THE MINING SITUATION.
There are a great many mining enterprises being offered to the investing public. Some are good, in our judgment most are good—have fair prospects—some are bad.
These proposals submitted to the public are of two kinds: (1) Proposals to develop and work particular prospects or mines and are actual mining ventures; (2) proposals of development companies, which are taking money for their shareholders by taking hold of prospects, claims, and running mines with a view to developing them and then selling them or subsequently working them themselves.
We do not propose at the present writing to discuss these various propositions in detail, but we desire to give the public an idea what a model mining company ought to be in order to protect the shareholders.
A model mining company would be organized on something like these lines: Let us begin with a claim or prospect in either British Columbia or Ontario. Mr. Prospector has gone out, has made his location, has had several analyses, has done his preliminary development work. He comes into the camp, tells his story, shows his specimens and is ready to do business.
Mr. Prospector is out, say $500. Mr. Prospector, who thinks well of the find, and the two of them decide to organize a mining company. They have already given the prospect a name—the Mary Melinda. They take out letters of incorporation either in British Columbia or Ontario for the Mary Melinda Gold Mining Company, capital $100,000. They must have a board of directors. So they go to their friends and they agree to share effect. That the price of the stock shall be $100,000. Mr. Prospector, who has $500,000, and half the stock ($500,000), that the other half-million of stock shall be put in the treasury and sold for five or ten or fifteen cents a share, the money to be received therefor to be applied (1) to the cost of incorporation, say $500; (2) to the cost of the $500,000 to Mr. Prospector for all his rights in the mine; (3) to the payment of securing the Crown grant title, survey, etc., say $500; (4) the balance to work of the development. In other words, if the mine is in such a position that it can be sold for a share, less two cents a share, to a broker for commission and advertising, there will be $30,000 in the treasury, $500,000 of which will provide for the first three charges above, leaving $45,000 clear for development work.
But before this is done, and let Mr. Prospector, Mr. Prospector and Mr. Prospector, their friends are honest, they will have agreed that the $500,000 stock which they received for the mine, and which is called "promoters' stock," shall be deposited in the bank or in a trust company, where it is to remain until the treasury stock is sold and the work of development carried out. On no account should any of it be sold in competition with treasury stock. It should not even be divided.
If this is done and there is $45,000 in the treasury the purchasers of this stock, the general public, have a fair show for their money, especially if the stock is deposited in the bank or in a trust company for the specific work of development. If the prospect is a good one, if the management or the development work is in practice, the chances are that the owners will have a mine at the end of twelve or eighteen months. If the prospect is a poor one; or, if the promoters untold their own stock on the market in competition with the treasury stock and at a less price, or if they pay out the proceeds of the treasury stock to themselves for the development work, the chances are that the public stand to lose their money.
In all fairness the investing public ought to be better protected than it is in the matter of title, of keeping promoters' stock apart, of depositing the proceeds of treasury stock to development work alone. The law of British Columbia and the law of Ontario should secure this to the investor. At present the investor has only the honesty or the veracity or the disinterestedness of the company to protect him. It is, therefore, of vital importance to him that the directors, the trustees, are honest men. His one other protection is that the mine is a good one and that, when it proves stock, will be so benefited thereafter that they are bound, in their own interest, to make the title good, the development work complete and the management honest in every particular. But if a promoter sells out his stock at five cents he does not look as if he had much confidence in the mine he floated.
A "wild-cat" is a poor claim at the beginning, or an overstocked company, or a company where the promoters' stock is sold for a song, and the company is not prepared for the equipment of the mine, or where the treasury stock is stolen, or where something else of a discreditable nature is done to swindle the investor.
Now as to British Columbia mines: We believe that the Trail Creek country is particularly rich, that the country is only at the beginning of a wonderful development, and that the Slocan and other districts are endowed in a similar way. We believe that it Ross-land to day there are five or six ship-ping mines, and that there will be twenty such by June the first, and thirty or more dividend-paying mines by this year. We believe that the bulk of the propositions offered to the public are honest, but that there are a number of reckless ones also in the market, where either the intention of the promoters is dishonest, or their management reckless. The public must be on the lookout for these.

The investor must try and discriminate between them and the law ought to step in and increase his protection. We think that it is Mr. Hardy's intention to improve the Ontario law so as to protect the residents of this province who invest in companies organized in other provinces but promoted here, and also to compel companies organized and promoted here to secure their shareholders in some of the directions indicated above.
As to development companies, they will be discussed later on.

THE NAVY LEAGUE IN CANADA.
The Navy League in Canada is an organization that ought to meet with the approval and sympathy of the people of this country. The object of the league is twofold, viz., to assist in the development of trade between the different parts of the Empire, and to strengthen the Imperial naval resources. The league claims that the scheme it has outlined and recommended to the Governor-General will, if carried into effect, prove material benefit to the Empire, and to the strength of the Imperial Navy. A somewhat erroneous impression is prevalent in Canada in regard to the objects of the league. It is supposed by many that the league simply proposes to tax Canadians for the support of the British Navy. Such is not the case. The main idea running through the memorial that was recently presented to Lord Aberdeen, is the utilization of existing conditions for the betterment of Imperial trade and Imperial defense. To take an example: It is proposed to establish a line of express steamships between Canada and Great Britain. This line is to be subsidized by both the colony and the Mother Country. A condition of the subsidy is the obligation of the vessels to carry a certain number of British subjects. The vessels are to be used by the Imperial Government in the event of war. The Navy League recognizes this principle as a commendable one, so commends it to the colonies of colonial seas, and to the colonies of colonial seas, and to the colonies of colonial seas. AND SEVEN NUNS PERISHED

The Convent at Roberval, Quebec, Was Burned.

MOST OF THE STUDENTS OUT

All the Young Ladies Escaped, But Not So With the Nuns.

even of the devoted Ladies, seeking to save Papi, remained Two Left in the Burning Building and Were Suffocated—A Candle in the Chapel Is Believed to Have Caused the Disastrous Conflagration—Loss $75,000; Insurance $15,000.

Roberval, Que., Jan. 6.—At 6 o'clock this morning fire broke out in the chapel of the convent of Roberval. A lighted candle near the cradle of the infant Jesus set fire to the draperies and the whole was in a moment a mass of flames. The alarm was given by the sacristan, but the fire had spread with such rapidity that before the inhabitants of the convent became aware of the trouble it was too late to do anything. The sacristan, who was the first to see the fire, was killed by the flames. The loss is estimated at $75,000, with only about $15,000 of insurance.

CONSERVATION REIGNED. Once it was known that the convent was on fire there was no hesitation. Ordinarily in that institution there were almost 60 young ladies, but on this day only a few remained. The nuns, however, were all present, and they were all saved. The convent is one of the largest in the district, and it is under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chicoutimi, Mr. Labrecque. The institution was founded in 1837, and it has since that time been a place of refuge for many young ladies. The convent is situated on a hill, and it is surrounded by a wall. The fire started in the chapel, and it spread rapidly to the other parts of the building. The sacristan, who was the first to see the fire, was killed by the flames. The loss is estimated at $75,000, with only about $15,000 of insurance.

A CANDLE STARTED IT. A candle in the chapel started the flames. Against the rapidity with which the fire spread, nothing could be done with the scant appliances at hand. The utmost confusion prevailed at the scene of the fire. Nuns and scholars as were there rushed from the place, some making a dash for the door, others trying to escape by the windows. The fire was so intense that it was impossible to enter the building. The sacristan, who was the first to see the fire, was killed by the flames. The loss is estimated at $75,000, with only about $15,000 of insurance.

A BUCKET BRIGADE. The best possible fight was made against the flames under the circumstances. A bucket brigade was formed by the villagers, and those in it used all the water procurable, but being dashed out by the intensity of the fire with little or no effect. The loss of the convent is a great blow to the district, both from a religious and educational standpoint.

THE CONVENT WAS BURNED. The convent was burned to the ground. The fire started in the chapel, and it spread rapidly to the other parts of the building. The sacristan, who was the first to see the fire, was killed by the flames. The loss is estimated at $75,000, with only about $15,000 of insurance.

ONE OF THE OLDEST

The convent was considered one of the best of its kind in Canada. Ursuline nuns, so famous in the history of Canada, were in charge of it. Here young ladies were taught the art of the household, and which the Local Government granted a yearly bonus. Monseigneur Labrecque, Bishop of Chicoutimi and Lake St. John, the Lady Superior of the Mother House at Quebec and her assistant, together with the Chaplain, an architect and contractor, will leave early to-morrow morning for Roberval. It is the intention of the Ursuline nuns to reconstruct the convent at once.

COUNTY AND SUBURBAN NEWS

Who Attempted to Bribe an East Toronto Councillor With the Paltry Sum of $300?

Last spring the Toronto Street Railway Company asked East Toronto to grant it the right of way along Queen-street east to Victoria Park, but the village refused without the compensation of single fare along the Scarborough line to the city. The question lingered all fall and then was dropped until the spring of this year, when it will likely come into court. While the principals, however, have been resting, other parties have been busy. It leaked out yesterday that one of the village assessors, Mr. J. H. Schuchman, indignantly refused a bribe of $300 to withdraw his objection to the extended line, and that other members of the village committee were going to be approached.

Another doctor has set up his signboard in East Toronto, bringing the number up to four. Dr. J. H. Schuchman, who has been practicing in the village for some time, has just moved to a new residence. He is a well-known physician, and he is expected to do a great deal of good for the village. He is a well-known physician, and he is expected to do a great deal of good for the village.

An Avalanche

By P. M. Anish.

Two men were tramping along the valley at the end of which lies the pretty little village of Nordfeld. It was towards the close of day, and the valley was flooded with the level rays of the sun, part of whose disc had dipped beneath the horizon. The men talked earnestly, and saw nothing of the beauty of the scene. They were Axel Torrell, an elderly farmer, and his young neighbor, Eric Bjornsen, the handsomest, strongest, and bravest hunter in all the district, or country through which they were passing.

"Margaret loves you through admiration and loves Ivar through pity," said Torrell, as though summing up a long explanation. "Loves Ivar through pity," repeated Bjornsen.

"Yes," said the elder man; "I know her heart as I do my own--better even, I have been father and mother to her; she trusts me with almost as much confidence as I am not worthy of such confidence."

"Then," said Bjornsen, "there is nothing save to wait until she can choose between us."

"I am sorry, but I must tell you the truth. Margaret will marry Ivar. With few exceptions, she will make her choice between us."

"Never!" exclaimed Bjornsen, "she loves me, I know she loves me. I will make her my best friend."

Torrell laid his hand upon the arm of the young man as if to restrain his vehemence. "Listen, Eric," he said, "I wish it could be so, but some years ago I borrowed money from a miser in Sweden. I have been unable to prosper, but it has been my duty to pay my debt. I must now pay my debt or be ruined."

Bjornsen glanced quickly at the grave, bearded face of the once prosperous farmer, and in the fading light read the bitterness and shame which the awful cost him.

"You, Eric," pursued Torrell, "are only a shepherd on your father's farm; you are his youngest son; you have few prospects. Ivar's wood-mills are bringing him a fortune he can help me."

"And Margaret?" said Eric, at last. "She will marry him. My influence thrown in his favor will make a decision."

They wandered their way in silence for nearly a mile. "She may refuse," said Eric, bitterly. "She will not refuse. Her pride is greater than my own. It would kill her if we were turned off the land, and forced to live in some mean habitation in Tromsore."

The bear would have its victim now. Ivar realized that his rivr's life was saved, and that his own purpose was being served for him by a brute beast. His momentary thrill of excitement produced a strong reaction. Bending on one knee, he put his gun to his shoulder, and as the bear rose on his hind legs to deal the fatal blow with one of its fangs, he pulled the trigger with deadly aim. The bullet sank in the brain of the animal, which fell, killed by the shot. The bear, as it fell, knocked him backwards over the edge of the precipice.

Ivar uttered a cry of horror. He was certain Eric would be dashed to pieces at the foot of that terrible crag. Feeling over, to his astonishment, he saw the body of the young man some 150 ft. beneath, lying partly on a ledge of rock, partly on a stump of tree which had its roots thrown. Eric lay motionless; he was insensible, if not killed outright. A movement and he would fall again, this time without any possible escape.

"I must save him," said Ivar. With fearless haste he hurried back to the hut, which he knew would be provided with a coil of rope. One end he made fast to a tree-trunk, and having tied the other round his own body, he lowered himself over the edge of the precipice, and with a steady difficulty descended to the spot where Bjornsen lay. Then, taking the rope from his own waist, he tied it to the trunk of a tree, and he himself got back again, and without any rope to save him if he missed his hold took a desperate step.

Ivar was a man of iron, and nerves as steady. It took him three or four long steps to reach the top of the precipice, and he reached it at last. He found Bjornsen lying on his back, his head resting on a stump of tree which had its roots thrown. Ivar took his pipe from his mouth, and said: "I came up here yesterday to kill you."

"And instead you saved my life, and at the risk of your own. I shall owe you gratitude so long as I live."

"I asked your life," said Ivar, "and then gave me the right to kill you to-day."

"You want to kill me now?" said Eric, in pained amazement. "You are strong enough to fight, are you?"

"I can, but I will not. What need is there? She has promised to marry you."

"She loves me," exclaimed Eric, with a joyous accent he could not control. "Aye!" The depth of bitterness in the tone was indescribable.

Eric looked at his companion long and earnestly. "If you had not saved my life," he said, "I would accept your challenge gladly. Life is mine, and I will not let it go. I will fight, and could almost wish that my body lay mangled in the Black Pool. But he is satisfied. It is you who love her father told me so."

"Her father?" ejaculated Ivar, in deepest contempt. "Yes, and she herself confessed it to me. 'It was to please you, to fan your ardor. Come, I give you a chance of a queenly wife. You win her if you kill me. Defend yourself.'"

"Be it so," cried Eric, springing to his feet. "Margaret shall be mine. The two men drew their knives and stood facing each other. "Ready!" replied Eric. "It was a struggle of giants. To and fro they swung, each seeking the advantage. Both were bleeding freely, but the struggle went on with unabated ferocity. Ivar was the stronger man, but he had neither the skill nor the practice of his adversary. He was fang of his feet and the bright blade now over his heart, as if the next moment it would drain his warm blood. But the blow never descended.
