LIFEBOATS, FILLED, CRASHED DOWN SLANTING DECK

TORONTO PEOPLE CRAWLED ON BLACK, ROLLING HULL TOWARD KEEL

TRIED IN FRENZY TO FREE BOATS FROM FEARFUL TANGLE OF ROPES: NEW LIGHT BY TORONTO PEOPLE

Lifeboats Filled With Women and Children Went Crashing Down the Stoping Decks-No Officers Seen at Any Post and There Was No Discipline-The Stern of the Vessel Went Up, the Bow Down, There Was a Hiss and Gurgle Before She Sank-Surviving Salvationists Returning to Toronto Tell Stories That Give New Side to Disaster.

MONTREAL, May 30.—There is a painful tale implied by the interviews with the Toronto survivors. No one wants to believe them, and no one will force himself to until the very last. It is a tale of a duty unfulfilled. More than a few of these survivors say there were no officers on deck, and that at the supreme moment it was all a scramble for life.

Was quartered in the same state-room with Gray. He saw him climbing from his berth when the shock came, and running for the companion-way. He never saw Gray again.

The last clear recollection of Gray Myer has, before the turdent of attraction was Captain moil of the accident, is when he came below after a stroll on deck and sat on his bunk, playing softly on his cornet. Gray was a member of the lost liner, who consented to give evidence had to leave a sick bed to do not deck the inquest, and all the evidence had to be translated because the jury was French. The cause the jury was Captain moil of the accident, is when he came below after a stroll on deck and sat on his bunk, playing softly on his cornet. Gray was a member of the Army and for years was artist for The War Cry.

"There seemed to be no discipline as far as I could see," said Major Atwell, Toronto, when seen at the Place Viger before leaving for Toronto. "I was first aware of a slight jar, then a list, and when I got above decks with my wife, everything seemed to be moving. It was a matter of moments. I got lifebelts for my wife and myself. We climbed over the rail, and as the great dripping black hull rolled, we came peacer and neaver to its keel. Then it sank."

we came nearer and nearer to its keel. Then it sank."

Saw No Officers at Any Post.

"I did not see the captain of the ship at all. I heard no orders given. I saw no officers at any post, and as far as I knew, no boats

"The passengers were left to themselves, each for himself, and no one had a chance to help his neighbor." J. Johnston, another Toronto passenger, confirmed what Major

"It Seemed Like Eternity." Lieut. Keith, Toronto, was another survivor. When the fatal list ended and the Empress plunged, he was left swimming in the icy water for half an hour. "It seemed like elernity," he said.

Bert Greenway, who was saved in the same boat as Mrs. Rees, told of further disorder. The boat he got into was full with fifty people. Its davit ropes were fouled and people were sitting on the oars so that rowing was for a time impossible. Most of the boat Whitened Faces, First Party load were members of the crew, he declared.

load were members of the crew, he declared.

Greenway's story is the most graphic one given here today. "I saw the stern of the vessel go up, the bow go down, and she gave a hiss and a gurgle before sinking. I saw scores swimming about, calling for help. Some of them when rescued went crazy. One man, who was swimming, even when aboard the Lady Evelyn, lay on the deck and frantically went thru the motion of swimming.

Staff Captain McAmmond of Toronto, said:
"When I got on deck people were trying to loose the boats. The lines were foul of the davits and it was pitiful to see how frantically they went about their work. Several of the lifeboats filled with women and children broke away and fell down the slanting deck to crash

The staff captain tells of seeing Commissioner Rees, Toronto, shortly before the boat went down, making his way about consoling there were only three of the thirty odd and encouraging.

The survivors tell of the death of Captain Dodds, Toronto, and thread of strength that has borne them his wife. He was editor of The Canadian War Cry: "Just you stay here and I'll get you a lifebelt, darling." These were his last words to his young wife. Woman Kept Child Above Water.

Gracie Hannagan, age seven, probably the youngest survivor, whose father, Bandsman Hannagan, and mother, were both lost, told her pitiful story. She does not yet know her parents have died:

"I went up on deck with papa and mamma, but we got separated. I hung to the rail when the ship went down. When I came up I hung to an oar I found floating. After a while a woman came and hung to the par too." The woman she spoke of was the wife of a drowned bandsman, and she kept the child above water.

Captain Keith, 22, Toronto, was interviewed in the sleeper. His story resembles the others as to the accident and scenes. He believes he is the last man to have seen Commissioner Rees alive.

Sick Wife Doesn't Know. Captain Ernest Pugmire, 26 years of age, Toronto, was quarter- will endeavor to sooth the people and ed in the same stateroom as Commissioner Rees. When he got on make preparations for the arrival of deck the ship listed so that the small waves lapped over her side and the train at Toronto. Automobiles are down the slanting deck. not yet know of his experiences. He left here to join her.

Mrs. Walter Sydney Green, 1216 Dovercourt road, Toronto, is lege, where those left homeless will be called the pluckiest little woman among the survivors. Her statement

"I kept swimming for over two hours until I felt my body stiffen, so I shrieked for help. Finally a member of the crew picked me up, and we sat on an upturned life boat. With us was a young woman, holding a child, and we drifted for three hours. The fog was thick, but suddenly we saw a light. We were picked up by the Storstad."

Mrs. Green gives credit to the ship's officers. "I ran on deck and was ordered into a boat by an officer. I tried to obey, but the crowd was too much for me and I remained on deck praying with a member of the Salvation Army. Together with another woman, I

Toronto People Were All Good Swimmers, But in the Darkness They Became Separated

MOTHER, DAUGHTER MEET ON EUREKA

MONTREAL, May 30 .- To dive into the water with her husband and daughter, and to be separated from daughter alone on the deck of the Eureka, was the experience of Mrs. O'Hara of Toronto. Mr. O'Hara, at first reported saved, was apparently lost. Telling her story, Mrs. O'Hara, who arrived today from Rimouski, says that her husband, her daughter and herself, made their way on deck when the alarm was given that the Empress was sinking. Mr. O'Hara thought that the ship could not hold up long, and there seemed to be no chance to get into the lifeboats. He told his wife and daughter, who are both good swimmers, like himself, to jump into the sea and keep afloat until the Storstad picked them up. The three went ever the side and at first kept together, Mr. O'Hara supporting his daughter. In the darkness they became separated and afterwards Mrs. O'Hara was picked up by a boat and taken to the rescue ship Eureka. There she was met by her daughter, who had also kept herself afloat. The girl did not know what had happened to her father.

They were killed by thousands and the survivors were driven back into the interior and finally the ancient and sacred capital of the tribe, Chan Santa Cruz, was captured. This and other defeats broke the spirit of the Mayas and they retired still further into the recesses of the primeval forests, where they have carried on guernilla warfare against the Mexicans.

It is well known here that Americans and British traders in Belize carried on a profitable trade in supplying the Mayas with arms and ammunition in return for chicle, managing logs and other tropical products.

British Honduras became a British colony in 1862. It was settled by British in the latter part of the eighteenth century, despite the armed opposition of the Spaniards who were in possession of the country. The town of Belize where the British Governor makes his headquarters, has a population of about 15,000, including about 500 whites.

ion were held Friday evening, May 29, in the concert hall of the institution, when a very large representative and critical audience was present. The program was made up of detached readings and two scenes from Barrie's "Little Minister" and Sheridan's "School for Scandal," given by the Misses Jessie Slater, Dorothy Beattie, Mildred Bedell, Madeline Chisholm, Freda O'Brien. Dora Adams, Mary E. Laughton, Mabel G. Murphy, Laura Gilchrist, and Geo. Hayden. Miss Edith Cameron Taylor also gave a reading from Tennyson's Guinevere. In all these numbers Dr. Kirkpatrick's students evinced that steady and natural platform presence. clear enunciation and knowledge of the dramatic effect which have been shown on former occasions by School of Exxpression pupils, and the result was delightful to the audience who appreciated the fine poetry of Tennyson and Browning, as well as the lighter comedy pieces admirably rendered in every detail. The presentation of diplomas was kindly undertaken by Mr. W. K. George, vice-president of the conservatory, and Dr. Kirkpatrick's few words to the students and their friends were timely and fitting, and dealt with the high literary ideals of the school which endeavored to foster genuine culture and familiarity with what was best in the best literatures of the world. In eight years the department had made wonderful progress both in numbers and in the class of work studied, and the outlook for the future was most encouraging. Dr. Kirkpatrick was heartily complimented at the close of the evening, and altogether the occasion was a remarkably enjoyable and interesting one.

LAD DIDN'T WANT HIS FAMILY TO GO

But Expostulations Were Vain, and Wychwood Family is Wiped Out

"I don't want to go to England," said young George W. Felstead, the fifteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Felstead of Wychwood awanue members of the local corps of the Salvation Army, the night before the family, consisting of father, mother. George W. and Sister Gladys aged twelve years, left Toronto to embark on the ill-fated C. P. R. steamer Empress of Ireland. The entire family were lost. Mr. and Mrs. Ruttan, neighbors, were given charge of the Felstead home in Wychwood until their return, and cannot realize at present the position in which they are placed; the entire family dead, and the only surviving relative being Mr. Felstead's father, in feeble health, aged 80 years, residing in London, England.

Mrs. Ruttan informed The World that Mrs. Felstead, several, days before leaving home, asked her husband to make his will, but he would not consent, remarking that she was becoming superstitious.

Following is an extract from The War Cry of last week, giving an account of an army musical festival, and of Mr. Felstead's connection with the Salvation Army: "We have gathered the followin facts concerning the members of the "Household" Band of Wychwood. Brother Felstead (stove-pipe section), is a native of London, England, a son of Sectional Serg. Maj. Felstead of Hammersmith. At the age of ten he became side-drummer in a junior band. He afterwards became a senior bandsman, and held the position of band secretary for some time. On transferring to Canda he joined the Toronto Temple Band, going later to the United States; he became a member of the Ohio and Kentucky Staff Band. He is now connected with the Canadian Staff Band, and is a soldier at Wychwood. He can lock back over twenty-eight years of Salvation Army service."

ENGLISH CITY TORONTO'S SIZE APPOINTS BUSINESS MANAGER

Strike of City Workmen Led to Investigation Which Revealed Extravagance and Waste That Shocked the Yorkshire Ideas of Thrift in Leeds.

Valunteers Ran City,
The city council refused to grant the advance and told the men that they were being as well paid as similar workmen in private employment and had many advantages, such as pensions, holidays, and shorter hours, which private workmen did not as which private workmen did not en

In the end, after much negotiation, the men went on st-ike last December and for five weeks the public services of Leeds were more or less disorganized. For two or three days there were no streets cars, and no light, and the streets were not cleaned. Then came the strong man in the person of Alderman C. H. Wilson, leader of the conservative party in the city hall. Alderman Wilson is a successful manufacturer who is accustomed to getting things done and he told the council that if they would give him a free hand we would break the strike. The council gave him full powers and Alderman Wilson, in a few days, had organized a fairly efficient municipal service manned by volunteers.

Students at Leeds University took off their shirts and shovelled coal in the gas works, while others put on their overcoats and drove street cars. Stald business men wielded brooms in the streets, while clerks and bookkeepers drove garbage carts. The the streets were not cleaned. Then keepers drove garbage carts. The strikers threw a few half bricks at the "black legs," as strike breakers are called in this country, but Alderman Wilson had control of the police and the result of it all was that an Island

LONDON, May 30.—When the United States started municipal government by commission all the world hailed it as an almost revolutionary step in the science of city administration, but England has gone one better, and Leeds, one of the great industrial cities of Yorkshire, has gone in for a business manager. While the American experiment may be described as a step from municipal democracy to oligar-chy that of Leeds is a further step to municipal autocracy.

In order to fully understand what has happened at Leeds it is necessary to be familiar with the recent minicipal history of the Yorkshire city. It may be well to say at the start that Leeds has been a fairly well managed ty, even according to the English tandard, which is high. It has a poutation of about 500,000 keen, hardheaded Yorkshire manufacturers and workmen, who are used to driving a hard bargain in their private business headed Yorkshire manufacturers and workmen, who are used to driving a hard bargain in their private business and who carried this habit into their municipal affairs. Its death rate is low, its streets are clean, it has an excellent street railway system and gas works, both municipally owned, and, altogether, were it not for the smoky atmosphere, inseparable from English industrial towns, it would be almost an ideal place to live in.

The tendency toward driving a hard bargain, however, brought trouble, for some months ago the municipal workmen, of whom there were between 3000 and 4000, all told, made up their minds that they were not getting enough money. Other cities of equal rank with Leeds, they declared, were paying higher wages and they sent a deputation to the city fathers and asked for a rise of 50 cents a week all round.

Valunteers Ran City,
The city council refused to grant aldermen of whom, of course, Mr. Wilson is one, and this committee of seven has appointed J. B. Hamilton, who was manager of the street railway department, boss of Leeds. Mr. Hamilton's salary has been raised from a specific street railway department, boss of Leeds. Mr. Hamilton's salary has been raised from a specific street can be stoned in the street can be stoned as a great campaign against it at the polls.

In any case, Mr. Hamilton has at leest a year in his new job as boss of Leeds, and much depends on his success. There is no doubt that Englishmand amateur management of their men are getting tired of the political cities, and are ripe for some sort of reform.

Mr. Hamilton proposes to run Leeds just as he would if he were the manjust as he would if he were the manager of a great business. Every department of the municipal administration will come under his hands and he will go thru it department by department seeing where expenses can be saved and efficiency increased. Superfluous men will have to go no matter what their pull may be, and competence and ability to get results will be the only factors considered in making promotions. Mr. Hamilton will be responsible only to the seven who will be in the position of the board of directors of a great company, and who will, of course, give their manager a free hand so long as the results are satisfactory.

Consument of the government of the metropolis bought its own supplies without reference to the others, with the result, of course, that all sorts of varying prices, and all too high, were paid. No report has been issued by the council since this appointment, but it is stated that the saving has been enormous.

It is also evident that the British public is growing tired of the petty "graft" which is just as prevalent in English municipal life as it is in Canada, In many of the towns and London boroughs the councils are made up largely of contractors and tradesment of the government of the metropolis bought its own supplies without reference to the others, with the result, of course, that all sorts of varying prices, and all too high, were paid. During his experience as city boss, however, Alderman Wilson had been finding out things that shocked him as a business man. London's Purchasing Agent.

Something similar to the Leeds experiment, on a much more restricted scale, was undertaken in London about a year ago, when the London County Council appointed a general purchasing agent. Before that each department of the government of the metropolis bought its own supplies without reference to the others, with the result, of course, that all sorts of varying prices, and all too high, were paid. No report has been issued by the council since this appointment, but it is stated that the saving has been enorm—prised." And the princess took the advice to heart.

The Duchess of Albany, far from wealthy, spends much of her time saving money for her daughter. It seems the duchess boasted some time ago that she was able to live on $10.000 a year. For one thing she does not lay out five hundred dollars a year on her dress. A bonnet (of the early Victorian persuasion) will last her a year, and she has it re-trimmed to do for another. The future vicereine dresses rather well in a quiet way, and has a special penchant for feathers.

King George and his cousin, the King of Denmark, both give the impression that they have their fingers, so to speak, on the pulse of the public, and they are aware that the wisest thing they can do to keep the public in humor is to be democratic. The King of Denmark shook hands with every man, woman and child he met during his visit to London. He has a grip or iron, and when he grasped the palm of the housekeeper at Buckingham Palace he dug the poor woman's rings into her fiesh and sent the tears into her eyes.

It is quite unusual to find a queen with genuine taste in dress. Alexandrina of Denmark certainly has it. This is not strange when you remember she is a sister of Crown Princess Cecilie of Germany, who sneaks off to Paris to buy her clothes. Their mother, the gay and festive Dowager Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who is always so much in the public eye in the South of France, and who keeps open house, also wears "killing" frocks.

Queen Mary was of course, prepared to be surprised by Queen Alexandrina's wardrobe, butishe did not expect to see the Dnaish Queen introduce the trouser-skirt to London society. This garment was part of the gorgeous gown the Queen of Denmark wore on the gala night at opers, and her daring is the talk of society.

Canadian medical men, from Halifax to Vancouver. who are at present doing post-graduate work at London hospitals, paid a visit to Oxford recently as the guests of Sir William Osler. Regius Professor of Medicine at that University. The party were met at Oxford by Sir William Osler. and visited several of the colleges, including New Christ Church and Magdalen. They visited the Radcliffe Infirmary, where a clinical lecture followed by demonstrations, was given by one of the University lecturers. After lunch a visit was made to the operating theatre, where Mr. Anglin Whitelock, the Litchfield lecturer in Surgery in the University, performed a number of operations and demonstratied some cases. This was followed by a visit to the Radcliffe Library, to the museum, and various laboratories, where short demonstrations had been arranged of some of the latest developments in research work at Oxford. The party then returned to Norham

The Earl and Countessog Ashburnham expect to return to Canada in June and will spend the summer in Fredericton, Lady Ashburnham's former home. Since her arrival in England, Lady Ashburnham has not been out a great deal, but has been living quietly in the country. The romantic discovery in the banker's vaults of the Ashburnham silver and its sale some weeks ago was a much discussed event. It is understood that Lord and Lady Ashburnham intend to spend part of each year in Canada. am intend to spend part of each year

The report contains an interesting "In Memoriam" sketch of Mrs. Chamberlain, who had written several papers of reminiscences for the Women's Historical, and to whom Canadians are indebted for her work "Plant Life." with drawings by the author herself, colored entirely by hand, and amounting to 18,700 plates in the three editions published. This must have been a gigantic task, but also a task dear to the one who performed it, for her biographer tells us "from her earliest childhood she was a lover of nature, she sought the flowers in the woods, and called them her bables. She knew the wild flowers, and nothing hurt her feelings more of the "Valley of the Humber," and in 1817 to collect specimens and ex-

TO DOMINATE WORLD WHITES MUST JOIN

Eminent Thinker Sees a Crisis in World Affairs if Europeans Ever Get Tangled in War - Gives Reasons Why Anglo Saxon Unity Must Prevail Above Cries of Politicians.

Major Stewart L. Murray calls upon be preserved as an equilibre Anglo-Saxons of the British em-saxon lands for the next fifty years all may end well," says Major Murray; "the yellow danger, at least in its acute and menacing phase, may pass away and be succeeded by some working agreement. For in fifty years Australasia, the present weak-spet of the white man's position in the world, will be sufficiently populated to be able to defend itself. But forget not the other side of the shield in fifty prosperous years, 1750-1800, the population of China, where there are no bachelors and no old maids, doubled itself; it may do so again during the next fifty years. Imagine 800,000,000 Chinamen to be provided for. Everything depends on the next fifty years.

"All the Dominions should co-operate to furnish and maintain one Pacific "Rundamental economic interests are identical.

"Round a good Anglo-German-French understanding, as has been suggested by one of the most influential of German publicists, Professor Hans Delbruck, and many others, the Alliance of Europe may well be formed. Russia has already initiated the possible machinary in The Hague, conferences, thereby showing her willingness. Germany has nothing to gain and all to risk by a general European conflagration, but she would pull the chestnuts out, not for herself but for Japan. It is said that this is the view in high quarters in Germany. "On the whole such an alliance appears possible. If it is possible we should try and try. It should be the aim of our policy. Out of such an alliance of Europe who can say what may not evolve?

should try and try. It should be the aim of our policy. Out of such an alliance of Europe who can say what may not evolve?

"All the Dominions should co-operate to furnish and maintain one Pacific navy under one command, to be based on Australia for the next fifty year.

"Few there are of us who would deny that the present state of the British, of the Anglo-Saxon, emptre is unsatisfactory and dangerous in the extreme," says Major Murray. "The unity of the Anglo-Saxon race, and more—its continued existence in Australia, New Zealand, and Africa—depends entirely upon sea-power. And, as Admiral Mahan has so truly observed, there is nothing so uncertain and unstable as sea-power. But the Anglo-Saxon sea-power and unity is now in jeopardy, because one-fourth of our race have not yet done, and will not yet do, their fair share towards its maintenance.

Where Dominions fail in Duty.

Should try and try. It should be the aim of our policy. Out of such an alliance of Europe who can say what may not evolve?

United States of Europe.

"I am assured by Sir Max Waechter, the persistent advocate of European unity, that the great sovereigns of the continent have expressed their private approval of the faea, provided that public opinion will support it. whose in the remaining desideratum, public opinion. The working class in every country, and the financiers, we can rely upon. The merchants and manufacturers are no less interested. Statesmen and soldiers should prepare for warfare outside, not inside, Europe.

An Anglo-American Understanding. "To posterity it will appear almost irreconceivable folly that the two great branches of the fair sheet."

Where Dominions Fail in Duty.

"Roughly speaking, about one-half the trade, and about one-half the revenue of the whole empire belong to the oversea portions thereof, yet the United iKingdom, with only half the revenue, has to defend, or attempt to defend, the whole.

"The Dominions have now a white population equal to that of Great one-by the same Pacific danger, have no Pacific policy in common. This should be rectified at once by "(a) An instant naval understanding:

United iKngdom, with only half the revenue, has to defend, or attempt to defend, the whole.

"The Dominions have now a white population equal to that of Great Britain at the time of the Seven Years' War, when she maintained one hundred and twenty ships of the line in commission, manned by seventy thousand seamen trained and hardened by five years of constant service affoat, and flushed with victory. But do the Dominions maintain such a fleet? No—nor a tenth part of it.

Endless Procession of Nations.

"Most of us in ordinary life are accustomed to think and speak of the Anglo-Saxon race as if, because of its present existence in force, it were something which must always exist in equal force. But really we know, if we choose to pause and consider, that it is but as one of the countiess mixed breeds of men which have apappeared and disappeared upon the earth.

"The negro possesses a great fighting capacity, a great capacity for military organization, for secret societies, etc., and he is stirring. Out of Asia have come all the greatest surprises of history, and Asia is arm."

Anglo-Saxon fate, altho threatened by the same Pacific danger, have no Pacific policy in common. This should be rectified at once by "(a) An instant naval understanding: "(b) An arbitration treaty followed by a defensive alliance as soon as possible for the preservation of the Pacific.

"As regards the naval understanding, advocated by Admiral Mahan and others, the British navy should understanding the latter to be transferred entirely to Pacific of frequired, thus enabling the latter to be transferred entirely to Pacific of frequired, thus enabling the latter to be transferred entirely to Pacific of the preservation of the Saxon fact, alternity in comminon. This should be rectified at once by "(a) An instant naval understanding. "As regards the naval understanding the status quo in the Pacific."

"As regards the naval understanding the fact of frequired, thus enabling the latter to be transferred entirely to Pacific effect of the preservat

ing capacity, a great capacity for military organization, for secret societies, etc., and he is stirring. Out of Asia have come all the greatest surprises of history, and Asia is arming. In the first trial Asia is arming. ing. In the first trial of strength Russia was surprised. History will repeat its story of surprises."

The State of Europe.

Major Murray sees in the divided When we survey the endless pro won hope.

Dominions in their common desire to guard the white man's heritage; also fifty million inhabitants, is the centre of the white man's dominance in the world," adds Major Murray. "If Europe hain any way aliminated it." rope be in any way eliminated it is plain It must also appear to the racial inthat the white man's dominance will stinct that our unity depends upon our be in jeopardy, and the opportunity sea-power. of the yellow races will come. The question will then at once assume a new aspect. If Europe be eliminated many unexpected things may happen, and may happen quickly. Can Europe be eliminated?

Grouping of the Powers, "The answer is that Europe can eliminate herself, and indeed appears to be on the highway towards doing sidered a little further.

"The grouping of the great European powers into the Triple Alliance and Triple Entente is the chief present political fact, and will continue as long as the interests, or supposed interests, of the powers remain the rivalries that they are. It is the foundation of all naval and military calculations. And rightly so, For gests the permanent dominance of the puropean peace can at present only white races.

Major Stewart L. Murray calls upon the Anglo-Saxons of the British empire and the white men of Europe and the United States to stand together so that they may hold dominion in the world.

Major Murray writes in the Nine-teenth Century, and his afticle is extremely lucid and interesting, and many will agree with his arguments and aims who do not accept his God's white-man point of view.

He calls for "an Anglo-Saxon policy" because there are "causes at work today which, if adequate counter-precautions are not taken by us, may in the fullness of time result in the expulsion of our race from Australia, New Zealand, and Africs, where we are least firmly established."

In the event of a great European war he sees "Europe, including Great Britain, helpless and impotent as regards the Pacific. Then will come the opportunity of the Japanese, with the Chinese behind them." "Africa is beginning to stir; Asia is beginning to arm."

The Next Fifty Years.

"If we can only hold the Anglo-Saxon lands for the next fifty years all may end well," says Major Murray: "the yellow denses at least as an equilibrium or balance of forces.

Tied to Home Waters.

We must; howeyer, recognize that European all European forces are thereby increasingly neutralized and immobilized. An instance lies in what policy of concentration of the whole British nearly neutralized and immobilized. An instance lies in what policy of concentration of the whole British inaval force in European ware tited to home waters whole concentration of the whole British inaval force in European us. We cannot send a single battleship to the Pacific. We are tited to home waters. And his ancessity will be increased by the new Mediterranean question due to home waters. And his ancessity will be increased by the new Mediterranean question of the whole British naviers. The result is that the british and all other European and Italian navies. The result is that the British and all other European ware freat to home waters. And be prover has practically eliminated itself from Australia. That we must accordingly have, and soon, very soon, or it may be too late. That fleet the Dominions must provide, for their own sake, for the preservation of the white man's heritage and standard of life. "The Imperial Anglo-Saxon navy Major Murray sees in the divided can safely be organized into two, the Atlantic and the south Pacific navies.

An Ideal For the Dominions. when we survey the endless procession of nations across the earth's stage it is comforting to reflect that the causes of their fall and disappearance were, in those cases where they are known to us, avertible, and could have been prevented by wiser leadership. In that lies our Anglo-Saxon hope.

An ideal for the Deminions.

"It has been shown that democracies, our democracies, require a short formula which all can understand. Without such a central unitying formula democratic opinion wanders in all directions, as sheep without a shepherd. It must appeal to the Dominions in their common desire to sea-power.

"Meantime, as an example for criticism and improvement, I suggest the following:—

"Our policy is to federate the free

Anglo-Saxon peoples at once, to defend the white man's heritage and standard of life by a strong Pacific fleet, and to preserve the peace of Europe.'

eliminate herself, and indeed appears to be on the highway towards doing so. Europe can eliminate herself in two ways either by neutralising and immobilizing her naval and military forces in the two hostile camps of the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente, or by exhaustion due to a general war or series of wars between these two groups of powers so evenly matched. Each of these methods of self-elimination requires to be considered a little further.

Europe.'

"It is earnestly to be hoped that the next Imperial Conference will result in an appeal being made by ministers in each of our five nations for a mandate of immediate federation.

"Give us Anglo-Saxondom as our ideal to work for, and demand with confidence whatever efforts and sacrifices may be necessary to defend it," concludes Major Murray. "Clearly proclaim, and resolutely lead the way towards, our racial ideal of the Anglo-Saxon peoples free and safe, each for

Tail-enders Are Causing Trouble For the Champions

The Early Weeks of the Baseball Season Have Furnished Many Surprises-Detroit Tigers Are Going in Great Style and Jennings Says He Will Grab the Rag-Connie Mack Explains the Situation.

generally jump out in the lead of a new baseball season is explain-ed in this way to my mind," said Connie.

"The crack team of either league is generally composed of older and more experienced ball players. The tail-enders, made up generally with a lot of new material, hit the lots with a team that is right on edge. And here let me sandwich a reason within a reason. These voungsters, forced to the limit, have been sent along at a stiff clip during the spring training season, while a team like mine, composed of tried and valuable men, is not rushed ahead. Each man takes his pro-man, winning as he pleases. The confident baseball manager attaches no more importance to the early rush of a tall-end ball team than does this fighter when an unknown is to all intents and purposes giving him a lot of trouble.

"Personally, I know my men like a book. Baseball, with them, is a high profession. Each man on my team is bent on being the leader of all men who play their particular position on a ball field. I don't have to worry about them overtaken by a real team, and when the season is in full swing the tail-ender is overtaken and passed without even a show of fight. fight.

It's the old question of class, and it certainly must tell on a ball field. It's exactly like a great boxing champion fighting a sucker. The champion, positive of his finishing ability, lets the chump show all he has, and when the fight is well along, he simply settles down and makes a show of his individuality, or as a fighting force. When the time comes for them to hit their stride they will settle down to the task of winning the flag in true, thorobred style. I haven't a selling plater on my team, and class will tell, as I said

And there is all truth in what Connie Mack says. Especially is it so in that most of the games his particular team has dropped to the Yankees have been lost by the young pitchers. Until the warm mound.

Of course, there seems to be a lot of real merit in the fight the Yankees are puting up in the American League. Chance has some mighty fine ball players on his pay roll. Little Fritz Maisel looms up head and shoulders above his team mates. His base running has been a sensation, so far.

been a sensation, so far.

Just how long Brooklyn will keep up her fight to stay in the first division of the National League is a question. Robinson seems to have his players right on edge, and he hasn't any doubt in the world about winning the bunt-ing for the town across the big-bridges.

It's a pretty race all around the two circuits. At least, it creates a lot of new interest in the national game; much more, in fact, than if last year's winners were off to a hopeless lead. Verily, the leadership of a tail-ender may be short, but, to say the least, they stir up a lot of dormant entiusiasm among the fans, and, after all, that is the thing that makes it the grand old game that it is.

More power to the tail-enders! May the dust clouds they are kicking up on the big league lots grow larger. The American fan will ever applaud any show of fight on the part of the under dog. In the mean time, dear old Mr. Fan is standing on his head to look at the percentages in both leagues.

Advices reaching me from Paris state that Jack Johnson has knuckled down to real hard work for the matches down to real hard work for the match put him.

Moran is not the strongest candidate we could offer for the Johnson thing, but maybe he will put it over. The negro is a much over-rated fighter, and it will not take a great man to beat him. A fellow like Gunboat Smith with a punch—and the confidence the Gufiner possesses—might make the big dinge hit the floor for the full count. Johnson can put in several months at the hardest kind of work and still be a long way from good fighting trim. Years of dissipation cannot be undone in so short a time.

Johnny Coulan and Kid Williams clash for the bantam title one week from next Tuesday. This match will decide the bantam-weight championship of the world—if I have the correct dope; I don't know so very much about the little fellows—and the eyes of sporting men from everywhere will be centered on Los Angeles when about the little fellows—and the eyes of sporting men from everywhere will be centered on Los Angeles when the sturdy little Chicagoan will enter the ring to defend his honors in a bout with the most formidable challenger he has yet faced.

The opinion prevails in this locality—at least, that is what I gather from conversations with prominent sporting men—that Williams will prove too strong for Coulon. who has been out of the ring for a long time as a result of sickness. At the same time Coulon's class is admitted by all, and those who favor the Baltimorean are not too anxious to back up their opinions to the extent of laying odds against the champion.

Coulon has written to fairness.

in which he is scheduled to defend the championship against Frank Moran next month. This indicates that Johnson is taking the matter more seriously than one would gather from the oft-printed interviews in which he ridicules the Pittsburger's pretensions, and that he intends to enter the ring in a good condition as hard work can put him.

Moran is not the strongest candidate we could offer for the Johnson thing, but maybe he will put it over. The negro is a much over-rated fighter, and it will not take a great man to beat him. A fellow like Gunboat Smith with a punch—and the confidence the Guffner possesses—might make the big dinge hit the floor for the full count. Johnson can put in several months at the hardest kind of work and still in the food of the full count. Johnson can put in several months at the hardest kind of work and still in the food of the full count. Jesus the force the champion into a match before he had fully recovered were not of the highest type of sportsmenship, and Johnny by accepting the challenge has won over many who would otherwise have been disinterested.

Williams success in the coming engagement will not necessarily mean, tho, that Coulon's condition made it possible. The Kid is a great fighter, and Johnny at his top form might have a tough time staving off defeat. Williams, if the winner, will make a splendid champion.

Farming in Pike.

American apropos of a statement that the railroads were laying off men as a bluff to get permission to raise freight rates, President Rea of the Pennsylvania Railroad, smiled ironically, and said:

"He who should try to prove today that the railroads are prospering would get all mixed up as the Pike County farmer." "An angler said to a pike County farmer:

"You can't raise much on these stony hills, I reckon?"

"Oh, yes stranger, we generally get fine crops," the farmer repied.

"But you don't raise much grain?"

"Sure we do. We raise barley. We raise a sight of barley back here in Pike. I don't know what we Pike County farmers would do if it wasn't for our barley crops."

"What do you get for the stuff?"

"Oh, we don't sell it, We don't sell a grain of it."

"Feed it to your stock? No, stree! You don't catch us wasting barley like that."

Belfast a City of Broad Industries But Narrow Interests

selfast is a city of splendid achievements, and of equally notable limitations. No article ever written of Belfast falls to mention the fact that it possesses five of the largest individual concerns in the world in various branches of industry. These consist of the largest shipbuilding yards, rope works, tobacco factory, distillery, and these industries is truly something to be proud of.

It must, however, be born in mind that Belfast possessed facilities denied to most other large cities. Land was originally purchased under exceptionally favorable conditions, the poverty of the Chichesters enabling manufacturers to secure 999-year leases at very low annual rentals. Also, the clay, which abounds in the vicinity, is of the very best for brick-making, and as a consequence, you get in Belfast of his Catholic fellow citizen, as witness Sir Edward Carson's recent reference to "that majority which we loathe and detest." History with him began and ended with the Battle of the Boyne. Of its historical setting, and of its then political incidence he knows little or nothing. To nim it has simply resolved itself into a historical battle between Protestant and Catholic, the Catholic having been happily defeated, and the country saved. William of Orange has since then been the patron saint of the north, his portrait hangs over every workman's and cottar's mantel shelf, just as that of the Pope hangs on the wall of his fellow Catholic's home.

these cases received less than $750 per With all the boastful pride of the north, it is not to Belfast, but rather to Dublin that we turn as the centre of an intellectual movement which has made itself felt the wide world over. So far as the old country is concerned we have been accustomed in the past to look to England for intellectual movements and schools of thought. Today we turn to Dublin for the finest nest of singing birds extant. W. B. Yeats is the foremost, and perhaps the best known of this school, and may be said to have fixed the style of those who came after.

A story of him, never before published, as it is characteristic of the was told me by an old lady—happily still alive—who was an intimate friend of the poet's mother. She was visiting Mrs. Yeats in the early Sligo days, and they were having a quite talk together over the fire. Little Willie Yeats was not long ago either, when the parliamentary nominee of the official order was never questioned, in at least With all the boastful pride of the

It is the Roman Catholic of the middle ages that is feared should home rule become law, the period of the thumb, screw and the piliory. A man, tolerably sane in most other matters, is intolerably unreasonable in this, that he deliberately blinds himself to the fact that he ts living in the twentieth century, when certain conditions are impossible, and can never be revived. He forgets, too. that many of the abuses he fears were common to both sides, and depended entirely on which had the power at any particular period, to impose them.

The continued self-centreing of the mind, over a long period of year, on one question has resulted in a dwarfing of the intellect, both from a political and a religious standpoint. The earnestness with which they have striven the keep the faith' from the inroads of Roman Catholicism, has had the effect of shuttling the mind to new ideas from other quarters. That is why the Belfast man is so painfully orthooks, and is usually intolerant of anything in the way of a broader outlook in politice or theology. The pulpit of the city is eminently 'kafe,' and the application of modern ideas to Biblical questions is regarded with suspicion.

Lady Gregory, who with Yeats founded the National Theatre in Dublin, and the Matter in Dublin, and the twenties, only less well known.

But greatest of them all, perhaps, was the late J. M. Synge, whose short but brilliant career would of itself have given distinction to Irish literature, and whose work will perhaps survive when many better known names of the century are forgotten.

We must not forget that George Bernard Shaw, the not of this, nor indeed any other school, is also a Dublin man. A more recent recruit is James Stephens, who a few months ago received the much coveted Polignac prize for literature, and who recently came into prominence, in connection with Provost Trailly blunder, in refusing him permission to address the students of Trinity University, mistaking him permission to address the students of Tri unthinkable. It came, however, A large section under Mr. Thomas Sloan, revolting under the tyranny of official-dom, defied the grand master and in a body secoded. Mr. Sloan contested South Belfast as an independent candidate, against Mr. Dunbar-Bullen, the official nominee, and to the utter contusion of headquarters, secured the seat with a substantial majority.

At the next general election a more popular candidate was sought by the official party, in the person of the Rt. Hon. Lord Arthur Hill, but he, too, was defeated, Mr. Sloan holding the seat. It is, indeed, one of the notable events in the history of Belfast that in the face of the greatest opposition, and with the entire Orange organization to support it. South Belfast was held by a working man for six years.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 30 .- Mrs. SAN FRANCISCO, May 30.—Mrs. Ella Heim is suing Jerry Wilson, reputed owner of several rich Alaska gold claims, and his wife for a share of his fortune. It is the old story of the Alaska grubstake. Mrs. Heim adopted Alice Nightengale years ago, and Jerry Wilson, at that time of San Francisco, married the adopted daughter.

Years later Wilson went to Alaska, Years later Wilson went to Alaska, Mrs. Heim alleges alleges, with money she furnished him as a grubstake. Two years afterward, Mrs. Heim says, she furnished Mrs. Wilson with money to go to Nome to join her husband.

Wilson and J. S. Kimball, his business partner in the Wilson-Kimball Mining Company, who is a co-defendant are alleged to have properties worth several millions. National League Batting Averages

MARINERS DECLINE TO DISCUSS AFFAIR

Bad Weather and Bergs for Week Past Reported in Gulf of St. Lawrence

MONTREAL, May 30. - Mariners nere as usual in such cases, refuse to discuss the foundering of the Empress of Ireland. When questioned by your reporter they pointed out that in face of the coming enquiry anything they might say would be extremely prejudicial. They all await official and expert reports of the collision. Some of them have said, however, that the heavily laden Storstad even if steaming ever so slow, would easily tear a great gap in the side of the liner. The collier is thought by some to have been steaming slowly, since her bow only was crushed and she was able to proceed for this port. Master mariners now in port here report for the last week perilous weather in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Fogs have been prevalent and icebergs and growlers common. discuss the foundering of the Empress

Summer Here and Summer There

WHICH CATASTROPHE WILL END THE LIFE OF THE EARTH?

is held that the largest number of these earth-waves are due to the movements of the earth's axis, for the poles vary in position as much as 30 feet at a time.

These variations cause strains up-

These variations cause strains upon the earth-crust. The catastrophes of Lisbon, San Francisco and Messina prove how dangerous these earth-quakes may be, and what was demonstrated in August, 1883, on the island of Krakatao, was a miniature instance of a way in which the earth might be destroyed.

There occurred the most terrific contest between fire and water that has ever been presented to the eye of man. A 90-foot high tidal wave would overwhelm the earth in a single day, and the masses of ashes thrown out would waver over the earth as light-clouds for decades. Fortunately, in the case of Krakatoa, the volcano into which the wave made its way toward the interior of the earth was very small. Had it entered the volcano of Mauna Loa on the island of Hawaii, with its great opening extending for miles square, it would not have been impossible for the earth to have been torn to fragments.

Meteors are regarded as most dangerous wanderers in space, and there is nothing impossible in the suggestion that some day an enormous meteorite may descend upon the earth with such force as to pierce the crust. According to Newton's law, the larger stars have the power of drawing the smaller ones to them.

Who knows whether the earth will not, in this way, be drawn to some one of the larger planets and be swallowed up in it?

According to the latest reckoning no less than a thousand million bits of star-dust reach the earth each day. Large meteors seldom reach us, but sometimes they are of great weight. On Feb. 10, 1896, there was a great rain of fire at Madrid. At Porto Alegre, in South Brazil, Feb. 12, 1890, an enormous meteor fell. It measured 78 feet in width and 51 feet in length. In 1891 a tremendous cavity was made in the Devil's canon in Arizone by a meteor. It made a "hole" 510 feet deep and more than half a mile wide. One of the astronomers holds that this giant from the skies then glanced off into space, but, had it been coming straight, who knows what it might have done to old Mother Earth?

Others have held that the meteor have done to old Mother Earth?

Others have held that the meteor burst into pieces at the impact, as bits of meteoritic stones were found more than four miles away.

It is plain that such visitors may be very dangerous to the earth. Nordenskield is of the opinion that the earth is nothing but a mass of meteors, and he points to the great dust-rain of May 3, 1892, over Denmark and Sweden, when not less than 500,000 tons of cosmic dust fell. In this way the catastrophe may come from space. Enormous ice-masses are dropped into the earth-atmosphere, and Prof. H. Meyer attributes the great storms of September, 1899, to some such accident.

Arrhemius estimates that the total matter dropped on the earth from space amounts to 10,000,000 tons each year, and that the sun increases by drawing toward itself not less than 300,000,000 tons. What an appetite! Yet the sun sheds its rays just as

It would be quite unpleasant if two of the heavenly bodies were to crash together. In this case it may be a planet that will run into us, or a comet. or the sun may draw the earth into itself, or hurl it into some other body on the way. The planet Bros, discovered in 1898, may serve as a horrible example to the earth, for it is a section of a planet, hurled out of its orbit, and, after its catastrophe, driven across the orbit of Mars.

The greedy attraction of the earth may some day hang a planet like Eros about its neck, and then the destruction of the earth would be very probable, but the end of the earth may be brought about by the peniodic disturbances which take place among the stars. It is well known that the stars influence each other by attraction and repulsion, and all the 50.000 constellations, which have entered the solar system during 2.000,000 years, disturb the regular orbits. In 1901, for instance, many planets of the solar system, excepting Venus seemed to be standing in a line of parade in front of the sun. But this critical period passed without any accident.

It has been figured that since 729 B.C. the day has lengthened 01 of a second. That seems very little, but it is btill something. In the chapter of the earth's dance of death the fear of comets plays its part.

Six Thousand Comets Known.

It is little known that the sun is actually the cause of these visits by comets, because, on account of its tremendous power of attraction, it brings about the shower of comets. causing the birth of some 240 each year. In the solar system today there are some 6000 comets, and about as many of these are quenched, each year as come into existence. This is very fortunate, or we should not be able to see the sun on account of the comets.

The fear of comets has been somewhat assuaged since the experiences of 1372, 1385 and 1910, when the earth passed thru tails of comets without the loss of a single life, much less the laying of the world in ruins and ashes, as was predicted. It seems more probable to some astronomers that the sun itself, with the planets about it, will go up in a mass of explosive gas, altho Helmholtz holds that this cannot happen for billions of years to come.

It is quite a sum of the experience of the sun transfer of the act to Helmhoitz holds that this cannot happen for billions of years to come.

It is quite a different matter when we consider the danger of the world coming to an end from heat or cold. Helmholtz gives the world only 6,000,000 years more to exist. The average temperature of the earth today is but 43 deg. The surface temperature of the sun is usually reckoned at 6000 deg. Some of its protuberances reach ase high as 10,000 to 12,000 deg., and Arrhenius is of the opinion that in the interior of the sun the temperature rises to 5,000,000 deg. All of this beauty and glory must fail, according to the law that is streaming forth upon cold bodies some day there must be a diminution of temperature everywhere; and, under these circumstances, all life must cease. This seems however, very far away. The sun will increase its temperature for a long time by its own contraction. The length of time that must elapse before the temperature decreases has been figured. Joly figures it at 400,000,000; Rutherford at 600,000,000.

But sure as the end of the world is, just so sure it is that life may exist without the earth. There are two reasons assigned for this belief. In his great work on the birds of worlds Arrhenius announced two notable discoveries. One was the pressure of the rays of the sun. This interesting phenomenon is as follows: The control of the sun. This interesting phenomenon is as follows: The sun, like all other great masses, is possessed of an enormous power of attraction. It swallows up 300,000,000 tons of world-material annually. But at the same time its rays, or the ether-waves in the universe, have the power of sending into space very small particles of matter.

The waves are swifter than the bodies carried with them, as the waves of the sea go more rapidly than the log upon them. The etherwaves pass from the sun to the earth in eight minutes, but the minute bodies take 52 hours to reach the earth. The Swedish savant has stated that bodies .00016 of a millimeter are scattered most rapidly by the sun-rays. A body this dze takes 20 days to go from the earth to Mars.

As particles are thrown off from the earth at its poles into the great spaces, Arrhenius holds what he calls the theory of "pansmermia in space," that all space is filled with living organisms. A new world created today would receive its germs of life from these billions of creatures spread thruout the ether. In this way, even the our world were to go to pieces, life would still be preserved in space, finding lodsment wherever it could, upon some planet which afforded the proper conditions for growth and development.

The J. S. Knowlton, Post G.A.R. No. 532, was named after a brother of the present adjutant, who was adjutant of the 6th Missouri Veteran Infantry. Mr. Cyril Maude, the famous actor, nded his American tour full of apreciation of Canada and Canadians. "I had a most delightful time in Canada," he said to a press representative. "Not only a delightful time, but a most uccessful one as well, I am glad to say. It struck me as a wonderfully busy, prosperous city, extraordinarily changed in regard to its buildings, which are exseedingly handsome an outward and visible sign of its progress. In Montreal, I had an even more delightful time than in Toronto. The ideal time to see the island city is, I believe, in the winter, when it wears its mantle of snow, and the ice carnivals are in full swing; but it is also a very beautiful place in summer. I had the pleasure of inspecting Mr. Van Horne's wonderful collection of pictures. It is, hear, one of the most comprehensive private collections in the world, and contains some priceless examples of Velasquez, Rubens, Rembrandt, Corot. and other great masters. The youth of South Parkdale is very keenly interested just now in Edward H. Robins, leading man of the Bonstelle Players, who, with his wife, has taken a furnished house on Springhurst avenue.

To the small boys he is known as "Mr. Bonesteel." Last week he pitched in a corner lot ball game and made himself solid.

Becoming a householder is not without its penalty for him, however, and the latest disclosure, which is confirmed by the neighbors, will be extremely disquieting to his numrous matinee admirers. It is a dainty bit of gossip which is going the rounds this week. Whispered softly, it sounds something like this:—

"He is so fond of onions that he has the whole back-yard planted."

will remember the furore it created in New York and on tour.

"Zira" is a gripping drama of British army life during the Boer War. The first scene discloses the rough headquarters of the troops, with Hester Trent serving as a red cross ter Trent serving as a red cross ter Trent serving as a Red. Cross nurse under the name of Zira in an effort to get away from an unfortunate marriage with aristocracy. Here she is met by Ruth Wilding who is about to disclose Zira's real identity when the enemy makes a night attack and the building is wrecked by the explosion of a shell. Believing Ruth Wilding to be dead. Zira takes her name and place, and goes to England where relatives, who have never seen her, are awaiting her. Zira enters settlement work in London, and the beginning of a romance is formed with Gordon Clavering, a young curate. the truth.

As may be imagined, the play abounds with thrilling incidents and in the hands of such a capable company as the production of "The Martonettes" this last week has proved them to be, it cannot help but create a profound impression in Toronto. The production will be quite up to the mark set by the companies that played it in New York and other large American cities.

Special attention is being paid by the management of the theatre to the ventilation of the house during the summer months, with the result that no matter how warm and sultry the weather is outside, inside the theatre it will be perfectly cool and comfort-

"The Darling of the Gods' That Sir Beerbohm Tree is now presenting "The Darling of the Gods" with much success in London will add to the interest that will attach to the production of John Luther Long's great story to be made at the Alexandra Theatre this week by the Bonstelle Players. The presenting of this play by a permanent stock company is not only a big undertaking, but it also means a great expense. For the past two weeks an extra crew of scenic artists and stage carpenters have been in Toronto from New York working on the scenery. The success in New York and other cities at David Belasco's wonderful production of this beautiful Japanese play is still fresh in the character of Yo-San that Miss Blanche Bates made such a great impression. Miss Catherine Proctor will be seen in this role next week. It takes eleven massive scenes and a large company to tell this charming story, consequently the patrons of "The Players" will see many new faces on the stage next week. It is the intention of Manager Harrison of "The Players" to make his production of "The Darling of the Gods" equal the standard set by Belasco. There is not the slightest doubt but the public will agree that it is the most beautiful and gorgeous offering by a stock company that Toronto has yet seen. That local play-goers demand and appreciate the best there is, is a well known fact, and all can rest assured that no effort will be spared, nor nothing left undone to make next week a genuine surprise for those who visit the Alexandra.

Notwithstanding the extra expense entailed in making this presentation the prices will remain the same. Matinees will be given on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday,

FILM PRODUCTION

FILM PRODUCTION OF "EAST LYNNE" MAKES IMPRESSION

Picture That Comes to Grand This Week Presents Real Emotion, Not Alone Action, on the Screen.

An offering unique in the amuse-nent world is scheduled for the prea motion picture production that invites criticism with any "legitimate" stage offering of the same subject, will be shown. It is P. C. Craft's English all-star production of "East Lynne," enacted by a distinguished company of English players amid the beautiful historic scenery of the Severn River Valley of Western England, where Mrs. Wood laid the locale of her immortal love romance. The picture, the greatest that ever was made in England, and one of the most remarkable in motion picture history, is notable for many things. Primarily it is the first attempt to approximate legitimate stage productions by projecting emotion on the screen instead of depending on mere incident or action to relate the sphere of the moving picture producer—a circumstance that has been the sphere of the moving picture producer—the simply a gripping, inspiring narrative of a highly emotional character, the story of a sympathetic appealing woman who was tired beyond her strength, deceived and mistreated: one who had sinned greatly thru lack of self-control and poise, yet who suffered far more under circumstances that arouse the sympathy of all, especially women. In the film presentation the text of the tear compelling novel was followed rather than any of the familiar dramatic versions, with the result that the entire story is depicted in detail with fidelity unknown on the stage, because of the physical limitations of the latter. Many big scenes and incidents that occur "off stage" if the dramatized versions and are merely told of in them, are shown in their entirity in the Craft revival. These include big ensembles and outdoor scenes—the meeting of Richard and Barbara Hare and Archibaid Carlyle in the Woods of Dorchester, the vites criticism with any "legitimate" midnight elopement by carriage, the wedding of Carlyle and Barbara Hare, the shooting of Hallijohn, the old game keeper. Levison's pursuit of Lady Isabel on the sands of Bolougne, his subsequent arrest, trial and conviction for murder and numerous others—besides the familiar scenes that have made the spectators weep for five decades. Few realize, that next to the Bible no book has enjoyed translation and publication in as many languages as "East Lynne." It is universally regarded as the great romantic love drama of modern times. In producing it in picture form for perpetuity, no thought was given to cost, in the matter of cast, historical correctness of costumes, scenic backgrounds, etc., with the result that the correct atmosphere of the early Victorian period midnight elopement by carriage, the mosphere of the early Victorian period has been preserved for all ages. In has been preserved for all ages. In giving the masterpiece of stage presentation, an appropriate musical setting has been arranged with the result that the spectator is likely to forget that he is viewing a screen exhibition and is sure to travel in fancy with the ill-fated Lady Isabel thru the vicis-situdes that lead to her doom. This unique attraction will open Monday afternoop. Matinee prices fifteen and twenty-five cents. Evening performance fifteen, twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents.

Four big headliners, all of which Four big headliners, all of which have topped bills at Marcus Loew's New York theatres, and all equally worthy of note, will be seen at Loew's Winter Garden Roof, the coming week making one of the costilest and most notable bills ever shown here. Two of the acts are big favorites in this city and are sure to draw a host of their personal admirers into Loew's Theatre. The first feature will be the "Nine Krazy Kids," an act which has proved a riot everywhere. Eight merry youngsters, and a German schoolmaster are shown in a hodgepodge of mirth and melody. All the youngsters have good voices and several are very clever funmakers. From start to finish it is either a feast of melody or a riot of mirth.

unusual act ever presented here. The first of the two scenes shows the stage

life in theatricals is enacted, tempered with delicious comedy and new situations. The big Toronto favorites Jack Kenny and Frank Hollis, "Two Comedy
Gentlemen," in an entirely new collection of laughs, will play here again after a long absence. These two clever comedians were the original "College Boys," but have discarded that for the role of gentlemen of leisure, and are funnier than ever. They are presented here by Jos. M. Schenck, general booking manager for Marcus Leow. The fourth feature will be another Toronto favorite Clarence Wilbur, former musical comedy star, featured with "Funny Folks," and other musical shows here. He is now presenting a type of highbrow tramp, which has proved a wonder as a laugh maker.

Miss Blood's Offer Brings 26 Manuscripts

The $1000 play contest announced thru the columns of The Sunday World, by Adele Blood, the beautiful and accomplished star, whose fame in the title role of Henry W. Savage's great play, "Everywoman," spread thruout the entire English-speaking world, and who is leading her own company at Shea's Theatre this summer, has caught on with a vengeance, and already no fewer than 26 manuscript plays have been received.

Miss Blood is anxious to bring to the front the latent talent in Canada. This country has produced its famous stars, but has so far been lacking in playwrights. The winner of the Adele Blood competition will become famous right off, the bat, for not only is the winning play to be produced at Shea's Theatre during the summer, but, if it is suitable, Miss Blood will star in it all

The conditions are very simple. No vice or white-slave plays will be accepted, neither will any which attack any religious organization. The story must be clean, wholesome, and contain a part suitable for Miss Blood. The winner will receive $1000 in real money, and will also be afforded all the rights and privileges accorded the greatest playwrights of the day.

police began to regard it with suspic-ion as a semi-socialist propagandist organization. The police declared t was not a theatrical society, but an organization with political and social tims, and under this pretext they subjected it to political censorship, and treated its performances as political meetings. The socialists, in fact, did try to capture the society, and as Berin's workingmen are mostly social-st, the attempt nearly succeeded. A further attempt was made in the name of democratization to take the technical and artistic directorate out of the hands of the professional experts who served the organization gratis, and to re-place them with an untrained working-class junta. This Dr. Wille re-sisted. A split resulted and Dr. Wille founded the New Free People's Stage, which entirely overshadowed its rival. The New Free People's Stage is run on non-political lines, but as it is ar-tistically as advanced as the old soer suspicion. As result of police interference and pro-nibition, it has had numerous lawsuits. Nevertheless, it has flourished amazingly; has over fifty thousand members all of whom attend periodically its performances; has a fat treasury and is about to open a splendid theatre of its own. The activity of the New Free People's Stage is great. In 1913 it organized nine hundred representations of dramatic and operatic works. Most of these performances were given on Sunday afternoons when theatres can be had, and when workingmen can attend. Some performances are held engage, on Sunday afternoons when on week days and evenings The theatres temporarily rented, are the best tres; to enlist the aid as far as possible unpaid of managers and actors, "Deutsches Theatre," and his KammersMISS PERCY HASWELL AND SOME OF HER COMPANY HER FIFTH SUMMER BEGINS AT PRINCESS TUESDAY the Deutsches Opernhaus. The New Free People's stage is not a pedantic educational institution. It plays everything from Strindberg to Wedekind down to operettes. But, predominantly it has a serious dramatic character, and it ventures to present works of which ordinary managers fight shy. In the program of the last year are Shakspere's "Measure for Measure," Grillparzer's "Woe to the Lian." Strindberg's "Intoxication." Biornson's berg's "Intoxication." Bjornson's

"When the Young Vine Blooms." Tolstoy's "Man Who Was Dead," Isben's "Wild Duck;" operas by Mozart and Offenbach; and new pieces by Behr, Guitry, Eulenberg, and Ludwig Thoma. Arranged In Groups.

Cheap seats and absolute equality for all members is the basis on which the New Free People's Stage is conducted, Anyone can join. The initial payment is still twenty-five cents. For this is issued a ticket of membership, giving the right to attend every year thirteen or fourteen of the society's performances at a cost of 25 cents per time. This payment includes programs, wardrobe fees, and the right to receive the society's periodical journal. The fifty thousand members are divided into groups each containing eight Cheap seats and absolute equality aining eight hundred persons; and these groups at-tend in turn the different performances At present there are sixty-eight groups. As far as possible it is arranged that each group shall get seats once for every play or opera produced. The society is run very economically; but with such a vast organization it has largely to depend on unpaid help. Every group is attended on and organized by seven volunteer stewards, who come to the theatres and help to arrange places and keep order. The cost of performances is low. Many professional managers, scene-painters and actors, help gratis. Sometimes theatres are lent to the society free of charge; other help is given with scen-ery and costumes. So with a total revenue from all sources of a little less than $200,000 a year, fifty thousand Berlin workers are supplied with as much first-class drama and first-class music as is enjoyed by the average middle-class man and woman.

Just For Working Classes.

The contributor is given an equivalent for his two cents when he paid two cents ten times, he gets a "building stamp" valued twenty cents; and after he had stuck ten building stamps on his membership ticket, he is presented with $2 paid-up stock in the theatre company, which bears interest at the rate of 5 per cent. Many workmen consider this a fair investment for part of their savings, and buy up more than the compulsory number of stamps. This way of raising money, which resembles the minute system practised in German Labor Insurance, has proved a great success. Thousands of men, who would not pay a dollar down, have paid much more in the shape of two-cent quota; and the theatre company has now a building fund of nearly $190,000. With this and some assistance from the city of Berlin, it is building the Bulowplatz Theatre. The theatre has been designed by Oscar Kaufmann, an accom-

Something About the People Who Will Take Part in Her Stock Season at Princess Theatre.

SPLENDID PEOPLE AMONG SUPPORTERS

Percy Haswell is back among us. This is her fifth consecutive summer in stock in the "Queen City." Miss Haswell is the pioneer player of stock in Toronto, and no other actor or actress has enjoyed the distinction of carrying on so long an engagement as this. This, of course, is due to the charming personality and ability of the actress, the high-grade plays she has offered, and the most excellent supporting company which has always marked her engagement.

Of the star herself, little remains to be said, as she is so well known to local theatre-goers for her charm, ability and versatility. Those who have followed Miss Haswell's career closely are familiar with her wonderful transition from farce to tragedy, and from society plays to comedy; and even the musical field has not been overlooked, as she has appeared in musical comedy during a recent engagement.

Her friends are legion, and it has been extremely gratifying to her to have already received so many letters of welcome from her friends, both as the woman and the actress.

The supporting company, which she promises will eclipse any of her form-the woman and the actress.

The supporting company, which she promises will eclipse any of her former organizations is composed of Francis J. Gillen, leading man, who has appeared in "The Lottery Man," "Over Night" with Mr. Belasco, in "The Girl of the Golden West" was featured with the original Graustark Company, has appeared under the management of Mr. Frohman, Brady and Dheuberts.

Mr. Gillen has had a large stock experience, having played leading roles in Baltimore, San Francisco, Washington, New York, St. Paul, Winnipeg, and Cleveland, and will, no doubt, establish himself as a favorite here.

Americans, which animates all sorts and conditions of Mexicans—constitutionalists, rebels bandits, and looters alike—of all these, and of much more lie will give a graphic and vivid account. An Australian by birth, Mr. Wilson was for some time an officer in the British army, and for four years, until last April, he was a British subject living in Mexico. He owned large oil-fields in Tampico, but the constant outrages and the never—end-important member of the cast, has appeared with Victor Moore in musical comedy, with Robert Edson in "The Arab," has been under the management of Cohan and Harris in both musical and dramatic productions. He has played stock seasons in Indianapolis, Louisville, Kansas City, Minneapolis, San Francisco and Los Angeles. W. H. Murdock, who will appear in character parts, was for many years considered the strongest leading man in the south when that section of the country was so thoroly played by the Baldwin Melville Company. He has had a large stock experience, hav-ing appeared in stock in Syracuse, Indianapolis and New Orleans.

Miss Sylvia Starr, who will appear in leading support of Miss Haswell will, undoubtedly, be received with the same hearty greeting that marked her engagement with Miss Haswell in Cleveland and Memphis. Miss Starr has appeared with Rose Coughlin in "Diplomacy"; with Max Fignan in his recent tour; has played leading role on all the Hoyt comedies, spent one season in the leading musical roles in Madison Square Gardens and has had large stock experience, having played in New York, Pittsburg, Milwaukee, Montreal.

Miss Angela Ogden, who is already extremely popular here, is well known for her clever work with Miss Haswell for three years, Miss Ogden for the past year has appeared in vaudeville. Previous to this she spent most of her winter seasons with Liebler attractions.

Frances Murdoch, who will play the principle character parts, has supported Agnes Hearndon; has appeared in a number of important productions under Charles Frohman's management. Miss Murdock has appeared here with the Baldwin Company in stock with the Baldwin Company in stock at the Princess Theatre. She has play-ed stock in Syracuse, Minneapolis and New Orleans.

Miss Eleanor Russell, who will appear in the Ingenue role, has just returned from an engagement of "Pilate's Daughter," the large spectacle which appeared in Boston and Philadelphia. Miss Russell has held several excellent engagements and will prove a valuable asset to the company.

Ralph Ntcholls, who will act as stage manager, has been especially engaged for this position on account of his wonderful ability as a director of musical comedy and opera. Mr. Nicholls for cal comedy and opera. Mr. Nicholls for a number of years has directed the musical attractions of the Atorn Opera. Company, and is familiar with, and has directed over one hundred operas.

While Mr. Nicholis has not lived in Toronto for several years, he is, in a sense an old Torontonian, having resided here for a number of years.

Alfred E. Smith, stage director, came irectly here from the Academy of Music, New York, where he has met with considerable success. He was stage director at Detroit when they were playing the stock star system, stage director in Cleveland when Miss Haswell and William Farnum were coetars in Shaksperian repertoire.

W. H. Bevans, scenic artist, is one of the best known of the younger painters, and his work has met with much praise wherever he has been. He has been the chief artist in the well-known Poli Theatres, and for the past year has been with Miss Haswell.

"HAMLET" TO BE

Elaborate Production of This Great Tragedy.

The Vitagraph Players, under the direction of James Young, one of the foremost directors of the Vitagraph Company, are working on what promises to be the most elaborate pro duction of Shakspere's "Hamlet" that ments at the Vitagraph Studios, have Alexandria, and the King and Queen of Norway.

The film portrays the life of a soldier from the recruit to the finished soldier on the battlefield. It vividly portrays the interesting life of the man who gives his services to his country, and it is very interesting through the entire length of the film, which is seven thousand feet.

At the exhibition Friday night, the Duke of Connaught invited two hundred guests, including most of the military officials in Ottawa to view this picture, and the expressions heard from all was that it was the most wonderful exhibition ever seen of the British Army, and that a film of this character would not only be interesting to military people, but to every British subject who is loyal to the British fiag.

The Famous Players' Film Co. were highly congratulated by His Royal Highness the Duchess on the very excellent manner in which the picture was projected and the manner in which the picture was projected and the manner in which the entire entertainment was conducted. Beautiful embossed programs were distributed to the guests.

The scenic and property departments at the Vitagraph Studios, have been busy for weeks past, preparing for this presentation.

It is a remargable thing that no real, adequate Shakspearean production of any kind has been presented in pictures with the degree of detay, care, thought and acting that would make it a presentation which would be popular with all classes of people. This is the aim of the forthcoming production—to tell the story of Hamlet masses, and also to make it a classic which will be greatly appreciated by the most critical and exacting.

Mr. Young has played the part of Hamlet more than five hundred times on the legitimate stage, so it will readily be seen that his portrayal of the part in pictures will be beyond criticism. Mr. Young was leading music with viola Allen in "Twelfth Night," for two seasons, and starred for nine years with his own company in Shakspearean repertoire. He has also appeared with Sir Forbes Robinson.

"THE MASTER MIND"

Another strong bill has been secured for the Beaver Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Among the vaudsville attractions will be found Falpaugh & Gardner, a high-class pair of acrobais, the Barlows in a novel singing and dancing act, and Musical Feely.

presents the most finished exhibition of MOTION PICTURES in these precincts. Not only in one department does it excell, but in all. The programs are quality programs and are selected with much care. The Pictures are focussed on the efficient operator. Results which are constantly in evidence bear out the truth of our assertions that the "GARDEN THEATRE PICTURE" excells both from the standpoint of clearness and steadness.

MUSIC is now recognized as a very important part of a Moving Picture tion and in this department we have set a standard which surpasses not only contemporary institutions, but the "big" theatres as well. Our orchestra is corposed of artists of the very first rank, all under the direction of a thorough music who is a composer and an arranger as well. The Garden Theatre Orchestra is only one in Canada using, besides the usual complement of instruments, an organic and a harp.

In matters theatrical, the show is the thing, and while in the last few to dozens of places have sprung up offering Motion Picture entertainment, not bear the microscopic analysis for completeness that does the "Garden." We confine our efforts to Motion Pictures only, showing that coming from studies of Vitagraph, Biography, Edison, Selig, Lubin, etc. We solicit the promage of those who enjoy this style of entertainment in its highest form. To regular or occasional patron it will entertain, as it has in the past, to the strangit will prove a revelation.

CAPT, ALVAREZ.

Argentine Republic to look after his father's business, finds himself in a hotbed of revolution. Stopping at the home of Don Arana, foreign minister to Rosas, the tyrant, he meets and falls in love with Bonita, Don Arana's niece. Bonita favors the rebels, and thru Wainwright's love for her, wins him to their cause. He communicates with Gen. Urguiza, the rebel leader, but the messenger is intercepted by Tirzo, Rosas' spy. As Tirzo also aspires to the hand of Bonita, he schemes to get Wainwright out of the way, and insinuatingly suggests that he leave the country at once.

Wainwright arranges for passage on the first ship leaving for the north, but contrives to escape, after the vessel leaves port. He returns to Don Arana's home, meets Bonita, and acquaints her with his plan to join the rebels. She makes him a present of Mephisto, a wonderful horse, and suggests he change his name to Alvarez. Wainwright, now a rebel under the name of Capt. Alvarez, so distinguishes himself that he becomes, the scourge of the federals. He is communication with Don Arana, who is secretly in again at midnight to make sure of her future safety.

Alvarez returns to his command, captures the million in currency, and is on his way to keep his midnight appointment with his sweetheart when he hears Tirzo plotting with a band of gypsies to kidnap Bonita. Alvarez arrives at Don Arana's first; walts for Tirzo, who comes alone, and in a fight kills the spy, whose body is carried off by the gypsies. A band of federals intercept them, recognize Tirzo, and rush to Don Arana's house, where they capture Alvarez, and he is to be shot at sunrise. In the meantime the federals are defeated and Rosas, the tyrant flees for his life. Alvarez, by a trick, induces the federals guarding him to flee. The production of "The Voice in the Wilderness" has been handled by a skillful director, whose ability to "put on" dramatic stories is almost unex-celled. If the scenario contained any more than the production shows, it was unnecessary in the script. The story runs smoothly and carries with it an air of aristocracy. It is true to life and all of the players carry their parts in a thoroly natural manner, not forcrole of "The World's role of the author and his interpretation of this character is pleasing beyond comprehension. She gives the character a pleasing but selfish personality. The sculptress, Gerda Holmes, is all and more than could be expected of one whose art has led her into the wilds for solitude and career. Her work is remarkable. The story in brief is as follows:

Act One. Frank, a young author, living in the city, is unable to concentrate his mind on his work, and much to his wife's disgust, decides to spend a few months in a small village, where there will be nothing to distract him. After some controversy he persuades her to accompany him, and they retire to a this mode of life for some time, Irene becomes very much dissatisfied and pleads with Frank to return to the city, but he refuses.

Upon returning to her cabin, she tells Frank that his wife has deserted him. This is a terrible blow, but he decides to remain and continue his work rather than try to find her. They live in this manner for months, each day bringing them closer together.

One day the unused jug which Gerda had purchased fell from a shelf and broke, disclosing the note from Irene. Frank reads it and reprimands Gerda for lying to him. Unheeding her plea for him to remain with her, he goes to the city in search of his wife. In the meantime, Irene, thinking her husband dead, promises to marry another man, and Frank arrives just in time to with ness the wedding ceremony thru a window. Cleo Madison.

Cleo Madison is certainly unfortunate of late, for in the "Girl and the Feud," her feet were very badly burned. In the photoplay, audiences will notice that in the latter scenes she is tied to a tree, and the grass catches fire and the smoke and flames gradually creep around her, and she finally breaks her bonds and leaps over a cliff into the river, and so joins her lover below. Miss Madison was encased in asbestos and had high boots on, but some of the chemical used in the fire got on her boots and burned right thru them, and she was very painfully hurt. She has not been able to put anything on her feet for several days, but the burns are setting better.

The Most Exciting Moment of My Life Was When---

Have you ever had an exciting experience that you could relate? One that lives in your memory and could be put on paper in a few words?

It may have been the happiest or saddest moment of your life, but if it was really the most exciting, the most thrilling, hairraising moment, write about it and send your letter to the Excitement column of The Sunday World. If your letter is printed you will receive one dollar. Write on one side of the paper. Enclose your full name and address the not necessarily for publication.

Bruin At Liberty.

The most exciting incident of my life occurred while I was quite a young boy in the old country. I lived with a relative in a very thinly populated rural district. While on an errand to rural district. While on an errand to the village I had to walk down a very steep incline, which had been excavated to allow of the roadway being carried under a railway bridge. This, of course, left very high banks on either side of the road, and at the bottom of the road there was a very sharp turn, in fact at right angles, left before coming to the bridge. either side of the road, and at the bottom of the road there was a very sharp turn, in fact at right angles, jest before coming to the bridge.

I was just reaching the corner when suddenly a large grizzly bear stuck his head around the corner just in front of my face. I stood just as if I was rooted to the spot, and felt all the different sensations generally felt on such occasions and then some. Just how long I would have stood there I cannot imagine, as just a few seconds later the owner turned the corner carrying a chain, muzzle, and a long pole over his shoulder. It was only a dancing bear, and quite tame, but as I had only seen a picture of one up to I had only seen a picture of one up to then you can imagine the shock. The Italian who owned it had taken advantage of the quiet road to give bruin a little liberty, but it gave me a scare which I will remember as long as I

Then one of them said:

The Princess Parlaghy, condemning in New York the recent invasion of her plazza suite by the police, said:

"The way I have been treated reminds me of a story.

"A foreigner was being shown over New York by a native. The two men visited the downtown district. Here they waded ankle-deep in old newspaper and straw, and wrapping paper, and every little while the sidewalk was so crowded with packing cases and boxes, and what not, that they had to climb and leap as if they were up among the Aips.

"We don't allow anything like this where I came from." panted the foreigner, as he prepared to spring across a chasm between a mound of cotton bales and a stack of flour barrels.

"The native answered proudly as he eaped from the top of a piano case and broke his ankle:

"I know you don't, but this by jingo, is a free courter."

After a few weeks of fruitless searching they give him up and conclude that he has been killed. Irene receives a letter telling her that she has fallen heir to her uncle's vast estate, and that she is to come immediately to occupy his home. Before departing she leaves a note with the village storekeeper, who places it in a small jug for safe keeping, in case Frank ever returned. In this note she tells why she is leaving, and where she is going.

Act Two.

Gerda has fallen in love with Frank, and is very much distressed when he asks her to go to the village and locate his wife, if possible. At the village they tell her that Frank has been killed, and that his wife has gone back to the city. She keeps silent as to Frank's whereabouts. While in town she purchases a jug—the jug in which the old storekeeper had placed the note from Irene, and then forgotten where he had put it.

The recital hall of the Toronto Conservatory of Music was filled to its capacity last night on the occasion of the program of the vocal works of Gena Branscombe, the Canadian composer, given by pupils of Dr. Edward Broome, with the assistance of a chorus of forty women's voices from Jarvis Choir. Miss Branscombe, who is at present a resident of New York, has won appreciative recognition from the critics of that city, her vocal music being praised for originality, refinment the critics of that city, her vocal music being praised for originality, refinment and appropriate setting of the words. Last night the selections given fully justified the eulogies it has received. Both in the sole work and the accompaniments there was a refreshing departure from conventionality of treatment as well as a clever development of melodic themes. The two numbers paniments there was a refreshing departure from conventionality of treatment, as well as a clever development of melodic themes. The two numbers that appealed most strongly to the audience, and were enthusiastically encored were the duet. "Laughter Wears a Lilled Gown." to words by Isabelle Valency Crawford, Toronto, and the chorus, "Hail, Ye Tyme of Holidayes," both of them frank and straightforward in melody and rhythm, and free from subleties of excursions from the dominant key. The chorus of women's voices, "The Morning Wind is Blowing," was charming in its characteristic breeziness and gladsome mood. The women's chorus. "In Arcady by Moonlight," was very pretty and delicate. One cannot make a choice of the solo songs; they reflected various moods and had a special message to the various temperaments of the hearers. One may mention as winning a general verdict of approval the "Ol' Marse Winter." sung by Mary Hallman; "Boots and Saddles." sung by Arthur R. Brown; "Happiness," and "Noonday," sung by Winifred Henderson; "Marching Along," a stirring number; "There Was a King of Liang," sung by W. J. Williams; and "In Granada," a bright song with Spanish "esprit"; "But Yesterday the Piper Spring," (words by Katharine Hale. Toronto), and "The Tender Sweetness," a refined and expressive number, all three sung by Marjorle Brush. The duet already mentioned was sung by Winifred Henderson and Arthur R. Brown. The soloists vied with each other in giving sympathetic, interpretation to Miss Marjorie Brush. The duet already mentioned was sung by Winifred Henderson and Arthur R. Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freekles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is triffing.

Simply get an ounce of othine-double strength, from any druggist, and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove the freekles.

Ford Upkeep Low

To the man inclined to believe that motor car travel is still a luxury and for the rich alone, figures secured from more than three hundred automobile owners, and on hand at the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, should prove most interesting.

These three hundred owners have all kept careful and complete records of the cost of operation of their cars—Fords of course—for an average of nine and a half months.

Each of the three hundred and seventeen owners had driven his car an average distance of five thousand two hundred and seventy-three miles. Each had carried a load of approximately four hundred and forty-four pounds (three persons the entire distance).

Cadillac experts only render this unique Cadillac service. Every grease cup is removed and refilled if need be. Lubrication is given at every point where lubrication is required. The wheels are examined for alignment. The carburetor, bearings, oiling system, ignition and every part of the motor are carefully and systematically tested and inspected. The clutch, steering gear, Delco system, transmission, rear axle, brakes and tires are all gone over, and any adjustment required is given them. Remember, this service is FREE TO ALL CADILLAC OWNERS.

Just consider what this means to you. Your car is as good after one year's use as the very day you bought it. It is a universally recognized fact in motordom that the Cadillac sells second-hand nearer its first cost than any other car. The reason is obvious. Ask any Cadillac owner.

Free Monthly Inspection

HOW many owners of automobiles understand the functions of every individual part of the engine? Not many-now the object of this free monthly inspection is to better acquaint the owner of a Cadillac with his car. You learn how to treat a car; how to avoid abusing it; and how to drive it properly. You know how to lubricate your car from one end to the other, and thus minimize the wear and replacement of parts.

After inspection a typewritten report is sent to the owner. This record shows exactly the condition of your car at the time of inspection. These monthly reports constitute a valuable set of records for reference.

Five Reasons Why Men Change Tires

Goodyear Users This Year Increase 55 Per Cent

Faster than ever men are changing from other tires to Goodyears. There are more tire users—that is true; perhaps 20 per cent more than last year. But Goodyear sales have increased 55 per cent. So legions of these new users have discarded other tires.

Why They Change

Some change to end rim-cutting. And No-Rim-Cut tires offer them the only feasible way to do it.

Some have suffered needless blow-outs. due to wrinkled fabric.

The enly way to prevent them is the 'On-Air" cure, and we alone employ it. It adds greatly to our own cost.

Some fear loose treads. By a patent method we reduce this danger by 60 per cent in No-Rim-Cut tires.

And some want our All-Weather tread. A double-thick tread, as smooth as a plain tread, but with deep, sharp, tough projections. It grasps wet roads with a bulldog grip.

No other tire offers any one of these features. Yet every tire user knows he needs them all.

Resent Extra Prices

Some resent extra prices. There are 18 U. S. and Canadian makes which this year cost you more than Goodyears-up to onehalf more. And those prices are unjust.

No-Rim-Cut tires hold top place in Tiredom. They outsell any other, after millions of mileage tests. At least in the four ways cited they excel any rival tire. Then why should men pay for other tires from $5 to $15 more?

There is no reason? It is easy to build tires to undersell Goodyears, but none ever built tires worth more.

Goodyear prices are due to output, to efficient methods and to modest profft. Every added penny is an utter waste. Tell your dealer, you want Goodyears, and at Goodyear prices. He will give them to you.

The Haynes is a comfortable car—upholstery is luxurious, seats are just a little wider and deeper, and there's plenty of leg room for the driver. It is an easy-riding car.

As for concenience, instruments are located on the cowl within arm's reach; gasoline tank is on rear of chassis, where readily filled; running boards are clear and electrically lighted.

A few other refinements on the Haynes are motor-driven tire pump, demountable rims, gasoline strainer, and Collins Curtains, in addition to electric starting, lighting, ignition and gear-

Because the car as a whole is harmoniously designed, the Haynes is economical to operate. You'll appreciate this car when you ride in it.

That Cole boy is some rider. And the motorcycle fans are proud of him. After cleaning up the card at the Exhibition, he made the fastest time yet shown at the Motordrome in the evening, and incidentally took the measure of some of the best dirt and hoard track riders in America.

peculiar construction of the track, the great velocity attained, and the cleverness of the riders there is lots of new dope for the enthusiasts to consider. The public has been told that a speed of 100 miles per hour is possible on a steep motordrome track. Such is actually the case, the oficial books of the Federation of American Motorcyclists showing that the century pace was made for a whole mile on a California track. But such a record is not made every day in the week, nor is it made in competition. In a race, the rider is thinking of far more than speed alone. In a flight for a record, the driver goes it alone and has nothing else in mind than to get the speed. It is said that when Lee Humiston went after the mile mark, he was compelled to make fifteen trials before he really touched the goal of 100 miles per nour.

The greatest speed ever shown in Canada has been made on the Greenwood avenue saucer, commencing even with the first motorcycle race on the track. All over the country the people are of one voice in the fight for "Safety First."

More than two years ago we were telling motorists that Safety was the First Consideration in buying tires. We knew then, as we know now, that Dunlop Traction Tread is the one tire which ensures Safety in automobiling.

Dunlop Traction Tread having settled the point of the motorist's Safety, the battle cry is now tending to the Safety of "the man on the street. But Dunlop Traction Tread while protecting the motorist in his car also protects the pedestrian, even if he is negligent in his own regard, because perfect control of the car means perfect control of the situation. The Master Tire is always master of events.

The twenty-three police matrons in Philadelphia last year cared for 9452 women, according to the official figures. Six thousand and ninety-three children, too, were looked after in some way by the matrons during the same period.

The first union service of the Girl Guides was held on Sunday, May 24, in Convocation Hall, when a splendid address on the guide laws was given. A collection was taken up in aid of the Sick Children's Hospital. At the graduation, luncheon lately held by the University Women's Club at the Fort Garry Hotel, Winnipeg, the new girl graduates were for the first time in the history of the club welcomed to the function.

Mrs. Frances Newton, a remarkably vivacious lady, over seventy years of age, and a graduate of 55 years' standing from Oberlin College, one of the great American universities, gave some delightful accounts of the first experiences of the co-eds in that institution, the first, to open its doors to women. She paid a very high tribute to the "live enthusiastic teachers who had done great things with small tools" in those far-off days. She also commented with enthuslasm on the ever-widening field of opportunity in the professions now open to women, as opposed to the older days when teaching alone must be the choice of the girl graduate. of young girls who will act as wait-

Dr. Charlotte Ross, the pioneer woman physician of Manitoba, also gave a delightful talk on days gone by. Dr. Ross has been practising at Whitemouth for 35 years, and spoke with great depth of feeling of her enjoyment of the arduous work of a large country practice. She spoke of the need of patience and perseverance in the practice of medicine, and emphasized the fact that women practitioners were necessary and valuable. N. Y. CHILDREN WILL CAMPAIGN FOR PURE CANDY

New York children will be organized

New York children will be organized to campaign for clean candy. The society is to be known as the Junior Housewives' League, but it will include boys as well as girls.

In making the abnouncement at the meeting of the New York and Suburban Council of the Housewives' League, Mrs. Julian Heath, president of the Housewives' League, asked for 100 volunteers to talk to the children in playgrounds and recreation piers and recruit them for the league. A circular of don'ts will also be distributed. Here are some of the don'ts: "Don't drink soda out of dirty glasses. moment only buy two and yet appear in six or more different dresses. This is the idea of a clever French dressmaker. A model appears in a simple evening gown, which is suitable for a very quiet function. Then, with a few touches, this gown is transformed into a smart upto-date frock. These additions to the gown can be changed as often as the wearer chooses. Thus, a plain black satin gown may be transformed into several striking dresses by the hooking on of different tunics and draperies.

UNIVERSITY WOMEN'S CLUB HAS VARIED INTERESTS AND DISTINCT DEPARTMENTS

The University Women's Club of Toronto, which has just had its election of officers, has a membership of about one hundred and sixty, and has been in existence for ten years. It is a union of university women, and has in its membership women from European, English and American institutions.

The club is divided into four departments; social, civic, industrial and educational. Last year the educational section met once a month for the study of Ibsen's drama. The course of brilliant Powys' lectures last season was given to the people of Toronto thru the initiative of the Club. Work of a different character tho none the less important, is also due to the action of the women of the club, who initiated the movement for hygienic handling of bread thru the method of paper-wrap-

Women look on aghast as they see the occupations of the home sweeping out in relentless stream to the fac-tory and the shop. Women, like men, are active, constructive, creative. Like men, they cry "Give us work or we perish." A survey of the field reveals the fact that there are sixty-nine occupations which gladly welcome women, with new ones opening with amazing regularity.

It is true that with college women, as with college men, some sort of technical preparation must be added to the college work or else a period of meagerly paid apprenticeship must be entered into. Men take more kindly to this than women, due doubtless to their inherent seriousness of attitude toward business and professional life. Most men carry thru college a definite notion of what they intend to do when they graduate. This is often discouraged in the women's colleges for some reason not quite clear. Thus the bureau finds almost an occupation in advising college women who have a property of the college. men who have made no study of them-selves and in directing them to fur-ther training which shall be organic and utilitarian. Again arrives one who determines to conduct a lunch room which shall come to pass provided the girl will show first of all a strong domestic temperament. After that to satisfy her vision she must have definite business instincts, money capital, some serious training in a good school for usehold science. Following her comes the girl who wishes to be an interior decorator. Here again is the need of a rich trainting in art, sufficient travel to make her familiar with the sequence of the procession of beauty in its endless expression, and in the experiences of the world, besides a strong sense of business and incidentally a knowledge of needlework craft in many and fine forms. Along with these qualifications must be the conviction that even then apprenticeship is a necessity. Only the gifted and the strong will continue to the end but those who do have their reward.

Planning City Development

Few who have given the matter of city expansion even cursory consideration but will agree that it is eminently desirable to have suburban development conducted in a way that will best meet the need of the greater community of the future. Yet

It invariably happens that, altho the theory commends support, any and every attempt to translate it into practice at once meets opposition by some one or other of the interests that are affected. Another and even more serious obstacle is that lack of public spirit, which refuses to look beyond the circumstances of the moment. What has posterity done for us, that we should do anything for posterity? is an excuse that is simply the refuge of the destitute. These identical individuals are also the very first to complain that their aspirations have been thwarted by the generation to whom they have succeeded. But, even at that, they fail to realize that when they start out to think in advance, they are no less working for their own immediate advantage. Whatever benefits the community cannot injure any of its members.

Among the public works now in hand none is more likely to result in permanent good than the construction of the Bloor street viaduct. This link between east and west has long been a necessity, not only because it creates a great new artery of traffic, but because it will open up a district which promises to be one of the most important residentially in Toronto. Eighteen months have elapsed since it was sanctioned by the citizens, and nothing, to all appearance, has been done towards its materialization. But it is now explained that the city authorities have not been idle, and that so advanced are the preparations that at least $1,000,000 will be spent on construction during the current season. When the work commences it is to be hoped that every effort will be used to make up for lost time, and secure the opening of the viaduct at the earliest possible moment. It will be a valuable means of relieving the congestion both of traffic and of housing.

Assisting Land Settlement

Recent melancholy happenings in Muskoka point the moral of allowing settlement on lands that are unable to yield a decent return to the tillers of the soil. Isolated settlers, deprived of the conveniences of civilization, and without the social intercourse necessary to maintain a proper standard of morals, are only too apt to become degenerate. Then, when some terrible disclosure happens, blame is placed on the individual who may, to a large extent, have been the victim of circum-Much more responsibility rests on the authorities charged with land settlement than they are prepared to accept or the public to demand. The cry has always been, get the settler, ye him his location, and leave him to his own often ignorant devices. It is little short of crime to locate immigrants in New Ontario, for example, who have no conception of its conditions, and can, therefore, make no adequate preparation for them. Clearing should be done in advance to an extent that will at least permit them to live; decent accommodation for man and beast should be provided, and a certain amount of supervision and assistance rendered in the early stages of their settlement.

Canada of recent years has witnessed a remarkable development of the cooperative movement among farmers and agriculturists. It has, perhaps, attained its highest point in the western grain provinces, but it is also conspicuous in the fruit districts of Ontario, and in special areas in other provinces. In British Columbia, too, the inclination of public opinion towards cooperative effort is apparent, and the Royal Commission of Agriculture has recommended the organization of a commercial branch of the department to assist in the formation of associations adapted to the particular needs of the various districts, and of central marketing organizations. Among other suggestions are the institution of a market news service, to collect and disseminate information regarding the supply of and demand for agricultural products, and the study of transportation problems, for the purpose of securing the best and cheapest service. These are eminently practical steps, which can be most successfully taken only thru an organization acting for individuals who, as a rule, are not in a position to spare the time, even if they knew whence the information can be obtained.

Reception

Toronto's civic reception committee fell down badly on the occasion of the visit of the South American delegates to the conference at Niagara Falls. On their arrival at the union station they found no pilot to guide them thru that labyrinth, and were left to find their way to the King Edward Hotel as best they could. Yet the circumstances might well have prompted an extension of the courtesies that have so often been given to visitors of less importance and engaged in a much less valuable mission. To whom the failure was due is not apparent, but it certainly was regrettable from many points of view, and it will be unpleasantly remembered, even if there be a valid excuse for the seeming neglect.

Canada has been squarely faced with the duty of maintaining and enforcing her immigration regulations, and the Dominion government is only doing its obvious duty when it acts in accordance with its settled policy. Recent authorities have made it clear that any right belonging to a British "subject" either by birth or naturalization does not include unfettered, liberty to leave his birthplace and become a resident in any other part of the empire whither his inclination leads him. Each self-governing dominion has the inherent power to lay down its own immigration laws and to impose such restrictions as it considers advisable for the maintenance of its own stanadrd of living. By insisting on the free exercise of that power, Canada will have the support of the other self-governing dominions, and it is all the more imperative in the case of British Indians, when the possibility of demands on the part of other Oriental nations are taken into consideration.

Britain and the Panama-Pacific Exhibition

After renewed consideration, the British government has adhered to its decision not to participate in the Panama-Pacific Exhibition at San Francisco. This has come with something of a surprise, since at his recent interview with a deputation representing not only all parties but a majority in the House of Commons, Premier Asquith invited the inference that the government would favorably entertain the proposal for a small official exhibit. Why the cabinet have taken so pronounced a stand against recognition of the Panama-Pacific Is not quite understandable. It was freely rumored that its first attitude had been adopted in consequence of an agreement with the German government, but this has been specifically denied. Yet, apart from some such complication, it is difficult to imagine on what grounds the British government bases its disinclination to be represented at San Francisco, more particularly when the exhibition is being supported by Canada and by the Australasian states.

Possibly the government was disappointed at the lukewarm response from British manufacturers and mercantile houses. Mr. Asquith again repeated that no evidence had been offered of any general intention on their part to participate in the exhibition. After all, expenses in this direction are only incurred when there is a prospect of business resulting, and British manufacturers may have convinced themselves that the Panama canal will not advantage them sufficiently to justify the large expenditure involved. That is, of course, their own affair but the government might well have allowed due weight to broader considerations than any yet advanced. The United Kingdom will, it is assured, be adequately represented at the official opening of the Panama canal by a squadron of warships, but the invitation anyway could not well be ignored. A voluntary resolve to support a commemorative exhibition would have been better appreciated.

"The River of Doubt"

Colonel Roosevelt is back from the swamps of Brazil, but, even before he emerged from that attractive region, he had managed to set some geographical authorities by the ears. The announcement that his party had not only discovered but successfully navigated a new and previously unknown river at a place where the supposedly authentic maps located only mountains was quite enough to arouse the ire of other explorers, who regarded Brazil as their preempted territory. Sir Clements Markham and Mr. Savage Landor rushed into the fray, and, on the strength of their scepticisms, the colonel's tributary was at once dubbed "The River of Doubt." However, the ex-president sticks to his guns, or rather his river, and stoutly insists that it is there to the extent of one thousand

Public Doctors

Monthly, Professor Paul L. Vogt, of Miami University, writes on the need for a salaried medical profession. This and the proposal for public lawyers, noticed the other week in these columns, have for some little time been attracting considerable attention in the United States, largely because the present professional system is being increasingly regarded as essentially unfair to people of moderate means, prejudicial to the general welfare, and not even to the advantage of the practitioners themselves. In Professor Vogt's view, attention to the public health presents two aspects—one preventive, intended to preserve health by removing the causes of disease; the other curative, and intended to restore health to those who have fallen ill. Hitherto the medical profession has been mainly concerned with the problems of curing disease, and had no direct financial interest in its prevention. Professor Vogt's first point in support of publicly-paid doctors is that they will be as much concerned with the prevention of disease as in its cure.

His next argument relates to the charges made by physicians. These vary according to the means of the patient, and "the physician is bound by the ethics of his profession to heed the call of every individual without any preliminary inquiry as to ability to pay, and must give both prescriptions and medicine to many with-out hope of reward." The present system, too, develops a class in the community who are regarded as a pauper group, requiring care according to special methods. Free dispensaries and other institutions exist, to which physicians volunteer their services. The poor are made to feel the disgrace of their poverty, and the wellto-do who attend the dispensaries are induced to falsify their position. Professor Vogt maintains that this system is unfair to both the physician and the public, and prevents adequate and timely aid to those in need. It encourages also the resort to patent medicines and other nostrums from the drug store, because they are cheap and seem to fit their case.

Strongest of all is the argument drawn from the necessity to preserve the public health. Prevention of disease is too important to be left to random treatment, because the sick person becomes a non-producer and a care to his family and friends. Patients suffer and die because they are too poor to pay for proper medical attendance, and dread the stigma attached to dispensary treatment. That dread can only he removed by making free medical attendance universal, and limiting the fee system to the very wealthy, or to those able and willing to pay. Free public schools have not eliminated private schools from the educational system, and neither would a salaried medical profession necessarily eliminate private practice. But with physicians paid by the state, the emphasis in practice would be shifted from the curing to the prevention of disease. The public doctor would become the agent for the dissemination of popular information on subjects of hygienic interest. and it would bring the medical profession into line with the highest interests of the community. Such, in brief, are the arguments Professor Vogt adduces in support of his thesis.

Stories of Famous Masterpieces EDITEDBY DONALD G. FRENCH

12. Wordsworth's Michael: A Pastoral Poem

WORDSWORTH, apostle and interpreter of nature as he was, did not go far afield for his themes. This poem of simple but dignified narrative of humble life—"Michael"—was based on the career of a young scapegrace of the author's neighborhood, who had run away from his parents; added to this was the local legend of an old shepherd, who spent seven years building a sheepfold in a solitary valley.

The background of the story is the rugged and diversified mountain scenery of the Lake District, where Wordsworth spent so much of his life. The poet asks us to imagine ourselves as passing along the highway near Grasmere Lake, in Westmoreland County, England:

If from the public way you turn your steps, Up the tumultuous brook of Green-head Ghyll, You will suppose that with an upright path Your feet must struggle; in such bold ascent-The pastoral mountains front you, face to face.

Russed and uneven is the flow of words that presents to us the cture. But, around that boisterous brook we find that the mountains en out a hidden valley. Here is the stage upon which the little drama

No habitation can be seen; but they
Who journey thither find themselves alone
With a few sheep, with rocks and stones, and kites, That overhead are sailing in the sky. It is in truth an utter solitude.

With an eye to the dramatic, the poet calls our attention to "a straggling heap of unhewn stones beside the brook," which, he says, "we might see and notice not." Around the ruins of this unfinished fold is centred the simple tragedy of the shepherd's life. And here, as he breaks into the tale, the poet pauses to make an explanation, and, it seems to me, a confession. For, Wordsworth, in spite of the high rank accorded to him as poet, has, to my mind, always been more the high priest of nature than the sympathetic interpreter of nature to man. He avers here that he loved the shepberds of the valley, but

For their own sakes, but for the fields and hills, Where was their occupation and their abode.

These lines show Wordsworth's tendency to study mankind in relation to nature, rather than nature in relation to mankind. We scarce expect to find him a genial, red-blooded man; that he was cold, austere, reserved, and lacking in humor, we might infer from this poem alone.

ORDSWORTH'S pet theory he has emphasized again and again.

Very few passages of any length does he write without expressing it in some manner. Here it is in Michael:

.....Yet having felt the power

Of nature, by the gentle agency
Of natural objects, led me on to feel
For passions that were not my own, and think
On man, the heart of man, and human life. From nature, says Wordsworth, we learn, tho we merely sit passive and allow her influences to work their will upon us. Now to the story.

Michael, the shepherd, is pictured thus:

Upon the forest-side in Grasmere Vale.

There dwelt a shepherd, Michael was his name;

An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb. His bodily frame had been from youth to age Of an unusual strength; his mind was keen,

Intense, and frugal, apt for all affairs, Spending much of his time upon the hillside, he "had learned the meaning of all winds, and blasts of every tone." Despite his constant toil, he was appreciative of the beauties of the green valleys, the streams and the rocks. He loved the lands of his rugged farm-lands which he had won as his own by the persistent, patient toil of a lifetime. They had come to him encumbered, but he had wrested them free, and now, with his wife Isabel and his son Luke, he lived "a life of eager industry," not gay and scarce cheerful, but hopeful and not discontented.

sabel, his helpmate, was a fit companion for the faithful shepherd. She was a model housewife. With two wheels she spun now flax, now wool; and, after the homely evening meal:

Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk, Sat, round the basket piled with oaten cakes,

After this, father and son carded wool for the housewife's spindle, or repaired the rude implements of their daily toil. So constant were they at their tasks that 'they were as a proverb in the vale for endless industry."

A second instance of Wordsworth's fine dramatic touch exhibited in this poem is the fact that he chose as the scene of the story a cottage "The Evening Star," which stood conspicuous on a plot of rising ground, so that it could be seen from all sides. He pictures an even-ing in the cottage with the light from an old-fashioned lamp shining to the far limits of the valley in every direction. This prominent position of the cottage would make the story of Michael fix itself more firmly upon the community. The cottage, which was really the home of the runaway, who served as the original for the story, was nearly so conspicuously situated.

VERY TENDER and touching is the picture which Wordsworth presents of the love and companionship of Michael and his only son Luke. Luke had been born to them in the later years of married life, and for that reason was endeared to them the more.. Michael, altho austere, "of an unbending mind," and unden strative, showed in many little ways his love of his son. When the boy was very small, his fatchr would have him about him on every possible occasion-in the field, at the sheep-shearing; or when driving the sheep, he would place Luke at the gap to turn the flock, the the boy was only "something between a hindrance and a heip."

At his tenth year Luke joined his father regularly in his daily

They shepherded together amid the mountain blasts in delightful companionship, and the old man grew young again by observing thru the eyes of the boy, and by feeling anew the emotions of youth, by reason of the boy's comradeship. And so the boy grew up to his eighteenth

THEN INTO this peaceful valley comes "distressful tidings." Michael had become surety for a brother's son, "a man of industrious life, and ample means." Sudden misfortune required that Michael should come good for the amount guaranteed. It was a terrible blow-it meant little less than half Michael's whole property, for which he toiled so long, so arduously, so patiently. The only thing to do seemed to be to sell a portion of his lands. The more Michael thought of this, the harder it appeared. The lands were almost a part of himself; there must be some other way out.

Two evenings after he heard the news, Michael proposed to his wife Isabel that instead of selling the lands, they might raise the money and send Luke away to another kinsman, there to earn money to repair their loss. Isabel did not at first answer, but she thought of one Richard Bateman, a poor boy who had gone from that neighborhood and had become exceedingly wealthy. The recollection brightened her countenance, and, the old man seeing it, pressed home his scheme. He was eager that the boy should go immediately; if it were possible. The mother's heart-strings held back the boy's departure. She even spoke to the boy against his going. The youth, however, was filled with delight at the thought of the adventure of life in a great city; and so everything was made ready for his departure. Favorable word came from the distant kinsman, and that same evening Michael took Luke with him to the valley, where a pile of stones had been gathered for the building of a sheepfold. Here in simple words of earnest love the father rehearsed the story of their companionship and urged upon the boy to remember his father's love as a shield against the temptations that may assail him.

The next morning Luke set out for the city. There, for a time, he did remarkably well, and wrote home "the prettiest letters that were ever seen." Whenever Michael could snatch a leisure hour from his other duties he went down the valley and wrought at the sheepfold. Ere long, however, the temptations of the city overcame Luke, and he had to fiee to a hiding-place beyond the seas. Outwardly there was little change in Michael. For many years afterwards he tended his flocks and performed his daily duties with his accustomed vigor. He even went time and again to the valley: but there, by the sheepfold, the altar of covenant between father and son, the full force of his sorrow came upon him; and, tho he went there, he had no heart for the work: That many and many a day he hither went, And never lifted up a single stone.

The pathos of that last line is the pathos of perfect simplicity. The closing of the poem is equally effective. Michael and his wife are no more; the estate passes into other hands; Evening Star Cottage is gone, "the plowshare has been thru the ground on which it stood," only:The oak is left

That grew beside their door; and the remains Of the unfinished sheepfold may be seen Beside the boisterous brook of Green-head Ghyll.

BERTRAND W. SINCLAIR

NEW NOVELIST OF CANADIAN NORTHWEST.

Bertrand W. Sinclair, author of "North of '53" (Musson Book Co.). ascribes his invasion of the literary field to a certain resentment at the way western types were consistently caricatured in the magazines a few years ago, and a conviction that he could write better yarns himself. So he began writing short stories, sold the first one immediately to The San Francisco Arsonaut, and did not place another one for two years. Despite the fact that he knows the country from the middle west to the Pacific, and from California to the regions about Great Slave Lake, Mr. Sinclair is not an American. He is Scotch by birth and descent and a native of Edinburgh. But his parents came to America when he was eight years old, and settled in the Canadian Northwest, which in those days was something of a frontier. As a boy he hobnobbed with cowpunchers, miners, trappers, Hudson's Bay men, and the like in a country where schools were not. At sixteen he was doing a man's work on the range, and from that time on he earned his living doing various things all the way from the Saskatchewan to the Platte, varying that pursuit with aimless trips to any part of the North American continent that took his fancy. "Whatever education I possess," he says, "I have absorbed thru my pores, since I have never darkened the doors of any academic institution except as a transient stranger. But everything in print is grist that comes to my mill, and I cannot resmember when I could not read. This sort of education may not be so adequate a preparation for a voyage on the literary high seas as a university degree, but I have come in the way western types were con-sistently caricatured in the magaon the literary high seas as a university degree, but I have come in contact with all sorts of men and women, and I have seen pretty raw slices of life, but it has all interested me vitally and sympathetically."

Work along this line will be commenced in the present year and shipments of coal will probably be made under the supervision of the company's en-gineer, who has been in Spitzbergen during the last two years.

The chief difficulty in the way of the venture is that of obtaining a sufficient number of miners and providing for them an adequate shelter, but the company proposes to erect a number of small houses and will also build a modern power plant. The coal, it is said, is for the most part near the surface so that deep mining will be unnecessary. The company, however, will have to face the difficult problem of paying the freight and competing with the singlish mines, which are so much more conveniently located for supplying the coal trade of northern Europe. The difficulty of the freight problem is increased by the fact that vessels will be compelled to return to Spitzbergen without a cargo, so that freight rates must necessarily be viding for them an adequate shelter, bergen without a cargo, so that freight rates must necessarily be

THE INTERVENING LADY.

Or How Youth and Beauty Finds It's Greatest Joy in Helping Others.

THE Intervening Lady," is a very entertaining humorous story. It tells in a most pleasing manner of the intervention of Lady Felicia Grandison in her friends affairs, from her earliest strihood to womanhood.

Lady Nogrs, as her friends call her, lives with her uncle, the prime minister of England, and makes life very interesting to him by her innocent misdemeanors. She is truthful, kind and very high-spirited. In pity and genuine desire to make others happy she kidnaps a little playmate, Michael Broome, because his aunt's strenuous social duties prevent her from caring for him. The boy's father, a retired officer in the Indian army—finds him and is allowed to have him, only when he repeatedly assures her that he will treat him kindly. This little incident is just the beginning of her career of helping people out of difficult and humorous situations.

Her governess proves rather trying because she does not understand

Her governess proves rather trying because she does not understand her pupil, so Lady Noggs conceives the brilliant idea of making her fall in love with the curate. She diplomatically makes them believe they are enamored of each other. Thus she rids herself of an uncongenial person. Her uncle is relieved of an officious secretary by her amusing intervention.

officious secretary by her amusing intervention.

In young womanhood her life is one round of pleasure but she does not let this be her chief aim. The wide family connection call on her repeatedly to help them out of their social and financial difficulties. She secures one of her friends from the clutches of a blackmailer by a clever and ingenious device, which is exceedingly laughable. She is instrumental in marrying two people who are not quite sure whether they are ready for matrimony or not. She prevents a distinguished cousin from making a misalliance. She arranges the marriage of a worthless cousin with a highminded actress who eventually redeems him. All her "interventions" are done from the best of motives, and are well within the bounds of possibility.

Her own love affair with Michael Broome, who has become, by her aid, a famous painter, is felt rather than expressed and of course ends most satisfactorily.

I can feel him coming nearer and nearer, and my heart becomes glad."

Most artistic of all is the closing scene where Tagore's marvelous power invests this gem with the strong sense of salutation of the king. The material suddenly changes to the spiritual—no king enters, no mention is made of death, yet you know death comes, and the very moment of his advent. The unseen and intangible become the strongest of realities. (The Macmillan Co., Toronto, publishers).

THE second march was undertaken by 20 other men and they had a ration of 4511 calorics, including bacon and cheese, more jam and porridge. These were all much appreciated, but the pickles were not and almost without exception the men preferred corned beef and biscuit to fresh beef and bread. It was found in the second experi-ment that the men gained weight a little and the men stated that they were not hungry and looked in good condition saying that they condition, saying that they were sorry that the march was over, whereas in the first experiment the men were hungry and presented all the usual appearances of commencing starvation.

In consequence of the above work the British Field Service ration has been changed. It is now three pounds in weight and 4500 calories. The addition of a mincing machine to each company's equipment is also cordered as a trial and some of the ammunition formerly carried by the soldiers is to be carried in future by the transport wagons.

T appears that commanding of-ficers and medical officers are now co-operating much more than they formerly did and that pro-fessional knowledge of sanitation among the ranks continues to increase and the effect is shown in the improved sanitaty condition maintained in the barracks. The troops are more "fit" than they used to be, and every man is inspected once a month, any man in a doubtful state of health receiving special attention. It is also expected of the officers that they will regularly inofficers that they will regularly in-struct their companies in sanitary

SUPPOSE that it is some of the old Spanish pirate blood that is stirring, but when news came of gun-running along the grim, sad, western coast of Ireland, one felt a longing to be in the thick of it. The Clare and Galway coasts are made for smuggling. Take the giant cliffs of Moher, hohey-combed with caves which long ago were filled with the rich loot of the aforesald Spanish pirate, or the lonely Arran rocks, or the wild country of Connemara—the loneliest place! They ran a boatload or two of guns in on the Connaught coast the other day. American guns—which makes me doubt their value it they are anything like the articles sent down to Cuba when our Great Cousin camped on the skirts of Cervera. That time the siege guns were landed—without their sights—and other odd things happened. Of what use guns without ammunition? But perhaps the U. S. has this time remembered former mistakes.

The Irish situation ran away from—or with—both Redmond and Carson—some time ago. They started the ball, but they have no string on it to tow it back. And if it is Nationalist against Ulsterite—there will not be even the tail of a Kilkenny cat left between them. I love the gun-running tho. Likewise smuggling. Anything that's "agin the governments; the thing is bred in the bone.

NEIL LYONS, in one of his inimitable sketches in "Cottage Pie," gives a vivid picture of the kind of people who prey upon others, of which one was reminded by the bitter saying of an elderly spinster the other day, who was accusing her old mother of having spoiled her life. "You always shooed the men away," she told-her unfortunate victim, who by reason of facial paralysis bore the censure without moving a feature. "You kept me year after year, caring for you, and working for you until my youth went and nobody wanted me. And now I am no use to anyone but you, whom I have to wash and feed like a baby, and who doesn't know me half the time." We tried to stop her-feeling that recrimination of the sort before another was a kind of profanity. But "Oh, she doesn't hear me, and if she doesn't hear me, and if she did she couldn't understand, and it does me good to speak out my mind to her "sometimes. I have mind to her sometimes. I have sacrificed my whole life to duty, and look what I've got for it!" And she wheeled the unfortunate old woman away with a series of jerks. A pitiable spectacle. One you will say that in its way was shocking. Her own mother! I hear you ex claim. Yes, but this daughter had can be too selfish. Great love is always unselfish, always sacrificing for the beloved one. And great love is rarer than you think. Not all mothers have it for their child-ren, or children for their mothers. Not all lovers have it-and very few married people. Kipling voiced it in "Mother o' Mine," and I know of no other writer who ever sounded its depths as he did. That mother who can sacrifice a daughter's life to her own love, does not know what real love ever means. It appears very fine on the face of it when a woman says she hopes her dear daughter will never marry; or not for a long, long time. At first we are apt to think—how dearly she loves her girl; she cannot bear to think of her leaving for a home of her own. Why she has a home while she lives with mother-a real home!

SHE HAS not. The mother who talks like that may believe talks like that may believe that it is because she loves her girl that she wants to keep her always. But give me the mother who can stand aside, and see her little girl go out with the boy she has chosen to make a home of her own with him. Do not think for a moment that such a mother does not suffer. She does. She misses her child at every turn. She weeps, but her tears are those secret ones of the night which no one sees. She goes about quietly, but there is a vacant chair at the table, and a vacant chair at the hearth, and, oh, a lost feeling every hour in the day because the dear face, the gentle voice, the helpful little hands are not here any more in the old nest-because SOME ONE ELSE has broken the chain of love and slipped a dividing link into it. But it is for the best. It is as it should be. One day, in her turn—the little girl will know the ache of loneliness that fills a mother's heart on a

I always think of Shaw as a man built up on wires instead of bones—quivering, vibrating wires. A man of nimble imagination and satiric wit. But what a terrible position is his? Every time a new book, or essay, or play is put out bearing his name, each critic expects Shaw to out-Shave himself. (Shavian they call his literature, therefore the term will pass.) The unfortunate fel-low has to be always jumping about amusing people, no matter how his corns pinch. In the old days when living dramatists and novelists were rarely praised, and never read in print, the marvelous recital of their own doings and prodigious gifts which seems to be the fashionable mode of the hour, a man could put forth such work as the mood of the moment permitted. But Shaw, and lights like him, are expected shine a little more brightly each time. A PIRMATIVE advertising is preasant publicity, plus sales manship.

Acsalive advertising is unpleasant publicity, with intent of boosting your own business by destroying the trade of your competitor.

There have been instances where whole industries have been wiped out by negative advertising.

Ten years ago there were in the States at least a dozen successful manufacturers of incubators. These men started in exposing the weak points of competitors. Things that they were not sure of they concoted, hinted at and fished out of the cosmic ink bottle.

So successful were these men in showing up the weak points in the business that they destroyed one another.

All of them beckoned for the company the meanstarted.

All of them beckoned for the com-nissioner in bankruptcy, who gra-lously responded.

If THESE men in the same line of business had stood together in an educational, social and fraternal way, and taught the people how to use incubators, they might all today be doing a successful business. For while it is a fact that it takes about as much genius to raise chickens as to prepare advertising, yet the thing can be done. The business world has pretty generally come to the conclusion that to pound on a competitor isn't a very good way to sell your own goods.

that to pound on a competitor isn't a very good way to sell your own goods.

Wise traveling salesmen do not do this sort of thing, but some people do in print that which they would not do by word of mouth.

I hold in my hand the catalog of a successful manufacturer of automobiles. The machine this concern makes I believe is all that its manufacturer claims for it.

Now this manufacturer is not content with emphasizing the excellence of his car, but he begins a campaign of hammering on the entire automobile industry. Not only does he libel his competitors' commodities, but he attacks their credit. Thus does this manufacturer throw a scare into every "prospect." Instead of giving us courage, he gives us goose fiesh. Instead of encouraging the buying mood, he tries to stampede the public into a panic. The fact is, the whole automobile industry is a new enterprise, and the men who are making the most money today were poor yesterday. And this very individual, who is boasting of his solidity, and comparing his own happy state with that of the parties he avers are hanging on by their eyebrows, is essentially silly, immodest, grandiloquent, and belongs to the pioneer stage.

If this man has a beautiful car.

If this man has a beautiful car, and big resources and small liabilities, these things are well; but when he goes on to warn us not to deal with anybody else, he is sowing a crop of nettles.

mental attitude.

Personally, if I were going to buy a car I wouldn't buy of this man who assumes the lordly strut; who hoasts of his success, and intimates that the whole industry, outside of himself is on the blink.

Let this man advertise the beauties of his own goods, but when he utilizes space in his catalog and in the magazines to convince, the world that as an industry the whole automobile business is in a shaky financial condition, he overshoots the mark, and we become leary.

Tastes in automobiles differ; we do not all want the same machine. The great number of makes reveal a great number of wariations in style, weight, size and general attractiveness. quarter down."

The workman's eyes lit. "Well, youngster," he said with a show of carelessness. "You'd better be going with your Dad's dinner before it gets cold."

The boy traveled away. In about half an hour he came back and saw the man still at the grating. "Are you quite sure, son, it was this grating the quarter was lost in?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "because I saw my father get it out again."

tractiveness.
So far, it looks to me as if there were room for all the automobile manufacturers who are in the business. The use of the automoble is increasing rather than lessening.

ND when along comes a manufacturer of automobiles and fills up good newspaper space with scare-heads, and such words as "Caution," "Information," "Go Slow," "Wao are you buying off?" "Can you afford it?" and "Remember there is a risk," this man is injuring not only his own business. juring not only his own business, but the entire automobile industry. He is hitting his competitors without benefitting himself. This is wha you call suicidal competition—industrial hari kari, or grouch gone

This man does not know that a new day has arisen; that life today is affirmative; that the brotherhood of man is at the door.

Co-operation is the big word now, Every man in any line of worthy business ought to help every other man in the same line—this for the plain, simple, commonsense reason that when you put the skids under the other fellow's prospects, you slip the knockout drops into your own.

Denying the Criminal Type

OU CANNOT subject a man to certain measurements and then decide whether he is a criminal any more than you can make the same method determine the moral and humane content of a man. There are some persons who still stubbornly hold the theory, but its acceptance is growing less and less. Lombroso's "criminal type" has received some unmerciful wallops of recent years, and so has been beaten and assailed until not much is left

One of the most telling demonstrations against the "criminal type" was the measurements of a man which showed, according to the Lombroso scale, that he might be a murderer by poison or the knife; that he was cruelly vengeful and had probably come from a family of criminals dating back for general tions. All of which might have been true but for the fact that the subgiven to big charities and good deeds

Of course, it might be contended that, given the Lombrosan criminal stigmata, had this man been differ-ently circumstanced—in dire poerty, entry circumstanced—in dire poerty, for instance—he might have realized the fixed "criminal type." But thus fitting the man to the theory is a confession of weakness. Dr. C. Goring, author of an English Blue Book of valuable criminological information. after painstaking investigation, adds his name to the number of investigators that declare number of investigators that declare there is no physical "criminal type"; and, what is most striking, that there is no such thing as a mental "criminal type." Following the suggestion of Dr. Griffiths, deputy medical officer of Parkhurst prison, a large number of prisoners convicted of certain similar offences were subjected by Dr. Goring to accurate measurements in order to ascertain whether these showed any deviation. showed any deviation from what may be described as the normal type. This material has all been tabulated by Dr. Goring. Like most modern criminologists, he makes short shrift of Lombroso's "criminal type."

not a matter of selection, but have to be taken as we find them; but it is not true that if they are ugly to begin with, they must be left that way. Take, for instance, the long, dark hall with a straight, narrow stair so prevalent in city houses. Generally with a little thought and care it can be made both dignified and beautiful. Indeed, it is frequently preferable to so-called "Dutch" and reception halls, for the ordinary town house needs the privacy and dignity afforded by a formal entrance. The accompanying illustration shows a novel and inexpensive treatment for such a hall. In its original state it was gloomly, lacking in distinction and altogether unattractive, with dark heavy woodwork, wall paper and carpet that completely overpowered the small ount of illumination furnished by the

N its renovation the main facts taken into consideration were light and eerfulness combined with dignity and small expenditure. In an effort to obtain these the paper and carpets were removed and the thick, dark varnish on stairs, handrail and surbase washed off with ammonia. A narrow moulding was proved by moving the newelpost back two steps and placing a platform step ut four feet in width at the bottom. This had the rise at the side running parallel with the hall and was finished across the front with spindles to match those in the handrail. You could have these made in any mill at a trifling cost. The surbases, spindles and simulated panelling were then given two coats of white paint and one of enamel, while the handrail, stair treads, floor and molding at the top of the wainscoting were finished with mahogany stain rubbed down with wax. The walls were painted a deep pumpkin yellow, decorated at the ceiling line with an odd, little border stenciled in black.

THE NEXT thing was to provide suitable furnishings from the "leftovers' about the house. In collecting material for these nothing was ned unworthy of consideration. If the average housewife knew the creative delight one experiences in contriving some decorative or useful piece of furniture out of old odds and ends, the exercise of craftsmanship and in-genuity would soon become as popupurchased for three cents a foot and ap- lar as "afternoon bridge" and probably solved was how to obtain a light that would harmonize with the newly acquired beauty of the hall. The solution was found in a heavy galvanized tin basin turned into wrought iron with a little, dull black and hung from the ceiling with three lengths of dog chain. This was finished with a Chinese shade that had ribs of bamboo and cost but seventy-five cents. In a house fitted electric light a single powerful bulb could be placed in the lamp by running the wire in and out one of the chain supports. When painted black this would be invisible. Where electricity is out of the question, furnish the basin

SPEAKING of hall lights and hall fixings in general a young matron a fashionable suburb has a beautisince they represent the outcome of her good taste. For instance, being keenly desirous of an old-fashioned wall table leaf variety, that had been relet to the kitchen, by the simple exp of reversing the hinges on one of the leaves so that it could be made to stand upright against the wall. The lamp was not such an easy matter and required considerable thought. But after wandering for nearly half an hour in the attic one day, expending copious "gray matter" in a vain effort to see any of the various objects lying about in the light of the desired lamp her eye was attracted by the glint of green shining like an emerald where the light caught the glass of a big wicker covered demijohn, and immediately she saw visions of a lamp as wonderful as Aladdin's. The demijohn was first thoroughly scrubbed, the wicker was loosened from the top and neck, cut out 'n a wide circle with a glass cutter, after which the wicker was carefully plaited around the edge and finally finished with a dark brown stain such as the the Japanese use; the glint of gree glass through this was perfectly fac-cinating. For a shade the bottom was cut from an old wicker work basket which was given a coat of stain, lined with shirred green silk and attached to the bowl with a shade frame from the bargain counter. Use of Phosphorus Paste.

There are various poisons which, it is asserted, are fairly effective as remedies against roaches. The only one of these that seems to give satisfactory results is a phosphorus paste, sold in the form of pills. It consists of sweetened flour paste containing one to two per cent. of phosphorus, and is spread on bits of paper or cardboard and placed in the runways of the roaches. This mixture has been used very successfully in the department to free desks from Croton bugs, numbers of drawers every day during the time the poison was kept about. As phosphorus is poisonous to human beings and domestic animals, besides being highly inflammable, it should be used very care-

Considerable relief may be gained by a liberal use of pyrethrum powder. It is not a perfect remedy, however, and is at best but a temporary expedient, while it soils shelves and other objects over which it is dusted. It should be used fresh and liberally applied. Roaches are often paralyzed by it when not killed outright, and the morning after an application the infested premises should be gone over and all dead or partially applied. or partially paralyzed roaches swep-

Pyrethrum may also be burned in an infested apartment. The smoke and vapors generated by the burning of this insecticide are often more effective in destroying roaches than the application of the substance in the ordinary way as a powder. There is no attendant danger of explosion, and the only precaution necessary is to see that the room is kept tightly closed for from six to twelve hours.

WASH CELERY STALKS

Since the _____ Department of Agriculture has discovered that it is practically impossible to bring satisfactory celery to market unless the plants have been sprayed with Bor-deaux mixture, or the salts of copper declared injurious for use in food products, two warnings have been issued, one to the housewives telling them to wash the celery before using it, and the other to the farmers telling them that the danger in using this blight preventative was due to a faulty spraying apparatus. It should be spread at high pressure to make a fine mist instead of in a stream which settles on In this way it settles in the roots and is not washed away by the rain, giving the celery a blue look. However, even if the spray is properly used the Department of Agricul-ture advises the consumer to break the unches and wash and scrub the stalks before they are eaten. Chemical anal-ysis proves that this cleansing removes nearly all the copper left by the spray and prevents injury to those eating the Pineapple Cocktail.

REMOVE the rind and eyes from a ripe fruit and after cutting it into thick slices, remove the cores and cut the slices into dice. Now place in a little white cocktail sieve over a chilled bowl.

Add three or four dozen white grapes, which have been halved and seeded. Now melt three-quarters of a cupful of white sugar, in half a cupful of water, and after boiling two minutes add the juice of half a lemon, the juice squeezed from the pineapple core, together with that drained from the fruit, and one tablespoonful of apricot cordial. When chilled, fill the cocktail glasses with the fruit and add enough liquid to moisten and flavor the fruit.

Fruit Cocktail.

Allow four bananas, four oranges, two grape fruit and two dozen white grapes with sugar to taste and a maraschino cherry or two to decorate each glass. Remove the seeds from the grape fruit and oranges after halving them and scoop out the pulp. Peel and slice the bananas. Then out the white grapes in half lengthwise, removing the seeds. After mixing the whole well with sugar, stand on the ice until very cold. Serve in sherbet glasses on small plates.

Strawberry Cocktail. After washing and hulling halve firm tipe cherries, chill them. When time to herve, add sufficient spiced strawberry yrup to moisten the cherries and add a tick of cinnamon to each glass.

THE CASE FO JENNIE BRICE ! MYSTERY, DESPERATE AND BAFFLING, IN REAL LIFE

THE BEST OF THE MYSTERIES OF MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Concluded From Last Sunday. "I laughed it off, and we separated. But at two o'clock Bronson called me up again. I met him at his office at the theater, and he told me that Jennie Brice, who was out of the cast that week, had asked for a week's vacation. She had heard of a farm at a town called Horner, and she wanted to go there to rest.

"'Now the idea is this,' he said. She's living with her husband, and he has threatened her life more than once. It would be easy enough to frame up something to look as if he'd made away with her. We'd get a week of excitement, more advertis-ing than we'd ordinarily get in a year; you get a corking news story, and find Jennie Brice at the end getting the credit for that. Jen-nie gets a hundred dollars and a rest, and Ladley, her husband, gets,

say, two hundred.'
"Mr. Bronson offered to put up the money, and I agreed. The flood came just then and was considerable help. It made a good setting. I went to my city editor, and got an assignment to interview Ladley about this played interview Ladley about this played in its. Then Bronson and I went together to see the Ladleys on Sunday morning, and as they needed money, they agreed. But Ladley insisted on fifty dollars a week extra ladley in the ladle week extra ladle was not ladle week extra ladle was not ladle w if he had to go to jail .We promised it, but we did not intend to let things

"In the Ladley's room that Sunday morning, we worked it all out. The hardest thing was to get Jennie Brice's consent; but she agreed. finally. We arranged a list of clues, to be left around, and Ladley was to go out in the night and to be heard coming back. I told him to quarrel with his wife that after-noon—altho I don't believe they needed to be asked to do it—and I suggested also the shoe or slipper to be found floating around."

"Just a moment," said Mr. Holsome, busy with his note-book. "Did you suggest the onyx clock?"
"No. No clock was mentioned.
The—the clock has puzzled me."

"The towel?"
"Yes. I said no murder was complete without blood, but he kicked on that—said he didn't mind the rest, but he'd be hanged if he was going to slash himself. But, as it happened, he cut his wrist while cutting the boat loose, and so we had the towel"

"Pillow-slip?" asked Mr. Hol-"Well, no. There was nothing said about a pillow-slip. Didn't he say he burned it accidentally?"

"So he claimed." Mr. Holcombe made another entry in his book. "Then I said every murder had a weapon. He was to have a pistol at first, but none of us owned one. Mrs. Ladley undertook to get a knife from Mrs. Pitman's kitchen, and to leave it around, not in full view, but where it could be found."

"A broken knife?"
"No. Just a knife."

"Why did you meet her openly, and take her to the train?"

Mr. Howell bent forward and smiled across at the little man. "One of your axioms, sir." he said. "Do the natural thing; upset the customary order of events as little as possible. order of events as little as possible. Jennie Brice went to the train, because that was where she wanted to go. But as Ladley was to protest that his wife had left town, and as the police would be searching for a solitary woman, I went with her. We went in a leisurely manner. I bought her a magazine and a morning paper, asked the conductor to fix her window, and, in general, acted the devoted hysband seeing his wife off on a trip. I even"—he smiled—"I even promised to feed the canary."

Lida took her hands away. "Did you kiss her good-by?" she demanded.

"Not even a chaste salute," he said. His spirits were rising. It was, as often happens, as if the mere confession removed the guilt. I have seen little boys who have broken a window show the same relief after telling about it.

"For a day or two Bronson and I sat back, enjoying the stir-up. Trings turned out as we had expected. Business boomed at the theatre, I got a good story, and some few kind words from my city editor. "I wonder if you realize, young man, that, having provided a perfect defense for this man Ladley, you provided him with every possible inducement to make away with his wife? Secure in your coming forwife? Secure in your coming for-ward at the last minute and con-fessing the hoax ta save him, was there anything he might not have dared with impunity?"

"But I tell you I took Jennie Brice out of town on Monday morn-

CHAPTER XVI. Mr. Holcombe was up very early the next morning. I heard him mov-ing around at five o'clock, and at six he banged at my door and de-manded to know at what time the neighborhood rose: he had been up for an hour and there were no signs of life. He was more cheerful after he had had a cup of coffee, commented on Lida's beauty, and said that Howell was a lucky chap.
"That is what worries me, Mr.
Holcombe." I said. "I am helping the affair along and—what if . it turns out badly?"

He looked at me over his glasses.
"It isn't likely to turn out badly,"
he said. "I have never married. Mrs. Pitman, and have missed a great deal out of life"

"Perhaps you're better off: if you had married and lost your wife—" I was thinking of Mr. Pitman.
"Not at all." he said with emphais. "It's better to have married and lost than never to have married at all. Every men page at all. Every man needs a good woman, and it doesn't matter how old he is. The older he is, the more he needs her. I am nearly sixty."
I was rather startled, and I almost dropped the fried potatoes. But the next moment he had got out his the next moment he had got out his note-book and was going over the items again. "Pillow-slip," he said, "knife broken, onyx clock—wouldn't think so much of the clock if he hadn't been so damnably anxious to hide the key, the discrepancy in time as revealed by the trial—yes, it is as clear as a bell. Don't you think you could be Alice Murray for a few moments? Now think—you are a stenographer with theatrical ambitions: you meet an actor and fall in love with him, and he with you." "That's hard to imagine, that last." "Not so hard," he said gently. "Now the actor is going to put you on the stage, perhaps in this new play, and some day he is going to marry you." "Is that what he promised the

"Now you are going to New York very soon, and in the meantime you have to cut yourself off from all your people. You have no one but this man. What would you do? Where would you go?" Where would you go?"
"How old was the girl?"

"Ninteen."
"I think," I said slowly, "that if I were nineteen, and in love with a man, and hiding, I would hide as near him as possible. I'd be likely to get a window that could see his going out and coming in, a place so ear that he could come often to see

"Bravo!" he exclaimed. "Of course, with your present wisdom and experience, you would do nothing so foolish. But this girl was in her teens; she was not very far away, for he probablly saw her that Sunday afternoon, when he was out for two hours. And as the going was slow that day, and he had much to tell and explain, I figure she was not far off. Probably in this very neighborhood."

not far off. Probably in this very neighborhood."

During the remainder of that morning I saw Mr. Holcombe, at intervals, going from house to house along Union street, making short excursions into side thorofares, coming back again and taking up his door-bell ringing with unflagging energy. I watched him off and on for two hours. At the end of that time he came back flushed and excited.

"I found the house," he said, wiping his glasses. "She was there, all right, not so close as we had thought, but as close as she could get?"
"And can you trace her?" I asked.
His face changed and saddened.
"Poor child!" he said. "She is dead, Mrs. Pitman!"
"Not she at Sewickley!"

"Not she—at Sewickley!"
"No." he said patiently. "That

"But—Mr. Howell—"

"Mr. Howell is a young ass," he said with irritation. "He did not take Jennie Brice out of the city that morning. He took Alice Murray in Jennie Brice's clothing, and premises to hers, and five times have I lifted my carpets and moved Mr. Holcombe, who occupied the parlorbedroom, to a second-floor room, A few days ago, as I said at the beginning, we found Peter's body floating in the cellar, and as seen as the yard was dry, I buried him. He had grown fat and lazy, but I shall miss him.

Yesterday a riverman fell off a barge along the waterfront and was drowned. They dragged the river for his body, but they did not find him. But they found something—an onyx clock, with the tattered remnant of a muslin pillow-slip wrapped around it. It only bore out the story, as we had known it for five years

The Murray girl had lived long enough to make a statement to the police, altho Mr. Holcombe only learned this later. On the statement being shown Ladley in the jail, and his learning of the girl's death, he collapsed. He confessed before he was hanged, and his confession, priefly, was this:

He had met the Murray girl in connection with the typing of his play, and had fallen in love with her. He had never cared for his wife, and would have been glad to get rid of her in any way possible. He had not intended to kill her, however. He had planned to elope with the Mur-ray girl, and awaiting an oppor-tunity, had persuaded her to leave home and to take a room near my

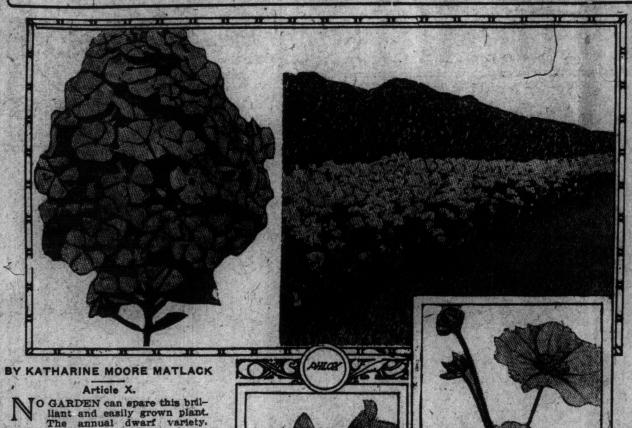

Here he had visited her daily, while his wife was at the theatre.
They had planned to go to New York together on Monday, March the fifth. On Sunday, the fourth, however, Mr. Bronson and Mr. Howell had made their curious proposition. When he accepted, Philip Ladley maintained that he meant only to carry out the plan as suggested. But the temptation was too strong for him. That night, while his wife slept, he had strangled her.
I believe he was frantic with fear, after he had done it. Then occurred to him that if he made the body unrecognizable, he would be safe enough. On that quiet Sun-day night, when Mr. Reynolds reported all peaceful in the Ladley room, he had cut off the poor wretch's head and had tied it up in

It is a curious fact about the case that the scar which his wife incurred to enable her to marry him was the means of his undoing. He insisted and I believe he was telling the truth, that he did not know of the scar: that is, his wife had never told ceal it. He thought she had probably used paraffin in some way.

In his final statement, written with great care and no little literary finish, he told the story in detail: of arranging the clues as Mr. Howell and Mr. Bronson had suggested; of going out in the boat, with the body, covered with a fur coat, in the bottom of the skiff: of throwing it into the current above the Ninth street, bridge, and of seeing the fur coat fall from the boat and carried yond his reach; of disposing of the head near the Seventh street bridge: of going to a drug store, as per the Howell instructions, and of coming home at four o'clock, to find me at

No GARDEN can spare this brilliant and easily grown plant. The annual dwarf variety. Phlox Drummondii, or Texas Pride, is wonderful for edging borders. Sow ten cents' worth of seed and it will be a mass of bloom in a few weeks. The perennial phlox should be planted in clumps, which fincrease in size each year. A ten-cent package of mixed, hardy phlox will give you a good start. If you find that the colors do not harmonize transplant them so that you have artistic effects, as scarlet with snow white, or lavender with purple. There are pinks and corals and lavenders, but don't use them together. Have clumps of all these colors, by all means, but separate them by masses of white. There are early and late varieties, so that you can make a picture of your garden all summer. The old-fashioned early phloxes do not have such brilliant colors as the late ones, but are well worth planting, as they flower freely nearly all summer, beginning to bloom fully six weeks before the others.

At this time of year it is well to set out a half dozen or more plants, costing from $1.50 to $2.00, and also to sow some perennial mixed seed. Remember that those plants increase rapidly and can be separated either with the fingers or a spade. Only don't disturb them till they have finished blooming, Try to avoid the hideous old-fashioned magenta color, there are so many lovely ones. Pure white and salmon pink with a crimson eye are beautiful, as are the clear purples and delicate lavenders. Here is a small but good list:

ear purples and delicate lavenders. Here is a small but good list:

Miss Lingard (white), June till frost, tall and vigorous, 25 cents; Chastity (white), June till frost, medium, vigorous, 25 cents; Mrs. Jenkins (white), June till frost, fine for massing. 15 cents; Jeanne d'Arc (white), late, therefore valuable, 15 cents; R. P. Struthers, deep salmon pink, dark eye, very large flower, cents; Tower of Elffel, light salm pink, red eye, very early, 15 cents; Coquellect, orange scarlet, in large trusses, 15 cents; Le Mahdi, deep, clear purple, 15 cents; Rosenberg, violet, red eye, 15 cents.

While phlox will grow in almost any soil provided it has sunshine, it will pay you for fertilizing with manure or bone meal. Should the leaves show black or rust spots or mildew late in the summer, spray with Bordeaux mixture.

This delightful fall flower comes when most appreciated for garden and table decoration. Large, daisy-like blossoms in snow white, delicate lavender, pink and red are lifted high in air by the tall "giant" variety and seem to be floating in the breeze like butterflies, their stems and foliage being so delicate. These tall plants must grow at the back of your flower-beds and need "staking" to protect them from blowing down or breaking in a high wind, as they are frequently seven feet high.

There are dwarf and early varieties but the late or giant strain is the best. A package of mixed seeds costs but five cents. Sow in full sun in ordinary garden soil.

Well, it is all over now. Mr. Ladley is dead, and Alice Murray, and even Peter lies in the yard. Mr. Reynolds made a small wooden cross over Peter's grave, and carved "Till we meet again" on it. I dare say the next flood will find it in Molly Magufre's kitchen.

Mr. Howell and Lida are married. Mr. Howell inherited some money, I believe, and what with that and Lida declaring she would either marry him in a church or run off to Steubenville, Ohio. Alma had to consent. I went to the wedding and stood near the door, while Alma swept in, in lavender chiffon and rose point lace. She has not improved with age, has Alma. But Lida—under my mother's wedding. with age, has Alma. But Lida—Lida, under my mother's wedding veil, with her eyes like stars, seeing no one in the church in all that throng but the boy who waited at the end of the long church aisle—I wanted to run out and claim her, my own blood, my more than child.

I sat down and covered my face.

And from the pew behind me some one leaned over and patted

That is all of the story. On summer afternoons sometimes, when the house is hot, I go to the park and sit. I used to take Peter, but now he is dead. I like to see Lide's little boy; the nurse knows me by sight, and lets me talk to the child. He can say "Peter" quite plainly. But he does not call Alma. "Grandmother." The nurse says she does not does not call alma. "Grandmother." The nurse says she does not like it. He calls her "Nana."

Lida does not forget me. Especially at flood-times, she always comes to see if I am comfortable. The other day she brought me, with apologies, the chiffon gown her mother had worn at her wedding. Alma had never worn it but once, and now she was too stout for it. I took it; I am not proud, and I should like Molly Maguire to see it.

beauty as the Minonian cups the invader carried away after the sack of Knossos.

The senith and decline of the Cretan city reads like a classic, which, indeed it is. And here is part of the last crimson chapter. See whether you can visualize the beautiful maiden, which the psychologist tells us is there, the not described in words, in all the beauty, the pathos and the tragedy of overwhelming disaster:

"At last an affective blow was struck. Knossos, too long sunk in security to realize at first that her power was slipping from her, woke one red night to find it gone. The guard on the northern tower might have seen a faint glow rising from the harber town; they could not see the long black ships creeping in by scores with the fall of night. The first they knew of danger was a sudden hammering at the wicket, a voice of terror from the darkness, and a blood-stained figure reeling into the glars of the hastily-lighted torches, breathless and dying, a runner from the port with tidings of disaster.

Cups of Solid Gold Dug Out of the Ruins of the Palace of Knosses, in Crete, from Which a Greek Scholar Constructs an Image of a Woman.

"Even before this tale was done a mighty flare shot up from the little palace without the gate, the air overhead was suddenly full of the faint, fretful whisper of feathered arrows, and the tide of battle surged down upon the pillared portico. Breaking on the angle of the palace wall it hurled itself against the western gate as well, while in doorways and windows everywhere lights appeared, like eyes startled from sleep, as guards clattered to their stations and the palace awoke.

"The thundering rain of blows upon the western gate ended in a crash and a triumphant yell—the gate was down. Then a dark hurtling fight up and down the corridors, the heavy breathing of men at grips, the short gasp when the point went home, red stains spreading on the gayly painted walls; the smooth stucco of the pavement slippery with blood.

"Then thru the court of the altar into the heart of the western wing, fighting from room to room thru the pillared shrines, down the blind alleys of the magazines, hacking and stabbing in the dark, staggered the mass of frenzied humanity, till the battle burst at last into the wide courtyard. There was mere room there, and so more clash and clatter, louder shouts in the night air agswered and overtopped by a high-thin sound swelling and deepening to the very voice of despair, the screams of the women huddled on their housetops on the slope of the hill gazing with terror-widened eyes upon the scene.

"There below them, scarcely beyond hand's grasp husbands, lovers, brothers fought almost unarmed, naked, against a seething mass of devils sprung from nowhere, their long swords swinging free, their great shields booming; the background was fire; the big doors from the courtyard to the stair were reeling under a hail of blows, and they could guess what it meant when the doors went down.

"And so the fight went on till dawn awoke in the paling east, to be met by a growing glare from every doorway, every light well, of the doomed palace.

"The flames whirled up the long staircase, they raced with the sackers in their work of destruction, overtaking more than one, till at last these, too, were forced to retreat before the flend they had let loose, strewing their course toward the northern gate with spoils that they dropped as they ran; and as day broadened a heaving stream of warriors laden with gold and silver and bronze, of wailing women, and of stient, sullen men fast-bound, rolled down the long road toward the river mouth, and one by Three What Kind Sius Six. one the ships that had come unseen slipped out to see, leaving the shattered glory to the flames and to the dead."

tered glory to the flames and to the dead."

The Minoniam find are the gold cups of Vaphio, despite the fact that they were found in a thelos tomb near Sparta. They are the work, says Mr. Kaines Sinith, "of the bloom and glory of the last most gorgeous days of the palace of Knossoa. The bulls are the bulls of the freecoes with their high-curving horns. The men are the men of the freecoes with their wasp waists thick girdles pointed loincicths, shoes with upturned toes—the shoes of mountaineers from that day to this—their flowing hair and clean-shaven faces, muscular legs and arms. The palm trees are trees indigenous to Crete. The spirit, the verve, the certainty of the work, alike in conception and in execution, have not been equalled.

"If we choose to give our fancy rein we might say that there lay Tyndareus, last king of the old Aegean line of the royal house of Argos and of Sparta, father of the fatal twin sisters, Helen and Clytemnestra, holding in his dead hands twin relics of a dead civilization."

Have Learned of Stocks, Bonds, Markets and Mortgages-Many Toronto Women Swing Big Deals in Leading Issues-What Makes for a Woman's Success in Security Trading-Women a Few Years Ago Entered the Banks and Broker's Office in Awe and Trembling, Today They Are Big Customers.

By Hugh S. Eayrs.

The world of commerce, in all its mutifarious undertakings, has been invaded, and very successfully invaded, by woman. This was the inevitable accompaniment of the invasion by woman of other worlds that were heretofore regarded as peculiarly man's. The invasion did not come suddenly; it was gradual, but it was none the less assured. And in this year of grace, nineteenfourteen, the woman plays a more important part than ever in the business world. Nor does she take altogether a secondary part. She used to imagine; now she knows. And, knowing, she acts on her own initiative.

used to imagine; now she knows. And, knowing, she acts on her own initiative.

This is especially true of the world of investment and finance. Woman knows the financial ropes today far better than she did fifty, or even twenty-five, years ago. She has changed her ideas. Not so very many years ago, she imagined the financier to be a very-much-to-be-avoided person. He was a man who had a passion for raking in the shekels, anybody's shekels, everybody's shekels—particularly those belonging to the weak woman. After the raking process the ill-gotten gains were placed in a strong box, and the financier mounted guard by sitting on the lid and the original owners of the shekels never saw them again. That was the old idea. It has been superseded by another, and a truer, which is the result of the progressive movement of woman which is shown in every sphere of life today. Now, the financier appears as a man who helps everybody, man or woman, to make a little money, and asks a consideration for himself for his assistance. The broker, the bond man, the promoter are discovered to be anything but the ogres they were imagined to be, and the result is the fact of the woman investor. She is a fact, and a factor, and her presence in the investment market had the twofold effect of making the investment houses do a greater business than heretofore, and making the woman of today able to turn over her money to advantage.

HERRE was a time, not many years ago, when most all the

THERE was a time, not many years ago, when most all the investing that the average woman did was to put her money in a bank, at a rate of interest which rarely exceeded three per cent. Even that form of investment was not indulged in without much misgiving. The very word finance seared women. Whenever Mrs. Smith entered the precincts of a bank in days now sometime gone by, she looked round, awed by the portentous solemnity of the marble pillars and by the near-religious hush which characterized the every movement of the people who were working, from the manager to the office boy. Even the office boy seemed chastened. And so, people who were working, from the manager to the office boy. Even the office boy seemed chastened. And so, finance seemed to be a very fearful and wonderful thing—and it ought to be left to Mr. Smith. For his wife to deposit twenty dollars was much like having a tooth drawn; it took a great deal of courage to face the man who took it from you.

There was one other form of investment, for the woman with a good round sum to invest. She would lend it on mortgage, and get it back in a number of years, meanwhile getting five or six per cent.—If the time was opportune, and those were the prevailing rates. The reason why she chose a mortgage instead of buying mortgage debentures or municipal bonds was because her lawyer advised her to. He was the only advisor slie had, for she was afraid of anyone who looked like a broker, and, obviously, it was to the lawyer's interest to advise a loan on a mortgage because a deed would have to be made, and that put a little money into the lawyer's pocket.

THESE are the days, however, when woman wants to try her hand at investing. She is not afraid to instruct her broker to buy a hundred shares of this or that stock; she will go to a bond dealer, and write a cheque running into the thousands for some industrials, or some municipals.

ASKED a bond dealer how much a woman put up at one time. "We have an investor who will come in and buy fifteen thousand deliars' worth of industrials at a time," he replied. "Of course, that is an exceptional case. There are not many women whose bank account runs high enough to allow of several purchases during the year at the rate of fifteen thousand deliars a time. But there are numbers who buy in denominations of a thousand deliars. One of the biggest municipal debenture houses in Teronto are doing a very large part of their business in woman's investments. Municipals are a good buy at any time. During the last nine months they have been unusually attractive. Municipals have been on the bargain table. Just as a woman will go into a store in Yonge street and buy a seal coat which has been reduced considerably, so she might have gone to a municipal debenture broker at any time during the last nine months or so, and buy sterling securities gilt-edged, as they are called—at bargain prices. During Asis, first-class immes were resoluced from 34 to 90, and even 39. In 1909, these same securities sold for 100. A municipal debenture is always a from 94 to 90, and even 89. In 1909, these same securities sold for 100. A municipal debenture is always a good buy, because the city which issues it is behind it, and no city goes bankrupt. The thing is official. You know you are going to get your money. Of course, some discretion is necessary. Any investor would need to think twice before buying debentures issued by some little jerkwater town on the prairie, which has five hundred people, three stores, a saloon and a pool-room—these last may be found in any town, even a town of about sixteen houses, and 'promise'—but there are scores of reputable cities, his and small, whose financial backing is all that is necessary, whose debentures are a very attractive investment. A thousand deliars put into municipals, which can be bought at a price still in the nineties, is money well spent. But these should be bought before the bargain table disappears. The money stringscoy, which has troubled everybody for so leng, and which, by so troubling people. has made the low price of bonds possible, is now easing a good deal, and bonds are becoming dearer. It is still possible to get an interest yield of anywhere from 4% to 6% per cent.—an exceptionally high.

cell, and bonds are becoming dearer. It is still possible to get an interest yield of anywhere from 4% to 6% per cent.—an exceptionally high rate of interest—but the trend is upward, and investors can be certain that their purchases now will be worth considerable more later on Moreover, the securities will appreciate in value, so that even from a speculating standpoint, municipals at present are a good buy.

Industrial bonds—bonds issued by an industrial company, wholesale drygoods, steel manufactures, or any other big industry—are also very attractive just now. The bond dealers will tell you that a thousand dollare put into an industrial concern by buying their bonds, will bring a yield of anywhere from 5 to 7 and 7½ per cent. Of course, they are not as attractive always as municipals, because they are not "official." That is to say, they depend on the success or otherwise of the concern which issues them, while municipals have the official backing of the town or city for which they are issued. But there are several good buys among industrials. Many businesses are on as safe a basis as the municipal finances of a city, and the yield is a little higher. The bonds of a company take precedence over preferred and common stock. That is to say, the first people considered by a firm if they are in difficulties would be the people who hold their bonds. Preferred stockholders come next, and holders of common stock last. For this reasen, it is safer, the not always better to buy the bonds of a concern.

Wice, Anybody is in-advised to go and buy bonds without taking some advice on them beforehand. That is what the bond-dealer is there for, and he is coming into his own nowadays. A few crisp, crinkly bonds are very handy things to possess.

bonds are very handy things to possess.

In connection with this form of investment what is known as the baby bond is a very convenient little security. The term has long been current in financial circles to designate a bond for a hundred dollars. The yield is four or four and a half. The peculiar attraction of this security is that it is a good investment for the person with only a little money. You can buy one or you can buy ten. The people over the line have shown their fondness for the baby bond, and it is growing popular. It is usually issued by a township or city; sometimes by an industrial corporation. Down at Ottawa a bill has just been passed which proposes an issue of govern-ment bonds. in as low a denomination as ten dollars. The yield is four per cent. This, again, is a move-ment to give the small investor an opportunity to come in and buy a is coming in for a growingly large share of business from the woman investor. I was in a broker's office the other day, taiking about the part woman was playing in the twentieth century in investment circles, and the telephone bell rang. The broker answered it, and after he had put on the receiver turned to me and said: "There's an instance of what I was saying. That lady bought ten shares of C. P. R. three days ago. She has just instructed me to buy twenty more." Thirty shares of C. P. R. means an outlay of a few greenbacks! At a dinner table the other evening the conversation turned on mines, and mining investments. "I made good on the C Mine," said a lady, naming a mining venture that a number of people had gone into, some with more or less disastrous results. "I cleared something like twenty-five thousand dollars, anyway, and my husband didn't know I had touched the proposition till I had cleared my profit." That is a very nice little bulletin for a wife to hand to her husband. THE stock exchange these days

WORD on how and when to buy will not be out of place. Making good on investments is the same for the woman as it is for the man. It is all a question of buying and selling at the right time. The opportunity of a lifetime must be seized in the lifetime of the opportunity. You must take the tide at the flood if you want it to lead you on to fortune. When money is tight, securities—bonds, stock, both preferred and common—are low and in the main, that is the time to buy. For you see what happens. Money becomes tight, and the person who holds stocks or bonds needs money. So they sell, and all that selling reduces the market price. Then the investor with money laid by, who doesn't need to bother about tying it up for a little time, comes along, and gets hold of really good securities at a very chap figure.

It is a mistake, often to buy because there are a lot of other people buying. It goes without saying that so much buying sends the price of the security up, and when the boom is over, you have the stock on your hands, and maybe will have to sell at a loss, when you really need the money. Time and tide—and stock markets—wait for no man. And no woman either. But a little thought, and more discretion will enable any woman to make good in the world of finance. There are scores who have already done as WORD on how and when to enable any woman to make good in the world of finance. There are scores who have already done so. While a bank account is a very nice thing to possess, the right idea is to use it only as a reserve, and to put your money into negotiable securi-ties.

WRITING FOR THE MAGAZINES

ISS IDA TARBELL, probably the most famous of American women journalists, says that there is plenty of opportunity for women writers on the magazines, because there are somany magazines, because there are so many good stuff.

Scarcely a girl grows to woman-hood without a longing to publish a novel; it is almost as commona com-plain as the desire to go on the

But like the stage, there is no chance for the mediocre writer, because the second rate material market is overstocked.

It sounds very easy to write when one has an idea, but unfortunately there is also the necessity for good composition and also for the proper setting forth of the idea itself. In magazine writing the only way to learn how to write is to study the publications and, if you are in earnest, keep on trying in spite of the continual return of manuarement.

of the continual return of manuscripts.

The first great rule of writing is to express one's self in good English, and to learn how to write to the point, clearly without long, involved sentences and rambling thoughts, which lead the reader miles away from the main theme.

It takes a genius, like Dickens or Thackeray or the modern De Morgan, to wander successfully from the main thought.

When manuscripts are returned from the publisher, there is always among amateurs, the half confessed feeling that their contribution has been slighted; but this is rarely true. Most publishing houses have a regular staff of professional readers and every contribution is earnestly perused for a chance "find" of a budding author.

Aside from the worth of the contribution, there are other points to be considered by the critics—its suitability for the magazine approached, its length, and a dozen other reasons, hence there is no reason for feeling hurt at a failure of appreciation.

It has been related of a successful writer of short stories beloved by the reading public that the first story accepted by her publishers was the afficient one she had sent them. She wrote a clever letter apprising them of this fact and whether it was her faith in herself or the improvement displayed in the succession of contributions is not known, but the fact remains that nowadays her stories are eagerly awaited.

Miss Tarbell claims with truth that writing for the Sunday papers is excellent training for future magazine work, because here one gains experience both in expression and in looking up her own ideas, a necessary item in any field of literature. Says Miss Tarbell:

"If you are willing to eat twenty cent dinners and to work twelve hours a day you are pretty sure to get on. If you are not then you probably won't be a success in magazine work or anything else."

A PAGE OF THE BEST HUMOROF, THE WEEK,

Lasting Cure. A well known professor at one of universities was often annoyed by two Italians playing a streetorgan before his house. Giving his servant some money, he told her that whenever she heard an organ she was to go out and pay the owners to take it away. This was a failure. The men, instead of coming once a week, came twice.

One day the sound of the organ disturbed the professor while working at a certain lecture. This so annoyed him that he rushed out and ordered the men away, telling them that if they came again he would hand them over to the police. They refused to go unless he gave them more money. Enraged at their impertinence, he raced down the street in search of a policeman.

Just as he turned the corner of the street he met a sergeant marching nine constables to their beats. Without speaking, he turned and walked alongside the procession. When they turned the corner the Italians saw the professor with the policemen. It was enough. They were both seized with the sudden desire to see how quickly they could get the organ out of the street. The cure was lasting, for the professor declares that no one has since been bold enough to play an organ before his house.

One day two farm-laborers were discussing the wiseness of the preent generation. Said the first:—
"We be wiser than our fathers was, and they were wiser than their fathers was."

The second one, after pondering a while and gazing at his companion, "Well, Garge, what a fule thy grandfather must 'a been!"

Feeling not in the best of humor, but very hungry, he went into a restaurant, and ordered a beefsteak. After cutting into it, he called the waiter, and said, very sarcastically: "I have managed to cut this steak, but I really don't see how I am to

The poor, dear King was not (or thought he was not) a very strong man at all. Sometimes he said to the Queen and Princess: "I feel, really, very poorly today," and the Queen would always say: "Well! What do you mean by speaking to me in that manner of voice? You know yourself all I had for breakfast was five plates of porridge ten aggs and plates of porridge, ten eggs, and twelve rashers of bacon. As for walking, how can I, when all I have is a crown, instead of a hat in this boiling sun?"

The Queen and Princess were out shopping, so, unless it was the King who ate them, I do not know who it could have been. Well, that night the King went to bed as usual, but about 3 o'clock, guess what happened -(now guess hard)-Why! he woke up in a cold perspiration, shaded his eyes, made spec-tacles with his hands over his eyes—No! he could not see, but, Oh! he FELT that something was sitting there, crouching there, creeping there—something awful, something terrible, something OILY and WET. Now, if you or I wake, or anybody, for that matter, wakens and feels that something awful, something terrible, something OILY and WET, is sitting, crouching and creeping by our bed, what do we do? I say, what would we do first thing?

what would we do first thing? Why, we would yell, of course; why, we would yell, or course; what else? So, that is what the poor, dear King did—yell, YELL! You never heard such yells. My dear, I wish you could have heard him. I really wish you could have.

They woke the Queen, the Princess, and all the royal household, and, of course, everyone came rushing in. By this time, the King was screaming at the top of his voice: "I see it! I see it! Oh! take it away! Please take it away!" His wife said: "What is it, dear? What

The Queen shook his shoulders, and asked him once again: "What in the world was wrong?" But how could he answer when he had no breath? "Ah, me!" cried the Queen, while her tears fell in showers — (perhaps, he might have felt better if she had asked more about his pains in the morning) Doctor Katchem! I say, send right away, this instant!"

Doctor Katchem came running up with ten knives, sixteen bottles of medicine, and a pair of rubber gloves; so the people all stood aside to let him

"What is it?" cried he; but as soon as he saw the King lying with his eyes rolled up and panting for breath, he dropped the knives, bottles and gloves, and said to the Queen: "Your Majesty, what did your husband have for dinner tonight?" The Queen told him; but the doctor said: "No! It could not have been that!" He then asked what the King had had for breakfast; but the doctor said: "No! It could not have been that!" At last, the doctor said: "Excuse my seeming impertinence, your Majesty; but one last QUESTION: What did the King have for lunch?"

"Well," said the Queen, 'that I cannot answer, because was out at the time; but I shall find out." So she rang the bell for the cook.

The cook said: " I know nothing about it, your Majesty, except that ten cans of sardines, five vegetable dishes of fried potatoes, and two bottles of Lipton's pickles were gone when the King was finished, and, of course, you know that you and the Princess were not there."

The Queen said: "Oh! That we had been!" Then she came back and told the doctor. The doctor said: "Thank you, thank you, your Majesty. Kindly take the King by the feet, while I take him by the head. We'll lift him to your window, for all he needs is a little NIGHT AIR. (I must say just here that the fresh air brought the King to, and in a few minutes he was asking for a pitcher of cream and a dish of strawberries). By this time there were crowds and crowds of people below, waiting to hear what was wrong with the poor, dear King, and, just as the doctor reached the window with the King's head, he (the doctor) said those last two words; "NIGHT AIR." "What is wrong with the King?" called somebody, and someone else answered "Did you not hear the doctor say 'He has the Nightair'?" "That was not what he said." cried another; "it was 'Night Scare'!"

Near the place they went to was a large forest, and Pa said: "If you boys go in there, you know what you'll get," and the boys said "They

Another day young John got up,
As bad as bad could be.
He said: "What mischief is there now?

I'll have to look and see." His brother said: "Oh! John! Please don't! You know you're doing wrong!"

John said: "Say, Kid! You make me sick!

You always sing that song!"

Well, in the forest Johnny goes. And, dear! what happens now?

The first he knows, he's lost some way—
He really can't tell how.

At last he sits upon the grass,

To take a rest; but, my!

His nose goes up, his SMILE departs,

And then he starts to cry.

And, as he sits, Oh! What is this? It's creeping down a tree— (John's eyes pop out so very much, It's hard for him to see).

And as he sits, Oh! what is

For when Mutt heard the dreadful how!
He ran right there, you see;
The beast saw Mutt, so off it went
As hard as hard could be.

A great, big thing, with teeth so sharp, And eyes with awful scowi, And claws so long; it looks at John, Then gives a dreadful howl. Poor John stares at the thing. Ah, Me!
He's struck quite stiff with fear.
Will no one save the poor, poor child?
Does no one see nor hear?

Now, Pa looks up and down and 'round. He shivers to his knees. He cries: "Come, save my small lost boy. He's somewhere in these trees!"

Well, Mutt, good dog, was there, of course; And great was his distress. He showed more brains than Pa, or all, I really must confess.

For, when he heard that dreadful howl, He ran right there, you see. The beast saw Mutt, so off it went, As hard as hard could be! Just then poor Pa came rushing up.
And this I'll have you know:
He gave young John five sounding slaps.
'Twas sad, but it was so!

Poems and Stories By Little Readers Of the Smilers' Page

A LETTER FROM A SMILER.

Dear Sir: Since I first saw the page entitled "The SMILING FACE CLUB," I have longed to become a member I am writing to ask if you would kindly send me an S. F. C. button. The SMILING FACE CLUB interests me most of all I think it a button. The SMILING FACE CLUB interests me most of all, I think it a splendid idea. In fact it has always been my one desire to belong to such a club, and now, at last my wish is fulfilled. The one point in life is to SMILE, and be cheerful, but we cannot always smile and be cheery. When everything goes wrong that is the time to smile, instead of grumbling. I have found that out by experience. The thing that goes the farthest in making life worth while—that costs the least and does the most, is just a pleasant SMILE. In my work in particular I have occasion to notice that It is work that is trying on the nerves, and requires is trying on the nerves, and requires a great deal of patience. There is many an instance that a SMILE in place of a frown is needed. It is private switchboard work. I like it very much. If it would not be too much trouble. I wish you would explain full particulars regarding the club. I remain.

Halifax, N. S. Mary Sugden. MY TROUBLES.

When I was a little boy about so high. My mother used to get a stick and make me cry; But now I am a big boy, my mother can't do it.

Was because she belonged to the S. F. C. -Elsie Miller, age 12.

Dear Editor and SMILERS: I had my name printed as a member of the SMILING FACE CLUB quite awhile ago: I am sending in a little story ago: I am sending in a little story which I hope will be good enough to print. I got the idea from real life. The other day my little nephew came in with his finger cut and wanted a rag on it. I asked him what he wanted a rag on it for, and he said "fo make it git bettow."

I had a little story printed before, "How Dimples Found a Home." A year ago at this time I was in Toronto, I would like to be there now.

The Use of a Rag.

(This is to show the possibilities of a plece of cloth and thread as a cure for small cuts, burns, and bruises on children.)

"Moth-er, Moth-er," walled six-year-old Bobby, "come and put a rag on my finger, I cut it. Oh! it's hurtin' on my innger, I cut it. On! it's nurtin' awful."

"Let me see it," said mother. "Why it isn't even bleeding. That's nothing, you don't need a rag on it. Go outdoors and play, you'll soon forget it. "No, I won't; No, I won't. It's bleedin' now. Look! look!" and he squeezed it up and brought forth a drop of blood, "Put a rag on it quick."

"Oh, Bobby! don't bother me. I'm
usy. Look at those men climbing
he telephone poles."
But Bobby didn't care anything bout them, he wanted a rag on his finger.

"What do you want a rag on it for?" asked mother.

"Why, to make it get better," cried Bobby.

"A rag won't do it any good."

"Yes 'twill," asserted Bobby, and kept on crying.

kept on crying.
At last mother put a rag on it to keep him quiet, and Bobby's walls soon ceased.

"Why don't you cry now?" asked mother after a time. Bobby was watching the telephone men.

"Oh, the rags made it all better now," said Bobby.

Dear Sir: I am writing a poem for the Smilers' Page. Little Kittens.

I have some little kittens away up in the barn; I like to hold them in my lap, they feel so soft and warm. Joe broke my spade the other day, a-digging in the earth for bates. There goes the bell, I shall be late. Another scolding I shall get for swinging on the gate.

Dear sir: I would like you to put this in the SMILING FACE CLUB:

A Good Boy.

Once upon a time there was a boy named Herbert. He was very poor, but very honest. Once he was crossing a train track right beside a bridge. He noticed a break in the track, the boys had put the signal for the train to go ahead. Herbert lay down on the track. The engineer stopped the train, and everybody thought he was dead, but a man knew him and gave him a hundred dollars, and today he is reading about the SMILING FACE folks.

"EAST LYNNE"—GREAT PHOTOPLAY.

An unusual offering for the week at the Grand is P. P. Craft's wonderful English revival of the celebrated old play, "East Lynne," in photo-play form. This film is notable for many reasons. Primarily it perpetuates the acting of a most distinguished company of London players, headed by depending upon multiplicity and rapidity of incidents for effectiveness.

"East Lynne" is not spectacular; it is simply sweet, beautiful and pathetic—the greatest love-drama ever written. In making the film the miliar dramatic versions has been followed with the result that many striktence, it is easy to understand its ing and beautiful features never acted popularity, for next to the Bible, Mrs.

of the oral drama have relegated these features to "off-stage business"—that is the players have been content to describe them rather in dialog than in the presence of the audience. Such incidents are the shooting of Halliphon the old same because the clayers have been content to the shooting of Halliphon the old same because the clayer.
