heard it said in this House that there is a lack of communication between government departments, and that these departments should co-operate and co-ordinate government programs. Having visited the Inland Waters Centre at Burlington last year, and the Bedford Institute of Oceanography at Dartmouth earlier this year, I can say that there is a great deal of co-operation among federal government departments and that they in turn are co-operating with provincial agencies. The Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works also learned that there is extensive co-operation between certain American states, Canadian provinces such as Ontario and the federal government with respect to international boundary waters. In this field the International Joint Commission has done a most commendable job.

I presume most reports regarding the Arrow disaster off the east coast are accurate. If they are, it is obvious that the shipping firm concerned was very much to blame for what took place. It is important that Canada, in its work on such problems, should not be isolated from the thinking of other countries. There should be international agreements in this area. As a result of our visit to Dartmouth we learned that on this matter there is considerable co-operation among countries in the western world. We hope that as a result of our new look toward Asia there will be growing co-operation among countries in the Far East and Canada and that this will upgrade the rules and regulations governing shipping companies, no matter from what countries they hail. We must make sure that these companies improve their standards.

There is very little use in a country having strong legislation which protects its coastal waters if other countries do not do likewise. Canada must play a leading role with regard to oil pollution off the coast of any country. Canada should promote international meetings and conferences so that all shipping countries of the world will be impressed with their responsibility in keeping the waters clean.

There are many other matters that could be dealt with, such as migratory birds, fish, plant life and sea life in general.

An hon. Member: Liberal birds.

Mr. Hopkins: If they are Liberal birds, they will be very strong flyers. We can get things done in this House by flying over some of the tactics of the opposition. Canada should play a leading role in international politics to promote conferences among the shipping countries of the world. These countries should realize that they have a moral responsibility to prevent oil pollution. It is natural to assume that industrial complexes in various parts of the world will grow at the same rate as the population of the world. As these complexes grow, shipments of oil and gas will increase.

The hon. member is to be complimented on presenting this bill for protection from pollution off our shores. I hope that our scientists who are working diligently at places such as the Bedford Institute of Oceanography, the new Research Institute at Victoria and the Inland Waters Centre at Burlington will accept this new challenge. I hope they will make constructive suggestions which can be incorporated into legislation. We must have legislation with teeth in it so that the regulations will be enforced.

This is a vast problem. The International Court must be the means of ensuring that countries toe the mark with regard to the waters of other countries and international waters. It is very important that a standard of law be developed at the international level. This would result from laws developed at the national level by the various countries of the world. The next step would be enforce the regulations.

Oil slicks that appeared on our waters from time to time were not looked upon seriously until we had a catastrophe. The hon. member who sponsored Bill C-39, and other members who treat this as an important issue, create in our country a mental climate in which people are willing to provide services and accept constructive legislation in order to arrive at a program of anti-pollution. The Canadian people can be proud of those working in the fields of science in this country. They have made a great name for this country at the international level. All hon. members have a moral obligation to support research programs, not only those in our own country but in the developing nations. Standards of living throughout the world can be improved by having anti-pollution legislation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I am very pleased that Your Honour has been able to overcome your obvious bias to belatedly recognize me. I hope Your Honour will continue this practice in the future without having any misgivings.

I am pleased to participate in this debate upon request. I congratulate the hon. member for having introduced this bill. I think it represents the thought of many Canadians that pollution is being created by outside sources over which we have no control. It is a subject in which the average person must participate because of the magnitude of the disaster that can be created. Canada is not a shipping nation; we have a very limited number of ships. However, we have an immense seabed and seacoast and there is a tremendous amount of shipping in our waters and along our coasts.

Since this bill was introduced by the hon. member, there have been a number of disasters. The recent Arrow disaster has been mentioned. A very large sum of money is being spent to clean up that problem. Part of the cost of cleaning up pollution must be borne by the country, because of its nature, but the main portion should be borne by the industries that are polluting our waters. The people of West Africa were faced with a problem with which they were not able to cope. World attention was focused on the sinking of the Torrey Canyon. Disasters such as these are not local problems. There was also a disaster off the coast of California. When disasters such as these occur, the area in which the disaster occurs must be compensated.

I listened with interest to the previous speaker, who referred to everything but the bill. The bill is limited. The hon. member raised a number of very important points. He mentioned that we are only now developing the techniques, know-how and research necessary to provide leadership in solving problems created by this type of disaster.

The disaster on the west coast which prompted the hon. member to bring forward the bill was a relatively small one. The Arrow mishap cannot be placed in that category. Maybe the next accident will be four or five times as serious. All our resources will be needed to deal with such situations, including the equipment necessary to restrict damage to as small an area as possible and to make clean-up possible before the damage has reached its peak.

Today we are probably in a much better position to accept legislation of this kind than we were in the past when several amendments having the same general intention were put forward by my hon. friends. I hope this proposal will go before the Transport Committee and that consideration will be given to it. Everyone in the country gives a great deal of credit to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) for the way in which he has exercised his responsibility to the fullest extent under the laws which now exist for combating or preventing pollution in areas over which he has control. We hope a similar kind of control will be exercised by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) following the amendment of our laws.

I am not sure whether this object can be achieved under the Navigable Waters Protection Act in exactly the way suggested, but no doubt the committee hearings will establish the mechanisms by which the object can be effected by legislation. Under the bill the minister would be given power to demand that the company concerned should undertake the necessary salvage operation, or alternatively the nation as a whole would do so, the cost being borne by the user of the facility. The average person who is interested in this problem will be most unhappy if the government, through its supporters, talks out this legislation today instead of allowing it to go to committee where it could receive a favourable hearing.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on pollution control. It is a subject which is occupying the minds of more and more Canadians throughout our land. If the mail of other hon. members is anything like my own, not a day goes by when they do not receive letters from concerned citizens asking what is being done to control pollution. I therefore congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) on introducing an amendment to the act which will assist in clearing up a problem in his own locality which has been brought forcibly to his attention.

I think he is perfectly correct in saying that we should not continually expect the taxpayers of this nation to foot the bill for pollution which has been caused through no fault of their own. I think he is well within his rights, and Parliament would be well within its rights, to make it clear that the polluter must pay. This was the principle which lay behind the recently passed Canada Water Act. We sought to make important amendments to the legislation. Every one of us felt that the underlying principle was that the polluter should pay.

What concerns me about the whole question of pollution is the government's method of attacking it on a scattergun basis, like a man using a shotgun loaded with buckshot in the hope that one pellet will hit the mark. The hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins) put on record a list of legislation and amendments thereto which have sought to deal with pollution. It seems to me our work would be more effective if one department of government were given the responsibility for dealing with all forms of pollution. It may be impossible to amend all our legislation along these lines, but a start must be made somewhere.

The Canada Water Act sought to make the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources the focal point for pollution control in this country, especially as it relates to water. Recently, general support was expressed for the government's decision to set up a committee to study environmental pollution. Perhaps this is the committee in which the first step will be taken to draw together all forms of pollution control. We do not like to see new departments of government set up, because their number has gone beyond reason already. However, there must surely be a way of centralizing pollution control.

I think there is a danger in this country that we may get scared of pollution and become unrealistic about it. Professor Hans Carol, of the Department of Geography, York University, Downsview, wrote a timely letter—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-215, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, when I was overtaken by the coming of private members' hour this afternoon I was saying that another principle which should govern the drafting of electoral law is that of maximizing the opportunity of electors to exercise their franchise. Although the legislation before us moves a long way in that direction, nevertheless in my opinion there remain some shortcomings within the legislation. Before I address myself to them I should like to take a moment to express my pleasure at the intent of this legislation to reduce the voting age to 18.

Three Canadian provinces now permit voting at the age of 19 and four at the age of 18. Reduction of the voting age to 18 was one of the first acts of the CCF administration when it assumed office in Saskatchewan; and it was one of the first acts passed by the legislature under the New Democratic Party government in Manitoba. Experience in at least six of these seven jurisdictions indicates that the measure has merit. I am most pleased that we at the federal level may see fit to follow suit.

To return to those areas where there would seem to be shortcomings in the attempt to maximize opportunities for the exercise of the franchise, I should like to make brief but specific reference to the problems associated with placing people on electoral lists in urban polling divisions when through some misfortune they have missed being enumerated and have also missed the court of revision procedures. This is not uncommon. I think that if the legislation is to fulfil its purpose in maximizing opportunity for electors to vote, it should take into account the fact that people can innocently miss being enumerated and miss the court of revision procedures, and make some provision to accommodate them.

My colleague for Regina East (Mr. Burton) has an interesting suggestion in this regard which I hope will come before the House when it is assembled in committee of the whole. The procedure that he envisages involves a person being able to swear that he is a qualified elector. His ballot, on being cast, is placed in an envelope on which his name would be found. A list of persons thus casting ballots would be supplied to each candidate in the election so that he could challenge any of the names listed. The person or persons so challenged would then be notified so they could make representations at the time the ballots were to be counted. Once this procedure had been completed, the ballots would be taken from the envelopes, put in the ballot-box so they remained completely anonymous, and then counted. This is a suggestion to which we might devote some attention in committee of the whole.

Another way to maximize opportunities to vote relates to the polling hours that are allocated. In this regard I would strongly urge the House to consider an extension of the voting hours from the seven o'clock p.m. as provided in the legislation before us to eight o'clock p.m. This would accommodate a great many industrial workers as well as people who work in white collar jobs in commerce and service industries.

Another area that we might well examine in committee of the whole with regard to maximizing voting potential concerns the number of days allocated to advance polling. There are difficulties in regard to accommodating some sectors of our population, such as the railroaders, within the two days at present allowed for advance polling. It may well be advisable to increase the number of days allotted to advance polling.

Related to the need to maximize the opportunity to vote is the necessity to minimize the opportunity for abuse of the right of voting. In this regard I am somewhat nervous about the extensive provisions for proxy voting contemplated by the bill. While such a system is obviously needed for certain groups in our community—an outstanding example of such groups being fishermen—most other groups would be equally well served, I submit, by a comprehensive system of absentee balloting. A system of absentee balloting would, I believe, be less subject to abuse than that of proxy voting and would serve the needs of the community equally well.

A further principle which should govern the operation of election machinery in a democracy is that of unassailable impartiality on the part of electoral officials. The office of Chief Electoral Officer undoubtedly meets that standard, as does its current occupant. So, too, does the current method of redistributing seats. However, I believe that despite the irreproachable conduct of the vast majority of our returning officers, the causes of impartiality and objectivity, as well as efficiency, would be better served if these officials were appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer after the positions had been advertised and a competition had been held to fill them.

There is one further, rather small omission in the bill as it now stands which I should like to draw to the attention of the House, one which is of particular interest to those of us who represent constituencies which are partially urban and partially rural. I am referring to the difficulties involved in recognizing officially the change in character of a polling division from rural to urban and governing the operation of that poll accordingly.

Once again, one of my colleagues will have a suggestion to place before the House in this regard. I am referring to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) who will submit his excellent suggestion to the House in the form of an amendment seeking to designate automatically a polling division as being urban if it has a postal walk. As I say, he will be introducing an amendment to that effect, and I heartily recommend it to the House, assuming of course that the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) does not attempt to reduce his numerous problems by totally eliminating the posties.

I would like to conclude by saying I consider that the legislation which is before us represents a considerable improvement upon that which has in the past governed elections in Canada. The kind of principles and suggestions which we have been putting forward from the opposition side in the last few hours of debate are, I think, well worth the attention of the House. I hope they will receive that attention when we reach Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, in taking a very brief part in the discussion of this momentous Bill C-215, which runs to no less than 355 pages and appears to me to cover every conceivable aspect or contingency having to do with voting, I intend to confine my remarks to two or three general areas and to give broad support to what is being proposed as being better than that which the voters have had in the past.

There is one particular provision of the bill in which I am interested. It has to do with proxy voting, as outlined in the proposals on pages 236 to 239 of the legislation. In the province of British Columbia there are more than two million people, and over half of them live in less than one-half of one per cent of the land area of the province—that is, around the metropolitan area of Vancouver and in the Lower Fraser Valley. In those places there live a great many industrial workers—fishermen, miners, construction workers and loggers. This general group of industrial workers over many years of federal elections has been to a substantial extent disenfranchised through the failure of the existing electoral legislation.

Every summer thousands of these industrial workers on the mainland of British Columbia, whether they be fishermen, loggers or miners, take off for the hills, the seas or the mines to carry on their work. They work out of town, away from the one half of one per cent of the land area of the province. Very often when a election takes place, which is often in the summertime, they have been long gone from their home constituencies prior to the holding of the advance poll, which is therefore of no use to them. Being away from their constituencies during the campaign and on voting day, they virtually lose their vote. Large numbers of them have lost their vote. This has had a detrimental effect with regard to one party and an advantageous effect with regard to other parties.

It is no secret that the party I represent here, the NDP, is most closely allied to and representative of the industrial workers of many areas. Consequently, the fact that many of these workers are unable to vote in their home areas has a considerable and tangible effect on the outcome of the election in those areas. Generally speaking, I think the effect has been to create an artificial result in some of the constituencies, giving added weight to the older parties and less weight to the party which the majority of those workers support.

I am glad to see that in the legislation before us this situation is tackled, to some extent at least, in the provisions regarding proxy voting. My hope is that the new system of voting proposed in the legislation before us will enable many workers who cannot now vote in their home constituencies to have a vote there. That is better than the system we have had, to the extent that something is better than nothing.

I hope that if this legislation passes it will succeed in achieving a truer political expression of the people in many areas of Canada where industrial workers are often removed from their home base at election time. I wonder whether fuller consideration might not be given to this aspect of the proposed amendments to the Canada Elections Act. It may be that we should urge that the matter be referred back to the committee for further consideration to see whether what is put before us will be practical in solving the voting problem of a great many industrial workers.

I commend very highly the provisions for proxy voting for incapacitated people, the blind and those who have physical disabilities which prevent them from getting out to the polls and voting by themselves. I think the proxy vote will be very beneficial for those people, for the electoral system and for the country.

In connection with what is proposed in regard to the service vote, the members of our party—and I imagine many members from other parties—have long questioned the situation where any votes in an election are made public, where a group of voters have had their votes made public. I refer, of course, to the fact that in a federal election there is a service vote and after the election the result of that vote is tabulated. We are all familiar with the news headlines stating that the armed services vote went this way or that way. I object to that: I think it infringes on the right to secrecy of ballot. I think this practice should have been stopped before now.

My colleague, the usually well-informed, excellent and astute member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) made two or three suggestions today when he was speaking on this measure. I say he is usually well informed, astute and wise, but personally I wonder at some of the proposals he made. As I understood him, he would set different restrictions or regulations on the reduction of the voting age from 21 to 18 years. He felt this was a good move. He suggested that in order to qualify for the franchise, younger people should be required to perform a useful public service. I do not believe in that, Mr. Speaker. If we set qualifications with regard to who should vote, they should be applied equally to adults as well as to the young. If the franchise is extended on an age basis, this principle should be universally applied.

I may say I am surprised to find myself so much in contradiction with what my colleague said today. He also suggested that the franchise be extended to the inmates of penal servitude institutions. His idea is that this would encourage people in prison to feel they were truly citizens because they could take part in our democratic processes. I am of the opposite view. People in these institutions have yet to prove themselves citizens in the full sense of the word, much as we may wish them to become that. Rather than give them the same rights as citizens who are law respecters, I believe we should maintain the present situation and not extend the franchise to those in penal institutions until they have served their term of imprisonment.

As I say, I am surprised at the hon. member's suggestions. I admire and usually respect the judgment and viewpoints of my colleague. But this goes to illustrate the very interesting aspects of the legislation. I support much of what is proposed in the bill. It represents a step forward. We in our party will have a number of amendments to propose, and we will do so in the hope of improving the reforms which we have been discussing.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Canada Elections Act, which undoubtedly ranks among the best in the world, is to allow every eligible citizen to exercise freely his right to vote.

Some time ago, a special committee was instructed to consider this legislation, and without having been closely involved in its proceedings, I have no hesitation in saying that its members have surely done a fine job, and that they deserve our consideration. All their efforts aimed at one thing, to make our act even more effective, if possible.

Many recommendations of the committee have been incorporated to the bill before the House, and I support them with a great deal of satisfaction. Other recommendations I view with less enthusiasm, while I am in total disagreement with some others. I agree with the committee that in our day and age, young people of 18 should be enfranchised and allowed to make their views known.

Until recently, we have always considered young people eligible only to the privilege of defending the country. But the maturity they have shown—and this must be admitted—entitles them to be recognized as full fledged members of our democratic society, and I am pleased to see that the committee has decided to grant them franchise.

I am also in favour of the steps taken to improve the voting procedures for the armed forces. We often have to wait several days to learn the final results of the vote in some constituencies. Needless to say that those delays result in real inconvenience, not only for the candidates themselves, but also for the population. The committee therefore deserves our gratefulness and our thanks.

I am not too very keen about the proposal which would allow vote by proxy. In my opinion, such a step would give rise to many abuses. The intent of the legislation should not be criticized, but evil-minded persons should be prevented, especially at election time, from committing abuses and even depriving certain persons of their franchise, because of the proxy vote.

Before granting proxy voting, all aspects of the matter should be considered because in each election, there are always some trouble makers who take advantage of elections to do their own little business.

The law should be as good as it can be because there will always be some ill-intentioned people to get around it. If the law enables those sad specimens of humanity to carry on their activities, I recommend that we reconsider the matter in order to fill this gap in the legislation.

I would be in favor of establishing temporary polls in hospitals or similar institutions. This would enable people who until now have always been prevented from voting to do so without any worry, knowing that they will not run the risk of having their name struck from the electoral list by unknown persons who would vote in their place, since they could not cast their ballot at the ordinary polling station.

I am also in favour of indicating political affiliations on ballots. In addition, the address of candidates should still appear on ballots. It could be added in small print, which would enable the electors to know with whom they are dealing because, in any election, there may be catapulted candidates. As a rule, people in our electoral ridings do not like them.

I see across from me the hon. member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance) who, like myself, had to deal with a catapulted candidate. He defeated him at the political convention held in his riding, I myself defeated a like candidate in the election. I do not doubt that we are both happy with the results of the 1968 election. Of course, I am only voicing a personal opinion.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that even though a candidate does not belong to a group with a slate of 75 candidates, his affiliation to a party should appear on the ballot. If often happened in the past that for one reason or another legitimate candidates were not chosen at a political convention but were nevertheless elected as independent members. It would therefore mean discrimination if we set at 75 the minimum number of candidates of a political party before party affiliation could be mentioned on the ballot.

Along with many others, I would favour a shorter election campaign. Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, how exhausting it is, especially for party leaders, to travel across Canada. With the present media at our disposal, that is, radio, television and newspapers, I think that we might with advantage shorten election campaigns because they are exhausting, and sometimes we end up so weakened physically that it takes months to recover.

As for the identity card and the permanent list of electors, I think that a lot more time will be needed to consider the merits of those two proposals.

There would surely be some advantages in carrying an identity card and in establishing a permanent electors list. But I wonder if we have made enough progress to introduce these practices, and if it would not be more advisable to postpone those projects in order to look more fully into the matter.

As for election expenses, I am in favour of some degree of control in this connection. I came to that conclusion mostly after the last election campaign during which I went through an astounding experience. Everybody knows that my opponent was a minister and apparently, his supporters were quite determined to get him elected at all costs, because the methods used in St. Hyacinthe by my opponent took us back to the bad old days. In fact, I would not dare to use some of these methods. It was not at all edifying. But enough said. However, I would like at least these things to be put on record.

I could cite numerous examples and I feel I have to tell you what happened at the Hotel-Dieu of Saint-Hyacinthe, on the morning of the polling day in 1968, around nine o'clock, when a busload of teen-agers invaded the Hotel-Dieu and scattered through the various floors of the hospital. At that time, the hospital employees were helping old people to wash and dress. These oldsters were taken without any more ado to the poll set up in the hospital. Some people believed that such tactics would be to the advantage of my opponent, but out of 727 eligible voters, I won by a majority of 225 votes, in spite of the candies and gifts distributed to the hospital personnel a few days before the poll.

Must I recall that during the last elections, a federal minister has been defeated by the electors of Saint-Hyacinthe, and needless to say, to my great satisfaction. As I was saying at the beginning of my remarks, no efforts have been spared, although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came twice to visit my riding. A number of ministers also came to visit my riding. Several senators spent a week or two there, going from "door to door" and in spite of all that, as in the constituency of Gamelin, the "catapulted" candidate was not accepted.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to make concerning this bill. I thank you.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and a duty for me to rise today and express my views on the bill now before us, Bill C-215 entitled "An Act respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members to the House of Commons".

I am not at all in agreement with the previous speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) when he claims that election campaigns are exhausting. In my opinion, they are not exhausting because it is a good opportunity to visit each voter personally.

First of all, I should like to commend the government on the proposed changes to the Canada Elections Act through this bill as a whole. It is very important that the Elections Act be as impartial as possible and that is the purpose of most of the amendments brought forward. I do say "most of the amendments". Indeed, I would like to draw the attention of the House on clause 13 of this bill with which I entirely disagree.

The second part of this item reads as follows, and I quote:

> —any new party that wishes to be identified on the ballot papers must have candidates officially nominated in 75 electoral districts in Canada on the 28th day before polling day.

I strongly object to the second part, because I feel it is not up to the government to decide which party will be or will not be an official one according to the number of candidates of that party running in an election. If we do not amend this item, we will rightly be able to accuse the government of discrimination against the people seeking to elect a group of individuals who might be as efficient as any member of any party.

I should like to draw the attention of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) on clause 13 and ask him to delete the figure of 75 in the second part of the item and to replace it by: "a minimum of 10 to 20 per cent". I think the same suggestion was made by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin).

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council stated in the House, on May 27, that the drawing up of a permanent electors list would cost $13 million to the government and that, therefore, he rejected that possibility.

I know that it is sought in the act to be as fair as possible, but you will agree with me that many irregularities take place at election time. I feel therefore that we must absolutely find a solution which would encourage honesty at election time, and I endorse the views of many a member who would make it compulsory to carry an identity card that the elector would have to show to the clerk and to the representatives of the various parties, failing which he would have to sign an affidavit or to take the oath under clause 39. I believe that this amendment to the act would protect the elector and eliminate frequent frauds.

The amendments to clause 4 provide that when it has been necessary to suspend voting at a polling station on polling day by reason of a particular circumstance, the Chief Electoral Officer is empowered to extend the hours of voting at the polling station beyond the hour fixed for the closing of the poll.

I feel we should set a closing time for the polling stations, otherwise there might be delays in knowing the final results for the riding concerned, and this could influence the vote of those who might vote after learning the results in other polls of the same riding or neighbouring ridings.

In closing, I should like to congratulate the government for having inserted section 14 in the bill now under study. I am very pleased to welcome this new concept of maturity in our people. I feel that Canadians between 18 and 21 can doubtless be considered as being mature people.

In our modern world, where communications media are lightning-fast, where education has become compulsory and accessible to almost every one, and where we feel an overall awakening in our young people, I feel that it is very wise to allow them to use the fundamental right of man, that of choosing his administrators.

I have heard many people say they believe those young people would vote according to the opinions of the group rather than according to the personal value of a candidate.

I believe we are all aware of the influence of opinion polls prior to elections, of the part played by the psychological climate of a community which influences the vote of numerous electors. I believe young Canadians will vote with far more seriousness, which will prompt politicians to present more realistic platforms than in the past, in order to solve the problems we have to cope with.

Students are often much more critical than older people. They are looking for faults and they find them. Being very active, whenever they dedicate themselves to a cause, they do it thoroughly, which could give a more rational and realistic meaning to our elections.

I believe however that we should find ways of letting people know what is going on in the House. That question deserves consideration.

Once again, I congratulate the government for inserting in the bill clause 14 which gives the franchise to every person of 18.

However, I think that we should consider the majority at 18 years of age which would grant privileges in all other fields: insurance, licenses and the right to go into beverage rooms. We should have more confidence in our young Canadians who want to grow up with a sense of participation in the life of the community as full-fledged Canadians.

In closing, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council to give us the assurance that the report of the committee set up to study election expenses will not be left to gather dust because I am convinced that as long as we have not "tamed" the money which runs freely during election campaigns, it will still remain the main asset.

I should like to repeat some words spoken by my colleague from Lotbinière who sat on the committee set up to study the Elections Act and who stated on Wednesday May 27:

> I say and I repeat that until we overcome the problem of money in politics, until we give the same rights to all political parties insofar as money is concerned, as long as the candidates of the various political parties are enslaved by money during election campaigns and as long as governments kowtow to finance, democracy will only be a farce—
> There are perhaps many young people and older people too who believe less and less in democracy, because they know as well as I do that money is the master in politics.

As far as I am concerned, although money may not be the determining factor, it is no doubt one of the most powerful tools.

> That is why I can only urge that specific regulations be annexed with regard to the expenses incurred and authorized by political parties during an election campaign.

I therefore whole heartedly endorse the statements of my colleague and I hope that the President of the Privy Council will take good notice of the statements I have just quoted and will make a point of taking action in this respect for it is a question of the utmost importance.

[English]

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the House very long. There are one or two points that I should like to bring to the attention of the House. I agree with many of the changes in this new Elections Act which have the effect of extending the franchise. I have one suggestion to make to the government in that regard. It seems a little incongruous to me that three provinces grant the franchise at age 18 and three provinces grant it at age 19, but according to provincial statutes, in order to become a full citizen one must be 21 years of age. You must be 21 to sign contracts and do all the other things that go with becoming a full citizen. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is much more important to young people to be accepted as full, first-class citizens than it is to be handed in such a patronizing way the sop of the vote at age 18.

Our young people have not, in my opinion, particularly pressed for the franchise. I suggest that what they want is to be recognized; they want to be involved. The young people I know want to accept responsibility. I suggest they should be made to feel they are citizens. We should not just throw them a sop. I have a suggestion to make to the government. I hope they will act upon it and take the initiative in this regard. At the next federal-provincial conference the government should recommend that when our young people are granted the franchise they should also be given the responsibility of full citizenship.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate on Bill C-215 I wish to set forth my ideas with regard to this lengthy document which encompasses 355 pages. I shall take a minute or two to enunciate some of my ideas. Bill C-215 escapes many of the very pressing problems with regard to Canadian elections which it should face squarely. It does come to grips with the question of the privileges of teenagers with regard to elections. It lowers the voting age from 21 to 18 years of age. However, it does not come to grips with the question of election expenses.

If hon. members wish to check Hansard they will see I opposed a private member's bill which suggested that the government should pay election expenses. I made a thorough study of the report of the election expenses committee which was set up some time ago. Two very prominent members of this House were on that committee. I refer to the former leader of the CCF Party, Mr. Coldwell, and the former member for Calgary South, Mr. Smith. That committee comprised five members. After studying the whole question of election expenses the committee made some very worth-while recommendations. Bill C-215 does not incorporate some very good recommendations that were made to previous Parliaments, to this Parliament and which will no doubt be made to future Parliaments. Bill C-215 should not be passed by this House without an exhaustive study of the report of that committee.

The committee made a number of recommendations, including the appointment of a commissioner of elections. It was suggested that a commissioner of elections should set a limit on how much time should be spent by each candidate on television and radio, and how much space he should have in the daily press. The main concern of that committee was that money should not buy a seat in this House; money should not have the direct influence that it sometimes appears to have during elections; money should not have the influence in Canada that it sometimes appears to have in our neighbouring country to the south. This commissioner was to rule that each party should be given so much time on television and radio and so much space in the daily press, and having acquired over 25 per cent of the votes the government should underwrite a certain amount of the cost of the election for the various candidates.

When this concept was initially introduced in a private member's bill six or seven years ago, I spoke against it. At that time I had just been re-elected. In the election campaign there were six candidates in my riding, some with party affiliations, some without party affiliations, some founding new parties and some running as independents. I felt this concept would be impossible to administer and to underwrite. After reading and understanding how the committee's report could be implemented, I feel there is much in it that should be considered by this House. I am disappointed that Bill C-215 does not encompass more of the desires and wishes of that committee.

We are fast approaching a period in this country when the private citizen is being deprived of the power and strength of his vote. This is because it is becoming assimilated with cliques and the power of money. There is a mercenary strength of ideas and a mercenary strength of personal gain within this concept. If this concept proliferates and is further expounded, democracy in its true sense will be destroyed. This is the greatest omission from Bill C-215.

The bill is more than 300 pages long and it might well have encompassed more of the principles enunciated by the royal commission. Many people are especially concerned about two or three of the principles set out in the bill. The one that most people latch upon is that the voting age should be reduced from 21 to 18. I was first elected at the age of 30 and I have long felt an affinity with youth, an affinity with change, an affinity for the notion that young people have a great many ideas which should be incorporated in legislation and readily grasped by the leaders of our society and by this chamber.

I shall not try to convince you, Mr. Speaker that I wholly endorse the setting of the voting age at 18. While I have no intention of opposing the reduction of the voting age, I would have preferred it to be 19 years. My reasons are simply explained. Young people can hardly learn the full meaning of responsibility unless they have taken upon themselves some manner of responsibility. It is true that the age at which young people graduate from high school or leave the home is usually in the neighbourhood of 18 years. But the period between the age of 18 and the age of 19 is usually a time of tremendous transition during which immense advances are made in knowledge, wisdom and a sense of responsibility.

I shall not attempt to explain why the age of 21 was fixed as the voting age, the age at which young people had a full sense of responsibility. I say quite simply that I would much prefer the age to be 19 rather than 18 years established in this measure. From my own personal experience I can say that I went through a tremendous transitional period between 18 and 19 years of age. I have now seen my offspring pass through the same period and noted the progress he made during that important year. I think he has acquired some knowledge and that he will continue to acquire knowledge, wisdom and responsibility as he progresses in life having left, partly or wholly, the environment of the home.

It may well be said that young people of 18 in most cases are still dependent upon their home environment and that this is bound to influence their judgment as to the way they should vote. If we really mean what we say in this legislation, we are asking these young people to judge the issues as individuals, not to vote on the advice of the mother, the father or others in the home. In my judgment an individual decision could best be expected after a young man or a young woman had left the parental home for even a temporary period.

Mr. Rose: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner: Certainly.

Mr. Rose: I was very interested in the hon. member's remarks and I should like to ask whether he intends to come out against the concept of lowering the voting age to 18. Further, I should like to ask whether he has in mind any specific knowledge based on scientific studies as to the age at which young people acquire the knowledge to make meaningful electoral choices.

Mr. Horner: The question is an interesting one. I thought I had elaborated at length. I even though I had repreated myself a couple of times. I see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who is well used to my repetitious remarks on a number of subjects and who has apparently got the drift of what I meant to say to the House, is nodding his head in approval of what I have said.

Mr. Olson: No. Just agreement as to the way you said it.

Mr. Horner: I can testify as one who experienced, not too many years ago, the full meaning of responsibility. I was fully within an environment of my own, I was living entirely within my own earning capacity, and I had sufficient knowledge to pass judgment on the issues raised at elections when I was 18 years of age. Yet only after I had reached 30, with the passing of my father, which was a great and tremendous loss, did I realize I was really alone and accepted, maybe, the full responsibility for my own thoughts and judgments. One progresses in knowledge and wisdom throughout the period of adulthood to the point at which one is conscious of one's full responsibilities.

Though I was fully responsible for my finances and credit at the age of 18, it was many years before I realized I was not acting solely on my own judgment, without the help of my environment or without the help of the creditors upon whom I leaned. The reason I mention creditors is that very few people at the age of 18 are leaning upon many creditors. They may well be leaning upon the creditors of the family, but they do not have financial responsibilities of their own because they have not yet left the environment of the home. However, at 19 many young people have left the home and have borrowed money in their own name and had to pay it back.

There is one other provision that I would support, and that is the placing of party affiliation on ballots. We in western Canada have no hesitation in accepting this concept. When a person runs as a candidate of a political party, his party affiliation should be on the ballot. Although I think there will be wide acceptance of this provision, some exception may be taken to it in the province of Quebec and in the Maritimes where from time to time it has been the policy to nominate members of like name. But in Western Canada we like to face an election issue as squarely as we can and judge the matter accordingly.

In closing may I say I have no hesitation in voting for the bill and in trusting the judgment of the 18-year olds, particularly the 18-year olds in western Canada whom I know best. They have been raised in an environment that has schooled them well in the art of politics, and they judge just as wisely as many people throughout Canada have judged them in the past.

I rose to put my reservations on the record. I believe that one reaches a transitional period between the ages of 18 and 19 when one is better able to cope with the political jargon thrown at one during an election campaign, and judge it accordingly. At the age of 19 one has left, partly or wholly, the environment of the home and is able to judge an issue as one sees it in the context of his own environment.

[Translation]

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity of speaking on Bill C-215. It is somehow difficult for me to take the floor after having listened to my two good friends, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon).

[English]

I should like to make a few points. I submit that the bill before the House is of extreme importance. In spite of what the members of the opposition have said this afternoon, the bill makes a start in changing the electoral procedures of this country. This bill makes provision, for the first time, for university students such as those at the University of Waterloo—with which I am very familiar—who spend four months at university and four months in practical training, to exercise their franchise. It is just as important for these students to exercise their franchise as it is for the members of the armed forces of Canada and the longshoremen about whom we heard this afternoon, as well as many others. In spite of what the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) said, if at 18 someone is old enough to serve his country, he is old enough to vote for the people he wants to govern his country.

I am not going to delay the progress of this bill because I know the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and others are anxious to proceed with consideration of the legislation in Committee of the Whole. However, there is one other matter that I think is very important. The members of the New Democratic Party have raised the old bogey about vested interests tying themselves to certain political parties. I think what is more important is that the 20 million citizens of Canada take an interest in their country, align themselves with one of the three or four political parties in Canada and work for that party and the future of the country. I do not care whether they join the Conservative party. I have many friends in the Conservative party. which has provided many years of good government in this country. Neither am I interested in whether people work for the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party or the Raillement Créditiste. But I do think that those who make donations to political parties should be allowed by the Department of National Revenue to deduct such donations from their income tax. There are a few people in Canada who join one of the political parties, but the majority of the people of the country could not care less what happens to any political party or to the Dominion of Canada.

The white paper on tax reform has been published and there are many important problems about which decisions have to be made. The Liberal party is supposed to have a tremendous fund, but I have been unable to find it. Union organizers work for the New Democratic Party, but no record is kept of their hourly contributions, though it cannot be denied that these contributions must be taken in to account. That is all I can say.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Howard (Skeena): What about union organizers who work for the Liberal party?

Mr. Hymmen: We have a bill presently before us which will provide the opportunity for those over 18, who are good enough to fight for their country, to vote for those who will represent their country. We have provided an opportunity for these young people—some of whom may be students at the University of Waterloo, who take an orientation course and are part-time at the university and part time in industry—to exercise their franchise. Someone mentioned longshoremen this afternoon. We have taken an important step in the interests of responsible government, but let us give a great deal of thought before we go into the second stage of our consideration of the bill, which the President of the Privy Council mentioned, before we decide on the important question of political expenses.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Would the hon. member permit a question before he concludes his remarks?

Mr. Hymmen: Certainly.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): With the consent of the hon. gentleman I ask whether he would include within his proscription regarding so-called union organizers working for a political party, in determining the cost, a union organizer of whom I know, a former member of the Trotskyite group and a member of the Communist Party who worked assiduously for the Liberals during the last election?

Mr. Hymmen: I am not familiar with this matter and I am not at all embarrassed by the question because I do not know what goes on in the province of British Columbia. All I know is that we have our own problems in Ontario and the hon. member has his in B.C.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this very important bill in order to complete what has been said so far. I intend to be brief.

Like others, I cannot but support this measure because of the importance and the quality of some of its amendments.

I am in favour of the provisions in the bill which are aimed at lowering the voting age to 18. In my opinion, since young people are more dynamic and more competent, this responsibility which we are giving them will ensure our country of a co-operation that will never force hon. members to regret this gesture.

I am among those who believe that these increasingly active young people will be able to use their franchise in a positive way, which will result in a better and greater participation of the Canadian electorate.

I also want to mention that I am particularly interested in the representation at polls. I do hope that at the committee stage we will be able to amend the legislation in such a way as to allow the official opposition party to be officially represented at polls.

Presently, the Elections Act authorizes government members to reserve the right to designate their representatives at polls. In a "just society", it would be perfectly just to let the official opposition designate a representative at polls, since the opposition parties which do not always have the necessary election funds are without a representative at those polls. I think that all the members recognize that the government party as well as the party of the official opposition should be represented.

I hope that in a near future, at least before the next elections, we will have passed a legislation on the financing of election campaigns.

Heaven knows how hard it is to organize an election campaign. I do not think that I am the only one to complain. We all know that the party in power can always fill its election fund more easily. I take the liberty of inviting all members to seriously consider the opportunity of introducing a bill to provide any candidate with a per capita subsidy, such as exists for instance in Quebec for provincial elections, where an amount of 50 cents per elector is granted to official party candidates if they obtain a certain percentage of the vote. This makes it possible to pinpoint legitimate candidates. As certain candidates are financed by the government, the election campaign is run in a freer and fairer way.

I hope that we might at least benefit from such financing over the next election campaign. I am hopeful that a legislation to that effect will enable any serious candidate advocating the platform of a recognized political party to be adequately financed and to undertake an election campaign with all possible freedom.

I do not know of a better way to win the confidence of the people than to allow those candidates to make election campaigns financed by the state, at least in part. A legislation ought to be passed to guarantee the population that a candidate can run without having his hands tied, without being at the mercy of some speculators, as it has been too often the case unfortunately.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks which I wanted to make, while taking the opportunity to say that I am in favour of the bill. This will prove once more that an opposition member can, in a very wise and concrete way, endorse good government legislation, and at the same time hope that eventually the members of the party in power will approve of the good suggestions from opposition members.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, just a few words to point out that the legislation under study is important, though it contains some legal fictions.

It gives franchise to 18 years olds. It obviously expresses our faith in the maturity of our young people, and it might lead them to realize the importance of the responsibility which is being handed to them.

We should also point out that when franchise is given at 18 years this represents a legal majority which in some provinces is fixed at 21 years. In fact, at age 21, a Quebec citizen is empowered to go to law, to act validly without the backing of a person who has reached majority or of a guardian appointed for that purpose.

We know that in Quebec, an 18-year old who wants to bring an action against somebody must have a guardian designated by a family council before he can act. If anybody under 21 is prosecuted, a guardian must again be chosen by the family council and defend the minor person's interests.

I think that when the committee has made a detailed study of this bill, it will have to ensure that the provinces facing legal difficulties regarding majority will modify their legislation accordingly, so that the rights granted to people coming of age at 21 in Quebec, should be granted also to an 18-year old. In other provinces, a citizen comes of age at 18 years, as is the case in British Columbia, I believe. But, if we want to enfranchise the citizen at 18 years, we must also give him the contractual and legal responsibilities proceeding from the laws in force in Quebec and in other provinces.

I am not against giving the franchise to electors of 18 years, but I say that the committee should provide with this right all the legal effects involved in the coming of age according to the Quebec Civil Code.

Under this bill, a person of 18 will be entitled to vote or to run as a candidate in an election. However, this right will only have any sense provided that under the Civil Code this person is given the corresponding legal competency.

In fact, young people of 18 or less are teenagers, legally incapacitated. They cannot undertake legal actions or sign a deed before a notary without the assistance of a person of full age appointed by the family council. They are, as I said earlier, legally incapacitated.

If we want to give the young a sense of responsibilities by granting them the right to vote at 18, the provinces should be asked to amend their legislation with regard to majority. As for the Quebec government, it should lower the full legal age from 21 to 18. The bill contains a legal fiction that I find strange. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) who is responsible for the bill—

Mr. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is rather the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Asselin: —the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) who is responsible for the bill should consult the provincial governments where the legal age is still 21 in order to know whether they would be prepared to lower the legal age to 18.

That is all I had to say about this bill. I shall deal again with it when it is discussed in the committee of the whole. I hope that in the meantime, the President of the Privy Council will be able to tell us whether he got in touch with certain provinces on this matter and whether those provinces are prepared to amend their legislation concerning the legal age in order to grant to the young people of 18 all the legal powers ensuing from the franchise.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I must advise the House that if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to comment on a number of the themes which have been recurrent throughout this debate, and in particular to refer to some of the possible amendments which have been put forward. First, as to the comment on the physical size of the bill, I agree it is a monster. I think, for those who are not lawyers, this is the best evidence of why a regulation-making power is desirable under our statutes. This is one bill in which it had been decided, long past in this Parliament, that we would not have the details spelled out by way of regulations. For this reason we have to include every comma within the statute itself.

Another subject touched on by many hon. members was that of a permanent voters' list. Hon. members who spoke on this question included the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont), the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and a number of others. I would say again, as I did in opening the debate, that the decision not to proceed with a system of a permanent voters' list was not taken lightly. It was only taken after consideration of the position taken by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in both sessions of this Parliament and, as I said, in both cases the committee recommended against a permanent voters' list system.

One of the suggestions put forward by the hon. member for Lotbiniere was the provision of a "carte d'identité obligatoire," a card of identity. I am not sure if "obligatoire" would imply that we would have a compulsory registration system. Unfortunately, I gather that the hon. member did not put this proposal before the Standing Committee on either of the two occasions when it considered the question of a permanent voters' list, and therefore I suggest it is a little late in the game for him to be making it now.

The basic reason the committee arrived at its decision was that, as I said in opening the debate, a permanent voters' list risks having fewer voters on the list than is possible with our present system of enumeration before each election campaign. I should like to refer to an interesting authority recently published on this question, by Professor T. H. Qualter of the University of Waterloo, entitled "Canadian Politics".

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Not published yet.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, shortly to be published. On page 29 he sets out statistics in comparing with the percentages of the total voting age populations which are registered on official voters' lists in various jurisdictions. It is interesting to note in the table provided that in three of the Maritime provinces, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, over 95 per cent of the persons of eligible voting age are registered as electors. A further group, including Saskatchewan, Alberta, Quebec and Manitoba, attain between 92 per cent and 95 per cent of the total population of eligible voting age, and the percentage of the total voting age population in Canada as a whole which gets on the voters' list is 91.2 per cent.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Interestingly enough, at the bottom of the list of percentage registration for election purposes is the one province that has a permanent electoral list—British Columbia. While I have said that 91.2 per cent of the persons eligible in Canada generally are on the voters' list with our enumerating system, British Columbia with a permanent electoral list has only 74.5 per cent of the eligible population listed.

Professor Qualter points out on page 29:

> Despite this intensive effort—

He is describing the effort made in British Columbia to add voters to the list,

> —it is quite clear that voluntary registration schemes of the type in use in British Columbia produce far less satisfactory results than the enumeration procedure used elsewhere in Canada. To this general criticism one qualification ought perhaps to be added. If the continuous roll were more widely used in Canada, so that the procedure became more familiar, then it might be more successful. As it is, people moving to British Columbia from other provinces will have been enumerated in the past and will in many cases continue to expect to be enumerated. Similarly, electors within the province itself will have been enumerated for federal elections and not all will be fully aware that something more is expected of them in provincial elections.

I have already indicated, in reference to the system in the United Kingdom, that one of the shortcomings of a permanent electoral list is that even on theoretical grounds, and without a compulsory registration provision such as there is in Australia, you do not get a very high percentage of the population on the list and the list goes stale quite quickly. Even in Australia, with the compulsory registration system, up to 5 per cent of the population may not be registered. From the standpoint of making sure that the maximum number of eligible persons get on the voting list, our system of enumeration can claim an advantage over the permanent list system. I assume that is the reason why the committee decided, on two separate occasions, not to recommend the permanent voters' list system to the House.

Extensive reference was made to the question of election expenses. I would repeat the remarks I made at the start of the debate, that the timetable that I set before the House on April 1, 1969—which may be found at 7359 of Hansard for the last session—dictated a certain order of priorities for dealing with election problems. That order of priorities, which I believe was generally accepted in the House, established that in the first place these general changes to the Elections Act should be considered by committee first and then dealt with by bill in the House, this to be followed by changes with regard to election expenses.

The reason I set out at that time—and I think it is worth while to remind the House of it—is that the Chief Electoral Officer has made it clear that when and if the voting age is changed to 18, the electorate will be increased by about one million electors and he will only have under two years to prepare for the next federal election. On the other hand, he feels that with a better election expenses system such as that recommended by the Barbeau Commission, he could be ready in about a year's time. I think, therefore, it is obvious that prior considerations should be given to the general changes in the Elections Act.

We have drawn up the terms of reference to establish a special committee and I expect in the next day or so a notice will be appearing in my name on the Order Paper. A number of amendments have been suggested, a useful one by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) to include under the proxy voting system the occupation of loggers. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) added a number of other occupations to that suggestion. There are various suggestions which we would be interested in hearing in committee, so perhaps somebody will be moving an amendment not only to refer to specific categories but perhaps in more general terms to the effect that any person who by the nature of his occupation cannot attend at the advance polls or on election day in his own poll should have the privilege of proxy voting.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) made reference to a change which had some appeal to me, though I cannot say to what extent it was considered in committee. That is to give to the service electors the further anonymity of the vote to the extent it can be given by combining service electoral results and those of the advance polls. I suspect the number of votes cast by service electors may outweigh the advance polls, but it would be one step further away from identifying this group by electoral results. The House may want to consider such an amendment.

One suggestion which, subject to correction, I do not think has been widely considered by the committee and the House is that made in debate this afternoon by the hon. member for Broadview and the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather), which I believe would find support and may have originated with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). It is that persons incarcerated in jail or penitentiary should not be deprived of the vote. I can well understand the argument behind that proposal. If, indeed, the purpose of the incarceration is part of a rehabilitation program, then they should continue to be treated as citizens within the community. Whatever may have been the former view, perhaps the present practice should not be continued.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be useful if I called particular attention to that suggestion. I hope it will receive publicity, because as far as I know it has not been considered widely in the past and members may wish to focus attention on the proposal so that it may be considered when the bill gets into committee.

I believe the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg) raised a question with respect to the provision which would amend the statute to the extent that at revision one might remove the name of an elector who was wrongfully on the list. He took exception to this, but I think there are good reasons for it. There are many persons who by way of nationality and through the unavoidable ignorance of the enumerators may be included on the electors' list though they do not wish to be. A bizarre incident was brought to my attention by the Chief Electoral Officer which, with our changes, would not occur again. In the last election campaign the entire resident staff of the Australian High Commission was enumerated and put on the electoral list. The interesting thing is that all those members of the High Commission staff who had been resident in Canada for 12 months were entitled to be on the list but, obviously, in the position of a friendly and Commonwealth country they would not wish to exercise the Canadian franchise. But there was no way of correcting the electoral list at revision.

The question was raised that if the age of qualification of candidates and the qualification of electors was to be fixed at 18, why not the qualification for returning officers as well? I will be referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) in a moment, but the answer is that the federal government does not have jurisdiction to reduce the age of legal ability from 21 to 18, or at least the jurisdiction in this regard is disputed. The situation heretofore has been that while no person should feel compelled to contract with an 18-year old candidate, it is basically the problem of the 18-year old candidate being supplied with services, printing and otherwise.

Since the returning officer is a public appointee and has to submit to a strict timetable for having services rendered, particularly printing, we should be certain that in every part of Canada the returning officer would be protected from a reluctance on the part of business people to deal with him because he was not of the age of majority. So until the age of majority is reduced below 21, the government deemed it wise to retain the age at 21 for that purpose. There will be many other detailed suggestions which I am sure will be dealt with as we go through the bill.

May I refer at this point to a discussion which has taken place among the representatives of the parties with respect to the procedure that might be followed in the clause by clause study. I think there will be general agreement to a procedural order whereby the consideration of the committee could be focused first on those changes which are sidelined in the bill and which involve a novelty in the Elections Act as compared with the previous act and, second, on those particular sections to which hon. members would like to offer amendments. On that basis I would propose a procedural order along the following lines:

That when Bill C-215, an act respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members to the House of Commons, is being considered in committee of the whole, only such clauses, and other provisions, or parts thereof, that propose the enactment of new or amended provisions in relation to the Canada Elections Act and which are indicated by vertical rules shall be open for consideration and amendment;

That all other clauses and other provisions, or parts thereof, when called from the Chair shall be deemed to have been adopted without amendment or debate;

Provided that any clause, subclause or other provision referred to in paragraph two above, may be brought under consideration by any member who rises and forthwith proposes a motion to amend any such clause, subclause or other provision of the bill that may be accepted by the Chair.

To put it more simply, the motion proposes that the debate in Committee of the Whole be confined to the clauses, subclauses and parts of the bill marked vertically, plus such other parts as a member on rising may indicate he wishes to amend. On that basis I would commend the bill to the committee. Perhaps the question could be put to the House as to whether a motion in those terms is acceptable.

Mr. Macquarrie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think we are agreeable to this suggestion. There have been discussions and it was my understanding that we would obtain a moral commitment from the minister that in this part of the session we would institute proceedings to move toward the setting up of machinery under which the other parts of the act relevant to election expenses would be examined. If that is the case, we will go along with the suggestion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I confirm this again. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) made a comment on the draft that I had prepared in this matter. I was not able to speak to him in the latter part of today. I might mention that we are having a House Leaders' meeting at 9.30 a.m. tomorrow and that motion will be brought forward. I think it would be desirable if the Elections Expenses Committee could meet before the House rises for the summer. The plan is to give the public notice of its proceedings in the fall.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the Government House Leader with respect to how we are to deal with the bill in Committee of the Whole is agreeable. I have one thought but it has nothing to do with unanimity in accepting the suggestion. It has been some time since the House proceeded on a bill in Committee of the Whole, and some time since the House considered a bill of such complexity. It is sometimes the practice of the Chairman to proceed rather quickly from clause to clause of a bill of this nature. Clause 18 of the bill takes up 41 pages. It has innumerable subclauses. I think that when we are in committee the Chairman should not proceed with too much dispatch; hon. members should have the opportunity of finding their place in the bill and indicating which parts they wish to amend. I know from past experience that there is sometimes a tendency for us to move along rather quickly. If we bear that in mind, the suggestion is quite agreeable.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems to me that the motion proposed by the Government House Leader needs two more words. I say that because a situation could arise under which, if clause 80, say, were amended, we would have to turn back and make a consequential change to clause 46. I am plucking hypothetical examples out of the air. I suggest that the last paragraph of the motion should be changed so that the relevant part reads, "may be brought under consideration or reconsideration." The two new words are "or reconsideration," which are necessary because the motion does not refer to any consequential amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) moves:

That when Bill C-215, an act respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members to the House of Commons, is being considered in committee of the whole, only such clauses, and other provisions, or parts thereof, that propose the enactment of new or amended provisions in relation to the Canada Elections Act and which are indicated by vertical rules shall be open for consideration and amendment;

That all other clauses and other provisions, or parts thereof, when called from the Chair shall be deemed to have been adopted without amendment or debate;

Provided that any clause, subclause or other provision referred to in paragraph two above, may be brought under consideration or reconsideration by any members who rises and proposes a motion to amend any such clause, subclause or other provision of the bill that may be accepted by the Chair.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The question now is that the bill be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SHIPPING—SAFETY STANDARDS OF FOREIGN-REGISTERED SHIPS OPERATING IN CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on June 3, I raised the following question in the House of Commons, as reported on page 7682 of Hansard:

In view of the reported statement by Dr. McTaggart-Cowan that the safety standards on ships flying flags of convenience are disgraceful and that if similar standards existed with application to aircraft there would be a crash a week, I would ask the minister whether his department has laid down any regulations with respect to standards applicable to ships operating in Canadian waters, especially for those ships carrying cargoes such as oil which would cause serious environmental damage should a sinking occur?

The minister partly answered this question two days later when a similar question was asked in the House. However, I welcome this opportunity to expand on the very important principle involved, for Canada must move quickly and effectively to protect our coastal environment from the type of costly damage which we witnessed in the recent sinking of the oil tanker Arrow. Canada should insist that all shipping plying our territorial waters be adequately equipped for navigational purposes and conform to a high standard of safety regulations.

A few days ago Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who heads the present task force which was set up to investigate and clean up the oil spill from the Arrow indicated that there should be an international agreement controlling the equipment and operation of oil tankers similar to the regulations which control commercial aircraft. He went on to say:

This flags of convenience business is one of the sloppiest damn things I ever saw. If the commercial airlines ran their business like the tankers do you would be crashing a DC-8 every week and the world would say stop it.

He went on to point out that in 1944 the International Civil aviation Agreement was written, which sets out safety standards, requirements for navigation aids and control of commercial aircraft. A commercial aircraft, wherever it flies, is under its control although the essential prerogatives of the pilot are preserved in emergencies. All the nations of the world adhere to the International Civil Aviation Agreement. He felt there was no reason why countries which co-operate in the aviation field could not get together in the marine field. This is certainly a desirable objective and one which we should press for vigorously.

The flags of convenience ruling allows a vessel to cperate under the shipping regulations of a country with lax rules if it flies the flag of that country. It is an easy way out for any unscrupulous owner or company to avoid those standards of safety and operation upon which their own country might insist. It allows shipping to ply international waters with dangerous cargoes whether the ship is seaworthy or not. Over the next few years we will see immense damage to the world environment unless steps are taken to remedy the situation.

I feel Canada must lay down some very strict regulations for the shipping that enters our territorial waters. Full and adequate safety standards must be insisted upon. We want no more incidents such as we witnessed in the sinking of the Arrow on the east coast. It does not make sense to ban the drilling for oil in the Gulf of Georgia if we allow oil tankers with inadequate navigational aids, etc., into the area. The risk of another costly oil spill in our territorial waters will be greatly reduced if adequate amendments are made at an early date to the Canada Shipping Act.

In the international field, of course, we should press vigorously for adequate safety standards in shipping because the ecology of the oceans is also our concern.

It seems that this is the appropriate time for Canada to examine its need for a merchant marine. All the ingredients are present for a successful move into this field. We are one of the greatest importing and exporting nations in the world. We have one of the longest coastlines in the world. We have a slowly dying shipbuilding industry on both the east and west coasts. We have the skilled craftsmen and the workers to operate a shipbuilding industry. It would not only provide employment and a monetary return, but we could build into our merchant marine those safety standards required to give the best possible protection to our coastal areas. I hope this matter, together with adequate safety standards, will be high on the list of priorities at the next session of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) for his interest in pollution.

You may remember that this very afternoon, the member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) introduced a private bill on pollution. We are know that pollution is now the object of very timely studies and comments.

As for the question of the member for Kootenay West, on June 3, the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) asked a very similar question on June 5 last, as reported in Hansard at page 7767, which proves once again the interest of all the members in this matter of pollution.

I should like to recall only a few words of what the minister said in reply to the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I quote:

—In fact, we did so in Brussels in November of last year. In addition, as I have advised the House from time to time, we are presently working on considerable and substantial changes in the Canada Shipping Act which will have the effect of bringing about the improvements that Dr. McTaggart-Cowan along with others, myself included, agreed with.

It is true that recently the famous Arrow incident in Nova Scotia opened many people's eyes. This will encourage the department to bring out more rapidly regulations on pollution.

All hon. members will remember that before the Manhattan undertook its trip, the Department of Transport required that many improvements be made to it before tackling northern ice. Similar measures will apply in the future until such time as the government can introduce its bill on the steps to be taken to avoid pollution.

We cannot but congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) who, during the Brussels conference in November, advocated an international agreement on the steps to be taken to fight pollution. Unfortunately such an agreement could not be concluded during the international conference. However, inside as well as outside the House, the minister said on several occasions that the government would introduce legislation to that effect as soon as possible. The department's officials are engaged at the present time in drafting that legislation and, knowing how the minister feels about it, I am sure that within a short time, perhaps before the end of this session, legislation to establish standards so as to prevent incidents like the one that happened recently in Nova Scotia—I refer to the Arrow—will be passed and that we will thus be able to prevent the pollution we dread so much and which spoils rivers and streams.

Perhaps the hon. member did not expect such an answer, but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The time allowed the Parliamentary Secretary has expired.

NATIONAL PARKS—REQUEST FOR DEVELOPMENT OF FACILITY IN LIGHT OF POLLUTION OF LAKE ERIE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) the following question:

> In the light of the deplorable state of Lake Erie and the need for environmental rehabilitation, and having regard to the fact that the people of Ontario are being barred from using the beaches of Lake Erie, will the minister give consideration to the development of an East Erie National Park?

I welcome this opportunity to enlarge on the urgency of this question and to hear the minister's answer. The need for action by the federal government is based on two imperatives. The first is to be in a position to clean up the pollution of Lake Erie. I quote from an article in the Canadian Churchman, which is the national publication of the Anglican Church in Canada.

> It is no wonder that sometime during the last decade Lake Erie died. The largest fresh water lake in the world is now being turned slowly into a weed-choked swamp. The water near its shoreline cannot be used for cooking or drinking. Not even boiling or chlorination can remove the contamination.

The other imperative is that the urbanized industrial heartland of Ontario, with rapidly expanding population pressure, has no adequate national parks. There are no adequate recreational facilities for the public, especially for those in low-income groups who cannot afford vacations in northern cottages. Ontario has only 12 square miles of national parks, compared with Prince Edward Island which has 7.9. The matter has been fully discussed in a study by Dr. John S. Jackson of Brock University, entitled "Recreational Development and Erie East Lakeshore," in which he says that the public are restricted to narrow road allowances while vast stretches of unused beach lie on either side. He even suggested that private business interests have erected fences into the water to prevent people using their legal right of access to the beaches. My information comes from a brief presented to the federal caucus of the New Democratic Party at Hamilton, by the Association for the Preservation of Erie East Lakefront, whose initials spell APEEL.

I address an urgent appeal to the government on behalf of numerous Canadians living in the Niagara peninsula to deal with the problem in the only way available, by developing an East Erie National Park. If the minister accedes to this plea he will earn the gratitude of numerous Canadians of this and later generations who will by his action be able to enjoy an improved quality of life.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us would agree with the appeal made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), both with its principles and with his desire—a desire that we all share—with respect to what my hon. friend described as the horrible pollution of Lake Erie. There are some problems arising from this, of course. As my hon. friend knows, this government, the government of Ontario and the municipalities concerned are taking steps to make a more direct attack on pollution than by way of establishing a national park, though I am not derogating from this very good suggestion.

One problem is the availability and very high cost of land in this particular area. I do not have the sort of knowledge of the area that my hon. friend has. But as I say, the principle is good. My minister has been very active, as has the government, in the pursuit of more national parks in Canada, and he has indicated that by the year 2000 hopefully we will have a total of 80 to 100 national parks. During the last year three new national parks have been established and there are six or seven presently under negotiation with the provinces.

For example, only last Friday the minister, as part of a series of discussions extending over the last two or three months, discussed with Hon. Rene Brunelle the substantial enlargement of an existing national park in Ontario as well as the establishment of a new park. Only yesterday the minister had the agreement of the province of Quebec to the establishment of a new national park, and there is a second national park now under negotiation in that province. And so it goes across the country. I think there are seven or eight parks now under consideration.

I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood on the importance of establishing national parks in what he described as the heartland of Ontario—this applies to other provinces too—those urbanized areas where people cannot travel some distance to enjoy the facilities of a national park. The minister has held discussions in several provinces along this line and the whole matter is being pursued very actively. I thank the hon. member for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. The matter is an important one; we are conscious of it and indeed are doing a great deal about it.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES—MONTREAL—BOMB EXPLOSIONS—CO-OPERATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE WITH OTHER FORCES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Canadians have the same sense of outrage that we in the House have this evening at the recent bombing activities in Westmount in the city of Montreal. This is what brings the Parliamentary Secretary and myself together for a brief exchange this evening.

It began last Friday when I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), as minister reporting to the House for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, whether he had had an opportunity to check the serious allegations that the RCMP were not co-operating with other police forces in connection with the investigation of the outrages in Montreal in the last few days.

The Solicitor General replied:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker. Immediately I saw the story published in the paper I had this matter checked into and find—

My seatmate, the hon. member for Fundy Royal (Mr. Fairweather), interrupted and asked:

> Is it a canard?

The Solicitor General replied:

> Yes, it is. That is precisely the point, and today's newspapers so indicate.

When the Solicitor General agreed it was a canard I believe he was ducking the question, because I think he was relying on senior officers of the RCMP who could only be expected to say that there was all the co-operation in the world. Yet, sir, a year ago, as Your Honour would well know, in the province of Quebec the Prevost Royal Commission reported about the joint workings of the police forces in that province and singled out for special observation what it regarded as the somewhat secretive work of the RCMP, who apparently set themselves apart from the other police forces there. So my first question to the Parliamentary Secretary is: What has been done to overcome the criticism voiced in the Prevost report?

I do not expect a detailed or full answer. I understand the minister's position. One cannot probe too deeply into matters of this kind. I realize that, but I think that if he could give us and the country a general reassurance it would be helpful. I have checked with members of the press gallery and others who have followed the events of that day in Westmount and in the city of Montreal. I was told the Westmount police chief was sort of tagging along while other police forces rushed on to the new bombings that occurred. He was left behind waiting for his own car to catch up with him. I think the reports of the press about the co-operation, or lack of it, in dealing with this very serious problem in the city of Montreal add to the feeling of disquiet. I am told specifically by the press—and I suppose that I either have to eat my words in this regard or prove them, and if I have an opportunity I feel I can do that—that there is a feeling that the lower levels of those three police forces simply do not get along.

My second question, therefore, to the Parliamentary Secretary is: What sort of thing has been done to see that all levels of these police forces work together? As I have said, sir, I have spoken to people whom I regard as serious journalists, one of them being the best journalist I have worked with in 30 years in that profession, and I count on his word and on his diligence. I think it takes more than the answer that I received the other day to remove the disquiet that I have in my mind.

I should like to say in closing that I have no desire in any way, in making the speech that I do this evening, to give comfort to the people whose activities can only lead to loss of life unless they are caught—and I hope they are caught and put away for a long, long time. But I think we must have some kind of statement for the public I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will now be in a position to give one that everybody across Canada, whether they live in the metropolitan area of Montreal, in Eekum Seekum or in Vernon, B.C., will find reassuring. We hope that in future all the police forces in the Montreal area will act in harmony in dealing with a very serious national problem.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, first, that we all share the hon. member's feeling regarding the recent rash of bombings in Montreal and in the city of Westmount. We all hope this bombing will stop and that the culprits will be brought to justice.

I want to assure the hon. member that the utmost co-operation exists between the RCMP, the provincial police and the municipal police. I am informed that this week a special meeting took place among representatives of these police forces and a co-ordinating committee was set up to exchange information, to try to act in a co-ordinated way against these bombings and to try to achieve joint action in bringing the people responsible to justice.

RCMP services have always been available to all provincial and other legitimate authorities seeking them. Meetings and exchanges of information are always going on, on a general basis. As I say, a special meeting was held this week among representatives of the three police forces, and we hope that by the concerted use of their facilities we will have better prospects of bringing peace to the city of Montreal and to the city of Westmount I share the feelings of the hon. member in this respect. I will bring his remarks to the attention of the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), who may wish to make a further statement. I assure the hon. member that close co-operation is taking place among the three police forces.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON DELAY IN PUBLICATION OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Speaker: On Thursday, May 28, 1970, as recorded at pages 7423-24 of Hansard a question was raised concerning the delay in the publication of proceedings of the standing and other committees of the House. Since then I have looked into the detailed operation of the printing and publication of committee proceedings. Speaking in a general way, I have to state that even in the face of the most difficult circumstances this work is being discharged quite efficiently by the responsible officials of the House of Commons. Of course, there are some shortcomings, as was pointed out by the hon. members who raised the question by way of a point of order. I can give them the assurance that efforts will be made to improve the system and give the best possible service to the committees and to all hon. members.

May I briefly state to the House some of the many and varied problems involved. Initially, it must be said that the translation and printing of the daily Hansard, the Order Paper, Votes and Proceedings and bills, including reprinting of bills as amended by committees, for the use of both Houses must be given priority over our other work. That in itself is a problem of some magnitude, but if reference is made to the translation and printing of blue books such as the estimates, the Auditor General's report and other publications, it will be seen that the problem of co-ordinating the work of the House with the efforts of the translation and printing bureaux is not entirely within our direct administrative authority.

Neither should it be overlooked that a fundamental change in the committee system was effected in January, 1969, halfway through the last session. The full impact of those changes, from an administrative standpoint, has been felt most seriously during the last few weeks. At the end of the last session it was recognized that adequate accommodation and additional staff must be provided. Until that space became available, recruitment and training of staff could not be implemented in the manner thought desirable. That space became available in April of this year when our committee branch and supporting staffs were moved into the Vanguard Building. The actual moving of the staff set the whole pattern of our work back several weeks.

May I now briefly refer to what is entailed in the preparation, translation and printing of committee proceedings. For example, on Tuesday, May 26, 1970—that is, shortly before the matter was raised in the House—no fewer than nine committees were scheduled to meet. Four of those committees scheduled morning, afternoon and evening meetings; the other four scheduled one meeting each on that day. Assuming that no additional meetings were booked, there would be a total of 18 meetings listed for that day. On Thursday, May 28, 1970, ten committees were scheduled to hold 16 meetings, a program comparable with that of Tuesday, May 26, 1970. As a further example, 10 committees and two subcommittees met yesterday and held a total of 22 meetings. When consideration is given to briefs, exhibits and other documents which form part of a committee's printed record, it is reasonable to say that the preparation, translation and printing of committee reports on each of those days was the equivalent of nine daily Hansards in both languages.

It must also be emphasized that it has been the practice to give priority to the proceedings of committees dealing with bills that must be reported back to the House. As of May 28 last, all outstanding copy for the Standing Committee on Agriculture was either in the hands of the translators or the printers. Here again, an effort is being made to provide a priority for the Agriculture Committee's proceedings in respect of Bill C-196, the Canada Grain Act bill.

There is also the question of committees meeting outside the city of Ottawa. Such committees need supporting staff and it will be apparent that the translation and printing processes of publication in regard to such sittings are necessarily slowed down. I need not dwell on the question of subcommittees other than to say that each subcommittee must be staffed and supported in the same manner as a main committee and that the proceedings of the subcommittees which have to be reported, translated and printed are often as extensive as the proceedings of the committees themselves. By way of example I would mention the Finance and External Affairs Committees, which have each set up two subcommittees. Effectively, our staff is thus required to process the proceedings of six committees rather than just two. In those circumstances hon. members will appreciate that some delay in the preparation of reports of proceedings is only normal.

In conclusion I might outline in a few words our plans or objectives in regard to committee work. As training and efficiency progress, and this must also flow into the translation and printing services, it would be our objective, as of next session, to provide a 36-hour service in the publication of committee proceedings on bills and other questions allotted priorities. With regard to the proceedings with respect to the consideration of estimates and other general references, it would be proposed that such material be made available within a week; that is to say, committee proceedings on a Tuesday in relation to a general reference will be published not later than the following Tuesday.

In order to further those objectives, may I also refer the House to the report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization presented to the House as recently as Thursday, May 28, 1970. In that report the committee recommends the standardization of the size and format of all our publications. We believe that standardization will contribute to shortening the time required for production of our printed records.

As a final comment I might mention to hon. members that a limited number of copies of typewritten transcripts of a committee's proceedings, including the interpretation thereof, are ordinarily available through the committee clerk the day following a meeting.

Again I think I express the feelings of all hon. members when I express the appreciation of the House for the efficiency and devotion of all employees of the committee branch. These officials have the full confidence of the House. We know that we count on their continued co-operation and on their devotion to the service of the House to overcome the difficulties with which they are confronted from time to time.

I thank the hon. members who raised this question. Their intervention has given us an opportunity to review the situation and to engage in even more determined action to provide the hon. members the service to which they are entitled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER RESPECTING BILL C-197—ITEMS FOR CONSIDERATION THIS DAY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions about today's business. In particular there have been expressions of interest during the past week in having government order No. 84, Bill C-197, completed with respect to the second reading stage and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I believe there would be general agreement in the House for an order along the following lines: That after a further two hours' debate on the second reading stage, including any amendments on that bill, all questions would be put in order that a decision of the House might be taken and, in particular, in order that it might be referred to committee.

I might indicate that on behalf of the government I would give this undertaking: First, the government will not oppose any motion in committee to hear representatives who may wish to appear before the committee, as indeed had been the intention. Second, the government will undertake, at least in so far as it can give an undertaking, not to oppose in committee on technical grounds any amendments, other than those involving financial considerations, that may be brought before the committee.

On that basis, and assuming this order is acceptable to the House, the order of business for today will be changed. Instead of dealing with the Canada Elections Act, we will have a two-hour debate on the second reading of Bill C-197. This will be followed by government order No. 100, the amendment to the Aeronautics Act. This in turn will be followed by government order No. 68, the shipping conference amendment to the Combines Investigation Act. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if it could be determined whether there is general agreement to limit the debate on second reading of Bill C-197 to two additional hours, after which all necessary questions would be disposed of.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the hon. gentleman continues to show that spirit of flexibility which marked his appearance in the House yesterday. We highly approve of it. We are prepared to accept an order of the House which will limit debate on Bill C-197 to two hours in the terms mentioned, provided an undertaking is given by the minister along the lines which I asked for some time ago in the House. I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) publicly and privately that the government not oppose the moving of motions in committee and allow groups or organizations to make representations in person or by brief with suggestions as to change in substance. I asked that the government not raise technical objections to amendments dealing with matters of substance which might be proposed following such representations. I say, in a spirit of complete benevolence, that in the past we have been lured and seduced into committees—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —and there have found the government trying to place the most narrow and rigid interpretation upon the rules. They have refused to allow witnesses to attend to make their views known. I am referring to witnesses and organizations who were supremely and vitally interested in the matter before the committee. In addition, valid amendments offered by this party have not been accepted. It was said they were contrary to the principle of the bill which had been approved on second reading.

I hope this action represents a change in view on the part of the government. If so, I welcome it. I recognize that the government cannot bind itself or anyone with respect to questions involving financial changes. However, if during the course of representations to the committee proposals are made by groups or by opposition parties which involve a variation of the financial recommendation, I hope the Minister of Agriculture, with that same degree of flexibility which marked his presence on this side of the House a number of years ago, will attempt to persuade his colleagues to accept it. I hope that all vitally interested groups will be allowed to be present and that the bill will be changed so as to be more in accordance with the views of the people of this country.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly prepared to agree to an order for a two-hour debate in the House so that Bill C-197 can then proceed to committee. We have received representations from organizations which wish to appear when the bill is in committee, and we are very pleased with the attitude of the government in this regard. We are glad to know that those who wish to appear as representatives of the farm organizations and of agricultural business generally can attend and make their views known. There will be an opportunity for fruitful debate in the committee and we can put forward some of the proposals we have made in the House.

Our position is clear. We think this bill is important, that it is essential to the welfare of a great many farmers, and for this reason the government can certainly count on our full co-operation to expedite this marketing measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are in complete agreement with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) who would like us to deal as soon as possible with Bill C-197, and we are ready to co-operate entirely with him.

This, Mr. Speaker, does not mean that we intend to approve the principle of the bill which seeks no more and no less than the socialization of Canadian agriculture and we have in fact so reminded the House on several occasions.

However, we want to give the members of the committee an opportunity to hear representatives of the different agricultural organizations of Canada and to question them. We feel that by proceeding in this fashion we might be able to change the principle of the bill, since the Ralliement créditiste does not agree with the government's policy to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I sent a note to the Government House Leader a few moments ago asking him whether the government intended to move concurrence in the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, but he slipped it under his papers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have not yet concluded the business on the point raised by the President of the Privy Council. I assumed the hon. member intended to refer to the same matter.

The terms of the order have been proposed by the minister, and conditions have been suggested by representatives of the parties in opposition. In any event, hon. members have heard the terms of the proposed order suggested by the President of the Privy Council and I have to ask the House whether it is so ordered.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask whether the Government House Leader intends to present a motion for concurrence in the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections? I would just as soon it came from the government side, but if it does not I can ask unanimous consent to move it.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I think it should come from the chairman of the committee and I will ask him to give notice of it in order to place it on the Order Paper and in that way bring it before the House.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not wish to sound impatient, but concurrence could be moved now by unanimous consent. This is a normal procedure and the committee was unanimous in its report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am certainly agreeable to that if the House will waive the requirement of two days' notice.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposal that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

ELECTION EXPENSES

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have also been discussions between representatives of the parties with respect to referring the question of election expenses to a special committee to be constituted for the purpose. If there were found to be general agreement I should like to suggest that the following be made an order of the House:

That a special committee, constituted of 12 members to be named at a later date, be appointed to consider the question of the limitation and control of election expenses in Canada and to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon;

That the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House; to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee; and to delegate to subcommittees any of its powers, except the power to report directly to the House.

As I say, if there is found to be general agreement among hon. members this might be made an order of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order:

Mr. Bell—That the third report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the House on Wednesday, May 13, 1970, be concurred in.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in view of the unanimous agreement within the Public Accounts Committee that concurrence in this motion not be moved—there was a discussion of this subject on Monday last—I wonder whether the hon. member might not be agreeable to withdrawing his motion.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the apology the minister made yesterday we shall cooperate in the matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster have the unanimous agreement of the House to withdraw the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

DRUGS

TABLING OF LeDAIN COMMISSION REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 which permits a motion to be moved by unanimous agreement in cases of urgent and pressing necessity after an explanation has been given by the mover, I seek consent to move such a motion preceded by an explanation as to the urgency and the necessity for taking action quickly.

As every day goes by the misuse and abuse of drugs in this country becomes wider and wider, with the problem multiplying in intensity particularly among our younger people. Inasmuch as the public paid for the LeDain commission to conduct an inquiry into the subject matter of the non-medical use of drugs, inasmuch as the interim report of the commission has been before the minister for some two or three weeks, as well as before the cabinet, inasmuch as we are not asking for a decision on what the government intends to do with respect to the recommendations in the interim report but are simply asking the government to make available to the public a report which they paid for, in view of the growing abuse of the use of drugs I ask unanimous consent to move the following motion:

This House expresses the opinion that the government should forthwith table the interim report of the commission of inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and therefore the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I point out that there is not unanimity within the cabinet committee that is studying this question either.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-187, an act respecting inland water resources in the Yukon territory and Northwest Territories, with an amendment, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

SHIPPING

TABLING OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS ON MANNING OF STEAMSHIPS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I am pleased to table the proposed regulations relating to the manning of steamships. In order to meet my commitment to hon. members to lay them on the table today, I am tabling two copies in English, with the translation to follow, I hope, later today.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

APPLICATION OF CONDITIONS AND APPROVALS TO GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-221, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I say by way of explanation of the purpose of this bill that, in my view, many activities of the governments of Canada and the provinces and their agents now affect navigable waters in ways similar to non-governmental activities. It is therefore proper and necessary that the Act clearly require that governmental activities are subject to the same conditions and approvals.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SUPPLY BOATS AND BARGES LOST IN ARCTIC WATERS

Question No. 995—Mr. Harding:

1. (a) How many supply boats or barges operating in Canadian Arctic waters have been lost within the past three years (b) when were these carriers lost (c) in what part of the Arctic were they lost

(d) what was the cause of the loss of each carrier (e) what was the cargo on each carrier, and (f) who was the owner of each carrier?

2. (a) What department investigated the sinking of these supply boats or barges (b) when were these investigations carried out (c) who made the investigations (d) have any of the sunken carriers been located (e) are reports on these investigations available?

3. (a) If oil or other pollutants were part of the lost cargoes, what amount of each was estimated to be in each individual sinking of a boat or barge (b) what steps have been taken to recover any lost cargo of possible pollutants (c) has any pollution of Arctic waters taken place through the loss of (i) oil supplies (ii) other supplies (d) what steps are being taken to prevent the further loss of cargo carriers in the Arctic?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Two, the towed barges L.A. Learmonth and Johnny Norberg. (b) August 22 and August 24, 1969, respectively. (c) In Viscount Melville Sound, S.E. of Byam Island. (d) Ice damage. (e) The L.A. Learmonth loaded with mining equipment and steel pipes, the Johnny Norberg with light diesel oil and aviation fuel (J.P. 4). (f) Both barges were owned by Panarctic Oils Limited, Calgary.

2. (a) Department of Transport. (b) September 10, 11 and 29, 1969. (c) Officials of the Marine Regulations Branch, Department of Transport. (d) No. (e) A summary report of the investigation is available.

3. (a) 2000 short tons light diesel oil and aviation fuel in the Johnny Norberg. (b) None. (c) (i) and (ii). No, as far as is known. (d) Work is in progress on the establishment of new safety standards to be applicable in these waters, to be made compulsory under the new Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act (Bill C-202).

NORTHWEST PASSAGE—POLICY OF CONTROL

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the federal government have a policy of control of the Northwest Passage and, if so, does the policy include the co-operation of any other government?

2. To what extent does the federal government intend to police the Northwest Passage?

3. Will the Canadian Forces be involved in the security of Canada's north and in asserting sovereignty in the north and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Government intends to open the Northwest Passage as a waterway for passage by ships of all states, subject to necessary conditions required for preservation of the Arctic environment. That policy is reflected in the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Bill and the Bill to Amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act. The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Bill would provide for co-operation with other countries by empowering the Government to exempt from the application of Canadian anti-pollution regulations the public and naval vessels of other states which substantially comply with Canadian standards; the Government has also indicated its intention to consult with other countries regarding the safety regulations to be adopted under the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Bill.

2. The Government intends to police Canada's coastal waters, including the Northwest Passage, in a manner which will achieve the purposes of existing and proposed legislation with respect to those waters.

3. The Canadian Armed Forces will be involved, along with other agencies of the Government of Canada, in protecting the security of Canada's North and in promoting Canada's sovereign interests in the area.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Question No. 1,304—Mr. Broadbent:

1. For the years 1967, 1968 and 1969, what are the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures regarding the degree of foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry (a) manufacturing (b) petroleum and natural gas (c) mining and smelting?

2. If the above figures are not available, on what date is it anticipated that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics will publish such figures?

3. What are the reasons regarding the delay on publishing the foreign ownership and control figures for the above years?

4. Is the section in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics responsible for the publication of such figures now suffering from inadequate staff and, if so, will this situation be immediately corrected?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. (a) Assets of corporations principally engaged in manufacturing and in which the majority of voting shares are owned by non-residents amounted to $22.4 billions or 56.7 per cent of the total reported by all manufacturing corporations which filed 1967 Canadian income tax returns. (b) Assets of corporations principally engaged in the oil and gas wells industry and in which the majority of the voting shares are owned by non-residents amounted to $3.7 billions or 82.6 per cent of the total reported by such corporations filing 1967 Canadian income tax returns. For petroleum refining, assets reported by concerns in which non-residents owned the majority of the voting shares amounted to $4.1 billions or 99.9 per cent of the total reported by such corporations filing 1967 Canadian income tax returns. (c) Assets of corporations principally engaged in the metal mining industries and in which the majority of the voting shares are owned by non-residents amounted to $1.8 billions or 42.0 per cent of the total reported by all metal mining corporations which filed 1967 Canadian income tax returns. Total assets of mining corporations which were at least 50 per cent owned by non-residents amounted to $6.6 billions or 60.6 per cent of the total reported which includes metals, non-metals and other mining. Assets of corporations in the primary metals group of the manufacturing division in which at least half of the shares were owned by non-residents amounted to $3.0 billions or 55.6 per cent of the total. The smelting and refining component of this group included corporations in which the majority of shares were owned by non-residents which reported assets of $2.4 billions or 84.9 per cent of the total. It should be noted that the measurement of the degree of foreign ownership given above is based on the value of assets. Data for 1968 and 1969 are not yet available.

2. It is anticipated that the Report for 1968, Part I, Corporations, Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act will be published by November 30, 1970. The 1969 Report is expected to be published approximately one year later.

3. The figures above are based on returns under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act and corporation income tax returns. Substantially all returns for any given year must be on hand to establish the intercorporate relationships required to estimate non-resident ownership. It is approximately one year after the close of the calendar year before all tax returns become available (the Income Tax Act allows six months after the end of a corporation's tax year for filing a return). The complete processing of many thousands of complex financial statements, although automated, requires a further period of twelve months. A close to two-year lapse of time between the end of the calendar year and the publication of statistics is the result of the above factors.

4. The Section of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics responsible for the publication of such figures is not now suffering from inadequate staff. While improvements in automation procedures are expected during the next year, the timeliness of reports is substantially affected by matters referred to in Part 3 above.

AIR REGULATIONS AND NOTICES TO PILOTS

Question No. 1,480—Mr. Hales:

1. Under what section of the Air Regulations does the Minister of Transport or those to whom he may delegate this authority derive such authority to order the owner of an unlicensed aerodrome to cease to allow private aircraft operations to take place from this aerodrome?

2. What regulatory type of notice to pilots has been adopted by the Department of Transport as normal standard procedure to advise pilots that they are prohibited from landing at certain aerodromes?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Notwithstanding Section 4 (1) (c) of the Aeronautics Act, no Air Regulation presently authorizes the Minister of Transport to order the owner of an unlicensed aerodrome to cease to allow private aircraft operations therefrom.

2. An Air Navigation Order published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, prohibiting navigation of aircraft over the specified area, supplemented by a Notice to Airmen distributed to all licensed pilots advising of the prohibition.

2. Information not available for individual firms. The following table shows total wheat used by flour milling industry.

Crop Year Ending July 31	Wheat Milled (Million Bushels)
1965	87.2
1966	97.9
1968	84.8
six months 1969	44.0

[Mr. Pepin.]

(a) Prevailing prices as established by the Canadian Wheat Board. Present price is $1.95½/bu. for No. 1 Northern basis in store Thunder Bay, with appropriate differentials for other grades. (b) Western wheat is purchased through the Canadian Wheat Board.

3. Yes. (a) Ontario wheat is purchased through the Ontario Wheat Board, or directly from a dealer or farmer. (b) In the 1967/8 crop year, 7.6 million bushels (included in total shown in item two above). (c) Prices are negotiated for each purchase.

ACREAGE OF CELERY

Question No. 1,706—Mr. Fortin:

1. For each of the past ten years, what was the acreage of celery under cultivation for commercial use?

2. How much celery has Canada imported over each of the past three years and from what countries was it imported?

3. What was the customs duty on this product for each of the past three years?

4. What was Canada's total celery production for each of the past three years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: 1. For each of the past ten years the acreage of celery under cultivation for commercial use was as follows:

Year	Acreage
1965	1,050
1964	1,110
1963	1,200
1962	1,170
1961	1,290
1960	1,220
1959	1,380

2 and 3. Imports of celery with duty collected thereon for each of the past three years are shown on the following table:

Year	Country	Quantity (lbs.)	Value ($)	Duty ($)
1967	U.S.A.	122,399,543	6,598,032	171,427
1968	U.S.A.	119,817,532	6,657,070	214,985
1969	U.S.A.	123,653,664	8,210,813	258,834

4. Canada's total celery production for each of the past three years is shown in the table below:

Year	Production (lbs.)
1968	43,716,000
1967	36,618,000
1966	38,790,000

APPLICATIONS FOR INCENTIVE GRANTS

Question No. 1,752—Mr. Serré:

Since the inception of the Regional Development Grants Act (a) how many applications for grants were received from Ontario (b) what projects have been approved to date (c) what is the location and amount allotted to each project?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): (a) Fifty-five.

(b) and (c) This information is contained in the reports which are tabled in Parliament each month.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—SPECIAL AREAS

Question No. 1,770—Mr. Burton:

What criteria was used by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to select special areas as announced by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in Parliament on March 11, 1970, for the Provinces of (a) Newfoundland (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Ontario (f) Manitoba (g) Saskatchewan (h) Alberta?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): That priority measures to facilitate economic expansion and social adjustment in the areas would be especially beneficial in improving opportunities for productive employment of the people of the regions of which the areas are parts.

OMISSION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA AND P.E.I. FROM SPECIAL DESIGNATED AREAS

Question No. 1,779—Mr. Burton:

Were the Provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island omitted from the announcement by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in Parliament on March 11, 1970, concerning special areas designated by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, for what reasons?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes. In the case of British Columbia, needs for economic expansion and social adjustment were not so exceptional that, within the resources available for 1970-72, priority could be given to special measures. In the case of Prince Edward Island, there is already a comprehensive development plan under the FRED legislation.

NEWFOUNDLAND—CBC COVERAGE OF PROCEEDINGS REGARDING COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY

Question No. 1,790—Mr. Marshall:

1. How much time was given by CBC to televise proceedings in the House of Assembly in the Province of Newfoundland on April 21-23 to question Mr. John Shaheen with regard to the Come-by-Chance oil refinery?

2. What national and regional programs were pre-empted due to such coverage?

3. What revenue was lost to CBC in advertising by national or regional subscribers?

4. What was the cost to CBC to produce the proceedings?

5. Who authorized the televising of these proceedings and on whose request?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Total television broadcast time of the April 21 and 22 hearings was 12 hours and 18 minutes.

2. Programs pre-empted on April 21 were: As the World Turns (Network); Canadian Outdoors (Network); The Edge of Night (Network); The Galloping Gourmet (Network); A Place of Our Own (Network); Belle Sebastian and the Horses (Network); Beverley Hillbillies (Network); All around the Circle (Regional); Hollywood and the Stars (CBNT—local); Love American Style (CBYT—local); Press Conference of the Apollo Astronauts (Network).

Programs pre-empted April 22 were: As the World Turns (Network); Take Thirty (Network); The Edge of Night (Network); The Galloping Gourmet (Network); Banana Splits (Network); H. R. Pufnstuf (Network); Debbie Reynolds Show (Network); David Frost Show (CBNT—local); Gunsmoke (CBYT—local); Montreal Expos Baseball Game (Network—This program was joined in progress at approximately 11:04 p.m.).

3. All local spot commercials and national selective sales spot commercials plus the one fully-sponsored regional program, All Around the Circle, were made good at later dates, therefore no local loss of revenue was incurred. National revenue lost amounted to $792.

4. Total cost to the CBC for producing the hearings was $5,336.

5. The televising of proceedings in the House of Assembly on April 21 and 22 was authorized by a vote of the members of the House of Assembly as the result of a request from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation through the Speaker of the House.

LEVIS, QUEBEC—CANDIDATES FOR POSITION OF POSTMASTER

Question No. 1,816—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What are the names of the candidates who took part in the last competition for the position of postmaster in Lévis?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: Section 25 of the Public Service Employment Regulations provides that the name of a person who is a candidate for a position, unless his name is on an eligible list for that position, shall not be disclosed, without the consent of the candidate, to any person who is not directly involved in the process of selection for appointment to the position. Six applications were received in the last competition for Postmaster at Lévis and two of the candidates were found to be qualified. Their names were placed on an eligible list in the following order: 1. Maurice Bourgeois; 2. Jean-Marie Poirier. There were no appeals, and Mr. Bourgeois was appointed to the position.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY—AMOUNT OF DEBT AND INTEREST

Question No. 1,826—Mr. Laprise:

1. (a) What was the amount of debt of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority at the time of its inauguration (b) what is the amount at present?

2. What was the amount owing in interest, each year, since the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, and what amount was paid each year?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: 1. (a) At March 31, 1959, the debt of the St. Lawrence Seaway amounted to $285.6 million, consisting of capital loans of $270.0 million and deferred interest (during construction) of $15.6 million. (b) At December 31, 1969, debt amounted to $546.4 million, consisting of capital loans of $474.5 million, deferred interest during construction of the Welland By-Pass of $5.4 million and deferred operating interest of $66.5 million.

2. Interest charges to operating and payments against these have been as follows:

	Interest Charged $	Paid $ (millions)	Balance Owing $
1959	8.1	—	8.1
1960	12.7	—	20.8
1961	14.2	1.3	33.7
1962	15.6	—	49.3
1963	16.8	—	66.1
1964	18.1	5.3	78.9
1965	15.8	49.6	45.1
1966	16.3	13.7	47.7
1967	16.6	10.9	53.4
1969	19.1	10.7	66.5

Of interest charged to operations during 1959-1969, a total of $11.6 million was in respect of borrowings for the improvement of the Welland Canal. This entire amount was paid out of parliamentary appropriations voted to cover the Welland Canal operating deficit for the period.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO SWIFT CANADIAN CO. LTD.

Question No. 1,834—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the Regional Development Incentives Act authorized or provided an incentive grant to Swift Canadian Co. Ltd., Etobicoke, Ontario and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. Who are the directors and executive officers of Swift Canadian Co. Ltd., and what is the address of each?

3. To what extent is the company non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

4. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as follows: 1. This information was contained in the monthly report, tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

2. The officers and directors of Swift Canadian Co. Ltd., as at October 26, 1968 were: P. L. Ayers, 1137 Royal York Road, N.. Islington, Ontario; W. P. Christian, 287 Markland Dr., Etobicoke, Ontario; E. D. Fletchall, 919 Country Club Dr., LaGrange, Illinois 60525, U.S.A.; J. E. Harris, 1113 Algonquin Drive, Port Credit, Ontario; M. E. Morgan, 930 Eyremount Dr., West Vancouver, B.C.; C. F. Patterson, R.R. No. 2, Norval, Ontario;

R. W. Reneker, 10158 S. Leavitt St., Chicago, Illinois 60643, U.S.A.; L. V. Spalding, 11 Orrell Ave., Islington, Ontario; P. M. Steinbrink, 9757 S. Bell Ave., Chicago, Illinois 60653, U.S.A.; J. C. Walmsley, 31 Appledale Road, Islington, Ontario; W. A. Mill, 403 Valleyfield Dr., Mississauga, Ontario.

3. Non-residents own 100 per cent of the voting shares of the company.

4. Swift and Company of Chicago own 119,989 of the total 120,000 shares outstanding.

VETERANS IN CANADA RECEIVING PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Question No. 1,847—Mr. Caouette:

How many veterans are there in Canada who served in the army of our allied countries during (a) World War I (b) World War II (c) the Korean War and, of this number, how many receive (i) a federal pension (ii) a veteran's allowance (iii) a pension for disability attributable to service (iv) medical and hospital care?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Veterans Affairs and National Health and Welfare as follows: (a), (b), (c) Information not available. (i) All records of the Income Security Branch, of the Department of National Health and Welfare, are kept in such a way as to make it impossible to produce this information. (ii) World War I, 5,257; World War II, 985; Korean War, Information not available; Dual Service (WW I and WW II), 31. (iii) World War I, 423; World War II, 1,034; Korean War, none. (iv) Information not available.

NUMBER OF CANADIAN VETERANS IN WORLD WAR I, WORLD WAR II, AND KOREAN WAR

Question No. 1,848—Mr. Caouette:

1. Among World War I veterans, how many (a) were living in Canada prior to enrolment (b) served in the Canadian Army?

2. Among World War II veterans, how many (a) were living in Canada prior to enrolment (b) served in the Canadian Army?

3. Among Korean War veterans, how many (a) were living in Canada prior to enrolment (b) served in the Canadian Army?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Veterans Affairs and National Defence as follows: 1. (a) Information not available. (b) 619,636 (including 59,544 fatal casualties).

2. (a) Information is available only with respect to the Canadian Army. Out of a total enrolment of 1,086,343 in all three services, the records indicate that 723,143 army veterans were previously living in Canada. (b) 730,159 (including 22,917 fatal casualties).

3. (a) and (b) The Department of National Defence does not hold records which would provide this information.

COST OF COAST GUARD ICEBREAKERS ACCOMPANYING "MANHATTAN"

Question No. 1,854—Mr. Burton:

1. What was the total cost to the Canadian Government involved in having the icebreaker Sir John A. Macdonald accompany the supertanker Manhattan on its Arctic voyage in 1969?

2. What is the estimated total cost to the Canadian Government involved in having the icebreaker Louis S. St. Laurent accompany the supertanker Manhattan on its voyage in Arctic waters in 1970?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Costs that are clearly identifiable as related to the Manhattan operation amounted to approximately $23,700. These comprise consultants' fees, salaries, travelling expenses, rental of equipment and expenses concerned with press representation.

The CCGS John A. Macdonald would have been employed in Arctic waters for approximately the same time even if she had not accompanied the Manhattan and there is no realistic way of determining what extra costs were incurred in the Manhattan operation. If any, they were offset by a certain amount of fuel supplied at no cost by the Manhattan.

An increased program of aerial observation of ice conditions was carried out over that normally undertaken. The Manhattan benefitted considerably from this but it was also of very great value in increasing our own knowledge of Arctic ice conditions and this was largely due to the loan of specialized electronic sensing devices not possessed by the Department at no cost by the Humble Oil Company. Here too there is no way of finding a realistic apportionment of cost.

2. A spring voyage by the CCGS Louis S. St. Laurent into northern waters to test the capabilities of this new vessel had been scheduled before the request for Canadian icebreaker support to the Manhattan was received. The two are therefore being combined. What additional cost, if any, will be incurred through the Louis S. St. Laurent accompanying the Manhattan cannot be estimated until it is known how long the voyage lasts.

Questions

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,859—Mr. Goode:

What is the capacity of the Vancouver International Airport sewer system in gallons per minute and how much of this capacity is being used?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The maximum capacity of the forcemain from the airport to the treatment plant is 1,400 gallons per minute. The agreement with the Iona treatment plant limits the discharge to 1,000 gallons per minute with a maximum daily total of 350,000 gallons per day. The airport is presently discharging approximately 240,000 gallons per day to the treatment plant and it is expected that with plans to connect the old terminal area to the system and growth of the present terminal area, the discharge will soon reach the allowed rate of 350,000 gallons per day.

AVERAGE CONSUMER INTEREST RATE 1960 TO 1970

Question No. 1,862—Mr. Robinson:

What was the average consumer interest rate for each year 1960 to 1970 inclusive?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): There is a great variety of interest rates charged to consumers depending upon the nature of the transaction. It would not be possible to calculate an average consumer interest rate. Consequently, the question cannot be answered in its present form.

REDUCTION OF INTEREST CHARGE ON CREDIT BUYING

Question No. 1,891—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider ways and means of reducing the interest charge on credit buying?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The Bank of Canada on May 31 reduced its Bank Rate from 7½ per cent to 7 per cent. This was the second reduction in May. In addition, the government is reviewing its economic and financial policies in view of the recent changes in circumstances.

PERCENTAGE OF GNP SPENT BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1,913—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the percentage of the gross national product spent by the federal government for each year 1940 to 1960 inclusive?

[Mr. Loiselle.]

2. What is the estimated percentage of the gross national product proposed to be spent by the federal government for the year 1970?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. On a national accounts basis, the percentage of the gross national product spent directly by the federal government for each year 1940 to 1969 was:

Year	Per Cent	Year	Per Cent	Year	Per Cent
1940	14	1950	12	1960	16
1941	18	1951	13	1961	16
1942	35	1952	17	1962	16
1943	38	1953	17	1963	15
1944	43	1954	17	1964	14
1945	35	1955	16	1965	13
1946	23	1956	15	1966	14
1947	14	1957	15	1967	14
1948	12	1958	16	1968	14
1949	12	1959	16	1969	14

2. On the same basis, it is estimated that these proposed expenditures by the federal government in 1970 would account for 14 per cent of the gross national product.

FINANCING OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 1,940—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the Department of Finance created a new position with regard to the financing of Crown corporations and, if so, what will be the duties of the incumbent?

2. What are the requirements for this position?

3. Is there a specific policy on the financing of Crown corporations?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Yes. The policy is that Crown Corporations obtain their financing from the Government of Canada, usually by way of loans but equity capital is supplied when required. Sums so provided are to finance the capital expenditures of Crown Corporations included in their capital budgets approved by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the appropriate Minister, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance as required by the Financial Administration Act. From time to time, some Crown Corporations have borrowed in their own name, for example, the CNR has issued bonds guaranteed by the Government of Canada, CMHC has sold mortgages insured under the National Housing Act. However, these issues were exceptions to the general policy of financing Crown Corporations by loans or subscriptions to equity capital from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The sums raised by these direct sales of securities to the public were also applied to financing capital expenditures approved in the manner just described.

PRIME MINISTER'S FAR EASTERN TRIP

Question No. 1,972—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many people accompanied the Prime Minister on his recent trip to the Far East?

2. What are their names and respective positions, including members of the Press Corps?

3. What were their duties while abroad?

4. Were additional personnel employed abroad, for the purpose of speech-writing, etc., and, if so, what are their names, and what were they paid?

5. Were any charges made to any person to recover air travel expenses and, if so, to whom and in what amount?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1, 2 and 3. See answer to question No. 1,858 answered this date.

4. No.

5. Air transportation charges of $1,300 for the round trip, and pro-rated for portions thereof, were recovered from members of the press party.

USE OF DATA PROCESSING EQUIPMENT IN PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Question No. 1,976—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Privy Council Office have data processing equipment (automatic) and, if so, for how long?

2. What was the initial cost of the equipment?

3. What yearly costs are anticipated for data processing in the Department?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—RESEARCH PROJECTS

Question No. 607—Mr. Comeau:

1. In 1968-69 and 1969-70, what were the estimated sums spent on research in the Department of Labour and what was the purpose of each research project?

2. How much money was actually expended according to Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures?

Return tabled.

Orders for Returns

GRANTS TO STUDENTS FROM UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 1,533—Mr. MacLean:

1. How many scholarships or other grants have been made to students from underdeveloped countries at Canadian universities for each year since the inception of such scholarships and/or grants?

2. What is the minimum and maximum of assistance given to individual students?

3. How many students who have received benefits have already graduated from Canadian universities?

4. (a) Have any of these students applied for landed immigrant status in Canada (b) how many of such applications have been granted?

5. When students from underdeveloped countries apply for these grants, are they required to undertake to return to their own countries on the completion of their education?

Return tabled.

CONSULTANTS ENGAGED, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 1,800—Mr. Robinson:

How many consultants have been engaged by the Department of Agriculture during each year 1950 to 1970 inclusive (a) what was the cost of the consultants (b) how were the consultants utilized (c) for what reasons were the consultants necessary?

Return tabled.

PEOPLE WITH PRIME MINISTER ON FAR EASTERN TRIP

Question No. 1,858—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many people accompanied the Prime Minister on his trip to the Far East?

2. Who are these people and what was the purpose of each person accompanying the Prime Minister?

3. What are the qualifications of each of the public servants who accompanied the Prime Minister?

4. Of those accompanying the Prime Minister who are not government employees, how many were representatives of newspapers, radio, television and other news media?

5. Will the representatives of the news media have their expenses paid by their employers and (a) if so, what will be the cost to each (b) if not, will the cost be paid by the government?

6. Were the representatives of the news media who accompanied the Prime Minister chosen by (a) the Press Gallery (b) by the media (c) by the government?

7. Were any of the people accompanying the Prime Minister either not government employees or representatives of the news media?

Return tabled.

Motions for Papers

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct the attention of the President of the Privy Council to the fact that the first eight questions on the Order Paper were all filed in October and here we are in the second week of June and they have not been answered. It seems to me inexcusable that these questions should remain on the Order Paper from the beginning of the session until almost the end of the session. If the government does not wish to answer these questions it should say so. Members cannot conduct the business of the House if they must wait months for answers to questions and then find that the House is about to close without these answers being given. May I ask whether these and many other questions which have been on the Order Paper for several months will be cleaned up before we recess at the end of the month?

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, we are pressing for answers to all the remaining questions on the Order Paper. May I point out that up to date more than 85 per cent of the record number of all questions on the Order Paper have been answered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, to be specific, question No. 131 was asked on October 23. I believe an answer could be provided without much difficulty. Again, question No. 133, which has been on the Order Paper since October 23, is merely an inquiry concerning whether an Arctic transportation task force has been established. Surely this does not involve too much research. Then there is question No. 244 of October 23 concerning outside consultant studies for various departments. Surely we should be able to expect answers before the end of June to some of these questions.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I shall make inquiries, but we expect to file answers before the end of the session.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 465 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential papers and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining Notices of Motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 465 be deemed to have been adopted.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CLOSURE OF POST OFFICES, SERATH AND GREGHERD, SASK.

Motion No. 465—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all corespondence, reports, memoranda and other documents relating to the closure of post offices at Serath and Gregherd, Saskatchewan and the proposed establishment of an alternative rural route mail service.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker will the Parliamentary Secretary give the same assurance and carry it through with regard to the remaining Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers?

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member we are making representations to the proper departments. May I point out that we have dealt with about 80 per cent of the Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers already.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, some two weeks ago I asked about Notice of Motion No. 32 which has been on the Order Paper since October 23 and was given some indication it would be dealt with by the Minister of Transport. The same situation exists in respect of many other Notices of Motions which date back to October and November. Surely these motions can be brought forward and dealt with.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, on December 19 I asked the government for copies of all correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia regarding financial assistance for the Deuterium of Canada Limited heavy water plant at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. It seems to me the government should have been able to give some indication prior to now concerning whether or not this correspondence will be made available.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSING

DROP IN STARTS AND GOVERNMENT POLICY OF RESTRAINT—MEASURES TO PROMOTE CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the serious drop in housing starts in the month of May to an annual rate of less than 130,000 units is a drop which is taking place according to plan as part of the government policy of restraint and whether it is consistent with the guidelines policy the government has adopted?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to see housing starts expand greatly.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is it the policy of the government that the expansion of housing starts to a reasonable level would have an inflationary or anti-inflationary effect?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I find that question concerning whether it would have an inflationary or anti-inflationary effect very difficult to answer. I do not think it would have an inflationary effect.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the serious decline in housing starts that has taken place not only causes great hardship to individuals but would seem quite obviously to be inflationary in the sense that it pushes up the cost of living and therefore an increase in the wages that persons expect, is the minister prepared to announce in the House, in light of these very alarming figures, measures that he proposes to take to have housing starts return to something like a satisfactory, sensible and normal figure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may be able to assist a little on this. I have a report from the minister responsible for housing. I do wish to indicate the government's concern about these low figures and to repeat—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps you do not want an explanation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You sound like Rawhide.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is much the same as that of the Leader of the Opposition. I would ask the Prime Minister to set forth the position of the government concerning ways and means to improve housing starts in Canada in view of the serious decline in the first five months of this year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would seem to me that the question asked by the hon. member for Broadview is very wide in scope. He might wish to rephrase it. He is inviting a minister of the Crown to make a general statement. I do not think this should be done at this time.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister make a statement before Parliament adjourns with regard to measures the government intends to take to solve the serious decline in housing starts in view of the 50.1 per cent drop in urban starts in the first five months of this year?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will pass this suggestion on to the minister.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would stop playing games with a subject of great importance not only to this House but the country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —and indicate to the House whether the government proposes to take any measures to meet this very serious situation and, very briefly, what these measures might be?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is difficult to know if members of the opposition really want all the facts or if they are interested in playing politics with the situation.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 39 members of the House are entitled to ask questions. Ministers do not have to answer but if they do the answers should not be frivolous, glib, evasive and non-responsive.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Hamilton West has a supplementary.

ESTABLISHMENT OF BUILDING SOCIETIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing, since his return from his European fact-finding tour, is now convinced of the usefulness and practicality of building societies, and in light of the fact that interest rates have increased to 10.3 per cent for home ownership, would the minister confer with his colleagues in order to review and re-assess the government's decision regarding building societies?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to stop the formation of building societies in Canada.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House when his mental age will catch up with his chronological age?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LABOUR RELATIONS

SETTLEMENT OF WEST COAST TOWBOAT STRIKE—WAGE INCREASE AND SIX PER CENT GUIDELINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question regarding the towboat strike which has been going on for some weeks in the province of British Columbia. I understand that an agreement has been worked out for submission to the membership of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild with the help of the conciliation officers of the federal Department of Labour. Can the minister tell the House what are the terms of the settlement which is being submitted to the towboat workers, both with respect to the wage settlement and the manning and safety provisions?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am rather pleased to announce that the very disruptive towboat strike on the west coast was settled about five o'clock this morning, Vancouver time. I think that the hon. gentleman will appreciate the fact that I cannot be specific as to the details of the settlement because these things are normally put before the membership when they are asked to ratify the proposed settlement, something which will occur on Friday.

I would like to say to the House that the main issue in dispute for some considerable time has been the safety factor, as pointed out by the hon. gentleman. This has been settled as the result of the improved manning regulation which the Minister of Transport tabled today, plus certain conditions which are included in the collective agreement.

So far as the wage factor is concerned, it is a three-year contract. It has been settled precisely on the lines recommended unanimously by the conciliation board. I think the settlements are 10 per cent, 10 per cent and 6 per cent.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the wage settlement which has been agreed upon by both parties and which is now being submitted to the membership, may I ask the Minister if this means that the Department of Labour has come to recognize that the 6 per cent wage guideline restraint is unrealistic unless it is accompanied by restraints on other forms of income?

Mr. Mackasey: Well, Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Labour I recognize the fact that there is a cost-push type of inflation, and I do not think anyone in the government should have ever left the impression, in fact I do not think anyone has left the impression, that the only cause of the cost-push inflation has been wages. I think that profits, dividends, rents, executive salaries, professional fees and wages have all contributed to the cost-push inflation, and I am hoping that labour will not be isolated as the only cause because this would be erroneous and unfair.

SETTLEMENT OF WEST COAST TOWBOAT STRIKE—USE OF SAME CONCILIATION OFFICERS IN POSTAL DISPUTE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the excellent work which the conciliation officers of the federal Department of Labour did in the west coast towboat dispute, may I ask the minister if he would be prepared to make these conciliation officers available to the government in the postal dispute in the hope of bringing about an early settlement?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, much as it is tempting for the Department of Labour to take the credit for this settlement, I think the head of the conciliation branch, Mr. Kelly, would be the first to say that the terms of settlement were arrived at independently of the Department of Labour. I think hon. members should realize that we were there only to assist the two parties to arrive at a settlement, and they arrived at a settlement, including wages, independently of the Department of Labour. I would like to take this opportunity, rather than on motions, to pay particular tribute to the B.C. Federation of Labour which proved to be a very positive force in arriving at the settlement.

EFFECT ON WAGE DEMANDS OF INCREASED RENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether it is the view and the experience of his department that the shortage of housing with the resultant increase in rents is a factor in the wage demands put forward?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance made it quite clear in his statement on Monday that he regards unfair rents, high rents, as a cause of inflation, and I understand Dr. Young did obtain from the provinces—I must remind the House that rents come under provincial jurisdiction—recognition of this. There is nothing to prevent the Premier of Ontario, for example, from imposing rent controls. This is one tangible way in which the provinces can show that they pay more than lip service to the fight against inflation.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct one further supplementary to the Minister of Labour, a man who is sincerely interested in this whole issue. Would he use the influence that I am sure he has with the Prime Minister to persuade the Prime Minister to abandon his reticence and the rather arrogant way that he is treating the House and tell the House whether the government has a program to deal with this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

GOLD MINES—ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING FREEING OF DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

After the adoption of the floating exchange rate for the Canadian dollar, Canadian gold mines are losing revenues and a good many marginal mines which attract American funds to Canada and which provide employment for Canadians will undoubtedly have to close down. Does the minister have any measures in mind to help the gold mining industry and improve this situation?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a week or so ago, along with my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion I met with citizens of the gold mining areas concerning gold mining assistance, and I understand that this morning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources met with gold producers to discuss this particular problem.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND LABOUR LEADERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Ontario and Quebec made it very clear that they do not intend to enforce the 6 per cent wage increase guideline, and in view of the very strong and recent reiteration by the leaders of organized labour that they do not intend to pay any attention to the government's 6 per cent guideline, a position which, judged by the announcement which was just made by the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not make a statement; he should ask his question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, sometimes I find it necessary to put the Prime Minister in the picture. In view of these facts, does the Prime Minister not consider that the time has now arrived for him to call together the leaders of organized labour to try to persuade them that they should give their co-operation in order to make anti-inflation policies workable in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I attempted such a meeting some months ago, with the success which is now judged by the hon. member, but perhaps he could invite the leaders of organized labour himself and convince them.

Mr. Stanfield: Well, we will try. Somebody had better do something.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, now that I have the Prime Minister's okay to call a meeting that he will attend at his house in Rockcliffe, I will be very glad to issue the invitations today. I take it that he will be there and will do his very best to persuade the labour leaders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: No female company.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS—CONTROL OF COMPANIES—ASSISTANCE TO SWIFTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is it government policy, in reference to regional development, to advance money to Canadian companies in preference to American controlled companies?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister justify his position, in light of that of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, by explaining to the House and the country why he is advancing to Swift's in Lethbridge several hundred thousand dollars to go into operation against Canadian owned and controlled companies? Why is he advancing money to United States companies that are not here already?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in our regulations concerning industrial loans or incentives, we do not take into account the origin of the company but only the place where materials for the construction of industries are bought. There is no discrimination against businesses with regard to their origin.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the advancing of this money, is there any arrangement that the group that will be working in this plant will come from a certain section of Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I believe the policy comes from the statement on materials to be used for the construction of factories. Such restrictions exist but there are no others.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, maybe the minister did not understand my question, which was very simple and to the point. Is there any arrangement, because of the advancing of this money against the interest of Canadian companies, that the labour that will work in this new plant, which is not there now, will come from a certain section of the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would need further details about the location or the area in Canada. If the hon. member would tell me to what area he is referring, I could give him a more specific answer.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises from one asked by the hon. member for Calgary North. Is it a principle of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to assist industry in certain areas of Canada in order to create greater employment in the area that the industry is going into?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it is surely one of the objectives of the department to create a greater number of jobs where plants are set up.

[English]

QUEBEC—GRANT TO INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS MACHINES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether, prior to making a grant to International Business Machines Corporation for a project in Quebec, he consulted with the Minister of Communications in view of the interest expressed by the Minister of Communications in developing a Canadian controlled—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order. The hon. member knows he cannot ask whether the minister has consulted with another minister before a decision has been taken.

DRUGS

APPEARANCE OF CANADIAN PHARMACEUTICAL ASSOCIATION BEFORE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE ON PRICES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister received a request from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association to appear before the federal-provincial committee on drug prices and, if so, what reply has he given to that request?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the meeting being held in Ottawa today is a federal-provincial meeting of officials at both levels of government. It certainly is not the practice to have people from the private sector present at such meetings.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the high cost of drugs, would the minister arrange to meet with representatives of the association who are anxious to offer advice on how the cost of drugs can be lowered?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the association that following the conference there undoubtedly would be consultation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SETTLEMENT OF WEST COAST TOWBOAT STRIKE—RELEASE FROM JAIL OF UNION MEMBER

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Labour relating to or arising out of the response he gave to the first question asked about the towboat situation in British Columbia. Could the minister tell us whether part of the settlement involves any form of truce in the legal conflicts which have surrounded this dispute? If so, could he state whether this might lead to the release from jail of a member of the union who is at the moment, I understand, in jail?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I think such a conditional settlement would be an interference with the due process of the law. I am not a lawyer but I would presume that in the case of this particular official the matter would no doubt be reviewed by his lawyer and possibly there are appeal procedures. Certainly the settlement was not conditional on the release of any union member under sentence for contempt of court. One of the beneficial effects of the proposed settlement is I understand all secondary picketing will be removed immediately in British Columbia and this should do a lot to remove one source of irritation.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice arising out of a question asked on Monday in his absence concerning, whether he sees any role that he might be able to play in bringing about the release of this union member, particularly now—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not acceptable.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF PROPOSALS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of Finance which concerns the timing of the implementation of the white paper proposals on taxation. In light of the recommendations of the western conference of Liberals which are to go to the national conference of the Liberal Party in November, is it right to anticipate that the government will be able to implement those recommendations by January 1, according to the timetable?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday.

POLLUTION

OIL SPILL NEAR UNGAVA BAY

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. What action is his department taking in relation to the 350,000 gallon oil spill near Ungava Bay in Quebec?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we are sending people there immediately, as are the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Quebec government. I understand that a large tank farm has been swept into an inlet near Ungava Bay and there is real concern about the living resources in the water there due to that unfortunate spill.

OIL PIPELINE SPILLAGE NEAR FORT MCMURRAY

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister might be able to report on progress being made on pollution in the Athabasca River and Lake system as well?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that is not a supplementary but the question having been asked, perhaps the minister might like to reply.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I understand that officials from several departments are co-operating on this problem as well, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TORONTO—FACILITIES FOR PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I have a question for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. In view of a possible impending postal crisis and in view of complaints that workers are being herded like cattle at the Moss Park Armouries in Toronto to receive their unemployment insurance benefits, will the minister give consideration to the use of the facilities at the Canada Manpower Centres in the Toronto area for the issuing of these benefits?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his customary courtesy in giving me notice earlier in the week that he intended to raise this question. The problem, of course, is that because of the rotating strikes we have endeavoured to continue our service to people who normally receive unemployment insurance payments by mail. The choice of the armouries, which may have been an unhappy one as far as conditions are concerned, was predicated upon location and size because of the admittedly large number of unemployed people in the Toronto area. I have taken into consideration the suggestion made by the hon. member that we use other government facilities, namely the Canada Manpower Centres. We have come to the conclusion that they are not large enough. However, as a result of the hon. member's suggestion we are searching in the general area for accommodations that are more suitable and through which the unemployed can receive their unemployment insurance with the dignity to which they are entitled.

HAMILTON—ALLEGED USE OF POSTAL CRISIS AS REASON FOR DELAY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in receipt of a telegram from the President of Local 2868, United Steelworkers, in Hamilton to the effect that untold hardship is being experienced by hundreds of employees of International Harvester in Hamilton as a result of the Unemployment Insurance Commission using the postal crisis to delay unemployment insurance claims due to intermittent mass lay-offs? Would the minister look at the Hamilton area in order to ascertain whether it is possible to find some means to get rid of these delays?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter, without accepting the interpretation of the hon. gentleman as to what the telegram contains.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION TO CLEAR UP BACKLOG OF CLAIMS

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister advise what action, if any, his department is taking to clear up the very serious backlog of unemployment insurance cases in British Columbia which has arisen from the strike?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we should not at this time attempt to deal with all the provinces and communities of Canada. That would perhaps lead to some difficulty because there are only 40 minutes at our disposal. Perhaps hon. members who have supplementaries along that line would get in touch directly with the minister so that we might make some progress during the question period. I know this is an important matter, but perhaps we should go on to other subjects.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I admit that Your Honour's point is well taken but surely, since this matter affects thousands of people, particularly in the metropolitan areas, it should be raised in the House of Commons. The minister has indicated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question which I realize is important and I believe he received an answer. The hon. member for Hamilton West did the same. We are now reaching British Columbia, and if we worked our way back to Newfoundland we would need more than the 40 minutes at our disposal. In fact, now we have much less time than that.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, if a person is waiting for his cheque this matter becomes very important to him.

Mr. Hees: That is absolutely correct.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

LEVEL OF MERCURY IN HUMANS—USE OF BLOOD INSTEAD OF URINE TESTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I apologize for not giving him notice but I was unable to reach him by telephone. Since it has now been estimated that 1 milligram of mercury is toxic to the human brain, and since very grave doubts have recently been expressed on the reliability of urine tests to determine the level of mercury in humans who eat a steady diet of fish, will the minister consider resorting to blood tests which are much more accurate?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I think this question should be directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We are working closely with that department, of course. I believe it is dealing with the effects of mercury on human beings. We are confined to fish.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. speaker. I direct my previous question to the minister's attention and ask whether, since this matter comes within the responsibilities of his department, he will get in touch with that minister and bring an answer back to the House?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say something further. The level of mercury in fish in Canada is a very small fraction of the level which was found, for example, in Japan where there was an effect on human beings. In other words, the levels in Canada are very safe levels indeed.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SEIZURE OF LETTERS BY CUSTOMS OFFICERS AT MONTREAL AIRPORT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. I tried to give him notice of it. Has the minister investigated the incident at Montreal airport where it appears that his officials have seized or detained 140 letters written by American servicemen captured in North Viet Nam to their relatives, and other material in the possession of visitors to Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Brewin: Can the minister give assurance that the provisions of the Customs Tariff Act relating to treasonable or seditious literature will not be employed as a means of censorship of material which expresses a critical view of the continuation of the war in Viet Nam?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is in the form of an argument or submission. The hon. member will have to assume that it has been noted.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERU—ASSISTANCE TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the recent earthquakes in Peru where over 50,000 people lost their lives, can the minister tell the House whether this unfortunate country has asked for Canadian help and whether the government has dispatched relief?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has received requests and has responded, I think, in a very adequate and generous way. We are also considering further measures to help the people of that country who have suffered such a great disaster.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, my question has just been answered.

FINANCE

SPREAD BETWEEN PRICES CHARGED AND PAID BY BANKS FOR UNITED STATES DOLLARS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he aware of the exceptionally wide spread between the price that the chartered banks of Canada are paying for United States dollars and the price they are charging when selling United States dollars? If so, what does he propose to do about the situation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the particular incidents to which the hon. member alludes. I will look into the matter.

SHARED-COST PROGRAMS—CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES BY PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern expressed at the recent dominion-provincial conference of finance ministers about shared-cost programs, and in view of the answer of the minister on February 18 in the House that the President of the Treasury Board would be consulting the provinces on these matters, can the minister inform the House whether the President of the Treasury Board did consult the provinces; if so, could the minister at his earliest convenience make a statement on the result?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, he has consulted. He again consulted the Ministers of Finance in Winnipeg and a communiqué was issued. I would be pleased to table it.

NATIONAL PARKS

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—EFFECT OF OIL EXPLORATION RIGHTS ON ACQUIREMENT OF LAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with the right part of Canada now. I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he indicate whether in his negotiations with the province of Newfoundland to establish a national park in that province there has been any indication of action on the part of the provincial government to withdraw oil exploration rights held by John C. Doyle, which rights are holding up the handing over of the land necessary to establish the park?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware if Mr. Doyle or other people have the right to search for oil in this national park. Government policy is very clear in the matter: no oil exploration is to take place within the limits of national parks.

[Mr. Hales.]

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister not take the word of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe as to the reason for the hold-up? Will the minister use his good offices to try to remove the rights held by John C. Doyle so that our regional development program may get under way as quickly as possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a submission to the minister. He has to assume it will be taken into account.

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS FROM LAW

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the recent tragic and sordid deaths of two young girls, one in Hamilton and one in Montreal, as a result of illegal abortions at the hands of unqualified persons, will the minister reconsider his decision and introduce legislation to take abortion out of the Criminal Code, thus freeing qualified doctors to act in consultation with pregnant women?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not take second place to the hon. member in my sympathy for the tragic situations that may arise under the present law, but the position of the government has been stated by the Prime Minister and myself and that is it for the moment.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the minister not aware of the position of the western Liberals?

AIRPORTS

UPLANDS—COMPLAINTS REGARDING NOISE FROM EXPECTED INCREASE IN JET FLIGHTS

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I have given him notice of it. Is the minister aware of the complaints and apprehensions by residents in my constituency about increased noise and disturbance arising from the enlarged jet aircraft traffic at Uplands Airport which is contemplated by his announcement of Friday last respecting changes in the regulations. If so, what steps is the minister taking to meet these complaints? Could he say, in particular, whether his department will change the rules governing this airport to prohibit commercial jet flying between midnight and 7 a.m., as is now the case at Dorval and Malton?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this comes as a complete surprise to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I will make the answer very short by saying that we have not received any complaints. Three of the four runways at Ottawa airport do not extend over residential areas. The fourth will be restricted. We will take a look at the other three. If this situation is going to cause disturbance to my hon. colleague's constituents, we will try our very best to keep it to an absolute minimum.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister divert a little of that noise and jet activity to the international airport at Gander?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, as long as the hon. member represents that constituency I do not think they will need to worry about noise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware that the residents of Gander-Twillingate, after 21 years, would welcome that kind of noise in Newfoundland?

AIR CANADA

ADDITIONAL FLIGHTS FOR EDMONTON

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a serious question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: —arising out of his answer yesterday to my supplementary question. I asked the minister the following question:

—would he also see to it that Air Canada comes up with a few extra flights for Edmonton?

The minister replied:

Yes, Mr. Speaker, one each for myself and the hon. member.

I realize that the minister is having trouble with his diet control and may need a private aircraft for his duties, but as a private member who must travel by commercial aircraft and who has had his diet controlled—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: —I am concerned because Edmonton has had a few flights deleted from its schedule. Will the minister please check into the question of service and see what he can do?

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF SUBJECT OF OFFSHORE LOBSTER FISHERY TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Will the minister consider a special reference to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry of the matter of the offshore lobster fishery for the purpose of hearing the representations of the fishermen? I understand this matter could be dealt with in a day.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I would be very glad to hear from any of the fisheries interests affected. I doubt whether a special reference to the committee would be appropriate at this time.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—RENTAL CAR SERVICE STRIKE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Bearing in mind the long strike of Rent-a-Car employees at Vancouver International Airport, can the minister indicate what contact he has with this dispute which affects the international airport and tell us what is being done to get those involved in the dispute back to the bargaining table?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member appreciates that this strike is strictly and exclusively under provincial control. The party being struck against happens to be a U-Drive company which is a lessee of ours at Vancouver International Airport. In so far as the strike itself is concerned, we have no jurisdiction whatever. I did authorize limited picketing in the neighbourhood of the accommodation that is leased at the airport. That is the only involvement we have had. I can say that I am advised informally that one of the major U-Drive companies has now agreed to settle with its employees. Hopefully, this will lead to the rest doing the same.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—ELUCIDATION OF SALARY AND WAGE GUIDELINE POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he will, with a view to making a statement within the next day or so, confer with the Prices and Incomes Commission which reports to Parliament through him so that the minister can elucidate, on behalf of the Prices and Incomes Commission, the current guideline policy with regard to salaries and wages and what this policy consists of.

In view of the apparent effort of the government to maintain a 6 per cent guideline in respect of settlements, will the minister elucidate what the policy in fact is, and how the Prices and Incomes Commission proposes to influence the provinces to bring about settlements within a 6 per cent level when the federal government has just approved a settlement of 10 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the minister should not reply to the question now. He might indicate whether he intends to make a statement to the House in due course.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have read the statement the Minister of Finance made in the House last Monday and the statements by the Prices and Incomes Commission. At the moment I do not see the need for a further statement. I will be happy to table the statements issued by the Prices and Incomes Commission. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition has already read them. I see no need for a further statement today.

MANITOBA CENTENNIAL

REDUCTION IN TRAVEL GRANT FOR BOY SCOUT JAMBOREE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): My question to the Secretary of State arises out of the second Arctic and Northern Scout Jamboree being held in Churchill this July to commemorate the centennial of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, with over 500 Boy Scouts from southern Canada in attendance. When this jamboree was held in Yellowknife two years ago, the Secretary of State supplied a travel subsidy for scouts attending. Could the minister advise the House why his department has drastically reduced the travel grant for this year's jamboree, preventing many scouts attending?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the importance of the question asked by the hon. member. I suggest it is the kind of question that can be considered for debate at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

POLLUTION

SERPENT RIVER—LEVEL OF CONTAMINANTS IN FISH

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of a press report this morning regarding uranium mines pollution in the Serpent River, can the minister say if tests of fish from that river basin have shown levels of contaminants harmful to people?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there are tests indicating harm to people. However, I have not yet had time to check with my officials on this matter.

MONITORING OF WATERS RECEIVING EFFLUENT DISCHARGES FROM PLANTS USING MERCURY

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Is the Fisheries Department monitoring all those waters in Canada which receive effluent discharges from industrial plants using mercury processes in their operations? If so, how many such monitoring operations are currently under way?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question could well be placed on the Order Paper. I realize it is important. It could perhaps be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Harding: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

REPLACEMENT FOR MV "PATRICK MORRIS"

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister been successful in obtaining a replacement for the CN ferry Patrick Morris which sank some time ago?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received a further report from the team trying to find a vessel in Europe. They have boiled the search down to one vessel. This vessel will require some modifications. Inquiries are now being made to ascertain whether the owners of the vessel are prepared to make those modifications. If they will, I think we will make an arrangement. We should know before the end of the week.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-197, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Horner (p.6719).

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment to this bill proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot, (Mr. Horner). If the amendment is accepted by the House, it will restore to this bill some semblance of control by our producer groups, primary producers and agriculture in general.

Bill C-197, which is called the omnibus bill on agriculture, is of tremendous importance to the entire agricultural industry. It will affect nearly every segment of agriculture, if the provisions of the bill in their present form are implemented. I am concerned that the minister and members of the government have indicated in this House and to various major commodity groups that the opposition is conducting a filibuster with regard to this bill; that we are preventing the bill going to committee where the amendments can be considered, and that it is our intent to talk out the bill so that it will not become legislation. This is unfortunate indeed. These things have been said only for personal political gain on the part of an individual member, or because of a gross lack of knowledge of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I am not only disturbed but angered that such tactics should be employed in connection with a matter which affects the livelihood of thousands of families engaged in the agricultural business. These are nothing but cheap, contemptible parliamentary tactics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: Let me deal with this accusation of filibustering which hon. members opposite have made. This bill was introduced in the House on March 17. Today is June 10. The government has absolute authority when it comes to bringing business before the House. It can do so whenever it chooses. Responsibility for doing so rests with the government alone. During this time, the minister says, the measure was brought before the House on seven different occasions, on none of which could the government get the bill through second reading stage.

Let me deal with this allegation. On the first occasion the bill was introduced, no debate was permissible. On the second occasion, it was introduced about half an hour before the end of the sitting, so we discussed it for only half an hour. Subsequently, over a period of weeks the government allowed the bill to be discussed in fits and starts. At no time was the opposition allowed to discuss it for more than 3¼ hours. If my arithmetic is correct, in the period of almost three months during which the measure was brought before the House from time to time, opposition members have been allowed to contribute approximately 12 hours, in total, to the debate, compared with the days and days spent on the omnibus Criminal Code bill dealing with abortion and other matters in which the opposition contributed 17 hours over a nine-week period.

The government talks about a filibuster. On one occasion members of this government filibustered for 26 solid days on the estimates. Now they talk about 12 hours! During those 12 hours we were dealing with a measure which affects 10,000 farm organizations and commodity groups, and 120 marketing agencies. For 12 hours we were dealing with a bill which contains 30 clauses. This works out to something like three minutes a clause —and I would point out that the time I have mentioned was taken up by all three opposition parties. Members opposite call this a filibuster. It is the grossest misrepresentation they have ever tried to put across to these commodity groups.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: The government told them it intended to press forward with this legislation as quickly as possible, but that the opposition were holding it up. They were doing their best, they said, but the opposition would not allow the bill to go to committee. Well, look at the record. This is the first day upon which the measure has been allowed to come before the House since May 19, almost four weeks ago. We have asked for it both privately and publicly, but the government has refused to bring it forward. Now they bring it in—

An hon. Member: On a short day.

Mr. Danforth: They bring it in on the shortest day of the week and we can only debate it for about 2½ hours. There is something else. When they were telling the farm groups that the opposition were holding up this measure, members of the government were well aware that if the bill had been referred to committee on the day it was introduced, it would still not have been possible to act upon it since the committee already had a full program before it. The government had already placed the estimates of two major departments before the committee in addition to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. They knew full well that consideration of these matters would take up all the time available to the committee in this part of the session.

If the bill goes to the committee this afternoon, the committee will still not be able to work on it; its members are seized with another piece of legislation. We who sit on the Standing Committee on Agriculture, aware of the fact that one group alone has proposed 83 amendments to a bill containing 114 clauses, fully realize that it would be impossible for the measure before us to be dealt with immediately—and so would anyone else who was acquainted with parliamentary procedure. Yet the government has the cheek to say, across the nation, "Put the bill in committee and you will have ample opportunity to fix up this measure to suit yourselves." That is utter nonsense. This is why I call the government's action cheap and contemptible. I do so because there are no other adjectives which can describe it.

Members of the government have told the producers—and they have put it in writing—that if the opposition would let this bill go to committee, all their amendments would be favourably considered at the committee stage. They said this knowing full well that since treasury expenditures are involved, amendments which could be entertained in committee are extremely limited in nature. But they did not tell the industry this. They did not tell the industry that on second reading the principle is determined, not at the committee stage. Mr. Speaker, we have had painful experience of the type of bills which come out of committees, particularly committees of this Parliament.

We in the opposition are not trying to tell the agricultural industry the type of legislation it should have, but we are trying to give the industry the opportunity to express itself, to exert some influence with regard to the legislation with which it is to be saddled by the government. We are trying to give agriculture a break. How can we help these people if this kind of misinformation goes out across the nation? Leaders of the commodity groups, who do not have the time to spend on studying parliamentary procedure, of investigating the fine print and the reasons behind the positions taken here, must accept the information given to them at its face value. The information circulated amounts to misrepresentation. I have little patience with Members of Parliament who stoop to shenanigans of this type in exchange for a little political gain.

Mr. Olson: Then you must be mad at all your colleagues.

Mr. Danforth: There has been misrepresentation as to the amendment proposed by my hon. friend. The information given out was that the amendment meant there had to be a referendum among all producers from coast to coast before a marketing board could be set up under this bill. That is utter nonsense. The amendment deals with two principles only. The first is that primary producers should have representation on the boards of directors or on the councils and agencies to be appointed by the government under the terms of this legislation.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Secondly—and this is equally important—the amendment does not state as a principle that we must have a referendum throughout the nation before the bill can be effected. Yet this is the information disseminated by the government. I say it is misinformation, half truths, untruths. This amendment would mean—and every primary producer in the country supports this desire—that agencies would not be brought into being by this government by the stroke of a pen, by Order in Council, on the advice of a civil service bureaucrat appointed by the government. This is not what the producers want. They want a say in whether or not they have a marketing agency.

Under the terms of this amendment, which I would commend to all members of the House, no primary producer group could be brought under the control of a government agency unless a referendum were held among the producers of the commodity concerned and a majority of them indicated support. This is a fair procedure; it is democratic; it allows the primary producer, whose livelihood depends upon this measure, to make the decision. I submit there is nothing wrong with this approach.

Already at the provincial level we have marketing agencies which were set up in this very fashion. Under the terms of this amendment commodity groups would not be expected to hold another referendum. They have already made their wishes known, and this is good enough for the members of the opposition. They have indicated that they want an agency, and therefore they should have an agency. Our antipathy to this legislation results from the fact that from the beginning to the end of the measure it is the government agencies, the government appointees, that will make all the major decisions with or without consultation with and consent of the primary producers. We contend this principle is unjust.

These are the two principles behind the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot. I suggest these principles are reasonable and can be easily implemented. Further, they do justice to the primary producers who are asking for help in controlling their product. The amendment would not mean that the producers are told what to do; it would put a noose around the neck of government-appointed decision-makers.

The producers of this nation find it difficult enough to compete in the marketplace, to fight for domestic markets, to fight input costs, to fight rising labour costs and to fight to produce a better product both for the Canadian people and for international markets, without this type of legislation. They have enough battles as it is, without battling government bureaucracy, a government whose help they are asking for in order to combat the marketing trends they are experiencing today. The agricultural producers of this nation are asking the federal government to be their allies, not their enemies. They want to work with government and to have government work with them. They do not want to be directed and told what they can and cannot do. Primary producers in the agribusiness feel they are subjected to enough regimentation as it is. They are looking for a way to protect themselves and improve their lot; they do not want to surrender their right to make decisions. This is our primary objection to the bill. The government today gave an undertaking that it will not throw technical roadblocks in the way of amendments proposed at the committee stage.

Mr. Baldwin: It took a lot to drag that out of them, too.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, we have been asking for this commitment for weeks. We have asked for it privately and publicly. It is on Hansard. Today the Government House Leader gave this commitment, and I think he gave it seriously.

I know that had the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) been asked to give the same commitment today, he would have given it. We have now had an indication by the government that it will accept amendments at committee stage of the bill and will hear any and all interested parties. If in past weeks the government had been correct in informing agribusiness across the country that the opposition were preventing the bill going to committee, that if the bill were in committee and would be well and amendments would be given serious consideration and the government would present the type of legislation the opposition wanted, is it not strange that the government should say today, "We give an undertaking that we will allow amendments and that we will allow witnesses to appear"?

Mr. Whelan: We do it in other committees, too.

Mr. Baldwin: We have seen what you do in your committees.

Mr. Ricard: You do not accept the reports of committees.

Mr. Danforth: I am satisfied that the government is serious about the undertaking it gave Parliament today. I am also satisfied that interested commodity groups will be allowed to make representations. However, I am interested indeed in knowing how the various commodity groups across the nation will be invited to make representations. The task force report indicated—and I am sure this is correct—that there are nearly 10,000 commodity groups, agencies and committees as well as 120 marketing schemes directly affected by Bill C-197.

All members of this House who are engaged in agriculture have been aware for some time that this measure has not been promoted by 100 farm groups, by 50 farm groups or by 1,000 commodity groups. It has been actively promoted by two or three commodity groups and one major farm organization. I do not blame them for it; they face difficulties and we realize that. They have every right to promote such legislation and to seek government support for it. However, the Minister of Agriculture, on the basis of this sort of support for the bill, should not stand in the House and say that this measure is what agriculture has been seeking for years. Let him not tell us that agribusiness has been pressing for this sort of legislation. This, like many other statements we have heard, simply is not true.

This bill controls all agribusiness such as chemical fertilizer sales, food processing, storage and whatever one buys and sells. All these things come under the terms of the bill. The entire agribusiness of this nation is involved. We are speaking perhaps of a $40 billion business when we take into account all the labour, all the capital investment and all the segments of the industry that are involved in this measure. We are speaking of a tremendous part of Canada's economy. We in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will not allow, if we can prevent it, agriculture to be put in such a confined, legal cage.

An hon. Member: Straitjacket.

Mr. Danforth: Yes, a straitjacket where government directive can control the entire industry. Mr. Speaker, we have seen what government directives can do. Many men seeking employment in the cities, and many families facing hardship such as they have never faced before, find themselves in this position because of directives of this government.

Before I resume my seat I would repeat that it is not the intention of the official opposition in this House to tell the agricultural industry of this nation what it may or may not do. It is our intention to prevent the government doing that. We feel that agricultural businesses combined are in a position, since the livelihood of all those employed in agriculture is involved, to make major decisions concerning the industry and should be left free and unhampered to do so. In this amendment, all we are seeking to do is making certain that those engaged in the production, distribution, sale and storage of agricultural products have an opportunity to decide whether they want a marketing agency and whether they will allow their businesses to come under the farm council which would be set up under this bill. The decision should be theirs. We shall not throw roadblocks in the way of any commodity group having such an agency, provided that is its wish.

Before concluding I should like to point out that under the provisions of this measure, any production monopoly, be it in respect of broilers, eggs or anything else, would be in a nice, comfortable pew because the government by regulation could prevent any other industry starting up in competition and could prevent any young person starting in the business. This measure will be effected on a nation-wide basis. Under the bill the government could control quotas and production. The reason this measure cannot, and never will, give the producers what they want is—as the minister himself said—that we cannot control imports.

When the minister speaks on this bill I should like him to say yes to the following simple questions: First, under the terms of this bill will the government guarantee that the primary producers will receive more for their products? Second, under the terms of this bill will the government guarantee that the input costs of production will not increase? Third, under the terms of this bill will the government agree that imports will not be allowed to take a part of the domestic market which is allocated under a quota system? Fourth, under the terms of this bill will the consumers of Canada, who are tremendously important and are very interested in this measure, obtain the same quality at no greater price? If the minister can answer yes to all these questions, this bill is very different from that which appears to be.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my contribution to the debate on Bill C-197 to establish a National Farm Products Marketing Council will be very brief. Despite the rather attractive wording of the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the members of the New Democratic Party will oppose it. I believe, however, we can speak in favour of the general principles of the bill. The form in which the bill will appear when it emerges from the committee is another question. I believe that to be in favour of this amendment would be to be in favour of greater duplication. I have a telegram from the province of British Columbia which reads in parts as follows:

> We do hold plebiscites in this province for marketing boards and therefore see no need for a further plebiscite to see whether or not they are prepared to join a national marketing agency since the provincial authority allows them to contract or deal directly with a national agency.

That is one point of view from my province. Every member of our party who desired to speak on this bill before the amendment was moved has done so. Therefore, I need say only a few words. The important thing is that representatives of the farm organizations and commodity groups be given an opportunity to appear before the Agricultural Committee in order to make their representations. It has been emphasized by other members of our party that we should make certain that the various producer groups and farm organizations have adequate representation on the National Farm Products Marketing Council which is to be instituted. They do not want to be merely part of an advisory body. They want to be part of the decision-making process which affects their livelihood and businesses.

I was particularly interested in the questions asked by the previous speaker at the end of his speech. I think they could be applied equally to any marketing board. I believe these questions have been answered many times, perhaps years ago, because we have seen many marketing boards develop for the benefit not only of consumers but the marketing or commodity groups they represent. I am unhappy that this important bill which was introduced on March 17 and last debated on May 19 was not brought back to the House until June 10. Along with the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth), I think we can be a little suspicious of the priority the government places on the bill and the urgency of this matter. I will follow my own advice at this point and sit down, in the hope that the bill will be referred to committee.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) wishes to make some comments, I wish he would get to his feet.

Mr. Whelan: I have heard enough from other peoples' feet; I do not want to do the same.

Mr. McCutcheon: That is where the hon. member makes the best sounds.

Mr. Jamieson: What makes you think he isn't standing up now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCutcheon: If the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) wants to get into the act, let him do so. Mr. Speaker, I expect to speak for only five minutes; I propose to inflict myself upon the House for only that time. I agree with the principle of establishing a marketing board, but I have reservations about the way this one is proposed. Clause 3 of the bill provides:

> There shall be a council to be known as the National Farm Products Marketing Council—

The bill goes on to say that it is to be appointed by the Governor in Council and will hold office during pleasure. It also says that the members of an agency shall be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office at pleasure. This is the provision to which I object most strongly. I object to this paternalistic, Big Brother approach—that so far as the farmers of Canada are concerned Big Brother knows best what is good for them. Big Brother knows who is in, through licensing. Big Brother also will know who is not in, through licensing. Big Brother will know what is in, through licensing, and Big Brother will also know what is out. I suggest there will be more people with briefcases looking after the affairs of our farmers than there will be primary producers.

I do not know why the government could not have agreed many, many days ago to having primary producers on the National Farm Products Marketing Council or on the agencies. Had this been done, it would have avoided all this so-called holdup.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: There is no reference whatever to primary producers in this context of the bill. I have known the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for a long time and I hold him in high regard. I thought that so long as he held that portfolio there would be representation from primary producers. Why is the government afraid to include this provision as an amendment to the bill? I think the Minister of Agriculture would not object to it, because I have known him so long and I remember what he said on December 12, 1962—

Mr. Bell: I remember that, too.

Mr. McCutcheon: —in the House of Commons when speaking during a supply debate in which a similar matter was raised. He said at that time:

For this reason I think any such scheme should be worked out amongst the farmers themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: How times change! I guess your view depends upon where you sit. I support the amendment which has been brought in by the hon. member for Crowfoot because it will prevent all the things the Minister of Agriculture was terribly concerned about a number of years ago. I remember something else the minister said. I do not have the quotation here, but he will remember that when there was a slight problem of patronage in the Post Office he became quite eloquent in his condemnation of it. I am not suggesting for one minute that there would be patronage in the appointment of these marketing board people, but there is the possibility that it might happen. Therefore, I think the amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot is most appropriate. It reads in part:

"this House will not proceed upon a measure to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products where the establishment of such agencies is in the discretion of the government and the appointment of members to such agencies is in the gift and at the pleasure of the government—

Wow! Another matter which concerns me is that decisions will be made for farmers by people with no practical experience, period. They will probably have Ph.Ds. They will be economists, academics, and all the rest. The type of recommendation they will come up with is that which is found on page 8 of "Canadian Agriculture in the Seventies". This is a dandy heading. I hope that some day somebody will be able to explain to me what it means. I will just read this heading:

—increasing planning and contractual arrangements resulting in backward, forward, horizontal integration.

These are the birds—I use that word advisedly—who will be making decisions for practical farmers, unless the minister gives us assurance that there will be practical people on the boards. I have heard it said that if we had a group of economists laid end to end from B.C. to Newfoundland, we still would not come up with an opinion. I think there is some truth in that.

The preceding speaker said this bill could be amended so far as virtually everything in it was concerned, if only it got to the committee. We know that is not the case, because the government is not bound to make any changes so far as principle is concerned. I know that I speak for many farm organizations when I say we are pleased the minister has given us the assurance that the modifications and amendments which we desire will be included in the bill.

I have here a letter from an organization of Alberta farmers who were sucked in with the misinformation, or whatever it was, that was given out. I know they will now be happy because the mistake has been smoked-out, and witnesses can be called before the committee and, hopefully, the bill can be repaired to such an extent that it will be acceptable. Again I say to the Minister of Agriculture, "Please see to it that there are practical people on these boards so that we do not hear a lot of double-talk; so that, hopefully, this legislation will do a job for the agricultural community and for the consumers".

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty as well as my privilege to speak on Bill C-197, entitled "An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products".

First of all, although I agree with the ideas expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Côté), who represents the Richelieu constituency, I do not appreciate the need for such a bill. In fact, this is what he had to say in the House, on June 4 last, as recorded at page 7761 of Hansard:

Then, as my hon. friend pointed out, the cows will be well looked after. They seem to be doing quite well indeed, because of the government's policy.

So the Parliamentary Secretary to the minister believes that "the cows are well looked after" by the government and that the Canadian agriculture is in good health. This is probably why, as he says himself so well, he felt prompted to sell his cows a few days after the election. I understand him perfectly well because, no doubt, it pays more to have one in Parliament than to have 25 of them in the barn, the way things are going nowadays.

This is perhaps what my hon. friend from Richelieu was referring to when he stated that the cows were well looked after. I do not want to dwell any longer upon the subject and I shall deal then with Bill C-197.

The agricultural situation is far from bright, especially in Quebec, whatever the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture thinks about it. And I shall quote a few figures showing that the situation is serious.

At page 11, volume 1349 of the news bulletin published by the Department of Agriculture, the following appears:

Although the general consumer price index shows an increase of 36 per cent between 1948-1952 and 1964-1968, the retail price of food has increased by only 33 per cent. Prices to the farmers have increased only by 9 per cent during that same period.

And further, we can read that in 1948, the average hourly wage which was 92 cents, enabled people to buy 18 large Grade A eggs. In 1968, the average hourly wage which was $2.58, enabled them to buy 59 eggs of the same grade. It is always the same people, i.e. the farmers, who suffer the consequences of an ailing, retrograde economy, with or without planning by the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, etc.

I am convinced that many believe the government helps farmers considerably. Nevertheless, what can make up for the present lack in product marketing? I should now like to quote part of page 2 of the aforementioned bulletin:

Canadian farmers do not receive many subsidies. A comparison with the OECD shows that federal expenditures on behalf of Canadian agriculture (including not only subsidies but all services such as research and inspection) come to an average of about $286 per person actively engaged in agriculture against $1,287 in the United States. The level of Canadian support of agriculture is one of the lowest in the Western world.

We can see from this, that it is senseless to say that the farmers are oversubsidized. Their incomes are no more encouraging as they follow a downward curve. One can read at page 191 of the report presented by the Canadian Agriculture Outlook Conference held in Ottawa on November 24 and 25 last, and I quote:

—the total cash received from the operation of farms in 1969 is supposed to be about $4,290 million, i.e. $100 million less than in 1968.

At page 195 of that same report, it is stated that in 1969, the net profit of farmers amounted to about $425 million, i.e. about 10 per cent less than for 1968. Now, the expenditures have increased by about $117 million. When one has a look at these figures one understands easily that Canadian cows are not so well looked after as the member for Richelieu seems to believe.

To cope with this we have Bill C-197. I approve the establishment of a National Farm Products Marketing Council so long as farmers are able to move freely within that agency.

As I read the bill carefully I found that many clauses could be improved.

Clause 2(d) says that marketing

—includes selling and offering for sale and buying, pricing, assembling, packing, processing, transporting, storing and any other act necessary to prepare the product in a form—

I feel that the government is firmly taking over the whole farm products trade.

Further, under clause 2(e)(iii), we realize that a marketing plan may, and I quote:

—determine the quantity in which and the price, time and place at which the regulated product or any variety, class or grade thereof may be marketed in interprovincial or export trade.

Under those provisions, the government would therefore determine the price, time and place, etc., at which the farm products may be marketed. The farmer would thus become simply a government employee with no freedom whatsoever as to his production.

In addition, only the farmers licensed by the government or the persons appointed by it would be able to go into production, as is provided for in clause 2(e)(v), which reads, in part, as follows:

—a system for the licensing of persons engaged in the growing or production of the regulated product—

Thus, the farmer will no longer be free since everything will be left to the discretion of the authorities appointed by the government.

The government will even be able to ask the farmer for "levies or charges", as stipulated in paragraph (vi) of subclause (e) of clause 2, and I quote:

—the imposition and collection by the appropriate agency of levies or charges from persons engaged in the growing or production of the regulated product—

As to the regulated product, subclause (g) of clause 2 provides the following, and I quote:

—any farm product to the extent that it is grown or produced—

And further on, we read this:

—in any region of Canada designated in the proclamation that authorizes an agency to exercise its powers—

In my opinion, the government is taking over all farm products through the people appointed by it.

Farm Products Marketing Agencies Bill

• (4:10 p.m.)

According to clause 3 of Bill C-197, the members of the National Farm Products Marketing Council are appointed by the governor in council, therefore by the cabinet.

Besides, clause 5 says that the members of the Council become public servants, and so are independent from the farmers to whom they will not have to report at all. Consequently farmers will have no control over the marketing of their products.

Clause 6 says that the object of the act is to maintain and promote an efficient and competitive agriculture industry, which means the complete disappearance of average size or small farms.

The Council is empowered to require persons engaged in production or marketing to register with the agency, to maintain books under the provisions of the three paragraphs of clause 7 (e).

In addition, an inspector of that Council may, under clause 34, enter any place when he reasonably believes that there is a regulated product intended to be marketed and may examine any books, records or other documents in such place.

Pursuant to clauses 36 and 37, every person who violates any provision of this act or fails to comply with a requirement of the Council is guilty of, and I quote:

(a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or

(b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Mr. Speaker, the bill in its present form will surely be amended in committee, and I propose to attend all its sittings, because I strongly object to its passage. If a vote is taken, I will vote against it, because it must be amended at all costs, otherwise it is a strait-jacket put on the farmers. In my opinion, we should make this bill more democratic.

Instead of the government appointing all those who will implement this act, it would be advisable to divide that Council into three sectors, as my colleague, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), mentioned in the House on April 27 last.

I suggest that there be first, a federal sector; second, a provincial sector, and third, a sector made up by the producers themselves. Each sector would appoint its own representatives and thus have some discretion insofar as the implementation of this bill is concerned. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) finds it impossible to do that, I urge him to delegate all his powers to the provinces, as I suggested it to him on June 4 last.

Primary producers groups want to appoint themselves their representatives, or have them appointed by their professional association, in order to ensure the control and the marketing of their products. They have their own set-up and they want their decisions to be carried out through the normal channels, that is, through their association. Every Canadian province has one or several farmers associations. That is why they want to have their own too, being more familiar than anyone with their individual or collective needs. They know better than anyone the cost of every consumer product they want to market. Now, in my opinion, they are better judges than anyone to advise the organization which is to govern them, under bill C-197, regarding the fixing of fair prices.

I feel that when an economic sector as important as agriculture is in a bad way, we should diagnose the trouble so as to remedy it as soon as possible.

I believe that up to now, the federal government has proved its inability to solve adequately the agricultural problem, whatever may think my friend from Richelieu, and I therefore ask the honourable minister once again to extend the scope of Bill C-197 with regard to the representation on the Council, or else to delegate his authority.

As far as I am concerned, the present situation could not be worse. The net subsidies to industrial milk and cream producers in Quebec have been as follows. The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) had addressed the following question to the Minister of Agriculture:

What were the amounts granted to Quebec industrial milk producers for the years 1967, 1968 and 1969?

The answer was as follows:

1. Net subsidies to manufacturing milk and cream shippers in Quebec were as follows:

1967-68	$41.2 million
1968-69	$44.4 million
1969-70 (incomplete)	$36.7 million

The second part of the question read as follows:

2. What amounts were witheld, for marketing surpluses or penalizing for overproduction manufacturing milk producers in Quebec, in the years 1967, 1968 and 1969?

Here is the answer:

2. The following amounts were witheld from the subsidies to pay for the cost of exporting surpluses:

1967-68	$4.5 million
1968-69	$7.2 million
1969-70 (incomplete)	$13.6 million

There is an increase there. So, we give with one hand and take back with the other, while giving less money from year to year. For instance, in 1968, $36.7 million were paid Quebec producers and in 1970, only $23.1 million, which represents a $13.6 million decrease over a short period, while we tolerate the government in power.

Employees in certain regional offices feel that the farmers would be well advised to sacrifice some personal freedom to protect their interests. However, I do not agree with that. If one must give up one's liberty to live decently in as rich a country as Canada, our government must be sadly lacking.

Therefore, I shall vote against this bill if it is not amended properly with a view to respecting the freedom of the farmers. We are fed up with a regime in which one must be tied like a dog to survive. It is high time someone cut the rope used to tie up the farmers.

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture on a point of order.

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, it may be that I did not understand clearly but the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) said about clause 2 that a marketing plan may ensure marketing, regulate sales.

As for me, I read:

(e) "marketing plan" means...

I do not know whether my interpretation is wrong or if I misunderstood what was read but if the hon. member really read that, the nature of the bill is completely altered. Could the hon. member repeat what he has in his notes? That would elucidate the matter for me, because it is very important.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, does this have to do with clause 1?

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, it is about clause 2(e).

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the parliamentary secretary that I said "may", but I think I should have read "means".

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Indeed, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I think it proper to remind hon. members that on second reading it is forbidden to consider a bill clause by clause and to refer to it as the hon. member for Richmond did in the course of his speech. Concerning this, I should like to quote part of citation 381 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 4th edition:

On the motion for the second reading, it is out of order to discuss the clauses of the bill.

The appropriate stage for the discussion of a bill clause by clause is the committee stage and not second reading.

The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am happy—

Mr. Beaudoin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. Beaudoin: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I thank you for having called me to order. However, I should like to say that I do not want to criticize application forms. Nevertheless it is a rewarding thing to trace something back to its origin, so as to know how to begin a discussion in committee.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to take a few minutes of the time of the House to express a number of opinions on this undoubtedly questionable and questioned bill, and also on the amendment introduced by a member of our group.

Bill C-197, as all members are already aware, is a very important bill. There is no need for me to say that in principle, we are in favour of the establishment of a marketing agency for farm products. We are certainly in favour of changes likely to bring about improvements by increasing the income of all Canadian farmers. On the other hand, it seems to me that the type of representation provided for within this agency whose members will be appointed by the government is not clear enough.

Several members have emphasized the importance of having the producers represented. I agree with them that this is not only desirable but necessary in the case of an agency entrusted with such heavy responsibilities.

This bill, however, does not say who is going to be appointed. How can we be sure that the members of this agency will be qualified and will really represent every farming group in Canada?

As members of the House, I think it is our duty to require the minister and Parliament to amend this bill in order to ensure the full representation of the various farming associations.

Mr. Speaker, I do not question the good faith of the minister introducing the bill, but is it enough to rely on the good faith of the minister when he might very well happen some day to change his mind?

As for us, we want to be assured that a number of members of this agency, which will have great responsibilities as indicated by the clauses of the bill, will be chosen among the farmers.

I think that the farmers are entitled to that representation so as to ensure that the necessary talents can advise the agency. When the government will realize the significance of that representation, we may expect certain changes to be made during consideration of the bill in committee, so as to ensure the producers of an adequate representation.

It will be pointed out to me that the bill under consideration does not prevent such appointments. I realize the significance—as I said earlier—of the marketing of farm products and I would not want, at some time, to be accused of merely delaying the passage of this legislation.

I believe that it is our duty to require that representation if necessary. By simply relying on this bill, which lacks precision and guarantees, I think that we would be remiss in our duty.

We require these particulars in the best interests of the agricultural community.

My remarks are not intended to delay the passage of this measure. On the contrary, we recognize its merits and we agree with its basic principle.

In view of the importance of this bill, we must admit that the government is taking over complete jurisdiction over agriculture. Recognizing also the importance of agriculture in Canada as well as the difficulties it is facing, it is also obvious that such legislation has to be passed in order to improve the lot of the farmers.

This bill which contains provisions on the official recognition of the farmer, the selection of lands appropriate for certain types of crops and the control of the general production, constitutes the outline of a management policy. I am not saying that it is not necessary today for the government to help in matters of production of these products. As several associations have requested it for a long time, we are asking for the establishment of a Commission or agency that will determine the kind of production most profitable to agriculture and to producers.

However, I wonder why the government would turn down the suggestion that the House give assurances that producers will be represented on the Council or the agency. Why should it refuse? I see no reason for the government continuing to refuse giving us the assurance of such a representation which I consider is necessary in order to maintain better control, at the same time depriving itself of the required information. I repeat that I do not believe these arguments are worthy of discussion in the House.

I prefer to credit hon. members with good faith and believe that the failure to recognize the value of farmer representatives within the council is perhaps an omission. Such participation would be a real enrichment.

The problems are many concerning milk, wheat, vegetables and imports in general, and at times they create great difficulties for our Canadian producers. The council will, I believe, have all the powers required for limitation of imports in certain cases. Thus, production of milk, wheat, or vegetables will become more regular and better directed to the advantage of the Canadian producers.

We all want agriculture to be prosperous. Because of the interest I have for the producers of my riding and for the Canadian producers in general and with the co-operation of all hon. members, I hope that the representatives of the various farm associations of Canada will be allowed to sit on this Council. The government will understand that these suggestions from the opposition are not against the principle of this bill and do not aim at questioning the goodwill of the minister responsible for this bill. On the contrary, we wanted to participate in the drawing up of the bill so that producers may be given the place they are entitled to since they are directly involved.

I imagine that an impartial government would not hesitate to recognize the value of such representation which cannot but help farming and which can also give our producers a sufficient income if it is well thought out.

I shall close my remarks by wishing that all hon. members will understand how important this bill is and to what extent such representation is not only desirable, but also necessary.

[English]

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister on bringing Bill C-197 back into the House to be dealt with, rather than making statements through the press and other news media of this country. I have reason for being nice to the minister; I am hoping he will visit Norfolk County this fall to assist in the opening of an agricultural exhibition. We look forward to the minister accepting the invitation extended by the agricultural society of that area.

I rise in this debate in order to prove the consistency of my remarks. Very early in this session, in the Speech from the Throne and in a preliminary announcement the minister declared his intention of introducing legislation which would permit national marketing boards to operate in Canada. I wrote a newspaper article in which I said I welcomed wholeheartedly this announcement and looked forward to the introduction of the legislation.

I was completely dismayed when I found that the bill which was presented did not contain some very vital sections. I wrote in the article that it was absolutely essential for primary producers to retain a measure of control over any national agency which might be set up. The government could have obtained the acceptance of all opposition parties had it written into the bill a clause spelling out beyond any doubt that primary producers would be appointed or elected to the national marketing council and to the national marketing agencies.

In the second place, the government could have obtained ready acquiescence to their proposals had they simply carried out a referendum or plebiscite among the primary producers to discover whether they were favourable to the establishment of a marketing agency. If they did not find it workable, or if they believed it was not working to their advantage, they should have the privilege of voting it out again. This is the principle under which marketing boards operate in Ontario. In that province a 66⅔ majority of producers must vote in favour of a scheme. They also have the privilege of voting out an agency if they find it is not working in their best interests—and this has been done on more than one occasion in Ontario. Surely we are not asking too much when we propose that the government write this type of safeguard or safety valve into the legislation we are now considering.

The minister's assurance that primary producers will be on the board is simply not good enough. As has been pointed out by my hon. friends, the minister has the best intentions, no doubt, and as long as he retains his present portfolio he will no doubt see that this is done. We want an undertaking to be in black and white. Our producers are not satisfied by a simple assurance from the minister or an indication that it may be done at the pleasure of the government or of the Governor in Council.

We are also suspicious of a promise that amendments will be made at the committee stage. We have had some eye-opening experiences on committees dealing with other pieces of legislation, when perfectly acceptable and reasonable amendments, drawn up with legal advice and worded so as not to contradict the principles of the measure concerned, were voted down by a majority of the members. This situation was not explained to the producers across the country. The government said, "All we have to do is get the bill into committee and all your recommendations and proposals will be listened to and accepted." This is just not the case.

The opposition welcomes the assurance by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the minister that the government will guarantee the acceptance of reasonable amendments to this legislation. Only in light of this assurance are we ready to accept a time limit on this debate, are we willing to see this discussion reach a conclusion and have the bill sent to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The primary producers in my own area whom I have contacted or who have contacted me concerning Bill C-197 have expressed mixed reactions. The broiler growers are among the few groups across Canada who are in a position to take advantage of this legislation, and even they were not familiar with the bureaucratic and autocratic way in which the national marketing council was to be set up. Then again, everyone became suspicious when there were not sufficient copies of the bill to send to all those who wrote enquiring exactly what it contained. The Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board adopted a ho-hum attitude toward the legislation. They would not oppose it but they are not, perhaps, in a position to take advantage of the services of a national marketing agency at the present time. Tobacco, as hon. members know, is grown only in limited areas of Canada. In Ontario we operate under a somewhat rigidly controlled system operated by a board which was set up by a 66⅔ majority of producers. However, in other parts of this country the tobacco industry is only in the development stage, and growers would not wish to have controls imposed upon them such as those in Ontario find acceptable. Another factor which causes some people to view Bill C-197 with a measure of suspicion is the experience of dairy producers operating under the Dairy Commission. In many cases the experience has been good, but some producers have found their production curtailed to a quantity below the level necessary for efficient operation.

I stated earlier that I did not intend to prolong this debate unduly. I say in conclusion that I accept wholeheartedly the principle of this bill, but I want the details spelled out in black and white so that they cannot be changed at the whim of a minister. The participation of producers in policy-making is essential. Unless the government accepts this point of view in committee, it will encounter further opposition when the bill comes back to the House for third reading. We want to make it abundantly clear that when this legislation is finally written into the statute books, production is controlled by the primary producers and decisions are made by the producers themselves in their own best interests.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think it is in order to say once again that this bill is one of the two most important pieces of legislation affecting agriculture which have been presented to Parliament this session. The other bill, of course, was the one to change the grading of grain and deal with other aspects of the grain trade in both eastern and western Canada.

Reference has been made to the amount of time which has been taken to debate this piece of legislation. In my opinion the bill deserves a great deal of debate. After all, it will affect the methods of production and marketing employed in respect of a great many farm products. Also, of course, it will affect the livelihood of many thousands of farmers. So as far as we in this party are concerned, we are not worried about the amount of time which has been taken to discuss the bill. When it gets to the committee we intend to propose changes, the first objective being to ensure that farmers participate in the decision-making process; that they do not simply act on the direction of government administrators no matter how capable they may be.

We have received representations from farm groups who wish to use this legislation. The turkey producers marketing board of Saskatchewan have been in touch with me and indicated they want this bill passed in a workable form because they want to use this type of legislation co-operatively with producers in other provinces. We have also received representations from other farm organizations. It is significant that in letters written to other members of this party as well as myself major farm organizations have mentioned repeatedly that the bill should provide for producer participation in decision-making. They suggest that the commissioners appointed under the bill be nominated, wherever possible, by farm organizations and producer groups.

One thing about this bill that has surprised me is that no specific provision was included in the original draft for the participation of producers in matters dealing with the operation of the bill, the kind of products it will control and the markets to which produce will be directed. We are moving into an era when this sort of legislation is becoming increasingly important, an era when patterns of production and marketing will progressively be controlled not by individual farmers but by organizations, in some cases not by government but by the industry itself.

I recall that a few years ago some of the big chain stores in Regina decided to buy their eggs from Manitoba instead of from the egg producers close to Regina. As a result, the Regina egg producers who had been supplying these chain stores found they had no retail outlets. Since eggs must be delivered to market quickly and must be fresh, this meant that some egg producers literally were put out of business on, if I remember rightly, two or three weeks' or one month's notice. As the saying goes, they were all dressed up but had nowhere to go.

This is the kind of marketing situation that we have to live with today, and it is the basic reason we want this bill to go to committee. There I hope the government will be prepared to take a hard look at some of the provisions in the bill to ensure that the producers are fully protected. It is not a question simply of protecting the producers by this type of legislation; participation of producers is also involved. If the operations of agencies such as the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners are out of the reach of the farmer, and the farmer does not take part in the decision-making process, in the absence of two-way communication sooner or later he will regard them as one of his worst enemies even though he may now regard them as his friend.

This situation can only be avoided if individual producers have a working knowledge of the operations of such agencies and how they are trying to assist him. Through this understanding the farmer will be able to take the good with the bad. The nature of marketing activities is such that at times things get a bit rough. Unless there is two-way communication the farmers will run into trouble with the marketing agencies, whatever their stripe, be they government commissions or producers' agencies. Once there is a breakdown in communication and understanding between producer and marketing agency, you are in real trouble.

Those are the thoughts that I wish to express this afternoon. As the bill moves into committee I hope we will be able to work toward meeting our objectives. As I say, I should like those organizations who have written to members of the House saying they are either in favour or against the measure to appear before the committee, state what they like or do not like about the bill and give their reasons. In this way the members of the committee will be able to make a reasoned, value judgment of how we should change the legislation.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). It is a pleasure to follow the previous speaker because he has great experience in farming matters. Before becoming the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar he was president of the Saskatchewan Farm Union and, as I say, he speaks with great authority of farm matters. He has taken a very fair attitude in the debate which has taken a few days to bring it to this stage.

Had the minister wanted to rush this legislation through, it would have been quite simple for him to assure the House which specific amendments would be acceptable or even encouraged in committee. The subject of marketing boards is not new. The Saskatchewan Farm Union, the former farm union of Alberta, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and now Unifarm, a combination of these two, are unanimous in saying that uniformity and common sense should be brought to the orderly marketing of farm products.

No farm union—I repeat, no farm union—has ever recommended handing over responsibility for decision-making, consultation and the composition of such boards to a group other than itself. I do not know why any government or minister would suggest in legislation, in this House or in committee that such a program could be foisted on the Canadian people. I am not satisfied with a sort of blanket assurance that everything in committee will be well. We have found from sad experience that the proper time to change the principle of a bill is on second reading when its principle is under discussion. Once the bill is sent to committee, often the government feels that it has a free hand to do what it likes.

I have before me a letter from the president of Unifarm, which represents 30,000 farmers in Alberta, the great bulk of family farmers in that province. In paragraph 4 the letter states:

• (4:50 p.m.)

> Our main concerns are in regard to representation on both the proposed marketing council and the marketing agencies which could be established under it.

The following appears in the previous paragraph:

> We understand that desirable changes could be introduced at that stage.

As the former speaker said, and I agree, it is our duty to see that more than pious promises are given. We want to see commitments in black and white. After all, the minister's promises are binding only on himself. We do not know what the vagaries of the summer may bring. We know that Bill C-196 is still before the committee and that Bill C-197 cannot be passed in the few days remaining in this session.

Mr. Olson: I hope it can.

Mr. Bigg: A pious hope cannot put it through. The committee is seized with Bill C-196. I understand that the marketing agencies have proposed 87 amendments.

Mr. Olson: All members need do is get on with it.

Mr. Bigg: That is quite apart from amendments presented in the House. I cannot deny what the former speaker has said. He has been intimately connected with farm organizations and the problems in respect of grain. He knows that Bill C-196 in its present form is unworkable and it will be some time before it leaves the committee.

Mr. Olson: Not necessarily.

Mr. Bigg: The minister also is aware of this.

Mr. Olson: We will vote on the amendments as fast as we can.

Mr. Bigg: We will be happy to see the amendments that come forward, but it will take some time for all the farm organizations to be heard. We want to see orderly marketing established, fair prices instituted and the agricultural industry stabilized. We must be assured of these things. There must be consultation before the boards or agencies are established. There must be proper representation on those boards. There must be a sensible and reasonable appeal from the arbitrary decisions of such boards. The appointees must be independent, whether they are farmers or not, and not mere tools of the government.

There are these four main principles involved. I am sure the letter from the president of Unifarm would have been couched in different terms had he been assured by the minister that these things would be done. I hope that in a few months' time the minister will come back to this House and tell me I am wrong. However, at the moment I do not think the farmers of Canada have been given the assurance they require.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I do not agree with this amendment. As I understand it, under the BNA Act no provincial marketing agency can be forced to participate in this legislation unless it has the sanction of the provincial government concerned. This is a question we should discuss in the committee, along with other questions. I understand that provincial bodies have the right to vote on whether they will join the marketing agency or whether they will have an agency. If that hurdle were passed, I assume the power to operate under this bill could be delegated. If this is the case, I do not see any need for this amendment. I have very hastily checked this point in the BNA Act. I even spoke to a person who wrote a book about it. If he knows what he is talking about, the situation is as I have explained it.

When this bill reaches the committee I should like to have some of these points clarified. I am somewhat concerned about how control by the respective boards of the council will apply in all cases. We are all aware that no legislation is better than the government which applies it. I believe that in respect of these boards there should be some control by the producers themselves. I should like to see an amendment to the bill which would ensure that this is the case. Further, I believe producers should have an opportunity to appear before the committee. I realize that the government would like early action to be taken on this bill. I can understand that, but I do not think it would be right to rush such a bill through the House when there are points to be brought forward by the people involved in this matter. I can think of no better example than the hearings just completed in respect of Bill C-196.

For the major part of my adult life I have been involved in the grain business as a farmer, as an interested politician and as a wheat pool delegate. I still learn much about legislation from these hearings. It would seem to me that some of the abstract lawyers who sit in Ottawa and draft bills relating to industry are not always aware of the effect of some of their clauses. For this reason I believe committee hearings are useful. They provide an opportunity for those involved in the industry to present their points of view.

In this connection I should like to refer to the Canadian Wheat Board. This agency seems to be a little unrelated to the marketing situation of the day. It would seem to be, in a sort of vacuum, apart from the situation which exists. The Canadian Wheat Board appears to be separated from the grain producers. I feel that producer representation would be useful on the boards contemplated in the bill in order to ensure that the operations of the boards are related to those who produce the product and to the market in general. I should like to make sure that the agencies to be set up under the National Farm Marketing Products Council will have a close relationship to the people who are to be served.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Horner) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Paul-M. Gervais (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, if the House agrees, I would like to revert to routine proceedings in order to present the report of the committee on Bill C-192.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gervais: Mr. Speaker, in the name of the chairman of the committee, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the fifteenth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AERONAUTICS ACT REGULATIONS BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING REGULATIONS MADE PURSUANT TO SECTION 4

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-218, respecting regulations made pursuant to section 4 of the Aeronautics Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Moved that Bill C-218, respecting regulations made pursuant to section 4 of the Aeronautics Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jamieson moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, so far this bill has had a pleasant, even passage. However, one or two things still remain to be said about it. I have a responsibility to take a few minutes of the time of the House to refer to the bill, and possibly to move an amendment.

At first blush the bill looks very simple. There is an amazing story behind this bill. As an amendment to the Aeronautics Act seeks to repair an omission of 16 years and tries to validate in a retroactive manner air regulations which have been passed from time to time since 1954. This is because of an error which has crept in where ministers, probably on the advice of their officials, have enacted these regulations by means of Order in Council. In section 4 of the Aeronautics Act it is stated that subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the minister may make regulations. Over this 16-year period a large number of regulations have been enacted by Order in Council, improperly and illegally. I am not here to challenge the necessity and virtue of the regulations; I am here to point out the dangers in adopting this procedure.

We are continually giving the government, at its request and demand, power to act by Order in Council, regulation, decree and ordinance. At the present time there is very little legislative power left in this House. We have seen this situation occur in the electronics media, in broadcasting, and in transportation. The government has supreme power in these two areas: it is omnipotent; it cannot be regulated or controlled. These actions have been the basis of motions in this House which have not had any real effect. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is attempting to take such action, on behalf of the government, with respect to agriculture. It is happening in respect of financial institutions, through the Corporations Act and the investments act.

We are heading into a very dangerous area where all-power will reside in the government. The situation would be bad enough with a good government, but when we have an incompetent, stupid, sawdust-Caesar government making use of this power it is time some of us stood up and called attention to the fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: This bill was brought about because in the recent past someone noticed the irregularity and challenged the validity of a regulation. When the matter came to court, a judge decided that the regulation in question was invalid because it had not been dealt with in the proper way. I wish the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) were here. In the face of most complete and meticulous requests by members of this side of the House, that minister saw fit to institute the breathalyzer provisions by amendment to the Criminal Code, without asking the proper precautions. I cannot go any further than that because the matter is now before the courts. These are two examples within recent weeks of the government's acting in a tyrannical and autocratic manner.

This government is out of step. Grave dangers face the people of this country because of the exercise of power such as this. In an attempt to validate all the regulations improperly enacted over the last 16 years, this bill would purport to make them legal and effective retroactively. I understand this action is essential and must be done, because the regulations are there. I assume they are essential regulations and that grave consequences and ill effects will follow if they are not validated. The minister was questioned today about the regulations by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). I was inclined to tell the hon. member that he did not have to worry, because at this time none of the regulations are valid. However, I thought of my responsibility to the country and decided not to do that. By this apparently simple bill the House is now being asked to make good the defects and deficiencies of past governments and to validate these regulations. I know of nothing that can better illustrate the dangers and evils of giving unrestricted rights to any government in the way of acting by Order in Council and by regulation.

Canada is one of the few Commonwealth countries where no authority resides in the House, where there is no means of examining, scrutinizing and vetting regulations. Machinery for doing so exists in England. I had the opportunity a year and a half ago to be present in Westminster and I was invited by the chairman of the scrutiny committee there, which was dealing with regulations, to be present. It was a revealing and fascinating experience. This committee, which examines regulations such as those now in question, is advised by Sir Robert Speed who is legal counsel to Mr. Speaker. He receives a list of the large numbers of Orders in Council and regulations and these, according to certain rules, must go before the committee. He examines them with regard to their legality and validity—whether or not they have any undue or unexpected effect not contemplated by the legislation. He then makes a report to the committee and the committee meets from time to time in camera to conduct a detailed examination.

On a great many occasions, as I could tell from my examination of the proceedings of the committee, government departments were told: This regulation is not in order. This regulation is retroactive in its effect. This regulation imposes a greater burden than was contemplated by the legislation. You must change them.

We have no such safeguard in this country. Together with other hon. members, I have been attempting for the last year to repair this serious omission. Finally, last session, we persuaded the government to set up a committee known as the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments. It was a good committee, an all-party committee which toiled very hard examining this issue with the help of expert counsel. It heard a number of witnesses and, in the result, on September 22, 1969, the day before the session began, it brought in a most comprehensive report, one which was greated with loud hosannas by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and others opposite. They said it was the dawn of a new day as far as statutory instruments, regulations and Orders in Council were concerned.

What has happened? The report is gathering dust in some pigeonhole, and this is not because we on this side have not attempted from time to time to push the government into implementing at least part of the proposals. Here we are, a few days away from the termination of this part of the session, and not one thing has been done about it. This is shameful and disgraceful behaviour on the part of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Turn the rascals out.

Mr. Baldwin: I hear my leader say, "Turn the rascals out". That is the song now being sung in all parts of western Canada whenever a member of the government appears there. The song is, "We'll be glad when you're gone, you rascals you."

I shall read a few extracts from this report to indicate what we had in mind. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), appears to be a reasonable man. I hope he will be prepared to bring pressure to bear on the rather immovable bodies of some of his colleagues. They may be prejudiced so far as I am concerned. I hope he will be the irresistible force.

Mr. Jamieson: I am the immovable body.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I would pit the minister against the President of the Privy Council any day. I will read one or two sentences from the preface of the report and from the end.

> The report is based on the assumption that public knowledge of governmental activities is the basis of all control of delegated legislation. For parliamentary democracy is a system of government which requires that the executive be responsible to the legislature and that both be accountable to the people, and there can be neither responsibility nor accountability where there is no knowledge of what has been done.

That should be written up on a placard and hung in the Prime Minister's office where he can see it every morning.

Your committee's contention is, therefore, that there should be, as a general rule, public knowledge of the processes of delegated legislation before, during and after the making of regulations, and that any derogation by government from this rule requires justification.

Your committee adopts this position for five reasons. First, the people cannot control their government without knowledge of its actions, nor can Parliament fulfil its role of responsibility with respect to legislation without being fully informed on the operation of those legislative powers which it has delegated to others. Second, the existence of secrecy is likely to lead to popular suspicion of wrongdoing by government—

How right that popular suspicion is, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this government.

—whether or not there is any genuine reason for suspicion. Third, we are living today in a period in which the validity of authority can no longer be taken for granted but must be constantly demonstrated. Governmental systems which do not take this new attitude seriously are apt to find public confidence in them diminishing rapidly. Obviously a continuing demonstration of the justice of the system necessitates an opening of the processes and products of delegated legislation to the light of publicity. Fourth, your committee has been able to find no reason, either theoretical or practical, except the force of tradition, why there should not be publicity in the making of regulations. Canadian governments appear to have remarkably little to hide—

If I had seen that sentence, I would have objected to it.

—and therefore nothing to lose, from openness except their psychological investment in existing practices. Indeed, publicity can have the positive value for administrators of helping them to improve weaknesses in their system. Fifth, since regulations have the force of laws, they should be made by processes which as far as possible approximate the openness of the general legislative process.

I reinforce those words because there is today in many parts of democratic society a feeling that governments must be strong, must be able to act without interference from the legislative branch. This is a myth which was exploded between 1939 and 1945. It is a myth which we in this House would do well to disregard. There can be no efficiency in a government which has freedom to act and regulate in the absence of the wholesome scrutiny which comes from the legislative branch. This is one of the reasons we find ourselves in the situation which causes us so much difficulty today. This is one of the reasons Bill C-218 is before the House.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I shall not discuss all the other recommendations made by the committee, but there can be no excuse for the government failing to implement at least some of the recommendations. One of them involves the selection and appointment of a House Committee on Regulations, together with terms of reference which were set out carefully and particularly. Nobody in this House can have any doubt about the usefulness of these recommendations. Nobody has challenged them. Yet here we are, late in the session, and nothing has been done. It is possible that implementation of some of the other regulations might take time, but I simply fail to understand why no action has been taken to establish this committee. I have discussed this question with some of my friends in the New Democratic Party and the Créditiste Party.

• (5:50 p.m.)

If the President of the Privy Council had come forward with a motion couched along these lines, incorporating the terms of reference to establish a committee on the basis proposed by the third report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments, it would have received unanimous approval and been agreed to without debate. I can only suspect that the government and some of the bureaucrats who buoy them up stand fearful of what would happen if this committee were established.

It is for this reason that I intend to move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), the following amendment:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted:

"This House will not proceed upon a measure to validate retroactively Orders in Council of doubtful legality, without obtaining the safeguards and controls which will be brought about by the implementation of the third report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments tabled in this House on Wednesday, October 22, 1969."

Before I conclude, let me say that this amendment has been pretty well couched in terms that follow the amendment on which we just voted. Yesterday I had the opportunity of hearing Mr. Speaker commend Your Honour's interpretation of the rules in regard to the amendment which I was unfortunate enough to have ruled unacceptable. Since Your Honour was in the chair when the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) brought in the amendment to Bill C-197 on which we just voted, and since I followed it faithfully except to adapt it as required, I am sure that Your Honour, in light of the great commendation Mr. Speaker made respecting your capacity for understanding the rules, will find it difficult to suggest that this amendment is not in order.

Finally, we have heard a lot recently about the great measure of independence of hon. members opposite. We have heard of great winds blowing from Toronto and from western Canada. Over and over again we have heard the news story that the Liberal party, especially its western branch, will assert its independence; that there must be new changes to the rules of this House to permit members on the government side to express themselves freely and without hindrance. What better chance could they have to do that than this amendment? Certainly I hope the members from western Canada who served with me on the committee will take this opportunity. This is not a non-confidence motion; hon. members cannot hide behind that argument. If hon. members feel there is a case to be made for a greater measure of scrutiny and examination of government regulations and Orders in Council, here is an opportunity for them to back up, by their votes and actions, the talk that we have been hearing.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, before Your Honour decides whether or not this amendment is in order I am sure you will want to take into account other factors. Firstly, we are at the report stage of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Third reading.

Mr. Olson: On third reading, that is right; we passed the report stage a few minutes ago. What this amendment calls for is the rejection of the provisions of Bill C-218. I think it is a well-known practice and precedent in this House that a motion, the purpose of which could be achieved by negating the bill, is not in order. This, of course, is the situation here. The motion reads:

> This House will not proceed upon a measure to validate—

And so on. The operative words are, "This House will not proceed". The words following differ in different cases. Sometimes the wording is "be not proceeded with for six months", and there are other variations in wording that my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is clever and adept at using. We have to be concerned with the fact that the amendment calls upon this House not to proceed with Bill C-218. As I pointed out at the outset, if a negative vote on third reading would achieve the same thing as a positive vote on this amendment, the amendment is out of order. I suggest that that is the situation before the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I call to Your Honour the wording of the amendment that we have just voted upon, moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). It commenced:

> —"this House will not proceed upon a measure to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies"—

It then delineated certain principles which indicated why we felt that this should be the case. In other words, we were establishing, not our opposition to the principle of passing the bill but we were setting up a reason without the acceptance of which we would be reluctant to support the bill. It therefore came squarely within the interpretation of a reasoned amendment. In fact, Your Honour did not even ask for argument on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot because it was a valid amendment.

My amendment has simply been shaped and adapted to conform to the particular provisions of this bill, but its principle is precisely the same. Without needing to say anything further, I suggest that this amendment is a reasoned amendment of the type which by tradition and practice for many years has been accepted by the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think there is a point of order; I just want to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that the hon. member is more convinced of that than I am. Perhaps he would like to enlighten the Chair. I must say I have reservations about the amendment. I would specifically draw the attention of hon. members to the provision to be found at page 572 of May's seventeenth edition, which I would read at this point:

> As the debate on the third reading should be confined to the contents of the bill, reasoned amendments which raise matters not included in the provisions of the bill are not permissible.

It seems to me that the amendment not only attaches a condition, which probably by itself would be reason enough not to put it, but it goes beyond the contents of the bill. I am inclined not to put it, despite the very generous and persuasive comments of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). However, I am prepared to hear procedural argument. If there is none, I am prepared to rule definitively now.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would make this proposition. It is now six o'clock. It is not an unreasonable amendment at all. I would be perfectly prepared to withdraw it if I could get a commitment or undertaking. The Minister of Agriculture and the President of the Privy Council have been becoming a little more generous in giving undertakings. If I could receive an undertaking from the government that within a limited time it will implement the provisions of the third report of the Committee on Statutory Instruments, although I would have to consult my colleagues I would be inclined to give serious consideration to withdrawing the amendment. If that is not done, I would have to insist on Your Honour making a ruling, because I would then have no more faith in the intentions of this government regarding the report of this committee.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this is another of those instances where the hon. member for Peace River wants to attach conditions that are clearly out of order and which have nothing to do with—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In view of the hour I will reserve judgment in case there are some last-minute appeals to sections of May or Beauchesne that I have not consulted. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 11, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received which is as follows:

Government House, Ottawa
11 June, 1970

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. D. C. Abbott, P.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, June 11th, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau,
Brigadier General,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO MEMBERS FOR CALGARY CENTRE AND OTTAWA EAST ON TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF SERVICE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of the House. Politics is often described as a gamble—that is, it is not unlike playing the stock market. Some players lose their shirts in short order. Others manage to make respectably moderate gains. Still others transform their initial investment in the political process into solid and long-term returns. A gamble or not, this process is a vital and necessary element in the constitution of the democratic process in which we are all participants.

[Translation]

To achieve such success requires tenacity and patience; humour and understanding. Above all it requires the ability to convince a block of voters that, on balance, one understands their problems and has more to offer them than all the other fellows.

Today I am sure all hon. members would wish to join in congratulating two of our colleagues who have been receiving votes of confidence from their constituents since they were first elected on June 11, 1945. I refer to the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the hon. member for Ottawa East.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Twenty-five years is a large and precious segment of any man's lifetime, Mr. Speaker. Our country is all the richer for having as citizens the kind of men who would offer these years to the Canadian Parliament. Without this sort of responsibility and dedication, this institution would not endure; without their good nature and geniality we would find it a less attractive place.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the question of privilege raised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to join him in extending congratulations to the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) and the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) on achieving 25 years of service to this House. I do not think that hon. members think of it in terms of service. My own observation is that most people who come to this House are very anxious to stay. In addition to these 25 years being a period of service for these hon. gentlemen, I am sure that they have been fascinating and enjoyable years which have given a great deal of pleasure to their colleagues in the House.

It is natural that I should know the hon. member for Calgary Centre a little better than the hon. member for Ottawa East, who I find to be a very friendly and gracious colleague. I have known the member for Calgary Centre for quite some time. He has had a very distinguished career. He is a very affable man, a man of very deep conviction and principle. I recall, when I was in another position, trying to persuade the member for Calgary Centre, who also at that time held another position, that he ought to do something he did not think he should do. I was not able to make much progress.

I extend felicitations to both of these gentlemen. I wish them many years of continued public service and good health. I express my compliments to them on the contribution they have made to Parliament and to the lives of those associated with them.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to associate ourselves with the sentiments expressed by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and extend our congratulations to the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) and the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) on having completed a quarter of a century of service to this House and to the people of the constituencies they represent.

Politicians have three main problems: First, how to get elected to the House of Commons; second, how to stay there and, third, how to get out gracefully. When the late Senator Chubby Power was a member of this chamber he said that there are only two ways for a member to get out of this House: One is to be defeated and the other is to die, but the trouble with these alternatives is that the first is so humiliating and the second is so final. The two members we are honouring today have succeeded in avoiding both, and I hope they will not have to worry about the latter for a long time.

The members of my party wish me to say how happy our association has been with these two members over the years. We wish them well. We trust that they will continue in good health and that they will have the privilege of serving the people of their constituencies and the people of Canada for many years to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in extending our warmest congratulations to the members for Ottawa East and Calgary Centre (Messrs. Richard and Harkness).

Between 1945 and 1949, I got to know both very well as I was then sitting on this side of the House. If we had to part company in 1949, it was not my fault but that of the "bad" Liberals who defeated me.

In any case, the members for Ottawa East and Calgary Centre, whom I got to know between 1945 and 1949, have both rendered tremendous services to their constituents.

Personally and on behalf of my colleagues, I wish them long life and success in their undertakings. I hope they will continue to serve the Canadian people for many years to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the New Democratic Party and the leader of the Créditiste party for their kind expressions of good will toward the hon. member for Ottawa East and myself. I should like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and, indeed, all our colleagues in the House for the mark of esteem which they have shown by their applause.

I appreciate this very much. I must agree with the Prime Minister that 25 years is a very large slice of one's working life to spend in Parliament. At the same time, I do not know of any way in which I could have spent those 25 years in a more interesting manner than I have here in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harkness: It is a privilege to have known so many hundreds of members who have sat in the House in that period, to have been able to exchange ideas with them, and to obtain from them a much broader idea of the different elements which make up this country—its problems, its diversity, and, at the same time all the unifying forces that exist within it. This is a privilege one can only enjoy by spending a long period in the House of Commons. I must say, though, that occasions of this sort demonstrate fairly dramatically the fact that all of us here are engaged in a very hazardous occupation. I do not know of any other way of life in which the survival rate after 25 years is less than 2 per cent.

I must at this point express my thanks to the voters of Calgary who have sent me here in the last nine elections, and say to all my colleagues that the only way in which to make a career out of politics is to make sure that your voters continue to support you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J.-T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply moved by the nice things that were said by my leader (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) and my friend, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette). I wish to thank them all for their good wishes.

I must say that I am happy to have spent 25 years in the House; as we say "it was a home away from home". Besides the fact that some confided in me, I have been trusted and respected by my colleagues from all parties in the House. My leaders had confidence in me and I consider that I have a special status: among the four more senior members of the House, I have the privilege of having always remained a commoner. Perhaps I wanted to make sure that I would be re-elected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richard: However, I have always thought that there was enough to do in the interest of those who are dear to me, the ordinary people with whom I have lived from my childhood, in very simple conditions, as I continue to do still.

I am quite pleased that I was never meant to have a lot of money or to reach a high station in life, because I still feel quite close to my electors who respect me and this is what I want more than anything else.

If you allow me, I would like to point out the presence in the Speaker's gallery of my mother—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richard: —who is accompanied by my wife and my son.

[English]

I would have so many things to say, Mr. Speaker, if we were in a committee, or if I had the privilege of speaking for 40 minutes, but I think it would be very enlightening to some hon. members to know just what Parliament has been like, during these 25 years. The reformists are not just the recent arrivals in the House; The 1945 "little Chicago boys" who used to sit over in that corner of the House were much more a group of reformists. We sat there the whole time from three to six and then from eight to eleven at night.

I must thank all of the party leaders who have been in this House since 1945. I have enjoyed the confidence not only of my leaders who were Prime Ministers—four of them—but I should also mention that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has been a very good friend of mine. On the very first day I sat in this House he came over to greet me and to speak to me.

I could ramble on but I must close. Before I do let me say this carnation I am wearing was also a symbol of the little Chicago boys in 1945. The then Prime Minister, Mr. King, was in hot water at that time for many months, and I remember in those days we played the game because he thought that we were members of the Fabian society.

From a more serious point of view, may I say I hope I will be able to serve the people of my riding for some time yet. I also hope I will live to see a Canada that is very closely united and whose people are bilingual. By that I mean that I hope the solution to a united Canada, which I have looked for for so many years, will be found in the fact that slowly, progressively, without force or any other means of that type but through knowledge of each other and the expression of good will, we will have a nation where the majority of the people speak not only their native language, whether that be French or English, but both languages.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville) moved that the second report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada, presented to the House on May 20, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Student Summer Employment

MANPOWER

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED SUMMER EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDENTS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last week the government took action concerning the financial relationships between the federal and provincial governments in view of current economic conditions. This action will provide a new stimulus to the economy.

Today, again in view of these economic conditions, the government has taken new decisions to increase employment opportunities for students across the country this summer, either within the federal public service and through special programs.

You will recall that some time ago I stated in the House that the objective of the government of Canada was to employ 11,365 students this summer at an estimated cost of $13 million for salaries. I now wish to announce a decision of government to employ an additional 5,836 students within the government service this summer at an estimated additional cost of $5.5 million for salaries. This represents a total of 17,200 jobs for students this summer in the public service at a possible salary cost of $18.5 million.

My department will also within a fortnight open 33 additional special offices to serve students. These, as well as the 40 offices already operating, will be manned by students. In this way, we hope to provide the best possible services to the student population of Canada.

In addition, funds will be made available to permit the Department of National Defence to launch four new job-creating projects. These are: ground maintenance at bases across Canada, range clearance at Base Gagetown and Valcartier, opportunity to serve in the militia, and increased cadet training. Additionally, the Canadian Red Cross Youth has been approached to assume responsibility for leadership courses to be given to students while National Defence will provide accommodation and board to students in some of its establishments across the country. Some 10,500 should be gainfully employed through the first four projects. Some 300 students could enrol in the leadership courses. The total cost of these five projects involving the Department of National Defence is estimated at $7.9 million.

Funds for the ongoing program of student travel within Canada and abroad under the leadership of voluntary agencies and in co-operation with the Department of the Secretary of State have been increased. It is expected that some 1,800 additional applications will be received from students. The Department of the Secretary of State will launch also a program to teach French or English to some 1,000 students during the summer months. While no salary is paid to students, the cost of the program is estimated at $600,000 to cover teachers' salaries, accommodation and board for students for a six-week period.

Finally, with the assistance of the Department of National Defence an effort will be made to establish drop-in centres in major cities to provide beds for students travelling throughout the country.

We have also approached the Canadian Red Cross Youth to allow us to participate in their educational projects by assisting them with funds to extend these projects to all provinces. These projects are designed to assist the underprivileged. Some 100 students could be employed as leaders while some 5,000 secondary school students might serve as volunteers.

In co-operation with the National Council of YMCAs it has been proposed that we assume through a grant the employment of students to act as supervisors in a number of day camps which, I believe, are important to many children in Canada.

In brief, the federal government intends to provide through its total program 36,000 openings for students this summer at an estimated cost of $27.9 million. Parliament will be asked to provide funds through supplementary estimates.

A table providing a summary of our programs is attached to this statement, and, with consent, might be included in Hansard as part of my statement.

I have outlined our new programs for student employment. We shall bend all our efforts to ensure their implementation to the fullest possible extent.

As I have said before, we appreciate the leadership given by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to its members in providing additional student openings this summer. It is my hope that these additional efforts by the federal government will encourage other employers to increase summer employment for students.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the minister for taking into consideration even at this late date the student employment problem in Canada. I am rather proud to have the opportunity and privilege of answering the minister's statement because the young member of our party, the hon. member for Vegreville, who usually speaks on matters regarding youth, happens to be absent from the House today. I feel privileged because, like many other hon. members who attended university in the 1930's, I had to work my way through college, and thus we are aware of the difficulties in trying to obtain employment.

I should like to say a few things regarding the merit of the program. First, any thought given by this government to student employment is good. I hope that the assistance given will be based on need rather than special privilege or any other factor because those in need are the ones who require the jobs. When we look at the total program we see that in one way or another 36,000 students will be guaranteed employment. But I think that this fact must be seen in its proper perspective. I do not have the exact figures but I have seen references in newspapers to the fact that there are as many as 600,000 students in Canada. I believe it would be more accurate to say that there are about 450,000 students in institutions of higher learning, universities and vocational training schools. So we have to look at this program from the point of view of what it will really do.

The program is good as far as it goes. The only criticism I have is that it comes too late. University students have been out of college already for one month. One only has to drive down the Trans-Canada highway from Winnipeg to Banff, which I did recently, to see large numbers of students thumbing rides to go to places where they hope they can find employment, just like the average man in the 1930's rode the rods trying to find a job.

So I say that although this program will be helpful to 36,000 students, it will not help those who are still unemployed. I repeat that there are 450,000 students in Canada, many of whom are looking for work. If they do not find work this summer they will not be able to return to university in the fall. In addition, we must remember that, as has been brought out, unemployment in Canada is 6.6 per cent of the work force in this country. If we add to this figure the number of unemployed university students and other students from our high schools and colleges, there must be pretty close to 800,000 unemployed in this country, and that to me is a serious situation.

Mr. McGrath: Close to a million.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, we will not be very far from that figure. I say with great respect that this is no time to gloat. Our greatest resource in Canada is our human resource. If we neglect our youth, we will have neglected the finest resource we have.

Only a month ago I asked the minister, when this problem first arose as university students were leaving college, whether he would present a program similar to the one he presented today but also go even farther and bonus business and industry to stimulate and motivate them to take on students so that all students, irrespective of class, would have employment and be able to return to the universities they have been attending.

Finally, we must realize that the 36,000 students are only equivalent in number to the student population of two universities in western Canada. When one considers the number of universities across this country and the number of young men now hunting desperately for employment, not only graduates and undergraduates but high school students and students in vocational training schools, I say to the minister on behalf of the ones who will obtain jobs: thank you very much but the program is too late and is too inadequate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that I am very happy that the minister has recognized the problem of student employment this year. I congratulate him for recognizing the need to spend additional government money on employing an extra 5,800 students in the government services this year. I am also happy that the minister has opened an extra 33 special offices to serve students seeking jobs this summer and that he is staffing the offices with students. I wish we could have done these things about a month and a half ago when they could have helped quite a few students who have been unemployed since classes stopped in the middle of April.

I do not think we should now put away our books and forget about the student summer employment problem, because it will not go away. The minister's program will be helpful but more jobs are going to be needed.

I have just completed a survey of the major universities in Canada. I have been telephoning placement officers on their campuses and have learned that they have major problems this year. I should like to take one or two minutes to point out three or four of them. First, I think the student employment problem is linked directly to the whole unemployment picture in Canada and to the economic slowdown we are now experiencing. I find that almost every major university is having more difficulty this year than they had last year in obtaining adequate employment for students this summer.

Second, I find that even though a student has a job it may not be one that pays him adequate money to enable him to return to university in the fall of 1970. Other students only have part-time jobs and cannot expect to work for any more than two or three months this summer.

The third point I want to make is that I found through my survey that particular difficulty is encountered by women students in finding adequate jobs in the cities and towns of this country.

I should like to underline two additional points. One is that there are special regional problems in student employment as there are in many other facets of Canadian life and society. I believe we will need extra help and more emergency or special programs in places such as Saskatchewan, which is suffering from an economic slowdown, and in the Maritimes and rural Quebec. I think this is very important.

I also believe that in dealing with the whole problem of student employment we should make some basic change by trying to create jobs that are more student-oriented. I refer to work-study jobs, so that students will not be competing with the members of the regular work force. We will have to start such programs in the future. Having regard to the student employment picture, we will also have to start thinking of fundamental changes in our educational system so that every young person, regardless of his financial or economic background, will be able to attend university whether or not he finds a summer job.

I thank the minister once again for at least recognizing the problem in part. Let us make this the beginning rather than the end in trying to find jobs for students this summer and in trying to find a new solution to the whole problem of making it possible for everyone to attend a school of higher learning.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are surely pleased to hear the minister say that the Public Service will hire this year 17,200 students instead of 10,365. Better late than never.

As the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) mentioned a moment ago, the students have been looking for jobs for more than a month and the government has finally decided to open 33 special offices for students in addition to the 40 already existing, in order to enable them to find employment. I hope that among these 33 offices at least one will be established in northwestern Quebec, an area which I represent in this House.

Mr. Speaker, the government is making a big fuss about the student situation, and rightly so. I have recently had the opportunity of visiting the four Western provinces: British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. University students have had to pay their tuition fees in wheat or rye because they could not afford paying cash. Those students in the West, I repeat, are entitled to earn an honest living in their country, and it has not been possible to allow them to do so. Actually, what are 35,000 or 40,000 jobs at a time when 400,000 to 600,000 of our students are seeking work. That is therefore not an adequate response to the present problem.

I also said in the West that, should a war break out today, the Minister of Labour and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) would not just say: We have found 33,000 jobs, but: At last we have found jobs for all our young people of 18 and over, and we are going to draft them into the Army, feed them, house them and clothe them. Then any amount could be spent.

I think the government is taking a band-aid approach to the problem. It will not be possible, of course, to find employment for every student. Those who will not be able to earn a livelihood and those who will not earn enough to resume their classes for the fall term will engage into another path and then they will be blamed for rebelling against a society.

Mr. Speaker, instead of putting the blame on the young who sometimes revolt against society, why not blame society itself for preventing the young from integrating into it and having their say about the administration and the development of their country.

TELESAT CANADA

TABLING OF FIRST ANNUAL REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1969

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41, section 2, I wish to table the first report of Telesat Canada for the year ended December 31, 1969, in accordance with section 37 of the Telesat Canada Act.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

MANPOWER

LACK OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, notice was given to you in reference to this motion prior to any knowledge on my part of the statement made on motions today by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the dearth of summer employment for many thousands of young Canadians who will be unable to continue their education next fall because they cannot now work to pay their way through school and university, a problem compounded in many instances by the desperate plight of their families whose incomes have been drastically reduced through growing unemployment.

In the next ten days there will be more than 200,000 additional students from colleges and high schools also looking for summer employment. Although there are no definite figures we do know that 6.6 per cent of the Canadian labour force is unemployed and if the students that are unemployed were added to this figure it would bring unemployment in Canada up to 8 per cent. I would hope that this government has the heart to do even more than was suggested today.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether I should infer from the hon. member's statement that he is making his motion or is withdrawing it.

Mr. Woolliams: No, I am making it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North had filed the notice required by Standing Order 26 and, of course, I have had an opportunity to give the matter some serious thought since then. Hon. members are well aware that the matter of summer employment for students has been brought to the attention of the House on a number of occasions in recent weeks. In particular, a motion similar to that now before us was proposed on May 14 by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. The ruling of the Chair on that occasion read in part as follows:

> In so far as the reference to the problem of student employment during the summer months is concerned, it is hardly necessary for me to remind hon. members that a debate on this very subject took place on Friday last, when a supply motion was presented to the House by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

In view of the fact that there has already been a special debate in the House on this very subject, considering that it has been the subject of a number of interventions by hon. members since then, and taking into account the statement made on motions by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which has been followed by the interesting and constructive comments of hon. members speaking on behalf of the parties in opposition, including the statement made by the hon. member for Calgary North, I would not think that I am at liberty at this time to put to the House the motion proposed by the hon. member.

HOUSING

DROP IN STARTS IN URBAN CENTRES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the announcement by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of a drop of 50.1 per cent in housing starts in urban centres for the first five months of this year compared with a similar period last year, thereby creating a new and alarming crisis in Canada, and making it urgent that Parliament deal immediately with the situation that has now been created before the people of Canada suffer undue hardship from the housing shortage and excessively high rents and mortgage interest rates.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview has also given the Chair the notice required under the terms of Standing Order 26. Hon. members will recognize that the report on which the hon. member for Broadview has based his motion is analogous to the periodic announcements made by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and other government agencies dealing, for example, with the cost of living, with employment or unemployment with import or export statistics. There are many precedents indicating that in the circumstances it is not competent upon the Chair to accept such motions.

In the circumstances I regret very much that I have to advise the hon. member that I cannot agree the House should be adjourned for the purpose he has suggested under the terms of Standing Order 26.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED FORUM FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-MUNICIPAL CONSULTATION—ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister without Portfolio from Port Arthur was announcing government policy when in Halifax he recommended a forum for federal-provincial-municipal consultation on urban matters, with the municipalities having a legitimate and recognized place at the table with the provinces, with the federal government laying on that table all federal policies and actions that affect the cities for discussion and co-ordination with provincial and municipal needs, and more in the same vein? I hope the minister was speaking for the government when he made that recommendation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the Leader of the Opposition for supporting the government's position on this general approach, Mr. Speaker, but I would not want to bind the government to the exact words quoted by the Leader of the Opposition. Certainly the government has always hoped it could find some way of discussing its actions in the cities with the people upon whom that action bears first and foremost. We are very glad that the position taken by the minister in Halifax has met with some degree of support from at least some municipal authorities.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Prime Minister whether the minister was announcing the position of the government and government policy when he said he would seek the views of the provinces on whether they would be agreeable to the establishment under a formal framework of an urban council where the political representatives of all three levels of government could meet and discuss urban policies regularly?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The idea of an urban council was discussed by the minister with his cabinet colleagues, and this idea was approved. It is a matter for implementation and for agreement, which the minister is presently seeking.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the government to establish a department of urban affairs in order to administer the federal end of this program that the minister announced?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not obsessed with the name of any such agency. We think that the minister is now dealing with the problem in a very adequate way. He has no department yet, but of course he has some supporting agencies such as CMHC. We will be looking in the near future to see if there is any need for further structural changes.

STRUCTURE OF PROPOSED FORUM FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-MUNICIPAL CONSULTATION—DROP IN HOUSING STARTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of housing, Mr. Speaker. In setting up this new urban council on housing, does the minister intend to set it up under a framework different from that suggested by former Prime Minister Pearson, who in December, 1967, said that such a council would be merely a consultative body dealing with housing assessment and housing studies? Is it the intention to have a different framework for the purpose of initiating policies, dealing with financial problems, and so forth?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think the words already spoken on this subject during the question period give some indication of some of the ideas I have, but they are one man's view of the world. It would be incumbent upon us to start the consultation by consulting about that very point, that is, about the structure that would best serve the purpose that we all seem to be agreed on. In that light it would be part of my approach to the provincial minister concerned to see what their views would be.

Mr. Gilbert: May I direct another supplementary question to the minister in charge of housing, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious drop in housing starts in the first five months of this year, amounting to a 50.1 per cent decrease in urban centres, is it the intention of the minister to make a statement on motions setting forth the government's policy and initiatives aimed at solving the housing crisis we now face?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will give consideration to a statement. I am concerned myself about the low number of starts in May. I think it would be wise if we could analyse the May figures in particular, which, among other reasons, were down as a result of some unfortunate construction strikes. One or two of the provinces, for good and legitimate reasons, have not yet been able to commit public housing funds allocated to them. This, however, is a temporary situation and will be improved upon. This does not negate the seriousness of the low number of starts in May. I am consulting with my colleagues and if there is to be any different approach to this matter I will be glad to mention it in the House.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the government's obvious change in policy with regard to direct participation of the representatives of urban municipalities, is the welcome mat now outside the Privy Council Office for the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer)?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing for taking the advice of the opposition which has long been seeking the co-operation in this field of the federal, provincial and municipal governments. Now that we are moving in that direction, may I ask whether the Prime Minister would consider setting up a standing committee on urban affairs to which many representations could be directed?

Mr. Baldwin: Come on! Answer the question!

Mr. McCleave: Does the Prime Minister now know what is going on?

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister was exceptionally busy when I asked my question. Perhaps I might ask my question again. In view of the direction that government policy has now taken, is the Prime Minister prepared to recommend the setting up of a standing committee on urban affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his representation.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that the independence and initiative the Minister without Portfolio displays in urban affairs will meet with more success than the independence and initiative he displayed when he was in charge of Indian affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

REFUSAL OF CASH BENEFITS BY BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of Mr. Gaglardi's new directive in British Columbia that people involved in a labour dispute can receive food vouchers but no cash welfare, and only when they can prove there is no food in the house? If he is aware of this, did he agree to it? If not, what action does he propose to take?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of various press releases alleging that the minister made this statement, but I have not yet seen such a statement in the form of directives to welfare administrators who are responsible. If it should occur that there are such directives, that of course would be contrary to the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan and the agreements under it.

Mrs. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I can provide the minister with those written directives, will he take action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

GOLD MINING—ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING FREEING OF DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday, I asked the Minister of Finance a question in which I said:

> After the adoption of the floating exchange rate for the Canadian dollar, Canadian gold mines are losing revenues and a good many marginal mines which attract American funds to Canada and which provide employment for Canadians will undoubtedly have to close down.

The Minister of Finance told me that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was meeting with gold producers to discuss this particular problem. Is the latter in a position today to tell the House whether the government will continue or will increase the subsidies paid to gold mines to keep them in operation, in order to reassure the population of northwestern Quebec?

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is as yet no government decision on the question of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The subsidies continue until the end of the year. I have had meetings both with community leaders from northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec and also, yesterday, with officials of the Canadian Mining Association. My own department is conducting a very comprehensive survey that includes both the social and municipal implications of the removal of the subsidy. We hope that we shall have a government decision as to the future of the gold mines and the gold mining communities and the relevance of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act in a very short time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND LABOUR LEADERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: He will not listen.

Mr. Hees: I gave him notice of the question. Following the Prime Minister's suggestion yesterday that I invite the country's top labour leaders to a private meeting with the Prime Minister to discuss some of the country's more serious economic problems and possible solutions to them, and in view of the personal assurances that have been given to me during the past 24 hours by those top labour leaders that they would welcome such a meeting and that they think it could be very constructive indeed, will the Prime Minister assure the House that he will now instruct his staff to work out a mutually convenient time for holding such meetings, so that they can be proceeded with as soon as possible?

An hon. Member: How about next weekend?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there may be a little bit of misunderstanding on the question of how the hon. member's persuasive powers were to be used. When I answered his question yesterday I suggested that since in my public meetings with the labour leaders some months ago I had not been entirely successful, perhaps the hon. member could invite the labour leaders and that he could convince them. Obviously, he feels he is unable to convince them and he wants me to convince them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am, of course, prepared to do so and I thank the hon. member for his constructive proposal. But I have a high regard for the persuasive powers of the Minister of Labour, who has told me that he has been in contact with the labour leaders for some time now and that he will arrange for such meetings if such meetings can usefully take place.

Mr. Hees: I have conveyed to the Prime Minister, as he very well knows, the fact that during the past 24 hours very senior labour leaders of this country have indicated that a private meeting with the Prime Minister would be very conducive to improvements in the economic atmosphere in Canada. Will the Prime Minister take this matter seriously in the interest of the country? I am speaking very seriously. Will he ask these labour leaders to attend a private meeting with him, away from press, radio and television? Possibly a meeting could be held in the home of the Prime Minister to discuss these important matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that I do take the proposal seriously. I thank the hon. member for having given it consideration and for having discussed it with me yesterday after the question period. I can only repeat my answer of yesterday to him and indicate that steps are under way. The Minister of Labour has been having discussions with these leaders. If the minister cannot make any headway, and if the labour leaders find that their only access to me is through the hon. member, I will willingly let him set up the meeting.

INFLATION—EFFECT OF HIGHER WAGE INCREASE IN TOWBOAT INDUSTRY ON SIX PER CENT GUIDELINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question. Following the announcement made by the Minister of Labour yesterday, I ask the Prime Minister whether the government's guideline on wage and salary increases is still 6 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the Leader of the Opposition will recall, the government's position as stated by the Minister of Finance is that the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission proposed that guideline to the federal government and to the provinces. We indicated our intention of accepting it.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary. Will the Prime Minister or one of his ministers make a statement on motions at an early date to explain this guideline? Since the government of Canada has apparently accepted it, how do they propose to persuade those concerned that the 6 per cent guideline should be followed when the Minister of Labour has been involved with negotiations at a substantially higher level?

Mr. Trudeau: I gladly ask the Minister of Labour to answer that question.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Leader of the Opposition. I do not think he would want to mislead the House, even unintentionally. If he will read yesterday's Hansard, he will see that the settlement of the strike in the towboat industry was arrived at independently of the government and the Minister of Labour. I think the settlement is fair, in view of the fact that it represents the unanimous feelings of the conciliation board which was set up to settle the strike in the towboat industry and taking into consideration the existing salaries before the collective agreement was signed, as well as productivity and other factors. I made it very clear in my statement yesterday and I take this opportunity today to say, with a degree of satisfaction, that in the two years I have been Minister of Labour on not one occasion have I either persuaded or abnormally influenced either side to make settlements.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether we are not now entering the field of debate. I point out to hon. members that we are running short of time.

Mr. Stanfield: With respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter. I wish to direct one further question to the Minister of Labour. I do not think I misinterpreted what he said. I simply ask him how he expects postal and other employees to accept a guideline of 6 per cent in the circumstances announced by the minister yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again suggest to the minister and the Leader of the Opposition that we are entering the field of debate and argument. Although I appreciate the matter is very important, I suggest we go on to another subject.

ENERGY

RELAXATION OF U.S. IMPORT CONTROLS ON CANADIAN OIL—RELATIONSHIP TO EXPORTS OF CANADIAN GAS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister received any information from the government of the United States that the latter intends to relax controls on the import of Canadian oil into the American market? If he has any information, will he tell the House what the new quotas are likely to be and whether this relaxation is in any way related to an arrangement between the two governments regarding the export of Canadian natural gas?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am not officially aware of any such relaxation, Mr. Speaker, although I have read rumours in the press that there might be a relaxation. We have not had any official notification of any relaxation.

With regard to the latter half of the hon. member's question, there is certainly no agreement that any relaxation must be contingent upon a greater quantity of Canadian gas being made available. The decision on whether there is a surplus of Canadian gas is made by the National Energy Board. The government cannot make such an agreement. I have accentuated in several speeches that the wider the oil market, the more exploration will take place and the greater the likelihood of more gas being found.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that American companies now have applications before the National Energy Board for the export of 9½ trillion cubic feet of Canadian gas to the United States, and in view of the fact the final decision will come to the cabinet in the form of recommendations by the National Energy Board, I ask the minister whether he will assure the House that the government will not approve any such export until such time as the matter has been placed before Parliament?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, if I made such an undertaking I would be interfering with a statute of this House. There is a statute which set up the National Energy Board as the decision-making authority in this regard. When they sit on these hearings they do so in a judicial capacity. At no time do I interfere in their deliberations. Their recommendations will be made to and determined by cabinet in the normal course of business.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DELIVERY OF PENSION AND OTHER CHEQUES BY SPECIAL MESSENGERS

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster

General. Since the advent of the rotating postal strikes, has the government been delivering old age pension cheques, government annuity cheques and similar payments to areas such as Carleton Place and Smiths Falls? Can the minister say whether this personal service will be or has been extended to all areas of Canada? Also, will he inform the House whether the messengers are private bonded couriers or departmental employees?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): With respect to the particular places mentioned by the hon. member, I will have to consult with my officials. As the hon. member knows, my colleagues in the Department of National Health and Welfare took care some time ago to mail early many of their cheques. I will have to seek further information on the particular places mentioned.

Mr. McCutcheon: A supplementary question. My question is basic and simple. Is the department sending people to places such as these to personally deliver mail?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has restated the question asked in the first instance. My understanding is that the minister will look into the matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SAFETY OF CANADIANS IN AMMAN, JORDAN

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is about Canadian citizens and nationals of other countries now being held as hostages by Palestinian insurgents in Amman, Jordan. Can the minister bring us up to date on the current situation and tell us whether it is expected that Jordan will be in a position to guarantee the safety of our fellow citizens?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The reports I read just before coming into the House are very serious. There is great trouble in Amman, and it continues. There were reports that some Canadian citizens are being held as hostages but we have been unable to confirm this; the reports are somewhat contradictory. Our embassy in Beirut, which also looks after our interests in Jordan, is checking on these reports and I may have further information on the subject later. As to the safety of Canadians in Jordan, measures to assist them as the situation might warrant have been arranged through the United States and British embassies in particular.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I ask the minister whether he can tell us the approximate number of Canadians in Jordan, and whether any have so far sought asylum or refuge in either the American or the British embassies?

Mr. Sharp: The records we have show there are seven Canadian residents in Jordan but of course there may be some Canadian tourists there who would not necessarily be registered. The reports I have received are that Canadians are not among those who are being held hostage. I would think that any Canadians who might want to get out would act in concert with the United States and British citizens who are there, and they would be informed as to how best to look after themselves. We have no information so far that any Canadians are being held.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the 700-page Le Dain Commission report. Does the minister plan to make it public tomorrow and does he intend to hold a briefing session for members of the press, members of the opposition and maybe members of his own party?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is premature to consider seriously the mechanics which might be employed to make this report public since the matter is still before the cabinet and no decision has been taken on whether or not it should be made public.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: Has the minister or any member of his department discussed the possibility or the probability of this document being tabled tomorrow so that people outside the department can see this document which he seems to regard as a security document?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker. As I say, no decision has been made by the cabinet on whether or not it will be tabled, and I doubt very much whether a decision will be reached by tomorrow.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I ask the minister whether he has been able to overcome the objections of the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General to the publication of this report?

MANPOWER

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Following his statement concerning the creation of 35,000 new summers jobs for students, can the minister indicate to the House whether this new policy will be permanent or only temporary?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is a policy for this summer. I would not wish to predict what the appropriate policy might be for a future summer.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the lack of reference in the minister's statement today to the special problems affecting students in certain regions of Canada, would he instruct his department to give special attention to the needs of university students living in areas where economic disparity exists?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is in the form of a representation.

DRUGS

MEASURES TO DEAL WITH HIGH PRICES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does the hon. gentleman agree with the conclusion of the joint parliamentary committee on high drug prices that the chief cause of the difficulty is at the retail level? If so, when does he intend to use the anti-combines legislation or other measures to deal with this problem?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am not sure that the phrase used by the hon. member is a correct reflection of the recommendation of the Harley report which recommended that action be taken on several fronts. In line with the recommendation of the Harley committee we are, as the hon. member knows—he asked a question about this yesterday—holding meetings today with provincial officials to discuss certain aspects of the distribution of pharmaceutical products at the retail level. I am surprised that the hon. member does not know that action under the Combines Investigation Act was taken some months ago in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I notice that several members are rising to ask supplementaries, but again I would request the co-operation of hon. members in an effort to curtail the number of supplementary questions asked between now and the end of the question period.

Mr. Dinsdale: A very brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the minister's answer, is it fair to conclude that he is now delegating his responsibility for the control of drug prices to the provincial governments?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

CROWN CORPORATION TO MANUFACTURE AND DISTRIBUTE—ADVERTISING AND PROMOTION EXPENSES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question which is related to one addressed to him a few moments ago? In view of the minister's justified concern about the high prices of prescription drugs, and in view of certain statements he is reported to have made, will he inform the House whether he intends proposing to the cabinet the establishment of a Crown corporation for the manufacture and distribution of prescription drugs to the end that drug prices might be reduced?

Mr. Basford: I am also reported as having said that, for the moment at least, I have rejected that solution.

Mr. Lewis: I had hoped that overnight the minister had become wiser. I regret being disappointed. I should also like to ask the minister whether he would consider discussing with the Minister of Finance the possibility of amending the Income Tax Act so as to place limits on the allowable expenses which large pharmaceutical concerns and wholesalers may put into promotion, advertising and the like?

Mr. Basford: As has been made clear, we have a five-point program to reduce the cost of drugs and we are meeting with the provinces at the present time in an effort to get some improvement made at the retail level. I believe it would be premature to adopt other measures until we have had a chance to see how effective existing measures are.

BROADCASTING

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ACT TO COMMITTEE IN LIGHT OF TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State? Because of the rapid advance of technology in the communications field, will the minister agree to a suggestion that the Broadcasting Act be considered by the relevant committee and that the committee be empowered to recommend changes? Will he report to the House on motions at an appropriate time as to the merits, if any, of this suggestion?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's suggestion is an interesting one, especially because it is based on technological changes, but before answering I would like to consider it more closely.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC—POWER TO AMEND SECTION 128 OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

As he surely knows that in Quebec a group of separatist members of Parliament are refusing to take the oath of allegiance to the Queen and, because of this, are not authorized to sit in the National Assembly, and in view of the provisions of section 128 of the British North America Act, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether the province of Quebec could amend this section without first consulting the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member will certainly recognize that he wants the Prime Minister to express a legal opinion and that his question is obviously out of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary or rather an amended question. Can section 128 of the constitution be amended by the province only?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that this second question is too similar to the first one to be in order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERMISSION TO UNITED STATES TO STORE NUCLEAR WEAPONS AT ARGENTIA, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. May I ask the minister whether permission was sought by the United States government to store nuclear weapons at Argentina. If so, was permission given?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had to answer questions of this kind on many occasions by saying that I can make no comment on the positioning of nuclear weapons in Canada, either to comment negatively or positively.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question. I appreciate the need for the minister to remain silent but perhaps he might give me some hint as to the position. If an explosion took place in the area, should the people there start praying or start running?

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for St. John's West. Would the minister give the House an undertaking to investigate the report referred to by the hon. member for St. John's West and to make a full report to the House on motions before the termination of the session, indicating the basis for the report and whether or not there is a reasoned explanation of why Canada cannot inform its 22 million people about the establishment of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the reason for not discussing these matters is fairly obvious; it is one of security.

REINSTATEMENT OF SUGAR REBATE TO CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to a question I asked the Prime Minister, as reported on page 7894, of Hansard for June 9, with regard to reinstating the sugar rebate to Caribbean countries. I believe that at that time the Prime Minister thought we were talking about other sweets. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs be so kind as to answer that question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government is aware of the representations which have been made by the Caribbean governments. Indeed, I personally met with Mr. Lightbourne, Minister of Trade for Jamaica, and we are now studying ways of meeting those representations.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRENCH-SPEAKING UNITS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Was the Secretary of State expressing government policy last night when he said, as reported in Le Droit, that there would be French-speaking units in the Public Service, as recommended by the third report of the B and B Commission, perhaps before the end of this session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I see the Secretary of State indicating by his facial expression that that is not quite an accurate quotation of his position.

Mr. Nowlan: Then, could I ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State. Was the Secretary of State correctly reported in Le Droit as saying that this question would be decided—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be asked in that way, as the hon. member knows. Perhaps he would ask the question directly.

Mr. Nowlan: This is not a canard. Canards come in English, but I do not know whether they come en français. May I ask the Prime Minister whether this matter is under active consideration by the cabinet, and will there be a declaration of government policy before the House rises, if it does rise, on June 26?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question as put seems to be hypothetical, but I am prepared to answer it. Yes, the matter has been considered by cabinet. I cannot recollect whether a statement has been made or whether it has been decided that a statement will be made, but I will check into the matter and let the hon. member know, if he will remind me subsequently.

[Mr. Paproski.]

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I bring to the attention of the hon. member that we are running short of time. Perhaps he has a short supplementary.

Mr. Nowlan: Did the Secretary of State say last night that he thought these units would be in the Public Service—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question as I have indicated to the hon. member that, according to the rules, cannot be asked.

IMMIGRATION

REPRESENTATION OF APPLICANTS BEFORE APPEAL BOARD BY UNQUALIFIED PERSONS

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that hundreds of would-be immigrants are being badly represented before the Immigration Appeal Board by people who pretend to be but are not solicitors and are not capable, will the minister, as requested by the Immigration Appeal Board, amend the regulations to stop this abuse of so many would-be newcomers to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by my hon. friend is under very active consideration at the moment. There are compelling arguments for and against the proposition, and until they can be fully assessed no change will be made.

EXERCISE BY APPEAL BOARD OF DISCRETION RESPECTING POLITICAL PERSECUTION AND COMPASSIONATE GROUNDS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Immigration Appeal Board. When checking with the Immigration Appeal Board, would the minister ensure that the board exercises fully the discretion given to it under the act by section 15(1)(b) regarding political persecution and compassionate grounds? I have in mind especially those of Greek origin who may be sent back to Greece at this particular time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the board is an independent tribunal, but I am satisfied that they do consider, in the exercise of their discretion, the political position of an individual in a country for which he may be destined. On more than one occasion the board has allowed an individual to remain in Canada on the very grounds referred to by my friend in connection with Greece; the board has certainly considered that factor.

ESTABLISHMENT OF APPEAL BOARD PANEL IN TORONTO

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the tremendous backlog of applications for landed immigrant status in Toronto, and again the tremendous backlog of cases before the Immigration Appeal Board in Ottawa, would the minister seriously consider setting up another Immigration Appeal Board in Toronto?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is proposed in the fall to establish a panel to hear cases in Toronto, as is now the case in Montreal. This will certainly provide a more convenient service for the large number of interested persons appearing before the board, though it will not in itself fully remove the backlog or even partially remove the backlog of work facing the board.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

• (3:30 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before we proceed with the motions listed for consideration at the report stage of Bill C-4, may I be allowed to suggest to hon. members that there might be procedural difficulties with respect to a few of the motions which appear on the notice paper. I have in mind particularly motions 2, 3 and 5. Any decision with respect to motion 2, would, of course, affect motion 1, which I understand is consequential. It seems to me that motion 2 is in the nature of a substantive proposal, and perhaps hon. members who have been able to understand the amendment proposed by the hon. member might like to guide the Chair in this respect. I am not making a ruling now but I would appreciate being enlightened by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) who has proposed this motion that has caused considerable difficulty to the Chair and to the Chair's advisers.

In regard to motions 3 and 5, the difficulty, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) will recognize, is procedural and stems from the fact that it might well be considered that there is therein provision for a possible charge against the Crown. The hon. member must have given this matter serious thought, and probably also has some advice for the Chair.

I have been studying the other amendments closely, and to the Chair all appear to be procedurally in order, though it may well be that some members of the House may have objections to other motions to which I have not alluded. For the moment, the Chair might hear from the hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the amendment we are seeking in respect of clause 38A deals with ownership. We are seeking to change the nature of the clause to make it more encompassing so that it will deal with the matter of foreign or non-resident ownership. The effect of this amendment would be to put into this section a clause which exists in the Bank Act, and in some other financial legislation, which would restrict foreign ownership in Canadian corporations generally to 25 per cent, unless any corporation is excluded by the minister. One of the clauses in the amendment would give the minister discretion to exclude any company from the provisions of the act if there should be a good and compelling reason for so doing. We think it is important that such a provision be included in the bill because, if it is not, the bill itself does not go very far and does not do too much in respect of dealing with the question of ownership. I think this is a fundamental point. The House has put this provision in other legislation in the past. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will accept the reason as offered and accept the amendment.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order in respect of amendment No. 2, may I say that I think from the words of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) two things probably are apparent. The first is that he is not satisfied with the original scope of the bill and, second, in putting this motion he is attempting to expand the original scope of the bill by what he has referred to as a fundamental change. It would seem to me, having made those two admissions, that he has acknowledged that the amendment as proposed in Motion No. 2 does go beyond the scope of the bill and therefore is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I must tell the hon. member for Waterloo that I feel very unhappy about having to reach the conclusion that the amendment should not be put. I suspect it is the result of considerable work. It would appear to be a drafting masterpiece. In fact, after studying the hon. member's amendment, the impression I have is that it is in essence a legislative proposal which stands on its own two feet and might very well be the subject of a private bill sponsored by the hon. member. To my way of thinking, this amendment goes considerably beyond the purpose and purport of the bill before us. As the President of the Privy Council has indicated, the hon. member for Waterloo himself has indicated that he is trying to introduce a new aspect or a new proposal which, in effect, would change the basis of the bill itself. My impression is that in a way the hon. member has sought to amend more than the bill which is before us. He has sought to go behind this bill to amend the Corporations Act. In other words, he has sought to make a change which would not only affect the bill before us but also the act which the bill seeks to amend. In this respect, the amendment should not be accepted.

Again I say to the hon. member that it is with considerable hesitation that I reach this decision because I think it is very unfortunate that an amendment which is so well prepared and drafted should not have an opportunity to be debated. Perhaps the hon. member will give some thought to the possibility of introducing this proposed amendment by way of a private bill, at which time a debate could be held in the House. I apologize to the hon. member and say to him very sincerely that it is with regret I must rule that the amendment should not be put.

I shall now move on to Motion No. 3 and Motion No. 5 in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) about which I have expressed some reservations. I have indicated to the hon. member that I have some misgivings about these two amendments which otherwise appear to be in order. They have financial implications which would make them out of order. Perhaps the hon. member might like to indicate his views in this respect.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I shall do so most willingly, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me these same points were raised before the committee. Unfortunately for me, the government has introduced another bill, C-216 to which I draw Your Honour's attention, in which precisely what I am seeking to do is being done, and in similar terms. I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to the original form of Bill C-4 and the recommendation contained therein. Perhaps I might read the whole recommendation:

> His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House the present measure to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject-matter of certain of those amendments, in connection with the administration of the Canada Corporations Act, more particularly in regard to provide for the payment of expenses to be incurred with respect to the investigation of the affairs of companies and to authorize the increase in the membership of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission from three to four members to take account of the added duties arising from the investigation measures introduced by the amendments to the Canada Corporations Act, and to provide for other consequential and related amendments.

The minister has admitted that he also was breaking new ground not in any way referred to in the recommendation. As appears from page 52 of the bill, the judge, on the conviction of an individual, may in the same proceedings order the individual to pay to the Receiver General such expenses as may be specified in the order. We now have the Crown seeking to recover its expenses from an individual, which is a provision that has not existed before. So, the purport of my Motion No. 3 is merely an attempt to go down the other side of the street and say that on acquittal the judge, in the same type of proceeding, may make a recommendation. I do not say that he should order. I use the word "recommend" on the advice of the officers of the minister's department. The effect of the amendment is that the judge may recommend to Her Majesty in the right of Canada that such a person be paid costs as specified in the order. In other words, there is a discretionary power given to a judge or magistrate to recommend that Her Majesty pay certain costs in view of the fact that authorization is provided for the payment of expenses to be incurred in respect of an investigation of the affairs of companies.

I would therefore say there is sufficient authority to give a judge the discretion to recommend that Her Majesty pay the cost of the expenses of an individual who has been acquitted. After all, the Crown asks for the right of reimbursement of its expenses from a person convicted. All I am trying to do is see that justice walks down both sides of the street rather than only the one side.

I would put it to Your Honour that, on the basis of what I said with regard to the recommendation and my amendment, there is sufficient authority for the motion. But if proof of that be needed, let us go to Bill C-216 where, in the second paragraph of the recommendation, it is said:

To provide also that the salaries, travelling allowances and annuities payable to members, former members and widows of former members shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and that all other expenditures shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the purpose;

The first paragraph has only to do with salaries, annuities, and things of that nature. Let us consider Bill C-216, by which the Crown seeks to amend the act. The amendment is to section 101 of the Income Tax Act, which reads as follows:

101 (1) The court may, in delivering judgment disposing of an appeal, order payment or repayment of tax, interest, penalties or, subject to subsection (2), costs by the taxpayer or the minister.

It is left to the discretion of the court to order the minister, in the case of certain tax appeals, to pay the costs. But then let us look at subsection (2), which is an amendment, which reads:

(2) Where, on an appeal by the minister, other than by way of cross-appeal, from a decision of the Tax Review Board, the amount of tax that is in controversy does not exceed $1,000, the court, in delivering judgment disposing of the appeal, shall order the minister to pay all reasonable and proper costs of the taxpayer in connection therewith.

Bearing in mind the recommendation that I read to Your Honour that all other expenditures shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, there is a provision whereby the judge in the Exchequer Court shall order the minister to pay. This is not a discretionary provision. It is absolutely clear that he will have to pay the costs of the taxpayer in connection with any claim that amounts to less than $1,000.

Let us take the parallel situation where the recommendation of Bill C-4, refers to authorizing a provision for the payment of expenses. These two are in the same category. It is the expenses of the Crown that we are asking be paid, and the expenses of the Crown shall include, in appropriate cases, the costs that may be awarded against it by a judge in dealing with a matter. This is my case. We cannot distinguish between the two types of recommendation. They are recommendations for the payment of expenses, and if the costs that may be recommended to Her Majesty to be paid to a taxpayer are not the expenses of an investigation, that is straining the credulity of members of the House and also is an abuse of the English language.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) would like to participate in this debate also. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised a nice point with respect to the two recommendations. I suggest that the recommendations are different in that the time honoured use of the phrase with regard to Bill C-216 "and that all other expenditures shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament for the purpose" indicates that the numerous occasions which occur in other bills where the Crown may be exposed to financial expenditures are covered by those words. Of course, such funds will have to be appropriated from time to time in appropriation acts.

What the hon. member is seeking to do with regard to the recommendation in Bill C-4 is to expand the meaning of the word "expenses" so that it would refer not only to expenses which the Crown may incur on its behalf in connection with the type of investigation referred to but also to provide for punitive costs that may be awarded against the Crown from time to time in the case of a certain proceeding. I suggest that the principle should apply here that if a further obligation is imposed on the Crown it should be stated with greater precision. With respect to Bill C-216 the precision will be provided from time to time by the appropriations acts. With regard to Bill C-4, however, there has been no inclusion of penal costs against the Crown in the definition of expenses in the original bill. I suggest, therefore, that it would expand the word beyond its normal meaning to suggest that costs awarded against the Crown could be regarded as expenses for the purpose of the financial recommendation.

As I said, perhaps my colleague who, I must admit, is much more familiar with the entire procedure, could, I hope, enlighten the Chair better than I can.

Mr. Basford: It is seldom that I argue points of order in the House, but I would like to contribute briefly because the same point Your Honour has raised was raised in the committee when various amendments were moved. I concur with my colleague, the House leader, that what the hon. member for Edmonton West is endeavouring to do is to expand and extend the use of the phrase "payment of expenses" in the recommendation far beyond whatever proper interpretation could be given it. The recommendation from the Governor General preceding the introduction of Bill C-4 contains words which allow the Crown the payment of expenses to be incurred with respect to the investigation of the affairs of companies. I submit that that wording in the recommendation has to be interpreted by reference to the provisions of Bill C-4 as they stood before the Governor General when the recommendation was made.

There is nothing in the original version of Bill C-4 that would allow the conclusion that the Governor General ever intended to recommend that the Crown should accept responsibility for paying the expenses and costs incurred by the person who is the object of an investigation pursuant to these provisions. This is what the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West is endeavouring to do. The original version of Bill C-4 provided by way of expenses solely for the appointment of an additional member of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and the conduct by the Crown of certain investigative work. Surely, the only interpretation that can be put on those words is that those are expenses that were intended to be included within the recommendation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a further point, Mr. Speaker, in brief answer to the minister.

Mr. Speaker: There will have to be unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Edmonton West to make his additional point. Of course, the hon. member may rise on a point of order.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister has indicated that I have rather expanded the nature of the phrase "payment of expenses", but it will be noted on examination of the bill that the right of recovery is limited to the case of a convicted individual and to no other case, whereas the payment of expenses is the responsibility of the Crown all the way up to, but falling short of, conviction. Therefore that category of expenses all the way through must be authorized and recommended by the bill. It is not limited only to matters of appointment of a commissioner. All I say is that these expenses are part of the investigation.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Edmonton West and the minister for taking part in this procedural debate. The advantage of the notice which the Chair receives by the appearance in our notice paper of the motion is that the Chair can appear to be very wise.

After lengthy discussion and consultation of precedents I have, of course, in this instance again given the matter very serious thought. I have listened to the very interesting and forceful argument put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West, and he has shaken me to some extent in my original conviction that this amendment is a charge on the Crown.

The hon. member well knows how difficult it is to get away from the long established limitation which prohibits members from proposing for acceptance by the House charges which are not covered by the royal recommendation. It is perhaps the most difficult procedural obstacle to be surmounted. I have some doubts that the hon. member has been successful in this respect, although he has submitted very serious objections and potent arguments.

My understanding of Motion No. 3 is that it proposes in certain circumstances, when persons have been acquitted of charges, when certain prosecutions have been dismissed, abandoned or withdrawn, that such persons may be reimbursed by the Crown for their expenses. It seems to me, if the proposal were accepted and became operative, that it would create a financial charge. I find it difficult to escape this conclusion.

I should perhaps refer hon. members to May's seventeenth edition, page 551 which states as follows:

> Amendments or new clauses creating public charges cannot be proposed, if no money resolution or ways and means resolution has been passed, or if the amendment or clause is not covered by the terms of the resolution. This rule, which is of fundamental importance, is fully explained in Chapter XXV and on page 803.

This is a general statement of course and refers more to the resolution than the royal recommendation but it is the rule which applies to royal recommendations even when a bill is not preceded by a resolution. I have looked at the words in the royal recommendation and having studied it, my humble interpretation of it was that it should be deemed to include the costs incurred by individuals, which the hon. member's amendment would want to be paid.

Of course I have some difficulty in connection with the other argument put forth by the hon. member for Edmonton West when he suggests that his proposal is on all fours with the clause contained in Bill C-216 on the Order Paper, which is an act to establish the tax review board and particularly clause 22 subsection (3) wherein section 101 of the Income Tax Act is amended by making costs payable by the Crown where the amount of taxes in controversy does not exceed $1,000. The hon. member suggests that this has the same effect as his proposal to amend Bill C-4. I should like to suggest to the hon. member that there is a substantial difference in that the amendment to section 101 contained in clause 22 of Bill C-216 in reality recommends a reduction in the charge on the Crown because section 101 at present enables the court to order payment of costs by the Crown in all cases, that is, wherein the amount of taxes on controversy exceeds $1,000.

That is my interpretation. The hon. member does not appear to agree with this, but I have given the matter serious thought and study and it is my impression that this is the way the bill ought to be interpreted.

Through his amendment, the hon. member suggests that he would rectify what he considers an inequality or injustice by putting the individual taxpayer on the same basis as the Crown. This is a most laudable purpose but I would not think it is sufficient to overcome the procedural difficulty to which I have alluded. I would have to rule that Motion No. 3 standing in the hon. member's name cannot be put for the reasons I have stated.

I feel we would have the same difficulty in relation to Motion No. 5 but perhaps the hon. member feels there is a difference which is not apparent to me. Unless he felt there was a difference in Motion No. 5 and would like to argue some difference between the two, I suggest that the ruling I have just made on Motion No. 3 should apply to Motion No. 5.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to raise a point of order because I would hesitate to have the Chair misdirect itself on an interpretation of law. Your Honour indicated the amendment to section 101 of the Income Tax Act was a reduction of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. The hon. member is debating a ruling of the Chair and he knows very well that cannot be done. Perhaps he would like to advance an argument in connection with Motion No. 5.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With in regard to Motion No. 5, I hope Your Honour will look at section 101 again because what I did was to follow the principle as enunciated in the bill whereby the Crown can recover its expenses by saying, at the termination of the investigation or at any stage, that the commission which is in charge of the proceedings may in its discretion direct the payment of the expenses of the Crown. In other words, I am suggesting that the Crown should have the right to recover some money. In the previous section the Crown has narrowly limited itself to the case of an eventual conviction. I agree that they should, in this instance, recover their expenses and I think it is an acceptable principle. But I go further and say why should the Crown not have the right to recover part way down the road? If the person involved says "that is fine I agree. I will not raise any further defence and I will restore the money" or whatever it is, then the Crown should have the right to recover. But under these cases, unless there is security for costs, which was an amendment the Minister and I worked out together, there is no means whereby the Crown can recover any of its expenses. That is the purport of my amendment.

True enough, I must travel down both sides of the street and if at any time in these proceedings the Crown should desist—this often happens because the individual before the commission may have given a satisfactory explanation and the Crown could be satisfied that it should not proceed any further—then I say the commission, in its discretion, should make an award of the expenses of the individual or the company concerned and that these be paid by the Crown. Let us have justice on both sides of the street, and this is what I have said.

I have indicated clearly that this shall be for the payment of the expenses of an investigation of the affairs of a company. There is no suggestion, I would submit, of any question of costs—if anybody wanted to split hairs and distinguish between expenses and costs. These are expenses of an investigation of a company and I suggest to Your Honour that this is amply covered in the recommendation of the resolution. There is no expansion.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I will go back to my second argument because I suggest to Your Honour that it is apposite. In the terminology of the recommendation of Bill C-216 there is not a reduction in expenditures at the discretion of the court, but an expansion, because the amendment in the case of Bill C-216 makes the award of costs against the Crown mandatory in all cases. The original act only stated that the court "could do so" in all cases. In those cases involving $1,000 or less, it must award costs against the Crown. Therefore, with all due respect, that is an expansion of the liability of the Crown. Clearly, if there is an expansion of the liability of the Crown under Bill C-216, and if it is deemed that there is an expansion of potential liability of the Crown under Bill C-4, the wording in C-4 is wide enough and the amendment ought to be accepted.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I might add that I think Your Honour's ruling on Motion No. 3 applies to the motion we are now considering. In view of the lastest remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West I simply add that the wording of the two recommendations, one relating to Bill C-4 and the other relating to the amendments to the Income Tax Act that the hon. member mentioned, is different. Different words are used.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But they mean the same thing.

Mr. Basford: The wording in the recommendation relating to Bill C-4 refers to the payment of expenses to be incurred with respect to an investigation. The wording in the recommendation that the hon. member for Edmonton West referred to lists a number of expenditures and then goes on to say, "all other expenditures." I think, since the recommendations accompanying these two bills are different, the words in the recommendation accompanying Bill C-4, speaking of the payment of expenses and those in the recommendation accompanying Bill C-216, speaking of "all other expenditures", that these matters ought to be subject to different interpretations.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West restated as forcibly the second time as he stated the first time his arguments in support of the procedural admissibility of Motion No. 5 in his name. I do not see how I can reverse my decision, reached after having given every possible consideration to the hon. member's views, to his past experience in the House, which I respect, to his training in the Chair and to his legal background. I have taken all these matters into consideration. I would say, rightly or wrongly, that this is the conclusion I have reached. I hope that the hon. member will not be unduly aggrieved and that no miscarriage of justice will result from this interpretation of the hon. member's motion. But I feel, generally speaking, that the opinion I have expressed in relation to Motion No. 5 should apply to Motion No. 3. I again regret very much that I cannot accept the hon. member's arguments and that I cannot put to the House Motion No. 5.

I shall now put the question on Motion No. 4, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He moves:

That Bill C-4, An Act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended by striking out in clause 12 the words "any shareholder" in line 6 on page 53 and substituting the words "any or all shareholders".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) Mr. Speaker, I rise on a minor point of order. I wonder, have we disposed of Motion No. 1? I realize that it is consequential on Motion No. 2. Since Motion No. 2 has been ruled out of order, perhaps Your Honour might make a ruling on Motion No. 1.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for raising this point. I thought it had been made clear that Motion No. 1 was a consequential motion and could not be put if Motion No. 2 were not accepted. That is why it has not been called. It is deemed to have been ruled out of order because it is consequential upon Motion No. 2.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my amendment is actually to bring a little more precision to this point. This amendment was worked out with the minister and relates to the obtaining of security for costs. I felt that merely using the words "any shareholder" in line 6 on page 53 was perhaps limiting the matter too much, because the bill says that an application for an investigation by the minister shall be made by five shareholders or more. I should like to be satisfied with the interpretation to be put on this part. I want combinations. It may be that the minister would find that one or more of the complaining shareholders is a citizen of substance residing in Canada, and from him no security for costs would be required. However, others might be residents of foreign countries or in other provinces and they may not be citizens of substance, so in their case there may be a necessity for obtaining security for costs. The purpose of this amendment is to dot the "i's" and cross the "t's". That is about all there is to it, because we want to make absolutely clear that the choice of the minister would be exercised and that there would not be a case of "any and/or shareholders". The amendment seeks to clear this matter up.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, while I am not entirely sure the amendment is needed, because I think the wording of Bill C-4 probably covers the situation the hon. member refers to, I may say that if there is any doubt I will be quite happy to accept the amendment. That of course, is characteristic of this government. When we receive good ideas from across the floor we are happy to accept them in the spirit of co-operation.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Lambert) agreed to.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of privilege that has nothing to do with the minister. It relates to the holding of the debate on the report stage of this bill this afternoon. As the minister knows, there were 19 sittings in committee with regard to this bill. We heard witnesses from 17 organizations as well as individuals, plus the minister, the deputy minister, his assistant, the deputy minister for corporate affairs and the director of corporations. They appeared before the committee on numerous occasions. What I wish to say to Your Honour now will not entail any kind of disparagement of hon. members in the House at the present time. This is a highly technical bill. The House is being asked in some instances to express itself on certain amendments. As debate continues, it will have to express itself on other amendments that are more contentious than the ones which have been put forward up to now. Why has this debate been scheduled for today when there is full knowledge that the finance committee in another place will hold three sittings today. That is a very grave matter. The members who were present at the committee hearings have studied this matter in great detail. I suggest that very few members of this House have read the proceedings of the committee. They are very extensive.

My point of privilege is that the scheduling of this debate is a discourtesy to this House and also to the witnesses who are appearing before the finance committee. The representatives of national organizations, major corporations, etc., in many cases have to travel a very long distance in order to appear before the committee. The committee today has to limit itself to less than a corporal's guard to receive and question these witnesses. This points out a very serious problem. Your Honour alluded to it yesterday.

There are nine committees holding 19 sittings today. On Tuesday last, ten committees held 25 sittings. One committee had three sittings on that day, yet the legislation called for discussion in this House was legislation dealt with by that committee. I am referring to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On that day someone counted 26 members in this chamber. I say that is a discourtesy to this House.

I did not see any government members in attendance today at that committee at any time as committee members, although periodically one member present did come in to ask questions. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) attended that committee. There is not one member on the government side who was present at those committee discussions. That is an odd situation. It seems to be an ill-disguised attempt to get legislation through by default or by steamroller because members are required to be present in two places at the same time.

I am not complaining to the minister because he has no control over this. I am not complaining to the Chair. I wish to point out the difficulty that has arisen which is one that is sundering the efficacy of the committee system in studying legislation.

Mr. Basford: There are several things that surprise me, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that the business of the House is arranged through consultation with the government house leader and house leaders of other parties. It was announced some time ago that Bill C-4 was to be the business of the House for today. I assume this was known by the house leaders and the hon. member. The fact that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was to meet today was known some days ago. We have been debating Bill C-4 for over an hour. I am curious as to why the point of privilege has just been raised.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much if we should pursue the matter. Generally speaking, I agree with the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. As the hon. member mentioned, the Chair alluded to this situation yesterday in a statement made prior to routine proceedings. However, this is not a question on which the Chair can make a ruling. My only suggestion is that even in the face of a difficult situation we should attempt to pursue our discussion of the matter. The next motion, No. 6, stands in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo) moved:

That Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended in clause 14 by adding to section 118A the following subsection:

"(c) funds derived from the non-resident aspect of each item in subsection (a)

(d) funds applied to the non-resident aspect of each item in subsection (b) and,

(i) payments to non-residents for advertising licences

(ii) payment to charitable, cultural, and political causes."

He said: Mr. Speaker, clause 14, subsection 118A is a provision dealing with the application of funds. It deals with a number of important items, such as from where the funds are derived and where they are applied. It is our feeling that it is most important that stockholders and the public know about the use of corporation funds for political purposes.

One of the chief purposes of the motion before the House is that, if accepted, companies will have to reveal the contributions they make to political, charitable and cultural causes. Another important reason for moving this motion is that in the absence of any differentiation between American and Canadian corporations in this act, it is important to know to what extent there are transfer payments between the corporations in Canada and the parents in other countries regarding advertising, licences and other matters of that kind. The motion is commended to the members of this House as a way of providing additional information to stockholders and companies on how corporations are conducting their affairs.

Mr. Basford: I wish to oppose this amendment, Mr. Speaker. It is not appropriate to include it in Bill C-4 at this time. As the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has pointed out, the amendment requires the disclosure of payments by non-residents for advertising and licences. The hon. member says that this would be useful information. However, I am not sure why he has selected this particular kind of payment.

The Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, the other disclosure statute in the law of Canada, applies to all companies, whether or not they are incorporated under the Canada Corporations Act. The amendment requires the disclosure of payments by resident corporations to non-residents. The requirement for the disclosure of payments of that kind includes more than 15 different items, such as royalties, rent on real property, payments for or in respect of scientific research and several others. It is doubtful, in my view, that the information the amendment would require would in this context be very useful. If it were to be deemed useful information, I submit that the appropriate place to obtain it would be through amendments to the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. The disclosure of these kinds of payments from resident to non-resident companies would then be required from all companies in Canada, rather than just federal companies.

With regard to the second point of disclosure that is required, I wish to point out two things. I am not sure that the lumping together of all payments to charitable, cultural and political causes would provide meaningful information. I suspect that is a technical error in the amendment. I suspect that the hon. member for Waterloo would like them all shown separately. The wording is such that they could be all lumped together. This would not be very useful information.

Also, the matter of election expenses is before a committee of this House at the present time. If we are to have different laws pertaining to corporate donations to political parties, this should be dealt with in the legislation with respect to election expenses. It should be dealt with in matters pertaining to federal elections and federal political parties.

It would require information from all companies in Canada, not just the federally incorporated companies. In any event, if there are votes on these amendments I would request that they be deferred so that they can all be taken together.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It must be remembered that this is an amendment to an amendment to the Act. In actual fact, it covers part of the disclosure provisions in the amendment put forward by the minister. It would add to the number of public companies on the register of the Crown, as well as to those private companies referred to in the second amendment, bringing them within the group of companies which must make certain disclosures.

The information which is sought here in the amendment before us would really be meaningless. As far as the private companies are concerned, their number is 375, and the total number of private companies operating under federal jurisdiction is, I believe, less than 9 per cent of the total in the country. All the companies operating under Ontario Charters—and I suggest they amount to nearly 50 per cent—and all those operating under the charters of the common-law provinces in the west, operate under the same kind of company law. So, what we would be doing is this: we would be picking out a very narrow sector of Canadian companies and asking them to make available certain information. But for what useful purpose? I can see none except, maybe, to satisfy the curiosity of a few Paul Prys, certain individuals who would have to pay a fee to look into company files.

What is the purpose? The rule should apply to all, and unless it does there is no useful purpose served by an amendment of this type. I cannot see my way clear to supporting it at all; I did not support the initial amendment, in the first place.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): I believe the mover of this amendment is under the misapprehension that the more information which is given, the better. In some way this amendment is supposed to indicate to a corporation where to invest its money, how it is to expend its advertising funds and so on.

I should like to bring the section to the hon. member's attention. The act stipulates that certain matters should be disclosed to the shareholders; for example, the extent of funds derived from current operations, through the sale of non-current assets, identifiable assets and issues of securities. This is all intended to give the shareholder some knowledge in the event that there are inside trading arrangements of which he might not be aware. Later on, there is a reference to funds applied to the purchase of material assets. This is in case one of the directors, on the inside, might have been able to pawn-off on the company certain assets detrimental to the position of the shareholders. There is a further reference to disclosure of information with regard to purchases of redeemable stock. It might be that a company had issued redeemable stock which had fallen into ill-repute. Then, when the company was about to make it 100 per cent good, one of the "inside" directors might have acquired it so as to make a profit for himself.

If the hon. member would study this section, he would see that the purpose is to require disclosure of information to shareders which it is necessary for them to know before deciding whether or not to support the board of directors or the management of the company. It is not a section designed to make possible the provision of all kinds of information or one by means of which a government, whether federal or provincial, may dictate to a corporation the way in which it should run its business. It is intended merely to protect shareholders against eventualities which might prejudice them as shareholders.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I wish to say a few words in support of the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). Information as to both the source and the application of corporation funds is a most important aspect of the financial statement made by a corporation. This is of particular significance in view of the concern felt in Canada at the present time with respect to foreign ownership, a concern reflected in the fact that a study is presently under way in government circles to help determine future policy with respect to foreign ownership and development in Canada.

The principle that adequate information should be provided by corporations has already been acknowledged. Among the information which should be required from all these corporations is disclosure of figures relating both to the source and the application of their funds, and especially to the non-resident aspect of such funds. My hon. friend from Waterloo has dealt adequately with specific features such as advertising, and in the circumstances I shall content myself with expressing the hope that there will be support in the House for this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Saltsman) negatived.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East) moved:

That Bill C-4, An Act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended by striking out in clause 20 paragraph (b) of subsection (3) on pages 62-63 and substituting the following:

"(b) A private company except as provided in paragraph (c) and (d);

(c) section (b) does not apply to a private company that is a personal corporation within the meaning of section 68 of the Income Tax Act in the whole of the year in respect of which a financial statement is required by this Act;

(d) the Minister having regard to the public interest may grant an exemption to a private company if revenue does not exceed ten million dollars in any period ending in or after the year in which this section comes into force, in respect of which a financial statement is required by this Act to be prepared, or whose total assets on the last day of any such period do not exceed five million dollars."

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the present time we are giving consideration to the review and overhaul of the Canada Corporations Act, an important statute. I feel we are bound to give close and serious attention to the various aspects of this legislation before it is given final passage. It must be recognized that within a modern Canadian economic complex the corporations are a principal instrument for economic activity. Through federal legislation and other legislation enacted by the provinces, the corporations are established as legal entities and thus given special powers and privileges within our society. Thus we, as legislators in this House, have the duty and obligation to ensure that there is an adequate control over the operations of the corporation in view of the rights and privileges granted to it.

In my view, the operations of corporations are no longer simply a matter of considering the interests of shareholders, the interests of debt holders, business transactions, transfers of shares and proxies, and investigations into problems that develop within corporations. I quite acknowledge that these matters are important and deserve adequate consideration; but I think it is not enough to restrict our consideration solely to these matters.

Corporations today exert a very profound influence upon the economy. We no longer live in a society where the actions of individuals or corporations do not influence the economy. We no longer live in that sort of laissez-faire world. The corporation today can have a particular influence on the economy. It can influence the course of affairs of a nation and it affects the public good and public interest. Thus, we have to exert extreme care in determining the powers and rights of these corporations and to ensure that adequate obligations are placed upon them. I think this is, in fact, now recognized since at the present time there are many people in society, including governments, who are working on the development of policies to reconcile corporate activity and power with the public good and public interest. A prerequisite to carrying on such studies and examination of the activities of corporations is adequate information and knowledge.

One of the first to point up this particular matter and to indicate that a very real problem exists in this regard was Professor Melville Watkins, who was commissioned by the federal Liberal government to make a study. His report was entitled "Foreign Ownership and the Structure of Canadian Industry". When Professor Watkins presented his report to the government he stated as follows:

It is a prerequisite to public discussion of government policy and the formulation and implementation of actual policy that more information be available on the activities of corporations, particularly large corporations, both Canadian-owned and foreign-owned. Information presently available is generally deficient, and in some respects grossly so, for meeting the three distinct purposes for which information is needed: public disclosure, economic analysis, and governmental surveillance of firms.

He goes on to make this recommendation in his report:

It is recommended that the following specific steps be taken with respect to company law, bankruptcy law, securities legislation, the Corporations and Labour Union Returns Act, and the guiding principles of "good corporate behaviour" to the larger foreign-owned subsidiaries:

(a) Amend the Canada Corporations Act so that federally-incorporated private companies (as well as federally-incorporated public companies), without respect to the nationality of ownership, must file returns with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and make returns for all companies available to the general public; seek provincial co-operation to make this an effective means of obtaining public disclosure.

He then suggested other alternative steps that might be taken. It seems to me that in his study Professor Watkins took a major step forward in highlighting this particular problem and indicating the need for more adequate legislation. There have been many other instances and examples quoted both before this monumental report and since that time. I have had considerable personal experience in searching the records of companies in the province of Saskatchewan, as well as federally incorporated companies, in connection with which there has been a great deal of difficutly in obtaining adequate information. I would find that with a public company there was no problem at all about securing adequate information with respect to its shareholders, the directors of the company and the financial statement of the company. But such was not the case with companies carrying on similar operations which were incorporated as private companies. In those cases this information was not available to me.

I can assure the House that in searching these records I was not doing so in any individual capacity on behalf of any private or personal interest; rather it was in terms of looking at them in order to determine whether certain steps taken and activities carried on by those companies were in fact in the public interest. I quite realize that a certain judgment follows from that in regard to the use of the information that is obtained, and in regard to making judgments based on the information obtained. But certainly it was quite clear to me from my own personal experience that information was being denied the public, information the public had the right to have in terms of dealing adequately with modern economic and social problems.

Thus, it seems to me that the principle of the right to know is one of the features that should be incorporated in the Canada Corporations Act vis-à-vis the provision of financial information. I think a balance is required in terms of the structure of the law. On the one hand, corporations are given powers, rights and privileges; on the other hand, certain controls and requirements are placed upon them. The requirement should also be placed upon all large corporations that are established within the framework of this statute to provide adequate information with respect to their financial operations.

Bill C-4, which was introduced in the House of Commons last fall, provided with respect to this particular matter that any company which had gross revenues of over $3 million in any one year or which, on the other hand, had more than $3 million in assets would be required to submit the same financial information as was required of public companies incorporated under this act. Various representations were made when the bill went before the committee, for the most part by a variety of companies, though chiefly large companies that objected to being required to make this information public. As a result of consideration in the committee, an amended version of this clause was reported back to the House of Commons and is now before us. This amended version states that any private company which has more than $5 million in assets or more than $10 million in gross revenues should be required to submit financial information comparable to that required of a public company.

It seems to me that in setting that arbitrary figure—and I have to consider this an arbitrary figure—there are a number of problems created. First of all, who knows what the right figure is? What figure should be used, whether $3 million, $5 million, or $10 million, in terms of dealing with the economic significance of any given company?

• (4:40 p.m.)

In the second place, I think it is quite probable that a figure of economic significance will differ between various regions and companies. I do not believe one would find the figures for one company would be applicable to another company in assessing the economic significance and importance of a corporation. Third, I would point out that big oaks from little acorns grow and very often very small concerns are the start of large corporations, sometimes by design and sometimes simply because that is the way the corporate events take place. I have personal experience in trying to obtain information on small companies which had been established and for which no information was available. I knew very well that these small companies would be economically significant corporations in which questions of public interest would be involved, either now or in the very near future. Thus, I believe it should be suggested that provision of information concerning the financial operations of corporations should be applicable to all corporations under the Canada Corporations Act.

This, in fact, is the intent of my amendment. It does provide for an exemption and exception in respect of personal corporations.

There is also provision within my amendment for special cases where corporations may apply to the minister for an exemption from the provision. This gives the minister a discretionary authority. I think it should be noted that corporation laws provide for two basic types of companies, public companies and private companies. Under the terms of the bill as now reported back to us we have sort of a hybrid known as "constrained share companies". We do have these two types of companies, public and private, and I would point out, if it is important to obtain information concerning the financial operations of public companies, that only some 2350 companies will be involved according to recent information. On the other hand, there is a much larger number of companies incorporated as private companies on the basis of the information available to me. If it is important that we obtain this information from public companies, I believe it is also important that we obtain this information from private companies.

Two factors involved in differentiating between public and private companies very often concern the control of the ownership of shares within the company, the provision of financial information and information in respect of the shareholders. We are not concerned just with the control of ownership. A private company would still have the right to say who may own shares and to whom shares may be transferred. We are proposing a change which would place both public and private companies on the same footing with regard to the provision of financial information. I believe this is necessary within the framework of a modern, integrated and complex economy because we no longer live in a world of isolation. It would seem to me that the public interest should be paramount in any consideration of this legislation. As was pointed out by Professor Melville Watkins, the information is needed for determination of policy and analysis of events and developments within the economy.

It would seem to me that the right to know is a very important principle. This principle now applies to many aspects of government operations. Certainly, the right to know is applied on a much broader scale than is proposed in respect of the operations of corporations. I suggest that this principle of the right to know must apply to the private sector as well. Thus, I would hope the House would give serious consideration to the amendment proposed.

[Mr. Burton.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, briefly may I say that I thoroughly disagree with the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). I also disagree with the minister in respect of his proposal concerning disclosure —disclosure for whom, for what purpose? At the time of the examination by the committee, the minister indicated that he did not know for what purpose the disclosure is to be made. There was also no precision in the comments of the hon. member for Regina East. He did not indicate for what purpose. When the comparison is made with public companies, may I say that little or no information can be drawn from the material filed by public companies. There is no common form used in respect of the filing of balance sheets. There is no common form in respect of profit and loss statements, with the exception of whatever conformity there may be as a result of the statements having been prepared by chartered accountants and the fact that they have some uniformity. Apart from that, however, there is absolutely nothing that says that balance sheets shall be on the same basis or that profit and loss statements shall be on the same basis or that the source of revenue and application of fund statements shall be on a uniform basis.

So, there is absolutely no simple reason for the collating of the information. These returns will now be placed on a company file forever to gather dust unless someone wishes to equip himself for the payment of a dollar per file to go through the files and collate information which is not uniform. Information which is not uniform is useless unless someone wishes to go to an individual company to do something privately for a chosen purpose. There are other ways in which to do this. There are a number of public companies registered in Ottawa. All one need do is buy one share in order to have the right of access to the statement, thus gaining rights with other shareholders. I am surprised the hon. member for Regina East mentioned that when he was concerned about private companies he could obtain no information whatever. Of course he can obtain up to date information from the corporations branch in respect of the shareholders, the directors and the quantum of their individual holdings. This is a requirement of Saskatchewan law as much as it is a requirement of Alberta law.

One cannot obtain any balance sheets of private companies at any level at the present time, but why would one want such balance sheets? The original and fundamental reason for the provision of balance sheets and profit and loss statements is for the information and protection of persons who are interested in investing in public companies. This is the purpose. But there is no reason for this in respect of private companies because they are prohibited from seeking to distribute shares to the public. It is forbidden for a private company to do that. So, it is not seeking shareholders and will not adversely affect anybody else. If a person wishes to make an investment in a private company, he must make application and before his application can be considered all other shareholders have the right to buy those shares in whatever proportion they may desire. This is the purpose of a private company.

A private company is an expanded partnership with limited liability. Do we want disclosure, and for what meaningful purpose? Not one iota of meaningful purpose has been disclosed by the minister, either in the House on second reading or in committee, whereby he could point out that disclosure of the information would be of benefit to a class of companies. Is it on the basis of the balance sheet or of the source and application fund statement that it will be determined a company has been efficient behind a certain tariff wall, as someone suggested, or because it receives grants? What about looking at a company like Eaton's, which is a private company with many interests and many operations? Which of them are efficient and which are inefficient? Which ones benefit from this particular economic policy and which ones do not, as disclosed by the balance sheet, the source and application fund, or the profit and loss statements required to be filed by law?

What hon. members would like to do really is to go into the books and play God in the operations of the business. I will ask the minister and anyone supporting this type of amendment just who they would like to carry out the appropriate analyses on the basis of this information that is submitted in disparate form. It is not uniform. There is no power to go back to the company to ask them to elaborate on their statements, none whatsoever. So the minister is going to gather a basket of fruit of all kinds and someone will say "my, what a fine looking bunch of grapes or what a fine bunch of bananas or what a fine bunch of rotting fruit". What is the purpose of it?

We know that the proportion of companies that will be affected in Canada is minute, and when one company comes and says that they want to draw some economic conclusions and therefore want to make some surveys about the operations of private and public companies, I ask: what about all the private companies in the province of Ontario? Over 50 per cent of the companies of the country are under Ontario charter, but not one of them will be touched by these amendments. There is no indication whatsoever that the Ontario law will be changed. There is no indication that the law in Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan or Manitoba—which is pretty well uniform with that of Ontario except that the Manitoba law has a little more flexibility in it in certain areas—will be changed. I find it incredible for anyone to advance serious arguments in favour of disclosure.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): "Why not" is not an argument. It is like saying "because". Originally, the disclosure was for the protection of shareholders and potential shareholders, but as far as that goes the securities commissions exact a lot more and better information of the type which I suggested should be required but is not asked for here. The minister is trying, in a half-hearted and ham-handed way, to do some work that he cannot do because he cannot set up a national securities commission. That is the reason. What we should have established is a national securities commission in co-operation with the provinces. Co-operation from the provinces would be forthcoming, but for the insistence that the national securities commission should be headquartered at Ottawa, away from the stock exchange, and that it would be under federal aegis. This is a co-operative effort.

I have had a number of sources of information with regard to the "non-negotiations" that have been going on between the federal government and the provinces with regard to the establishment of a national securities commission. This is a sort of picayune effort to try to obtain what a meaningful securities commission, having the right to ask for statistics from public companies on a uniform basis, could obtain. That is what is needed for the protection of shareholders. With regard to disclosure for the purposes of carrying out an economic study of one sort or another, that is all very well if the government is able to separate the operations of a company on the basis of the information that is required, even the operations of a public company as it exists today. There is no possible way of determining whether or not this type of operation is successful. Did the company benefit from certain economic activity? Only wild guesses could be made on the basis of a great deal of misinformation.

I am amazed at some of the academic economists who should be so naïve as to think that through this sort of operation they will be able to get some meaningful information. This is not so. Comparisons have been made with the United States, but in the United States information is obtained from the SEC, not from the companies' annual returns. The directors of companies are not even authorized to go through the files to collate information. So who is going to make the study, the minister? He has to pay $1 for every entry into the files. Under the Companies Act the minister is not exempt from paying the fee, neither is any member or any professor wanting to make a study. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Basford: I apologize to the House because there have been no previous consultations, but I wonder if the House would be agreeable, in view of the fact that we are trying to adjourn by June 26 and this bill has to reach the Senate if it is to be dealt with at all, to waiving the private members' hour, during which we are to deal with a notice of motion for the production of papers, and continuing debate on this bill for the next hour?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not disagree with the minister's request, but I should like to say that I hope the minister will be able to say that one day all those members who have given up private members hour will receive a day from the minister or from the government. Private members have their rights and, in order to assist the government, they have given up private members' hour. I should like it clearly understood that in due course we will get a day which will be devoted to private members on an allocated basis so that we can deal with some of our business.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I make a suggestion, Mr. Speaker? It is true that when we give up an hour on a Thursday or Friday, we lose it. Today happens to be a day for the debate of notices of motions for the production of papers, and one of my colleagues was planning to present one of his motions today. I have just consulted with him and my colleagues who are here. We offer a compromise of half an hour. In other words, let us stay on this bill until 5.30 and at 5.30 we could go to notices of motions for papers.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I was reaching the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I think I have made my point. I do not think the amendment adds anything to the terms of disclosure as requested by the minister in his bill. I thoroughly disagree with the requirements, and I have said so many times in committee and out of committee. I have a further amendment which would eliminate disclosure for private companies and that is why I have said as much as I have on this occasion, so that when we deal with my amendment I will not be repetitious.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to recognizing the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan), I might advise the House of the subjects to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Canada Assistance Plan—Refusal of benefits to members of B.C. building trade unions; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Broadcasting Policy—Suggested reference of act to committee in light of technological developments; the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell)—Immigration—representation of applicants before appeal board by unqualified persons.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

The House resumed the consideration of Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motion No. 7 (Mr. Burton).

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by attempting to respond to some of the questions asked by the previous speaker. He tossed into the air the consideration of what useful purpose would be served by disclosure, what meaningful purpose would there be. He argued that the minister had not offered one single, substantial reason why it would be in the interests of Canada to have this kind of disclosure.

I disagree with him. I think this disclosure would be extremely desirable and useful. I will agree with him to the extent that it is not obvious that this disclosure would be useful. It takes some thought to appreciate why it would. In the first place, we have the consideration of privacy. This is important and I think in other areas this government has indicated its respect for privacy in what it proposes to do with respect to computer technology and bugging devices. These considerations indicate that privacy is a value which this government respects. One might ask, why should privacy not apply to business. I think it should and I think there is a value in privacy there.

The hon. member mentioned that we ought not to pander to mere nosiness to accommodate people's interest. Even if someone would like to know how much profit is made by the T. Eaton Company, the A & P, Texaco or General Motors, this is nobody's business. The hon. member points out that these are private companies and they should be allowed to carry on privately, that no public interest would be served by knowing their profits and that we ought not to accommodate mere nosiness. He also pointed out that some businessmen can achieve a certain benefit in secrecy. That is undeniably true, because in many cases there are competitive advantages in keeping information to themselves. I have to agree that this is a point deserving of strong consideration and appreciation.

But even considering those factors, Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that public disclosure is a good practice within a certain limit. It is not just a case of shareholders having information; I agree entirely with the hon. member that the interests of shareholders are already accommodated by existing laws. The interest that has to be accommodated by increased disclosure is the public interest.

We sit in this House day after day, Mr. Speaker, and many of us concern ourselves with economic questions. It is remarkable that, although we propose public policy, although we make far-reaching decisions which must be considered fundamental to our free enterprise system and the preservation of our market economy, although we do the best we can, we make these decisions largely on the basis of guesswork. We do not know as much about our economy as other countries knows about theirs, and we do not know as much as we should in order to do a good job.

I was astonished to hear the hon. member refer to economic studies with a measure of contempt. I have a great deal of respect for that kind of research and I think we need more of it in Canada if we are to have an effective economic policy. Let me give some examples of questions where increased disclosure would help us. Every day we answer questions on our policies without the benefit of any good, hard knowledge about the underlying facts. We have decisions to make about the appropriate interest rate from time to time. We have to decide upon appropriate monetary policies. We have to decide how much liquidity there should be in our economy at any time. We have to look at competition and try to decide whether our system is functioning properly as a free enterprise system we have to analyse combines policy. We have to know something about our foreign exchange balances. We have the whole area of labour about which we are badly informed because we do not know how our economy is functioning. We have to make fundamental decisions about the allocation of resources in our society and we are not in as good a position to do that as we would be if we knew more about the operation of companies in Canada. We need more information in order to establish a good tariff policy.

One of the answers that might be tendered to this list of questions, Mr. Speaker, is that we have all this information but we have it in statistical form. We would have to agree that although we could have better statistics we do have very good ones. But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, we need to know more about the operations of certain companies in Canada. I do not agree with the position stated by the New Democratic Party. We do not have to invade privacy to the extent of knowing everything about every company in Canada. But companies reach a certain size where the economic decisions which they make are important and where a knowledge of their internal affairs would clearly assist us in establishing better public policies. Disclosure is the way to achieve this.

I am satisfied with the standard proposed by the government, Mr. Speaker. Originally they were suggesting a test of $3 million of assets or $3 million of gross sales or revenue a year. That has been moved upwards to $5 million of assets or $10 million gross revenue or sales. I have no complaint about that test. One of the things that convinces me it is the appropriate level is that we have been informed in our committee that 2,500 Canadian companies are of that size; that is, companies operating in Canada. In the formation of public policy it would be useful to know the details of how the 2,500 largest companies in Canada operate. It is a bit arbitrary, I agree. One could raise it by a few thousand or a few million dollars or lower it by the same amount, but the principle would not be affected. One has to have an arbitrary line in that kind of decision.

But there is another form of arbitrariness in the legislation which I find it difficult to accept, and which I would urge the government to reconsider. I refer to the decision to make the disclosure provisions applicable only to federal companies. I mentioned that there are only 2,500 companies in Canada that meet the test of size and I was referring to all companies that carry on business in Canada, wherever incorporated. Of those 2,500 companies, less than 20 per cent who do not now make disclosure would be affected by this provision. If we want to learn something about the way big business operates in this economy, why approach it with a proposal that will only reach 20 per cent of the companies not now making disclosure? This is a kind of tokenism, it seems to me, and it is a tokenism that is unsatisfactory. I agree that there ought to be a test, but why should that not apply to 100 per cent of incorporations in Canada instead of just 20 per cent?

Some of the consequences of limiting the test to federally incorporated companies will be very serious. I urge the minister to consider some of the consequences of the measure he is proposing. For one thing, the companies that now will be required to make disclosure claim that they will be put at a disadvantage vis-à-vis their provincial counterparts who are not required to make disclosure. I am not sure they are right, but they think they are right. They think that provincial companies of the same size ought also to be covered, and how can we argue with that? It strikes me as extremely discriminatory to impose regulations on companies that are incorporated under federal jurisdiction while permitting other large companies in Canada to continue carrying on in secrecy. Here we have a kind of tokenism that I find it difficult to accept.

It follows from what I have just observed that if these companies feel themselves put to a disadvantage, federal incorporation will become less popular. As a federal legislator who in these matters necessarily has a federal bias, I think we ought to encourage our citizens to make the greatest possible use of federal incorporation. We ought to introduce legislation that accommodates the interest of the business community; our legislation ought to protect shareholders. In these respects, our legislation is moving ahead. Most of the government proposals are excellent and we are about to introduce the most progressive corporation law in Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It has one or two flaws.

Mr. Kaplan: The question is, how interested will some of these companies be in federal incorporation when, by bringing themselves under the authority of another jurisdiction, they can avoid having to make the kind of disclosures which they find so distasteful. If statistics were to be offered, I would have to agree that there may be the same number of federal incorporations in the future as there have been in the past. There are substantial advantages in obtaining a federal charter. The national names of companies so incorporated are protected, and such firms have the right to carry on business in every province. But I suggest that such federally incorporated companies may well become shells held as subsidiaries probably by an Ontario company or, to an increasing extent, by a Prince Edward Island company. That is the kind of thing that people who like the idea of federal incorporation will be driven to by what is basically a discriminatory proposal. Such companies, I suggest, will make use of federal incorporation—

Mr. Fairweather: It will be known as the flag of convenience.

Mr. Kaplan: Exactly. Federal incorporation will be known as the flag of convenience. There are many advantages to federal incorporation and, as I say, the number of federal incorporations probably will not decrease. I am greatly afraid, however, that proper use will not be made again of federally incorporated companies, and that Canadians who wish to incorporate will not make use of federal charters as they ought to be encouraged to do in the conduct of their business.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the motion of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), may I say that the important aspect of his motion relates to the principle of disclosure. His motion recognizes that there may be companies of such a small size as not to represent any significant economic interest. The minister has the discretion to exclude such companies. Nevertheless, the hon. member's motion suggests that disclosure ought to be accepted as a matter of principle. In our society, people increasingly wish to know what is happening. They want to make their decisions and cannot do so unless they have adequate information at their disposal.

The hon. member who spoke on behalf of the Conservative party had developed great zeal in supporting the Auditor General. That member attacked the government for allegedly trying to silence the Auditor General. He said that we must have disclosure of all government operations to make sure that absolutely nothing the government does is withheld from the public. And that is so. Why should only the government be scrutinized? Why should the private sector be free to do exactly as it pleases? After all, most economic activity in our society still rests with the private sector and not with the government. I suggest that it is incumbent on my hon. friends to show the same zeal for the disclosure of information relating to the private sector as they showed with regard to information relating to the public sector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Saltsman: After all, many people in our society are subject to scrutiny. For instance, we know how much teachers are paid, how much civil servants are paid and how much M.P.'s are paid. The salary of Members of Parliament can be a matter of public debate, as it ought to be.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is because they are paid by the public.

Mr. Saltsman: Indeed, why should others be excluded from scrutiny if Members of Parliament are not excluded? It seems that there is a double standard in these matters which is a carry-over from the view that business is entitled to a special niche. It is entitled to secrecy. There was a time when politicians were entitled to secrecy also; yet politicians make no claim to that secrecy now. They do not say their activities should not be scrutinized. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector also should not be entitled to claim secrecy in this respect. At the moment, a great deal of mystery surrounds the operations of business. I am quite sure that most business operations are quite straightforward and most businesses can probably defend their activities. Yet, so long as the mystery exists, the suspicion will also exist that business is trying to hide something and that there is some benefit to be gained from maintaining the mystery. If there is to be rapport between our business community, our society, and those services that operate outside the business community, I think it is important for us to know how business carries on its affairs.

Not long ago there was a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to look into the question of prices. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) served as the distinguished co-chairman of the committee. One of the committee's first decisions was whether there was to be public disclosure of information brought before it. A number of initial witnesses who appeared before it said, "Yes, we will tell you all sorts of things, but you must sit in camera". The committee decided that there would be no secrecy and that the information it requested would be made public. As a result of this decision something strange happened. Some businesses suffered, and they deserved to suffer because of their practices. But quite a number of businesses gained immeasurably, because the public became aware that they were acting in the public's interest as well as their own. Those firms found that disclosure brought enormous advantages.

It seems to me that those businesses that are worried about disclosure have a reason for being worried, whereas those that are conducting their business in a way that serves the public's interest as well as their own have nothing to fear and a great deal to gain for accepting the general principle of disclosure.

An hon. Member: What does Marcel say now?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Saltsman: The question of privacy is often raised. We have to be very careful in dealing with this question. We in this party have taken a very strong stand on personal privacy. We cannot go too far to protect the right of the individual to live his own life, without public scrutiny, providing it affects no one else. It is his own business. Even the matter of abortion, which is raised so often by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), deals with the question of privacy. We insist this must be a personal decision.

We must distinguish very carefully between privacy that affects only the individual and the privacy of corporations which affects all of us. The public has a right to know everything about those matters that affect us, whether they be related to governments or corporations. It is not idle curiosity to worry about our future. We want information as to how our future is going to be affected by decisions of public and private corporations. We have to be very clear in our distinction between the bedrooms of the nation and the boardrooms of the nation. There should be no secrecy attached to the operations in the boardrooms.

We in this society justifiably examine tax measures. No subject is so close to the hearts of people as the taxation policies of their legislators. Yet we forget that the private corporations, by their pricing and investment policies, in effect have taxation powers. The difference is simple. There is representation at the public level. It is possible to make some kind of a stand as to how one feels with regard to tax measures through his representative. What kind of representation do we have on the boards deciding the taxing and pricing policies of private and public corporations?

It may be argued that the marketplace disciplines them. If we were living in the 1700's or 1800's, I might agree that there is a tendency for the marketplace to discipline corporations with regard to pricing and other practices. The invisible hand may have been in evidence at that time. That is not so today. Today, through either monetary or patent rights, the corporations have the power to determine their own policies. If there is competition, it is a different kind than the traditional concept. Since business has what we in our party call the power to tax, the representatives of the people, and the people themselves, should have the power to investigate that power and the extent of that taxation.

The question has been raised by some hon. members as to what we want to know. They ask what we are trying to find out by this terribly vague resolution. The point was made that there is not even a standard for reporting this information. If there is going to be public disclosure, there must also be a standard for reporting those disclosures.

What do we want to know, Mr. Speaker? We want to know what the investments policies of these companies are going to be. We need to know whether their investment policies are good and whether they will create the greatest wealth and social benefit for our society. In a world of scarce resources, it is important that we know how efficient these companies are. From the viewpoint of public policy, it is important that we know whether there should be a tariff on a product and what sort of taxes should be placed on these companies. How valid are the arguments that are made against some of the approaches of government to these industries? It is very important that we know their pricing policies and practices. We already have some precedents for interfering, regardless of the size of the company, through the Combines Investigation Act.

It is of particular importance that we have this information because of the wide foreign ownership. What is the exact relationship between subsidiaries in Canada and the parent? We need more than the vague knowledge we now have on that point. It is important that we know when takeovers occur so that we do not need to call out the fire brigade, as was done recently with regard to the uranium industry. The waste in government is obvious. Any waste in government is exposed. We have a very diligent committee of this House and an Auditor General who is doing a good job. However, waste in the private sector is completely covered. There is a great deal of waste and it is important that it be uncovered. The public would be shocked to learn that the $15 million spent on refitting the Bonaventure is only small potatoes compared to the wasteful expenditures in the private sector.

In accordance with the agreement reached earlier, may I call it five o'clock and continue later?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Pursuant to order made earlier in this sitting, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely Notices of Motions (Papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TRADE

POTASH—REQUEST FOR CORRESPONDENCE ON SALE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence for the period January 1, 1968 to September 30, 1969, between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States regarding the sale of potash to the United States.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on December 3, 1969 I moved this motion which was placed on the Order Paper early in the session. At that time the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Forest) replied:

Mr. Speaker, the only correspondence that the government of Canada has had with the United States government refers to the procedures followed by the United States authorities in their anti-dumping investigation of Canadian potash exports. This exchange is continuing and in these circumstances the production of papers for the period in question would not be in the public interest.

He then asked if I would agree to withdraw this motion which, of course, I did not do. The first point I want to make is that if, in fact, the point of the government is solely that the termination date of my motion, September 30, 1969, produced a problem, I would be quite willing to entertain an amendment which would extend the date to a suitable date that might be suggested by the government. In this way, all of the correspondence involved, which would give the complete picture, could be made available to the public.

I wish to give my reasons for requesting this information. The first reason is that last fall the Premier of Saskatchewan undertook discussions with potash companies, and more particularly with the Governor of the State of New Mexico in the United States.

• (5:30 p.m.)

During the course of this discussion it was decided to establish quotas on potash production in Saskatchewan. As you know, sir, all the potash production in Canada at the present time is in Saskatchewan. Prices related to the quotas were established. In other words, a quota would be established for a company only if it honoured the price commitment which was made, namely, $18.75 per ton. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and any other federal agencies which might have been involved appeared to have come into the picture only at a late stage.

The minister confirmed that there had been discussions between Washington and the Canadian government and between the Canadian government and the Saskatchewan government, but he appeared to wish to keep silent about the nature of those discussions. I believe it is important to know what the Canadian government said in the United States about this matter and what exchanges took place. I appreciate that consent has to be obtained from the United States government before its correspondence can be tabled.

Saskatchewan says that it obtained a good deal—based, apparently, on a production level of between 50 per cent and 55 per cent of total capacity. The question is: Was this deal in the interests of the United States potash companies who have holdings both in Saskatchewan and in New Mexico? Were these United States potash companies the real gainers in this arrangement?

We are all, no doubt, familiar with the development of the potash industry in Saskatchewan. Two mines were started before 1962 and each encountered considerable technical difficulty because of water problems. Once this difficulty had been overcome, construction on three more mines began in 1963 and early 1964. But when the new Premier came to power he wanted to push industrial development in line with his election platform, with the result that over development occurred. New production capacity was developed before obtaining the necessary markets; in other words, the supply of potash was far ahead of the demand. This is an example of poor planning in an important new industry. When the Premier of Saskatchewan found he was in a box, he embarked upon the discussions to which I have referred and approved the deal involving quota and price.

When the potash companies appeared before the Finance Committee recently in connection with the white paper on taxation hearings they stated that $18.75, the price presently paid, was marginal in terms of present production levels based on the quotas established. They also stated that if the mines were in full production, unit costs would be much lower. I have heard it suggested that unit production costs might be as low as $11 or $12 a ton at full production level. It is plain that Saskatchewan could out-produce the United States in the production of potash and that we have a competitive advantage. It appears that many of the companies concerned have mines in Saskatchewan and in the United States. There is one German company in Saskatchewan and two Canadian companies; all the rest are United States companies. I believe all but one of those companies also have interests in New Mexico. These companies wish to protect their interests in the New Mexico mines.

Thus, there are a number of questions which need to be answered, and the information sought in this motion would be most helpful in this regard. First, was this a good deal for Saskatchewan? Second, did it protect New Mexico potash rather than Saskatchewan potash? Third, did the Premier of Saskatchewan overstep provincial jurisdiction in engaging in international negotiations on trade matters? Fourth, what representations did Canada make on this question? Fifth, what role did the United States corporations with interests in both Saskatchewan and New Mexico play in these arrangements? It seems to me there is a clear conflict here between the interest of these corporations and the interests of Canada, and in these circumstances I hope the government will see fit to accept the motion I moved on December 3.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak briefly on this motion in support of my hon. friend, believing it is important we should persuade the government to produce the papers and correspondence connected with this issue. A number of telling arguments in favour of doing so have been put forward by my hon. friend from Regina East (Mr. Burton), and I agree with them.

The biggest potash mine in Saskatchewan is located in my constituency near the town of Esterhazy. When a large-scale lay-off took place there last January or February, many people were wondering why potash production was slowing down. Many believed the decision to curtail activity was taken in the interest of the United States companies who wished a quota placed on Saskatchewan potash production because they had mines in New Mexico as well. Since so many people are affected in Saskatchewan, particularly in towns such as Esterhazy, I submit it is essential that the government disclose the correspondence involved. It would give those concerned an opportunity to find out the facts upon which decisions have been based and they would be in a better position to assess the future of the potash industry.

[Mr. Burton.]

The situation in Saskatchewan has produced a minor crisis, the effect of which has been to slow down the economy in towns such as Esterhazy. A large portion of the work force of the province is already unemployed—according to the April figures about 8.8 per cent of the non-agricultural work force is in this position—and one element of this total is, of course, the potash workers, many of whom had been employed until this year. Of course, as all members know, when there is a slowdown in any industry, the whole of the community is affected. This applies to other towns in Saskatchewan such as Largenburg and Churchbridge, to mention only two, where today one can see empty houses and apartments, and where small businesses are experiencing declining sales. This situation is due in part to decreased employment in the potash mines.

According to a statement by Premier Thatcher, the potash mines will be operating next year at a capacity of 42 per cent. The reference is to the next potash year which is from July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971. This leads me to think that the operation is not as efficient as it could be. Of course, the arrangement means that many people who were working in the mines will no longer be doing so. In a situation like this it is important that we should find out from the government the reasons which led these concerns to make a deal such as this.

Some of the planning which has gone on between the governments concerned had been very poor indeed. I recall that in the fall of 1968 the IMC plant at Esterhazy decided it would truck potash to the United States border instead of shipping it by rail as they had been doing. The reason for this was that Canadian National Railways would not agree with the company to ship potash by express, as the company wanted. They found it more economical to truck potash to the U.S. border and then load it on to U.S. trains for transportation to the market. As a result we have found that the railway workers in the area are afraid of losing their jobs because of the slowdown in rail transportation. At the present time the provincial government is planning to spend $6 million on maintaining the highway over which trucks carrying potash travel every day. And all this because the potash company could not reach agreement with CNR.

There are many other matters I could mention, but in view of the hour and because other members want to participate in the debate I will try and sum up my point very quickly. As I said, during the next year the mines will be operating at only 42 per cent capacity. This is a good indication that something is wrong and that the people of Saskatchewan need to hear about certain facts immediately. People living in these communities should be given as much information as possible about the future of potash mining in Saskatchewan, since many of them are buying homes, sending their children to school and planning to establish roots in the area.

If the government would let us have the correspondence for which we are asking, perhaps it would clarify the situation. Many people seem to think there is a conflict between the mining companies and the people of Saskatchewan. As my colleague for Regina East (Mr. Burton) mentioned, several of the mining companies operating in Saskatchewan also operate mines in New Mexico. It has been pointed out many times that the New Mexico mines are not as efficient as those in Saskatchewan and the supply of potash in New Mexico will probably be exhausted in a few years. Because of this the companies seem to have decided to mine potash in New Mexico rather than in Saskatchewan. If this is the case, I and the people of Saskatchewan want to know. Those who are directly affected want to be able to plan their future like Canadians in other parts of this country.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion moved by my colleague from Regina East (Mr. Burton) requesting the production of the exchanges, if any, between Canada and the United States concerning potash. I suspect there is very little, if anything, for the government to produce. It was the government of Saskatchewan that did the negotiating. The Premier of that province, acting like an Arab sheik in an oil kingdom, dealt with the governor of one of the states of the U.S.A. and these two gentlemen carried on what was, I submit, the business of the government of Canada and the government of the United States.

We want to know what representations the federal government made to the United States or what discussions were held in regard to the proposed threat to impose tariffs on Canadian exports of potash. I strongly suspect that if this tariff threat was made by the governor of New Mexico and was put before the United States trade commission, it was more bluff than a threat. If the Premier of Saskatchewan had chosen to make a common cause with the governors, senators and congressmen of 10 to 15 farming states on holding down the price of fertilizer, I submit there would be no likelihood of any attempt being made to impose tariffs on Canadian potash. In fact, I submit any such attempt would have failed.

What happened was the Premier of Saskatchewan and the governor of New Mexico chose to work out a deal between themselves. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) had egg on his face. He knew he was being imposed upon by the Premier of Saskatchewan. The Premier of Saskatchewan and the governor of New Mexico decided to come to a cosy arrangement between themselves, the benefits of which went to a few corporations that owned potash mines in both New Mexico and Saskatchewan. I should like to know what happened to the study made by the justice department as to the legality of this affair, a matter that is obviously within the jurisdiction of the government of Canada. In this regard I should like to read a short excerpt from the Ottawa Citizen of November 22 last, which carried a report on the study made by the justice department and about which we have heard no more. The article reads, in part:

> The regulations, which follow negotiations between Premier Ross Thatcher and the New Mexico governor...would limit production from Saskatchewan potash mines and...exercise some control over exports—

According to the article, it would also control the price of the exported commodity. The Premier of Saskatchewan pointed out that this sort of thing had been done by the government of Alberta in regard to oil. But this was strictly for the purpose of conservation; nobody could suggest for one moment that this was the purpose of the production controls in Saskatchewan.

The article continues:

> —the agreement between the New Mexico and Saskatchewan that led to the Saskatchewan regulations was the answer to a prayer for New Mexico's Carlsbad-based potash industries—

These were worn out, in course of being phased out and in no way could compete with Saskatchewan production as to price or as to quality. This was a neat arrangement to bail out corporations which had mines in both places, at the expense of Saskatchewan production and Saskatchewan employment. Prorationing of production in Saskatchewan is nothing more nor less than export control. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce refused to exercise its jurisdiction and allowed the Premier of a province to assert that responsibility which the federal government chose not to accept. Setting a minimum price of $18.75 a ton, which it is now suggested should be raised to $22.75 a ton, was again controlling the price of an export commodity. The people of Canada, and particularly the people of Saskatchewan, want to know what the federal government did on their behalf in a matter that was absolutely and completely within its jurisdiction.

I submit that if the government fails to produce these papers and to give us this information, it is in fact admitting either that it did nothing in the matter or it agreed to something that was not in the interest of Canadians, particularly in Saskatchewan, but was in the interest of the corporations which owned the potash mines. Therefore, I submit the government was party to this cosy little deal between the Premier of Saskatchewan and the governor of New Mexico. Even though the federal government failed to prevent the government of Saskatchewan from acting in a matter not within its jurisdiction, I hope the government will indicate that it did make some representations on behalf of Canada.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, I should have thought he was speaking about the Premier of Newfoundland. I have not heard the Premier of Saskatchewan condemned in such a blatant way for a long time—in fact, ever.

Mr. Benjamin: I do it every day.

Mr. Otto: The issue here does not relate to industry in Saskatchewan, be it the mining industry, the forest industry, the potash industry, or whatever it may be. The issue is whether the government should make public correspondence, research or studies passing between the United States government and the government of Canada. I realize we have participatory democracy, but there is a limit even to participatory democracy. If this motion were carried and production of these papers ordered, it would mean that hon. gentlemen opposite would have the right to decide whether the government acted or did not act in a certain set of circumstances. If the House were doing this on every issue and in respect of every bit of correspondence—

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Benjamin: They have already done it.

Mr. Otto: As the hon. gentleman said, they have already done it. The opportunity exists. The estimates are before the House and the committees and at any time hon. gentlemen opposite are welcome to point out to a minister that he has not exercised his proper, judicial function or that he has not made the correct decision. I have done this myself on many occasions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In order that we may not become involved in difficulties later, I wonder whether it might be understood that if my hon. friend from York East (Mr. Otto) is interrupted by a certain knock on the door, this motion could retain its position on the list of motions for papers.

Mr. Forest: That is the agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it so agreed?

Mr. Otto: It is so agreed. I believe the knock has already come. This is the shortest speech I have ever made.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that His Excellency the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting Brunner Corporation (Canada) Limited

An act to amend the Criminal Code

An act respecting the expropriation of land

An act to incorporate National Farmers Union

An act to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act

An act to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences and have subsequently rehabilitated themselves

An act to amend the Supreme Court Act

An act to amend the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

TABLING OF LETTER FROM MINISTER OF FINANCE TO CHAIRMAN OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have your indulgence to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling a document under Standing Order 41 (2).

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gray: I should like to table at this time copies in English and in French of a letter from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to the chairman of the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which was sent to him today.

At 6.07 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Motion No. 7 (Mr. Burton).

Mr. Saltsman: In my earlier remarks, Mr. Speaker, I was pointing out that a great deal of waste occurs in the private sector and passes unnoticed because we assume that the private sector has the right to keep its business to itself. We fail to take into consideration the fact that waste, whether it occurs in the public or the private sector, affects every citizen of the country because it ultimately reduces his standard of living and has the same effect as the imposition of an additional tax.

The business organizations that appeared before the committee took the position that disclosure was a very bad thing, that it was sheer idle curiosity on the part of those who wished fuller disclosure. Businessmen should realize that disclosure may not be a bad thing and that in many cases it may be of considerable benefit to them. We have to assume that most businessmen do not like waste any more than do parliamentarians, and that they would like to avoid many of the difficulties which result from business operating blindly.

I say this without tongue in cheek because I have seen many businesses suffer because they did not have prior knowledge of their competitor's activities. If they had had prior knowledge of their competitors' intentions everybody, including the public, would have been better off. I have seen shopping centres being opened when negotiations were going on for another shipping centre in the same area, with the result that nobody could recover their capital investment and eventually they all had to raise prices to try and recover overheads and capital investment. There is no profit for anybody in this situation and the government does not receive the taxes it would like to have. The public does not get the benefit of lower prices, either.

Perhaps the most glaring example of mismanagement, lack of investigation and lack of prior knowledge of business transactions is the potash industry of western Canada. In that case everybody rushed in to develop. They overdeveloped, with government incentives, until it reached the point where nobody could recover their investment. The government is suffering as a result. They have had to prorate production and reallocate the industry because of its failure to regulate itself. The market is not very effective, particularly when business has to plan and make commitments over a long period of time.

The recess gave me an opportunity to obtain a newspaper clipping which I think illustrates that lack of knowledge contributes to business inefficiency and business losses. This article is from the Globe and Mail of October 25, 1967, and reads in part as follows:

> He quoted the example of a company that built a $5 million chemical plant in Montreal. The day they got it in operation a competitor announced a new process for making the same chemical at double the productivity and half the cost.

Disclosure will not solve that problem. Having more frankness and a greater awareness of what people in society are doing should benefit everyone. Like MPs, businessmen will find that disclosure does not hurt very much once one gets used to the idea. When businessmen talk about keeping things close to their vest, one would think there were great secrets in business. There is no secrecy in business, in my experience. Very often competitors know almost exactly what their opposite numbers are doing in certain fields, except in the area mentioned earlier where they really manage to keep it a secret.

Industrial spies garner secrets. Travelling salesmen go around and manage to catch a few words here and there. Employees have a way of telling secrets. In addition, there are official agencies which exist simply to supply information to other people. The group that knows the least is not the businessman's competitor but the public. It is the public we are concerned about in this debate; it is the public that ought to know about these activities.

The other day an interesting little blue book was sent to our offices from the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. It is entitled, "Business Forms". It tells an interesting story about those who manufacture business forms in Canada. These people have no secrets from one another. They have formed a little club and have appointed an executive secretary. They even tell each other what they sell, how much they sell it for, and to whom. But the public does not know about this. The minister may say, "That is exactly why we have a Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. It must find out these things".

Instead of playing cops and robbers in order to find out what is going on, would it not be better if we asked these people to lay everything on the line? They may have good reason for carrying on as they do. I do not want to pass judgment on them at the moment; that is not my job. Unless there are good reasons for not doing so, the kind of activity that has been carried on in secrecy should be exposed. Is it not far better for companies to expose their operations than run the great risk of arousing suspicion in the public mind and be chased all the time by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission which wishes to find out how honest their operations are, to what extent they are competing and whether, so to speak, they are holding hands?

Another question that has been raised is this: What is the point of asking for disclosure at the federal level when so few companies in Canada come under federal jurisdiction, and when there is no agreement with the provinces under whose jurisdiction such companies are incorporated? If we examine our laws I think we will find that almost every worth-while piece of legislation has been introduced at the federal level. If there is public acceptance of the legislation, as I think there will be of this legislation relating to full disclosure, it is not long before the provinces pass similar laws. On other occasions provinces have introduced good legislation and the federal government has followed suit. I believe this is good legislation. I think the minister himself believes that disclosure is good. After all, he fought very hard for the minor changes which appear in this bill. We are asking the minister to recognize the importance of the principle and to go all the way.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate may I say that I find the bill complex and somewhat difficult to understand. I have serious doubt whether it will do what it is intended to do. I would feel much happier about this portion of the bill we are discussing if I could be sure that the position the government has taken with regard to disclosure will bring about the desired effect.

Bill C-198 of the previous session died on the Order Paper and was replaced by the bill we are discussing. I should like to refer to a press release which is mentioned in a brief which the Parkin Company presented to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It speaks of a press release concerning Bill C-198, issued by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) on May 22, 1969. The press release states in part:

> The disclosure amendments also constitute the government's first legislative action in an area commented upon by the Watkins Committee on Foreign Ownership and the Structure of Canadian Industry. 'This will meet the concern about how hard it is to get information about important private companies, particularly those which are wholly owned by foreign companies,' Mr. Basford said. 'There is no question of discrimination against foreign-owned companies, however, since we have decided it is in the public interest to have public disclosure by all federally-incorporated companies which are significant to the economy.'

Another memorandum released by the Department of Corporate and Consumer Affairs on May 22, 1969, said the following about section 121E of Bill C-198 of the previous session:

> This section makes the financial statements of companies to which paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection 121E(3) apply (public companies and companies having gross revenues or assets in excess of $3 million) accessible to the public. It is enacted in recognition of the fact that the existing definition of public company ... is totally unrealistic in Canada today. This is so because many of the most important companies in Canada are 'private' subsidiaries of foreign companies. New section 121 sets out a better test for distinguishing between those companies which are 'economically significant' (and whose financial affairs are therefore a matter of legitimate public interest) and those companies which are truly 'private'. This reflects, at the federal level, the public disclosure recommendations of the Watkins Committee on the Structure of Canadian Industry and the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Prices.

It is not clear from this memorandum whether the government is looking into the question of foreign ownership in Canada or into private companies which practice non-disclosure. If it is thought desirable to control or classify the problem of foreign ownership in Canadian companies, it might be better to approach this matter in a different way. For instance, any company which is foreign-owned above a specified degree could be required to make public disclosure. We already do this in commerce, communications, broadcasting and finance. This is a requirement under the investment companies act.

Companies operating in the fields I have mentioned must limit their degree of foreign ownership. On the other hand, if it is desired to bring about wider disclosure by private companies which are subsidiaries of large public companies, it may be better to pass legislation specifying such disclosure. To some extent the problem could be solved this way. In addition to mentioning the problem of foreign ownership, the Watkins task force said in its report:

It is a prerequisite to public discussion of government policy and the formulation and implementation of actual policy that more information be available on the activities of corporations, particularly large corporations, both Canadian owned and foreign owned.

The Watkins task force defined the three distinct purposes for which corporate information is needed. They are, public disclosure, economic analysis and government surveillance. The Watkins task force, at page 185 of its report, said that corporate information for the purpose of economic analysis was "generally very good." On the other hand, it concluded that information for the purpose of surveillance was "inadequate" and information for the purpose of public disclosure was "grossly inadequate". What does this mean? If the amount of corporate information is good enough for purposes of economic analysis, what more could be required? It is in this area that the bill leaves something to be desired.

The thread running through the testimony of witnesses appearing before the Finance Committee was that public disclosure by small companies would be damaging competitively. Large companies found, on the whole, no real difficulty and felt there would be no competitive disadvantage as a result of public disclosure. On the other hand, some companies at the lower level of the economic scale felt that they would be at a serious disadvantage if there were public disclosure. For this reason the minister has broadened the criteria for public disclosure. I agree with this. Canada has many small corporations, as is disclosed by the white paper. Public disclosure may work great hardship in this area. Mr. Watkins observed this deficiency. Page 357 of the Watkins Committee report reads in part:

• (8:20 p.m.)

For the purposes of economic analysis, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics must collect and analyse data made available by corporations on a confidential basis and published in aggregative form which does not permit identification of individual companies. For purposes of surveillance, relevant government departments and agencies must collect and use data on individual companies on a confidential basis.

If it is decided that it is necessary for the government to survey businesses and companies, then it is logical to use the approach that data can be collected on a confidential basis at a much lower level than is contemplated in this bill. If it is necessary for the government to survey and chart its financial course, it would be much more complete. Much of our business is already at a level below that set in the legislation.

In industry comprised of many small companies the total information is as complete as if the field were held by one large corporation. The provinces do not have this legislation, so there is little point at this time in the federal government's requiring federally-incorporated companies to make public disclosure. Witness after witness who appeared before the committee indicated that in the future, because of the present legislation, companies will elect to be incorporated as provincial entities. On that basis, this portion of the legislation will be an empty shell. It will not be effective and it will not be acceptable to the business community.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the other members of our group who are very much in favour of these disclosure provisions. I know that for a long time the minister has been in favour of such provisions. There was a good deal of discussion this afternoon regarding the type of disclosure required. I wish to make one further suggestion. As far as the public are concerned, there are certain types of disclosure which go beyond what is being proposed. This is good.

This afternoon I received several letters from my constituency. They are a form type of letter. A certain firm is being transferred to the United States. The people who are losing their jobs are very concerned about this. The public, particularly those who are employed or are likely to be employed in industries, have a right to know on what basis these companies are being moved and whether there is a need for the move. They should be informed of the plans of this industry. I wish to read one letter. Copies were sent to me by several employees, including a die-maker and a welder. The letter reads:

> Power Machinery, engaged in the manufacture of chain saws for 25 years, was purchased by the Chicago-based Skil corporation in July, 1968.
> Skil corporation plans to move the operation to Chicago; one hundred and twenty-five employees will be out of work and business will be lost for local suppliers. Another secondary industry, so sorely needed in the area, will be gone.
> A local consortium, who felt that movement of the plant was not in the best interest of the company or B.C., was put together by management personnel of Power Machinery after officials of the parent company, Skil, announced plans to shut down the operation and shift production machinery to Chicago. Financial backing for the consortium was available.
> Negotiations have broken off and Skil corporation has restated that the operation will be phased out in three to six months.
> I ask, in the interest of retaining secondary industry and employment in Canada, that you raise this matter in the House of Commons.

I raise the matter now. The minister appreciates the situation in British Columbia in general, and in Vancouver in particular. If this company is transferred, 125 employees will be unemployed. Their families will be without income. The various suppliers will be depressed as a result of the industry being moved. I know the minister feels this will be a danger spot if it happens in Vancouver.

We in British Columbia are most anxious to build secondary industries. Without any warning or public disclosure, this firm has suddenly announced that it is transferring to Chicago. The employees will be out of work. There will be all the attendant evils for their families and the suppliers of this firm. A local consortium was prepared to invest the money necessary to keep this firm in Vancouver. Those negotiations have now broken off. The company has stated that the operation will be phased out in three to six months. This action should not be permitted without some type of disclosure as to why it is necessary to deprive these 125 people of Vancouver and their families of this form of employment, particularly at this time when there is such a high level of unemployment in that city.

When the minister is replying, I ask him to take a few minutes to state whether he knows anything about this situation, and to tell us what can be done. These people are appealing to the government, the minister and their elected representative to see if anything can be done about the situation. I know that the proposed disclosure provisions will not solve this sort of problem, but it is the responsibility of the government to ensure that such firms are not moved away without explanation in view of the loss of employment and wages which is entailed.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, a number of members have used the occasion of this debate on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) to discuss the general principle of public disclosure by private and public companies of economic significance. I do not want to discuss that part of the question at any great length. The principles of greater corporate disclosure were decided when this House gave second reading to Bill C-4 which is now before the House. This subject was dealt with exhaustively in 19 committee meetings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

I want to deal with the amendment and some of its specific recommendations which I oppose. I say to the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) that I appreciate his position and am sympathetic to it. However, we have been talking in this country for many years about the need for greater disclosure by corporations and about the need to provide that companies of economic significance should make certain information available. Here at least the government is making a beginning, and I hope the bill will be passed as quickly as possible in order that we can open the door to a greater degree of corporate disclosure.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I would remind the House that this bill was first introduced in May of 1969. It was reintroduced in October, 1969. We are now in the month of June, 1970, and it is still not the law of the land and it still has to be approved by the members of the other place. I would say to the hon. member for Don Valley that here we are at least adopting the principle that private companies of economic significance should disclose as public companies do.

I am hopeful that provincial governments will follow the lead which the federal government has set. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) touched upon this aspect of the matter and I agree with his remarks in that respect. Of course, if what I have suggested does not happen we shall have to consider other measures to ensure that the principle of corporate disclosure becomes applicable in the years ahead not only to federal companies but to all companies incorporated under provincial acts.

I listened to the two hon. members who spoke for the official opposition, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). I became somewhat confused when I listened to the spokesmen for the Conservative Party on this issue. I do not want to re-debate the whole principle of corporate disclosure, but I was confused when I listened to them because they opposed it on second reading, they opposed it in committee and they are opposing it tonight. I only wish that the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Dauphin would consult with their leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) who said as recently as last April:

> There is also the problem of getting adequate disclosure of information. At the moment, Canadian disclosure requirements are among the lowest in the world.

Here we are trying to improve disclosure laws in Canada, as I take it the Leader of the Opposition was advocating in April, while his minions from Edmonton West and Dauphin are opposing what he is trying to do.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am no minion.

Mr. Basford: I have great difficulty figuring out just where the Conservative party stands on this issue. To deal with the substance of Motion No. 7 moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), it is an amendment which in no circumstances can the government accept. Bill C-4 provides that private companies with assets of $5 million or sales exceeding $1 million shall file annual returns with the companies branch of my department, and that those returns shall be open to the public and treated in the same way as annual returns from public companies. The amendment before us would provide that all private companies, no matter of what size, would have to follow the same procedure and be regarded as public companies. All their returns would be made public.

There are two objections to this proposal. First, it would mean that all sorts of very small and insignificant companies would be obliged to go to the expense and trouble of making an annual return—and for no conceivable purpose. I fail to see any merit or wisdom whatever in requiring small private companies to do this. If we believe, as I do, that private companies of economic significance should disclose in the same way as public companies, there is surely not much point in saying that small private companies having capital of $50,000 or $100,000 should go through all the operations required of a public company. That suggestion makes no sense whatsoever.

The amendment provides that the minister may exempt a company from this requirement on an individual basis, upon application. But this would involve the minister, who at this particular time is myself, dealing with some 15,000 applications a year from private companies with assets of less than $5 million. All of them would, I am sure, apply to me for an exemption. This, in itself, would amount to a very large administrative task and one which would produce absolutely no benefit, though it might well cost the taxpayers a great deal.

Then again, the trend for some years has surely been away from the granting of ministerial power of discretion. I have listened many times to members of the opposition advocate that the power of ministerial discretion should be curtailed. Yet here we find the New Democratic Party seeking to give me discretion to decide whether or not some 15,000 companies should publicly disclose particulars of their operations. This is not the kind of discretion I want, and it is certainly not the kind of discretion a minister should have.

Surely, as in this case, we should write good laws which are progressive and modern. Equally, the corporate community, the legal profession and the accountancy profession are entitled to know with some certainty what the law is. If the amendment were adopted, no one would know whether a company would have to disclose or not. One year the minister might permit an exemption, the next year he might not. Ought we not try, as the government has sought to do in Bill C-4, to write some rules which are fairly certain and easy of interpretation, so that companies would know whether they have to disclose or not? The amendment before us destroys that certainty and makes it impossible for companies to know where they stand. For these reasons I must oppose it.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that ministerial discretion could be exercised by dealing with some of the cases to which he referred by way of general rules which would apply unless there was a specific case where a different situation prevailed? Second, cannot a distinction be drawn between ministerial discretion which is exercised with public knowledge and the exercise of discretion which cannot become public knowledge, when the public does not know that discretion is being exercised?

Mr. Basford: I suppose it would be possible for the minister to pronounce some rules by which he would be guided, but whether he did so or not these rules would be made purely at his own discretion and this is what we are trying to avoid. If the hon. member feels that rules should be pronounced, does he not think they should be provided for in the legislation so that people would have the benefit of knowing what the law says? I do not think the suggestion contained in the hon. member's question is really very practical.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the minister has made a great point about ministerial discretion, but surely this is within the capacity of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He often makes decisions on specific questions which are referred to him. For example, just recently he made a decision in regard to drugs. I do not think this power is specifically spelled out in any legislation, but it does seem to me that virtually everything the minister has done in this connection in recent times has been through the exercise of discretion.

[Mr. Basford.]

Would the minister not agree that we also gave this ministerial discretion to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) in order to free him from the rigidity of rules that had not worked and with regard to which people had fallen between stools? The minister would have to answer to Parliament for the exercise of his discretion, and this would be very desirable because we could then scrutinize his activities and he would have to be responsible for his acts.

Mr. Basford: I think that the rules applicable to whether or not a company should disclose, and what kind of annual statements and returns it should prepare, should be spelled out in the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my view the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the motion No. 7 stands deferred.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

That Bill C-4, an act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended by deleting in clause 20

(a) line 16, page 62, the words "every company" and substituting therefor "every public company"

(b) subparagraphs (3) (4) (5) of section 121E, being lines 32 to 44 inclusive, page 62, lines 1 to 43 inclusive, page 63, and lines 1 to 18 inclusive, page 64.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this amendment, I do not intend to repeat the remarks I made when discussing the motion moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). However, I am following up the remarks I made on that occasion with the proposal that the disclosure called for in this bill shall be limited to what it is in the present law; in other words, it will be applicable to public companies.

I have given a number of reasons for contending that disclosure of the information requested in the government's amendment is not worth a fig. I was absolutely astounded at the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), who felt that by reason of such disclosure at this time the situation of the people on whose behalf she was making representations would be affected. I contend their situation would not be affected one iota. It would not affect the filing of an annual balance sheet, a profit and loss statement, a source and application of funds statement and a few other pieces of information. That is not disclosure.

I have no qualms at all when the minister tries to nit-pick some remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on the subject of disclosure. I agree that many matters in the bill relating to disclosure are important, though this is not disclosure of the kind of thing we are talking about now. The Leader of the Opposition was talking about meaningful disclosure in respect to such matters as takeover bids. Let us talk about insider trading, but not of the kind that is meant here. True enough, lip service is paid to the principle of greater disclosure in regard to insider trading, but frankly this is a dead letter from the word go.

Again, this is an attempt at substitution for what would be a meaningful national securities commission act. It is a stock exchange operation. It is like reporting cases of insider trading to the Ontario Securities Commission on a regular basis, such instances being published in the financial papers so everyone is aware of them. Here it will be filed in company files. A news reporter will have to call on the directors of corporations and comb through the company files to see whether there has been any declaration of insider trading, and he will pay $1 for each search. Is that meaningful disclosure? There is no power under the act to authorize the director of a corporation to maintain a running record of insider trading. Not only that, he is not empowered to do it nor is he authorized to disclose it. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) feels there is a great deal of merit in this sort of disclosure, but I say that if its purpose is meaningful disclosure, I think frankly it is a sham.

The minister has stated that he has maintained a meaningful dialogue with the provinces. In 18 months he has not talked to the provinces about a national securities commission. He has not done so because of some stupid and wrong-headed ideas—I do not know whose they are—as to who will control a national securities commission and where it will be located. The minister has made much of this bill. It was first introduced in 1968, I think in May, in the other place. We are now in June, 1970, and the bill still is not law. And I should hope not, Mr. Speaker; the Senate kicked the stuffing out of the original bill because it was such a bad bill.

Mr. Basford: The bill started here, not in the Senate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The bill was brought in last October, but it remained on the Order Paper and was not called by the government. Ultimately it was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which organized public hearings. As I have indicated, some 17 organizations and individuals appeared before the committee to comment upon it. Let me tell the House just how good a bill it was. As a result of these comments, 39 printed pages of amendments were introduced by the government during the committee hearings, completely altering some of the features of the bill. Even the five-ten formula was changed as a result of the representations made before the committee. Some sections of the bill are unrecognizable when compared with the original sections.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the original bill had 106 printed pages. The amendments totalled 39 printed pages. Therefore, over one-third of the bill went into the wastebasket. On that basis, I do not believe it is a good bill. Tonight we will be asked to vote on three small, inconsequential amendments which were the result of poor drafting by the government. I maintain that we are talking about disclosure for a mere 375 companies. That is the number of companies that will be caught by the government's amendment—375 companies out of a total of 1,500 private companies under federal registration.

We will be asking these companies to file a balance-sheet not of a uniform nature. We will be asking them to file a profit and loss statement not of a uniform nature, a performance fund statement not of a uniform nature, as well as some additional information depending on how the information is filed. We are not introducing disclosure to protect the public, because the public will not be offered the shares of these companies; the public cannot invest in them.

We are to examine these companies, and there is no way to collect the information except by a one-by-one file search of apples, oranges, grapes and bananas. Yet it is suggested that we will obtain meaningful information and meaningful conclusions. Let us not make a joke of this matter. The hon. member for Don Valley indicated that there is not a solicitor worth his salt who would advise a company or an individual wanting to incorporate as a private company to come under federal jurisdiction. It would be much easier to go to Toronto or British Columbia. If one wishes to operate in one of the other provinces, one registers under the general provisions of the Companies Act of the province. This completely defeats the purpose of the disclosure set out in this bill: it can be ignored. All this measure will do is drive more and more companies away from registering under the federal act. The arguments of the hon. member for Don Valley are unanswerable in so far as the future effect is concerned in respect of registration of those companies under the minister's control. In other words, the minister will have disclosure on a diminishing basis.

There is no guarantee that the provinces will follow the federal lead. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is a safe bet that the province of Ontario will not follow because this is a half-hearted—it is not even half-hearted but, rather, one-tenth hearted—attempt to have a substitute for a national securities commission. If the minister really wants to do something, let him get down to meaningful discussion with the provinces to establish on a co-operative basis a national securities commission. Then he will obtain all the disclosure he wants from the public companies. If he wants information of a certain kind from private companies which conduct business in excess of $250,000 in a year, let him come in with amendments to COLURA. If he wants statistical information, that is how to obtain it, because it is filed on a statistical basis and can be collected and collated by somebody who understands something about statistics. In that way meaningful conclusions can be reached.

Mr. Speaker, it is a joke to think that someone could go through the files of the directors of corporations, look at the various balance-sheets and profit and loss statements of 375 private companies and come up with meaningful conclusions. It is for this reason I have moved the amendment. To me this practice would be discriminatory of private companies operating under federal charter. I should like the minister to restore this measure to what it was. If the minister wishes to do something meaningful in respect of disclosure, I suggest that he proceed on a positive basis along the lines I have indicated with regard to either a national securities commission or amendments to COLURA.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, the whole question of greater public disclosure by private companies was dealt with exhaustively by this House at the second reading stage and during the 19 meetings of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, where the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised all the points he raised tonight, all of which were answered in the committee to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Ho, ho!

Mr. Basford: During the committee proceedings the hon. member was unable to persuade either myself or many of the members of the committee concerning the merits of his case. We can state our case only so many times. Quite obviously the hon. member for Edmonton West, in spite of what his leader said, will not be persuaded that this is a good development. Quite obviously, also, the hon. member for Edmonton West was unable to convince members of the committee and will be unable to convince members of the House of the merits of his case.

The matter has been dealt with exhaustively and thoroughly on many occasions. I am sure that whatever I might say tonight would not persuade the hon. member for Edmonton West. All I can say is that many authoritative studies in Canada have shown the need to have companies of economic significance in this country disclose their affairs as provided for in Bill C-4. I believe the case in this regard was made out in the House this afternoon by members who have spoken. I also believe the case has been made out by the Porter Commission, by the joint committee of the House and Senate, by the task force on the structure of Canadian industry, by commentators and some financial analysts. So I believe the case is there. Obviously, we will not persuade the hon. member for Edmonton West that the case has been made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the amendment please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my view the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-4, an act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended by striking out line 1 on page 79 thereof and by substituting therefore the following:

"(c) sections 18 to 21, subsection (2) and paragraph (b) of subsection (3) of section 22, sections 24 to"

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to the text of section 147 of the Canada Corporations Act which in error was dropped out of the text of the new section as printed in Bill C-4. The purpose of this amendment has been explained to the hon. member for Edmonton West. We are agreed on this matter. The reinsertion of the reference to section 22 of the act in section 147 will allow corporations incorporated under part II of the Canada Corporations Act to use as their legal designation either the English or the French form of their corporate name. This has been the law and, as I said, it was left out by inadvertence and error in reprinting. Allowing companies to do this is a matter of convenient practice and there is no reason to put an end to it, as the error would have us do. Therefore, we are reinserting the reference to section 22 so that companies may use their name in either French or English.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Basford) agreed to.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-4, an act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended by striking out lines 19 and 20 on page 96 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"(ii) letters patent issued under section 5A or 5D of the Canada Corporations".

He said: I have also explained this amendment to hon. members and I think there is agreement to it. However, I would like to explain the amendment, for the record. The amendment is to correct an oversight. This matter was left out of the bill when it was before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I would like to explain briefly why we are proposing this amendment to clause 30 of the bill, which provides for a consequential amendment to the National Energy Board Act in its definition of "special act".

Section 25 (1) of the National Energy Board Act provides that "no person other than a company shall construct or operate a pipeline". Section 2C of the act in its present form defines a company as a person having authority under a special act to construct or operate pipelines. Clause 30 of Bill C-4 which is now before the House extends the definition of "special act" to include letters patent issued under section 5A of the Canada Corporations Act.

There is a possibility that the National Energy Board Act provisions as amended by Bill C-4 would be interpreted in such a way that a company now incorporated by special act of Parliament which chooses to take advantage of the new section 5D, and is continued under the Canada Corporations Act, might not qualify under section 25 (1) of the National Energy Board Act as a company authorized to construct or operate a pipeline. This, of course, is not at all what the legislation intends and in order to remove the possibility of misinterpretation I propose an amendment whereby the words "or 5D" be inserted in the definition of "special act" in clause 30 of Bill C-4. A company continued by letters patent under section 5D would then clearly be, by definition, a company within the meaning of the National Energy Board Act and there would be no question of its power to construct or operate a pipeline. This is a somewhat technical amendment which I am sure will have the concurrence of all members of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. Basford) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): This concludes the consideration of all motions at the report stage except deferred Motion No. 7.

Division

The question is now on Motion No. 7, moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), as follows:

That Bill C-4, an act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be amended by striking out in clause 20, paragraph (b) of subsection (3) on pages 62-63 and substituting the following:

"(b) A private company except as provided in paragraphs (c) and (d);

(c) section (b) does not apply to a private company that is a personal corporation within the meaning of section 68 of the Income Tax Act in the whole of the year in respect of which a financial statement is required by this Act;

(d) the minister having regard to the public interest may grant an exemption to a private company if revenue does not exceed ten million dollars in any period ending in or after the year in which this section comes into force, in respect of which a financial statement is required by this act to be prepared, or whose total assets on the last day of any such period do not exceed five million dollars".

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost. When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, should we not deal with the report stage first?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Basford moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to say only a few words about those features of the bill of which we approve. There are a number of them. As I have already indicated, a great number of changes were made in this bill at the committee stage. These changes greatly improve the bill. In many sections the bill is barely recognizable. I am sure all members appreciate the greater flexibility in incorporating federal companies and the alternative method of amending companies which have a federal charter from this House. I think that is a big improvement.

With regard to disclosure, there is certainly a vast improvement on takeover bids. Those persons or organizations taking over a federal company now have to pay the same price to all shareholders of the company, not just the majority of shareholders, leaving the small shareholders high and dry with 10 per cent or 15 per cent and at the mercy of the takeover principle. I am having a tough time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Can we have quiet in the chamber.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There are also improved conditions with regard to the solicitation of proxies. The changes in the act are more in keeping with the representations of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. The act is improved to that extent. My complaints about what the minister calls disclosure by private companies certainly were not argued during the 19 committee meetings. The minister was not there. Outside of two or three minor witnesses, everyone was against the features that the minister indicated. Quite frankly, some of them will be in a difficult position. They would get out of their federal registration if it were not for the difficulties with regard to taxation; there is no doubt about that. I say to the minister and to those members who are solicitors that clients will not be advised to incorporate private companies under federal charter.

There are many improvements in this bill. It was good that the bill was before the committee. We spent many long sessions on it. I think the committee members should express their appreciation to those members of the public, associations and companies who made many constructive suggestions which were accepted by the minister. This is an important bill and I am glad it received the treatment it did. But the minister retreated on one point. Frankly, we think he spoiled a good deal of the bill by the limits he imposed on disclosures of private companies. This bill is not so good because of that action.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, we find it very difficult to understand, with the takeover of Canada by international corporations, why a Corporations Act should be introduced that does not take this serious problem into consideration. We find this bill most unsatisfactory. The fact that it cleans up a few minor matters relating to takeover and proxy voting does not commend it, in light of the problems facing this country. We hoped the minister would do the same with the Corporations Act as was done with the Bank Act, namely, limit foreign ownership to 25 per cent and include a clause that would provide some exceptions.

We should change the assumption which has been made so far about foreign ownership and which has led us into our present situation, namely, that all foreign investment, no matter how it behaves, is good. That assumption should no longer be made. There may be cases where foreign investment would be valuable to Canada, and opportunities should be available for a case to be made; but from now on the assumption should be that there has been too much foreign investment and a halt must be called. If we do not do that, the question of disclosure by corporations, proxy voting, and so on, will become the least of our considerations. This is our objection to the bill as it stands.

There is another objection related to the disclosure provisions but, as I say, our principal objection is that the bill fails to deal with the serious problem of foreign ownership. One of the less desirable features of foreign ownership is that decisions are not made in this country; that laws made in other countries intrude into Canadian affairs, making it difficult to take certain actions. Then again, we do not know to what extent research is being carried out abroad at the expense of research which would otherwise be carried out here.

If the present situation continues to develop, this country will be deprived of the ingredients necessary to our continuance as a nation. We have recognized already the serious danger which exists in connection with specific fields such as banking and financial institutions generally, newspapers and television. It is important, while we are debating the Corporations Act, to point out the need for enacting similar provisions with regard to all corporations in Canada. Nobody wants to be faced every month or so with the need to take emergency, fire brigade action, action of the kind which faced us when we had to step in to prevent control of the uranium industry passing out of Canadian hands. People are now talking about the development of a computer industry in Canada and there is a danger that this industry, too, may slip away from Canadian control, meaning that an essential ingredient of our future development may be lost. It seems to us it would be better to pass legislation which would inform foreign investors of the position this country takes with regard to certain industries and give the minister authority to prevent takeovers by foreign corporations.

There are some who talk about foreign ownership in Canada as a form of twentieth century imperialism, and the term is really not too far out. Foreign corporations are making familiar arguments about their civilizing influence, the role they play in increasing wealth and improving technology; they are carrying the modern-day white man's burden even when the people resent the kind of intrusion into their affairs which takes place when a foreign corporation moves in. The central issue for most societies, not only for Canadian society, is the extent to which they will be able to exercise control over their own future, the extent to which they will be able to make their own decisions.

Having said this about ownership, I should make it clear that a simple change of ownership would not in itself solve the problems facing Canada. Domestic ownership can be just as unthinking and unfeeling about the future of the country as foreign ownership. But at some stage, as a necessary first step we shall have to call a halt to this taking over of the country, if only to enable us to determine our own future. For these reasons we find this legislation to be inadequate. The meagre changes which have been introduced are not satisfactory, and the government has lost a great opportunity to take a stand for Canadian nationalism.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to cover the ground that has been covered so adequately, by my hon. friend from Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), but I wish to make a few comments as we approach the end of a lengthy debate on the overhaul of an important statute on the law books of Canada, the Canada Corporations Act. This measure took a long time to prepare. It involved the setting up of a task force which reported to the minister, a draft bill last session, reintroduction of the bill this session, lengthy committee hearings and, now, further debate at the report stage and third reading.

This entire process could be summed up in one phrase—the mountain laboured mightily and brought forth a mouse. There have been some minor, tinkering changes which in themselves are useful, but in terms of dealing with the fundamental problems involving corporate activity and the relationship of corporate bodies to the total economy and Canadian society as a whole, the bill is totally inadequate and I fail to see how I can support it on third reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the indication from hon. members opposite that we may get third reading this evening. Like them, I shall be brief. I wish to comment on the number of people who appeared before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and, like the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) I appreciate very much the effort which many trade associations, professional groups and individuals made in preparing briefs and giving us the benefit of their particular knowledge.

As a result of the work of the committee a great many improvements have been made in this bill. It was a better bill when it came out of the committee than when it left the House after second reading. The members of the committee are to be commended. Company law is a dull and tedious subject and I appreciate very much the way in which the members of the committee stuck with the bill, dealt with the hearings, improved the measure and sent it back in a better form. The amendments which were made and accepted by me did, in my opinion, clarify many of the provisions and constituted a great improvement in the bill. I refer in particular to the provisions relating to proxies and proxy solicitations which had the effect of making the bill more uniform with company law in the various provinces. I believe this will be of great convenience to the business community.

The provisions of the original bill relating to notices of meetings and entitlement to vote at meetings have been redesigned to take into account the views expressed by the business community in the course of the hearings. A provision has been added which would allow the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to impose, upon the recommendation of the minister, security for the costs of an investigation in the case of a shareholder who applies for an investigation in circumstances where suspicion exists that the application might be frivolous or malicious. This was an amendment in which I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West concurred. I know it did not go as far as he would have wished, but I believe he will regard it as an improvement and as an additional safeguard in investigation and inspection procedures.

We have had in this House, in the committee and again today many debates on the question of corporate disclosure and whether or not private companies should disclose. My reading of what was said in the committee by members of the committee leads me to believe that there was a consensus reached by the committee that financial disclosure by companies of a certain size was important in our economic system, even in the case of privately incorporated companies.

I think it was agreed there was also a consensus that the law should provide for such disclosure, and this bill does that. As I have said before, there is a great amount of arbitrariness in any criterion or figure under which private companies should disclose, and amendments were made in the committee raising the threshold over which they have to disclose. As the hon. member for Edmonton West indicated, while he does not agree with the whole concept of disclosure, this at least was an improvement. I think those amendments accomplish our original purpose of having companies of economic significance make disclosure and at the same time they avoid some of the difficulties that the figures used in the bill when first introduced might have created.

I think this is significant, Mr. Speaker, after so many years in Canada during which the only disclosure required was that of public companies. While the members of the New Democratic Party are not satisfied with what the bill does, I think it is an important step forward. The bill opens the door to having corporate laws in Canada that would require public disclosure by private companies. As I indicated earlier today, this is something that many groups in the Canadian community have been advocating for many years. This important and significant development in Canadian corporate law, when it becomes effective will provide us as Canadians with a little better idea of what is going on in our economy, what important sectors of the economy are doing and how they are performing.

In conclusion, the amendments made by the committee, in my view, and I think in the view of many members, have considerably improved the bill originally presented to the House. I repeat my thanks to the committee for the job it has done, and also to the many members of the business community and legal fraternity who took the time, trouble and energy to appear before the committee to make their views known to us. Both I and my officials found those views extremely helpful.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, what I wish to say at the third reading stage of this bill can be said in one or two sentences. I think it should not go unnoted that in the remarks of the minister he expressed no concern whatever about the increasing degree of foreign ownership in this country. I can only take it from the absence of any reference to this question that he is expressing the complete lack of interest of the government to which he belongs in this very important matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you might call it ten o'clock, but before you do I wonder whether the acting House leader could tell us the business for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week? That implies that we know what it is for tomorrow and Monday.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the record a statement of House business on behalf of my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). The business for the week commencing June 15 will be as follows: First of all, as the House knows, this coming Friday and the following Monday will be allotted days. The business for Tuesday will be as follows: first, the Canada Labour (Standards) bill, Government Order No. 97; second, the Excise Tax Act, Government Order No. 94; third, the Canada Elections Act, Government Order No. 98. For Wednesday, if we make sufficient progress on the items I have read out we will proceed with the Canada Elections Act, Government Order No. 98. On Thursday we will have the final allotted day in this period.

Finally, I would call the attention of the House to a notice which will appear in the name of the House leader proposing an extension in the hours of sitting in the next two weeks, in the hope of completing the agenda of business by June 26.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN—REFUSAL OF BENEFITS TO MEMBERS OF B.C. BUILDING TRADE UNIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is now nearly two months since I first drew to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) that welfare minister Gaglardi of British Columbia was refusing welfare payments to workers involved in labour disputes. On that occasion the minister replied that such action was contrary to the Canada Assistance Plan, and that if specific instances of refusal were found he would have "no choice but to take appropriate action in terms of reducing the moneys payable to that province under the Canada Assistance Plan".

A number of specific instances were found. I provided several to the minister myself and also copies of a directive sent out by welfare workers on provincial government stationery, stating that welfare payments would be refused to persons involved in a labour dispute. Since then the federal minister has travelled to British Columbia and has met with his counterpart, Mr. Gaglardi. The Vancouver Sun of June 8 headlined the result in bold type, "Munro, Gaglardi reach agreement" and in less bold explanation added, "But on what, not specific". The story related that the federal minister had explained that the Canada Assistance Plan provides that welfare should be issued solely on the basis of need. But Mr. Gaglardi said he was going to keep on doing exactly what he had been doing before the discussion with the federal minister. As one newsman put it, "The farther Mr. Gaglardi got from Mr. Munro's suite—and the closer he got to reporters—the more he reverted to his previous position".

I am now reliably informed that a directive has gone out from Mr. Gaglardi's office to all welfare officers in British Columbia that persons who can show they are completely destitute as a result of current labour disputes are entitled to food vouchers; that is provided there is no food in the house. The directive makes clear that under no circumstances are persons in this category to receive cash welfare payments. If this is so—and I am confident that I can secure copies of the directive within a few days—it means two things: first, the provincial minister of welfare is continuing to break the federal-provincial agreement; second, he is compounding the offence by creating second-class welfare recipients—those involved in a labour dispute.

As an example of what this means, a family of three on social assistance in British Columbia is ordinarily entitled to $165 and is allowed to have the same amount in the bank. Under Gaglardi's new regime, this family must show that it has no money and no food. They can then get $70 in food vouchers. They do not get the balance of the $165; that is, they do not get the $95 allowed for items other than food—rent, light, clothing and the rest. I think this is a shocking betrayal on the part of a welfare minister. I cannot believe that the federal minister agreed to this further flouting of the Canada Assistance Act. I hope he will not wait for me to collect the evidence of this latest piece of high-handed injustice on the part of a provincial minister. I hope he will demand immediate compliance with both the letter and the spirit of the act.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, seven weeks have gone by in which families in British Columbia have been denied their rights under the law. During these weeks these families were without light or heat until the family allowance cheque arrived to relieve the worst of their miseries. I think it is time the Minister of National Health and Welfare called his counterpart's bluff and set a deadline by which, unless he lives up to the terms of the law, the provincial minister will find the federal funds cut off. I believe if steps were taken to get the facts to the people of British Columbia, the federal minister would receive their full support and the deadline would be met. Highwaymen cannot be allowed to continue their careers indefinitely without danger not only to public well-being but to the respect in which governments are held in this country.

I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare will stop the game of cat-and-mouse which Mr. Gaglardi is inviting him to play in this regard, and will take steps to call the bluff of one of the most bluffing provincial ministers of welfare we have ever had in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) the minister indicated that if specific instances could be identified whereby recipients are denied benefits contrary to the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan, he would have no choice but to take appropriate action to ensure that the terms of the agreement are being honoured. I can only report on the minister's behalf that a number of specific examples have been received by the department. These have been referred to the officials of the British Columbia department of rehabilitation and social improvement with the request that the circumstances be investigated to determine whether the person is in fact in need of and eligible for assistance as provided in the province's agreement under the Canada Assistance Plan.

I can also report that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and Mr. Gaglardi, Minister of Rehabilitation and Social Improvement for British Columbia, have discussed the welfare status of employees locked out in a labour dispute in relation to Canada Assistance Plan benefits, in order to resolve this matter. The minister will soon make a statement in the House on the results of his discussions.

BROADCASTING POLICY—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ACT TO COMMITTEE IN LIGHT OF TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, before another long, hot summer approaches, when hopefully we will be involved in another session, something new will be in the living room of every Canadian home. I refer to a video recording apparatus which can tape from one's TV set programs from that set. If one wishes to watch one program and see what is on another channel, one will be able to do that, so complex and interesting is this apparatus. This information was given to us in the broadcasting committee and it prompted me to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) whether, in light of this and other developments, he would consider examining the Broadcasting Act at the earliest possible opportunity to take into account all the technological changes in the communications industry.

The minister was good enough to say that because there were technological changes involved, he would examine the question and, I think, examine it seriously. So perhaps I am here under false pretences tonight, because I really do not quarrel with the answer he gave. I thought that if we discussed this matter we might have some fun on the "late show." Imagine the great benefit of having delayed video recordings so that one could play back the final game of the Stanley Cup series, for example, in the summer when one needs something to make one a little cooler. If you cannot love Lucy in the morning, you might be prepared to do so in the afternoon, or possibly in the evening. When I say "you" I am speaking in a very abstract sense, Mr. Speaker. If Soames Forsyte cannot win back the fair Irenee in the spring, could she fall for him in the summer?

We have all heard the story about the crazy Canadian who lost a bet on the time that the winning goal would be scored in the hockey game, and then lost twice that amount of money on the instant replay. Just think of the fabulous opportunity it would give that gentleman to lose even more money on delayed video recordings. As I say, the possibilities are rather awesome, and all of this will be before us before we reach another June 11. That prompted my question. I think it is one of the latest developments that affects broadcasting. Let me reminisce for a moment. We know that the Broadcasting Act which we now live under, or perhaps as some broadcasters would say, suffer under, was stimulated by the thrust of cable television. We have great technological changes coming about, not only the ones I have mentioned but those in the trade known as EVR and through Telsat, if the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) is ever able to get it off the ground—and knowing what he does with our mail one is entitled to have some doubt about that.

Be that as it may, those two changes alone and other things that the communications industry has cooked up for us will provide a very exciting, immediate future for Canadians in illustrating the change which technology will bring about in the important field of communications. That was the purpose of my suggestion that it was time for the Secretary of State, his officials and the government to give serious consideration to studying the Broadcasting Act which we now have, in view of the things that will be here within a year, or three years, to see whether it belongs to the age of the dinosaur—even though it was only passed two years ago—or whether it can stand up to what we face in the very near future. In that friendly spirit, hopeful of consideration of my request by the Secretary of State, I appear on the "late show" tonight.

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member started with rather light remarks may I point out that they were not in the spirit of the act or of the regulations, because the programs he mentioned would not constitute 60 per cent Canadian content. I congratulate the hon. member for his concern for technological development. I agree that we should all follow these developments very closely. But I should also say that if the hon. member reread the Broadcasting Act and refreshed his memory on certain of its provisions, he would see that it is a very farsighted piece of legislation which encompasses not only the developments that had taken place at the time the act was adopted, but even some future developments—which might be called progress or which some people might call possibilities for further nuisance and noise pollution. The act envisages many developments that are not with us yet but that were known to be on the cards at that time. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has not convinced me that we have to be very worried. I certainly do not think that we have to insist on revising the Broadcasting Act before June 26. Next fall, after having had in his livingroom for two months, this marvelous gadget that he heard of in the Standing Committee, he might come back even more convinced that we must change the act. Then we will all listen to him very intently. Until that happens, however, I think we can survive with the Broadcasting Act as it is.

IMMIGRATION—REPRESENTATION OF APPLICANTS BEFORE APPEAL BOARD BY UNQUALIFIED PERSONS

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, during question period I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) the following question:

> In view of the fact that hundreds of would-be immigrants are being badly represented before the Immigration Appeal Board, by people who pretend to be but are not solicitors and are not capable, will the minister, as requested by the Immigration Appeal Board, amend the regulations to the act, to stop this abuse of so many would-be new citizens?

If an applicant for admission to Canada is refused by the departmental immigration officers, or if anyone else is ordered deported by these officers, he may have a hearing before an inquiry officer pursuant to the provisions of the Immigration Act. If he is still unsuccessful, he has the right of appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board pursuant to the Immigration Appeal Board Act. I shall read the relevant sections of the act, Mr. Speaker. Section 27(2) of the Immigration Act provides:

> the person concerned if he so desires and at his own expense shall have the right to obtain and to be represented by counsel at his hearing.

This is, of course, a hearing by a special inquiry officer as provided for by section 2 (b) of the regulations to the act. Departmental form 689 which is headed, "Notice concerning the rights to be represented by counsel at an immigration inquiry," contains the following paragraph:

> If you so desire and at your own expense, you have the right to retain, instruct and be represented by counsel. Counsel need not necessarily be a lawyer, but may be a friend, priest or minister of your church, or a representative of the Salvation Army—

The Immigration Appeal Board rules, section 11 (2), provides that:

> An appellant or respondent whether or not he appears in person before the board, has the right to be represented by counsel, at his own expense.

Section 2 (b) of the rules states:

> Counsel means any person authorized by the appellant or respondent to represent him before the board, and is not restricted to barristers, solicitors or advocates, and in the case of an appellant or respondent who by reason of age or physical or mental condition is unable to act or proceed on his own behalf or to authorize counsel to act for him, includes any person interested in his welfare.

So by departmental form in respect of a hearing before a special inquiry officer and by a rule—not parliamentary legislation—in respect of a hearing before the Immigration Appeal Board, the newcomer or deportee who wishes to stay in Canada, perhaps more than anything else in the world, can be represented by absolutely anyone. The ability, training, integrity or character of this "anyone" does not in any way impair his capacity to solicit clients from and prey upon these newcomers who are not familiar with our languages or their rights in Canada.

In all other courts of record, that is to say, the county and district courts and the supreme courts of the provinces, the Supreme Court of Canada and all other federal courts of record, a party may appear for himself, but otherwise he must have legal counsel. Not even a law student is allowed to appear on his behalf. In England they are even stricter. The laywer must be a barrister. In Canada, although not compulsory, it is customary for barristers rather than solicitors to appear in court. The reason for this is that the matters under review are important. In a criminal matter, liberty or life is at stake. In a civil matter one's financial affairs, and thus one's fortune, are at stake. To protect their interests, the parties require a lawyer and the court usually requires the lawyer's assistance. Provincial laws made it an offence for anyone who is not a lawyer to practice law.

Obviously, provincial legislators feel it would be dangerous and wrong to allow those who are not qualified to act as a lawyer, just as it would be wrong to allow those who are not qualifed as doctors to carry out surgery. This feeling is so widely accepted that eight out of ten provinces have passed or are about to pass legal aid schemes so that everyone, regardless of his financial means, may have the lawyer of his choice. The exceptions are Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. This is paid for by the people and, in Ontario, at least, is accepted by 100 per cent of the people.

Why is it different when it is an appeal before the Immigration Appeal Board? I expect someone thought that they were doing the subject of inquiry or detainee or deportee, as he may be called, a kindness in allowing him to bring a friend, priest or minister who would assist him without charge. These people do not act as counsel. They know better. They advise him to get a lawyer and they come along as a witness and friend.

Who is representing all these people at these special inquiries and before the Immigration Appeal Board? In hundreds of cases they are represented by people who pretend to be lawyers or "consultants" in immigration matters but are without any legal knowledge, training or ethics. They set themselves up as notary publics or travel agents and thus snare these new immigrants. They are usually assisted in getting this business by the fact that they can speak that person's language. They are not doing it as a friend, but for money—all they can get—often on a contingency basis and for more money than a lawyer would charge. No matter how bad may be their advice, their character or their behaviour before the board, there is no authority to discipline them. Unless the Law Society of the province in question takes on the job of policing these inquiries and charging these people for acting as lawyers, they continue with a free hand.

May I cite some examples. A travel agent has appeared on hundreds of appeals before the board. This gentleman pretends to be a lawyer and even takes written legal retainers and, of course, charges for these services. In another case a former employee of the department, now a travel agent, in an appearance before the board on behalf of someone ordered deported, argued that although he had refused him admission when he was an assessor in the department, he had changed his mind and would now give him something like another 14 points so he could be admitted. Obviously, when he was being paid to do so he reversed his view. This behaviour certainly would not impress the board or assist the cause of the appellant. In another case a former interpreter with the department set up in business as an immigration consultant and now appears before the appeal board, although earlier involved in a criminal charge in connection with applications for landing in Canada.

These are important matters. People can be refused admission although their families are here, or deported up to five years after acquiring landed status and in some cases after even a longer period, although their families would remain here in Canada. If anyone can appear as a lawyer for these people, why not let anyone appear as a lawyer in all courts? Why bother with the expense of training lawyers, when travel agents and notaries public can appear in an appeal court of record?

These people are methodically preying upon new arrivals in Canada who, because of their inability to speak English and lack of knowledge of our country, are easy victims. The public has provided funds so that they may be assured of a lawyer, and those who get the proper advice do have a lawyer. These people being allowed to appear before the Immigration Appeal Board make a mockery of this. Legal aid is even available for those who appear before the Immigration Appeal Board from those two provinces that do not have legal aid schemes. Surely the minister should amend the departmental form and the rules, as requested by the Immigration Appeal Board, to provide that only legal counsel may appear. If he is not agreeable to going this far in respect of inquiries before the special inquiry officers, the minister should provide that there be an appearance only by legal counsel or a representative from the church or social agency.

[Translation]

Mr. Gendron: Mr. Speaker, the minister has informed the hon. member, by an exchange of correspondence, that no decision has as yet been taken on a recommendation made by the Chairman of the Immigration Appeal Board that henceforth only legal counsel be allowed to appear on behalf of appellants before the Board.

There are very compelling arguments both for and against such a move. The hon. member will note that the present government policy is based upon the recommendation of the white paper issued by the Joint Parliamentary Committee that studied this problem very carefully over a prolonged period of time and recommended that the government should not be a party to any system which forces a person to retain legal counsel, possibly at considerable expense.

Furthermore, there is ample indication that many appellants very definitely prefer to be represented before the Board by relatives, friends, clergymen, members of the ethnic community or indeed Members of Parliament because the nature of their appeal to the Board is not based on legal grounds but rather on compassionate or humanitarian considerations in which area the Board does have authority to exercise discretion in its decisions. Many of these non-legal persons undertake such representation without a fee and at their own expense.

On the other side of the issue, there are good arguments that if only legal counsel were allowed to appear before the Board, a greater measure of control cound be exercised through the responsible professional associations in the matter of fees charged and the conduct of counsel from a standpoint of both ability and ethnics.

The minister agrees that some measure of control is necessary, since he has been made aware of some questionable practices on the part of certain non-legal representatives. However, the incidence of this seems to be so slight in relation to total numbers appearing before the Board that a measure depriving people of the possibility of being represented by whomever they choose might seem oversevere. He feels that a sufficient measure of control might be achieved by other regulatory measures which would at the same time not prevent an applicant from choosing his own representative.

The minister hopes that after consultation with the parties involved an equitable and practical solution for all concerned might be found shortly. He appreciates the hon. member's arguments and suggestions, which will certainly prove helpful in finding a better solution to the problem.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—FAILURE TO TABLE LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all members of this House. It is based on the failure of the government to table in the House and make public the interim report of the Le Dain Commission inquiring into the non-medical use of certain drugs. I have given Your Honour the required notice of this question of privilege.

Public inquiries or commissions come under the Inquiries Act and are established "to permit the Governor in Council to conduct inquiries into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof." There is nothing in the Act which authorizes the government to hide or conceal, even for a limited time, any report or reports made. In support of that I refer to the report of the commission on security. In that case the government saw fit to hold back part of the report but justified it on the ground that the national interest must prevail.

The very careful wording of the Act constitutes an irrebuttable presumption that the public interest of the people of Canada is involved. This and the fact that the Canadian taxpayer is footing the bill make it impossible for the government to maintain that any report of this or any commission, either interim or final, is the private property of the leaders of one political party to be suppressed or publication delayed to suit the partisan convenience and interest of such people. To do so is a contempt of the rights of this House.

Tradition, constitutional precedent, and the present practice in this country and in the United Kingdom where this type of inquiry originated all support the view that a report must be tabled in this House when it is received by the government.

Nor should the government or any minister be permitted to play games by pretending that the report has not been officially tendered to the government when in fact the contents have been made known.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that it is public knowledge today that the commissioner involved has made some serious charges in this regard. In the United Kingdom the present practice is to fix a time limit and publication must be made in accordance with this.

Finally, in this contemporary age of a great public interest, on an issue of such tremendous importance, and at a time when the right of the public to be fully and immediately informed is accepted as part of our democratic system, the failure of this government to be frank and honest and table the report constitutes a contempt and a breach of the privileges of the members of this House as trustees of the rights of all Canadians. This represents a conflict between the "just society" and the "secret society". I therefore move:

That the question of the failure of the government to immediately table the interim report of the commission of inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to consider and report back to this House whether such failure is a contempt and a breach of privilege and for a declaration as to the duty of government to table reports of commissions of inquiry forthwith after they have been received.

If Your Honour holds there is a prima facie case, I ask that this motion be put.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know, the ruling which the Chair has to make before the motion proposed by the hon. member can be put is whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I have serious doubts about this. I recognize the importance of the matter raised by the hon. member. The hon. member referred to the fact that in another jurisdiction there is a rule which specifies a time limit within which certain reports have to be filed. There is no such rule in our Standing Orders. On the contrary, there is a procedure which is specified in the Standing Orders whereby members of this House can obtain production of documents or production of papers, that is, by making such a motion. It may be that hon. members do not think this procedure should be followed in the present instance, but I do not believe there is a prima facie case of privilege and the motion should not be put.

TAXATION

CHANGES IN PROPOSALS FOR REFORM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under Standing Order 43 for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on a subject of urgent and pressing necessity.

At 6 p.m. yesterday the Minister without Portfolio from Windsor West tabled, pursuant to Standing Order 42(2), a letter from the Minister of Finance to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs wherein the Minister of Finance announced changes in the personal income tax rates during the first five years after the coming into effect of the tax proposals so as to neutralize some of the tax increases incorporated in the white paper proposals. Included in the statement is the following sentence on page two:

> But I have said the white paper proposals are going to be changed and the changes will substantially reduce the amount available for prospective tax cuts.

Such an indefinite and confusing statement can only create uncertainty and bewilderment in the minds of the members of both parliamentary committees now hearing public testimony on the government's tax proposals and in the minds of the public making representations. Why discuss proposals and changes which no longer are relevant or which may have been materially altered? A clearcut statement of the changes decided upon is called for immediately along with the reasons for the changes. The responsibility rests with the government.

I therefore move, seconded by my hon. friend from Halifax-East Hants.

> That this House request the Minister of Finance to issue a concise statement with reasons for the changes decided upon in the white paper on tax changes, and that the same be communicated immediately to the parliamentary committee studying the said white paper.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West under the terms of Standing Order 43. This motion can only be put by unanimous consent. The Chair will inquire whether there is such consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity, and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This simply discloses their closed minds.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—POSSIBLE RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will ensure that the interim report of the commission inquiring into the non-medical use of drugs is tabled in order to avoid forcing the resignation of the commission chairman in the middle of a very useful study? I call the attention of the Prime Minister to this statement attributed to the chairman:

> Failure to table the report before the House rises at the end of June could raise such serious questions about government intentions and the utility of the commission's work that the commission would no longer have an atmosphere of sufficient confidence in which to operate.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the report is tabled it will certainly not be under any threat, either that of a question of privilege or the resignation of the chairman. I do not believe the chairman made such a threat in those words.

This being said, I can only repeat your own ruling, Mr. Speaker; it is usual for a government to take cognizance of a report before tabling it, and this is what the cabinet is now in the process of doing. There has been no indication of when we would table it and I cannot give any indication this morning.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is not moved by the chairman's conception of the usefulness of inquiry in these circumstances, would he not be moved by the urgent desire of the public for this information and the urgent need for more research, as well as the dismay of all those concerned in this question, including the social agencies, at the delay in tabling this report, which is viewed as accruing to the detriment of many young Canadians and their families?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the so-called dismay seems to be exaggerated. It is not unusual for government to take at least a week or more to consider the report of a royal commission. I repeat, this is what the government is in the process of doing. I have very high regard for the members of the commission and I understand their anxiety. They have published what is an interim report, and the government is considering it as such.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister intending to indicate that the minister of health has had this report for only a week?

Mr. Trudeau: I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that it came to cabinet within a week or less, and it is only within that time that we have had the report in both languages.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister in connection with this matter. Bearing in mind that all parties in the House are perplexed, even divided, on this question and that we do not want to make an issue out of it or pose any threats, would the Prime Minister give serious consideration to the tabling of the report at an early date without comment, even before the government takes a position, so that the public can have the information contained in it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is a very simple question. The answer is yes, we will give consideration to tabling it. The part of the question of privilege that we could not admit was that it asked for the report to be tabled immediately, and there is no rule here or anywhere else that a royal commission report should be tabled immediately.

Mr. Baldwin: Then there ought to be one.

Mr. Trudeau: Why don't you move one and then we will know what "immediately" is. However, I can give the House the assurance that the report will be tabled. May I just put it to the opposition parties that I hope they will make a statement of their position on the report as quickly as the government will.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY REGARDING FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF METAL AND PETROLEUM REFINING INDUSTRIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the information given by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in answer to Question 1,304 put by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, which information is to be found at page 7946 of Hansard. The information discloses that in the smelting and refining of metals foreign-dominated companies now control 84.9 per cent of the business, and in the petroleum refining industry foreign companies now control 99.9 per cent of the industry in Canada. In light of these facts, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister intervened in the case of the uranium industry in order to preserve Canadian ownership, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to intervene in this matter, and has he any intention of making an announcement before the House adjourns regarding the government's policy on foreign ownership?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I said some weeks ago that the government did have the intention of taking a position and stating its policy with regard to the whole problem of foreign investment. I indicated that this certainly would not be done, as I said then, within a matter of a couple of months but that it would take some time. This work is progressing. I think we will probably take the same position as the New Democratic Party in rejecting the extreme position submitted by Mr. Watkins in Winnipeg.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question,

Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we have been waiting for some time for the government to announce a policy arising out of the study being conducted for the cabinet by the Minister without Portfolio from Windsor West, may I ask the Prime Minister how soon we can expect some statement of policy from the government in light of the very serious information produced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in answer to the question to which I have referred?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer concerning how soon. I would indicate that it would be a matter of several months. I can only give that as the minimum time it would take us to come to grips with this problem which is one that I do not think can be changed overnight even if we were to make our announcement of policy within a few weeks. Therefore I cannot encourage the hon. member to think that these statistics will be suddenly changed by any magic.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question regarding a matter which the government has indicated as policy, namely, the implementation of the recommendation of the Watkins commission in respect of the setting up of a Canada Development Corporation which the government has been promising for years. May we expect legislation to set up the Canada Development Corporation during this session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the number of days remaining and the number of urgent matters on the Order Paper, obviously I cannot give such an undertaking. If I were sure that the House would agree to the policy decision taken by the government and pass it into law in a very short period, say a day—if we could have that undertaking by all parties I could give the undertaking asked for by the hon. member.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT INTERNATIONAL SONG FESTIVAL IN ATHENS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I will address my question to the Prime Minister.

According to reports, Renée Claude, a Montreal singer, who will represent Canada from July 10 to 12 in Athens, has proudly stated that if federalists are stupid enough to call on independentists, so much the worse for them. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister whether he could make representations to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as usual, in order that we be represented in Athens by someone who sings about the unity of Canada instead of singing about its division.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to pass on to the CBC the representations the hon. member has just expressed.

I do not care any more than he does to be called an idiot, but I think that those who take pride in the fact that they are prostituting themselves to get the federal government's money are not in a better position than we are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INCREASE IN BANK PROFITS—SUGGESTED MEETING OF MINISTER OF FINANCE AND BANK PRESIDENTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance whose day it is to be in the House, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the 27.7 per cent increase in the profits of the chartered banks during the first six months of their fiscal year, would the Prime Minister suggest to the Minister of Finance that he might sit down with the presidents of these organizations with the least possible delay and suggest to them that, as this very large increase in profits comes on top of a very good year last year, the chartered banks can very well afford a substantial decrease in their interest rates which would greatly help to stimulate the economy and employment, both of which very much need stimulation at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly transmit this suggestion to the Minister of Finance. We are very glad the Conservative party is taking this tough line with the banks.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary. Does the Liberal government take an equally tough line?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Do you or do you not, or are you taking a soft line with your friends?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PROPOSED CONFERENCE TO SETTLE VIET NAM WAR

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In reference to a statement by the Secretary General of the United Nations yesterday to the effect that Canada should be involved in an international conference to settle the Viet Nam war, can the minister advise whether recent discussions have been held on this important matter and whether the government has indicated its willingness to participate in the kind of conference envisaged by U Thant?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have kept the House informed on most of these initiatives, I think, and have indicated that we would be prepared to attend such a conference.

TAXATION

PUBLICATION OF CHANGES IN WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS—RAISING OF EXEMPTIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the unscheduled absence of the Minister of Finance I will ask the Prime Minister whether the government has decided on certain changes in the proposals in the white paper on tax reform, as indicated in the minister's letter, and, if so, what are they and will they be published shortly to remove the uncertainty that is surrounding all of the discussions at the present time?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I can respond on behalf of the Minister of Finance who is presently attending the annual meeting of the Canadian Bankers Association in Vancouver.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: There's your liaison.

Mr. Gray: He would therefore be in a position to express any necessary remarks to them to ensure that they do their share in ensuring the economic stability of the country.

An hon. Member: It is a bit late, is it not?

Mr. Gray: I would like to respond further by saying that when the government is ready to announce modifications in the tax reform proposals it has put forward, it will do so in the usual manner and in due course.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does the minister agree then that any discussions that may be held with the public at the present time are arguments in a vacuum because many of these points may become academic?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that this is an argument.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But it is so obvious.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio speaking for the Minister of Finance. Since considerable changes have been indicated in the white paper in advance of the committee report and since there is an indication that the government may not be in a position to implement some of these measures before 1972, is it the intention of the government to at least bring in a measure to raise the exemptions before that time?

Mr. Gray: I have nothing to add to my previous answer which I think covers the point raised by the hon. member.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the Minister without Portfolio talks to the Minister of Finance today, would he pass along my suggestion to him while he has all the boys together so we can perhaps get some action on bank rates by next Monday?

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for the minister. How are members of the public who are concerned about the tax proposals to know what are still government proposals and what are not government proposals in light of the minister's comments in the letter? Has the Minister without Portfolio any way of indicating to the public what are still government proposals?

Mr. Gray: I am sure that the representations made by the public to the committee and to the government will continue to be very useful. When decisions are ready to be announced, this will be done in the usual way.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister not agree that the representations being made to the committee are directed to certain proposals on the assumption that these are proposals of the government and that it is a travesty for the government to continue to invite these representations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is obviously debate. I would not think the question is acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

PUBLIC WORKS

FUTURE USE OF VACATED KINGSTON LAKESHORE LAND

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question either to the acting Minister of Transport or to his Parliamentary Secretary or perhaps to the Minister of Public Works. I do not know exactly where the responsibility lies. Is the minister aware of the fact that a couple of industries have vacated lakeshore land in Kingston and that there is now a question as to the ownership of that land and whether or not the land should be given to a private developer from Ottawa or be developed as a recreational facility? Further, if he is aware of this would the minister undertake to assert federal ownership of the land or interest in the land, and also assure the House that it will not be handed over to the private developer?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about this matter but I thank the hon. member for drawing it to our attention. I shall talk to the Minister of Transport, and if there is Public Works responsibility in the matter we will see to that.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister would be good enough to draw it to the attention of the Minister of Transport so that the whole thing may be dealt with.

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what I said I would do.

PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER'S OFFICE—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. JEAN-PAUL LEFEBVRE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

[Mr. Gray.]

Can he tell the House if Mr. Jean-Paul Lefebvre, former Liberal member for Ahuntsic, is still a member of his staff, since his appointment as general director of the Liberal party of Canada, Quebec section?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question, in as much as it is in order, should be put on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS BY UNITED STATES CONCERNING ENTRY INTO CANADA OF YOUNG MEN OF DRAFT AGE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have the United States authorities indicated to the government their concern respecting the entry into Canada of a significant number of young men of draft age?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I have had no representations of that kind and so far as I know none have been made to my department.

PERU—FURTHER ASSISTANCE TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is he in a position to indicate whether or not the government intends to reassess the degree of assistance it is going to give Peru in view of the information that has now been made available as to the extent of the disaster in that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government made further decisions to extend additional aid to Peru. We are sending some tents and we are sending a cargo of flour. The government also has under consideration even further measures if these can be useful.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMPLIANCE OF MINISTERS WITH ROSTER SYSTEM

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister about the roster system. Is he aware that 12 ministers are defying the roster system today with respect to House attendance? Ten are not here and two are here when they should not be.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Is the Prime Minister also aware that a former minister, the hon. member for Trinity, has been in his place for three days in a row with a smile on his face?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I share the distress of the hon. member. As the hon. member may have noticed, the ministers who are present in some three cases are pinch-hitting as acting ministers for some who are away on urgent government business—in Paris, in Vancouver, and in other parts of the world. But if the hon. member looks around at his own ranks he will realize that toward the end of the session attendance tends to drop down a little bit.

Mr. Bell: Would the Prime Minister mind answering the latter part of my question about the possibility of the hon. member for Trinity going back into the cabinet now that his policy has been adopted?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that part of the question is in order.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON SALE OF PHANTOM JET PLANES TO ISRAEL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of a press report which attributes certain remarks to him with regard to the sale of Phantom jets to Israel, could the minister tell the House what is the government's position on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in view of the publicity that this press report has been given I think it essential that I set the record straight. The report is inaccurate. I made no comment whatever—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course the minister can do this only on a point of order or question of privilege because of the well-established rule that members cannot ask ministers about statements made outside the House, but if there is agreement the minister might be allowed to make this statement. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On motions.

Mr. Sharp: Then, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the question has been raised I think it is important, if the House will permit me, that I should put the record straight. It is causing some confusion.

I made no comment whatever in Rome concerning a possible sale of military aircraft by the United States to Israel, either at the NATO meeting or at any press conference, other than to say that this subject had not been discussed at the NATO meeting. We did, of course, discuss the Soviet build-up in the United Arab Republic, which is causing very grave concern. I expressed no opposition and I do not do so now to the possible sale of military aircraft to Israel, and it is most unfortunate if any such impression had been created by this inaccurate press report.

SUPREME COURT DECISION UPHOLDING VALIDITY OF PERPETUAL LEASES—DISPOSITION OF BILL C-152

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Now that the minister and his officials have had an opportunity of studying at some length the decision of the Supreme Court as to the validity of certain types of leases in the national parks, would the minister advise whether it is the government's intention to go ahead with Bill C-152, or is it to be a dead letter as it should be?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet completed our studies of the problem and of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. As soon as we have, I shall be glad to report to the House and to the hon. member.

GRAIN

EXPLANATION BY WHEAT BOARD OF DEMAND FOR REPAYMENT OF CASH ADVANCES—DRAWING OF 1970-71 ADVANCES

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Will the minister take steps to see that letters of explanation and apology will be sent by the Canadian Wheat Board to those farmers who have been wrongfully sent letters threatening them with legal action and penalties with regard to outstanding balances on 1968-69 cash advances which in most cases are not in default?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will take the specific suggestion of the hon. member under consideration and discuss it with the Wheat Board. I have discussed the matter with them, and they have made it clear in press releases that no farmer who has been delivering grain on quotas will be considered in default with regard to payments outstanding from the 1968-69 crop year. I will certainly be glad to check if that information is being adequately given to farmers who have received these notices.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Will the minister again recommend that prairie farmers be permitted to draw their full 1970-71 cash advances this fall, in line with the policy of last year, even though the previous year's cash advances may not be fully repaid?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken on that as yet.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—RESTRAINT ON BANK PROFITS IN LINE WITH SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the wide discrepancy between the 27.7 per cent increase in profits announced by the banks and the 6 per cent wage increase policy of the government, is the government giving consideration to a policy of restraint on profits such as it is proposing on wages?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has obviously misunderstood the purpose of the whole operation. He is referring to percentages that have accrued over the past and it would obviously be easy to indicate many salaries and many wages which had gone up over the past by considerably more than 6 per cent—

An hon. Member: Twenty-seven per cent?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. Some unions are asking for 30 per cent and 40 per cent, as the hon. member knows—

[Mr. Douglas (Assinboia).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: So the question is really as to the future and the controlling of inflation. The hon. member should remember that the guidelines regarding profits were laid down last February, I believe it was, when the—

An hon. Member: For banks?

Mr. Trudeau: —banks and other members of the professional financial community agreed to certain guidelines, and that they would not raise their prices or charges as much as their costs. This is obviously intended to squeeze their profits. Once again these voluntary approaches can only work if we have the co-operation not only of all members of the community but the active support of all members of this House—that is, if they are really serious in wanting to fight inflation.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the fact that the 27.7 per cent increase in the first six months of this year for the banks comes on top of a 25.5 per cent increase last year, or an increase of 53 per cent in two years, does the Prime Minister not think that the supposed guidelines should be looked at again to see if they really mean anything in terms of restraint on profits such as is proposed for wages?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The guidelines proposed by the Prices and Incomes Commission are being looked at by that commission. That is why from period to period they have come up with new proposals and the government thus far has always supported them.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister not agree that the fight against inflation would be greatly helped if he would screw up his courage, meet with top labour leaders of this country and discuss with them the important economic problems facing this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hr. Hees: —instead of being afraid of meeting with a rebuff from the labour leaders?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should remind hon. members that when the Chair calls for order, that is an invitation for hon. members to observe the request of the Chair. I believe the hon. member for York South wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I apologize. There was so much noise coming from the other side of the House that I could not hear you. I therefore apologize, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like the Prime Minister to explain to the House either now or at some other time why the working people of Canada, some of whom are making incomes that are fairly low, and the unions representing them should agree to a 6 per cent limit on increases in their incomes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: —when the banks have enjoyed much larger—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should have intervened earlier in this debate. We have clearly entered the field of debate. This is the question period. I think that the last two or three questions were more in the realm of argument than in the field of questions. I think I ought to allow the hon. member for Lisgar to ask his question.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With great respect, I realize that the time is passing but I do not think we were debating. The government has enunciated a policy. Something has happened in the economy which is normally—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. The hon. member is debating. He first debated, in my view, the question and now he is attempting to debate the ruling of the Chair. I think we ought to call on the hon. member for Lisgar.

GRAIN

BARLEY—AMOUNT OF DELIVERIES TO THUNDER BAY UNDER ADDITIONAL QUOTA

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. Would the minister inform the House how much barley the Wheat Board hopes to receive for delivery to Thunder Bay under the extra quotas now in force in Manitoba and Saskatchewan for that grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board has very substantial shipments of barley to move. I do not have precise figures before me, but they are in the order of 20 million bushels or more which are required in the period. In the last week on which I have seen reports, 5.2 million bushels came in.

WHEAT—ESTIMATE OF SEEDED ACREAGE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REDUCTION UNDER LIFT PROGRAM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister without Portfolio. In view of the fact that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool crop report shows plantings of approximately 8 million acres in the province as of June 5, as well as seeded acreage for other crops, can the minister inform the House whether his department has had surveys conducted of the acreage sown to wheat in the three western provinces to determine if it is in line with the Lift program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is that no comprehensive surveys of any great accuracy have been made. I should caution the hon. member against relying too heavily upon the figures to which he referred since I believe the analysis is very limited and in percentage form. The hon. member, I think, should not put money on those figures.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the advice the minister gave me. I will therefore ask him if he will take an opportunity before the end of the present session to make a statement on motions to indicate to the House the acreage reduction under the Lift program and the probable amount of money that therefore will be disbursed to the farmers in the western region?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to do so if the figures available by that time are sufficiently accurate to allow anything very substantial to be said.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Would the minister take it upon himself to advise that economic apologist, Dr. John Young, that he cannot put the blame for unemployment and other problems on the backs of labour but that he should place it on a bumbling government where it belongs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPAIR FACILITIES FOR MARITIME PATROL AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Would the minister indicate whether or not any active negotiations are being carried on today or this week in connection with the overhaul and maintenance programs relating to Tracker and Argus aircraft and whether or not there is any future possibility of employment for the four or five hundred men involved?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the department is now in active discussions with a number of companies concerning the repair and overhaul of Tracker and Argus aircraft.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED CLOSING OF CANADIAN SUBSIDIARY BY SKIL CORPORATION OF CHICAGO

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of an earlier exchange on foreign ownership. Is the minister aware that another foreign-owned company, Skil Corporation of Chicago, is planning to phase out its west coast subsidiary, Power Machinery, which will entail the loss of 125 jobs? Also, will the minister undertake to investigate this matter thoroughly to see what can be done?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have been in touch with company officials about this matter and are pursuing it with them. However, the company in question has indicated that no firm decision to close has in fact been made.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC—POWER TO AMEND SECTION 128 OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Did the government of Quebec submit a request to him concerning an amendment to the constitution on the oath of allegiance to Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any request having been made to my office or the office of the Minister of Justice. If such a request had been made, I would advise the member, but as far as I know, such is not the case.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition in the Quebec legislature on the need for co-operation on the part of the federal government to achieve such a change, would the Prime Minister say whether he shares the opinion expressed in the said statement?

Mr. Speaker: The question asked by the hon. member is essentially the same as the one put yesterday by the hon. member for Shefford, I think. He is inviting the Prime Minister to express a legal opinion. I suggest that the question, in such terms, is not in order.

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the matter of the oath of allegiance is being considered by the Department of Justice, and as for as it comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government, whether the latter will gladly extend its full co-operation in order to solve a problem which, in my opinion, does not prevent an elected member from fulfilling his duties.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member expresses an opinion, and in that sense, his question is out of order. However, I wish to mention that the first part of the question is in order—

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member please resume his seat.

To that extent, the Prime Minister would perhaps like to answer.

Mr. Trudeau: As for the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am not aware that such a proposed change is considered by the Minister of Justice. I will inquire in this connection, but I do not think that I will have to tell the House otherwise.

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—EFFECT OF PROVINCIAL INTEGRATED DEVELOPMENT PLAN ON ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to my genial friend, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would he indicate whether he is considering the white paper proposal by the province of Newfoundland to approve an integrated development plan which would superimpose the establishment of a park in the Bonne Bay area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned by the problem of the Newfoundland government's white paper. My problem deals with the enforcement of the National Parks Act and I have clearly stated in the House—and I have also advised the Newfoundland government—that we will be ready to act when it is willing to surrender the land we need, subject to the usual regulations providing that there must be no mining or oil operations on such land.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate if the province has threatened to withdraw from signing the agreement for the Bonne Bay Park if the federal government would not accept the integrated development plan in the white paper?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Speaker, they did not make any threat concerning the proposal for the setting up of a national park.

URBAN AFFAIRS

POSITION OF QUEBEC AND OTHER PROVINCES ON ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-MUNICIPAL COUNCIL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. It has to do with his recent announcement indicating that the government is interested in urban councils. I wonder whether the reversal by Mr. Bourassa of Mr. Tessier's indication that he found nothing wrong and as a matter of fact encouraged municipalities to deal directly with the federal government has been jeopardized as a result of Mr. Bourassa's reversal?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I am not aware of any reversal, Mr. Speaker. It has been indicated to me that Mr. Bourassa made a statement yesterday afternoon to the effect that he has no objection to municipalities discussing matters directly with the federal government. He agrees with the formation of a tri-level council. He reiterated the position, with which I thoroughly agree, that Quebec will not give up jurisdiction over municipalities. In any event, that was never the intention of our suggestion.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question. Can the minister advise whether he has received approval from any of the provinces of the plan submitted by the government? If not, does he intend to hold meetings with their representatives as soon as possible in order to acquire the required approval?

Mr. Andras: As has been indicated, I have had a specific agreement from Mr. Tessier. Prior to that I had some rather casual conversations, not in the precise form that I suggested the other evening and I intend to address myself to a discussion with my counterparts in the provinces as quickly as possible.

POLLUTION

EFFECT OF SPRAYING OF ARSENIC ON HORSESHOE BAY FERRY DOCK

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I intended to address my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry but in his absence I will direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary. It is in connection with complaints emanating from the lower mainland of British Columbia regarding the reported spraying of arsenic on the B.C. Ferries dock at Horseshoe Bay and the danger to the water and fish in that area. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House what the situation is and whether the government is interested in it?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that we are aware of it. We are checking to see what effect this is having on shellfish in the area. I understand the spraying is done to keep the termites from eating the dock or something of that nature.

Mr. Alkenbrack: They are also in the Liberal party.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HARBOURS

COME-BY-CHANCE, NFLD.—BENEFITS TO PROVINCE UNDER FEDERAL AGREEMENT TO BUILD WHARF

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. When I directed this question to the Minister of Transport on June 9 he suggested that I direct it to the Minister of Public Works when he was next in the House. My question concerned a statement by an official of the Department of Transport to the effect that the federal government agreement to build a $16 million wharf to serve the planned refinery at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, is contingent on certain additional benefits guaranteeing more revenue for the province of Newfoundland. What are the additional benefits?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada had undertaken an offer to build the wharf at Come-By-Chance. It was subject to a clarification in the agreement between the federal government and the province with respect to their ability to repay the investment. The cost of the wharf is recoverable. At the present time there are continuing discussions between officials of the government of Canada, the provincial government and the company with a view to seeing whether we can get this matter straightened out and the work undertaken.

Mr. Carter: Can the minister indicate if the signing of the agreement will be contingent on Newfoundland getting additional benefits other than those already agreed to by the company and the province?

Mr. Laing: What we are interested in, Mr. Speaker, is a financial provision so that the considerable amount of money involved, probably $16 million, will be returned to the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about run out of time. Perhaps the House will allow the hon. member for Broadview to ask a question. He has been trying to do so for a few days.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO CONDITIONS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Solicitor General. Last Friday I asked the Solicitor General to have a public inquiry or set up a committee to investigate the conditions in penitentiaries across the country, especially the high suicide rate at the present time in some of our penitentiaries. The minister said he would consider this and make a decision. Has the Solicitor General made a decision with regard to this very important problem?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is not our present intention to set up any such commission.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Is the President of the Privy Council rising on a point of order?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the representatives of the parties. I think there is general agreement to an order that for the purpose of today's debate the initial spokesmen in each group should be allowed 20 minutes and the remaining speakers allowed 15 minutes. If agreeable, perhaps this could be made an order of the House.

Mr. Alexander: There is agreement on this side of the House with respect to the proposal made by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—HOUSING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION TO INCREASE CONSTRUCTION, ETC.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

This House declares that the government must, in view of the disastrous decline in residential housing construction, announce before the summer recess new measures to stimulate a significant expansion in the number of housing units being built, to reduce the total cost of individual homes for middle and low-income Canadians, and to reduce or eliminate unemployment in the construction trades.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I suppose many members wonder why this motion has been placed before the House and the people of Canada. Your Honour has just read the motion, thus giving an indication of what it is about. It is only necessary to read a few newspaper editorials to see the publicity being given to the gathering momentum about the lack of initiative by the government with respect to housing starts. I wish to put on the record some statements, particularly from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I quote from an article which appeared in the May 9, 1970, issue of the Hamilton Spectator. This article quotes Albert Fish, past president of the Ontario Association of Real Estate Board and reads in part as follows:

> Canadian cities are heading into the worst housing crisis since the end of the Second World War and it is becoming impossible for nine out of ten city families to own a home, a housing expert said yesterday.

An article which appeared in the June 10, 1970, issue of the Globe and Mail, emphasizing the gravity of the situation is headlined, "Housing Starts in Ontario off 44 per cent". The article reads in part:

> Urban housing starts in Ontario totalled 14,114 in the first five months of this year, 44 per cent fewer than in the corresponding period last year, preliminary figures from Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. show.

What is even more significant, this article, by way of Dow Jones Service, reads:

> Housing starts in urban centres totalled 8,392 dwelling units in May, off 50.1 per cent from a year earlier—

I now refer to an article which appeared in the June 2, 1970, issue of the Ottawa Journal. This article quotes Mr. Johnson, president of the National Housebuilders Association, as follows:

• (12 noon)

> We may be seeing a real housing shortage by next spring. Rising costs have priced homes out of the reach of over 80 per cent of Canada's wage-earners.

He goes on to state:

> The federal government raises sales taxes on construction materials, then runs around like a chicken with its head cut off trying to lower housing costs.

What is the situation in Hamilton? I quote from an article which appeared in the Hamilton Spectator of June 4. The headline reads, "Multiple Dwellings Hit Hardest—20 per cent Drop in House Building". It begins:

> Housebuilding in Hamilton has dropped 20 per cent so far this year compared with the first five months of last year.

Any forecast of things to come is, at best, nothing more than an educated guess, and two of the leading educated guessers are Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Economic Council of Canada. Both predict a decade of tremendous demand for housing accommodation, great and conflicting pressures in providing it in the urban environment of the seventies, and exceedingly keen competition for the means to finance what is needed. In mid-January, Mr. Herbert Hignett, president of CMHC said that 2,500,000 dwellings must be produced in Canada during the seventies—1,100,000 by 1975 and 1,400,000 by 1980. He set a price tag of about $4 billion on this construction.

According to the Economic Council of Canada, of ten highly-industrialized nations Canada ranks only eighth in the percentage of population living in urban areas. In 1961, this proportion was 62 per cent as compared with Britain, in first place, with 77 per cent. But Canada was way out in front when it came to the average annual percentage of growth of urban population. It topped the other nine nations with an annual rate almost twice that of the next in line—4.1 per cent as compared with second place United States with 2.7 per cent. Fortunately or unfortunately, depending upon how one views urban development, this pre-eminent rate continues. Canada's strong increase in population growth and rate of urbanization is likely to continue until 1980 at least.

The Economic Council forecasts a population of about 26 million by 1980, a growth since 1965 of 28 per cent. This is the highest growth rate for that 15-year period of seven leading countries including Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Sweden and the United States. The council estimates that of this 1980 population of 26 million, 20 million will reside in urban areas. Perhaps of more significance is the estimate that while all urban areas will grow immensely, those which are already the largest will grow most rapidly and disproportionately. With millions of new urban dwellers being pushed into existing facilities, it is not hard to perceive the outlines of some of the problems which will be created.

I noticed in the Ottawa Journal of April 13, 1970, an article by James Nelson under the heading, "Five Million Families Push Housing Needs". It states in part:

> About the middle of this year, the number of families in Canada should reach 5,000,000, twice what it was in 1940 and 1,000,000 more than in 1959.
> The figure is important in projecting sales in all lines of business, but particularly in housing. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation estimates that the current 190,000 a year growth in demand for accommodation will jump nearly 230,000 in 1971-76.

Request for Housing Statement

The unfortunate fact about today's development picture is that almost all single-family dwellings are designed for the taste and the purse of an affluent society. Yet the urgent need is not among the affluent; it is largely among the group which lies between the poverty line as defined by the Canadian Welfare Council, around $3,000 per year, and the poverty line as set out by the Canadian Labour Congress—$10,000 or $11,000. The need is greatest in the twilight zone of our affluent society, among those without economic elbow-room who are prisoners of the city.

I should like to put on record what the Canadian Welfare Council said in its statement of April 26, 1970. It read from the first page as follows:

> The committee views the current housing situation as continuing to be an emergency for people of low-income and a serious problem for middle-income Canadians. In terms of rent levels, vacancy rates, and mortgage interest rates, it is obvious that conditions have deteriorated since the conference was held in 1968.

It is against this challenge to produce less expensive, relevant housing that the government's taxation policies in general and the white paper proposals in particular must be measured. Against this background, Mr. Speaker, you will be keenly aware of one of the fundamental shortcomings of the government white paper: it covers only part of the tax field. No one has any idea of government policy on consumption and sales taxes. In considering the impact of new tax programs on the housing industry it is surely of prime importance for us to know whether the government is now willing to contemplate any relief from the onerous 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This demand has been made so often that we proponents of it must be sounding somewhat like a broken record. But it still remains a valid demand.

There are a number of proposals in the white paper which will generate great frustration and confusion for home owners and for people in the real estate business. The major one is, of course, the proposal to apply capital gains tax to owner-occupied homes. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), as I understand it, wants to exclude most Canadian homes from capital gains tax, but unfortunately the white paper does not say just how this is to be achieved, nor does there seem to be any practical and simple method of accomplishing this end. Not only would homes be tied up in endless red tape, but it is noticed there are major discriminatory features attached to this proposal.

[Mr. Alexander.]

For example, a home owner would be exempted from tax if he moved from one area of Canada to another in connection with a change of work. On the other hand, no consideration is given for any other reason for selling a house and buying another—expanding family needs, for example. The value of a home will be fixed on valuation day. How does a home owner ensure that valuation is made in a way which will give him some protection? The Minister of Finance says, "Put your own value on it and we will take your word." But he says nothing about what is likely to happen when a dispute arises with the government over the size of the capital gain.

The minister has indicated that the Department of National Revenue will accept any reasonable value which a home owner may establish, for example, by looking at newspaper advertisements or talking to neighbours. I can see the courts and lawyers having a field day with this idea. Further, will Canadians have the foresight to open new books of account? Will they have proof of every home improvement valued at more than $150 so that costs can be applied against the capital gains they realize when selling? Now we hear that the $1,150 annual exemption on individual homes may not be high enough to exempt most homes from capital gains tax.

This is the kind of frustration which Canadians will face daily if the white paper is implemented as it stands. But having regard to the major housing problems likely to arise in the next ten years, there are much more fundamental objections to certain other proposals in the white paper. Perhaps the most serious is the proposed abolition of the two-level system of taxing companies without the substitution of an alternative. This would strike a severe blow at the smaller construction firms which are so important to our housing program. The incentive to plough back investment so as to expand production would be removed as far as the small firms are concerned. The much-needed growth in our productive capacity would be threatened and, in the face of continuing demand, prices could only rise.

I realize that the present lower rate applies even to huge corporations and the two-level system was often open to abuse. But it is unacceptable to me that the system should be abolished without presenting some offsetting provision to help overcome a capital market bias against smaller businesses. Higher taxes on the major elements of the housing market can only add to the cost of housing, and the less generous depreciation provisions for apartment building will, as the Montreal Real Estate Board recently pointed out, drive rents up faster. While taxation policy alone will not solve our housing problems, it is important that we should not increase the obstacles through our tax policies. Yet that is just what the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and the white paper proposals seem to be doing. Little wonder, then, that many are questioning the government's intention to be more effective in making homes available and in encouraging home ownership. At this stage the government should face up to realities and release from the proposals the personal, permanent residences of Canadians.

However, what disturbs me even more is that this situation is a prime example of what this government has been doing. It has shown a lack of co-ordination in the federal approach to the urban environment, particularly to the housing problem. The tax policy is merely the most visible symptom of a general failure to examine and to co-ordinate all policies as they affect housing. There is no over-all design; there are simply unrelated policies. What particularly concerns me and many members of the House is that when the minister appeared before the Committee on Health and Welfare during the committee's examination of his department's estimates, he said the projected housing figure for 1970 was 180,000. We know the Economic Council of Canada has indicated we must have at least 200,000 units per year. Let me just read once more the statement of the Canadian Welfare Council, which goes even further than this. They say:

> However, in view of CMHC's own statement that "a program as high even as 250,000 units per year would not create a sufficient stock within five years to bring an end to overcrowding, doubling up, and the continued use of deficient dwellings", the committee questions the degree to which this can be considered an achievement. The committee is also alarmed that in the first quarter of 1970, an annual rate of only 160,000 starts was maintained.

I remember questioning the minister with regard to what his position was on the government's anti-inflationary policy, which had certainly been increasing unemployment, the figure now being almost 7 per cent. The minister said this was just a regrettable side-effect of the government's policy and that he would have to go along with it. But when wearing his other hat he said the government was interested in seeing that it reached the target of one million homes announced in the Throne Speech. I also asked the minister, with regard to the government's anti-inflationary policies, why the private sector was going to become involved in mortgages only to the extent of about 10 to 15 per cent of its involvement last year. I quote from the minutes of the committee on this point:

> Mr. Alexander: Is there any indication why their funding would be down?
> Mr. Andras: Yes, there is. I think I would come back to the point that they plead, and with some justification, I think—they plead the effect of anti-inflationary measures, the tight money fiscal policy of the government to combat inflation.

So there you have it, Mr. Speaker. The government is being blamed because of its anti-inflationary policies which have not only increased unemployment in this country but have made sure that Canadians will not have the required number of housing units. In regard to unemployment, we must bear in mind the number employed in the housing industry today compared with previous times. I have figures that compare 1969 with 1970. They show that in January, 1969, there were 431,000 employed in the construction industry, and that in the same month of 1970 there were only 416,000—a decrease of 15,000, or 3 per cent. In February, 1969, there were 419,000, compared with February, 1970, when there were 391,000—a decrease of 28,000, or 6 per cent. In March, 1969, there were 416,000 in the construction industry, compared with 406,000 a year later—a decrease of 10,000, or 2½ per cent. In April, 1969, there were 431,000, compared with 426,000 in April, 1970—a decrease of 2½ per cent.

In other words, there are a further 10,000 people without work in the construction industry. Perhaps they are working somewhere else, but the point is that as a result of government policy we have in 1970 an unemployment rate of 21.9 per cent in the construction industry, compared with 18.2 per cent last year. This represents an increase this year of 3.7 per cent. I cannot understand the government's thinking in this regard. We are living in an urban-oriented society and housing will unquestionably play a critical role in urban life. Unless the government realizes this fact and appreciates that some priorities must be set in terms of housing, the present situation, which has reached critical proportions since the last war, will be further aggravated.

We have on several occasions indicated that alternatives should be considered by this government. I was pleased to note that the minister indicated approval of one of these alternatives on returning from his trip to Europe, namely, that there is some acceptability of the concept of building societies. The other day I asked the Minister of Finance whether the government would review its policy in this regard, but the minister adopted a kind of smart aleck attitude and said that anybody could start a building society. What he did not say was that in order for a building society to become a reality, there would have to be some tax incentives.

I hope the minister will take this question to his colleagues again for consideration. As long as interest rates continue to rise to the present level, which is around 10½ per cent, more money must be brought into the housing field. I asked the minister about this matter the last time the committee considered his department's estimates, and he said that CMHC could not put more money into housing. I asked him about the billions of dollars in the pension funds, and he said there were some problems with the provinces in this regard. Although that may be true, I should like to know whether the minister is making any moves to acquire some of this money for housing purposes. I think the minister, in all fairness, would agree that one practical solution to the housing problem these days would be the creation of building societies.

Another proposal we have made to the minister is the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, a tax that has a very real effect at this time. I do not know why the minister has not indicated whether this is feasible at the present time. I understand that it would take $600 to $700 off the price of a house, at the very minimum. Another alternative to present government policy is to control land prices and to limit speculation by having, not so much land banks but by acquiring land that is serviced. I see no possibility of our being able to help those in the lower-income bracket, much less people in the middle-income bracket, if the cost of land continues to escalate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired, but he may continue with the agreement of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I will not take up much more time since there are others who would like to condemn the government for its inhumane attitude toward the housing situation confronting many Canadians, a situation that will continue to exist with present government policy. All I can say is that we in the opposition have every reason to put before the House and before Canadians the motion I have moved. I hope the government will give housing a high priority and that it will accept some of the alternatives put forward by the opposition in order to alleviate the housing shortage. I was pleased to hear the minister indicate the other day that he is all for urban councils. I was also pleased to note that it was this party which initiated this idea. We stated that unless we had three-level conferences there would be no way of solving the problems of urban development, one of which is housing.

I close by saying that urban renewal is still a fact of life. It is a fact of life because, even though the freeze is on, urban decay continues. I hope the government is conducting some research into this matter, rather than just imposing a freeze as part of government fiscal policy. In view of the heartache, frustration and alienation caused by the policies of the government, it is beyond my comprehension how the government could think that such policies could find acceptance. I hope that before the end of this year the government will introduce a firm policy defining what urban renewal means, particularly in terms of rehabilitation, and will offer some guidelines in this regard.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party completely agree with the substance of the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), to the effect that there has been a serious decline in housing in the first five months of this year and that the minister should take immediate steps to stop the crisis that has been created and introduce measures to solve the problem. In fact, yesterday I proposed a motion under Standing Order 26 to have a special debate on this very matter. Yesterday I also asked the Minister in charge of housing to set forth in a statement on motions some of his ideas in respect of meeting this critical situation.

The Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing (Mr. Andras) has reached the same position concerning housing that he reached as Minister without Portfolio in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He has indicated that he is a man of concern, compassion and knowledge, but having acquired these three attributes he finds he cannot do what is required to be done and what he would like to do to solve the problems. The minister attempted to do something in respect of the Indians and Eskimos across Canada, but as soon as he commenced to do so he was stopped.

Now he is confronted with the same problem in regard to housing. He now has a new role; he is now the apologist for government inaction. He is the greatest builder of paper houses this country has ever known. He has become the smokescreen of the government. When the crisis emerges, he makes suggestions such as the one he made last year, that in the CMHC budget for 1971 he would bring forward $200 million for what is known as experimental building in order to develop some of the innovative ideas the builders might have. In respect of that $200 million we have not seen an indication of any great innovation. When he knew he was on the griddle for his poor performance in respect of housing starts in Canada, he came forward with the urban council idea. I recall that at the federal-provincial conference in 1967, Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson brought forward the same idea. Members of the New Democratic Party agree with this idea and I think most Canadians would agree with it. It received a cool reception, however, and was not acted upon. I think it would take more than two or three years to set up the proper framework for an urban council so that it would have immediate direction and would be in a position to take meaningful action in respect of housing problems.

I find that the minister in charge of housing has become a sophisticate in housing jargon. Ever since he read the book on housing dynamics he has attempted to use all the jargon referred to in that book and seems to be trying to confuse the issues. I recall that in his first speech after being appointed minister in charge of housing he said the simple way to solve the housing problem in Canada is to build houses, more houses and more houses. But now he has changed his tune and has become the apologist for the government.

If the minister were in private industry, on his performance to date he would without doubt be fired because of his incompetence and inaction with regard to housing. Let me review his record since he was appointed to this portfolio. In May of this year, CMHC figures indicated a 50.1 per cent decline in housing starts in urban centres as compared with a similar period last year. Now the projection has dropped to 169,000 housing starts for 1970. Last year there were 210,000 starts. This was the first time the country had broken the 210,000 housing starts barrier. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the government indicated it wanted to build one million homes over the next five years. The figure has dropped to 169,000 for 1970. This indicates a substantial drop in respect of achieving the target of one million homes over the next five years.

I recall the statement by CMHC back in 1969 in which it was said that a program even as high as 250,000 units per year would not create a sufficient stock of houses within five years to bring to an end the overcrowding, doubling up of families in housing accommodation and continued use of deficient dwellings. Here we have CMHC referring to 250,000 units, the Economic Council of Canada refers to 200,000 and 210,000 units and the government of Canada refers to one million units over the next five years. Yet the projection for this year is 169,000 units.

I recall the CMHC budget for 1969-70, which the minister set forth. There was to be a substantial increase in the support of low-income and moderate-income housing. The figures I have indicate that only 27,000 units were built last year, which amounts to only 7.9 per cent of all housing starts in Canada. The minister's projection for 1970 is 35,000, although he must know there are 100,000 people on the public housing waiting lists throughout Canada, and that in Toronto alone there are 18,000. His record with regard to starts is most discouraging. In respect of rents across Canada, the consumer price index indicates an increase of 5.5 points for the 1968-69 period, compared with an increase of 3.5 points in 1966-67 and 4.7 in 1967-68. It would be fair to say that the consumer price index for 1969-70 will rise above the 5.5 points increase of 1968-69. The minister has taken no action to request that the provinces impose rent controls, especially in the major cities throughout Canada, as a measure to fight inflation.

The NHA interest rate at the moment is 10.3 per cent. The conventional rate is 11 per cent, and the rate on second mortgages ranges between 15 per cent and 20 per cent. There has been a substantial drop in the prime rate which the banks charge, and yet CMHC has taken no action to bring down the interest rate charged by conventional lenders, or even by itself on its mortgages. People cannot buy homes at these exorbitant interest rates. With interest rates of 10 per cent and 11 per cent, and with mortgages ranging between $20,000 and $25,000, by the time a person has paid off the mortgage he has paid more than double its principal amount. When we think of a 35-year or 40-year mortgage being assumed by people 25 and 30 years of age, we realize that they will be 65 or 70 years of age before they make their final payment.

With regard to the financing of homes, we have experienced a substantial drop in mortgage financing by major lending institutions, insurance and financial companies. When the minister appeared before the committee he attempted to put the blame on pension funds, but he did not say that he would get tough and require that a percentage of investment portfolio moneys held by these companies be directed toward financing housing. He did not hesitate to change the 25-year mortgages to 5 years to give the financial institutions a decided advantage with regard to interest rates, nor did he hesitate to free mortgage interest rates. But when it comes to telling the banks and other financial institutions that they must direct a certain percentage of their investment portfolio to the financing of housing, he remains silent.

The record also indicates that home ownership for low-income Canadians appears to have been reduced in the last few years. The percentage of NHA mortgage borrowers in the lower-third income group dropped from 17.9 per cent in 1965 to 6.4 per cent in 1969. With regard to housing, apartments have composed the highest number of building units to date; 52.7 per cent of all starts in 1969 were apartments, compared with 38.3 per cent in 1966. In Toronto alone, of the housing starts 77.8 per cent were apartment dwellings, and in Montreal the figure was 80.7 per cent. This trend to high-density units corresponds neither to the preferences nor to the needs of most Canadians. All these factors have resulted in an emergency for people in all income categories and a serious problem for middle-income Canadians.

After spending a few minutes setting forth the record of the minister in charge of housing, I find it incumbent upon me to tell the House what we in the NDP would do if we were faced with the same problem. First, we would bring forth legislation dropping all mortgage interest rates to 6 per cent. This would help to curb inflation and would stimulate home buying. It would help to decrease rents across the country. We would then bring forth legislation, if necessary, to ensure a steady and sufficient flow of mortgage moneys so that homes may be built across the country; and we would give priority to certain types of homes.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Gilbert: I will be glad to answer any questions when I have finished my remarks. We would make sure that residential homes and apartments had priority over shopping centres, luxury apartments, gas stations and other commercial ventures throughout the country. This would be a step in the right direction toward solving the housing problem.

Second, we would ask the provinces to impose rent controls in major cities or areas where it is shown that high rents are contributing to inflation and making it difficult to obtain shelter at reasonable rents. Third, we would introduce new subsidy programs to assist people to purchase or rent homes. In 1969, people at all income levels spent only $20.9 million on public housing subsidies, and the federal contribution amounted to only $12.6 million. This amounts to about 60 cents per person.

Compare that with subsidies for family and youth allowances, which amounted to $29.12 million; subsidies for post secondary education, 13.59 million; railway subsidies, $5.73 million; dairy subsidies, $6.20 million; defence subsidies, $86.22 million. When you compare those subsidies with the 60 cents per person paid for housing, you realize what a low priority the government gives to assisting people with low incomes to obtain housing. It is without doubt a shameful record.

Our subsidies program would include housing allowances to individuals to help them pay their rent. It would include rent supplements to low-income residents in non-profit and co-operative housing. We would subsidize interest rates to all income families, including condominium and co-operative homes. Fourth, we would curb inflation in the cost of land and we would impose a capital gains tax on land speculation. We would acquire large tracts of land with provincial and municipal co-operation. When these lands were obtained, we would lease them and exercise more positive and direct control with regard to land use. If any appreciation in value was obtained as a result of the development of these lands, this appreciation would go to the public rather than to a private person or company. We would use a minimum of $100 million of the experimental $200 million fund that the minister set up as a start, to acquire these lands, and no sale of Crown lands would be made to private companies.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) questions with regard to the development of housing in land on the Kingston area waterfront. We were told that at this time a private developer by the name of Teron is interested in developing waterfront property in the Kingston area which should be used for public recreational purposes. I ask the minister to direct his attention toward helping people of Kingston develop these waterfront properties for public housing and for public recreational use.

I ask that he contact the municipal officials in Kingston, give them assistance for urban renewal projects in this area and allocate some of the $200 million of the experimental fund to develop this area. To sell this property, which really belongs to the public, to private interests would be indicative of a preference for individual profit rather than concern for the public of Kingston. I ask the minister to apply his immediate attention to this matter.

Fifth, we would develop a program of rehabilitation, because the home improvement loans program has failed as a result of high interest rates and the limitation on the amount that may be borrowed. We would make grants and low-interest loans to enable people to improve their homes. Sixth, we would have citizen participation in neighbourhood improvement organizations, in housing design and development, and in housing management. If we are to have participatory democracy, we must start at the grass roots. Through citizen participation in these areas, the principle of participatory democracy would be fostered.

Seventh, we would set up a separate ministry of housing and urban affairs, and we would have full consultation with all levels of government to assess housing needs. Thus we could allocate housing moneys to those areas of Canada which need housing most. We would give some direction with regard to the type of housing that should be built. We would also set up a Crown building corporation which would use all the newest ideas with regard to design and building techniques in the development of homes. We would stress the importance of building homes for the lower income groups and for senior citizens. In this way the Crown building corporation could give the lead to Canada with regard to co-operative housing.

I have come close to the end of my 20-minute allowance, Mr. Speaker. Much like the hon. member for Hamilton West, if I were to record all my criticisms of the government I would require two hours and 20 minutes. I hope the minister will implement some of our ideas with regard to meeting the housing crisis, and that he becomes more than a builder of paper houses, an apologist for the government and a smokescreen. I hope he shows the man of concern, compassion and knowledge that he really is, and that he makes a deep impression in the housing field. If he does not, he will have to transfer from this department as he did from the Department of Indian Affairs, except that next time he will not have a ministry; he will be relegated to the backbenches. I hope that does not happen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, it is true, as the motion points out, that recently there has been a decline in residential housing construction. This is a regrettable situation. I know the minister is aware of the problem and that he is trying to do something about it. It is very easy for opposition members, and for backbenchers in this party to be critical. I am sure the minister would like to see built all those houses that he talked about when he first assumed this portfolio. But it is not always as easy to get things done as it would appear; certainly, it is not as easy as it is to stand up in this House and criticize. However, I hope the minister will be able to deal with the problem and that before the House adjourns he will be able to make further announcements of steps to stimulate construction of residential housing.

As a representative from Montreal I would point out that the situation there is not nearly as bad as it is in other Canadian cities. I am not as familiar with other cities as I am with my own, but I understand the housing situation is much worse in Toronto, Ottawa and other places. Within the last three months I purchased a small home in my Montreal constituency. Prior to that I had been checking the Montreal housing market. The housing advertisements showed small homes for sale at a low price not equalled in many other places. There have been advertisements regarding housing developments on the south shore of Montreal, in Brossard, Candiac and elsewhere, where three-bedroom, fully contained houses are offered for sale at $14,000 with a $500 down payment. These are new houses.

I have in my hand the Montreal Star, and here I see an advertisement for a house for sale in my constituency. The price is $22,000. It is a six-room house, with playroom, 1½ bathrooms, fireplace, appliance kitchen and garden. They are asking $4,000 in cash, with a first mortgage at 7 per cent. As I say, the total price is $22,000. It is in Montreal west, one of the garden municipalities. Here is an advertisement for a two-year old home in my constituency. It has four bedrooms, 2½ baths, family room, fireplace, double garage, with a 9 per cent mortgage and a $9,000 down payment. Here we have a house in Boucherville, on the south shore of Montreal, with three bedrooms. The mortgage interest is 5½ per cent, with mortgage payments at $71.45 per month. There are other very good homes advertised. Here is a bungalow built in 1970, for $19,750, which has three bedrooms, playroom, fireplace and garage. These homes are in Montreal, close to the centre of the city. Many of these places are within 15 minutes' driving distance of downtown Montreal. They are residential areas. They are not what can be considered rundown areas. I realize this may be exceptional in Canada and that these conditions are not to be found in other places. However, this is not to say that there is not much to be done in Montreal.

The area in which Montreal is most lacking is that of public housing. The examples I have given are of homes which middle-income people could purchase with $4,000 or $3,000 down payments. I do not have the advertisements here from the Saturday papers, because it seems our library does not keep the Saturday papers, but I have seen the Saturday papers advertising $14,000 homes with $500 down payments. As I say, the lack in Montreal has been in the area of public housing. But in the last year and a half there has been a great improvement. Up until then the situation was deplorable. Montreal, the largest city in Canada, had only two public housing projects, proportionately away behind Toronto, Vancouver and other major cities. A year and a half ago the Montreal city administration finally realized the city was badly lacking in public housing and now homes are being built for low-income people. These are attractive homes and are being built properly.

[Mr. Allmand.]

Another phenomenon of the housing situation in Montreal is the high vacancy rate in apartments, not only in luxury apartments but in middle-class apartments. As has been pointed out by other hon. members, families, especially those with young children, do not prefer to live in apartments. Many of the apartment units in Montreal have fairly low rents, and there are many vacancies. They are in areas of Montreal which are not away out in the suburbs but which still are residential areas.

I understand that the minister will point out again that there has been an increase in investment in public housing, although there has been an increase in investment in public housing, although there has been a decline in housing starts. As a matter of fact, he has already announced a great shift in priorities, and the volume of public housing has increased. We who are interested in the problems of the cities were greatly encouraged by the minister's recent announcement concerning the possibility of the establishment of an urban council. As a representative from the province of Quebec, I was particularly pleased to note the statement made by Mr. Tessier, the provincial minister of municipal affairs, clearing the way for Quebec municipalities to consult directly with the federal government. Some opposition members have stated that they suggested this step many weeks and months ago. That is true, Mr. Speaker. Many of us have done the same, but the fact is that when we were trying to encourage constitutional change it was not appropriate to invade an area of provincial jurisdiction without provincial consent.

• (12:50 p.m.)

The present constitution gives over-all or comprehensive jurisdiction for municipalities to the provinces. No matter how much the federal government may have wanted to deal directly with the municipalities, it could not ignore the views and attitude of an important and significant province of Canada, such as Quebec. That is why it was very difficult to deal with certain municipalities directly, and I can appreciate the difficulty. Montreal withdrew from the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities four years ago, precisely because of pressure brought to bear by the government of Quebec. The announcement by the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing (Mr. Andras) and the Quebec minister of municipal affairs has greatly pleased me. Clearly, there has been a great change of policy in Quebec. Not only have there been statements in Quebec saying that there would be co-operation with respect to cities, but last week agreements were signed to establish the first national park in that province. The agreement signed with respect to regional economic expansion will do much for the city of Quebec and the region of Trois-Rivières. My colleague for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) is present in the House and no doubt will say something in this debate. There was also an agreement signed with respect to new industries in the Granby area, which also is most encouraging.

Speaking as a citizen of Montreal, I would now encourage the leaders of that city to rejoin the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. Since it is one of the most dynamic cities in Canada, it could contribute much to the federation, and it has much to gain. I think the city's counsel would be meaningful for the federation. I hope Montreal will soon take steps to rejoin the federation and participate in the proposed Canadian urban council.

The motion before us refers to the cost of homes and asks the government to take steps to reduce the total cost of individual homes for middle and low-income Canadians. The minister has announced that several research and pilot projects now under way are designed to do that. I have met architects from the Montreal area who are working on programs of this nature and who have participated in low-cost housing programs.

The task force on housing has said, as have many other people, that there is room for great improvement in this area. They mean that the technology of mass production in housing must be improved. Whereas the manufacturers of most consumer products have for a long time reaped the benefits of mass production and new technology, the house builders have lagged far behind. Whereas the price of items inside the home—items such as household appliances and furniture—have been greatly reduced in price over the past 30 or 40 years, the price of homes has not been reduced mainly because methods of mass production have not been used in the housing industry.

I do not think that we at the federal government level can find all the solutions to that problem. It is true that unions involved in house construction have not cleared the way for the implementation of new mass production techniques which could be used. If we are to introduce mass produced housing on a large scale, we must obtain the co-operation of a number of unions. Also, if we are to build great numbers of mass produced housing units, we must ask for changes in zoning regulations and building codes, and these are matters which fall under provincial and municipal jurisdiction.

We shall also need co-operation to curb land speculation and to build up public land banks for housing purposes. There must be co-operation in the provision of more and better serviced land on which large housing projects can be built. I know that portions of the agreements signed by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) with Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Quebec provide for the establishment of serviced land with sewers and other facilities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Bell: Let the hon. member finish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I shall finish with the point I had begun making. I thank hon. members for allowing me a few extra minutes. I was saying that agreements which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion signed with several provinces provide for the establishment of serviced land to be used for municipal purposes and housing. I think this is a step in the right direction. In conclusion, in common with the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) I regret the decline in residential housing starts and hope that the government will be able to do more to promote the expansion of such housing. I know the minister is aware of this problem. I feel that he is doing his very best. I should like him to be able to carry out the request made in this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate on a subject of great urgency and importance. I begin by expressing surprise that when the mover of the motion and the first speaker for the New Democratic Party spoke this morning, stressing the importance of this matter and putting forward certain proposals, no spokesman for the government felt it was necessary to respond. I am not insisting that the minister should speak right away. However, it seems to reflect the attitude of the government toward this House and this subject. It is hardly in keeping with the situation that exists with regard to housing in Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is not necessary to go over the ground already covered with regard to the housing situation in Canada. It has been clearly established that housing starts were substantially down for the first five months of this year. Housing construction is down approximately 43 per cent. It is down with regard to all parts of the country. The month of May was even worse than previous months. There has been a crisis developing with regard to housing in every province in Canada. In Saskatchewan, housing starts are down 90.4 per cent. In the great province of Ontario, one of the industrial centres of Canada, the figure is down 48 per cent. In the city of Windsor housing starts are down 80 per cent, and in the city of Toronto 53 per cent. The prospects for the next few months are no better, based on information available with regard to applications for new loans.

A few weeks ago, when the situation seemed very serious, the minister estimated there would be 180,000 housing starts in 1970. Is this still the forecast of the minister? If not, how many housing starts does the minister now expect? What is the minister's target? I think the House is entitled to know his expectations. What does the minister propose to do to achieve this target? So far this year the course has been steadily downward. We must speak frankly in situations such as this. The estimate with regard to the number of housing starts can only be the result of horrible forecasting or callous disregard of the implications. I do not want to accuse the minister of callously disregarding the implications because I do not think he is that kind of man. Therefore, I must accuse those responsible for forecasting for the government of a very high degree of incompetence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: I cannot believe that even this government would have sat back had they foreseen what was going to happen and what has happened. This is a very important subject because of the effects on people seeking shelter. It is also important in a number of other respects. It is important with respect to the major fight this government claims it is contending, the fight against inflation. The cost of houses has risen between 55 per cent and 60 per cent since 1965, far exceeding the rise in salaries or wages. The cost of housing is one of the leading components in the consumer price index. It has already been pointed out that this index has gone up and up. In the month of May the consumer price index rose .2 points and the cost of housing rose .7 points.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Moreover, housing is one of the most heavily weighted items in the consumer price index. Clearly, therefore, the cost of housing is a most important factor in inflation. The increase in the cost of housing is reflected in the demands for wage and salary increases; there is no need to elaborate on this point. While we must agree that in Canada, generally speaking, inflation is not due to a shortage of goods or to too many dollars chasing too few goods, the area of housing is plainly one in which shortage of supply is reponsible for the steady rise in cost and, by extension, for the steady increase in the cost of living. In other words, this is an area in which shortage of supply is an inflationary factor and in which a policy of restraint is the worst thing in the world a government could contribute toward reducing inflationary pressures.

Obviously, an important part of any successful anti-inflation fight in Canada is to increase the supply of housing. The supply of housing must be increased, and we must get rid of the tax on building materials. Increased flexibility must be attached to the making of loans for the construction of housing units of all kinds, and this must be done on a regular basis, not on an intermittent basis.

The minister has admitted that the government's policies of restraint have been a substantial factor in the disaster which has taken place this year with regard to housing. He has admitted that the change in taxation policy adopted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in 1969 as far as life insurance companies are concerned has affected their willingness or ability to advance money in the housing market. He has admitted that the tight money policy followed by the government has placed the banks in a position where they have been unable to move strongly into this area. The policy which the government has followed is, therefore, inflationary as far as its effect on housing is concerned, and this is bound to be reflected in the demands of the working man for salary increases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Now, in the month of June, figures for the first five months of the year are before us and they show some of the results of the government's disastrous housing policy. The Economic Council of Canada had the following to say in its Sixth Annual Review last September. I will read at some length because I believe it sums up the whole question very well.

> In view of the large rise in the total housing stock required to 1975 under conditions of rapidly rising levels of new household formation, it is essential that a high rate of new residential construction be maintained, and that there should be no major setback in this sector, such as occurred in 1966. Indeed, over the next year or two, it is particularly important that a very high rate of new housing completions be achieved to increase the relatively low vacancy rates now prevailing in various major Canadian cities. This is one essential requirement for achieving a moderation in the recent very high rates of advance in shelter costs. In these circumstances it is vitally important especially under the financial conditions of today, that the seasonally adjusted annual rate of new housing starts be carefully monitored month by month. If there should be any clear sign that new housing starts are falling off in a significant way, possible remedial actions should be quickly considered. We are now in a situation in which a major housing crisis could develop within a very short period of time.

That is what the Economic Council of Canada said last fall, and I think it is not unfair to say that the government seems to have completely ignored the warning. Yet this is a government which prides itself on efficiency and says that everything is happening as planned. It has bungled, despite warnings from very high places. I do not like to say this, but I think it is true. The only explanation I can find—and I do not think it applies to the minister in question today—is that the government has been so set on getting at labour and picking a fight with it that it has failed to take seriously the developing crisis in housing.

I have been advocating a fair set of guidelines for this country for the past two years. Six per cent is not fair; it cannot be called fair when an increase of 10 per cent occurs in other places. But the government is insisting on a 6 per cent limitation. We need an incomes policy, but hon. gentlemen opposite have made it very difficult to achieve such a policy in Canada, with public support, because of the way in which they have been behaving.

What is urgently needed as part of any anti-inflation program is a serious attack upon the human misery which has resulted from the disastrous fall-off in housing which we have experienced this year. If imaginative measures were called for in 1969, then certainly bold and imaginative measures are needed today. The matter is urgent because the government has allowed to happen the very thing which the Economic Council warned should be avoided at virtually any cost.

It is high time the minister rose to tell us what his plans are to make more money available for housing at lower cost, whether the government intends to re-examine the level of CMHC loans and make more of them available, and what it will do to end the policy of turning on and off the amount of loan capital available for housing construction—a policy which is disastrous not only for housing starts at any time but in its disruptive effect by weakening the ability of the industry to respond again in a satisfactory way.

I ask him to tell us what the government intends to do about the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and what action it proposes to take to remove the unsettling effects of the white paper proposals as far as they concern home ownership. I call upon the minister to answer these questions. I do not ask him to explain what has happened. I know what has happened: the government has bungled; the government has allowed housing starts to settle to a disastrously low rate. This has happened as a direct result of government policies. The government must accept full responsibility for what has occurred.

• (2:20 p.m.)

A number of suggestions have been made from the opposition side of the House. More money should be made available for housing, and the cost of the money lowered. Let the government reduce the cost of building materials by eliminating the sales tax. The problem of housing is a long-term one, but I address myself this afternoon particularly to the immediate emergency in which the country finds itself in the field of housing as the direct result of the policies of this government. I ask the minister to get off his seat and to tell the House and the country what he proposes to do about the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before recognizing the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), is the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) rising on a point of order, or to ask a question?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Stanfield: Certainly.

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. gentleman indicated that for the last two years he has been recommending a fair system of guidelines, and he rejected 6 per cent as an appropriate rate. What rate does the hon. member regard as appropriate for these guidelines?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have not rejected 6 per cent in principle, or in any other way, as an appropriate rate. What I reject is the way the government has gone about the whole question. In view of the way it has proceeded, how can the government expect anybody to accept the package it proposes when it is so obviously unfair in the circumstances? I simply say to my hon. friend that the guidelines package, to be acceptable, must be fair. I would ask him at some time to try to convince me or any fair-minded person that what the government proposed recently is fair in the circumstances and does carry conviction.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, from reading the motion, it is easy, I think, to realize that the mover, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), is good-natured, mature and broad-minded. He could have said, with some malice not often heard from him, that this House wants to blame the government. But far from doing so, he proposes that, and I quote:

> This House declares that the government must, in view of the disastrous decline in residential housing construction, announce before the summer recess new measures to stimulate a signifiant expansion in the number of housing units being built, to reduce the total cost of individual homes for middle and low income Canadians, and to reduce or eliminate unemployment in the construction trades.

At first glance, the motion seems mild. In fact, it refrains from blaming the government too strongly, and I guess that the mover, even if he sits in the opposition, realizes that the housing shortage is a problem for which not only the government is responsible.

There are several factors. For instance, the scarcity of available capital, the rise in interest rates—for which the government is not necessarily responsible—and the disastrous strikes which occurred in Quebec when certain labour unions refused to co-operate with the government. All these factors played a part in the economic slowdown in the construction field.

When the mover asks the minister to announce measures, I have the impression that he will not have to wait too long and that he might learn a great deal this afternoon because we on the government side know that the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing (Mr. Andras) is very active and deeply concerned about the housing construction problem in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to relate certain recent decisions to the construction problem.

First of all, I would like to thank the government, and especially the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), for having designated Trois-Rivières as a special area. The latter recently announced measures which will improve the substructure of my area and therefore will facilitate not only the establishment of new businesses but also the construction of new houses.

I am particularly grateful to the government for having taken this decision which was welcomed by the population. It had the effect of a shot in the arm for our economy. As everyone knows, activity in the building trade is a sign of general prosperity. That is why we are all in favour of incentives for construction. The minister could give more details than I could and he will be able to do so when he speaks this afternoon. I would also like to comment the recent statements made by the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs. He said that he was hoping for better co-operation among the three levels of government.

This is not a new request, but I am pleased to note that for the first time in several years, when we are all wishing for an improved climate among the three levels of government, the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs, who is a former mayor and president of the Union of Quebec Municipalities and who is quite aware of the problem, has just made the statement that the Canadian Federation of Mayors has been asking for for several years.

I will remind the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that in 1963, while I was president of the Canadian Federation of Mayors, I had had the honour of being received by him at his office in Halifax. I had been given the responsibility of putting before him before a meeting of all the Canadian premiers this request of the Canadian Federation of Mayors for a conference on municipal problems.

Obviously, we all know that municipal affairs fall under provincial jurisdiction but we do not think it is interfering with the latter if Canadian mayors are allowed to meet in order to exchange views and decide on the best ways to play, with the help of the other two governments, the part assigned to them within their jurisdiction. They are not forbidden either to consult American or European mayors. I had myself on several occasions the opportunity to do so. It is, I think, an enriching experience for everybody, and it does not in any way infringe upon provincial jurisdiction.

I think it is time we should stop considering mayors and members of municipal councils as not qualified in this field. For my part, I believe that the three levels of government are important. In fact, not one of them should be considered as inferior to the others, but the municipal government, usually regarded as such, is probably nearer to the people and in a better position to get the feel of public opinion.

I am happy about the attitude of the government of the province of Quebec. With that kind of understanding and broad-mindedness, we will manage to solve problems such as, for instance, that of building enough houses to please everyone, and that of unemployment which we all deplore and which is inherent in the inflation period that we are going through.

In that connection, I should like to remind the House that, some years ago, I introduced a motion that advocated the setting up of an intergovernmental advisory commission similar to that in the United States. Indeed, an intergovernmental advisory commission, made up of representatives of the federal, State and municipal governments, exists in that country. Its members meet to compare notes and see what the best solutions might be to various problems such as the housing problem.

To my mind, what the minister has just proposed strongly resembles the setting up of an intergovernmental advisory commission which would enable us to remove the obstacles, fill the gaps and achieve better understanding between the three levels of government which must join in their efforts to solve such major problems as that of housing.

I congratulate the minister on his statement in Halifax, and I am sure the majority, if not all the mayors in Canada, and those in my province in particular, will accept his proposal and participate in the joint efforts of the representatives of the municipal, provincial and federal administrations, to solve our problems.

Still with regard to the need for new housing starts and consultation between the people involved, if we want to solve problems as serious as those—I should like to inform the House about an informal organization that just sprang up amongst hon. members about a year ago already. In fact, certain members, some of whom had been mayors in the past and had worked within municipal and provincial associations or with the Canadian Federation of Mayors, decided to join together in order to provide a link between the municipalities and the provincial and federal governments. About a score of us meet informally three or four times a year. In my opinion, all the members who were mayors in the past rejoice as I do about the announcement made by the minister in Halifax and the stand taken by the Quebec Minister for Municipal Affairs. In fact, we notice already better co-operation between those in charge who have to join together if a solution to the construction problem is to be found.

There have been complaints about the fact that the high cost of construction might explain why this industry is in the doldrums. But, I think that this is relative, and that the provinces have a responsibility in this field. And I could give some examples. In fact, in my own riding, some builders sell for $10,500, $11,000 or $15,000 five-room houses, approved by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. But, I have seen the same houses sold for $16,500, $17,000 or $17,500 in Toronto while in Montreal they sell for $14,000, $14,500 or $15,000.

So there is an element of relativeness which would come, I believe, under the provincial responsibility rather than under that of the federal government and here again the co-operation we are endeavouring to establish at all government levels could help to solve that problem.

I approve of the representations made by some opposition members to the government about the removal of the 11 per cent tax, which increases housing costs. I admit that this problem goes probably beyond the responsibility of the minister in charge of housing and that it comes instead under that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who finds good arguments for upholding that 11 per cent tax. But I do not think it would be betraying my party to join those who ask the minister in charge of housing to seek some way of removing it.

In connection with housing, I should like to deal with a problem that does not come directly under the Parliament's jurisdiction. As a member of Parliament, I think I may be allowed to use this forum in order that my remarks may be carried further than if I were addressing myself to a particular individual. There is in Quebec at this time a trend according to which the Municipal Commission of Quebec wants to make it compulsory for municipalities to auction available land that could be sold to people who want to build houses.

I believe this is a ludicrous and foolish measure which is working against the objectives that we should have, namely, keeping the cost of housing as low as possible, because if a municipality wants to sell a few hundred lots to people who want to build decent homes at a reasonable price, it is obvious that the auction sale will make prices go up. The large building companies could make higher bids than the small ones, which would contribute to worsen the housing crisis that we now deplore.

I should like to ask the Quebec authorities and the authorities in all other provinces where such a situation might prevail, to make it a rule to sell their land as cheap as possible.

In my municipality, for instance, some lots sold at 10 or 15 cents per square foot. The price was the same for everyone and the rule was: first come, first served. The lots were reasonably priced for small wage-earners. Now, it is ridiculous, unsound and silly to compel municipalities to auction their land.

Some landowners want to buy slopes bordering on their property and of no use whatsoever. They wish only to help their municipality. They ask that the land be sold to them for $1 and other considerations, conditional on proper maintenance. In such cases, bidding is absolutely ridiculous.

Basically, we are almost all in agreement on the substance of the said motion. Indeed, everybody wants to put construction back on its feet. However, there is no unanimity when the opposition seeks to hold the government responsible for the present situation. The fact that certain things do not come to the attention of the government is overlooked. Perhaps opposition members forget that the minister in charge of housing in Canada is actively concerned with this problem. Government members know it, for nearly every day, they have an opportunity to discuss the matter with the minister. That is why I do not hesitate to share the views of the opposition members who have shown their wisdom in avoiding to use the expression "blame the government". The opinion is simply expressed that the minister should announce something new. I have the impression that were the minister to mention what he has done these last weeks, he would have many new things to announce, and the opposition would be satisfied. For once, there would be perfect agreement between all parties in the House. Further, co-operation similar to that which is being initiated between the three levels of government would allow us to hope that all our problems, even the most severe ones, will be solved in the near future.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in 15 minutes it is impossible to cover the subject before us. Many of the details have already been dealt with. I want to start by saying in the presence of the minister that a simple fact is that in the field of housing and urban affairs this government has fiddled and diddled for the last two and more years, with disastrous consequences for Canada and for the people of Canada.

This minister, like the minister before him, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), and like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) so often, has developed a rather disarming habit of sounding cheerful about the situation. The minister always expresses concern for and great sympathy with the disadvantaged people. Indeed, he is always full of concern and pain, but completely empty of policy and action. His concern and sympathy will not build homes. They will not provide accommodation for the disadvantaged people of Canada. However sincere he may be—and I do not doubt his sincerity—the fact is that for years now the housing situation in Canada has gone from bad to worse. The government has stood still without taking any of the steps that might have enabled it to improve the situation, so that every year we are in a worse situation than we were in the year before.

Mr. Speaker, all of us in the opposition—I know I am, and I am sure all my colleagues in the New Democratic Party are—are aware of the fact that the housing problem in a sense is a universal one. There are very few cities in very few countries of the world that have been able to keep up adequately and quickly enough with the rapid urbanization which has been taking place in the last several decades in all the industrialized centres and countries of the world. No one can expect this or any other government to solve the problem overnight, because it is a cumulative problem which results from the rapid urbanization which is more rapid in Canada than anywhere else.

It is a problem which cannot be solved except in the course of some years. Perhaps it cannot be completely solved except in the course of a generation. It is precisely because of this fact that I say to the minister, with all the seriousness of which I am capable, that the fact that there has been an accumulation of decades of mismanagement in the past, together with the fact that this is the result of rapid urbanization which grows year after year, and the fact that it might be years before we can solve the housing problem, is all the more reason this government should be soundly condemned for not having taken the first steps toward a solution.

No one expects miracles from the minister, but one did expect from the Prime Minister, the swinger of 1968, and from this government some kind of modern approach to this problem, some recognition of the urgency of the problem. We expected some steps which would indicate that we were making at least a modest start on licking the problem of the shortage of housing, of the slums in the cities, of the deteriorating homes in which people have to live, of the overcrowding, of little children playing in the streets because of the absence of parks and playgrounds in our cities, of the traffic jams in the cities, of the air and water pollution and of all those things about which government spokesmen have sounded lyrical and poetical for years now. That is why I for one was forced to say to the conference of mayors and municipalities, at which I had the pleasure of speaking last Tuesday at lunch, that it seems to me these problems are so overwhelming now that they have become almost entirely unmanageable.

The failure of this minister to do the least that should be done with respect to solving these problems, his failure to take some fundamental approaches in this respect, makes the problems worse every day. It is not as if this or the former government were not fully aware of this problem. I re-read only this morning, in preparation for my comments now, a speech which the former Prime Minister, Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, made to a federal-provincial conference on housing and urban development held in Ottawa on December 11, 1967. At that time Mr. Pearson said:

> Although every level of government has had its failures in this increasingly vital area of our national and local life, fortunately we still have time in Canada to correct our mistakes and to avoid repeating them in the future.

It is a pity that the present Prime Minister was perhaps absent when Mr. Pearson made the statement, because we still had a little time then. We still have a little time now, but we are not correcting our mistakes and apparently we will not avoid repeating them in the future. On the contrary, we continue to compound them and to make the situation worse. Mr. Pearson in the speech to which I have referred also made the following comment which I draw to the attention of the minister and of the Prime Minister. Having said earlier that there were difficulties and limitations as to jurisdiction, he said:

> But the urban environment is now of such fundamental importance to every aspect of Canadian life, including the health of the whole nation and its economy, that local problems in all areas of the country collectively present a national problem which clearly concerns the federal government.

This was said on December 11, 1967, and I am certain that if I looked through Hansard and if I had the time to re-read speeches made by Mr. Pearson and other people in the years before 1967, I would find exactly the same kind of statement—that our program until now has been a failure, that we still have some time to correct our failures, and that all of this is a national concern and a national responsibility. But as I look at the picture in 1970 as compared with 1967, I see that the housing situation now is worse. The price of our houses has gone up, our rents have gone up and the total urban picture has become worse since December 11, 1967. This government, as is apparent from what we see all around us, stands clearly condemned for total failure in the important national area of housing and urban affairs.

It is not as if construction has not been going on. You cannot visit any city in this country without seeing construction taking place, unless there is a construction strike. There is not a city in this country—and I have been to many cities in recent months—where you do not see luxury apartment buildings going up, entirely unnecessary office buildings and unnecessary and redundant commercial buildings going up, whether they be shopping plazas or service stations at some corner, the only corner that is left at the intersection, all the other corners already being occupied by gas stations or bank buildings. It is not as if construction was not going on in Canada, but in social terms it is totally unnecessary construction.

If the funds, the effort, the labour and the resources which are spent in this field of socially unnecessary and less than useful construction at this particular time were turned over to the construction of public housing, to the rehabilitation of old homes, and planning and beautifying the cities, we would not be in the serious difficulties in which we now find ourselves.

I do not make any apology for emphasizing the social philosophy I and my colleagues have often expressed in this House. Our present housing crisis is one of the most visible results of the total failure to organize our society and our economy, of our inclination to leave it to private developers—as I said to the conference of mayors and municipalities in Halifax—to shape our cities, because in the long run they are the ones who do so. They decide what kind of construction they will undertake and they make the decision as to what kind of plan they want, even though municipalities frequently have plans and zoning by-laws. As I said to the conference, I do not know of any single case where the objectives of the municipal plan have not been bent, and perhaps even abandoned as a result of the pressures and the lobbying of the private interests which conflict with the public goals which the municipal councils and planning agencies have set for the city.

We have permitted the private developers to do this. I do not condemn them; they are playing according to the rules as they know them and they are interested in profit, which is why they are in business. They are interested in a situation which will maximize that profit. But I do condemn government at all levels for its failure to demand that our cities be planned, that the people in the cities, rather than the private developers, have something to say about the shape of our urban environment, and that we set priorities for the use of capital and resources for construction.

Top priority should be given to public housing. The second priority should be given to area development and rehabilitation, and the third priority should be given to low-cost housing for the lower and middle-income people. Only when these priorities in construction are met should we permit the building of banks, office buildings and high-rise luxury apartment houses. These are the priorities that we should set for ourselves in Canada. This is the only way in which this problem can be tackled. It will not be solved in a year or two, but it should be tackled so that the people can have hope that it will be solved, that the quality of our urban life will not be undermined and that the hopelessness of a great many of our low-income people can be removed and some hope given them.

I think my time is about up, so I will draw my remarks to a conclusion. I know that in the files in my office—and I am sure in the files of every hon. member of every party—there are literally hundreds of letters written over the last few years by old people, people with families, young people who cannot afford to pay the rent they are forced to pay, who cannot buy the homes they want to buy, who have nothing left to eat after they have paid the rent, who are on welfare, who are on a long waiting list for public housing and who are totally desperate about their position with regard to accommodation.

These are the facts, Mr. Speaker. I join the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in demanding from the minister not merely an expression of his concern, because we accept the fact that he is concerned. We demand not merely an expression of his sympathy, because we know him to be a generous and sympathetic person. We ask that he not waste any of his time telling the House he is as concerned as everybody else—we take that concern for granted—or telling the House he is sympathetic, because we take that as given. We demand that he rise from his seat and tell this House and the people of Canada what he will start to do tomorrow to meet this urgent and overwhelming problem in our cities.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Those are interesting challenges, Mr. Speaker, and I can understand and feel the concern—I use the word of the hon. gentleman who preceded me and who talked about his earnestness. Perhaps we all have words to which we stick very faithfully.

There is reason for the concern expressed by hon. members, particularly about the low level of housing starts in May. In fact, if anyone were justified in projecting to the end of the year the May rate of housing starts, or anything close to it, the implication would be that we would get less than 140,000 units this year, and this would also probably include in the same projection only 15,000 starts in low-income housing. Certainly a low level of achievement of that nature would justify the most profound criticism of and concern for the government's policies in this area. But I say with the most deliberate emphasis that there is no justification for such a dire projection.

Dealing with the month of May, the fact is that there were several factors combining to yield the low level of housing starts, but they will not persist.

Mr. Orlikow: How about April and February?

Mr. Andras: I referred to these factors briefly in the House yesterday, but I think they will bear repetition. First, there was a temporary decline in low-income housing starts. In April, starts of these dwellings had totalled 2,488 units but in May they totalled only 896 units. This kind of fluctuation has to be expected from time to time, reflecting the combination of decisions about the start of construction of low-income housing projects by provincial housing agencies and by non-profit or low-income housing corporations. I may say that there were events taking place in some of the larger provinces during May that gave rise to their preoccupation with other measures. But this decline in activity in May did not reflect any cutback in commitments for this kind of construction on the part of the federal government.

In fact, at the beginning of that month over 13,000 loans were approved for these dwellings, for which construction had not yet started. For your information, Mr. Speaker, and that of hon. members, this was almost three times the number committed to this program at that time a year ago. I can assure you that those financial commitments, while not resulting in starts in the month of May, will not go to waste. If ever there appeared any danger of that, of course we could quickly reallocate them and find many other willing takers for the funds we are providing. So this activity will recover. But I do expect, and I think we should all face it, that the starts of such dwellings will fluctuate from month to month. I think everyone should face this fact.

The second of the special circumstances was the impact of construction stoppages in Quebec and British Columbia. The Quebec stoppage is already over, I believe. I do not pretend to know what will be the future course of the B.C. situation, but the work stoppage will not last forever. When it ends there will be a catching up on the construction that has been delayed, for which the land has been acquired and for which the financing and all other preparatory work has been completed.

The decline in starts of low-income housing and the impact of construction strikes are estimated to have accounted for about three-quarters of the decline in the rate of housing starts from April to May. The rest of that decline was the lagged result of the decline in mortgage lending which was under way in the second half of 1969 and which continued into the first quarter of 1970. But that decline in mortgage lending activity has already reversed itself, and had in fact done so before the May housing starts data became available.

Institutional mortgage lending under the National Housing Act reached its low point of a seasonally adjusted annual rate of some 21,400 units in March. That rate doubled in April to 42,800 units, and was at a rate of over 50,000 units a year in the month of May. Those are mortgage commitments, and they do not immediately, at once, result in starts. For conventional mortgage lending activity the data are a little less current because they do not come under the NHA statistical apparatus. But the data do show a reversal in trend in March, with the upturn continuing in April, bringing mortgage loan commitments from an annual rate of 33,700 units in February to 46,800 units in April, and I would expect that there have been further increases. I would also expect that these trends in mortgage lending activity will have a discernable effect on housing starts not later than July.

What of the rest of the year? First, as to starts of low income housing units, I expect these to be about double last year's level. In 1969 commitments were issued to provincial housing agencies and to non-profit and low-rental housing corporations for 27,000 housing units for low-income people. That is totally apart from a significant amount of hostel accommodation. So we were committed to 27,000 units in 1969. Construction actually got under way on 16,000 units, because the commitment the previous year had been considerably less, and that left a carryover into this year of about 11,000 units.

This year, Mr. Speaker, as I have been and as I continue to be proud of, the capital budget of CMHC provides for about 35,000 units of this kind of accommodation for low-income people, again quite apart from the hostel accommodation provided for elderly people and university students. Assuming the same proportion of carryover—and I think that is a reasonable assumption—this year we should get actual starts of at least 30,000 low-income housing units and, as I said, we have actual commitments in excess of that, beyond the 35,000 limit.

As to the private housing market, which has been affected by monetary and fiscal policies, I have already indicated that there has been a decided upturn in institutional mortgage lending which will have an effect on housing starts. In light of the discussions that I have asked my officials of CMHC to conduct with the mortgage lenders as to their investment intentions or expectations, and certainly recognizing that in a period such as we are now going through there is some hesitation in the market, I believe that even a cautious view can anticipate some further improvement in mortgage lending activity for new house building. I expect, in fact, that that improvement will take us to a rate of housing starts in the fourth quarter of this year that will be close to at least 200,000 units.

• (3:00 p.m.)

It was on the basis of those expectations about a week or so ago that I gave a committee of the House an estimate based on current statistics of between 180,000 and 185,000 housing starts for the full year. I also said that I hoped that events would show me to have been unduly cautious in that projection. It must be obvious to hon. members that that estimate was made prior to my hearing about the low level of housing starts in May. But, having examined all the facts and the important statistics of May, for the reasons I have already given I must say that the forecast I referred to is unaffected by the particular circumstances of that one month. While I feel quite confident about these expectations, I have had enough experience here and in other places to take all forecasts, including my own, with a grain or two of salt.

Mr. Gilbert: So have we.

[Mr. Andras.]

Mr. Andras: Quite apart, therefore, from the discussions which I have had from time to time with my cabinet colleagues on these matters, I have, in concert with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), caused a committee of senior officials from the Department of Finance, the Bank of Canada and from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to be formed several weeks ago, and this is keeping a keen eye on the progress of house building and mortgage lending activity. And if for any reason things appear likely not to turn out the way I have been suggesting, the warning lights will flash and consideration will have to be given to remedial action.

The major component, Mr. Speaker, in the government's housing target for the year 1970 is to see that commitments are made for low income housing units for close to 35,000 dwelling units, together with a significant number of hostel units. That target is deliberately directed to where we believe the real need to be.

I have pointed out elsewhere that this target, together with the commitments for low income housing achieved in 1969, add up to more than 75 per cent of all such activity for low income people in the 20-odd years prior to the beginning of 1969; while that may not be enough and I should like to see more done, I doubt if it indicates that no start has been made in the solution of this significant problem.

The other part of the government's housing concern for 1970—

An hon. Member: Twice zero is still zero.

Mr. Andras: —is to see that the private market for new housing operates as effectively as possible, and contributes as much as it can to the production of new housing. Surely, in the circumstances the most effective contribution we can make to that is to see that inflationary forces are abated. I am confident that the combination of public action directed to the housing needs of low income people, together with an effectively operating private market, will yield the 1 million new housing units that this government is committed to over the five-year period. That does not mean, and never has meant, that there is a commitment to build a constant average of 200,000 housing units in each of those five years.

Mr. Gilbert: That is what we were given to understand.

Mr. Andras: The trend will be up, in line with the growth in householders, starting from a rate below 200,000 units per year and reaching above that by the end of the five-year period. I think it is only common sense to recognize that variations from any precise figure in any given year can be expected. Despite statements by some hon. members, there has never been a commitment to a target of 250,000 units per year. No responsible body, least of all the Economic Council, has ever suggested that 250,000 starts per year represents a feasible or in some sense absolutely "required" housing target for 1970, and I submit it is no contribution to the improvement of public policy relating to housing to suggest otherwise.

Mr. Orlikow: And what about Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Andras: The same thing applies there. The objective of 250,000 housing starts per year is extremely desirable and represents a degree of perfection that no country in the world has attained in the short space of five years. I would love to do this; hon. members would love to do it and the government would love to do it, but it would mean the abandonment of other priorities which, perhaps on other emergency debates on other days, hon. members would say ought to be the current top priority of this government on that day.

Mr. Orlikow: That does not let the government off the hook.

Mr. Andras: I should like to close by saying that the government's housing policy and actions are set within a longer time frame than a month or statistical variations arising from month to month. While these variations are important in giving us trend information, and require examination, which we are giving them, this matter should really be looked at in a longer time frame, and I think all hon. members will in the end recognize that we will reach our objectives as indicated in the throne speech last fall.

Mr. Stanfield: And in the end we will all be dead.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am glad I heard the comments of the minister in charge of housing on the motion the official opposition brought forward today.

We were expecting an answer offering a solution to the extremely serious housing problems of this country. We well recall that last year towards the same date the government brought forward in the House Bill C-192 on housing. The bill's purports were good, but to date it has not achieved the goal the government had set for it. For the past year, and this year more than ever, we have been aware that Canada's housing problems are still the same if not worse than last year.

The minister has again expressed the pious wishes we have been hearing since 1968. Two years have gone by and here is what the minister said in May 1969 in his statement on Bill C-192, which I have here:

> Quite simply, there are more families and non-family households in this country than there are dwellings, and too many dwellings are inadequate.

• (3:10 p.m.)

What a discovery!

> —and too many dwellings are inadequate.
> It also means that many people are living in substandard housing, and face the resulting threat to health, comfort and self-esteem. There are many families that are overcrowded because the accommodation is too small for their needs.
> The housing problem...is expressed in terms of deprivation, suffering, congestion and squalor... "families that do not keep their own household", "dwellings in need of major repairs", "dwellings lacking running water and flush toilets and without private bathing facilities"—

And the "litany" goes on that deplores the lot of thousands of Canadians who are without proper housing at this time.

We remember also quite well that at that time, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), chairman of the task force that investigated housing problems in Canada and travelled about 25,000 miles to that effect, submitted a report to this House and eventually had to resign as minister in charge of housing.

And in the May 1969 issue of the newspaper Le Travailleur Canadien, one could read this:

> The hon. Paul Hellyer resigned at the end of April from his office as Minister of Transport—
> Just before he resigned, Mr. Hellyer disclosed a new surrender of the government before the powers of money.

A few moments ago, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said that housing problems in Canada today are everybody's responsibility except the federal government's.

Capital is scarce in Canada for housing projects. Who is responsible for putting money in circulation if not the federal government? It is its responsibility and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, who is no longer in his seat, said that the lack of capital in Canada was attributable to everybody, except to the government which is responsible for it.

He also said that the rise in interest rate is one of the reasons why there is a housing shortage in Canada and that everybody was to be blamed for it, except the present government.

He also mentioned that the 11 per cent tax on building materials constitutes one of the direct causes of the problem. He indicated that he was favouring its removal. However, I remember quite well that several proposals to remove this tax were brought before the House but the hon. member for Trois-Rivières always voted against them. Are the answers of the government side serious?

Last year, there appeared in the March 5, 1969 issue of La Presse an article, which reported the following, and I quote:

The CNTU of Montreal proposes that a vast public housing sector be set up in Quebec—

For that purpose, the CNTU set up a committee of tenants which it called for the occasion the Tenants' Association. That committee presented a report from which I would like to quote:

The report points out that estimated Canadian needs in housing units to be built per year vary between 170,000 and 200,000. In Montreal, between 35,000 and 40,000 would be needed. The Tenants' Association states that in its opinion, 100,000 low-price units would be needed in Montreal while governments have built less than 1,000 to replace the 14,332 which have been demolished.

It is estimated that the number of over-populated housing units in the Montreal area is 90,903.

The Tenants' Association also conducted a survey on housing costs in Canada as opposed to other countries of the world. It reported as follows:

Moreover, it is found that, in general, Quebecers on the whole pay more for housing...than in several other countries of the world, that is 13.3 per cent of the family budget as compared, for instance, to 9.9 per cent in Sweden, 7.4 per cent in Italy and 5.5 per cent in France.

Those figures were published by the Tenants' Association. Nonetheless, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières this afternoon would have us believe that the housing situation in Canada was one of the brightest compared to the conditions prevailing in other countries.

In its editorial of January 8, 1969, Télévision de Québec (Canada) Ltée had this to say about interest rates and housing:

It is surely not by increasing its interest rates on loans from 8½ to 9 per cent, as the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation did on January 1, that the federal government will encourage Canadians to build. In addition, it is not by maintaining its 12 per cent tax on building materials that the government will encourage contractors to undertake building projects.

The following appeared in La Presse on January 4, 1969, and I quote:

The former president of the Housebuilders' Association, of the Montreal district, Mr. Albert Gagnon, expressed the hope that all builders will refuse, as he does, to build houses as long as the interest rate of 9⅜ per cent on mortgage loans will remain in force.

In a brief submitted to the Association, Mr. Gagnon said that the rate was prohibitive.

The spokesman of the Montreal builders before the Hellyer Commission points out, in his submission, six consequences which, according to him, would result from the increased interest rate.

It must be noted that the six effects mentioned have been felt in the past year in the Canadian economy, mostly in the housing field. The first effect of the increased rate was the following:

an increase in the rates now being charged by all loan companies.

This followed the increase in the mortgage interest rate by the federal government. I continue the quotation:

The rate of conventional loans could easily reach 11 per cent or more;

The rate is now 11 per cent in most Canadian areas.

Therefore, his prediction came true. He goes on to say:

—a sharp slowdown in new housing starts resulting in a housing shortage:

This effect has also been evident in the past year. I continue the quotation:

—a spiralling increase in unemployment, a situation quite opposite to a policy geared to the "just society";

A society "just for fun" has been advocated or, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, a "just society." He did not say for whom! Two years after his coming to power and thanks to the publicity he has enjoyed so far, we realize that we now have a society "just for him". The quotation goes on:

—rent increases which will be reflected in a higher cost of living;

Everywhere, especially in the larger Canadian cities, rents have gone up.

I continue the quotation:

—more pressing claims from the unions for wages increases which will contribute to strengthen the inflationary trends—

But Mr. Gagnon had foreseen that following the increase in interest rates, the workers, as was seen last year, would go on strike in order to get pay increases, thus causing more inflation. The government would like to fight inflation, but they are responsible for it.

The sixth consequence pointed out by the former president of the Housebuilders' Association is the following, and I quote:

—the citizens will be deprived of their legitimate right to live in adequate housing or to own their homes.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The six effects mentioned on January 4, 1969 made themselves felt 15 months later.

And, Mr. Gagnon advocates the very thing that we, of the Ralliement créditiste, have asked on many occasions in this House. As a solution to this problem he recommends the following, and I quote:

—an immediate lowering of the interest rates on CMHC loans for people who earn less than $10,000 a year; also the elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials for housing purposes;

He also recommends the passage of a measure already in effect in the United States, and I quote:

That the Income Tax Act be amended so that small home-owners be able to deduct municipal and school taxes from their taxable income.

We know that in the United States a homeowner can deduct from his taxable income his municipal and school taxes in addition to the interest which he pays on his mortgage, which is prohibited in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would have many more recommendations to make yet. I have before me a thick file on housing in Canada. It contains recommendations, study reports, statistics, and an analysis of the needs in the housing field. These studies have not been carried out by us by by the task force and experts who considered this problem even before the task force chaired by the hon. member for Trinity did so.

Ever since I have had the honour of sitting in this House, I have noticed that under the former administration as well as the present one, the cost of housing has continued to rise. Today, it is nearly twice what it was in 1960.

Inflation affects housing as well as all other segments of the economy. And the Ralliement créditiste is not responsible for it. We, of the Ralliement créditiste, claim that the Bank of Canada should put at the disposal of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the credits required to enable it to lend to individuals, namely to young couples who want to own their homes, at a rate of interest of 3 per cent, which is quite normal.

Instead of going to the international money market to find the capital it needs to finance itself, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should go to the Bank of Canada; it could then offer loans for 20, 25 or 30 years to the young who want to marry, or any other Canadian who wants to marry or own his home, at 3 per cent interest. Then, we would not witness inflation in the field of housing.

In addition, we would not witness the current unemployment in the construction trades, and we could build within two or three years the million units Canada needs, according to the Minister without Portfolio. And even then, we would have some way to go to meet the needs of the population, in view of its increase.

We know there is a serious housing problem. Having a place to live, owning one's home is a vital need; it is the normal wish of every Canadian. Every Canadian has the right to own his home and as we do not lack anything else in Canada, the housing problem is surely an artificial one. This is an "artificial" problem as there is no shortage of materials, contractors, or labour. Indeed supply and demand exist. However, in order to balance supply and demand, we must first apply the recommendations made by the task force under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Trinity as well as the ones put forward by the Créditistes for many years in this House.

The housing problem in Canada is an "artificial" one, and it is impossible for the Parliament of Canada to solve it without solving first the problem concerning finance, which is the most important one. Should a war break out and should we need one million housing units for servicemen, we would not be talking in this House of the scarcity of money. We would not say that the housing shortage is due to the municipal or provincial governments but we would settle the problem. Indeed the Minister of Finance would solve the financial problem within a few hours so as to accommodate our servicemen in the one million housing units we would be able to build at the present time. We need them even though we are in peacetime.

I regret that the hon. member for Trinity who was in the House this morning cannot be here now for I would advise him if he wants to apply the recommendations made by his task force—recommendations which by the way compelled him to resign, to side with the Créditistes to settle first the financial problem and then the problem of housing.

Mr. Speaker, our families are lacking accommodation. Our young people who want to marry have to crowd in unhealthy dwellings—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Does the House agree to allow the hon. member to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Rondeau: I shall try to be brief, Mr. Speaker.

Our young people need homes. Hon. members have similar problems. People need homes while lumber piles up, rotting. The unemployed are living on unemployment insurance benefits instead of being put to work building homes. The people are tired of all the wishful thinking in which this House has been indulging for the past ten years.

[English]

Mr. Tom H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by saying I appreciate the job which the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing (Mr. Andras) has done. His approach has been one of genuine concern for the people who make up urban Canada.

All too often we forget that our cities are made up of people, the people who work in them and the people who live in them. There is a tendency to think of our urban areas as consisting of so many houses, apartment buildings, offices, industries and freeways. The minister has avoided this pitfall and has attended admirably to the needs of those who, because their incomes are low, have despaired in the past of ever getting suitable accommodation at reasonable cost. Under the minister's guidance, the housing stock available to low-income families and to our senior citizens has grown significantly and will continue to grow.

However, the fact remains that overall the number of housing starts is down to an unforgiveable amount. This should really come as no surprise to some of us. It was painfully obvious months ago that this would be a bad year in terms of the number of housing units begun. The reasons for this are simple, even if the solutions are not: inflation, the tight financial situation and labour disputes. Yet even when it was clear that massive assistance would be required if we were to do our part this year to arrive at the goal of 1.1 million units which the Economic Council has set for the period 1970-1975, the government did not respond. I could understand this if money were not available. But when I see millions of dollars going into the Lift program, when I see the government making available to the provincial governments $300 million more than originally provided for in the current fiscal year, when I see vast amounts being spent on regional development projects, I know that money can be made available if the government deems it desirable.

We have here a question of priorities. The government must surely count housing and urban affairs as being deserving of very high priority. Yet it has not given this impression. Why? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the finger of blame points in a number of directions. First, I have to admit that part of the blame must rest with those, such as myself, in the backbenches of this party who have not spoken out often enough or loudly enough on urban affairs and who have stood idly by while the frontbench has made housing the whipping-boy for inflation. There have been exceptions among the backbenchers, such as the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens) and the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), but by and large the backbenchers of this party have not put the case for the cities strongly enough.

Secondly, I blame the opposition parties. Every goverment needs to be prodded, and this government is no exception. But it seems the opposition contains more plodders than prodders. Certainly some members, such as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), have presented constructive suggestions to the government and tried to alert their colleagues to the importance of the housing crisis. But clearly these members have not been successful in converting their colleagues, because every day this chamber echoes to the cries of rapeseed and the ghost of the Newfie Bullet.

If the government is to be convinced of the importance of the housing problem, all interested parties must maximize their input into the decision-making process. Where does the National Housebuilders' Association maintain its headquarters? In Toronto! It should be here in Ottawa where officers of the association could be in daily contact with government and its officials and be in a position to influence government policy rather than just react to it. Likewise, I charge the real estate fraternity of this country with not making its problems more apparent to the government. There can be no denying that some of the blame for the housing situation today lies with the real estate people themselves.

The housing crisis cannot be viewed in isolation from the sum of the problems plaguing our cities. It is an integral part of the urban dilemma which can be solved only within a unified framework. We must—I repeat, must—establish a department of urban affairs. For too long we have developed piecemeal programs with little or no understanding of how each would affect the other. We have failed to recognize the basic fact that our urban environment is a complex system constantly interacting with itself.

We have failed to come to grips with the concept of the urban unit and how that total unit will react to new programs and developments. We have, in fact, proceeded as if we were operating in a vacuum. Housing problems have been tackled as if the urban context were irrelevant. This kind of thinking, or perhaps I should say lack of thinking, cannot go on if we value our existence as an urban society. A department of urban affairs would serve to develop and co-ordinate urban policy, and the minister in charge of this department would then be in a position to see that programs affecting our urban areas produce harmony rather than conflict, gardens rather than ghettos.

Surely, if the problems of agriculture require the attention of two full-time ministers and the fiscal operation of this country demands the efforts of two cabinet members, then the problems of urban Canada in which 70 per cent of our people now live and in which 85 per cent will live in the year 2000 are worthy of the attention of a full ministry. And, Mr. Speaker, if I may make a suggestion to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras), would be an excellent choice for minister of urban affairs.

I have some further suggestions for government action now. I believe the government should announce for this fall a large mortgage commitment for medium and low priced houses and condominium development. This mortgage money should be made available at a rate of no more than 8 per cent. This action would have the effect of lowering competitive interest rates without subsidization and would at the same time reduce unemployment in the construction trades. As hon. members may know, 40 per cent of the cost of a house is on-site labour. The great rush of housing starts which would result from a program such as I am proposing would not only serve to improve the housing stock for middle income Canadians, but would have a very significant and beneficial effect on the unemployment situation.

Further, the government must bring extreme pressure on the banks of Canada to meet the challenge of the housing crisis. But how have these institutions responded to date? They have upped interest rates and they have tightened conditions borrowers must meet. The conventional insurance lenders have gone even further; they are demanding exorbitant equity positions, thus increasing their own profits. This is of no help in meeting the housing crisis. The government must demand that these offenders adjust their policies in order to meet the challenge.

The federal government must also consider offsetting the effects of the white paper on tax reform, which has created a marked decrease in large apartment projects. The white paper suggests the elimination of some depreciation benefits, has created uncertainty in the building profession and has retarded building construction. Provincial governments must also examine their programs; their restriction against large funds in estate trusts entering the mortgage market is unforgiveable. The third level of government in Canada, the cities and municipalities, continue to restrict construction by lack of planning, restrictive building by-laws and lack of adequate zoning.

At this point I should like to comment on the suggestion made earlier by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). He suggested that the government make available mortgage funds at an interest rate of 6 per cent. I point out that this is a 100 per cent increase over the figure used in the election platform of this party in 1968. At that time, NDP candidates went into the field and suggested a rate of 3 per cent for all Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgages. I suggest to the hon. members of the New Democratic party that since their 1968 rate of 3 per cent has jumped to 6 per cent by 1970, by 1972 the NDP will be offering 12 per cent mortgages; I suggest this is not good enough.

Mr. Orlikow: We have those now.

Mr. Goode: These members are insisting on 6 per cent mortgages, but what are they going to do about those people who presently have mortgages at rates of interest between 7 and 10 per cent? Are they going to subsidize them as well? If so, where will they find the money?

They also talk of rent control. With great fanfare they tell the people of Canada that they are going to bring in rent controls. They know very well that the federal government cannot introduce rent controls. Furthermore, these rent controls would have to be enforced by the provincial governments, and certainly I have not seen the government of Manitoba showing any sign of moving into this field at an early date, as hon. members suggest. The provincial government of Manitoba is not entering this field, and I suggest that an NDP federal government would not either.

The urban challenge of the 1970's is with us. If we do not act quickly with courage and imagination, this challenge may well become a catastrophe from which Canada will never recover.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to contribute, in a very modest way, to the debate on the motion proposed today on housing. I think the choice could not have been wiser in view of the sorry and desperate plight of the greater part of our population in this field.

We all agree that the proposals of this government have only brought inadequate results. Some will even say that the government has done nothing, but I will go even further. However, it is to be wondered whether the government has done enough and whether it might not do more. I think we can answer this question.

For the past year or year and a half, they have been talking about giving a new impetus to housing in the near future, and they are still talking about it. Since the unemployment rate is particularly alarming in Quebec, I think it is the duty of Quebec members to press the government to come up with suggestions, proposals and much more effective legislation than those put forward in the last years.

How can a new impetus be given to the housing industry in the short term? There has been a lack of realism, I think. The minister mentioned earlier that millions had been spent on housing. But we know very well that even those considerable amounts are not adequate considering the great number of people with a low income.

I am not in the habit of limiting myself to criticism. But I think that the pitiful failure of the government to provide housing for low-income groups should prompt us to press more strongly than ever for more effective measures on their behalf.

It was said that a number of housing units had been built, but the interest rate on mortgages, which can be most detrimental to the building industry, has always been glossed over.

I have already urged that loans at 5 or 6 per cent be made available to those earning $10,000 or less per year. I will be told: But who will pay the difference in interest? I will answer that it is obviously up to the government to make up the difference. However, I do not believe that easier loans, longer amortization periods up to 40 years will allow more Canadian citizens to purchase a house, for they will then have to pay for it three times over.

Reference is made to low-cost housing, and I think I am in a position to say a few words on this matter. This week, I got the happy news: in my constituency, more particularly in the city of Joliette, a $600,000 housing project will be built. Now those $600,000 can at the most allow the construction of 51 3 and 4 room dwellings and this is a 50-year loan bearing at 8 per cent interest. Therefore, the owners will have to pay a monthly rent of $136 for a 3-room dwelling and of $150 for a 4-room dwelling. I do not believe that this can be considered low-cost housing. Surely, this project is important for my area and this large city of my constituency. I appreciate the launching of the project, but I know very well that only professional people will benefit from it.

It is therefore our duty, as members of this House, to demand more realistic action for small wage-earners. We have the opportunity today to try again and ask the minister to be more compassionate and understanding and to make it possible for small wage-earners to live in adequate dwellings with suitable rents.

It is true that for several years, we have been asking the removal of that hateful 11 per cent tax on building materials. Reference has been made to the possibility of granting loans to workers earning from $5,000 to $10,000 per year at an interest rate of 5 or 6 per cent. I venture to think that the government will react to those recommendations. We could be told that we are only criticizing. I think that our suggestions are acceptable. I am convinced that such a policy would likely give new life to the building industry in Quebec as elsewhere in Canada.

Indeed, the construction industry employs close to 30 per cent of the Canadian labour force. Somebody could say that there is the risk of inflation. Everything that is said about inflation makes me laugh, because the government policy to eliminate it made it worse. Inflation has never been so bad. Yet, the budgets of various departments were cut while more unemployment was created to eradicate inflation. The policy of the government in that regard did not produce the expected results.

Housing is not any better for all this. If the suggestions to get construction going again were implemented, thousands of new jobs would be created and industries would be more prosperous.

As for the 500,000 unemployed who receive from $53 to $60 a week, they could find work. They would pay small taxes on certain building materials. However, the general 11 per cent tax on building materials would have to be repealed.

Not wanting to deny my colleagues the opportunity of speaking—they probably have much to say—I conclude my remarks by saying that, like an important segment of the population, I am quite disappointed with the housing policy of this government. Of course, I have had the pleasure of approving the policy of the government in other fields, and I even made it a point to do so. As to the failure of the policy concerning housing and assistance to low wage earners, I feel it is my duty—and I do not think I am wrong in saying so—to hold the government responsible for it.

They can say all they want about establishing a department of urban affairs, about dialogue or co-operation between municipal, provincial and federal governments, but as long as we fail to reduce substantially the interest rate and to bring in legislation to lower the price of building materials, it will be completely ridiculous to talk about boosting the construction industry and the minister's wishes today will remain pious ones.

I dare hope that these few comments will incite the government to be more serious, more courageous and more sincere as regards the great number of people who need suitable housing at reasonable prices. It is the only way to offer them decent homes. That is the only way to put the building industry back on its feet. To speak at greater length on that subject would probably be a waste of time. I hope that the government will avail itself of these suggestions and that I will not be regarded as confining himself to destructive criticisms. On the contrary, while trying to make suggestions I keep hoping that the government will stop turning a deaf ear to the possibility of housing low income people in proper homes at reasonable prices.

Mr. Speaker, I think this would be a good show of humanitarianism, because we would then recognize that a homeowner is a precious asset for society, since the one who owns a home is always more interested in society than the tenant. The owners are more fully aware of their responsibilities, because they wish to protect their property. I suggest that to be able to afford an adequate home is an honor and something to be proud of. It would be within everybody's reach if reasonable interest rates were available and if materials were moderately priced. I do not see any other solution. I am not well versed in economics, but I think I can say that the economists who have come up with housing proposals so far have been way off the mark.

[English]

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to participate in the debate this afternoon. I think you might be interested to know there is a long list of members on this side of the House who would like to participate in this debate on urban policy. We are grateful to the opposition for raising the problem so often. I have waited now for three allotted days—they are not very good days, Fridays and Mondays—to have the opportunity to make a few comments, and I am glad to finally have this opportunity now. However, I find that almost everything I would have liked to have said has been said very well by other members who have spoken.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I appreciate fully the position which the government has taken. I agree with their assessment and with the proposed target of 1,100,000 homes to be constructed over a five year period. I can certainly see that in an economy characterized by cycles, by periods of inflation and by periods of near recession it is appropriate that houses not be constructed in an even pattern. There ought to be years in which we should do better than one-fifth of 1,100,000, while there will be other years when one might not expect to reach this number of housing units.

Mr. Orlikow: There is no hurry whatsoever for houses in Don Valley.

Mr. Kaplan: I might say that I have not heard any member of the opposition today challenge the target of 1,100,000 as not being more or less the proper level to be reached in five years. What I would like to urge on the government is that it should perhaps have more confidence than it seems to have in the ability of the private sector to produce housing for Canadians at reasonable prices. It is the assumption that the private sector is unable to do this that has led to the emphasis the government has placed on the provision of public housing. I should like to quote from the remarks the minister made a few moments ago when he said: "The major component in the government housing target for the year 1970 is to see that commitments are made for low income housing for close to 35,000 dwelling units together with a significant number of hostel units."

These public housing projects are not developed by the private sector, they are developed and financed by the government. There will always be a need in our society for some element of housing subsidy or housing support by the government. However, I am glad to see signs in other places that the government is beginning to recognize the private sector is, perhaps with some assistance, capable of producing housing at lower prices than it has done in the past. I should like to deal with one of those signs, but before I do so I wish to emphasize the point I just made and to indicate to you, sir, that there is a very great danger that this strong emphasis on the aspect of public housing will lead us into a situation where the rest of society also is going to have great trouble in being able to afford adequate housing. By concentrating very heavily on public housing, we may find ourselves in a situation where the rest of society suffers from adequate attention.

Recently the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was presented with a brief from one of the largest residential developers in Canada. I took the trouble to obtain their financial statement. Perhaps legislators and tenants are not supposed to read these financial statements because they contain some very disturbing pieces of information that may enthuse shareholders but that are less promising for the rest of us. I should like to read from this statement. I think the passage I will read shows that increased attention is necessary to what the private sector is doing for those in our society who can afford houses at reasonable prices. It reads:

> Probably the most significant factor for our industry in 1969 was the increasing effect of high interest rates on the cost of providing residential rental accommodation. These high rates are likely to continue to hamper the industry for the better part of 1970.
> The residential rental market has not as yet reflected, through its rent levels, the extra costs imposed by these interest rates. Consequently buildings being built for absorption by the rental market in 1970 will be unable to produce a reasonable rate of return until rent levels properly reflect these increased costs.

That is very disturbing news for anyone who in the last two years has found his rent increasing. The message here is that, even with rents at their 1970 levels, it is not economic for developers to build apartments, for example. Rents must increase according to this financial statement to justify the construction that is taking place this year. This is a very disturbing statement. It tells us that if we allocate our government revenue to public housing to the extent that we overstress that aspect, we are tending to produce a situation where the rest of society may find itself unable to afford the only kind of housing that can be constructed at present costs. So, I think the government, in allocating its resources, has to turn its attention to the situation that exists generally in the housing market.

While public housing is important, and while there will always have to be some, the provision of it should be contrasted with some of the other things the government could do to stimulate housing. Let me illustrate this in one way. In public housing there is a multiplier effect for government expenditure of .95 to one, that is to say, whenever the government spends 95 cents toward public housing, $1 worth of public housing is produced because for every 90 cents that Ottawa puts up the provincial government puts up 10 cents. By an expenditure of 90 cents, therefore, the federal government can obtain the benefit of the multiplier effect and obtain a $1 worth of housing.

Let me contrast that, because the contrast is remarkable, with some of the other things that the government could do with its $1 for housing. I suggest that for every $1 the government spends in the servicing of land there would be $30 or $40 of benefit as a result of this multiplier effect. Around my own city, the principal block to the construction of a sufficient number of houses for the people who live in the Toronto area is the lack of available serviced land. A dollar of government activity in this area can go very much farther than a dollar of activity in the area of public housing. It is for this reason that I was greatly encouraged to see CMHC recently extend an invitation to the private sector to bring forward unconventional and innovative plans and new ideas for constructing homes for Canadians at reasonable prices. This is a project that I heartily endorse.

To the extent that the government is prepared to make investments in the servicing of land to bring this great multiplier effect to which I have referred into play, it is obvious that there are constitutional considerations which will require the co-operation of the province of Ontario. For this reason, as an elected member from Ontario, I can only hope that all other members of the House will urge the government of Ontario and all provincial governments to seriously consider the initiative that was taken by the minister the other day in recommending the establishment of an urban council to deal precisely with this type of problem where there is a great federal interest in stimulating activity, but where work on the ground can only come about with full provincial and municipal co-operation.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when the minister replied he said there was no justification for our dire projections. I sat listening to him, hoping he would say something positive to allay the fears of the House and the country over the serious housing crisis facing Canada. I heard nothing. In fact I heard words that more than justified the pessimism that is felt on all sides of this House, and right across the country, following the government's failure to come to grips with the housing crisis.

I was hoping that the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) would be in the House. I noticed he was here today and I hoped he would participate in this debate. It is well to recall the famous task force on housing and urban development which was headed by the minister's predecessor, the member for Trinity, just over a year ago. We remember that task force going all across the country, holding public hearings and seeing first hand the ugly picture of urban and rural poverty.

We read with interest its report. The hon. member for Trinity was so impressed with what he saw in his pilgrimage across the country that he came back to Ottawa firmly resolved that something had to be done, and done immediately. Unfortunately, the government of which he was a member did not agree with the urgency that he felt, and the minister resigned. That was the last positive word we had from the government on housing. It was the last indication of hope, of any suggestion of the government coming to grips with the housing problem and the attendant problems of poverty and unemployment.

It would be well for the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras), who is sincere in his intentions, to retrace the steps of his predecessor, to go into the poverty ghettos in our cities and see the way that the poor of Canada live. Oh yes, we hear a great deal from hon. members who represent the large cities about the urban problems of pollution, transportation and recreation. But, Mr. Speaker, what about the more serious problem of the lack of adequate housing?

Today in this proud land of ours there are people living in the most abject poverty, with children who have to be watched constantly for fear of their being bitten by rats. There are people living in our cities who do not have the ordinarily accepted convenience of adequate plumbing facilities. The hon. member for Trinity saw this. He saw it in my city; he saw it in other cities; he saw it in the rural areas of Canada. He was so impressed, or should I say depressed, with what he saw that he felt if the government's just society was to mean anything, something had to be done for Canadians living in substandard housing.

In the declaration of principles that formed the preamble to his report he mentioned that every Canadian should be entitled to clean, warm shelter as a matter of basic human right. I ask the minister how long can the thousands of Canadians who live in urban poverty wait to enjoy what should be this basic Canadian right? As the minister well knows, there are areas in my own city without plumbing facilities, without adequate facilities of any kind. I refer to the area known as the Battery, which has been a political football for years, bounced back and forth between provincial, municipal and federal governments with nobody wanting to claim the responsibility for it. The poor who are forced to live in this area continue to suffer the consequences and the inconveniences. Another such area is Munday Pond, which will be referred to by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter), and which is now the subject of further urban renewal. But I ask the minister, why did he not announce today a real list of priorities covering specific problems in the various specific areas of the country?

These problems exist all across Canada, perhaps more glaringly in the major cities, but they exist in the rural areas as well. Notwithstanding what the minister said, or any of the pious hopes he enunciated, the fact remains that housing today is failing to keep pace with the demands of a just society, and has failed to keep pace with the demands of our growing urban environment. As compared with May last year, it is an undeniable fact that housing starts in May this year were down 50 per cent. Accompanying this decline is a related growth in unemployment. The two usually go hand in hand. In my own province, unemployment figures have reached the astonishing level of 15 per cent. Indeed, it has been suggested the actual unemployment figure is in excess of 20 per cent. I understand that the figure for the Atlantic provinces as a whole is in excess of 10 per cent. The unemployment figure for the province of Quebec is approaching or is in excess of 9 per cent.

These are areas in which housing starts have been declining. But the largest decline in housing starts has been in the urban areas, with Windsor, Ontario, down 80 per cent; Halifax, Nova Scotia, down 69 per cent; Calgary down 57 per cent; Toronto down 53 per cent; Edmonton down 45 per cent, and Montreal down 40 per cent. That is the kind of fact we should contend with, not the pious plans of the government or of the minister to deal with the problem over a long-term period. The problem is so acute that it needs immediate attention here and now.

In the first quarter of 1970 housing starts were down in all provinces of Canada. The decline in housing starts right across the country ranged from the amazing figure of 90.4 per cent in Saskatchewan to 61.5 per cent in my province, Newfoundland. In Ontario, the decline was 48 per cent, with British Columbia experiencing the smallest decline. This shows how serious is this problem, Mr. Speaker. It is the most serious problem facing the country. Yes, we are concerned, because the government has failed to come to grips with it. I believe it is fair to say that the hon. member for Trinity resigned from the cabinet because of the failure of the government to realize the urgency of the housing crisis and the urban problem in Canada today. By accepting the minister's resignation, the government automatically placed this problem well down on its list of priorities. I do not think the present minister can deny that.

I sympathize with the minister. He faces problems in the cabinet; he knows that his predecessor was forced to resign because the government failed to deal with the housing problem. The minister is concerned because he has seen many areas of Canada in which the housing problem is really acute. I suggest that unless he can obtain action soon by his cabinet colleagues, he will have no alternative except to follow the course of his predecessor in office and resign. That will be the only honourable course for him to take.

A few days ago in my home town, St. John's, I received a call from a constituent who was on the verge of being placed on the street, and I did something I rarely do. I called the housing authority and said, "I am not trying to interfere politically or influence your decision in any way, but I happen to know the circumstances of this particular case. This man, his wife and children are on the verge of being put out on the street. Can you do something for them?" I described the circumstances and gave them the man's name. The official pulled out the file and said, "He is so far down the list that I doubt whether it will be possible to do anything for him within the next year." That man was far down the list; 900 families ahead of him, were waiting, to be allocated a public housing unit, each one of them hoping to get out of inadequate slum housing they were forced to live in, often as a result of circumstances over which they had little or no control.

I hope that the minister will bring some specific solution to these specific problems in my city. I hope, for example, that he will announce a gigantic public housing scheme which will be wholly financed by the federal government, because this is a special case. He knows full well this is a special case and the reason for it. It is because the government of Newfoundland is strapped financially, to the point where it is unable to undertake any more public housing projects. My city is the creature of that government. The housing crisis in my city is grave. People are being forced to live in temporary shelters that were put up over 70 years ago as a consequence of the fire that destroyed a great part of the city. They still live in those shelters and often do not enjoy adequate facilities. I therefore plead with the government and the minister, Mr. Speaker, to come up with some sort of special arrangement in order to cope with the special areas of the country where the need is greatest. There is ample precedent for the government to take such initiatives in areas where the need is greatest.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I support the recommendations of those who preceded me and who urged the government to act on this problem. It could begin by eliminating the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and by lifting the freeze on urban renewal, so that certain areas could receive attention. It could also announce a policy whereby it would be prepared to enter into special agreements with those provinces where the need is greatest. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has more success with his cabinet colleagues than he has had to date in bringing this problem to the successful conclusion that is necessary if this serious crisis in Canada is to be dealt with expeditiously.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion that has been moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I am happy to support this motion because, as my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said a moment ago, the city we have the honour to represent faces many problems in housing and urban renewal. Certainly, neither the agencies coming under the minister responsible for housing nor the government are paying to this problem the necessary attention. Little hope is therefore held out to those people who are suffering as a result of inadequate housing conditions that their problems will be solved in the foreseeable future.

As my colleague said a few moments ago, we sympathize with the minister responsible for housing. He realizes that he is filling the office once occupied by the man who had to resign because the government was unwilling to go along with his recommendations based on the report of the task force on housing. One of the recommendations of the former minister, now the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), was that the government should remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, a worth-while recommendation which would have brought tremendous benefits to people in the middle and low income groups who might wish to buy or build a home. That 11 per cent sales tax probably represents $600 or $700 in the price of a house, an amount which often makes the difference in a person's ability to buy or build a home.

The minister is in an awkward position, because he must try to run with the hares and hunt with the hounds. On the one hand, he must support the anti-inflation policies of the government which are having a ruinous affect on housing and urban renewal in Canada as well as on the economy generally; on the other hand, he must put on a brave front of showing concern for the many thousands of Canadians who are forced to live in substandard conditions and for those with families who are on the waiting lists for public housing. In one breath the minister supports the government's anti-inflation policies, which are probably the greatest enemy of housing and urban renewal in this country, and in the next breath he must address various associations interested in housing, associations such as the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities and the Canadian Homeowners Association, and go through the motions of showing he is interested in the affairs of the average Canadian who is trying to acquire a decent home.

Before my time expires, may I refer to something that is very, very serious in my riding of St. John's West. I am referring to the Mundy Pond urban renewal scheme. The present scheme was probably presented to the people in the early 1960's and a grandiose plan was prepared by the planners on instructions from the federal government, the province and the municipality of St. John's. A great deal of fuss was made. The people of Mundy Pond were to be given a new lease on life; their neighbourhood was to look like the Eutopia of St. John's, and their hopes were built up to the skies. Unfortunately, they have been kept dangling for at least ten years. At least three municipal elections have been fought on the issue and several federal elections, not to mention a number of provincial elections. But the people of Mundy Pond are still suffering. No more has been done up to now than was done ten years ago. The plan to redevelop that area is still on the drawing board. From what I understand there is very little likelihood of any start being made on the project this year. This is trying the patience of those people too much. It shows a complete and utter disregard for their feelings.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Canadians have been suffering too long from the shortage of suitable homes for the people in the low and middle income brackets. The solutions to these two problems should be fundamentally different. The first problem is essentially that of poverty, and the second is the inability of the market system to function. This problem prevails not only in my province, but right across Canada. A large number of Canadians are desperately in need of homes who are not earning salaries that qualify them for a National Housing Act mortgage. I understand that a person must be earning $8,000 or more a year to qualify for such a mortgage. In a large number of areas in Canada, including Newfoundland, that regulation eliminates approximately 90 per cent of the people wishing to buy or build a new home.

The government should encourage municipalities to avail themselves of the limited dividend section of the National Housing Act. They should be encouraged to build co-operative housing. This also applies to the building societies, as mentioned this morning by my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West. The municipalities should be encouraged to become involved in housing on a much larger scale with, of course, financial assistance from the government. A large number of communities could take advantage of section 16 of the National Housing Act, dealing with the limited dividend aspect. The federal government should encourage the municipalities in order that decent low cost homes will be available.

Public housing is a must in most urban areas of Canada. In the city of St. John's, Newfoundland, we have far too few public housing units. As my colleague pointed out, there are waiting lists of 400 to 1,000 people in this city with a population of less than 100,000 people. We should give serious consideration to providing more low cost public housing. A new concept should be adopted with regard to public housing, with funds being made available to the middle income group so that they could build small homes on land developed by the municipality with the co-operation of the federal government. This land would be given to the people on a lease basis. This would enable them to acquire title to a piece of land on a lease back basis with a very small down payment. With CMHC financing, they could erect a home suitable for themselves and their families. This avenue should be explored by the minister in charge of housing and the government in conjunction with the provincial governments and municipalities. The middle income people would derive great benefits. In some respects this could also assist the low income group.

I understand that 100,000 families in Canada are on waiting lists for public housing. The minister's statement this afternoon will be of little consolation to those people desperately in need of better accommodation. The government is sadly lacking in its approach to housing. The number of starts made this year is far below that projected a year ago. It is a sad commentary in this day and age, when we are putting men on the moon and satellites in the sky, that a large number of Canadians in all parts of this country, especially in the economically depressed areas, do not even have proper toilet facilities. It is a sad commentary on the policies of this government. As was pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's East, every effort should be made to bring forth a bold new approach to the problem of housing in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I wish to point out that we do not have a quorum and therefore I would ask you to count the members.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: That reflects the attitude of the government to this whole problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Badanai): Order. I shall instruct the clerk to count the members in the House.

On the count being made, 20 members were declared to be present.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Badanai): There is a quorum.

Mr. Carter: I wish to impress upon this House, the government and the minister responsible, the need for immediate assistance to those people on the bottom half of the income ladder in Canada. I think the minister would be well advised to read the statements by Dr. Albert Rose of the University of Toronto. He said:

> The most important change that could be made in our national housing policy would be a formal declaration that the federal and provincial governments intended, during the balance of this century, to discriminate in favour of families and individuals at the bottom half of the income ladder.

I think this is very good advice for the minister in charge of housing as well as the government. I urge the minister to get on the ball and get the Mundy Pond urban renewal scheme under way in order to fulfil the promises that have been made for the past ten years. The government should show that it cares about these people, is aware of their problems and will do everything possible to alleviate this situation.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, just over a year ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was chided about the housing emergency, he flourished a set of figures purporting to show that in the year 1969, 225,000 housing units would be built. He stated that was within the target set by the Economic Council of Canada for the five-year period 1969 to 1973, and that in fact there was no housing crisis.

The Toronto Star, certainly not an anti-Liberal newspaper, on May 10, 1969, ran an editorial commenting on that view expressed by the Prime Minister. The editorial was headed "But Pierre Baby, There is a Crisis". What was said in that editorial is essentially true today. There is no housing crisis in the constituency of Mount Royal which the Prime Minister represents. There is no housing crisis in the constituency of Westmount, which is represented by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). There is no pressing need in the constituency represented by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) who suggested there was no need to hit the target of 250,000 homes in any particular year to reach the objective set by the Economic Council; there is no housing crisis in the constituency of Winnipeg South, particularly on Wellington Crescent which the minister knows so well. So I was not surprised when I did not hear very much from the Prime Minister about the housing crisis.

But I was disappointed in the speech made by the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing (Mr. Andras). He told us that while starts were running at only 160,000 units for the year, he expected we would do better than that and build between 180,000 and 185,000 units. That figure falls far short of what the Economic Council said we needed. I give the government credit; the minister told us we would build 35,000 public housing units this year, and this is better than we have done for many years. But the number is still small in comparison to the need. There are 100,000 families or more waiting for accommodation and it is obvious we are falling further behind in meeting our housing needs every year. I say this bearing in mind the need, not of 210,000 units a year but of the 250,000 units mentioned by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I say it without going into all the catastrophic effects of increased housing prices on the ordinary person.

A few years ago, ten years ago, when we talked about people in the lower income brackets, we were talking about people who were making less than $60 a week. Now, we are talking about people who are making less than $100 a week. But these are not the only people who are in trouble. Eighty-five per cent of the people of this country are in trouble if they do not have their own homes. In cities like Toronto, unless a man earns between $8,000 or $9,000 a year he cannot even qualify to get a house under the provisions governing the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The interest rate on mortgages is now running at more than 10 per cent, which means that the vast majority are locked out of the possibility of house purchase, or else they are buying houses by cutting back on the most essential needs such as food and clothing.

I have a great deal of respect for this minister, for the job he tried to do when he was concerned with Indian Affairs and for the job he is trying to do now. For this reason, I was particularly sorry to hear him adopt the complacent view he took today. Those of us who are interested in the problems of housing, and in ordinary people, know that this minister is probably more interested in these questions than are all the other cabinet ministers put together. When he takes a complacent view, I can only say we are in real trouble. We in this party have consistently taken the view that the estimate of 250,000 units a year is a conservative one. And we are failing to meet that objective by 25 per cent this year. If the housing needs of the people are to be met, then housing must be given a much higher priority both federally and provincially within the economy. We agree with the conclusion of the Canadian Conference on Housing held in 1968, that housing is just as socially necessary as is education. The need for the construction of all types of housing in this country far exceeds the money which is, or will be, available even if we could bring interest rates down.

There are demands in this country for high rise office buildings with air conditioning and carpeting from wall to wall; there are demands for factories, for larger filling stations or service stations—service centres as they are now called; for high priced apartment buildings, for public housing and for houses for ordinary citizens. The total demand is far greater than the amount of money, labour and materials which we can accumulate in any one year. It is not surprising that banks and the finance companies are not doing more in the private housing field. After all, they are primarily interested in making profits for their shareholders. I am not being critical of them, bearing in mind the kind of society in which we live. I refer the hon. member for Don Valley to the announcement yesterday or today that bank profits were up by more than 25 per cent in the first six months of this year as compared to last year. It is no wonder the banks are much more interested in putting their money into shopping centres, filling stations, office buildings and luxury hotels than they are in ordinary housing.

As I say, I cannot blame them. They are there to make a profit for their shareholders. But we can blame governments of Canada, both federal and provincial, for permitting this state of affairs to continue and for failing to establish, through consultation, a system of priorities. I submit there is much more need in Ottawa for 2,000 moderately priced homes than there is for the third building which the Campeau Construction Company is putting up very near here at the present time.

I submit there is much more need for three or four thousand housing units, public or private, in the city of Toronto than for another Toronto-Dominion Centre in the city of Toronto. I submit there is more need for 2,000 homes in Winnipeg than for the Richardson building that was opened some months ago. But until governments in this country look at the problem in this way, and people tell the governments in Canada that housing is the number one priority, we will continue to do what we have been doing until now and build 180,000 housing units when we need 250,000. We will continue to encourage the building of more office buildings in Ottawa so that civil servants can move from temporary buildings, which are old but habitable, into high rise buildings that are air conditioned and all the rest. We will continue to permit oil companies to build more filling stations and permit the building of more shopping centres, the cost of which is borne by the consumer in the price of the groceries she has to buy in order to live.

In closing, I hope the minister will stop being so complacent, which is the only way I can describe the speech that he made today. I hope that even though we do not know who are members of this task force, what subject it will be studying and at what cost, the minister will put it to work to examine some of the housing problems facing this country. When this work is completed I hope the federal government will tell the provinces and municipalities that those things which need doing the most should be done. This is not the building of fancy office buildings or high rise luxury apartment buildings, but rather the kind of homes that the ordinary people of this country who earn $60, $70, $80 or $100 a week need so desperately at this time.

Mr. Kaplan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Certainly.

Mr. Kaplan: What evidence has the hon. member for thinking that the banks and trust companies earn a greater return on loans for office buildings and shopping centres than on loans for apartment buildings?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is very simple. It is obvious where the money is going and that that is where the action is. Apart from making more money, I am sure the hon. member will agree it is much simpler for a bank or a mortgage or trust company to lend $5 million, if I may use that figure as an example, to just one company so there is one transaction, to build one building, rather than to lend the same amount to a couple of thousand individual prospective homeowners. As I say, the answer is simple; the evidence is that the homes we need are not being built. Instead, office buildings, hotels, shopping centres and filling stations are being constructed.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite who have contributed to this debate today have made comments on the present situation and described the various aspects of the problems in connection with housing. Some members have taken the trouble to put forward proposals; some, like the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), have put forward a lengthy list of proposals in an endeavour to provide some alternatives. But by and large, we have had a recitation of statistics and generalizations of the sort that have been made in this House in years past about a very complex and difficult subject.

However, one thing has emerged from this debate today, and it is that practically every hon. member opposite, with rare exception, has deplored inflation and indicated that inflation has had a negative effect on housing. I could not think of a better compliment in recognition of the efforts that are presently being made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to break the back of inflation than this common theme that has been followed in the debate today. Even hon. members opposite seem to recognize the importance of this aspect.

A look at housing policy over the past two years indicates a gradual reduction in the size of the housing problem. The problem is being approached area by area, beginning with housing for Canadians who are at the bottom of the income scale. Before this task could be initiated, the federal government ordered a document produced by a task force which, perhaps for the first time, provided a clear indication of the complexity of the problem of supplying Canadians with housing.

As far as federal responsibility is concerned, except for four or five, the major recommendations of the report have been implemented. It is true some of the recommendations have not. Some of them had to wait until the right time. One recommendation saw the light of day last Wednesday when the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing (Mr. Andras) announced in Halifax a three-level council. This announcement was made possible as the result of a radical change of attitude on the part of a major province in this country, Quebec. This announcement having been made, one hopes that other provinces will follow suit and endorse the idea of a three-level council, including, of course, the province of Ontario.

In his speech this morning, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) gave examples of the complexity of this problem by reading advertisements published in a Montreal newspaper which showed that the situation in Montreal is quite different from the situation, for example, in Toronto. He quoted advertisements offering houses for sale in Montreal at a price of $14,500, with a $500 down payment. So that in fairness, one cannot generalize and describe the housing situation as a national crisis. There are variations from region to region, from province to province; and in each area the components of the variations differ.

The next aspect that has been given attention during these years has been the priority given by the government to producing housing for Canadians with low incomes. Figures to this effect have been cited by previous speakers. In other words, considering the resources available, it has been possible to give precedence to that portion of the total housing problem which is of a most urgent nature; that is, the provision of decent housing for Canadians who cannot afford a roof.

Within this general policy, last April we saw a new development when new rental fees and new regulations were announced for people occupying low income housing. Also there was a very important inclusion in the National Housing Act to permit something which was not possible before. I refer to the inclusion of social and recreational facilities in future projects in recognition of the necessity for these in projects of any size. Another step within this area was the provision of $27 million this year for loans for limited dividend housing. This again is for that spectrum of the population in Canada which is in need.

Another measure for low income Canadians is the provision of $200 million. This is an encouragement and an invitation to Canadians to produce new ideas, new approaches and new designs, I would assume, for the government to produce houses for middle income Canadians. This measure is an indication that today we are at least approaching the question of housing within the limitation of the resources available, rather than approaching it on a gigantic universal scale as proposed by some opposition members. Probably the effect of these measures will be felt during the second half of 1970. Therefore, today we are debating statistics and figures that really do not present the picture for the entire year 1970. Whatever the total figure may be—and we do have reason to hope it will be a fairly encouraging one—certainly, we all agree there is no room for complacency on this question. Housing policies in any nation are the subject of criticism, and quite rightly so, because everyone is entitled to increasing standards of fine housing.

In Canada we must strive for higher standards. But, a look at what has been done so far from 1968 up until now would indicate that all the signs are there and that, once having assessed the entirety of the problem, the minister has approached the problem initially here the urgency is greatest. He is gradually moving into the areas of lesser urgency, keeping in mind the total picture. Therefore, members on this side of the House are convinced that the minister is doing well and we have the utmost confidence in him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion before the House are deemed to have expired.

This House stands adjourned until Monday, June 15, 1970 at two o'clock p.m.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD (SKEENA)—DISCLOSURE TO PRESS OF INFORMATION IN INTERIM REPORT ON NON-MEDICAL USE OF DRUGS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating particularly to an announcement over the CBC on the 11 o'clock news on Friday night and to other news items which were carried over the weekend dealing with the interim report of the LeDain commission on the non-medical use of drugs.

It was obvious from watching the newscast and listening to Capital Report and other news items that certain members of the press have inside information as to the contents of the report. Reference was made to the number of pages in the report—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Seven hundred.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): —and to the legal difficulties which might arise if certain aspects of the report were adopted, the awkward position in which the courts might be placed when imposing sentences dealing with infractions of the current laws, the matter of diet pills, marijuana, a cabinet committee and other things. This clearly indicates that certain individuals within the news media have received information with respect to the report in question.

It is my contention, since government is the element of Parliament which has possession of this interim report and has so far not tabled it, that the contents thereof, or part of them, have been revealed to certain persons in the news field contrary to proper practice and to the requirement that such reports be tabled in Parliament. It is an affront to the people of Canada and to Parliament for someone in government to leak certain information, as is obviously the case here, to the press while at the same time denying full information in the form of the report itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): After much prodding and questioning on Friday morning last, the Prime Minister said the report would be tabled in the House. I believe that it smacks of arrogance and manipulation for someone in his cabinet to contravene the spirit of that commitment.

If Your Honour finds that a prima facie case of privilege does exist, I intend to found upon it the following motion, seconded by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North:

This House expresses the opinion that the government should forthwith table the interim report of the commission of inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member for Skeena and to other hon. members that there should not be a debate on the proposed motion. A motion in similar terms was proposed late last week by the hon. member for Peace River. After much thought and consideration and after hearing argument on the subject, the Chair ruled that though there might have been a grievance no question of privilege arose. I therefore have to say that, even in the light of the circumstances to which the hon. member has alluded, this cannot be considered a proper question of privilege and I have to rule that the hon. member's proposed motion cannot be put to the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMUNICATIONS

TABLING REPORT ON PARTICIPATION BY TELECOMMUNICATIONS CARRIERS IN PUBLIC DATA-PROCESSING

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table two copies in both official languages of a report on "Participation by Telecommunications Carriers in Public Data-Processing". This report has been prepared by the Department of Communications within the framework of the telecommission studies. It should not, however, be regarded as a final telecommission report.

Oil Spill into Athabasca River

As the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications may well wish to study this report I suggest, if the House agrees, that the report be referred to the committee today.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North rising on motions?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding of the proposed motion of the Postmaster General is that it referred to the tabling of a document and this, of course, is not subject to debate. I have to rule that there is no debate on the statement or on the action proposed by the Postmaster General.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have another motion I should like to move.

[Later:]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Minister of Communications suggested that the subject matter of the report tabled by him today might, with unanimous consent of the House, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I wonder if we might ascertain whether there would be unanimous consent to such an order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is this under Standing Order 43?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I gather it is not under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The President of the Privy Council as Government House Leader seeks the unanimous consent of the House to proceed as suggested by the Minister of Communications. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimity. The motion cannot be proceeded with as suggested by the minister.

POLLUTION

OIL SPILL INTO ATHABASCA RIVER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion of a type with which Your Honour is now familiar. My proposal motion is made pursuant to Standing Order 43 and I ask unanimous consent to move the motion under these circumstances.

The oil spill into the Athabasca River has now reached epic and dangerous proportions. It is now backing up into the Peace River, will be entering the Slave River and may well go into Great Slave Lake. At this time of year the flood waters in the area of the confluence of these rivers are very substantial.

In view of what has happened and the fears that have arisen, and in view of the fact that additional pipelines to be constructed in the north are now under contemplation, I think this matter should be one for immediate inquiry. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), the following motion, to which I ask for the unanimous consent of the House:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Canada and the government of Alberta should immediately discuss the establishment of a commission of inquiry into the question of the oil spill in the Athabasca River; the adequacy of the means taken to deal with the damage and the establishment of proper safeguards and precautions against any repetition of this disastrous pollution.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. By the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Therefore the Chair has to inquire whether there is such unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimity the motion cannot be moved at this time.

COMMUNICATIONS

RATE INCREASE REQUESTED BY BELL CANADA —REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the House to agree to a motion regarding Bell Canada. Bell Canada has made a request to the Canadian Transport Commission for a new increase in telephone rates of 6¼ per cent. This follows the increase of last fall which gave Bell increased revenues of $27.5 million.

Bell Canada has surpassed the 6.8 per cent maximum rate of return permitted by the Canadian Transport Commission and is now averaging over 7 per cent return on its investment. Bell has been working closely with the Prices and Incomes Commission in circulating its material. This request for an increase is completely uncalled for.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to meet forthwith and proceed as quickly as possible to investigate the latest proposed increase of Bell Canada, and the relationship between Bell Canada and the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Again hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member, which requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is no unanimity the motion cannot be put.

DEUTERIUM OF CANADA ASSISTANCE BILL

AUTHORIZATION AND PAYMENT OF GRANT

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-222, to authorize the making of a grant to the province of Nova Scotia for the purpose of providing assistance to Deuterium of Canada Limited.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SCIENCE POLICY—STATEMENTS BY DR. R. J. UFFEN

Question No. 161—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Did Dr. R. J. Uffen, Director of the Science Secretariat, at the conference of Canadian scientists and engineers held at Carleton University from July 31 to August 1, 1969 say that, "I speak to the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Drury, regarding science policy for two hours each week."?

2. Did Dr. R. J. Uffen, also say at that meeting that, "The Committee of the Privy Council on Scientific and Industrial Research meet one hour each week"?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Dr. Robert J. Uffen, Chief Science Adviser to the Cabinet, in his capacity as Secretary of the Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research, regularly meets with the Hon. C. M. Drury, who is Chairman of the Committee.

2. The Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research has a scheduled weekly meeting.

STATEMENT ON SCIENCE POLICY

Question No. 173—Mr. Broadbent:

1. When will the Government of Canada issue a full statement on Canada's National Science Policy?

2. When will the Government of Canada issue a comment on the recommendations of the Science Council of Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The Government is at present receiving advice from many sources regarding science and technology in Canada. It is yet to be determined if it would be useful to endeavour to articulate a statement comprehending all science policy. There may evolve a series of policy statements covering specific areas of Canadian activity.

2. The Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research meets weekly and does give consideration to the various recommendations of the Science Council of Canada. The Government acts upon those recommendations which it deems timely and makes announcements where appropriate.

PRIVY COUNCIL COMMITTEE ON SCIENTIFIC AND INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH

Question No. 480—Mr. Broadbent:

Does the Privy Council Committee on scientific and industrial research meet regularly once a week?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): See reply to Question No. 161 answered this day.

EMPLOYMENT AND CONTRACTS, AIRCRAFT DIVISION, ENAMEL AND HEATING PRODUCTS LIMITED

Question No. 1,457—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the total employment of the Aircraft Division of Enamel & Heating Products Limited?

2. What is the total amount of contracts awarded to Enamel & Heating Products Limited, Aircraft Division, through the Department of Supply and Services and through sub-contractors involved in work with the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The only authoritative source of information is the company.

Questions

2. The total amount contracts and subcontracts awarded for fiscal years 1968/69 and 1969/70 were as follows:

Fiscal Year	Price Contracts	Subcontracts	Total
1968-1969	$363,013	$ 731,594	$1,094,607
1969-1970 (estimated)	$320,982	$1,327,272	$1,648,254

ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Question No. 1,628—Mr. Broadbent:

Has the government given any consideration to the problem of discrimination against women in the labour market during its meetings with representatives of the provincial governments and, if so, has the federal government discussed with the representatives of the provincial governments the matter of provincial legislation which would accord with the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against women so that Canada might ratify this Declaration?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women is not open to ratification. The matter of discrimination against women in employment has been the subject of federal-provincial discussions. Canada ratified International Labour Convention number 111, dealing with discrimination in employment, in 1964, following consultation with the provinces.

FEDERAL PROGRAM TO EMPLOY WOMEN AS ECONOMISTS, LIBRARIANS AND STATISTICIANS

Question No. 1,629—Mr. Broadbent:

1. How many women are currently employed in the federal public service program to employ economists, librarians and statisticians on a part-time basis?

2. Has this program proved successful and (a) if so, is the government planning to extend this program to other job categories (b) if not, for what reason?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. Eight.

2. The program was launched as a pilot project to determine the availability of women with skills in the fields of economics, statistics and library science to work on a part-time basis and the capability of government departments to utilize these skills on a part-time basis. Relatively few women with skills at the levels required were identified as a result of the program. The program did demonstrate that employment of part-time workers in some professional fields is feasible in some government departments. The special regulation under which the program was established has not been renewed as it was found the program could be carried out under the provisions for part-time work which apply generally across the Public Service. It is therefore possible to continue to employ women with professional skills on a part-time basis.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Question No. 1,677—Mr. Robinson:

How many consultants have been engaged by the Department of Manpower and Immigration during each year 1950 to 1970 inclusive (a) what was the cost of the consultants (b) how were the consultants utilized (c) for what reasons were the consultants necessary?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Since its establishment in 1966 to 1970, the Department of Manpower and Immigration has engaged 125 consultants. (a) The cost was approximately $669,841; (b) The consultants were utilized to carry out analysis, planning, organization, and evaluation studies for the Department; (c) The consultants were necessary because the work was beyond the capabilities of departmental resources.

REMOVAL OF REFUSE FROM HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 1,721—Mr. Mather:

1 Approximately how many tons of papers, left-over or waste, are removed from the Houses of Parliament each month?

2. On what basis is this removal carried out?

3. What revenue does the waste paper bring to the public?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned: 1. Approximately 10 tons.

2. By contract government buildings are scheduled for a regular pickup of all left over and waste paper.

3. $12,000 per annum.

CBC—"THE NATION'S BUSINESS"

Question No. 1,727—Mr. Paproski:

Was the film shown on Sunday, April 19, 1970, on the CBC program, Channel 4, "The Nation's Business", sponsored and paid for entirely by the Liberal Party?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes.

ONTARIO—EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Question No. 1,750—Mr. Serré:

1. What were the expenditures in the Province of Ontario by the Department of National Health and Welfare for its various programs, Family Allowances, Old Age Security, medical services, research etc., during the fiscal year 1968-69?

2. What are the estimated expenditures for the year 1969-1970?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. The table below lists the expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the Province of Ontario for the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70. It excludes the payments made to the Province of Ontario under the various shared-cost programs administered by this Department.

Program	1968-69 $	1969-70[1] $

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—POSITIONS EXEMPTED FROM P.S.E.A.

Question No. 1,753—Mr. Barnett:

1. What are the descriptive particulars of each of the twenty-five positions in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which, by P.C. 1970-120, dated January 21, 1970, are excluded from the operation of section 10 of the Public Service Employment Act and to which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may make appointments during the period January 21, 1970 to March 31, 1971?

2. For what reasons has the Public Service Commission decided that it is not practicable nor in the best interests of the Public Service to apply section 10 of the Public Service Employment Act, as stated in the preamble of P.C. 1970-120?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. All 25 positions which, by P.C. 1970-120, are excluded from the operation of Section 10 of the Public Service Employment Act are training positions to which only Indians and Eskimos may be appointed. It is expected that the positions to which the 25 Indians and Eskimos are being appointed will provide an opportunity for them to learn the administrative skills required to operate effectively at middle management positions within the Department and in provincial and Band administrations. By March 31, 1971 the 25 employees selected will move into full-time positions within the Department or in Band administration. The 25 positions are being filled by competition among Indians and Eskimos and the Public Service Commission Selection Standards apply in all cases. The salary levels are within the range $6,294-$10,162 depending upon the person and his qualifications.

2. The Public Service Commission is in full sympathy with the Government's objective of providing developmental experience to enable Indians and Eskimos to assume managerial responsibilities in the Department that has primary responsibility for native peoples, and the exclusion was made to facilitate this objective.

Questions

INFLATION—ISSUANCE OF DIRECTIVES TO PROPRIETARY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 1,833—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the government issued directives to proprietary Crown corporations to participate in the governmental anti-inflationary policy and, if so, what were the directives?

2. What steps have proprietary Crown corporations taken to fight inflation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes. The directives issued by Treasury Board requested proprietary Crown Corporations to comply with the government's policy as outlined by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on February 18, 1970, at the close of the Federal-Provincial Conference on Price Stability. Compliance was requested in respect of all domestic prices other than charges determined by statute or international agreement; charges for recovery of actual costs under existing agreements; and interest rates for the lending of money. In the case of these three items, other controls exist and are being employed selectively, where possible, to achieve the government's policy.

2. In accordance with the directives mentioned in the answer to the first part of the question and with the guidelines established for private business by the Prices and Incomes Commission, proprietary Crown Corporations are now requested to submit any proposals for essential price increases to the Prices and Incomes Commission for review under the procedure established after the Federal-Provincial Conference in February 1970.

COST OF CRTC HEARING IN OTTAWA APRIL 13 TO 22

Question No. 1,855—Mr. Hees:

1. What was the direct expense to the government of the Canadian Radio Television Commission hearing in Ottawa on April 13 to 22 inclusive—hotel, transportation, etc.?

2. For what reasons was a hotel selected instead of a government building, such as the new facilities at the old Union Station?

3. What were the other costs to the taxpayer for the same meeting such as travel costs, per diem of the part-time members, and an estimate of the cost of keeping the full-time members and staffs there for this period of time?

4. How many staff members were directly involved in the hearing to the extent of spending most of their time at it during the period involved?

5. What was the CRTC telephone, telegraph and telex bill for the period March 1 to April 30, 1970?

[Mr. Forest.]

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows: 1.

Rental of halls and rooms for hearing		$9,870.00
Advertising as per Broadcasting Act		9,425.00
Simultaneous translation
Equipment	$4,256.00
Interpreters	3,937.00	8,193.00
Court reporters		4,500.00
		$31,988.00

2. The space at the old Union Station was considered for public hearings and ruled out because it was too small and because it was already committed to some other use.

3. Travel costs and fees—part-time members $12,615.00.

4. 14.

Cost of telephone March 1 to April 30/70	$4,484.54
Cost of telegraph March 1 to April 30/70	778.12
Cost of telex March 1 to April 30/70	402.73
Total	$5,665.39

OLD AGE PENSIONS—ADJUSTMENT TO COST OF LIVING

Question No. 1,863—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider increases in the Old Age Pension in accordance with the increases in the Consumer Price Index and the 1.5% rate of inflation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes.

EFFECT OF BUDGET CREDIT RESTRICTION PROVISIONS ON CONSUMER DEBT

Question No. 1,873—Mr. Robinson:

To what extent is it anticipated that the consumer debt will be reduced by the budget credit restriction provision?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I announced in the House of Commons on June 1, 1970 that the government would not be proceeding with the measures proposed in the last budget to control consumer credit.

CBC COVERAGE OF OLYMPIC COMMITTEE

Question No. 1,899—Mr. Matte:

Did CBC cover the meeting of the Olympic Committee held recently in Amsterdam, and, if so, did the technical crew responsible for the film sequence come from Toronto or from Montreal and for what reasons?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Yes. As a matter of convenience, European-based technical crews were used by CBC French and English services. In addition to a local Dutch crew, technical crews were sent to Amsterdam from CBC offices in London and Paris.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—DATA PROCESSING EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,905—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of National Defence have data processing equipment (automatic) and, if so, for how long?

2. What was the initial cost of the equipment?

3. What yearly costs are anticipated for data processing in the Department?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, data processing equipment has been used since 1942; in Defence Research Board since 1956.

2. The initial equipment was rented. Defence Research Board's records for 1956 no longer exist.

3. In the fiscal year 1970-71 the forecast cost for data processing is estimated to be $3.287 million.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—COMPUTERS USED IN OPERATIONS

Question No. 1,917—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of National Defence have the use of a computer in its operations and, if so, to what extent is it utilized?

2. Is the computer programmed 24 hours per day and, if not, for what reason?

3. What is the number of hours planned for utilization of the computer?

4. What has been the annual cost of computer services for each year 1960 to 1970 inclusive?

5. How many programmes are in preparation for the computer at the present time and how will each affect the efficiency of the Department?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The Canadian Armed Forces have many computers in operations ranging from the SAGE facility at North Bay to guidance systems in individual weapons. The Defence Research Board also has a number of computers of varying capacity in its establishments to carry out research programs.

2, 3, 4 and 5. Since the computers used by the Canadian Armed Forces are considered to be integral parts of the systems to which they belong, their use, measured in hours per day, varies with the training programs, operations, etc. involved. Those used by Defence Research Board are considered to be tools in the research activity and are selected and used to maximize the efficiency of the research program. The costs of computer services are allotted as part of the costs of the scientific program and are not maintained as separate items.

REPAYMENT OF LOAN BY GREAT BRITAIN

Question No. 1,920—Mr. Matte:

Has Great Britain repaid the money borrowed from Canada during the last war and, if so, how were the repayments made?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In 1942 Canada made an interest-free loan of $700 million to the United Kingdom. The loan represented the funding of advances made to the government of the United Kingdom in 1941 and 1942, prior to the establishment of the wartime Mutual Aid arrangements. Repayment was deferred until the end of the war, though the total outstanding was reduced both during the war and after by crediting against it the Canadian dollar proceeds of Canadian securities sold, or surrendered for redemption, by U.K. residents. After this provision came to an end in 1953, the outstanding balance of $150 million was repaid in 20 equal quarterly instalments, ending on December 1, 1958.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS—SEMINAR "ACCESS TO INFORMATION"

Question No. 1,954—Mr. Coates:

1. Was the Department of Communications involved in the arrangements for a seminar called "Access to Information" held at Carleton University on May 15?

2. What was the purpose of the seminar, how many invitations were issued and how many attended the seminar?

3. Was the reception associated with the seminar held before or after the actual seminar or was there a reception both before and after and, if so, what was the cost of the reception and what portion of this cost was the responsibility of the Department of Communications?

4. What was the total cost to the Department of Communications for its involvement in this seminar?

[Translation]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1. Yes.

2. The purpose of the seminar, taking special account of regional disparities was: a) consider ways by which telecommunications technology, systems, concepts and institutions can be developed and applied so as to approach the ideal of the optimum amount of information being made available to the maximum number of individuals, groups and institutions; b) assess the costs and benefits (economic, social) of providing such information, and the costs (economic, social) of failing to do so. 90 invitations were issued. 77 people attended.

3. A reception was held before the seminar. There was no cost to the Department of Communications for this reception.

4. Approximately $5,600.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

INCENTIVE GRANTS TO DOMINION TEXTILE LIMITED

Question No. 1,765—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the Regional Development Incentives Act authorized or provided an incentive grant or grants to Dominion Textile Limited, Magog, Quebec, and, if so, what is the amount of each grant?

2. Who are the directors and executive officers of Dominion Textile Limited, Magog, Quebec, and what is the address of each?

3. To what extent is this company non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Return tabled.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire about starred question No. 1,907 standing in my name. The question is starred because of the urgency in acquiring the information. It relates to meetings the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may have had with certain Indian bands. Having been in touch with some Indian people I know they would like to have the information before Parliament rises presumably at the end of this month. Could this question not be answered with some expedition?

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Chrétien: Soon.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Skeena, I also have a starred question, No. 1,203, about which I am concerned. It has to do with the Prime Minister's use of the Jet Star. In view of the fact that he now uses a Boeing 707 and since it has been most difficult to obtain information regarding the Jet Star, I am afraid that if consideration is not given to answering the question soon I will never be able to catch up on his use of the 707.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I refer to question No. 1,530 of March 18 in my name requesting the simple information as to the fees paid to people who have been hired by the present administration in the province of Nova Scotia since June 25, 1968. It would be most interesting to have the answer to this question. Certainly I cannot see any reason for the government not wanting to disclose how much money was received by people who possibly formerly have been Liberal candidates and by others.

Mr. Macquarrie: I should like to refer to an ancient question of January 21 regarding the SS Prince Edward Island. Now that the boat has been towed away I wonder whether someone could give us the information as to the number of tenders that were received.

Mr. Orlikow: I should like to refer to my question No. 1,002 of January 28, asking for the names of outside consultants, etc., hired by the Prime Minister's office or the Privy Council office, what they are doing and how much they are being paid. It is almost five months since I filed my question and I would hope that an answer could come down before the House adjourns.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSITION OF SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE—MEASURES TO PROMOTE ACCEPTANCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Finance. What is happening to the government's guideline program of 6 per cent with regard to wage and salary increases? Has this program been abandoned or modified or is everything going according to plan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The Prices and Incomes Commission is continuing to seek co-operation in wages as well as in prices and incomes. I hope that it has the support of my hon. friend.

Mr. Baldwin: Sir Galahad.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think the Acting Prime Minister, in his own embarrassment, should provoke me. Does the government, instead of simply passing this off as something devised by the Prices and Incomes Commission, propose to take any measures toward encouraging the acceptance of this program which I understand it has accepted as its own?

Mr. Sharp: The government has accepted the recommendations of the Prices and Incomes Commission. It established it, it encourages it, it gives it all the support that it can, and I hope it has the support of my hon. friend.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the position of the Acting Prime Minister and of the government that this program in its present form, with the exceptions that seem to have developed, carries conviction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that this question is in order.

INFLATION—APPLICATION OF SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE TO POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the wage increases announced in the past few days for teachers, firemen, iron workers and towboat workers in British Columbia, all of whom have received substantially more than 6 per cent, is it the government's intention to continue to insist that the postal workers get no more than 6 per cent?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The Prices and Incomes Commission this morning issued a statement in which it said that it is undertaking a preliminary inquiry into wage settlements ratified yesterday by Toronto construction workers, that it is proceeding to gather the facts and, after it has done so but not before, it will be making appropriate comments.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

SALARY INCREASES OF STAFF MEMBERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General who I understand is Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would like to ask him a question regarding the policy of the Prices and Incomes Commission with respect to the salaries of its own staff. Is it correct that those joining the staff of the Prices and Incomes Commission are guaranteed a 15 per cent increase over the salaries they were making prior to joining that staff and are guaranteed an annual increase in excess of the 6 per cent which the commission has laid down for others?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to have the hon. member's allegation looked into and have an answer brought forward by the minister on his return to the House.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Will the minister undertake to have a statement made on motions by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board some time this week so that we may have all the facts with respect to the income policy applying to the staff of the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, because it must be readily apparent to hon. members that any answer given should be given by way of answer to the parts of the hon. member's allegation that can be considered to be a question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Under those circumstances, will the minister undertake that an answer will be forthcoming to my question this week?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will try to have that done.

NATURAL RESOURCES

GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION TO PROSPECTING IN NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC AND NORTHEASTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Does the Canadian government make any contribution to prospection of new mining resources in northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: I feel the hon. member's question should normally be placed on the order paper, but if the House agrees the minister might perhaps reply.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to inquire from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and perhaps also from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as to such prospection as might be carried out, and probably the minister under whose jurisdiction the matter comes will be able to reply to the hon. member.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has SOQUEN, the Quebec agency, already applied for government aid for specific development.

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question could be placed on the order paper or dealt with at the time of adjournment.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTED REIMPOSITION OF CEILING ON BANK INTEREST RATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. As the statement by Dr. Young during the weekend about the 6 per cent wage guideline makes it clear that the government intends to keep the cost of labour as low as possible in its fight against inflation, is it the intention of the government to take similar steps to keep another very important cost of production, the cost of working capital, as low as possible by reimposing a ceiling on the interest rates charged on commercial loans at a level considerably below the levels of today, which are permitting the chartered banks to register record profits since the 6 per cent ceiling was removed?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question contains a number of statements. He knows that a question should be a question and not a statement, but to the limited extent that the hon. member's intervention is a question perhaps it might be replied to by the minister.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the question that was originally put to me by the hon. member was whether the government was taking steps to bring down the cost of interest on working capital. As a result of the government's success in dealing with inflation there has been a notable reduction in interest rates, and if we continue to be successful interest rates will continue to come down, but if the hon. member wants to encourage inflation on the one hand and hopes for low interest rates on the other he will be disappointed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, I have been pressing the government for a long time to keep costs down, and I would simply—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —I would ask him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I would ask him why it is that the government feels perfectly well satisfied to impose very stringent guidelines or restrictions on the earnings of labour when it refuses to impose any restrictions whatever on the earnings of capital?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is argumentative.

INFLATION—INVESTIGATION OF BANK PROFITS BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister who has been speaking about the necessity for maintaining guidelines. In view of the fact revealed in Friday's reports that the chartered banks have chalked up an increase in their profits of 27.7 per cent for the first six months of this year, following a 26.5 per cent increase last year over the previous year, is the Prices and Incomes Commission taking any steps to investigate these high profits particularly in view of the fact that the criteria the commission established do not deal with the profits of banks?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us how soon we can expect the results of this investigation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was talking to the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission this morning and he is looking into the matter immediately.

INFLATION—OPINION OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION CHAIRMAN ON CERTAIN WAGE SETTLEMENTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): In his conversation with the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission this morning did the Acting Prime Minister ask his opinion on these very large raises that have been put through during the weekend and what does the chairman say about them?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. gentleman could have been listening to my earlier answer.

Mr. Hees: Oh yes, he was. He didn't hear any answer.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Young said it would be inappropriate to comment on the settlements until the commission has had time to examine the situation, and this advice I offer to my hon. friend.

POLLUTION

ATHABASCA RIVER—PROPOSED COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO OIL SPILL, CONTROL AND PREVENTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development in respect of a matter which I have already raised. In view of the fact that the oil spill in the Athabasca River is moving with tremendous rapidity hundreds of miles north through the Peace and Slave Rivers and threatening the water supply of Fort Smith, will the minister get in contact with the proper authorities in the province of Alberta to arrange for a commission of inquiry as to the nature of this spill, how it happened, whether proper steps were taken to control it and what can be done to prevent a repetition of this very dangerous form of pollution?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the problem has been looked into by the officials of my department. As early as Saturday morning, I communicated with Mr. Ross, Minister of the Alberta Department of Lands and Forests, to seek the co-operation of his department, and we have set up a task force headed by Mr. Stephens of the Wildlife Service to study the problem. In addition, 23 officials of the Department of National Defence have been sent on the spot, not to mention officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have obtained the co-operation of the Alberta government and hope to repair the damage as soon as possible.

With regard to the possibility of preventing the recurrence of such incidents, of course the officials concerned have been asked to look fully into the cause of that pollution and to try to give the necessary instructions to prevent a recurrence.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister mind explaining to the House and the country why, in as much as I raised this question two weeks ago and was told by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the oil spill would be investigated and that experts would be sent there to find out the cause and to do something to prevent such spills, there has been two weeks' delay and nothing has been done to this date?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the hon. member that the pipeline was damaged in Alberta, within the territory administered by the province. As soon as the oil reached the national park and I felt I was involved, I immediately dealt with this problem.

As far as the officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are concerned, I cannot say what they did, but I shall inquire into the matter and report to the House.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Is it because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has got himself into so much difficulty with the cabinet that there has been no conversation between that minister and—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. the hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Could the minister indicate in what way the government is co-operating with the provincial government and Great Canadian Oil Sands to handle the pollution that is occuring in view of the fact that it has been going on for nearly two weeks, outside of sending officials to the area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that, essentially, the hon. member has reiterated the question asked by the hon. member for Peace River.

ATHABASCA RIVER—POWERS OF INQUIRY TASK FORCE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in light of the answer given earlier about the appointment of a task force with which the province of Alberta has agreed to co-operate, will this task force have the power to subpoena witnesses and call evidence, and if that has not been arranged will the government be requesting the government of Alberta to agree to such a procedure?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have been directly in touch with the company responsible for that pipeline to inform them that they would be held responsible for the incurred damage as far as legally possible.

I wish to point out to the hon. member for Calgary North that there are over there not only government employees, but additional employees who are trying to control the damage, and we have acted as soon as it happened.

[English]

ATHABASCA RIVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DAMAGE TO WILDLIFE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he would be prepared to make a statement on motions, after his officials have reported, with reference to the damage done to wildlife such as waterfowl, fish and furbearing animals in the area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it does not seem so far that any great damage has been caused to the animals of the area. It remains possible that the damage caused to fisheries might be quite serious, but I have received no report in that respect. As soon as I have one, I will gladly submit it to the House.

[English]

ATHABASCA RIVER—SCOPE OF TASK FORCE INQUIRY—ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT BODY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to ask a supplementary question concerning the task force that has been assigned, Mr. Speaker. Is this an ad hoc task force appointed just to look into this particular problem? If so, does the government have plans for the establishment of a more permanent and satisfactory group to deal with oil pollution problems?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know that following other similar incidents, the Department of Transport conducted extensive studies of methods used to clean up damage caused by oil.

As far as the pipeline itself is concerned, I wish to inform the hon. member that in Inuvik, some very important experiments are going on in order to make sure that in the future pipelines will be constructed so as to make such accidents impossible.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a further supplementary to clarify the matter, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to set up a body which would deal with oil pollution problems both on land and on water and not just through the Department of Transport's special task force?

Mr. Baldwin: You had better amend your legislation; you had better change your bill pretty soon. It is out of date even before it has been applied.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think a joint study of the problem by the various departments would certainly be appropriate, and I take due note of the recommendation of my hon. friend.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SAFETY OF DRUG, TOLBUTAMIDE, USED BY DIABETICS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the great concern felt by diabetic patients in Canada as a result of reports to the effect that the drug tolbutamide, under the trade name "Orinase", has dangerous properties, is the minister yet in a position to make a statement to the House about the use of this drug in Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been checked into by my officers in the Food and Drug Directorate. This was a conclusion of one paper submitted at a recent conference of scientists but there are other scientists who disagree with the findings. Scientific papers on investigations conducted especially in the United Kingdom and Scandinavia would indicate contrary conclusions. We are continuing to examine all the data, but in the meantime we are far from satisfied that there is anything harmful here which would require action at this particular time. We have also been in consultation with the Canadian Diabetic Association and they feel that the protective elements of this drug are very necessary for many diabetics in this country. Until we have greater clarification on what the research is, and because it is so contradictory, we feel that it is not appropriate to take action now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister whether the government of Canada is doing any monitoring of patients in Canada who are using this drug in order to determine statistics for our own use?

Mr. Munro: As far as all the scientific research that is being carried on is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of what is going on in other countries. We are not conducting research ourselves, but are relying on studies carried on in other countries. This does not mean we do not regard it as important but we do not want to duplicate the work. We are carrying on extensive research in other areas. That is the situation at the present time.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Are we to understand from the minister's remarks that the government does not plan to restrict or control the use of Orinase in Canada until further studies take place?

Mr. Munro: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. Several studies that have been conducted indicate quite the contrary of the adverse findings mentioned, in terms of conclusions. Until we can adequately assess the contradictions, we do not feel that action is warranted. Many benefits are derived from the use of this particular drug.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. OFFICIALS CONCERNING FINANCIAL POSITION OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister in his position as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the federal government has not lent more than $500 million to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the Seaway Authority is unable even to pay the interest charges on this government loan, has the government or the minister been involved in any recent discussions with United States officials concerning any joint action that might be taken to put the seaway on a sound financial footing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question, although it is important and may be urgent, is the type of question that should normally be placed on the Order Paper. If there is urgency the hon. member might wish to give the Chair notice and I will see that it is given priority for consideration at the time of adjournment.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RAE—INDIAN DEATHS ALLEGEDLY CAUSED BY SEWAGE PLANT WATER

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister in a position to answer the questions I directed to him on May 4 and May 20? On June 3 the minister indicated he expected an answer shortly. I refer to the allegations by Mr. Roy Daniels with respect to the Indian people who are alleged to have died because of water pollution in the community of Rae in the Northwest Territories.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Wefare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The nature of that particular situation was due to the fact that there was no top soil. The environment was such that the pollution could not be corrected. Measures have been implemented for that particular community to be moved to another area some miles away from its present location where they will not be subject to this type of risk.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DEPORTATION OF DESERTERS FROM U.S. ARMED FORCES—TABLING OF REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): My question is for the Solicitor General. Has the government completed its investigation with respect to complaints made against the Royal Canadian Mounted Police concerning the alleged handing over of three United States deserters to the American authorities? If so, can the minister indicate to the House in general terms the result of that investigation?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, a commissioner was appointed pursuant to the Inquiries Act by the three departments directly concerned, the Department of the Solicitor General, the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the customs department. The commissioner presented a report on Friday. I hope to consult with my colleagues who participated in the appointment regarding this report. The report will be translated and copies made available to the House.

Mr. Nesbitt: In view of the fact there is considerable interest in this matter, can the minister indicate when the report might be tabled? The second part of my original question was whether the minister could give the House an idea as to the result of the investigation?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be fair to reveal any of the contents of the investigation until the report is tabled in the House. One of the difficulties is that each minister has only one copy of the report. Additional copies will have to be made and the report translated before it can be tabled in the House. I hope that can be done very quickly.

DRUGS

AVAILABILITY OF INTERIM REPORT OF LE DAIN COMMISSION TO OPPOSITION PARTIES ON CONFIDENTIAL BASIS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is prompted in part by the commitment on Friday morning by the Prime Minister to table the interim report of the LeDain Commission and also the Prime Minister's statement that he hoped the opposition parties will be in a position to make a declaration of their position on the interim report as quickly as the government. In light of that, is the minister prepared, in the period until the report is tabled, to make the interim report available on a confidential basis to the opposition parties so that we will have the same amount of time to examine the report?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the government's position with respect to the LeDain Commission report is well known. As stated by the Prime Minister and earlier by myself, the decision as to when the document will be made public, if indeed it is to be made public will be made by cabinet as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Trudeau said it would. You are starting to weasel already.

Mr. Munro: I am not starting to weasel. I am indicating that as of this moment the government has not made a decision to table the report. I estimate that the matter will be taken under consideration this week. With regard to the cabinet's decision I am referring more to the timing of the tabling of the report. I believe the Prime Minister indicated it would quite probably be made public.

An hon. Member: Be made public?

Mr. Munro: I think the preoccupation of the opposition is that it be made public as soon as possible. That type of decision has not yet been officially made.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare aware of what the Prime Minister said on Friday, namely, "I can give the House the assurance that the report will be tabled?"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): We are aware of everything that the minister has said and I again ask whether he is prepared to make the report available to the opposition parties on a confidential basis so that the opposition parties will have a similar amount of time to examine the report and make their positions known at the time the report is tabled?

Mr. Munro: I think it is fair to say that when the Prime Minister made that statement he hoped and expected that the opposition would take a position on the paper as quickly as the government does. I judge that would be very soon indeed, judging from the attitude of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Munro: The government certainly has had very little time indeed to study the report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MARIJUANA—INSTRUCTIONS TO CROWN PROSECUTORS RESPECTING CHARGES IN LIGHT OF LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wish to direct my supplementary question to a minister who will give an answer we can understand, namely, the Solicitor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: In view of the minister's knowledge of what is in the LeDain Commission report, are special instructions being given to those Crown prosecutors who look after prosecutions under the federal jurisdiction with regard to young men and women involved in marijuana charges, in light of the recommendations of the LeDain Commission and in light of the bill the Minister of Justice has introduced with regard to bail, because many of these young people will remain in jail over the holidays?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I am sure the hon. member does not want me to give him indirectly the contents of the LeDain Commission report in answer to a question phrased in that manner.

Mr. Woolliams: I guess the Solicitor General has fallen into the same habit as the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Possibly I can make my question a little clearer. Will the Solicitor General issue special instructions to the Crown prosecutors who receive their instructions from his office on charges involving marijuana, particularly with reference to those people who cannot raise the money for bail?

Mr. McIlraith: I find it a little difficult to answer the hon. member's question. He is suggesting that I give instructions to Crown prosecutors in some way, by inference, contrary to the law. First, the Solicitor General does not give instructions to Crown prosecutors at any time. Second, even if I were the minister with authority to instruct them I would not give instructions that are, if I am correct in the inference I have drawn, contrary to the law.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary. Can the minister explain why some of the special Crown prosecutors in Calgary allege to defence counsel that they get that kind of instruction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROVINCIAL ASSURANCES OF ACTION TO CURB INFLATION—IMPOSITION OF CONTROLS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Labour on Saturday to the effect that the provincial premiers have apparently given assurances that they will take whatever steps are necessary to curb inflation, including rent control, will the Acting Prime Minister say whether assurances have been received from all provincial premiers that this will be done?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The hon. member's question is based on a very truncated version of what the Minister of Labour said. I obtained a transcript of what he said on the air and it was not as alleged by the hon. member. He said: "I presume—I wasn't there; I don't know what Dr. Young discussed but I am sure he came away satisfied." He made it quite clear that he was not there, that he was just talking from a presumption, and he did not know.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister, who is undoubtedly in communication with Dr. Young, whether all the premiers said that they might take such steps and, if so, when might this take place?

Mr. Sharp: I would have to take the question as notice and ask Dr. Young or someone who was there. I was not there myself.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Can the hon. gentleman say whether it is now government policy to press for rent controls and other controls on a nationwide basis as part of its war against inflation?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure it is the view of all members of this House that if a prices and incomes policy is to be put into effect successfully there must be restraint in all directions.

Therefore the government does support in general the idea that all forms of income and prices and so on should be restrained. To this extent we support the Prices and Incomes Commission. If the hon. member asks me directly whether the provinces have agreed to apply a certain kind of restraint in the areas over which they have control, I would have to take the question as notice.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CANCELLATION OF APPOINTMENT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the statement the Prime Minister made to Indian leaders recently in Ottawa that the government would not force the white paper policy on the Indian people, has a decision been taken to cancel the appointment of the Indian claims commissioner appointed to inquire into certain matters affecting Indian claims?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the policy we suggested a year ago was based on proposals. We do not intend to force anything on the Indians.

I wish to point out to the hon. member that this commissioner was appointed after the Indians had set up their own inquiry committee headed by Chief Délisle of Caughnawaga which is responsible to the Indians although it is financed by the government. On the other hand, Mr. Barber is responsible to the government. His contribution is aimed at clearing up the matter, so that the discussion will be more open when each party knows whether or not the contracts have been adhered to.

ACTION TO DEAL WITH CLAIMS OF NON-TREATY INDIANS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to ask the minister whether the government intends to do anything at all to deal with the legitimate and real claims of the Indian and Eskimo people in northern Quebec, in the Northwest Territories and in British Columbia with regard to resources and lands which they claim to be theirs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as far as New Quebec is concerned, I had the opportunity to discuss this matter personally with the provincial authorities. A tripartite committee, composed of representatives of the federal government, the provincial government and the Indians, was set up to look into this problem.

As regards the Northwest Territories, those are obligations now being studied by Commissioner Barber.

With respect to the rights of non-treaty British-Columbia Indians, they brought their troubles themselves before the Supreme Court of Canada.

POST OFFICE

RESTORATION OF NORMAL SERVICE IN WINDSOR, ONT.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): My question is for the Minister of Communications. In light of the fact that residents of the city of Windsor have received mail only once since the current postal negotiations began, can the minister advise the House when normal postal service will be restored in Windsor?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications and Postmaster General): I am extremely sorry that there is not normal postal service in Windsor. At the present time the unions are attempting to dictate to the Post Office the terms under which casual employees will be engaged. We regret that we cannot accept this kind of dictation. We realize that the service is diminishing—in fact it is bleeding to death in Windsor—but until the unions accept the fact that the Post Office will itself determine who is needed to sort and carry the mail there is nothing that can be done.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): May I ask the minister when, in his opinion, mail delivery service was normal in any part of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that the question is argumentative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us whether we can expect the white paper on foreign affairs to be tabled within the next week or so? I am advised that the gestation period of the document outstrips even that of an elephant.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The period of gestation is over now and we are only waiting for delivery from the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Fairweather: That, of course, does not answer my question. Will the delivery date be within the next few days? We want the report for light summer reading.

Mr. Sharp: Present plans are to provide copies for light summer reading. We expect to be able to table the review before the House rises.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LONG-TERM DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM PROPOSED BY NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has he received a proposal from the government of Newfoundland for a $1 billion long-term development program based on a white paper recently presented by that government to the Newfoundland legislature?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I can inquire of the department whether we have received such a request.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask what additional initiatives his department is taking to bring about regional economic expansion in light of the government's new policy and the new finances available?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this information would normally be given by way of a general statement to the House on motions. I do not think it would be in order for the minister to give this kind of information now.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Was the Prime Minister stating government policy in Vancouver yesterday when he was asked whether he would introduce more liberal abortion laws if the opposition agreed to it, and he replied that he would?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—INVESTIGATION OF SUICIDE OF JACQUES BOUCHER

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the Solicitor General. May I ask whether he has caused to be completed the inquiry into the death of a 16-year old boy by suicide at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary as promised by him on May 27 and as reported in Hansard at page 7388, and will he report to the House thereon?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I regret that the inquiry or investigation I was making into that case is not yet completed. I will see that an answer is brought forward.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE CONFERENCE ON CARIBBEAN POLICY—SCOPE OF AGENDA

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of Canada's deteriorating position in the Caribbean, will the government give consideration to calling a full-scale conference on Caribbean policy this summer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no intention of calling a conference this summer but we have in mind calling one at an appropriate time.

Mr. Paproski: In addition to dealing with the sugar rebate issue, will the agenda of such a conference deal with tourism, development assistance and immigration?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should think that a conference of this kind would have a very broad agenda including the items mentioned by the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BANK SALARIES IN RELATION TO PROFITS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I have a question related to one which was asked a little earlier, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the very high profits of the chartered banks. I would direct it to either the Minister of Labour or to his Parliamentary Secretary. Considering the multi-million dollar profits being made by the banks and the fact that an estimated 8,000 bank employees have been working for less than the newly established minimum rate of $1.65 an hour, will the department concerned look into what appears to be a reprehensible situation?

Suggested Interest-free Loans

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RIGHTS RESPECTING CONTINENTAL SHELF OFF ISLAND OF ST. PIERRE

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government taken a decision yet to go to the International Court of Justice to determine our rights over the continental shelf off the French island of St. Pierre?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No decision has yet been taken, Mr. Speaker. The matter of the conflict between the French government and ourselves is still under discussion.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EXTENSION OF TAB BENEFITS FOR AUTO WORKERS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister inform the House whether or not the TAB benefits for the auto workers, due to expire at the end of this month, have been extended?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check whether an announcement has been made or not during my absence.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—FINANCING OF PUBLIC DEBTS THROUGH INTEREST-FREE LOANS FROM BANK OF CANADA

Mr. René Matte (Champlain) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt, the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards should be financed by direct interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada, repayable at the rate of the depreciation on the assets thus created.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a principle universally accepted by orthodox economists and applied by all governments that government expenditures can only be financed by charges and taxes or, still, by means of loans which finally turn into taxes when it comes to paying the interest on the amounts borrowed and paying back the capital.

The federal government, the provincial governments, the municipal administrations and the school boards need money to administer themselves, to pay their civil servants, to finance public works, public services, to build roads and bridges, schools, universities and hospitals. Now, since governments have no money, they must get it somewhere, in the taxpayer's pocket, by imposing sales taxes, excise duties, through the delivery of licences to individuals; they must also get money from the public by selling natural resources, by making a profit in Crown corporations such as the liquor boards, for instance.

The profits of public undertakings do not amount to much in terms of income for the governments, because most of them lose money instead of making profits.

The sale of natural resources is only a temporary source of revenue: it is a source of income only at the time of the sale or as long as those natural resources exist.

As for the royalties paid to the governments which concede certain rights to industries or individuals, they are nothing but deferred taxes, taxes paid to the government by the companies and the individuals which are then passed on to the buyers of the products when the transactions are made within the country.

Government loans are deferred taxes which will be paid by the taxpayers in five or ten years. They are taxes other generations will have to pay. And to pay the interest on those loans, taxes will have to be levied which, in many cases, will be greater than the value of the goods and services purchased through the loans.

To give you some idea of the amounts the taxpayers must pay in interest only on public debts, I will quote you statistics on certain elements of the public debt in Quebec.

As of March 31, 1969, the public debt in the province of Quebec amounted to $2,022,858,854. The interest on that debt was $120,507,300 or $330,157 per day.

The Quebec Hydro, as at December 31, 1967, had a debt of $2,213,263,653; the interest amounted to $120,538,440 or a daily interest of $330,242. The figures for 1968 reveal the equivalent of a daily interest payment of $700,000.

In 1969-70, the Quebec government borrowed $318 million at a 9 per cent interest rate, which means an annual interest of $28,620,000, or $78,411 per day.

The 1,652 Quebec municipalities, with a $2,083 million debt, pay $232,470,000 in interest, or $636,904 per day.

According to the Union of the county councils, school boards, including the CEGEPs and regional schools, hospitals and universities have an overall debt of $4 billion. Therefore those organizations must pay an interest of $250 million, or $684,931 per day.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the overall debt of the province of Quebec amounts to $10,637,122,507, on which the Quebec taxpayers pay an interest of $2,060,645 per day.

I do not intend to linger unduly on the debt problem in Canada. I will merely point out that since 1867, the gross debt as well as the net debt have steadily increased in Canada.

Here are a few examples of the total debt of the federal administration for a few given years. In 1867, Canada's total debt was $93,046,051. In 1900, it went up to about $346 million. In 1933, it had already reached some $3 billion; it increased to $9,228 million in 1943 to finally reach $32,924,170,000 in 1968.

But these loans, as I mentioned, are but differed taxes which some day the taxpayers will have to pay. If we succeed in decreasing the public debt, it will be because the government will go and get that money in the taxpayers' pockets. And if the government does not succeed in decreasing the public debt, the taxpayers will be called upon to pay taxes all through their lifetime just to pay the interest.

Taxes, taxes and more taxes. We have personal income tax, corporate income tax, taxes on dividends, federal taxes, provincial taxes, municipal taxes, school taxes.

Any manufactured item carries a 12 per cent federal tax. The Ontario government adds a five per cent tax while the Quebec government adds an 8 per cent tax. Thus, for a simple item which costs $1.35 at the manufacturing level, if the seller adds 30 per cent for his profit, the sales price will be $1.98 including the federal tax.

In Quebec, if you add the 8 per cent sales tax, the item will cost $2.14 to the consumer.

Every province, except Alberta, applies a direct sales tax. The hidden tax on the sale represents on the average about 7 per cent of the retail value of the products to which it applies. Since the provincial tax is added on to the federal sales tax, we are having tax over tax to which other surcharges are often added.

There are also many other taxes: tax on land, tax on meals, tax on cigarettes, tax on alcoholic beverages, tax on estates, taxes on entertainment, crop insurance premiums, medicare premiums, unemployment insurance contributions, taxes on airplane tickets. Taxes, Mr. Speaker, taxes everywhere.

And taxes keep rising. Here is how taxes and other revenues of the Canadian government have increased during certain years.

In 1926, with a gross national product of $5,146 million, government revenues totalled $867 million or 16.8 per cent of the GNP.

In 1950, for instance, with a GNP of $17,955 million, government revenues amounted to $4,634 million or 25.8 per cent of the GNP.

In 1968, with a GNP of $71,454 million total government revenues at all levels reached $24,727 million or 34.6 per cent of the GNP.

And that is just the beginning because, according to the white paper on tax reform, the federal government intends to draw another $630 million annually from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, five years after the new tax system has been implemented.

Such is the situation today and such will it be tomorrow if Canadian citizens do not require from their governments to find other sources for the financing of social capital. Such a situation will last for ever unless the government should finance without interest social capital used for the development of the social projects of the federal government and the financing of the activities of provincial governments, municipal services and school boards.

People will say that taxes are necessary. Indeed, they are, as long as we yield to the financial rules which keep them necessary. However, these rules are no part of the Decalogue nor of God's commandments. They were established by men, and other men may change them, if they decide to do so.

We, from the Ralliement Créditiste, state positively that we can do without running into public debts and without taxes, without giving up developments and public services, without inflation or deflation, while providing an adequate distribution of the purchasing power among the members of the community. But to realize that, a certain condition has to be fulfilled first: a change in the operation of the financial system.

What sort of change do we have in mind? A very simple one, and nobody could possibly deny its worth: let finance reflect hard facts; let finance be a servant, not a master; let finance be a flexible and useful tool, instead of a tyrannical one which can only paralyze.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I have had the honour to move this motion which has been read at the beginning of my remarks, and which I want to read again:

> That, in the opinion of this house, in view of the government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt, the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards should be financed by direct interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada, repayable at the rate of the depreciation on the assets thus created.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I wish to remind the House that the present inflation and rising interest rates actually make even still heavier for the taxpayers the burden of taxes and public debts, due to the higher interests the governments and public bodies have to pay.

In this respect, let me recall what Mr. Louis Rasminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada, said in the brief he submitted to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on July 3 last. I shall quote from page 2749 of No. 55 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the said committee:

> One of the casualties of a prolonged period of inflation is the market for long-term debt obligations. This is because investors become increasingly reluctant to commit their funds in such a form even at progressively higher interest rate levels. Private corporations who wish to raise long-term funds can try to combat this trend by offering equity participation, often in the form of convertible debentures, but this option is not open to government—federal, provincial or municipal—or to buyers or to publicly-owned utilities who must rely on debt financing to cover their borrowing requirements. It is social capital formation rather than private capital formation which must bear the brunt of the harm done to the long-term capital market by inflation.

In his evidence before the Committee on Banking and Credit of the United States House of Representatives on June 21, 1969, during hearings on the increase of the prime rate by the banks, the governor of Maryland, the hon. Marvin Mandell, after having listed the requirements of cities and education, the housing needs of small wage-earners, the need for health care, prisons, rehabilitation of criminals, transportation and roads, pollution control, etc. stated that the Maryland government was forced to give up some plans needed by the people.

He referred at that time to an article published in the June 21, 1969 issue of the Washington Post pointing out that several states and cities of the United States were no longer able to sell their bonds, and that certain issues had to be cancelled. Among others he gave the example of the cities of Pittsburgh and Dallas, which had received no offer for school bond issues, while the state of Maryland had cancelled the floating of $59.8 million worth of bonds.

Mr. Speaker, this is also happening in Canada, and that is why, for instance, the Union of Mayors and Municipalities is proposing that a bank be set up to provide for municipal bonds.

It can thus be rightfully implied that it is the social capital, in short, the social projects of all governments which are being scrapped due to the shortage of credit and high interest rates.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we think that we are justified in proposing that the sums required for the public projects of the federal and provincial governments, of school boards, be financed through interest-free loans granted by the Bank of Canada.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to congratulate my friends in the Social Credit Party. Although I cannot support their motion I can sympathize with their sentiments and it is for this reason I rise now to discuss the present financial system. In a way they have a very understandable grievance because anyone who has been an objective observer over the years and who has observed our financial institutions as well as our way of financing public works over the years, surely has been appalled at the stupidity of the conventional method of financing. This type of financing causes the cry against the establishment, and it is one that has a long history. The cry arises from seeing poverty in the midst of plenty, and seeing waste when there are so many things that are needed by the people. I recall that during the depression years there were many people who wanted to work and there were all sorts of needs that had to be fulfilled, yet the government was not able to match the two together. Later, when the war started it suddenly became possible for this nation to make an enormous expenditure.

I can recall during the war meeting a fellow who had not volunteered but had been conscripted into the Canadian army. In those days of great patriotism there was a tendency to look askance at conscripts. I remember asking him why he felt the way he did. He said: "There was a time when I needed a job, when I needed help from my government, but they could not solve the problem of depression or find me a job; they could not help me support my family. Now, when the war breaks out, they suddenly have all kinds of money to get me killed. I do not like that kind of stance, and that is why I have taken the position I have". It was rather an extreme position, and it certainly was not the position I took, but in some ways it was understandable.

To get back to what I said earlier, this man's attitude was a reflection of the grievance that exists in our society against the traditional methods of finance. To some extent, our banks are already subsiding certain public programs. During the hearings before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs we had the opportunity to raise some questions with the banks' representatives when they appeared. The point was made that about 15 per cent of the banks' fund creating facilities are now established for government purposes. Whether it be for student loans, farm loans, fishermen's loans, small businessmen's loans or NHA mortgages, the banks already set aside 15 per cent of their funds for loans to be made at the direction of the government. They do not always make these loans at low interest rates, but I am sure the interest rates are lower than they would have been had there been no insistence on government direction.

At any rate, the government does ensure that a certain percentage of the available capital in our society is used for what they have set up as social priorities. Some cross-subsidization arises from this sort of arrangement. Quite obviously, if the banks charge a lower interest rate to some groups, this will be reflected in a higher interest rate to other groups. It is quite clear to me that the banks do exactly as they are told in our society; they have not had any choice to do otherwise. When we criticize the banks, our criticism is somewhat misdirected because it should be aimed at the government. Whether it is the Bank of Canada, or the chartered banks of this country, they respond to government policies. I think it has been clearly established in the last number of years that the government wishes the banks to undertake a certain policy. If they wish the Bank of Canada to undertake a certain policy, no other option is open to this institution. Therefore, my criticism will not be directed against the Bank of Canada or other banks but rather against the government policy which encourages and sustains what is going on today.

At present the banks' profits are the highest in recent history. They make fabulous profits year after year, and the returns for this year indicate that these profits will be maintained at the previous high level. One cannot escape the conclusion that the government wants these high bank profits to exist because if they wished otherwise they could say to the banks: "You will restrain your profits; you will limit the spread between what you pay for money and what you charge for it". If the banks' profits are at the level at which they are now it is because the government of Canada wishes it to be so.

We may ask why it is that at a time when the government of Canada is calling for restraint in other sectors of the economy, particularly among the wage and salary earners, they want to see these high bank profits. I think the government has a number of reasons for wanting this condition to exist. They want the banks to make money for some reasons which are very obvious, to me at least. First of all, they have the policy of keeping interest rates high, and they want them to be high. Second, this prevents the destruction of many of the financial institutions of our society.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Canadian banks are not totally efficient. There are a lot of flaws in their operations. Nevertheless, considering the powers they have under the Bank Act, if they lowered their profits they would be efficient enough to drive virtually every other financial institution out of business. High profits in the banking sector enable their competitors to survive. This is a developing characteristic of our society. It is taking place under the guise of a market system, or a free enterprise system. More and more we see certain institutions supporting lesser institutions rather than developing into monopolies or near-monopolies and therefore becoming subject to the scrutiny of government.

I believe we can do something with the banks to help in the formation of social capital at low interest rates. We have an obligation to establish social priorities, whether they be for municipal financing or for low cost housing, and have the banks work in the direction of this policy. This could be done by the government imposing a profit level on the banks, restricting the spread between what they pay for money and what they charge for money. The interest rate could continue at its present level for those areas of low priority but for the things which we think are fundamental and important to an intelligent, humane civilization, the banks would have to provide funds at low interest rates. This is not as far out as it sounds and that it why, as I said, although I cannot support the Social Credit motion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Saltsman: —I sympathize very much with my hon. friends' sense of injustice, with what they want to do. However, I cannot give them anything more than sympathy until they see things a little more clearly. I understand what they are trying to do, and I appreciate what they are trying to do, but they think you can have something for nothing.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Saltsman: What always disturbs me is that the Social Credit party postures as the great defender of the little businessman, and at the same time it wants interest-free money. But there is a mechanism involved. They cannot have both. They cannot have low interest rates for the private sector, and interest free money in the public sector.

Mr. Gauthier: You are all mixed up.

Mr. Saltsman: There appears to be a difference of opinion, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I cannot support their motion. I have listened very carefully to the Social Credit party spokesmen but after all these years of listening to them I remain unconvinced. Perhaps their advocates are not as persuasive as they might be. Perhaps some day they will have an advocate who will be persuasive. I think there is an inherent flaw in their theory. They try to walk on both sides of the fence and the result is that what starts off as a laudable outlook with regard to some of the problems in our society, becomes discredited because of the lack of thought attached to it.

Let us take a look at the smart boys in government, the people who deride Social Credit theory, who cannot see the germ of truth that exists in it, and who try to dismiss it. The exception, of course, was Hon. Walter Gordon, the former finance minister, who turned out to be a supporter of the Social Credit party when he voted with them on one occasion. Let us look at how intelligently these smart boys are approaching this problem. They start off by saying, "We have a great problem in this country. Inflation is a terrible problem. We are going to pull out all the stops and do something about inflation. The way to tackle this problem of inflation is to create unemployment." They all sat there in great, solemn convocation, and reached this earth-shattering conclusion, despite all the evidence that the causes of inflation are external to Canada. Virtually all of our inflation is inherited because of our close association with the United States and, in fact there is very little we can do about it The most draconian methods will only create a marginal effect on inflation in Canada so long as the United States pursues its insane policies in Viet Nam. Despite this evidence which is coming from virtually every major economist in the country, the great and solemn conclave over there creates unemployment.

Unemployment is not a costless thing. I would not mind them having a little fun, a little pleasure in playing games, if it did not cost the nation too much. But it is a very expensive little game that they are playing with the lives of the Canadian people and with the future of our economy, because we have over 500,000 unemployed people now. I made inquiry of the ministry as to what unemployment was costing Canada. I wish to quote from a return that was given me on March 2, 1970. I asked this question:

1. In its economic planning, does the government attempt to assess the cost to the economy of different amounts of unemployment and of different degrees of inflation and, if so, what techniques are used in calculating these costs?

2. Does the government compare the cost of inflation and unemployment in deciding what fiscal and monetary policies to use?

3. What is the cost of having an additional one per cent of the labour force unemployed?

The great geniuses on the other side of the House, who are charged with the responsibility of running the government, thought about this for a considerable time, and then in the great parliamentary tradition answered my question as follows:

1. The Department of Finance maintains a continuing analysis of the economic situation and outlook with a view to assessing likely trends in the economy, including movements in prices and unemployment. A wide variety of techniques is used, including surveys, statistical and econometric analysis and qualitative appraisal. The results of these various studies are brought together in formulating judgments as to likely developments.

I wonder whether the ghost of a former secretary of state for external affairs walked through the walls while that was being typed.

2. In deciding upon fiscal and monetary policies, the government and the Bank of Canada consider many objectives such as those pertaining to economic growth, stability, regional disparities as well as employment and prices.

I must apologize, Mr. Speaker, if I am just too dense to understand what they meant by that.

3. It is not possible to give a definitive reply to this hypothetical question without detailing the underlying economic environment, including inter alia, the level and distribution of unemployment by region and occupation, movements of prices, the distribution of the national income, the phase of the business cycle, developments in capital markets and trends in savings and investment. There are available publicly a number of studies which relate changes in the rate of unemployment to changes in GNP. These studies have been based largely upon observations of past events, especially during periods of relative price stability. They show varying results depending on the time period chosen and other assumptions.

In that last bit they used a little Latin, which is very impressive. It is easy to see why the opposition is so enlightened when it gets replies of this kind from the government. Other people have been working on this problem and they are inclined to be a little less obtuse than the bright boys in government. The studies I have seen would seem to indicate that with the present rate of unemployment we are losing over 8 per cent of our gross national product. This is not an insignificant percentage when one calculates that we are talking about $7 billion a year lost in terms of potential output in this economy. I wonder how the government balances this against their marginal joy at the slight decline in the cost of living.

What does this amount of unemployment mean in terms of revenue? It represents a 15 per cent shortfall in government revenues, and here we are talking about close to $2 billion At a time when people are concerned about rising taxation, at a time when there is such a need in our society to help old age pensioners, to do something for war veterans, to stimulate housing, it is shameful and criminal to have a government act in this way and to virtually destroy the economy.

The only thing that saves us, Mr. Speaker, is that this country is so rich, so resilient that even the worst attempts of the government cannot destroy an essentially buoyant nation and a buoyant people. If it were not for that, we would be suffering even more.

What have they accomplished? We have been through periods of national crisis before. We have been asked to tighten our belts and do without things. When there is some purpose in adopting these methods and they can be shown to be necessary and effective, then even these terrible figures that I have quoted would have some justification. But this cannot be shown in the present case. They have not succeeded in even denting the problem of inflation. They were told time and time again that they would not succeed, so their little game has been played out and has given fantastic hardship to the people; it has held back the economy. It has prevented us from creating the housing we need and from giving some social justice to pensioners whose condition worsens as the years go by. While the government is preoccupied with fighting inflation the pensioner's standard of living is declining.

Things do not have to be this way, Mr. Speaker. With full employment, government revenues would have been more than adequate to take care of the problems of the poor and the needy in our society. But the just society has been aborted by policies which are senseless and which cannot be justified.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I am informed his time has expired. He can continue with the agreement of the House, however. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is unanimous agreement, so the hon. member can continue his interesting remarks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well put, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I just need a few moments to conclude. The government is now coming to the conclusion that the policy has been a failure, that the policy has not been working and probably will not work. Like the characters in the old film serial, The Perils of Pauline, they have escaped from one cliff only to be found hanging from another. They have decided to bring in a policy of wage restraint which is to apply only to the wage and salary earners of this country. As in the case of their previous policy, they are now being told by everyone who is concerned about the problem, that it will not work and that it is unfair. If it is unfair it will not work in our society because it will not be accepted. The government has been told repeatedly that any policy of restraint must apply equally to all sectors of the economy. In a democracy, unless something is accepted as fair and workable, it will eventually have to be withdrawn.

I welcome the opportunity provided by the members of the Social Credit Party to put before this House some ideas for change, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to join with my friends in the Social Credit Party in denouncing what we think has been an insane financial attitude on the part of the bright boys of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the motion now before the House, introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), clearly lays down a basic creditiste tenet, which is to make financially possible what is physically attainable, in a country like ours.

Recently, the provincial Ministers of Finance met in Winnipeg to discuss taxation and monetary matters, but within the framework of our present financial system.

When we ask to make financially possible what is physically attainable, we are making no crazy suggestion, since, in the past, such a principle has been applied. I am referring to wartime or national emergency periods, as they were called. In wartime, when they were told about national emergency, people never asked whether the necessary credits existed.

When we had to manufacture guns and other deadly weapons, to enlist young people 18 years old or over, to withdraw from the consumer goods production sector 800,000 young workers during the Second World War, to provide them with clothing, food and adequate housing, we never wondered whether Canada could make financially possible what was physically attainable.

And as soon as it is peacetime, it usually takes 10, 15 or 20 years to reach a situation as the one we are experiencing now, when every province is near exhaustion, when municipalities are impotent, when several school boards can no longer pay their teachers, with the federal government suggesting as a solution: Tighten your belts, stop spending your money, even though the number of unemployed may increase considerably.

Mr. Speaker, because of the present financial policy, there are a total of 545,000 unemployed in Canada. In addition, more than 600,000 students are looking for summer jobs and we cannot give them any. The federal government may very well say: We are going to use 35,000 or 40,000 of them, but what about the remaining 550,000 or 600,000?

Mr. Speaker, the Finance ministers, particularly that of Quebec—that is the new Quebec Prime Minister—got back to their respective provinces saying: Ottawa has granted us $100 million, $50 million of which should have been turned over only next year. But what does represent $100 million for the administration of the province of Quebec? A drop in the ocean! You could not even pay the annual interest on the provincial debt with it! And the Prime Minister was pleased to announce that he had come back to Quebec with his hands full. But the unemployed are still "filling the frame" of Quebec's economic activity.

Mr. Speaker, the financial question is of prime importance. We suggest that interest-free loans should be granted to the public sector in Canada, namely to municipalities, school boards, provincial governments as well as to the federal government which does not have the necessary funds, even if it has the necessary authority to enact the monetary reform or the mobilization of the whole monetary system for the benefit of the Canadian people, in order to liberate Canada, the provinces and the municipalities.

As soon as we say this we are accused of wanting inflation. But when we granted interest-free credit to other countries, did this create inflation in this country? When, quite recently, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) offered Malaysia $50 million in interest-free Canadian investments for the development of a power plant, did the Malaysians complain that this would create inflation in their country? And if the same thing were done for Quebec, Ontario or any other province, this would create inflation.

When, because of the system, the former premier of Quebec had to borrow $50 million from the United States, these $50 million did not exist in the province of Quebec before the loan. They were borrowed from the United States at a 10 per cent interest rate for 25 years. In 25 years, we will have payed out $125 million in interests and we will still owe $50 million in capital, i.e. $175 million in all!

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) does not understand that. No one has mentioned that it caused inflation. We will have to pay $175 million for $50 million received. Neither the Prime Minister nor any other federal cabinet minister have protested against this shameful abuse, nobody mentioned that it was causing inflation in the province of Quebec. If the province, instead of borrowing from the United States, had used the services of the Bank of Canada to produce the same amount of $50 million, interest-free, would that have caused inflation? Of course not. Some members of the federal Parliament have no gray matter between their ears. We hear a lot about inflation, but is the Bank of Canada short of ink or pens? Does not Mr. Rasminsky know how to count anymore? We are afraid of creating inflation by calling upon the Bank of Canada, while the fear of inflation miraculously disappears when we borrow money from our friends, the Americans.

As private enterprise is profit-earning, it can put up with our financial structures, pay interest while making profits, which is normal. But that public institutions such as the federal, provincial and municipal governments as well as the school boards should have to pay interests when they do not operate on profit, that is a mathematical impossibility. It is illogical on the part of the central government to allow such a situation with regard to provinces, municipalities and school boards.

Quebec or Ontario, in order to build low cost houses—not at $150 a month for a worker who earns $5,000 a year or at $135 or $125 a month for people who earn from 4,000 to 5,000 a year, which they cannot afford—needs from $50 to $500 million. Houses are built and then families are told: regardless of the size of your family, take this house.

Instead of building houses according to the needs of families, an attempt is made to cut families down to the size of the house. It is quite sensible. Four-room houses are built for families with ten children. A fine sight!

My friend, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), smiles when I talk about that, but he knows. In Hull, we see it every day. Large families are living in small houses. That is why the federal government and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) work at bringing in abortion bills so as to control the birth-rate, to prevent human beings from coming into the world and to cut down families to the size of houses built by the government. Those are the logical consequences of the present system.

I understand the position of the Minister of Justice. Families must be cut down because it is impossible to enlarge houses. Lumber and other materials are lacking. Contractors and workers are lacking. The minister is smiling. And he is right. That system is so stupid. They do nothing to change it, smiling all the while, as the Minister of Justice is doing. They smile, put they stand pat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: If the province of Quebec needs $500 million at once to build dwellings, the Bank of Canada does not issue that amount on the spot, by putting that money in circulation, but according to the work done, at the rate the work is completed. If during one month $500,000 worth of dwellings have been erected, the Bank of Canada issues a credit of $500,000 to be paid back in "x" years according to the depreciation of those dwellings. Then a man would not have to pay twice or three times for his house. As regards my small house in Hull, the Mutual Life agreed to underwrite my mortgage and in six years I have not yet managed to reduce the capital debt by $1,000. My payments amount to $1,500 a year, most of it in interests. In one year, I pay $90 or $100 on the capital, the rest goes for interests and insurance.

I am forced to pay for three houses. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has published official figures concerning payments on a $22,000 house with a 9 or 9¼ per cent mortgage over 35 or 40 years. In the end, the $22,000 house will cost $99,000.

• (4:00 p.m.)

And that is inflation. It is not just an ajustment, it is not the true reflection of our opportunities.

So, the provincial government—to come back to my example—would refund the loan in so many years following the fall in value of the houses which have been built and we could give accommodation to our people. We could have houses to sell, thus allowing the small wage earners to have their own homes which is simply impossible in the present circumstances, under the system now prevailing.

The government has to come to grips with this system. It expresses wishes for it is anxious to see an end to inflation. However, those who are at the roots of inflation are encouraged in every way. In fact, under the present financial system we have to pay two or three times whatever we achieve, as for instance Hydro-Quebec.

In Manitoba, under the New Democratic Party, they have done the same thing. They have borrowed $50 million from the United States on behalf of a Hydro project. I remember hearing on television my good friend, the leader of the New Democratic Party in Winnipeg, and his colleague from York South (Mr. Lewis) who, with fists clenched above his head, was saying that if the Americans could be expelled from Canada we could recover the control of our economy and have Canada all to ourselves.

And he was right. The next day, however, the Minister of Finance of the New Democratic party in Manitoba was telling us on the waves of the same television station about the wonderful trip he had just made to the United States where they had rolled out the red carpet and where, thanks to the confidence of the Americans in Manitoba and its new government, he had been able to borrow the huge sum of $50 million at an interest rate of 9¼ per cent. This was just a little less than what in the province of Quebec had had to pay: 9¼ instead of 10 per cent. They were bragging about it.

Mr. Speaker, the only condition on which we can regain control of our economy, is to start with regaining control of our finance. When we can create our own credit in order to build our roads, to enable our provinces to develop normally, then we might say that we control our economy. Canada belongs to us. But as long as this financial issue has not been settled, I challenge the New Democratic party, as well as any other party, to tell me that some day we will own Canada. We will never own her as long as we are obliged to borrow from the United States.

But this is the reply given to us: Will the credit supplied by the Bank of Canada not cause our money to depreciate on the American or the international markets? They have not understood yet, Mr. Speaker, that our Canadian dollars is not in circulation in these countries.

I have been to Russia, Czechoslovakia, France, everywhere! And let someone show me in those countries one single dollar bearing the likeness of the queen. No one has ever seen any. No one wants to accept our dollar. Go to the United States, across from Cornwall, and try with a Canadian quarter to get a package of cigarettes from a vending machine. It will immediately reject the coin. Some will say: How much will our money be worth in the United States? At the present time it has no value.

Do you imagine that the Americans are wondering what kind of roads we are now building to James Bay? Are they wondering what kind of schools we are building in Charlevoix and in Carleton, or anywhere else in Canada? Are they going to see what kind of wheat is stored in our grain elevators in northern Saskatchewan? What concerns the Americans at the present time is to lend money to the idiots that we are because this way they can triple their profits.

Great care is taken not to alter those interest rates. We would rather let them go up. However, bills are submitted to the provinces in which they are told: Try to control the small employees' salaries, not to increase them by more than 6 per cent a year. But for the "big shot", a 30 per cent increase is not excessive.

No minister has taken exception to that. To the small wage-earner, the mailman, the miner in Noranda or the worker in Toronto, a 6 per cent increase only is granted in order to check inflation, but a 30 per cent one is granted to the "big shot". To fight against whom? To fight against those who check inflation, this is exactly what it is.

Why would the creation of credit by the Bank of Canada have any influence in the United States? We wish to create credit in order to develop our country, and make financially possible what is physically feasible. At present, there are 200,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec; Those Canadian citizens do not want to be unemployed, they want to work. However the Quebec government, is promising them 100,000 jobs. Our friend, Mr. Samson, the leader of the Ralliement créditiste in Québec said to Mr. Bourassa: Hurry up, because we are going to count them one by one, those 100,000 jobs, if they are not provided by the end of 1970.

Even if 100,000 jobs were created, there would still be 100,000 others to create, in addition to summer months for students, jobs for future graduates. The situation is serious.

In Quebec and elsewhere, everything is to be done. There is some talk of hydroelectric projects at James Bay, of about $2 or $3 billion. But they think of dollars instead of thinking of the waterfalls of the natural wealth they represent. Instead of adjusting the financial system to the resources to be developed, they do the opposite: they try to adjust the resources to be developed to the financial system.

That is against common sense. This is walking on one's head instead of using one's feet. There are some who do not yet realize that.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Will the hon. member allow me to interrupt him to remind the House that his time has expired? He can keep on with his remarks with the unanimous assent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed. The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I congratulate my very good friends of all parties for allowing me to continue. They doubtless want to better understand Social credit, and if that could happen, I should have helped not only the members present but also the whole population. Indeed, applying our principles would improve precisely the situation the government would like to improve. It is impossible for them to do so, because their hands and feet are tied. The government cannot go ahead. The system commands that it stop. That is paralysis.

A while ago, I spoke of interest free loans to the provinces. I have here a copy of Hansard for Thursday, March 12, 1970, where, at page 210, is given the amount of loans granted to foreign governments as at March 31, 1970: $1,333 million, at very low interest rates. A few loans were granted at 3 per cent but most have lower interests rates.

We grant those loans to the United Kingdom, for instance, and to France. These are interim credits, special assistance loans to underdeveloped countries. According to the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, on deferred interest, the interest is added to the debt, for a total amount to $1,038 million.

Yet, the Canadian government makes loans, pays for the issue of unamortized loans, and pays rates of interest of 7 per cent, 7¼ per cent, 8 per cent for a total amount of $181 million. The federal government pays interest and asks the Canadian people to do without things to help others.

I have no objection to our helping others, but I do object to our not helping our own to the same extent. That the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), our very own Prime Minister, should go touring the Pacific to meet Australians, New Zealanders, Malaysians, that he should flaunt the Canadian wealth in those countries, we have no objection to that. However, we do object to our Prime Minister telling Canadians that they must submit to certain restrictions, while allowing himself to tell the New Zealanders: To help you as much as possible, we will try, in Canada, to decrease the subsidies to the dairy industry. We will ask our farmers to stop producing milk so that you may export your dairy products to Canada.

If subsidies to Canadian farmers were abolished, this would enable us to import more products from New Zealand. Moreover, we are already importing butter and powdered milk from New Zealand when we have more than required in Quebec to meet the demand of all Canadians.

I understand that the international market must be balanced. However, we must at the same time dispose of our own products instead of telling our people: In order to promote international trade, starve at home, sit back and do not produce, your subsidies will be cut off in order to encourage New Zealand.

Since the government is paralyzed and his policy ineffective, what will have become of Canada five or ten years from now? On March 9, the hon. member for York South asked the following question in the house:

1. For the fiscal year 1968-69, what were the total Canadian parliamentary appropriations for foreign aid programs?

2. For the fiscal year 1968-69, what were the total actual expenditures by the government of Canada on foreign aid programs?

The appropriations allowed amounted to $219 million. Up to now, the expenditures have been $153 million. Then, the Secretary of State for External Affairs replied as follows:

1. For the fiscal year 1968-69, the Canadian Parliamentary appropriations and authorizations for foreign aid totalled $289,476,000.

Foreign countries get more than Canadian provinces; the latter have to pay taxes, while the former do not even have to pay interest. This is where the system goes wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that hon. members are listening very carefully, but as questions are raised everyday on inflation, unemployment and distress in this country, why does the government impose restrictions? Why does the Prime Minister do this instead of that?

For instance, both the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) are taken to task, and both have the same reply: No money.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say again what I said at the opening of my remarks: If war broke out tomorrow, there would not be any shortage of money: we would find some, even to buy the wheat of the western farmers. Indeed there would be some to buy everything.

But is it not also a national urgency when you have close to 700,000 or 800,000 unemployed in Canada? Is it not urgent to find a solution when our kids are uprising against a society in which they are not able to integrate themselves?

Mr. Speaker, the young people who are uprising are blamed and the society which prevents their integration is tolerated. Instead of blaming the youngsters who are uprising, one should begin by blaming the society and by improving it, and begin by effecting improvements in the House of Commons so that it could set an example for the rest of Canada. But instead, the blame is put on the youth. It is true that there are some hot-headed among the youngsters, but if we were in their situation, would we not have our hot-headed too? After all, these young people of today are our children.

I met recently a few federal members with 18 or 19 years old kids who are blamed in their own home by young separatists, rebels or revolutionists who cannot find a job in their own country. And we are told that the middle class is responsible for this situation, when everyone wants to become part of it. Today's young people who rebel against the middle class want to become part of it tomorrow. However, the financial system does not see to it that these young people are integrated in society, because it refuses them the right to work. If all these young people were actually employed in the development of the vast riches of Canada, would not that create new riches? Would it not allow them the opportunity to contribute directly to the administration of their country?

What solution does the Government offer? None. It does what it can; it spends $27 million to create 33,000 jobs. $27 million is a large sum! However, 600,000 young people are watching us. They are not happy about what is happening. That should not worry us. As long as our leaders will give more attention to the financial system than to the Canadian nation, and in particular to the young, there will still be trouble in Canada.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Things will go from bad to worse and necessarily Canadians as a whole will pay for the consequences. That is why we should assume our responsibility. We are reasonable and in earnest, we are seeking solutions. The government finds none. The Progressive Conservatives offer no alternative solutions. They tell the government: Put us in your place and we will do the same as you do. The proof thereof is that they already were in power, and acted in the same way.

The New Democratic party has never been in power. What better results would they obtain within the same system? None at all. If we were in the government's place within the same system, we would do no better. We must get out of the system, improve it, change it. Instead of changing the people and putting them through the system, let us put the system to work for the people. Then we will be able to guarantee that each and every citizen enjoys economic security as well as personal freedom.

Canadians are entitled to their freedom and security. Freedom without security is impossible. Security without freedom is quite easy. Every socialist country in the world has brought security at the expense of freedom. If you do not believe me, try it. Suppose that ten members go to Frieman's and break all the windows of that department store. I am convinced that within 15 minutes the Minister of Justice will have his security, just like me. We would all be behind bars with three meals a day guaranteed, and clothes that might not fit. But we will be clothed and fed and if we get sick, medicare will look after us, all of this at the government's expense. There, we would all enjoy security but not freedom. That is not a system we want for our citizens.

We want a system that would allow the minister, as well as all Canadians, to be free, to enjoy security from birth to death. That is exactly the purpose of the motion introduced by my colleague for Champlain. That is also advocated by the Creditiste doctrine of Major C. H. Douglas. Instead of laughing at it, let it be seriously considered. Everybody agrees that changes are necessary if we are not to end up in chaos as so many other countries did.

A country to which we provided millions of dollars in assistance, I mean Ceylon, became communist a few hours ago. We gave help, but was it the citizens or the businessmen of Ceylon we helped? If we used Canadian credit to make a few businessmen richer and left the poor in destitution, it is not surprising to see communism taking hold of that country.

Besides, even in India, a country on which we are lavishing assistance, what Indians are benefiting by it directly? None. There again, businessmen who make profits at the expense of human lives.

I went to India just two years ago. I have seen what is happening over there. I did not see any 25-cent Canadian coins in Bombay, where two million people sleep outside at night. None at all! We have not helped the people, we have helped some businessmen.

I believe it is time, if it is not too late, to think of helping the individual. We will then prevent the communist catastrophe, the revolution growing in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

In our capacity as responsible members of a sovereign Parliament, it is time we bring order in our finances, so as to free the human being. Then, as I said before, we will ensure the security and the freedom of every citizen.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the last speaker who participated in this debate, because at least two-thirds of what he said was right. His speech was entertaining and forceful, but unconvincing. He suggested that if he were given some additional time he would be able to convince the members of the House, and Canadians as a whole, of the correctness of Social Credit theory, but I am afraid he left me unconvinced. I do not expect to be lengthy in my remarks. I merely wish to show that the Conservative party is at least consistent. On November 6, 1962 we opposed a motion to this effect—

Mr. Francis: I think I remember it.

Mr. Bell: A lot of people remember it.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, a lot of people remember it. The motion called for debt free money. The Conservative party at that time opposed this particular motion and they are opposing it today. It is interesting to note that on November 6, 1962 the Liberals voted for debt-free money.

Mr. Bell: Shame.

Mr. Monteith: The motion itself reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the Government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt—

So far I agree. I think it should be stressed that this situation is one of the government's own creation. The huge increase in debt in the last few years, the huge increase in taxation and the increase in inflation have been caused by government mismanagement. World-wide conditions have been difficult to combat. I admit that. Since 1965, this government has been heading into the situation in which we find ourselves now. Today, we have a situation in which the government is at least suggesting controls. There are implied guidelines. Presumably, the government is on an austerity kick, although expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1971 are some 9 per cent higher than for the last fiscal year. I call this irresponsibility on the part of the government. When this debate on debt free money came up today, I recalled the debate which took place in November, 1962. I should like to point out that the following appears in Hansard of that year at page 1331:

> The tight money policy which was introduced as part of the austerity program, and by this I mean restrictive credit and high interest rates, was bound to slow down business activity. High interest rates were bound to make it difficult for municipalities to proceed with badly needed works and services. This, in turn, could not fail to slow down construction and this is bound to mean fewer jobs this winter.
> But instead of worrying about a program which would lead to the employment of more people in this coming winter, the government seemed much more anxious to placate those who had moved their money out of Canada and to beg them, in the form of high interest rates on their investments, to bring it back. The effects of the government's tight money policy are bound to fall most heavily on small businessmen and on those parts of the country such as the maritimes and the Minister of Finance's own province of Nova Scotia where capital is especially hard to come by. Why we should go on punishing our own people in this way is beyond my comprehension. But that is what we are doing under this emergency tight money policy.

Those are the words of the Hon. Walter Gordon. I suggest that those words apply today. I feel convinced that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), who listened intently to the last speaker, will probably vote for this motion again today. Since the members of the Liberal party voted for a similar proposition in 1962 they will probably be quite ready to support it today.

Mr. Bell: They have nothing to gain today.

Mr. Monteith: My purpose in speaking today is to point out that I feel this is the wrong approach. I admit that an approach should have been made back around 1965, but it is not too late yet for this government, which does not know restraint, to start showing some restraint. I should like to mention in passing that the last speaker was entertaining. I recall a member of the Social Credit Party, the hon. member for Lethbridge of that day, who always participated in the debate on the estimates of the Department of Finance. In those days the estimates were considered in the House, as any hon. members who were where here will recall. This particular hon. member always spoke three times on the estimates of the Department of Finance He spoke once on the estimates themselves. Then, he spoke on Social Credit theory and, finally, on the Turkish-Mongolian conspiracy. This was always most entertaining.

The hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) was as entertaining today, if not more so, but at the same time he failed to convince us that the use of debt free money is the way to cure the situation. The government, during free time for Political broadcasts on t.v. last August, came out with a big hullabaloo about what it was going to do under the austerity program. This was a lot of nonsense. The government has not done anything. A few commissionaires employed at various places may have been laid off and some other people on the lower income bracket may have been laid off, but actually the government is building up the hierarchy. A power house is being built up around the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) office. This is enough to frighten anyone. We are approaching what I would suggest very definitely is a socialistic dictatorship. I know of a country in the Middle East which suggests it has a constituional monarchy form of government. I call it a benevolent dictatorship. This is not even a benevolent dictatorship.

This government, for instance, a few months ago renewed the 3 per cent surcharge. In addition, this government changed the constitution under which our system of government operates. In February, 1968 they were defeated on a money bill and refused to resign, so, in effect they changed our whole system of constitutional authority.

Now, they have renewed that 3 per cent surcharge which replaced the 5 per cent on which they were defeated, and if, as, and when the white paper should become legislation—pray God it never does—this temporary tax will be melded into one tax rate which the people of Canada will have to face forever.

[Mr. Monteith.]

I suggested earlier, Mr. Speaker, that I would not go over my time so you do not have to point out to me that my time has expired. I propose to sit down now, but before doing that I want to point out, something to the hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). He suggested that the Conservatives would only do the same as the Liberals, that we would be very concerned about the situation. We have proven our ability to be concerned about the situation which has existed here in Canada since 1965. I cannot support this motion no matter how well intentioned it may be.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we listened a few minutes ago to the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) who introduced with great eloquence a motion to establish a new method of financing public capital in Canada.

We also listened to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) who gave us examples intended to cast some light on this motion.

One would have to be blind, to be totally deprived of financial knowledge or to accept to be a accomplice of this administration not to recognize the merits of this motion. The Canadian financial system piles up on the federal government, the municipalities, the provincial governments and the school boards and all the public agencies, a pyramid of debts which mathematically speaking can never be repaid and which paralyses all these bodies.

If, because of ignorance or collusion, we refuse to recognize that banks alone, with practically nothing, in the form of credit, create more than 95 per cent of the money in circulation in Canada, we will look everywhere as the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) just attempted to do, for some justification for that pyramid of debts, the causes of which I should like now to summarize. When banks through credit created out of nothing lend to all public bodies, governments and school boards, $10 billion per year, at a 10 per cent rate of interest and then request a year later for the repayment of $11 billion in capital and interest, that represents the basis of a pyramidal system of debts that we will never manage to pay, if we keep that same indebtedness system.

How can we believe that all public bodies can repay $11 billion when they received in fact only $10 billion?

Put $5 billion next to another $5 billion, Mr. Speaker, and let them sleep together for a year, and as there is no such thing as male or female dollars, bringing together those two amounts of $5 billion for a year will never generate little ones twelve months later.

Whenever the banks lend $10 billion and request to be repaid $11 billion, they create in a year a billion dollar debt at the expense of all public bodies, a debt mathematically impossible to repay over a short or long term period.

However the banks will accept part payments and will refinance the balance under the same conditions. If you owe $11 billion on a $10 billion loan and pay back $5 billion, you still owe a balance of $6 billion. Yet, you only have in fact $5 billion of the original amount borrowed.

So you borrow again, at every government level, you borrow again to pay back part of your old debts; you borrow let us say another $14 billion for the following year. You then owe $20 billion, for the banks will refinance the first $6 billion you owe them. Total loans then amount to $20 billion, at 10 per cent, which means that in another year you will again owe $22 billion while having received only $20 billion.

Because money does not make little ones, because it has neither hair nor life, it cannot multiply itself.

Banks, by creating credit out of nothing, ask that more money be paid back to them than they have put in circulation through loans, create a system of perpetual and pyramidal debts which society cannot possibly pay. That is what crushes public bodies.

Today, more than 50 per cent of all public income is absorbed by taxes of all kinds: municipal taxes, school taxes, federal and provincial taxes, to pay the interest on unpayable debts. Indeed, fifty per cent of all our taxes are spent solely on paying the interest on the public debts.

That is why it is stupid, archaic, obsolete and criminal, not to accept the motion of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), so that the federal government, through its own financial institution, the Bank of Canada, would issue credit instead of the banks, and put it interest free, at the disposal of all public bodies.

With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a chart of the public debts, including those of the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities, and the school boards.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must point out again that although there may be precedents for this it is a practice against which I have felt obliged to caution. It seems to me that the practice of hon. members seeking to include tables in Hansard might be open to abuse. Having said that, I am prepared to put the question to the House. Is there unanimous consent?

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I thank the—

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): There was no unanimous consent.

[English]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently there is no unanimous consent.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues seem to be afraid of hearing about the debts we are facing, because those figures were supplied to me by the Minister of Finance of each of the ten provinces of Canada.

I would like to put on record the official documents in my possession from each of the provinces. According to this chart, which gives a frightful picture of our public debts, the provinces owe $9,299,409,860. The municipalities with a population of over 5,000 people owe $6,502,696,257. The school boards owe $3,744,760,945. The total debt for the municipalities, the provinces and the school boards is $19,546,830,062.

According to the latest statistics in the budgetary papers dated March 12, 1970, the federal debt totals $38,018 million, for a grand total of $57,564,830,062 for the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards, without mentioning the debts owed by municipalities with less than 5,000 population.

A look at the budget of Quebec municipalities for 1967-1968 and at the statistics reveals that several municipalities must earmark over 65 per cent of their budget for the payment of interest on the debt.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

The town of Saint-Hubert, for instance, which has a municipal budget of $2,274,400, must pay $1,015,866 in interest only on its debt. The municipality of Ville d'Anjou, which has a $4,976,081 budget, must earmark 64.9 per cent of its budget for the repayment of interests only. It actually has to pay $3,229,623 in interests.

And so it goes for most municipalities in Quebec.

For instance, on a budget of $690 million, the city of Trois-Rivières-Ouest must pay 57.4 per cent in interest alone, that is $396,385. The story is much the same for all municipalities in Canada.

I would have liked to table in the House a list of borrowings by the Quebec Hydro last year, a very important list. In a single year, the Quebec Hydro borrowed $282 million, including $50 million in the United States on July 15, 1969, $27 million in Germany on September 1, 1969, $25 million in Canada on October 15, 1969, $20 million in Europe on October 15, 1969, $50 million in the United States on December 15, 1969, $50 million on February 1, 1970 and $60 million on March 15, 1970.

A look at those figures shows that every 15 days, Quebec Hydro gets into debt to the tune of approximately $25 million.

When we consider those figures, we realize that a very large part of the budget of some municipalities goes in interests on their debts.

For example, in the city of Châteauguay only, one bank makes an annual profit of $315,000 in interests on three bank accounts. The two cities of Châteauguay owe the same bank the amount of $1 million at 9½ per cent interest. The Youville Regional School Board, in the riding of Châteauguay, owes $1,700,000 at 8¾ per cent interest. As for the Châteauguay School Board, it has a $881,000 debt at 9½ per cent, for a total of $3,581,000 on which the bank makes $315,000 a year. It does not take a large personnel to enter three different figures in the three bank accounts.

Three hundred and fifteen thousand dollars have been earned by entering three figures in the bank books for three accounts. This contributes to get the Châteauguay taxpayers into debt.

The same conditions prevail in all cities and school boards of Quebec and other Canadian provinces.

The creation of credit money by banks is the finest legal racket in the world stifling every public body.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

In India people starve and worship sacred cows instead of eating them. In Canada, we are crushed under the burden of public debts while worshipping the golden calf and Mammon.

Even though we believe that our civilization is much more modern and superior to that of India, we are strangely like the Indians when we worship the golden calf and Mammon.

Our financial system of running into debt is a bottomless barrel which the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards are trying to fill up, but which is used to make richer all those who create money out of nothing and exploit the people. In Canada, the total public debt amounts to $57,564 million. We therefore pay on average $5 billion in interests per year, which means that each Canadian pays $250 and each family $1,000 yearly.

If we passed the motion put by the hon. member for Champlain, we would avoid all those payments and Canadians would save $5 billion per year in interest, the price of entering figures in bank books.

A few months ago the Quebec Autoroutes Authority said in its report that in the province of Quebec, after 400 years, there are only 155 miles of highways which have cost the province over $400 million, an average cost of $2.5 million per mile. This includes the Eastern Townships highway, 70 miles long, the Northern highway, the Laurentides highway as well as the highway connecting Montreal to Joliette.

Last year the Autoroutes Authority gave the following figures: tolls brought in $7 million while only $2 million in capital and $19 million in interest were paid back. The revenue totalled $7 million, which leaves a deficit of $14 million for 1969 to be added to the already existing deficit of $70 million, even after the $400 million are paid.

But, if we could take advantage of the credits of the Bank of Canada for the highways of Quebec or of any other province, we would be able to pay for them once and for all whereas presently, we have to pay for them at least five times as it is the case for our schools. Why? Because we have no public financing system and, for that reason, we freeze the private capital in the public one. But if the Bank of Canada financed our public capital, it would allow us to use our savings to build sidewalks, bridges, highways and water systems. We could invest our savings in the private sector, in order to increase our national wealth.

The Ralliement créditiste is convinced that if the financing policy of the public capital that it has now been advocating for many years in this House is not applied, the federal government, the municipalities and the school boards will have budgets that will barely pay the interest rates and they will have practically nothing left to pay for services needed by municipalities.

All we have to do is consider the balance sheets of our municipalities and school boards to find that a financial cancer is eating our public bodies, and that only the federal government can cure it, by agreeing to the motion moved by the hon. member for Champlain.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to recognizing the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) perhaps I might alert the House as to the subjects to be raised at the time of adjournment: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Criminal Code—Abortion—Removal of provisions from law; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Pollution—Monitoring of waters receiving effluent discharges from plants using mercury.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—FINANCING OF PUBLIC DEBTS THROUGH INTEREST FREE LOANS FROM BANK OF CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Matte:

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the Government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt, the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards should be financed by direct interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada, repayable at the rate of the depreciation on the assets thus created.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) referred earlier to the unfortunate consequences of our present financial system and showed that governments, at all levels, are new facing almost insoluble financial problems.

Besides, the hon. members for Shefford and Témiscamingue (Messrs. Rondeau and Caouette) quoted many statistics to the effect that governments, federal, provincial or municipal, and school boards could only provide the necessary services to the Canadian people only by involving all communities into debt.

Such a situation, that I would readily term disastrous, is the result of past performance. The Canadian people in 1970 are paying for blunders made in the past; yet our governments still believe in the principles that brought them about. We are in debt for things of the past. Bridges, highways, schools and hospitals built ten or 20 years ago have not yet been paid and all Canadians must pay each year a very high tribute in return for the permission granted by bankers to carry out those works.

But, Mr. Speaker, some thought should also be given to the present and of the future. At this time, governments are hard-pressed. The federal government wanted to take $630 million more in the taxpayers' pockets, according to the proposals of the white paper on tax reform.

The provincial governments have money problems. They want to build schools, universities, hospitals, roads, health facilities. They have no money or the money available is beyond their means because its cost is prohibitive.

Therefore, we must look into those problems and ask ourselves what we can do as members of Parliament to settle the present financial problems and bring about the results the people expect of us.

The Ralliement Creditiste has always maintained that the human person is the most valuable creation of society and that all existing facilities should be at his disposal. We therefore say that material things, i.e. money and credit, should be put at the service of the human person rather than the opposite, as has been and is now the case. That is the first principle of the Social Credit philosophy.

The second one is as follows: government must be at the service of man. The role of an elected and responsible government is to run the public affairs to suit the people, as long as this is desirable and physically possible.

In addition, what is physically workable must be made financially feasible. This means that if schools are a must to house young Canadian students, and if workers and materials are available to build them, the financial world must then bring itself in line with facts. I suggest that finance must be a reflection of the state of the economy. If money is needed to build those schools, then the necessary credits must be released automatically.

I would like to tell hon. members once more that as money is a creation of man, it should serve him and not enslave him, being only an element of exchange between human beings, for which purpose it was created. It has no other justification.

Mr. Speaker, the needs of the Canadian people are constantly increasing in various fields of economic and social life.

If you examine the housing problem, you realize that in spite of the population's urgent needs the rate of construction is increasingly slower, which will certainly not help to solve the housing problem in Canada.

The Hellyer Commission, for instance, and all recent reports on housing show that Canada should devote more funds to housing. Referring to working papers submitted at the provincial conference on housing and urban development in 1967, I see that of all the major sections of the economy, housing is the one where it will be most necessary to increase productivity, at least into the seventies, and perhaps even to the end of the decade. It is a major problem for the country as a whole since it involves seeing to it that the increasing shortage of housing does not become a real national problem. It will therefore be imperative to considerably increase present available resources, including skilled manpower and capital in the field of residential construction. It will be necessary to provide a considerable and sustained volume of mortgage loans.

• (5:00 p.m.)

That is what the report suggests, Mr. Speaker. Now what do we find? We find that residential construction decreases, that mortgage loans are almost unavailable, or if they are available, their interest rates are very high, and thus prohibitive. Construction decreases, and the problem worsens from day to day.

Another problem is directly facing municipalities; urbanization. We now witness a concentration of population in the great urban centres, which is an almost insuperable challenge for municipal governments.

Municipalities have to meet the new requirements of the people, of traffic, transportation, water and sewage facilities, control of water and air pollution, and land use.

This implies, in a given area, an effort in respect of synthesis, co-ordination and planning at the urban, metropolitan, regional, provincial and national levels.

Because of those needs, cities have to resort increasingly to experts in all fields able to attack the complicated problems created by that urbanization. Therefore education is involved. In order to train such experts, specialists, technicians and engineers, educational systems are in need of reform. School boards also need more financial resources to build modern and well equipped schools; they must have better trained teachers and be able to pay them.

Now, all Canadian cities are faced with financial problems. For municipalities, there is an ever increasing gap between revenues and expenditures. They can no longer balance their budget and must always resort to borrowing. Their most important budget item is usually the debt service.

At this stage of my speech, I would like to quote a few statistics so that the House will know the percentage of municipal budget earmarked for interest payments. I have here the 1967-68 financial statement covering about 200 municipalities in Quebec. Checking these figures, one can easily see that the older the city the higher the percentage of its budget allocated to the payment of interests on its debt.

Thus, the municipality of Bagotville in the Saguenay-Lac Saint-Jean area, during the fiscal year 1967-68, paid $49,633 in interest charges on its debt, that is 8.9 per cent of its total budget of $557,250.

As for the relatively new municipalities, they earmark not more than 20 per cent of their total budget to the payment of the interest costs. The cities of Roberval, La Tuque, Rouyn, Aylmer, Touraine, Westmount and many others are in this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange to consider as fortunate the municipalities which do not earmark more than 20 per cent of their annual budget to the payment of the interests on their debts. The noxious fumes of the present economic system are slowly poisoning us and I find it very disturbing.

However, many municipalities in Quebec earmark more than 50 per cent of their annual budget only for the repayment of interest on their debt. Thus, the municipality of Trois-Rivières-Ouest in the St. Maurice region earmarked 57.4 per cent of its budget for the fiscal year 1967-1968 for interest payments on its debt, or about $62.98 per citizen.

The municipality of Ville d'Anjou earmarked $3,229,623 in 1968 out of a total budget of $4,976,081 for the payment of interest on its debt, or 64.9 per cent of its total budget. The Chambly municipality in the Richelieu region allocated 53.6 per cent of its budget during the fiscal year 1967-1968 to the payment of interest on its debt.

What are we to make of such figures, if not to feel that our economic system is completely obsolete and that all we can do now in order to live decently within such a system is to get our children and our children's children into debt.

The older a municipality is, the harder it is for it to balance its budget. Simple logic proves, without the shadow of a doubt, that there is something really wrong with our economy. Why persist in increasing taxes, reducing expenses, getting into debt with neighbouring countries, while in reality we are only putting bandaids on a wooden leg. Why not solve the problem at the source, and change the system?

I have only quoted a few figures concerning the municipalities, but we all know that the same goes in every field in the public sector, and that it is much more so in the private sector. Indeed, the situation is the same with regard to the budgets of school boards, community centres, the provinces as well as the Canadian government. Must we wait till the nation goes bankrupt to finally wake up? Unfortunately, I am afraid so, Mr. Speaker.

Another problem, that is ever growing, and which, unless it is solved in the near future, will cause us much trouble, is that of air and water pollution.

At the present time, our rivers, our lakes, are filled with waste to the extent where government authorities have had to forbid commercial fishing because the fish has become unfit for consumption.

I have sat for two years on the National Resources and Public Works Committee, and I am convinced that the present situation urgently requires the attention of the central government. Last Wednesday, I attended with my colleagues of the committee the showing of a few short films on the quality of our waters in various parts of the country. Things are far from rosy, even though the films were in colour. We talk of saving the lives of our fish, but what about the lives of human beings, of Canadians!

In several municipalities, tap water is no longer drinkable. Many doctors have forbidden their patients to drink the water in some Quebec municipalities, on the other side of the Ottawa river, for instance, where cases of typhoid and paratyphoid fever have been recorded.

Meanwhile, the municipal councils are doing nothing and they cannot do anything because they do not have enough funds to purify the water, to filter it so that people may safely drink it. These are very serious problems since the health of the people is at stake as well as our industrial development.

It is time that the federal government should develop some kind of machinery for regulating financial participation in order to help the municipalities together with the administrations of the various provinces.

We should try to devise financing methods more rational and more just than those we have now if we do not want to run the risk of entirely destroying private ownership and if we do not want to jeopardize house ownership as a result of high taxes.

Municipalities as well as industrial organizations are facing financing problems when they try to fight water pollution in an efficient way. Provided it is willing to take the necessary steps, the federal government is in a position to solve these financial problems.

That is why the Ralliement créditiste has raised today this question and is asking the federal government, through the Bank of Canada, to grant interest-free loans to the provinces and to the municipalities in order to build and develop social projects which are a vital necessity if the community is to survive.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we must admit that the members of the Ralliement créditiste who spoke before me, seem convinced and sincere, but me must also admit that they are not very convincing. In fact, according to the members of other parties who also spoke in this debate, the Créditistes seem to have convinced no one.

It is not an easy task to follow the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) through a speech such as he alone can make. He told us how nice it would be to get interest free money. He complained that he is paying a 7½ or 7¾ per cent interest on a house that he bought, but he did not tell us how much interest he draws from his savings at the bank because it is rather easy, nowadays, to invest these savings perhaps at a even higher rate.

It was also pointed out that we are paying now for the bridges, roads and schools which have been built perhaps 20, 25 or 30 years ago, or more, but I find this normal, since we are using these roads, these schools and these bridges.

The true injustice would have been to have the taxpayers, 25, 30 or 40 years ago, pay for buildings, roads or bridges which would be used perhaps for the next 50, 75 or 100 years. And it is only fair that the next generation pay also a portion of the cost of what we build today.

Of course taxes were mentioned and it was suggested that all the taxes which are raised, are mainly used to repay loans or our public debt. One must not exaggerate. We must admit that the taxes we collect help most of the time to pay for expenditures and that most of that money goes back to the taxpayers in the form of social benefits such as old age pensions, family allowances, medicare, hospitalization insurance. They also help to finance education and to pay for public buildings and services.

Mr. Speaker, the Créditiste motion before us is based upon the false assumption that there was a tremendous increase of the public debt. Indeed, the public debt at all levels of government increased only in a moderate way during the last 15 years or so as against the gross national product. If we merely quote figures, such amounts seem astronomical, of course, but compared to the gross national product, such an increase seems rather a moderate one.

Last February, the Committee on Taxation reported to the federal-provincial conference of prime ministers that the present debt at all government levels had increased from 95.9 per cent of the gross national product in 1952 to 101.4 per cent only in 1968.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

During the same period, the federal government's debt decreased from 75.7 per cent of the gross national product in 1952 to 61.4 per cent in 1968. The debt of the provinces had increased from 14 per cent to 26.6 per cent of the gross national product and that of the municipalities, from 7.4 to 13.3 per cent.

On this account, I must point out that the Economic Council of Canada indicated in their last annual review that as a proportion of total government expenditures, interest on the debt had decreased from 20.8 per cent in 1939 to 6.8 per cent in 1967. The Council's figures also show that proportionately to the to the gross national product, interest on the debt at all government levels had decreased from 4.7 per cent in 1939 to 2.1 per cent in 1967.

Both groups of figures are another proof that the Créditistes motion is based uniquely on assumptions but allows them to claim that the public debt is frightening.

If we read the motion carefully, we see that it is predicated on the idea of a federal responsibility as regards the loans of other provinces or other governments. In fact, the motion reads as follows:

> That, in view of the Government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt, the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards—

The motion assumes that it is the government's responsibility to limit the amounts of money borrowed by the other levels of government. It is a matter that obviously overrides its jurisdiction.

Let us deal now with the impact of the financing of these loans by the Bank of Canada. During 1969, the net total of borrowings made by all levels of government was well over $2 billion. If the Bank of Canada was making available unlimited amounts of money to all levels of government, and that, without interest, as is proposed by the créditiste motion, inflation would be greatly accelerated. This tremendous increase in the money supply would start a large increase in expenditures and would give a great impulse to price increases, which would seriously jeopardize the stability of our economy.

Governments and school boards must borrow on the money markets as to all other enterprises. In a free enterprise system, public administrations must compete to attract the money lenders. One must pay for the use of money; this is a truth as old as money itself which Social Credit should recognize.

Mr. Speaker, when hearing the speeches of the members from the Ralliement créditiste, we were wondering if that party which seems to be so far from socialism is not quite close to it sometimes.

The Ralliement créditiste often cites as an example—and the member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) mentioned it a moment ago—the loans which Canada grants to other countries on easy terms.

It is true that Canada, as other countries granting loans to under-developed countries, do so on quite easy terms. But this is not a reason to ask the same terms in some entirely different situations in Canada.

The federal government recognizes that there are joint responsibilities at the international level to devote some financial resources to the development of poorer countries. However, all countries recognize that such funds cannot always be loaned on commercial terms. The poorer countries simply cannot obtain the necessary exchange funds to pay commercial interest rates.

Therefore, Canada grants loans on easy terms, while abiding by criteria ensuring worthwhile development projects. Such loans do not apply to non-profitable enterprises. They apply to construction and development projects providing a good return.

Mr. Speaker, the Ralliement créditiste motion reflects their old theory according to which our economic system is defective since it fails to produce an adequate increase in the money supply.

The federal government believes that our present monetary system is efficient and flexible enough to meet the changing needs of the economy, including the need for expansion of the available credit. And a while ago, a striking example of the situation was provided by the hon. member of Temiscamingue when he referred to credits avaialble in wartime.

• (5:20 p.m.)

True, available credit was enormous during the war, but it is equally true that there were a great many restrictions, particularly on coffee, tea, butter, sugar, and even manpower mobility. In fact, one could not change jobs without permission. There were restrictions on the purchase of luxury items. One could not even buy a car, a fact which even now would surely affect the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

There was also a control on salaries and prices. The results of that increase in credit are that the national debt more than trebled, because the credit allowed was financed from war loans. New money was not created, it was just a matter of borrowing more money in order to spend more.

In the report which he presented to the Commons last Thursday on the provincial Finance Ministers and Treasurers conference, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) did mention that the basic goal of the government is to put an end to the inflationary spiral of prices, while maintaining a firm economic balance.

The budget tabled by the Minister of Finance last March considerably eased federal tax restrictions. Since then, monetary restrictions have also been eased, which was reflected in a decrease of the bank rate from 8½ to 7½ per cent.

In the meantime, the government has also decided not to implement the budget proposal to establish controls on consumer credit. Furthermore, the increase of $300 million in payments to provinces during the fiscal year, which was announced in the House last Monday by the Minister of Finance, is another important measure to ease the fiscal policy of the federal government.

The continuous increase in costs and prices remains a main matter of concern to the government. Since the beginning of 1970 some progress has been made with regard to checking price increases, which has made it possible to reduce somewhat fiscal and monetary restrictions.

I would emphasize that the government is quite anxious to have the Canadian economy back on a strong but steady rate of increase. We are looking forward to reducing the surplus capacity now existing in our economy so that it may develop more in harmony with its potential.

I am in a position to inform the House that the government is now intensively studying the adoption of specific measures aimed at increasing still more our economical activities.

Before taking further significant action to ease present restraints, it is essential however to ascertain that the inflationary pressures on our economy have begun to slacken.

As I have indicated, through various undertakings we have been able to slow down price increases in Canada for the first months of 1970. Until now, no corresponding progress has been noted as regards costs. Moreover, salaries have kept on increasing rapidly.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

The house realizes that this is the factor which has caused the Price and Incomes Commission to recommend the establishment of guidelines for salaries and wages at the federal-provincial conference of ministers of Finance and provincial treasurers which took place in Winnipeg recently.

These guidelines, which would correspond to the criteria on price controls adopted at the national conference on price stability held last february in Ottawa, were fully endorsed by the federal government. They were also approved by most of the provincial ministers present at the Winnipeg conference.

If those guidelines manage to hold costs down as they have done already with prices, the government could go ahead through a new policy aimed at a more rapid rate of growth, a higher rate of employment and a higher increase in the actual income of all Canadians.

Unemployment has been referred to. The very high rate of unemployment in Canada is a matter of concern. However, the opposition seems concerned with unemployment only when the rate reaches 5 or 6 per cent. But the government, I can say that, becomes involved right away as soon as there is one man out of work. We try by every means to give him a hand.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to conclude that, even though Créditistes may seem convinced, they are not quite convincing. Having heard the NDP members and the Conservatives decline to support their motion, I can say that the government will not support it either and it seems that the Créditistes are quite isolated.

Mr. Speaker, between you and me who does not understand?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I believe we have today a special day, called the opposition's day. We, of the Ralliement créditiste had to propose a motion and it seems to me that the motion which has been proposed by the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) concerns the whole population.

The Liberal, Conservative and New Democratic members say they are not concerned by the motion. In fact only three of them have spoken up to now. They are afraid or are not authorized to speak about this matter. However this matter is nowadays a very important one.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

I was pleased when the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) rose a while ago, because I thought: at last, here is someone who might try to disregard the high finance. However I did not recognize his usual style and at times I wondered whether his speeches are not written by the financiers themselves.

He has claimed that others have said that we would not convince them. Our aim is not to convince members. Indeed, I have always believed this saying: Tell me who pays you and I will tell you who you are. In my opinion, the three parties are well paid by big finance and it is strictly forbidden to speak against it these days. People suffer so much because their true representatives are not in the House.

We do criticize the government at times, but we do more than that, we make suggestions. For years we have been suggesting monetary reform, asking the government to try to find new credit through the Bank of Canada and to stop having private interests create public credit. That is the flaw in the system. We take over public property and put it back on the market through individuals, that is, chartered banks.

And I was not surprised to hear the Minister of National Revenue say that he was satisfied with our indebtedness. As far as he is concerned it is normal to get into debt. The more the people work, the more they have to get into debt. This is normal. But I say that it is abnormal. And if some argue differently, they are also abnormal.

I have never seen a man who works in earnest and receives an income, getting deeper into debt year after year if he has a sound accounting system. However, this is what we tolerate from the government. If at the end of the year the government has not received a sufficient income to pay its expenditures, it goes into debt.

Of course, in underdeveloped countries this is logical. But in a country such as Canada which shows surpluses every year—if we compare the gross national income to the national output—this is unconceivable. However, we note that Canada is not a poor country but a country which is robbed by high finance which we want to denounce.

After listening to some of the speeches made by members from other parties, I am more convinced than ever that it is impossible, even with a ton of water, to get a duck wet. According to an old saying, there is none so deaf as those who will not hear.

We are trying to see our way clear through this maze of ideas from other parties trying to convince the people that they are right. But I am convinced that they know for sure that they are wrong. Here is the proof of it: Last week I was attending a meeting of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, where I heard the president of Imperial Oil, who appeared as a witness, tell us that today no one could explain the system. He challenged everyone, economists as well as other people. However, I think that he is an intelligent man. And today they would have us believe that they can explain the present system. No, that is impossible. At least if they said: We shall try to think of something else, because after all, the monetary system is supposed to reflect what our economy is worth, but it does not at present. If only they took the trouble of looking into the question. But no. They persist in their opinion, or they promised, in order to win their election, never to raise that issue.

Our words are intended for the public and that is why I speak today. Everyone must read in Hansard what was said in the House so as to know at least about this tremendous indebtedness which is only beginning under the present system.

Previous speakers emphasized the bad effects of the present policy, due to the bank financing of the various governments' social projects, which leads to public indebtedness and, through tax increases, relentlessly erodes the low income of factory workers, farmers, white collars, civil servants, in short all classes of society.

Other spokesmen for the Ralliement créditiste have suggested a financing formula, a sound, logical one which could only be beneficial to all taxpayers through the application of the principles embodied in the motion introduced by the hon. member for Champlain.

First of all, the social needs of all Canadians could be met if the brains are available, the hands are ready to work and the materials are plentiful. Education, public health, urban development, public services and social security would benefit from it.

Since education comes under provincial jurisdiction, educational systems should be financed and administered by the provinces. They are the ones who, with the co-operation of the school boards, should administer the colleges and the universities.

The provinces are the ones which, by way of consultations with the parents, the teachers and the Church, should be made responsible for developing programs while making allowance for the objectives and the needs of the community. Those educational needs, whether it be school facilities, teacher training, the physical comfort of the students, cost money. We feel that a formula such as the one we advocate would enable us, not to solve everything, but to remove the worst stumbling block that now paralyzes all the goodwill, and practically kills the best initiatives.

The same applies in the field of health. To cure the sick, to prevent disease, to maintain good health, we must first of all have enough institutions. There must be enough hospital beds to accommodate those in need of hospital treatment. We need enough doctors, and specialists to meet the needs of the sick and physically disabled.

At the present time, in all Canadian provinces, there are medical insurance plans and soon, these will be replaced everywhere by medicare. Without discussing the merits of those programs or the methods for implementing them, the fact remains that they are all experiencing the same financial difficulty.

The difficulties are such that the federal government has practically called upon the provinces to limit the ever increasing cost of those insurances. We must not forget however that the provinces must meet the cost of hospital construction, of training a competent personnel, and that they must bargain wages and working conditions with unions.

The provinces are the ones who bear the brunt of the expense of those medicare programs and strive to find the necessary funds to improve health services, considering the high interest rates on loans on the open market.

We believe that the financing formula in the public sector, through the Bank of Canada, would help to solve health problems in Canada.

Social security measures could be improved through the setting up of a realistic financial system which would not discourage goodwill or effort, but would provide all Canadians with the bare minimum, thanks to the wealth and production of Canada.

But is Canada rich enough to meet the essential needs of all Canadians? If so, why are all those needs not met? It is simply because the present financial system paralyses everything, monopolizes all the wealth and makes all efforts fruitless.

A financing process which would allow to bring about whatever is physically workable and desirable would result in putting an end to the misery and distress of millions of Canadians who are living below the poverty line.

I would like to say a few words on the consequences of such a financial system on savings, investments, employment, and finally on the consumers in general.

Billions of dollars are invested at present in the public sector, billions coming from the savings of Canadians and which are created at the stroke of a pen, by bonds issued by the federal and provincial governments, municipalities and school boards. Those projects are unproductive by their very nature, because they serve only to pay the interest on war debts.

The billions invested in the construction of roads, bridges, schools, hospitals, are unproductive. This is why the financing formula for the public sector we are suggesting will have the effect of freeing these nonproductive billions which could then be invested in the private sector. We think that it is legitimate to make a profit and that invested savings should bring an income, a reward and that they would find there a great opportunity to serve the common good by contributing to the country's progress.

At the present time, construction of houses, formerly financed on a large scale by savings invested in insurance companies, is paralyzed because government policies have discouraged investors and have led them towards other more profitable sectors. Savings freed from the public sector could be invested in the construction of houses, which would offer an opportunity for profitable investment and which would serve highly social purposes.

Savings diverted from the public sector towards the private one would also provide industry with a plentiful source of capital. Canadian firms would be less and less obliged to call upon foreign investors, foreign banks, to sell bonds and shares in order to insure their financing. Thus, Canadians might finance themselves the economic development of their country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he should get the consent of the House to carry on his remarks.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed. The hon. member for Roberval.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying that greater availability of capital, more and larger investments in Canadian industry would also result in creating many jobs for the thousands of unemployed who now have no opportunity of demonstrating their skills and their willingness to serve the Canadian community, enabling them to ensure the welfare and security of their families.

More investments, new factories, thousands of new jobs would flood the Canadian market with products in quantities to meet all requirements, either through sale on the local market, or by exchanging this increased production for foreign goods which we will always have to import.

An abundance of goods would result in lower prices which would benefit all Canadians who could buy those goods more cheaply.

Public capital financing by the Bank of Canada would ensure interest-free loans which would bring about lower taxes. This would result in a nominal increase in the purchasing power of all Canadians as well as in lower prices, which include all kinds of indirect taxes that make prices go up and deprive Canadians.

Mr. Speaker this is my final word. If the formula proposed by the hon. member for Champlain were implemented, the Canadian economy would really benefit the consumers. Since we believe that the consumer is the true purpose of the economy and that the satisfaction of the consumer's needs is the object of industrial activities, those purposes would be achieved. That is what we are asking for.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD (SKEENA)—DISCLOSURE TO "TIME" MAGAZINE OF INFORMATION IN INTERIM REPORT ON NON-MEDICAL USE OF DRUGS

Mr. Speaker: Approximately 55 minutes ago the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) gave the Chair notice of a question of privilege under Standing Order 17(2). In view of the fact that the hour required for the notice will expire in about two minutes, I assume there would be consent of the House to allow the hon. member to state his question at the present time. This would obviate interrupting the hon. member who is about to start his speech. He will have an opportunity to make his contribution, without being interrupted, after we have disposed of the question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is based upon an article in Time magazine which apparently reached the newsstands this afternoon after Orders of the Day had been completed. Thus, this is the first opportunity I have had to raise the matter. If it had not been for the requirement of giving one hour's notice we would have been able to raise it earlier than now.

The article in Time magazine, which ranges over six pages, complete with pictures and the like, contains a number of what are purported to be—and I do not doubt their truthfulness—direct quotations from the interim report of the LeDain Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical use of Drugs in Canada. Even though that report has been kept as an inner cabinet, confidential document up until now, there have been rumours and expressions in the news field about the contents of the report—but none so extensive as those which appear in Time magazine.

Those rumours and the discussions which have revolved around what the LeDain Commission interim report might have contained have been in themselves sufficient to hamper Parliament in the proper and full prosecution of its concern for the question which the commission studied. However, I submit that the question of privilege is primarily that Time magazine, in its article which ranges, as I have said, over six pages, gives extensive quotations from the report itself, paraphrases other parts of the report and makes references to minority reports in it and the like, in itself totally interferes with the work of Parliament and makes it at this stage virtually impossible for Parliament, thoroughly and properly, to take any action it would like to take with respect to that report.

If, for the sake of argument, the government wants even at this stage to maintain the confidentiality of the report, if questions are asked about it the government is in the position of not being able to answer, of not being able to make comments about items that appear in the press, and the like. I submit that this is interference. If I could briefly put on the record a few direct quotations from the article in Time magazine, it may assist the Chair in coming to a conclusion about the matter of privilege. The article starts off, right in its first paragraph, with a quotation as follows:

> We believe that the emphasis must shift...from a reliance on suppression to a reliance on the wise exercise of freedom of choice.

The next paragraph says:

> So states the interim report of Ottawa's Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical use of Drugs in Canada.

It goes on, in this first page, to say about the commission:

> It recommends that possessing or trafficking in either drug remain on the books as a crime, but that the offence be removed from the Narcotic Control Act under which a younster who offers a friend a joint of pot can, theoretically, face up to life imprisonment—
>
> The commission further recommends that criminal records for drug offences be destroyed after two years.

Here is another direct quotation:

> —"one of the major problems involved in the non-medical use of drugs." Says the report—

Then there is another quotation, and so on. I do not wish to give more extensive quotations than these from the first page, nor to go on into the article itself. Based upon those quotations I would offer a motion to the House, if it is found that there is a question of privilege and that the publication Time magazine, with the extracts in it from the LeDain Commission report and other factors inherent in the article, interferes with the proper functioning of Parliament. My motion seeks to attach no blame to the government or to anyone else, but simply to have an inquiry or investigation into how Time magazine came to acquire this particular report.

We know that in the news field, Mr. Speaker, it is not uncommon for organizations, magazines, newspapers, television stations and the like to try to obtain what in the trade are called scoops and exclusive articles or items, and to obtain them by way of offering money, which often gives them prior and exclusive access to a particular document. Four or five months ago I heard rumours—that is all they were at that time—that Time magazine, among others, made offers of pretty substantial amounts of money to acquire the exclusive rights to the interim report. I just wonder, with the publication of this article today, if Time was the successful bidder in that endeavour. But it is a fact that Time magazine does have a commission report that has so far been denied the people of Canada, and I submit that interferes with the operation of Parliament in its consideration of this matter.

This is a highly moral question, a matter of great concern to the health and psychological well-being of our nation, because the question of drug abuse is slipping through our society at all levels. One does not even need any great connection with those activities at any level of society to know that this is happening, because there are common and regular references in the newspapers to the fact that marijuana is a common companion at some parties held in our middle and upper classes. We know that we have weekend heroin users in our schools, and that LSD and other drugs are readily available at all levels, by all age groups and in all sections of our society.

We can only seek to deal properly and effectively with this question if everything is above board and if the LeDain Commission, for which we had great hopes, provides the basis of an answer that Parliament might give to the people of Canada, not in a partisan way but in an individual and moral way—in the way that Parliament should operate—on a non-partisan basis. That should be our objective—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he is now going beyond the terms of the question of privilege which he has raised. He is debating the essence of the matter, and I do not think his intervention should be allowed to continue along these lines. I fully appreciate the interest in what he is saying at the present time, but perhaps we should try to limit this debate to the strictly procedural question.

I wonder, since it is just about six o'clock, whether it would be the desire of the House that we conclude this matter now. I have some doubt whether it would be entirely fair to pursue it much beyond six o'clock, in view of the fact that we are on a supply day. I would therefore suggest to hon. members that we try to dispose of the matter before we rise.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I was simply making my concluding remarks to indicate the necessity of taking some action. One action I hope to propose by way of this motion, and another is calling for the tabling later this evening, or tomorrow at the latest, of the report itself with or without a policy statement by the government. My motion, based on what I believe to be a proper question of privilege, is as follows:

> That this House is of the opinion that the government should conduct an immediate investigation to ascertain how the interim report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs came into the possession of Time magazine and to report its findings, either interim or final, to the House not later than June 26, 1970.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no further debate on the point, I am prepared to give a ruling now.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a word or two to what has been said by my colleague from Skeena. I will confine myself strictly to the question of whether Your Honour should find that there is a prima facie case of privilege. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, without trying to attach blame to any particular group—whether it is the government, some other agency, or what have you—that the fact that this kind of thing happens does interfere with our capacity to do our work as Members of Parliament.

Without quoting all the authorities on privilege, hon. members will realize that this is what privilege is all about, namely, anything that interferes with our right to do our work as Members of Parliament. When this kind of thing happens, I suggest our rights are being interfered with. Therefore it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has made a proper suggestion, namely, that how this situation arose in this particular case should be investigated; the House should know how it came about. I hope Your Honour will agree that there is a prima facie case of privilege in the sense that the functions of Parliament have been interfered with by what has happened.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his contribution to this very interesting point. As was indicated by the Chair earlier, the necessary notice was given just about an hour ago and this gave the Chair time to reflect on the question and study the precedents. It also gave the Chair time to come to a conclusion on the very interesting arguments brought forth by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Hon. members realize that this point has already been proposed twice by way of a question of privilege. Last week, on either Thursday or Friday, a like motion was proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and a similar motion was proposed earlier today. When the first motion was advanced for the consideration of the Chair, the suggestion was that the fact that the report was not being published by the government was in itself a breach of the privileges of the House, and that the matter should be investigated by a committee.

After hearing argument, the Chair reached the conclusion that it was not a question of privilege; that, basically, if a document which has been commissioned by the government is not made public and the opposition wants the document to be made public, it can present a motion for the production of papers in the normal way. This was perhaps a harsh suggestion, and I realize it has serious practical difficulties; but the rule is there. I suggested to hon. members that on this basis there was no question of privilege.

The subsequent question arose as to whether some of the information contained in the report might—as the hon. member for Skeena puts it in a very positive way—have been made public either by the government or some other source, and that that in itself is a question of privilege which ought to be investigated. There again, I have very serious doubts. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Skeena suggest that in this way the operation of Parliament has been hampered; that hon. members have been hampered in the discharge of their responsibilities as Members of Parliament in that information not yet given to the House has in some way found its way to the press or the public.

Does that constitute a question of privilege? The worst case that might be made by the hon. member would be that there has been deliberate misinformation by the minister. If this were so, then I suggest to hon. members we might have a question of privilege if there were a substantive motion directed against the individual or directed against the minister as a member of the House. If there were a specific charge, the matter might be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That is not the subject matter of the motion proposed now. The motion is simply that an inquiry should be launched to investigate how this information leaked out, if it is a fact that information has actually been conveyed to members of the press.

I fail to see how this can be a question of privilege. There are a number of precedents indicating to hon. members that this type of situation cannot be treated as a question of privilege. Hon. members may remember that last year the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) raised a question of privilege on the alleged advance publication of information relating to Dorval airport. It was suggested by the hon. member for Calgary North, who was supported by a number of hon. members, that this constituted a question of privilege and that the matter should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation. This is precisely what the hon. member wanted to do; he wanted the committee to ask questions, to interview witnesses and ascertain how this information had got into the hands of the public. This is what the hon. member for Skeena would like done in connection with this particular alleged leak of information.

If hon. members will consult Journals of the House of Commons for Monday, March 31, 1969, they will see that the Chair at that time had painstakingly gone through many precedents, had studied the precedents in the British House and had come to the conclusion that this could not be the subject of a question of privilege. I refer hon. members to two cases which are particularly relevant. One is the Thomas case, where a motion was made for an investigation under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act. After debate on that motion, it was resolved on the main question "that the report be accepted," etc. The relevant point is that the matter was not considered at any time by way of a question of privilege.

Then in the Dalton case there was a suggestion that information had been leaked out. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) smiles, but he may not be thinking of the same Dalton.

An hon. Member: They are all in the same Camp.

Mr. Speaker: I am referring to the British Chancellor of the Exchequer of that time. The decision was the same, that the matter was not considered as a question of privilege. The conclusion was reached that the motion for study of the circumstances surrounding the leak of information could not be considered as a question of privilege but was, rather, a substantive motion and should be considered by way of substantive motion.

I suggest to the hon. member for Skeena and to all hon. members that what is being proposed now is a substantive motion. This kind of investigation cannot be carried out, by way of a question of privilege, by the Committee on Privileges and Elections or any other committee. I hope the hon. member for Skeena will accept the ruling I am making at this time. I am not suggesting that the matter is not an important one. I realize that it is, but I suggest that the duty of the Chair is to find whether there is a prima facie case of privilege and whether an investigation should be carried out by way of privilege. My ruling must be that there is not a prima facie case and that the hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At 6.10 p.m. the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—PUBLIC DEBT FINANCING THROUGH BANK OF CANADA INTEREST-FREE LOANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Matte:

That, in the opinion of this House, in view of the Government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt, the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards should be financed by direct interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada, repayable at the rate of the depreciation on the assets thus created.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I was in the House at the beginning of this sitting when the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) introduced a motion censuring for its failure to fight efficiently, and I quote:

—the frightening increase in the public debt—

—and requesting that—

—the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards should be financed by direct interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada, repayable at the rate of the depreciation on the assets.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Finally, the motion aims at restarting through proper financing all that is presently paralyzed or on the verge of paralysis in the economy. In my opinion, we are living the years 1929 to 1939 all over again.

While the central government is asking Canadians to "tighten their belts", the provinces, the municipalities, the cities are cancelling projects. Thus, workers take to the roads. Being unemployed, Canadians travel from one province to the other. Unemployed from Manitoba and Saskatchewan thumb rides to Alberta and British Columbia while those from the Maritimes and Quebec head for Ontario.

They are qualified workers: electricians, welders, machinists, designers and others from all kinds of trades and they are men of good will. They wander without gaining much since there is stagnation in all provinces.

We attend federal-provincial conferences where tax sharing is discussed. Yet, no effective measure is proposed to solve the problem once and for all. As I said earlier, we are going through the 1929-39 recession over again. Those who are 45 or more remember those ten years of economic paralysis. No government felt able to end it. But suddenly a war was declared and financial permits were issued to produce, to recruit, to destroy and to kill. Ten parliamentary sessions, each lasting several months, each in Ottawa had not succeeded in prompting the government to find a way to end the unnatural crisis which was starving and depriving whole families, while goods remained unsold and many more could still be offered. A so-called emergency session of only six days, namely from September 7 to 13, 1939, was enough to involve the country completely in a war that was to cost billions of dollars. That decision was speedy and unanimous.

A minister in the Mackenzie King cabinet, the hon. J. H. Harris, resorted to all his eloquence when he stated: "the eyes of all Canadians are on this House. If such is the case, does it not rest with us to act and think as one man? The reason is obvious, since christianity, democracy and individual freedom are at stake."

Christianity and individual freedom did not seem at stake to him nor to the party to which he belonged during all those years when Canadian parents found it impossible to feed their children, when young people took refuge in concentration camps, the said labour camps to get a meagre ration in return for their complete slavery, when able-bodied men were unemployed, wandering in the bush, roving from one town to another, while others were taking shelter in huts which they built with pieces of sheet iron, scrap wood and tar-paper found on the dumping grounds of the city of Montreal.

The authorities had nothing to offer to families or individuals. Of course, the provinces, the cities, the municipalities had to try to balance their budget. For them, as well as for the companies, trying to balance their budget was only normal. But when the budget is prepared by a sovereign government, there should be no need of balancing it. This would be nonsense. Clearly, an individual cannot indulge into expenditures that exceed his income without getting into debt, but the situation is entirely different for a sovereign government.

The sovereign government is the nation itself. If the nation does not increase its total production, the balance will come naturally as a result of the method suggested. Credits in circulation will be balanced by money withdrawals since no monetary expansion will be justified.

However if, as is normal, total production increases, more money will be needed. Issues must exceed withdrawals or else there would not be any money increase.

And if it is not the country itself, through its government, which makes that increase necessary, some other institution will have to take over. In fact, to-day it is the issuing banks which are handling it, but they realize this expansion by creating debts. This is why any development to-day entails a debt.

A sovereign government which strives to balance its budgets gives up its sovereignty. It lowers itself to the rank of a mere individual. It hands over its sovereignty to others, to those who undertake to look after development and credit compensation. That is why, normally, world banks insist so much on every government balancing its own budget. They even bring about the fall of those which pay no heed. They are jealous of their sovereignty and fear that governments should shake themselves free from their bondage.

With what would the government pay public services if it does not obtain money through taxes?

Suggested Interest-free Loans

Once again, I repeat, the government has a mandate from the community. If the community, through its Parliament, has decided to avail itself of the nation's productive capacity, it is simply issuing to those entrusted with the undertaking drawing rights on that productive capacity. It generates its own credits and its own modes of payment. The government and the citizens are drawing on the same productive capacity, but the citizens contribute their money and the government the decision of the community's representatives.

Of course, the productive capacity has to be able to meet the demand. It would be futile for the community to call for a production it cannot supply. The following tax-free public works example assumes the existence of a social credit system including issuance and cancellation of credit-money according to circumstances, with periodic distribution of dividends to each and every citizen, including compensated adjustment of prices. One must keep in mind a complete Créditiste economy to understand the operation of public financing without taxes.

Public works without taxes, the building of a bridge without taxes, it is not under the existing financial system that we can find that. Under this system, finance orders, conditions, limits and restricts the realities.

But under a Social Credit system, finance is nothing more than the accounting representation of realities. We produce and we express in credit the value of the product. We destroy and we express in debit the value of what is being destroyed.

The question: "Are we able to pay"? or "How shall we pay"? no longer applies.

Does a community want a bridge? The only question to be considered is: "Are we able to build a bridge?" To be able, means to have the materials, the technicians, the labour needed to achieve this project.

If it is a provincial undertaking, the Minister of Public Works will submit the project to the provincial government that will approve or reject it, or delays it until later in the name of the community as a whole. To take this decision, the legislature enters into no financial considerations. It only determines whether the project meets the population's requirements and whether the physical possibilities of the province permits it.

Certainly the bridge can be evaluated on the basis of the estimate, of the materials and of the labour required. The construction of the bridge may be entrusted to the lowest bidder if he is competent. Considering finance as a reflect of reality, a lower cost means less consumption, less materials, time and energy. The more finished goods a country gets with a minimum amount of raw material, the richer it becomes.

Let us suppose the member for Chambly (Mr. Pilon) retires as a member of Parliament to start a business and gets the contract for the building of the proposed bridge. He wants $500,000 to carry out the project. Where will the government get this amount to pay the contractor? It should not worry about it. Finance is not a matter of administration, it is a matter of book-keeping. The working of a Créditiste financial system presupposes the setting up of a book-keeping agency. Let us call it the provincial Credit Office since provincial finance is concerned. The head office is in Quebec, but the Office has a net work of branches according to the needs, more or less like the banks with their head office and their branches.

The branches deal with the local producers and tradesmen and they send their reports to the head office as the banks do. Who will appoint the accounts in charge of the management of the system? The government, since it is a government agency. The appointment cannot be made elsewhere, but once the commissioners have been chosen the government should not interfere with their operations.

In the name of the community the government sets the goals which are determined by the act creating the Office. But it is up to the accountants to carry out the necessary operations in order to achieve these goals according to production and consumption, to the wealth that comes and goes.

It is more or less like the judicial system. The government enacts laws and appoints judges, but it does not interfere with the convictions. Judges are bound by a legislation which they did not make and by actions which they did not make either. Judges could even hand down judgments against the government which appointed them.

This is what the credit board would do. It would not dictate what to produce or what to consume, but would simply record the results. Then, the accountants would draw conclusions on a mathematical basis, according to the objective drawn up in the legislation creating the Board.

[Mr. Godin.]

• (8:20 p.m.)

1. The Bureau should create and cancel credit money in relation with the production and the disappearance of wealth;

2. Periodically credit each citizen a dividend guaranteeing him a share of the assets of his country;

3. Periodically adjust the retail prices paid by buyers, according to the relation of the global consumption to the global production from time to time.

To come back to the bridge: the Bureau would therefore not decide whether or not a bridge is to be built, nor for what amount. But the Bureau, and not the government, would be responsible for financing the bridge as it is built, since in the system under study, finance is but accounting. The contractor for the bridge, the former member for Chambly, could dispose of the required funds to pay the bills and salaries throughout the undertaking. In this case, he would receive his total payment, $500,000, upon handling over the completed bridge. But he could also need advances to pay for material and labour. In that case, very simple: he goes to the Credit Bureau.

Let us suppose the contractor takes delivery of cement, wood, steel, for an amount of $25,000; all he does is present his bills to the Credit Bureau. The bills prove the existence of wealth, since it has even been delivered. The Bureau does not have to make an estimate of the value of the material. They see the bills and create corresponding credit on the basis of that wealth; $25,000. They give that much credit to the contractor who uses it to pay the producers of wealth.

In fact, a loan on demand is granted the contractor, a loan without any other guarantee than the wealth produced and without interest. Why should interest be charged? Why should a fine be imposed on those who produce wealth? While the bridge is being built the contractor can get the necessary credit up to $500,000. Let us assume that the contractor could get advances amounting to $225,000. When and how is he going to pay that back?

When the bridge is built, the contractor has it approved by the Department of Public Works. Once the inspection is over and the bridge has been approved, the minister gives to the contractor a certificate showing that he has delivered a $500,000 bridge to the province. Then the contractor presents this certificate to the credit office which, on behalf of the community which received the bridge, gives the contractor a receipt for the advance in the amount of $225,000 and a credit-money for $275,000 to complete the price of the bridge. The Credit Office records on the assets side of the province the amount of $500,000 which represents the new bridge. The contractor had made a profit; he has paid a salary to his employees, and he has paid the materials suppliers with the $500,000 which represent a debt on the production of the community. This is liabilities versus assets. If no one had used that money, the province would have simply acquired extra wealth and nothing else would have changed. Of course this money, at least a good part of it, is used to buy food, clothing, shoes, to pay the rent, transportation, medicine, and so on. All these purchases represent consumption, and they also contribute to greater production.

As long as they have not reached their maximum, agriculture and industry can increase their production. No need to embark upon lengthy investigations to find out that nowadays a great part of the production is unused or wasted.

Should the increase caused by the credits issued for the bridge be sufficient in itself to meet the increased demand, the bridge will be paid through that production increase.

In fact, the bridge will have been paid through the work of its builders. And those builders will really have been paid by the community's increased production. The community will have paid the cost of its bridge in the form of work, products, services, without having to deprive itself or to lower its standard of living.

In the opposite case, where consumption financed through the $500,000 would increase without any increase in production, consumption would become greater than production. The result would be an increase in the readjusted price. The buyers would get less for their money. It would amount, in the end, to a tax on the citizen's standard of living. The result would probably be between those two extremes.

But, in any case, the consumers, on account of the price readjustment, get the whole production corresponding to their needs. In every case also, each citizen is sure to get a part of the available production on account of his dividend.

The system has to be considered as a whole to see that not only does it preserve the rights of the individual but also the aspirations of the community while truly reflecting how wealth is produced and destroyed whether it be public or private.

If we feel that capitalism is better than socialism or communism, let us preserve capitalism. But if we feel that capitalism does not benefit everybody, let us try to study it, analyze it in order to straighten it out, while preserving its strength and its merits. This is elementary logics: not to destroy what is good, but simply to straighten out what is warped.

It is not by creating new debts through borrowing that we shall be able to repay our debts. I believe that the state should recover its financial control. The state must recover control over issuing and regulating money and credit. It will do so through an independent board empowered with all the necessary authority to achieve this purpose, that of financing public services and ownership.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if we could arrange to have all this money referred to in the motion provided interest free. I have no doubt that many municipalities would rush to build some project or other if that were possible. Perhaps some would commence building madly in all directions. However, I feel that the motion would have been more reasonable had the party sponsoring it suggested some limit to it or put forward some priorities in the way of projects to be built with this money. I think all of us, including the members of the Créditiste party to my left, would accept the fact that there must be a limit to what can be built in any given period. If you allowed too much money to enter the economy in a short space of time, the economy would be burned up.

I realize that my friends to my left would not agree with me, but I suggest that it would be a good idea in times of prosperity to build up project banks, if you will, these banks to be comprised of, for example, hospitals, schools, bridges, senior citizens' homes and government building of all kinds. Then I suggest that different communities list their priorities, say in order of age, need and cost, depending on the community. As I say, these banks would be built up when times were relatively good. When a recession hit a particular area, or the country as a whole faced a depression, we could then start to build some of these projects in an effort to compensate for lack of business activity in a community, or to offset unemployment.

Too often in the past when we have felt flush, when business has been good, when farm incomes have been up and everything going along as it should, we have decided to build a new hospital, a bridge or a school. I am suggesting that this is not really what we should do. I am suggesting we build such projects and use them as economic weapons to offset fluctuations in the economy. In effect, let us manufacture business or employment, as the case may be. I think an approach like this is a fairly reasonable one. I am sure if this idea had been explored in the thirties or at other periods of depression, things would have been much different in certain sections of the economy. However, in those days we did not believe in interfering with this sort of thing.

I will go so far as to say that I do not think even today we are doing all we can to solve such problems. I understand that the Manitoba government has set aside capital grants in their budget for projects of this nature. I think it would be wise to take a serious look at the approach they have taken. A short time ago the federal government attempted to dampen down the fires of inflation and one of the weapons they used was to eliminate depreciation allowances on buildings in cities like Toronto and Edmonton where inflation was at a high level. However, things did not work out as well as they might have. I am suggesting we take the other approach and actually put some money, effort and thought into building up business and employment through the use of project banks.

I have in mind something along this line: If there should be a problem in Toronto, Biggar or Saskatoon, the federal government or the provincial government might suggest to the municipality that if it started within, say, a six months' period to build a hospital or whatever it might be, a larger than usual grant would be allowed for this purpose. This would be an encouragement to the municipality to build such a facility? I believe it would be a reasonable incentive to build during a period when there is slack in the economy. Not only would such a program help the particular community, but it might enable the municipality to get a better deal from the builder if it were carried out when the builder did not have things geared up too tightly.

I suggest that in some areas, for instance in my area, while one might say there is a recession the people in the area might say there is a depression. Too often one looks at an economic situation and says it is a recession, but when it relates to him personally it is a depression. There is a need for a hospital in my home town of Biggar. The municipality might see fit to build such a facility if there were some extra encouragement. In using my community as an illustration I do not mean to suggest that it is any better or worse economically than any other community. I suggest that interest-free money by itself will not stimulate the economy in some areas. I suggest that we take a serious look at the project bank concept which I have mentioned.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): For several reasons, Mr. Speaker, I derive a great deal of satisfaction from taking part in the debate on the motion now before the House.

First, I would like to show that the present system of indebtedness tends to discourage people. To realize this, one has only to look at the pyramid of unpaid and unpayable debts under today's upside down financial system which leads legislators to dream up every conceivable way of finding new taxes. So much so that legislators and civil servants sometimes contradict each other. Here is an example: It is generally agreed that an annual income of about $5,000 is required for a family of four or five to live decently. On the other hand, legislators under the influence of today's financial dictatorship tax the income over $1,000 of a man with a family. If we stop and think about such legislation, we realize that the lackeys of the system are in total disagreement with reality.

In reply to a question put on the order paper, in 1964, in which I asked how much was paid in interests on the public debt since Confederation, the Minister of Finance said: Gross cost of interest on the national debt to the government of Canada from July 1, 1867, to March 31, 1964, was $15,287 million (including an estimated amount of $952 million for the fiscal year 1963-64).

Economists and politicians would easily find an explanation to the rising cost of living, if they carried out their inquiries on the constant increase of interest charges on public debts. Why continue to look for solutions that are nowhere to be found in a topsy-turvy system?

Social Credit is turned into ridicule by associating it with a "dollar machine". Now the opposite is exactly true. There is no dollar machine more efficient and diabolic than the present bank system. Diabolic, because it always deprives the people in favour of money lenders.

The people are crushed under the taxes used to pay constantly and gradually increasing interest charges on the national debt, heavy and unfair taxes, because out of proportion to the services rendered by a centralist state.

"The greatest delusion of the mind is to believe that things are as we want them to be rather than what in fact they are." I am quoting Bossuet.

In such a situation, are we not justified in asking ourselves some questions? What occult power compels our governments to maintain such a dictatorship? The real question is to determine who is running the country. The politicians elected by and for the people, or the big financiers?

There are three ways in which a government can obtain funds required to meet its obligations. First of all, it can tax the citizens and the institutions and thereby get hold of their money. Second, it can borrow from the people and the institutions and pay some interest on the amounts borrowed. Third, it can simply create money and use the funds so created to make its purchases.

Opposition to the creation of money in the past used to be based apparently on the belief that demand for goods always had to be equal to the supply, as long as the government did not interfere with the economy. John Maynard Keynes destroyed that belief when he showed that nobody could be sure that the demand was always equal to the supply in rich countries.

Mr. Robert Theobald, an American economist of high repute, wrote the following not so long ago, and I quote:

> There are many methods to make up the difference between supply and demand. It could be possible to decrease the extent of the supply without greatly affecting the demand by reducing working hours for the same salary.

• (8:40 p.m.)

> It would be possible to increase demand by telling the people that more goods are needed to live comfortably and enjoy a higher standard of living.
>
> The government could simply make up the difference between actual and potential production by building new schools, clearing slums and controlling pollution, because there would be unused resources in the economy.
> The government would not have to raise money through taxes or loans. Money could be simply created. Additional funds would not cause inflation because, by definition, goods are not scarce.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

This, Mr. Speaker, is the testimony of an American economist who thinks it possible to democratize money and to use new interest-free credit for the development and social organization of a country.

While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and this government allow rises in the interest rate and increase the burden of the Canadian taxpayer, everywhere in the world loans are granted under extremely easy conditions, $25, $30, $50 and even $100 million interest-free loans for periods of time from 50 to 60 years and often with a 10 years' grace period.

Those who are against Social Credit generally claim that the application of Créditiste theories would lead to inflation. The Liberal members said it, the Conservative members agree and, unfortunately, a number of economists who base their studies upon the data of the present system, think so too.

However, it is to be noticed that in Canada as well as in the United States, both countries, like most countries in the world, are facing this kind of malaise that they call "inflation" and which was brought about by the unbalanced financial system of today. Is it the fault of the social credit, a doctrine which is not applied anywhere, or is it the fault of the actual financial system?

Today, there is no shortage of credit. The problem is that the credit is not social enough. In these days, it is not necessary to be an expert to find the great number of credit facilities available to the people.

Federal and provincial governments give us a great many examples of the way credit is used in all departments. Such a procedure has become normal. We find that at times, during the session of the various legislatures, federal or provincial, discussions become animated when estimates have to be approved or rejected.

The minister concerned sometimes becomes nervous and anxious. He feels the need to call upon the best advisers in his department to help him justify the use of the estimates submitted for approval. This occasional tension is due to misuse of certain credits voted to cover expenses that sometimes greatly exceed the experts' estimations, because they failed to take probable waste into consideration.

The Glassco report demonstrated how bureaucrats can disrupt the experts' forecasts when carelessness prevails constantly in economic fields where efficiency should be the rule.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

In addition to the kind of credit we have been discussing, there are many others: international, national, provincial, municipal, import, export, credit for purchasing, credit for sales. Indeed our country has advanced so much in the field of credit under our present financial system that we grant credit to foreign countries for the purchase of our products.

Here in Canada, many Canadians are born, live and die on credit. People are continually in tow of the publicity heard on television or radio. A lot of them are feeding themselves with instant products, three minutes meals, and are relying on automatic machines bought on credit. All those rogues have helped many families get head over ears in debt.

But, we need not loose heart, our credit is still good with the finance companies which will provide us with the credit we need to balance our budget for the time being. It is even possible to purchase on credit a second-hand car at the cheapest possible price, in spite of all the hazards this implies in terms of highway safety.

However, the whole process by which these various terms and conditions of credit are established is directed, controlled, managed and monopolized by the system which issues bank credit.

Things controlled by man are subject to the human laws of production, exchange and purchasing power. This power is expressed in a practical way by monetary values. Money is to the exchange of goods what words are to the exchange of ideas. Production and consumption are thus related to the purchasing power or to the exchange power.

If we consider the world as a whole, we realize there is a blockage, an obstruction. For instance, the farming people in Canada are seriously threatened by overproduction due to deviation of consumption. The accumulated surpluses of Canadian wheat are equivalent to eight years of consumption. The dairy products of Canada are anxiously waiting for consumers. In 1969, overproduction of milk in Canada reached one billion pounds of milk or 100 million gallons. Lawyers have now come to the point where they are inverting the order of creation by saying to the farm producers: "Stop sowing; kill your cows."

A premium of $200 is about to be granted to the milk producers in six countries of the Common Market for every milk cow slaughtered.

[Mr. Dionne.]

Too poor to buy their own products, Canadians eat imported foods and chemical products sold at bargain prices. While underfed people are lacking milk and wheat, Canadian citizens, surrounded by mountains of wheat and heaps of milk cans, are suffering from hunger and from thirst.

Capitalis, the object of which is to regularize means of exchange is therefore in a bad conditoin. It should be corrected but not destroyed.

Instead of laying our economic system upon logical principles, upon the natural pattern, we remain tied to a system which does not provide the necessary means of distributing the existing abundance. Thus thousands of Canadian citizens must live in slums while there are enormous quantities of building materials available for the building of decent homes.

Thousands of Canadian citizens have to resort to social relief so as not to suffer too much from hunger, in a country offering through all possible advertising means such a great variety of products. Macaulay wrote in "The History of England":

> The stability of the modern world is based upon the stability of its money, but it is obvious that the value of currency is unstable.
> Whether all hardships inflicted upon the British people by bad kings, bad Parliaments, bad ministers and bad judges are not equal to the hardships due to the poor currency is doubtful—

A sound currency, namely a currency that keeps its stability through the repayment of debts and its purchasing power and which protects the purchasing power of salaries, savings and pensions, is the key to economic freedom, to progress and to development.

The end and objective of a monetary policy are therefore to maintain the dollar stability and to be the instrument of a maximum production. Indeed, next to the maintenance of law and order in a country, that should be the greatest responsibility of the state.

Everybody admits that the value of currency is based on goods and services. A steady balance should however be provided between the money issued and the production of goods.

It is unbelievable that governments, one after another, should have allowed private banks to create and issue millions of dollars in new currency without any obligation on their part of maintaining the stability of the purchasing power.

• (8:50 p.m.)

We do not want to disrupt everything or to set up a printing-shop, as some simple-minded persons have suggested. We already have the institutions required. It is only a matter of adjusting the values, a matter of accounting, so that the financial machinery may reflect the actual wealth, taking into account human self-respect and the value of things that can be produced in large enough quantities to feed, house and clothe the whole population.

It is quite astonishing to realize that all those researchers, more especially in the economic field, have not managed to come up with some means of distributing the abundant production that only has to be oriented to meet the needs of those waiting for it. There is certainly no shortage of means of transportation, since we have reached the point of going to the moon, spending millions of dollars just to satisfy our curiosity to "peer" on another planet, when thousands of human beings suffer from hunger, lack of shelter, clothing and care.

It is high time that our politicians, now at the helm, find a solution other then the plans submitted until now and which have only favoured even more the rich at the expense of the poor.

We do not pretend that the Social Credit theory we are advocating will be a panacea but it is logical to forecast that it will eliminate many reasons for concern.

[English]

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, as most members of the House know, I represent the constituency of Pembina in the Social Credit province of Alberta. It is passing strange to hear this eloquent plea for interest-free money after all these years of provincial Social Credit rule when little, if anything, was done to help the taxpayers of that rich and oil-filled province. You cannot put all the blame on the federal government because, after all, the only source of income for the federal government is the taxpayers, who must reside in a province.

For a long time it has been the practice of federal governments to try to equalize the wealth of the have-not provinces with the wealth of the haves. It is no secret that Alberta is one of the have provinces. One would expect that if Social Credit interest-free money policy could be worked anywhere with any hope of success, Alberta would be a fair testing ground. But what do we find? For at least 25 years the people of Alberta have been living in hope of receiving a dividend of $25 a month. During some of those 25 years Alberta was in a financial condition to make at least a gesture in that regard. As a matter of fact, one year people who had been resident in Alberta for 20 years received $20 from the provincial government. For 25 years they had been hoping to receive $25 a month, but the pay-off was only $20.

The federal government, with socialism in full command and full sweep, is short of money. Even if it wanted to give us a dividend right now, it would be the first to admit it is broke, bankrupt, and it has made the country pretty well bankrupt from coast to coast. So this is no time to ask for a handout; it is no time to ask for a dividend. But, Mr. Speaker, it is time to ask the Canadian people to go back to work, and back to work we must go if we are to compete with western Europe which has now recovered after 25 years of handouts and interest-free money from the United States. Remember the Marshall Plan. The United States put Europe back on its feet, with disastrous results. Now the great United States finds itself alone, without friends. That is a great example of social credit: you find yourself abandoned, without friends. That is where the taxpayers of Alberta find themselves, abandoned and without friends.

Social Credit is supposed to be a free enterprise party. It is supposed to support the taxpayers, the people who do the work. But have those who do the work in Alberta benefited? I will speak for myself. In a small town of 3,500 people, which has no university, my taxes are $700 per year on a three-bedroom house. From the provincial government I get $50 rebate, so my full taxes are $650. If the Social Crediters are sincere, why do they not put oil revenues at the disposal of the municipalities? With considerable riches, hundreds of millions of dollars a year coming in, why do they not put some of this money at the disposal of the people who need it most, the bankrupt municipalities?

Mr. Speaker, if you examine the record you will find that the municipalities in the rich province of Alberta are the worst off in Canada. I can only come to one conclusion, that the Social Crediters do not mean or practice what they preach. They have the money in Alberta. They do not have to go to New York for it. It is there in Alberta, but the municipalities cannot get it because the Social Crediters want the same old power that most governments want, the power to control the purse strings and never mind the poor little worker, the poor little taxpayer. How long do you think you can go on killing the goose that lays the golden egg? Not much longer.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

We in the Conservative party have been consistent throughout the years. Taking over in 1957, we found the country bankrupt as it is today. We found the people of Canada starving in the midst of plenty. We found them with too much grain, too many cattle, too many hogs, too many chickens and nobody to buy these things. So we adopted the only answer—not a quick answer, and not a sharpened pencil. We adopted a rolled-up sleeves, back to work, back to trading policy and we balanced the country's budgets. We got the economy rolling. The only sorrow of Canadians is that they allowed the same old gang to take over again and put us back where we were 13 sad years ago.

We must go back to work in order to compete in the markets of the world. We have efficiency in the working people of Canada. This is no class war that I am waging. In this context I mean the people who are producing, the small businessman, the manufacturer, the efficient builder of houses and the entrepreneur. They are the real source of wealth in this country and no government has a right to tax them, no government has a right to lay red herrings across the trail—Socialist red herrings or Social Credit red herrings—because only through hard work, with reasonable prices and solid world markets, can we regain our feet.

Solid world markets made success possible for us, after we were forced to devalue the dollar, not because of any fault of ours but because Canada was bankrupt. We took the only way out. We got back into the export markets of the world. We recovered our share of the export markets and we sold every bushel of grain until the boast of the Minister of Agriculture of that day was, "You grow it; we will sell it." It is a long time since anybody has dared to say that about agriculture or any other sector of the economy, except perhaps nickel, uranium and some of the other hardware of war.

No government has ever been proud that the only way Canada could keep afloat was to supply the world with war materials. You are getting this from a self-declared hawk, Mr. Speaker. I am a hawk to the extent that I believe in the full defence of Canada. I do not believe in a "respectable" budget for defence which is designed to fool the Americans and bamboozle the Canadian taxpayers. It does not fool the Americans, Mr. Speaker. We have not saved a cent in the defence budget.

[Mr. Bigg.]

We have no defence in Canada, and taxes remain the same. How long can this bamboozling go on?

For 25 years we have had Social Credit rule in Alberta, and the people of that province snort in disdain when debt-free money is mentioned. Grow up! This is the twentieth century. Nobody accepts this kind of promise now, although it put the Social Credit government in power. Nobody believed the old shinplaster about $25 a month when it was promised. Nobody has believed it since, and nobody believes it now. Nobody will believe this resurrection of a concept that never was born. It is an old story.

I find it passing strange, Mr. Speaker, that anybody would dare pretend that an experiment like this would work, for 25 years when they have had the finest opportunity, in the richest province in Canada, to put it into effect and nothing has been done but to give a $20 bill. That is all the people of Alberta ever got. This scheme is a dead loss; it would not even pay the interest on $25 a month for one year. For the last 20 years I have been hearing this empty nonsense, and I am tired of it. If the Social Crediters of Canada would only take a good look at the facts, they would realize that the only effective action in this situation is for all of us to get together with good, old-fashioned common sense, old-fashioned hard work and old-fashioned effort to retrieve the export markets of the world and compete with western Europe, the United States and Asia. We can show that the people of Canada have been, are now and always will be efficient.

An hon. Member: The same old speech that we have heard before.

Mr. Bigg: You will hear it a good many times from me. I can be consistent. I have never changed my view and neither has the party that I have the honour to represent. We have worked for balanced budgets, which is the best form of debt-free money you can get. You cannot pile up a national debt if you pay as you go, and that is the only honest way of going about it. Everybody within sound of my voice—and I imagine that is everybody in this chamber—knows that there is no such thing as debt-free money; there is no such thing as something for nothing. You will never get something for nothing. We believe in paying as we go. We believe in paying our debts and giving people a fair return for the money they have saved. I would not ask people to give us money debt free. That is to steal—

An hon. Member: The CPR got some.

Mr. Bigg: If the CPR got debt-free money, that was taking something they did not have coming to them. There is never something for nothing. Those who try to get it are free riders. The new doctrine of something for nothing, by right, is a lie. The people of Canada may want to give something out of the goodness of their hearts—they have done it to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars—but there is nothing that says anybody has a right to it. No government has the right to take my charitable feelings and put them into print.

If we want to produce in this country an atmosphere in which a man can work, instead of taking away more and more of the profits of his labour we should be striving to give him more and more in his pay cheque for the work he performs. If you did this you would have fewer and fewer people needing relief. We need policies to send young people back to school. We need aggressive trade policies to sell goods in the markets of the world. We need to encourage businessmen. Forget the white paper and give the businessmen of Canada encouragement to compete in the markets of the world. They have to compete with manufactured goods in the way we have competed with agricultural products.

There is no more efficient farmer in the world than the Canadian farmer, but never has he been so hard up. The policy of lending interest-free money, money at 5 per cent, or subsidizing loans to farmers of western Canada will not do much good unless markets are found for their products. You are only hanging a debt around the farmer's neck. Why let him have $75,000 without a well-thought out policy on how he will pay it back? There is no such thing as debt-free money, and I would never vote for it.

My friends opposite voted for debt-free money. I do not know why they have had this sensible change of heart, except that they know it was Conservative policy which put Canada back on her feet between 1957 and 1962. To the extent that this administration has followed the guidelines we gave them, we have prospered. When they have gone off into the wild blue yonder on a wild goose chase, we have come to disaster. It is the people of Canada who have paid and who will pay until we return to the common sense of hard work, thrift and obtaining foreign markets.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

• (9:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the hon. member who spoke before me deal with the motion, I was under the impression that I was sitting in the Edmonton legislature in view of the efforts made to criticize the policy of the provincial government of Alberta. However, the motion is clear and it does say:

> That, in view of the government's inability to effectively combat the frightening increase in the public debt in the opinion of this house, the public sector of the Canadian economy, including the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the schoolboards should be financed by interest free loans—

This is where there is a lack of objectivity and efforts are made to impute motives to the Ralliement créditiste and its supporters when they defend this policy.

In my estimation, a man who earns $100 and who agrees to lend it to a friend or a partner is really entitled to receive an interest because in some way he rents out the fruit of his labour. We recognize this and we accept it right away and I consider dishonest those who would like to make the people believe that we object to all this lending system of the fruit of one's work to an industry or to a chum. What we want especially is to lighten the burden of the individuals and the community by strongly urging the government so that all new credit based on the work, of all the Canadian people, be loaned to the federal government, the municipalities, the provinces, under an accounting system but free of interest which crushes everyone at the same time.

Last year, during a debate on pieces of legislation introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation,—to unfreeze this interest system which was frozen at 5 per cent,—our friends in the official opposition categorically objected to it arguing that it would tend to impose an extra burden on the farmers and place them in an unfavourable position.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if excessively high interest rates can create problems for private enterprise, for individuals, why should it be different in the case of the interests that crush the federal and provincial governments, all our public bodies, and those who administer them, who of necessity have to levy high enough taxes to meet their payments?

Suggested Interest-free Loans

I know what I am speaking of in this field, because I have now been secretary of a municipality for some 25 years. Every year I have had to prepare a budget, with the help of the mayor and the aldermen, we must take into account the public debt we have contracted and must honour.

I am in a position to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that what our taxpayers find most annoying is precisely the interest on the public debt.

Fortunately, in the case of many municipalities, that public debt is owed mostly to taxpayers, who were willing to buy bonds or debentures with the money earned by the sweat of their brow, and who are certainly entitled to the interest.

What we condemn through this motion, is precisely what the Liberal government of 1935 condemned through the right hon. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister at the time, when he stated in Saskatoon on September 23 1935:

> When governments do not control their money and credit, it matters little who makes the laws, those governments are bound to depend on those who control that money, that credit, and it is pointless to speak of democracy.

I feel that the objectivity and the sincerity of all the members of the Ralliement créditiste will be recognized, when we suggest that a stop be put to those disorderly loans which not only overburden the government, but also discourage those who contribute to the financing of public affairs.

A few moments ago I heard the previous speaker complain bitterly about the so-called acheivements of Alberta. Since I became member of Parliament, however, I have realized that if anyone attacks the present financial system and tries, in the name of democracy, to take away from the banks the right of Parliament to control the credit of the nation—credit which is the result of the work of all—the two old traditional parties close ranks in a common front against it. That is a sign of the times, an indication that we are on the right track and that we are really working to ensure for all Canadians the democracy which everybody is talking about.

Some say democracy means freedom. We, Créditistes, go futher than that. We say that democracy truly observed is the assurance not only fo freedom but of security. We work desperately hard at it, in order to give each and every one the opportunity of being himself in a truly democratic country where it is good to live.

I am surprised to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) say that we must tighten our belts. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asks us to show restraint although I have noticed everywhere in Canada the presence of considerable wealth and the possibility of production, through the work of those who want to work. We could increase production if the activities of the young and not so young people were not stifled by the provision of that meagre allowance called social welfare. Those people are well disposed, they still have plenty of pluck, they wish to cooperate to the development of Canada.

I recently had the opportunity to travel overseas. I did not go there to wander about, but to watch what was going on. Today, I am in a position to convey my impressions to the House. We have nothing to envy anyone. In Canada, we can better develop our natural resources in all areas, provided that we subdue those who make their living by controlling our credit, those who hold the key to our security and who decide whether the federal government will increase such and such a service, undertake this or that project and authorize such and such a development in such and such an area.

• (9:20 p.m.)

This afternoon, I heard the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), together with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), request the introduction of a bill allowing parliament to help the province of Nova Scotia.

Right now I say that I shall support that bill, for after all, it is good and commendable since it purports precisely to show that there are still potentialities for new developments in Nova Scotia. However, I could detect a smile on the minister's face which seemed to tell the hon. members of the official opposition: Well, I pulled a fast one on you! I am introducing legislation that will benefit even a province which is dead set against us.

I think that in Canada, there is no place for political partisanship when it comes to spending public funds and using the possible credit of Canadians. We should instead try together to create everywhere in Canada an atmosphere of confidence and security. We should stop thinking that there is a rich Canada in the west and a poor Canada in the east. It is not good enough, when we live on the same continent and in the same country, that certain things are blamed on us, sometimes very bitterly.

I received this afternoon a letter from a citizen of Saint-Michel parish, in the Bellechasse constituency, the fairest of the province of Quebec—where people get the lowest per capita income throughout Canada. In my opinion, this is not normal, in view of the present possibilities.

A certain Mr. Roy wrote to me as follows, and I quote:

> Having learned of the famous Trudeau-Benson plan on the radio and in newspapers, I would consider it as coming from two complete idiots.

Of course, I would not call them idiots. I go on with the quotation:

> We, the small and average wage-earners, are we taken for idiots?
> If salary increases are limited to 6 per cent, who will be affected do you think? Surely not those in the $20,000 to $40,000 salary range, but rather the small and average wage-earners.
> Why should these small wage-earners have to suffer from inflation?

He concludes by saying:

> By their plan, Trudeau and Benson are protecting high-salaried people and capitalists.

Those are his remarks. As for myself, I am his spokesman.

This citizen will be happy tomorrow when he learns that his message has reached Parliament. He wanted to convey what he had in mind, no matter the words he used. He simply means that he has not enough money to live and that he is disgusted to see that in order to fight inflation, those who do not earn enough money already will be asked to settle for a 6 per cent raise while more powerful organizations—such as the Bank of Montreal, as one could read in the weekend newspapers—are allowed to realize an increase in revenue of 27 per cent, which somewhat exceeds 6 per cent.

Those who read newspapers and notice these things are shocked to see that Parliament, which is supposed to defend the interests of the people, is not doing anything. They expect us to assume our responsibilities.

Mr. Roy added:

> We have been laughed at for too long.

I know that nobody wants to laugh at the poor people. I am really convinced of that. I know that Parliament, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) or any former Minister of Finance did not want to laugh at anybody. But it is still a shame that the people who hold such an office are not giving orders but carrying them out. Of course, some decisions have to be taken, and people like the man who wrote to me are in a good position to see what is going on, but they are not always able to judge clearly enough the decisions taken. They then write us letters like the one I just read to you, and that shows what the present mood is.

And that, I feel, is why we must adopt this motion which is not likely to bring about a revolution, but to enable the government, in the field of finance, to liberate what is now frozen, to enable our unemployed workers, as the previous speaker said a few minutes ago, to find work and become useful members of the community, and also our students, over 600,000 of them, some of which visit our offices, inquiring about summer job opportunities. We all want to give them work, but we are all unable to do so, and they go off dissatisfied because they think that in September they will have to get back to university and spend more money when they did not have, during their holidays, any opportunity to earn a few dollars to pay for it. We talk about free education, but it remains that one has always personal spendings to make.

Mr. Roy ends his letter as follows:

> Perhaps we are idiots and small wage-earners, but we still have a good memory.

What does this mean? This means that if something is not done to meet the proposed goal, other means will have to be taken. We will have to elect other members, another government.

Governments have come and gone for a hundred years, but the financial system which supports our administration has remained the same. For that reason we are always in a vicious circle: in alleged periods of peace we should have prosperity.

If I have four or five boys at home and if every morning we have to quarrel for two hours in order to know what we will do, and if we need three more hours to make a decision, it will be noon before we have decided to go to work. A good part of the day is over. How can we work effectively during the rest of the day? How can we achieve anything!

In wartime, every country is experiencing difficulties with respect to finance, economic organization and service. But in peacetime, when we should have some prosperity, how could we explain, Mr. Speaker, that big 20-year-old 200 pound 6-foot-2-inch fellows are glued to their seats, while we, the responsible grown-ups, tell them: Listen, you must understand the situation, the country is broke. But where do those damned bucks come from?

They do not grow on trees. There was a time when I believed that they actually came from the land.

I tilled 90 acres of virgin soil, but I never found one bloody buck behind the plough. So, it must come from somewhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Money comes from whoever has the control over the printing of dollars. Why is it so scarce while there should be plenty of it. Because it is not controlled democratically, but in a wrong way. We, of the Ralliement créditiste, demand that the credit of the nation, made up by the nation, be put at the disposal of the nation. That is all we ask for, and nothing else. This is pure horse sense. The tap feeding the public Treasury should be controlled by the Minister of Finance who is at our service, at the service of the people, at the service of the government, which is not the case of those who have now the privilege of controlling money and credit.

• (9:30 p.m.)

That is all we are asking for. It seems to me plain common sense. And then we find people who say: "As long as you do not bring us together with some influent person able to help us understand what Social Credit, we cannot believe in it.

Mr. Speaker, in turn, I ask the government and those who are advocating the present system to bring us together with some influent person able to help us understand the present financial system and its effectiveness when—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired unless the House will give unanimous consent to allow him to carry on his remarks. Is it the pleasure of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed. The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also thank my colleagues. I am convinced of one thing and it is that all of us here are working in all goodwill. We want our discussions to bring about improvements.

That is why the hon. member for Bellechasse was allowed to proceed with his remarks and he will not take advantage of the confidence and the right to speak granted to him.

I shall conclude my remarks and make my point by referring to a conference on pollution which I recently attended in France. I hope I may be allowed this reference for I believe that when parliament pays the expenses of members like the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) or any other, for that matter, in order to make a trip, it is with a useful purpose in view.

We have studied there the problem of air and water pollution now facing mankind. The problem of providing us with fresh air is indeed important. I made a personal experience with a little bird. I tried to put it in a cage which I gradually made smaller, which means that the volume of oxygen was shrinking gradually, and I reduced its size to the extent where at one point, the bird flapped its wings, and dropped dead. Why? It had run out of air; there was an abundance of it around, but I controlled it.

We have also studied the important problem of water pollution. The problem is vital for the nations.

But there is another problem, that of the pollution of our financial system and of our democracy. We are polluted and do not realize it. We realize there is uneasiness, that some people are unhappy. We seek the cause, but we really avoid looking for it where it really lies. What is lacking? What is wrong? Those who oppose the reforms advocated by the Creditistes, embroil matters purposely. It is easy to do so, to ascribe all kinds of intentions to us.

But God knows that our intentions are as good as anyone else's. In Parliament and elsewhere, we want our work to be of benefit not only to ourselves but to others.

A while ago, I heard the hon. member from Pembina (Mr. Bigg) say that there are surpluses, and perhaps if we were to relax credit, this would create a surplus of money, which could become dangerous.

Allow me one small remark, no harm meant.

There are milk and wheat surpluses. But there are hungry people, deprived of the bare necessaries to whom we must bring relief and comfort.

Some people claim that all the Créditistes want is the recognition of rights but that they refuse to accept the obligations of community life. Nothing is further from the truth. We recognize that each individual has rights and obligations and that we cannot live within a community if our rights and obligations are not respected. That is the reason why we keep saying that we must not only ensure the recognition of the rights of the individuals but also enable them to fulfil their moral, economic and social obligations. Why is it that so many people nowadays refuse to fulfil their obligations, within society? Because they are deprived of the right to participate through their work in the development of the community. I am shocked, as a head of family, to see that the Canadian government is spending in Sainte-Anne-Des-Plaines $32,450 per inmate. An institution was built to accommodate 450 inmates, while families, are systematically refused the right to obtain the credit required to build a home for their children.

In my opinion, the government is not living with the times when it does not make use of all possible means to ensure to these families a right to live in a dwelling of their choice large enough so that they might perpetuate the human race.

In France we were told that the French people do not wish to emigrate to Canada because they like to stay in their country. As for us who enjoy a huge country, we can increase our population in a natural way without being obliged to resort to integration as of birth into a given area, which would systematically allow the normal growth of the population because of the famous dollar which, coming from a system proposed by the Créditistes, will be inflationary, painful and bad because there will be too much money in circulation. However, if the money comes from those who control the credit of the nation without any active and industrious participation, it is not inflationary, or dangerous for the economy. This system is sacred, it must not be changed.

Therefore, let us continue to see things unrealistically.

Very few members know the tragic events which I and certain others lived through during the 1930-39 depression. We were not even allowed to have a 3-cent stamp to mail a letter to our mothers, and that really hurt. It is difficult to wait for daybreak at the edge of the wood to begin working without fear of injury. Some are laughing at that. Let them. He laughs longest who laughs last.

I have lived through such incidents and through those difficult years and today I consider it my duty, because I have been trained to fulfil my own responsibilities, to stand as the protector of my fellow citizens. In fact, they also have the right to live in their own country with a minimum of security while enjoying the freedom we cherish.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to speak for the motion introduced by one of our colleagues. The motion is logical and might be acceptable, but if the House is unable to understand, how can we expect to convince a whole country?

Parliament is supposed to group the best brains of a country, honest citizens who are supposed to work only for the nation and to develop the full physical, moral, intellectual and financial possibilities of a country. But any talk of reviewing our system, of correcting its inherent abuses is called nonsense.

Just while ago, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) stated that Liberals, Conservatives and NDP members disagreed with those who advocate an inflationary policy, a social, normal and intelligent policy which was only second-rate and extolled by a few members in a certain corner on the house who do not know what they are talking about. Those are approximately the words used by the minister.

When we have ministers who do not even know the difference between public and private capital, how can the administration of a country be normal, consistent and beneficial to the people?

We are convinced that the public debt is a nonsense, that it is the worst monster which we ever had to face, a dreadful monster, with all the necessary power and tentacles to pick up all that is consistent, powerful and weighty: finance. And it is that monster which is protected by those who govern us in Canada since confederation.

It is the Liberals and the Conservatives who governed us. They are those who increased the public debt to please, to enrich, to give more strength to that monster which now crushes and chokes the whole population. And they too are being choked and crushed by that monster but, alas, they do not feel it!

It is a bit of luck for the House to have Ralliement créditiste members, who see things clearly, who have studied the situation and tell it like it is. Truly, the House should realize its luck in having us here.

Suggested Interest-free Loans

Even if we are convinced that our words will fall on deaf ears and it is pointless to talk to empty seats, we shall do our duty, because people in our constituencies in Canada and Quebec have asked us to. They asked us to represent them here and before the Parliament of Canada, where we must seek the best means to achieve happiness for our fellow-citizens.

This is our reason for being here. We were elected on such terms and the other hon. members were not, because I know that they advocate opposite views. However the people who elected them are similar to the people that elected us; they have the same needs and are entitled to the same benefits. At any rate if those hon. members refuse to provide those people with such benefits, they will have to answer for it.

We know that their childish, naive and ridiculous prejudices prevent them from considering the Créditistes like normal citizens, capable of having some consistency in their ideas and some sense in their reasoning, but, in spite of all that, remarks are still made to us about the ridiculous manner in which Canadian affairs are now being run.

Oh, we are well taken care of. Have a look. The municipalities, the provincial governments, the federal government, in short, everybody is on the verge of bankruptcy! Individuals are taxed, overtaxed and all on the verge of bankruptcy in order to, I repeat, give more power to that awful monster that we want to strengthen all the time.

Then, the more our Canada is prosperous, the more we get into debt. The more interest we pay, the more the country gets engulfed in debt towards a small group of Canadian or foreign citizens who collect each year the greatest part of our national production at the expense of 40 per cent of our people who still live from day to day, with no security, in the most shocking poverty or destitution, in this era of progress, machines and automation.

I believe that those who are present, although most of the seats are empty, should open their ears and their eyes and take a closer look in order to find what improvements are needed in our outmoded financial system that has never been corrected since its foundation, while we have developed, through knowledge, progress, technology and the development of our universities. In spite of all that, the system we advocate is as old as the hills, and no one has ever dared change it in the least to make it fit the economic reality.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Therefore, we are right, when we say we are not ridiculous. On the contrary, it is the Grits and the Tories who are ridiculous because they have never changed anything to this barbarous and famous system that we have. The members of the old parties can laugh, if they want to, but really, they are the ones who are ridiculous. They will continue to enrich the rich by paying them higher interest rates on the public debts, and will continue to make the poor poorer in levying higher taxes on them to pay higher interest rates to the rich owners of our 800 largest corporations in Canada. The same causes always produce the same effects.

On the whole, however, the disruption of our national economy, the poverty of the masses, the accumulation of capital in the hands of millionaires, are what the present system permits. When are you going to open your eyes and ears?

Have there not been enough warnings? What is keeping you from bringing yourselves up to date, from attuning yourselves to a progressive society? Do you Progressive Conservatives and Liberals mean to be the only ones to benefit from progress? Do you intend to reserve it mainly for the rich, the educated, the powerful, the leaders?

The two great parties are ridiculous in all their commercial and legislative activities. Again this year the government has increased from 6 to 8 per cent, i.e. a 33 and $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent increase, its interest rate on the renewal of $275 million in bonds that had come to maturity and that the government cannot manage to repay on maturity.

Have you thought of this? At the same time, the government restricts the workers to 6 per cent salary increases and allows capitalists a $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent increase in interest rates. Every millionaire who used to get $60,000 for every million dollars loaned is now going to get, thanks to the 8 per cent interest rate, $80,000 in interest only for a $1 million loan.

The federal government allows a 8 per cent interest rate, but what about the municipalities and the provinces which now have to pay 10 and 12 per cent rate on capital and on credit merely advanced on scraps of paper?

At the same time our Parliament has become a Hyde Park where dissenters can speak out their minds. At least we have the pleasure of speaking. Even if we are sure that nobody listens to us, at least we speak with open heart. We speak out our mind and we spill out what we have to say. After all, we enjoy impunity. This is still granted to us in our free country. We are free to speak, even if we are sure that nothing will be changed and that nobody will listen to us. Long live our beautiful Parliament, long live democracy, long live the people where only millionaires are heard, appreciated, listened to, protected, favoured and glorified! If only one would try to know the origin of those millions and of those billions of debts which weigh heavily on the people!

The more our country is progressing, the higher the debt and the heavier the interests. After the war, Canada's debt was about $12 billion, with an interest rate of 2 or 3½ per cent. Today, after 25 years of peace, our debt is $30 billion and we are paying an interest rate of 8 per cent. Is it not ridiculous?

• (9:50 p.m.)

Who is stupid enough to accept this diabolical situation? Who is getting the interests? Who pays them? What millionaire individuals and corporations are getting the interests paid by the Canadian people? The Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives and the NDP members are defending this kind of government. The Social Credit party is the only one to offer an honourable solution which tends to balance a little more the economy, without destroying free enterprise, wealth, science or power of wealthy, learned and powerful people.

At present, the middle class as well as many learned and powerful people are gradually destroyed because of the absurdity of the financial system.

If we look closely to the gross national product from 1949 to 1967, after 18 years of peace, we see that it has increased from $16 billion to $62 billion, a raise of over $45 billion. However, in constant dollars, one realizes that in effect production has increased from $16 billion to $37 billion in 18 years, which amounts to a $20 billion increase instead of $45 billion.

What was formerly called "wet capital" was simply some way of inflating prices to give the people the impression that business was improving. And now they have the check to tell the people that it produces inflation. It is an artificial inflation, without any real basis. It is a very wide misrepresentation meant to lure people who do not know a thing about economics.

And the governments we now have, whether red or blue—and the same may apply to the New Democratic party—are concealing from the people the fact and the possible truth about the country, and the financial system as well. One day, however, they will all have to pay for the mess. Justice will prevail in the end.

This help us to somehow understand the increase of the prices and securities on the stock exchange. Our economy is based on fanciful, lazy calculations, devised by economists, hard put to explain away facts they were unable to foresee, mistakes they could not prevent, misfortunes they could not avoid. And the victims are forever the people.

When an economist or an engineer makes a mistake, it is never his fault. Even a voluntary and intentional mistake, with due knowledge, is always forgiven.

Only the ministers and the members in power are responsible for the leadership and the formulation of our national and international policy.

In view of these facts, why do such a large number of people live in misery, poverty and insecurity? In view of so much profit from capitalization reserves accumulated by the large multimillion dollar corporations, why those complaints, difficulties bankruptcies, medium or small, why—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58 the proceedings on the motion are now considered to have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CRIMINAL CODE—ABORTION—REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS FROM LAW

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) if he would reconsider his decision and take abortion out of the Criminal Code, thus freeing qualified doctors to act in consultation with pregnant women. He replied that both he and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already stated the government position, and added, "that is it for the moment".

Last night in Vancouver the Prime Minister held what the Canadian Press terms "a reasonably orderly discussion" on the subject with about 60 members of the Women's Liberation Group. According to the press dispatch, the Prime Minister said that current laws allow doctors to perform abortions if they wish, but added that the liberalization proposed by the group would force them to do so, possibly against their will. No one knows better than the Prime Minister what the present abortion laws permit. He knows that they do not permit doctors to perform abortions, no matter how much they wish to do so, except under conditions so rigid that it is estimated that about one woman in every 500 who require an abortion can get one.

• (10:00 p.m.)

As to the Prime Minister's charge that the changes proposed by the Women's Liberation Group would force doctors to perform abortions, possibly against their will, if the Prime Minister had taken the trouble to meet the group when they came to Ottawa on May 9, or even to read their brief, he would have seen that their demand in regard to abortion was simply this:

> That in this session of Parliament the government sponsor a bill removing all mention of abortion from the Criminal Code.

There is no mention there, or anywhere else in the brief, of forcing doctors to perform abortions. Indeed, what the doctors need is freedom to follow their consciences, without the legal shackles of hospital boards and whole desert areas where there are not any hospitals that will permit abortions or where hospital facilities of any kind simply do not exist.

The truth is that our present abortion laws are forcing women to bear children regardless of their wishes, regardless of their state of health, regardless of whether or not they can afford to care for and educate them properly, regardless of what additional children do to the health and chances in life of the others. A few doctors, unable to watch the helpless misery of such women trapped by unwanted pregnancy, have been performing abortions on their own. With what result? They are arrested and tried as criminals. Last week this happened to a respected doctor in Montreal, Dr. Henry Morgentaler, president of the Humanist Association of Canada. At a press conference in Ottawa he told of one woman, the mother of three children, brought into a Montreal hospital following a botched operation by a non-doctor. Infection developed and an emergency hysterectomy was performed, but several days after that press conference the woman died horribly of gas gangrene. No, Mr. Prime Minister, the current law does not permit doctors to perform abortions if they wish.

The Prime Minister is to be commended for trying to broaden the abortion laws last year in the face of strong opposition. But it is now evident that further changes are urgent to combat the menace of dangerous abortions performed by quacks and butchers and to wipe out the discrimination that permits a woman with means to have a safe abortion while a woman without money faces the risk of infection and death. The Prime Minister claims the public is not ready for changes in the abortion laws. A Gallup poll was taken in March of this year on the question, "Would you vote for a law that would permit a woman to terminate pregnancy at any time during the first three months?" Forty-three per cent said yes, 48 per cent said no, and 9 per cent were undecided.

A year ago it was the persistence and drive of the Prime Minister that put through the present abortion law. He did this in the face of opposition that would have discouraged most men in his position. I am quite convinced that if he now decides to make the change that experience has shown is necessary, that is, to take abortion out of the Criminal Code and leave the decision to the doctor and his patient, he will be able to switch that undecided 9 per cent into the "yes" column, thus making a safe majority of public opinion in favour of the change. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will take this risk as he took the risk to his career last year.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in the unavoidable absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) I should be pleased to reply to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). However, I do not think I could add anything to what the Minister of Justice said in this House a few days ago. The Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have indicated to the House that because the law relating to therapeutic abortion was amended less than a year ago, it would not be appropriate to reopen the issue until sufficient time has elapsed to evaluate how the amended law is working.

The Minister of Justice has indicated he will study the statistics which result under the new law's reporting procedures and, when a proper assessment can be made, he will take whatever steps may be required.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.07 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—UNAUTHORIZED PUBLICATION OF DOCUMENTS IN POSSESSION OF GOVERNMENT—LACK OF REDRESS BY HOUSE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave Your Honour notice a couple of hours ago. It is true that what I shall be saying arises out of events of the last few days concerning which there have been two or three interventions, but I assure Your Honour that I am now raising a new question of privilege, one that I believe affects every member of this House and also affects the working of this Parliament.

My question of privilege relates to the fact that it is now clear that when a crisis arises involving the unauthorized publication of a document that has been in the possession of the government, Parliament seems to have no recourse; there is nothing it can do to cope with the crisis. It is because we face this situation, and because it greatly hampers the working of this House of Commons, that I feel we should come to grips with this issue and call upon the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to go into the matter and make a recommendation to the House.

In order to outline the situation, Mr. Speaker, may I take just a moment to remind Your Honour of what has happened. As everyone knows, when the present government came into power the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) laid down very strict rules regarding cabinet secrecy and made clear to his ministers what would happen if these rules were broken. For some time now we understand the cabinet has had possession of the report of the Le Dain commission but that the cabinet has kept possession of it on a secret and confidential basis. However, certain bits of information have leaked out and, as was indicated in a question of privilege at six o'clock last evening, Time magazine has published a report which seems to be based on possession of the document or at least on possession of a summary of what is in the document. In other words, secrecy and confidentiality have been broken.

Now, sir, it seems to me this type of thing interferes with the efficient and proper working of a democratic institution such as this House of Commons. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that I think it interferes greatly with your position. I fully respect the rulings you have made on the interventions that have been raised in the last two or three days. I believe you have followed precisely our Standing Orders and procedures. Yet I think I would be less than honest if I were not to admit that Your Honour has looked uncomfortable because of the crisis which has been facing the House of Commons.

Your Honour has ruled against any motion under Standing Order 43 or any motion under privilege for the tabling of the report of the Le Dain commission. You have said that the only thing a member can do is to file a notice of motion for the production of papers, and Your Honour admitted from the Chair that at this stage of the game that is a rather unrealistic vehicle.

Your Honour has ruled against a request under privilege or under any other device for an inquiry into this whole matter which, as I say, is serious to us all. Personally, I well remember an incident of some 18 years ago. My friend the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will remember it very well also. At that time there came into my possession the original version of a document known as the Currie report.

An hon. Member: How did you get it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A friend wants to know how I got it. To this day I do not know the chain of hands through which that copy went but I do know that within days after I produced it the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were put on the trail and charged an unemployed printer.

Mr. Baldwin: Were they on horseback?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This unemployed printer spent 30 days in jail. There are times when an inquiry or an investigation can be made but those times seem to be limited to occasions when the government takes the initiative. But the government is responsible to Parliament. That is the kind of a system under which we operate and yet we seem to be stymied. There would seem to be no way by which we can have an investigation made into this matter to determine whether someone in the cabinet is responsible for an unauthorized leak, whether there has been thievery or what have you.

I suggest that this matter hangs like a cloud over Parliament and that it ought not to remain that way. However, I have already said I do not quarrel with the rulings Your Honour has given from the Chair. I may have presented argument on the other side but when Your Honour made the rulings I felt they were correct. But I think that in Parliament we ought not to find ourselves in this kind of a situation, frustrated as we are, when there is something in the nature of a crisis which affects the workings of Parliament. Yet we are asked to sit here helpless, unable to do anything about it. Instead of looking like the highest court of the land we are made to look like a barrel of monkeys.

I submit we should not be in this situation. There ought to be a way by which we can find out how this report came into the hands of Time magazine. We ought to be able to find out who was responsible. I suppose I should also say that we ought to be able to find out if Time magazine does have the correct report. It should not be made a matter of mystery and uncertainty, hanging like a cloud over Parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, despite your rulings of the last few days that it is not a matter of privilege to refer to a committee the question of the source of this report in Time magazine and that it is not a matter of privilege to seek an inquiry into the whole matter, I do ask Your Honour to consider the difficult spot in which the House and you as our presiding officer are placed because of the fact that when a crisis of this kind develops there seems to be nothing we can do. If you find that in the name of Parliament I do have a prima facie case of privilege in what I have stated, I would then be prepared to move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis):

That the lack of any redress on the part of the House of Commons when a confidential document in the possession of the government is made public without authorization be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for consideration and report.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a word or two in support of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I reiterate that this whole situation was brought by the leaking of the report and the subsequent interpretation and opinions expressed by Time magazine about the contents of the report or about the contents of a resumé prepared in the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare for presentation to cabinet. Either way, the situation has arisen because a private group outside of Parliament obtained the report or a resumé of it and expressed opinions about it, thus giving what may be an unclear and distorted view to the general public and to Parliament particularly.

The report may well have been leaked out so that the Minister of National Health and Welfare could strengthen his hand with the obstinate members of the cabinet who disagreed with him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The minister, a man of high integrity, I am quite sure would not have done this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is now straying some distance away from the very limited point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre well, he has raised an entirely new question of privilege. If it were not a new question of privilege, he would not even be entitled to put the question to the Chair and to the House. The hon. member is essentially reiterating the arguments which he put forward last evening and which were followed by a ruling of the Chair. If he wishes to address the House, it should be on whether there is a matter which should be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I agree with you, Mr. Speaker. I was just laying the groundwork in order to lead up to a citation from Beauchesne which I believe substantiates what is being attempted here. I point out that the cabinet knew two or three days before the Time magazine article was published that it was in fact going to be published. Thus the cabinet created the situation deliberately by refusing to make the report public and maintaining Time magazine's exclusive position. It makes one wonder whether the Prime Minister's declaration that we should have "a little bit of pot" in every chicken has permeated the whole cabinet.

I submit that citation 106(2) of Beauchesne provides us with the opportunity to accept this question of privilege because it points out that "the dignity and independence of the two Houses are in great measure preserved by keeping their privileges indefinite", in other words, not spelling them all out but permitting the opportunity for each case to be dealt with on its own merits. Because there was some ineptitude, fumbling and incompetence on the part of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the handling of this report, or on the part of one of the flunkies in his office in distributing it for an unauthorized purpose, I submit that Your Honour should look upon this question of privilege favourably and provide Parliament with an opportunity, through the Committee on Procedure and Organization, to discuss ways and means whereby Parliament can deal properly and fully with such a situation in the future.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall not add too much to what has been said.

Mr. Trudeau: You never do.

Mr. Baldwin: Our position in this party, despite the rude interruption by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who did not learn too much when he was out west, has been well stated on a question of privilege I raised some time ago and through questions by my leader and by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). We therefore think there is a question of privilege.

I do not intend to add to the words uttered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, should Your Honour hold that there is not a question of privilege and that this might well be in the nature of a substantive motion which would have to be put in the usual way—I hope you do not do so—may I suggest an alternative because no legislative body should be frustrated and inhibited by its own rules when an important matter like this arises. Should Your Honour so hold, and I hope you will not, possibly by unanimous consent the hour devoted to private members' business this afternoon might well be set aside for this particular motion with a provision, to which unanimous consent could also be given, that the question would be put at the end of the hour set aside for private members' business.

This is a very important question, and obviously it has been established that there is a roadblock somewhere in the proceedings of the House. The three judgments that Your Honour has rendered in connection with the questions which have been raised clearly indicate that. Possibly Your Honour may, by the exercise of great ingenuity and aided by the words of wisdom you have listened to this afternoon, find your way clear to get out of the jungle where we now rest. However, if this is not the case I would hope there would be unanimous consent—I am looking directly at the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald)—to set aside private members' hour for this very reasonable motion so that it can be debated for an hour and the question then put. In that way, by the time the next session rolls around the House would have come to a wise and sensible decision on the question with which we are now faced.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond at once to the suggestion of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that the cabinet knew that the report was in the hands of Time magazine and that it was going to be published. I can say that was not the case, and that is not a true statement.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): How about some of your colleagues' statements?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I can only point out to the hon. member that cabinet did not know and I can instantly rebut what he has said. I can confirm on behalf of the government that we too would like to know the source of these particular leaks, and we too would favour the kind of examination of this procedure that has been suggested by the hon. member's motion.

I would say, in response to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), why wait for five o'clock? Why not do it now? In other words, Mr. Speaker, I would make two suggestions to avoid your having to make a ruling on the question of privilege. First, perhaps by unanimous consent this motion could be regarded as a motion under Standing Order 43. Second, perhaps we could equally unanimously agree to pass it right away so that the matter could be referred to the committee at once.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Publication of Le Dain Report

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps before a ruling is made by the Chair I should obtain the views of the party leaders on this suggestion. I have to say, in fairness, that the Chair has been advised by the Leader of the Opposition of a proposed motion under Standing Order 26 which might further complicate matters. However, if there is unanimous agreement of the House that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre be put and debated at this time, the Chair could put the motion and if it were agreed to unanimously it would have the effect of sending this matter to the Committee on Procedure and Organization. Since this would have to be done by agreement perhaps the Chair might be guided in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, we would be quite satisfied if the House would unanimously agree to have this motion moved under Standing Order 43 and passed by unanimous consent so that the committee can look into the whole question of how Parliament has redress in a situation such as that we are facing. This does not, of course, deal with the basic problem of an investigation at the present time into how the interim report by the LeDain Commission got into the hands of persons outside the government and outside Parliament. As a first step, however, certainly the reference of this matter to the committee will deal with part of the problem. The problem of an investigation still has to be dealt with, however, and I hope it will be dealt with some time today.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimous agreement that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre be considered a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. The motion reads as follows:

That the lack of any redress on the part of the House of Commons when a confidential document in the possession of the government is made public without authorization be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for consideration and report.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is carried.

Motion agreed to.

An hon. Member: Fire the minister.

Another hon. Member: Fire Munro.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, on this day more than any other, should find it within his responsibility to attend upon Parliament and set the record straight by taking action to table the interim report of the LeDain Commission on the non-medical use of drugs, particularly in light of the publication yesterday by Time magazine of either an excerpt from that report or from a resumé which was prepared in the minister's office.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much whether this is a point of order. I apologize to the hon. member if I have interrupted him too soon but I have a strong feeling that it is not a point of order. If the hon. member has a citation or any Standing Order that he would like to refer to, I will certainly allow him to do so.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I was going to do that, Mr. Speaker, but I thought it necessary to do it in perspective and show how the minister is ignoring the House. Maybe he is afraid of it as he was yesterday. Maybe he does not want to be in the same place as the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member indicated that he would refer the Chair to a particular Standing Order. I wish he would do this as he has not offered any evidence of a legitimate point of order up to now.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I was distracted by the noise on the other side, Mr. Speaker. I do not say this facetiously but with great respect: I wish Your Honour would protect me from these people.

Mr. Trudeau: You are afraid.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Standing Order No. 5, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

Every member is bound to attend the service of the House, unless leave of absence has been given him by the House.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here. He may have got leave of the House to be away but I do not know how he did it or when he did it. I submit that there is a valid point of order and that the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be noticed by Your Honour and you should say that there is a valid point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, I am sure, cannot seriously suggest that the Chair should take judicial and official notice every day of the absence of a member of the House of Commons. Standing Order 5 does not apply only to cabinet ministers; it refers to the attendance of hon. members. This point has been raised from time to time. I recognize that the Standing Order is there. I have felt also that perhaps the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization should look at Standing Order 5. I have suggested that before but for some reason the members of the committee have thought that the Standing Order should not be interfered with and that it should be allowed to stay. According to my information, the last time that Standing Order was applied was back in 1875. I would not think, after all these years, that this Standing Order should be referred to to signal the absence of any individual member of the House. I do not think that the point is well taken.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have to raise another point of order because the Chair has already ruled on this point of order. Of course it cannot be discussed after the ruling has been made.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the ruling just given.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have just indicated to an hon. member that he cannot raise a point of order in respect of a ruling which has just been given. I can quote to the hon. member the Standing Order which says that that is not in order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order relating to the absence of cabinet ministers from the House. This is a direct violation of Standing Order 5 in that their absence from this House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: —is being interpreted—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has brought this point up on a number of occasions. I have made a ruling on the point which he brought up. That ruling having been made, I suggest to him respectfully that the point cannot be brought up again.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Nowlan: That is right, Your Honour. I find it a peculiar point of privilege that I must raise with Your Honour this afternoon. When Your Honour, tells this House and the Commoners of this House that we have in our Standing Orders Standing Order 5 which is so obsolescent, so ridiculous, that it has not been invoked since 1875, I consider that a reflection on my intelligence in sitting in this House. As long as we have Standing Orders that are so ridiculous I say to you, Mr. Speaker, with all respect—

An hon. Member: What intelligence?

Mr. Nowlan: If the hon. member had been in this House long enough and knew a little bit more about parliamentary procedure, he would get up from his seat and off his brains when attempting to speak. The point is, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Is that all?

Mr. Nowlan: That is not all. This is a very serious point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: This strikes at the whole spirit of this institution. Those people across on the treasury benches who have not been in the House long enough to know what this institution is for are those who lead the catcalls of the jackals behind them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: I agree with Your Honour that, taken by itself, Standing Order 5 is rather ridiculous and stupid. The hon. member for "Barley York" or "Barley Danson" or York North (Mr. Danson) can speak at any time, if he dares to and if he has permission. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I believe this rule by itself is rather ridiculous. You cannot stand up each day, point to empty seats and say that certain members are absent in violation of Standing Order 5. But when an hon. member stands up in this House and uses this order to ask Your Honour to call the attention of the House to the absence of a member of the treasury benches, I find it rather difficult to reconcile Your Honour's ruling with the Standing Order. That is my point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DRUGS

AVAILABILITY OF LE DAIN INTERIM REPORT TO "TIME" MAGAZINE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter I put forward does not relate directly to what the hon. member for Skeena raised a moment ago. The fact is that there is not yet a resolution before the House relating to the determination of the source of the cabinet leak. Standing Order 43 provides that in cases of urgent and pressing necessity a motion may be moved if unanimous consent is given. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity is the publication yesterday by Time magazine of purported extracts from the interim report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs.

This report has not yet been made available to members of this House and the public at large. It is, therefore, still a confidential cabinet document. By publication, cabinet confidentiality has been breached by someone in or close to the cabinet. At best this constitutes an unethical breach of parliamentary practice and at worst there may be illegality involved.

Therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask leave to move, seconded by the member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That this House is of the opinion that the government should conduct an immediate investigation to ascertain how the interim report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs came into the possession of Time magazine and to report its findings, either interim or final, to the House not later than June 26, 1970.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. It can only be proceeded with if there is unanimous agreement of the House. The Chair must inquire whether there is unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Nowlan].

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement and the motion cannot be put at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: The Prime Minister said no again.

INDUSTRY

SHOES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 43 in order to discuss immediately the emergency resolutions required on steps to be taken to remedy the situation of the Canadian footwear industry, which I consider very precarious.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the study of this question justifies an emergency debate considering that since January 1, 1970 shoe factories have been closing down at the fantastic rate of nearly one a week and, considering that between 1956 and 1969, Canada's footwear production has decreased by 1 per cent whereas imports have jumped by 568 per cent, considering that the industry now employs 3,260 fewer workers than in 1966 and considering also that the government seems to have lost control of footwear imports into Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the unemployment rate depends mostly on the great number of unskilled workers on the labour market. Since a large number of employees of the footwear industry are in that category, I dare urge Your Honour to allow a debate to be held as soon as possible on ways to solve the pressing problem of that industry.

On June 2, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) announced to the House that talks were under way about restrictions of footwear imports and I believe the same measure is urgently needed regarding the footwear industry.

I therefore ask Your Honour and hon members to consider, if possible, the motion to adjourn I am proposing to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposal put forward by the member for Richmond suggesting the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43, in order to discuss an urgent question concerning the situation of the footwear industry in Canada.

The member cannot proceed with that proposal nor discuss the motion, without the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous agreement, so that the motion cannot be put.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STATEMENT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, following the tabling of the third report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments, the government has made a full analysis of the impact of the recommendations in that report upon the many thousands of statutory orders and regulations issued by government and its agencies, and upon the procedures followed in preparing and reviewing regulations. The government has now determined a proposed course of action for responding to the report.

Due to the nature of the committee's recommendations it is not practical, nor is it reasonably possible, to proceed with their implementation by any one means. Rather, implementation of the committee's recommendations will require action of three different kinds: First, legislative action by Parliament to replace the existing Regulations Act by a new statutory instruments act; second, a number of cabinet directives to implement several of the recommendations which cannot be dealt with by general legislation and, third, amendment of the Standing Orders for the purpose of establishing a scrutiny committee to review regulations.

The government accepts fully the principle that both Parliament and the public are entitled to be fully informed of, and to have convenient access to, regulations and other instruments made under the authority of Acts of Parliament. The legislation and other measures that will be proposed by the government will be guided by this paramount principle, and only demonstrably necessary and carefully defined exceptions to the general requirements of the law relating to the examination, registration and publication of such instruments will be permitted.

The new statutory instruments act will update the present Regulations Act in light of the committee's recommendations. We will recommend that the definition of a regulation be expanded in order that certain subordinate legislation that is now excluded from the application of the present Act will come within the scope of the proposed new law. It will be proposed that the review procedure of proposed regulations that is conducted by the Clerk of the Privy Council in consultation with the Deputy Minister of Justice be given a statutory basis and that the fundamental principles in light of which the review is conducted be set forth in the legislation. A new system for registration of regulations will be provided and the date of registration will, in most cases, be the day on which a regulation will come into force. The Canada Gazette will be recognized by statute as the official gazette of Canada and powers to make regulations with respect to its publication will be provided. Other matters such as the requirements of the law to publish regulations and the right of members of the public to have access to and obtain copies of regulations will be dealt with in the new Act.

It is the intention of the government that the committee's recommendation No. 6 which is concerned with the publication of departmental directives and guidelines be dealt with by means of a cabinet directive. Departmental directives and guidelines that might reasonably be interpreted as affecting the rights of members of the public in a legal sense will be required to be submitted to the Deputy Minister of Justice before they are issued. The Deputy Minister of Justice will make a report to the person desiring to issue the document indicating whether the proposed directive or guideline is essentially legislative in its nature and, if so, whether it would be appropriate to incorporate it into regulations or, where there appears to be no authority to do so, whether the relevant statute should be revised with a view to conferring such authority.

With reference to the committee's recommendation No. 7, which is concerned with the general principles that should govern the conferring by legislation of regulation-making powers, a cabinet directive will be issued to all ministers directing that, in future, all such enabling legislation should be drafted in accordance with the principles proposed to the committee as acceptable to the government by letter dated September 30, 1969, addressed to the chairman of the committee and signed by myself as President of the Privy Council.

The government agrees with the general recommendation of the committee that a scrutiny committee should be established for the purpose of reviewing regulations. During the next session of Parliament the government will recommend that such a scrutiny committee be established and that by the proposed statutory instruments act all regulations, with the single exception of regulations the disclosure of which would be injurious to international relations, national defence security or federal-provincial relations, will stand permanently referred to such committee. After consultation with representatives of the parties, the government will put forward an order of reference in the next session to enable Parliament to establish a scrutiny committee.

Mr. Speaker, the limitations of a statement of this nature do not make it possible to give a detailed response to all of the committee's recommendations and, as a result, the foregoing is only a general outline of the manner in which we intend to implement the recommendations of that committee. In conclusion may I, on behalf of the government, express my gratitude to the chairman and members of the special committee for the contribution they have made by their report.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, what the President of the Privy Council has said today bears out a maxim with which I became familiar in the early days of my practice of criminal law—that no matter how black the heart appears to be or how desperate the character there is always a glimmer of light and virtue if one waits long enough for it.

I congratulate the President of the Privy Council on making this statement. We have been waiting for it a long time, but obviously when it comes to good things the period of gestation of this government, like that of the elephant to which the Prime Minister refers from time to time, is very lengthy. For myself and for some others in the House it is the end of a ten-year period during which we have attempted to bring ourselves to a point at which we could hold up our heads and say that together with other democratic countries, particularly the countries of the Commonwealth, we have obtained some reasonable measure of ability to scrutinize statutory instruments and regulations.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

This is a most essential thing that we do. The trend in modern legislative practice to delegate authority to the government is increasing. I know the reasons for it. I do not like it. But we have to live with it. We also have to learn to contend with it and place some brakes upon it, some means of scrutiny. We are happy, therefore, that the President of the Privy Council should indicate that the position taken by the government offers to be one of almost complete compliance with the report of the committee. The trend to which I have just referred has developed under this government and Parliament from what was a fair-sized river to a flood. The extent to which we in this House have been and are being asked to delegate to the government powers to deal with the people of this country is simply staggering, and precautions of the kind outlined today are a condition precedent to the maintenance to the kind of law and order for the individual which is needed in a democratic society.

There are one or two points I should like the government to take into account. It was proposed by the committee that the Minister of Justice should have over-all authority with regard to the examination of all regulations to decide whether or not they came within the category of those covered by the hon. gentleman's proposal. I appreciate that the minister was not able to deal with all the committee's proposals, which are minute and detailed, but the one to which I have just referred was among the main aspects which the committee considered.

Second, the question of the openness of disclosure is tremendously important. The minister told us in his statement, as found on page two, that "the government fully accepts the principle that both Parliament and the public are fully entitled to be fully informed of, and to have convenient access to, regulations and other instruments." I almost read "commission reports" into that as well but I am glad I stopped there.

In addition, the question of the establishment of a scrutiny committee is one with which the House should be particularly concerned. There is a scrutiny committee operating in other jurisdictions. There is a particularly good form of committee in the United Kingdom. I had the opportunity to attend the proceedings of that committee when I was in London not long ago. In the first instance, in the United Kingdom the chairman is a member of the opposition. The chairmen of both the Public Accounts committee and of the scrutiny committee dealing with delegated authority are both members of the opposition. I tried to get the special committee to go as far as that but was not altogether successful. The committee did say, however, that in order to make the objectivity of the committee apparent there should be some rotation among the parties as to the chairmanship. I do not know what the government intends to do in this regard, but if it does not go at least as far as the committee proposed the value of this work of scrutinizing regulations and so on will be seriously lessened.

Now a word about the kind of officials who should assist the committee. A great deal of work has to be done; there is a vast area to be covered. In the United Kingdom Sir Robert Speed, counsel to Mr. Speaker, advises the committee and examines all the statutory instruments closely. In the absence of assistance of this kind, the value of the committee will be entirely lost. Assistance must be given at a very high level in order that it may function properly. There must be adequate staff.

I particularly call to the attention of the government and members of the House the need not only to deal, as the committee did, with academics and people learned in the law but to hear from those people of the country, the millions of little people, businessmen and farmers, who are affected by delegated legislation and authority. These people do not know what Orders in Council have been passed and are not aware of them until the long arm of the law reaches out and touches them.

This is a tremendously important step and on behalf of myself and my party may I say that if the government will co-operate with us we will co-operate with the government 100 per cent in seeing that these proposals are implemented in an orderly and reasonable fashion. In particular, we will see that the type of committee set up to scrutinize statutory legislation is one that will function efficiently and properly, one that will do for the people of this country that which for so long has been left undone.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) was our member on the committee, the report of which is referred to in the statement, and if he were here today he would be making this response. He did not get permission under Standing Order 5 to be away, but it is interesting that by coincidence he is appearing before the Immigration Appeal Board which deals with matters that arise as a result of the exercise by a department of delegated authority. When I showed the advance copy of the statement to my colleague this morning, his comment was not unlike that which has just been made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), namely, that once in a while something good does come from the government now in power. This is one of those rare occasions.

We welcome the statement by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) that the government is prepared to implement the basic principles of the report made by the committee on statutory instruments. I support the general principles that have been laid down so well by the hon. member for Peace River, and we look forward to the promised legislation being introduced as early as possible.

There are just two or three comments I should like to make which might be of a critical nature. First, we find it strange that regulations dealing with federal-provincial relations should be put in the same category as regulations dealing with international relations or national defence security. We see no reason why these matters should be grouped together. Surely our provinces are not sovereign states to be treated like foreign powers. Surely relations between Ottawa and the provinces can be carried on on the kind of level that would produce regulations which would not be injurious to the unity of this country. We strongly urge that regulations relating to federal-provincial relations be deleted from this category.

The second comment I should like to make is that in this statement made by the President of the Privy Council there are two references, but only two, to cabinet directives that are to be made governing certain aspects of this whole process. If the picture were one of multitudes of things that had to be dealt with by cabinet directives, then maybe a case could be made for it. But if there are only two matters under this general heading that are to be dealt with by means of a cabinet directive, I suggest it would be far better to have those matters dealt with in the legislation itself.

My final comment is that it seems to me that the scrutiny committee which is to be established—this is the heart of the whole matter, the part of the statement that we welcome most—should have referred to it just not Orders in Council and regulations but also the various departmental directives that are promulgated down the line. These directives can have the force of law just as much as regulations, Orders in Council or statutes of Parliament. We find it difficult to understand why they are not included among the items which will be referred to the scrutiny committee. In this regard I might go one step farther and say that ministerial press releases could also be referred to the scrutiny committee, because many a time a ministerial press release relating to something that is going to be done is practically a case of promulgating law.

These points can, of course, be reviewed when the government presents the legislation, I presume at the next session. However, our general position is one of welcoming this forward step in the control by Parliament of the law-making process, which is as it ought to be.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are satisfied with the announcement of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) who just told us of the decision of the government to accept the recommendations concerning the proceedings of committees and the recommendations of the Committee on Procedure and Organization, which has been sitting for months, in order to suggest to the government the use of more flexible methods to formulate laws and let the public know about them.

Mr. Speaker, I would not like to repeat here the proposals of the previous speakers, but we entertain doubts as to the future formulation of laws, as a result of the recommendations made to the government after consideration in committee, the object of which is to give wider powers to the executive.

At the present time, we do not know to what extent this legislation will interfere with our democratic institutions and increase the powers of the executive. In fact, we are well aware that time and again in the past we have had to deplore the attitude of certain ministers who announced the tabling of legislative measures of which committees had had no prior knowledge and of which hon. members were only informed at the time the bills were tabled.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

We are convinced that certain recommendations must be accepted but we also believe that some of them must be very seriously considered before they are submitted to Parliament and eventually incorporated to our Standing Orders so that debating and legislating procedures have to conform to them.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills. First reading of Senate public bills. Government notices of motions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, having given Your Honour notice of a motion under Standing Order 26 I simply wish to indicate that I do not intend to proceed with it. I am so struck by the co-operative spirit shown today by the President of the Privy Council that I am hopeful that the Prime Minister will be equally ready to straighten out this whole affair when I ask him in a moment whether he will agree to tabling the LeDain report promptly and also to giving satisfaction regarding the leak that has taken place. It is with this hope that I do not proceed with the motion at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR PROMPT TABLING OF LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—INVESTIGATION OF LEAK

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether, particularly in view of the apparent leak of the LeDain report that has occurred and the resulting state of confusion in the public mind, he can now assure the House that this interim report will be tabled promptly, and by promptly I mean within a day or two? Can he give the House this assurance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot. I believe the matter of the leak has been dealt with substantially in the motion put earlier, to which we agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Trudeau: We are as anxious as any member of the opposition to find out what has leaked and from where it has leaked. There is no certain indication that the report itself has been leaked. Perhaps the leak comes from someone who has knowledge of it, but if the House can assist us in making inquiries into the way in which this might have happened, as the President of the Privy Council said we would be very happy to do so.

Mr. Stanfield: I am very happy to be able to assist the government in any way I can, but I have not yet been asked to assume the responsibilities of my right hon. friend. I would ask him whether the government has launched an inquiry into this incident?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the one hand we are asked to pass a motion which will make sure that the House—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: I am told by the Leader of the Opposition that we must assume the responsibility. We did not ask the Opposition parties to move this motion. We felt that they wanted to move it and therefore we agreed to the procedure. We are not asking them to assume responsibility for this motion, but if they want to assist us, fine.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The motion passed by the House does not refer to this incident in particular. If I may remind Your Honour, it reads as follows:

> That the lack of any redress on the part of the House of Commons when a confidential document in the possession of the government is made public without authorization be referred—

It is the lack of redress on the part of the House that was referred. Again I put my question to the Prime Minister and ask him not to evade on a matter such as this. Would he indicate to the House whether the government has launched an investigation into the apparent leak of this report?

Mr. Trudeau: Very simply, the answer is yes. I discussed the matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and he had already begun to launch an investigation to find out from where the leak might have come.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Is he investigating himself?

Mr. Trudeau: But I repeat that, to his knowledge, the document itself was not leaked but perhaps someone who knew of its existence and some of its contents did leak this information. I can only say that we have assumed this responsibility. I am glad to hear that the opposition parties are now supporting the government in its position that leaks should not occur from cabinet concerning confidential documents, and that they are prepared to assist us in this investigation.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to understand from the right hon. Prime Minister that the only investigation launched so far has been some sort of personal inquiry the Minister of National Health and Welfare is conducting on his own?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think he has put on gumshoes and personally gone to find out. May I just remind the House that the last time a leak of this kind occurred it had to do, if my memory is correct, with parts of the B and B report. At that time, we were chided by the opposition parties for putting the police on the tail of the organization which had published such confidential documents. Now, apparently we are not reacting strongly enough; we should attack the press and put the police on their tail to track down these people. I am not sure what the opposition wants.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow a supplementary question to be asked by the Leader of the Opposition, but I think in fairness we should allow the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to put his question.

Mr. Stanfield: I am only asking a supplementary question because of the false imputation by the Prime Minister. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not feel that it is within the sphere of responsibility of the government, not to attack the press but rather to conduct an inquiry as to who may be responsible for this incident within the sphere of the government and its officials?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, Mr. Speaker, but the way to find out who might be responsible, I suppose, is to look at the nature of the leak and at its source. I repeat that when the leak to which I referred occurred this is exactly what we suggested we should do, that we should try to find out how the publisher got hold of that confidential document. Certainly, the Leader of the Opposition cannot suggest any more effective way than that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that it is quite apparent from the article which appeared in the June 22 issue of Time magazine, in which there were extensive quotations from what purports to be the interim report of the LeDain Commission, that whoever wrote the article is in possession either of a complete copy of the report or a very full summary of it, and in view of the fact that this appears to be a breach of trust which puts a cloud of suspicion over the head of every cabinet minister, including the Minister of National Health and Welfare and members of his staff—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —as well as the members of the commission and their staff and the Queen's Printer, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in fairness to all who have had access to the report, he will not order an official investigation so as to ascertain how this report came into the hands of an unauthorized person?

Mr. Trudeau: I will gladly consider the suggestion, Mr. Speaker, although I must point out that many of the assumptions made by the hon. member are not correct. Suspicion does not fall on all members of the cabinet because very few members of the cabinet saw the document. But it is true, of course, that many other people, such as employees, printers and so on, have seen it, including members of the commission themselves. Therefore I will gladly entertain the suggestion of a full-scale investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police into this very regrettable leak. I just hope that the House will remember this the next time we order such an investigation on the grounds of maintaining cabinet secrecy, and I hope that at that time they will not attack or ridicule the government for going after the press, as happened on a former occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the Prime Minister could have saved himself and the government a good deal of embarrassment by tabling this report when it came into their possession, may I ask the Prime Minister now whether we can expect to have this report tabled during the present week?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this were a way to avoid a great deal of embarrassment I take it we would also table every cabinet document. There would be no such thing as a confidential document in the government's records.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I ask the Prime Minister whether he considers this to be a cabinet document. Is it not instead a report of a royal commission to which Parliament and the people of Canada have a right to have access?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member was making a suggestion to avoid cabinet embarrassment. I tell him that the reasons for having secrecy respected have nothing to do with embarrassment of the cabinet but rather have to do with an efficient way of running a government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): There has not been much evidence of it.

[Later:]

Mr. Trudeau: While I am on my feet, I should like to add to an answer I gave a few minutes ago when I indicated that all ministers did not have a copy of the LeDain report. This was true as of the end of last week, at which time the obvious publication was being prepared. I am told that since the end of last week all cabinet ministers have been given a copy of the LeDain report.

An hon. Member: They did not have Time.

LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—INVESTIGATION OF LEAK BY JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the fact that the Prime Minister and his government are insisting on keeping the LeDain report secret at this time, and as he has talked about an inquiry, will the Prime Minister be prepared now to set up the machinery for a judicial inquiry into the leak of the report which is now appearing in all newspapers from day to day like a soap opera serial? Mr. Speaker, may I put the question—

Some hon. Mmebers: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I will rephrase it. Would the Prime Minister now agree to a judicial inquiry into this whole matter so as to take away the clouds which have resulted from this leak?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this suggestion is one for escalating this matter beyond the degree to which we thought it necessary to escalate it at the outset. We are making an inquiry now, without the benefit of a full-scale judicial inquiry, and the House has just put through a motion which will lead to means of redressing this situation. We hope that the standing committee will assist the government in finding out how this particular leak occurred. If the step that the hon. member suggests eventually proves necessary, of course we will take it.

Mr. Woolliams: Whatever inquiry the Prime Minister and his government do conduct, would he be prepared then to come here, and make a full statement on the results of that inquiry to see if a judicial inquiry will be necessary?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I made the statement just now that if such an inquiry proves to be necessary and useful and possible, we will of course make it. But I am not prepared now, without knowing the facts, to state whether this will be necessary and useful. We may find out things that will indicate to the contrary.

I just want to repeat that we are very grateful for the opposition's insistence that cabinet and other secret documents be respected by all concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—UNAUTHORIZED PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION—"TIME" MAGAZINE SUBSIDY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister in charge of the Post Office. In view of the fact that a purported portion of a secret and confidential report in the government's hands was carried in a foreign-owned and controlled publication while Canadian publications did not have an opportunity for equal access—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. I have to rule that this is not a supplementary. I will come back to the hon. member in a moment. I believe the hon. member for Peace River has a supplementary.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the questions which have just been asked of the Prime Minister. It is a supplementary to another minister on exactly the same subject. I wonder, whether I may complete my question?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, it might be useful to tell the hon. member that if Canadian publications do reproduce what this publication has carried they will be reproducing a great many false words.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I did not understand the hon. member's supplementary correctly. In the circumstances, he should be allowed to complete the question.

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the fact that equal opportunity of access to this information, secret or otherwise, was not available to Canadian publications, will the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications advise the House whether he and the Post Office Department will give consideration to removing the almost $750,000 subsidy received annually by Time magazine?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not know precisely what equal access to secret information means, but the answer to the latter part of the question is no.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister one supplementary. If a judicial inquiry is held and a report is made, will the results be concealed, published, or leaked to the public?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—POSITION OF MAGISTRATES AND JUDGES FOLLOWING LEAKING OF INFORMATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to direct to the Prime Minister. I am wondering if the right hon. gentleman does not agree that since parts of the LeDain Commission report have been given wide circulation through one means or another, magistrates and judges are placed in a very awkward position. Does this, therefore, not make it more urgent than ever for the government to evolve a policy on this important matter?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that his very interesting supplementary question is rather an argument. I would not think it is in order as a question.

[Later:]

LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—DISTRIBUTION TO ATTORNEYS GENERAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is supplementary to the questions which were asked earlier. Could he indicate whether copies of the LeDain Commission report have been circulated to the various Attorneys General, in light of the confusion that now exists, and whether or not it is the intention of the Prime Minister's office to take this step so as to eliminate any possibility of confusion with respect to all of these reports to which the Prime Minister has alluded?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the suggestion is made in a constructive vein, but if I can be equally constructive I could perhaps remind the House and the Attorneys General that, although I did not read the Time magazine article myself, I am told by the minister that much of it is incorrect and leads to false conclusions. I know that the opposition parties are just yearning to state their positions on this whole question of the legalizing of drugs, but I must warn them to wait a little while because if they are too hasty they may be basing them on a false report.

LE DAIN COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—SCOPE OF INVESTIGATION OF LEAK

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, but first may I say that we wanted to have the report tabled and tabling would have prevented this situation from happening. In any event, the Prime Minister said that currently an inquiry is being conducted by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and that some other cabinet members, I think he said a few, not all the cabinet ministers, had access to the report itself. Is the authority of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in this inquiry confined to his own office, his own department, or does he have authority to inquire into the offices of other ministers and their office staffs, and the staff of the Commission—in short, all those who had access to the document?

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not be doing this alone. He will be asking for the assistance of other ministers, and I take it principally that of the Solicitor General under whom the RCMP comes.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I ask the Prime Minister, why does he refer to what he calls a false report as a leak?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the opposition that has been asking questions about leaks, not the government.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, all during the afternoon while questions were put to the Prime Minister he continued to refer to this as a leak. He now refers to it as a false report, and he has cautioned the opposition not to push this matter because of further leaks to come.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INCREASE IN BANK PROFITS—LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the financial statements of chartered banks show a net profit of some 27.7 per cent for the past six months, does the Prime Minister intend to make representations to them in order to have them lower their interest rates on loans to Canadian individuals and companies so that they may efficiently fight inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly refer the question to the Minister of Finance, but I might add that he dealt with the matter in reply to a question put last week. In fact, to the best of my memory, he mentioned among other things, that certain chartered banks had lowered their interest rate.

[English]

GRAIN

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—FARMERS' CANADA PENSION PLAN PAYMENTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. The question arises from the difficulties of western farmers in remitting their payments under the Canada Pension Plan because of low quotas imposed under Operation Lift. Has the government set up any special provisions to meet this unfortunate and unjust situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is presumably referring to a situation related to a quota system which will come into effect on August 1, but of course he is stating it completely inaccurately when he refers to low quotas under Operation Lift. The eight bushel per acre quota for wheat, for instance, will bring forward the full amount of grain required.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister misunderstood my question. I pointed out that some provision must be made to enable farmers to remit payments under the Canada Pension Plan in order that they may get benefits from the plan at a later date. Has any arrangement been made with the other departments in view of Operation Lift and the consequences thereof?

Mr. Lang: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not yet understand any additional implications of the question the hon. member is asking.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, my further supplementary has to do with the inability of farmers to remit payments under the Canada Pension Plan as they have done in the past, with the result that they will not be able to participate in the benefits. Has there been any discussion between the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board and other departments of government to offset this injustice?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I say again that I know of no change in the pension regulations, but I will be glad to discuss them with my colleague. The hon. member referred to a quota problem arising out of Operation Lift. There is no such quota problem, so I do not see the basis for his question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point or order? I suggest that since there are a number of supplementaries we might hear them.

WHEAT—FURTHER CONFERENCE OF EXPORTING COUNTRIES RESPECTING PRODUCTION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to ask a question of the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. In light of the continuing high levels of United States wheat production and recent reports that the United States is headed for another banner crop of both spring and winter wheat, is the minister planning to call another conference of the wheat exporting nations in order to avoid Canada being left as the only country with a significant reduction in wheat production?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Once again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously reading reports which must emanate from a very mysterious source. The last report I saw indicated that, whereas this year's United States wheat crop had dropped about 100 million bushels compared with last year, the forecast was that next year's crop would be down about another 80 million bushels.

[Later:]

Mr. Gleave: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister is not prepared to accept the information I gave him, would the minister conduct inquiries to satisfy himself and report to the House in due time as to the reduction in wheat production in other countries since that was related to the Lift program?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I might indeed try to make available from time to time to hon. members some information about production in other countries since their sources seem to be so clearly unreliable. I will try to see that at least some hon. members opposite who are interested are furnished with accurate reports from time to time.

WHEAT—ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM—EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR REMOVING COVER CROPS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the Lift program and is addressed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the uncertainty and concern of Prairie grain producers with regard to the removal of spring cover crops of oats by July 15, can the minister inform the House definitely whether or not the deadline will be set back to July 31 or some later date?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, some days ago the Minister of Agriculture stated the position with regard to cover crops and indicated that these were essentially intended as a protection against erosion. There is no new problem in that connection. We are still watching the forage situation very carefully, of course, to see whether the requirement for forage might require a change in the rule itself.

WHEAT—PROVISION OF FOUR-BUSHEL QUOTA TO ALL ELEVATOR POINTS BY JULY 31

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I have a supplementary question for the Minister without Portfolio relating to quotas. Since the latest Canadian Wheat Board report of June 8 indicates that more than 50 per cent of delivery points in the designated area are still on a two-bushel wheat quota, can the minister assure the House and the producers that the four-bushel quota will be achieved prior to the end of the crop year, a commitment which he guaranteed would be effective?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, at the present time more than 50 per cent of the points in the Prairie region are in fact on three or four-bushel quotas. Very rapid progress is being made in the opening of quotas and the forecast movement for the remaining months is still sufficient to allow the quotas to open as predicted.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is not supplementary but I have a question for the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will allow the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Vegreville on a supplementary.

EXTENSION OF INCREASED BARLEY QUOTA TO ALBERTA PRODUCERS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I wonder if the minister would undertake to assure the House at some time that the barley quota will be increased for Alberta producers prior to the end of the crop year in order that it may equal that of the producers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the barley which was required, and for which the special quota was opened was required particularly for movement through the Lakehead. There are good forward sales for barley and therefore there is every possibility of allowing Alberta producers as well to deliver barley in a similar manner. Deliveries of barley from Alberta are still coming in at a very rapid rate.

ADOPTION OF PROTEIN STANDARD AMENDMENT TO CANADA GRAIN ACT PRIOR TO PASSING BILL C-196

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt. In view of the intensive study required in committee of Bill C-196, the new grain act, and the full appreciation of all members of the committee of the importance of a protein standard for export grain, would the minister be prepared to ask the government to bring forward the appropriate amendment to the present Canada Grain Act, which could be passed quickly as a desirable interim measure while the new Act is being studied?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the direction of the Canada Grain Act falls more particularly under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. The hon. member, however, has put his finger on a very important point, that the passage of the new Canada Grain Act is in fact essential if steps toward protein grading are to be proceeded with. This is a matter of great importance to wheat producers throughout Canada. I hope the agriculture Committee and the House will be able to expedite passage of this legislation accordingly.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the new Canada Grain Act, which is new legislation entirely, and the fact that serious study must be given to it, it is going to be impossible to bring this bill back to the House before the recess. In view of that fact, would the minister discuss with the Minister of Agriculture the importance of bringing in an appropriate amendment to the present Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a suggestion to the minister and he has to assume that it will be considered or taken into account.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPLICATION OF SIX PER CENT WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE TO POSTAL AND OTHER EMPLOYEES AND TO OTHER FORMS OF INCOME

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that wage settlements in the private sector continue to exceed the 6 per cent guideline, would the minister inform the House whether it is still the intention of the government to impose a 6 per cent limit in its bargaining with the Public Service in general and postal employees in particular?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the last part of the question, the offer made by the government to the postal workers was made some time ago and represented not an adherence to the guideline but what was thought and felt to be a reasonable offer in all the circumstances. That position has been maintained.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister's answer mean he is denying that the government is seeking to impose a guideline of 6 per cent or less in negotiations with public servants?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking to deny anything. I am providing information.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question arising out of some statements made by the Minister of Labour in a television broadcast the other day. I am going to ask the question directly and not quote the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the minister, who was present if my memory serves me right at the meeting with provincial Ministers of Finance in Winnipeg recently, whether at that meeting the provincial ministers gave any undertaking or assurance or made any other kind of statement about establishing guidelines on executive fees, managerial fees and other income areas, including rent controls?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the propositions put forward at that meeting by the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission made it quite clear that the policies and proposals for restraint applied not only to wages but also to salaries and other forms of income, and included also all revenues derived from increased prices. The policy of restraint was not limited to one particular area but was to be universal, and his proposals related not only to restraint on wages and salaries but also to prices and other forms of income in both the public and private sectors.

Mr. Lewis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that I did not ask the minister what Dr. Young told the provincial ministers. I can read that. I asked the minister what the reply of the provincial ministers was to what Dr. Young said to them. He carefully evaded that question.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not a point of order. The hon. member is repeating the question he asked in the first instance. Apparently he was not satisfied.

Mr. Lewis: I hoped I might obtain an answer.

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS FROM LAW

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Is it his intention, as he stated at Vancouver, to introduce an amendment to the Criminal Code to remove therefrom the provisions regarding abortion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not exactly what I said at Vancouver. However, I can give the House an accurate account of what the question and the reply were, since the hon. member has shown his interest in this connection.

They made up a hypothetical situation where hon. members would be prepared to push through the House in a single day a piece of legislation repealing the abortion provisions of the Criminal Code. I replied that I knew from experience—and hon. members are well aware of it—that any amendment liberalizing the Criminal Code could hardly be carried in a single day, since it took several weeks to adopt the amendments we introduced last year.

However, I repeated that, to go along with the hypothetical situation, should the House agree to pass such a bill within a single day before the end of this part of the session, I would be prepared to introduce such an amendment.

Again, I am putting the question to the House. If such is its wish, I shall assume my own responsibilities.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Does the Prime Minister mean that such a bill will be introduced before the House adjourns for the summer recess?

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GROWTH RATE FORECAST BY OECD—RATE OF DESIRED SLOWDOWN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Finance. I do not know whether he has fled the country or whether he has been kidnapped by the Canadian Bankers Association. Perhaps the Minister without Portfolio from Windsor West would answer my question. It relates to the forecast made by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development of a 2.5 per cent growth rate for Canada for the current year, which is substantially below the growth rate predicted by the Minister of Finance. Does this indicate that, even with the credit restraints, having been dropped, the slowdown is greater than that desired by the Department of Finance and the minister? Also, in the view of the minister is this attributable in any way to the floating dollar?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice. I believe my colleague, the Minister of Finance, is expected in the House tomorrow and I am sure he will be ready to deal with the always stimulating questions of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope so.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DELIVERY OF PENSION AND OTHER CHEQUES BY SPECIAL MESSENGERS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It has reference to the delivery of government cheques by special messengers in areas affected by rotating postal strikes. Can he advise whether it is government policy for other departments to circumvent the Post Office Department and thereby, in effect, court the charge of being strike-breakers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly make an investigation of this. I believe it has been the practice in the past when a strike has been imminent to obtain consent of the unions—perhaps this is done without their consent—to deliver cheques in such ways so as not to inconvenience the people who need them very badly. I will inquire into the point raised to see if this is done without consent.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYEES EXCLUDED FROM COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PAY AND EMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. On April 10 of this year I asked him a question about the report of the advisory committee on the pay and conditions of employment of public servants excluded from collective bargaining, which is sometimes known as the Clyne Committee. At that time the minister said the committee was being urged to complete its work. Can he tell me whether this has been done and whether the report is expected soon?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the so-called Clyne Committee has been asked to advise on a number of questions. We have received some reports from them, but their work has not yet been completed.

POLLUTION

ADHERENCE TO CONTROL REGULATIONS BY OIL EXPLORATION COMPANIES

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My question concerns the control of potential pollution sources in Canada's northland connected with oil drilling and other petroleum activity. Have inspectors from his department investigated all the sites on which petroleum exploration is being carried out, and can he assure the House that these companies are living up to all the government's pollution control regulations?

Hon J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the areas under federal jurisdiction in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, questions of oil drilling, oil permits and the administration of regulations come under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, since the minister is concerned with Canada's mines and resources, does his jurisdiction not extend to all parts of Canada and to all petroleum drilling?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, of course, is not acceptable in that form.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question. Does the minister's department exercise control over petroleum drilling in any part of Canada and are regulations issued by his department?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member was on the committee and probably knows that in offshore areas the regulations are administered by my department.

OIL SPILL INTO ATHABASCA RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister is now ready to make a report on the question I asked him about the pollution of the Athabasca River and Lake Athabasca. Some of these waters fall under federal jurisdiction. The minister was going to send experts there to find out what was going on.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my information is that apart from the national park, which comes under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and may be affected, the pipeline is completely a provincial pipeline and is administered under the Alberta act, under which immmediate action in regard to the situation that has occurred has been taken. It is only pipelines that cross interprovincial or international boundaries which come under the jurisdiction of the federal government and the National Energy Board Act.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

LEVEL OF MERCURY IN HUMANS—USE OF BLOOD INSTEAD OF URINE TESTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. On June 10, as reported at page 7961 of Hansard, I asked the minister a question. His answer shows that there may have been some misunderstanding about the question. I asked whether, in view of the grave doubt that urine tests are reliable in determining the level of mercury, blood tests are being taken of those persons who eat fish as a staple diet so that they can be assured there is no danger of any bad effect on the brain or on the nerve system?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the principal tests relate to blood and brain tissue.

HOUSING

PRESENT POSITION OF MALVERN, ONT., PROJECT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the minister in charge of housing. In view of the undertaking the minister gave before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when his estimates were before it that he would immediately study the proposal of the Ontario government with regard to adopting the Malvern project, may I ask if the minister has completed his study and is prepared to make a report on it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the Malvern project, in its final form, has not been presented to me from the other level of government. I have put inquiries in motion to indicate that we should like to see it brought along, but until it is approved by the Ontario government I cannot put our approval on it. I am as concerned as the hon. member to see that it is dealt with quickly.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SALE OF HMCS "BONAVENTURE"

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple and brief and is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Can he indicate whether he has received any acceptable proposals or offers to purchase the Bonaventure? If so, has he taken any action on them?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not like to pass the buck but I think this question should be directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I direct the same question to the Minister of Supply and Services?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of offers, but none which were acceptable.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider making the Bonaventure available to his colleague, the Minister of Transport, for service between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia?

URBAN AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROPOSED COUNCIL IN LIGHT OF MONTREAL MAYOR'S OPPOSITION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. In view of the statement made by the mayor of Montreal that he is unalterably opposed to the minister's proposal for the establishment of a national three level urban council, would the minister say whether he still plans to pursue the matter?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I still plan to pursue the matter.

FISHERIES

LAKE ST. CLAIR—HONOURING OF FEDERAL COMMITMENT RESPECTING COMPENSATION BECAUSE OF BAN

Mr. Harold Danforth (Kent-Essex): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries. The minister is aware that on April 15 he and his associates met with their Ontario provincial counterparts in Toronto and agreed on joint financial reparation for the hardship caused by the ban on fishing in Lake St. Clair and adjoining waters. Since the provincial government has already carried out its commitment, can the minister tell us when the federal government will be prepared to honour the commitment it made in this instance?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): We have been carrying out all our commitments with respect to fishermen.

Mr. Danforth: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister in light of that answer. Having seen the published itinerary of the welcome visit of the Prime Minister to southwestern Ontario in a few days time, may I ask whether the right hon. gentleman would consider altering his program to the extent of providing an opportunity of meeting with the citizens of Kent County, not only to enjoy their famous hospitality but also to hear petitions and grievances?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Richardson.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

INCREASE IN MINIMUM HOURLY WAGE

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-214, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That Bill C-214, an Act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, be amended by deleting from lines 12 and 13 thereof the words "one dollar and sixty-five cents", and by substituting therefor the words "two dollars".

He said: It is not my intention to provoke a lengthy debate on the amendment which has now been placed before the House but I hope hon. members will be prepared to accept it and thus make a significant improvement in the bill which has been brought in by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). Having said that in my view a prolonged debate at this stage is unnecessary, I shall not repeat the arguments I used when we discussed this bill on second reading on May 29, although I should like to use again one or two of the arguments I advanced when the bill was before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

As hon. members are aware, the bill is a very simple one in that it makes just one change in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. It proposes that the minimum wage stipulated in the Code, which is now $1.25 an hour, should be made $1.65 an hour. My amendment proposes that, instead, the minimum wage be set at $2 an hour. As we all realize, this is a statute which applies to workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction. It does not apply to the federal public service but rather to workers such as railway employees, communications workers, bank employees and the like who, under the terms of the British North America Act, come under federal labour jurisdiction. There are about 550,000 workers in Canada who find themselves in these various categories but of course the number affected by any minimum wage provision is very low, since many of them have better arrangements as a result of collective bargaining agreements.

I must, however, correct the figure I gave on May 29 when I said I thought there were probably fewer than 10,000 people who would be affected by this bill—that there were fewer than 10,000 of the 550,000 whose wages were so low that they would get an improvement if their wages were brought up to $1.65 an hour. I now find from figures which the Department of Labour has been good enough to furnish to us that the number may be as high as 20,000. Previously, I estimated that only 2 per cent of those under federal jurisdiction were affected; the figure may turn out to be closer to 4 per cent. Since this larger number of people would be affected by the legislation, it is all the more important that we should do the right thing by them.

I said earlier that I will refrain from repeating the arguments I used on second reading. But when we got into the committee there were two points which I sought to make, and I beg the indulgence of the House to make them here as well. I shall try to make them a little more effectively than I did there, in the hope that we can go just a step further. In the committee, when I moved my amendment there and it came to a vote, a tie resulted and the chairman had to decide by his casting vote that the bill should remain as drafted. I hope this will not happen today. I hope you will not be put in that awkward situation, Mr. Speaker. I hope that instead of a tie there will be a clear majority in favour of my amendment.

The first of the new arguments I used in committee involved quoting an authority we in this party do not often put in that category. I refer to Dr. John Young, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission. But even people who hold ideas with which we do not agree can, at times, have ideas which are correct. I remind hon. members that when Dr. Young issued his statement at the famous weekend meeting in Winnipeg calling for restraint in terms of there being no wage increases allowed beyond 6 per cent, he said very clearly that there were certain groups of people to whom this should not apply. One of these groups consisted of those earning less than $2 an hour. In other words, Dr. Young recognized that anyone whose wage was below $2 an hour could, notwithstanding the policy of the Prices and Incomes Commission, have that wage brought up to $2 an hour. The proposed restraint does not apply. Anything less than $2 is so low that even Dr. Young would not object to its being brought up to the figure I propose.

Surely, with all this support the government is giving to Dr. Young in connection with the negative proposals he has made, the minister and his colleagues will also go along with his more positive suggestion, namely, that no wage below $2 an hour should be tolerated at all. I, therefore, call upon the Minister of Labour to help avoid the possibility of a tie, should the amendment come to a vote, by throwing his weight behind my proposal and helping to improve the position of those who are governed by the minimum wage under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

The other argument which I introduced in the standing committee was one to which a colleague of mine alluded in a question that he asked during the question period yesterday relating to an example of some of the people who are getting these low wages. I confess that I was astounded when I got these figures from the Department of Labour setting out the numbers of people who are drawing wages that work out to less than $1.65 an hour. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, but of the 20,747 people who in June 1969 were drawing less than $1.65 an hour, 8,000 were employees of the chartered banks of this country. In other words, 40 per cent of the employees in this lower bracket are employees of the banks of this country.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission has finally twigged to the inconsistency of some of the things that the banks are saying and doing by calling for an investigation into the profits of banks. A report in the Globe and Mail a few days ago carried the headline "Major banks show $275.2 million profit". That is covered by another heading which reads "27.7 per cent first half rise". That is their increase in profits in the first half of their fiscal year. If the banks of this country are making profits that run into these many millions, profits that in terms of percentage shoot high, wide and handsome through any guidelines talked about by the Prices and Incomes Commission, I suggest it is downright immoral for these people to be paying wages of less than $1.65 an hour to 8,000 of its employees. There just is no defence for this whatsoever.

By the same token, I submit that the government has no defence if it does nothing about this. All that the government has to do to correct this situation is to accept the amendment now before the House in my name calling for a minimum wage of $2 an hour, for all those who come under federal labour jurisdiction. In that instance, these 8,000 people would get their wages increased to $2 an hour, and there are probably a few hundred or thousand between $1.65 and $2 an hour who would also get an increase to that figure.

Not only are there the 8,000 bank employees to whom I have referred, who are receiving a starvation wage, but there are 5,675 persons in the transport industries who are receiving less than $1.65 an hour. I have grouped together several branches of transport, covering railway, air, road and water transport services. For the most part, workers in our transportation industries are covered by collective agreements, and most of the workers in those industries are doing better than $1.65 an hour. But these employees are persons in non-scheduled positions of various kinds, and there are some 5,675 of them whose present wage is less than $1.65 an hour. I should qualify the word "present" by saying that the figures I have are the latest I could get from the Department of Labour and are for June 1969. Although there may have been some improvement since, I am sure the situation has not been rectified to any great extent.

In addition, we have been told that the radio and television industries are not exactly on the rocks; that if you can get a licence to run a radio or a television station, in effect it is a licence to print money. Yet in radio and television in this country there were in June, 1969, 860 people who were receiving wages that worked out to less than $1.65 an hour. I do not think we should stand for this another day or even another afternoon.

I think there should not be any question at all about my amendment this afternoon. The House should say to the banks, to the transport industries and to the radio and television licensees that the least they must do is to bring their employees up to $2 an hour. The minimum wage proposed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) of $1.65 an hour, for a person who manges to work 40 hours a week, 52 weeks in the year, would work out to $3,432. The Economic Council of Canada has selected the sum or $4,200 as the poverty line for an employee with a family today, so to say to these people that they should get by on $3,400 is selling them short by $800.

This is what this bill in the name of the minister would do, that is, unless my amendment were accepted. If the amendment were accepted, it still would not bring affluence to these people. A wage of $2 an hour would mean, working 40 hours a week 52 weeks of the year, an annual wage of $4,160, which is at least within $40 of the poverty line indicated by the Economic Council of Canada. I have used 52 weeks in those figures to get the maximum amount in both cases, but I would hope that the provisions relating to vacations with pay would also apply to these people, that some of the employers who are getting away with these low wages are not at the same time getting away with practices that deny vacations to these employees.

There it is, Mr. Speaker; it is a simple proposition. I see no reason at all for the House not accepting this amendment of mine this afternoon. I know, of course, that we will be handed the usual arguments. The minister will tell us that he is trying to be realistic. I get awfully fed up with this line about having to be realistic. What about those people who are trying to live on this sort of money? What about realism for them?

I know the minister will also tell us that we have to be careful; that this matter involves the provinces as well as the question of whether industries will move from one province to another, or move from Canada to some other country; that we have to look at all these things; that we have to find some sophisticated ways to cope with the problem of poverty; that we must concern ourselves about the question of regional disparity and all that sort of thing; that maybe we will have to look at the situation of the banks as distinct from the situation of other industries. But after all these arguments have been put, we come back to the simple fact that this afternoon we are dealing with some 20,000 people employed in industries that come under federal labour jurisdiction and who are receiving less than $1.65 an hour. Probably some 22,000 or 25,000 or maybe more are receiving less than $2 an hour. I suggest that all of these arguments about federal-provincial relations, sophistication and realism do not apply.

The minister himself has said, and he said very effectively the other day in committee, that he is the kind of individual who is concerned about people. He did not claim anything for himself that he did not accord to the rest of us. But if we are all concerned about people, let us show our concern this afternoon by telling the minister that, yes, he has taken a good step by bringing in this bill to increase the minimum wage from that terribly low figure of $1.25 an hour to a higher figure. But in the name of those people who are affected, and in a desire to be fair and to have some kind of just society, let us not stop there. Let us make it fair and reasonable. The other day one of the members of the committee complained about my amendment because he was afraid that if $2 an hour were agreed to this year, then in a year or two I would be asking for $3 or $4 an hour. I probably will be; in fact, I hope I will be. Progress does not stop. But it is not an answer to people who are living below the poverty line to tell them that for reasons of realism, of sophistication or of procedural difficulty, they have to stay at the same level.

Mr. Speaker, the members of this House of Commons are sometimes shoved aside and sometimes feel irrelevant, but this afternoon we have the opportunity to act on behalf of 20,000 or 25,000 people. Therefore, I urge that this House support my motion, and by doing so let us raise the minimum wage in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code to the more reasonable level of $2 an hour.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I never cease to wonder at the political skill and acumen of the hon. member, having myself been a member of this House since 1962. I notice that in anticipation of my arguments he either paid attention to what I had said on second reading or in committee or else reread my remarks in Hansard. I do recall the hon. member saying, with his refreshing candour, during the second reading stage that had I come up with $2 for a minimum wage I would now be faced with an amendment for $2.25.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Mackasey: Not a thing, except that you must be consistent. Had I brought in $2, he would have proposed $3, and he would never be satisfied. In proposing $1.65, I had to ignore some of the political arguments and some of the very humanitarian aspects in the hon. member's remarks. I must, in all fairness to the hon. gentleman, take into consideration that he is consistently in this field and is genuinely and sincerely concerned about the people to whom he referred.

However, I think the hon. member will be the first to agree that that concern is not limited to him or to members of his party. There are no basic differences between the hon. member's arguments advancing his amendment and his speech on second reading or in committee the other day, nor will I attempt to come up with any different arguments in rebuttal. As I recall the debate on second reading, the one encouraging factor of course was the unanimous theme running through all the speeches made by members of all the parties in the House, including the Official Opposition, that there should and must be some increase in the minimum wages in this country. Had I viewed the minimum wage as the only instrument to alleviate poverty for certain classes of people, possibly I would have come up to $2. But when you are a minister charged with a certain responsibility you do not always have the freedom and flexibility that you may have in the opposition in taking into consideration one or two points.

Certainly, politically at least, it would be very palatable, so far as the relationship of the Minister of Labour and the government to 10,000 or 20,000 people is concerned, to bring in an amendment suggesting $3 an hour as the minimum wage. If I had that freedom, I would have proposed more than $2 an hour because it is certainly politically attractive. But as I mentioned on second reading and in committee, I have certain responsibilities and I have many other considerations which I thought I made as clear as possible.

We heard some very valuable contributions from representatives of the Atlantic provinces regarding the whole question of minimum wages. I think that in all the speeches on second reading some myths were dispelled which exist all too often in central Canada that the cost of living is so much lower in the Atlantic provinces. The fact that the people there can exist on a lower income is hardly a valid argument, but, as I pointed out earlier in the debate, I am opposed to the concept of regional minimum wages, either within a province or in a province within the nation.

So, in searching for a suitable figure, it became very obvious to me that I must come up with one that created the usual incentive, and the leadership with which the federal government has been associated ever since 1965 in establishing a minimum wage. I also had to establish a figure that did not create a distortion within a province or create unnecessary hardships for marginal industries, which may briefly be described as labour oriented rather than capital oriented. I was not unaware of the fact, through research in certain provinces, not necessarily the Atlantic provinces, that an increase in the minimum wage even in the federal field could have perhaps induced a degree of rationalization in an industry which would be premature in the sense that in some cases it may have been economically advantageous to industries heavily dependent on machinery rather than labour before the regional expansion in that part of the country was sufficiently advanced to absorb displaced people.

I do have a responsibility not only to the employees but also to employers, and in many marginal industries dependent on labour rather than machinery we must take into consideration the effects which the minimum wage would have on their operation. I do not intend to refute any of the arguments which the hon. member brought forward with regard to chartered banks in this country and their ability to pay a living wage. It would seem to me that these banks would want to review their policy, taking into consideration their ability to pay, because I certainly do not consider the banks in this country to be marginal industries.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: I know that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has established a very high level of debate as have other members, such as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and the hon. member from Newfoundland who participated in the second reading debate as the official critic for the opposition on industrial relations, as well as other hon. members. However, I cannot help reminding the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the arguments he advanced today, persuasive though they may be, did not persuade the premier of Manitoba to reach the $2 plateau. I think he would be the first to admit that he tried.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am still trying.

Mr. Mackasey: As I said on several occasions, I sympathize with the hon. member, who is a very persuasive member of his party, on his inability to persuade the premier of that province. I can only assume that now that the premier is no longer a member of the opposition in this House but has the responsibilities of office, he has had to take into consideration some of the factors that I have to consider. He has to consider the impact of too great an increase of the minimum wage on marginal industries in a province, just as I must take into consideration the effect which it might have on some of the less favoured parts of this country. However, I do think that the intermediate aim in this field should be to find, through a series of conferences with my provincial counterparts, a standard that is acceptable in all provinces as well as in the federal field. There is no particular reason why in time the minimum wage in this country could not be uniform across the country, and it is not the purpose of the federal government and of the Department of Labour, despite the fact that this will affect only 10,000 or 20,000 people, to embarrass my counterparts in the provinces.

What I mean to do is perhaps to persuade them, to create incentives, and to point out to marginal industries that they can take advantage of incentives through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to rationalize and protect their industries. I am thinking of a few industries that are perhaps too labour oriented, but this must be taken into consideration, together with the ability of a particular area to absorb those people who, perhaps through lack of education, lack of opportunity or other reasons, have been unable to take advantage of jobs that are available to those with greater skills and better education. So, frankly, I am more interested, having consulted many experts on the subject, in trying again to re-evaluate the real effect of the minimum wage on the income level based on studies available in this and other countries.

I am pleased to find, contrary to the opinion recently expressed by certain economists, that an increase in the minimum wage does not create undue unemployment, and that through the minimum wage we are helping the unorganized worker rather than the organized worker. This is an equal responsibility which I have, the responsibility to protect the unorganized as well as the organized, not only with respect to standards, not only with respect to wages, but with respect to hours of work, overtime, and all other factors. I think we do this fairly successfully.

I was also persuaded by certain experts, particularly those who devoted some years to a study on the impact of the minimum wage, that all too often in too many countries for a variety of reasons, the good influence of an increase in the minimum wage is lost because of the period of time between increases. Perhaps this is not anything that anybody should be proud of but it is a fact that the last time there was an increase in the minimum wage in the federal field in this country was in 1965.

I think that an annual increase would have a greater impact, and in the final analysis would be more beneficial to the unorganized workers at the bottom of the economic scale than would be an unduly high increase which could shut down certain industries in areas to which those industries are important. I promised in committee that it is my intention in the fall, when there will be a more intensive review of the Canada Labour Code, to introduce into the amending bill some provision that would permit the Minister of Labour, after an annual review, to recommend to his colleagues an increase in the minimum wage annually and, through some formula acceptable to the House, to avoid the necessity of coming to the House for sanction.

I am not the type of person who believes in government through regulation, but I think in view of the acceptance, expressed in all parts of the House, of an increase in the minimum wage, this should be possible. I do not make any protestation that concern for people is limited to the Minister of Labour. I know this from the speeches of many members in all parts of the House. I share with the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) the same concern that he has often expressed, perhaps as a result of my upbringing. I often wonder why when I look at a balance sheet, nowhere does a company mention its most precious asset, the people working for it. When it comes to the day that machines are more important than people, we will be in bad shape in this country. It is a fact which is forgotten all too frequently, forgotten not only in my field but in the medical field and in many others, that people are more important than anything else.

While I share the sentiments and the concern of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the Minimum Wage is one of the instruments in the fight against poverty, I point out that it is not the only one. It must be viewed in the context of rationalization of industry through the programs of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). It must be looked at in conjunction with the programs brought forward by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). It must be looked at in conjunction with the programs of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen).

What we must do for the people on the bottom level is to give them the same opportunities that are available to the more fortunate people in central Canada. If we want to make more progress we must make sure that those in the less well-to-do parts of the country get better education, more job opportunities, and we must take steps to rationalize industry, particularly any industry that survives on slave labour. In other words, we must spread the wealth across our country if we want it to remain as one country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I arrived at the $1.65 figure in a very logical manner. The hon. gentleman opposite took exception to the word realistic, but it is no sin to be realistic when one is running a ministry. The figure of $1.65 is not something I plucked out of the air. It is a figure we arrived at by combining two indices, one the cost of living, and the second the productivity of the work force, and this worked out at $1.65. If I can persuade my colleagues between now and some time in the fall, and I believe this to be quite possible, then I give my word that when the Canada Labour Code is revised in the fall the amending bill will contain a formula providing for an annual review of the minimum wage. By this time next year, therefore, the minimum wage could increase by another ten cents or 15 cents.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I point out to the House that when the amending bill comes forward in the fall, there is nothing to prevent us reviewing the minimum wage standard in the light of the economic conditions of the country at that time and the advances that other segments of labour and of society have made in the interim. I seek the co-operation of the House in moving this legislation forward, in the hope that it can be implemented by July 1 because there are certain adjustments that employers must make between now and July 1 if the bill is to come into effect on that date.

At the moment I would prefer not to answer any of the other arguments that have been advanced. I hope the House will accept the $1.65 figure. In the fall, we will have an opportunity to review not only the $2 figure suggested but to discuss ways of making annual adjustments to the minimum wage, ways of making those adjustments much easier, so that we do not have to wait another five years to help people who, in effect, have no leverage because they are unorganized, and are a very dispirited segment of the work force.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of my party will agree when I say I am certain that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) would like to do the right thing. But, Mr. Speaker, the right thing is obviously not $1.65 per hour. I cannot believe that the minister was really serious when he said they arrived at $1.65 per hour through some kind of scientific study concerning productivity and the cost of living. I am inclined to take a much more political and pragmatic view of how they arrived at that figure, namely, that that was the highest figure the Minister of Labour could persuade his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and a few other ministers, to accept. I point out that the President of the Treasury Board never had to worry about making a living, and that he represents the constituency of Westmount.

The minister talked about various other methods which can be adopted to raise the living standards of workers, particularly of unorganized workers who carry the main brunt of the low minimum wage. I agree with him that it is almost exclusively the unorganized workers who must live with the low minimum wage. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not much use to say to Canadian citizens, whether they live in Montreal, Winnipeg or Halifax, that some day in the future they will have pie in the sky, that some day in the future when the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has worked out some of his beautiful plans, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has worked out some of his plans and make the textile industry much more efficient than it is now, their wages will go up. Unfortunately, they have to live now, and as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, they have to live now on $1.25 an hour. Since the minister has rejected the $2 per hour suggested by my colleague, they will have to live on $1.65 per hour in the future.

The $1.65 per hour figure means that a married man with a family, if that is his wage, will receive an annual income which is $800 a year less than the Economic Council of Canada has set as the figure which divides those people who live in a state of poverty from those who live with some kind of decency. As I said on second reading, Mr. Speaker, this minister ought to be ashamed of himself for making such a niggardly proposal.

I was glad to hear the minister substantiate the claims of members from the Atlantic provinces, and others such as my own, that the cost of living is not much lower in the Atlantic provinces or Manitoba than in Ontario or Quebec. That simply reinforces the argument of those of us who say that the minimum wage, both federal and provincial, is too low and ought to be higher.

The last point I wish to deal with, and the one that brought me to my feet, is the suggestion or criticism—if it was a criticism—which the minister made of the government and the Premier of Manitoba because that government, which is NDP, had not moved immediately to a $2 minimum wage. The minister knows very well why that government has not moved. The minister knows that in every province there are marginal industries and if the minimum wage were increased in one province before another, it is likely those industries would be pushed out of business.

There is a very important garment industry in Manitoba. Most of the workers in that industry live in my constituency and that of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The minister knows very well why the government of Manitoba has not unilaterally increased the minimum wage to $2 an hour, just as he knows that the minimum wage was increased to $1.50 on a temporary basis. It has been announced that it will probably be raised again in the fall. The government of Manitoba would like nothing better than to increase the minimum wage and I am sure that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is aware of that, Mr. Speaker. But this cannot be done until other provinces with similar industries increase their minimum wage. It is for this reason I am so critical of the minister for this miserable increase he is proposing and which he wants us to support today.

Just speaking from memory and subject to error in some small detail, Mr. Speaker, I point out that when the federal minimum wage was set at $1.25 five years ago, no province had a minimum wage of more than 90 cents. We knew, of course, that there were not many employees coming under federal jurisdiction who were not receiving $1.25 then, just as there are not many employees coming under federal jurisdiction receiving less than $1.65 today. We knew, when the minimum was set at $1.25 five years ago, that the main effect of it would be to act as a spur on the provinces to increase their minimum wage and that is precisely what happened. The minimum wage in Manitoba is now $1.50 and I believe that in Quebec it will be $1.55 an hour by this fall. The minimum wage in every province has increased substantially since the legislation was passed five years ago. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what was accomplished when the rate was set at $1.25 cannot be accomplished today when the rate is set at $1.65 because most of the provinces are already close to that rate. The benefits attained by the increase five years ago will not be attained today.

I say to the minister, Mr. Speaker, that to a large extent this amendment to the bill is an exercise in futility. It will not do for the workers of Canada, whether under federal or provincial jurisdiction, what the original bill did five years ago. I say to the minister that in the light of his constant speeches and protestations as to his interest and support for the ordinary people of this country—and I believe that the minister is sincere in this—and in the light of his constant reiteration of a desire to improve the conditions of the worker, the Parliament of Canada had a right to expect a good deal more from him than we are getting today.

An hon. Member: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles) which was negatived on the following division:

● (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) who is abroad on official business.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-214, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mackasey moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, obviously $1.65 an hour is better than $1.25 and therefore we shall not oppose this bill, although we regret it has not been improved as we proposed. I should like to say, however, that we shall hold the minister to his promise to bring in a measure this fall to review and improve the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, including a review of the question of the minimum wage.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among representatives of the parties, and I think there might be some disposition to suspend the private members hour for today's sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Pollution—Monitoring of waters receiving effluent discharges from plants using mercury; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—The Canadian Economy—inflation—Restraint on bank profits in line with six per cent wage increase guideline; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Industry—Proposed closing of Canadian subsidiary by SKIL Corporation of Chicago.

EXCISE ACT

AMENDING LEGISLATION

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-209 to amend the Excise Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill C-209, to amend the Excise Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Côté moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO CONSOLIDATE AND REVISE

House in Committee on Bill No. C-215, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members to the House of Commons—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Before calling the first of the many clauses in this bill, I should bring to the attention of hon. members of the committee the terms of the Special Order made on June 9 as found at page 7935 of Hansard for that date. In accordance with that order, the Chair will group any clauses containing revised provisions of the present act. The new material will be called in each case. I might add that the Chair will endeavour not to move too rapidly.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Shall subclauses 1 to 5 inclusive of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclause 6 of clause 2 as revised carry?

On clause 2 subclause 6—Election documents or election papers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I should indicate to the House that the amendment here is the addition of the reference to proxy certificates which by this bill have been added to the Elections Act for the first time.

Subclause 6 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclause 7 of clause 2 as revised carry?

On clause 2, subclause 7—Election Officer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I should explain that the change here is merely to delete the reference to the Representation Commissioner.

Subclause 7 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 8 and 9 of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclause 10 of clause 2 as revised carry?

On clause 2 subclause 10—Electoral district.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The explanation here is that it is to delete the reference to dual ridings which no longer applies since the last redistribution.

Subclause 10 agreed to.

On clause 2 subclause 11—Enumeration date.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The definition here is only a clearer definition of the exact date for the purpose of enumeration.

Subclause 11 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 12 to 24 inclusive of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses 12 to 24 agreed to.

On clause 2, subclause 25—Political Affiliation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The definition here is changed consequential upon the stipulation further on in the bill that political affiliation will be noted on the ballot.

Subclause 25 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 26 to 32 of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses 26 to 32 agreed to.

On clause 2 subclause 33—Registered party.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This is a change consequential upon the registration provision introduced in clause 13.

Subclause 33 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 34 to 36 inclusive of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses 34 to 36 agreed to.

On clause 2 subclause 37—Rural polling division.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The change here is for the purpose of providing a slightly greater discretion for the chief electoral officer for the purpose of designating which are urban and which are rural polls. It happens, with the shifts of population in our highly mobile society and also with the frequent annexation of rural areas as part of municipal change, that some urban polls still comprise farmlands while there may be polls regarded as rural polls under the definition which, for all practical purposes, are urban. This is to give the chief electoral officer greater flexibility in designating which are urban and which are rural polls for the purpose of enumeration.

Subclause 37 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 38 and 39 of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses 38 and 39 agreed to.

On clause 2 subclause 40—Urban polling division.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This is the converse of the previous change.

Subclause 40 agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, I am trying to follow you and I am wondering whether we are finished with the clause concerning the definition of the word "oath"?

Mr. Goyer: The battle of the flags.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I point out to the hon. member—and I agree it is out of alphabetical order in the French text—that it is dealt with under subclause 19 of clause 2.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, may I comment briefly on this clause?

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member to revert to subclause 19 of clause 2?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 2, subclause 19, "Oath".

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council.

The matter of the oath by members is presently an issue in Quebec where they are wondering whether the oath should be taken in the traditional manner of according to another procedure. Considering the constitutional and legal difficulties that this matter entails for certain Quebec members who are not sitting in the National Assembly because they do not want to swear allegiance as provided in the constitution, do the President of the Privy Council and his officials intend to examine the possibility of amending the constitution in order to change the traditional oath and select a procedure which would be more acceptable to certain Quebec members, instead of maintaining the formula which is still in the Elections Act?

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Whatever the merits of that particular proposal, may I draw the hon. member's attention to form No. 2 at page 202 of the draft. The hon. member will notice that the oath in that particular case is the oath to be taken by the returning officer. My understanding of the difficulty which has recently been experienced in the Quebec Assembly had to do with the oath of allegiance. That question of course does not arise in connection with this provision. As to the oath of allegiance, I agree it has been a question of some legal nicety, but it would be clearly beyond my jurisdiction and beyond the terms of the bill if I offered my comments at this time.

Subclause 19 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 41 and 42 of clause 2 carry?

Subclauses 41 and 42 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclauses 1 and 2 of clause 3 carry?

Subclauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 3 subclause 3—Communication with Governor in Council.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The change here is for the purpose of increasing flexibility among the members of the Privy Council who are to be responsible for the purposes of this act. Traditionally, this has been conferred specifically on the Secretary of State for Canada, but as is now apparent this function may be assigned from time to time to another member of the cabinet. The amendment will make it possible to change this responsibility from time to time without having to make an amendment to the Elections Act.

Subclause 3 agreed to.

On clause 3 subclause 4—Salary and expenses of Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The amendment here is for the purpose of making any change in the remuneration of the chief electoral officer independent of a direct government decision which it would be if this were left to the exclusive responsibility of the Governor in Council, or alternatively to avoid the necessity to come back to the House from time to time with a statute to increase that officer's salary as circumstances might dictate. What this means, therefore, is that his salary will be subject to any changes that may occur from time to time in the remuneration under the Judges Act. It will be recalled that virtually every year the Judges Act is opened up. Therefore, any changes that will take place with regard to judges will automatically take place with regard to the chief electoral officer.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): As one of those in the standing committee who supported this change, I want to endorse it of course. But since the standing committee met and I made this determination, I find that on the passage of this provision the salary paid the chief electoral officer will be increased over what he receives at the moment under the procedures used for setting salaries. Since the committee made that decision, somebody named Dr. Young, who has something to do with the Prices and Incomes Commission, made a statement, which I understand is government policy, about limiting salary increases to 6 per cent. I am speaking as one who supported the amendment in the committee because at that time, presumably, we were operating as agents free from any prescription set by the government or the Prices and Incomes Commission. I ask the President of the Privy Council whether, as a result of this change which would establish the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer as equal to the salary of a puisne judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, the increase exceeds the 6 per cent policy announced by the government?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, it does. I think it is evident, Mr. Chairman, that there will be certain cases, and this is obviously one, where for a great many years the salary of the particular officer has been fixed. It would be reasonable to do this, therefore, to enable him to catch up with the position accorded to most other groups in society by reason of the change in the price level. Therefore, on this basis, I would acknowledge that is an exception to the general principle set out by the Prices and Incomes Commission, but I think it is one with which the House generally would agree.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I think the House would find it more agreeable if the 40 per cent of people who work in banks, and who fall in the extremely low category covered by the minimum wage, had their wages increased to $2 an hour, which the minister voted against a few minutes ago.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I, too, supported this suggested amendment in the Committee and I would like to say I think that the Chief Electoral Officer should have his remuneration looked after in this particular way. I cannot help but observe, however, that the hon. member for Skeena has in fact caught the government with its inconsistency showing a bit.

Subclause 4 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 5 of clause 3 as revised carry?

On clause 3, subclause 5—Superannuation and compensation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the change here is to bring up to date the statutory provisions with regard to the superannuation of the Chief Electoral Officer, in line with the provisions for others in the public service.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, might I be permitted to inquire of the President of the Privy Council what regulations are referred to, or what is the connection with the regulations that may be made pursuant to section 5 of the Aeronautics Act?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): These, Mr. Chairman, are the flying accidents regulations of the Aeronautics Act. The effect of them is that where members of the public service are flying under air arrangements which would not normally be covered by policies of insurance, for example on non-scheduled airlines, they are accorded insurance under the provisions of the Aeronautics Act.

Subclause 5 agreed to.

Subclauses 6 to 12 inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

The Chairman: We are now on clause 4. Shall subclause 1 of clause 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carry.

Subclause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 2 of clause 4, as revised carry?

On clause 4, subclause 2—Power to adapt Act.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, this is really a redrafting for greater certainty. By way of indication of the types of emergency or unusual circumstances referred to, it is my understanding that after the last general election there was a postal strike, or threat of postal strike action, which made it difficult to forward the returns by way of postal services, and they had to be returned in that case by way of air express. Rather than have any contest on that particular question this amendment is to make it clear that the Chief Electoral Officer may use all possible means to communicate this type of information, or any other type of information, where ordinary services of communication have been interrupted for any reason.

Subclause 2 agreed to.

Subclause 3 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 4 of clause 4 as revised carry?

On clause 4, subclause 4—Exception.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, we are including here a provision which is analogous to one already found in the Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba elections acts. What is involved here is really to provide a little flexibility for the Chief Electoral Officer where, for example, there happens to be a bomb scare in a polling booth, perhaps at five o'clock in the afternoon, and where as the result of safety precautions it may be necessary to clear the poll for several hours and therefore run the risk of disenfranchising a number of voters. It is subject to an over-all time limit so that the poll in total will not be open for a longer period of time, than is general under the act but this does permit that particular poll to remain open for a longer period of time than is usual. The discretion is exerciseable by the Chief Electoral Officer on the advice of the returning officer.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I realize we probably cannot cover every contingency and possibility here, but there is a provision elsewhere in the Act that no one shall publish the results of the election in one part of the country until the polls have closed in another part of the country, taking into account the time differences. Here we have a situation where a particular polling station in a particular polling division may be kept open beyond the normal closing time because of an emergency, or something unforeseen that may happen, in order to give the people in that polling division substitute time in which to cast their ballots. I am wondering whether the other provision relating to the sanction against publicizing the results of the election is included in this, or will it be permissible to publicize them in this instance? Will it be an infringement to publicize them if a polling station has to be kept open until midnight, or until three or four hours after the other stations close?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I understand that the inhibition elsewhere in the legislation applies to an entire electoral district, so that the general publication of election results elsewhere in the electoral district would not be an infringement of the statute if one or more polls were left open. I think the over-all logic is that it would be difficult to hold up the whole country while two or three polls voted.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I was not raising this for the purpose of objecting to it, because I think it would be an impossible situation. Take the case of an accident, or of a riot, or of something of that kind happening half an hour before the polls close. You cannot possibly get that information all across Canada in that period of time. But I just wanted to ask the question so that the information will be on the record, because presumably the Chief Electoral Officer and other people may be reading the proceedings here, and if this is set out in Hansard there will be a clear understanding of what it means.

[The Chairman.]

Subclause 4 agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 5.

Subclause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 2 of clause 5 as revised carry?

On clause 5, subclause 2—Superannuation and compensation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the changes to apply with respect to the Assistant Chief Electoral Officer are the same as apply to the Chief Electoral Officer himself, that is to say, with respect to changes in the public service benefits.

Subclause 2 agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 6, subclauses 1 to 3 inclusive.

Subclauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 6, subclause 4 as amended.

On clause 6, subclause 4—Returning officers to act to enable elections to be held.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, there has been a general revision of the criminal provisions in the bill and this will appear later. The revision really reflects the changes in so far as they pertain to the returning officers being able to act.

Subclause 4 agreed to.

On clause 6, subclause 5—Withdrawal of writ.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to present, for the consideration of the committee, on clause 6, subclause 5, paragraph (c). I assume this subclause means that in the event of flood, riot or other disaster that would prevent the holding of an election within the electoral district, the Chief Electoral Officer may cause the writ of election in that electoral district to be withdrawn and a new writ to be issued later. The provisions of paragraph (c) of subclause 5 now read:

a new writ ordering an election shall be issued within six months—

I am sure that the Chief Electoral Officer, the President of the Privy Council and all members would agree that for a general election the decision should be made at the earliest possible date. Therefore, it seems to us that in this case six months is not necessary. I would therefore like to submit an amendment for the consideration of the committee. I hope and trust that the President of the Privy Council and other members will agree that the amendment is suitable for this purpose. I move:

That clause 6 be amended by deleting paragraph (c) from subclause 5 and substituting therefor the following:

"(c) a new writ ordering an election shall be issued within three months after publication of the notice of withdrawal of the writ in the Canada Gazette; and that such writ be returnable within three months after issue; and"—

Then it goes on to the succeeding paragraph. The intention of this amendment is that when a writ had been withdrawn in an electoral district because of a disaster or emergency, the Chief Electoral Officer would cause a new writ to be ordered by the Governor in Council within three months, the writ to be returnable within three months after issue. In a general election the vacancy would be filled within six months, instead of taking six months to issue the writ and then whatever period was necessary after that to hold the election. I urge that this amendment be accepted because it seems more fitting and proper to conduct the election process in this manner, particularly in a general election when all electoral districts should be settled as early as possible.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the substance of the amendment would be acceptable, but in terms of the procedure I have one objection. The subclause provides that the election shall be conducted according to the procedures prescribed in this act for all elections. I would advise that at by-elections, writs are not returnable; therefore, the final line of the hon. member's amendment will appear not to be consistent with our procedure. I would suggest that we stand this particular subclause, consider any consequential effects it may have on the wording throughout the rest of the bill, and return to it after the dinner hour, if that is agreeable to the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Subclause 5, paragraph (c) stands.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to present for the consideration of the committee. It would have the effect of adding a new subclause to clause 6. Many of us have been concerned over the years about the length of time it has taken to fill vacancies in Parliament. In years gone by vacancies were filled in a manner which nowadays would be considered nothing more than political chicanery or political manœuvring. I think members of all parties agree that the electors of any electoral district have the right to be represented in Parliament at the earliest possible date following a vacancy in the House. I believe that no party in Canada, in this modern age, desires delay when vacancies are to be filled. I appreciate that on the death of an hon. member a reasonable period should be observed, out of respect for the member, before a writ is issued. That would be natural and courteous.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I think delays in the recent past have been longer than necessary. I do not ascribe any motives to the government. In the case of the former hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who died on July 10, 1968, subsequent to his election to the twenty-eighth Parliament, eight months passed before the vacancy was filled. In the case of the former hon. member for Selkirk, who resigned from this House and was successful in seeking opportunity elsewhere, 11 months passed before the vacancy was filled. At present a vacancy exists because a member of the Ralliement Créditiste resigned to sit in another chamber.

I urge upon the members of the committee an addition to this clause. I move:

That clause 6 be amended by adding thereto the following subclause:

"(6) Notwithstanding anything in this or any other act, where any vacancy happens in the House of Commons a writ ordering an election of a member of the House of Commons to fill such vacancy shall be issued within three months after the receipt by the Chief Electoral Officer of the warrant issued pursuant to the House of Commons Act, and that such writ be returnable within three months after issue."

I hope all members will favourably consider this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I know all of us would be interested in hearing the views of members from all parts of the chamber. I hope there is a general feeling that the day has long past when any government, of whatever party, would delay filling vacancies in an electoral district at the expense of Canadians who would not have representation as soon as they should.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the short-coming of the amendment is similar to the one already moved, in the sense that writs are only declared to be returnable in the case of a general election. More fundamental, perhaps, is the fact that the House of Commons Act regulates this particular situation and the membership of the House of Commons as it is constituted from time to time.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I would think that any amendment along those lines ought to be considered within the over-all context of that statute and not of this bill which seeks to amend the Canada Elections Act. Therefore, instead of making the change at this time we would be disposed to consider it in any future amendment to the House of Commons Act. Very likely, that measure will arise for consideration in the next session. We will, therefore, not make this change in the context of the bill now being discussed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I am not enthusiastic about the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council. He has merely said it is likely that the Senate and House of Commons Act will be amended in the next session. In view of the number of times we have been told it is likely that legislation apropos the Canada Development Corporation will come before the House, we take the minister's suggestion with a great deal of skepticism.

I would be more disposed to listen to the President of the Privy Council if he advanced some real arguments showing why the amendment of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is not now practical. Surely the minister does not want members of the House to think that the government needs freedom, for political reasons, not to call an election in any constituency for up to one year after a vacancy has occurred, and so leave that constituency unrepresented in this House. I have some experience of this situation. The former hon. member for Selkirk, who is now the Premier of Manitoba, asked me to look after certain matters relating to that constituency until the by-election could be held. I was happy to accommodate him, but I must admit that being a member who represents an urban riding I found some difficulty in dealing with the difficulties raised by the farmers of the constituency of Selkirk.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

The President of the Privy Council has not told us why any seat in this House should remain vacant for almost one year. The government may have political reasons; but I suggest to the minister that the democratic system being what it is, it is possible that the Liberal Party will not always form the government of Canada. There may come a time when it will be in opposition, and it will wish certain by-elections to be held even though the government of the day may not wish them to be held.

I suggest that we ought not to be playing politics in this kind of situation. We ought to enact rules saying that as soon as possible after a vacancy occurs, a by-election shall be held, no matter which party forms the government of the country. Therefore, if the minister has no political reasons for refusing the request of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, I urge him to accept the proposal of the hon. member.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out when replying to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre who introduced this question, my reason for neither accepting nor rejecting the proposal put forward is that I think it should be considered in the over-all context of the House of Commons Act and not on the spur of the moment or in the manner now suggested. I would agree with the hon. member that it is patently obvious that the ability to postpone the holding of a by-election has not in any sense been of advantage to this government. The hon. member could characterize my reasons as political, but probably the sensible thing would be to deal with the matter within the context of the over-all statute and not to agree to this particular change at this time.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has brought forward a significant matter. This question has been dealt with in other jurisdictions. We seem to have developed a technique, if it is a technique, of prolonging vacancies. We have here a device whereby the executive arm of government is influencing improperly the composition of the legislative chamber. Other jurisdictions have, as a result of unfortunate experiences, found it expedient and wise to write into their laws provisions of the sort which the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has brought forward.

While the suggestion may have been brought forward on the spur of the moment, in the eyes of the minister, the spirit of the suggestion is not at all new. I think events in this Parliament have served to underline the iniquity of our system whereby the executive, through inertia or other causes, can delay by-elections and thus the completion of the people's representation in Parliament.

I think any self-respecting government would wish to move as quickly as the law allows so that the people's parliamentary representatives may be installed in the law-making chamber. So I support the amendment, which I think would improve—and it is improvement that we are after—the efficacy of our system of representative government.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, may I join the mover of this amendment and my colleague the hon. member for Hillsborough in supporting this amendment. It seems that about every ten years we turn our attention in a substantive way to major changes to the Canada Elections Act. While I support the spirit of the Government House Leader's comments and think the matter ought to be looked at in the larger context, I hope the committee will not need to wait ten years for the consideration in that larger context to which he referred.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) negatived: Yeas, 14; nays, 28.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment negatived. The committee will turn to clause 7. Shall subclause 1 of clause 7 as revised carry?

On clause 7, subclause 1—Appointment of returning officers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, may I draw to the attention of the committee a related clause. I refer to clause 114(2) on page 198 of the bill which provides:

> The Chief Electoral Officer, the Assistant Chief Electoral Officer and every other election officer appointed under the former act who held office immediately prior to the coming into force of this act shall continue to hold office with like effect as though they had been so appointed under this act.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Under the previous Elections Act, the statute enacted in 1960, the positions of returning officers were declared vacant, for whatever use it was at that time. It is the considered opinion of the Chief Electoral Officer that, particularly in light of the change in the size of the electorate and the complications which would result from having to appoint 263 new returning officers, it would be desirable to keep in office those who have had experience. This preserves the positions of the returning officers.

Mr. McGrath: What is the rate of pay for returning officers at the present time? I understand there is a retainer paid during years when there is no election, and a special rate during the time of an election. I also ask what procedures the Governor in Council follows when appointing people to fill vacancies in places where vacancies exist.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): A tariff of fees is established pursuant to clause 61(1) of the current bill. There is no fixed sum applicable to all returning officers; the amount depends upon the number of names on the electoral list and is determined during the course of each election. As to the second question, an attempt is made to appoint someone experienced in election procedures. The hon. member became a member of the House before I did, and no doubt he is familiar with the process on his side.

Mr. McGrath: If that is an indication from the minister to make a recommendation to fill the vacancy in my constituency, I will gladly comply.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to propose to clause 7(1). It proposes that returning officers should be appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer rather than by the Governor in Council. I make this suggestion as a result of my interest in the matter as well as on the basis of an exchange which took place in one of the earlier meetings of the Committee on Privileges and Elections at which I was present. I should like to quote from the Minutes of Proceedings No. 2, dated October 31, 1968, beginning at page 8.

> Mr. Rose: My question is supplementary to something Mr. MacGuigan said. He said that you and your office do not appoint the returning officers; that is done by the government.
> Mr. Hamel: That is correct.
> Mr. Rose: You see, this brings up all kinds of interesting aspects of political patronage and that kind of thing in the appointment of these various returning officers, and I am interested in knowing what kind of recommendations you might have in this connection.
> Mr. Hamel: I do not have any recommendations. If you go back, I think to about 1930, the Chief Electoral Officer was responsible for the appointment of the returning officers. I do not think this would be efficient because I do not have the machinery, having my office in Ottawa, if at the beginning of an election a returning officer drops dead or decides not to take the job away out in British Columbia, Alberta or in Saskatchewan, to try to find a replacement.

Mr. Rose: Do I understand, then, that the returning officers are appointed by the province or some organization within the province?

Mr. Hamel: That I do not know.

Obviously, the Chief Electoral Officer has to reply officially. He does not know. The record continues:

Mr. Hamel: How they go about getting their names, I do not know.

Mr. Rose: It seem very strange, sir, that no one knows something as vital and as basic as this and I just cannot conceive its happening. It is like the answer we got yesterday concerning the political affiliations of appointees. I am not laying this at the door of any one political party, because I think this certainly has happened under both of the major political parties, but I think we could certainly look to some other kind of method for appointing these people, because I am convinced that not always are the best people appointed for this purpose and further, that there have been some very capable ones who have been replaced regardless of the changing of the boundaries.

This is the amendment which I am proposing, Mr. Speaker:

That clause 7 be amended by deleting subclause 1 and substituting therefor the following:

"(1) The Chief Electoral Officer shall appoint a returning officer for any new electoral district, and a new returning officer for any electoral district in which the office of returning officer becomes vacant, within the meaning of subsection 2. Such vacancy to be filled after the Chief Electoral Officer has publicly advertised the vacancy, invited applications, and held open competition for the position."

I believe our civil service operates on the basis that vacancies are regularly published as they occur in the government service. In my opinion, this is an admirable method of procedure and I do not see why it cannot be followed in this instance when it concerns the staff of the Chief Electoral Officer. I am surprised that the government has not thought it wise to ensure that these appointments are made without any hint of patronage. In the past, capable people were removed and their positions given to government supporters who were not necessarily the most competent among the applicants.

These appointments offer a small crumb to some people, but one wonders why the government has not seen fit to remove the taint of party advantage from an area which is of vital concern to everyone in our democracy. I am not moving this motion because I have been personally wronged by any electoral officer, but I believe the government should show confidence in its Chief Electoral Officer's competence to make appointments of this type impartially.

[Mr. Rose.]

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-215, an act respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members to the House of Commons.

When the committee rose at six it was considering clause 7, subclause 1 and the following amendment moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West:

That clause 7 be amended by deleting subclause 1 and substituting therefor the following:

"(1) The Chief Electoral Officer shall appoint a returning officer for any new electoral district, and a new returning officer for any electoral district in which the office of returning officer becomes vacant, within the meaning of subsection 2. Such vacancy to be filled after the Chief Electoral Officer has publicly advertised the vacancy, invited applications, and held open competition for the position."

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Fraser Valley West brought this amendment forward he referred at some length to an exchange that took place in the Standing Committee between himself and the Chief Electoral Officer, which seems to me probably the most effective answer to the points he was making at the time. As the Chief Electoral Officer pointed out, though I hesitate to quote him without reading his actual remarks, the system here appears to produce the most efficient way of appointing returning officers. It was also indicated at the time that up until about 1929 or 1930 they were appointed in the manner suggested by the hon. member. Then the House, nearly 40 years ago, changed the procedure so that they would be appointed by the Governor in Council and ever since that time this particular proposal has been in effect.

I understand it was the statement of a former Chief Electoral Officer, who operated under the older system, that the reinstitution of the system which in effect got him into controversy in a particular constituency by choosing the returning officer, would be a resigning matter as far as he was concerned. In other words, the law was changed specifically because of unhappy experience with the exact procedure that the hon. member is suggesting in this regard.

One other aspect of the hon. member's amendment which seems to me to be a good reason for recommending that the committee reject it is that there are other provisions in the statute—in particular subsection 5 of clause 7—for the purpose of the early filling of a vacancy, so there will not be a delay, and providing that the returning officer shall be appointed within 60 days. The procedure put forward by the hon. member, however, is a lengthy one with regard to which there can be no assurance whatever that within 60 days, or at any particular time, a vacancy would be filled. In other words, in order to carry out the procedure proposed by the hon. member, a particular constituency could find itself several weeks before an election campaign without a returning officer, and because of the restrictions that he imposes, without the ability of appointing one at an early date.

On that basis, Mr. Chairman, both because Parliament long ago rejected the proposal and because it will not provide, to adopt a term that has been used, for the efficiency of appointment, I recommend to the committee that it reject this amendment.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I think it is of the essence that every way we can find to reduce even the suggestion of partisan input into our election procedures should be welcomed. I am somewhat attracted to the proposal of the mover of this amendment. I notice that in several sections of the bill steps have been taken to put beyond question or reproach even any slight suggestion of partisanship. In the holding of an election, surely any distinction between a party in power and a party seeking power must be removed just as completely as is possible in all practical circumstances. I think it is well that we consider ways and means to reduce even the possibility of accusing a group in power of using the fact that they are in power for purposes other than the best purposes.

I am not suggesting that in our day and age elections have not been well conducted in this country, though in an earlier day that was not the case. I remember reading of an experience in the nineteenth century when nominations were made at an open meeting. The sheriff of one county did not tell the opposition party where the meeting was going to be held, and there was no one there to nominate the opposition candidates. As a result, there was an acclamation. However, things have been much better in recent times. If we could move toward de-politicizing—if I may use a terrible expression—our election campaigns to this extent, it would be a very good idea. When enumerators are appointed, the whole matter is carefully looked into; you have one designated by one party and one by another, so there is an assurance that you have reduced to the minimum any possible suggestion of partisanship. If we could do this with the returning officer, I think it would be a very good idea.

If I remember history correctly, I think at the time of the plebiscite that Mr. Mackenzie King called there was a procedure whereby in odd numbered polling divisions the deputy returning officer was the nominee of the government party, and in even numbered polling divisions he was the designate of the second running party. These are devices whereby you establish a good, proper, non-political basis which is of the essence in our electoral process. This is my point of view, and I support the amendment.

The minister was dilating this afternoon about the value of experience in the office of returning officer. Before we proceed further with this clause I wonder whether he could tell us how many of the returning officers who were appointed in the aftermath of the 1960 legislation are still functioning, because I agree with him that there is value in the experience of good people.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, before we become involved in the de-politicizing, or whatever the term is, let me make some comments in the privacy of this House. I see we have complete privacy because there is no one to report us. Let us consider what the result of this amendment would be. The Chief Electoral Officer would be very careful not to choose anyone with political ideals either Conservative, Liberal or NDP. This would automatically eliminate about 80 per cent of the people who know something about politics and about the running of elections. The Chief Electoral Officer would look for someone who had never been involved in political activity of any nature and who did not know a poll sheet from any other document. Such a person would have to be trained. This is the type of person who would be a returning officer.

In addition, about five years ago the Prime Minister decided it would be a good idea to take patronage completely away from all appointments. Where did we turn? We could not go to the general field of economics or industry in order to find people, because they were involved politically with the Liberal Party, the Conservative Party or the NDP. It was decided that academicians of the universities would be suitable because no one could say that they were partisan. Eventually the various commission appointments were filled by academicians—good natured souls, mind you, but people who have very little experience in the outside world. So in their little Valhalla they set down rules which in theory are perfect but which in practice have no application at all. Why should we penalize anyone who has been involved in political activity? What has such a person done that would warrant his being eliminated entirely?

An hon. Member: No one suggested that.

Mr. Otto: That is what an hon. gentleman across the way said. He said we should take politics away from these appointments. It was suggested that if a person is to be appointed as a judge, a commissioner, a returning officer, and so on, he should never take part in politics. In other words, the suggestion is: Never vote. Do not become involved. This is in fact what has been said.

I say it is time we reviewed this whole question. I see nothing evil in being involved with one political party or another. I can conceive of the Governor in Council obtaining an even better group of men from those who have been involved in politics than from those who have not.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Chairman, I feel obliged to reply to the arguments put before the committee by the hon. member who has just spoken because he is drawing from this amendment a conclusion which should not be drawn. Such an interpretation has no place in our discussion of the amendment. The sole purpose of the amendment is to ensure that the most competent people are selected to fill the position of returning officer. For obvious reasons, this would not eliminate a person merely because he had been involved in politics. Indeed, I think any intelligent Chief Electoral Officer would consider intimate involvement in politics to be a "plus" factor in the selection of a returning officer.

This amendment does not in any way indicate that a person must be non-partisan. It simply indicates that he must acquire the position as a result of an open competition. What it does mean is that if there should be a Liberal government in office, all the returning officers would not be former Liberals; and if there should be a Conservative government in office, all the returning officers would not be former Conservatives. Similarly, if an NDP government should be in office, all the returning officers would not be members of the New Democratic Party. It simply means that there would be a competition and the most competent applicant would fill the position. That is the point; anything else is totally irrelevant to the question. On that basis I urge the committee to adopt this amendment.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Selkirk for apologizing, on my behalf, for things I did not say and for interpretations I did not mean. No one is suggesting that the appointees be political neuters: they must become that, because the law does not allow them to vote when the poll is open. I was suggesting that politicizing be withdrawn from the appointing product rather than from the end product. I do not agree that one must be partisan in order to be competent. I can conceive of the independent voters managing the Elections Act, too.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words—

The Chairman: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member after the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I would gladly withdraw if I could be the last speaker. The hon. member would then have my permission to go ahead, but in the event that committee of the whole procedure precludes this kind of generosity, I should like to proceed. It seems to me that the arguments against my amendment have been approached from the wrong premise. I do not accept the type of argument rendered by the hon. member for York East, to the effect that my amendment means that people who have taken an active interest in politics should by virtue of their interest be precluded.

We are interested in obtaining the best possible people to fill the position of returning officer. My concern is that the best possible people be appointed by the government for the position of returning officer. I feel that the fact the government is involved in various partisan considerations might tend to make it appoint persons who are favourable to its political party.

Essentially, I am asking that there be an open type of competition in which people who have been involved in partisan politics from the point of view of scrutineer, enumerator, returning officer, and so on, would have a free hand in submitting applications to the Chief Electoral Officer for consideration by him in his wisdom, intelligence and great experience in dealing with this type of person, rather than the appointment being made through the Governor in Council.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the amendment, but I am not so naïve as to believe that over the years governments have amended the act so that they could obtain returning officers who were more favourable to their own cause. Let us get down to brass tacks. What we need is something exactly like the amendment now before the committee. This situation is similar to that in respect of redistribution. That is something I always oppose.

It was said that judges should be appointed to the redistribution commissions because they were independent persons. Unfortunately, in various areas judges were politicians before they became judges. Therefore, we had as much politics in redistribution as we would have had had we turned the matter over to a committee of the Senate and House of Commons. If any member should stand in his place now and suggest that parties do not play politics with regard to this act, in relation to returning officers, they should examine their own conscience or their own people. They have all been playing politics. The NDP have not been in office federally, but they were in office in my home province and I did not see any non-politics there.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: You should see them in Manitoba.

Mr. Woolliams: I have not seen them there. But they would be no better and no worse than the Conservatives or the Liberals so far as bringing in this bill is concerned. Let us not fool ourselves. But at least the hon. member's amendment tries to bring about some justice. We know that every time there is a new government, it amends the Elections Act. The purpose is not to give a greater franchise to the people of Canada—it is time somebody said this—but to appoint men who might give the government a small advantage here and there.

I support the amendment wholeheartedly. We are all politicians; we would not be here if we were not. We all have certain advantages, and people appointed to positions by governments are generally political animals. Once in a while the government appoints one Tory and 19 Liberals to make it look as if they are just, and another government might do it the other way round. Let us stop this nonsense of saying that the other parties are more political than we are. We are political beasts and we like having a little advantage here and there. Let us get the best advantage for ourselves. But if an amendment is proposed that will lift us a little above that level and away from that influence, I am for it.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I would join the hon. member for Calgary North in expressing a comment or two about this amendment. I am one of those who admit to being a political animal from time to time. But I am one of those who—I have no hesitation in confessing it—in the few years that I have been here have found it a lot more enjoyable to work for people for all but two months of the four or five years that a government is in office, and at that time to be a little political.

While I support this amendment—I have no hesitation in doing so, largely for the reasons enumerated by my colleague—I think that in fairness it should be brought to the attention of the committee, its acceptance would give rise to serious questions about other procedures under the act. It is to the other procedures that I should like to direct my attention: not only to the procedure that involves partisan politics in the selection of returning officers and their clerks, but to the entire procedure to which we must direct our attention from 1970 onward.

I am not about to say that political appointees are not competent. I hope I misunderstood my hon. friend when he expressed what I understood to be that opinion, because I believe that regardless of their political beliefs, when people are considered for roles such as this they are by and large competent. But what is important is that we do not strip—I simply mention this for what it is worth—the political process in Canada of the means of adequately prosecuting general elections.

The point has been made by the minister, and I think validly so, that there are times when the returning officers must seek local advice. It is not always possible at the eleventh hour for the returning officer responsible for the prosecution of an election in a given electoral district to secure the required replacement, if that is what the problem is, and he must turn to somebody for advice and direction. There is not always time the day before the election to run an advertisement in a newspaper and to secure a list of candidates from which he can select an appropriate returning officer.

I draw this matter to the attention of the committee, and at the same time I run the risk of being contradictory when I say that notwithstanding this very apparent difficulty and the very difficult position in which we might place the Chief Electoral Officer, and indeed the voters in a given riding, it is perhaps time, in 1970, that we devised a more efficient way of securing the appropriate officers who are required to prosecute elections.

The amendment very clearly has merit. I only hope that in the wisdom of the chamber, if we decide to accept the amendment we will look with charity at consequential amendments that will have to be made, some of which will be moved by myself. I commend the amendment to the committee. I do so on the basis of 14 or 15 years' experience of dealing directly with these matters. The matter should be taken out of the hands of political organizations, because this is in fact what we are talking about.

It does not matter how much we try to hide it, it does not matter how much we try to get around the basic fact of the matter: what happens in truth is well known to all of us, and in many instances has caused some of us who have had responsibility in running elections, both on our own behalf and in assisting others, considerable difficulty, particularly during the latter stages of general election campaigns. I sincerely urge hon. members who are here tonight to reflect for a moment or two on the merit of this amendment. If in their wisdom they decide that it should be rejected, I ask each of them individually to make a plea to the Government House Leader who is responsible for the passage of this bill to make sure that this item is included in the promised review for this fall.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Rose) negatived: Yeas, 23; nays, 36.

• (8:30 p.m.)

On clause 6, subclause 5, paragraph (c).

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre proposed an amendment to subclause (c)—

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, do I conclude from the House Leader's intervention that we are moving to another clause, because I have another amendment on clause 7 which I would like to submit for the consideration of the committee?

The Chairman: Order, please. The procedure, as I understand it, is that we are now reverting back to clause 6(5)(c), which was stood this afternoon, to deal with an amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, after which we will return to clause 7(1). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the substance of the hon. member's amendment was to require a new writ under this clause within three months rather than six months after publication of the notice of withdrawal. The advantage of the dinner hour has been used for the purpose of examining the legal effect of the amendment proposed. I have an alternative wording here, and if it were acceptable to him and to the committee, the hon. member's amendment might be withdrawn. The amendment suggested is as follows:

(a) by striking out lines 30 to 33 on page 13 and substituting the following:

'(c) a new writ ordering an election shall be issued within three months after publication of the notice of withdrawal of the writ in the Canada Gazette;

(d) a day not later than three months after the date of issue of the new writ of election shall be named in the new writ as the day fixed for the holding of the poll; and

Then there is a further, consequential amendment:

(b) by renumbering paragraph (d) of subclause 5 of clause 5 as paragraph (e).

If that meets the substance of the hon. member's amendment, perhaps he would be willing to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to have the advice of the President of the Privy Council and of his legal advisers. My legal advisers consist of the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I may say I am glad the trial is not any more serious. I believe that the new wording the President of the Privy Council has presented means what I intended to present in my amendment, that a by-election, in the event of this circumstance, would have been completed within six months. As long as that objective is achieved, I am quite prepared to withdraw my amendment and accept the wording of the amendment of President of the Privy Council.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) withdrawn.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could give the hon. member the assurance that my understanding is that this amendment will mean six months plus one week.

Mr. Benjamin: That is better than it used to be.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-215 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 30 to 33 on page 13 and substituting the following:

'(c) a new writ ordering an election shall be issued within three months after publication of the notice of withdrawal of the writ in the Canada Gazette;

(d) a day not later than three months after the date of issue of the new writ of election shall be named in the new writ as the day fixed for the holding of the poll; and

(b) by renumbering paragraph (d) of subclause 5 of clause 5 as paragraph (e).

Amendment (Mr. Forest) agreed to.

Clause 6 as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now return to the consideration of clause 7(1).

On clause 7, subclause 1—Appointment of returning officers.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with the amendment indicated by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, I rise on a matter of order. I do so in a very expansive and generous way, to point out that the Chief Electoral Officer is in reality, as I understand it, an officer of Parliament and not an officer in the sense that a member of the public service is an officer attached to a particular department.

It is true that the Chief Electoral Officer is here on the floor of this House. I have some doubt about the propriety of that, but that is another matter. He is here with a very attractive young lady whose position I do not know so far as the Chief Electoral Officer is concerned. The question I want to raise is that the office of the Chief Electoral Officer being one of Parliament, it should not be one, just by proximity to the President of the Privy Council, to be in any way considered as a position seconded to the President of the Privy Council as a member of the cabinet.

I am sure that Mr. Hamel and the office of the Chief Electoral Officer are available during tonight's sitting, as was the case this afternoon, to any member who wants to consult them about the technicalities, legalities and other details of anything involved in this legislation. But I think that this office and its facilities, being an office of Parliament and not a partisan one—not attached to government or opposition—should be available to opposition groups who are as concerned as the government about developing the Elections Act so that it will meet the requirements and the needs of the people of this nation in their election of Members of Parliament.

I do not know whether we could arrive at some arrangement in this respect. I realize that the Chief Electoral Officer cannot be jumping from one party to another in the developing of amendments and in suggestions about them, but the office of the Chief Electoral Officer should be available to all parties and all groups in this House as easily as it is to the President of the Privy Council at the moment.

Whether it is possible to work this out at the moment, I do not know. There may be some technicalities involved in doing so. But I think it is incumbent upon us in this House, and upon you, Mr. Chairman, to look upon this question as having great validity. The hon. member for Hillsborough and the people associated with him in the Conservative Party who have spent a fair amount of time over the years, before many members came to this House, dealing with electoral reform and the Elections Act, should have available to him and to the group associated with him the expertise and knowledge that exists within the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. My friend from Regina-Lake Centre should not have to rely upon the highly incompetent legal advice that he says he gets from myself and from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He should be able to draw on something much more knowledgeable than that. I raise the point and leave it with the committee for comment. I think it is a very worth-while point that we should consider.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make it perfectly clear, on behalf of the Chief Electoral Officer, that the opinion of the hon. member for Skeena is correct, that he is an officer of Parliament and that he is and will be available to all hon. members from time to time as they may need assistance. In terms of physical mobility around the floor of the chamber, I am open to suggestions as to how he could be made more available than he is now. But I am advised that the procedure now being followed, with the Chief Electoral Officer advising the minister who is conducting the passage of the bill, was the procedure followed when the House last had the Elections Act before it in 1960, and it was the practice followed in years before that. So I would make it perfectly clear that he is not the exclusive adviser of the government. If there are to be amendments which may involve technical advice on their consequential effect on other parts of the act, I think it might be necessary to postpone them. In terms of legal advice, may I take the opportunity to introduce to the House Miss Edythe I. MacDonald—she is no relation—of the Department of Justice, who has done a first-class job of redrafting this bill.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if I may—

The Chairman: I take it we are still dealing with the point of order. I do not know whether the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East is still on the point of order. I will hear him on it.

Mr. Forrestall: In connection with the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would bring to your attention that just now, in the middle of the hon. member's remarks, I sought the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer. I suggest to my hon. friend, not necessarily because it strikes me as being funny, that if his feet were as big as his tongue he could have walked across the chamber and done the same thing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a very simple way of solving this problem. Mr. Hamel could sit over there, and Miss MacDonald could sit over here with us.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on clause 1, which stipulates that the governor in council may appoint a returning officer and—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I am prepared to recognize the hon. member. I take it that in the spirit of amicability, the point of order raised by the hon. member for Skeena has been resolved to the satisfaction of both sides; but I am not sure if that includes the proposal just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I will leave that matter to the members of the committee to work out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, it does.

Mr. Rose: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. You said a moment ago that you were not certain whether the point of order had been completely dealt with, and perhaps I could be allowed to make one or two remarks. I suggest to Your Honour that a Chief Electoral Officer must maintain as part of his office a position of complete virtue and be undefiled by any kind of partisan politics. He seems to be contiguous, in his physical position, to the President of the Privy Council. I suggest that it might be possible for him to move around or to have some kind of mobility whereby he could advise the various parties in the House on a more equal basis than is presently the case.

The Chairman: I suggest that we have explored the point of order to the satisfaction of the committee. If arrangements of this kind are to be made, I would leave them to the members of the committee to negotiate privately.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, as I said a minute ago, I should like to make a few remarks on clause 7(1) which stipulates that the governor in council may appoint or remove from office a returning officer. This leads us to subclauses (2) and (3).

In those subclauses, we are not told what procedure must be followed to remove a returning officer from office. Paragraphs (c) (d) and (e) provide no procedure whereby reasons can be given to the government.

This means that the governor in council alone, in practice, may appoint or remove from office a returning officer, regardless of what the complaints may be. As for me, I would have valid and justifiable complaints to put forward. No procedure is provided in the law whereby I could have a returning officer removed. This is still the prerogative of the governor in council according to the legislation submitted again this year.

Actually, these amendments to the act are incomplete for they make no provision for enabling hon. members or anyone else to bring about the removal, supported by evidence, on the strength of reasonable and proven complaints, of a returning officer who might not have performed his functions normally.

I should like the President of the Privy Council to show me how one could, with proper evidence, recommend to the governor in council the removal of a returning officer who had repeatedly failed to do his duty.

I should very much like the President of the Privy Council to enlighten us on the procedure to be followed to have a returning officer removed under clause (3) (e).

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I thought at the end of the hon. member's remarks he referred to clause 7, subclause 3. I would point out that we have not yet reached that subclause.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: I can understand your point of view, Mr. Chairman, but since clause 7 (1) provides that the governor in council may appoint a new returning officer for any electoral district in which the office of returning officer becomes vacant, I should like the President of the Privy Council to give me some explanations.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I understood the hon. member to be referring to paragraphs (a) to (f) of subclause 3. Since we are on subclause 1, apart altogether from the Special Order of the House, I wonder if this is the right time to ask the question.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I stated earlier that I had another amendment to propose to clause 7 (1). Before I do that, I should like to congratulate government members for being here in such large numbers tonight. I think it demonstrates their keen interest in the subject of electoral reform.

I should also like to say that I anticipated the reply of the Government House Leader in negating my previous amendment and I am prepared to propose, with a great deal of magnanimity, a compromise amendment. I say it is a compromise amendment in the sense that I do not know whether my previous amendment was taken seriously. I know that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister suggested to me that I was just having fun with my previous amendment. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I would reply that, like the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I am serious even when smiling. It was not a facetious amendment.

I think my compromise amendment recognizes that we are discussing a very thorny political point. Because of the government's reaction, I wonder if they are really sincere about ruling non-partisanship out of the vital position of Chief Electoral Officer. What partisan advantage could accrue by avoiding the appointment of returning officers by the Chief Electoral Officer, who is himself supposed to be a non-partisan appointee of the Crown? What possible advantage could accrue to the government's having the Chief Electoral Officer, in whom I have a great deal of confidence, make these appointments?

• (8:50 p.m.)

Before I read this amendment I am prepared to release it so that government members and opposition members can discuss it or at least consider it. I do not suggest that the Chief Electoral Officer should appoint people who are devoid of political experience. The appointment of electoral workers, people like poll clerks, organizers, scrutineers and district returning officers, ought to be considered. The appointment of election workers of all the parties ought to be considered. There should be appointments from the Social Credit party, the New Democratic Party, the Progressive Conservative party and the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Because these people are interested in politics, they probably know far more about running elections than those who do not care about the electoral process. I suggest that if we appoint people who have taken an interest in one or other of our political parties or who, because of their close association with one or other political party have gained political experience, such appointments would be of advantage to the people of Canada. They ought to be appointed by the Governor in Council. I therefore move:

That clause 7 be amended by deleting subclause 1 and substituting therefor the following:

(1) The Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall appoint a returning officer for any new electoral district, and a new returning officer for any electoral district in which the office of returning officer becomes vacant, within the meaning of subsection

2. Such vacancy to be filled after the Chief Electoral Officer has publicly advertised the vacancy, invited applications and held open competition for the position.

I repeat what I said when speaking to my previous amendment. It is important that this electoral office should remain open and available to applicants, regardless of party, who are most competent to perform this very vital task.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the alternative amendment of the hon. member meets neither of the principal points I raised when speaking to his previous amendment. In our electoral system we are not without experience in putting the Chief Electoral Officer in the position where he must seek out and select as between individuals in a constituency. As I said before, the Chief Electoral Officer who occupied the position at the time the law was changed indicated that he would think it most unfortunate if he were again put in the position of having to make that choice. He was prepared to shift the choice on to the shoulders of the Governor in Council.

The second point which I raised, and which the hon. member has not considered, is that an open competition of this kind, particularly in circumstances where a quick appointment may be necessary, will not be effective and could well leave one or more constituencies without returning officers. Under the system which is in vogue we have the advantage, as the Chief Electoral Officer pointed out in the passage taken from the proceedings of the committee which the hon. member read, that we can efficiently fill vacancies when, as is often the case, there is a great rush, and thus make certain that each constituency has a returning officer before an election is held.

It seems to me that the amendment meets neither of the two points I raised earlier. It does not really deal with those two substantial objections, both of which arise on the basis of experience accepted by this House, which has been the basis of the Elections Act for some time.

An hon. Member: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I was taken by surprise when you asked me whether I wanted to raise a point of order. I thought we would keep on discussing the remark made by the hon. member for Shefford when he said that there is no provision in this bill that would enable me to secure the removal of a returning officer who had resorted, for instance, to unacceptable practices.

Therefore, I believe—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order, please. A point of order has been raised in committee and I wish to comment on it. It seems that we are involved in a dispute between two hon. members on the meaning of a clause we have not yet agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please. On reflection, it seems to me that the hon. member for Shefford was dealing with clause 7, subclause 3, and the point he has raised should be raised when we reach that subclause. At that point I will be prepared to recognize the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that you did not understand the meaning of my remark. There was certainly no intention on my part to try to pick a quarrel with the hon. member for Shefford, far from it. He asked a question to which I replied in a very friendly way, giving him at the same time a source of references. That is all. Let us leave it at that.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I would support the amendment that has been moved by my hon. friend for Fraser Valley West because I think it represents the sort of compromise that is required if we are to circumvent the sensitivity that is involved in straight political appointments of this kind. The President of the Privy Council has indicated that the Chief Electoral Officer is not anxious to become involved in the process of appointing returning officers. As I understand it, under the compromise amendment put forward by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, the ultimate responsibility lies in the hands of the Governor in Council and the Chief Electoral Officer would only be acting in an advisory capacity.

Speaking as one who has experienced eight elections, I can confirm the fact that the role of returning officer is of vital importance in ensuring the proper and efficient conduct of an election campaign. It seems to me that the Chief Electoral Officer, who has had very close association with the returning officers and, through them, with the candidates in the constituencies of Canada, might be able to channel the experience that has been gained by those who have participated in elections by ensuring that each candidate involved in the electoral process, or the representative of each of the parties contesting a constituency in an election, is consulted. In that way they could make recommendations as to who might be the most suitable person to handle this very sensitive task. This, I think, would get around the problem which concerns all hon. members with regard to clause 7. There is an amendment which indicates that the office is now to be made permanent, subject to certain reservations. I think this is an excellent compromise. The Chief Electoral Officer can consult the candidates or the representatives of the parties who have contested the election and make his recommendation to the Governor in council. It would then be the responsibility of the Governor in Council, in the final analysis, to make a choice.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I rise to add what I hope will be some reasonably convincing words in support of the motion moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, and favourable to what we regard as a compromise more acceptable to the President of the Privy Council than the motion we moved earlier. In reality, under the terms of this amendment, the Governor in Council still has the final say. Nevertheless, a measure of impartiality would have gone into the process of selection of these senior electoral officers.

I was a little worried earlier this evening in case the idea got around outside the chamber that there was a contest to see how many of their experienced people each political party could get hired by the Chief Electoral Officer. The point we were trying to make was this: there is nothing wrong in being partisan or in having experience of the political process on behalf of a political party. But the Chief Electoral Officer has to work with whoever is selected as a returning officer, and it seems to me he should have some say in the selection. If the President of the Privy Council would accept this amendment, I could think of a person who has been for a number of years an organizer in the Liberal party and who would make a first-class returning officer. He has never behaved in a vicious manner; he has always acted in a positive and constructive way, and he probably knows more about the election law in that province than does his returning officer.

An hon. Member: Then how is it he is a Liberal?

Mr. Benjamin: The fact that he has come up against honest competition might have helped. The election law is reviewed every eight or ten years. There is not a party in this chamber or outside which does not agree the time is long past due to place in the hands of a person in whom we all have confidence the responsibility for recommending the officers he would like to work with him. The Chief Electoral Officer might provide three choices to the Governor in Council. He might recommend two or three people after considering their abilities and holding a competition. Whoever is chosen, he will have had some say as to the calibre of the people who will fill these senior positions. If the Governor in Council, in its wisdom, was not satisfied with the recommendations, it could ask the Chief Electoral Officer to submit further names. So the point raised by the minister is met by the proposal in this amendment. We would in fact present an electoral law which finally provided for a new method of selecting the 264 people who will run and supervise our election procedures in the constituencies of Canada.

If it would make the amendment more acceptable, the word "shall" in the fourth line could be replaced by the word "may". The point is to provide an element of examination and selection by the Chief Electoral Officer prior to a recommendation to the Privy Council. We believe that here is an opportunity to make an improvement in the law, in a bipartisan manner, for the first time since 1962 or 1963—and if that would not be refreshing to the public of Canada, I do not know what would be. I urge hon. members in all quarters of the House carefully to consider this proposal.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, I can hardly believe there has been a more important bill before the Commons this session than the present measure, one which is concerned with a vital part of the democratic process. All of us have an interest in making sure it is the best statute we can possibly enact. As an important election official, a returning officer should be non-partisan in the performance of his duties and we should do our best to ensure that this will be the case.

I do not know that I can support the amendment which has been made, because I have not had the opportunity to consider the practical difficulties which may be involved. I appreciate the extent of the problem mentioned by the President of the Privy Council. Nevertheless, I would urge that these should not be partisan appointments. There should be a method of ensuring that those appointed perform their tasks fairly. Since it is unlikely that this massive bill will get through the House this evening, I wonder whether this clause might be stood, to give hon. members an opportunity to see whether an amendment could be worked out which would be fair to all parties. It may be that we on this side will not hold office indefinitely, though it is hard for me to contemplate the possibility of losing it, except on the basis that all things change. I would like to feel that the important office of returning officer in any riding is determined on a basis which is obviously fair and acceptable to all members of the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. Paul's commends itself in my judgment and that of my hon. friends. I hope the minister will respond to the question we asked before we conclude this matter. If he is deficient in information, I imagine he has means of getting it. If he is deficient in courtesy, I have no immediate suggestion to make.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Unfortunately, I have no record of the number of returning officers we replaced the last time the positions were declared vacant, nor do I have any record of the number replaced in 1960 when the hon. gentleman was chairman of the committee and caused all the positions to be vacated at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He was not chairman then.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am prepared to inquire from the Chief Electoral Officer whether I can get that information from him. Perhaps we could get that information for the hon. member.

• (9:10 p.m.)

With regard to the comments of the hon. member for St. Paul's and other hon. gentlemen in regard to the importance of being able to act quickly and effectively, this is perhaps illustrated by the following figures indicating experience during the last six general election campaigns with respect to filling of vacancies in the two-week period on either side of the date the writ is issued. In 1957 there was one returning officer appointed in that period; in 1958 there were 17 returning officers appointed; in 1962 there were three; in 1963 there were 12; in 1965 there were four; in 1968 there were 14.

I think it is clear, particularly in view of the fairly strict qualifications in terms of residence and otherwise of returning officers set out later in the section, that this is a situation wherein there has to be some swiftness. In the proposal suggested in the amendment, which deals with advertising the vacancy, in the coming and going and putting of names, having them rejected, and so on, this swiftness does not exist.

I suggest that the amendment does not effectively deal with the fact that there is a need in each election campaign to act swiftly. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West commented that he had suffered no disadvantage from returning officers, whatever the existing system might be, and this seems to me the best answer. It has operated fairly and as the Chief Electoral Officer himself has said, this is the most efficient method.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief intervention. I would suggest that the President of the Privy Council, in consultation with the Chief Electoral Officer and his legal advisers, consider drafting a further subsection to cover the necessity for occasionally appointing returning officers in a crisis situation through the Governor in Council, subject to the procedure outlined in this amendment being pursued after the general election is completed. I am sure that such an amendment would not be beyond his inventiveness. I hope that this suggestion, if it has not already occurred to him, will be considered and the clause stood so that he may draft such an amendment.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I can well understand why the NDP are sponsoring this amendment, it is because there is no chance of that party ever assuming power. In 1960 the present loyal opposition were quite sure they would maintain power and they made no suggestion along the lines of this amendment. It is unfortunate that, having reached a position so devoid of hope of ever being in power, they are now supporting this amendment. However, I say to them, "Take heart; this may not be the situation forever."

I intervene in this debate because I have heard it said, on this side of the House as well as on the other, that this amendment seems to be a rational one, on the assumption that the Chief Electoral Officer wants to be burdened with making this choice, supposedly through some sort of open competition. If he were to appoint a certain number of NDP'ers or Conservatives, there would be a holocaust of criticism from the other party, and this he does not want. Where is he going to find refuge? After all, it is the Chief Electoral Officer who is now guiding the bill, with the assistance of the President of the Privy Council; I do not think it is the other way around. He does not want to be saddled with this burden.

The suggestion was made that the final choice was that of the Governor in Council. Imagine a situation where the Chief Electoral Officer has made a judicious choice of returning officers, and yet the Governor in Council—the cabinet—rejects them. This would put an officer of Parliament in confrontation with the cabinet. The fact is that the Governor in Council does not have the final choice; such suggestion is a fallacy. The choice has to be entirely the responsibility of the Chief Electoral Officer, and he does not want this responsibility. Members of the party in power have, by chance, been elected returning officers and they have been good ones. No one has ever complained that they were inefficient or that they had done something wrong. I suggest we have had a good system and that no one has devised a better one, one that does not involve confrontation between the Chief Electoral Officer and the government of Canada.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the experienced and inexperienced views of a number of members who have spoken on this matter. I was particularly interested in the remarks made by the last speaker. He pointed out that since the system had worked rather well in the past, it should, if I understood him correctly, be continued. I was surprised at his remarks in view of the analogous situation described by the Minister of Justice in regard to the appointment of judges. No one wants judges appointed on a partisan basis. It has been suggested that a new system be devised whereby the bar associations recommend to the Governor in Council appointees to the bench. I do not think I have heard any disagreement from anybody to this proposal. The situation there is analogous to the one here.

This amendment suggests that the Chief Electoral Officer recommends one or two people to the Governor in Council. I cannot understand how any serious objection could be taken to this. As I say, it is similar to the proposal of the Minister of Justice in regard to the appointment of judges. I think it is a splendid idea and I cannot see why the governing party should object to it. However, under the present regime we have become accustomed to the attitude of the government that no member in any part of the House other than on the government side has any ideas of merit to put forward. There is never any disposition on the government side of the House to accept suggestions made by members in other quarters of the House.

The President of the Privy Council has very eloquently tried to explain that there might be a situation where there is no time to make an appointment. Personally, I cannot swallow this argument and I do not think anybody else can. All I can say is that the old motto of the Liberal party—power, patronage and perpetuity—has been eloquently exemplified by the President of the Privy Council and his cohorts.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up very much time. I do not think we are going to change the system one way or the other. I suppose in respect of the returning officer of a district 50 per cent of the names in urban ridings come from sitting members and 50 per cent from the other parties. In the rural ridings they all come from those who were lucky enough to win the previous election.

As I see it—and I have had experience of several elections—those people who happen to enumerate someone land up in the headquarters of the particular parties they want to land up in. I do not think we should waste any more time. We know this is going to be a partisan matter. I do not mind something being partisan if I know about it. But I did not like that "independent" redistribution when we knew that certain judges were above partisanship but yet they carved up Bow River constituency into five separate ridings; and they were so "independent" they received a phone call from Pickersgill before it happened. That is the kind of "independence" that I like.

I do not mind partisanship. I have always believed we should be clean. The New Democratic Party is above reproach. We had them in Saskatchewan. They were very clean fellows. We never knew of any partisanship there. The provincial treasurer graduated with me, and we were both broke together. He left with $2 million or $3 million to live elsewhere after he was provincial treasurer. All this political morality had better end now. I am ready to get on with the other business.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member for Calgary North to enumerate the $2 million or $3 million situation in chapter and verse because if he is right I am sure he will want to lay charges, and back up his mouth with action, against anybody present or past in the government of Saskatchewan.

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I usually understand what the President of the Privy Council says, but I was not sure whether he was completely turning down the suggestion of the hon. member for St. Paul's. If he did not, I should like to press that the point be considered, namely, that this clause and the amendment thereto be allowed to stand. It will not take any more time to have the vote tomorrow than to have it now. In view of the interest on all sides of the House in the possibility of there being a draft that would meet the point of view, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council would now agree to let this clause stand.

The Chairman: Order, please. There has been a suggestion made in the committee that subclause 1 of clause 7 stand, plus the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. The procedure is that such a suggestion is not in order unless there is unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: There is not unanimous consent. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Rose) negatived: Yeas, 31; nays, 51.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment defeated.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, many people are certainly far from pleased with clause 7 as it now stands, even if the amendment has just been defeated.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

In my opinion, the governor in council who is responsible for appointing returning officers could find a solution that would please as many people as possible, without having to make political appointments. I think we all agree on that, since we have known our returning officers in many constituencies and since in the past we have unfortunately seen too many political appointments. And if we pass this legislation in its present form such a practice might be continued.

I have prepared an amendment which, in my opinion, might satisfy everybody, if Parliament still trusts its judges. The act clearly states that if there is a doubt about the election of a candidate, it is always possible to ask for a judicial recount. We have enough confidence in the integrity of judges to assume that recounts are made honestly.

As the office of returning officer is extremely important since the result of an election depends upon him, his integrity must be above suspicion. Moreover, he must not be a recognized politician or a low-rate politician who has become famous through dubious election practices and who is being rewarded for his services by his party.

That is certainly possible, because I have seen it myself. That is why I have had to live through elections with returning officers whose ability was doubtful but whose political past was not.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if we have confidence in judges to make a judicial recount in an intelligent and honest manner, it would be normal when it comes to filling such an important office as that of returning officer to call upon the integrity and ability of judges.

It is also a fact that judges in a judicial district know many persons of impeccable integrity. They might therefore be better qualified to appoint returning officers. The governor in council would no longer have to rely on political say-so, tending to favour friends. Political affiliation should no longer be taken into account, but rather the fact that judges can best identify those who are involved in politics, when such an appointment has to be made.

That is why I suggest that a committee of three Superior Court judges sitting in the judicial district concerned be called upon to appoint the returning officer when there is a vacancy. If three judges in a given judicial district are in charge of appointing a returning officer, I will trust their good judgment as they will certainly be able to find a competent individual.

This is why, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to propose to the House the following amendment:

That clause 7(1) be amended as follows, by deleting the words "The Governor in Council" and substituting therefor "A committee of three Superior Court judges, of the judicial district concerned, appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer".

Such a committee could appoint a returning officer for any new electoral district. So, everybody would be pleased and Parliament would demonstrate that it still has confidence in the judges it has appointed.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

An hon. Member: Would you please read the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

[Translation]

The Chairman: The member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) moves:

That clause 7(1) be amended as follows, by deleting the words "The Governor in Council" and substituting therefor "A committee of three Superior Court judges, of the judicial district concerned, appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer,".

[English]

Amendment (Mr. Rondeau) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 59.

Subclause 1 agreed to.

[Translation]

The Chairman: I declare the amendment defeated.

[English]

On clause 7, subclause 2—Vacancy.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, before we leave clause 7 I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in connection with subclause 2 which deals with vacancy. Subclause 2 reads as follows:

The office of the returning officer is not vacant unless he dies, or, with prior permission of the Chief Electoral Officer, resigns, or unless he is removed from office for cause within the meaning of subsection 3.

Could the President of the Privy Council assure the committee that he is satisfied that this provision gives sufficient leeway for a returning officer to request in writing of the Chief Electoral Officer—without going into great detail—his release by the Chief Electoral Officer from his duties? Would not the act be clearer if it were amended to indicate that a returning officer could, upon written request giving cause prior to the date of the issue of the writ, be released from his duties if the cause were satisfactory to the Chief Electoral Officer?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I understand the practice has been, when the request has been submitted either before or just after the writ has been issued, for no inquiry to be made as to the underlying reason and the resignation is accepted. After the writ, of course, there is a further consideration because the office has to be protected. But my understanding is that it is currently not a problem.

Mr. Forrestall: So you are satisfied.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I will start by admitting that my intimate knowledge of English grammar is scant, but the wording of the first part of subclause 2 seems to be, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre put it to me earlier, a bit lousy. It reads:

The office of a returning officer is not vacant unless he dies—

Who is "he"? Is it the office, or the returning officer? Is it the office that dies, or the returning officer? Surely the office does not die, but rather the individual. I mention the point in order to reflect the opinion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is highly expert in the field of grammatical construction.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would hesitate to argue points of grammar, but it seems to me that if you refer to impersonal objects like the office, the proper pronoun would be "it" rather than "he". On that basis I think it refers to the occupant of the office; and "he", of course, under the Interpretation Act, can in the appropriate case mean "she."

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It is still lousy.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclause 2 carry?

Subclause 2 agreed to.

On clause 7, subclause 3—Removal from Office.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a comment in response to the hon. member for Shefford who raised a question about subclause 3. I draw his attention to page 150 of the draft, clause 59, which provides for the report of the Chief Electoral Officer including every statement referred to in subclause 2 respecting the conduct of an election or of any election officer that has been submitted to him, with such recommendations, if any, as he may see fit to make thereon. Therefore, the basis of the cause for removal would be such as is made in the report of the Chief Electoral Officer. With regard to the amendment that is being made, it strengthens the hand of the Chief Electoral Officer vis-à-vis a returning officer who may be recalcitrant in completing a revision of the boundaries of a polling division, and gives him authority to remove the recalcitrant returning officer if such should be the case. In this way, the job of revising the boundaries may be carried out effectively.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subclause 3 carry?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Paragraph (3) reads that a returning officer may be removed from office if he——has at any time after his appointment, been guilty of politically partisan conduct—

Would it not be better if the provision read, "has been found guilty by a court"? Who is to judge whether he has been found guilty of improper partisan conduct?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am advised that the phrase has been in the act for a considerable time and that there are virtually no precedents in this regard. Perhaps we can regard ourselves as having been fortunate.

Mr. Woolliams: The provision says that the Governor in Council may remove from office any returning officer who has at any time after his appointment been guilty of politically partisan conduct, whether or not in the course of the performance of his duties under this act. It seems to me it is obvious, and I think that the President of the Privy Council knows what it means. If the cabinet, or Governor in Council, found the man was partisan, he would be out; and if they found that whatever he did was proper, he would be in.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I think it might be appropriate, particularly in reference to the point that has been raised, to bring the attention of members of the committee to the fact that this question was not lightly dealt with by the committee. Indeed, it occupied considerable time of the committee, particularly with respect to the onus which it places on the Chief Electoral Officer in being a final judge in this matter.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The final authority must be the Governor in Council, but the bill provides that the removal is on the basis of advice by the Chief Electoral Officer to the Governor in Council. Granted, the word is a permissive one; it says "may remove." I wonder if it would be wise to pass this paragraph without members of the committee being aware that in accepting the amendment we are perpetuating a system in our electoral act which places an area of judgment in the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, one that I do not particularly like to mention. I am certain that the officer in question does not particularly like to have this type of onus placed on his shoulders.

For their edification I would refer members of the committee to volume 8 of the proceedings of the Privileges and Elections Committee. I have never been able to figure out the paging of these things, but it says 8:20, 8:21, 8:22 and 8:23. This question might be considered the next time the act is to be amended, even if it is in ten years' time.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the President of the Privy Council to find out if in the event of a returning officer being removed, particularly in the case of alleged political activity following his appointment to office, he has any appeal procedures open to him.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would think not.

Subclause 3 agreed to.

Subclause 4 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 5 as revised carry?

On clause 7, subclause 5—Appointment within limited period.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the purpose here is to impose a sanction against any delay in making an appointment, and it states in fact that an appointment should be made within 60 days.

Subclause 5 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I apologize for being late, but on page 14 of the bill, under subclause 3(e), it says:

"has, at any time after his appointment, been guilty of...partisan conduct—"

I should like to put a question to the President of the Privy Council. What would happen if a returning officer were also engaged in provincial politics. That would then be political partisanship. Would he have a right to do that?

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it is very likely that would be political partisanship, at whatever level it is engaged in.

Clause 7 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 8. Shall subclause—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I would move a motion at this stage. I move that the bill, subject to the sections which are subject to amendment, be now approved, it having been studied by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: That procedure, in effect, as I understand it, was adopted by way of an order of the House earlier this day. Nevertheless, we should go through the clauses but without debate. That is the procedure we have adopted, namely, that the sections that were approved by the committee—and those sections, more particularly, not amended—are automatically carried. I take it that is by order of the House.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If I could just make it clear, Mr. Chairman, it is either the sections or parts that have been sidelined, plus any part in respect of which a member, on rising, can say he has an amendment. So we are not confined to those sections or parts which are sidelined. If there is another part or section regarding which an hon. member intends to propose an amendment, it would be appropriate for him to say so at the start and then it would be considered.

Mr. Woolliams: That is a good understanding, that basically all sections where there are no amendments, by order of the House are automatically approved; and if there are amendments to be moved, other than those that are known, if hon. members now file them with the Clerk so that they be known, we can get into debate on them. But the rest of the bill is approved. Is that what we are doing right now?

The Chairman: It might be useful to remind the committee of the order adopted earlier this day. I will read its final paragraph, which I think will clarify the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary North:

> Provided that any clause, subclause or other provision referred to in paragraph two above—
> That is all other clauses and other provisions.
> —may be brought under consideration or reconsideration by any member who rises and proposes a motion to amend any such clause, subclause or other provision of the bill that may be accepted by the Chair.

In other words, all sections are open to amendment but that would be the only consideration on which a section, not lined, can be discussed in committee. It would be by way of amendment to it.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Further to that, and in order to make this determination clear, may one move an amendment to any of the clauses which are not sidelined?

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I could shorten the procedure. Could we have a list, now, of the clauses subject to amendment? Those members who are going to move amendments should name the clauses concerned so that we know where we are. Then the rest of the bill is automatically passed and we can get on with the business of the House. That is my motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I remind the hon. member for Calgary North and other members of the committee that this matter was the subject of discussion among the parties and that the House order, which after all does govern this committee, was thoroughly worked out and agreed to unanimously. One of the suggestions, when we were discussing the matter, was that there be given in advance a list of the clauses to which hon. members might wish to speak and move amendments, but that suggestion was not agreed upon. Rather, the proposal that you have read out from the chair was what we agreed to, that we go through the clauses and call them one by one. If there is no amendment to a clause, it is carried without being put. But if a member has an amendment to make, he has a right to rise. There was no requirement in the order that advance notice be given.

Mr. Woolliams: May I speak to that?

The Chairman: I would point out to the hon. member the procedural difficulty we would encounter if we followed his suggestions. The committee is now governed by an order of the House. That order can only be changed by the House itself. If the hon. member wants to move a motion with Mr. Speaker in the chair, that is certainly a possibility. But I am afraid the motion suggested by the hon. member cannot be put now.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: May I speak to that, Mr. Chairman? I think it can be. With the greatest respect, this is a refinement of the suggestion. In its order, the House has set out those sections that are not subject to amendment and can be called, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said. If all members would come forward with their amendments to these sections, according to the House order, and approve those not in that category, we would probably complete 90 per cent of our work. With the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, I suggest I am not violating any order of the House. Suppose there are 90 sections read out, and 10 are subject to amendment—we can pass 80. Surely members can get up and say what they are doing. If a certain group or party wants to deal with it clause by clause, I am ready to sit and do that. But surely we are businessmen and can run the House in a businesslike manner. I say again, we are not violating any order of the House. Those sections that are in a package may be subject to amendment in the minds of members, so let them name those sections. But let those of us who have read and studied the bill approve these clauses and get down to brass tacks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I share the desire of the hon. member to get the bill through all appropriate stages and focus upon this motion with the greatest possible speed, but I am subject to the agreement referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I feel I should adhere to it.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 8, subclauses 1 to 5 inclusive.

Clause 8, subclauses 1 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 8, subclause 10, as amended.

On clause 8, subclause 10—Additional election clerk.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I understand that the practice referred to here has been carried on for nearly 20 years under the discretionary powers conferred upon the Chief Electoral Officer. What we are doing in this section is putting into the statute what has been practised heretofore.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest an amendment to subclause 10, to delete in lines 22 and 23 the words "mentioned in schedule III". What I seek to accomplish can be done this way or it can be done with respect to a particular constituency. It can be done by seeking to amend schedule III when we get to it, but we thought it would be easier to do it this way because there may be other constituencies in the same situation. I present this amendment on behalf of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni who was concerned about this matter because of the geography of his constituency. Regretfully, he had to enter hospital today and will be there for a few days.

As the President of the Privy Council has said, the opportunity for the Chief Electoral Officer to make these decisions has existed for some time and has worked very well. But we are now embarking on a new venture in the Canada Elections Act, namely, proxy voting. Under the proxy voting structure, in certain constituencies it was felt necessary to give the elector an opportunity to apply to the returning officer or to one of the two or more election clerks who may be appointed for the constituencies named in the schedule. Comox-Alberni is not mentioned in the schedule. It is one of the constituencies within which there shall be a nomination day or polling day. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni says this is not really necessary because of the communication that exists between constituencies with regard to ballot-boxes and the like, but he felt it was necessary because of the scattered nature of the riding.

If we were to remove the reference here to schedule III, it would permit the Chief Electoral Officer to use his discretionary powers in designated constituencies to appoint an election clerk in addition to the regular election clerk already available. This would make things easier for constituents of Comox-Alberni, many of whom are fishermen and prospectors who may wish to exercise their right to the proxy vote. There may be other constituencies falling in the same category, so we felt it better to raise the matter at his juncture. Perhaps it is appropriate to do so at this time because it is close to ten o'clock and unless it is immediately acceptable to the President of the Privy Council it affords us the opportunity to hold it over. This is the reasoning behind it. It would be of great assistance to other constituencies as well as Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The point seems to be well taken, Mr. Chairman and we would be quite agreeable to the amendment.

Subclause 10 as amended agreed to.

Clause 8 as amended agreed to.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I may rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, to get the floor on what I consider to be an extremely important amendment which I hope to move when we reach the appropriate clause? I know it will require some consideration and I took the liberty of speaking to the President of the Privy Council about it a few days ago. I also spoke to the Chief Electoral Officer about it by telephone. I would indicate in an informal way what the amendment is. It would seek to amend clause 14. In order that there may be an opportunity to examine it this evening and tomorrow morning, if I am allowed to make representations now, hon. members will be better informed tomorrow when we reach the clause. I wonder if the committee would be kind enough to give me that opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 14, subclause 4, paragraph (e)—Disqualifications.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I could file the amendment now so that members would have it available. At page 24, clause 14, subclause 4, paragraph (e) reads:

(e) every person undergoing punishment as an inmate in any penal institution for the commission of any offence—

Subclause 4 provides that such persons shall not be eligible to vote at an election. As was indicated upon second reading of the bill, the purpose of the amendment is to afford, for rehabilitative and other reasons, inmates in our penal institutions the right to participate in the democratic process of elections.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if there would be a disposition on the part of the committee to seek the permission of the House to sit for perhaps an additional hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping to get the floor to make that suggestion, since we only have 84 more clauses to pass.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous agreement to sit for one more hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Perhaps we might proceed by not noticing the clock. The correct procedure is to rise and report progress and then seek leave to sit for an hour. But if the committee is agreed—

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I think that is agreeable, Mr. Chairman, as long as it is understood that it will be one hour and that at 11 o'clock Your Honour will notice it is ten o'clock. Also, we have to consider the position of the "late show." I wonder whether there is disposition to dispose of that as well; otherwise we shall not be finished until 11.30.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I take it that there is disposition to postpone the "late show" to another day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rose: On a point of clarification, Mr. Chairman, I did not hear your remarks relating to the "late show". It is my view that this interesting portion of our parliamentary procedure should be cancelled for this evening. Personally, I would be in favour of that if we agreed to extend the sitting for one hour.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 9 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 10, subclause 1.

On clause 10, subclause 1—Revision of boundaries of polling divisions.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, subclause 1 has been redrafted. I might say, for purposes of clarification, that it has been the subject of reference in the Auditor General's report and the redrafting has been for the purpose of meeting the financial comments which have been made.

Subclause 1 agreed to.

On clause 10, subclause 2—Polling divisions with 250 electors.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the reduction from 350 to 250 electors under paragraph (b) of subclause 2 is to allow for increases in population between the revision and the election, and to prevent too many split polls. The previous figure was 350 electors. It has been reduced to 250 to make split polls less likely.

Subclause 2 agreed to.

On clause 10, subclause 3—Polling divisions with more than 250 electors.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the explanation here is that it is possible to have a large institutional poll but, in a hospital or convalescent home where the poll is not too large, the anonymity of the vote might very well be lost. This subclause would permit the votes of such persons to be added to those of a great many others; thus there would be an attempt to preserve the anonymity of the vote.

Subclause 3 agreed to.

Clause 10 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 11.

Clause 11, subclauses 1 and 2 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 11, subclause 3—Exceptions in certain cases.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, we have already referred to the question of urban polls which are still rural in nature, and to rural polls which have become part of the city. This amendment is to permit the Chief Electoral Officer to make the necessary changes.

Subclause 3 agreed to.

Subclause 4 agreed to.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I did not rise more quickly, but I wish to move an amendment to subclauses 1 and 2 of clause 11. Perhaps I might read the amendment. It is as follows:

That clause 11 be amended by:

(a) In subclause 1 after the word "more" in line 29, adding the words 'or any municipal district, or part thereof, served by postal walk.'

(b) In subclause 2, after the word 'more' in line 34, inserting the words 'or any municipal district, or part thereof, served by postal walk.'

I move this amendment on behalf of my colleague for Fraser Valley West whose suburban constituency, in common with that of other hon. members of the House, in part is still considered rural. There are portions not incorporated into a city or town even though the population is 5,000 or more. These one or more portions are in a municipal district and are looked upon as rural districts. The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that suburban areas which are not incorporated towns or cities but which are served by a postal walk, shall be declared to be urban polls rather than rural polls. One of the ramifications would be appointing two enumerators per poll, rather than one. That will probably allow a better job of enumeration to be done in those places which because of their density of population would otherwise probably be part of a city or incorporated town with a population of 5,000 or more, as defined in the act.

We felt that saying an area served by a postal walk was obviously the kind of area which is urban, even if it were in a municipal district, would allow it to be treated as such under the other terms of the bill. I hope members will agree that this amendment will be useful in a large number of constituencies where there are areas, bordering on cities or towns, which are still municipal or rural districts.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Having taken counsel in this regard, I am of the opinion that the power expressed in the clause is already broad enough to cover the objective which is sought. If, in fact, in the judgment of the Chief Electoral Officer a poll has the character of being urban, it will be so treated according to the general definition in the statute, whatever the nature of the postal service. There is power to make a declaration without the need to specify in the manner suggested. The change proposed is, therefore, already included in the power which the Chief Electoral Officer would have if this clause in its revised form were adopted.

Mr. Benjamin: Would a request have to be made, on the part of the candidate or the returning officer of the Chief Electoral Officer, to have a poll declared an urban poll, or would it be done automatically?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that the clause would only operate on request.

Mr. MacLean: What arrangements are made for co-ordination between federal and provincial returning officers in the designation of polling divisions? I have in mind a situation where a given area is divided, say, into ten polling divisions by the federal returning officer; then a few weeks later the provincial returning officer divides it into nine polling divisions, resulting into a conflict of boundaries and general confusion for electors. Has any thought been given to means whereby some rationale could be established which would eliminate this confusion where possible?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would draw the hon. member's attention to clause 10, subclause 2 paragraph (a), where it states that a returning officer shall give due consideration to the polling divisions established by provincial and municipal authorities. I gather that in a practical way there is this exchange of information.

Mr. Benjamin: Can the minister tell me what part of the bill gives authority to the Chief Electoral Officer, at the request of a returning officer, to declare a poll to be urban? Is subclause 4 the one which covers the point?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Subclause 3.

Mr. Benjamin: In that case, I think we would agree to withdraw the amendment on the basis of the assurance that the power already exists.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have leave to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) withdrawn.

Clause 11 agreed to.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 12.

Clause 12, subclause 1 agreed to.

On clause 12, subclause 2—Lists of electors.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I point out that this is an innovation. Hitherto it was not possible to get the lists of armed forces' electors, who will now be voting under the special voting rules. Subclause 2 will make it possible for a candidate in a constituency to get a list of names and addresses of those individuals who will be voting abroad in respect of that particular constituency.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this is one of the fruits of the committee's labours of which I am very proud. I think this is a very good step toward civilianizing the whole process of taking the non-civilian vote, if I may use that contradictory expression. It might have been better if in drafting it had been spelled out that the returning officer would make a proper transmission of these documents, but this is nevertheless a distinct improvement. I believe it will make for better liaison with this sector of the electorate which so often seems to be lost sight of by those who are seeking public office.

Subclause 2 agreed to.

Subclauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

Clause 12 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 13.

On clause 13, subclause 1—Registry and application for registration.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, clause 13 introduces into our system the innovation of the registration of political parties, and I think the subclauses substantially speak for themselves.

Subclause 1 agreed to.

Subclauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 13, subclause 4—Prohibitions against registration.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, one of my colleagues has an amendment which is very important, if he can find it before I do. Since the government in its "wisdom" made a distinct change in number from 26 to 75, I think it was, there is now in subclause 4 (a) and (b) a prohibition, a restraint against the possibility of a political party changing its name. I think this is a bit iniquitous and is perhaps dangerous.

My colleague will speak to this matter once he finds his motion and moves it; but putting it very simply, he is seeking the deletion of paragraphs (a) and (b) of subclause 4. I would think it quite conceivable that a political party might want to change its name so as to include a name that is used by some other party. I cannot conceive of our party ever calling itself the old democrats, but if it did it would be unfortunate if a technicality in the act caused the Chief Electoral Officer to make this impossible of acceptance. Long before my time in this party, it was called the Liberal-Conservatives, though I do not think we would ever call the party that again. However, I would not want to be prohibited or restrained from so doing if we should become so frivolous.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Would the hon. member indicate in what way the change of the number of candidates from 26 to 75 would require this change?

Mr. Macquarrie: I think the mathematical fact should hit the minister fairly straight between the eyes. There is a great difference there.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move the following amendment:

That section 4 of clause 13 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

The Chief Electoral Officer shall not register a political party where the name of the political party includes the word "independent".

Amendment (Mr. Forrestall) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 34.

Subclauses 4 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 13, subclause 8.

On clause 13, subclause 8—Deletions from registry.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment to subclause 8, for two reasons. One reason, which is not the most important, is that we consider there is a real conflict in this clause. Paragraph (b) of subclause 8 states:

> after the twenty-eighth day before polling day, delete from the registry any registered party that > did not, on the twenty-eighth day before polling day at the election, have candidates officially nominated in at least seventy-five electoral districts of Canada.

Then subparagraph (ii) states:

Mr. Chairman, we believe there is a serious conflict here because in all but 21 constituencies nomination day closes 21 days before polling day, not 28 days before polling day. Any political party in this House or any political party which might be in existence and which is not now in this House could quite readily nominate 75 candidates in that seven-day period between the twenty-first day and the twenty-eighth day. In fact, this has been known to happen. In previous years parties now represented in this House deliberately planned nominating conventions in a short space of time in an effort to create a political impact on the public in a province or in a given part of Canada. I throw that out as an example of what has happened in the past and might happen in the future.

I suppose the point I make could be thrown out by saying that a political party would only need to advance its mass nominations by seven days in order to have sufficient candidates nominated before 28 days before polling day. But the essential point is, so far as the conflict in the figure of 75 and the number of days before polling day in which they must be nominated, is concerned, that there is a seven-day period during which candidates may still be nominated by a political party, but in the course of those seven days, the difference between 28 and 21 days, they will lose the right to have their party affiliation on the ballot even though they may have been before that time legally registered as a political party under the terms of the act. I put that point forward for the consideration of the President of the Privy Council and members of this committee, to see whether there is some way in which we can solve the problem.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Now I would like to come to the second and more pertinent point of my argument regarding the necessity for an amendment. The Standing Committee report, under recommendation No. 29, recommended that political parties in Canada wishing to endorse candidates for election to the House of Commons should be registered with the Chief Electoral Officer. In addition, any new party that wishes to be identified on the ballot paper must have candidates in at least 10 per cent of the total number of electoral districts of Canada. If my memory serves me correctly, that was a unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee. The government in its wisdom chose not to agree with that recommendation and inserted the figure 75 instead of the figure recommended by the committee, which was 26.4 or, to round out the figure, 27, in order to retain the privilege of having the party affiliation designated on the ballot.

I appreciate to some extent the arguments put forward by the President of the Privy Council and others on second reading, that there could be a danger once this country makes provision to control election expenses, and that there would be some necessity for making safeguards to prevent frivolity of political parties such as the "rhinoceros party" or other such parties that are formed overnight or a few days before a general election in order to secure public funds.

I submit in all sincerity that the political affiliation on the ballot of a recognized political party which has properly adhered to or abided by all the regulations of this bill should be completely separate from any consideration regarding public funds or control of election expenses. I am fully prepared to agree that there is a need for a higher level of safeguard regarding the expenditure of public funds than just fielding 27 candidates, and I would not argue on that score with any member of the House. However, it seems to me that a new political party or one that is presently in existence but is not represented in this chamber—and there but for the grace of God go any of our parties two or three elections from now when one of our parties may be in the position of having less than 12 members in the House—might not have 75 candidates nominated 28 days before election day and would thus lose the privilege that they may have held for a number of years.

It seems to me there was a great deal of unanimity of feeling among members of the committee that it is an essential addition to our election law that the party affiliation be designated on the ballot. All members of the committee wanted to ensure that there be minimal obstruction to retaining that privilege. Therefore, my amendment is as follows:

That clause 13 be amended by deleting from subclause 8 paragraph (b) (ii) in line 26, the words "seventy five" and substituting therefor the words "twenty seven".

First, this complies with the unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee which spent more hours on this bill than will committee of the whole and discussed this matter all the way from 75 down to 10 candidates in the field. In fact, I think it was even suggested that you should have 100 candidates in the field in order to retain your party affiliation on the ballot. But the committee felt that aside from any consideration of public expenditure and control of election expenses, the safeguards should be minimal so that any party with a semblance of credibility could have its party affiliation appear on the ballot.

A party that attempted to attain party affiliation on the ballot in a frivolous manner, or in a manner that would cause our electoral process to lose the esteem in which it is held, could have much difficulty in fielding even 27 candidates. I am sure many of us can think of events in past history where groups of that sort attempted to demean our electoral process or to participate in it in a frivolous manner, but they failed to field even 10, 12 or 15 candidates. I do not think 27 is too low a figure for any group to form a party, and such a party should have the privilege of having its party affiliation appear on the ballot, provided that party abides by the other provisions of the Elections Act.

I plead with the President of the Privy Council and other hon. members who spoke on second reading that there is no reason to connect this figure with control of election expenses or expenditure of public funds for electoral purposes. All of us are proud of our political affiliation. There may be times when we are not so proud in that respect, but we do not talk about them. The least we can do is make it easier for other Canadians to have that pride.

Members of a party now in this House may face great misfortune in years to come, and at that time they would still want their party affiliation to appear on the ballot. I hope the President of the Privy Council changes his mind a little bit, say by 40 degrees if not 180 degrees. If he cannot be persuaded to accept the figure of 27, let him look again at the 75 figure, because any party can have difficulty fielding 75 candidates in seven days.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances it seems to me that we may have something more to talk about here. Therefore, it would be good to stand clause 13(8) so that we may have further consultations and see if some agreement can be arrived at before the House sits tomorrow.

Mr. Benjamin: Would the minister seriously spend the night thinking of the number 27?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): And I suggest that the hon. member think of 75.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, since someone would like this clause to stand, I wonder if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), in his discussions with the other party leaders or their spokesmen, would not be well advised to look into a question which was overlooked in committee and which has to do with the political affiliation of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Unless I am mistaken, the passage of clause 13 will mean that each candidate of a recognized party will be identified with his party. At the last election, the Speaker of the House of Commons ran as an independant and, since we have decided to indicate the names of the political parties, we have done away with any reference to the address and the occupation of the candidate. In my opinion, perhaps we should consider the possibility of making an exception in the case of the Speaker and enter him as being politically unaffiliated in order to prevent someone with the same name from running as an independent candidate in the same riding.

All political parties have realized the necessity of omitting the political affiliation of the Speaker whose name and occupation should appear instead on the ballot paper.

• (10:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman of the committee bringing this matter to our attention. We will give it further consideration.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I should like to commend the previous speaker for his suggestion. My impression is vague now, at 10.30 at night, but I think already we have met one of the concerns within the act in terms of the ballot. It is provided that it is not necessary that any designation be placed on the ballot in connection with the name of the candidate. That might look after one point raised by the chairman of the committee.

There is one other point which I would ask members of the committee to consider. My mind is open on this amendment and I gather the distinguished President of the Privy Council's mind is open as well, which surprises me a little. When we were discussing this question in committee there was some concern that it would permit easy access to the formation of regional parties which would be coloured as such in terms of their impact on the Canadian scene. There were several excellent reasons why the figure of 75 was suggested. While this particular section is stood overnight I would ask hon. members to think about the distinct possibility of the danger inherent in lowering the number from 75 to 27. If the number were 27 it is quite possible, for example, that we in the Maritimes could become totally fed-up with the rest of Canada and would form our own party to sit in the House. I do not think that lends itself to Canadian unity. If by the suggestion that is what we are attempting to encourage, whether we express it or not I think we should give some thought to it.

Subclause 8 stands.

Subclause 9 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 14, subclause 1, as amended.

Clause 14, subclause 1—Persons qualified as electors.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, to bring this amendment clearly to the attention of the committee, the basic qualifications of electors are changed in a fundamental way. First, the minimum voting age is reduced from 21 to 18 and, second, it is made perfectly clear, subject only to subclause 3, that only those who are Canadian citizens will be qualified to vote in a Canadian federal election.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have already dealt with this question which I feel is important and which the President of the Privy Council has already answered. However, it is essential that I raise the matter again and that I express the views of many of my colleagues.

We grant to young Canadians the right to vote at 18 and to run in an election. If we grant them that right, we must also entrust them with the resulting responsabilities.

The President of the Privy Council has explained—and I fully agree with him on that point—that the fact of lowering the legal age from 21 to 18 years of age is a provincial prerogative, as everybody knows. It would be logical, since several very serious reasons justify such a step, for the President of the Privy Council to obtain from the government the assurance that at one of the next federal-provincial conferences a dialogue will take place with the provinces to have them all reduce the legal age from 21 to 18. This is very important.

In fact, if a young man is entitled to vote or to run as a candidate at 18 or 19 years of age, he could, for instance, be prosecuted for libel, and his father's responsibility would then be involved. Many similar cases might occur.

In my opinion, logic and common sense require that the legal age be set at 18. Young people of 18 and over should be granted the rights that will come with their majority if they are given the franchise and allowed to be run as candidates in elections.

I know that the federal government cannot put such a clause in the act; however, I do think that I am expressing the wish of many of my colleagues when I ask that the government take the initiative of starting a dialogue with the provinces in order that the legal age may be set at 18 as soon as possible in all provinces.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the suggestion and will bring it to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, in order to assist in the progress of our work I wish to propose an amendment to subclause 4. Two of my colleagues, who are virtuous men and went home at ten o'clock not knowing we were to continue sitting for one hour, wish to move amendments to subclause 3. I would be grateful if consideration of that subclause could be stood. The purpose of my amendment to subclause 4 is to add to the list of those who would be disqualified. The group of people I have in mind—

The Chairman: Order, please. We are considering subclause 1.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the committee would agree to hearing the amendments this evening so that we could consider them overnight, even though they are out of order at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 14, subclause 4—Disqualifications.

Mr. Macquarrie: I may be out of order, but I thought I was acting in the spirit of what we agreed to about 30 minutes ago. My proposed amendment would read, "every member of the Senate of Canada".

In speaking about this question I want to make it perfectly clear that I am not joining the crowd to my far left who are opponents of the Senate. I will join their crusade when I am 74½ years old and root for the abolition of the Senate. I think for too long in this country we have downgraded the Upper House and have not really taken cognizance of the fact that our Parliament is made up of two chambers. The Senate is an integral part of Parliament. We have been led to this conclusion by the expression "Member of Parliament" which leads us to think only of members of the Lower House. Our United States friends have done exactly the same thing. When they talk of a Congressman they think of a member of the House of Representatives, whereas they ought to be thinking of both their Houses. My amendment seeks to give full credit and precedence to our Upper House, as is done in the United Kingdom in the case of the House of Lords.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I am confused about the stage we have reached in our deliberations. I wish to offer an amendment to subclause 3, and I heard the hon. member speaking to subclause 4. I wonder if at some time I could present my amendment to subclause 3?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I apologize to the Chair if my remarks have contributed to our getting out of order.

The Chairman: We are still on subclause 1. Shall subclause 1 carry?

Subclause 1 agreed to.

Subclause 2 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 3 carry?

An hon. Member: Stand.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move that this clause be struck out, and this, for reasons of law and of fact. I think that this act is a proposed reform which cannot suffer the maintenance of privileges. Indeed I think that the fact of maintaining a privilege for British subjects who entered the country before some arbitrary date is senseless.

In a country like ours made up of various ethnic groups, the way to ensure harmony is certainly not by maintaining privileges which cannot be justified neither in law nor in fact. It may be an unconscious provocation, but if we really want to reform the Elections Act, we will have to deprive them of their privileges all those who have not deemed advisable to become Canadian citizens.

Therefore, I simply move that subclause (3) of clause 14 be struck out.

• (10:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Hillsborough indicated that a number of his hon. friends would like to move amendments to this clause. I wonder whether it might be allowed to stand until tomorrow so they would have an opportunity to put those amendments when the one now before the committee has been dealt with. I might say, also, that the hon. member for Skeena has moved an amendment to clause 4 in addition to that moved by the hon. member for Hillsborough. Perhaps subject to any other amendments which may turn up to this clause, we could allow it to stand and proceed to a less controversial area of the bill.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I understood some time ago, before we agreed not to call it ten o'clock, that all those clauses which were marked by vertical lines had been agreed to.

Mr. Macquarrie: No.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The exact opposite is the situation. Those which are sidelined are not agreed to, but may be the subject of discussion.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, we jumped from subclause 4 a while ago. I was frantically trying to rewrite an amendment to subclause 3.

An hon. Member: It stands.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Cochrane asked me to move, on his behalf, the amendment which the hon. member for Matane has moved.

Mr. Prud'homme: I should like to say that I agree with this amendment.

Mr. Forrestall: Would it not be useful for the leader of the House to stand the whole of clause 14 so that we might get on with a few others?

Mr. Benjamin: I would agree to that. If there are one or two further amendments to be considered overnight, I should probably throw my amendment into the hopper as well.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed we accept all the amendments and proceed to the other clauses afterwards?

Mr. Benjamin: I was not clear as to the intent of the amendment moved earlier by the hon. member for Matane. Our amendment is to subclause 2. It would have the effect of delaying for a fairly short period, for a year or perhaps two years, the provision whereby British subjects who have taken out Canadian citizenship cannot vote, and thus enable these recent British subjects to cast their ballot if they meet the other qualifications of residence. However, once the act comes into force British subjects arriving in Canada would have to serve the required five years and secure their Canadian citizenship before being eligible to cast their ballot in a federal election.

It has already been represented to me by some British subjects who have arrived in Canada that one of the things they were told before departing for their new home was that after one year's residence they would be eligible to vote in elections in Canada. One person who made representations to me both by mail and by telephone lives in Ontario, and he told me that although this would not have prevented his coming to Canada, the information that had been given to him would be falsified as a result of this change in electoral law. He submitted, and I agreed, that those coming to Canada have every right to know before arriving what their rights and privileges are in this country from the very day they arrive.

I want to make it quite plain that there is no misunderstanding here. We in this party completely agree that there should no longer be in our electoral law any discrimination as to the eligibility to cast ballots as between British subjects and those of other racial or ethnic origins. This has to stop in modern Canada. However, those British subjects who arrived in Canada between June 26, 1967, and the day on which this act comes into force should still retain their right to vote as British subjects. Those who arrive in Canada subsequent to the coming into force of this legislation will know beforehand that they must serve the five-year period and become Canadian citizens before being given the federal franchise.

However, I think we should be fair to those who arrived in Canada between June 26, 1967, and the day this act comes into force, which might be next month or next year. These people could number 60,000 to 70,000, if the immigration pattern has remained fairly constant. They should not be disenfranchised because when they arrived in Canada the legislation had not been amended. Therefore, I should like to move the following motion. I regret I have only one copy. I have rewritten the amendment because I received better legal advice in the last few minutes than I did yesterday. I move:

That clause 14 be amended by deleting subclause 3 on page 24 and substituting therefor the following:

"(3) Every British subject, other than a Canadian citizen, who

(a) was qualified as an elector immediately prior to the coming into force of the provisions of this act referred to in subsection 2 of section 119, and

(b) has not, since that date, ceased to be ordinarily resident in Canada, is deemed to be qualified as an elector.

As I say, I am sorry I have only one copy. In view of this I would ask the President of the Privy Council and other members of the committee to sleep on this amendment overnight and to consider giving fair treatment to those British subjects who have arrived in Canada since June 26, 1967, and before the act is proclaimed. They will still be eligible to vote without having to wait the five-year period, but if a British subject arrives in Canada after this bill comes into force he would have to wait the five-year period before he has the federal franchise.

• (10:50 p.m.)

Mr. Prud'homme: May I point out to my friend that anyone who emigrates to Canada, be he a British subject or otherwise, knows he will be subject to any new law that might be passed in Canada. What the hon. member is suggesting is similar to the following situation. If I were to emigrate to Canada because there was no military service here, and then suddenly this Parliament decided to vote for conscription in Canada, I might say exactly what the hon. member is trying to say about British subjects being betrayed. In this situation I would have emigrated to Canada because there was no military service and I could say that I was not subject to such a law because when I came to Canada I was told by the immigration officer that there was no military service here. This could be an analogous situation. I am sure people do not come to Canada with only this incentive.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I would normally accept the proposition that these matters stand, but I understand we did agree to some of them. Normally I would have forgone the opportunity to put forward an idea in respect of this question, but it is close to the time at which we have agreed to see the clock and it might be worth while to put something else before the committee so that it may also be considered overnight. If the amendment of the hon. member for Matane should carry, it would not, I submit, remove the matter of privilege or relief—if one should want to put it another way—in terms of the eligibility to vote, because that situation will still prevail not as a result of the Elections Act but as a result of the Citizenship Act.

Under that act we do discriminate, as I understand it, against the male sex in favour of the female sex in certain circumstances. Normally a person must wait five years before applying for Canadian citizenship, but if a woman who has emigrated to Canada marries a Canadian citizen she has only to wait one year before she can apply for Canadian citizenship. I think that if the government wishes to deal fairly with this matter and bring it up to date, it should consider eliminating the five-year period and instituting a more reasonable period, perhaps one year, so that all people will have equality before the law in terms of citizenship and the right to vote.

While I generally agree with the proposition that equality before the law should not be based on having a privileged position, nonetheless there is a matter which I think should be raised, namely, that it is unfair to a group of people to remove from them a right they have had up until now. In fact, the committee unanimously, and the government, endorsed that concept. They simply picked a point in time—I believe it was June 25, 1968—and said that up until that time we will respect the particular position that has been afforded British subjects. But from now on there will be an entirely different situation. What the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre seeks to do is establish another point in time, and he attempts to validate it by saying we should not make the law retroactive in removing this right.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 14, with the two suggested amendments, should stand except in respect of those subclauses which already have been carried?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, did I understand you to say that clause 14 would stand with the two amendments which have been proposed? I think there have been four amendments.

Mr. Forrestall: With the exception of the two clauses that were agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Together with the four suggested amendments. Shall clause 16, subclause 1, as revised, carry?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I hope your words "Together with the four amendments" do not preclude consideration of the two amendments of my colleague which I will ask hon. members to sleep on so that they can come back to them with their minds fresh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this would not be a good point at which to see the clock and call it ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my understanding that the adjournment proceedings are deferred until another day.

At 11.05 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 17, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—NEW UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM—PUBLISHING OF DETAILS BY PRESS PRIOR TO STATEMENT IN HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in respect of which I have given Your Honour notice. It relates to the extent to which a report which is to be given today by the Minister of Labour and/or accompanying material were made available to or obtained by the press some time before the minister was due to make the statement today.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the information I have is that the publication and also radio reports took place at a time that would indicate that this material must have been in the hands of the people who used it either last night or early this morning. We have here another instance of the extent to which matters which should be withheld until they are made public in the House are made available to outside sources.

Mr. Speaker, not in anticipation of this event but because of the gravity of the situation I read what was said yesterday in respect of the question of the pre-publication of documents and material which should be withheld until the time of presentation in the House. I have read what Your Honour said and what was said by others. I was the first person to raise the question last Friday in connection with the matter of the LeDain report.

I submit that what has happened today places a completely different picture on the situation. This is a repetition, and the situation has become so serious that Your Honour, this House and all of us must take the most careful note of what has happened and is happening as well as the effect it is having on this institution. Are Parliament and this House to be only a peg for the purpose of our being regaled by the public relations' competition of ministers and other people? Mr. Speaker, I do not like to think so. I do not like to think it is just a matter of competing political personalities, squabbling, shoving and squealing like pigs in a trough for a position of advantage. I think this is a place for grave and deliberate debate dealing with the affairs of the people of Canada.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: It may well be that the people of Canada think differently. I do not believe so. I think they rely on this place as a forum for proper intervention between the government and the people. God knows, there has been a rapid enough deterioration of the parliamentary process during the course of the last little while. Therefore this situation should be faced in the most serious way. I think this practice has to stop and I hope we are all agreed on that. I hope the government agrees that it has to stop.

Your Honour made a decision yesterday with which I am in agreement. I feel that there must be some way to deal with this situation. I am not in a position now to attach any blame to the minister. The motion I propose to move, if accepted, will give him the opportunity he should have to appear before a committee and make a statement indicating what in his view did take place. But I say that this practice must come to a stop.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

> That the question of the manner and nature in which the report and accompanying material of the Minister of Labour in connection with unemployment insurance was obtained by or made available for the media prior to a statement of the minister in the House be referred to the Committee on Procedure and Organization and that the committee do make an interim report on this on or before June 26, 1970.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. member for Peace River and I share his views to a large degree. As Minister of Labour I could say with accuracy that the source of the information which was printed in the Toronto Star early edition today did not come from me, did not come from my personal staff, nor did it come from any official or member of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. But like the hon. member for Peace River I have been a member of this House for eight years, first as a backbencher, then as a Parliamentary Secretary and recently as minister, and like the hon. member and others in this House I have a great degree of affection and respect for the traditional rights of the House of Commons.

I may be considered a traditionalist or a conservative in my view that the House of Commons has been downgraded all too frequently. I know that one of the rules of the House is that the word of an hon. gentleman is accepted without question. But this is can only remain valid if ministers and other members of the House are honest, frank and open.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: So it is tempting simply to say that as a result of investigations I have made I have found that the source of information to which the hon. gentleman quite properly takes objection did not come from my office, did not come from myself in person, and did not come from anyone associated with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and I would then have the full right to expect that to be accepted. But since I believe that to be objective and consistent we should be frank and open, I think the House is entitled to an explanation as to how this information came to appear in the Toronto Star.

I think it has been customary when tabling white papers, which are a medium of communication of the government, to place an embargo on the Press Gallery and to take them into full and absolute confidence before the fact. This is not a new procedure. This is a procedure that has been in effect since time immemorial, and it is one that the Press Gallery as well as Members of Parliament respect, or should respect.

On this particular occasion, Mr. Speaker, two members representing the electronic medium contacted my department yesterday to find out whether they should pre-empt time this evening, after the fact of tabling the report, if this white paper was deemed to be of sufficient interest to the Canadian public. I felt that this was something that only they could determine. So they were invited to the Department of Labour and made acquainted with some of the highlights, under the same type of embargo that was placed on members of the Press Gallery this morning.

One of the two people thus privileged respected that embargo. The other presumably honourable gentleman presumed to take these two pamphlets and give them to a reporter of the Toronto Star. So I think the question of privilege is one that members of the Press Gallery should want to raise amongst themselves—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —because, Mr. Speaker, we have a good press gallery collectively. They depend on their relationship with Members of Parliament, and to a great degree we depend on their integrity. If there is to be a breakdown in that communication because of a lack of integrity on either side, that happy relationship will come to an end.

All I can do is apologize to the House for this unhappy occurrence, this unexpected and certainly unpredictable leak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in light of what the minister has said about the situation, I would not be unwilling to withdraw my motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I believe I have done my duty as I have seen it. The terms of the general motion which was before the House, moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, may well permit the standing committee to conduct that full and impartial inquiry which is so essential and in light of which I made the remarks that I did.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is grateful to the hon. member for Peace River in that I am not now placed in the position where I have to make a difficult ruling. I would suggest to hon. members, in view of the fact that a motion which is very close to this one is before the Committee on Procedure and Organization, that perhaps that committee would take it upon itself to look into both situations brought to the attention of the House yesterday and today.

MR. KORCHINSKI—OPPORTUNITY TO PARTICIPATE IN DISCUSSION IN AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I believe affects all Members of Parliament. It arises out of the fact that I was denied, as a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, during consideration of Bill C-196 in a clause by clause study, by the vice-chairman of the agricultural committee who was in the chair at the time, an opportunity to participate in a discussion on a clause of the bill to which an amendment had been proposed, despite repeated requests by me directed to the Chair for recognition.

The incident arose during last night's sitting of the committee on Agriculture. An amendment had been proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). In fairness to the chairman I should say that I was granted one opportunity to comment on the amendment, after the opening remarks by the mover of the amendment.

Subsequently the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) presented his rebuttal to the amendment, at which time certain arguments were presented which I felt should have been corrected. I requested recognition from the Chair and patiently awaited my turn for recognition. However, after points of order had been raised during which I participated, at the conclusion of my contribution to the points of order I requested that I be heard at the appropriate time on the amendment to the pertinent clause which was under discussion. The present committee system and the reporting of the proceedings do not permit me to produce the report of the proceedings, which would attest to the fact that I verbally requested recognition before the amendment was put, because the report is not yet printed.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Under the previous system where the entire membership of the House participated in clause by clause discussions it may not have been necessary for a member to rise on several occasions to present arguments for or against a particular clause of a bill because other members had an opportunity to contribute and often covered the point. You will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that this practice was allowed and that on no occasion was a member denied the right to speak, and only when all arguments had been assessed was the question put.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: Under our present committee system the Committee on Agriculture has on it eight members of the official opposition, which is 11 per cent of the total composition of the membership of the official opposition in the House of Commons. Because of the inability of the other 89 per cent of members to be present during committee proceedings because of commitments to other committees, the case for presenting arguments for or against a clause rests heavily on those members who comprise the committee.

In hearing evidence presented in the form of briefs there has been an arrangement worked out whereby equal opportunity has been granted to all members to participate in the questioning of witnesses. This had general approval by members of all parties in the committee. However, when the committee is charged with the responsibility of studying a bill and a clause by clause study is being carried on, the situation is somewhat different from the hearing of briefs. Because of the heavy responsibility that is placed on individual members of our party, who constitute only a small percentage of our total membership in the House, adequate opportunity should be granted for a thorough discussion of a given bill.

I was denied that opportunity to pursue an argument following a statement by the Minister of Agriculture. The vice-chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who was in the chair at the time, showed his political bias by ignoring requests by me for recognition to speak on the particular clause and allowing himself to be guided by the persuasion of the supporters of the government to put the question.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Korchinski: The majority of the government members on the Committee on Agriculture last night were members who have displayed little interest in the grain industry and who, because of their background, have a limited knowledge of the consequences of the passage of this bill. The bulk of the government supporters appeared to have only one interest in mind, and that was the swiftest passage of the bill through committee in order that it may be brought back to the House prior to the summer adjournment. It was suggested by a member who was drafted to the committee last night that a time limit be imposed on the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is complicated by the fact that all the rules that have been drafted in the House pertain to the proceedings of the House of Commons. The rules are not drafted to take into account committee proceedings. To argue that the committee is master of its own proceedings leaves a member, who has a greater responsibility in particular during consideration of a bill than would be imposed upon him had the proceedings been undertaken in the House, without the protection that other members have who participate in House deliberations. The House, through an order, granted me the right to sit on the committee as a member and to participate in all the deliberations and votes in that committee. By denying me the right to speak, the chairman of the day denied a ruling of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: I think you will agree with me that there is now and has been in the past a feeling that Your Honour has, as have other Speakers, displayed a sense of fairness in allowing equal opportunity to all members of the House of Commons, who have the right and the duty to speak on all matters during consideration in the House or in committee.

In the House of Commons, when it is intended to impose closure on debate, proper notice is usually given. This is not the case in committees, and members of committees are then at the mercy of the majority of government supporters who are preoccupied with the idea of getting the bill out of committee and back into the House before the summer recess.

In the past I have raised other questions of privilege pertaining to the committee system. I believe I have no other recourse than to appeal to you on this occasion to display a sense of justice and allow this question of privilege. If you so rule, I would be prepared to move the following motion seconded by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth):

That the committee proceedings, particularly as they apply to the study of bills, be reviewed by the Procedure and Organization Committee in order to establish certain guidelines for the protection of all members of the committee which would be comparable to the protection afforded by Your Honour during proceedings in the House of Commons or by the chairman during proceedings in the Committee of the Whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie concerning incidents that would have occurred at last night's regular sitting of the Committee on Agriculture, I should like to reply at least to the reference the hon. member made to my behaviour as chairman of that committee, to the effect that one of the rulings I handed down in the course of the proceedings was biased.

The hon. member claims that the chairman was not fair to the members of the opposition who wished to take part in the clause by clause discussion on Bill C-196.

I wish to point out to the House that I have never prevented anyone from availing himself of his privileges and his rights. In all fairness, however, I believe that a committee chairman must direct the debates so as to divide the time available among the committee members; more particularly, he must give every member the opportunity of expressing the views of this party as well as his own on the legislation under study. That is what I have been trying to do and that is what I will try to do again if I continue to sit as Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. When hon. members read the proceedings of last night's committee meeting and read what was said between 8 and 10:30 p.m. they will realize that opposition members and particularly the hon. member for Mackenzie had ample opportunity to express their views on the four clauses that were examined during the evening. The hon. member himself admitted that he had participated in the debate on the clause in question. He contends that I prevented him from taking a greater part in the debate, that he asked to be recognized before the question was put on the clause concerned. He may have done so and I did not see him. In any event, the member had the opportunity to talk on that clause as any other member and I do not think I failed in my duty as chairman of the committee. I do not have a guilty conscience about the work I did last night.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't give us that nonsense. I never heard anything like it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie has presented his case in a very clear way and the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean has expounded his position in reply to the matter brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Mackenzie. This is a particularly difficult situation. As the hon. member for Mackenzie has quite rightly said, while our Standing Orders apply generally to our debates and proceedings in the House of Commons, there is very little said about proceedings in committees. I believe it is recognized, and the Standing Orders so provide, that the rules which apply to the governing of debates in the House also apply to the debates which take place in committees, and members, chairmen and acting chairmen are subject to the same rules there as they are in the House of Commons.

Whether the matter might be looked into further by a committee of the House or the Committee on Procedure and Organization, as suggested by the hon. member, is another question. I assure him that I consider this as a serious matter. If hon. members agree, I should like to have an opportunity to look into it a little more closely and, if hon. members do not think it an untoward action, to have a discussion with the Clerk of the committee, receive a report from him, and perhaps look at the evidence. At that time it might be easier for the Chair to determine whether this is the kind of situation that ought to be considered by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I must say that while, generally speaking, it is a commendable action for the House to refer to a committee a matter of principle on which there can be debate in the committee and a recommendation made to the House, I have always had some hesitation about suggesting that proceedings in one committee be considered by another committee. I wonder what might come of it.

The motion proposed by the hon. member is very sensible in that the hon. member does not ask that an investigation be carried out in this particular instance, but rather that the general application of our Standing Orders to committees should be studied by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. It may well be that hon. members might agree that this question ought to be studied by that committee. With the consent of the House I will take the matter under advisement, study the evidence and communicate with the House later on this subject.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the ruling, there was an occasion last week of which Your Honour is aware and I have some reason to know that it is an impropriety to make critical remarks within this House about the conduct of a chairman of a committee. In the course of his remarks, the hon. member for Mackenzie made an allegation of partiality against the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I do not intend to propose a motion at this point in view of the ruling of the Chair, but I would like to bring this question to Your Honour's attention. In view of that allegation, and the clear rule of this House, I think the House will also have to consider the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie this afternoon. They are clearly against the rule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether we should pursue the matter. I will look into all aspects of the situation. I can assure the President of the Privy Council, the hon. member for Mackenzie and the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean that I will look into the situation and either reach a decision or make a ruling which might be acceptable to hon. members.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON NEW PROGRAM

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government, it gives me great pleasure to table a white paper outlining a proposed new unemployment insurance program. My statement is rather brief.

The plan is the culmination of a relatively long period of consultation and study. It takes into account a number of the recommendations in the report of the Gill Committee and incorporates many representations received from labour, management and other interested groups.

The proposals contained in the white paper confirm the desire of this government to promote social policies that build the country not simply for progress but for people, people who must be adequately nourished, whose potential must be met and whose children must be well educated and, above all, people who must have jobs. The new emphasis will be on individual development coupled with adequate income support.

To this end, the plan will provide for a series of up to three interviews for all those who suffer from interruptions of earnings due to loss of work. These interviews are intended primarily to aid the individual in his search for employment. They will also help, however, to identify those persons who should not be receiving benefits.
