36. If there is a strong demand to have in the Trusteeship Council one member directly representing a people whose independence has recently been recognized, the Canadian preference might be for India, Iraq, or Egypt. There will, however, be three British Commonwealth countries on the Council in any event and India's name should not be proposed unless there is a reasonable certainty that it would not be defeated. It would be unfortunate if India were defeated in an election so soon after the inauguration of the Interim Government. [pp. 15-18]

...

THE VETO

...

THE CANADIAN ATTITUDE

24. No very strong position was taken by Canada on the veto question during the San Francisco Conference. Although the Canadian delegation was against the application of the veto power to the peaceful settlement provisions of the Charter and therefore supported the original Australian amendment, it felt that the veto was not too high a price to pay for a world organization. When it became clear that the joint statement of the sponsoring powers interpreting the Yalta formula was the greatest measure of compromise obtainable, the Canadian delegation abstained from voting on amendments to the text.

25. Canada shared the desire of the majority of middle and smaller powers that a more flexible procedure be adopted to amend the Charter and, in deciding not to oppose the Yalta formula, clung to the hope, which proved vain, that the veto power might be removed from the amending process.

The assurances of the great powers that the veto would be used with a sense of responsibility and the consideration that the importance of formal voting arrangements for the Council was possibly exaggerated appeared to the Canadian delegation at the time to justify their decision not to oppose the Yalta formula.

26. The hope that the veto would be used sparingly continued to be held when the General Assembly met in London in January 1946, and was voiced by the Chairman of the Canadian delegation in his speech before the plenary session of the Assembly. In defending Canada's agreement to the veto right of the great powers on most important matters, the Canadian delegate asked whether the Charter itself was not a firm pledge, on which all the nations could implicitly rely, that the great powers would use their privileged position only as a sacred trust for the whole of mankind. So far events seem to have given a negative answer to this question.

CONCLUSION

27. Although it seems clear to all observers of the problem that no substantial progress can be made toward restoring to the Security Council its primary function of maintaining international peace and security until some means is found of avoiding unwarranted use of the veto, it is doubtful whether any one of the Big Three is actually willing to curtail the veto power.

28. The U.S.S.R., of course, can be expected to use all available means to prevent any modification of the voting formula. When Mr. Najera of Mexico spoke to the Security Council at the end of his term as President, he mentioned the growing public opinion in favour of revising the Charter in order to prevent the veto being extended to cases which do not really merit so drastic a measure. The Soviet delegate replied bluntly that any hopes that Mr. Najera might have of achieving important results from his statement were doomed to disappointment. Moscow has officially described the veto as a safeguard to prevent the U.N. from being used to "isolate" socialist countries and it appears fairly certain that the Soviet Union relies upon this power to restore the voting balance in the organization in its favour.

29. Although the use of the veto to date has always been against measures of which the United States and the United Kingdom were in favour, it is far from likely that these states would be willing to forego the veto privilege at present if they considered their vital interests threatened by a majority of the Security Council. However, the United States plan for an Atomic Development Authority, as proposed by Mr. Baruch, recognizes the impracticability of seeking to create an effective international security system unless the veto is eliminated. This plan, dealing as it does not only with the elimination of atomic warfare but of war itself, includes as an essential and central feature the doctrine that operation of the Atomic Development Authority must not be rendered ineffective by the right of any single state to block its action. Hence it proposes to take the control of atomic energy out of the hands of the Security Council, a proposal which has been countered by the equally strong Soviet insistence that the jurisdiction of the Council should cover atomic energy matters.

30. The Canadian Government has supported the United States position. In this statement to the House of Commons on December 17, 1945, concerning the Washington Declaration on Atomic Energy, the Prime Minister said:

As political problems affecting the relations of governments, the solution of the problems presented by atomic energy must be sought in the realm of world politics. The more deeply one ponders the problems with which our world is confronted in the light of the implications of atomic energy, the harder it is to see a solution in anything short of some surrender of national sovereignty. With a limited surrender of national sovereignty, there must be instituted some form of world government restricted, at least at the outset, to matters pertaining to the prevention of war and the maintenance of international security.

He went on to say that the U.N., as at present constituted, was not a sufficient answer to the present problems of peace and security and that the nations must not delay too long in welcoming "a measure of world sovereignty sufficiently effective to maintain international security and to end all possibility of war."

31. In what has been written above, there has been outlined the development of the veto question up to the present time. It does not seem likely that the discussions on the veto at the Assembly will bring much in the way of results. It would be naïve to suppose that the Charter would work smoothly if the veto provisions were wholly removed—and such a decision is out of the question in present conditions. An international organization with effective executive powers to enforce decisions could never be based on a voting arrangement in which each state counted as one and no state as more than one. The veto is a crude device intended to ensure in some measure that the influence of a great power in the organization should correspond to its importance in the world. As the Canadian delegation constantly pointed out at San Francisco, it was illogical to single out five powers only for this special treatment and to leave all the rest in the same position under the Charter, so that The Netherlands or Brazil or Canada have no more rights in the organization than Liberia or Haiti or Byelorussia. The conception that the relative importance of states should be reflected in the Constitution of the U.N. has been recognized in the Charter only by the special place accorded the permanent members of the Security Council (including both their permanent tenure and their veto right) and in the injunction to the Assembly to pay due regard to relative contribution in selecting the non-permanent members of the Security Council.

32. If an effort to remove the veto now from the Charter were to succeed it would destroy the U.N. If it proves possible later to improve these provisions of the Charter, improvement will come, not from the simple removal of the veto power, but from the development in its place of some more effective and acceptable method of making the constitutional authority of the Member states inside the organization correspond more closely to their authority in international affairs.

33. This does not mean that it would not be useful to strive now for a limitation of the veto. The Canadian delegation, like many other delegations at San Francisco, swallowed the veto only after it had been sugar-coated by the assurances of the great powers that their special voting position would be used with a sense of responsibility and consideration for the interests of smaller states, and that therefore the veto would be used sparingly. The Canadian delegation also trusted that in due course the decisions of the Council might build up a kind of common law which would eventually be incorporated in the Charter itself, and that in this way more satisfactory procedures might come to be established.

34. The veto has not been used sparingly and the decisions of the Council have built up a bad common law, not a good common law. The Assembly cannot correct this development by legislation. The most it could do is to make more difficult the irresponsible use of the veto. It might, for example, adopt in formal terms a statement of what the Assembly considers to be the legitimate use of the veto under the present terms of the Charter. It might also express the hope that in the near future the veto should be restricted, by amendment of the Charter, to the one question of the application of sanctions instead of extending, as it does now, to a whole host of questions, including peaceful settlement, the nomination of the Secretary-General and the admission of new members. [pp. 31-33]

• • •

MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE

• • •

9. The Assembly is constitutionally competent to discuss the work of the Military Staff Committee since, under Article 10, it may discuss any questions or any matters relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the Charter and may make recommendations to the Security Council on such questions or matters. It is difficult at present, however, to forecast what kind of discussion could usefully take place in the Assembly on the work of the Military Staff Committee.

10. In any discussion in the Assembly on the work of the Committee Canada might well emphasize that, though the Committee is the special responsibility of the great powers, it is not their exclusive concern. Emphasis might also be given to the right which other members of the U.N. have to be associated with the Committee under Article 47:2 of the Charter, and that this right must not be curtailed by the use of an individual great power veto. While recognizing that the members of the secretariat of the Committee will be charged, if the Committee does any useful work, with dealing with highly confidential material, the Canadian delegation might urge that the secretariat of the Committee should form part of the Secretariat of the U.N. in accordance with Article 97. The delegation might also seek for information on the steps which the Military Staff Committee and the Security Council have taken on the order given in the Charter that the special agreements under Article 43 "shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council". [p. 38]

...

INDIA'S COMPLAINT ABOUT SOUTH AFRICA

...

ATTITUDE OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

29. Too broad an interpretation of the domestic jurisdiction reservation is not in the interests of the U.N. If the reservation is given a very broad interpretation, any member of the Assembly could veto discussion by the Assembly of a wide range of matters of great international importance. The reservation is in fact one of several "jokers" in the Charter which could be used to justify violations of many of the declared purposes and principles of the U.N. A refusal to consider the substance of India's complaint by taking refuge behind this clause of the Charter would leave the field to the Soviet Union in this round of the battle which is now being waged between the Soviet Union and the Western world for the sympathies of coloured and colonial peoples of the world.

30. The issue presented by this complaint is an embarrassing one, especially for the delegations from Commonwealth countries. The happiest solution would be an agreement between India and South Africa to settle the dispute by direct negotiation, and thus to remove it from the agenda either before or as a result of a discussion in committee. There can be little doubt that the Indian Government has grounds for complaining over the treatment in South Africa of persons of Indian race, and they have resorted to the U.N. only after having failed to secure satisfaction by negotiation. On the side of South Africa it can be argued the Indian complaint relates to matters within their domestic jurisdiction. Their restrictions on the ownership of land by Indians, however much they may depart from the purpose of the Charter quoted in paragraph 22, are analogous to some of the restrictions imposed on Asiatics in British Columbia and are caused, of course, by the same racial feelings.

31. Unless the issue is withdrawn from discussion, the Canadian delegation is likely to have to take some delicate decisions. In so far as the Indian complaint alleges a violation of an inter-governmental agreement on the part of the South African Government, it would be difficult to maintain that this part at least of the complaint is ultra vires of the Assembly under the domestic jurisdiction clause. The best course for the delegation is probably to seek to exercise a moderating influence both behind the scenes and in discussion, and to try to persuade both parties that they are likely to go further and fare better if they refrain from precipitating a battle of a nature admirably designed to serve the interests of the Soviet bloc rather than their own. [p. 57]

SPAIN

...

CANADIAN INTERESTS

28. The United Kingdom Government have kept us fully informed of their policy and of their exchanges of views with the other great powers. They have not requested our comment and we have offered none. Canada voted for the resolution on Spain adopted at the San Francisco Conference on June 19, 1945, and for the similar resolution adopted by the General Assembly on February 11, 1946. The Canadian Government is thus on record as favouring the removal of Franco.

29. Canada has no diplomatic mission in Spain although there is a Spanish Consul General in Montreal. In September 1945, the Spanish Government through the Duke of Alba, the then Spanish Ambassador to the United Kingdom, approached the Acting Canadian High Commissioner (Mr. Hudd) in London on the question of raising the Spanish Consulate General in Montreal to be a Legation in Ottawa, stating that the Spanish Government would welcome an exchange of diplomatic missions. On October 27 the Acting High Commissioner informed the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires in London that the Canadian Government was not prepared to receive a diplomatic mission from the present Spanish Government and that this decision was based on grounds of general policy.

30. Recently the Canadian Government has appointed Mr. L. S. Glass as Acting Consul General and Trade Commissioner in Lisbon. Mr. Glass was also named Trade Commissioner for Canada in Spain. The Spanish Government requested that, in addition to being named Trade Commissioner, Mr. Glass should be designated Canadian Consul General in Spain. This request was refused by the Canadian Government.

31. In July 1946 informal approaches were again made by the Spanish Government. They were informed that there had been no change in Canadian policy, i.e., Canada was not prepared to exchange diplomatic missions with the present Spanish Government or to appoint a Canadian Consul General in Spain.

32. Canadian trade with Spain has not been a large factor in our external trade. In 1945 the value of this trade was as follows:

Imports from Spain to Canada .....	$4,353,475;
Exports to Spain .....	$ 991,587.

In 1935, the last "normal" year, the figures were:

Imports .....	$1,374,755;
Exports .....	$2,626,984.

33. As Canada has no direct diplomatic relations with Spain, the question of withdrawing Canadian representatives does not arise. Canada's interest in the Spanish problem derives, therefore, from our general interest in the peaceful adjustment of an explosive international situation. [pp. 63-64]

...

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

...

CANADIAN ATTITUDE

6. The Canadian delegation at San Francisco welcomed the decision of the five powers to recommend the creation of a Trusteeship Council as one of the principal organs of the U.N. instead of setting up a trusteeship commission subsidiary to the Economic and Social Council, which had been the original plan of the United Kingdom delegation. It was felt that the body which supervised the administration of trust territories should report to the full General Assembly rather than to a body composed of only 18 members. At the coming session of the General Assembly, however, the Canadian delegation could support any arrangements which will facilitate close and smooth working relations between the Trusteeship Council and the Economic and Social Council.

7. In all discussions of the work which the Economic and Social Council may do for dependent peoples it is important to distinguish clearly between the three classifications into which such peoples are divided. The first are inhabitants of trust territories, and for the welfare of all such peoples the Trusteeship Council will assume a special responsibility. The second category of dependent peoples, referred to in Chapter XI of the Charter, are inhabitants of non-self-governing territories outside the trusteeship system. The co-ordination of reports on the welfare of the people of these territories is a function of the Secretary-General, who is expected to rely on the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies for advice and assistance in making the provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter effective.

8. The third group of non-self-governing peoples includes those who are found within the borders of sovereign states. No reports concerning the development of these peoples are required by the U.N. Unenfranchised Indians and Eskimos of Canada fall within this category, as do unenfranchised Indians, Eskimos and Negroes in the United States, the majority of the population of Algeria and special groups in several other countries, not excluding those which have a Soviet form of government. These groups are not mentioned in Chapters XI, XII or XIII but come under the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article 1 of the Charter.

9. A United Kingdom delegate pointed out during the first part of the First Session of the General Assembly that the work of the Economic and Social Council, the I.L.O. and the specialized agencies would largely depend on the building up of standards of health, labour, nutrition and education and the economic and agricultural development of non-self-governing peoples within the boundaries of sovereign states as well as in colonial dependencies. Accordingly, although it is not likely that any firm decision can be made in the Economic and Social Council regarding assistance to be given the Trusteeship Council before the latter has begun to function, the Canadian delegation should not feel that there need be any delay in considering the means by which the Economic and Social Council itself can aid dependent peoples in the second and third categories mentioned above. [pp. 75-76]

...

AGREEMENTS WITH SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

...

POLICY OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

21. It seems that the Economic and Social Council will present to the Assembly not "concluded" but "draft" agreements. At the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council, Canada supported the Soviet line that the agreement with the ILO spelled out in too great detail such matters of procedure as exchanges of documents, etc. (see Para. 8). While we would not be debarred from raising the issue again at the Assembly (in so far as all the agreements are concerned), it may be unwise to reopen the issue at the Assembly because it might result in a time-consuming argument in view of Mudaliar's attitude in the Council. To raise the issue in relation to the ILO agreement might be particularly unwise since it might provide the Soviet Union with an occasion for reviving the debate on the questions of principle involved in bringing the ILO into relation with the U.N. On the other hand, these agreements may set a pattern for future agreements and it is clearly undesirable to put too much detail (which will require amendment) in a basic document of this nature. Consequently the Canadian delegation should strive for a simplification of the agreements if this can be accomplished without long debate and a postponement of the conclusion of the agreements.

22. The proposals submitted by the Bank<sup>1</sup> (Para. 19 above) do not seem to meet the requirements of Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter since they would not result in bringing the Bank into relationship with the U.N. in any real sense. An effort should therefore be made to persuade the Bank to accept a compromise between their proposals and the kind of agreement negotiated with the ILO, FAO, and UNESCO. This compromise might be classed an "interim" agreement. It would certainly be less detailed than the other agreements but it should not be meaningless. The Economic and Social Council could be instructed by the Assembly to continue its negotiations with the Bank in an effort to bring down an agreement at the 1947 Assembly.

<sup>1</sup> Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement.

<sup>1</sup> International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

23. The question of relations in budgetary matters is covered by Article 17(3) of the Charter which states that the Assembly

- (a) shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies . . . and
- (b) shall examine the administrative budget of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

24. The Preparatory Commission was of the opinion that it was not intended that these provisions should confer on the Assembly power to control the policies of the specialized agencies, but that their purpose was to encourage and develop a large measure of fiscal and administrative co-ordination "in the interest of greater efficiency and economy in operation for the entire structure composed of the U.N. and of the specialized agencies related to it." The Preparatory Commission went on to say:

Each specialized agency would benefit from a close scrutiny by the General Assembly of the administrative budgets of all such agencies. Member Governments required to share the increasing costs of international organizations would be assured that precautions had been taken against avoidable duplication of effort and expense. The first part of paragraph 3 of Article 17 envisages varying degrees of relationship, from complete financial integration downwards, and the second part . . . the minimum degree of relationship which should be included in the agreements with the specialized agencies.

25. The Canadian delegations to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly should press for the effective carrying out of the second part so that the Canadian parliament and people can be assured that we have done all we can to ensure economy and effective control of the expenditures of international organizations of which Canada is a member. [pp. 96-97]

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

14. If, therefore, the subject of W.F.T.U. participation in the U.N. is again raised at the October Assembly, as the Soviet delegate has indicated it will be, the resulting debate — whatever the final decision — is almost inevitably calculated to be a propaganda victory for the Soviet Government and a propaganda defeat for the Western democracies.

15. Apart from the possibility that a proposal may be made to alter and extend the existing provision for consultation with the W.F.T.U., it is possible that the Soviet Government may directly or indirectly put forward requests at the coming Assembly for participation by certain non-governmental international bodies with claims to represent very significant international groups. There has been evidence of particular Soviet or Communist party interest and influence in an international youth organization and an international women's organization, and in plans for creating a world association of scientists. The intended constituent body in Canada of the latter is the Canadian Association of Scientific Workers, the Executive of which, according to the recent report of the Royal Commission on Espionage, was composed in large part of secret Communists most of whose names also figured in the espionage documents of the Soviet Military Attaché's Office.

16. In general, while the encouragement of genuinely representative international non-governmental organizations is obviously desirable, it will probably be wise to scrutinize very carefully the character and credentials of all non-governmental bodies seeking special recognition or facilities from the U.N.

17. If the question of still more extensive provisions for participation in the U.N. for the W.F.T.U. or other non-governmental bodies is again raised, and if the Canadian delegation decides to oppose this, it may be considered desirable to base this opposition on grounds more explicit and more forward-looking than most of the grounds put forward hitherto. The following consideration may be helpful.

18. Canada would welcome proposals calculated to associate the peoples of the world more directly with the activities of the U.N. and would not be opposed to such changes in the Charter as may be found necessary to meet new needs in a changing world (see in this connection Mr. St. Laurent's speech to the Assembly in January 1946, and the Prime Minister's speech in the House of Commons on December 17, 1945, on the Atomic Resolution). The direction in which Canada would wish to see the U.N. develop is towards an effective world authority with an Assembly representative of the peoples of the world.

19. Proposals to increase the special representation in the U.N. of selected interest groups on a corporative basis would appear to lay the foundation for an evolution in a very different direction. An analogous proposal in the national field would involve constitutional representation of occupational groups as such in national legislatures. This was typical of the fascist so-called "corporative state." The use which the Nazis made of functional organizations in the development of fascist "fifth columns" will also not be forgotten. There is always some danger, in special formal recognition by the U.N. of non-governmental bodies, of encouraging the growth of propaganda pressure groups, which would offer tempting prizes to the surreptitious growth of totalitarian machine controls.

20. The U.N. must be careful to avoid being put in the impossible position of having to assess competing claims and to scrutinize the credentials and representative character of private organizations claiming to represent various sections of the world's population. There are not agreed standards for comparing the membership figures of these private organizations or for determining their representative character or the representative character of their delegates. Such assessment and such scrutiny could not be carried out effectively as it would inevitably involve trespassing on the domestic affairs of Member states. The problem of establishing satisfactory criteria for the admission of states to membership in the U.N. is difficult and the scrutiny of the credentials of representatives of states can raise embarrassing questions but these difficulties and embarrassments are not as great as those which would arise in the case of non-governmental organizations.

21. While therefore recognizing that non-governmental functional organizations have a useful role to play in international life and that consultation with them will from time to time be desirable for appropriate specialized organs of the U.N., it seems desirable that caution should be exercised in this matter. It is clearly essential that the right of speaking or voting in major U.N. organs should in principle be reserved for the official representatives of peoples organized on a geographic basis, that is, in the well-recognized democratic manner. And while the Economic and Social Council should be free at all times to consult non-governmental organizations, as provided under Article 71 of the Charter, it should not be unduly fettered in advance or bound to permanent consultation on any too rigid basis with particular non-governmental bodies. [pp. 102-103]

...

REFUGEES

...

FINANCIAL PROVISIONS: CANADIAN VIEW

14. Throughout these discussions the Canadian Government has urged a solution of the refugee problem on the basis of as wide a measure of international co-operation as could be secured. Canadian delegations have taken part in the deliberations of all the conferences at which the subject was considered during the year 1946, and in these gatherings and in public statements elsewhere, the Canadian Government has stated that Canada would be prepared to support an international body for the solution of the refugee problem. The constructive role played by Canadian delegations in these conferences, particularly by Mr. J. G. Turgeon, the Canadian delegate to the Special Committee, was indicated by the election of Mr. Turgeon to the chairmanship of the Committee on the Finances of the International Refugee Organization which met in London during July.

15. In practical terms Canadian support for a refugee organization will mean the provision of funds and the acceptance of refugees for resettlement in Canada. The expenditure of the International Refugee Organization for 1947, as estimated by the Economic and Social Council, is $160,850,000; $4,800,000 for administrative expenses; $151,050,000 for Part 1 of operational expenses (i.e., for operations other than resettlement); and $5,000,000 for Part 2 of operational expenses (i.e., for resettlement).

16. The major item in the budget is for the care and maintenance of displaced persons in camps. This item is based on an optimistic estimate that in the year 1947 the number of displaced persons will be greatly reduced from the present figure of 830,000, this reduction being due to normal shrinkage and individual departures as well as to organized emigration, repatriation and re-establishment.

17. The scale of contributions provisionally proposed by the Committee on Finances called for a Canadian contribution of 4.362% of the administrative expenses and 4% of the operational expenses. (These estimates are not binding on the Governments represented on the Committee.) The Canadian contribution for the year 1947 under this scale would thus amount to about $6,500,000.

18. The suggested percentage scales of contributions for the other principal states are:

	Part 1
	Operational	Administrative
United States .....	43	24.614
United Kingdom .....	15	14.771
U.S.S.R. ....	6.00	6.892
France .....	3.20	5.602
China .....	1.75	6.400
Australia .....	2.50	2.875
Argentina .....	3.65	2.983
India .....	3	4.391
Brazil .....	2	2.983
South Africa .....	2	1.989

19. In assessing the scale for Part 1 of the operational budget, the Committee adopted the basis of the UNRRA administrative scale, with adjustments for two factors: relative national and per capita income; and the exceptionally difficult financial situation of states formerly under enemy occupation. This scale was adopted on the understanding that it should be reconsidered in the light of the decision of the General Assembly on the report of its Standing Committee on Contributions.

20. The scale for Part 2 of the operational budget (i.e. resettlement) is generally based on the same scale as Part 1. The Committee decided that countries of origin of displaced persons (i.e., the Slav states) should be assessed a purely nominal contribution of .05% of the budget. Even this proposal was not acceptable to the Soviet, Polish and French delegates, who contended that contributions for resettlement should be on a voluntary basis.

21. The scale of contributions for the administrative budget was compiled on the basis of the scale of advances to the Working Capital Fund of the U.N. This scale was also adopted subject to the report of the General Assembly's Standing Committee on Contributions.

22. There have been complaints from a number of states that the provisional budget of the International Refugee Organization is far too extravagant and that the scale of contributions is not equitable. The opinion has also been expressed that the organization is too unwieldy in its present form.

23. The Canadian Government has made reservations with regard to the suggested Canadian financial contribution. The main reason for concern is the proposed relationship between the contributions of Canada and the United States. Under the proposals, the ratio between the Canadian and United States contributions is 1 to 5.6 for administrative expenses and 1 to 10 for operational and resettlement expenses. The ratio between the populations of the two countries is 1 to 12 and the ratio of national incomes is 1 to 16 or 17. It would thus appear that Canada is being asked to bear a disproportionate share of the financial burden, and this disparity is of considerable importance in view of the size of the total budget.

24. The Canadian Government, however, did not press its objections to the scale of financial contributions during the discussions at the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council. It wished to avoid a bitter and protracted debate on finances which would give an opening to those who wished to see the organization fail. Moreover, the position of the Canadian Government was protected by the provision in the report of the Committee on Finances that the scales of contributions for both the operational and the administrative expenses should be reconsidered in the light of the report of the Standing Committee on Contributions as accepted by the General Assembly. The Canadian delegation to the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council was therefore content to reserve Canada's position on the scale and amount of the financial contributions, while at the same time insisting on the necessity of establishing adequate budgetary control and accounting responsibility.

25. It is undesirable that a delay in settling the basis of contributions should delay the establishment and functioning of the organization. Moreover, some working capital will be necessary if the organization is to commence operations. Consequently, the Canadian delegation to the Economic and Social Council was instructed to support any reasonable arrangement that might be put forward for the interim financing of the organization pending the final decision on the scale of contributions. It was understood, of course, that this interim financing, whether it takes the form of a working capital fund or otherwise, should not be considered a precedent nor prejudice in any way the basis of contributions to be ultimately decided upon. One suggestion which was considered by the Canadian authorities, but rejected, was that states which accept refugees and assist them in becoming established should be credited with a certain amount per head against their contribution to the International Refugee Organization. The disadvantage of this proposal is that it is unlikely that it would influence to any significant extent the immigration policy of the various states which may take refugees, while on the other hand such an allowance would upset the budget of the I.R.O. and make even more difficult the problem of financing as a whole.

26. On September 17, the Canadian delegate to the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council, the Hon. Paul Martin, presented the Canadian point of view on the general question of refugees. Mr. Martin pointed out that Canada was willing to assume its fair share of the burden of the I.R.O. but reserved the Canadian position on the scale and the amount of the Canadian financial contribution. After outlining the action already taken by Canada with regard to the refugee problem (see below), Mr. Martin emphasized Canada's strong opposition to the compulsory repatriation to their countries of origin of genuine refugees who are neither war criminals, quislings, nor traitors. Subsequently Mr. Martin was appointed chairman of the Sub-Committee on Refugees which was charged with considering the draft constitution of the I.R.O.

27. The nature and extent of the direct assistance which Canada should make to the resettlement of refugees has not yet been determined. Canada has, however, already taken some steps which have relieved the refugee problem. Some 3,500 persons who had been granted temporary refuge in Canada during the war were permitted by order-in-council in 1945 to apply for permanent residence. Changes were recently announced in the Canadian immigration regulations by which additional categories of relatives of Canadian residents were made admissible to Canada as immigrants; as transportation improves it is expected that a large number of people now in Europe, including many in displaced persons camps, will gain admission to Canada as a result of these new regulations, and of a simplification of the passport regulations, which accompanied them. Four thousand veterans of the Polish army are also being admitted for agricultural work in Canada on the understanding that all who make good will be permitted to remain in Canada.

28. The Canadian attitude to the suggestions that states capable of receiving immigrants should agree to accept specific numbers of refugees is that the Canadian method of regulating immigration by the definition of categories of persons admissible, without the imposition of numerical limitations, would make it difficult for Canada to agree to specific quotas. A more effective contribution by Canada might be through the modification of existing regulations rather than through participation in a plan for the acceptance of quotas of refugees. Moreover, while the simultaneous announcement by several states that they are prepared to accept a specific number of refugees would doubtless have a useful immediate political effect, the practical effect might be limited since experience has shown that many states would probably not in fact live up to their commitments. [pp. 110-112]

WORLD FOOD BOARD

...

POLICY OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

The International Emergency Food Council

21. The Canadian Government has co-operated fully in the work of the Combined Food Board and will naturally continue to support its successor, the International Emergency Food Council. Our system of centralized marketing through the Canadian Wheat Board and the other controls still in existence constitute an exceptionally effective means of carrying out the recommendations of the Council.

Other Means of Improving World Food Supplies and Their Distribution

22. International allocation of cereals: Since supplies to meet the deficit must come chiefly from North America, and since the marketing methods now pursued in the United States are not such as to permit of firm programming more than a month ahead, the burden of a system of international allocation would fall chiefly on Canada. International allocation is therefore not favoured. The Canadian delegation might take the stand that since it is the countries of North America, i.e. Canada and the United States, which dispose of the greater part of present exportable surpluses, the close co-operation through the International Emergency Food Council and the monthly programming now practised gives fully as good results as would be obtained by international allocation.

23. Increase in acreage planted to wheat: At the time when the 1946-1947 crop was being put in, it was felt that any further increase in wheat acreage would be at the expense of coarse grains and consequently have an adverse effect on the other parts of the food programme such as meat and dairy production. Wheat acreage nevertheless did go up from approximately 23½ to 26 million acres, with the expected effect upon the production of livestock feed. The Canadian delegation would be well advised, therefore, to emphasize the wisdom of all-round planning of food production and point out the dangers of one-sided expansion.

24. Increase in the extraction rate for flour: A somewhat similar position exists in this case, since an increase in the extraction rate lessens the supply of mill feeds for livestock. Moreover, owing to the comparatively small part of the Canadian crop milled in Canada, an increased extraction rate here increases the world's exportable supply of flour very little. It was owing to these considerations that last spring, when the crisis was at its height, the Canadian Government chose to cut down by 10% on the supplies of wheat released to the domestic trade rather than to raise the extraction rate.

The World Food Board

25. If the issue should be raised again at the U.N. Assembly, the Canadian delegation would do well to stress the interest of the Canadian Government in the stabilization of prices and rationalization of supply and to urge the need for early and full consideration of the best means to achieve this end. The World Food Board itself should be regarded as one proposal among the others which demand examination. [pp. 115-116]

TERMINATION OF UNRRA

* * *

SURVEY OF GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS AND POLICY

6. The course of discussions at the UNRRA Council meeting in Geneva during August, at the Food and Agriculture Conference in Copenhagen (September 2nd to September 16th), in the Sub-Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the Reconstruction of Devastated Areas, and in the Economic and Social Council itself, have indicated that pressure from needy countries for some kind of post-UNRRA relief arrangements will be heavy. It is probable that the United States will suggest the appointment of a small expert committee to determine relief needs after UNRRA comes to an end and will endeavour to discourage a general debate on the procedure necessary for meeting relief needs, on the ground that this cannot easily be determined until after the needs are known.

7. The United States Government is reluctant to give consideration to the machinery which may be required to administer relief, since it is most strenuously opposed to anything resembling a "little UNRRA". At the present time the State Department is prepared to consider nothing larger or more elaborate than a committee of the three supplying governments, the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. The Canadian delegation could properly support moves intended to secure a major share of control in relief matters by the supplying countries, but might be prepared to agree to the establishment of a small committee of the Assembly to consider the report of the committee of experts. For that purpose, a committee of seven might be large enough. The Committee might include only those supplying countries willing to contribute further to relief when the need is demonstrated and possibly two receiving countries.

8. Behind the whole problem of relief lies the political problem of relations between the Soviet world and the Western world. The concept behind UNRRA was essentially that "relief should be divorced from politics"—a principle based on the hypothesis of close political co-operation between the two worlds. Many of the expectations based on this hypothesis have been disappointed, with the practical result that the Western democracies have been extending charity to states in Eastern Europe whose political policies have, from the Western point of view, been most unsatisfactory. There is, moreover, some evidence to support the view that these policies tend to become increasingly hostile to us as the internal position of the Soviet group becomes more closely knit. These melancholy considerations are undoubtedly playing some part in the evolution in the United States and elsewhere of opinion on relief, and on the related problem of foreign loans, and the view is gradually gaining currency that foreign economic policies, including especially such matters as credits and relief, should not be dissociated from overall strategic and political policies [pp. 119-120]

...

TRUSTEESHIP

...

CANADIAN ATTITUDE

States Directly Concerned

12. During the first part of the First Session of the General Assembly the Canadian delegation proposed that any Member of the U.N. which considered itself directly concerned might so notify the Secretary-General, who in turn would notify the Member that had declared an intention to place the specified territory under the trusteeship system. It would be the responsibility of the latter Member to consider any claims it might receive and to report on the action it had taken to the General Assembly at the time when it submitted the trusteeship agreement for approval. The United Kingdom Government is following the course suggested in the last part of the Canadian proposal and hopes to reach full agreement with the United States before the General Assembly convenes.

The "Open Door"

13. At San Francisco the Canadian delegation took the position that in dealing with problems of trusteeship on which the United Kingdom and United States were divided its general aim should be to help work out an acceptable accommodation between their views. If issue was publicly joined between the two delegations on the question of non-discrimination in trust territories, however, the Canadian delegation was to take no part. In principle Canada was prepared to forego any special advantages it enjoyed from preferential régimes in dependent territories under Commonwealth administration, but the Canadian delegation would not participate in any move to force the United Kingdom from a publicly taken position in this respect to which it attached a certain importance. The policy adopted by the Canadian delegation at San Francisco would continue to be applicable if, contrary to expectation, any issue the United States delegation might raise concerning monopolies should fail to be settled by direct negotiation.

Canadian collaboration in general questions

14. Although as representatives of a non-colonial power Canadians took no active part in drafting Chapters XII and XIII of the Charter, they have been ready since the San Francisco Conference to expedite the implementing of measures to which Canada has now agreed. Thus in the Preparatory Commission it was the Canadian delegates who took the initiative in drafting a complete revision of the provisional rules of procedure for the Trusteeship Council to bring them into conformity with the rules of other organs. [p. 129]

...

PALESTINE

...

THE CANADIAN ATTITUDE

23. The Canadian Government has not intervened in the Palestine controversy. It understands the reasons for the intensity with which both sides have put forward their claims—those of the Arabs being based on the League Covenant and those of the Jews on the Palestine mandate in which the Balfour Declaration is incorporated. It does not seem likely, however, that a lasting settlement in Palestine will be achieved through reliance by either side on emotional appeals addressed to the public opinion of the world as a substitute for a study of the realities of the situation in the Middle East. Advocacy by outside nations of the claims of either side might tend, indeed, to retard in some measure the establishment of a régime which would bring peace to Palestine. The increasing activity of moderate Zionist and Arab leaders during August and September suggests that it may not be beyond the scope of Arab and Jewish statesmanship to find with the aid of the United Kingdom a working arrangement which both communities will accept.

24. Should the Palestine issue be discussed in any detail in the General Assembly, the Canadian delegation might support requests which may be made that a hearing should be given to spokesmen of the three groups to whom guarantees were offered in the Balfour Declaration, viz., the Zionists, the Arabs and those non-Zionist Jews who may feel that their rights and position in any country other than Palestine have been adversely affected.

25. Any policy for Palestine on which agreement seems not impossible might be welcomed. It would not, however, seem to be wise to promise support in advance for any of the particular schemes proposed, viz., federation, partition, the principle of bi-nationalism or a unitary state. Opportunities may arise to strengthen trends toward agreement among those whose interests are chiefly concerned, and there will undoubtedly be occasions for throwing Canada's influence on the side of moderation and against the publication of inflammatory statements whose only practical effect is to multiply international misunderstandings. Unless immediate partition and statehood are agreed on, it is also likely that the majority of the delegations will support the early substitution of a trusteeship agreement for the present mandate, since machinery for the supervision of mandatory administrations no longer exists. [p. 137]

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS SECRETARIAT

...

THE CANADIAN ATTITUDE

4. Canada, at San Francisco and in London, has urged that the Secretariat should be a truly international civil service and that, to quote from the report of the Canadian delegation to the first meeting of the Assembly, "The clear language of the Charter, in which the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity is the paramount consideration in the selection of the staff, should be strictly adhered to." Canadian delegations have taken a leading part in securing the acceptance of this concept in the Charter and in the various resolutions adopted in London on the Secretariat and have put forward numerous constructive suggestions in the form of papers or in discussion.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON POLICY

5. From the documents available it is not possible to predict any major issues that are likely to engage the attention of the Assembly in this field.

Rather can it be expected that the appropriate committee will be called upon to consider a number of questions which, while perhaps of not outstanding importance individually, nevertheless will be of considerable significance in the long run when taken together. The problem of the greatest significance may well be that of recruitment of the Secretariat, since the policies so far adopted have given rise to considerable criticism. The Secretariat is still in a formative stage and the decisions taken by the next meeting of the Assembly will affect its growth and development to an important degree. The approach of the Canadian delegation could therefore be along the following lines:

(1) Consistent support could be given to the concept of a truly international civil service.

(2) Because of the importance of this concept and because of the past record of Canadian contributions to its discussion, the delegation could be prepared to take a leading part in the appropriate committee, putting forward constructive proposals as the occasion arises.

(3) Particular attention could be given to securing the observance of the language of the Charter which provides that "the paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity." While "due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible", this is clearly a secondary and subsidiary consideration. This point is likely to crop up from time to time. For example, in the first report of the Advisory group of experts on administrative, personnel and budgetary questions there appears the following section regarding recruitment in the initial stages:

It may be that a ratio of distribution of posts related to the ratio of Members' contributions may afford a rough "rule of thumb" guide until an effective system is evolved.

This interpretation of the Charter is open to criticism.

(4) On the other hand, it must be recognized that the long-run interests of the U.N. would not be served by insisting that the only criterion should be the immediate efficiency and competence of a candidate. The Secretariat ought to contain qualified men from all the U.N. Every effort should therefore be made to get men of promise from such countries as the Latin American Republics, the Slav and Arab states and China, and train them so that they may become efficient. Canada was mainly responsible for the proposals in the Preparatory Commission's report on "in-service training" and on the necessity of using modern methods of personnel selection rather than relying on old-fashioned written examinations. The Canadian delegation could continue to stress the importance of these proposals.

(5) Any steps to increase the influence of national governments in recommending or vetoing appointments could be resisted as inconsistent with the concept of an international civil service.

(6) Proposals for an international civil service commission and for an administrative tribunal could be carefully examined in the light of the general principles set forth above. [pp. 141-142]

...

ANNEX "B"

LOANS OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES TO THE UNITED NATIONS

1. The Canadian Civil Service Commission is unwilling to approve any general policy of giving government employees leave without pay to join the staff of the U.N. In their view this would result in a serious drain on government departments, because of the higher salary scales of the U.N.

2. It is therefore up to each department to decide whether it is prepared to loan an employee to the U.N. This was done by External Affairs in the case of T.W.L. MacDermot. The Department continues to pay him his salary and is reimbursed by the U.N. who also pay him the balance required to bring his compensation up to the U.N. level. The disadvantage to the department is that no vacancy in the department is created by this arrangement and it is impossible to obtain a replacement on its establishment.

3. It is understandable that individuals should want to combine the higher salary scales of the U.N. with the security of a permanent civil service post in Ottawa. It is equally understandable that government departments should resist this effort to make the best of two worlds, and should take the line that, if civil servants want to work for the U.N., they should sever their connection with the Canadian Government so that they can be replaced. Again, the U.N. can plead a valid case that the loan of able civil servants familiar with the transaction of public business would be of great assistance in getting their administration properly organized. In view of these conflicting claims it is not easy to formulate a clear-cut policy, but the most reasonable line for the Canadian delegation to take appears to be as follows:

(1) We recognize that the U.N. has great need of first-class people and that, although there is the whole world to choose from, there is a natural tendency to seek these people from existing government services because they are experts in international problems and experienced in the transaction of public business, and they are more likely to be personally known in governmental circles than are people from the business and professional world.

(2) On the other hand, there is an urgent demand in Canada for skilled public servants and the Canadian Government depends on a relatively small civil service to cope with its difficult postwar problems.

(3) It is therefore not feasible for the Government to adopt a policy of wholesale loans of personnel to the U.N.

(4) Nevertheless, the Government is anxious to do what it can to assist the U.N. and is prepared to loan personnel temporarily in exceptional cases. This has already been done. It is also prepared to give sympathetic consideration to proposals that individuals now in the Canadian public service should take up positions with the U.N. and other international organizations. This has also been done. Although no senior civil servants have gone to the U.N. itself, the Canadian Government has established a good record in releasing two deputy minister to specialized agencies—Dr. Finn to the Food and Agriculture Organization and Dr. Chisholm to the World Health Organization.

(5) A continued dependence by the U.N. on personnel from the public services of Member states is not going to be very productive since most governments face the same shortages of qualified people. What is really needed, and where the long term emphasis should be laid, is better recruitment policies designed to appeal to non-governmental circles. [pp. 143-144]

BUDGETARY AND FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION OF THE U.N.

21. In their preliminary discussions the Committee were faced with the question of whether a ceiling should be imposed on the contributions of any Member state. While the imposition of such a ceiling would depart from the main intention of relating contributions solely to capacity to pay, it was recognized that undue dependence on any one state, through its contributions of a disproportionate share of the finances, might not make for the most effective type of international co-operation. Also, the United States, the state most directly concerned, might find it politically inexpedient to contribute too large a share of the overall budget.

22. As it was felt that questions of this type would necessarily have to be decided by the Assembly, rather than by the Committee, several alternative scales showing the effect of no ceiling and of ceilings set arbitrarily at 25, 30 and 35% were prepared for consideration of the Assembly, with the following results:

Ceiling	Canadian % Contribution	U.S. % Contribution	Approximate Ratio
(a) None	2.49	49.07	1 to 19.5
(b) 35%	3.18	35	1 to 11
(c) 30%	3.42	30	1 to 9
(d) 25%	3.67	25	1 to 7

The normal ratio of Canada's national income to that of the United States is 1 to 16.

23. In the past there has been a tendency to over assess Canada. Under the I.L.O. scale (now up for revision), Canada contributed the absurd proportion of one third of the United States allocation. (The reason was that the United States, when it joined the I.L.O. in 1934, did so on condition that it pay no more than the largest contributor, the United Kingdom). In the initial scale of allocations to the working capital fund of the U.N. Canada contributed more than one-sixth of the United States' allocation. In its contributions to other international organizations, except UNRRA, Canada's share has invariably been disproportionate to its relative national income. (The special problem of the financing of the proposed International Refugee Organization is dealt with in the memorandum on refugees.) Accordingly, it will be noted that if no ceiling is imposed the situation will be a distinct financial improvement over the past from a Canadian point of view. In view, however, of the strength of the political arguments in favour of a ceiling on the contribution of the United States, the Canadian delegation should feel free to support the establishment of a ceiling if there develops a general feeling in the Assembly that a ceiling would serve the interests of the U.N. Since the main concern of the Canadian delegation will be to use its best efforts to ensure that the Canadian allocation bears an equitable relationship to that of the United States and other states such as Argentina and Australia, which might be considered in a position comparable to that of Canada, a ceiling in the neighbourhood of 40% would seem to be not unreasonable. In any event the Canadian delegation should oppose a reduction of the United States contribution to below about 35%. (Comparative statistics showing the national and per capita incomes of various states are attached as Annex† to this note.)

24. The comparative figures for national and per capita incomes have already come under criticism from the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. who have argued that, as they were computed on a 1938-40 base, they do not adequately reflect the increase in national productivity arising out of economic changes which occurred in countries like the United States and Canada during the war. While it would be fruitless to deny the validity of this contention, the Committee has used the best information available, and attempts are now being made to meet this criticism.

25. However, this problem emphasizes the type of difficulty which will probably be encountered when the recommendations of the Committee are discussed by the Assembly. Even if they are accepted in principle, efforts may be made by individual states to improve the basis on which their allocations have been computed. For instance, in addition to criticisms of the type already registered, some states may argue that their economic dislocation or war damage is greater than that of others and justifies their relative positions in the groupings being altered. In other cases, the official exchange rates, which admittedly do not reflect the relative real purchasing power of the various currencies, may come under criticism. However, these are difficulties inherent in the type of information available. The statistics used were the most reliable that could be obtained, and, therefore, unless the evidence presented clearly indicates that a state is receiving inequitable treatment, the Canadian delegation should, in general, oppose revisions designed to improve the relative position of individual states.

26. It may be that certain of the states, in order to justify their requests for an alteration in the basis for contributions, may contrast their position with that of more fortunate states such as Canada which, they may say, has become financially and economically stronger as a result of the war. To help meet such arguments Annexes II and III are attached† giving as accurate a compilation as can be made of data on such matters as the budgetary cost of the war to Canada, the wartime increase in our national debt, the extent of our gifts to other allied governments, the volume of our military relief payments and our contributions to UNRRA. It would be unwise to use these statistics except as a counter-argument in case the Canadian position is under attack as their introduction would introduce material extraneous to that on which the Committee on Contributions has based its recommendations. [pp. 148-149]

• • •

ECONOMIC SANCTIONS—THE NECESSITY OF CANADIAN LEGISLATION

1. Article 41 of the Charter states that the Security Council may call upon the Members of the U.N. to apply measures not involving the use of armed force to give effect to its decisions. "These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations by rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations."

2. The King, upon the advice of his Canadian Ministers, may sever diplomatic relations with any state. However, while it is within the royal prerogative to sever diplomatic relations, the prerogative could not be regarded as extending to the interruption of economic relations with another state pursuant to a decision of the Security Council. Legislation by the Canadian Parliament will therefore be required before measures of this nature could properly be taken; the Canadian Parliament is competent to enact such legislation.

3. Following World War I, the Canadian Parliament passed the Treaty of Peace Act, 1919 which provided that the Governor in Council could make such Orders in Council and do such things as appeared to him to be necessary for carrying out the treaties of peace including the Covenant of the League of Nations, but no such Canadian legislation exists with respect to the Charter of the U.N.

4. There is little likelihood of sanctions being imposed against any state by the Security Council in the near future. It seems, however, to be desirable that the government should have power to give immediate effect to any action demanded by the Security Council under this article, since we are bound by the Charter to do so and delay while awaiting the passage of special legislation by Parliament would be hard to explain in a time of crisis.

5. It will therefore be necessary to secure Parliamentary approval for a bill to equip the Government with the necessary authority.

6. The United Kingdom Parliament have passed the United Nations Act 1946 (Chapter 45 of 9 and 10 George VI) which in effect authorized the United Kingdom Government to discharge its responsibilities under Article 41 of the Charter by the passing of appropriate Orders in Council. [p. 171]

• • •

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL PRESS CONFERENCE

* * *

RECOMMENDATIONS ON POLICY

12. There are two main problems arising from the Philippine resolution for the holding of an International Press Conference—the timing of such a conference and the nature of its membership.

13. With regard to timing, the holding of such a conference in the near future would afford the press an opportunity to state their grievances which, since 1939, have undoubtedly caused difficulties in the sphere of international relations. The holding of such a conference would also aid governments in framing their policy on these questions. On the other hand, an examination of the statements and proposals mentioned above indicates the wisdom, before holding an International Press Conference, of trying to narrow the existing profound differences of opinion on the meaning of the terms “freedom of the press” and “responsibility of the press”. The Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press refers to the rights, obligations and practices which should be included in the concept of freedom of information. The World Congress of Journalists stresses press responsibility as well as press freedom, while Mr. Kent Cooper of the Associated Press and Sir Keith Murdoch at the 1946 Imperial Press Conference stress freedom, apart from responsibility.

14. The recent public controversy over the freedom of the press between Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov at the Paris Conference is an indication of how controversial a topic this has become. The demand for the freedom of the press as voiced in the West is one aspect of the effort to break through the “iron curtain” which separates the Soviet world from the West. Consequently an International Press Conference held in the near future, before preliminary investigations have been made, might well develop into a bitter and barren controversy over the degree of freedom possessed by the press in the West and in the U.S.S.R. At Copenhagen, for example, a Soviet journalist stated that no country had so much slander written about it as the U.S.S.R. and that it was “a false freedom which poisoned, slandered and sowed seeds of disension between nations.” He also stated that in the U.S.S.R., freedom of the press was granted by the Constitution. Soviet statesmen may well regard the western demand for freedom of the press as an attempt to reach the people of the Soviet Union over the heads of their government in a fashion detrimental to the rulers of that country.

15. It might therefore be the wiser course to delay the calling of an International Press Conference, possibly until the end of 1947, when the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press will have reported to the Commission on Human Rights and to the Economic and Social Council on its examination of the concept of freedom of information. The Sub-Commission might also include in its report the different points of view of the various Members of the U.N. on the question of the freedom and responsibility of the press. The Sub-Commission's report should be prepared from the point of view of the proper extent of governmental responsibility for the free flow of news and information and should also cover the topics listed in paragraph 8 above.

16. While the Sub-Commission is carrying on its enquiry from a governmental point of view it might also stimulate two other enquiries to be undertaken simultaneously by foreign correspondents and international news agencies respectively. These two groups, in addition to formulating their ideas on "freedom of the press", would, of course, have to deal with their responsibilities to governments and to peoples, just as the Sub-Commission should deal with the responsibilities of governments to journalists, news agencies and publishers.

17. Then on the basis of the reports of these three enquiries the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press could draft a convention for discussion at an International Press Conference to be held possibly at the end of 1947. If this is an intergovernmental press conference, the convention approved of by the conference could be submitted direct to governments for ratification. However, if it is a conference of news agencies, newspapers and newspapermen, the convention drafted by it would have to be submitted either to a special intergovernmental conference or to the General Assembly of the U.N., and the resulting convention submitted to governments for ratification.

18. Another problem arising out of the Philippine resolution is the nature of the membership of an International Press Conference. The Philippine proposal is that the conference should be an intergovernmental one, in which each national delegation would give "adequate representation . . . to representative organizations of the press, both managerial and professional, of the country of origin". However, it might be argued that it would be better if the initial conference was not a conference of governments represented by mixed delegations, but rather a professional press conference on the lines of those summoned by the League of Nations in the decade before the Second World War. A professional conference would give the press an opportunity to air their grievances and would also assist governments in formulating their policy. On the other hand, an intergovernmental conference, composed of representatives of governments as well as of working newspapermen and publishers would have the merit that it would not only provide the press with an opportunity to air their grievances, but would also force the press to accept responsibility for suggesting concrete practical remedies. An intergovernmental conference would also save considerable time, as pointed out above in paragraph 17, since the convention which it approves could be submitted direct to governments for their ratification.

19. Because of existing profound differences of opinion on the meaning of the terms "freedom of the press" and "responsibility of the press", it seems advisable that a number of preliminary investigations be made before an International Press Conference is held. Therefore it seems on the whole desirable that the U.N. Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press immediately examine what rights, obligations, and practices should be included in the concept of freedom of information, and at the same time stimulate parallel inquiries by foreign correspondents and international news agencies, with a view to drafting a convention for discussion at an International Press Conference to be held, possibly at the end of 1947. [pp. 194-195]

. . .

433.

DEA/211

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Consul General in New York to Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 56

New York, October 29, 1946

SECRET AND PERSONAL. ASDEL No. 38. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins:

1. I am afraid that I have not been doing very well in keeping you in touch with developments down here but now that the delegation has shaken down I hope to be able to do better in the future.

2. On the whole, everything is going along very well. The delegation meetings are harmonious and the members as a whole are participating in the discussions at the delegation meetings. They are also working hard. The clerical staff is working too hard.

3. We have got our allocations to the Committees settled, at least temporarily, and the Parliamentary members of the delegation seem each to be happy about the assignments which have been given to them. The only change made from the last list of assignments which we had prepared in Ottawa was to move Mr. Coldwell from the Administrative and Budgetary Committee to the Social Committee and Mr. Bracken from the Social Committee to the Administrative and Budgetary Committee. (Côté tells me that he is tele-typing you today the list of Committee assignments).† The delegation is now broken up into Sub-Committees composed of the members of the delegation on each of the Committees. These Sub-Committees have all by now had a number of meetings.

4. The preparation of Mr. St. Laurent's speech to the Assembly has caused us quite a lot of headaches. The innocuous speech which we prepared in Ottawa might not have been too bad if presented in the first day or so of the plenary sessions, but after the forthright speech of Noel-Baker, there seemed to be unanimity in the delegation that we ought to take a stronger line ourselves. I hope that you agree that the final version of the speech is a considerable improvement. Côté tells me that he has teletyped it to you.<sup>1</sup>

5. I shall be trying to see the British today to find out what their latest line is on elections to the Councils. A few days ago I got from them a pretty distinct intimation that they are trying to get London to change their instructions on elections to the Security Council. They are reluctant to vote both for India and Syria and my present guess is that their slate will be Colombia, Belgium and India.

6. The reason for the Foreign Office decision was clearly, I think, that the United Kingdom intend, for understandable reasons, to keep in with the Arab bloc by voting for Syria and to keep in with India by voting for it.

7. While the delegation has not come to any final decision and will not do so, of course, without clearance with you, I think that the general feeling is that our slate should be Colombia, Belgium and India. The arguments which you have put forward against India are strong. There are, however, strong arguments on the other side. India, if defeated this year, will almost undoubtedly stand for election next year. Our chances of being elected next year may, therefore, be greater if India is elected this year. The new Indian Government, as is apparent from Mrs. Pandit's speech to the Assembly, is going to try to balance itself nicely between the Western and Soviet worlds. Consequently, it will be difficult to contend a year from now that India gives a second Commonwealth vote on the Security Council. Moreover, India's election would mean that India, South Africa and New Zealand could make no claim on geographical grounds next year for election to the Security Council.

8. Noel-Baker told us last week that the British are contemplating supporting the admission to the United Nations of all the eight applicant States. You will remember that the Americans put this proposal up to the Security Council and the British opposed it then and it was turned down. We discussed this matter this morning with Mr. St. Laurent and I think he feels that on balance we ought not to give support to the United Kingdom suggestion. If the Assembly were to accept the United Kingdom suggestion it would pretty well mean that the Assembly had decided that any State that applies for membership should be admitted. This would be contrary to the terms of the Charter. It might also make it more difficult for us to resist applications from more of the Soviet Republics for separate membership in the United Nations. My guess is that the Soviet aim is to try to secure a one-third vote in the Assembly so that they will be able to veto in the Assembly all proposals of importance since all such proposals require a two-thirds vote.

---

<sup>1</sup>Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, Séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale, quarante et unième séance plénière, 29 octobre 1946, p. 825-829.

<sup>1</sup>See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary Meetings of the General Assembly, Forty-first Plenary Meeting, October 29, 1946, p. 825-829.

9. Our proposal for economizing the time of the Assembly is meeting with heavy weather. Unfortunately, the Russians seem to believe that it is aimed at them. Wilgress may try in the next day or so to have a talk with Manuilsky and try to persuade them to take a more favourable view of our proposal. The General Committee in its report, which it is making to the Assembly on the allocation of the items on the agenda to the various Committees, has allocated our item to itself. It may be that Mr. St. Laurent will, in debate in the Assembly on this report of the General Committee, argue that this reference to the General Committee is unnecessary and that the Assembly should, without further reference to a Committee, be asked to vote on our resolution calling for the setting up of an ad hoc Committee to frame proposals to the Assembly at this session on how it might economize the time of future sessions.

10. Since the Russians have deliberately tried to confuse the issue by pretending that we have formally proposed a number of specific measures to economize the Assembly's time, we have made it clear in the formal resolution, which we have had circulated, that all we are asking the Assembly to approve is the establishment of an ad hoc Committee. (A copy of this resolution was teletyped to you yesterday). †

11. We have been sounded out by the British on whether we would be prepared to designate a Canadian to serve on the nine-member Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. You will remember that Hume Wrong was asked whether he would not take on the Chairmanship of this Committee and had to turn it down. The Department of Finance told us some months ago that they could not provide anyone. It seems to me, therefore, that we will have to stay off the Committee unless we are, in the near future, appointing, as permanent representative to the United Nations, someone who would be a first-class member of this Committee. If we were going to make such an appointment soon then I think our interests, as well as those of the United Nations, would be served by his being a member of the Committee, since it would bring him into very close touch with the work of the whole Secretariat.

12. I sent you yesterday a letter<sup>1</sup> about our draft resolution on the Pacific Settlement of Disputes by the Security Council.

13. I was delighted to learn from Maryon<sup>2</sup> today that you are hoping to pay us a visit in the middle of November. I do hope you can make it and that you will be able to stay for more than just a day or so.

14. I hope that the cares of the Department are not pressing too heavily on you. Maryon tells me that you are getting to the office at 8:45. That is a good idea as long as you do not follow Norman's<sup>3</sup> habit of staying until 7:45 p.m. Ends.

<sup>1</sup> Document 505.

<sup>2</sup> Mme Pearson.

<sup>3</sup> N. A. Robertson.

<sup>2</sup> Mrs. Pearson.

434.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Consul General in New York to Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 72

New York, October 31, 1946

ASDEL No. 46. Headquarters site.

The United States delegation, reversing the position which they took at London, intend to take an active part in discussions about the site. They feel that, on grounds of expense and of creating adverse public opinion, Westchester County would be undesirable. They may take the initiative in raising this question and, in any event, it seems clear that the whole problem will be reopened. This will permit consideration of alternative sites in the United States. The United States delegation is firmly committed to keeping the site in the United States.

The Canadian delegation is taking the line, for the time being, that the Assembly has settled on the Westchester area and that we have no intention of going beyond the matter of selecting one of the five Westchester sites. However, if on grounds of economy and of making for better relations between the United Nations and United States public opinion, there appears to be a general desire to consider other sites, we feel that we should not oppose this move.

435.

DEA/211

*Le secrétaire général, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale
des Nations Unies, à la deuxième direction politique*

Secretary-General, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Second Political Division

SECRET

New York, October 31, 1946

Dear Mr. Riddell,

1. The Secretary of the South African delegation invited members of the Canadian delegation to attend a small Commonwealth discussion Tuesday evening, October 29th, at 9 p.m., at the Waldorf-Astoria. The subject to be discussed was the incorporation of South West Africa.

2. At the meeting were present representatives of all the Commonwealth delegations. Field Marshall Smuts was in the chair and were present, among others, Mr. Philip Noel-Baker, Sir Hartley Shawcross, Mr. Makin (Australia), Sir Carl Berendsen (New Zealand), Senator Robertson, Mr. McIlraith, a number of representatives and advisers from other delegations, and myself.

3. At the outset, the Field Marshall indicated that in his opinion this was the first of a series of Commonwealth meetings to be held in New York, in continuation of the series held at San Francisco and the Paris Peace Conference. He considered that they were a very useful means of interchange of ideas among that group of nations which has the greatest experience in international collaboration throughout the world. It was not a question of "ganging up" on other nations but the world situation at the present time is a most critical one and the Commonwealth has to deal with very serious matters, a responsibility which it must discharge in the hope of making a useful contribution. The Commonwealth has a great rôle to play and it may be able to do something towards avoiding a "collision" between the two greatest powers.

4. The question of South West Africa was not mentioned (to his delegation's and our surprise), but he discussed Mr. Molotov's speech which he thought was very "mischief-making", coming as it does towards the end of the debate without much of an opportunity for reply, since the United States (against whom he felt the speech was largely directed) had probably set their speech and were unable now to change it. (Incidentally, in his conversation with Sir Hartley Shawcross before the meeting, he suggested that possibly Mr. Byrnes should fly to New York to make the speech in rebuttal).

5. Mr. Noel-Baker pointed out that the representative of Australia still had to speak and that, though he had been pushed off the list by the President of the Assembly in order to allow Mr. Molotov to speak, this may have been providential as it would allow Mr. Makin, if he could see his way clear so to do, to make a reply. Mr. Makin thought that his speech would give some satisfaction and he was consulting to see what changes could be made. Sir Hartley Shawcross suggested that three points should not go unanswered:

(a) The challenge by Molotov that certain powers were increasing armaments—the question to ask is, What powers are increasing armaments, certainly the United States and the United Kingdom have been reducing their armaments;

(b) The challenge that some powers have expansionist views—the question would be, What powers have expansionist views? Soviet Russia, since the beginning of the war alone, has incorporated into its territories another 24 million inhabitants;

(c) The suggestion by the Russians for disarmament and control of the atomic bomb—those have been the suggestions which have been made by ourselves before and if we have not been able to achieve them, who has prevented it?

6. The meeting was about to break up at the call of the Field Marshal when Senator Robertson expressed the view that, without prior reference to his delegation, he would say that the best approach would be to welcome those policies expressed in Molotov's speech which we have advocated in the past and which are now forced upon the Soviet by world opinion. Indeed, the Chairman of our delegation had that day spoken on the urgent necessity for disarmament before Mr. Molotov had mentioned it. The Field Marshal disagreed with this view; he said that after the last war he was a fervent proponent of disarmament but that after 1918, we (speaking of the Western powers) had thoroughly disarmed while another power had armed. Mr. Noel-Baker indicated that we are all bound to reduce armaments under the Charter and that the Military Staff Committee must prepare a plan for the regulation of armaments. The international control of atomic energy is but one phase of the entire regulation of arms. One could not say we shall control the atomic bomb and allow the type of wars which have occurred before. (Sir Hartley Shawcross, however, seemed to nod approval to Senator Robertson's suggestions).

7. Mr. Makin, however, respectfully differed from the Canadian view, as did the Field Marshall who in his rather brusque manner concluded the meeting.

8. I spoke with Professor Bailey (Australia) and he rather agreed with the soundness of the Canadian view on the subject. My own feeling is that among some of the leaders of the Commonwealth group (especially from South Africa and Australia), there is a rather strong "diehard" feeling which is not sufficiently flexible to permit us to rebut Soviet propaganda and to turn their arguments to our advantage.

9. This last view was very much borne out during the general discussion in our delegation meeting yesterday morning where the political members agreed with Senator Robertson's stand quite thoroughly and Senator Haig proposed that Mr. St. Laurent should be present at any of these "high-powered" Commonwealth meetings.

E. A. CÔTÉ

436.

DEA/211

*Le conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

New York, October 31, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Yesterday morning's meeting of the delegation was not unnaturally devoted almost entirely to a discussion of Mr. Molotov's speech of the previous day. Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Martin, Mr. Coldwell and Senator Haig all participated in the discussion.

What was significant about the discussion was that they were in substantial agreement and Mr. Bracken, although he did not take part, did not express dissent.

There was profound gloom about our chances of avoiding war with the Soviet Union. However, even on the basis of the most pessimistic calculations of the chances of war and the most cynical interpretation of Soviet policies, it was agreed that for the present proposals made by the Soviet Union allegedly in the interests of world peace should be treated as if they were made with sincerity. To reject Soviet proposals which on their face appeared to have merit would be to play into the hands of the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union was clearly attempting to undermine the loyalty to their own governments of peoples in the western world. Their propaganda was directed not merely at communists or semi-communists but at liberals with a small "l". The Soviet Union made proposals which emphasized objectives which were eminently desirable—such as outlawry of the atomic bomb and general reduction of national armaments. If the western powers were to appear to disagree with those objectives the ordinary person would find it hard to understand.

Therefore the western powers should take Soviet proposals such as those on disarmament and expand them. They should demonstrate that it was they, the western powers, which were the initiators in making proposals for outlawing the use of modern methods of mass destruction.

The western powers must reject a narrow conception of strategy based on concepts purely of military power. The Soviet Union was hoping that their most effective weapon against the western powers in the event of war or apprehended war would be divisions of opinion among the peoples of the western countries. Mr. Molotov, in his speech to the Assembly, had given a clear indication of this and had by implication threatened that if the United States dropped an atom bomb on the Soviet Union it would find itself faced at home with something close to civil war. We must therefore recognize that what we are engaged in is a campaign of psychological warfare with the Soviet Union for the minds of the people of the western world.

In the course of this discussion various suggestions were made about the kind of reply which could most usefully be made by the representatives of the western powers to Mr. Molotov's speech. These suggestions cover very much the same ground as was covered by Mr. Austin in the first part of his speech to the Assembly yesterday. This new part was added after Mr. Molotov's speech. I am enclosing a copy of this part of Mr. Austin's speech. †

I am told by a member of the United States delegation that agreement was made on this additional section by 3:30 yesterday morning. It is a very considerable achievement of which the United States deserves to be proud to be able to secure clearance of this reply to Mr. Molotov in the brief period which elapsed between the conclusion of his speech and the early hours of the following morning.

Yours sincerely,

ESCOTT REID

437.

DEA/211

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 61

Ottawa, November 1, 1946

SECRET AND PERSONAL. DELAS No. 40. Following for Reid from Pearson.

1. Thanks for your teletype No. 56 of the 29th. Glad to know things are going well. I think Mr. St. Laurent's opening statement was a good one and comment up here has been favourable.

2. I am still worried about elections to the Council. I feel pretty certain India will be defeated this year. If she stands next year and we also desire to stand, then once again we may possibly be squeezed out by another Commonwealth State. No matter what the new Indian Government may think, I feel certain that in the minds of most of the member states, India will be regarded as a Commonwealth candidate. If she is elected this time, our position is, I think, prejudiced next year. If she is not elected, and runs again, we will also be in a more difficult position.

3. I agree that the blanket election of all applicants for membership would be unwise and I do not see how we can support the United Kingdom suggestion. If Trans-Jordan is eligible for election to the United Nations, any pseudo-state is, and this will play right into the hand of the Soviet.

4. I am afraid that we will not be in a position to designate a suitable Canadian to serve on the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary questions if a nomination has to be made at this Assembly.

438.

DEA/211

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Consul General in New York to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 112

New York, November 6, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 75.

1. Mr. Bevin invited Commonwealth delegations to meet him this morning for an hour's discussion. Spain and the veto were considered.

2. Spain. Bevin covered familiar ground in saying that while everyone detested Franco, we must avoid action leading to civil war and must try to strengthen moderate and progressive forces in Spain. Breaking of diplomatic relations would be a useless gesture, while economic sanctions would place special burdens on the United Kingdom, as a country which would have to play a large part in enforcing them (re-imposition of navicerts). Moreover, a decision by the United Kingdom to cut down imports from Spain would have a serious effect on their economy, particularly as regards iron ore. We indicated that as we had no diplomatic relations with Spain and could claim no special knowledge of conditions there, we were not disposed to take any action which might embarrass others but would support whatever proposals seemed most constructive.

3. Veto. The United Kingdom believe that the most hopeful line is to seek agreement among the Great Powers on methods of procedure for the Security Council, including the use of the veto, which could be passed virtually unanimously by the Assembly. A constructive approach of this sort might conceivably be accepted by the Soviet Union, while a mere vote of censure by small and middle Powers on past practices would do little good. The United Kingdom are to produce a draft of their ideas and are prepared to put their proposals to the other Great Powers after further discussion with Commonwealth delegations. We agreed that the only hope of real progress is to try for a formula acceptable to the U.S.S.R. Australia has presented a resolution which merely restricts the use of the veto to matters falling under Chapter 7 of the Charter and which would clearly be unacceptable to the U.S.S.R.

439.

DEA/211

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 142

New York, November 8, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 96. Following for Pearson from Wilgress, Begins: With further reference to my teletype No. 137, ASDEL No. 85 of November 8th.†

1. Later in the discussion on Soviet attitude, Bevin raised the question as to whether or not other Commonwealth countries felt, from what had gone before at the Assembly, that the U.S.S.R. was working to smash the whole show. Smuts thought that we had not yet enough evidence to answer this question. Noel-Baker was unwilling to conclude that the Soviet Union was engaged in a deliberate policy of wrecking, though evidence pointed that way. He mentioned Manuilsky's behaviour as Chairman of the First Committee and Vyshinsky's speech on the Refugee Organization.

2. My own view is that it is dangerous to conclude from behaviour of Soviet representatives that they are working to undermine the Organization. Manuilsky's behaviour, as chairman, is what one might expect from him, and it is apparently a reflection of what the Russians were able to get away with in Paris on procedural issues. Vyshinsky's speech on the Refugee Organization was a deliberate attempt to kill that particular Organization but should not be taken to mean that the Soviet Union desires to undermine the United Nations, particularly in the exercise of its main function of the maintenance of peace and security. I believe that they have no desire to smash the Organization but they are determined to use it as much as possible for their own ends. Ends.

440.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 401

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 148

New York, November 9, 1946

IMPORTANT. ASDEL No. 101. Following for Riddell from Côté, Begins: Following is text of remarks which may be spoken by Mr. St. Laurent in the General Assembly on the question of the location of the Headquarters.<sup>1</sup> Text Begins:

I wish to explain the position of the Canadian delegation on the Resolution which has been proposed by the delegation of Byelo-Russia. If adopted, this Resolution would direct the Permanent Headquarters Committee to study the question of the possibility of choosing a permanent or temporary location for the Headquarters of the United Nations in Europe, in particular at Geneva.

When the question of the location of the Headquarters of the United Nations first came up for consideration, Canada held to the view that a site in Europe would best further the interests of the United Nations as well as suit the convenience of the majority of the members. We considered also that the availability of suitable buildings in Geneva would have made the location of the Headquarters in that city desirable from a practical point of view. It was for this reason that we cast our vote in favour of Europe.

However, a majority of the members decided that the Headquarters should be located in the United States of America. Canada has accepted the decision of the majority. Moreover, this decision has suited our own convenience since Canada also is a North American country. But it was and still is the view of the Canadian delegation that the particular convenience of any one member should not be a factor in determining this important question. Accordingly, we propose to take no further part in the discussion on the merits of the Resolution proposed by the delegation of Byelo-Russia and we shall abstain from voting on this Resolution when it is put to the vote. Text Ends. Ends.

<sup>1</sup> Ce discours n'a pas été prononcé.

<sup>1</sup> This speech was not delivered.

441.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 401

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 157

New York, November 11, 1946

ASDEL No. 106. Following from Côté for Riddell, Begins:

1. Following is statement which the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent might make in Committee 5 on November 12th<sup>1</sup> in connection with the contributions to be paid by various members. This text has been cleared at the delegation meeting but may be amended before it is presented.

2. Text: Begins:

On behalf of the Canadian delegation, I want to offer a few observations on this important subject of contributions.

We have heard with interest the views expressed by those delegates who have already spoken and we have not failed to note the warning voiced by the Norwegian delegate and emphasized by Senator Vandenberg.<sup>2</sup> No one can deny that in this field of the financial burdens to be borne by our member States, we may risk a reaction among the public and the Governments which might jeopardize the stable and progressive development of our entire world organization. It is also true that in these matters the United Nations must have the whole-hearted and continued support of our respective legislatures and peoples at home and when we ask them for that support, we must be able to convince them that the recommendations agreed to here are just and wise.

We appreciate the very useful work done by the Committee on Contributions on the basis of the capacity to pay of the member States. We also know there were gaps in the information available to them and that, of necessity, some reliance had to be placed on informed guesses. We feel however that on the basis indicated in their terms of reference no better job could have been done.

But Senator Vandenberg has argued very forcibly that capacity to pay cannot safely be made the only criterion for distributing the burden of the organization's ordinary administrative budget when the result of that criterion places practically 50 per cent of that burden on one nation alone.

The Canadian delegation agrees that to do this might very well jeopardize the success of the United Nations, both because it would tend to put a strain

<sup>1</sup> Le discours fut prononcé par M. John Bracken. Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, cinquième commission, vingt-quatrième séance, 13 novembre 1946, p. 102.

<sup>2</sup> Représentant, la délégation des États-Unis à l'Assemblée générale.

<sup>1</sup> The speech was delivered by Mr. John Bracken. See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Fifth Committee, Twenty-fourth Meeting, November 13, 1946, p. 102.

<sup>2</sup> Representative, Delegation of the United States to the General Assembly.

on the principle of the sovereign equality of all the nations in dealing with budgetary problems and because the people of the one nation would be apt to feel that they were being asked to do more than their fair share.

Senator Vandenberg therefore argues that a ceiling should be placed on the amount to be contributed by any one nation.

This solution of the political difficulty pointed out by Senator Vandenberg tends however to create like difficulties for other member States. Notwithstanding the gaps in the information available to the Contributions Committee, no one can doubt that if we had on our desks the most complete and up-to-date statistics on the annual national income of each of our countries, they would show two things clearly and beyond question: first, that the United States has the largest national income of any nation and, second, that in the United States the national income per capita is greater than in any other nation.

Now, to the individual tax-payer the second is the important factor: he is concerned with the relation which his personal contribution will be as to the contributions of tax-payers in other countries where the capacity to pay is equal to or greater than his own. It would not therefore seem to be politically realistic to expect any Government or the members of any Parliament to vote that their State make a contribution to the ordinary administrative budget of this organization higher on a per capita basis, than the contribution of the United States.

Under the recommendation of the Contributions Committee this difficulty does not arise and the per capita contribution of the citizens of the United States would appear to be higher than that of the citizens of any other nation.

The Canadian delegation is not asking that this exact relation be continued but if a ceiling is to be placed on the percentage of the budget to be contributed by the United States and that ceiling is substantially below the present percentage, it will be necessary to extend that ceiling to all the member States whose per capita contribution would otherwise exceed that of the United States tax-payer.

A ceiling on the total contribution of any member State necessitates a ceiling on the amount the citizens of any other nation are required to pay on a per capita basis.

We recognize, as does the United States delegation, that there is a difference between budgets for ordinary administration and "operational" budgets to help repair the ravages of war. As regards the latter category, Canada has in the past assumed substantial responsibilities and is prepared to give serious and sympathetic consideration to other like problems as they arise. But when it comes to the ordinary administrative expenses of the United Nations I submit that we cannot ask the tax-payer in any country to pay more per head than the tax-payer in the United States.

Senator Vandenberg has said, and we agree, that this is not a mere matter of money but a matter of principle. We can all afford to pay anything, in material values, to achieve the goals of the United Nations, if our decisions can be regarded as right and wise, and just as between partners in this common enterprise.

But I am convinced that we would be risking just the kind of reaction the Norwegian and the United States delegates warned against if we were to accept a scale of contributions which placed on the tax-payers of any other country a per capita rate higher than that placed on those of the country which is so fortunate as to have for its citizens the highest per capita income of the whole world.

It is for this reason I venture to say to the Committee—if we place a ceiling on total contributions we must also make that ceiling applicable on a per capita basis. Ends. Message Ends.

442.

DEA/211

*Le conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

New York, November 18, 1946

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I am sending you some teletypes† this morning on the Commonwealth meeting with Mr. Bevin which took place at the Waldorf-Astoria from nine to ten. In this personal note to you I want to touch on some matters which would not be suitable for an official communication.

Wilgress and I were most disturbed this morning by the state that Mr. Bevin appears to be in. He did not seem to have a grasp of some of the questions which were up for discussion. He was irritable and snapped pretty viciously at Noel-Baker a number of times. Wilgress says that Bevin's state now is in complete contrast with his state in Paris where, though tired, he showed a mastery of the problems and was not irritable.

A number of questions were raised about what the last paragraph of the revised draft resolution meant—whether, in particular, it would bar Spain from membership in the proposed International Trade Organization. Mr. Bevin was informed that this proposed International Trade Organization was being set up at the initiative of the United Nations. He said that he had never heard of this before, that he was sure that there was not a Cabinet minute to this effect and that the United Kingdom should never put its foreign trade policy under the auspices of the United Nations.

Bevin in the discussions on the veto had emphasized that the only outcome of any value would be for the five great powers to agree on a code of conduct in the Security Council. Noel-Baker put the argument mildly that even if the Big Five could not agree, there would be some advantage in having the Assembly approve by a vote of say 48 to 5 or 6, some broad general propositions on the measures which the Security Council should take to become a more effective agency of conciliation. This, he thought, might have a restraining influence on the Soviet Union. Instead of replying to him in a reasonable way, Bevin dismissed his remarks in a cavalier fashion.

These examples by themselves may not appear to be impressive, but if you had been at the meeting I think you would have been as depressed as Wilgress and myself at Bevin's behaviour. The pressure of responsibilities and of work have clearly been too much for him, and have affected both his ability to master a problem and his skill as a negotiator.

Bevin seems to be relying almost entirely on Cadogan and turns to him for advice instead of his fellow members of the United Kingdom Ministry here—Noel-Baker, Shawcross, etc. He appears to accept Cadogan's memoranda after a hasty reading as witness his acceptance of the original Cadogan memorandum on the veto which was definitely retrograde and which probably would have gone through except for Mr. St. Laurent's intervention.

Yours sincerely,

ESCOTT REID

443.

DEA/5475-BR-40

Mémorandum du conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, à la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Memorandum from Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], December 1, 1946

1. During the next week or two each committee and sub-committee is going to be faced with the necessity of some sort of closure on debate. Many committees will also find themselves involved in procedural snarls resulting from the inadequacy of the present rules of procedure.

2. As you know, we have sent in to the Secretariat a memorandum,† dated November 27th, on economizing the time of the General Assembly. This will be circulated as an A/BUR document and will be discussed by the General Committee's sub-committee on economizing time.

3. Three weeks before the Assembly opened we asked the Secretary General to put on the Agenda of the Assembly the item, "Measures to Economize the Time of the General Assembly". When our request that this item be added to the Agenda of the General Assembly came up to the General Committee, it was greeted with scorn and derision by Mr. Gromyko and Mr. Manuilsky.

4. The line taken by the Soviet representatives is set out fully in the following translation of a Tass message from New York, dated October 24th, which appeared in all Moscow newspapers of October 25th:

“During the discussion of the agenda for the General Assembly, opening in October 23rd, Vyshinsky proposed to exclude from the agenda the proposals of the Canadian delegation, figuring the demagogic title of: ‘Measures to economize on the time of the General Assembly’. Among these ‘measures’, are such as the proposal to limit the time of speakers at the General assembly to 10 minutes, not to discuss the report of the General Committee if one-third of the committee members do not demand it, not to discuss the essence of questions proposed for inclusion in the agenda, etc.

No doubts were left that the Canadian proposals have the hidden aim of preventing drawn-out speeches at the General Assembly, limiting the freedom of speech and hindering the criticism of the anti-democratic character of a number of drafts submitted to the Assembly.

The Soviet delegate, Vyshinsky, drew the attention of the Committee to these circumstances, and proposed to recommend to the Assembly not to include in the agenda the Canadian proposals as limiting the freedom of speech and having an anti-democratic character.

The Chairman, Spaak, stubbornly challenged Vyshinsky’s proposal, trying to prove that such recommendations were not within the competence of the Committee. But the Soviet delegate advanced such irrefutable evidence of Spaak’s incorrect interpretation of the functions of the Committee as a number of procedural rules (rules Nos. 33, 33(a) and others), directly binding the Committee to assist the Assembly in drawing up the agenda. The Soviet delegation was supported by Norway, China and the United States, but three hours had to be spent in debate to defend the unchallengeable right of the General Committee against the attitude of its Chairman. As a result, a proposal by Vyshinsky was adopted, to summon a special meeting of the General Committee on October 24th to discuss the draft agenda of the Assembly, embracing 52 questions, and in particular the question of the Canadian proposals, so as to present their recommendations to the Assembly. The General Committee also agreed that the General Assembly should not ratify the agenda until the report of the General Committee had been presented”.

You will note from this that the Soviet arguments against our proposals were that the purpose of them was to limit freedom of speech and that they had an anti-democratic character.

5. I would suggest, therefore, that when committees are faced in the next week or so with the necessity of limiting debate, the Canadian representative on the committee intervene to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that Canada suggested at the beginning of this Session the necessity of the Assembly at this Session studying carefully measures to economize the time of future sessions of the General Assembly and that the purpose of our proposals was to ensure as far as possible that the discussions in the next

Assembly should be stream-lined so that time was not wasted and that adequate time was given to the consideration of each important item on the agenda instead of spending an inordinate amount of time during the first three-quarters of a session on one-quarter of the business before the Assembly and rushing through without adequate discussion, during the remaining quarter of the Assembly, the remaining three-quarters of the work which the Assembly had to do.

6. Suitable quotations could be made from our memorandum of November 27th on economizing the time of the General Assembly, especially the first two pages and the first two lines of the third page.

7. I attach, for you convenience, a copy of our memorandum as issued in the A/BUR series, and a copy of our press release† on the memorandum.

E. R[EID]

444.

DEA/5475-BR-40

Sommaire d'une déclaration du conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Summary of Statement by Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York,] December 7, 1946

SUMMARY OF STATEMENT MADE BY MR. ESCOTT REID, THE REPRESENTATIVE OF CANADA AT THE MEETING ON DECEMBER 6, 1946, OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE'S SUB-COMMITTEE ON MEASURES TO ECONOMIZE THE TIME OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

1. The General Assembly has gone through a six weeks' debauch of un-organized discussion. It is immediately after a debauch that a person is most likely to make good resolutions. The Assembly now realizes that, during the first three-quarters of its time, it got through only one-quarter of its work and must now get through the remaining three-quarters of its work in the one-quarter of its time which remains to it. The Assembly, therefore, is now in the mood in which it would be likely to accept proposals for changing its rules of procedure which might result in a better organization of the work of the second session of the Assembly.

2. While my experience of international conferences is very limited compared with yours, Mr. Chairman, I have certainly found in the last two years in the conferences which I have attended—the Chicago Aviation Conference, the San Francisco Conference and the meetings in London—that the same pattern repeated itself. Each conference started off believing that it would behave itself but began by wasting its time and ended by having to rush decisions through at the end.

3. I am afraid that if we do not take any action now, but leave it for the next session of the Assembly to take action, the same pattern will be repeated.

4. Mr. Gromyko has suggested that it would be sufficient if the Secretariat were to draft new rules of procedure and present them to the next session of the Assembly. The problem, however, of persuading the next session of the Assembly to adopt improvements in its rules falls into two parts—getting good rules drafted and getting the rules accepted by the General Assembly. The chances of the Assembly accepting good rules will be much better if they come not from the Secretariat but from a committee of its own members.

5. Mr. Gromyko's first suggestion was that the Secretary-General's proposals for revision should go direct to the next session of the Assembly. He has since suggested that they go to the General Committee, which will be elected at the next session. The Canadian Government, in its original proposal set forth in its letter of September 24th to the Secretary-General, proposed that the General Assembly, as early as possible in the second part of the first session, elect an ad hoc committee of about 15 states to consider and make recommendations to it on measures it might adopt to economize its time. The General Committee in its wisdom decided to do this work itself and referred it to a sub-committee. The Canadian delegation accepted this decision with considerable reluctance since it feared that the General Committee was a most inappropriate body to consider this matter; it was composed to a great extent of committee chairmen and these chairmen would be unable to give careful consideration to the work of the sub-committee or even to attend its meetings since their first responsibility was to the committees of which they were chairmen. The vacant chairs around the table tonight demonstrate that our fears were well founded.

6. The proposal that a special committee be appointed by this Assembly, with instructions to present a report for circulation to the members of the United Nations three months before the opening annual session of 1947, causes me some embarrassment since the Chairman of the Canadian delegation, in his address in the opening plenary debate, stressed the dangers of the unnecessary multiplication of committees meeting between sessions of the Assembly. Moreover, the Secretary-General, I understand, has estimated that the cost to the United Nations for a committee meeting between its sessions is $1,000. per member. I do not doubt that $15,000 would be well spent for this committee, but it would perhaps be better if the committee were to meet one week before the opening of the next session of the Assembly.

7. The important thing is that the report of this committee should be placed before the second session of the General Assembly on the first or second day of the session, with a recommendation that the proposals for revising and amplifying the rules of procedure contained in the report be adopted provisionally, and preferably without debate, to apply to the second session.

8. Mr. Gromyko has suggested that Canada be asked to submit to the Secretary-General all the documentation at its disposal on measures to economize the time of the General Assembly. The Canadian delegation has exhausted its reservoir of suggestions for economizing the time of the Assembly and the Canadian delegation hopes that all the members of the United Nations will now send to the Secretary-General their suggestions for economizing the Assembly's time. The question is surely of common concern to all the delegations at the Assembly. It is not one in which there is a peculiar national interest of Canada.

9. All of us wish to see the General Assembly operate with dignity as well as with despatch.<sup>1</sup>

SOUS-SECTION ii/SUB-SECTION ii

CODIFICATION DU DROIT INTERNATIONAL CODIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

445.

DEA/5475-AX-40

Mémorandum du chef, la direction juridique

Memorandum by Head, Legal Division

[Ottawa,] August 9, 1946

PLACING ON THE AGENDA AT THE SECOND SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROPOSALS FOR THE PROGRESSIVE DEVELOPMENT AND CODIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

1. There has been placed on the Agenda, at the Second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, the question of implementing in a constructive and practical manner the obligation of the General Assembly, under Clause 1(a) of Article 13 of the Charter to:

initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification.

2. There are few references to international law in the Charter apart from the above-quoted provision. In particular, there are none which could be construed as conferring on the General Assembly legislative power stricto sensu in the field of international law. Indeed, all attempts at San Francisco to confer upon the Assembly in specific terms power to revise the rules and principles of international law were abortive. In the Preamble to the Charter, it is stated that the Peoples of the United Nations are determined, inter alia "to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained". In Article I, it is stated that the Purposes of the United Nations include the bringing about "by peaceful means, and in accordance with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace". In general, however, both in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals (in which the expression "international Law" does not appear at all) and the Charter itself, political and security, rather than juridical, interests predominate. It is open to doubt, however, that world peace can be maintained indefinitely in the absence of a system of international order based upon law. It would seem essential indeed, that all steps possible under the Charter be taken in order to strengthen the authority of law in international affairs.

<sup>1</sup> Voir aussi le discours de M. Paul Martin dans Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale, soixante-septième séance plénière, 15 décembre 1946, pp. 1454-1457.

<sup>1</sup> See also the speech by Mr. Paul Martin in United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary Meetings of the General Assembly, sixty-seventh plenary meeting, December 15, 1946, pp. 1454-1457.

3. (a) A division of the Legal Department of the Secretariat has been established, under the direction of Dr. Yuen-Le Liang, "for the Development of International Law". The programme of the Division as reported by the Secretary-General consists of:

- (i) making studies concerning the promotion of international legislation in the form of multilateral conventions;
- (ii) examining the possibilities of resuming the process of codification of international law and assisting in promoting conferences on the codification of international law in the future;
- (iii) undertaking research in the work of public and private bodies and serving as a centre of information concerning matters offering possibilities of codification. Also, within the framework of the activities of the United Nations itself, the Division will analyze and record legal principles practised by the principal organs of the United Nations in applying the provisions of the Charter.

(b) No doubt the above-mentioned Division has done useful preliminary work in the field. It is questionable, however, whether the Secretariat itself should be primarily charged with such a comprehensive, continuous and highly specialized responsibility: its dimensions and importance would suggest that it be regarded as something other than a routine function for the Legal Department of the Secretariat. At the other extreme, the project might be undertaken by an international organization established as a specialized agency of the United Nations; however, not only would this be unduly cumbersome, but such an organization would not be identified sufficiently closely with the General Assembly, the body primarily charged. A via media would seem to be indicated.

(c) The most effective and appropriate way of discharging this long-term obligation would appear to be through the establishment, by resolution of the General Assembly, of a subsidiary organ to be known as "The International Law Commission". The Commission might be composed of one representative, fully qualified in the field of international law, from each of fifteen states to be elected by the General Assembly. Following the analogy of the International Court, the states first elected by the Assembly might appoint representatives as follows: five states for three years; five states for six years; five states for nine years. After the first election, the respective terms could be determined by lot drawn by the Secretary-General. Subsequent elections, as they fell due, would be for nine-year terms. Such a body would not be too unwieldy for effective work, yet it would be representative of the principal systems of law currently in operation. Close liaison would, of course, have to be maintained with the Legal Department of the Secretariat, from which presumably some personnel would be drawn by the Secretary-General in providing suitable administrative staff for the Commission.

4. (a) One function of the International Law Commission would be to investigate and report to the Assembly on the existing agencies concerned with the codification of international law, with a view to making recommendations for the correlation of the work of such agencies with the work of the Commission. It is understood that some preliminary investigations in this field have already been undertaken by the Legal Department.

(b) A prime function of the Commission would, of course, be the development of a long-term plan for the codification of international law. The codification, it is thought, might properly take the form of a Restatement, corresponding to that undertaken by the American Law Institute in respect of United States law, which would proceed progressively and according to the aforementioned plan. As particular Sections of the Restatement were completed, they would be submitted by the Commission to the General Assembly of the United Nations for adoption, by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly, as declaratory of contemporary international law.

(c) This, of course, would not be tantamount to legislation. At the same time, there would seem to be no doubt that such a Restatement would have great weight as a declaration of the recognized principles of international law, that it would receive a large measure of acceptance as an authoritative code and that it would go far toward strengthening the importance of international law, both in the conduct of international affairs and in the settlement of international disputes. Law, of course, depends ultimately on its acceptance by those to whom it is addressed, and there have been instances in the past where international agreements have been recognized as authoritative codes of international law, even by states not party thereto.

(d) The Restatement proposal would have certain obvious advantages over the traditional method of codifying international law by the negotiation of multilateral conventions—It would not purport to affect only the participating states. It would not be affected by failures or delays in the depositing of ratifications, approvals or acceptances. Not only, however, would procedure by Restatement be more expeditious but, as a quasi-legislative device, it might point the way to further advances in the direction of international legislation.

(e) The Canadian Bar Association's Committee on Legal Problems of International Organization for the Maintenance of Peace, Toronto, August, 1944, recommended that "there should be undertaken a codification of the general rules of international law by such body as may be agreed upon".

This recommendation did not specify the means by which codification would be effected; however, the present proposal would conform therewith.

(f) It would appear, indeed, that, under the Charter, this is as far as the General Assembly could go in the direction of quasi-legislation. It might be desirable, in the long run, by an appropriate amendment to the Charter, to invest the General Assembly with power by a two-thirds vote, and with the concurrence of the Security Council, to exercise legislative power to codify and even to modify the general rules of international law and to enact new rules of international law. This course was strongly recommended by an unofficial meeting of North American jurists held in April, 1944. (A copy of Proposal 7 is attached hereto)†. However, judging from the experience at Dumbarton Oaks and San Francisco, which resulted in the formulation of the Charter in its present limited terms, it is doubted whether any useful purpose would be served by recommending a specific amendment of such a nature at the forthcoming Second Session. The ultimate attainment of legislative power by the General Assembly in the field of international law is no doubt an ultimate goal which should be borne constantly in mind. Nevertheless, it would seem more sensible for the Canadian delegation to content itself, at the present stage, with sponsoring the proposals outlined above as constituting a practical step in the right direction.

5. A further function of the Commission, to be undertaken pari passu with the Restatement, would be the initiation and examination of proposals for the progressive development or improvement of international law with a view to preparing, in the form of draft conventions or otherwise, specific proposals for the consideration of the General Assembly. The observations contained in the immediately preceding paragraph respecting codification are, of course, entirely applicable here. However, proposals for the development of international law differ in kind from proposals for the codification of international law. Presumably, in the field of international law reform, unless the terms of the Charter are broadened, the Commission would, in practice, be limited to the preparation of draft conventions (corresponding in form to the draft Convention on Immunities and Privileges for the United Nations) which would be submitted to the General Assembly for approval and presented to individual states for approval, acceptance or ratification in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures.

6. The Commission might, in addition, be empowered to examine and report upon any question of a legal nature submitted to it by the General Assembly or the Legal Committee of the General Assembly. Routine legal advice to the Organization and its components would, of course, remain the primary responsibility of the Legal Department of the Secretariat.

7. The Canadian Delegation should not proceed to the Second Session committed irrevocably to the foregoing specific proposals. The principal end should be to ensure that this basic problem is dealt with at the Session in a practical constructive manner; detailed problems affecting the mechanics of implementation could be dealt with in Committee as they arise. It is, however, felt that there would be more likelihood of effective attention being paid to the problem, if definitive proposals were put before the Assembly.

446.

DEA/5475-AX-40

Le conseiller, l'ambassade aux États-Unis, au sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures

Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Washington, September 5, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

In accordance with the instructions contained in your letter of August 21, 1946†, Mr. Rogers<sup>1</sup> of the Embassy staff had an interview with Miss A. M. McDiarmid of the Division of International Organization Affairs in the State Department, concerning the proposal of the United States to include on the agenda for the forthcoming Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations the problem of the implementation of the Charter obligation to encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification.

Miss McDiarmid stated that the United States government was hoping to have the Assembly discuss carrying out its obligations under the Charter in this regard. They hoped that the Assembly might appoint a Committee to examine the alternative methods of implementation, but evidently did not expect that it would go so far as to appoint a body to begin actual work on codification or revision during the coming session.

The unofficial Canadian suggestion as set forth in the Departmental draft<sup>2</sup> attached to your letter was explained to Miss McDiarmid, who expressed satisfaction that Canada appeared to be willing to go as far as the United States or even farther. A copy of the draft was left with Miss McDiarmid for study on the understanding that the draft was so far unofficial and had not received Cabinet approval.

It was agreed that Miss McDiarmid should retain the draft for about a week, and then return it together with a memorandum setting forth the views of the State Department with respect to its contents. I shall communicate with you again as soon as further word is received.

Yours sincerely,

C. P. HÉBERT

<sup>1</sup> R. L. Rogers, troisième secrétaire, l'ambassade aux États-Unis.

<sup>2</sup> Voir le document précédent.

<sup>1</sup> R. L. Rogers, Third Secretary, Embassy in United States.

<sup>2</sup> See preceding document.

447.

DEA/5475-AX-40

*Le conseiller, l'ambassade aux États-Unis, au sous-secrétaire d'État associé
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Associate Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Washington, September 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

On the 5th of this month, Mr. Stone wrote to you concerning the reception by the State Department of the unofficial Canadian proposals for the codification and progressive development of International Law.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. John Maktos of the Division of International Organization Affairs telephoned to explain that the principal concern of the U.S. Government was that the Assembly of the U.N. should explore the matter in detail in a most informal manner, preferably through a small Sub-Committee of the Assembly's Legal Committee. In this manner it would be possible to call experts and to take advice from Universities and other private bodies that it might wish to consult or that might wish to be heard.

It was pointed out to Mr. Maktos that the object of having an outline proposal such as that sketched in our draft, was to present the committee or sub-committee with a concrete proposal in order to assist it in coming to a more rapid decision. Each time this was done Mr. Maktos returned to the subject of very informal exploratory conversations by a sub-committee, which might continue to sit between sessions.

It became evident that Mr. Maktos, and Miss McDiarmid, who telephoned later, were interested primarily in having the question of how to codify international law canvassed at some length, and were not interested in starting the actual work during the present year. They did not appear to favour the introduction of the Canadian plan during the coming session of the Assembly, though of course it would be appropriate to bring it before the body appointed by the Assembly to explore the subject.

Yours sincerely,

C. P. HÉBERT

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document précédent. Il n'y a aucune indication sur ce document que M. Stone en était l'auteur.

<sup>1</sup> See preceding document. There is no indication on that document that Mr. Stone was the author.

448.

DEA/5475-AX-40

Mémorandum du chef, la direction juridique, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures et au chef, la deuxième direction politique

Memorandum from Head, Legal Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and to Head, Second Political Division

[Ottawa,] September 20, 1946

1. I see considerable sense in the United States suggestion. While it would be desirable to get on with the job of codification, it would be wise before so doing to have the matter explored thoroughly in an informal manner, probably through a small sub-committee of the Legal Committee. On the other hand, it should be made sure, I think, that any such exploratory work is concluded within a measurable period of time so that a decision may be reached by the Assembly as soon as possible. My original note was prepared against the possibility that the United States might be putting up concrete proposals for immediate action at the next meeting of the Assembly. It is accordingly most helpful to have an informal expression of their views at this time.

2. If you agree, I could:

(a) re-write the note on codification leaving the door open to the unofficial United States proposals and merely outlining the re-statement suggestion as one possible solution that might be put forward for consideration at a suitable time and place;<sup>1</sup>

(b) advise Mr. E. K. Williams<sup>2</sup> of the new turn of events and invite the informal comments of his Committee on the revised note on codification.<sup>1</sup>

3. Do you think that it would be advantageous to have any further conversations with the interested officials of the State Department in this matter?<sup>3</sup>

E. R. HOPKINS

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>2</sup> Le président de l'Association du Barreau canadien. Président du Comité spécial sur les problèmes légaux de l'organisation internationale pour le maintien de la paix de l'Association du Barreau canadien.

<sup>3</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

Apart from some comments I made at Pierce's party.

I think a consultative committee membership of which c[oul]d be combined with other academic and official employment w[oul]d bring better men than a full time long term job.

<sup>1</sup> Marginal note:

Yes

<sup>2</sup> President of the Canadian Bar Association. Chairman of the Special Committee on Legal Problems of the International Organization for Maintenance of Peace of the Canadian Bar Association.

<sup>3</sup> The following note was written on the memorandum:

R[OBERTSON]

449.

DEA/5475-AX-40

Le chef, la direction juridique, au président, le Comité spécial sur les problèmes légaux de l'organisation internationale pour le maintien de la paix de l'Association du Barreau canadien

Head, Legal Division, to Chairman, Special Committee on Legal Problems of the International Organization for the Maintenance of Peace of the Canadian Bar Association

Ottawa, September 25, 1946

Dear Mr. Williams,

I wish to thank you for your recent letter† concerning the codification and development of international law, and to endeavour to reply to your questions.

We now have information from Washington concerning what will probably happen in New York at the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly. It is envisaged by the United States officials who were consulted that the problem will be discussed most informally at New York, probably through a small sub-committee of the Assembly's Legal Committee, which would sit between sessions, call experts and take advice from Universities and other private bodies (including, presumably, Bar Associations) that it might wish to consult or that might wish to be heard.

The original Department Memorandum<sup>1</sup> (which I left with you in Winnipeg) was prepared against the possibility that concrete proposals would be put before the Assembly at the forthcoming meeting. On the other hand, it would seem desirable that the question of implementing Article 13 of the Charter be thoroughly canvassed before the Canadian Government or the Assembly finally approves any specific proposals. The Departmental Memorandum has accordingly been re-written so as to preserve our freedom of action, the Restatement proposal being outlined as one possible solution that might be put forward at a suitable time and place.<sup>2</sup>

In any event, the views of your Committee would be most welcome as to any of the points raised by the latest Memorandum. Moreover, it seems to me that you would be free to use the material contained in the Memorandum in whatever discussions you may have with the corresponding Committee of the American Bar. On the other hand, since the Memorandum itself is still without Ministerial approval, it would seem unwise to refer to it in any way as an official document, or to have it published or referred to in Resolutions, etc. I am sending, under separate cover, twenty copies of the most recent Memorandum.

I will gladly keep you informed of new developments in this field as they arise and would be grateful for whatever information you feel that you can let me have relating to the activities of your Committee. It seems to me that it would be most helpful if we could keep our lines from crossing.

<sup>1</sup> Document 445.

<sup>2</sup> Le mémorandum révisé ne peut pas être trouvé.

<sup>2</sup> The revised memorandum cannot be found.

Yours sincerely,

E. R. HOPKINS

SOUS-SECTION iii/SUB-SECTION iii
DÉSARMEMENT/DISARMAMENT

450.

DEA/211-F

*Le haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

1074/70

Ottawa, October 26, 1946

SECRET

Dear Mr. Pearson,

As you will be aware, the Soviet Government have placed on the Agenda for the General Assembly an item concerning the presence of Allied troops abroad.

The United Kingdom authorities do not feel able to accept the proposal in the Soviet Government motion,<sup>1</sup> and I enclose for your secret information the text of a telegram which has been sent by Mr. Bevin to the United Kingdom Ambassador at Washington.

The United Kingdom Government hope that the Canadian authorities may see their way to instruct the Canadian Delegation at New York to keep in touch with the United Kingdom Delegation there and to act with them when the matter comes before the General Assembly.

Yours sincerely,

J. J. S. GARNER

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères de Grande-Bretagne à l'ambassadeur de Grande-Bretagne aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain to Ambassador of Great Britain in United States

TELEGRAM

London, October [n.d], 1946

SECRET. I have been considering the line to be taken in the General Assembly in answering the Soviet item on Allied troops abroad. To my mind the overriding consideration is that in no circumstances can we admit the obligation to disclose all our troops strengths and dispositions abroad. It would be disastrous to reveal at the present time the exact strength and composition of our forces abroad for the reasons I explained to Mr. Byrnes in Paris. Furthermore, to agree under any circumstances that the General Assembly has a right to this information would establish a precedent whose consequences require to be carefully thought out. Once the figures of service strengths overseas are given to the United Nations there is nothing to stop a recurring request by the General Assembly or Security Council for the figures to be brought up to date. In other words, every replacement or re-equipment of land and air units in the Middle East (or Philippines) and every movement of naval units outside home waters might have to be notified. Powers with a high proportion of air and naval forces and scattered bases would have far more to lose by publicity of this sort than a land power depending mainly on an army inside its own frontiers, a fact which has evidently not escaped the Soviet Government.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, annexe 8a, p. 333.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 8a, p. 333.

2. Similar objections apply to Mr. Byrnes's original proposal to which he has now reverted, to extend the proposal to cover ex-enemy territories. It is quite possible that M. Molotov would jump at this offer and provide figures whose accuracy, although it might well be highly dubious, we should have no means of checking. In exchange the whole world would know the precise strength of British and United States forces in Germany and Austria as well as elsewhere, which it is certainly not in our common interest to divulge at the present time.

3. For these reasons I cannot take any line in the Assembly which, even if the Russians turned the item down when extended to cover ex-enemy territories, would admit the obligation to disclose our troop dispositions abroad. Even the Military Staff Committee if it were a united and effective body would still not be entitled to have this information beyond what is required for Article 43, and it seems to me out of the question to concede the point at the present time.

4. I quite agree that the difference in procedure between the Security Council and the General Assembly makes it impossible to keep the Soviet item off the Assembly agenda, as was done in the Security Council. Apart from this, however, I would propose to take much the same line as was taken then, namely, that this is a Soviet propaganda move, that British troops abroad are not a menace to peace and security and that nobody seriously believes they are. I am of course assuming, as I think is bound to be the case, that the Soviet spokesman in the Assembly will take essentially the same line as M. Gromyko took in the Security Council. I understand that Article 11 will be invoked in the Assembly and this Article, though more widely drawn, seems to give as much scope for such a Soviet line as Article 34 did in the Security Council. I should then meet Mr. Byrnes's point by observing that the Soviet item specifically excludes those countries who cannot speak for themselves, and yet have to bear the burden of a quite excessive number of Soviet troops. I should also point out that if any Governments feel aggrieved it is up to them to raise the question for themselves. The Soviet motion is either an insult to the Governments concerned or an interference in their internal affairs.

5. I cannot be certain that a motion exonerating British and United States troops would get a clear two-thirds majority as there might be a number of abstentions. On the other hand, it is most unlikely that a Soviet motion on the lines of their Security Council argument would get a two-thirds majority. Our tactics should therefore be to get them to propose a motion which, provided the United States and United Kingdom delegates take similar line, we should have no difficulty in defeating.

6. Please convey a message from me to Mr. Byrnes in the sense of the foregoing, explaining the grave risks I foresee for both our countries if we give way to the Russians in this matter which I regard as a vital point of principle. You should emphasize that the Russians are attacking us both equally in this matter and that we must co-ordinate the defence of our common interests. I very much hope that Mr. Byrnes will agree to the considerations I have put forward. If not, please urge him to make no move until I have had an opportunity of discussing it with him further on my arrival in New York.

451.

DEA/211-F

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain

SECRET

Ottawa, October 28, 1946

Dear Mr. Garner,

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 26th with a text of instructions from the Foreign Secretary to the United Kingdom Ambassador at Washington, on the policy to be adopted by the United Kingdom Delegation to the Assembly on the item on the Agenda concerning the presence of Allied troops abroad. This has been brought to the attention of the Canadian Delegation in New York, together with the hope of the United Kingdom Government that our Delegation may see their way to keep in touch with the United Kingdom Delegation on this matter, and to act with them when it comes before the General Assembly.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

452.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 108

New York, November 5, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 73. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Mr. St. Laurent has approved of my showing to the United States and United Kingdom delegations the following possible amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament. We do not contemplate introducing such an amendment ourselves but we assume that the United States does intend to bring in a substitute resolution and they might find our draft useful, Begins:

1. In the interests of consolidating international peace and security and in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly considers a general regulation and reduction of armaments necessary.

2. As an essential step towards a general regulation and reduction of armaments, the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that the Security Council, without further delay, negotiate with members of the United Nations under Article 43 of the Charter the special agreements making available to the Security Council on its call the armed forces, assistance and facilities necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

3. As an essential step towards the urgent objective of eliminating from national armaments atomic weapons and all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, the General Assembly urges the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference as set forth in Section 5 of the General Assembly Resolution of January 17th, 1946.

4. A system for the general regulation and reduction of armaments must be based on an international Treaty or Convention on the limitation of armaments. This Treaty or Convention should provide two safeguards for complying States against the hazards of violation and evasion:

(1) International responsibility with effective guarantees for the loyal execution of the Treaty or Convention; and

(2) Sanctions against States violating essential provisions of the Treaty or Convention.

5. In order to provide complying States with effective guarantees for the loyal execution of the Treaty or Convention, it should provide for the establishment of a Permanent International Commission of Control with the power to carry out investigations on the spot in the event of reasonable suspicion of a breach of the Treaty or Convention and of subsequent supplementary agreements on the reduction and limitation of armaments, and to appoint for this purpose special Commissions of Enquiry.

6. The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that the Security Council formulate, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, plans to be submitted to the members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments as is provided for in Article 26 of the Charter so that an international Treaty or Convention on disarmament may be concluded as soon as possible.

7. The General Assembly calls upon the Governments of all States to render every possible assistance to the Security Council, the Military Staff Committee and the Atomic Energy Commission in their pursuit of the objectives set forth in this resolution, confident that the attainment of these objectives would contribute greatly to the establishment of stable international peace and security and further serve the interests of all the peoples of the United Nations by lightening the heavy economic burden imposed on them by excessive expenditures for armaments which are not compatible with peaceful post-war conditions. Ends. Message ends.

453.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 134

New York, November 7, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 90. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: My ASDEL No. 73 of November 5th, concerning possible amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament.

1. I had a long talk last night with Joe Johnson of the State Department who gave me his views on the draft Resolution, emphasizing that he was speaking only for himself.

2. He was in virtually complete agreement with the draft and had only the following minor suggestions to make for its revision:

(1) The second sentence of paragraph 4 should read as follows:

"This Treaty or Convention should provide effective international safeguards by way of inspection and other means for complying States against the hazards of violation and evasion."

(2) Paragraph 5, after the words "Permanent International Commission of Control", should read "with the power to make such investigations as it may deem necessary to satisfy itself that no breach, etc., is taking place, and to appoint for this purpose special Commissions of Enquiry."

(3) Paragraph 6. There might be added after the word "formulate" the words "at the earliest practicable date".

3. Johnson confirmed our understanding that the United States does intend to bring in a substitute Resolution. The United States has not decided on the date on which they will bring in the Resolution, but Johnson himself hopes that it will be early next week, though the First Committee of the Assembly will probably not be reaching the item of disarmament for two or three or more weeks. Ends.

454.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 165

New York, November 12, 1946

ASDEL No. 111. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Limitation of Armaments.

The Soviet delegation has formally presented the Resolution on Reduction of Armaments of which notice was given in Mr. Molotov's speech to the Assembly on October 29th. The Resolution reads as follows:

1. With a view to strengthening peace and international security in conformity with the aims and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of a general reduction of armaments.

2. The implementing of the decision concerning the reduction of armaments should include as primary object the prohibition to produce and use atomic energy for military purposes.

3. The General Assembly recommends that the Security Council should ensure the effective implementing of the principles laid down in paragraphs 1 and 2 above.

4. The General Assembly appeals to the Governments of all the States to give to the Security Council all the assistance necessary to enable it to discharge its responsibilities arising out of this task, the achievement of which lies within the scope of its mission to establish an enduring peace and maintain international security. This task is also in the interest of the peoples who would be released from the heavy economic burden caused by the excessive expenditure on armaments which do not correspond to peaceful post-war conditions. Ends.

455.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 219

New York, November 20, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. ASDEL No. 143. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Armed forces of the United Nations in foreign territories.

At meeting of First Committee this morning, Molotov accepted the proposal made by Senator Austin in his speech in plenary session that the original Soviet proposal should be extended to ex-enemy countries. He substituted for the original Soviet proposal, a new draft resolution, the text of which is given in my immediately following teletype.

2. The United States and United Kingdom delegations were taken by surprise. Instead of revising his prepared speech in the light of the speech by Molotov, Senator Connally gave the speech which already had been prepared for him, which was in large part a criticism of the Soviet Union for not being willing to report on the number of its troops in ex-enemy countries as well as the number of troops at home.

3. Mr. Cadogan, who had hoped to receive instructions from London before he had to speak, had clearly not received instructions when his time came to speak and had to content himself with saying that the United Kingdom delegation was unable to comment immediately on the new Soviet proposal since they had not received any notice of it.

4. The discussion will be continued tomorrow morning in the First Committee. The result of this morning's speeches was a clear victory for the Soviet Union. Ends.

456.

DEA/211-F

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 220

New York, November 20, 1946

ASDEL No. 144. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Reference my immediately preceding teletype. The revised proposal of the Soviet delegation on armed forces of the United Nations in foreign territories reads as follows:

The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council to take a decision to the effect that States-members of the United Nations Organization should submit the following information to the Secretary-General and the Security Council within a month:

1. At what points in the territory of members of the United Nations or other States with the exception of former enemy territories and in what number are armed forces of other members of the United Nations.

2. At what points in the former enemy States and in what number are armed forces of the Allied powers and other members of the United Nations.

3. At what points in the above mentioned territories are air and naval bases and what is the size of their garrisons belonging to the armed forces of other States-members of the United Nations.

4. The information to be provided under paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 should refer to the situation as it existed on November 1st, 1946. Ends.

457.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 222

New York, November 21, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 146. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Reference our telephone conversation of yesterday. Mr. St. Laurent has approved of the following text of a Canadian amendment to the Soviet proposal on disarmament. We would like authority to introduce this Resolution if developments in Committee seem to us to make this desirable. The time may arise this morning.

Amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament.

1. With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of a general regulation and reduction of armaments. (First paragraph of Soviet proposal, substituting "purposes and principles" for "aim and principles" and adding "regulation and" before "reduction").

2. The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that, as the first step towards a general regulation and reduction of armaments, the Security Council should, without further delay, negotiate with members of the United Nations under Article 43 of the Charter the special agreements making available to the Security Council on its call the armed forces, assistance and facilities necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security. (New).

3. In order that atomic weapons and all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction be eliminated from national armaments at the earliest possible date, the General Assembly urges the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference as set forth in Section 5 of the General Assembly Resolution of January 24th, 1946, by which the Commission is required to proceed with the utmost despatch and to make specific proposals:

"(a) For extending between all nations the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends;

(b) For control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes;

(c) For the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction;

(d) For effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions". (Substitute for paragraph 2 of Soviet proposal).

4. A system for the general regulation and reduction of armaments should be based on a Treaty or Convention which would be accepted by virtually all States and which would provide for effective international safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions. There should be set up, under the Treaty or Convention, a Permanent International Commission of Control with power to make such investigations, including the appointment of permanent Inspectors and special Commissions of Enquiry, as it may deem necessary to satisfy itself that no breach of the Treaty or Convention and of subsequent supplementary agreements on the reduction and limitation of armaments is taking place. (New).

5. To the end that an International Treaty or Convention on disarmament may be concluded as soon as possible, the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, it submit plans at the earliest practicable date, to the members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments as is provided for in Article 26 of the Charter. (Substitute for paragraph 3 of Soviet proposal).

6. The General Assembly calls upon the Governments of all States to render every possible assistance to the Security Council, the Military Staff Committee and the Atomic Energy Commission to enable them to attain speedily the objectives set forth in this Resolution. The General Assembly is confident that the attainment of these objectives would contribute greatly to the establishment of enduring peace and the maintenance of international security. Moreover, it would make possible a rise in the standards of living of all the peoples of the United Nations by lightening the heavy economic burden imposed on them by excessive expenditures for national armaments which do not correspond to peaceful post-war conditions. (Substitute for paragraph 4 of Soviet proposal). Ends.

458.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 224

New York, November 21, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. ASDEL No. 148. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: The following is the text of the statement on disarmament which will be given by Mr. St. Laurent in Committee I either this morning or tomorrow, depending on the progress of the Committee.<sup>1</sup> You will see that it is pretty much a paraphrase of the Resolution which we have prepared. If Mr. St.

<sup>1</sup>Ce discours ne fut pas prononcé. Le texte est reproduit ici car il présente la position canadienne.

<sup>1</sup>This speech was not delivered. The text is printed here because it states the Canadian position.

Laurent does not have to give the speech this morning, it will be possible for him to make amendments in it. In that event, I would greatly appreciate your suggestions for revision.

Text Begins:

* * *

1. The concern of the Government and people of Canada that the question of disarmament be discussed at this Assembly was expressed in the speech which I gave in the opening debate before the Soviet proposal on disarmament was put forward. I then said that, in view of the Canadian delegation, "it would be in the interest of all members of the United Nations to see the Security Council equipped and ready, in fact, to enforce proper decisions for the maintenance of world peace and also to see serious consideration given to the reduction of national armaments so that the productive capacity of the world thus conserved may be used for improving the living conditions of all peoples".

2. In our view the Resolution proposed by the Soviet delegation does not go far enough. It states the objectives in general terms but it does not sufficiently point the way to the speedy attainment of these objectives. We believe that the United Nations will make progress in disarmament only if all the members of the United Nations agree to practical measures designed to convince their peoples that their nation may be secure through reliance upon means other than large national armaments.

3. How can this be done? First, I submit, by working towards a system of world security which would offer protection at least as effective to the members of the United Nations as their own national forces. Secondly, by developing such international safeguards as would give assurance to any nation that does disarm that it will not be suddenly attacked and struck down by another nation that may have evaded or violated its promises to disarm.

4. The Soviet Resolution proposes that the General Assembly recognize the necessity of a general reduction of armaments. We assume that the Soviet proposal includes the regulation as well as the reduction of armaments in accordance with Articles 26 and 47 of the Charter. With this proposition put forward in the first paragraph of the Soviet Resolution, the Canadian delegation is in cordial agreement, but we ask how it is to be implemented. The answer in the Soviet proposal is left vague. All that paragraph 3 says is that "the Security Council should ensure the effective implementing of the principles laid down in paragraphs 1 and 2".

5. I would recall to the Committee the suggestion contained in my remarks in the opening plenary debate "that the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee should go ahead with all possible speed in the constructive work of negotiating special agreements and of organizing the military and economic measures of enforcement".

6. For it is essential, I submit, that before nations deprive themselves voluntarily of the protection derived through reliance on their own national armaments they should be afforded at least a substantial measure of protection through an organized collective force at the disposal of the United Nations. Moreover, how can nations decide how far they ought to reduce their armaments if they do not know what armed forces they should maintain as their share of putting world force behind world law?

7. The second paragraph of the Soviet proposal states "that reduction of armaments should include as a primary object the prohibition to produce and use atomic energy for military purposes".

8. Here again, I submit, the means of implementation are left unnecessarily vague. All that paragraph 3 of the Soviet proposal says is that the General Assembly should recommend that the Security Council should ensure the effective implementation of this principle.

9. I need hardly remind this Committee that the General Assembly at its 17th plenary meeting last January set up the Atomic Energy Commission for the express purpose of recommending the means to implement this very objective.

10. We are all well aware that over the peoples of the world hangs the menace of an armament race in atomic and other weapons adaptable to mass destruction unless the means are found for the swift implementation of the terms of reference of the Resolution adopted unanimously by the General Assembly on January 24th of this year.

11. It is not enough, as the Soviet proposal suggests, to prohibit the production and use of atomic energy for military purposes. As my Prime Minister stated in the House of Commons in a speech on December 17th, 1945, in explaining the Washington Declaration on atomic energy of which he was a signatory: "Up to a certain point the processes for releasing atomic energy are the same whether the purpose is an industrial, commercial, or humanitarian use, or whether it is that of mass destruction". This statement was confirmed by an international group of scientific and technical experts on the Atomic Energy Commission in their first report on "The Scientific and Technical Aspects of the Control of Atomic Energy". In the conclusions of this report it is stated "there is an intimate relation between the activities required for peaceful purposes and those leading to the production of atomic weapons; most of the stages which are needed for the former are also needed for the latter".

12. This was an essential fact which was fully grasped when in drafting the terms of reference for the Atomic Energy Commission, it was provided that the Commission should make specific proposals, among other things "for the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes". These terms of reference also called upon the Commission to make specific proposals "for effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions".

13. The Atomic Energy Commission, on which Canada, as one of the pioneers in the field of atomic energy is a member, has been devoting some time to discussions which will throw light on some of the practical means which may be applied to prevent atomic energy activities required for peaceful purposes being diverted to the manufacture of atomic weapons.

14. I understand that we may shortly expect a report from the Commission on its work to date. I submit, therefore, that the most practical step for implementing the second paragraph of the Soviet proposal concerning disarmament in relation to atomic weapons is to urge the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference as set forth in the second part of the Resolution adopted last January.

15. Indeed nothing would create more confidence in international security measures than the fulfilment of these terms of reference by the Atomic Energy Commission. The Atomic Energy Commission has been given a job to do. When the Commission has done this job the public will feel that international co-operation is worthwhile.

16. Previous efforts at disarmament, as we know full well, failed when Powers conspired against their success by secret preparations for war. If we are now to take a step forward towards general reduction of armaments, as suggested by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R., we should bear these lessons in mind. Unilateral disarmament does not increase security. Disarmament by a few nations does not increase security. To be successful, a system for the general regulation and reduction of armaments must be based on an international Treaty or Convention on the limitation of armaments accepted and implemented by virtually all nations.

17. We must ensure that all States, which accept such a Treaty or Convention for the regulation and reduction of armaments and comply with its terms, are adequately protected against the hazards of violations and evasions. International responsibility for security without large national armaments requires effective international safeguards. International safeguards cannot be effective without international inspection.

18. I propose that with this end in view the Disarmament Treaty should provide for the setting up of a special International Commission of Control with effective powers of independent inspection and inquiry to see that any programme of disarmament is carried out faithfully by all nations. These powers should include freedom of access to inspect anywhere in any State in order that the Commission may satisfy itself that no breach of the Disarmament Treaty is taking place.

19. As a necessary preliminary to the holding of a Conference to draw up a Treaty on the limitation of armaments, the Security Council, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, must prepare plans. This is required of them under Article 26 of the Charter. May we not invite our Soviet colleagues to join us in being more specific on this point. May we not, for example, include a recommendation to the Security Council that it formulate, at the earliest possible date, plans to be submitted to the members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

20. As regards paragraph 4 of the Soviet proposals, I agree that the General Assembly should appeal to all Governments to give the Security Council all the assistance necessary to enable the Security Council to discharge its responsibilities on disarmament. But, as I have made clear, member Governments also have the right to appeal to the Security Council, as well as to the Military Staff Committee and the Atomic Energy Commission, to fulfil their obligations relating to disarmament.

21. Finally, the Canadian delegation expresses sincere agreement with the sentiment contained in the last sentence of paragraph 4 of the Soviet proposal, that disarmament is "in the interest of the peoples who would be released from the heavy economic burden caused by the excessive expenditure on armaments". The Canadian Government desires most earnestly that the people in all nations be spared the heavy financial burden imposed on them by excessive expenditures for national armaments. We want to see the standards of living of all the peoples of the world raised to the highest possible level. We do not want the productive resources of the world squandered on armaments. It is for this reason that the Canadian delegation has suggested practical ways by which immediate progress could be made towards a general reduction of armaments, believing that the Soviet proposal is deficient in this respect.

22. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to submit an amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament which incorporates the suggestions I have made. Text Ends. Ends.

459.

DEA/211-G

*Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Second Political Division to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa,] November 22, 1946

I spoke to Mr. Reid on the telephone concerning the speech and resolution on disarmament. I told him that you had mentioned these to the Prime Minister who had expressed a favourable opinion, and said that the Delegation should now feel free to go ahead and offer the resolution, if that continued to seem the appropriate action.

Mr. Reid said that the debate on armed forces was continuing and he thought it unlikely that the delegation would have an opportunity to put its motion of disarmament until tomorrow or perhaps Monday. He said that Mr. Bevin was endeavouring to have the two questions combined and had moved a procedural resolution to that end. The Russians, however, would resist this effort and he thought that Mr. Bevin would be voted down.

Mr. Reid said that the delegation would vote, in the first instance, for Mr. Bevin's motion proposing to combine the armed forces and disarmament questions. If this were defeated they would then vote for the Soviet motion on armed forces as amended by the United States. If this in turn were defeated they would then vote for the Soviet motion as originally placed. Mr. St. Laurent had expressed the opinion that the Soviet motion, even in its original form, should be supported, since it would be taken by the public generally to be a step in the direction of disarmament. Mr. Reid said that the United Kingdom delegation seemed to have got itself in the position where it would have to vote against both the United States amendment and the Soviet proposal.

Once the armed forces question was out of the way, the debate would be resumed on disarmament, and there is to be a Commonwealth meeting on the subject tomorrow morning. The Australians, meanwhile, had shown them a draft resolution on disarmament which was essentially a draft prepared by the Canadian delegation on November 4th. The Canadians had not yet put in their new draft nor had the Australians formally placed theirs. It seemed possible that some agreed action might come out of the Commonwealth meeting tomorrow.

R. G. RIDDELL

460.

DEA/211-G

Mémorandum du conseiller,<sup>1</sup> la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Adviser,<sup>1</sup> Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] November 22, 1946

As agreed, I spoke to Escott Reid on the telephone regarding his report that the Australians proposed to move their amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament.

Escott gave me the following information on how matters stood on the disarmament debate:

(1) the United States delegation has succeeded in getting the meeting of Committee I, scheduled for Saturday morning, cancelled in order to try to get agreement between the British and Soviet positions on the Soviet proposal regarding the presence of forces of members of the United Nations on non-enemy territories;

<sup>1</sup>G. Ignatieff. M. Ignatieff était alors à Ottawa.

<sup>1</sup>G. Ignatieff. Mr. Ignatieff was then in Ottawa.

(2) the United States delegation also hope to get the debate on the Soviet resolution concerning the general reduction of armaments postponed in order to get an agreed text of amendment of the Soviet Resolution;

(3) the Australians have indicated that they will not take action regarding their proposed amendment until the Commonwealth meeting tomorrow; and

(4) Escott said that he was sending in a note to Mr. St. Laurent, advising him to urge the Commonwealth meeting that there should be an agreed text, not exclusively on a Commonwealth basis, but one which the United States delegation would also accept and would sponsor. He will suggest that the Australians be persuaded not to take action on their amendment, in order to avoid having four separate resolutions before the Committee, which would necessitate a drafting group, giving the Soviet representatives a further opportunity of argument.

I gave Escott to understand that you would agree with the United States taking initiative on an amendment, but not Australia.

461.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 240

New York, November 23, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 159. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Soviet resolutions on the presence of armed forces abroad<sup>1</sup> and on disarmament.<sup>2</sup>

1. Yesterday morning's discussion in the first committee on the presence of armed forces abroad, indicated that it was possible that, if the Bevin resolution that this question be considered together with disarmament were put to a vote, it might be defeated and that the Molotov resolution on troops, possibly amended to include forces at home, would be carried in spite of United Kingdom opposition.

2. The United States delegation has had this morning's meeting of the first committee postponed until Monday, since they hope over the week-end to work out a resolution on troops which will be satisfactory both to the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. Bevin is not very pleased with this United States move but is, of course, reserving final judgment until he sees the text of the United States compromise.

3. Had the Bevin resolution been put to the vote yesterday, we intended to vote for it. We also intended to vote for the amendment which we understood

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, annexe 8a, p. 333.

<sup>2</sup> Voir le document 454.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 8a, p. 333.

<sup>2</sup> See Document 454.

the United States would introduce to include forces at home. Even if this proposed United States amendment were defeated (which was most unlikely), we intended to vote for the Soviet resolution and so informed the United Kingdom delegation who themselves intend to vote against it. Our feeling is that the Soviet resolution will be considered generally by the public as a step towards disarmament, and that it would therefore be difficult to explain Canadian opposition to it.

4. The British Commonwealth meeting will be held Monday morning, November 25th, to discuss the question of forces abroad and of disarmament. On November 21st we gave the text of our amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament to the United Kingdom and United States. On November 22nd we received from the Australian delegation the text of the amendment which they had intended to propose and which they are holding pending the conclusion of the debate on forces abroad. In view of the proposed Commonwealth meeting (which was originally scheduled for this morning), we gave the text of our amendment yesterday to the other Commonwealth delegations marked "confidential until released".

5. The proposed Australian amendment on disarmament is substantially our original draft of November 4th. It does not, repeat not, embody any of the proposals for amendment made in the Australian draft which the Australians gave us on November 4th.

6. The United States informed us yesterday afternoon that they are working out "pretty concrete and specific proposals on disarmament", the major plank in the proposals being the necessity of effective international inspection. The United States want another week to work their proposals out and intend to ask for a week's postponement of the disarmament discussions.

7. United Kingdom hope to receive tomorrow from the United States, the preliminary draft of the two United States resolutions on troops and on disarmament. The United States delegation is holding a long meeting this morning on the subject. United Kingdom will send us these documents tomorrow along with their own draft resolution on disarmament which they will have revised in the light of the United States resolution. The Commonwealth meeting on Monday will therefore have before it the United States, United Kingdom, Canadian and Australian resolutions.

8. The line which Mr. St. Laurent proposes to take at the Commonwealth meeting is, that the chances of a successful outcome (from the point of view of the western Powers) of the discussions in this Assembly on disarmament, would be materially increased if the United States were to propose a resolution so good that none of us would feel it necessary to move amendment to it. If more than one substitute for the Molotov resolution is introduced, Manuilsky, the Chairman of the Committee, will appoint a Drafting Committee and the appointment of such a Committee would play into the hands of the Soviet Union. Mr. St. Laurent may therefore suggest that the United States, United Kingdom, Canada and Australia may try to reach agreement on the resolution which would be introduced by the United States.

9. We are doing what we can to dissuade the Australians from introducing their resolution on disarmament. We concur entirely in the views which you have expressed and while we are prepared to see the United States take the initiative, we are not, repeat not, prepared to have the initiative taken by Australia. We understand that Dr. Evatt's instructions are that Australia should produce an amendment if the United States does not. If this instruction still stands, the Australian delegation is not bound by Dr. Evatt to produce an amendment since it now seems clear that the United States will produce one. Ends.

462.

DEA/211-G

*Le conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

New York, November 23, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Today Cockram of the Dominions Office asked me if we could attend a Commonwealth meeting Monday morning at 9:00 to discuss the resolution on disarmament moved by the Soviet delegation. The meeting would not be of heads of delegations but of the members of the Commonwealth delegations on the first (political) committee of the Assembly. The chief United Kingdom representatives would be Noel-Baker and Cadogan and the meeting would be held at Essex House, not the Waldorf-Astoria. For reasons explained below it has now been decided that Bevin will preside over the meeting.

I spoke to Mr. St. Laurent who said that he was willing to meet any one at any time if the meeting was likely to serve a useful purpose. However, he doubted whether a meeting would serve a useful purpose if the representatives of one government at it (i.e. the United Kingdom) had so little freedom of action that it would be impossible for them to try to harmonize their views with those of the others at the meeting. The meeting would, in that event, take the form of one side (the U.K.) lecturing the others on why they should support the policies which it had determined upon.

With Mr. St. Laurent's permission, I spoke frankly to Cockram along the lines of Mr. St. Laurent's remarks, leaving out the reference to the lecture.

Cockram replied that, as I knew, they had difficulties in their delegation with the result that it was embarrassing for them to discuss with Commonwealth delegations questions of major policy at a meeting where their whole delegation was present. (What he was referring to was, of course, the open differences of opinion at Commonwealth meetings between Bevin and Noel-Baker.)

I replied that while I realized that, it was also embarrassing for us to attend a meeting with Noel-Baker present and not Bevin and then have our arguments used by [Noel-]Baker to persuade Bevin to change his mind.

As a result of this conversation the United Kingdom delegation decided that the Commonwealth meeting would be attended by Bevin as well as Noel-Baker.

Yours sincerely,

ESCOTT REID

463.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 247

New York, November 26, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 165. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Troops and Disarmament.

The Commonwealth meeting yesterday morning spent most of its time discussing the troops problem. Bevin stated that the United Kingdom delegation had now been authorized by the Cabinet in London to move a Resolution incorporating the Molotov proposal adding troops at home and a procedure for verification of the returns received. Various formulas were suggested by the United Kingdom delegation and Smuts. The formula proposed by Shawcross, United Kingdom Attorney General, contained the phrase that the establishment of satisfactory verification machinery by the Security Council should be a "condition precedent" for sending in the information.

In the course of the discussion, Mr. St. Laurent expressed the hope that the instruction from the Cabinet in London could be carried out without using the words "condition precedent". The Soviet Union was being successful in persuading the public that they were the champions of disarmament. The public could understand that the information received would have to be verified but they might find it difficult to understand that a satisfactory verification procedure should be condition precedent. He added that should the United Kingdom proposal be defeated and the Molotov Resolution be amended to include troops at home, it might be difficult for Canada to oppose the Soviet Resolution as amended.

At yesterday morning's meeting of the Political Committee, Noel-Baker gave a telling speech in favour of the United Kingdom position and circulated a United Kingdom Resolution, the text of which is given in my immediately succeeding teletype.

The United States is reluctant to support the last paragraph of the United Kingdom Resolution.

We, of course, intend to support it and may speak on Tuesday in favour of international responsibility through the verification procedure. Ends.

464.

DEA/211-F

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 248

New York, November 26, 1946

ASDEL No. 166. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: My immediately preceding teletype, troops abroad.

Following is the text of the United Kingdom Resolution submitted by Noel-Baker today, Begins:

"The Committee considers that items 4 and 5 on the agenda are concerned with two aspects of the same question, the reduction and regulation of armaments.

As a first step in a study of this question, and to assist in the implementation of Article 43, the Committee proposes that the Assembly recommend that all members of the United Nations furnish the following information to the Secretary-General for communication to the Security Council and to other members of the United Nations, and for publication.

(1) At what points in the territory of members of the United Nations or other States, with exception of former enemy territories, and in what number, are armed forces of other members of the United Nations, including military type formations.

(2) At what points in the former enemy states, and in what number, are armed forces of the Allied Powers and other members of the United Nations, including military type formations.

(3) At what points in the above-mentioned territories are air and naval bases, and what is the size of their garrisons, belonging to the armed forces of States members of the United Nations.

(4) What is the total number of their uniformed personnel on the active list, wherever stationed, at home as well as abroad including military type formations.

This information, which should be furnished not later than January 1st, 1947, should relate to the situation on that date, and should be immediately subjected to an effective United Nations system of verification on the spot by a Committee to be established by the Security Council before that date."

465.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 249

New York, November 26, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 167. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Disarmament.

My immediately following teletype gives the text of the November 25th version of our amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament.

The Australian delegation informed us yesterday that they were under instructions to present their amendment on the Soviet proposal.<sup>1</sup> We, therefore, got in touch with Noel-Baker of the United Kingdom delegation and with the American delegation to find out whether they would be caused any embarrassment by our submitting our amendment.

Noel-Baker was very much in favour of our doing so but the American delegation informed us that while certain parts of our Resolution were along the lines of theirs, others were not. They stated that they intend to submit a Resolution on disarmament "of great importance". Their Resolution will not be ready until the end of this week, but they intend to consult us then. They expressed the hope that we would put off sending in our Resolution until we had a chance to see theirs. They insisted that this hope was in no sense a request.

In the light of this expression of opinion by the American delegation, we consulted with the Australian delegation and agreed that we would both ask our Governments for permission to withhold our respective amendments until we had had a chance to consult with the United States.

We have also given the United States a copy of our November 25th draft and have expressed the hope that their Resolution will be so good that it will not be necessary for us to move amendments to it. Ends.

466.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 250

New York, November 26, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 168. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Reference my immediately preceding teletype. Following is the November 25th text of our amendment of the Soviet proposal on disarmament, Begins:

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, annexe 9b, pp. 337-38.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 9b, pp. 337-38.

1. With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of an early and general regulation and reduction of armaments. (First paragraph of Soviet proposal, substituting "purposes and principles" for "aims and principles" and "an early and general regulation and reduction" for "a general reduction".)

2. The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that, as the first step towards a general regulation and reduction of armaments, the Security Council, without further delay, proceed to negotiate with members of the United Nations under Article 43 of the Charter the special agreements making available to the Security Council on its call the armed forces and other assistance and facilities necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security. (New)

3. In order that atomic weapons and all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction shall be eliminated from national armaments at the earliest possible date, the General Assembly urges the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its task under the terms of reference set forth in Section 5 of the General Assembly Resolution of January 24th, 1946, by which the Commission is required to proceed with the utmost despatch and to make the following specific proposals:

(a) For extending between all nations the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends;

(b) For control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes;

(c) For the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction;

(d) For effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions. (Substitute for paragraph 2 of Soviet proposal.)

4. The General Assembly recommends a system for the general regulation and reduction of armaments based on a Treaty or Convention accepted by virtually all States and providing for effective international safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions. It further recommends that there be set up, under the Treaty or Convention, a Permanent International Commission of Control with power to make such investigations, including the appointment of permanent Inspectors and special Commissions of Enquiry, as it may deem necessary to satisfy itself that no breach of the Treaty or Convention and of subsequent supplementary agreements on the regulation and reduction of armaments is taking place. (New)

5. To the end that an international Treaty or Convention on disarmament may be concluded as soon as possible, the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, it submit plans at the earliest practicable date to the members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments as is provided for in Article 26 of the Charter. (Substitute for paragraph 3 of Soviet proposal.)

6. The General Assembly, being confident that the attainment of these objectives would contribute greatly to the establishment of enduring peace and the maintenance of international security, and being convinced that it would make possible a rise in the standards of living of all the peoples of the United Nations by lightening the heavy economic burden imposed on them by excessive expenditures for national armaments which do not correspond to peaceful post-war conditions, calls upon the Governments of all States to render every possible assistance to the Security Council, the Military Staff Committee and the Atomic Energy Commission to enable them to attain speedily the objectives set forth in this Resolution. (Substitute for paragraph 4 of the Soviet proposal.). Ends.

467.

DEA/211-F

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 285

New York, November 29, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 194. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Soviet Resolution on Armed Forces Abroad.

1. The discussion in Committee No. 1 opened yesterday with the amendment proposed by the Egyptian delegation to the Soviet Resolution, quoted in paragraph 5 of my message ASDEL No. 186 of November 28th. †

2. Noel-Baker has returned to the United Kingdom, and Shawcross, who has replaced him, argued that the Egyptian proposal was not an amendment, but really a substantive proposal which should be considered on its merits. He suggested that, as a substantive proposal, it should go to the General Committee for allotment to the agenda of the appropriate Committee.

3. Connally asked the Egyptian representative to withdraw his Resolution, and said that, in any case, it would need to be carefully considered as it might, for instance, involve the withdrawal of United States troops in the Panama Canal Zone.

4. The Egyptian representative said that it was the intention of the Egyptian delegation that the proposal be debated fully, and agreed to have the proposal considered as a separate Resolution.

5. The question then arose as to whether it would be considered immediately in Committee No. 1 or would be introduced as a separate Resolution. Shawcross argued that, in its present form, it was an amendment to the Soviet Resolution, and as it had been withdrawn, it was not appropriate to discuss it at the present time. The Egyptian representative agreed to abide by the ruling from the Chair, and Manuilsky ruled that in its present form it had been withdrawn.

6. This unexpectedly expeditious disposal of the Egyptian Resolution in Committee No. 1 left only the final voting on the amended Soviet Resolution on armed forces abroad as a whole.

7. Before the vote, Vyshinsky made a brief statement to the effect that the Soviet delegation would vote against the motion as a whole because, as a result of the amendments which had been adopted the day before yesterday, the Soviet Resolution on the presence of armed forces of members of the United Nations on non-enemy territories had been mixed up with the next item on the agenda, namely, the proposal concerning the general reduction of armaments.

8. The Committee then voted 34 in favour of the Soviet Resolution as amended by the United Kingdom and United States delegations, 7 voted against and there were 4 abstentions. Canada voted for the Resolution.

9. Immediately after the vote, Hasluck proposed that the Committee deal with items 1, 2, and 3 of its agenda, namely, the question of the veto raised in the Australian and the two Cuban proposals. He said that the Australian delegation had some minor changes to suggest in three original Resolutions, and that the whole matter might be dispatched in one or two meetings. Hasluck's proposal was supported by the United States and United Kingdom delegations. Shawcross, in supporting Hasluck, made an unfortunate remark to the effect that there were only five working days left for the Committee and that it was therefore time the veto question was dealt with.

10. However, Vyshinsky intervened to say that, as the Resolution just adopted by the Committee had linked the statement on armed forces with disarmament, it was logical to proceed immediately with the debate on the Soviet proposal under item 5 of the agenda concerning the general reduction of armaments. Not without coincidence, Molotov, accompanied by Gromyko and his staff, entered the Committee room at this moment, and Manuilsky from the Chair proposed that a special day be set aside for a debate on the veto. Hasluck agreed, and the Committee proceeded with item 5 of the agenda, i.e., the discussion on disarmament which is reported in my immediately following telegram. Ends.

468.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 286

New York, November 29, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 195. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Proposal concerning general reduction of armaments.

1. Molotov opened the debate with a statement which contained little that had not been said in his original statement in the opening debate in plenary session.

2. After emphasizing Soviet initiative in introducing the discussion on disarmament in the General Assembly, he said that it was important that an end be put to the present armament race to enable budgets to be cut and to lift consequent financial burdens from all peoples. He emphasized that disarmament must cover not only national armies and navies but also all forms of armament and equipment. The recommendations of the Assembly, he hoped, would initiate a movement towards disarmament.

3. On the subject of atomic energy, on which he placed his main emphasis, he said that disarmament should have as the primary objective the forbidding of the use and manufacture of atomic weapons. He recalled the Soviet proposals put forward in the Atomic Energy Commission by Gromyko which, he said, still represented Soviet policy. He stressed the argument that atomic weapons were not decisive against military forces but were destructive of civil populations. It was for this reason that the Soviet Government proposed that atomic weapons be outlawed entirely and their manufacture prohibited and existing stocks destroyed. He suggested that atomic weapons were analogous to gas and bacteriological methods of warfare which had been similarly banned.

4. He linked disarmament in relation to the control of atomic weapons with other measures of disarmament and said that the details would require working out. He quoted Stalin's statement to the effect that strong international control is needed.

5. He then proposed that the Security Council, as the Organ of the United Nations having primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security, should set up Special Commissions:

- (a) For the control of disarmament generally, and
- (b) For the control of disarmament in relation to atomic weapons.

Both bodies would have powers of inspection and would operate as a result of special agreements with members of the United Nations. Having thus suggested that power and responsibility in relation to disarmament generally, and atomic weapons particularly should be entrusted to the Security Council he said that the Soviet Government for its part would do all possible to facilitate a practical solution.

6. The sudden ending of the debate on the Soviet resolution on armed forces abroad as a result of the withdrawal of the Egyptian resolution left delegations unprepared to enter into the debate on disarmament. In particular, the United States delegation had not come prepared to make a statement today and consequently they volunteered that we should no longer take into account their hope that we withhold our resolution pending their statement.

7. Accordingly, after Parodi made brief remarks of a general character on disarmament, Mr. Wilgress delivered the prepared statement<sup>1</sup> and moved the resolution<sup>2</sup> in the form which has been approved by the Prime Minister and Mr. St. Laurent.

8. Mr. Wilgress' statement was followed by Hasluck who had come unprepared to make a statement but in view of his strict instructions from Evatt to move the Australian amendment he tabled it with a few general observations.

9. The United Kingdom was also unprepared for the debate and Shawcross also confined himself to a few general observations and reserved the United Kingdom position until the United Kingdom delegation had an opportunity to study the Molotov statement and the Canadian and Australian amendments to the Soviet resolution which had not been circulated.

10. Owing to lack of other speakers the debate was adjourned until today.

11. In conversation afterwards, the United States and United Kingdom delegations expressed relief that we had moved our amendment of the Soviet resolution as otherwise there would have to be a request for adjournment of the debate which would obviously have been embarrassing.

12. Text of Soviet amendment to their own resolution is in my immediately following teletype. † Ends.

469.

DEA/211-G

Extrait du Communiqué à la presse PM/175 des Nations Unies

Extract from Press Release PM/175 of the United Nations

November 29, 1946

FIRST COMMITTEE

DELEGATION OF CANADA: AMENDMENT OF THE SOVIET PROPOSAL ON DISARMAMENT (A/BUR/42) 29 NOVEMBER, 1946

The Canadian Delegation accepts the following proposals which are contained in the Australian Delegation's amendment (A/C.1/82) to the Soviet proposal on disarmament:

(1) Add as new paragraph between paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Canadian amendment:

"The General Assembly considers that, since the activities in the domain of atomic energy leading to peaceful and destructive ends are so intimately

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, trentième séance, 28 novembre 1946, pp. 182-84.

<sup>2</sup> Voir le document 466.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Thirtieth Meeting, November 28, 1946, pp. 182-84.

<sup>2</sup> See Document 466.

inter-related as to be almost inseparable, the control of atomic energy to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes, the elimination of atomic weapons from national armaments, and the provision of effective safeguards to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions must be accomplished through a single international instrument or treaty designed to carry out these related purposes concurrently."

(2) Substitute in the second sentence of paragraph 4 of the Canadian amendment for the words "satisfy itself that no breach" the words "detect a breach or threatened breach"; and delete at the end of the sentence the words "is taking place".

(3) Add at end of paragraph 5 of the Canadian amendment the following sentence:

"These plans should be co-ordinated with the recommendations which are made from time to time by the Atomic Energy Commission."

. . .

470.

DEA/211-G

*Discours du représentant suppléant, la délégation
à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

Speech by Alternate Representative, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SPEECH BY MR. L. D. WILGRESS (CANADA) BEFORE COMMITTEE I, 30 NOVEMBER, 1946

The Representative of the Soviet Union, as well as certain other representatives have been good enough to refer to the amendment to the Soviet proposal on disarmament which has been proposed by the Canadian Delegation.

Perhaps a word of clarification at this point might assist the discussion in the committee.

First of all, you will have observed that we have circulated an amended version of our original proposal in an endeavour to carry out the suggestion of several representatives on this Committee that the amendments of the Soviet proposal should be, if possible, brought into conformity with one another.

We have found no difficulty in accepting three points contained in the Australian Delegation's amendment which were not included in our amendment. In other respects the Australian amendment conforms closely to ours, except that it does not include certain points which we think should be covered in an Assembly resolution on disarmament.

The Canadian Delegation expects that other delegations will put forward constructive suggestions. For our part we will welcome the proposal of the Philippines Delegation that this Committee establish a drafting sub-committee to try to bring together an agreed text.

Mr. Vyshinsky has rightly urged that we should not waste our time haggling over forms of words. This was far from the intention of the Canadian Delegation in proposing our amendments to the Soviet proposals. We would gladly yield to the Soviet Delegation the rights of authorship if the matter of difference between us was merely a question of words. However, this is not the case, as I had hoped the statement which I made on Thursday would have made clear.

We share Mr. Vyshinsky's thoughts on empty words and pious resolutions to disarm. We do not wish to see this Assembly adopt a resolution that did not clearly indicate the means of its implementation. Mr. Vyshinsky has said that quote the road to hell is paved with good intentions unquote. Let us also remember that the road to the last war was paved with pious resolutions.

Mr. Vyshinsky invited us to agree to his resolution in principle. With much of what he said in principle our Delegation is happy to agree. Principle and practice, however, are necessarily intertwined.

Mr. Vyshinsky, in his remarks yesterday, I was glade to note, agreed with the principle that disarmament and security must go together. It is exactly for this reason that the Canadian Delegation has submitted a paragraph, which is lacking in the Soviet resolution, calling upon the Security Council to proceed without delay in the conduct of negotiations with Members of the United Nations for the special agreements envisaged in Article 43 of the Charter. It is evident to us that nations will be unwilling to disarm unless and until effective collective measures are established which will assure them of protection against attack. Moreover, how can nations decide how far they ought to reduce their armaments if they do not know what armed forces they should maintain as their share of putting world force behind world law?

Mr. Vyshinsky has also invited us to accept the Soviet proposal as it stands, with the implementation of the decision concerning the reduction of armaments should include as a primary objective quote the prohibition to produce and use atomic energy for military purposes end of quotation. [sic]

I do not think that any useful purpose would be served to embark in this Committee on the reasons, which have been expounded at length in the Atomic Energy Commission and have been referred to briefly already in this Committee, why a mere prohibition to produce and use atomic weapons, by itself, is not enough. Suffice it to repeat that the very processes which are employed for the application of atomic energy to peaceful purposes produce the fissionable product which can be used directly in the manufacture of the atom bomb. This essential fact was given recognition in paragraph 2 of the Australian amendment. In order to give more precision to the reason for our amendment of paragraph 2 of the Soviet resolution, the Canadian Delegation has been glad to change the text of its amendment to include the elaboration contained in the Australian amendment to this effect.

We are faced, therefore, either with the total prohibition of the use of atomic energy or its control for peaceful purposes only. I need hardly remind

Mr. Vyshinsky that paragraph 2 of the Soviet proposal is already covered by paragraph c of Section 5 of the Assembly resolution, where it is stated that the proposals of the Commission should provide, among other things, for the elimination of atomic weapons from national armaments. Like Mr. Vyshinsky, I do not desire to split hairs over words, and I am sure that he will agree that quote elimination from national armaments unquote means both the prohibition of the manufacture and use of atomic weapons. This is to be part of the plan for the control of atomic energy which the Atomic Energy Commission is charged with working out.

If the new discovery of atomic energy is, as the representative of the Soviet Union so aptly says, to be used for the benefit of mankind and not for its destruction, measures of effective control must be devised to provide safeguards for all nations. The prohibition of the production and use of atomic energy for war must not result in its prohibition for peace. At the present time the Atomic Energy Commission is earnestly engaged (as Mr. Parodi has just reminded us) in devising measures of control which would provide effective safeguards. It is for this reason that the Canadian Delegation has proposed that the Assembly should urge quote the expeditious fulfillment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its task unquote—not just part of its task but its whole task—as set forth in Section 5 of the Assembly resolution of January 24, 1946. If my Soviet colleague is willing to re-affirm the stand of his Government as expressed in the vote of the Soviet representative on January 24th last, as I am sure he will, he should have no difficulty, I submit, in accepting the substitution of the third and fourth paragraphs of the revised Canadian amendment to the second paragraph of the Soviet resolution.

As regards paragraph 5 of the revised Canadian amendment, we are glad to find ourselves in agreement with Mr. Vyshinsky that any system for the general regulation and reduction of armaments should be accompanied by provision for inspection. We are now speaking of measures of control relating to weapons other than atomic weapons. Paragraph 5 of the revised Canadian amendment provides for a permanent international commission of control to be set up under the terms of a disarmament treaty, with power to make investigations either through permanent inspectors or by special commissions of enquiry to detect breaches, or threatened breaches, of the disarmament treaty. The supplementary proposals submitted by the Soviet Delegation contained in paper A/C1/83 of November 26th, propose, as one of two special organs of inspection set up under the Security Council, a commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the reduction of armaments. We warmly welcome the fact that the Soviet Union accepts in principle control by inspection of disarmament in matters of troops, weapons, and general war potential. The question, however, has been raised by other representatives as to the effectiveness of this principle if it were applied under the limitation imposed by the rule of unanimity in the Security Council.

What do the words quote within the framework of the Security Council unquote in the Soviet proposal mean? Are we to understand that before an inspection is carried out by such a commission in the territory of any one of the Permanent members, that member would be able to exercise his veto to prevent such inspection? Are we to understand that if such inspections were not prevented by the exercise of the veto, any action resulting from a report by the inspecting commission would be subject to veto action by one of the permanent members?

If that is what quote within the framework of the Security Council unquote means, then, I submit, the powers of the inspection commission proposed in the Soviet resolution will be quite insufficient. The Permanent International Commission of Control established under an international disarmament treaty, envisaged in the revised Canadian amendment would have freedom of access to inspect anywhere in any state, in order to satisfy itself and satisfy the whole world that no breach of the disarmament treaty is taking place.

And now let me say a few words of explanation on the subject of paragraph 6 of the revised Canadian amendment. The discussion of principles such as those which have been so usefully enunciated by the representatives of the United States and Australia are of undoubted value as a starting point towards disarmament. But I submit that, as envisaged in the Charter, it is essential that the members of the United Nations should have some concrete plans preliminary to the calling of a general conference to negotiate an international treaty or convention on disarmament. This is provided for in Article 26 of the Charter and we suggest, here again, that this Assembly could usefully recommend that the Security Council, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, expedite its work. We fully recognize in this connection the importance of atomic weapons and for this reason we have been glad to accept the suggestion contained in the Australian amendment that the plans of the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee should be co-ordinated with the recommendations of the Atomic Energy Commission in this regard.

The Soviet representative has suggested in a further supplementary proposal that the Assembly should declare itself in favour of the proposition that all Members of the United Nations should submit information on armed forces and armaments on their territory for submission to the Security Council when examining proposals regarding the general reduction of armaments. This is a proposition which undoubtedly has its place in the consideration of a disarmament scheme but surely what we need first are not figures but plans, or at least the outline of plans.

First we need a plan for the effective control of atomic energy for if we succeed here we lay the foundations for that international confidence which will make possible further progress in disarmament. That is the core of the disarmament problem. We also need plans from the Security Council and Military Staff Committee for the implementation of Article 43 to protect nations by collective force in place of reliance on national armaments. We also need plans from the Security Council and Military Staff Committee for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments under Article 26.

Until we have plans, what use is there of turning the Security Council or any other agency into a recipient of a vast amount of detailed information.

Let these bodies get on with the work of preparing plans which we need to put disarmament into effect and when these plans are ready and carry the support and confidence of the nations then we may be sure that nations will be ready and willing to give whatever information is necessary to put the agreed plans into effect. For this reason the Canadian resolution in its final paragraph proposes that the Assembly should call upon the governments of all states to render every possible assistance to the Security Council, the Military Staff Committee and the Atomic Energy Commission to enable them to obtain concrete and effective proposals.

471.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 299

New York, November 30, 1946

ASDEL No. 202.

1. Disarmament. At the end of the Committee meeting this morning the United States circulated their resolution on disarmament. In succeeding telegrams we shall report and comment on this morning's meeting of the Political Committee.

2. The text of the United States proposal is as follows, Begins:

1. With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of an early general regulation and reduction of armaments.

2. Accordingly, the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give prompt consideration to working out the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments pursuant to international treaties and agreements and to assure that such regulation and reduction will be generally observed by all participants and not unilaterally by only some of the participants.

3. The General Assembly recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the early establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern technological discoveries to ensure their use only for peaceful purposes. Accordingly, in order to ensure that the general regulation and reduction of armaments are directed towards the major weapons of modern warfare and not merely towards the minor weapons the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give first consideration to the report which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council before December 31, 1946, and facilitate the progress of the work of that Commission.

4. The General Assembly further recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the provision of practical and effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions. Accordingly the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that it give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and other limitation or regulation of armaments.

5. The General Assembly calls upon the Governments of all States to render every possible assistance to the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission in order to promote the establishment of international peace and collective security with the diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources. [sic] Ends.

472.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 300

New York, November 30, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. ATOM No. 184. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins:

1. I have been following with the closest personal attention the discussions in Committee 1 of the Assembly on disarmament. The delegation to the Assembly has, I understand, kept you informed of the developments in Committee 1 and in particular you will have seen the text of the statement which Mr. Wilgress made today in support of the Canadian revised amendment to the Soviet resolution on disarmament.

2. I have, of course, been in close touch with the delegation to the Assembly in relation to disarmament matters and the terms of the Canadian resolution and statements in support carry my full agreement.

3. You will have noted that the Canadian proposal has had the full support of Great Britain among others. Until today, we had hoped that the United States delegation would either have taken an initiative which we could follow or have given their support to our proposal.

4. However, towards the conclusion of today's discussion, a United States proposal was circulated in the Committee, the text of which has been forwarded to you by the delegation to the Assembly.<sup>1</sup>

5. In the second paragraph of this document it is proposed that the General Assembly recommend that "the Security Council give first consideration to the report which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council before December 31st, 1946". As a sequel we may expect that the United States delegation in the Atomic Energy Commission will press for conclusions in the Report to the Security Council that may even go so far as virtual endorsement of the Baruch plan.

6. Such a development in the United States attitude would undoubtedly raise almost immediately difficult problems for the Canadian delegations not only in the Assembly but also in the Atomic Energy Commission. In this connection, Parodi, the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission for the current month, stated in the course of his remarks in Committee 1 today that he intended shortly to call a meeting of the Atomic Commission. He did, however, add that he felt that the debates in the Assembly should not prejudice the work of the Atomic Commission in any way.

8. [sic] You will recall that in the plenary session on November 13th when supporting the proposal of the United States delegation that a report be rendered to the Security Council before the end of the year, I made it clear that I understood that report would be a progress report on the work of the Commission to date (see my message ATOM No. 174 of November 14th, paragraph 7).†

9. This interpretation of the scope of the report to be rendered before 31st December, 1946, was confirmed by the Chairman at the first informal conversation of Committee 2 and is, I think, generally accepted. However, I do not think that interpretation is agreeable to the United States delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

10. I feel that should this matter be raised again I should hold to the interpretation that the Commission's report to the Security Council should be a progress report not merely for consistency but because in my view any attempt to force the Commission to go beyond the matters which have been fully explored will not, repeat not, command majority support.

11. We have so far only discussed the council aspects of control to prevent diversion of materials and clandestine activities. We have not considered, except in terms of general principle in the early stages, the functions and powers of an International Authority to control atomic energy or its relations to the United Nations.

<sup>1</sup>Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, annexe 9h, p. 343.

<sup>1</sup>See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 9h, p. 343.

12. A progress report, therefore, to the Security Council could hardly go beyond a statement of certain of the technical safeguards that might be used. This would not permit important political conclusions to be drawn.

13. I should also like to draw your attention particularly to paragraph 3 of the proposal of the United States delegation "that the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that it give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy". This provision would seem to imply a United States view that the Atomic Energy Commission has failed to produce the results which they felt to be necessary and that accordingly the Security Council should be asked by the Assembly to take over.

14. The rapid developments in the debate on disarmament and its effect on the Atomic Energy Commission obviously require the most careful attention and I will keep you fully informed.

15. In view of the importance of this matter, I would appreciate copy of this message being passed to Prime Minister. Ends. Message ends.

473.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 306

New York, December 2, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. ASDEL No. 208. Following for Pearson from Wilgress and Reid, Begins: Disarmament.

1. Our teletype ASDEL No. 202 of November 30th contained the text of the United States proposal on disarmament submitted to the political Committee on November 30th. ATOM No. 184 of November 30th from General McNaughton sets forth his appreciation of the situation.

2. Before sending off his teletype, General McNaughton was good enough on the evening of November 30th, to go over the text of his teletype with us and we concurred in it.

3. It might be useful if we were to summarize the developments to date on which we have reported in previous teletypes, letters and telephone conversations with you:

(1) On October 29th, in the opening debate in the General Assembly, Mr. St. Laurent said: "Canada urges that the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee go ahead with all possible speed in the constructive work of negotiating the special agreements and of organizing the military and economic measures of enforcement. It appears to us that it would be in the interest of all members of the United Nations to see the Security Council equipped and ready in fact to enforce proper decisions for the maintenance of world peace and also to see serious consideration given to the reduction of national armaments so that the productive capacity of the world thus conserved may be used for improving the living conditions of all peoples."

(2) Later, on October 29th, Molotov presented to the plenary meeting of the Assembly his proposal on disarmament. He accompanied his proposal with a vicious personal attack on Baruch. Looking back, it seems clear that the main purpose of this attack was to drive a wedge between Baruch (and the plan associated with his name) and the "common people" of the western countries, including the United States. As Molotov put it in his speech, "His (Baruch's) sentiments are alien to the people who sweat in daily toil".

(3) On October 30th, General McNaughton and Ignatieff took part in an informal meeting attended by members of the United Kingdom, United States, Australian and Canadian delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission in the offices of the United States delegation to the Atomic Commission, for the purpose of discussing what line might be taken by the United States, United Kingdom, Australia and Canada as a result of the Soviet initiative. Mr. Baruch himself was there for part of the discussion. The Canadian representatives brought to the meeting a hastily-prepared draft of an amendment which might be moved to the Soviet proposals. Our draft was accepted as a basis for discussion. A paragraph included in this draft, urging the early conclusion of the special military Agreements under Article 43, however, was dropped on the insistence of Australia.

(4) The text of the proposed draft amendment resulting from this meeting was sent to you in teletype ATOM No. 167 of October 31st† and it is to be assumed that the other representatives present sent the text to their Governments. We did not feel that this hastily-prepared draft of October 30th was adequate and we immediately began working on an expansion of it, the result of our labours was our Working Paper dated November 4th, the text of which was sent to you by teletype ASDEL No. 73 of November 5th. Mr. St. Laurent authorized Reid to give this draft of November 4th as a Working Paper, which had not been cleared with the Canadian delegation, to the United Kingdom, United States and Australia. Reid did so on the morning of November 5th, giving it to Cadogan, Joe Johnson of the State Department and Hasluck.

(5) That same day Harry of the Australian delegation gave Ignatieff the Australian draft of November 4th, which reads as follows, Begins:

Tentative proposal for amendment to the Soviet Resolution on disarmament and atomic energy (A/BUR/42) along the following lines:

(1) That paragraph 2 be deleted.

(2) That paragraph 3 be re-numbered as paragraph 2, and revised to read as follows:

"The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council to provide for the practical achievements of the objectives set forth in the above mentioned paragraph."

(3) Insert new paragraph 3 as follows:

“The General Assembly expresses agreement in principle with the proposal submitted to the Atomic Energy Commission by the Government of the United States and supported by the Governments of Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, Egypt, France, Netherlands, and United Kingdom.”

(4) After “Security Council” insert “and Atomic Energy Commission.” Ends.

We have since learned that this Australian draft had been cabled from Canberra to the Australian delegation and that it was the personal product of Dr. Evatt.

(6) This draft contained the suggestion that the Assembly should express agreement in principle with the Baruch proposals. The Australian delegations to the Assembly and the Atomic Energy Commission, realizing the impossibility of securing general agreement on the Baruch proposals at this stage, were gravely concerned and we gather that they immediately cabled Canberra our draft of November 4th.

(7) On November 6th Reid had an informal private conversation with Johnson of the State Department, who made certain entirely personal suggestions for improvement of the Canadian draft of November 4th. These suggestions we sent you in teletype ASDEL No. 90 of November 7th.

(8) In our informal conversations from November 4th on with the United Kingdom, United States and Australia, we took the line that it was in the general interest that a substitute Resolution on disarmament be brought before the Assembly by the United States and this for two reasons:

(a) The Molotov attack of October 29th had been directed in the main against the United States;

(b) A Resolution on disarmament in reply to a Soviet Resolution on disarmament would most appropriately come from the State which, with the Soviet Union, was the most heavily-armed State in the world.

Cadogan and Johnson entirely agreed.

(9) Shortly before November 21st, we were informally told by Harry of the Australian delegation that they had received instructions from Canberra to introduce a Resolution on disarmament and that their Resolution would contain material “cribbed” from our draft of November 4th. Reid told Harry that, while we had no “copyright” on the draft of November 4th, we felt very strongly, for the reasons given above in sub-paragraph (8), that the competing Resolution on disarmament should be introduced not by Canada or Australia but by the United States; that we had been given by the United States every reason to believe that they did intend to send in as soon as possible a good substitute Resolution on disarmament; and that, if Canada was prepared to forego the prestige of being the first to offer an amendment of the Soviet Resolution, Australia could surely also, in the general interest, forego that prestige, especially since their Resolution was our Resolution of November 4th with a few minor changes.

(10) We learned from you that you were in full agreement with our draft of November 4th as amended by Johnson's suggestions. We incorporated Johnson's suggestions in our draft, made a number of drafting improvements and prepared a draft of November 21st. This text we gave on November 21st to the United Kingdom and the United States. On November 22nd (as we reported in our ASDEL No. 159 of November 23rd) we received from the Australian delegation the text of the amendment which they intended to propose and which they were holding pending the conclusion of the debate on forces abroad. In view of the fact that the United Kingdom had informed us that they hoped to have a Commonwealth meeting on the morning of November 23rd to discuss the two issues of forces abroad and disarmament, we gave the text of our amendment of November 21st to the other Commonwealth delegations on November 22nd marked "confidential until released".

(11) The proposed Australian amendment which we received on November 22nd from them was substantially our draft of November 4th and fortunately did not, repeat not, embody the proposal for an acceptance in principle of the Baruch proposal which had been contained in the draft which the Australians had given us on November 4th. The text of the proposed Australian amendment which we received on November 22nd was sent to you under cover of my letter of November 22nd.†

(12) On November 22nd, the United States informed us that they were working out "pretty concrete and specific proposals on disarmament", the major plank in the proposals being the necessity of effective international inspection, and that they needed another week to work their proposals out, and intended to ask for a week's postponement of the disarmament discussions, i.e., a postponement until about November 29th.

(13) In view of the possibility that we might have to introduce our Resolution on disarmament, and that in any event it would be necessary for us to speak on the question, we prepared a speech on disarmament and sent you the text of this speech on November 21st, ASDEL No. 148.

(14) It was at this point that we received from you by telephone information that the Prime Minister and yourself approved of our draft Resolution of November 21st and our draft speech of November 21st, that you would like us to submit our Resolution immediately, but that the Prime Minister and yourself would be prepared to have us not submit our Resolution if the United States would take the initiative. The Prime Minister and yourself were not, repeat not, prepared to have the initiative taken by Australia and we were to send in our draft of November 21st if there was danger that otherwise the Australians would steal a march on us. We, therefore, informed the United States and the United Kingdom that our draft of November 21st, which had previously been tentative and provisional, had now been approved by the Canadian Government.

(15) On November 23rd, 24th and 25th, we exerted, through various channels, every effort we could to dissuade the Australians from presenting their Resolution on disarmament. We repeated again the arguments set forth in sub-paragraph (8) above and informed Australia, the United States and the United Kingdom that, in our opinion, the chances of a successful outcome (from the point of view of the Western Powers) of the discussions in this Assembly on disarmament would be materially increased if the United States were to propose a Resolution so good that none of us would feel it necessary to move amendments to it. As a result of these interventions, the Australian delegation sent a cable to Canberra requesting permission to postpone sending in their amendment pending discussions with the United States.

(16) On November 26th, the Australian delegation informed us that they were under instructions from Dr. Evatt to present their amendment of the Soviet proposal. We, therefore, as reported in our ASDEL No. 167 of November 26th, got in touch immediately with Noel-Baker of the United Kingdom delegation and with the United States delegation to find out if they would be caused any embarrassment by our submitting our amendment. Noel-Baker replied almost immediately that he was enthusiastically in favour of our immediately presenting our amendment, but the United States delegation informed us that, while certain parts of our Resolution were along the lines of theirs, others were not. They intended to submit a Resolution on disarmament "of great importance". Their Resolution would not be ready until the end of the week, i.e., about Friday, November 29th, but they did not intend to present it to the Assembly until Monday, December 2nd, and they desired to consult us as soon as their draft was ready. They expressed the hope that we would put off sending in our Resolution until we had a chance to see theirs. They insisted that this expression of hope was not, repeat not, a request. We reported this to the Australian delegation, who said that their hands would be strengthened if they were given the same message by the United States. The United States then gave them that message and we agreed with the Australian delegation that we would both ask our Governments for permission to withhold our respective amendments until we had had a chance to consult with the United States.

(17) By this time, we had made some further drafting improvements in our draft of November 21st and had prepared a new draft dated November 25th.<sup>1</sup> This we gave to the United Kingdom and the United States, expressing the hope to the United States that their Resolution would be so good that it would not be necessary for us to move amendments to it.

(18) Neither we nor the United Kingdom were able to find out anything more from the United States on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 26th and 27th. The situation in the United States delegation was, however, apparent: no one in the United States delegation in New York knew anything about what was taking place other than that a United States Resolution on disarmament was being prepared on a very high level. Our understanding is that this high level consisted of Byrnes, Baruch, the Chiefs of Staff and the President.

---

<sup>1</sup> Document 466.

(19) On Thursday, November 28th, as reported in our ASDEL Nos. 194 and 195 of November 29th, the debate in the Political Committee of the Assembly on armed forces abroad unexpectedly terminated and the Committee decided to go on immediately to item 5 of the agenda, i.e., the discussion of the Soviet proposal on disarmament. The Australians requested that the Committee go on immediately to a resumed discussion of the veto but the Committee decided to put the veto discussions off until December 1st.

(20) The unexpected ending of the debate on armed forces abroad found the United Kingdom and United States delegations unprepared to participate immediately in the debate on disarmament. The United States delegation had still not received instructions from Washington. They, therefore, as soon as Molotov began introducing his Resolution on disarmament, informed us that we could now forget our conversation with them of November 25th. This was the conversation in which they had expressed the hope that we would put off sending in our Resolution until we had had a chance to see theirs.

(21) We, therefore, immediately sent a message to the Chairman of the Committee that we wished to participate in the discussion and we submitted to the Chairman our Resolution of November 25th. Parodi of France had asked the Chairman for the floor just before we had made our request so that we were put as third on the list of speakers immediately following Molotov and Parodi. Wilgress then delivered the speech on disarmament which we had sent you by teletype ASDEL No. 148 of November 21st. The only changes which he made in the speech were those which Mr. St. Laurent had made in it before leaving New York for Quebec City. Other changes were made necessary because the speech was being delivered by Wilgress and not Mr. St. Laurent, e.g., substituting for "as I said in the opening debate of the General Assembly", "as the Chief of the Canadian Delegation said, etc."

(22) After we had informed the Chairman of the Committee that we intended to speak and after we had submitted our Resolution, but just before Wilgress spoke, we informed the Australian delegation of what we had done and at the same moment the United States gave them the same message which they had previously given us that we were no longer to take into account our conversation with them of November 25th.

(23) As soon as Wilgress had given his speech, Hasluck of Australia tabled the Australian amendment with a few general observations. He informed Reid afterwards in the strictest confidence that the opportunity which he had been given to table the Australian amendment had saved him from an extremely embarrassing position since he had just received from Evatt a blistering telegram in which he had been severely reprimanded for not having sent the Australian Resolution in before. (Hasluck is not only very able and responsible but a loyal civil servant. We should be grateful if the information in this sub-paragraph were given the most restricted circulation).

(24) In informal conversations which took place immediately after Thursday morning's meeting of the Political Committee, members of the United States and United Kingdom delegations expressed to us their relief that we had moved our amendment to the Soviet Resolution and had given a carefully prepared speech on it. The United Kingdom said that otherwise they might have had to draft hurriedly at the meeting amendments to the Soviet proposal and submit them immediately.

(25) On Friday, November 29th, we consulted with the United States delegation and were told that they still had not received instructions from Washington and that it looked to them as if the fight in the Political Committee would be between the Soviet proposal and the Canadian amendment. The United Kingdom delegation said that they were asking London to instruct them to support the Canadian amendment. Makin of Australia spoke in the debate on Friday morning and made no reference to the Canadian amendment. Without consulting Australia, we gave the Secretary of the Political Committee, at about noon on November 29th, a formal note, stating that we had accepted three proposals contained in the Australian delegation's amendment, and we made arrangements for the revised version of our Resolution to be issued immediately as a press release by the United Nations press office. The release was issued about 2:00 p.m. on Friday.<sup>1</sup>

(26) Since the United States and the United Kingdom delegations had been given by us our draft of November 4th and it was, therefore, possible for them to deduce for themselves that the so-called Australian amendment was merely our draft of November 4th with three minor elaborations, Reid drew the attention of Shawcross of the United Kingdom delegation and Johnson of the United States delegation to this fact, speaking in the strictest confidence.

(27) In view of the fact that our intervention in the debate on Thursday and our substitute Resolution had been given only three or four lines in the New York Times and New York Herald Tribune for Friday morning, November 29th, Reid invited Hamilton of the New York Times to have lunch with him on Friday. Wilgress and Ignatieff were also present at the lunch. Reid said to Hamilton that it looked as if the fight in the Committee would be between the Canadian and the Soviet proposals; that Hamilton would obviously want to check the authenticity of this analysis with the United States and United Kingdom delegations; but that, if the analysis were correct, the New York Times would no doubt wish to print in full, and preferably in parallel columns, the text of the revised Soviet proposal and the text of the revised Canadian proposal. The New York Times of Saturday, November 30th, printed the complete text of the two proposals.

---

<sup>1</sup> Document 469.

(28) In order to explain the revisions in our proposals and to reply to the Soviet misinterpretations of our proposals in a speech by Vyshinsky on November 29th, we informed the Secretary of the Committee before the conclusion of Friday's session of the Political Committee that we wished to speak as early as possible in the debate when it was resumed on Saturday morning. We were given the second position, immediately following France.

(29) Before we left the hotel for the meeting on Saturday morning, Reid telephoned Johnson of the State Department to ask whether the United States had yet received from Washington the text of an amendment which the United States might introduce. Johnson said that it was very embarrassing for him to discuss the question. He added that the United States was not in a position that morning to indicate support of the Canadian proposal and that there seemed "to be a feeling pretty high up that even the Canadian draft tended to turn attention away too much from the Atomic Energy Commission". We were at a loss to understand this remark since:

(a) Paragraphs 3 and 4 of our revised Resolution were devoted entirely to atomic energy;

(b) Two-fifths of our speech of November 28th was devoted to the control of atomic energy;

(c) The section on atomic energy in our speech of November 28th had ended with the following statement, "indeed nothing would create more confidence in international security measures than the fulfilment of these terms of reference by the Atomic Energy Commission. The Atomic Energy Commission has been given an important job to do. When the Commission has done this job, the public will feel that international cooperation can be effective and is worthwhile".

Over one-fourth of the draft speech for Saturday, November 30th, in which, at the time Reid spoke to Johnson, we were making last-minute revisions, was devoted to atomic energy, and included the following:

"First, we need a plan for the effective control of atomic energy, for if we succeed here we lay the foundations for that international confidence which will make possible further progress in disarmament. That is the core of the disarmament problem".

(30) As soon as we arrived at Lake Success, the United Kingdom delegation informed us with manifest pleasure that they had just received instructions from London to support the revised Canadian Resolution and that Shawcross would make this clear in his speech to the Committee that morning. We informed the United Kingdom that we were going to speak second in the debate. As you will have seen from the text of Shawcross' speech, as reproduced in full in the New York Times for December 1st, Shawcross assumed that the debate in the Committee was between the revised Canadian amendment and the original Soviet proposal, and he compared them paragraph by paragraph.

(31) The Committee opened its meeting about 10:45 a.m. It would seem apparent that at the time of the opening of the debate the United States delegation had still not received instructions from Washington. However, while Wilgress was in the middle of his speech, we were informed by the United States that the United States was going to submit a Resolution on disarmament. This Resolution was circulated to the Committee at the very end of Saturday morning's debate and after speeches had been given by France, Canada, China, Poland and the United Kingdom.

4. We are still not clear about the full implications of the United States delegation's proposal on disarmament. The Political Committee will meet in the morning and afternoon of Monday, December 2nd, to discuss disarmament. Senator Connally will be making a statement and we hope that he will make clear the meaning of the second sentence of the second paragraph of the United States Resolution. We shall also have an opportunity at Lake Success of consulting with someone of the United States delegation with sufficient knowledge of the background of their proposal. Before this disarmament issue broke, we had invited the senior members of the United Kingdom delegation to dine with us on Tuesday, December 3rd. This dinner will give us an opportunity of talking over the whole problem with them.

5. We will send you a teletype on Monday evening, December 2nd. Ends.

474.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 312

New York, December 2, 1946

IMMEDIATE. CONFIDENTIAL. ASDEL No. 213. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Canadian proposal on disarmament.

I have been working with Mr. St. Laurent today on some suggestions we might make in the Drafting Committee, which is to be established tomorrow, for amendments to our Resolution in order to incorporate useful suggestions from other Resolutions and to meet criticisms which have been made of our Resolution. The text of these suggestions follows, Begins:

(1) Delete from the beginning of paragraph 2 the following:

"The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that as the first step towards a general regulation and reduction of armaments, the Security Council, without further delay," and substitute in its place:

"The General Assembly, regarding the problem of security as closely connected with that of disarmament and in order to enable the Security Council 'to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42' of the Charter, recommends that the Security Council, without further delay,";

(2) Insert at the beginning of paragraph 3 the following sentence taken from paragraph 2 of the United States proposal (A/C.1/90):<sup>1</sup>

"The General Assembly recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the early establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern technological discoveries to ensure their use only for peaceful purposes."

(3) Substitute for the second sentence of paragraph 5 the following:

"It further recommends that there be set up, under the Treaty or Convention, a Permanent International Commission clothed with all the powers required to implement such international safeguards and to detect and report on any breach or threatened breach of the Treaty or Convention and of subsequent supplementary agreements on the regulation and reduction of armaments. The Permanent International Commission shall be set up within the framework of the Security Council as a subordinate organ of that Council under Article 29 of the Charter, but shall derive its powers from the terms of the Treaty or Convention and of subsequent supplementary agreements." Ends.

2. The first suggestion incorporates a clause from the French amendment, "regarding the problem of security as closely connected with that of disarmament". This suggested amendment also would serve to remove certain United States objections since they do not consider that the making of military agreements is "the first step towards" disarmament.

3. The first sentence of the third suggestion meets the United States criticism that our attempt to be specific about the powers of the proposed Permanent International Commission of Control might have the opposite result to that which we intend and might limit the powers of the Commission. The second sentence of the third suggestion contains the seven words in the Soviet proposal to which they attach such importance, "within the framework of the Security Council", but does it in such a way as not to limit the powers of the Commission.

4. I gave a copy of these suggested revisions today in confidence to the United States, the United Kingdom and China.

5. In a supplementary telegram I shall be reporting on this morning's discussion on disarmament in the Political Committee. Ends. Message ends.

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document 471.

<sup>1</sup> See Document 471.

475.

DEA/211-G

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre<sup>1</sup>*

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa,] December 3, 1946

RE: DISARMAMENT PROPOSALS

1. There are three main proposals on disarmament before Committee 1 of the General Assembly: a Soviet resolution, a Canadian amendment to this resolution and a United States resolution. The Australians have also tabled an amendment similar to the Canadian proposal. These three proposals differ essentially only in the way they approach the question of eliminating atomic weapons and the relation of this question to general disarmament.

2. The Soviet resolution in its present form proposes a general reduction of armaments and prohibits the production and use of atomic energy for military purposes. If carried it would be implemented by the Security Council with the assistance of the Members of the United Nations. It also provides for international control by means of two commissions with powers of inspection, one for control of disarmament generally and one for control of disarmament in relation to atomic weapons.

3. The Canadian amendment in its final form, which incorporates three proposals contained in the Australian amendment, recommends that the first step toward a general regulation and reduction of armaments should be the negotiations for this purpose making available to the Security Council armed forces as provided in Article 43 of the Charter. It recommends that the Security Council submit plans, with the aid of the Military Staff Committee and in co-ordination with the findings of the Atomic Energy Commission, for the regulation of armaments as provided for in Article 26 of the Charter. An international treaty or convention would provide for international control embodying inspection and safeguards against violation. According to this proposal a permanent International Commission of Control would be established which would appoint permanent inspectors and special Commissions of Enquiry.

4. In the Canadian proposal, atomic weapons would be eliminated through the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference. A single international instrument or treaty would accomplish this purpose and provide the necessary safeguards against violation of atomic control.

5. The United States resolution recommends that the Security Council implement a general regulation and reduction of armaments but, in the provisions for inspection and control, treats general disarmament in exactly the same way as disarmament in relation to atomic weapons. It also recommends that the Security Council give first consideration in the matter of general disarmament to the report to be made by the Atomic Energy Commission before December 31, 1946.

<sup>1</sup>Ce mémorandum n'a pas été envoyé au Premier ministre.

<sup>1</sup>This memorandum was not sent to the Prime Minister.

6. If proposals for the control of atomic energy for military purposes are incorporated completely in the general plans for the reduction and regulation of armaments, as the United States proposal would appear to do, the Atomic Energy Commission might thus be circumvented. The Soviet proposal for a special commission on disarmament in relation to atomic weapons might have the same result. Both the Soviet and the United States proposals would also make the inspection and control procedure subject to the veto of permanent members of the Security Council. In his teletype No. 300, ATOM No. 184 of November 30 which is attached, General McNaughton has indicated his apprehension over this trend in the disarmament discussions. Also attached are the documents mentioned in General McNaughton's teletype.

L. B. PEARSON

476.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 317

New York, December 4, 1946

TOP SECRET. ASDEL No. 216. Following for Pearson from Reid (written December 3rd), Begins: Disarmament.

1. It had been agreed yesterday by the Political Committee that it would discuss disarmament this morning and Spain this afternoon. However, this morning's meeting was devoted to Spain. At the end of the meeting, Manuilsky announced that since the list of speakers was still not exhausted, the afternoon session would also be devoted to Spain.

2. As you have been informed in ATOM No. 185 of December 3rd,† we learned yesterday that the United States was going to propose in the Atomic Energy Commission, when it meets tomorrow or Thursday, that the report to be made to the Security Council by the end of the year should include an endorsement, in principle, of the main proposals contained in the Baruch plan. Hamilton of the New York Times had got hold of this story by late yesterday afternoon and we feel fairly certain that the Russians also know about it; they may be deliberately stalling the discussion of disarmament in the Political Committee of the Assembly until the United States position in the Atomic Energy Commission is made clear. They would then be able to say that the Soviet Union is prepared, in a spirit of give and take, to go a long way to meet the views of the United States delegation as expressed in their Resolution on disarmament (they might even accept it almost in full), but that the United States has now shown its hand in the Atomic Energy Commission and it was clear that the United States would do nothing about disarmament until all the other nations of the world had accepted the whole Baruch proposals.

3. During this morning's discussion in the Political Committee, Ignatieff spoke in this sense to the United Kingdom delegation. It was probably, in part, as a result of this that Shawcross, when the Chairman announced that this afternoon's meeting was to be devoted to Spain, protested that this was contrary to yesterday's decision of the Committee, that no explanation had been given by the Chairman why this morning's meeting had not been devoted to disarmament, and demanded to know who was responsible for these stalling tactics. Manuilsky was forced to admit that the Soviet Union had asked for a postponement of the disarmament discussions, and he and Gromyko explained that the Soviet Union wanted time to study the very important United States proposals on disarmament.

4. The disarmament discussions will be resumed on the morning of the 4th. The debate on Spain will require another session and the veto another session. We assume that disarmament will be referred to Sub-Committee at tomorrow's session, but the Russians may secure another session in the full Committee.

5. After this morning's meeting, I told Raynor, who is the State Department Liaison Officer with us, of my fear that the Soviet Union might announce tomorrow that it had accepted the United States proposals, that the United States proposals were dangerously ambiguous—especially the second sentence of paragraph 2 and the second sentence of paragraph 3, that Connally's speech of yesterday had made it clear that the United States interpretation of their own proposals was almost entirely satisfactory, but that experience in previous Conferences had surely taught us that the important thing was not the intent of the movers of a Resolution but the meaning which the language could be given by the Soviet Union after the Resolution had been adopted.

6. Raynor immediately asked Senator Connally to join our discussion and I asked Ignatieff to come over. Harry of the Australian delegation, who with Ignatieff was talking to Shawcross, also joined us and we were surrounded by some half dozen United States advisers.

7. I passed the ball to Ignatieff, who explained that we were gravely concerned over the effect of the United States putting before the Atomic Energy Commission a document proposing the Commission's approval now of the main principles of the Baruch plan in the findings of the Commission's report to the Security Council before the examination of the plan in the Commission had been completed.

8. I repeated to the Senator the remarks which I had made to Raynor. He showed a complete ignorance of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission and considered it entirely reasonable that a show-down should be had with the Russians immediately on the complete acceptance of the Baruch proposals.

9. I gave the usual arguments that, if we were to have a show-down with the Russians, we should choose our own ground and choose it in such a way as to make it clear to our own people that we had made every effort to meet the Russians and that the proposals which we had asked them to accept on atomic energy went no further than was absolutely necessary to ensure effective safeguards against violations and evasions. I said that I feared that, if the break-down were to come on the original Baruch plan, we would find it difficult to carry all our people with us.

10. The Senator was certain that all the people of the United States would be behind the United States Government if it insisted upon the Soviet Union accepting the whole Baruch plan.

11. Harry of the Australian delegation intervened to state that the Australian delegation would be unable to support in the Atomic Energy Commission a proposal to endorse now the principles of the Baruch plan.

12. Connally seemed to be a little shaken about my remarks on the danger of the Soviet Union accepting the present United States disarmament Resolution. He asked what I thought was the alternative. Was it to accept the Soviet Resolution on disarmament. I replied that naturally our idea of the alternative was set forth in our Canadian Resolution, and added that his speech of yesterday to the Political Committee was an able defence of the Canadian Resolution. His reply was that he had not even mentioned the Canadian Resolution in his speech.

13. He then said "what do you think we ought to do"? I suggested that perhaps he would be good enough to look at the United States Resolution again and compare it with his speech of yesterday and to see whether the United States might not think it wise to incorporate into their Resolution the interpretations which he had put on it in his speech yesterday. I added that I thought perhaps he might find that some of the language in the Canadian Resolution could, for this purpose, be usefully incorporated in the United States Resolution.

14. Connally ended the discussion by saying to his advisers that they would have to talk the matter over with the Secretary of State.

15. We were encouraged during the whole of the discussion, which must have lasted for 15 minutes, with the manifest pleasure which the United States advisers showed whenever we made a point in our argument. I doubt whether we have been able to get many of the points over to Connally but we hope that we may have strengthened the hands of his advisers.

16. I should have reported to you previously the conversation which Wilgress and I had with Joe Johnson of the State Department on Sunday afternoon, December 1st, after the meeting of the Political Committee. We told him then very frankly and fully our worries about the construction which could be placed on the United States Resolution on disarmament. He himself was obviously also very worried and asked Wilgress to try to get in touch with Senator Austin or, failing that, for me to get in touch with Ross of the State Department. We were unable to get in touch with either but I learned from Johnson later that evening that he had given a full report of his conversation with us to Senator Austin.

17. Senator Connally, in his speech on disarmament to the Political Committee on Monday morning, December 2nd, spoke without a prepared text. He had before him eight points jotted down just before the meeting by Joe Johnson and Lindsay. In framing the eight points which Connally was to make, Johnson obviously tried to ensure that he meet the criticisms that we had made the day before. They were all of them met by Connally's speech except that he did not say that the Atomic Energy Commission was not to be stampeded.

18. When the disarmament discussions in the Political Committee resume Mr. St. Laurent may comment on Parodi's statement yesterday that left the impression that it would not matter if a permanent member of the Council had the right to veto the sending of a Committee of enquiry to detect whether a breach of the Disarmament Treaty was taking place. Mr. St. Laurent, in his intervention, may also say that the advisers of the Canadian delegation had prepared for his use in Sub-Committee a composite draft Resolution drawn up in an effort to embody in one resolution all the good ideas from all the resolutions; that he was delighted to note how large an area of agreement there was between the Great Powers on the question of disarmament; that so far as the Great Powers were concerned this meeting of minds might be sufficient even though it was not expressed clearly in the Resolution, but that for the other forty-nine members of the United Nations it was essential that the Resolution as passed by the Assembly express in precise terms the agreement which had been reached. He might be able to work in some reference to the fact that a considerable number of the statements in Senator Connally's speech were expressed with greater precision in the Canadian Resolution than in the United States Resolution. Ends.

477.

DEA/211-G

Discours du président, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Speech by Chairman, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SPEECH DELIVERED IN COMMITTEE ONE ON DECEMBER 4, 1946, BY RT. HON. L. S. ST. LAURENT DURING DEBATE ON PROPOSALS FOR GENERAL DISARMAMENT

Mr. Chairman, Fellow Delegates, I am convinced the people of the whole world will be deeply grateful to the distinguished Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union for the great hope which his speech this morning holds out to us all, and especially those countries which like mine have no armaments which can constitute a menace or a threat to the peace and security of the world.

I am convinced that this speech of the distinguished Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union holds out the hope to the world that we are attempting to go even further than had been definitely provided for in the San Francisco Charter. We had in paragraph 4 of Article 2 of the San Francisco Charter a provision that all members undertake to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of another state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. We also have Article 26 which has been read and which provides that at some future time there would be, or we might hope that there would be, accepted by all the members of the United Nations an undertaking to reduce and to regulate their existing armaments.

Now the distinguished representative of the Soviet delegation has held out what appears to be a serious hope that we can, at this time, take a great step forward in implementing this general expression of the hope of the members of the United Nations that not only would there be an undertaking that armed forces would not be used against the integrity or freedom of any other member but also that the great powers who have such tremendous armaments wish to reduce those armaments and to put themselves in the position where there will not be in existence that which could constitute a serious menace or threat to the peace and security of the world.

When this second part of the first session of the Assembly convened in New York, we were all at great pains in the opening debate to dispel to the utmost possible the general feeling of disappointment at the achievements of the United Nations Organization. At this time, it appears to me that we are holding out to the world the prospect that not only will the high purposes provided for in the Charter be respected and lived up to, but that we will make more rapid progress than had been anticipated at San Francisco in bringing about a general reduction and regulation of those instruments of destruction which have proved so disastrous to the whole world.

As I listened with great interest and emotion to the speech this morning of Mr. Molotov, it appeared to me that we were in substantial agreement as to what is desirable for the welfare of mankind to accomplish at this time. I understood him to state that his Government recognized and asserted the desirability of an early and general reduction of armaments. I think with that purpose we are all in full agreement.

I understood the honourable delegate to say then that his Government desired the early implementation of the terms of reference assigned to the Atomic Energy Commission which, as he so well pointed out, not only deals with atomic weapons but with all weapons of mass destruction, and that it is the desire of his Government that there be an early solution of that problem which has been so troubling us all. With that also I am sure everyone is in substantial agreement. That, of course, is something which cannot be accomplished rapidly because, as Sir Hartley Shawcross has pointed out, in dealing with atomic energy we not only have to provide that it shall not be used for purposes of destruction, but we have also to provide that it may be available for peaceful purposes and for the improvement of the living conditions of humanity.

That makes it a problem which presents special difficulties and which cannot be solved merely by a prohibition of the development of atomic energy.

I think we will all agree that the reference to the Atomic Energy Commission provided that there would be as an outcome a draft convention to be submitted to the members of the United Nations for their acceptance and for ratification by their respective parliaments. But the very constructive suggestion from the Soviet delegation is that, while that is being proceeded with, preparation be made so that at the same time as the purposes of the Atomic Energy Commission can be adopted and ratified in an international convention, there may also be an international convention for the regulation and reduction of other armaments.

I am not at all repulsed nor frightened by the existence of the veto in the Security Council in that respect, because, if it is necessary that there be an international agreement it will be necessary for each state which will become a party to that agreement to give its assent thereto; the existence of this rule, which requires that the formulation of the plan be submitted to the nations shall have the unanimous support of the five great powers, presents no difficulty or obstacle whatsoever in the view of the Canadian delegation.

Now the speech of the Soviet Foreign Minister this morning, as I understood it envisages the necessity of the creation and the functioning of an international commission of control and inspection, and as the representative of one of the small countries I regard that as very important. We want to feel that we are secure. We want to feel that the United Nations is responsible to us for that feeling of security, and the only way in which we can feel that there is international responsibility is by a system whereby there will be some international body that will tell us that everything is all right and that every undertaking is being respected.

Now I think the Charter requires that this body operate within the framework of the Security Council, but as I understood the honourable delegate of the Soviet Union he envisages that this international commission will be clothed with powers which they will exercise autonomously and which will enable them to take the proper measures to make us feel that the international obligations are being respected everywhere. It is I think, within the general underlying concept of the Charter that these subsidiary organs will operate within the framework of the Security Council as being the organ of the United Nations which has the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security; and that any sanctions that might have to be adopted against any state which violated or which adopted a position that constituted a threat of violation should be subject to sanctions adopted by and applied through the Security Council. There again, the existence of the requirement of unanimity appears to me to be in strict accord with the realities of the situation. The Security Council is designed to have at its disposal armed forces, but armed forces contributed by the individual members. Now no one of the large powers can be expected to agree to something where forces contributed by his nation could be used against the other forces of his nation. That is not realistic and we must, I think, admit that if there came about a situation where it was felt that sanctions would have to be applied against one of the great powers, it would be a condition of absolute war whether the opposition of the one power took the form of resistance or took the form of a veto. The only way in which it could be overcome would be by the use of force and the use of force against a great power means war.

I think that the smaller powers, those of the category of Canada, and the like, will realize that in the suggestions we have heard this morning there is as concrete an effort towards a constructive solution as the realities of the day make possible. When we have it asserted, as it was this morning, that this international control commission will be clothed with powers that it can exercise and that it can report to the Security Council, and thereby to the world at large, that there is or is being prepared a threat to peace, then, if the members of the United Nations have undertaken to submit to such control and inspection any great power must realize that any obstacle it puts in the way of inspection and control would be tantamount to a declaration of war on the rest of the world.

I think that all of us and all those we represent have now such a horror of unnecessary war that there is not apt to be any interference with the working of the system which will be designed to give a feeling of security to all those concerned.

The Canadian delegation is grateful to the representative of the United Kingdom for his kind references to the draft resolution put forward by Canada; but Canada has no feeling of ownership or feeling of national pride about it. Canada is only too willing to take as a working basis in the sub-committee to be set up the proposal put forth by the Soviet delegation, as modified by the others that have come forward. We wish to recognize that, though we suggested in the opening debate in the General Assembly that the Security Council be as expeditious as possible in concluding the agreements provided for by Article 43 of the Charter, we did not at that time entertain the hope that has been given to us by the attitude of the Soviet Union that there could be so quickly set in motion the machinery required to bring about this reduction and regulation of all armaments which would increase and consolidate the feeling of security and trust in each other which is required for the reconstruction of the ravages of the years we have just gone through.

We have had prepared for our own use a collation of the various suggestions that have been put forward, and when this matter is before the Sub-Committee it may be that the collation can be of assistance to the Sub-Committee in their efforts to bring back to this Committee for recommendation to the General Assembly a unanimous resolution which will go far towards restoring the confidence of the world at large in the sincerity of all the members of the United Nations in the lofty statements of the purposes and principles for which we came together and for which the United Nations has been established.

478.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 413

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 325

New York, December 5, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 219. Following for Pearson from Reid (written December 4th), Begins: Disarmament.

1. The morning's meeting of Committee 1 on Wednesday, December 4th was devoted to disarmament.

2. Molotov opened with a statement in which he accepted the draft of the United States delegation on disarmament as a basis for further discussion. He said, however, that the United States draft "cannot satisfy us" since "it is insufficiently clear and rather one-sided." He therefore moved two amendments<sup>1</sup> to it, the text of which is given in a following teletype. †

3. You will observe that in his first amendment to the United States draft Molotov took as his first sentence an extract from the Australian draft amendment, which was taken from our draft of November 4th. He then tacked on to the United States draft for paragraph 2 the proposal that, in addition to considering the report from the Atomic Energy Commission before December 31st and facilitating the work of the Commission, the Security Council should also "expedite consideration of a draft Convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons" (he was probably referring to the Soviet Convention outlawing atomic weapons which was the Soviet reply to the Baruch proposals). To paragraph 3 of the United States resolution which calls upon the Security Council in conveniently vague terms to give consideration to the working out of proposals to provide practical and effective safeguards in connection with control of atomic energy and the regulation of other armaments, Molotov tacked on his proposal for two Commissions of Inspection to be set up "within the framework of the Security Council".

4. These amendments were supported with a speech in most conciliatory terms. Touching on the subject of the veto, Molotov said that the decisions on the reduction of armaments have to be taken by the Security Council, and that only unanimity between the Big Powers could guarantee such decisions being made. As regards the Commissions of Inspection, he said these would have to be set up as a result of agreement in the Security Council, but that once they were set up they would operate free of veto within the Commissions.

<sup>1</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur cette copie de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, Annexe 9K, pp. 345-46.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 9K, pp. 345-46.

5. After Hasluck, on behalf of Australia, had stressed that all the proposals made before Committee 1 should be referred for further consideration by a Sub-Committee, Shawcross followed with a statement in which he also said that all proposals should be examined by the Sub-Committee to be appointed for the purpose of trying to get an agreed composite draft. He welcomed Molotov's statement as indicating that he had apparently made some concessions in his originally rigid point of view and hoped that this would indicate that the Soviet Government would be willing to accept an agreed draft acceptable to the other members of the Assembly. Shawcross also said that he was glad to note that the Soviet representative accepted the United States draft as a basis of discussion, but reminded the Committee that the United States draft proposal was, as Molotov had himself said, in some points rather vague, and should be interpreted in the light of Senator Connally's speech (reported in teletype ATOM No. 185 of December 3rd).† He concluded by the statement of four principles which the United Kingdom wished to see embodied in any proposals of the Assembly:

(a) The atomic side of disarmament must be dealt with in the Atomic Energy Commission;

(b) No partial system of disarmament should be adopted. Under this principle Shawcross particularly said that if a plan for the abolition of the use of atomic weapons were worked out, its coming into force should be accompanied simultaneously with an agreement to abolish certain other weapons of mass destruction, particularly rockets. The United Kingdom has specially emphasized the point that the doing away with atomic weapons should be accompanied with the abolition of rockets as they apparently regard themselves exposed to the possible use of this weapon by the U.S.S.R.;

(c) Any system of disarmament should provide for an effective system of control and inspection;

(d) Any control and inspection agency and an extension of its powers to cover other weapons which may be invented should not be subject to the veto.

6. Connally, on behalf of the United States, welcomed the acceptance of the United States draft as a basis of discussion and said that his understanding of Molotov's speech implied that the Control Commissions proposed by Molotov would not be subject to the veto in their operation. He said that the Soviet amendments to the United States proposal would be given close examination.

7. In order to clear up the misunderstanding which has developed as a result of the vague wording of paragraph 3 of the United States proposal, to which your attention was drawn in message ATOM No. 184 of 30th November,<sup>1</sup> paragraph 13, Connally said that that paragraph referred to the formulation of plans. Such plans on disarmament or on atomic energy would then be submitted to the Governments of the members of the United Nations for ratification according to their constitutional processes. It did not refer to any executive powers at the Security Council. Finally, Connally said the United States Government wanted a resolution which would be acceptable to all members of the United Nations and suggested that all proposals made before Committee 1 should be studied by the Sub-Committee.

<sup>1</sup> Document 472.

8. Mr. St. Laurent then made some remarks, extempore, in which he expressed appreciation that Molotov in his statement of that day had given hopes to the United Nations that some progress would be made in the matter of disarmament. He pointed out that the Assembly was now trying to go beyond a statement of general objectives contained in the principles and purposes of the Charter and that if all the Great Powers had the will to do so we might expect some action toward an early reduction of armaments. Action on disarmament would involve not only proposals on atomic energy which is the special responsibility of the Atomic Energy Commission but concurrently a disarmament Convention should be worked out covering other weapons. Any control agency should have powers which would give all nations a sense of security by making each nation feel that the United Nations as a whole had undertaken responsibilities to each individually. The powers of such control bodies should give them autonomy. Any serious breach of a disarmament Convention, however, would hardly raise the question of veto in the Security Council if one of the permanent members were involved. It would be rather a question of a breakdown of the United Nations system or war. In conclusion, Mr. St. Laurent referred to a composite draft resolution which had been prepared by the Canadian delegation as a working paper to assist discussion of the various proposals to amend the Soviet resolution in the Sub-Committee which was to be set up.

9. After Molotov had repeated that he accepted the United States proposal as amended by the Soviet delegation as a basis for discussion, Connally and Shawcross both said that the Sub-Committee should examine all proposals.

10. Molotov agreed and no vote on this point was taken.

11. Byelo-Russia then proposed that instead of the slate of thirteen members for the composition of the Sub-Committee proposed by the Philippines as follows: United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, China, France, Norway, Argentina, Australia, Mexico, Canada, Poland, Ukraine and Iran, the slate should be the following: United States, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, France, Norway, Holland, Poland, Canada, India, Czechoslovakia, Mexico, Egypt, Brazil and Australia.

12. The United Kingdom and Australia proposed the addition of the three members newly elected to the Security Council, Belgium, Syria and Colombia. These countries were also added and also Argentina at its own insistence. The slate was adopted unanimously.

13. Committee 1 then continued its debate on Spain and appointed a Sub-Committee in an effort to work out a resolution on which general agreement could be reached. The Sub-Committee set up to consider the various proposals on disarmament will meet tomorrow morning, Thursday, December 5th.

14. It would be unfortunate if the public were to possess too high hopes as a result of the Soviet move today on disarmament. The three main issues still open may be difficult to resolve:

(1) The first Soviet amendment concludes with the words "Convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons." The Convention should clearly be one for the "international control of atomic energy and thereby the elimination of atomic weapons from national armaments."

(2) The Soviet propose a "resolution of the Security Council" on general disarmament and not a Treaty or Convention.

(3) The United Kingdom insist, and quite properly, that the atom bomb should not be abolished until there is effective prohibition of the manufacture and use of rockets. Ends.

479.

DEA/211-G

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET

[Ottawa,] December 5, 1946

I attach copies of four telegrams from General McNaughton, ATOM No. 184 of November 30th,<sup>1</sup> ATOM No. 185 of December 3rd,† ATOM No. 186 of December 5th<sup>2</sup> and ATOM No. 187 of December 5th.† These telegrams refer to the relation between the discussions on disarmament which are now proceeding in the General Assembly and the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. You will notice that General McNaughton is concerned lest the present United States resolution on disarmament may complicate or even circumvent the work of the Atomic Energy Commission.

In regard to disarmament, the present position is that M. Molotov has accepted a United States resolution as a basis for discussion in a sub-committee of twenty States, of which Canada is one. The view of the Canadian delegation is that the wording of the United States resolution is not sufficiently precise, particularly at one point where it might imply that the Security Council should take over the responsibilities of the Atomic Energy Commission. Senator Connally has asserted that no such implication was intended, but the delegation continues to have misgivings.

<sup>1</sup> Document 472.

<sup>2</sup> Document 304.

The Canadian delegation to the Assembly will endeavour to have its own alternative wording considered in the Sub-Committee. Mr. St. Laurent has meanwhile welcomed the agreement between the U.S.S.R. and the United States on the general terms of the disarmament resolution which will now be worked out in detail.

It should be added that there seems little likelihood that the present discussions at the General Assembly will result in any immediate practical measure of disarmament, no matter what the terms of the resolution which is eventually carried.

480.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 355

New York, December 7, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 240. Following for Pearson from Reid, (written December 5th), Begins: Disarmament.

1. The Sub-Committee on Disarmament held its first meeting Thursday morning, December 5th. Spaak, fortunately, agreed to serve as Chairman.

2. The three main issues listed in paragraph 4 of my ASDEL No. (blank) [sic] raised their heads. It looks as if the Soviet will agree to a reference in the Resolution to a Treaty or Convention on general disarmament, and at the next meeting of the Sub-Committee their attitude on the other two difficult issues should be made clear.

3. The Committee has taken as its basis of discussion the United States Resolution. It adopted paragraph 1 with some amendments, the chief of which was the deletion of "pursuant to international Treaties and Agreements" and the addition at the end of a sentence reading somewhat as follows: "The plans formulated by Security Council shall be submitted to the members of the United Nations for ratification according to Article 26 of the Charter." In the discussion of this paragraph, Mr. St. Laurent made a convincing intervention, pointing out that there were four stages in general disarmament: the work which the Assembly was now engaged in of adopting a statement of general principles governing disarmament; the working out of plans by the Security Council; the approval at a general Disarmament Conference of a Treaty or Convention on disarmament; the ratification of that Treaty by the members of the Security Council and by the necessary numbers of the other members of the United Nations.

4. The Sub-Committee began discussion of paragraph 2 of the United States proposals and the United Kingdom moved amendments to it which covered substantially the amendments which we had in mind.

5. The discussion on paragraph 2 will be resumed on the morning of December 6th.

6. We have this afternoon submitted substitutes for paragraphs 3 and 4 of the United States Resolution and a proposed additional paragraph to be inserted between paragraphs 3 and 4. These reproduce textually paragraphs 5, 7 and 4 of our "composite draft".

7. Mr. St. Laurent and the other members of the delegation attached to the First Committee had lunch today with Senators Connally and Austin, and Ross of the State Department who is Austin's principal adviser. We went over with them a number of obscurities in their Resolution, and I hope that, as a result, the United States at the meetings of the Sub-Committee will be happy to accept amendments to the text to their Resolution along the lines of the ones we have suggested.

8. Paragraph 1 of the American Resolution adopted today is still pretty unsatisfactory but the Americans at lunch agreed that, when we had gone through the rest of the Resolution, we should return to the first paragraph and try to get it cleaned up.

9. Late in the afternoon of December 5th, I gave Ross a draft of a proposed amendment to paragraph 1 which reads as follows:

"With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of an early general regulation and reduction of armaments. Accordingly, the General Assembly under Article 11 of the Charter calls to the attention of the members of the United Nations and of the Security Council this Resolution on the principles which shall govern disarmament and the regulation of armaments.

"The General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, it give prompt consideration, under Article 26 of the Charter, to formulating the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments and to assure that such regulation and reduction will be generally observed by all participants and not unilaterally by only some of the participants. These plans shall be co-ordinated with the recommendations which are made from time to time by the Atomic Energy Commission.

"The plans formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted at the earliest practicable date to a special session of the General Assembly. The Treaty or Convention approved by the General Assembly shall be submitted to the members of the United Nations for ratification, and shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the permanent members of the Security Council and by a majority of the other members of the United Nations." Ends.

481.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 364

New York, December 9, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 247. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Reference my teletype ASDEL No. 235 of December 6th.† Disarmament.

1. The Sub-Committee on Disarmament held its third meeting Saturday afternoon, December 7th, from 3:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. The results of the meeting were inconclusive and disappointing. The Soviet were prepared to accept paragraph 3 of the United States proposal provided that their second amendment were added to it. The United Kingdom put forward their very confused amendment to paragraph 3 of the United States proposal, and we put forward ours as expressing simply and briefly the points on which all the members of the Sub-Committee were in agreement.

2. The Soviet, however, continued to insist that their text be taken as the basis of discussion. I think that they were simply playing for time until they received further instructions from Moscow. It may be that, when the fourth meeting of the Sub-Committee is held on Monday, December 9th, they will agree to accept substantially the text of our amendment, and we are hopeful that the United States and the United Kingdom will also agree to accept the substance of our text. If, at the beginning of the fourth meeting, it is impossible to reach agreement quickly on a new text of paragraph 3, the matter will be referred to a drafting Sub-Committee on this paragraph, composed of the Five Great Powers, Canada, Czechoslovakia (rapporteur of the Sub-Committee) and Belgium (Chairman of the Sub-Committee).

3. We have been telling the United States during the last two or three days that we felt that there were obscurities and possible pitfalls in the first paragraph as adopted on first reading by the Sub-Committee. The United States is now, I think, convinced of this and may move on second reading the amendments we would like to see incorporated in it.

4. One of our worries is that the first paragraph as adopted concludes with the following sentence:

“The plans formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted to the States members for ratification in accordance with Article 26 of the Charter”.

This might give an opening to the Soviet Union to put forward in the Security Council vague and undefined “plans” similar in general approach to the draft Convention they proposed on atomic weapons. Then, when the other Powers say that this is not sufficient, the U.S.S.R. would be in a good position to pillory the other Powers as putting obstacles in the way of early disarmament.

5. My immediately succeeding teletype† gives the text of the first paragraph as adopted by the Sub-Committee on first reading on December 5th. Ends.

482.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 381

New York, December 10, 1946

ASDEL No. 256. Sub-Committee on Disarmament.

Late in the evening of December 9th we circulated to the members of the drafting Sub-Committee the following letter, proposing amendments to paragraph 1 as adopted on first reading:

1. The first paragraph of the Resolution now before the Sub-Committee was adopted on first reading with the understanding that the Sub-Committee would return to it after going through the other paragraphs.

2. The Canadian delegation suggests that it would be desirable if the second and third sentences of this paragraph were clarified in the light of the discussions in the Sub-Committee. Otherwise the intent of these sentences may not be entirely clear to the general public.

3. The Canadian delegation therefore proposes that the second sentence of paragraph 1 be amended by adding after the word 'accordingly', the words "The General Assembly, under Article 11 of the Charter, calls to the attention of the members of the United Nations and of the Security Council this Resolution on the principles which shall govern disarmament and the regulation of armaments."

The rest of the sentence would remain unchanged. It would begin:

"The General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give prompt consideration to formulating the practical measures, et cetera."

This would draw attention to the constitutional basis of the adoption by the General Assembly of the proposed Disarmament Resolution. The adoption of this Resolution by the General Assembly would constitute the first stage in the process of disarmament. The formulation of plans by the Security Council would constitute the second stage in the process of disarmament.

4. The Canadian delegation also proposes that the last sentence of the paragraph be amended to read as follows (new words underlined):

"The plans formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to the members of the United Nations for consideration at a special session of the General Assembly. The Treaties or Conventions approved by the General Assembly shall be submitted to the signatory States (members) for ratification in accordance with Article 26 of the Charter."

The adoption of this language would make clear the nature of the third and fourth stages in the disarmament process. The third stage is the consideration by all members of the United Nations of the plans formulated by the Security Council. The fourth stage is the ratification and coming into force of the Treaties or Conventions approved of by the General Assembly. The language used leaves it to the Security Council to decide whether to embody its plans for disarmament in draft Treaties or Conventions or in less formal proposals. The Security Council would be playing the role of a Preparatory Commission on Disarmament. The special session of the General Assembly would be the equivalent of a general Disarmament Conference.

5. The first paragraph as thus amended would read as follows:

"With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of an early general regulation and reduction of armaments. Accordingly the General Assembly, under Article 11 of the Charter, calls to the attention of the members of the United Nations and of the Security Council this Resolution on the principles which shall govern disarmament and the regulation of armaments. The General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give prompt consideration to formulating the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments and to assure that such regulation and reduction will be generally observed by all participants and not unilaterally by only some of the participants. The plans formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to the members of the United Nations for consideration at a special session of the General Assembly. The Treaties or Conventions approved by the General Assembly shall be submitted to the signatory States for ratification in accordance with Article 26 of the Charter."

483.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 382

New York, December 10, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 257. Following from Reid, Begins: Disarmament.

1. The Sub-Committee on Disarmament held its fourth meeting on Monday, December 9th, from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Most of the time was spent on the texts which appear on pages 8 and 9 of our composite draft. The Egyptians asked for the insertion in the second sentence of the French amendment of the words "and the urgent withdrawal of forces stationed in the territories of member States without their free consent". The United States asked for the addition after "free consent" of the words "in accordance with Treaties or Agreements or otherwise in accordance with the principles of the Charter".

2. Wilgress tried without avail to have our text accepted in place of the first sentence of the French text, but we did not press the matter.

3. At the request of Brazil it was decided to put paragraph 4 to the vote in three parts:

- (1) The first sentence of the French text;
- (2) The second sentence of the French text;
- (3) The Egyptian proposal.

The first sentence was carried by 11 to 7; we voted for it. The second was at first defeated by 8 to 8: we voted against it on the grounds of its irrelevancy. Then Spaak pointed out that to defeat the second part or the third part would lead to the defeat of the whole paragraph since many delegations, including the Soviet, had declared that they would only accept the paragraph if it contained all three parts. The second part was then put to the vote again and was carried by 15 to 3 with 2 abstentions. The third part was carried by 14 to 3 with 2 abstentions and the whole paragraph (subject to drafting changes by the drafting Sub-Committee) by 16 to 3. We voted yes on all these three votes.

4. The Committee then moved to a discussion of paragraph 4 of the United States proposal (see pages 14 and 15 of our composite draft). In order to save time we did not press for our own draft and the United States draft was adopted unanimously.

5. The whole of the draft Resolution was then referred to the drafting Sub-Committee.

6. The drafting Sub-Committee met as soon as the Spanish discussion was over and sat from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. and again on Tuesday morning, December 10th from 11:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. It will hold its third meeting on December 11th from 9:30 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. and the fifth meeting of the Sub-Committee will take place at 11:00 a.m. on December 12th. I represented us at these meetings, accompanied by Ignatieff.

7. At the meeting of the drafting Sub-Committee on December 9th, Senator Connally, who had been working in Committee ever since 10:30 in the morning, was so tired as to be reduced to silence. Shawcross was almost entirely concerned with getting rockets prohibited as well as atom bombs and thereby confused the issue on atomic energy. He did not see the pitfalls which Vyshinsky with the utmost skill was digging for him.

8. The main discussion was over the insistence of the Soviet that the Resolution expressly mention in paragraph 3 the two Organs which should be set up—one on general disarmament and one on the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes. All the Great Powers were content with language which would in our view have had the effect of making the control body for atomic energy into a body of inspectors for the enforcement of the prohibition of atomic weapons, instead of a control and development authority envisaged by all but the Soviet members of the Atomic Energy Commission. More particularly, the proposed language of paragraphs 2 and 3 contained no reference to the control of atomic energy for peaceful purposes and opened the door wide to the Soviet to claim in the Security Council that the General Assembly had requested the Security Council to go ahead immediately with the Soviet Convention to outlaw atomic bombs.

9. The Sub-Committee meeting on December 10th was equally unsatisfactory. I finally had to reserve the Canadian position on paragraphs 2 and 3.

10. My immediately following teletype gives the text of paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 as passed by the drafting Sub-Committee on December 10th and the text of the amendments we have proposed to paragraphs 2 and 3.

11. We are hopeful that the United States delegation will, by the time the Sub-Committee meets on December 11th, see the opportunity of misinterpretation offered by the present language of paragraphs 2 and 3. We are in consultation with the United States, United Kingdom and Australian delegations. The latter are strongly of the same view as ourselves and may indeed move a revised version of their Resolution as a substitute for the Sub-Committee's text. We are hoping that, instead of this, they will join us in appropriate amendments to the Sub-Committee's text.

12. It will probably be necessary for us to speak at some length at the Sub-Committee meetings on December 11th in order to explain our amendments. Ends.

484.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 383

New York, December 10, 1946

IMMEDIATE. ASDEL No. 258. Following from Reid, Begins: Disarmament.

My immediately preceding teletype. Following is the text of paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 by the Drafting Sub-Committee on December 10th.

2. As an essential step towards the urgent objective of eliminating from national armaments atomic and all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, and the early establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern scientific discoveries and technical developments to insure their use only for peaceful purposes, the General Assembly urges the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference as set forth in Section 5 of the General Assembly Resolution of January 24th, 1946. In order to ensure that the general prohibition, regulation and reduction of armaments are directed towards the major weapons of modern warfare and not merely towards the minor weapons, the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council expedite consideration of the reports which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council and that it facilitate the work of that Commission, and also that the Security Council expedite consideration of a draft Convention or Conventions for the creation of an international system of control and inspection, these Conventions to include the prohibition of atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now or in the future to mass destruction.

3. The General Assembly further recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the provision of practical and effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions. Accordingly the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that it give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and other limitation or regulation of armaments.

To ensure the adoption of measures for the reduction of armaments and armed forces and prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes and of other major weapons adaptable now or in the future for mass destruction there shall be established within the framework of the Security Council, who bear the main responsibility for peace and security, an international system, as mentioned at the end of paragraph 2, operating through special organs, which organs shall derive their powers and status from the Convention or Conventions under which they are established.

4. The General Assembly, regarding the problem of security as closely connected with that of disarmament, recommends the Security Council to accelerate as much as possible the placing at its disposal of the armed forces mentioned in Article 43 of the Charter. It recommends to the Governments the progressive and balanced withdrawal, taking into account of occupation needs, of the forces stationed in ex-enemy territories, and the withdrawal without delay of forces stationed in the territories of member States without their consent freely and publicly expressed in Treaties or Agreements, not inconsistent with the Charter. The General Assembly further recommends a corresponding reduction of national forces and a general, progressive and balanced reduction of these forces.

The following is the text of the amendments which we are moving to paragraphs 2 and 3.

1. Add at the end of paragraph 2 the words "and the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes"

2. Substitute for the following words at the beginning of the third sentence of paragraph 3:

“To ensure the adoption of measures for the early general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes and of other major weapons adaptable now or in the future for mass destruction”

either A

“To ensure the adoption of measures for the reduction of armaments and armed forces and to set up the international system recommended at the end of paragraph 2”,

or B

“To ensure the adoption of measures for the early general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces, for the elimination from national armaments of atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now or in the future to mass destruction, and for the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes”. Ends.

485.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 388

New York, December 11, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 261. Following for Mr. St. Laurent from Reid, Begins: Disarmament. My ASDEL No. 257 of December 10th.

1. The Drafting Sub-Committee of the Sub-Committee on Disarmament held its third meeting from 9:30 a.m. to about 11:30 a.m. on Wednesday, December 11th.

2. The whole time was spent in an effort to reach agreement on the Troops Resolution which had been hopelessly confused as the result of Shawcross' performance in the plenary meeting of the Assembly on the evening of December 10th. Shawcross had in the Assembly agreed that the members of the United Nations should furnish the Secretary General with information about their armaments within one month of the establishment of an International Supervisory Commission which the Security Council was to be asked to establish immediately. This meant that the United States would be called upon to disclose its stock of atom bombs.

3. Spaak had saved the situation at the plenary meeting and tried again to save the situation at the meeting of the Drafting Sub-Committee on Disarmament on the morning of December 11th. At the Drafting Committee, he tried to persuade the members that the thing to do was to kill the Troops Resolution and substitute for it a few words in the Disarmament Resolution. It looked as if he might succeed but Vyshinsky asked for time to consult with Molotov who had, he said, made a gentleman's agreement with Shawcross the night before.

4. The Drafting Committee was then adjourned to meet at three in the afternoon, to be followed immediately by a meeting of the full Sub-Committee which would itself terminate by four when the plenary session of the Assembly was to meet. Before the end of the Drafting Committee meeting our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3, set forth in my ASDEL No. 258 of December 10th, had been circulated to the members of the Drafting Committee.

5. Immediately after the meeting of the Drafting Committee the United Kingdom asked us to attend a private meeting with themselves, the United States and Australia. Among those present were Shawcross, Senator Connally, Eberstadt (of the United States delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission), Hasluck, Wilgress, Ignatieff and myself. The meeting lasted for over an hour.

6. Just before the meeting, we gave in confidence to Shawcross, Connally, Hasluck and Spaak our draft of a statement† to be made by the Canadian representative, explaining our amendments to paragraphs 1, 2 and 3. We marked this "Confidential until given: Subject to revision". You will have received the text of this statement through C.I.S. In giving it to Mr. Spaak, I expressed my regrets that I had not made our position clear at the meeting of the Drafting Sub-Committee on Monday evening, December 9th, but that he would find in this draft statement an explanation of why we considered our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the Resolution to be of paramount importance.

7. The United Kingdom-United States-Australia-Canada discussions began badly. No one had had a chance to read our statement and Shawcross insisted that our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3 were unnecessary and dangerous since they might jeopardize the whole Disarmament Resolution. Fortunately, Eberstadt supported vigorously our amendment to paragraph 2 and insisted that it was essential and that it was also desirable that there be added at the end of the Resolution a new paragraph stating that nothing in this Resolution limits in any way the Terms of Reference of the Atomic Energy Commission set forth in the Resolution of the General Assembly of January 24th, 1946. Hasluck, with whom I had had several conversations before the meeting, also supported our amendments but was in an ugly mood and was inclined to the opinion that the Resolution was so bad that even if it were amended in the sense which we and Eberstadt had proposed it would still be dangerous.

8. Connally was willing to go along with us on paragraph 2 after Eberstadt's intervention, but it took an hour of debate to shake Shawcross. However, by the end of the private meeting, he was agreed that the four States represented there would support the Canadian amendment to paragraph 2, and the new Eberstadt paragraph. We pointed out that the order of importance was:

- (1) Our amendment to paragraph 2;
- (2) The Eberstadt paragraph;
- (3) Our amendment to paragraph 1;
- (4) Our amendment to paragraph 3.

9. Much to our surprise, when we arrived at the meeting of the Drafting Sub-Committee at three o'clock, we found that it was a meeting of the full Sub-Committee. Shawcross immediately insisted that the press and the public be admitted. Vyshinsky, before the public was admitted, stated that the Soviet could not accept Spaak's formula of the morning which would have killed the Troops Resolution. We then went on to discuss the Disarmament Resolution paragraph by paragraph.

10. We got no further than the first paragraph to which we moved amendments. Australia and the United Kingdom supported them vigorously, but the United States made no intervention. We have learned that Ross (Senator Austin's adviser), who attaches great importance to our amendments to paragraph 1, had still not even tried to sell them to Senator Connally.

11. We had hoped before the full Sub-Committee met to have spoken to Spaak and requested that our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3 be taken before our amendment to paragraph 1.

12. The fifth meeting of the Sub-Committee on Disarmament lasted till about 4:15, when it was necessary to adjourn in order that Spaak preside at the plenary session. Before leaving, he said that he would not be able to continue to preside at the Disarmament Sub-Committee after Friday, and scarcely before then since he would be tied up as President of the Assembly. He suggested Koo in his place and this was accepted.

13. The Sub-Committee on Disarmament will hold its 5th meeting tomorrow morning, Thursday, December 12th. Wilgress will state that we consider our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3 as of much more importance than our amendments to paragraph 1, and that we hope the Sub-Committee will, with very little further debate, vote on our amendments to paragraph 1. When we finish with paragraph 1, he will make, on paragraphs 2 and 3, a statement along the lines of that which you have received from us through C.I.S.

14. Following the meeting of the Sub-Committee, we got in touch with a number of delegations represented on the Committee, including Parodi, in order to explain to them the importance of our amendment to paragraph 2. I also spoke to a number of the more important newspaper men who had been attending the Sub-Committee meeting so that in their stories, which will appear before the Sub-Committee meets, they will be able to speculate intelligently about the reasons behind our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3.

15. One point which I made this morning at the secret Four-Power meeting was that it was unlikely we would be able to get a good Disarmament Resolution through this Assembly if we were working to the deadline of the Assembly ending this Saturday; that it was standard practice for the Russians to take advantage of the desire of other people to get away from a Conference in order to persuade them to agree to an ambiguous text; that, moreover, experience had shown that the chances of international discussions being abortive were increased if people were working under the pressure of a few days' deadline; that, therefore, it would be desirable if it were to be announced that the Assembly could not possibly end on Saturday, December 14th but that it would have to continue until the middle or end of next week. Shawcross agreed and said he would speak to Spaak in this sense.

16. Having carried the ball for the United States and the United Kingdom for so long, it now looks as if, once Wilgress has made his statement tomorrow morning on our amendments to paragraphs 2 and 3, we can leave the ball to be carried by the United States and the United Kingdom.

17. Mr. Martin will, no doubt, be speaking to you about the possibility of your return to New York. I should like, however, to add my own personal plea that if at all possible you should return as soon as you can. We may be faced in the next few days with a number of extremely difficult decisions. Ends.

486.

DEA/211-G

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures.*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 396

New York, December 12, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 268. Following for St. Laurent from Reid, Begins: Disarmament.

1. Sub-Committee 3 of the First Committee held a meeting from 10:00 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, December 12th, and agreed to forward a text of a Resolution to Committee 1. (Copy of the text as it left the Sub-Committee is contained in my immediately following telegram.)<sup>1</sup>

2. The main feature of this meeting was the adoption of the amendments to the text offered by our delegation.

3. The first amendment was to the title and the first sentence of paragraph 1. An amendment which would include a reference to the first stage in disarmament, namely, the statement of principles governing disarmament by the Assembly under Article 11 was changed at the suggestion of Wellington Koo by introducing the idea in the title of the Resolution and in the opening words of the first sentence of the first paragraph. This suggestion was adopted unanimously. The title therefore reads, "Resolution on the Principles Governing the General Regulation and Reduction of Armaments" and the beginning of the first sentence is as follows: "In pursuance of Article 11 of the Charter and with a view, etc. . . ."

<sup>1</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur cette copie du télégramme:

<sup>1</sup> The following note was written on this copy of the telegram:

Note: Copy of text referred to in para[graph] 1 was not sent in the following telegram, but was transmitted via C.I.S. P.H.N.

4. The second sentence in paragraph 1 deals with the second stage in the process of disarmament, namely, the consideration of "practical measures" by the Security Council. This was unchanged.

5. The third sentence in the text presented by the Drafting Sub-Committee referred only to ratification by members in accordance with Article 26. We had proposed as an intermediary step consideration of the plans formulated by the Security Council at "a special session of the General Assembly". This proposal gave rise to some discussion. Our position was not helped by the fact that Spaak was quite obviously intent on getting unanimous acceptance of the text as it left the Drafting Sub-Committee without any change. Thus he argued that our proposal to include a reference to a special meeting of the General Assembly to consider plans from the Security Council on disarmament would have a "restrictive" effect and it should be left to the Security Council to decide how the Conventions on disarmament could be submitted to the members of the United Nations.

6. We were opposed also by Parodi, representative of France, who, like Spaak, objected to any change in the text of the Drafting Sub-Committee. However, effective support was given to us by Shawcross and Hasluck. Vyshinsky did not speak on this point. Our amendment was carried by 10 votes to 9. It reads as follows:

"The plans formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to the members of the United Nations for consideration at a special session of the General Assembly. The Treaties or Conventions approved by the General Assembly shall be submitted to the signatory States for ratification in accordance with Article 26 of the Charter."

7. The next amendment which we offered was at the end of paragraph 2 by the addition of the words "and the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes". Wilgress made a full explanatory statement in support of this amendment, pointing out that in the first part of the paragraph in which the objectives of the Atomic Energy Commission are set out it was clearly stated that one of them should be "establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern scientific discoveries and technical developments to ensure their use only for peaceful purposes". At the end of the paragraph however, where the text dealt with the Conventions which were to be considered by the Security Council there was no mention of control "to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes" but only of Conventions "for the prohibition of atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now and in the future to mass destruction" and "international system of control and inspection". The language, therefore, of the Drafting Sub-Committee text could be considered as an endorsement of the principle that a mere prohibition of the production and use of atomic weapons and the establishment of an international system of control and inspection that would merely supervise and report on the observance or otherwise of such a Convention would by itself be enough, instead of a system of control of all the processes of atomic energy to ensure its use for peaceful purposes only.

8. Wilgress reminded the Committee that the Canadian position had been reserved on this paragraph and paragraph 3 in the Drafting Sub-Committee.

9. The Czech representative, who is also the Rapporteur of the Committee, said that, although he opposed the amendment in the Drafting Sub-Committee, he was prepared to accept it to avoid further discussion. Vyshinsky said that he did not think the amendment necessary but if there were to be an amendment it should be in the exact terms implied in the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission. This was a rather surprising statement as the text of our amendment was an exact quotation of paragraph (b) of Section 5 of the terms of reference contained in the Assembly Resolution of January 24th, 1946.

10. Spaak and Parodi again opposed any amendment on the grounds that the agreed text of the Drafting Sub-Committee should not be touched. We got warm support from Senator Connally. When the amendment was put to the vote, it was passed 10 to 8 with one abstention.

11. In paragraph 3 we had proposed a consequential amendment to the third sentence dealing with the organs to be set up under the Conventions. We had offered two alternative texts as follows:

A. "To ensure the adoption of measures for the early general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and to set up the international system recommended at the end of paragraph 2",

B. "To ensure the adoption of measures for the early general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces, for the elimination from national armaments of atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now or in the future to mass destruction, and for the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes".

12. Vyshinsky, supported by others who were against any changes in the text, opposed A but it was passed 10 to 9. However, after it had been adopted in this way, Vyshinsky pointed out that he particularly objected to the exclusion in the Canadian amendment of any reference to the "prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes". He, therefore, proposed that the Committee should take the Canadian amendment B. Vyshinsky said that he would not have any objection to this text if the words, "for the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes" were inserted before "elimination from national armaments". With this change the Canadian amendment to the third sentence of paragraph 3 was adopted unanimously.

13. Hasluck then moved an Australian amendment to be added to the end of paragraph 3 to read as follows:

"The organs shall be clothed with all the powers required to implement international safeguards and to detect and report on any breach or threatened breach of the Treaty or Convention and of subsequent supplementary agreements on the regulation and reduction of armaments".

14. This proposal of the Australian amendment brought from Vyshinsky the strongest opposition on the grounds that it raised the question of the powers the organs should have and what should be the guarantees that they would be required to implement.

15. Shawcross endeavoured to help Hasluck by suggesting "a compromise" by using the wording employed in the Resolution of January 24th on atomic energy, Section 5, paragraph (d) and proposed that the amendment should read as follows:

"The organs shall be clothed with all the powers required for the effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violation and evasions".

Spaak, however, intervened with an appeal to all the members of the Drafting Sub-Committee to keep to the text which had been agreed. This gave Vyshinsky another opportunity to make a statement in opposition to Hasluck's proposal in which he said that the present text was a compromise and represented a departure from the original proposal on disarmament on which the Soviet Union had taken the initiative. He said that, if other delegations were to put forward amendments to the text, the Soviet Government would have to reserve its right to submit new amendments also. He said that the Australian amendment reflected doubt on the question of the applicability of the veto in the subordinate organs in the Commission and also the Soviet position regarding international control. He recalled Stalin's and Molotov's statements on these points. He said that Stalin had said "strong international control". This did not mean "national" control. Molotov had explained that the control organs would operate under their own rules as established by the Security Council and that the veto would not be operative in the control bodies. No State would, therefore, be able to hamper the operations of the Control Commissions.

16. In the light of Vyshinsky's statement, Shawcross agreed to withdraw his amendment noting interpretations of the Soviet position given by Vyshinsky.

17. Hasluck then said that the Australian delegation would not insist on a vote on their amendment, but reserved their position on paragraph 3 pending instructions from his Government. Wilgress said that his position was the same as that of Australia.

18. On paragraph 4 no changes were suggested for the first two sentences, but the last sentence which contains the recommendation of a reduction of national armed forces as distinct from forces stationed abroad, Vyshinsky suggested the addition of the words "in accordance with this Resolution" to follow the words "a general progressive and balanced reduction of these national armed forces". When Shawcross, however, pointed out that this would have the effect of postponing any reduction or demobilization of national armed forces until the various other objectives of disarmament, including the working out of the Convention, had been carried out, and would negate the whole idea of demobilization of the large armies which were no longer necessary in peace-time, Vyshinsky withdrew his proposal and the paragraph was adopted with only slight drafting changes proposed by the Indian delegation at our request, in the interests of consistency of language. Thus "Governments" was changed to "members", "member States" to "members" and the word "armed" added to "forces" in the second sentence of paragraph 4.

19. Paragraph 5 which calls upon all members to render assistance, etc., was passed with drafting changes of "Governments" to "members".

20. The United States delegation then moved an additional paragraph to the Resolution as follows:

"Nothing herein contained shall alter or limit the Resolution of the General Assembly passed on January 24th, 1946, creating the Atomic Energy Commission".

21. This amendment was supported by a strong statement by Senator Connally appealing to all members of the Committee for support, reflecting the anxiety of the United States Government and the possible results of interpretations which might be placed on the present Resolution by the Soviet representatives in the Security Council and in the Atomic Energy Commission. Wilgress gave strong support to Connally, pointed out that the two Resolutions were of equal validity and that it should be placed beyond doubt that under no interpretation of the text of the present Resolution could it be argued that the Resolution of January 24th setting up the Atomic Energy Commission was modified in any way.

22. Vyshinsky opposed the amendment, claiming that there was nothing ambiguous or contradictory in the present text, but he finally gave way, claiming that it was a "gesture of compromise", and on the suggestion of Spaak, the United States additional paragraph was inserted as paragraph 5, making the paragraph "appeal to Governments" paragraph 6.

23. Finally at our suggestion the Netherlands' representative suggested one or two minor drafting changes to make the text conform to customary usage of language in the Charter. Shawcross also suggested at our request that the text should be split up into more paragraphs and proposed this be done by the Secretariat.

24. Spaak then put the whole text for adoption to the vote. Hasluck and Wilgress both indicated their reservation as regards paragraph 3 but the full text was voted unanimously for reference to Committee 1 by Subcommittee 3.

25. At the conclusion of the meeting members of the United States delegation expressed very cordial appreciation of our efforts to safeguard the interests of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Resolution of January 24th, and it was generally felt that the text on disarmament as it now goes to Committee 1 does not at least contain any of the obvious pitfalls which the Canadian amendments have been intended to expose and remove. Ends. Message ends.

SOUS-SECTION iv/SUB-SECTION iv

AFRIQUE DU SUD/SOUTH AFRICA

487.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 337

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] November 27, 1946

India's complaint about the treatment of Indians in South Africa is proving to be one of the more disturbing and contentious issues at the meetings of the United Nations. There can be little doubt that the Indian Government has grounds for complaining over the treatment in South Africa of persons of Indian race and they have resorted to the United Nations only after having failed to secure satisfaction by negotiation. On the side of South Africa it can be argued that the Indian complaint relates to matters within their domestic jurisdiction.

At the moment there is a motion before the United Nations Committee which is studying the question to refer the whole subject to the International Court of Justice in order to clear up the preliminary question of jurisdiction. Mr. St. Laurent, speaking on November 25,<sup>1</sup> supported this motion as did the United States and the United Kingdom. No vote has been taken yet but our Delegation reports there is not much chance of this motion being passed.

If this motion is lost it seems likely that the Assembly would carry a motion of censure against South Africa and require her to report at the next meeting of the Assembly on the removal of the disabilities against Indians. Apparently there is a very strong desire among countries with coloured populations to secure the adoption of a censure motion against South Africa. So far only Argentina has come to the support of South Africa.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'assemblée générale, Commission mixte des première et sixième commissions, deuxième séance, le 25 novembre 1946, pp. 11-12.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Joint Committee of the First and Sixth Committees, Second Meeting, November 25, 1946, pp. 11-12.

If a motion of censure is presented the Canadian Delegation most likely will abstain, taking the view that in the absence of information which the Court might provide it could not vote on the question.

488.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 406

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 301

New York, November 30, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 203. Following for Pearson from Hopkins, Begins: India-South Africa dispute.

1. At a joint meeting of Committees 1 and 6 held today, Mrs. Pandit<sup>1</sup> withdrew the original Indian resolution in favour of a joint French-Mexican resolution, which is contained in a separate teletype.<sup>2</sup>

2. When put to a vote, the French-Mexican resolution was carried by a vote of 24-19 with 6 abstentions. Canada voted against the resolution on the basis that it favoured a reference to the Court for an advisory opinion on the preliminary question of jurisdiction before the Assembly intervenes. The French-Mexican resolution was put to a vote, before a joint Swedish-United Kingdom-United States resolution favouring a reference to the Court had an opportunity of being so voted on. Had this latter resolution been put to a vote before the French-Mexican resolution was so put, it would probably have carried by a slim majority. This would probably have occurred had a Chairman other than Mr. Manuisky been presiding.

3. Before the vote, Canada, in suggesting some amendments to the Swedish-United States-United Kingdom resolution, was able to make its position clear. The question of a reference to the Court was of course not voted on, the French-Mexican resolution having been already carried.

4. The text of the Swedish-United States-United Kingdom resolution is given in a separate teletype.<sup>3</sup>

5. There is doubt whether the French-Mexican resolution will obtain a two-thirds majority in the Assembly. There is, therefore, possibility that the

<sup>1</sup> La présidente, la délégation de l'Inde à l'Assemblée générale.

<sup>2</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, Commission mixte des première et sixième commissions, annexe 1f, p. 133.

<sup>3</sup> Voir Ibid., cinquième séance, 28 novembre 1946, p. 43.

<sup>1</sup> Chairman, Delegation of India to the General Assembly.

<sup>2</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Joint Committee of the First and Sixth Committees, Annex 1f, p. 133.

<sup>3</sup> See Ibid., Fifth Meeting, November 28, 1946, p. 43.

matter may be referred again to the Joint Committee. In the Assembly, the Canadian delegation proposes to vote against the resolution. Our present intention is to do so without comment.<sup>1</sup>

SOUS-SECTION V / SUB-SECTION V

ESPAGNE/SPAIN

489.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 39

Ottawa, October 28, 1946

DELAS No. 30. Following for Mr. St. Laurent from Pearson, Begins: Count de Morales, Consul General of Spain at Montreal, called at this Office this afternoon to express his Government's hope that Canada would not take any active part at Assembly in advocating intervention in Spain. De Morales stated that Spanish Government considered question of Franco's removal was one for Spaniards to decide and that he had been instructed urgently to place before you this statement for your consideration. Ends.

490.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le président, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Chairman, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL

New York, October 31, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I received the teletype dispatch No. 39 concerning Spain. I am afraid the best we would be able to do is to abstain from participation in any debate about the breaking off of relations with Spain basing our action upon the following considerations:

We have no diplomatic relations with the Franco Government at the present time and we do not feel we know enough about the situation to indicate to others what they should do. The U.K. Government can be regarded as quite sincere in its desire for world stability as we are ourselves. They are nearer Spain than we are, they find it rather an advantage than otherwise to maintain their mission in Spain and we do not think it would be appropriate for us to attempt to tell them what they should do.

<sup>1</sup> Le Canada a voté contre la résolution mais celle-ci a été adoptée par l'Assemblée générale. Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, Séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale, cinquante-deuxième séance plénière, 8 décembre 1946, p. 1061.

<sup>1</sup> Canada voted against the resolution but it was adopted by the General Assembly. See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary meetings of the General Assembly, Fifty-second plenary meeting, December 8, 1946, p. 1061.

We share the fear of many that it would not hasten the disappearance of Franco to give Spaniards the impression that outsiders were trying to settle their domestic problems for them. If we have to speak, we may do so in very general terms inspired by the above considerations.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

491.

L.B.P./Vol. 6

Mémorandum du représentant suppléant<sup>1</sup>, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Memorandum by Alternate Representative<sup>1</sup>, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL

[New York,] November 15, 1946

DRAFT CANADIAN DELEGATION TEXT ON SPAIN (1) <sup>2</sup>

The Canadian Delegation does not wish unduly to prolong the discussion of this difficult problem. It is desirable, however, that our views should be placed on the record in order that there may be no misunderstanding of our position. We do not wish to run the risk of having silence mistaken for indifference.

In our opinion every proposal regarding Spain should be judged in the light of its probable effect on the welfare of the Spanish people. It is they who were the first and the most tragic victims of the Franco dictatorship. It is their immediate and lasting welfare that should be the basic concern of all who profess an interest in the Spanish problem. It is from this point of view that the Canadian delegation will examine all the proposals that are placed before this Committee of the General Assembly.

In its detestation of the actions of the present ruler of unhappy Spain the Canadian Government shares the views of those who have preceded us in this discussion. We do not forget that General Franco and those who established and supported him, including the Germany of Hitler and the Italy of Mussolini, have brought tragic sufferings to the people of Spain. We know that that suffering still continues. Nor are we unmindful of the fact that both

<sup>1</sup>H. L. Keenleyside

<sup>2</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum: <sup>2</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

Telephoned my strong objections to this draft Nov[ember] 16th, 5:30 P.M.—
to Escott [t] Reid in New York. L. B. P[EARSON]

before and during the war the Franco regime collaborated closely with those evil forces that brought Europe and the world to the very verge of disaster. By his actions at home and by his collaboration with the other fascist regimes abroad General Franco has defiled the history of a great and noble people.

We recognize also the dangers inherent in the continued existence of organized fascism anywhere in the world. We know that so long as such regimes continue in power they are likely to become a source of infection to other nations and they inevitably constitute a dangerous encouragement to subversive groups throughout the world.

For these reasons, and because the present Government of Spain exemplifies in its spirit and conduct the very antithesis of all that the Canadian and other democratic and humane peoples hold most dear, we join in the hope and expectation that there will be an early termination to the activities of this malevolent regime.

It is because we hold these views concerning the present Spanish dictatorship that we have recently refused to establish diplomatic relations with Spain. We have rejected the Spanish proposals with the definite statement that we cannot consider the exchange of diplomatic missions so long as Spain remains under its present leadership.

Our dislike of the Franco dictatorship, however, does not blind us to the difficulties facing those who, by the employment of positive measures, would endeavour to assist the Spanish people to gain their freedom.

In a better organized world, in a world free from the tremendous burdens of reconstruction and reorganization which today face us all, and in particular the countries of Europe, the solution of this problem would be very greatly simplified. We might then find practical means of assisting the people of Spain without placing renewed and redoubled burdens on those European peoples who are still struggling under the accumulated miseries of five years of total war.

We must not at this time, by incurring new responsibilities, risk the loss of those meagre improvements that have been achieved during the last eighteen months. With chaos still around us we must not run the risk of creating additional chaos.

Nor would the Canadian Government be prepared to share in the responsibility for the adoption of any policy that would cause, or be likely to cause, a revival of civil war in Spain. We are convinced that, great as are their present sufferings, the people of Spain would suffer even more profoundly if their country were to undergo the bitter tragedy of renewed domestic conflict.

It has been proposed that the United Nations should act together in the severance of all diplomatic relations with the present Government of Spain. Whether such a step would be likely to weaken the internal position of the Spanish dictatorship is, in our opinion, open to question. It is possible that such an action would convince additional elements within Spain that their country can never enjoy normal and mutually profitable relations with the remainder of the world until it is freed from its present leadership.

But it is also possible that such concerted action might be so exploited in the controlled press and radio of an insulated Spain that the dictatorship might actually bolster its defences by calling to its aid the traditional national pride of the Spanish people. The Canadian delegation is not yet convinced that this would not be the more probable result of the proposed diplomatic sanction.<sup>1</sup>

It should also be recognized that, once started on the course of coercion, it would be very difficult for the nations concerned to withdraw from that dangerous highway. One step might lead to another with consequences which, in the present state of the world, would be disastrous to our plans for the early reparation of the ravages of war.

So far as the proposal to break diplomatic relations with Spain is concerned, the Canadian position is relatively simple and its course correspondingly clear. We have no diplomatic relations with the Franco Government and we have no intention of altering that situation.

With regard to the Spanish problem as a whole, the Canadian attitude can perhaps best be summarized as follows:

We detest and deplore the past record and the present policies of the Franco dictatorship.

We hope that the Spanish people may themselves find means to rid themselves of Franco and to establish a democratic, responsible and enlightened administration.

Because of our sympathy for and interest in the welfare of the people of Spain we shall be glad to assist in the achievement of this objective if feasible and proper means can be found.

We are not prepared to support any course that would be likely to

- (a) cause renewed civil war in Spain;
- (b) endanger the fragile fabric of European rehabilitation or slow down the processes of European recovery.

Within the confines of this policy we are prepared to collaborate with the other members of the United Nations in any course that promises to bring relief to the people of Spain, and to release the European continent from this potential menace to its security and peace.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal Note:
What do we think then?

<sup>2</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal Note:
Some policy!

492.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 123

Ottawa, November 16, 1946

DELAS No. 80. Following for Keenleyside from Pearson, Begins: Our files here do not definitely show that we ever told any Franco representative that we would not institute diplomatic relations with Spain as long as the Franco Government is in power. In the circumstances, therefore, I do not think it would be wise to include any specific reference of this kind in any statement which the Delegation makes. For one thing, it might make it more difficult for us not to send a representative to Spain immediately if Franco should be overthrown, and we might not be in a position at present to find such a representative. Ends.

493.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 197

New York, November 18, 1946

TOP SECRET. ASDEL No. 131. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Spain.

The United Kingdom delegation has sent us the following revised draft resolution which results from discussions between the United Kingdom delegation and the United States State Department and which supersedes the previous draft which I sent you. Text begins:

The people of the United Nations are desirous of welcoming the people of Spain into the United Nations as soon as they give proof that they have a Government which derives its power from the Spanish people and which is willing and able to meet the obligations imposed by the Charter upon members of the United Nations.

THEREFORE

The General Assembly of the United Nations, convinced that the Franco Fascist Government of Spain, which was imposed by force upon the Spanish people by the Axis Powers and which gave material assistance to the Axis Powers in the war, does not represent the Spanish people, and is pursuing policies which make impossible the participation of the Spanish people with the peoples of the United Nations in international affairs;

Desiring to secure the participation of all free and democratic peoples, including, when they achieve that status, the people of Spain, in the community of nations;

Recognizing that it is for the Spanish people to settle the form of their Government and wishing, by peaceful means, to encourage the re-establishment of democracy in Spain;

Places on record its profound conviction that in the interest of Spain and of world co-operation the people of Spain should give proof to the world that they have a Government which derives its authority from the consent of the governed;

And to achieve that end General Franco should surrender the powers of Government to a Provisional Government broadly representative of the Spanish people, which should guarantee to the Spanish people freedom of speech, religion and assembly and arrange for the prompt holding of a free and untrammelled election in which the representatives of all parties, committing themselves to respect freedom of speech, religion and assembly may seek free from force and intimidation the franchise of the Spanish people.

And invites the Spanish people to bring about by this method the admission of Spain to the United Nations.

The General Assembly further recommends that the Franco Government of Spain be debarred from membership in international agencies set up at the initiative of the United Nations or by members of the United Nations, and from participation in conference or other activities which may be arranged by the United Nations or by these agencies. Text ends. Ends.

494.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 204

New York, November 18, 1946

TOP SECRET. ASDEL No. 135. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Reference my ASDEL No. 131 of November 18th, transmitting the text of revised draft resolution on Spain. This was discussed at a Commonwealth meeting this morning at which Mr. Bevin was present.

1. Bevin stated that the United Kingdom Cabinet had approved of this resolution and that he had informed Byrnes that it would, in the United Kingdom's opinion, be best if this were moved by a Latin American Republic or, if not, by the United States.

2. Makin of Australia wished to have a reference inserted to the findings of the Sub-Committee of the Security Council on Spain, and will submit a revision to Bevin for his consideration. Bevin was clearly reluctant to consider this change and Mr. St. Laurent suggested that perhaps Makin's point would be met by a reference to the fact that the Security Council had transmitted to the Assembly all its records on the Spanish question. No one made any other suggestions for the amendment of the draft resolution other than on the final paragraph. Smuts asked whether this paragraph as drafted would not bar Spain from the International Trade Organization, and Mr. St. Laurent raised the question of its effect on the Aviation Organization. Bevin made it clear that the intent of the paragraph was to bar Spain from membership in organizations set up in future at the initiative of the United Nations, and he had not realized that the International Trade Organization was being set up at the initiative of the United Nations. Mr. Bevin agreed that the words in the final paragraph "or by members of the United Nations" should be deleted.

3. As a result of this discussion, I hope that this extremely badly drafted final paragraph will be revised to make its intent clear.

4. The Indian representative came out strongly against the severance of diplomatic relations with Spain or the imposition of economic sanctions. The first was objectionable since it would deprive us of means of influencing the Spanish Government. The second was objectionable since it might help to precipitate civil war in Spain.

5. If India takes this position publicly, it should be most helpful since India, hitherto, has sided more with the Soviet bloc than with the Western Powers in discussions in most questions before the Assembly. Ends.

495.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 132

Ottawa, November 19, 1946

DELAS No. 84. Following for St. Laurent from Pearson, Begins: I have been reading Escott Reid's telegram No. 204 on the U.K. revised draft resolution on Spain. I take it that the Delegation will be supporting some resolution of this kind. In view of this fact, I think it would be undesirable for us to be vigorous in words to the point of violence when our action is to be so negative. I have had some discussions here (though I have not mentioned the matter to the Prime Minister yet), and I feel fairly certain that the general view will be that we should draw as little attention as possible to our stand on this matter. That being the case, I should think the less we say about it, the better. If, however, some statement is required, I would hope that we would make clear that, while we deplore Franco and all his works, particularly his attitude in the War, we have no desire to have a Fascist dictatorship replaced by any other kind of dictatorship, Monarchist or Communist; that all we are interested in is giving the Spanish people an opportunity freely to express their own views on the kind of Government they desire. Ends.

496.

CH/Vol. 2082

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 1983

Ottawa, November 20, 1946

Following for your information is repetition of tel[egram] received from Canadian delegation in New York dated Nov. 17th, Begins:

ASDEL No. 128. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: A State Department official informed me last night in confidence that the United States has decided to oppose the Polish resolution calling for the severing of diplomatic relations with Spain. While they do not think that this resolution is likely to get a two-thirds majority in the Assembly they fear it may be passed by the Political Committee where only a simple majority vote is required. According to their information the Latin American Republics are divided as follows: Against the Polish resolution 8, probably against 3, in favour 5, doubtful 4.

The Polish resolution will be supported by the Slav Group and by perhaps most of the other European members though The Netherlands may vote against and Iceland, Denmark and possibly Sweden abstain. Other States listed against resolution are the Arabian States, Iran, Turkey, Liberia and the Philippines. The United States also hopes that all Commonwealth countries are going to vote against the resolution. In view of the possibility that the resolution may have a majority vote in the Committee the United States is urging us to vote against it.

I said that the line that we had tentatively decided upon was to abstain on the Polish resolution, but that I would put the State Department's arguments up to Mr. St. Laurent.

We shall be in a better position to decide on our policy after Commonwealth meeting on Monday. There is no great urgency since the Spanish issue will not come up in the Political Committee until the discussion of the presence of the Armed Forces of Members on non-enemy territory and on the Soviet proposals on disarmament. Ends.

497.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 136

Ottawa, November 20, 1946

TOP SECRET. DELAS No. 87. Following for Reid from Riddell, Begins: Your ASDEL No. 135 of November 18th.

Following comment, which was discussed and agreed by Pearson, Ritchie and myself, yesterday, may be of use to the delegation in considering action you should take on Spanish question.

1. One difficulty against which we should try to protect ourselves is that brought out in paragraph 2 of your ASDEL No. 135 of November 18th. Russians are systematically trying to force western nations to exclude Spain from any international organization even of a technical character, with United Nations affiliations. As Mr. Martin knows, they have succeeded in this policy in case of narcotics control, and tried to compel us to put Spain out of PICAQ. We have learned recently that same question has arisen in regard to telecommunications. U.S.S.R. at four-powers Telecommunications Conference in Moscow in October stated that they would not be present at World Telecommunications Conference if Spain were invited.

2. In many cases, U.S.S.R. desires to stay out of these technical organizations in order to avoid measure of international control involved, and Spanish question is used merely as a pretext. On the other hand, exclusion of Spain may seriously weaken effectiveness of technical organization such, for example, as telecommunications.

We should, therefore, avoid as much as possible being put in position where Russians can embarrass us by charging inconsistency when we oppose for technical reasons exclusion of Spain from some particular United Nations Organization. Ends.

498.

L.B.P./Vol. 6

Le représentant suppléant, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Alternate Representative, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL

New York, November 20, 1946

My dear Mike [Pearson],

I am sorry that you found my draft on Spain so out of line with Canadian policy. It represented, in my opinion, the consensus of the Delegation's views including those of Mr. St. Laurent who had summed up by saying that

- (a) we would probably have to speak
- (b) we would go along with anyone in our denunciation of Franco, but
- (c) would not agree to any foreseeable proposals for sanctions.

I went over the exact text that I gave you with Sen. Haig, Senator Robertson, and M. J. Coldwell (one from each party). Haig said that it suited him and was what we had agreed in committee. Robertson went over it with great care and came to the same conclusion. He noted the divergence between condemnation and lack of action, but said that that was the position "of the Delegation and of the people at home as well". Coldwell said it was too weak but that it was what the Delegation had agreed and was probably the best—or the most, I am not sure which—that could be expected. He regretted that it could not be made more vigorous both in phrasing and in provision of eventual action if that should become practicable.

After this it was a bit hard to be told by you that my text was “violent”. Even Mr. St. Laurent did not go that far! In fact when we reviewed it together yesterday he proposed to leave in one or two of the paragraphs that I imagine you found open to objection.

I knew that I was inviting a headache when I took this on and as you can see from the foregoing I not only got it but still have it! Coldwell is going to object to my new text although it is probably not modified enough to suit you. I shall go over it again with Mr. St. Laurent before I send a copy to you.

We had a dinner for Najera* last night with Paul Martin presiding. It was a great success with the guest of honour creating a very strong impression as I knew he would. Paul was quite enthusiastic.

In summary Najera said that it is his view that the Assembly should go as far in condemnation of Franco as it can go with unanimity. It should not go beyond that point. He would like unanimous intervention but knows that that is not possible. He wants unanimity in whatever is done because otherwise Franco will be able to say that the British and Americans and whoever else holds back, are on his side.

This is, of course, in line with our policy.

Please forgive the writing. I did not want to give this to one of the girls, or to put it on file.

Yours

HUGH [KEENLEYSIDE]

499.

L.B.P./Vol. 6

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au représentant suppléant, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Alternate Representative, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, November 25, 1946

Dear Hugh [Keenleyside],

I have just received your personal letter of November 20th and am extremely sorry over the disappointment that my intervention in the Franco draft speech has caused you. I would have much preferred to take this draft up with you when you were in Ottawa, but I was not able to do so. Therefore, I telephoned New York. I hope that my observations and reactions were correctly reported to you.

* H. E. Señor Don Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs and Head of Mexican Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly.

In the first place, I do not yield to anyone on the strength of my feelings about the Franco regime. So far as I am concerned, the adjectives which you use in your draft correctly describe it. I would go as far as any person in advising action which would remove that regime, but, as you point out, that action must be effective for the purpose indicated and not react against the welfare of the people of Spain, who would be its first victims if it miscarried.

Personal feelings, however, are not important in connection with a statement of this kind. There are other more important considerations. One is the position of public opinion in Canada and the effect of this on government policy. Another is the impression created in other delegations by the words which we use in a public statement at the United Nations Assembly. As to the first, that is a matter, of course, for Government decision, but I know enough about the viewpoint here to be quite sure that certain people are most anxious that as little controversy as possible be created in Canada over this issue. As to the second point, I sincerely thought that the impression created among other delegations by a statement couched in the terms of your first draft, would not be a good one. I had in mind particularly the contrast between the strength of our language and the weakness of our policy. I do not suggest that we should adopt any other policy, but in view of its negative character, I personally did not think it warranted language as strong as that which you used in the first page or two. The contrast seemed to me to be startling.

I gather that you do not feel that I was justified in using the word "violent" in connection with that language. Possibly it was not "violent" in itself, but it certainly seemed violent to me in comparison with what followed. I do not argue that we should not say that we "detest" Franco and all his actions; it may be true that he has "defiled the history of the Spanish people" and that his regime is "malevolent" but all I felt was that these words constituted a violent prelude to the soft music which followed, namely, a somewhat complicated explanation that we could not do anything about this malevolent fellow because "once started on the course of coercion it would be very difficult for the nations involved to withdraw from that dangerous highway". If Franco is as bad as we have painted him, and I am not arguing that he isn't, then almost any kind of coercion could be justified, if we desired to justify it. We do not so desire, for good and sufficient reasons. Therefore, I think that we should adopt language a little more suited to our justifiable timidity in this matter. That was really all I had in mind.<sup>1</sup>

The delegation in New York may feel differently, and they may be right and I may be wrong. However, I thought I had better give the delegation my own frank opinion. In a nutshell, that opinion is that, as we cannot do anything effective about Franco at the moment, we should say as little as possible; especially as the motives of our friends the Russians in this matter are certainly not above suspicion.

<sup>1</sup> Voir la version finale de la déclaration sur la position du Canada dans Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, trente-septième réunion, 3 décembre 1946, pp. 244-45.

<sup>1</sup> See the final version of the statement on Canada's position in United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Thirty-seventh meeting, December 3, 1946, pp. 244-245.

I should end by expressing to you my sympathy in this headache that you have voluntarily contracted. It is certainly that. I would like to give you an aspirin for that headache, but, as that is not possible, I would hate to do anything to make it harder for you to bear.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

500.

DEA/5475-CU-40

*Mémorandum du chef, la première direction politique,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, First Political Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] December 4, 1946

The following is a brief summary of the position in regard to Spain before the General Assembly:

1. There is a resolution proposed by Poland and Byelo-Russia calling for the breaking off of diplomatic relations and the imposing of economic sanctions. It is perhaps worthy of note that if economic sanctions were imposed the burden of enforcing them would fall on Atlantic naval powers, and particularly on the United Kingdom.

2. There is a United States resolution recommending that Franco Spain be debarred from membership in international affairs set up on the initiative of the United Nations, and calling upon General Franco to surrender his power to a provisional government.

3. The Canadian delegation has associated itself with criticisms of the Franco Government in Spain and has indicated its willingness to support the second part of the United States resolution but not the first part which would debar Spain from all bodies organized under the United Nations.

501.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 412

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 386

New York, December 11, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 259. Following for Mr. St. Laurent from Reid, Begins: Spanish Question.

My ASDEL No. 254, December 10th.† My immediately following teletype† gives the text of the Resolution on Spain<sup>1</sup> adopted by the First Committee on December 9th and on which we abstained.

2. This Resolution may be coming before the General Assembly tomorrow Thursday, December 12th.

3. I was not at the delegation meeting this morning since I had to attend a meeting of the drafting Sub-Committee on Disarmament which began at 9:30. I understand, however, that Mr. Coldwell expressed quite strongly the view that we should vote in the General Assembly in favour of the Resolution on Spain. He regrets that we did not, in the First Committee on December 9th, vote in favour of the Sub-Committee's proposal calling on the members of the United Nations to break diplomatic relations with Spain. He is somewhat mollified by the fact that we did vote for the second paragraph of the Belgian amendment recommending that all members of the United Nations immediately recall from Madrid their Ambassadors and Ministers Plenipotentiary.

4. Mr. Martin has asked me to try my hand at drafting a statement which the Canadian delegate might make in plenary session when the Spanish Resolution is up for discussion.

5. I have spoken to him on general terms about the nature of the statement which we might make which would justify our voting in favour of the Resolution presented to the Assembly but he has not seen the draft statement which I have just prepared and which follows, since he is now attending the plenary meeting at Flushing. He will, no doubt, be getting in touch with you direct on this question.

6. The text of the draft statement which I have prepared reads as follows:

“(1) The Canadian delegation made clear at the meeting of the First Committee of this Assembly on December 3rd the attitude of the Canadian Government on the Spanish question. I need not, therefore, repeat now the points contained in the statement which we made then.

“(2) When this Resolution, which is now before the General Assembly, was being considered by the First Committee on December 9th, Canada voted against that part of the Resolution which recommends that the Franco Government be debarred from membership in Specialized Agencies and from participation in Conferences or other activities which may be arranged by the United Nations or by the Specialized Agencies.

“(3) We did so because we feel that the question of the participation of any State which is not a member of the United Nations in any Specialized Agency should be decided on one basis only—the practical advantages to the peoples of the United Nations of the Government of that State being committed to the obligations of membership in that Agency. This is the position which the Canadian Government has consistently maintained in the meetings of the Economic and Social Council and of the Specialized Agencies. In our opinion, no useful purpose is served by limiting the scope or weakening the effectiveness of the Specialized Agencies in order to debar the Franco Government from the obligations of membership in them.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale pendant la seconde partie de la première session du 23 octobre au 15 décembre 1946. Résolution 39(1), pp. 63-64.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly during Its First Session from 23 October to 15 December 1946. Resolution 39(1), pp. 63-64.

“(4) We put our views strongly and we continue to maintain that the views we expressed on this question are correct. However, this part of the Resolution was passed by the First Committee by a vote of 32 to 5 with 8 abstentions. In view of this clear expression of the views of the great majority of the members of this Assembly, we believe that no useful purpose would be served by our continuing to oppose this section of the Resolution now before the Assembly. Canada will not, therefore, because of the inclusion of this section in the Resolution oppose the passage of the Resolution.

“(5) The paragraph in the Resolution which immediately follows the paragraph on the Specialized Agencies recommends that if, “within a reasonable time”, the Franco Government is not replaced, the Security Council should “consider the adequate measures to be taken in order to remedy the situation.”

“(6) The term “measures” has a special meaning in the Charter. It is used in Chapter VII to mean what used to be called sanctions. Under Article 39 of the Charter the Security Council, before considering what “measures” should be taken against a State, must first, however, decide a preliminary question. This preliminary question is whether there exists a threat to the peace, a breach of the peace or an act of aggression.

“(7) It is obviously constitutionally improper for this Assembly to recommend that the Security Council, in the event that the Franco regime remain in power more than a reasonable time, consider the application of sanctions against Spain before first determining under Article 39 that the continued existence of the Franco regime constitutes a threat to the peace, a breach of the peace or an act of aggression.

“(8) It is to be assumed that this Assembly would not pass a Resolution which is constitutionally improper. It is, therefore, to be assumed that what this part of the Resolution means is that, in the circumstances envisaged, the Security Council should determine whether the continued existence of the Franco regime is a threat to peace and, if it decides that it is a threat to peace, it would then go on to consider “the adequate measures to be taken in order to remedy the situation.”

“(9) This part of the Resolution is based on an amendment proposed by the Belgian delegation. I am confident, Mr. President, that this was the meaning which the Belgian delegation had in mind when they drafted their Resolution.

“(10) I would suggest, however, that the intent of this part of the Resolution has not been clearly expressed and it would, therefore, be wise and useful if the General Committee, acting under Rule 36 of the Rules of Procedure of this Assembly, should revise the language of this part of the Resolution in order to make it clear that the Assembly is not acting unconstitutionally and is not recommending to the Security Council that it act unconstitutionally.

“(11) On the understanding that the necessary drafting changes in the Resolution will be made by the General Committee, the Canadian delegation is prepared to vote in favour of the Resolution”.<sup>1</sup>

7. (Please repeat to Mr. Pearson in Washington). Ends.

SOUS-SECTION vi/SUB-SECTION vi

VETO

502.

DEA/5475-L-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au conseiller, la délégation à la Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Adviser, Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 28, 1946

Dear Mr. Ignatieff,

We are giving consideration in the Department to the possibility of our suggesting, at an appropriate time in the Assembly debates, that the Assembly adopt a resolution clarifying the meaning of the provisions of the Charter on the pacific settlement of disputes by the Security Council.

2. One of the reasons why the Security Council has found it difficult to carry out the functions assigned to it in Chapter VI of the Charter is that the provisions of Chapter VI are obscure. An attempt to clarify these provisions might therefore help to make the work of the Security Council a little easier.

3. At San Francisco the Co-ordination Committee realized the defects in the draft of Chapter VI and reached agreement among themselves on a re-draft. However, it was then too late to secure the Conference's approval in view of the pressure to bring the Conference to an end.

4. I enclose four copies of a draft resolution prepared in the Department for possible submission to the Assembly. The draft is dated August 27th.

<sup>1</sup>Cette déclaration ne fut pas prononcée. Le Canada s'est abstenu lors du vote. Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, Séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale, cinquante-neuvième séance plénière, 12 décembre 1946, p. 1222.

<sup>1</sup>This statement was not presented. Canada abstained on the vote. See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Plenary Meetings of the General Assembly, Fifty-ninth Plenary Meeting, December 12, 1946, p. 1222.

5. I think it would be useful if you were to show this draft to the United Kingdom, United States, and Australian representatives on the Security Council, and say that we would appreciate their comments both on the text of the draft resolution and on whether they think it might be useful to have such a resolution introduced at the Assembly. From their experience in the Council, we know that they will be able to suggest many improvements in our draft.

Yours sincerely,

E. REID

[PIÈCE JOINTE / ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum du chef, la deuxième direction politique

Memorandum by Head, Second Political Division

[Ottawa,] August 27, 1946

DRAFT RESOLUTION CLARIFYING THE MEANING OF THE PROVISIONS OF THE CHARTER ON THE PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES
BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Since certain obscurities in the provisions of the Charter on the pacific settlement of disputes by the Security Council have given rise to difficulties in their practical application, the General Assembly approves of the following restatement of the provisions of the Charter dealing with the pacific settlement of disputes by the Security Council.

I. UNDERTAKINGS OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes that:

(1) If it is a party to an international dispute, it will seek a solution by peaceful means so that the maintenance of international peace and security will not be endangered. (Article 2, paragraph 3; Article 33, paragraph 1.);

(2) If it is a party to an international dispute which endangers international peace and security and it fails to settle it by peaceful means, it will refer it to the Security Council. (Article 37, paragraph 1.)

II. METHODS BY WHICH DISPUTES OR SITUATIONS MAY BE BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL

2. The General Assembly or any Member of the United Nations or the Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any international dispute or any situation, provided that the situation is one which might lead to international friction or give rise to an international dispute. (Article 11, paragraph 3; Article 35, paragraph 1; Article 99.)

3. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council any international dispute to which it is a party, provided that it accepts in advance, so far as this dispute is concerned, the undertakings of Members set forth in paragraph 1 above. (Article 35, paragraph 2).

III. PROCEDURES IN SECURITY COUNCIL

4. As soon as a dispute or situation has been brought to the attention of the Security Council, it shall be placed on the agenda of the Security Council by the Secretary-General and no vote by the Security Council shall be required in order to authorize its inclusion on the agenda.

5. Subject to the exception noted in paragraph 10 below, the Security Council has the right to deal with a dispute or a situation only if a continuance of that dispute or situation is likely to endanger international peace and security. Therefore, the first step the Security Council must take, once a dispute or a situation has been brought to its attention, is to determine whether a continuation of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger international peace and security. This may require a preliminary investigation by the Council of the dispute or situation but this preliminary investigation shall be limited to the question whether the dispute or situation is likely to endanger international peace and security. For the purpose of such a preliminary investigation, the Council may appoint a committee of enquiry which may exercise its functions elsewhere than at the seat of the United Nations. (Article 34).

6. Once the Council has determined that a dispute or situation is likely to endanger international peace and security the Council has the duty to deal with it for the Members of the United Nations have, in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, conferred on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. (Article 24, paragraph 1.)

7. Having determined that a dispute or situation is one which it has the duty to deal with, the Security Council may take any or all of the following three courses of action in any order it sees fit:

(1) It may remind the parties to a dispute of their undertaking to settle it by peaceful means of their own choice (Article 33, paragraph 2);

(2) It may recommend to the states parties to a dispute or concerned in a situation that they adopt those certain particular peaceful means or methods of adjustment which, in the opinion of the Security Council, seem to be most likely to succeed (Article 33, paragraph 2);

(3) It may recommend terms of settlement to the parties to a dispute (Article 36, paragraph 1).

8. In deciding between the three possible courses of action, the Council should take into consideration:

(a) any procedures for the settlement of a dispute which have already been adopted by the parties (Article 36, paragraph 2), and that

(b) as a general rule, legal disputes should be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court. (Article 36, paragraph 3.)

9. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through regional arrangements or agencies, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. (Article 52, paragraphs 1 and 3).

IV. DISPUTES WHICH DO NOT ENDANGER INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

10. The Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, deal with the dispute even though it is not one likely to endanger international peace and security and the Council may make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute. (Article 38.)

V. VOTING IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL

11. A party to a dispute shall abstain from voting on all decisions under Chapter VI and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, whether on procedural matters or on other matters. (Article 27, paragraphs 2 and 3).

12. Decisions of the Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members. Procedural matters shall be deemed to include:

(a) decisions on whether the Security Council has the duty to deal with a dispute or situation (i.e., whether the dispute or situation is likely to endanger international peace and security), and

(b) decisions leading up to that decision (e.g., a decision to appoint a committee of enquiry to make a preliminary investigation of the question whether a dispute or situation is likely to endanger international peace and security.)

13. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 11, decisions of the Council on all other matters relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members.

503.

DEA/211-C

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 933

London, October 15, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. We have been considering attitude to be taken by United Kingdom delegation if question of voting in Security Council is raised at forthcoming meeting of United Nations General Assembly.

2. Confidence in Security Council has, in our view, been considerably undermined recently by use made by U.S.S.R. of veto as tactical weapon in Council. This has been done in spite of statement by sponsoring Powers at San Francisco of June 7th, 1945, which concluded "it is not to be assumed that permanent members would use their veto wilfully to obstruct operation of the Council". This has led to suggestions that right of veto ought to be abolished.

3. As regards this suggestion, following observations arise:

(1) To abolish veto would entail amendment to Charter. Article 109(2) provides that for this it is necessary for General Assembly by a two-thirds majority and Security Council by a vote of any seven members to decide on a Conference for purpose. Any amendments recommended by such a Conference only come into force when ratified by two-thirds of the members of the United Nations, including the five permanent members. In our view, even if necessary majorities could be obtained in Assembly and Council, there is no, repeat no, prospect of Soviet Government ratifying any amendment to Article 27.

(2) United States have from the beginning attached importance to right of veto. They might be reluctant to forego the protection which it could in certain circumstances give them.

(3) Granting of this right to five permanent members accords roughly with their relative position in the world and is formal acknowledgement of fact that a refusal by one of them to co-operate in enforcement action would gravely impede, if it did not effectively frustrate, such action.

(4) What has occurred in the Security Council does not prove that right of veto is wrong, though probably the cases in which it can be applied might be reduced by introduction of rules of procedure of kind proposed in my telegram Circular D. 283 of March 26th.† What is wrong is misuse of veto. It has yet to be shown that any alternative voting system can be devised which is not equally open to abuse by a State determined to misuse it.

(5) It is by no means certain that United Kingdom Government should forego right of veto. Circumstances might arise in which a majority on Security Council voted in favour of a course which appeared detrimental to interests of United Kingdom or other members of British Commonwealth. If all decisions were taken by an affirmative vote of any seven members, it might be tempting for an ill-disposed country to obtain decision adverse to us on a matter where our vital interests were concerned.

4. If amendment of Charter is ruled out, there appear to be only two possible lines of approach:

(a) To try to secure agreement between permanent members of Council for repudiation of five-Power statement at San Francisco and subsequent agreement by them to fresh undertakings on use of veto. This, however, in our opinion has no more prospect of Soviet concurrence than a proposal to amend Charter.

(b) By introducing rules of procedure, to lay down conditions for defining a dispute, thereby limiting occasions on which a permanent member could at same time both be a protagonist in a matter before Security Council and use veto on decisions on that matter. Rules of procedure about submission of cases in writing should also be laid down. It seems to us that this remedy affords the most promising and practical approach.

5. Article 30 of Charter lays down that Security Council shall adopt its own rules, which are, therefore, not strictly speaking business of General Assembly. On the other hand, Article 10 of Charter entitles General Assembly to discuss any matters within scope of Charter, or relating to powers and functions in organs provided for in the Charter. It would, therefore, appear to be in order for United Kingdom delegation to propound its suggestions to Assembly.

6. As regards item on General Assembly agenda, proposed by Cuba, for a Conference to amend Charter in order to eliminate veto, we are disposed to take following line:

(1) United Kingdom Government joined in sponsoring voting procedure now included in Article 27 of Charter, believing it to be in accordance with distribution of strength and responsibility among United Nations and burdens they had to bear during war.

(2) We share widespread disappointment in achievements of Security Council to date, but consider it premature and not necessarily correct to make changes in Charter designed to eliminate veto altogether.

(3) While we do not rule out possibility of amending Charter at earlier date, it is relevant that Article 109(3) of Charter already provides for Conference to be called after tenth annual session of General Assembly for purpose of reviewing Charter, and consideration of amendments at this early stage in operation of United Nations Organization seems premature.

(4) It does not necessarily follow that any change that might be made now would be for the better. A distinction should be drawn between provisions of Charter and use made of them. For our part, we feel that, if permanent members regard veto as privilege only to be used when their interests are vitally concerned in matters of major importance, veto will prove to be help instead of hindrance to proper functions of Security Council.

(5) We cannot support interpretation of right of veto to cover preliminary investigations of disputes or situations, long before there is any question of enforcement action. Nor can we support irresponsible use of veto to prevent Security Council from reaching any decision at all, in cases where clear wishes of majority are not to liking of one permanent member. At present stage, however, we would prefer to see permanent members retaining right of veto; if experience has shown need of safeguards against abuse, these should be provided by suitable rules of procedure.

7. If other British Commonwealth Governments have any comments, we should be grateful if they could be telegraphed as soon as possible and repeated to Washington or New York for communication to United Kingdom delegation, now on point of departure for New York.

504.

DEA/211-C

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] October 23, 1946

COMMENTS ON UNITED KINGDOM TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 933 ON THE QUESTION OF VOTING IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL

1. As pointed out in Paragraph 2 of the above telegram, the veto has provided any Great Power under the Charter with the constitutional means of blocking positive action by the Security Council in the discharge of its primary responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security. Whereas the main argument used at San Francisco in favour of the veto was that it was essential for the preservation of unity among the Great Powers, in our view the use of the veto in the past year in the Security Council has demonstrated and underlined their disunity.

2. The veto is, in fact, a device intended to ensure in some measure that the influence of a Great Power in the Organization should correspond to its importance in the world. However, as the Canadian delegation constantly pointed out at San Francisco, it was illogical to single out five powers only for this special treatment and to leave all the rest in the same position under the Charter.

3. The United Kingdom observations in Paragraph 3(1) and 3(2) are sound. It does not seem likely that the discussions on the veto at the General Assembly will bring much in the way of results, though there is the possibility, or more, that the Australians will push their amendment (see telegram No. 13 from Canberra of October 22nd)† to a vote. If it proves possible later to improve the relevant provisions of the Charter, we believe that improvement will come, not from simple removal of the veto power, but from the development in its place of some more effective and acceptable method of making the constitutional authority of the member states inside the Organization correspond more closely to their authority in international affairs.

4. The Canadian delegation, like many other delegations at San Francisco, swallowed the veto only after it had been sugarcoated by the assurances of the Great Powers that their veto power would be used sparingly. The Canadian delegation also trusted that in due course the decisions of the Council might build up a kind of common law which would eventually be incorporated in the Charter itself and that in this way more satisfactory procedures might come to be established. The veto has not been used sparingly and the decisions of the Council have built up a common law, but, as indicated in Paragraph 6(5) of the United Kingdom telegram, it is a bad common law. However, in our opinion, this does not mean that it would be feasible, or possibly even useful, to strive for a limitation of the veto at this time. The most the Assembly could do is to make more difficult the irresponsible use of the veto. It might, for example, adopt in formal terms a statement of what it considers to be the illegitimate use of the veto, under present terms of the Charter. It will be seen from the Australian telegram referred to above that they are likely to oppose this as not going far enough. On the other hand, such a course might well be favoured by the United States delegation if Alger Hiss' views, as reported in Washington teletype WA-3733†, accurately reflect United States policy.

5. The introduction by the Assembly of rules of procedure concerning the definition of a "dispute" and the submission of cases in writing, as suggested in Paragraph 4(b), appears to be a desirable measure and the Canadian delegation could support such a proposal.

6. Paragraph 3(5) of the United Kingdom telegram is a discouraging one. The emphasis therein on the value of the veto in the preservation of "national interests" is a depressing reminder how far we have had to retreat from the ideals and even the language of San Francisco.

505.

DEA/211-C

*Le conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

New York, October 28, 1946

Dear Mike [Pearson],

You may remember that I showed you some time ago a draft of a re-statement which I had done of the Provisions in the Charter on the Pacific Settlement of Disputes. Hopkins has prepared a most useful revision of my memorandum. I am enclosing two copies of it. It is dated October 26th.

You will see that he has put it in the form of a recommendation to the Security Council on rules which should govern the treatment by the Security Council of disputes or situations brought to its attention.

We have discussed the enclosed memorandum with Mr. St. Laurent and, as a result, I am now going to show it informally to the United Kingdom, United States and Netherlands delegations.

We are, of course, not going to do anything precipitous about a resolution of this kind, but it may be that the course of events may indicate a week or so from now that we would be doing a constructive piece of work if we were to present a resolution of this character to the first committee of the Assembly on Political and Security questions.

The British, Americans and the Dutch will no doubt have suggestions to make about a possible revision of our working draft. I should be most happy to receive from you any suggestions that occur to you.

There is nothing, I think, up to the last paragraph which the Soviet Union could legitimately take exception to. Even the last paragraph they would, I think, have been prepared to accept at San Francisco provided, of course, that it contained the joker that a decision on whether or not a matter is procedural is a substantive question requiring Great Power unanimity. However, it is barely possible that in two weeks time they might not object too strenuously to the passage of a resolution along the lines of ours, since this might result in the Assembly not passing a more extreme resolution.

I shall let you know the result of my conversations with the British, Americans and Dutch.

Yours sincerely,

ESCOTT REID

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum du chef, la direction juridique

Memorandum by Head, Legal Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[New York,] October 26, 1946

DRAFT RESOLUTION ON THE PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES
BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL

The General Assembly, conscious that difficulties in the practical application of the provisions of the Charter relating to the pacific settlement of disputes have prevented the Security Council from fulfilling adequately the high functions it is required to exercise on behalf of the United Nations, recommends as follows to the Security Council and the Members of the United Nations:

(1) When a Member of the United Nations or a state which is not a Member brings a dispute to the attention of the Security Council, the Member or state should be required to supply to the Council a detailed statement in writing showing:

(a) what steps have been taken by the states concerned to settle the dispute by peaceful means, as provided in paragraph 1 of Article 33 or otherwise;

(b) in what manner the continuance of the dispute is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

(2) When a Member of the United Nations brings a situation to the attention of the Security Council, the Member should be required to supply to the Council a detailed statement in writing showing:

(a) what steps have been taken by the state or states concerned to seek a solution by peaceful means of its or their own choice.

(b) in what manner the continuance of the situation might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute.

(3) When a dispute or situation is brought to the attention of the Security Council by a Member of the United Nations, or by a state which is not a Member and which has complied with paragraph 2 of Article 35, the dispute or situation should be placed on the agenda by the Secretary General. No vote by the Council should be required to authorize its inclusion.

(4) The first step which the Security Council should take when a dispute or situation is placed on its agenda is to determine without delay whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

(5) When the Security Council has determined that the continuance of a dispute or situation on its agenda is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it is the responsibility of the Council, under paragraph 1 of Article 24 of the Charter to take prompt and effective action in accordance with paragraph 2 of Article 24, paragraph 2 of Article 33, paragraph 1 of Article 36 and paragraph 2 of Article 37. It should without delay pursue any one or more of the following courses of action in whatever order it sees fit:

(a) remind the parties to a dispute of their undertaking to settle it by peaceful means of their own choice;

(b) call upon the states parties to a dispute or concerned in a situation to adopt such particular peaceful means or methods of adjustment as the Council considers most likely to succeed;

(c) recommend terms of settlement to the parties to a dispute.

(6) In deciding the appropriate course of action under (5) above regard should be had to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article 36 of the Charter and to paragraphs 1 and 3 of Article 52 of the Charter.

(7) Where the Charter does not specify what are "procedural matters" under paragraph 2 of Article 27, the expression should be interpreted in practice in the manner best calculated to facilitate the adequate accomplishment by the Council of its purposes. "Procedural matters" should, for instance, be deemed to include:

(a) matters falling under the heading "Procedure" in Articles 28 to 32, inclusive, of the Charter;

(b) determinations by the Security Council on the preliminary question whether the Council has jurisdiction to deal with a dispute or situation (i.e., a determination whether the continuance of a dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security);

(c) decisions leading up to determinations by the Security Council on the preliminary question of its jurisdiction to deal with a dispute or situation, (e.g., the nature of any inquiry to determine the preliminary question);

(d) decisions by the Security Council on whether a matter brought to its attention is a dispute or a situation.

506.

DEA/211-C

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 76

Ottawa, November 4, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. DELAS No. 54. Following from Pearson for Reid, Begins: Your letter of October 28th concerning proposed recommendation to the Security Council.

1. While I fully agree that proposed restatement of procedure governing treatment by the Security Council of disputes or situations brought to its attention would be preferable to procedure as now defined in Charter, it seems to me that difficulties from which the Security Council now suffers are so deeply imbedded in political relations amongst the Great Powers that adjustments of the kind you suggest in the instrument may not materially improve the situation while these difficulties persist, and should be put forward only if you feel certain they will not make things worse.

2. Proposals you make under paragraph 3 of your memorandum will have the effect of taking out of hands of the Security Council all control over its own agenda. While this would undoubtedly eliminate present difficulties arising from preliminary debate on whether items should be included in Agenda, I wonder whether in the long run loss of control over its agenda might not be harmful to the Security Council.

3. It seems to me also that your paragraph 7 changes from substantive to procedural matters subjects on which the Russians will hold very strong views and I should think it unlikely, in existing circumstances, that they would accept your resolution even as an alternative to something more objectionable to them. This, however, is a point on which you will be able to judge more accurately in New York.

4. For these reasons, my own view is that if there is any likelihood whatever that your resolution will be carried only by a majority vote against the opposition of the Eastern bloc, your proposal should be considered and approved by Government before it is put forward on Canadian initiative.

In the meantime, I assume, of course, any discussions on this subject with the United Kingdom, the United States or Netherlands delegations are on a tentative and noncommittal basis. Ends.

507.

DEA/211-C

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 115

New York, November 6, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 78. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Your DELAS No. 54 of November 4th, proposed Resolution on the pacific settlement of disputes by the Security Council.

1. Our hope had been to get the United States to father the Resolution. However, Bevin suggested at Commonwealth meeting this morning that we might try to persuade the five permanent members jointly to sponsor a Resolution of this character. Cadogan is drawing up a memorandum for consideration by the Commonwealth delegates. How far Cadogan's memorandum will be based on ours we do not yet know.

2. Cadogan's next step is to call together a group of officials of the Commonwealth delegations in the hope that they can agree on the text of a Resolution. This Resolution would then be presented to the heads of the Commonwealth delegations. Bevin then contemplates asking the heads of the delegations of the Big Five to meet with him to consider the Resolution. They would probably find it necessary to refer to their Heads of State.

3. We are in entire agreement with this course of action, which seems to offer the only hope of getting a constructive result out of the Assembly discussions of the veto and of the failure of the Security Council to be an effective agency for settling disputes. We are not optimistic about the possibility of success. We agree with you that the value of a Resolution carried by the Assembly against the opposition of the Eastern bloc would be extremely limited.

4. The draft Resolution which we framed for purposes of informal discussion has been shown only to the United Kingdom, United States, Australia and The Netherlands and on a tentative and non-committal basis. In my discussions with members of these delegations, I have made clear that we do not ourselves wish to propose the Resolution, since we feel it should be proposed by that country whose initiative would be best calculated to get it through.

5. Cadogan and Jebb agree with our draft of October 26th and think there is a possibility of securing Soviet concurrence in everything but sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph 7. Van Kleffens agrees with it and I will tomorrow receive his suggestions for minor revision. I will also receive tomorrow from Joe Johnson of the State Department his comments on the draft.

6. We have prepared a new draft, dated November 4th, a copy of which I am sending you today.† It contains two new paragraphs inserted between paragraphs 3 and 4 of the old draft. These paragraphs reproduce the substance of Part (a) of Annex IV of the Foreign Office memorandum on the right of veto. Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the new draft read as follows:

“4. In deciding whether a matter brought before it is a dispute or situation, the Security Council should hold that a dispute exists:

(a) Where the State or States bringing the matter before the Council and the State or States whose conduct is impugned agree that there is a dispute; or

(b) Where the State or States bringing the matter before the Council allege that the attentions or intentions of another State are endangering, or are likely to endanger, the maintenance of international peace and security and the State or States which are the subject of these allegations contest some or all of the facts or the inferences to be drawn from the facts.

5. Where a dispute exists which arises from an allegation by one State that another State has violated the rights of a third State, and the third State supports the allegation, the third State should be deemed to be a party to the dispute.”

7. We have also added a new final paragraph in an effort to implement the proposal made by Parodi of the French delegation in his speech to the Assembly that the abstention of a permanent member should not necessarily be considered as a negative vote. The United Kingdom delegation has also been trying to work out a formula along these lines and so has M. Spaak.

8. Our new paragraph reads as follows:

“1. A member of the Security Council, which before a vote is taken, makes a statement to the following effect should be held to have cast an affirmative vote within the meaning of Article 27 of the Charter:

“While I am not prepared to support this proposal, I am not prepared to prevent its acceptance if that is the desire of the majority. I am willing, in the circumstances, to have my position considered as constituting that degree of concurrence necessary in order that a decision may be reached.”

9. The changes suggested in our proposals on the control of the agenda are perhaps more apparent than real. At present, items automatically go on the “draft agenda”. What we are suggesting is that the decision on whether a matter be transferred from the draft agenda to the agenda should be an automatic result of a determination by the Council that the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. Ends.

508.

DEA/211-C

Mémorandum du conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, au président, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Memorandum from Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Chairman, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SECRET

[New York,] November 7, 1946

DRAFT RESOLUTION ON THE PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES
BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL

I had a long talk yesterday evening with Joe Johnson of the State Department. He is the State Department expert on the Security Council. He said that the views that he expressed were purely his own, since the United States had not yet decided either on objectives or on tactics in this particular matter. He said that I could repeat his remarks to Jebb of the United Kingdom delegation but that he would not wish his remarks to go further in the U.K. delegation than that.

2. He is still opposed to the U.K. proposal which we embodied in paragraphs 4 and 5 of our draft of November 4. This relates to the definition of a dispute. He thinks, and here I am pretty certain he is reflecting the settled views of the State Department, that the more desirable thing is to blur the distinction between dispute and situation in the hope that general agreement may be reached soon that the states directly involved in a situation as well as states party to a dispute abstain from voting. He thinks that the United Kingdom proposal for defining a dispute is a narrowly legalistic approach.

3. He was at first opposed to the statement in paragraph 6 of our draft that "the first step which the Security Council should take when a dispute or situation is placed on its draft agenda is to determine without delay whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security." He had interpreted this to mean an almost immediate vote by the Council on this preliminary question. I explained that this was not our intention and agreed that it was badly phrased. We agreed that a better way of putting it would be somewhat as follows: "The first steps taken by the Security Council when a dispute or situation is placed on its draft agenda should be directed towards settling the preliminary question whether the continuation of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security."

4. I said that what had been in the back of our minds in drafting this paragraph 6 was to try to ensure that the discussions in the early stages in the Security Council should be focussed on the one point of jurisdiction. It would clearly be necessary for the Council to discuss the facts of the case in order to determine whether its continuance was likely to endanger peace, but it would discuss the facts and the charges and counter-charges, not in an effort to arrive at a recommendation on the settlement of the dispute but in order to decide whether it had jurisdiction.

5. He agreed with Jebb that it would be difficult if not impossible to reconcile sub-paragraph (d) of paragraph 10 with the provisions of the Four-Power Declaration at San Francisco. He was also doubtful whether the Soviet Union would accept sub-paragraph (b), which provides that a decision by the Security Council on whether a matter is a dispute or a situation is a procedural decision. I said I thought the Soviet Union would be on extremely weak ground if it tried to oppose this. The Four-Power Declaration at San Francisco was certainly no more than a gloss on the Charter. It could not, therefore, be interpreted to override the clear sense of the Charter. Paragraph 3 of Article 27 stated that "a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting" in decisions under Chapter VI. If a permanent member could veto a decision that a matter was a dispute or that it was a party to a dispute, this proviso in the Charter would in effect be rendered meaningless. I understood that it was a principle of the interpretation of an international document that it was to be assumed that its provisions had some meaning.

6. He is attracted by the proposal in the final paragraph of our memorandum under which abstention would count as concurrence. He drew my attention, however, to the fact that the French version of paragraph 3 of Article 27, in the reference to the concurring votes of the permanent members puts the word "tous" before "les membres permanents". The same is true of the Spanish version.

7. Johnson showed me what seemed to be an extremely useful elaboration of the proposals we make in paragraphs 1 and 2 of our memorandum on the statement which should be made by a state bringing a dispute or situation to the attention of the Security Council. I think this United States proposal should be incorporated in any final memorandum drawn up on this subject.

8. He does not like the final sentence in paragraph 3 and in paragraph 7 stating that no vote by the Council should be required to authorize inclusion in the draft agenda or agenda, respectively, but he did not make the reason for his objection clear to me.

9. He thinks that paragraph 9 of the memorandum is unnecessary and I am inclined to agree.

10. The conversation was, I think, useful since it cleared up a certain misunderstanding in Johnson's mind about the nature of and reasons for our proposals. I said to him that it had seemed to us that the main reason for the failures of the Security Council in dealing with disputes or situations was of course the bad relations between the permanent members but that minor obstacles to the success of the Security Council had resulted from its inadequate rules of procedure and the obscurities in Chapter VI which resulted in legitimate differences of opinion as to what the chapter meant and how the Security Council should proceed under it.

11. I reminded him that at San Francisco the Co-ordination Committee had finally reached unanimous agreement on a new text of Chapter VI which cleared up a considerable number of the obscurities but that it was by then too late in the conference to get the new draft accepted. Our approach to Chapter VI was in accord with this clarification agreed to by the Co-ordination Committee.

12. Johnson is still in two minds about the wisdom of trying to bring greater precision now in the meaning of Chapter VI and in the Rules of Procedure of the Security Council on peaceful settlement. He has a feeling that it may be better if the Security Council is left to stumble along in rather a confused way in the expectation that gradually the permanent members will agree on interpretations which may go even further than the kind of interpretations they might agree on today. I said that I realized the strength of this argument, but that it was also necessary to take into account another consideration and that was the danger in this Assembly either that the Assembly would pass extreme resolutions about the Security Council directed against the Soviet Union or that a long and bitter debate would end in a sense of frustration.

E. REID

509.

DEA/211

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 140

New York, November 8, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 94. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: My immediately preceding teletype. †

Following is text of memorandum of November 7th by Cadogan on the veto. (It may be useful to have a definition of what is meant by the veto. It is submitted that it can be claimed that the veto has been exercised only when the requisite majority of the Security Council—7 members—have been defeated by one or more privileged votes of the 5 permanent members. Clearly, the worst case is where a single permanent member obstructs the will of all the other members of the Council, but logically it must be admitted that the veto is also exercised whenever an otherwise effective majority is defeated by 2, or more, permanent members).

It is generally agreed that there is no possibility of amendment of the Charter at this stage. Nor would there perhaps be urgent need of it if only the Charter could be worked as was intended.

The fact is that the veto has been misused. It originated in the recognition of the fact that a Great Power could not be expected to accept an adverse decision on a matter which it held to affect its vital interests. In practice, it has been used to block any proposal not exactly pleasing to the possessor of the veto. We have had cases, for instance, where the Soviet Government, or one of its satellites, has made a proposal that fails to find support in the Council. Some other member has then put forward another proposal, tending in the same direction but going, admittedly, only part of the way. The Soviet representative has then vetoed this latter proposal. This is senseless: it is preferring no bread to half a loaf.

The declaration made by the sponsoring Powers at the San Francisco Conference in June 1945 gave the assurance that the veto would not be used arbitrarily. But that is exactly what has, in fact, been done.

A possible remedy, therefore, is to seek agreement among the 5 permanent members on certain rules of conduct, if such can be framed. To take the extreme case, the veto should only be employed by the permanent members in defence of their own vital interests, and they would have to state the grounds on which they considered these were at stake. There might be other rules less difficult to establish, e.g., that a proposal could not be vetoed simply for the reason that it did not go far enough: the vetoing Power or Powers would have to state their grounds for holding that the proposal in question was detrimental either to their own interests or to those of the United Nations as a whole, or likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. It might be possible to define other rules of conduct.

If so, their observance would be greatly facilitated if it could be established that a permanent member could abstain without vetoing. A permanent member may genuinely dislike a proposal, but at present has to choose between vetoing and voting for something it dislikes.

The actual wording of the Charter seems pretty clear on the point: substantive decision "shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members, including the concurring votes of the permanent members". It might appear, therefore, that an amendment of the Charter would be necessary. But is it not possible that an interpretative resolution agreed by all would be valid. The United States are in favour of this: the Soviet delegate on one occasion abstained without claiming that his abstention vetoed a decision which, if pressed, he would almost certainly have claimed was one of substance (it is true that he made a somewhat obscure reservation): there is no reason to suppose that China or France would object. In fact, it would not be reasonable for any one of the permanent members to object: there is no question of depriving them of any right: they would merely be given the right, if they chose to avail themselves of it, of divesting themselves of a right. But this would be entirely at their discretion.

If the 5 were agreed on this, there is little doubt that the other members of the Assembly would also agree.

It might be said that if all were agreed, there would be no difficulty about making an amendment to the Charter in this sense. But, apart from the Soviet horror of any amendment to Article 27, there is the difficulty that the entry into force of an amendment depends on ratification by all 5 permanent members and this might not, after all, be forthcoming.

But there is another line of approach to the problem. It is not only the veto that has been misused but the whole machinery of the Council. The primary purpose of the Council is, if other methods have failed, to attempt conciliation—at least that should be the first method that it employs. But this has never been attempted. A number of questions have been put on the Council agenda without any warning or prior consultation. The prime object seems to be, not to find a settlement, but to score points and to trap and trip up the representative of the Government accused or involved. The representative of the Government giving notice of the question opens the discussion in uncompromising terms, and the discussion itself leads straight to a vote, engendering considerable heat on the way.

It is a simple proposition that the fewer votes that are taken, the fewer vetoes can be interposed. Might it not, therefore, be possible—as it is desirable—to get agreement on certain rules of procedure governing the conduct of the case by the Council when it comes to handle it?

For example, might it not be laid down that, except in cases of extreme urgency, a preliminary statement should be submitted in writing: this document should show in what way the peace was threatened: it should include a statement of the steps already taken to reach agreement and achieve a settlement?

It might be possible to go further and prescribe the actual manner of handling the matter in the Council when the latter comes to deal with it, e.g., it might be laid down that the Council shall appoint a Rapporteur, or a Committee of some of its members, to make a further attempt at conciliation.

A related question concerns the provision of Article 27, paragraph 3, of the Charter, whereby parties to a dispute are debarred from voting on decisions under Chapter VI and Article 53, paragraph 2. At present, there is often a tendency to deny that a dispute exists, in order to avoid forfeiting the right to vote. This might be met in part at least if agreement could be reached once and for all on a simple definition of a dispute. A formula has already been devised in London.

To summarize, we ought to try to get agreement among the permanent members:

- (1) On the occasions on which it is legitimate to employ the veto;
- (2) On the right of abstention by a permanent member without thereby vetoing a proposal;
- (3) On the necessity for presenting a case in proper form to the Council, and only after other means of settlement have been tried;
- (4) On certain procedure to be followed by the Council in handling a case, and
- (5) On a definition of a dispute.

It remains to be considered whether any of the above suggestions, or all of them, should be discussed in the first instance privately with the other permanent members, or whether they should be brought forward publicly. It is suggested that, even if they are negatived in private, it should thereafter be announced that they had been made and rejected and we should present them in Committee. We must face the fact that it is very unlikely that the Soviet Government, in their present mood, will accept all, or indeed any, of them. But that need not deter us from putting forward suggestions that we consider reasonable and likely to be effective: we shall have made the best contribution we can, and the responsibility for opposing all improvement must rest where it properly belongs. Ends.

510.

DEA/211

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 147

New York, November 9, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 100. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: In speaking at Commonwealth meeting this morning on Cadogan's memorandum on the veto, Mr. St. Laurent said that it was apparent that a very large majority of the members of the Assembly were in favour of passing a Resolution on the exercise of the veto. It would be unfortunate if it appeared that the smaller States were trying to wrest power from the Big Five which had been given them by the Charter and were trying to do this in spite of the opposition of the Big Five. What we should aim at, therefore, should be a statement to the world of an agreement between the Big Five and the other members of the United Nations about how the veto should be used. Such a statement would restore confidence in the Security Council.

2. He would deprecate any statement coming from the Great Powers which contained some of the passages in Cadogan's memorandum. Some of these passages were a retrogression even from the Four-Power statement at San Francisco. In that statement, the Great Powers had said that it was not to be assumed that they would use their veto power wilfully to obstruct the operation of the Council. They also, in the speeches which they gave to the San Francisco Conference before the veto provisions were accepted, gave the impression that they would use the veto not to protect their own interests but to promote the purposes of the whole Organization.

3. Cadogan had, however, said that the veto "originated in the recognition of the fact that a Great Power could not be expected to accept an adverse decision on a matter which it held to affect its vital interests". The logical implication of this statement was that a Great Power could not be expected to give up its veto when it is a party to a dispute. Yet the Great Powers had already agreed under the Charter to do this.

4. Cadogan had also stated that "the veto should only be employed by the permanent members in defence of their own vital interests". Mr. St. Laurent contrasted this with Senator Connally's statement on June 20th, 1945, at a meeting of Commission III at San Francisco that the Great Powers "will discharge the duties of their office not as representatives of their Governments, not as representatives of their own ambitions or their own interests, but as representatives of the whole Organization in behalf of world peace and in behalf of world security".

5. The other Great Powers did not protest the language of Connally's statement and it was with the kind of assurance which Connally had given, in mind that the nations which were not Great Powers had signed the Charter.

6. It would have a considerable reassuring effect if the Great Powers included in their proposals to the Assembly a statement along somewhat the same lines as Connally's.

7. Mr. St. Laurent said that he was concerned over the terms of the draft Australian resolution under which the Assembly would state that it "considers that in some instances the use and the threatened use of such power of veto have not been in keeping either with the general purposes and principles of the Charter or with the understanding of the United Nations Conference on International Organization held at San Francisco, and, therefore, earnestly requests that the permanent members of the Security Council shall refrain from exercising this power of veto except in cases under Chapter VII of the Charter." Any request to the permanent members to refrain from exercising a veto, except under Chapter VII, would open the way to the Soviet Union to argue that what they were being asked to do was to agree to a modification of the Charter as they construed it in the Four-Power statement at San Francisco. Mr. St. Laurent referred to the chain of events argument in that Four-Power statement. Ends.

511.

DEA/211-C

Mémorandum du conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, au président, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Memorandum from Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Chairman, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SECRET

[New York,] November 9, 1946

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Dr. Van Kleffens asked me to have lunch with him today. Dr. Van Roijen was also present.

2. Dr. Van Kleffens read to me a memorandum which he had written commenting on my draft resolution of November 4. He also gave me the attached statement† which he prepared some months ago for possible delivery at a Security Council meeting but did not in fact deliver.

3. On the whole Dr. Van Kleffens is in agreement with the ideas expressed in the draft resolution.

4. His main point of divergence is that he conceives of two stages in the preliminary examination of a dispute or situation brought to the attention of the Security Council. During the first stage the Council decides whether there is a prima facie case and whether the dispute or situation has been brought in good faith. If it decides this in the affirmative, the matter is moved from the draft agenda to the agenda of the Council. The Council then embarks on a discussion of the question of whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

5. Dr. Van Kleffens agrees with Mr. Johnson of the State Department that it is desirable to retain the provision in the existing Rules of Procedure of the Council under which a vote is required to put a matter on the agenda (as distinct from the draft agenda, which is under the control of the Secretary-General).

6. Dr. Van Kleffens is not satisfied with the definition of a dispute given in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the draft resolution. In the first place, he thinks that paragraph 4 should begin somewhat as follows: "In deciding whether a matter which it has jurisdiction to take cognizance of is a dispute or a situation, the Security Council should hold that a dispute exists." He also thinks that while (a) and (b) are good examples, (a) and (b) are not an exhaustive list of examples and that there is contained in paragraph 5 another definition of a dispute.

7. His own opinion on the definition of a dispute is contained in the attached memorandum† which he gave me. It is "that there should be a stated claim and a denial of that claim; the denial being either express or implied."

8. Dr. Van Kleffens is not satisfied that the examples of procedural matters given in paragraph 10 completely exhausts the list of procedural matters implicit in the Four-Power Declaration at San Francisco. He did not, however, have any explicit suggestions for addition to this list.

9. So far as paragraph 11 is concerned on the possibility of abstention being made equivalent to concurrence, his comment was that this would "commend itself to sane people."

10. Dr. Van Kleffens said that The Netherlands would be glad if we so desired to join themselves with us in presenting to the Assembly proposals of the character set forth in the draft resolution. I felt that the farthest I could go was to say that I was very grateful and to go on to say that our feeling of course was that we wanted to see proposals of this character put forward in the Assembly by whatever state was most likely to get them through, and that it might be best if either the United States or the United Kingdom were to present proposals of this character.

11. Dr. Van Kleffens also suggested the possibility that Australia might join with The Netherlands and Canada, though he had doubts about the wisdom of this, since the Australians so often put things to the Assembly the wrong way.

12. During lunch Dr. Van Kleffens said that he hoped Canada would be able to support The Netherlands for election to the Economic and Social Council. I said that we had made up a list of those countries we intended to support and that The Netherlands was on this list. I could not promise that there would not be changes in the list but I left Dr. Van Kleffens with the impression that there was little chance of The Netherlands coming off it.

512.

DEA/5475-BA-40

*Le conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

New York, November 12, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I enclose a copy of a draft paper on the Veto† which has been prepared by Sir Alexander Cadogan for possible communication to Mr. Molotov.

The United Kingdom delegation has to-day sent copies of this paper to Mr. J. V. Wilson (N.Z.), Mr. K. H. Bailey (Aus), Mr. K. P. S. Menon (Ind) and Mr. D. D. Forsyth (S.A.). We are to have a discussion about it with Cadogan in a day or so.

I also enclose three copies of the latest draft of our own paper on the same subject. We put the finishing touches on it to-day and I am sending it to the people to whom Cadogan sent his paper.

Mr. St. Laurent has copies of both papers.

Yours sincerely,

ESCOTT REID

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Memorandum by Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SECRET

[New York,] November 12, 1946

RESOLUTION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON PACIFIC SETTLEMENT
BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Difficulties in the practical application of the provisions of the Charter relating to pacific settlement have prevented the Security Council from fulfilling adequately the obligations imposed on it by all the Members of the United Nations. The experience of the past nine months has demonstrated that the provisions of the Charter relating to pacific settlement require clarification and that the procedures followed by the Security Council in dealing with the pacific settlement of disputes and situations require to be more closely defined. The approval by the General Assembly of a memorandum intended to assist in the process of clarification and definition would be of assistance to the Security Council.

THEREFORE

The General Assembly approves the annexed memorandum on pacific settlement by the Security Council, and requests the Security Council and the Members of the United Nations to give practical effect to the recommendations embodied therein.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

MEMORANDUM ON PACIFIC SETTLEMENT BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL

1. By Article 24 of the Charter, the Members of the United Nations have conferred on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and have agreed that, in carrying out this responsibility, the Security Council acts on their behalf. The Security Council is moreover required by Article 24 to act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The Charter has thus imposed on each individual member of the Security Council, permanent and non-permanent, the obligation to exercise its rights and responsibilities as a member of the Council not on behalf of its own special interests but on behalf of the United Nations as a whole. This applies to the votes which a member casts in the Security Council as well as to its other actions in the Council.

2. The special voting position in the Security Council of its permanent members imposes on each of them special responsibilities since failure by any one of them to concur in certain decisions supported by the requisite number of other members of the Council may prevent the Council from exercising its proper functions. In view of these special responsibilities, each permanent member is under an obligation to all the other Members of the United Nations not to use its special voting position wilfully to obstruct the work of the Council. Each permanent member should exercise its veto only in the interests of the United Nations as a whole. If a permanent member decides, after careful consideration, to exercise its veto, it should, before exercising it, state the grounds on which it bases its conclusion that the interests of the whole Organization require that it exercise its veto in this particular instance. Since the requirement of unanimity of the permanent members can be met only if the permanent members are willing to accept compromises, a permanent member should not veto a proposal on the ground that it does not go far enough.

3. In order that a permanent member may not have to veto a proposal which it feels it cannot actively support, the right of a permanent member to refrain from supporting a proposal, without by so doing exercising the veto, should be formally recognized. Therefore, a permanent member which, before a vote is taken, makes a statement to the following effect should be held to have cast an affirmative vote within the meaning of Article 27 of the Charter: "While I am not prepared to support this proposal, I am not prepared to prevent its acceptance if that is the desire of the majority. I am willing, in the circumstances, to have my position considered as constituting the degree of concurrence necessary in order that a decision may be reached."

4. All the Members of the United Nations have under Article 33 of the Charter undertaken that, if they are parties to any dispute the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, they will first of all seek a solution by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice. The spirit of this undertaking applies to situations which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute. Therefore, when a State brings a dispute or a situation to the attention of the Security Council, it should submit in writing a preliminary statement setting forth the steps which have been taken by the states concerned to seek a solution by peaceful means of their own choice.

5. The Security Council ought not to be asked to consider frivolous complaints or complaints which do not appear to be brought in the bona fide belief that they involve disputes or situations likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. Therefore, a state which brings a dispute to the attention of the Security Council should submit in writing a preliminary statement showing in what manner the continuance of the dispute is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. Similarly, a state which brings a situation to the attention of the Security Council should submit in writing a preliminary statement showing in what manner the continuance of the situation might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute.

6. Apart from disputes brought to its attention under Article 38, the Security Council has the right to deal only with disputes or situations the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. The preliminary question to be settled therefore when a dispute or a situation is brought to the attention of the Security Council is whether the Council has jurisdiction to deal with the matter, that is to say whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. In order to ensure orderly procedure, the early stages of the consideration of a dispute or situation by the Security Council should be directed towards settling the preliminary question whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. It may be necessary for the Council in these early stages to discuss the facts of the case and the claims and the counter-claims, but the purpose of this examination should be, not to arrive at a recommendation on the settlement or adjustment of the dispute or situation, but to decide the preliminary question of jurisdiction.

7. The primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security was conferred on it by the Members of the United Nations to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations. Therefore once the Security Council has determined that the continuance of a dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it is the responsibility of the Council to take prompt and effective action in accordance with paragraph 2 of Article 24, paragraph 2 of Article 33, paragraph 1 of Article 36 and paragraph 2 of Article 37. This responsibility can be discharged only if the Council without delay pursues one or more of the three courses of action set forth in these provisions of the Charter. It may pursue these courses in any order it sees fit. The three courses of action are (a) to remind the parties to a dispute of their undertaking to settle it by peaceful means of their own choice; (b) to call upon the states parties to a dispute or directly involved in a situation to adopt such particular peaceful means or methods of adjustment as the Council considers most likely to succeed; (c) to recommend terms of settlement to the parties to a dispute.

8. Under the proviso of paragraph 3 of Article 27 of the Charter, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting in decisions under Chapter VI. This proviso would be rendered of no effect if a permanent member of the Security Council could veto a decision that a dispute exists or that it is a party to a dispute. Therefore decisions by the Security Council on whether a matter brought to its attention is a dispute or a situation, and decisions on which are the states parties to a dispute, should be deemed to be decisions on procedural matters within the meaning of paragraph 2 of Article 27. Similarly, all decisions by the Security Council leading up to determinations by it on the preliminary question of its jurisdiction to deal with a dispute or situation should be deemed to be decisions on procedural matters within the meaning of paragraph 2 of Article 27.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Un texte quelque peu révisé fut présenté au Secrétaire général des Nations Unies par M. L. D. Wilgress le 30 novembre 1946. Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, annexe 10, pp. 348-51.

<sup>1</sup> A slightly revised text was presented to the Secretary-General of the United Nations by Mr. L. D. Wilgress on November 30, 1946. See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 10, pp. 348-51.

513.

DEA/211

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 172

New York, November 13, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 114. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Cadogan's draft paper of November 12th on the veto.

This paper was discussed this afternoon at a Commonwealth meeting. Cadogan explained that he considered a paper along these lines as only the first step and that if the Russians accepted it it would be necessary for the five Powers to present to the Assembly an expansion of the proposals made in the paper.

2. Those who were present at the meeting agreed with the wisdom of Mr. Bevin presenting a paper of this character to Mr. Molotov. Various suggestions were made for the revision of the paper which Cadogan said he would take into account in preparing a new draft for submission to Bevin. We shall receive the new draft and I shall send it to you immediately by teletype.

3. I put the point that great Power consultation under the first suggestion should take place only after full discussion in the Council in which each member had expressed its views and unanimity had not resulted. But Cadogan did not commit himself to accept this suggestion. In any event the language is capable of this construction. I supported an Australian suggestion that the sentence should end "in order to give effect to the preponderant opinion of the Council". Cadogan did not accept this precise wording but will put in something to meet this point.

4. I repeated our objections to the reference in the second suggestion to questions "of vital importance to themselves". I said that in our opinion this represented a retrograde step and suggested that the second sentence begin with "if there is not unanimity it might be agreed that the minority of the permanent members would refrain from using their veto except in the interests of the United Nations as a whole" and that a new sentence be added, "it is, of course, recognized that this principle would not apply to enforcement measures under Chapter VII". Cadogan was very disinclined to accept this. He believes that the United Kingdom might want to use the veto at some time under Chapter VI in defence of its own vital interests. Though he did not say so, I think the sort of case he has in mind is a demand from Ireland that Northern Ireland be transferred to them. Australia supported my stand, pointing out that even if the United Kingdom voluntarily relinquished the use of its veto under Chapter VI in defence of its interests, no recommendation could be made against it unless concurred in by all the other permanent members of the Council and the necessary number of non-permanent members. I think it is likely that Cadogan will recommend to Bevin that the second suggestion be amended by striking out the words in line 4 "to themselves or".

5. Cadogan agreed that the words "in the first instance" in the fifth suggestion might give the impression that the Council should not first of all decide whether it had jurisdiction and said that he would make this point clear.

6. On the sixth suggestion I said that there was a strong argument for keeping the distinction between a dispute and a situation blurred in the hope that the Charter could in time be interpreted to mean that the States directly concerned in a situation lose their vote. Hasluck of Australia supported me on this and referred to a memorandum presented to the Security Council's Committee of Experts on procedure. This memorandum by Liang had argued that the proviso of paragraph 3 of Article 27 should be interpreted to mean that a State directly concerned in a situation should abstain from voting. I think Cadogan, who has never been convinced about the wisdom of defining a dispute, will withdraw this sixth suggestion.

7. The other suggestions were agreed to without discussion.

8. Cadogan reported that he had a talk this morning with Cohen and Herschel Johnson of the United States delegation and that the United States delegation were in general agreement with the strategy proposed by Bevin and that their suggestions were very much the same as those embodied in Cadogan's paper.

9. There was not time at the meeting to discuss our own draft resolution of November 12th on Pacific settlement by the Security Council.

10. The debate on the veto opens tomorrow. Meetings of the Committee will be held on Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the Committee room which has facilities for simultaneous interpretation. This means that the general debate on the veto ought to be completed by Saturday and that we will have to speak before the end of this week. The debate is going to cover the three items on the Committee's agenda which relate to the veto—the Australian resolution, and the two resolutions of Cuba, the first calling for a conference to eliminate the veto and the second asking that preparations be made for a conference to review the whole Charter.

11. The progress of the debate this week may indicate that we would be performing a useful service if we were to introduce a resolution along the lines of our draft of November 12th. We might introduce it ourselves or introduce it jointly with The Netherlands and perhaps one or two other countries. Since things will be moving fast towards the end of the week, it would be useful if you could find time to discuss this question with Mr. St. Laurent. Our resolution represents a constructive approach to the problem and can be reconciled with the Four-Power Declaration at San Francisco. Ends.

514.

DEA/5475-BA-40

Déclaration du président, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies<sup>1</sup>

Statement by Chairman, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations<sup>1</sup>

STATEMENT BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE L.S. ST. LAURENT IN COMMITTEE I OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, NOVEMBER 16TH, 1946 . . .

The Canadian delegation does not associate itself with any proposal for the calling at this time of a conference to amend the Charter. We believe that the Charter in its present form should be given a longer period of trial than one year. But the Canadian delegation does join in the demand voiced by so many other delegations that the veto be employed in future with restraint and in the interests of the United Nations as a whole. The Canadian delegation feels that it would be premature to call in question in this first session of the General Assembly the rule of unanimity set out in Article 27. What we do call in question is the manner in which that rule of unanimity has already been applied.

We have listened with great interest to this debate. It seems to us significant that no delegation has questioned the desirability of unanimity of the permanent members of the Council. Indeed, if only the permanent members could agree on matters of substance and work together the members of the United Nations would have grounds for rejoicing. All of us recognize that the peace of the world depends on whether or not the permanent members remain united in any serious international crises.

It has been argued in the debate that the members of the United Nations must choose either to accept the unqualified exercise of the veto by the Great Powers or, alternatively, to advocate the immediate amendment of the provisions of the Charter relating to the voting rules of the Security Council. That argument, I submit, is not in accord with the facts as they have been presented in several able speeches in this Committee, notably by the representative of Australia, nor is it in accord with the letter or spirit of the Charter.

First of all, it cannot be said that the exercise of the veto depends upon the mere discretion or will of each of the permanent members, since that discretion is already restricted by the terms of paragraph 2 of Article 27 of the Charter and by the second clause of paragraph 3 dealing with disputes to which one of the permanent members is a party.

It is moreover difficult to justify the charge that delegates are attempting to violate the Charter or are attacking the rule of unanimity, when they urge that the permanent members of the Security Council should exercise their discretionary power of veto in a manner consistent with the Charter, that is to say, in a manner which will enable the procedures of the Security Council to operate instead of impeding or even preventing their operation. Such delegates want to achieve in fact that unanimity which has so often been lauded in principle, and which will never be achieved by the irresponsible use of the veto. The irresponsible use of the veto does not achieve unanimity; it is merely disunity writ large.

<sup>1</sup> Pour le contexte dans lequel cette déclaration a été faite voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, vingt-deuxième séance, 16 novembre 1946, pp. 111-113.

<sup>1</sup> For the context in which this statement was made see United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Twenty-second Meeting, November 16, 1946, pp. 111-113.

The Security Council was given primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations. But the experience of the past nine months can scarcely be said to have demonstrated that the Security Council would be capable under its present practices and procedures of taking prompt and effective action.

In the unsettled state of the world which is the inevitable aftermath of the war, situations or disputes may be expected to arise where it would be important that the Security Council should be capable of taking prompt and effective action for the maintenance of peace and security. In such circumstances we would all like to feel that the Council would be ready and able to take effective action promptly and not after a dispute or a source of friction had been fanned into a conflagration; that it would not wait until it is necessary to resort to force or until men, desperate from the frustration of waiting for a decision, might take whatever action they thought apt to serve their own interests.

None of us wish to see set in motion that chain of events which might lead to sanctions—that chain of events on which so much emphasis was laid in the statement of the sponsoring powers made at San Francisco. But still less do we want to see a chain of events set in motion which might lead to war. The Security Council was given by the Charter the responsibility of trying to adjust peacefully those international disputes and situations which unless peacefully settled might lead to war. If, through the use of the veto or for some other reason, the Security Council should be unable to act effectively as an agency of conciliation when occasion requires, the chances of war are increased. No one can disagree with the implication of the sponsoring powers statement that the members of the Security Council undertake a heavy responsibility when they agree to investigate a dispute or situation or to make recommendations on its settlement. But the members of the Security Council would undertake an even heavier responsibility if they should fail to investigate a dispute or situation the continuance of which was likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

This responsibility rests on all the members of the Security Council. It rests with particular weight on the five permanent members since failure by any one of them to agree with certain decisions supported by the requisite number of other members of the Council may prevent the Council from exercising its functions as the supreme agency of international conciliation.

Article 24 of the Charter states that the members of the Security Council in carrying out the primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security act on behalf of all the members of the United Nations. The Council as a whole acts on behalf of all the members. Each individual member of the Council acts on behalf of all the members of the United Nations. Each individual member of the Council is under a treaty obligation to cast its votes and its vetoes not in defence of its own special national interests but in defence of the interests of the United Nations as a whole. If a permanent member decides, after careful consideration, to exercise its veto, it should, before exercising it, state the grounds on which it bases its conclusion that the interests of the whole organization require that it exercise its veto in this particular instance. Since the requirement of unanimity of the permanent members can be met only if the permanent members are willing to accept compromises, a permanent member should not veto a proposal on the ground that it does not go far enough.

We therefore join with other delegations in appealing to the permanent members of the Council to adhere scrupulously to the spirit and the language of the Charter and to refrain from using the veto except in the interests of the United Nations as a whole. We are confident that, if the permanent members take the view of their responsibilities which we suggest, the happy outcome will be that they will not find it necessary to use the veto except over measures of enforcement action under Chapter VII of the Charter.

We of course also trust that effect will be given to the clear intent of the proviso of paragraph 3 of Article 27. Under that proviso, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting in decisions under Chapter VI. This proviso would be rendered of no effect if a permanent member of the Council could veto a decision that a dispute exists or that it is a party to a dispute. The language of the Charter is capable of no other construction. Therefore, the Security Council should work out agreed procedures to ensure that no State shall be judge in its own cause.

Furthermore, in order that a permanent member may not have to veto a proposal which it feels it cannot actively support, the right of a permanent member to refrain from supporting a proposal, without by so doing exercising the veto, should be formally recognized. Therefore, a permanent member which, before a vote is taken, makes a statement to the following effect should be held to have cast an affirmative vote within the meaning of Article 27 of the Charter: "While I am not prepared to support this proposal, I am not prepared to prevent its acceptance if that is the desire of the majority. I am willing, in the circumstances, to have my position considered as constituting the degree of concurrence necessary in order that a decision may be reached."

If the permanent members of the Council were to use their veto only in the interest of the United Nations as a whole, if the veto were not to apply to decisions by the Council on whether a dispute exists and on which States are parties to a dispute, and if a permanent member could refrain from supporting a proposal without by so doing exercising the veto, many of the obstacles which have prevented the Security Council from becoming the supreme agency for international conciliation would disappear.

More, however, is required than this. The Charter contains, especially in its chapter on peaceful settlement, a number of unintentional obscurities which have led to honest differences of opinion between members of the Security Council on how the Security Council should go about its work of trying to settle peacefully international disputes and situations. It is not now possible without great difficulty, nor indeed is it necessary, to amend the Charter to remove the obscurities. It is, however, essential that the rules and practices of the Security Council be such as to carry out the intent of the provisions on peaceful settlement even though that intent is not always clearly expressed.

In the first place, the rules and practices of the Security Council should be based on the fact that all the members of the United Nations have undertaken that, if they are parties to any international dispute, they will seek a solution by peaceful means of their own choice so that the maintenance of international peace and security will not be endangered. Though this undertaking does not in precise terms apply to situations, certainly the spirit of the Charter means that, if members are directly involved in an international situation the continuance of which is likely to endanger international peace, they will seek an adjustment of that situation by peaceful means. They should do so before appealing to the Security Council, for the Security Council should be so majestic a body that it should be regarded as a court of last resort to be used only when all other possible peaceful remedies have been exhausted. Therefore, any State which brings a dispute or a situation to the attention of the Security Council should submit in writing a preliminary statement setting forth the steps which have been taken by the States concerned to carry out their obligation under the Charter to seek a solution by peaceful means of their own choice.

In the second place, the rules and procedures of the Security Council should be based on the fact that the Council's jurisdiction to deal with disputes and situations is limited. Apart from the special jurisdiction which may be conferred on it under Article 38 by all the parties to any dispute, the Council's jurisdiction is restricted to international disputes and situations likely to endanger international peace and security. It is not merely that the Council should not deal with frivolous disputes or unimportant situations. The essential limitation on the Council's jurisdiction is that it has not the right to deal even with serious disputes or situations so long as these do not endanger international peace and security. Therefore the early stages of the consideration of a dispute or situation by the Security Council should be directed towards settling the preliminary question whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. It may be necessary for the Council in these early stages to discuss the facts of the case and the claims and the counter-claims, but the purpose of this initial examination should be, not to arrive at a recommendation on the settlement or adjustment of the dispute or situation, but to decide the preliminary question of its own jurisdiction.

It also follows from this that any State which brings a dispute or a situation to the attention of the Security Council should, in the written preliminary statement which it submits, show in what manner the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

In the third place, the rules and practices of the Security Council should be based on a recognition of the fact that the Security Council is under an obligation to deal with those disputes and situations which it has decided come within its jurisdiction. This obligation can be discharged only if the Council without delay pursues one or more of the three courses of action set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter. It may pursue these courses in any order it sees fit. The three courses of action are (a) to remind the parties to a dispute of their undertaking to settle it by peaceful means of their own choice; (b) to call upon the States parties to a dispute or directly involved in a situation to adopt such particular peaceful means or methods of adjustment as the Council considers most likely to succeed; (c) to recommend terms of settlement to the parties to a dispute.

I have thought that, speaking towards the conclusion of this discussion, I might try to bring together as many specific suggestions as possible for improving the practices and procedures of the Security Council within the framework of the Charter as it is, even though some of these suggestions have already been put forward by other delegations. I put these suggestions forward in the hope that they may be of assistance to the members of the Security Council. They, I know, recognize as do the rest of us that difficulties in the practical application of the provisions of the Charter relating to pacific settlement have prevented the Security Council from fulfilling adequately the obligations imposed on it by all the members of the United Nations, that the experience of the past nine months has demonstrated that the provisions of the Charter relating to pacific settlement require clarification, and that the procedures followed by the Security Council in dealing with the pacific settlement of disputes and situations require to be more closely defined.

The remarks which I have made may be summed up as follows:

First

The Charter has imposed on each individual member of the Security Council, permanent and non-permanent, the obligation to exercise its rights and responsibilities as a member of the Council not on behalf of its own special interests but on behalf of the United Nations as a whole.

Second

If a permanent member decides, after careful consideration, to exercise its veto, it should before exercising it, state the grounds on which it bases its conclusion that the interests of the whole organization require that it exercise its veto in this particular instance.

Third

Since the requirement of unanimity of the permanent members can be met only if the permanent members are willing to accept compromises, a permanent member should not veto a proposal on the ground that it does not go far enough.

Fourth

The Security Council should work out agreed procedures to ensure that no State is judge in its own cause.

Fifth

In order that a permanent member may not have to veto a proposal which it feels it cannot actively support, the right of a permanent member to refrain from supporting a proposal, without by so doing exercising the veto, should be formally recognized.

Sixth

When a State brings a dispute or a situation to the attention of the Security Council, it should submit in writing a preliminary statement showing in what manner the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security and setting forth the steps which have been taken by the States concerned to seek a solution by peaceful means of their own choice.

Seventh

The early stages of the consideration of a dispute or situation by the Security Council should be directed towards settling the preliminary question whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Eighth

Once the Security Council has determined that the continuance of a dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, there is an obligation on every member of the Council to see that prompt and effective action is taken by the Council in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter.

515.

DEA/211-C

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresDominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 1057

London, November 20, 1946

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 933 of 15th October, voting in Security Council.

As you will be aware, discussions have taken place at New York between the British Commonwealth delegations about the line to be taken on the veto. My immediately following telegram contains text of memorandum communicated by Foreign Secretary confidentially to the representatives of the United States, Soviet Union, France and China as a suggestion of kind of thing which would meet wishes of majority of delegations.

516.

DEA/211-C

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 1058

London, November 20, 1946

SECRET. Voting in Security Council.

My immediately preceding telegram. Following is text referred to, Begins:

It must be recognized that the use of the "veto" in the Security Council in recent months has called forth almost universal criticism from members of the United Nations.

United Kingdom Government themselves are amongst the first to admit the necessity for the maintenance of unanimity amongst the Great Powers. But the manner in which the "veto" has often been used takes no account of unanimity and its constant use in this way makes achievement of unanimity all the more difficult.

There can probably be no question of amending the Charter at this stage, but are there not some things that could be done to avoid, in practice, the situations that have given rise to so much criticism? For instance:

(1) The Powers possessing the right of "veto" might agree amongst themselves to consult each other, where possible, before a vote is taken if their unanimity is required to enable the Council to function effectively.

(2) If there is not unanimity it might be agreed that the minority of the permanent members, mindful of the fact that they are acting on behalf of all the United Nations, would only exercise the "veto" where they consider the question of vital importance to the United Nations as a whole and they would explain on what grounds they consider this condition to be present.

(3) The permanent members might agree that they will not exercise their "veto" against a proposal simply because it does not go far enough to satisfy them.

(4) The permanent members might agree to advocate rules of conduct for the Security Council providing that questions are only brought before the Security Council after other means of settlement have been tried and must then be presented in proper form to the Council.

(5) The permanent members might agree to support the establishment of further rules of procedure for the conduct of the Security Council's business, e.g., for the consideration of any question, the Council should appoint a rapporteur, or a Committee of some of its members to make a further attempt at conciliation before resorting to the final discussion and voting.

(6) It might facilitate the work of the Security Council and ensure that the Charter is properly applied, if a formula could be devised on which all could agree for the definition of a "dispute".

(7) It would be of great advantage if it were possible to provide by some means that a permanent member could abstain from voting without automatically vetoing the proposal. Similarly the mere absence of a permanent member should not have the effect of a veto. Ends.

See my immediately following telegram.†

517.

DEA/211-C

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 1084

London, November 25, 1946

My telegrams Circular D. 1057 to 1062.<sup>1</sup> Voting in the Security Council.

Five-Power meeting took place in New York on 23rd November. Mr. Molotov was in the Chair.

2. M. Molotov said that there were two matters for discussion,

- (1) Possibility of revising Charter, and
- (2) Methods of applying procedure in Security Council.

As to (1), no permanent member suggested revision. Still, question had been raised in General Assembly and latter should "react against it", and reject any such proposal as "untimely". As to (2), Soviet view was that any proposal to elaborate existing Rules of Procedure in Security Council should be opposed. It was impossible to base relations between countries, and especially between Great Powers, on technicalities and formalities. On substance of proposals submitted, he considered in first place that no permanent member of Security Council had applied veto improperly. It was very undesirable to "foment passions" on this subject because they would be harmful to all—not only to the Soviet Union. Indeed, it might "tend to restrict the freedom of action of any Great Power in Security Council and in particular its right to express itself freely". This indicated that it was a mistake to tighten up Rules of Procedure either in Security Council or in any other organ of United Nations. He then read out a draft resolution which, he suggested, should be put forward in Committee No. 1. (Text in my immediately following telegram) †.

<sup>1</sup> Seulement D. 1057 et D. 1058 sont reproduits.

<sup>1</sup> Only D. 1057 and D. 1058 are printed.

3. Foreign Secretary said United Kingdom has no intention of suggesting revision of Charter. We did not necessarily want more rules and regulations; what we wanted was a Code of Behaviour as between the Big Five designed to increase confidence. So much depended on successful working of Security Council that this seemed a legitimate ambition. In working out its future policy, United Kingdom Government had to consider whether they could trust it or not. He had thought that the consultation which he had suggested might enable him to tell the British people that they could not build securely on Security Council. To this end, it was necessary to improve atmosphere in which Security Council worked. M. Molotov's draft resolution, however, did not help. All that could now be done was to explain positions of each member in Committee No. 1 and leave decision to Assembly. In reply to an intervention by M. Molotov, Foreign Secretary said that form of Soviet resolution did not matter. It was evident that it did not deal with difficulties which had been raised by United Kingdom and other permanent members. Nor did it provide hope for the better organization of work of Security Council.

4. Mr. Byrnes said that, as was known, United States were against a revision of Charter but sympathized, nevertheless, with view of smaller States that Great Powers had, in fact, exercised their veto privilege in a manner which had never been dreamed of by those who signed Charter at San Francisco. There was clearly a serious misunderstanding between permanent members as to how the veto should be exercised. For their part, United States believed that it should only be applied in connection with enforcement measures. If declaration to that effect could now be made, criticism of veto would be allayed; but if it could not, statement on lines proposed by M. Molotov would be worse than nothing.

5. M. Parodi supported Mr. Byrnes. It was true that M. Molotov's draft involved an important issue, namely, general collaboration of States members. But it was much too vague and general. Veto had already caused great emotion in General Assembly. Submission of M. Molotov's draft would only poison atmosphere. In any case, proposals which had been circulated by other permanent members were not, repeat not, designed to increase formalities. On contrary they tended to reduce them and to make conduct of business more flexible.

6. Doctor Koo insisted that some Rules of Procedure might suitably be added to those already existing, notably in regard to other questions which might be decided by a procedural vote.

7. M. Molotov still pressed his draft resolution, particularly part of it which condemned revision of Charter. He said that Soviet Government also had not "complete confidence" in Security Council. They thought it had operated against them in case of Persia and generally speaking atmosphere in Council had been "one sided".

8. It was agreed that each of the Five Powers should be free to submit whatever resolutions it liked in General Assembly.

518.

CH/Vol. 2105

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

DESPATCH 1971

Ottawa, November 25, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose, for your information, two copies of a memorandum which has been prepared in the Department summarizing the policy of the Canadian Delegation to the General Assembly in regard to the discussion of the veto question. You will be aware that since this memorandum was written the veto question was considered by the Big Five in New York with a view to arriving at some agreed limitation of the use of the veto power. These discussions have now broken down and the matter will, therefore, be considered again in the Assembly.

I have etc.

R. G. RIDDELL
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum de la première direction politique<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum by First Political Division<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa,] November[n.d.], 1946

MEMORANDUM ON THE VETO QUESTION

SUMMARY OF DEVELOPMENTS AT THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
UP TO 20 NOVEMBER, 1946

1. The question of the veto has been constantly under consideration by the Canadian delegation in New York. In general the subject has been approached in two ways. On the one hand there have been efforts to secure the adoption by the Assembly of a resolution calling upon the members of the Security Council to adopt rules limiting the use of the veto. The other approach has been to suggest that the permanent members of the Security Council might agree among themselves to restrict the application of the veto power.

2. A draft resolution on the pacific settlement of disputes by the Security Council was prepared by Mr. Reid on November 4th. This resolution, which it was envisaged might be presented to Committee One for ultimate approval by the General Assembly, was aimed at clarifying, within the present Charter, the rules of procedure involved in Chapter Six concerning the pacific settlement of disputes. The main points of this resolution were:

<sup>1</sup> De J. G. H. Halstead.

<sup>1</sup> By J. G. H. Halstead.

(a) The states bringing a dispute or a situation to the attention of the Security Council should be required to present a detailed statement in writing showing how the continuance of the dispute is likely to endanger peace, and what steps the states concerned have taken to reach a peaceful solution.

(b) The dispute or situation should be placed on the draft Agenda by the Secretary-General.

(c) A specific definition for a dispute or situation and for a party to a dispute should be adopted.

(d) The determination of whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger peace should be the first step taken by the Security Council.

(e) If a threat to peace is established, the dispute or situation should be placed by the Secretary-General on the Agenda without a vote.

(f) The next step should be the adoption by the Security Council of one or more of three possible recommendations.

(g) Specific definitions of procedural matters under Article 27 should be adopted.

(h) The abstention of a permanent member should not constitute a veto.

3. Sir Alexander Cadogan of the United Kingdom delegation drew up on November 7th a draft memorandum on the veto. It was intended that the Commonwealth delegations should discuss this draft and formulate a revised memorandum which could be discussed privately by Mr. Bevin and the leaders of the delegations of the other great powers, and then could be announced publicly and presented in Committee one. The main points of this memorandum were:

(a) No amendment of the Charter was possible at this time.

(b) The failure has been the mis-use of the veto when a great power has blocked a proposal simply because it was not pleasing to that power.

(c) The origin of the veto is in the acknowledgement of the fact that no great power could be expected to accept an adverse decision on a matter which it held to affect its vital interests.

(d) A possible remedy would be agreement between the five great powers on rules of conduct, so that the veto would be used only in defence of a great power's vital interests, and would be accompanied by a statement of the grounds on which those interests were involved.

(e) Abstention by a great power should not constitute a veto.

(f) Rules of procedure for the conduct of a case by the Security Council should be adopted which include the definition of a dispute, and would require a preliminary statement in writing by a state bringing a dispute or situation to the attention of the Council.

(g) Agreement is necessary among the great powers on the legitimate exercise of the veto, on the right of abstention, on the proper form for presenting a case to the Council, on the procedure for handling a case in the Council, and on the definition of a dispute.

4. The opinion of the Canadian delegation on Sir Alexander Cadogan's memorandum was that it did not constitute a useful basis for discussion between Mr. Bevin and the representatives of the other great powers, and was a retrograde step from the position taken by the United Kingdom at San Francisco. The statement of the origin of the veto (point (c) of the preceding paragraph) was considered to be particularly bad, and was in contrast to the statement by Senator Connally of the United States that the veto should only be used to serve the interests of the United Nations as a whole. Our delegation was also doubtful of the advantage of giving an exact definition to a dispute, since in the view of Mr. Johnson of the United States State Department it would be better to blur the distinction between a dispute and a situation, in the hope that the usage would develop of barring a party to a situation as well as a party to a dispute from voting.

5. On November 8th a meeting of the Commonwealth delegations was held under the chairmanship of Mr. Bevin, at which Sir Alexander Cadogan's memorandum was discussed. A sub-committee was formed to revise this draft in the light of the criticisms voiced by Canadian and the other Commonwealth countries. Mr. St. Laurent advocated incorporating into the revised memorandum the liberal view-point expressed by Senator Connally. It was agreed that Mr. Bevin's strategy should be to approach Mr. Molotov after the debate on the veto in Committee One had progressed, but before any resolutions of substance were voted on, and to suggest to him that the great powers should agree on a code of conduct for the Security Council. Mr. Bevin was very hesitant to seek prior agreement with the United States, for fear that Mr. Molotov would accuse him of "ganging up". Although Mr. St. Laurent expressed the Canadian delegation's disapproval, the Australian delegation announced that they were determined to present independently a resolution which they had drafted, though they agreed that they would not press it to a vote if circumstances appeared unfavourable.

6. Mr. Reid discussed his draft resolution of November 4th with Mr. Johnson of the United States and Mr. Van Kleffens of The Netherlands, and incorporated some of their suggestions in a revised draft. Mr. Johnson expressed his uncertainty as to the wisdom of attempting at present to clarify the meaning of Chapter Six on the pacific settlement of disputes. He thought that mistakes might bring their own remedy. He was not in favour of exact definition for a dispute as distinct from a situation, and he considered it would be extremely difficult to obtain Soviet acceptance of the definition of procedural matters contained in Mr. Reid's draft. The wording of the paragraph dealing with the preliminary question of establishing the Security Council's jurisdiction to deal with a dispute (point (d) of paragraph 2 above) was ambiguous to Mr. Johnson, and the paragraph was re-worded to make it clear that this preliminary question did not involve an immediate vote by the Council, but was rather intended as a guide to the purpose to which the Council's discussions should be directed. Mr. Johnson was in favour of the provision that abstention by a great power should not mean a veto.

7. In discussing Mr. Reid's draft, Mr. Van Kleffens suggested that there should be two stages in the preliminary examination of a dispute or a situation. The first decision should be on whether there is a case brought before the Council in good faith; if there is, the matter should be moved from the draft Agenda to the Agenda. The second stage should be the discussion of whether there exists a threat to the peace. Mr. Van Kleffens considered that a vote should be required to put a matter on the Agenda. He was not satisfied with the definition of a dispute contained in Mr. Reid's draft, and presented a memorandum which he had prepared containing definitions of a question, a dispute and a situation. In his opinion, a dispute should involve a stated claim and a denial of that claim, either express or implied. He was also not satisfied with the few examples of procedural matters contained in Mr. Reid's draft (point (g) of paragraph 2 above), and thought that more examples should be added. He assured Mr. Reid that the Netherlands delegation was ready to join with the Canadian delegation in presenting these proposals to the Assembly, but he was told that it had not yet been decided whether it would be desirable to present them before consultation between the great powers had taken place.

8. On November 12th, Australia submitted its resolution advocating a restriction of the veto to Chapter Seven of the Charter.

9. On the same day, the revision of Sir Alexander Cadogan's draft memorandum was circulated to the Commonwealth delegations for later discussion. The main points covered in this revision were:

(a) Before the possible exercise of the veto, there should be consultation among the great powers.

(b) If unanimity cannot be reached, it should be agreed that the veto should be used only if the question is of vital importance to one of the great powers or to the United Nations as a whole.

(c) The veto should not be used against resolutions which are not considered extensive enough.

(d) A question should be presented to the Security Council in the proper form only after other methods of settlement have been tried.

(e) A rapporteur should be appointed before the consideration of a question by the Council.

(f) A formula should be adopted defining a dispute.

(g) A great power should be allowed to abstain without exercising a veto.

10. This version of Sir Alexander Cadogan's memorandum was discussed the next day at a Commonwealth meeting, and it was agreed that suggestions for revision should go into a new draft to be prepared for Mr. Bevin. The Canadian delegation still objected to making questions of vital importance to a great power a valid reason for that power exercising the veto (point (b) of paragraph 9 above). We also objected to drawing up a formula for a dispute (point (f) of paragraph 9 above). We advocated that consultation between the great powers should take place only after full discussion in the Security Council.

11. In the meantime, Mr. Reid had revised his original draft resolution of November 4th, and had drawn up a resolution for possible presentation to the Assembly in which the Assembly would approve a memorandum on peaceful settlement by the Security Council, and would request the Security Council to give practical effect to the recommendations embodied therein. These recommendations were:

(a) Each member of the Security Council carries the obligation to vote not on behalf of its own special interests, but on behalf of the United Nations as a whole.

(b) The veto should not be used against measures which do not go far enough, and the exercise of the veto should be accompanied by a statement of the reason for its use.

(c) A great power should be able to abstain without exercising a veto.

(d) The presentation of a question to the Security Council should be accompanied by a preliminary statement in writing on the steps already taken towards solution of the situation, and on the way in which the situation or dispute is a threat to the peace.

(e) The preliminary question in the consideration of a matter should be the jurisdiction of the Council to deal with the matter, i.e., whether the dispute or situation is a threat to the peace.

(f) If this threat is established, it is the responsibility of the Council to take prompt and effective action of three possible kinds.

(g) Decisions on whether a matter is a dispute or a situation, and decisions on the preliminary question of jurisdiction should be procedural.

12. On November 14th, 15th and 16th, the general debate on the veto in Committee One covered three items: the Australian resolution, and two resolutions by Cuba, one to call a conference to eliminate the veto, and the second, to call a conference to review the whole Charter. The debate was opened by Mr. Hasluck of Australia, and he voiced his country's concern about the best way of ensuring that the Security Council work within the present Charter. He advocated moderation in the exercise of the veto, increased consultation and mutual accommodation among the permanent members of the Security Council, and the development of recognized procedures under which the Council would discharge its duties. New Zealand, Belgium and El Salvador referred in their speeches to the necessity of enabling a great power to abstain without exercising a veto. There was implicit in the speeches by Australia, New Zealand and Belgium an appeal for an agreed statement by the five permanent members of the Security Council. The United States representative affirmed that the unanimity of the great powers was essential. He advocated the inclusion of a complete list of procedural questions in the Security Council's rules of procedure. Although he considered favourably a restriction of the veto to Chapter Seven of the Charter, he thought that this step should be considered first by the permanent members. As was to be expected, the Soviet representative defended the past use of the veto, particularly in the questions of Syria-Lebanon and Spain, and claimed that the absence of Mr. Gromyko during consideration of the Iranian question did not constitute a use of the veto.

13. On the morning of November 16th, Mr. St. Laurent delivered the Canadian statement on the veto question. This statement opposed the calling at this time of a conference to amend the Charter, but voiced the widespread demand that the veto be employed in future with restraint and in the interests of the United Nations as a whole. The statement concluded with an eight-point summary of specific suggestions for improving the practices and procedures of the Security Council within the present framework of the Charter. The draft resolution prepared for possible approval to the Assembly (paragraph 11 above) was not presented by Mr. St. Laurent at this time on the grounds that the most useful approach appeared to be consultation and prior agreement among the permanent members of the Security Council concerning restriction of the use of the veto.

14. On November 15th, prior to Mr. St. Laurent's speech in Committee One, a revised memorandum was communicated confidentially by Mr. Bevin to the representatives of the other four great powers, "as a suggestion of the kind of thing that could be done to meet the obvious wishes of the great majority of delegations". After conceding the necessity of unanimity among the great powers, and stressing the obstacle to the achievement of this unanimity that the past use of the veto had constituted, the memorandum went on to outline seven suggestions for improvements that might be made within the framework of the present Charter. These suggestions were:

(a) The great powers should hold prior consultation when unanimity is required.

(b) If unanimity is not reached, the veto should only be exercised when a great power considers the question of vital importance to the United Nations as a whole, and should state the grounds for this consideration.

(c) The veto should not be exercised against a proposal simply because it does not go far enough.

(d) Rules of conduct for the Security Council should be agreed upon which provide that questions are brought before the Council only after other means of settlement have been tried, and must then be presented in proper form.

(e) Further rules of procedure for the conduct of the Security Council's business might be adopted, such as the appointment of a rapporteur or committee for the consideration of the question.

(f) A formula for the definition of a dispute should be devised.

(g) Abstention by a permanent member should not constitute a veto.

The points contained in this memorandum are almost identical to the previous draft of November 12th (paragraph 9 above). Improvement has been made in point (b), with the submission of questions of vital importance to a great power, but the insistence on a formula for the definition of a dispute (point (f)) still remains.

15. At a meeting of the Commonwealth delegations on November 18th, Mr. Bevin reported that this memorandum of November 15th was to be the basis of discussion of a meeting of the five great powers the same day. Mr. Molotov had told Mr. Bevin that he did not want more rules for the Security Council, but Mr. Bevin replied that what was required was a code of conduct which would place the Security Council in the position of prestige which it should occupy. Mr. Bevin hoped that the great power discussions would make clear whether the U.S.S.R. did, in fact, desire to make the Security Council work or not. On this depended, to a large extent, the implementation of any disarmament proposals. Mr. St. Laurent pointed out the danger of point (e) of the memorandum slowing up the Security Council's procedure.

519.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 412

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 304

New York, December 2, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 206. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Veto.

1. My immediately following telegram† contains the text of the draft Resolution submitted by the U.S.S.R. delegation at the meeting of the First Committee, Sunday 1st December.<sup>1</sup> The debate on the veto was resumed yesterday. On the suggestion of Kaufmann (Denmark), supported by Poland and China, the Committee decided by a vote of 33 to 8 to appoint a Drafting Sub-Committee to consider the six Resolutions now before the Committee and to prepare a Resolution which might be acceptable to a majority. We voted for the appointment of the Sub-Committee. Manuilsky named the five permanent members of the Security Council, Australia, Peru, Argentina, Cuba, the Philippines (the countries which had proposed the Resolutions) and Poland, Denmark, India and Venezuela. This Sub-Committee will meet today.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, première commission, annexe 7g, p. 328.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, First Committee, Annex 7g, p. 328.

2. Hasluck (Australia) opened the discussion with a review of the Australian Resolution in its present form (the text of this Resolution was given in my ASDEL No. 198 of the 29th November).† He said:

“The Canadian delegation has circulated a very useful paper developing its ideas on this subject. The Australian delegation had it in mind to elaborate its own suggestions in this field, but in view of the pressure of work on the Assembly will content itself with stating that the suggestions made by the representative of Canada come very close to our own views, and, in our opinion, are deserving of the closest and most careful consideration of the Security Council. At this stage, we do not ask—and we understand that no other delegation asks—the Committee to adopt any detailed recommendation, but simply propose that the General Assembly should recommend to the Security Council that it give attention to this phase of the question and that in doing so it should take into consideration the various statements which have been made in the course of the present debate.”

Shawcross opened his remarks by saying:

“The United Kingdom find themselves in general agreement with the Canadian proposals and we support them.”

Connally remarked to Wilgress after the meeting:

“We liked the Canadian memorandum very much. There were some things we could not support; but, on the whole, it was very good.”

Van Langenhove (Belgium) also remarked after the meeting that they agreed with our memorandum, and would like to have spoken in support of it but that he had specific instructions from his delegation not to prolong the debate by intervening in it.

3. Belt (Cuba), in support of his Resolution to call a Conference for revision, referred to the “pessimism” caused by Vyshinsky’s insistence, in the discussion on disarmament, that regulation be subject to the control of the Security Council. He also asked that the two paragraphs of his Resolution (A/C.1/49/REV.1) be voted on separately.

4. Shawcross’ speech was most conciliatory to the Soviet Union. He gave the text of the seven suggestions contained in Bevin’s letter of November 15th to the other permanent members (the text of this letter was given in my ASDEL No. 133 of the 18th November).†

5. Vyshinsky took particular exception to the second paragraph of the revised Australian Resolution (referring to the applications of the veto in the past) as a reflection on the report of the Security Council before that report was under consideration by the Committee. He also made a heated attack on the Cuban attempt to revise the Charter, pointing out that most other delegations, among them Canada, had not insisted on this point. He characterized the United Kingdom suggestions as “pious and feeble.” He said the U.S.S.R. had never had any objection to consultation and that it had always given explanations of its votes. He referred to all the suggestions made to the Committee as attempts to “restrict unanimity.”

6. The atmosphere of the discussion was conciliatory.

7. Had the Soviet Resolution been pressed to a vote, we would have voted for it and it would probably have been adopted almost unanimously. It seems likely that paragraph 2 of the Australian Resolution would have been defeated and the Australian Resolution with this paragraph deleted would have been carried. We were prepared to vote for the Australian Resolution in its entirety.

8. The Australians still appear to be under instructions to press their Resolution to a vote. Hasluck is angered by the decision to appoint a Sub-Committee, especially since it is loaded against him. He will probably bring back his Resolution unamended as a minority report.

PARTIE 4/PART 4

CONSEIL ÉCONOMIQUE ET SOCIAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

520.

DEA/5475-B-40

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 286

London, January 31, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Following from Wrong, Begins: Economic and Social Council.

1. The Economic and Social Council has now held two meetings, in the course of which most of the delegations have made general statements defining their attitude to the Council.

2. Our statement<sup>1</sup> stressed the following points:

(a) The importance Canada attaches to this phase of the work and our willingness to contribute constructively to overcoming obstacles to co-operation.

(b) The necessity of avoiding any special prerogatives for the Great Powers in the Economic and Social Council.

(c) The importance of giving thorough consideration to the Commission and Committee structure of the Council, and

(d) The avoidance of either excessive centralization or decentralization on the part of specialized agencies. This point was stressed because it seemed to us that the United Kingdom delegate was putting forward an excessively centralist view of the relationships.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Conseil économique et social, Procès-verbaux officiels, première année, première session, deuxième réunion, 29 janvier 1946, pp. 25-30.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Economic and Social Council, Official Records, First Year, First Session, Second Meeting, January 29, 1946, pp. 25-30.

3. In connection with point (c) above, the position is that the Assembly has adopted the recommendation of the Preparatory Commission, which provides that the Economic and Social Council should, at its first session, set up five Commissions, namely, Human Rights, Economic and Employment, Temporary Social, Statistical, and Narcotic Drugs. The Economic and Social Council is also at this session to give consideration to the establishment of Demographic, Temporary Transport and Communications, and Fiscal Commissions. We suggested that the nomination of members of commissions might, with advantage, be held over in order to give time to explore the possibilities and decide who are the best qualified people. No decision has yet been taken regarding the size of the Commissions. We also questioned the wisdom of the preparatory Commission recommendation that a majority of the members of the Commission should be Government representatives, while agreeing that they probably should be Government officials nominated by the Council in their individual capacities.

4. The Council will appoint small Committees to consider its rules of procedure and the organization of the Secretariat, and will resolve itself into a Committee of the whole to consider:

- (a) Its own organization, i.e., question of Commissions and Committees.
- (b) Relations with specialized agencies, and possibly
- (c) Relations with non-Government institutions.

5. The first meeting of the Committee on Organization was held yesterday and we again put forward the case for deferring the establishment of the main Commissions, while saying that we might immediately establish a small ad hoc expert body on the urgent problems of economic and social reconstruction.

6. This view received considerable support, particularly from the United States, Russian and Chilean delegations, but it is unlikely to be adopted, as Mudaliar seems strongly opposed to giving the appearance of delay, and we are not inclined to press in face of determined opposition from him.

7. In these circumstances, we may be called upon to decide who shall be named as members of the first five Commissions mentioned in paragraph 3 above, and possibly the others. Could you let us know by Monday to which of these Commissions, in order of preference, you consider it desirable that a Canadian should be named, and also the name of the Canadian you think we should put forward in each case. He can be either a Government official or an outside expert. Ends.

521.

DEA/5475-BQ-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 295

Ottawa, February 2, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Your telegram No. 286 of January 31st. Following for Wrong, Begins: Economic and Social Council.

We are in agreement with the attitude you have taken in asking that the establishment of main Commissions of Economic and Social Council be deferred until more is known regarding location of these Commissions and duration of their sittings.

2. You indicate, however, that the prevailing feeling in the Council is that it would be unwise to give appearance of delay. Perhaps an ad hoc arrangement could be agreed upon to have organizational meetings of Commissions in London and await transfer of these bodies to temporary site of U.N.O. headquarters before making final arrangements. I agree that in addition an expert ad hoc body might be set up by Council to consider pressing problems of economic and social reconstruction. Canadian representation for these bodies will have to be drawn from whoever is available in London for this purpose.

3. As regards Canadian interest in the Commissions to be set up we would certainly desire participation in Economic and Employment Commission. In view of our contribution in the narcotics field under the League, it would also seem desirable to have representation on the Narcotic Drugs Commission.

4. Canadian membership on standing Commissions of the Economic and Social Council would require to be at least on the same level as our membership in standing technical Committees of the League. It is impossible to say who would be available for U.N.O. Commissions until we know where they are to be located. Moreover Canadian nominations would require authorization by Order in Council and you will appreciate that it will not be possible to put forward specific names now, as suggested in the last paragraph of your telegram. Ends.

522.

DEA/5475-B-40

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 312

London, February 3, 1946

IMMEDIATE. ASDEL No. 46. Following from Wrong, Begins: Economic and Social Council.

1. At today's meeting of the Committee on organization of the Economic and Social Council Mudaliar referred to the strength of the arguments we have made for taking time to consider personnel of Commissions and proposed:

(a) That Commissions should now be established with one-year term instead of three-year term, and

(b) That they should be of a nuclear character confined to a few experts nominated in their individual capacity and instructed to advise the Council on organization of their work and on names which should be added or countries which should be invited to nominate experts in order to ensure proper representative character.

We welcomed this proposal, which was also supported by others, but Russian attitude is not yet clear and matter will come up for discussion again on Monday. Meanwhile, suggest you give information requested in paragraph 7 of our telegram dated 31st January on Economic and Social Council.

2. The United States initiative re Economic and Social Council sponsoring the International Trade and Employment Conference, is likely to come before the Council early next week. The proposal is:

(a) That a Preparatory Commission be constituted to elaborate an annotated draft agenda, the major chapters of which are to be those of the United States document. The members of the Commission are to be the 15 nuclear countries plus two other countries members of the Economic and Social Council designated by the Council (the Americans tell us privately that they would like to see Chile and Norway designated). A representative of the Secretariat is to participate in meetings of the Committee.

(b) The President of the Economic and Social Council is requested to confer with members of the Council and the Secretary General in order to make recommendations to a subsequent session of the Council regarding what States, if any, not members of the United Nations should be invited.

3. Another substantive question to come before the Economic and Social Council is the Polish resolution on reconstruction of countries devastated by the war which has been referred to the Council by the Assembly today to be dealt with as an urgent matter. The resolution does not call for any definite action by the Council, but it is likely that proposal will be made to set up an ad hoc Committee on urgent problems of economic and social reconstruction.

4. Chinese are sponsoring a resolution approving an International Conference of the United Nations to consider appropriate machinery for international action in the field of health.

5. Finally, the question of refugees will be referred to the Economic and Social Council by the Assembly.

6. We assume that you will wish us to support warmly the United States proposal on Trade Conference and also to support the establishment of effective international machinery for dealing with the problems mentioned in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 above. We would appreciate receiving any special instructions on these matters as soon as possible. Ends.

523.

DEA/5475-BQ-40

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 317

London, February 3, 1946

IMMEDIATE. ASDEL No. 51. Following from Wrong, Begins: Thanks for your telegram No. 295 of February 2nd. Economic and Social Council.

1. Sorry our failure to explain in more detail the position regarding membership on Commissions has resulted in some confusion.

2. The Commissions are to be continuing bodies composed of experts and will meet periodically like the League Committeees and not sit permanently.

3. The Preparatory Commission recommended that the majority of the members should be Governmental representatives but that there should also be individual nomination of experts by the Council. We have expressed doubts regarding selection of experts by Governments preferring that members should be named as individuals by Council after consultation with Governments in the case of officials. This point has not yet been decided.

4. In any case a Canadian might be chosen in his personal capacity as a member of Commission either under the Preparatory Commission's recommendation or under Mudaliar's suggestion reported in our telegram ASDEL No. 46 of February 3rd. It was with this possibility in mind that we requested advice regarding names we might suggest informally.

5. We would still consider it helpful if you felt it possible to say what Canadian should be suggested if we are asked to propose someone to be nominated by Council in his personal capacity on Economic and Employment Commission. He could, but need not be a Government official.

6. If this situation arises regarding Narcotics Commission we shall assume that Sharman's name should be put forward unless you advise to contrary. Ends.

524.

DEA/5475-B-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 315

Ottawa, February 4, 1946

IMMEDIATE. ASDEL No. 21. Following for Wrong, Begins: Your ASDEL 46, Economic and Social Council.

1. Regarding the nomination of experts to Commissions, Mackintosh<sup>1</sup> would be an obvious suggestion for nomination on a personal basis by the Council for Economic and Employment Commission and Sharman for the Narcotics Commission. I propose to discuss the matter with them and I shall reply separately to your ASDEL 51.

2. Regarding the United States proposal that Economic and Social Council should sponsor International Trade and Employment Conference, I think you should give strongest possible support to United States initiative in this matter. It was evident in our recent discussions with State Department officials, of which we informed you, that one of the most difficult aspects of proposed preliminary trade talks was ensuring the acceptance by non-nuclear countries of any agreements that might be reached by the fifteen participating nations. If the Economic and Social Council approves the preliminary arrangements by the United States and designates the fifteen nuclear countries as constituting the Preparatory Commission as proposed by the United States delegation, it would remove possible objection to the preliminary Conference on the grounds of its exclusive character. While we would prefer the preliminary group to remain at fifteen because of practical negotiating difficulties, nevertheless if the inclusion of a few other States would result in sponsorship being accepted by the Economic and Social Council it would be worthwhile extending the number of participating countries. If it appears likely that the additions will exceed the two mentioned in your telegram it might be worth considering an arrangement whereby the countries added to the group would participate in the non-tariff discussions only. It appears to us that the limitation of the group to fifteen when tariff concessions are being negotiated is justifiable on practical grounds but there is much to be said on broader representation when non-tariff matters are being considered.

<sup>1</sup>W. A. Mackintosh, le directeur général, le service des recherches économiques, le ministère de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements.

<sup>1</sup>W. A. Mackintosh, Director General, Economics Research Branch, Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

3. We agree that you should give support to the establishment of effective international machinery for dealing with the matters referred to in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of your telegram. Ends.

525.

DEA/5475-W-40

Mémorandum du chef, la deuxième direction politiqueMemorandum by Head, Second Political Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] May 23, 1946

COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

1. One of the important questions which will come before the Economic and Social Council at its meeting in New York will be the report of the Commission on Human Rights. Since the Soviet member of the Commission has taken exception to certain of the conclusions agreed to unanimously by the other members and has abstained from voting on the provisions for regional conferences and implementation, it is probable that the report may give rise to controversy at the E. and S. C. and that the Canadian representative will have to take a position.

2. The Soviet states have demonstrated that they intend to use the organs of the United Nations as instruments of Soviet propaganda in a war for men's minds. Already they have met with success in their efforts to pose as defenders of the rights of small nations and of coloured and colonial peoples. The chances of the Soviet states winning the battle for men's minds are greater if the Western world remains on the defensive. It is therefore desirable that the Western world should go over to the offensive and should attack the Soviet states at their weakest point, their refusal to concede to their citizens the ordinary freedoms of speech, of the press, and of worship and their inability to give their citizens freedom from want and from fear. The Western states should therefore make an immediate drive to formulate a declaration of the rights of man. The Soviet states would find it embarrassing to oppose such a declaration and, if they do oppose it, the strength of their propaganda would be weakened. Correspondingly, the strength of the propaganda of the Western states would be increased.

3. The usual criticism of a declaration of the rights of man is that it is of little value without provision for implementation. This argument runs counter to British traditions and experience since it has proved useful in the development of liberties in England to secure agreement on bills of rights even before it was possible to ensure that they would be implemented. The bill of rights becomes a goal which is eventually achieved. When a government departs from the principles of the bill its opponents can appeal to them. The antipathy of some English speaking people to a declaration of rights is,

I think, a relic of a nineteenth century Austinian doctrine of law which was a temporary aberration in English political thought.<sup>1</sup>

4. The Commission on Human Rights has recognized that it would be desirable if some sort of machinery were set up to implement a declaration of the rights of man. It is possible that proposals for the setting up of an organ of the United Nations to watch over the general observance of human rights may conflict with the domestic jurisdiction clause of the Charter. However, it seems to me that the Western states would be wise to let the Soviet Union bear the onus of raising this point and not get the Soviet Union out of an embarrassing position by raising it themselves. Moreover, the domestic jurisdiction clause of the Charter is so broad that it could be used, if given an extensive interpretation, as a means by which many of the most useful activities of the United Nations could be paralyzed. It is therefore in our interest that the meaning of the domestic jurisdiction clause be narrowed down by custom and the development of a sort of case law. Our general line should be to discourage appeals to the domestic jurisdiction clause.<sup>2</sup>

5. At present we unfortunately have to think in terms of political, economic, and psychological warfare against the Soviet Union. One source of the strength of the Soviet Union in that warfare is that it has allies within our gates—people who still think that Moscow is the Mecca of the disenchanted and disinherited of the whole world. We must try to persuade these people that they are misguided. One way to do this would be to demonstrate that the states of the Western world are willing to implement a declaration of the rights of man which will give both political and economic freedom while the Soviet Union is unable or unwilling to implement such a declaration.

6. There is one constitutional point which Mr. Malania mentions in his memorandum which is not, I think, of great importance. He states that Article 62 of the Charter does not specifically mention the Security Council as an organ to which the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council may be addressed. However, under Article 65, the E. and S. C. "may furnish information" to the Security Council. It is therefore constitutionally proper for the Economic and Social Council to include in the information which it furnishes to the Security Council information about a violation of human rights which, in the opinion of the Economic and Social Council, constitutes a threat to peace.<sup>3</sup>

E. R[EID]

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

There's a good deal of difference between a national law and an international declaration in potential effectiveness.

<sup>2</sup> Note marginale:

I doubt if a new organ would command authority. How could it "implement" freedom of the press in USSR—or in Argentina? By proposing sanctions? The E[conomic] and S[ocial] C[ouncil] and the Assembly seem to me the proper organs.

<sup>3</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum: <sup>3</sup> The following note was written on the memorandum:

I agree with the general line of argument in this memo., but I am not inclined to support a Canadian [line?] in the E[conomic] and S[ocial] C[ouncil] against the U.S.S.R. in current circumstances.

H. W[ONG]

526.

DEA/5475-AB-40

Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique<sup>1</sup>Memorandum by Second Political Division<sup>1</sup>

[Ottawa,] June 28, 1946

RE: SUB-COMMISSION ON DEVASTATED AREAS

On June 21st the Economic and Social Council adopted the recommendation of the "nuclear" Economic and Employment Commission to set up a sub-commission on the reconstruction of areas devastated by war. This recommendation was based upon the resolution proposed by Poland and adopted by the General Assembly at the first part of the first session in London, which recognized "the problem of full reconstruction of the countries belonging to members of the United Nations which suffered substantial war damage as a grave and urgent matter which should be given very high priority among postwar problems." The Assembly resolution requested the Economic and Social Council to place this subject on the agenda of the first meeting "as an urgent matter."

TERMS OF REFERENCE

The attached draft resolution† defines the terms of reference of the sub-commission. These are

(1) to advise on the nature and scope of the economic reconstruction problems of those countries which face great and urgent tasks in this field; and

(2) to advise on the progress of reconstruction and the measures of international co-operation by which reconstruction might be facilitated.

The Sub-Commission is authorized to make enquiries in these countries "with the consent of the governments concerned". Its preliminary report is to be presented to the third session of the Economic and Social Council not later than September 2nd, 1946.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMISSION

The drafting committee of the Council chose the following countries to name representatives to serve on the Commission: Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Ukraine, United Kingdom, and the United States, the U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia.

Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar nominated Canada for chairmanship, but this, however, was declined by the Canadian delegate on the drafting committee. The representative of France, however, gladly accepted this honour, and China was chosen for vice-chairmanship.

The sub-commission is to be divided into two working groups, one for Europe and Africa, the other for the Far East. Presumably the Far Eastern working group is to be under the chairmanship of China. Canada was named a member of both working groups.

<sup>1</sup> De L. Malania.<sup>1</sup> By L. Malania.

PROPOSED ACTIVITIES

No clear plan of work was developed. It was generally understood that the sub-commission is to meet as a body within the next three or four weeks, either in New York or in Europe (the exact place was not named, but it might well be London where the United Nations has a branch office), and after the initial meetings break up into the two working groups. The European group will visit western and eastern Europe and Ethiopia. The Far Eastern group is to visit the Far East. The latter visit may, however, be postponed until after the General Assembly. It was understood that towards the end of the Council meeting the Chinese delegate had decided not to insist on a visit to the Far East being given high priority.

In informal discussions among delegates and members of the Secretariat, two broad courses of action were envisaged:

(a) the sub-commission would not travel but spend two or three weeks discussing its programme of work and would prepare a preliminary report based upon available statistics. (The Secretariat have already assembled a considerable amount of data for this report.)

(b) the sub-commission would take a flying visit through Europe only, and would produce a report consisting of an outline of its programme of work, statements submitted by governments, and a summary of official statistical data, together with some "observations" by individual members of the sub-commission.

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP

It would appear to be desirable to nominate to the sub-commission two economists with some experience in field research. One of these should have some knowledge of European and the other of Far Eastern conditions. At this stage only the selection of the European expert is a matter of urgency. We should be receiving an official request from the Secretary-General for our nominee within a short period of time.

527.

CH/Vol. 2103

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

DESPATCH 1205

Ottawa, July 15, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I enclose a copy of an informal report on the proceedings at the second session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, which was held in New York from May 25th to June 21st. This report was prepared by Mr. Malania, who was a member of the Canadian Delegation to the Council.

I have etc.

H. H. WRONG
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Rapport de la délégation à la deuxième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies

Report by the Delegation to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL

June 29, 1946

At the conclusion of its second session, Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, the President, summed up optimistically the achievements of the Council during the past six months. A number of delegates felt privately that the summary was a bit "padded". It is true that during this period the Council had been going through a difficult organizational period. There was a tendency on the part of many delegations to quibble rather dogmatically over words and formulas, which in practice would probably make little difference. This tendency, was inevitable, however, since the Council was trying to define on paper the composition and functions of its commissions, and the relationship between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, without any clear picture based on experience as to the practical considerations which would be involved in solving these problems. The effort to provide on paper for all possible contingencies led one of the Canadian delegates to remark privately that one of the most depressing characteristics of the Council was its apparent conviction that its commissions would be composed of morons who had to have everything spelled out for them.

Another difficulty of the Council which was largely responsible for the snail-like pace of its meetings was the very real set of difficulties connected with the temporary headquarters and the poorly organized Secretariat—the distance of Hunter College from the downtown hotel area, the inadequate arrangements for transportation, the shortage of experienced interpreters, the confusion in the production and distribution of documents, the lack of a sufficient number of committee rooms, and the inadequate distribution of work within the Secretariat. These material difficulties of the initial organizational phase of the United Nations were complicated by Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar's determination to maintain a firm control over the work of the Council. He presided at all meetings of the Council and of every one of its committees. Had there been concurrent meetings of the committees, the Council could no doubt have accomplished more in less time. Sir Ramaswami appeared to feel a personal responsibility for the performance of the Council and he yielded his place only on the very few occasions when his absence from the Council was unavoidable. This criticism is not intended to imply, however, that Sir Ramaswami displayed any shortcomings as a chairman. He was at all times most competent and effective.

PERSONALITIES ON THE COUNCIL

The difficulties of the Council were complicated by the disappointing calibre of its members. The United Kingdom, the United States, U.S.S.R., Canada, and Belgium can be fairly said to have had the best representation. The United Kingdom was represented during the first three weeks by Mr. Noel-Baker, who was as usual clear-headed and eloquent, though inclined to be dogmatic especially on organizational problems. He was succeeded by Mr. Hector McNeil, who showed himself a true disciple of Mr. Bevin. The United Kingdom alternates and advisers were of first rate calibre. The United States delegation was headed by Mr. John Winant who had a large staff of competent alternates and advisers. It was obvious that the Canadian delegates had considerable personal authority in the Council and its committees and that they enjoyed the respect of all sides on controversial issues. The Belgian delegate, M. Dehousse, spoke rarely and generally to the point. He appeared to be an able constitutional lawyer who tempered his knowledge and experience with common sense.

The French delegation repeated their poor showing in London. Mr. Bousquet became a positive menace especially towards the end of the sessions when his garrulousness and energy in pressing "compromises" which were unacceptable helped to delay the proceedings. He was aided and abetted by the Greek delegate, M. Argyropoulos. The Latin Americans were represented by career diplomats who were not too familiar with the questions under discussion and who generally voted as a bloc, the only exception being Colombia, whose representative abstained on a number of important votes. The Eastern-European bloc was also pretty well united, with Yugoslavia frequently taking the lead in pressing its case and Czechoslovakia acting as moderator between it and the western countries. The Chinese delegates appeared to be at sea most of the time. They displayed the familiar tendency to produce "compromise" formulas based upon a rearrangement of commas or the substitution of inappropriate synonyms for the contentious words.

The Soviet delegates, Mr. Feonov and Mr. Morozov showed great ability and the usual rigidity in carrying out their instructions.

THE WORK OF THE COUNCIL

The Council approved draft agreements for bringing three specialized agencies—F.A.O., I.L.O., and U.N.E.S.C.O.—into relationship with the United Nations. These agreements are subject to ratification by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the General Conferences of the Agencies. At the request of the International Bank and of the Monetary Fund, negotiation of arrangements with these two agencies was deferred until the two organizations have completed their organization and have begun to operate. In the meantime letters outlining a simple scheme of mutual co-operation are to be exchanged by the President of the Council and the Chief Executive officers of the two organizations.

The Council considered the Report of the Preparatory Committee of the International Health Conference and draft observations for transmission to the Conference, which the Council convened to meet in New York on June 19th.

The Council also discussed the report of the Committee on Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations. The report was adopted after considerable revision, and a committee of the Council was set up to screen applications for consultative status from various national and international organizations. The committee consists of the President of the Council and the delegates of the United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R., France and China.

The reports of the "nuclear" commissions of the Council—the Economic and Employment Commission, the Temporary Transport and Communications Commission, the Statistical Commission, the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, and the Temporary Social Commission—were considered by the full Council and by two drafting committees of the Council, one dealing with the economic commissions, the other with the social commissions. The full commissions were not, however, constituted. This has been deferred to the third session.

The Council took the important decision that all members of its commissions shall be representatives of governments and not independent experts appointed by the Council itself.

The Council set up a sub-commission on areas devastated by the war. The sub-commission consists of Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Philippines, Peru, Poland, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia. The representative of France will be chairman and that of China vice-chairman. The task of this sub-commission is to produce a report on the problems and progress of reconstruction in war devastated areas of Europe, Africa and Asia before September 3rd.

Finally, the Council spent several heated meetings in discussing the report of the Special Committee on Refugees and Displaced Persons. This question is dealt with in a separate memorandum.†

Seven items of the agenda had to be postponed owing to lack of time. These are the terms of reference and composition of the Fiscal Commission, the Demographic Commission, and the Co-ordination Commission; the assumption by the United Nations of the functions and powers connected with public loans issued with the assistance of the League of Nations; revision of Rules 4 and 5 of the Rules of Procedure relating to the calling of special sessions of the Council by the specialized agencies; arrangements for conferring with the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council; the Belgian proposal to establish special relations with the League of Red Cross Societies; and the United States proposal to grant the International Chamber of Commerce the same consultative status as has been accorded to the W.F.T.U. and the A.F. of L.

THE REPORT OF THE PREPARATORY COMMISSION ON THE HEALTH CONFERENCE

The Preparatory Commission was set up by the Council during its first session in London. Dr. G. B. Chisholm was the Canadian representative on the Committee and served as its rapporteur. The committee met in Paris in March and April, 1946, and prepared a draft constitution for the proposed World Health Organization and a draft annotated agenda for the International Health Conference.

This was the first instance of the Economic and Social Council calling an international conference for the purpose of setting up a specialized agency and for this reason the procedure followed in this case is of special interest.

In accordance with the terms of the Council's resolution appointing the Preparatory Committee, the report of the latter body was submitted to the Council for any observations which it might wish to transmit to the Health Conference. Apart from comparatively minor drafting changes in the draft constitution of the W.H.O., the two principal issues which arose in the Council were (1) the question whether the new Health Organization should supplant the existing regional Health organizations such as the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau, the Arab Sanitary Bureau, and the Office International d'Hygiène Publique, and establish regional offices under its own direct control, or whether the W.H.O. would use the existing regional health organizations as its own regional offices, leaving to the latter a considerable degree of autonomy; and (2) the question whether the World Health Organization should be set up by the "old method" of a separate intergovernmental convention which would be signed by plenipotentiaries and ratified by national legislatures, or whether it should be set up by the "new" streamlined method of a simple resolution of the General Assembly which would be considered binding upon all Members of the United Nations.

The United States delegation favoured autonomy for the existing regional organizations in order to preserve the quasi-political functions of the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau, and the "old method" of ratification, which under United States constitutional practice is considered essential to enable Congress to vote its contribution to the Health Organization.

A debate revolving mainly around these two issues took place in the Council but no vote was taken. At its conclusion the matter was referred to a drafting committee of the Council which was charged with the task of preparing a summary of the points made during the debate for transmission to the Health Conference. After three meetings the drafting committee produced a resolution which endorsed the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee's report on such questions as the invitation to attend the Health Conference as observers to be extended to sixteen neutral and former enemy states, to the Allied Control Commissions in Germany, Japan and Korea, and to ten world-wide and regional organizations, the activities of which have some bearing on health, (The proposal to invite P.I.C.A.O. to send representatives was carried over the vigorous opposition of the Soviet delegate), and the setting up of an Interim Health Commission pending the establishment of the World Health Organization, the Secretariat of the Commission to be provided by the United Nations.

The two contentious questions were left open for decision by the Health Conference itself. Mr. Noel-Baker argued vigorously that the Council should make a definite recommendation on these two points. The Canadian delegation supported his proposal that the W.H.O. should be a centralized body, but not his position on the procedure of setting it up. A number of observations made by delegates were appended to the resolution for transmission to the Conference.

On the whole, the procedure followed by the Council in preparing for and convening the Health Conference appears to have been successful. The amount of time (five full meetings) consumed in Council and in the drafting committee by the discussions of the Preparatory Committee's report could have been reduced to one or two meetings at most, if it had been clearly understood at the very outset that the streamlined procedure advocated by Mr. Noel-Baker could not be accepted by a significant number of states. A valuable lesson has probably been taught by the attempt. Pending the possible adoption by these states of enabling legislation under which resolutions of the General Assembly would become automatically binding upon all Members of the United Nations, it would seem that the most effective method for establishing a specialized agency is to have the Economic and Social Council set up a preparatory committee and to convene a special conference for the purpose, avoiding as much as possible any detailed discussion by the Council of the preparatory committee's recommendations. A single resolution transmitting the report to the conference should be sufficient. Observations which members of the Council might wish to make on the report could best be made in the conference. It would seem worth while to recommend that this procedure should be followed in establishing the proposed International Trade Organization.

The procedure in the case of the refugee organization might be mentioned as a contrast. A full dress debate on this question was held in the General Assembly in February and a brief debate during the first session of the Economic and Social Council. The various issues were fully debated in the Special Committee on Refugees which met in London in April and May, 1946. The report of that committee was then debated again by the Council in June, when many of the contentious issues settled in London were reopened and the delicate compromises reached there were upset. These questions will almost certainly be debated again by the General Assembly in September, which may find it necessary to refer the question of establishing an International Refugee Organization to a separate international conference. These long and profitless debates might have been avoided if the Council had decided to content itself with setting up a preparatory committee and convening a special conference.

AGREEMENTS WITH THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

The negotiations with the I.L.O., U.N.E.S.C.O., and F.A.O. consumed from two to three meetings of the Negotiating Committee for each organization. One or two meetings were held by the Negotiating Committee privately to consider the draft agreements prepared by the Secretariat in consultation with the representatives of the agencies concerned. The Negotiating Committee consisted of the President, and representatives of Belgium, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, France, Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States, and the U.S.S.R.. Each of the agencies was represented by a small committee, headed by Mr. Myrddin Evans for the I.L.O., Mr. Julian Huxley for U.N.E.S.C.O., and Mr. André Mayer for the F.A.O. The actual negotiations were carried on by the President of the Council and each of these officials, in the presence of the two negotiating committees. In the negotiations with U.N.E.S.C.O. the spokesman for that organization was M. Roger Seydoux.

The agreements, which are rather more formal than would appear necessary in the case of organizations the membership of which is largely co-terminous, provide for exchanges of information and documents, the reciprocal right to submit items for inclusion in the agenda, reciprocal representation of the United Nations and of the agencies at meetings of the two bodies, pledges to consult one another in recruitment of personnel, the establishment of uniform conditions of employment and exchanges of personnel, and undertakings to co-operate in the exchange of statistical information and the eventual establishment of common administrative services.

The agencies undertake to assist the organs of the United Nations when requested to do so and pledge themselves to carry out so far as possible the recommendations of the United Nations.

On the whole the agreements leave full autonomy to the specialized agencies. In each case the agencies undertake to prepare their budgets in consultation with the appropriate officials of the United Nations. The final budgets of the agencies are to be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations, which may make recommendations with regard to any item of the budget. Representatives of the agencies are accorded the right of participation without vote in the deliberations of the General Assembly or of any of its committees when their budgets are being discussed. A common budget is envisaged as an eventual possibility, to be defined by a special agreement.

The right to examine the budgets of the agencies and to make recommendations regarding any items in them gives to the General Assembly of the United Nations very considerable powers to control undesirable expenditures by the agencies and to effect the necessary co-ordination in their activities. The main safeguard of the agencies against arbitrary dictation by the General Assembly is the fact that the majority of the Members of the General Assembly are also members of the agencies.

CONSULTATION WITH NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

A committee to recommend methods of consultation between three non-governmental organizations—the W.F.T.U., the A.F. of L., and the International Co-operative Alliance—was set up at the first session of the Council in London. It consisted of the President of the Council and the representatives of China, Cuba, France, Greece, Lebanon, Peru, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R. and Yugoslavia. The first report of the committee (E/43) recommends the setting up of a committee of the Council to act as the channel for consultation with non-governmental organizations. It also proposed the classification of non-governmental organizations into three broad groups. The first group would include the W.F.T.U., the A.F. of L. and the International Co-operative Alliance. Because of the special importance of these organizations broader powers of consultation were recommended for them. The second category included organizations with international interests but in more narrow fields, and the third category included organizations concerned primarily with information. The rights of consultation become narrower from the first to the third category.

The main provisions of the first report were to allow the representatives of the organizations to sit as observers at meetings of the Council, to submit written communications to the Secretariat which would be distributed to the members of the Council only on request of a member, and on particular matters to consult with the committee of the Council appointed for this purpose, if the Council so desired, or the organizations specifically requested such consultation.

These recommendations drew a sharp rebuke from Mr. Hillman of the W.F.T.U. Mr. Hillman objected in particular to the denial of direct access by the W.F.T.U. to the Council and its commissions.

The objections of the W.F.T.U. were supported by the French delegate who declared that the recommendations of the first report, which, incidentally a French representative helped to draft, “amazed and surprised” him, and by the representatives of Belgium and the Eastern-European group. After a heated debate the first report was sent back to the committee for revision in the light of comments made during the debate and the criticism contained in Mr. Hillman’s letter.

The revised report (E/43/Rev. 1) recommends that “most close consultative connection” should be established between the Council and the W.F.T.U. A standing committee composed of the President of the Council and the representatives of China, France, the United Kingdom, the United States and the U.S.S.R., assisted by the Assistant Secretaries-General for Social and Economic Affairs, will review applications for consultative status. (It was learned informally that over 200 such applications have already been received by the Secretariat.) The classification of organizations into three categories is maintained but written communications from organizations in the preferred category are to be circulated among members of the Council without requiring any previous request from any of its members, and the representatives of such organizations are given the right, subject to the President's consent, of addressing the Council and any of its organs. Much greater latitude is provided for consultation with the commissions of the Council, and the Secretariat is specifically instructed to facilitate such consultations in every way.

The revised report was adopted unanimously by the Council. A last minute attempt was made by the United States delegation to have the International Chamber of Commerce placed in the preferred category for consultation. Owing to the lateness of the hour, the United States proposal was deferred to the third session of the Council. In spite of the substantial victory won by the W.F.T.U. the Soviet representative attempted to extend still further the privileges accorded to that organization, but the proposal to give the W.F.T.U. virtually the same right of participation without vote as was accorded to the specialized agencies was defeated by a majority of 12 to 5. The Soviet delegate, however, signified his intention of reopening the question at a later date.

COMMISSIONS OF THE COUNCIL

It is not proposed to give in this memorandum a detailed account of the reports submitted by the "nuclear" commissions regarding the functions and composition of the commissions. Three of these reports appeared to be far too ambitious in scope—those of the Human Rights Commission, the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, and the Temporary Social Commission.

The most startling proposal was that of the Human Rights Commission which recommended that this body should act as a temporary "agency of implementation" to rebuke governments which failed to live up to the obligations of the Charter. It proposed to set up local centres within the territories of Members of the United Nations, which would provide the Commission with information regarding violations by governments of their obligations on human rights. The conception of a kind of international league of civil liberties' associations was dear to the heart of Mr. Laugier, the Assistant Secretary-General for Social Affairs, and to Mrs. Roosevelt who had played a prominent part in the work of that Commission. The Social Commission in defining the scope of its activities had included almost every subject within the competence of the Economic and Social Council itself and of many of the existing specialized agencies.

The reports of the Economic and Employment Commission, the Statistical Commission, and the Transportation and Communications Commission, covered more soberly the proposed activities of the full commissions within these fields. The development of the actual work of these commissions when they have been set up will, no doubt, reveal much overlapping and the problem of co-ordinating their activities with those of specialized agencies is likely to be the major organizational preoccupation of the Economic and Social Council for several years to come.

The somewhat ambitious schemes of work outlined in the reports of all the "nuclear" commissions will, no doubt, be greatly modified by the decision of the Economic and Social Council on the nature of the composition of the full Commissions. One of the major issues debated in all the "nuclear" commissions was whether the membership of the full Commissions should consist of independent experts appointed by the Council from a panel of names submitted by Members of the United Nations, or whether it should consist of persons named by governments of states elected to the Commissions by the Council. The United States representatives advocated the former alternative; the Soviet delegates insisted on the Commissions being composed of Government representatives. The United Kingdom representatives advocated "mixed" commissions consisting of about ten experts appointed by the Council and five representatives named by governments.

By vote taken in a committee of the whole Council it was decided by 11 to 5 that members of commissions should be representatives of states elected to the commissions for a period of three years. The United Kingdom, the United States, Canadian, Belgian and Lebanese representatives voted against this proposal. It was further decided by 9 votes against 7 that the tenure of office on commissions should be on a rotating basis. At the first election one third of the member states would be chosen for two years, one third for three years, and one third for four years. Thereafter, terms of office would be three years.

The decision as to the length of tenure would be made by drawing lots. All retiring countries would be eligible for immediate re-election. The Canadian suggestion that corresponding members of the commission should be independent experts was accepted with the amendment moved by the Czechoslovak delegate that such experts would be appointed only with the approval of their governments. It was further agreed, on division, that governments would have the right to replace their representatives on the commissions, but it was generally agreed that governments should be asked to keep as much as possible the same persons as their representatives on the various commissions.

This decision on the nature of the composition of commissions completely reversed the decision of the Council taken previously in London, that the Commissions should be primarily bodies of experts. It alters considerably the nature of the activities proposed by the "nuclear" Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on the Status of Women, and it will probably have a serious effect on the nature of the work of the economic commissions, in particular the Economic and Employment Commission. One result of the decision is to place much greater emphasis on the importance of adequate expertise in the Secretariat.

The drastic character of this decision was mitigated to some extent, however, by the provision suggested by the Soviet group that the Secretary-General should be authorized to consult with governments of states elected to the commissions regarding the qualifications of their representatives. The Russians submitted this provision with specific reference to the Transportation and Communications Commission where need for a balanced group of experts on various aspects of these fields is most obvious. The identical sentence, however, was inserted in the final document (E/84) under each of the Commissions. It passed without debate when the resolution was adopted unanimously by the Council.

In explanation of their vote in support of the Russian position, one of the Latin American delegates stated that the Latin American countries had voted for it in order to ensure that their experts, who are little known outside of their own countries, would have the opportunity of acquiring renown on an international scale. He appeared to suggest the fear that on such commissions as the Economic and Employment Commission, there would be a tendency towards Anglo-American preponderance. On the other hand, it would not be surprising if the Latin American vote should have been the result of some deal privately reached between that group and the Eastern European countries.

After the vote in committee had been taken, the Belgian delegate raised the pertinent question whether in view of the composition of commissions by representatives of states rather than independent experts, these should be paid by the governments they represented rather than by the United Nations. The question was not discussed, however, and the presumption is that the members of commissions will be paid by the United Nations.

One consequence of the decision may be to reduce the importance of the Economic and Social Council, since there would seem to be no point in having a recommendation agreed to by the representatives of eighteen governments reviewed by the representatives of eighteen governments. Apart, therefore, from the obvious function of co-ordinating the recommendations of the various commissions, the Economic and Social Council might find little to add to them and a tendency might develop in time to refer the recommendations of the commissions directly to the General Assembly. Whether this development takes place or not would appear to depend on the extent to which governments follow the practice of appointing qualified experts as their representatives on the commissions and allow them full latitude to state their views without being bound by definite instructions.

The first elections of states to the commissions was referred to the third session of the Council.

SUB-COMMISSION ON DEVASTATED AREAS (E/66/ Rev.1)

The only subsidiary body of the Council which was constituted at the second session is the Sub-Commission on areas devastated by the war. The setting up of this Sub-Commission was recommended by the "nuclear" Economic and Employment Commission which will receive the recommendations of the sub-commission. The sub-commission consists of twenty members: Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia. Canada was named by the President for the chairmanship but the Canadian delegate asked to be excused, and France was chosen for the chairmanship. The vice-chairmanship will be held by China.

The functions of the sub-commission are (1) to advise on the nature and scope of the economic reconstruction problems of countries devastated by the war; and (2) to advise on the progress of reconstruction and the measures of international co-operation by which reconstruction might be facilitated.

The sub-commission was authorized to conduct enquiries in devastated areas "with the consent of the governments concerned." Its preliminary report is to be presented to the third session of the Economic and Social Council not later than September 2nd, 1946.

The sub-commission will be divided into two working groups, one for Europe and Africa, and another for the Far East. Canada is a member of both working groups. No clear plan of work was prescribed by the Council, but it was anticipated informally that the sub-commission would meet in Europe in July and either prepare an outline of the more urgent problems based upon official statistics now available, or make a cursory visit to the devastated areas of Europe and submit a tentative account of its preliminary findings as its first report.

It was generally recognized that the sub-committee could accomplish little in the limited time at its disposal. Private conversations with several members of the Council and of the Secretariat revealed that one of the motives which prompted the rather hasty setting up of the sub-commission was the desire to counteract as much as possible the effect of the disturbing reports circulated by a Congressional Committee in the United States and by several individual Congressmen that the situation in devastated areas was not nearly so serious as had been generally believed, and that the generosity of the United States Government was being misused.

CONCLUSION

The general impression produced on many thoughtful observers by the second session of the Economic and Social Council was somewhat unfavourable. It was felt by some delegates that the reports of the "nuclear" commissions were hastily prepared and poorly drafted and that the recommendations contained in them were far too ambitious. The facility with which the Council reversed some of its previous decisions gave rise to private accusations of irresponsibility. The slowness of its progress helped to create in some minds a feeling of futility. This general feeling of disappointment was aggravated by the material difficulties of life in New York City. It would not be surprising if at the forthcoming General Assembly a determined effort were made to reverse the decision to locate the permanent and temporary headquarters of the United Nations in the Eastern United States and to move them to San Francisco. The Chilean delegation indicated privately that a Latin American lobby might shortly be organized with that end in view.

One of the best ways of strengthening the Council appears to be to strengthen the delegations of various countries. But although this might improve the work of the Council, it will hardly make it more effective until some of the outstanding world problems, such as the political settlement of Europe, the loan policy of the United States, and the general post-war economic relationships among the Great and Middle Powers have been clarified. These problems cannot be solved within the framework of the Council. The effectiveness of its work however, is predicated upon a reasonably stable system of international relations.

528.

CH/Vol. 2103

Procès-verbal d'une réunion interministérielle

Minutes of an Interdepartmental Meeting

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] July 20, 1946

Minutes of a meeting held on Thursday, July 16th, at 11.15 in Room 123 of the East Block, to discuss the work of the Economic and Social Council and Canadian participation therein.

Present were:

Honourable Brooke Claxton, Minister of National Health and Welfare,
 Mr. Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs,
 Dr. W. C. Clark, Deputy Minister of Finance,
 Mr. Wrong, Department of External Affairs,
 Mr. W. A. Mackintosh, Department of Reconstruction and Supply,
 Mr. M. W. Mackenzie, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce,
 Mr. R. B. Bryce, Department of Finance,
 Mr. L. Rasminsky, Bank of Canada,
 Mr. J. J. Deutsch, Department of Finance,
 Mr. P. Renaud, Department of External Affairs,
 Mr. A. H. Brown, Department of Labour,
 Mr. Paul Goulet, Department of Labour,
 Mr. S. D. Pierce, Department of External Affairs,
 Mr. R. G. Riddell, Department of External Affairs,
 Mr. J. Starnes, Department of External Affairs.

MR. MACKINTOSH gave a brief review of the activities of the Canadian delegation at the second session of the Economic and Social Council which has just finished in New York. He explained that he was not prepared to give any constructive criticism but rather an account of the work as he saw it. In his experience the work of the Economic and Social Council had been mainly hampered by the lack of a good secretariat. In certain cases the Commissions set up by the Council tended to be large and unwieldy as, for instance, in the case of the Commission on Devastated Areas, which was composed of twenty members, all representatives of Governments. He was of the opinion that the only remedy for improving the work of Committees and of the Council generally would be to improve the calibre of the Secretariat.

MR. WRONG said that, while this was a rather pessimistic account, it was not unexpected in view of the reports which we had been receiving.

MR. RASMINSKY stated that while perhaps the difficulties encountered in New York were greater than those experienced in London at the first session of the Economic and Social Council where the work was largely organizational, he felt sure that subsequent work of the Council would prove to be easier.

MR. CLAXTON said that he too was of the opinion that matters would improve with time. He stressed, however, the enormous physical difficulties in New York which prohibited any efficient organization. He said that as a newcomer to international conferences he found the setting in which such meetings were conducted to be somewhat bizarre and that the effects of Kleig lights and microphones and the habit of talking to a large unseen audience rather than to individual members on the Council created an unreal atmosphere. He felt in some ways New York was an unfortunate choice as the site for the temporary headquarters apart from the physical difficulties encountered, as United Nations affairs received about the same amount of publicity as those of the Municipal Court of New York. He too had been disappointed in the work being done by the Secretariat.

MR. CLAXTON added that he had been approached while he was in New York and asked if Canada would be willing to have the Security Council meet here at its next meeting. Mr. Claxton, at the time he had been approached, had said that it was unlikely that the Canadian Government would agree to such a proposition and that in any event we would require at least six months' notice.

MR. RASMINSKY had said that it might be possible that San Francisco would once again be mooted as the headquarters in preference to New York.

MR. MACKINTOSH said that in his opinion it might be a good idea if, while some permanent buildings for the United Nations were in process of construction during the next few years, Geneva were to be used as the temporary site of the Headquarters.

MR. WRONG said there was some indication that Soviet hostility to Geneva was diminishing. His last visit to Geneva convinced him of the advantages of using the League of Nations buildings for International Conferences.

MR. CLAXTON said that one suggestion he would like to make was that a minimum of two automobiles should be provided for any future Canadian delegations to the United Nations. He had noted that almost every delegation with the exception of the Canadian had one or two cars at their disposal and the United Kingdom delegation had five cars at their disposal.

MR. WRONG said that some arrangements were at present being made by the United Nations Secretariat to allocate a number of cars to each delegation for the duration of the Assembly and he was hopeful that we might obtain two cars, perhaps from the Department of National Defence, which would give us a total of four or more.

MR. CLAXTON discussed the proceedings in the International Health Conference which showed conclusively, he said, that the United Kingdom, the United States and Canadian delegations were the only ones which had done much serious preparatory work. In his opinion the Economic and Social Council might be a useful meeting ground for experts behind the scenes but that for the present no great amount of work could be expected to emanate from the actual Council itself.

MR. WRONG pointed out that if such a practice were consciously recognized by the member Governments, the value of the Economic and Social Council would decline and Governments would be loth to send experts as delegates. He said that there were three questions on which he would like some guidance:

1. What sort of representation should we have at the next meeting of the Economic and Social Council?
2. What degree of preparation should we make and was there any general line which we could usefully follow?
3. Should we seek participation in some of the other Commissions? We were at present represented on the Economic and Employment Commission and, of course, on the Narcotics Commission. The answer to these questions would in large measure determine the type of the instructions and the composition of the delegation which we would be sending. Was it, for instance, felt by the meeting that we should continue to be represented at such meetings by a Cabinet Minister?

MR. MACKINTOSH said that we should be represented by a Minister, for the present at least.

MR. WRONG asked if the size of the last delegation had been appropriate. Both Mr. Mackintosh and Mr. Claxton were of the opinion that it was, stating that it could not have been any smaller.

MR. CLAXTON said that there was good argument for having a permanent representative at the seat of the United Nations who might appropriately be a member of the Department of External Affairs. He had in mind somebody of the rank of First Secretary. In his opinion the Consulate General was not equipped to do this task and we ought to have one fairly senior person to maintain the continuity which was so essential to the work of succeeding delegations.

MR. WRONG said that such a plan was at present under consideration and that at the present time it was hoped to obtain some separate office space for the Atomic Energy Commission which was at present meeting in New York. If possible, it would be desirable to obtain office space in the same building as the Consulate, although separate from it, in order that they might use the same communication facilities.

MR. CLAXTON endorsed this idea.

MR. WRONG then said that he thought it was desirable to have such an office in the downtown section of New York. He considered that one of the great advantages would be that telekrypton communication could be installed eliminating the laborious system of using cypher books which was at present in force.

MR. CLAXTON remarked that in his opinion the Biltmore Hotel was an excellent place for the actual living accommodation of any Canadian delegations in New York.

MR. WRONG asked if, in the opinion of the meeting, we should continue to give our support to the practical aspects of the many problems which would be arising at the forthcoming meeting of the Economic and Social Council. He realized that this question was scarcely answerable.

MR. CLAXTON was of the opinion that we should continue the line which we maintained in San Francisco, and later in London and New York.

MR. WRONG explained that the strain in keeping up a constant review of the many problems was exceedingly great and that it necessitated almost constant interdepartmental consultation which was becoming increasingly difficult.

MR. RASMINSKY said that Mr. Wrong's question was a very appropriate one and that there was only one possible answer, that we should make every effort to see that the Economic and Social Council, and ipso facto the United Nations, succeeded in its task.

MR. WRONG said that he thought there was a middle course. That it was possible, for instance, to limit the amount of work done beforehand and leave it to the good sense of the delegates as to the course they might take and the work which they ought to do at each Conference.

MR. RASMINSKY was in agreement with this.

MR. MACKINTOSH pointed out that it was necessary to maintain a steady effort in order to have any work done in advance, particularly on some of the more involved questions such as refugees. He felt that it might be useful if we were to attempt, behind the scenes and before actual Conferences took place, to gain the support of a number of other countries. While our efforts at International Conferences gained us the respect of the majority of nations, they considered us as rather unusual and it might perhaps be worthwhile trying to make a number of converts beforehand.

MR. CLAXTON said that the worth of this point of view had been proven at the International Health Conference where he had been able to swing both Brazil and Venezuela to our side in informal talks he had had with them outside the Conference.

MR. WRONG said that it was obvious that what was called for was a continuous survey of what should be done and what can be done in these various fields. It might mean our keeping in frequent touch with five or six countries through our representatives abroad.

MR. MACKENZIE said that while it was quite obvious that there were a number of other Government Departments on whom the burden would fall, it was clear that the Department of External Affairs would have to remain the focal point.

MR. BRYCE pointed out that Government Departments other than External Affairs would be more interested when the various matters under discussion became matters of substance.

MR. WRONG agreed that in this particular period when most of the matters under discussion were ones of procedure, it was largely a matter for the Department of External Affairs.

MR. BRYCE suggested that someone present at each Conference should be charged with the responsibility of preparing a confidential report for the subsequent use of the various Government Departments and our Missions abroad.

MR. WRONG referred again to the question of our representation on the Commissions of the Council and enquired whether it was considered that we should seek representation on other Commissions than the Economic and Employment Commission. Was it considered, for instance, that we should seek to be represented on the Temporary Transport and Communications Commission?

MR. MACKINTOSH said that he had raised this point while he was in New York. It appeared that the work would be largely taken up with European problems and with the establishment of separate agencies to deal with air transport, telecommunications and shipping, it would not be so vital for us to be represented on such a Commission,

MR. CLAXTON remarked on the rapid and alarming multiplication of international bodies.

MR. WRONG said that he had mentioned this matter at a previous departmental meeting and had suggested that the Prime Minister, in his opening address at the United Nations Assembly in September, might draw attention to this matter, pointing out that the increasing number of Conferences and international bodies on which Governments had to be represented defeated in large measure the value of the work of those bodies and resulted in imperfect work which could only have a deleterious effect in the long run on international organization.

MR. CLAXTON expressed the opinion that this was an excellent idea and the meeting was in general assent on this point.

MR. BROWN said that it was important that I.L.O. and other bodies should not overlap in their responsibilities and work.

MR. MACKINTOSH suggested that, in any reports which were made on the work of the Canadian delegations at International Conferences, there might be a paragraph summing up the results of the Conference and any conclusions which had been reached. He also considered it would be useful to add a paragraph containing suggestions for action in Ottawa to follow up the questions considered by the Conference.

529.

DEA/5475-W-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre de la Justice*

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Justice

Ottawa, August 15, 1946

We have just received from the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the agenda for the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council, which will meet in New York on September 11. One of the important items on the agenda will be the election of states as members of the various commissions of the Council. There may also be an opportunity for discussing work that it is proposed each commission should do.

2. One of the commissions to be set up is the Commission on Human Rights. The general scope of the work of this commission is set forth in the enclosed extract from the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.†

3. Since we are now in the process of preparing the material and instructions for the Canadian delegation to the Economic and Social Council, we would be very grateful for an expression of your views on the proposed terms of reference of the Commission on Human Rights. Are you, for example, of the opinion that the proposed terms of reference of the commission are adequate, and have you any views on the relative importance of the various fields of work of the commission?

4. Would you have any views as to whether recent discussions in the House of Commons relative to a proposed national Bill of Rights would have any bearing on the position to be taken by the Canadian delegation with respect to the work of this commission? Your comments on this point would be much appreciated.

5. I should be grateful if you would return to me the enclosed United Nations documents when you have finished with them.

530.

DEA/5475-W-40

Mémorandum de l'officier juridique, le ministère de la Justice

Memorandum by Legal Officer, Department of Justice

Ottawa, August 26, 1946

RE: COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Points to be discussed:

(a) Are the proposed terms of reference of the Commission adequate?

(b) The relative importance of the various fields of work of the Commission.

(c) Should the recent discussions in the House of Commons relative to a proposed national Bill of Rights have any bearing on the position to be taken by the Canadian Delegation with respect to the work of this Commission?

(d) Canada's position with reference to states to be represented on the Commission.

The following provisions of the Charter of the United Nations would appear to be relevant:

Preamble: "We the peoples of the United Nations determined . . . to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small . . ."

Chapter I, Art. 1, para. 3: "The purposes of the United Nations are . . . to achieve international co-operation . . . in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion . . ."

Idem, Art. 2: "The organization and its members, in pursuit of the purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following principles . . . Nothing contained in the present charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement out of the present chapter . . ."

Chapter IV, Art. 13: "The general assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of . . . assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion."

Chapter IX, Art. 55: "With respect to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for the peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote . . . universal respect for, and observance of . . . human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion".

Chapter X: This chapter sets up the Economic and Social Council consisting of eighteen members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly. Article 62 provides that the Council may "make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all" and may "draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence." Article 68 provides that the Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights.

Chapter XII: This chapter provides for an international trusteeship system and provides that the basic objectives of the system shall be inter alia "to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and to encourage recognition of independence of the peoples of the world.”

By resolution of the Economic and Social Council of February 16, 1946, a Commission on Human Rights and a Sub-Commission on the Status of Women was established consisting of representatives of Norway, France, Belgium, Peru, India, U.S.A., China, U.S.S.R. and Yugoslavia. This resolution provided that the work of the Commission shall be directed towards submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

- (a) an international bill of rights;
- (b) international declarations or conventions on civil liberties, the status of women, freedom of information and similar matters;
- (c) the protection of minorities;
- (d) the prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language or religion.

The resolution also directed the Commission to make studies and recommendations and provide information and other services at the request of the Council and authorized the Commission to propose changes in its terms of reference.

On May 24, 1946, the Commission on Human Rights made a report to the Council containing recommendations with regard to its work.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution dated June 21, 1946, revised and settled the constitution of the Commission on Human Rights. To the functions set out in its original resolution, it added the following:

- “(e) any other matter concerning human rights not covered by items (a), (b), (c), and (d)”

It further provided that the Commission on Human Rights shall consist of one representative of each of the eighteen members of the United Nations selected by the Council. Representatives are to be nominated by the government of the nations selected and confirmed by the Council. The Secretary General is to make arrangements for

(a) the compilation and publication of a year-book on law and usage relating to human rights, the first edition of which should include all declarations and bills on human rights now in force in the various countries;

(b) the collection and publication of information on the activities concerning human rights of all organs of the United Nations;

(c) the collection and publication of information concerning human rights arising from trials of war criminals, quislings, and traitors, and in particular from the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials;

(d) the preparation and publication of a survey of the development of human rights;

(e) the collection and publication of plans and declarations on human rights by specialized agencies and non-governmental national and international organizations.

The Secretary-General has made a report to the Economic and Social Council reviewing what has been done from February 14, 1946 to June 30, 1946. In Chapter II it deals with the Commission on Human Rights. An extract of this portion of the report has been sent to you by External Affairs.

The terms of reference are wide enough to include the making of proposals, recommendations and reports on anything relating to "human rights" whatever that expression may extend to. I see no reason why they should be restricted. If any criticism might be made of the form of the terms of reference, it is with reference to the failure to specifically mention the question of remedies or sanctions. Declarations of rights are by themselves of little practical value. The British experience surely is that human rights are developed and extended by laws which provide remedies for the infringement of rights.

It would be difficult to say that any one of the fields of work of the Commission is more, or less, important than any of the others. It might be, however, that Canada has a greater interest in the way in which certain matters are treated from the point of view of international obligations than others. While it is true that there has been considerable agitation recently with reference to a national Bill of Rights, this is a matter in which all nations presumably are equally interested. Canada has possibly, however, a greater interest in rules that might be adopted with reference to the protection of minorities and the prevention of discrimination on the grounds of race, language or religion than most other countries. If rules concerning these matters were adopted without adequate consideration being given to problems peculiar to countries such as Canada, Canada might find itself in an embarrassing situation.

A further problem from Canada's point of view with reference to the work of this Commission arises from the federal nature of our constitution. A unitary state can adopt and implement proposals or recommendations of an international character. A federal state must bear in mind its legislative limitations when it is adopting such proposals or recommendations.

I have reviewed the debate in the House of Commons arising out of Mr. Diefenbaker's<sup>1</sup> proposed amendment to s. 10 of the Citizenship Act by which a subsection was to be added as follows:

(6) Such certificate of citizenship shall be deemed to include a Bill of Rights as follows:

1. Freedom of religion, freedom of speech and the right to peaceful assembly are assured.
2. Habeas corpus shall not be suspended except by Parliament.
3. No one shall be required to give evidence before any tribunal or commission at any time if denied counsel or other constitutional safeguards. (Hansard, May 7, 1946, p. 1342)

<sup>1</sup> Député fédéral pour Lake Centre.

<sup>1</sup> Member of Parliament for Lake Centre.

This debate does establish that there is a fairly vocal body of opinion in this country that there should be a bill of rights adopted at this time. (Hansard, May 7, 1946, p. 1342, May 8, 1946, p. 1370 and May 13, 1946, p. 1516). Whether or not it should be of a conventional or constitutional nature is one of the problems that require consideration. Another problem is to what extent such a bill of rights is within the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament and to what extent it is a provincial matter. If, of course, the Bill were to be an integral part of our constitution, it would have to be by way of amendment to the British North America Act.

It is to be noted that there is no representative from the British Empire on the present Commission. Consideration might be given as to whether there should be such a representative in view of the pride taken by British people in this aspect of their history. The constitutional problems peculiar to Australia and Canada might make it advisable that such representative be from one of those two countries and Canada's own special problems arising from her racial groups might make it seem advisable that the responsibility should be assumed by Canada.

If Canada were to have a representative on the Commission, certain qualifications should be kept in mind, e.g.

(a) he should have a thorough knowledge of the constitutional development of British people and of Canadian constitutional law;

(b) he should be fully aware of Canada's peculiar problems arising out of various races and religions in Canada; and

(c) he should be a man of common sense who can appreciate the impracticability of laying down principles too much in advance of what can be implemented in practice.

W. R. J[ACKETT]

531.

CH/Vol. 2105

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1801

London, August 29, 1946

Following for Wrong from Turgeon, Begins: Your telegram No. 1445 of August 8†: Sub-Commission Reconstruction of Devastated Areas.

1. Work of Sub-Commission now resumed following return of touring committees from Western and Eastern Europe. Plenary sessions will not be held till return of Southern European group next week, but in the meantime working committees have begun drafting reports.

2. One committee has approved form of final report which will include a survey of present European economic situation and reconstruction plans of various governments and recommendations for international action and assistance.

3. It is suggested that recommendations should fall under three heads: first, the future activities of the present European working group of Sub-Commission; second, the creation of a permanent European economic council; third, other recommendations covering relief and loan needs and measures for restoration of multilateral trade. Of these, only second discussed thus far.

4. Committee has before it three largely similar proposals from United Kingdom, United States and Secretariat for creation of economic council for Europe under Article 68 of United Nations Charter. Summary of U.K. proposal in Dominions Office telegram No. 798 of August 26† not unlike Salter plan referred to in despatch No. A.219 of 13th June, 1945.† Idea generally approved and although Soviet delegate has expressed no opinion, it seems Polish Government might support it.

5. I favour general idea of creating European economic council but feel that it is wrong to confine membership to European countries. Proponents of plan argue that interests of non-European countries will be satisfied by representation in subordinate bodies of council dealing with particular problems such as food and international trade. They feel that if council membership broadened it would encroach on authority and prestige of Economic and Social Council and further if membership confined to Europe may encourage more cooperation and self help in reconstruction among European countries and lessen present tendency to rely on credits from abroad. I do not think that creation of council will lessen immediate desire of Europeans for financial assistance through export credits or otherwise. There is danger of proposals of this type leading to the creation of regional trade groups and I feel any tendency to regionalize world trade ought to be avoided. Further, I feel that Canada's interest in Europe by reason of past trade, war contribution, and post-war credits granted warrants inclusion in council, if created.

6. I have not intervened in debate because of reluctance to commit Canada too strongly to one branch of this Sub-Commission's recommendations when it may develop that recommendations on financial assistance will prove unacceptable to us. I do feel, however, that this proposal is independent of any financial recommendations and that without embarrassment we could press for a broadening of this proposed economic council so as to remove exclusive European character.

7. The preliminary discussion of this proposal is to continue on Saturday, August 31st, and final decisions will be made early next week. I would be grateful for your comments on this matter and your view of the advisability of pressing for Canadian membership in the proposed council. Ends.

532.

DEA/5475-AB-40

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain

TELEGRAM 1579

Ottawa, August 31, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Following from Wrong for Turgeon, Begins: Your telegram No. 1801 of August 29, 1946. Devastated areas.

It is our view that, though Canadian Government would not be opposed in principle, to inclusion of non-European states in Economic Council for Europe or to Canadian membership, we should not seek membership and on the whole would prefer not to be a member.

2. It is our feeling that extension of membership to include non-European states (except United States as an occupying power) might result in conflicts of jurisdiction between Economic Council for Europe and other international bodies with similar terms of reference.

3. As far as Canadian membership is concerned, it seems to us that we should not seek membership unless we are in a position to provide expert technical personnel for membership on the commission. Demands on people with specialized knowledge here are already greater than we can meet. Initiative on our part might also create impression that we are prepared to extend credits to a greater extent than is actually the case.

4. We are grateful for information which you have continued to give us concerning activities of sub-commission. Ends.

533.

CH/Vol. 2105

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1865

London, September 9, 1946

IMMEDIATE. CONFIDENTIAL. Following from Turgeon to Robertson, Begins: Your telegram 1579 of 31st August, Devastated Areas.

1. Discussion on proposed European Economic Council resumes September 11th.

2. In discussion on September 7th, U.K. moved that the Sub-Commission formally recommend to Economic and Social Council that European Commission be created. Lord Pakenham said inter alia that his government was willing to leave the door open so that European countries not joining immediately could become members later. Soviet delegate did not openly oppose creation of Commission but asked that decision be left to Economic and Social Council because he had no instructions for or against from his government. Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia reserved position and Ukraine opposed creation on ground that such recommendation was beyond Sub-Commission's terms of reference.

3. I spoke here saying that Canada strongly favoured creation of this Commission, although it meant additional financial expenditure, because administrative costs would come from United Nations funds, and stated my opinion that recommendation was definitely within Sub-Commission's terms of reference. However I pointed out that Soviet delegate did not oppose but simply asked question to be left to the Council, and that only the Council could definitely make this recommendation to the General Assembly. I suggested that instead of voting for or against proposal in Sub-Commission, it should be submitted to Council as a recommendation from U.K., U.S., and Poland, and that the Council be asked to give matter urgent consideration.

4. I took this attitude partly because it seemed best and most appropriate in the circumstances, partly because it would ease the position of Polish delegation which had joined Western powers in this proposal and largely because of Canadian attitude expressed in House of Commons after espionage exposures, of wanting to be friendly as possible with Soviet Union.

5. Previous to U.K. motion U.S. delegate Blasdell, acting in Lubin's absence, stated the matter was important and should be carefully considered, and frankly discussed. During recess in session after my speech, he showed me draft of suggested amendment carrying out my suggestion for action in council instead of Sub-Commission. Lubin arrived in London later in day after Sub-Commission chairman had postponed decision till September 11th in hope Soviet delegate would then be instructed. Last night Lubin told me he thought Sub-Commission should make decision. He was of opinion General Assembly will be delayed and that Sub-Commission could postpone conclusion of its work till week beginning September 16, and that by then Russian delegate would be instructed. I think however this matter will be concluded by September 12 in which case Lubin will probably support U.K. resolution.

6. I should be glad to receive instructions as to action if Russian delegate is still without instructions when question finally dealt with. Considering everything, I favour maintenance of my attitude but am in position to take any action you desire. I fear that forcing of affirmative vote in Sub-Commission before Soviet delegate receives instructions will add to bitterness of debate in Council and could be the factor which would turn Soviet government against proposal.

534.

DEA-FAH/7-1946/1

Extraits du projet de commentaire pour la délégation à la troisième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies<sup>1</sup>

Extracts from the Draft Commentary for the Delegation to the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations<sup>1</sup>

. . .

III APPROVAL OF AGREEMENTS BRINGING SPECIALIZED AGENCIES INTO RELATION WITH THE UNITED NATIONS

. . .

Policy of Canadian Delegation

21. It seems that the Economic and Social Council will present to the Assembly not "concluded" but "draft" agreements. At the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council, Canada supported the Soviet line that the agreement with the ILO spelled out in too great detail such matters of procedure as exchanges of documents, etc. (see Para. 8). While we would not be debarred from raising the issue again at the Assembly (in so far as all the agreements are concerned), it may be unwise to reopen the issue at the Assembly because it might result in a time-consuming argument in view of Mudaliar's attitude in the Council. To raise the issue in relation to the ILO agreement might be particularly unwise since it might provide the Soviet Union with an occasion for reviving the debate on the questions of principle involved in bringing the ILO into relation with the United Nations. On the other hand, these agreements may set a pattern for future agreements and it is clearly undesirable to put too much detail (which will require amendment) in a basic document of this nature. Consequently the Canadian delegation should strive for a simplification of the agreements if this can be accomplished without long debate and a postponement of the conclusion of the agreements.

22. Since the agreement with PICAQ is still fluid, the Canadian delegation to the Economic and Social Council might try to keep the agreement on broad lines and to leave as much detail as possible to be worked out by the chief administrative officers of the two organizations.

<sup>1</sup> Les parties du commentaire traitant du problème des réfugiés, de la sous-commission temporaire sur la reconstruction économique des régions dévastées, des accords entre les agences spécialisées et les Nations Unies, de la terminaison d'UNRRA, des accords sur les stupéfiants, de la conférence internationale sur la santé, du paiement des membres des commissions, du règlement intérieur et des navires sur le haut Danube ne sont pas reproduites parce que l'attitude du Canada envers ces questions n'est pas indiquée. L'attitude du Canada envers certaines de ces questions est indiquée dans le document 537.

<sup>1</sup> Parts of the Commentary dealing with the refugee problem, the Temporary Sub-Commission on Economic Reconstruction of Devastated Areas, agreements between specialized agencies and the United Nations, the termination of UNRRA, conventions on narcotic drugs, the International Health Conference, payment of members of the Commissions, rules of procedure and vessels on the Upper Danube are not printed because the Canadian attitude towards these issues is not indicated. Canadian attitude towards some of these issues is indicated in Document 537.

23. The proposals submitted by the Bank<sup>1</sup> (para 19 above) do not seem to meet the requirements of Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter since they would not result in bringing the Bank into relationship with the United Nations in any real sense. An effort should therefore be made to persuade the Bank to accept a compromise between their proposals and the kind of agreement negotiated with the ILO, FAO and UNESCO. This compromise might be called an "interim" agreement. It should certainly be less detailed than the other agreements but it should not be meaningless. The Economic and Social Council could be instructed by the Assembly to continue its negotiations with the Bank in an effort to bring down a more satisfactory agreement at the 1947 Assembly.

24. The Delegation to the Economic and Social Council should oppose the drawing up of an elaborate face-saving agreement with the Fund so hedged with qualifications as to be meaningless. It would be better to have a brief "interim" agreement, similar to that suggested in the preceding paragraph for the Bank.

25. The question of relations in budgetary matters is covered by Article 17 (3) of the Charter which states that the Assembly

(a) "shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies..." and

(b) "shall examine the administrative budget of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned".

26. The Preparatory Commission was of the opinion that it was not intended that these provisions should confer on the Assembly power to control the policies of the specialized agencies, but that their purpose was to encourage and develop a large measure of fiscal and administrative co-ordination "in the interest of greater efficiency and economy in operation for the entire structure composed of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies related to it." The Preparatory Commission went on to say:

Each specialized agency would benefit from a close scrutiny by the General Assembly of the administrative budgets of all such agencies. Member Governments required to share the increasing costs of international organizations would be assured that precautions had been taken against avoidable duplication of effort and expense. The first part of paragraph 3 of Article 17 envisages varying degrees of relationship, from complete financial integration downwards, and the second part ... the minimum degree of relationship which should be included in the agreements with the specialized agencies.

27. The Canadian delegations to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly should press for the effective carrying out of the second part so that the Canadian parliament and people can be assured that we have done all we can to ensure economy and effective control of the expenditures of international organizations of which Canada is a member.

<sup>1</sup> Banque internationale pour la Reconstruction et le Développement.

<sup>1</sup> International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

IV LETTER OF AUGUST 31ST TO MR. MARTIN CONCERNING MEMBERSHIP ON COMMISSIONS

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 31, 1946

Dear Mr. Martin,

One of the most important items on the agenda of the Economic and Social Council is the appointment of the governments who are to name representatives to serve on the various commissions of the Council. It will be necessary for the Canadian delegation to decide which commissions of the Council it would like Canada elected to.

2. The Council, at its New York meeting, decided to set up six commissions; these are referred to in item 12 of the agenda. It deferred to its next meeting the setting up of three additional commissions; these are referred to in item 19 of the agenda. One of these additional commissions is the Co-ordination Commission, which will probably be composed not of government representatives but of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Directors-General of each of the specialized agencies brought into relationship with the United Nations.

3. Thus, at most, the Economic and Social Council will have to select the members of the following eight commissions:

- Economic and Employment Commission
- Statistical Commission (12 members)
- Demographic Commission (number of members not yet decided)
- Social Commission (18 members)
- Fiscal Commission (number of members not yet decided)
- Commission on the Status of Women (15 members)
- Commission on Human Rights (18 members)
- Transport and Communications Commission (15 members)

4. It would seem to me that three considerations should be taken into account in determining which commissions we should seek membership on: the extent of our direct national interest in the work of the commission; the extent of the contribution which, because of special knowledge and experience, we may be able to make to the work of the commission; our ability to appoint a first-class representative.

5. There is also the question of how many commissions we could legitimately expect to be elected to. The only indication we have of the attitude of other governments to this question is that the Netherlands Government has indicated its preference for elections to the eight commissions, in the following order: Economic and Employment, Statistical, Transport and Communication, Social, Human Rights, Status of Women, Demographic, Fiscal.

6. A nuclear Economic and Employment Commission, of which Canada was a member, met during the second session of the Council. We were represented on this commission by Dr. Mackintosh. This is probably the most important commission of the Council and the one which is of most direct concern to us. I would think, therefore, that we ought to be represented on this Commission.

7. The Dominion Statistician and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have very strongly expressed the view that we should be represented on the Statistical Commission. They think that, as we are one of the more advanced countries in the field of statistics, we would be able to make a valuable contribution to the development of international co-operation in statistics.

8. The Demographic Commission is, like the Statistical Commission, of direct interest to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The Dominion Statistician is of the opinion that demographic knowledge is well advanced in Canada and that we are in a position to make a very creditable contribution in this field as well as in the field of statistics.

9. Dr. Davidson, the Deputy Minister of Welfare, and the Deputy Minister of Labour, think that we ought to be represented on the Social Commission. Dr. Davidson says that membership on the Social Commission is particularly important for us because of the expanding responsibility of the Federal Government in the field of social welfare.

10. Mr. Elliott, the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, thinks we should seek election to the Fiscal Commission for two reasons. The first is that we have developed in this country specialized knowledge concerning the relations between taxation and the movement of capital; the second reason is that Canada has so much material interest in the development of international agreements for reasonable and consistent practice in taxation. These views are concurred in by Mr. Eaton, the Director of the Taxation Division in the Department of Finance.

11. We have received representations from the Canadian National Council of Women and from the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, asking the Government to try to secure membership for Canada on the Commission on the Status of Women.

12. The work of the Commission on Human Rights can be very important. The section of the United Nations Secretariat which deals with this question is headed by Professor Humphrey, formerly of McGill University. I am sure that there are many Canadians who feel that we should be represented on this commission. Mr. Varcoe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, has given us a memorandum<sup>1</sup> concerning the work of the Commission on Human Rights in which he points out that if the commission is to do a good job it should include in its membership at least one of the nations of the British Commonwealth; otherwise the peculiar British approach to the problems of the protection of the rights of individuals will not be represented in the commission. He adds that, if only one Commonwealth country is on the commission it ought to be a federal rather than a unitary state in view of the difficulties which federal states will encounter in implementing by domestic legislation international agreements for the protection of individual rights. Mr. Varcoe also suggests that Canada is concerned in the work of the Commission on Human Rights because of the interest which has been shown in this country in the protection of minorities and the prevention of discrimination on the grounds of race, language or religion.

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document 530.

<sup>1</sup> See Document 530.

13. Neither the Department of Transport nor the Post Office has indicated that we should now seek membership on the Transport and Communications Commission. Possibly, therefore, membership on this commission might be put at the end of any list of preferences which is drawn up.

14. Before accepting membership on any commission we must, of course, be sure that the Government is in a position to name a first-class representative.

15. Dr. Mackintosh has been the Canadian representative on the nuclear Economic and Employment Commission. I do not know whether any consideration has been given as to whether he will be able to continue on the commission, but even if he cannot I am sure that, in view of the importance of the commission, we would be able to find a first-class representative from the Department of Finance or the Bank of Canada.

16. Since the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is the government agency primarily concerned with the work of the Statistical and Demographic Commissions, and the Dominion Statistician strongly urges that we secure membership on these commissions, I assume that there will be no difficulty in our appointing first-class representatives to these two commissions.

17. Dr. Davidson would be an appropriate member for the Social Commission, and Mr. Fraser Elliott, who was a member of the League Fiscal Commission, would be an appropriate member of the Fiscal Commission of the Economic and Social Council.

18. Since the Department of External Affairs has already had heavy drains on its resources, and since the commissions for the most part are of more concern to other Departments than to us, I think that we would not wish nor be able to provide representatives for any of the Commissions. So far as this Department is concerned, however, we would welcome the appointment of officers of other Departments to commissions since this would relieve us of the direct responsibility of ensuring that the work of these commissions was being properly followed in Ottawa.

19. It is obvious that we cannot secure membership on all the commissions and that the delegation will have to establish some order of preference before the elections are held at the Council meeting. I thought that you might like to have time to give the question consideration before you left Ottawa and that you might wish to consult your colleagues in the Government.

20. There is one further question concerning the membership of these commissions which I need not develop now, and that is the question of which other states the Canadian delegation should support for membership on the commissions. We have consulted the Departments of Government chiefly concerned and are having a note prepared for you on this subject. Canada has not had much success in getting the functional principles applied in practice in the elections to the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. We might do our best to ensure that it is applied in the elections to the commissions of the Economic and Social Council.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG
Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

V MEMORANDUM ON "THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE INTERNATIONAL BANK AND THE U.N."

Ottawa, September 6, 1946

Dear Mr. Reid,

RE: RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN INTERNATIONAL BANK AND THE U.N.

You will recall my speaking to you about this matter since returning from Washington last week, and saying that my opinion had changed somewhat since seeing the draft agreement between the Fund and the U.N. I no longer feel that the proposals of U.N. to the Fund and the Bank are mere hollow, deceptive documents, and, therefore, I would like to change the comments which I gave you some weeks ago. I had based my opinion too much on second-hand knowledge acquired from some of my colleagues in the Bank, who exaggerated the nature of the proposed contract of relationship. Sir James Grigg, in particular, had led me to believe that the contract which the Fund was proposing to enter into was so hedged about with qualifications that it was meaningless and somewhat deceptive. On looking at it, I came to the conclusion that while it would not bind either party to very much and really just set down on paper a lot of intentions to collaborate and cooperate, which might almost be taken for granted, nevertheless it was not misleading nor completely useless.

The situation as regards the Bank itself is that it has indicated to the U.N. its reluctance to enter into a formal agreement at the present time, but that it is willing to co-operate on an informal but effective basis pending the time when it can enter into a contract with the benefit of some experience and knowledge of the matters to be covered by such a contract.

As I understand the situation, there has been no real exchange of letters or memoranda even between the U.N. and the Bank setting forth their views on the matter, but there have been a number of discussions and verbal assurances by representatives of the Bank that they were prepared to cooperate with the U.N. I believe that in fact consultations between the staffs of the two organizations take place when there is a need for it, and the Secretary of the Bank, who was only appointed last month and only recently commenced his duties on a more or less full-time basis, is endeavouring to arrange for effective working contacts. Whether these informal working contacts will proceed to the extent of the Bank communicating its proposed budget to the UN at the time it sends it to its own Board of Governors later this month, I do not know. I would hope myself that they might go so far as to send the proposed budget to the U.N. for their information, but I am not sure that the Bank will itself feel ready to do this as yet.

On the substance of the arrangements between the Bank and the U.N., I believe that the Bank sees no objection in principle to having an agreement, but the President and, to a considerable extent, a number of the Directors feel that it is too early for the Bank to make an agreement of this sort before it has really had any experience in dealing with the problems of liaison or, indeed, with its own problems. The Bank is still only in the process of organization, and all the senior personnel are not yet selected and at work. They have a great many other more urgent matters to think about than a formal agreement with the U.N. In addition to this, however, there are some important practical considerations of substance. The most significant is the danger that is felt that the U.N. may press on the Bank recommendations as to the loans that it should make in such a way as would interfere with the proper appraisal of proposals by the Bank itself. The Bank is not only an international executive agency, but one which is going to be forced to reach decisions of judgement on rather controversial questions of great material importance to certain of its members. It must be careful that the exercise of this judgement and the reaching of decisions in which the voting strength of the members has been carefully related to fairly objective economic criteria, are not distorted by pressures exercised through other agencies where the balance of power is somewhat differently distributed and where it may be difficult to give as careful and objective consideration to the issues involved in the proposals put forward. This same argument, of course, applies to some extent in the case of the Fund, but less strongly, I believe, because the Fund's questions are somewhat more technical and perhaps of a less controversial and political nature.

In addition the Bank has a special problem of its own, arising from the fact that it must borrow in the market or on its own credit. Its whole success in accomplishing the purposes for which it was established will depend on its ability to do this. It is most important that it behave in a way which will enable it to acquire and retain the confidence of those who must buy its securities. For this purpose, it must make evident that in the first place it is a reasonably independent and strong organization, controlled, it is true, by the nations who established it and operated through those whom these nations have appointed to its Board of Directors and the governing body which meets annually, but nevertheless having a separate existence in itself and able to discharge responsibilities and undertakings. If through entering into a contract of relationships with the United Nations it confuses in any way public opinion amongst those who are going to buy its securities in such a way as to lead them to believe that it will be subject to the controls or pressures of the U.N., which is a new organization itself, as yet unproven and greatly influenced as it inevitably must be by political rather than economic and financial considerations, then it will considerably complicate and increase the problem of selling its securities. For this reason, it is bound to move more cautiously in associating itself with the U.N. than any of the other agencies, because they do not have this special problem to face.

My own recommendation would be that the Canadian delegation concerned with these matters from the U.N. side should understand the position of the Bank and should not endeavour to press it to enter into a formal contract with the U.N. before it feels itself ready to do so. I am inclined to believe that the contract of relationship can be reasonably simple, clear, and not such as to compromise in any way the Bank's situation from the point of view of the investment market, but it may take some time to put the contract into such a form and to convince those in the Bank that in fact it is quite safe from their special point of view. In the meantime, I do not believe that some delay in the case of the Bank need hold up the arrangements with other agencies.

Yours truly,

R. B. BRYCE

VI NOTE ON MEMBERSHIP OF COMMISSIONS OF THE
ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

[Ottawa,] September 5, 1946

This note is concerned with the suggestions which have been made regarding membership of countries other than Canada on the Commissions to be established by the Economic and Social Council.

1. STATISTICAL COMMISSION:

The Dominion Statistician considers that the following countries could contribute much to the work of this Commission: the United Kingdom, the United States, Sweden or Norway or Denmark, The Netherlands, France, Australia or South Africa, India (which has done pioneer statistical work in connection with illiterate population and would contribute advice concerning the statistical organization of other backward areas), Chile (which has a relatively advanced statistical organization among South American countries), Brazil or Mexico (which are, along with Chile, prominent in the Inter-American Statistical Institute). The Governor of the Bank of Canada makes no specific suggestions, but thinks that presumably some countries which do not yet have very good statistics but are anxious to improve should be included.

2. DEMOGRAPHIC COMMISSION:

The Dominion Statistician makes the following suggestions: the United Kingdom, the United States, Sweden, France, Mexico, Chile.

3. SOCIAL COMMISSION:

The Deputy Minister of Welfare, Dr. Davidson, acknowledges some difficulty in knowing what states to suggest for this commission. Among the English-speaking countries he mentions New Zealand, the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia. Norway, Sweden and Denmark have all made outstanding contributions to the development of social policy. Czechoslovakia would have a great deal to offer. France, Holland and Belgium could make useful contributions. Of the South American countries, Dr. Davidson thinks that Chile, which has the reputation of having developed a fairly comprehensive social security programme, would serve as well as any other country, although Brazil and Mexico also have something to offer and could perhaps be considered alternatively with Chile.

4. FISCAL COMMISSION:

Mr. Elliott, the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, has no specific suggestions to make, but thinks that in addition to the Big Four there should be representatives from "large geographical areas having the best developed economic viewpoint."

5. TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION:

The Deputy Postmaster General would like to see represented on the Commission countries which have important international postal services, such as the United Kingdom, the United States, France and Brazil. The United Kingdom and the United States are also suggested by the Department of Transport.

6. COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN:

A memorandum† prepared in the Department of External Affairs makes the following suggestions: the United States, the United Kingdom, France, China, India, Denmark, the U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia, or Greece, Chile or Brazil, Poland, the Lebanon, the Dominican Republic.

7. COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS:

No suggestions have been made regarding membership on this Commission.

VII TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSIONS OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

[Ottawa,] September 5, 1946

STATISTICAL COMMISSION

1. The functions of the Commission, as defined by the Economic and Social Council, are to assist the Council:

(a) in promoting the development of national statistics and the improvement of their comparability;

(b) in the co-ordination of the statistical work of specialized agencies;

(c) in the development of the central statistical services of the Secretariat;

(d) in advising the organs of the United Nations on general questions relating to the collection, interpretation and dissemination of statistical information;

(e) in promoting the improvement of statistics and statistical methods generally.

2. The Dominion Statistician thinks that the terms of reference are adequate and, indeed, very comprehensive. He feels that functions (c) and (b) would require priority; (a) and (e) are long-term projects and would require a considerable amount of preliminary discussion, while (d) is a function which would develop gradually.

3. The Governor of the Bank of Canada agrees that the terms of reference are adequate. He would give priority to (a) and (c), and suggests that early attention be given to compilation by each country of figures of physical production and stocks in major lines. He also thinks that it would be very valuable to have for each country statistics of the local currency cost of certain standard family budgets.

SOCIAL COMMISSION

4. The terms of reference of the Social Commission, as approved by the Economic and Social Council, are:

(a) to advise the Council on social questions of a general character, and in particular on all matters in the social field not covered by specialized inter-governmental agencies;

(b) to advise the Council on practical measures that may be needed in the social field;

(c) to advise the Council on measures needed for the co-ordination of activities in the social field;

(d) to advise the Council on such international agreements and conventions on any of these matters as may be required, and on their execution;

(e) to report to the Council on the extent to which the recommendations of the United Nations in the field of social policy are being carried out.

5. The Deputy Minister of Welfare, Dr. G. F. Davidson, is not convinced that these terms of reference are wholly adequate. He feels that the effectiveness of the Commission's work will depend almost entirely on the degree to which it can establish satisfactory working relationships with the specialized agencies already operating. The avoidance of any reference in the report of the Interim Commission to social security programmes or economic maintenance programmes may be due to an assumption that the I.L.O. already covers this field and will be left with responsibility for it. If this assumption is correct, Dr. Davidson fears that the Social Commission will be merely a loose and relatively ineffective co-ordinating agency with certain specialized but minor responsibilities. He would prefer to see all the important areas of social policy brought within the scope of the Social Commission. With this important exception, he thinks that the terms of reference are reasonably satisfactory.

6. The two problems which should be given first attention by the Commission, in Dr. Davidson's opinion, are those of picking up the loose ends from UNRRA and of finding means of resuming the work formerly carried on by the League of Nations Committee on Social Questions. Other problems are less urgent although probably of greater long-range importance. The Commission should at an early date commence the study of professional services forming part of social security programmes.

7. The Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. A. MacNamara, also draws attention to the importance of the relationship to be established between the Social Commission and the I.L.O. In his opinion, unless there is close co-ordination or a clear division of the respective fields between the two agencies the new Commission will not achieve useful results. He feels that the question of priorities depends upon the settlement of the first question.

FISCAL COMMISSION

8. The functions of the proposed Fiscal Commission, as drafted by the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations, are to advise the Council on:

- (a) international taxation problems;
- (b) exchange of information among States on the techniques of government finance and on their social and economic effects;
- (c) fiscal techniques to assist the prevention of depressions or inflation;
- (d) such functions of the Fiscal Committee of the League of Nations as the United Nations may decide to assume.

9. Mr. C. F. Elliott, the Deputy Minister (Taxation) of the Department of National Revenue, thinks that these proposed terms of reference are adequate but feels that they should be reconsidered after experience has been acquired. He regards the functions of the Commission as of great importance. Attention should, he thinks, be concentrated on (a) and (b).

10. Mr. A. K. Eaton, Director of the Taxation Division in the Department of Finance, thinks that the question of foreign exchange control should be considered by the Fiscal Commission unless it comes within the purview of another Commission.

COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

11. The Economic and Social Council defined the function of this Commission as that of submitting proposals, recommendations and reports to the Council regarding:

- (a) an international bill of rights;
- (b) international declarations or conventions on civil liberties, the status of women, freedom of information and similar matter;
- (c) the protection of minorities;
- (d) the prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language or religion;
- (e) any other matters concerning human rights.

12. The Department of Justice, in a memorandum, notes the very wide character of these terms of reference and sees no reason for restricting them.

The only criticism is that no mention is made of remedies or sanctions. The Department expresses no opinion about the relative importance of the various items. It observes that Canada might be particularly interested in (c) and (d).

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

13. The terms of reference approved by the Economic and Social Council are:

- (a) to assist the Council in its tasks concerned with transport and communications problems;
- (b) to advise the Council on the co-ordination of the work of specialized agencies in the sphere of transport and communications;
- (c) to report to the Council, on its request, on the work of any of the specialized agencies in the sphere of transport and communications;
- (d) to advise the Council in fields where no permanent international organization yet exists and on problems which concern more than one sphere of transport or communications;
- (e) to suggest to the Council the creation of new agencies, or the conclusion of new conventions or the revision of existing conventions;
- (f) on instructions of the Council and when so authorized by convention or agreement between the parties, to perform the task of conciliation in cases of disputes between States and (or) specialized agencies, on problems concerning international transport and communications where not dealt with by other means;
- (g) to perform such other tasks as the Economic and Social Council may require of it on any question concerning international transport and communications;
- (h) to assist the Security Council, if so desired by the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter;
- (i) to assist the Trusteeship Council, if so desired by the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with Article 91 of the Charter.

14. Mr. W. J. Turnbull, Deputy Postmaster General, regards these terms of reference as adequate. He is not aware of any particular field of work on which the Commission should concentrate during its first years of existence. He notes that the Universal Postal Union will be brought into a minimum relationship with the United Nations but will exercise complete autonomy.

15. The Department of Transport expresses no opinion on the adequacy of the terms of reference. The field of international telecommunications would be of most immediate concern to it.

COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

16. The functions of this Commission are defined as follows:

To prepare recommendations and reports to the Economic and Social Council on promoting women's rights in political, social and educational fields. The Commission shall also make recommendations to the Council of urgent problems requiring immediate attention in the field of women's rights.

17. A memorandum prepared in the Department of External Affairs observes that these terms of reference seem sufficiently broad and adequate. It suggests that attention should be directed to: (a) the establishment of an Executive Office; (b) a survey of laws pertaining to the status of women, which is a necessary preliminary to further progress; (c) political rights, since little progress can be made without them; (d) educational problems; (e) a Women's Conference, although this could wait for some time.

DEMOGRAPHIC COMMISSION

18. The United Nations Assembly decided that a Demographic Commission should be established to make studies and advise the Economic and Social Council on matters related to:

- (a) population growth and the factors determining it;
- (b) the effectiveness of policies designed to influence these factors;
- (c) the bearing of population changes on economic and social conditions;
- (d) the general population and migration questions.

19. In the opinion of the Dominion Statistician these terms of reference are adequate and give ample scope for the consideration of population problems.

20. The United Kingdom delegation have emphasized their conviction that the establishment of a separate commission for the study of population is amply warranted by the importance of the problems involved and also by the necessity for having fully qualified specialists in this field available to advise the Council. They have suggested changes in the terms of reference which do not alter their nature but have the effect of slightly enlarging their scope.

VIII THE PROPOSED WORLD FOOD BOARD

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

1. The Economic and Social Council on June 21, 1946, adopted the following resolution:

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL, BEING CONCERNED with urgent economic and social problems and with the task of coordinating the activities of specialized agencies;

HAVING TAKEN NOTE that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in order to assist governments and international organizations to implement the resolution on wheat and rice of the General Assembly of the United Nations of 14 February 1946, convened a special meeting on Urgent Food Problems in Washington, D.C., 20 to 27 May 1946, which was attended by representatives of twenty-one governments and of five international organizations; and

HAVING TAKEN NOTE of the report of the Special Meeting and, in particular, of the "recommendations on longer-term machinery" which call upon the Director-

General of the Food and Agriculture Organization to make a survey and proposals concerning longer-term international machinery, in the preparation of which he is requested to maintain close contact with the Economic and Social Council;

REQUESTS the Secretary-General to offer all possible assistance to the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization at all stages, in making the survey and in preparing proposals concerning longer-term international machinery with reference to food with a view to ensuring that these proposals are in harmony with the broad pattern of the United Nations for international economic organization and co-operation; and requests the Secretary-General to report to the next session of the Council.

2. The report which the Secretary-General will make to the Economic and Social Council will raise some important issues. Discussion will turn on the scope, functions and powers of the World Food Board, which the Director General of the Food and Agriculture Organization, in accordance with the resolution of the special meeting on urgent food problems, has proposed should be set up.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

3. When the world shortage of food, particularly cereals, first became critical at the end of 1945, international action was taken to mitigate its effects. On February 14th 1946 the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted a resolution urging all governments and people concerned to take steps to conserve supplies both directly and through the appropriate international organization.

4. A special meeting of the Food and Agriculture Organization was convened in Washington May 20-27 to consider both the short-term and the long-term problems. To meet the short-term problem the Combined Food Board was transformed into the International Emergency Food Council with an enlarged membership and expanded functions though still on an advisory and consultative basis. To meet the long-term problem the Director General was requested to survey existing machinery and submit proposals for any extension of the functions of existing organizations or any new organizations which the survey might indicate as necessary.

5. The proposals for a World Food Board, which the Director General, Sir John Boyd Orr, has prepared in accordance with this resolution will be under consideration at the Food and Agriculture Conference which will open in Copenhagen on September 2nd. They suggest the establishment of a World Food Board with power to:

a) stabilize prices of agricultural commodities on the world markets, including provision of the necessary funds for stabilizing operations;

b) establish a world food reserve adequate for any emergency that might arise through failure of crops in any part of the world;

c) provide funds for financing the disposal of surplus agricultural products on special terms to countries where the need for them is most urgent; and

d) cooperate with organizations concerned with international credits for industrial and agricultural development, and with trade and commodity policy, in order that their common ends might be more quickly and effectively achieved.

6. These very far reaching recommendations came as something of a shock. The United States Government expressed the opinion that:

- a) the financial obligations entailed might be very heavy;
- b) the type of operation proposed might tend to create the obstacles and restrictions to world trade which it was the purpose of the future international trade organization to remove; and
- c) the suggested functions of the World Food Board would cut across the activities of other international organizations.

7. The United Kingdom Government was unfavourably impressed by some of the proposals, such as the suggestion that supplies should be distributed as relief to needy nations, but indicated that the plans for the use of buffer stocks to stabilize prices were in accordance with previous United Kingdom policy and should receive the fullest consideration. It suggested, however, that the functions of the projected Board fell outside the scope of the Food and Agriculture Organization and, in order to avoid overlapping and confusion, the proposals should be considered by the international agency best able to take into account the issues affecting all specialized organizations in the field.

8. At the present time (August 28) the United States delegation to the Food and Agriculture Organization Conference has been instructed to move that a special committee to examine all the alternative proposals, including those for a World Food Board, be set up, and that the Conference do nothing that would prejudice its work (i.e. that there should be no endorsement in principle of the World Food Board programme). The committee would be asked to report to the Director General at the earliest possible moment, preferably by the end of 1946.

9. The United Kingdom delegation has been instructed to move that the proposals be immediately referred to the Economic and Social Council and thence to the Economic Employment Commission for urgent action. If the United Kingdom motion is adopted a debate may arise in the Economic and Social Council which will deal both with the substance of the proposals and the best method of handling them.

CANADIAN POLICY

10. The sweeping character of the proposals has led the Canadian Government to regard them with caution. It is felt that though the objectives sketched are admirable, the implications of the methods suggested have been insufficiently worked out. Final instructions to the Canadian delegation at the Food and Agriculture Organization Conference have not been drawn up, but will certainly not include any general endorsement of the proposals.

11. The United Kingdom Government has been informed that the Canadian Government would support the reference of the proposals to the Economic and Social Council as the best means of ensuring that they are considered in relation to the other pertinent international problems and in association with all the agencies competent in this field.

. . .

X THE WORLD SHORTAGE OF CEREALS

. . .

POLICY OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

18. The International Emergency Food Council. The Canadian Government has co-operated fully in the work of the Combined Food Board and will naturally continue to support its successor. Our system of centralized marketing through the Canadian Wheat Board and the other controls still in existence constitute an exceptionally effective means of carrying out the recommendations of the Council.

19. The International allocation of cereals. Since supplies to meet the deficit must come chiefly from North America, and since the marketing methods now pursued in the United States are not such as to permit firm programming more than a month ahead, the burden of a system of international allocation would fall chiefly on Canada. International allocation is therefore not favoured. The Canadian Delegation might take the stand that since it is the countries of North America, i.e. Canada and the United States, which dispose of the greater part of present exportable surpluses, the close cooperation through the International Emergency Food Council and the monthly programming now practised gives fully as good results as would be obtained by international allocation.

20. Increase in Acreage planted to Wheat. The Canadian view is that Canadian wheat acreage has already substantially increased and that any further extension would be at the expense of the acreage planted to coarse grains and would consequently have bad effects on other parts of the food programme such as meat and dairy production.

21. Increase in the Extraction Rate for Flour. The Canadian position is that any increase in the extraction rate would lessen the supply of mill feeds for livestock and, owing to the comparatively small part of the Canadian crop milled in Canada, would increase the world's exportable supply of flour very little.

22. The World Food Board. If the issue should be raised again at the United Nations Assembly, the Canadian Delegation might stress the interest of the Canadian Government in the stabilization of prices and rationalization of supply and to [sic] urge the need for early and full consideration of the best means to achieve this end. The World Food Board should be regarded as one proposal among the others which demand examination.

XI REFERENCES TO THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

1. The provisional agenda for the third session of the Economic and Social Council includes, as Item 7, the following:

Request to General Assembly for authorization to Council to request advisory opinion of International Court of Justice.

2. It is assumed that this refers to the procedure outlined in Article 96, paragraph 2, of the Charter, which provides that other organs of the United Nations, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities. It would therefore be within the terms of the Charter for the Economic and Social Council to seek the authorization proposed.

3. From the point of view of policy, as it does not appear that the International Court will be overburdened at the outset, and as the adoption of this method of direct reference from the Economic and Social Council would relieve the General Assembly of the labour of passing on each specific reference from the Economic and Social Council, it is felt that the Canadian delegation should support the proposal to seek authorization to refer legal questions, within the scope of the activities of the Economic and Social Council, direct to the International Court. If in future the International Court should become overburdened, this decision could be reconsidered.

. . .

XV TRANSFER TO THE UNITED NATIONS OF NON-POLITICAL FUNCTIONS AND ACTIVITIES OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

. . .

ATTITUDE OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

17. There can be no doubt about the usefulness of the work accomplished by the Economic and Financial, and the Transit and Communications Organizations of the League of Nations. This work should be continued, and developed under the general direction of the interested Commissions of the Economic and Social Council. The Social Commission will also take over with advantage the work formerly undertaken by the League Advisory Committee on Social Questions. The data and experience accumulated will be useful to the various specialized agencies.

18. It is to be hoped that the United Nations will be able to secure the services of a considerable number of the League officials with long experience and specialized knowledge of the non-political activities of the League. Full use should also be made by the United Nations of the records, reports and statistical material collected by the League during the past twenty-four years. Most of this material is in Geneva. Some of it is at Princeton. The United Nations should continue, on a comparable basis, the League series of publications in the economic and social field.

XVI ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONSULTATION BETWEEN THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

. . .

15. In general, while the encouragement of genuinely representative international non-governmental organizations is obviously desirable, it will probably be wise to scrutinize very carefully the character and credentials of all non-governmental bodies seeking special recognition or facilities from the United Nations.

16. If the question of still more extensive provisions for participation in the United Nations for the W.F.T.U. or other non-governmental bodies is again raised, and if the Canadian delegation decides to oppose this, it may be considered desirable to base this opposition on grounds more explicit and more forward-looking than most of the grounds put forward hitherto. The following considerations may be helpful.

17. While Canada would welcome proposals calculated to associate the peoples of the world more directly with the activities of the United Nations, and would not be opposed to such changes in the charter as may be found necessary to meet new needs in a changing world (supporting references could be quoted from Mr. St. Laurent's speech to the Assembly in January, 1946, and from the Prime Minister's speech in the House of Commons on December 17, 1945, on the Atomic Resolution), nevertheless the direction in which Canada would wish to see the United Nations develop is towards a world government with the Assembly presumably evolving towards a democratic world parliament directly representative of peoples on a geographic basis and with direct authority. All democratic countries have incorporated this principle of representation in their constitution.

18. Proposals to increase the special representation in the United Nations of selected interest groups on a corporative basis would appear to lay the foundation for an evolution in a very different direction. An analogous proposal in the national field would involve constitutional representation of occupational groups as such in national legislatures. This was typical of the fascist so-called "Corporate State". The use which the Nazis made of functional organizations in the development of fascist "fifth columns" will also not be forgotten. There is always some danger, in special formal recognition by the United Nations of non-governmental bodies, of encouraging the growth of propaganda pressure groups, which would offer tempting prizes to the surreptitious growth of totalitarian machine controls. The United Nations must be careful to avoid being put in the impossible position of having to assess competing claims and to scrutinize the credentials and representative character of private organizations claiming to represent various sections of the world's population.

19. All the Members of the United Nations have concerted the most careful rules of procedure to cover the admission of new Members to the United Nations and the scrutiny of the credentials of the official representatives of Members to the United Nations. No equivalent scrutiny of non-governmental groups is possible. There are for instance no agreed standards for comparison of membership figures. There are no agreed standards for determining the real representative character of non-governmental groups in various parts of the world, or the truly representative character of the delegates of such unofficial bodies. Such assessment and such scrutiny could not be carried out effectively as it would inevitably involve trespassing on the domestic affairs of member nations.

20. While therefore recognizing that non-governmental functional organizations have a useful role to play in international life and that consultation with them will from time to time be desirable for appropriate specialized organs of the United Nations, it seems desirable that caution should be exercised in this matter. It is clearly essential that the right of speaking or voting in major United Nations' organs should in principle be reserved for the official representatives of peoples organized on a geographic basis, that is, in the well-recognized democratic manner. And while the Economic and Social Council should be free at all times to consult non-governmental organizations, as provided under Article 71 of the Charter, it should not be unduly fettered in advance or bound to permanent consultation on any too rigid basis with particular non-governmental bodies.

• • •

XVIII LEAGUE LOANS

• • •

8. The first consideration in determining the Canadian attitude on this question is whether the functions and powers of the League in connection with these loans are of a political or technical character. An examination of the list of these functions and powers remaining (as outlined in paragraph 3) makes it clear that they are technical. An inspection of the record of the borrowing countries shows that Hungary, Greece and Bulgaria defaulted and the bondholders had to content themselves with such settlements as the League Loans Committee could secure for them; Danzig and Estonia never defaulted so long as they remained politically independent; and default on the Austrian loan was avoided until the Anschluss of 1938 on account of the governmental guarantors putting up more money. Since the League was responsible in a general way for these schemes, although assuming no liability for loss to the bondholders, there would seem to be a moral justification for the successor of the League continuing any technical help within its power to salvage these loans. Furthermore, it would appear undesirable to allow these functions and powers to lapse in view of the new international plans that have been made for the provision of funds for reconstruction and development. In this connection, there is the possibility that, in accordance with the resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations in London, the functions and powers could be assumed by a specialized agency (in this case the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development). In any event, there seems a good case for Canada supporting the assumption by the United Nations or by some specialized agency which has been brought into relation with the United Nations of the League of Nations functions and powers in respect of League loans.

9. None of the League loans were subscribed for in Canada. Canada therefore has no direct national interest in protecting the bondholders.

* * *

XX CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

* * *

5. A useful outline of arrangements on which such cooperation might be based was submitted to the Executive Committee by the United Kingdom delegates. (See Report by the Executive Committee to the Preparatory Commission, page 63.) The features of this memorandum which are of interest to the Economic and Social Council may be summarized as follows:

(1) Article 91 of the Charter should be construed to mean that normally the Trusteeship Council or the General Assembly will take the initiative in asking the aid of the Economic and Social Council. This, however, should not debar the Economic and Social Council—or any of the specialized agencies—from bringing to the notice of the Trusteeship Council any matters arising in trust territories which they believe may merit the attention of the Trusteeship Council.

(2) Just as the Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations invited a representative of the I.L.O. to attend its meetings, the Trusteeship Council might invite a representative of the Economic and Social Council to be present during its sessions to serve in an advisory capacity, although without the right to vote. The Trusteeship Council and the Economic and Social Council might draw up an agreed list of subjects in the discussion of which the Economic and Social Council would be interested. The Economic and Social Council would be regarded as having a standing invitation to attend all meetings of the Trusteeship Council during which these subjects were to be discussed. It would be for consideration whether the representative of the Economic and Social Council should be present while the Trusteeship Council formulated its observations.

(3) In certain circumstances the Trusteeship Council might ask the Economic and Social Council or one of the specialized agencies to make a study of some particular matter arising out of an annual report on a trust territory or out of a petition, in order that the Trusteeship Council may have the results of the study before it when formulating its observations.

(4) There should be the fullest possible interchange of papers between the Trusteeship Council and the Economic and Social Council. It will be for the Secretariat of the United Nations to work this out as a part of the general machinery of internal coordination.

(5) An interchange of staff between the Trusteeship Department of the Secretariat and the Economic and Social Departments would be useful. A member of the staff of the Trusteeship Department might be appointed as permanent liaison officer with the staffs of the Economic and Social Departments, or vice versa.

CANADIAN ATTITUDE

6. The Canadian delegation at San Francisco welcomed the decision of the Five Powers to recommend the creation of a Trusteeship Council as one of the principal organs of the United Nations, rather than a trusteeship commission subsidiary to the Economic and Social Council, which was the original plan of the United Kingdom delegation. It was felt that the body which supervised the administration of trust territories should report to the full General Assembly rather than to a body composed of only 18 members. At the coming session of the General Assembly however, the Canadian delegation should support any arrangements which will facilitate close and smooth working relations between the two bodies.

7. In all discussions of the work which the Economic and Social Council may do for dependent peoples it is important to distinguish clearly between the three classifications into which such peoples are divided. Some are inhabitants of trust territories, and for the welfare of all such peoples the Trusteeship Council will assume a special responsibility. Other dependent peoples are inhabitants of non-self-governing territories outside the trusteeship system. These peoples are referred to in Chapter XI of the Charter. The coordination of reports on their welfare is a function of the Secretary-General, and it is expected that the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies will have a more direct influence on their development than will the Trusteeship Council, whose work is to be confined to trust territories.

8. The third group of non-self-governing peoples are those who are found within the borders of sovereign states. No reports concerning their development are required by the United Nations. Unenfranchised Indians and Eskimos of Canada fall within this category, as do unenfranchised Indians, Eskimos and Negroes in the United States, the majority of the population of Algeria and special groups in several other countries, not excluding those which have a Soviet form of government. These groups are not mentioned in Chapters XI, XII, or XIII but come under the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article 1 of the Charter.

9. A United Kingdom delegate pointed out during the first part of the First Session of the General Assembly that the work of the Economic and Social Council, the I.L.O. and the specialized agencies would largely depend on the building up of standards of health, labour, nutrition and education and the economic and agricultural development of non-self-governing peoples within the boundaries of sovereign States as well as in colonial dependencies. Accordingly, although it is not likely that any firm decision can be made in the Economic and Social Council regarding assistance to be given the Trusteeship Council before the latter has begun to function, the Canadian delegation should not feel that there need be any delay in considering the means by which the Economic and Social Council itself can aid dependent peoples in the second and third categories mentioned above.

535.

DEA/5475-BQ-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CG-586

New York, September 12, 1946

ECSOC No. 2. Following from Economic and Social Council, Begins:
Following from Riddell, Begins:

1. Delegation has considered question of membership on Commissions, which appears on agenda tentatively for Saturday. Our view is that we should seek membership on following Commissions in order shown:

- (1) Economic and Employment.
- (2) Statistical.
- (3) Social.
- (4) Fiscal.

2. United Kingdom has named Canada in its lists for all those Commissions except Statistical. We are considering suggesting to United Kingdom that they transfer us on their lists from Human Rights Commission, where they have placed us, to Statistical Commission. Before doing so, however, Mr. Martin wishes to know opinion of Mr. St. Laurent as to importance which latter attaches to our seeking membership also on Human Rights Commission, particularly in light of remarks made in letter of August 26th† from Mr. Varcoe concerning debate in House on proposed Bill of Rights. Ends. Message ends.<sup>1</sup> 536.

DEA/5475-W-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 436

Ottawa, September 25, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for Hon. Paul Martin from Wrong, Begins: I have spoken to Mr. St. Laurent on the question of our possible membership on the Human Rights Commission which Riddell has told me about this morning. Mr. St. Laurent feels that it would be best for us not to seek initial membership on this Commission in view of the great extent of its mandate, the possibility of protracted discussion on vague issues, and the uncertainty of its real usefulness. He thinks that we should see how it develops and only consider pressing a claim in the light of its experience.

<sup>1</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce télégramme:

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the telegram:

Mr. Robertson spoke to Mr. St. Laurent who held no strong views—no reply was sent to this message. J. S[TARNES] 20 Sep[tember], 1946

2. I fully agree with this view and I believe that we should find it very difficult to instruct a Canadian member, and to explain to the public our position, on the matters which may come before the Commission. Ends.

537.

DEA-FAH/7-1946/2

Extraits du Rapport de la délégation à la troisième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies

Extracts from the Report of the Delegation to the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations

. . .

ELECTIONS TO COMMISSIONS.

14. Because of the decision that members of Commissions should be representatives of governments, the election of nominating states for these Commissions, which took place during the Third Session, had, in no sense, the object of establishing an efficient body of experts. Balanced representation of groups of states and geographical areas was the basic consideration in the elections, and the best that could be achieved in the application of the functional principle was an occasional reference to states with a record of accomplishment in some particular field. Because of the complicated nature of the election—eight Commissions with a total of 120 members—the chairman postponed the holding of elections as long as possible in order that efforts might be made to work out an agreed list. Such a list was produced during the last few days of the Session and was accepted in its entirety by most of the delegations. Consequently, the results of the voting reproduced exactly the slate which had been agreed upon in informal consultation. It appears, however, that in the voting, some of the Latin American countries transferred their votes from Eastern European to other Latin American states, with the result that, in the results of each poll, the votes cast for the Eastern European states tended to be less than in the case of those for other states, though sufficient to ensure election.

15. The agreed list on which the elections were based was worked out in consultation between the three Great Powers, which, in turn, represented the interests of other members of the Council. The Canadian delegation indicated to both the United States and United Kingdom delegations its desire to be, if possible, on the Economic and Employment, the Statistical, the Social and the Population Commissions. At one time, the United Kingdom proposed that we should give up our place on the Statistical Commission in order that Australia might become a member of that body, and that we should instead accept membership on the Human Rights Commission. After consulting the Department, the delegation re-affirmed the view previously stated that Canada would prefer not to be on the Human Rights Commission and wished, if possible, to be included on the Statistical Commission. When the balloting was taken, Canada was elected as a nominating state to all four Commissions on which she had sought membership.

16. The results of the election, together with the length of term established by lot in the case of each state, are as follows:

(a) Economic and Employment Commission:

Belgium (2 years), Canada (3 years), China (3 years), Cuba (4 years), France (2 years), India (3 years), United States (4 years), U.S.S.R. (4 years), Australia (4 years), Brazil (2 years), United Kingdom (2 years), Czechoslovakia (3 years), Norway (3 years), Byelorussian S.S.R. (4 years), Poland (2 years).

(b) Transport and Communications Commission:

Chile (3 years), China (3 years), France (3 years), India (2 years), Netherlands (2 years), United States (4 years), Norway (3 years), United Kingdom (2 years), Brazil (2 years), Egypt (4 years), U.S.S.R. (4 years), Czechoslovakia (4 years), Union of South Africa (3 years), Poland (2 years), Yugoslavia (4 years).

(c) Statistical Commission:

China (2 years), France (4 years), India (3 years), Norway (4 years), United Kingdom (4 years), Canada (3 years), Mexico (3 years), Netherlands (2 years), United States (2 years), U.S.S.R. (2 years), Turkey (4 years), Ukrainian S.S.R. (3 years).

(d) Human Rights Commission:

Belgium (4 years), Chile (4 years), France (3 years), United Kingdom (2 years), Australia (4 years), China (2 years), Egypt (3 years), India (3 years), Uruguay (2 years), United States (4 years), Philippine Commonwealth (4 years), U.S.S.R. (3 years), Lebanon (2 years), Panama (2 years), Byelorussian S.S.R. (2 years), Iran (3 years), Ukrainian S.S.R. (3 years), Yugoslavia (4 years).

(e) Social Commission:

Canada (4 years), China (4 years), Denmark (4 years), France (2 years), Netherlands (3 years), United States (2 years), Czechoslovakia (2 years), New Zealand (3 years), Peru (3 years), Union of South Africa (2 years), Colombia (3 years), Ecuador (4 years), Greece (2 years), Poland (4 years), U.S.S.R. (2 years), United Kingdom (3 years), Yugoslavia (3 years), Iraq (4 years).

(f) Commission on Status of Women:

United Kingdom (3 years), India (2 years), Australia (2 years), Denmark (4 years), France (4 years), U.S.S.R. (3 years), United States (3 years), Venezuela (4 years), Costa Rica (4 years), China (2 years), Turkey (4 years), Syria (3 years), Mexico (3 years), Byelorussian S.S.R. (2 years), Guatemala (2 years).

(g) Fiscal Commission:

China (4 years), Colombia (3 years), France (4 years), United States (2 years), Belgium (2 years), U.S.S.R. (3 years), United Kingdom (4 years), Cuba (3 years), Czechoslovakia (2 years), India (2 years), New Zealand (2 years), Union of South Africa (4 years), Lebanon (3 years), Poland (3 years), Ukrainian S.S.R. (4 years).

(h) Population Commission:

France (3 years), Peru (4 years), United States (2 years), U.S.S.R. (2 years), Australia (3 years), Brazil (4 years), Canada (3 years), China (2 years), United Kingdom (2 years), Netherlands (4 years), Ukrainian S.S.R. (3 years), Yugoslavia (4 years).

CONTINUATION OF THE WORK OF UNRRA

69. Discussion of the report of the Sub-Commission on Devastated Areas was understandably associated in the minds of Council members with provision for continuing the work of UNRRA. These questions were considered together in a set of resolutions brought in by the same Sub-Committee (Document E/211).<sup>1</sup>

70. The Eastern European countries were anxious to recommend that the work of UNRRA should be continued. The United Kingdom and United States delegations, however, were insistent that no recommendation should go forward from the Council either for the continuation of UNRRA or for the establishment of any agency similar to UNRRA for the purpose of carrying out relief work on no matter how limited a scale. The Council, therefore, merely sent forward to the Assembly its endorsement of the resolution which had been carried by the Council of UNRRA at its Fifth Session in August 1946. This resolution asks the Assembly to establish or designate some agency, the purpose of which shall be to review the needs for relief in 1947 and to make recommendations as to the financial assistance which might be required to meet these needs.

71. The terms of the Council's resolution were discussed between members of the Secretariat and the Canadian Delegation and also between members of the Canadian Embassy in Washington and officials in the State Department who are concerned with relief problems. As a result of these discussions, an amendment to the resolution was presented by the Canadian Delegation. This amendment requests the Secretary General to undertake immediately the collection and analysis of information concerning relief needs for the year 1947. The purpose of the resolution is to make it possible for the Secretariat themselves to commence the studies which will later become the concern of the agency nominated by the Assembly. The United Kingdom Delegation was opposed to this amendment, fearing that the activity of the Secretariat might prejudice the conclusions of the agency appointed by the Assembly to carry out the proposed investigations.

72. The Canadian amendment assumes that the preparatory work done by the Secretariat shall be made available to the agency nominated by the Assembly rather than to the Assembly itself. It is expected that when the Assembly meets, it will nominate some existing body or create some new body to carry out the investigation which has been recommended. The results of this investigation together with any accompanying recommendations will then be communicated directly to governments for any action which those governments may think it advisable to take, either directly through their own relief organizations or indirectly through such bodies as the International Bank.

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Conseil économique et social, Procès-verbaux officiels, première année, troisième session, supplément 9, annexe 33.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Economic and Social Council, Official Records, First Year, Third Session, Supplement 9, Annex 33.

APPENDIX A

ADDRESS BY THE HONOURABLE PAUL MARTIN BEFORE THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ON THE REFUGEE PROBLEM
NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 17th, 1946

MR. CHAIRMAN,

1. Your decision to permit this discussion to proceed along general lines has, I think, on the whole been fully justified because we have had, generally speaking, thoughtful and constructive proposals with respect to this matter. It is encouraging to realize that the wide and sympathetic interest in refugees, which was first shown at the meetings of the General Assembly at the beginning of this year, has grown and been intensified as the problem has been investigated, and as plans for the future have been made.

2. It has been the view of the Government of Canada throughout all of these discussions that the question of refugees could be solved only through co-operation amongst the United Nations in the fullest degree possible. The condition of a million people who have been left homeless in Europe is as great and pressing a problem of relief as any of the others that have emerged after victory. It appears to us that the refugee problem should be regarded as part of the larger problem of relief and rehabilitation, and should accordingly be so treated. The repatriation of displaced persons who have homes to which they could go was accomplished by a phenomenal act of international co-operation for which the occupying authorities deserve a large share of the credit. The creation of UNRRA dealt with still another general aspect of the problem. It has been suggested in this debate and elsewhere that assistance should be given to the resettlement of refugees returning to their homeland in Eastern Europe; but this relief has already been given indirectly in many thousands of cases through the operations of UNRRA, which has helped to provide the means necessary for rehabilitation in these areas. The new refugee organization is now required to complete a portion of the work amongst displaced persons which the Allied military authorities and UNRRA are unable to carry to a conclusion—that is, the repatriation or resettlement of those who still remain. If this work is not done, it will be necessary to turn loose on the cities and roads of Germany and Austria a great company of homeless people of Allied origin. Quite apart from humanitarian principles which make it imperative to take care of these people, there is also the important practical consideration that the peaceful recovery of Europe might well be hindered and delayed indefinitely if a million non-German refugees were to be abandoned to their fate in occupied territory. I do not think that this is a problem which can be separated from the other two—repatriation and relief—which have now been so largely accomplished, and I feel sure, and my Government feels sure, that the demands of our responsibilities towards refugees will command the same measure of general support as in the case of the others.

3. Now, Sir, these decisions which we are taking will involve all of us in heavy financial responsibilities. The Report of the Committee on Finances will receive special consideration later on, and it is not therefore necessary for me at this moment to consider in detail this question. I will, however, have something to say later on behalf of my Government in regard to the proposed scale of contributions to the budget of the International Refugee Organization, and I have noticed that other delegations have expressed concern in regard to some aspects of the Report of the Committee. I may say that with regard to this financial consideration I have to reserve the position of my Government. At this stage however I think I should say that we feel it necessary to say a word of warning concerning finances. The mounting costs of international undertakings is already a cause of concern, and I am sure that if the scale of contributions to refugee organizations is to prove acceptable to member states it will be necessary to demonstrate that every item in the budget is essential and that it is set at the lowest possible figure. For this reason the proposed budget of the new organization should be scrutinized with the greatest care. Whatever the final decision, the financial obligation will be a large one for all of us. I think it can be met only if the responsibility is fully shared on the same wide international basis as has characterized the response to other problems that have emerged from the war.

4. I may say that, after listening to the delegate for Peru the other day, I shared somewhat the sympathy expressed by Mr. Baker, of the United Kingdom delegation, when he said that without agreeing to the full embrace of the Peruvian delegate's speech he found a great deal of common interest and support in what the delegate from Peru had said, and I may say that I think the delegate for Peru has served and made a great contribution in this debate by pointing out that perhaps the great objective that we have all in mind, and which my Government wants to support, can be effectively achieved without creating unnecessary organization, particularly in the interim period—an organization which may prove to be more costly than the circumstances warrant.

5. It will be necessary for the new Refugee Organization and for the officials who undertake responsibility for interim measures to secure the fullest possible information in regard to the possibilities of resettlement. It may prove however that no single method for receiving refugees will be acceptable to all countries where immigration is possible. The suggestion has been made from various quarters that certain states should express their willingness to take specified quotas of immigrants. The Government of Canada will be prepared, I am sure, to examine in detail any proposals which may emerge in this connection. Immigration by quotas however has not been the traditional method of regulating the movement of people into Canada. In our case, therefore, as in the case of some other countries, it may prove that the admission of refugees can be arranged more readily through the adjustment of the existing immigration system than through the adoption of measures which cannot readily be reconciled with that system. In Canada immigration is based on the admission of categories of persons, who by reason of their places of origin or their training may most quickly be absorbed into our economic and social life. It is true that during the war, as an emergency measure, some 3,500 homeless people were given temporary refuge in Canada and that these persons have recently been granted permanent landing, together with the right to apply for full Canadian citizenship. It is true also that arrangements are now being made to admit to Canada 4,000 veterans of the former Polish Army in Western Europe who are unwilling to return to their homeland. These men, who will be selected amongst single agricultural workers, will in due course, unless life in Canada proves unacceptable to them, be eligible to become Canadian citizens. They will also eventually have the same privileges as other residents of Canada of bringing their close relatives to our country. This method of admitting immigrants is not however the procedure normally followed by the Government of my country. We have recently taken other steps which are in keeping with our immigration regulations and which we expect will result in the admission of several thousands of refugees. Provision has now been made for the admission to Canada of certain categories of relatives of residents in Canada who can provide the prospective immigrants with homes and with maintenance. These groups are: mothers and fathers, unmarried brothers and sisters, unmarried children, nephews and nieces who are orphans and who are below the age of sixteen years. We are not yet certain how many people will come to Canada as a result of these changes in our regulations—changes in our regulations which are now effective, I might add—nor is it certain how many of those who come will be refugees. There are, however, indications that the numbers will run into many thousands, and we know that of these a very considerable number is now in Displaced Persons Camps. We fully expect that when it becomes possible to move these people to Canada we shall be making an initial contribution of some magnitude towards the problem of resettlement of displaced persons. In the meantime, a careful scrutiny of the Canadian immigration system is being made with a view to considering the policy which should be followed in the post-war period.

6. Mr. Chairman, I should like at this point to make one observation as to the purpose of the new refugee organization. On Saturday morning we were reminded that repatriation must continue to be the primary objective of all organizations which were working in the field of refugees, and we were reminded earlier last week by the very able speech of Mr. La Guardia of this fact likewise, and it seems perhaps desirable to recall to the Council's attention that when the first Assembly of the United Nations was held in London of this year the Refugee question was on the agenda, and it became a subject of long and vigorous debate in the third committee of the Assembly. That debate revealed a sharp divergence of view concerning the extent to which aid should be given to people who had been displaced as a consequence of the war and who are now refusing to return to their places of origin in Eastern Europe. There was, however, it seems to us, general agreement on the following four points: (1) the problem of Refugees is an international responsibility; (2) repatriation should be carried out to the fullest extent possible; (3) no genuine refugee should be forced to return to his place of origin against his will; (4) no aid should be extended to war criminals, Quislings, or traitors.

I think it is important to remember that debate in those decisions. I should like to assure my Soviet colleague that we are in full agreement that as many people as possible in Displaced Persons Camps should be encouraged to return to their countries of national origin. There has already been ample indication that the full number of refugees now in Displaced Persons Camps can be placed in new homes abroad only with the greatest difficulty. The movement of large numbers of people across oceans to new continents and the assimilation of these people in new environments is both costly in money and in human effort. We are all concerned over the magnitude of this problem and we have good reason for supporting the view that repatriation must be accomplished to the fullest extent possible. I therefore fully concur that wherever possible obstacles which stand in the way of voluntary repatriation must be removed.

7. In the meantime, with so many decisions of major importance still to be taken, both in regard to the establishment of the new refugee organization and in regard to the policies which various countries will adopt towards this organization when it comes into existence, there is very great need for interim measures of a kind which have been suggested in the paper presented on this subject by the Secretary General. We have examined this document with care, and we are grateful to know that the Secretariat has given so much attention to it. The Canadian delegation would be happy to hear a further and more general expression of opinion in regard to the measures proposed in the interim period, and would particularly like to see in greater detail the way in which the work of the proposed interim commission will be integrated with that of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees and of UNRRA. We must not forget that we have already in existence two international organizations charged with the responsibility for work amongst refugees. Would it not be most unfortunate if, through the creation of the interim commission which has been proposed, a third international body should now be given responsibility in this field? It would appear to us therefore that much would be gained during the interim period by leaving with the two organizations which are already in existence, the IGC and UNRRA, full responsibility for operations for the maintenance and resettlement of refugees. The activities of the Secretariat would thus be confined with administrative measures preparatory to bringing the new refugee organization into existence and commencing its work. I know that we are all desirous of seeing the International Refugee Organization brought into existence at the earliest possible date, and if we achieve this end, there will be less need for interim measures of an elaborate kind. For this reason, and for the reasons so cogently brought to our attention by Mr. La Guardia, if we are to achieve this end, I think there will be less need for interim measures of an elaborate kind, and if we can avoid over-organization, or over-expenditure, or over-assignment in the interim period, I think that it will meet more readily the wishes and the opinions expressed in this Council. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, as well as for the even more compelling reason that thousands of homeless people wait for early action, I would urge upon my colleagues here and upon other members of the United Nations that we establish this Body as quickly as we possibly can to meet this very great problem, which, I say again, was brought to our attention in such a forceful way by Mr. La Guardia. My country is prepared, within the ambit of the reservations I have made, of playing its full part as one of the Member States in the international community which we are seeking to create.

APPENDIX B

ADDRESS BY THE HONOURABLE PAUL MARTIN WHEN THE REPORT ON THE NARCOTIC DRAFTING COMMITTEE WAS SUBMITTED TO THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL MEETING, NEW YORK, SEPT. 26, 1946

1. The Draft resolution and the draft Protocol before the Council propose measures required for the formal transfer to the United Nations of the powers and functions exercised before its dissolution, by the League of Nations under international narcotic conventions and also to ensure the continuity of the international control of narcotics.<sup>1</sup>

2. This control, based on international conventions ratified by some sixty-seven governments, functioned without interruption throughout the war. The international administration instituted under these conventions was in a position to watch all international and national transactions in narcotics during the past twenty years and its endeavours to limit the use of narcotics to medical and scientific needs met with a considerable measure of success. The work done in this field also proved conclusively that only through the combined efforts of all nations is it possible to control an evil which is international in character.

3. Under the Resolution adopted by the First General Assembly on February 12 last, and the Resolution of this Council on February 16 concerning the non-political functions and activities of the League of Nations, the Secretary-General was directed "to take the steps necessary to the provisional assumption and continuance of the work hitherto done by" the opium section of the League of Nations and the Secretariats of the Permanent Central Opium Board and the Supervisory Body.

4. It is our understanding that, in pursuance of these decisions the Secretary-General has made the provisional administrative and financial arrangements necessary to ensure the continuance of the international control of narcotics.

5. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, established by the Resolution of this Council of February 16 and in accordance with its decision of February 18, will carry on the functions of the former Opium Advisory Committee of the League of Nations.

6. A special Narcotics Division, established by the Secretary-General within the Department of Social Affairs, is continuing the work previously discharged by the Opium Section of the League of Nations.

<sup>1</sup> Pour le texte de l'adhésion du Canada à ce protocole voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1946, N° 50.

<sup>1</sup> For the text of Canada's adherence to the Protocol see Canada, Treaty Series, 1946, No. 50.

7. After consultation with the President of the Permanent Central Opium Board and the Chairman of the Supervisory Body, the Secretary-General took provisional measures to ensure the functioning of these international bodies and their secretariats under the auspices of the United Nations as from September 1, 1946.

8. In the desire to simplify, within the provisions of the existing conventions, the administrative machinery of international narcotic control, and in accordance with the ideas put forward during the First General Assembly of the United Nations, the Secretary-General brought about a fusion of the Secretariats of the Permanent Central Opium Board and the Supervisory Body as from September 1, 1946.

9. It will be seen therefore that the United Nations has provisionally assumed full responsibility for the continuance of international narcotic control.

10. This is a gratifying result and the Secretary-General is to be congratulated upon having, in a relatively short period of time, brought these negotiations to a successful conclusion.

11. The two draft Resolutions and the draft Protocol now before the Council are intended to provide a legal basis for the provisional measures taken by the Secretary-General, and to give effect to the decision of the General Assembly of February 12 concerning the steps necessary to ensure the uninterrupted exercise of the functions and powers of a technical and non-political character vested in the League of Nations by virtue of international agreements relating to the international control of narcotic drugs.

12. Canada has given careful consideration to these draft Resolutions as they stand [and to] the draft Protocol and its annex and approves the procedure proposed therein.

13. We have been asked also to consider a proposal that the Spanish Government should be excluded from the application of the international narcotics conventions. Mr. Chairman, we are all agreed that the benefits and privileges of the United Nations should not be extended to any nation which has not qualified for full membership. This is not a question, however, of granting a measure of benefit to any particular country. It is a proposal for the continuation of a joint effort to solve a technical international problem. The solution of that problem, it seems to me, should be pursued by the most efficient means possible, and the barriers which we raise to illicit trade in narcotics should be made as high and as extensive as we can make them. Surely this purpose will only be impeded by the exclusion of any part of the world from the controls which these conventions impose. This is especially true if we realize that these conventions are ones which have been operating now for many years. The arbitrary exclusion of one country will mean that a part of the world which is now within the scope of these controls will fall outside them. If we adopt this proposal, we shall be saying in the case of this one country, Spain, the trade in narcotics shall be free of any of the inhibitions which international action provides through the medium of the Permanent Central Opium Board and the Supervisory Body.

14. Canada has always taken an active part in the international control of narcotics and is a signatory to every international convention on the subject. It seems to us that the exclusion of Spain from the existing international machinery would be a retrograde step. Without wishing in any way to give place or position to Spain amongst the United Nations, it is my opinion that no step should be taken which would eliminate Spain from the continuing activities of the international narcotic control machinery by which she has been bound for more than twenty years past.<sup>1</sup>

APPENDIX C

STATEMENT BY THE HON. PAUL MARTIN, TO THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ON THE PRELIMINARY REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMISSION ON THE RECONSTRUCTION OF DEVASTATED AREAS, NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 26, 1946

Mr. Chairman,

1. Like other delegates, I would like to congratulate the temporary Sub-Commission and its Secretariat on the report which they have produced.<sup>2</sup> Whatever other impressions we have, I think all of us have been rather astonished that so good a report could have been prepared in so short a time. It hardly seemed possible in June. I am also impressed by the evidence in the report of a spirit of co-operation among the nations of Europe and a recognition that they have a mutual interest in each other's problems and prosperity.

2. A query was made yesterday as to why the United States should be so anxious to participate so actively in this matter. We heard Mr. Winant's reply to this question. Apart altogether from the reason given by the U.S. delegate, I wish to observe that it is a most heartening sign to know that a nation so important in the world's economy as the United States has played and is prepared to continue to play an important role in this matter.

3. The questions discussed in this report are not academic or philanthropic questions to my country. It ought not to be necessary to emphasize Canada's interest in the sound and speedy settlement of Europe's economic problems. We have had throughout our history a free and mutually advantageous trade with Europe, except in those days when Nazi Germany strangled the external

<sup>1</sup> Le Canada s'est abstenu lors du vote pour exclure l'Espagne. Voir Nations Unies, Conseil économique et social, Procès-verbaux officiels, première année, troisième session, neuvième séance, 26 septembre 1946, p. 61.

<sup>2</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la deuxième partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, supplément 3.

<sup>1</sup> Canada abstained on the vote to exclude Spain. See United Nations, Economic and Social Council, Official Records, First Year, Third Session, Ninth Meeting, September 26, 1946, p. 61.

<sup>2</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Supplement 3.

trade of Europe, and as the Sub-Commission has said, "bent" the European economy to the purposes of war.

4. We were in the war from the beginning to the end, and the part which our 12,000,000 people were able to play in providing men, food, materials, and equipment is ample evidence of the realization of the average Canadian that the threat to Europe was a threat to him.

5. While the International Bank and Monetary Fund have been awaiting agreement and building up their organization, the Canadian Government has extended credits of some hundreds of millions of dollars to European countries for needed supplies and reconstruction.

6. I do not mention these facts as a basis for any claim to membership on the proposed commission. We are not seeking membership. I mention them as a visible evidence of the Canadian interest and of our belief in the advantage to us of a settled and prosperous Europe.

7. I agree with our colleague, Dr. Chang, that matters now before us are the "real thing". Particularly, the "real thing" is the work of this Council in reconstruction of devastated areas. To me this is the basic task of the Council—to seek to repair devastation and to try and restore the working economy of the world. Whether it be devastation of human lives, which is the humanitarian aspect of the refugee problem, whether we deal with devastation of property and services, or devastation of economics and states, by our action we are laying the foundation for a lasting peace.

8. The measures which we agree upon can be the means of opening the gates of the future to millions of people—a future largely free from the economic causes of war. The opportunity which we have is the very reason why this Council was formed.

9. Aside from the principle involved here there is little hope of true security for any nation or any people. We all know there is no real lasting gain for any nation in fighting a war. Victor and vanquished alike are subject to the remorseless reckoning that follows such a conflict. After the moral and physical destruction of a war, follows the terrible and lasting effect of loss of hope.

10. We must nourish and inspire nations which have suffered in this war in the belief that the conditions which produced it will not again prevail. That is the positive task of this Council. Treaties, signatures, words will not suffice. We are dealing with the economic reconstruction of states devastated by war. Upon what we are able to do and the measures which we are able to put in motion, the real hope for the future depends.

11. The Sub-Commission has made a large number of suggestions and comments, some of them, I think, are more important and more applicable than others, but I do not intend to comment in detail on them. I would like to say, however, I was particularly glad to see the stress which the Sub-Commission laid on the need for re-establishing multi-lateral trade and of discouraging the use of mere bi-lateral agreements except as the most temporary expedient. Europe has been impoverished by war, by the pressure of population, and by the loss of resources. If, in addition, she impoverishes herself by confining her trade to narrow bi-lateral channels she will face a meagre and haunted future.

12. It is quite clear that the major question which calls for comment is that of the proposed Economic Commission for Europe. In this regard there were a number of things said by the delegate of China, in his vigorous statement, with which the Canadian delegation would agree fully. In the first place, we would agree that we are now beginning to discuss the "real thing" for which this Council was created. We believe that we should think of it in real terms and that we should be prepared to go ahead. I assume from the Sub-Commission's report and from what has been said here that the European countries themselves are anxious to work together and see important possibilities of mutual help within the frame-work of this proposed Commission.

13. In the second place, like our Chinese colleague, we are not prepared to see the continuing economic work of U.N. delegated to regional councils. This is not the intent of the Charter, nor is it in accordance with the facts of world development. I do not think, however, that the initiators of this proposal had any such regionalization in mind. The proposal originated in the deliberations of the temporary Sub-Commission on the Reconstruction of Devastated Areas, and I assume that the proposal is directed to the purposes of that Sub-Commission; that it is temporary in nature and is concerned with the reconstruction of devastated areas. If we can agree on these "real things", the question of name need not be insoluble.

14. I would extend this remark further. I assume that the proposed body would have the active assistance and co-operation of all the permanent organizations and agencies of the United Nations. I also assume, however, that it is not to be set up as the co-ordinator in Europe of the work of the permanent agencies of the United Nations, nor is its authority to be substituted for the authority of the Economic and Social Council.

15. It follows from what I have said that we attach great importance to the circumstances and conditions under which the proposed body would be set up. It is, in our eyes, virtually [sic] important that the European nations themselves should want the organization and should mean business. We assume the Council itself will be quite clear that the new organization is to devote itself to reconstruction, and does not represent the change in the permanent organization of United Nations. We shall want to be assured that the lines are carefully drawn between the proposed Commission and the permanent organizations and agencies of the United Nations, so that the Commission will help and not thwart the work of the Council. On these assumptions the Canadian delegation supports this proposal strongly.

538.

DEA/5475-BQ-40

*Mémorandum de la première direction politique<sup>1</sup> au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from First Political Division<sup>1</sup> to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] December 30, 1946

RE: CANADIAN NOMINATIONS TO COMMISSIONS OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

1. At the third session of the Economic and Social Council in New York, Canada was elected to the following Commissions for the terms indicated:

Economic and Employment Commission (3 years)

Statistical Commission (3 years)

Social Commission (4 years)

Population Commission (3 years)

2. It was also decided at this session that the states elected should nominate experts, and that agreement should be reached on such nominations by consultation between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Governments concerned. Such consultation was to ensure that there should be on each Commission a proper balance of specialists in particular fields. The results of these consultations were then to be confirmed at an ad hoc meeting of the Economic and Social Council to be held in New York during the General Assembly.

3. Canada's nominations to the four Commissions mentioned in Paragraph 1, as communicated to the Secretary-General, were:

Economic and Employment Commission—Mr. Stewart Bates, Director General of Economic Research, Department of Reconstruction and Supply

Statistical Commission—Mr. Herbert Marshall, Dominion Statistician

Social Commission—Dr. George F. Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare Population Commission—Mr. J. T. Marshall, Chief Administrative Officer, Dominion Bureau of Statistics

4. After consultation between the Canadian Government and the Secretary-General, and as a result of the ad hoc meeting of the Economic and Social Council in New York on December 10th, 1946, the above mentioned nominations were confirmed as Canadian members of these Commissions.

<sup>1</sup> De J. G. H. Halstead.

<sup>1</sup> By J. G. H. Halstead.

PARTIE 5/PART 5

CONSEIL DE TUTELLE
TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

539.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 1

Ottawa, January 2, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Your circular D. 2290 of December 22nd, International Trusteeship.

In our view the proposed statement during the first part of the first session of the General Assembly with regard to placing mandated territories under the trusteeship system is a wise one. We are impressed with the argument that it may be desirable for the United Kingdom Government to take the initiative in this matter rather than to appear to act under pressure, and we feel that an announcement along these lines at this time would make a good impression in the United States and elsewhere.

540.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D.38

London, January 8, 1946

SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram.† Trusteeship.

Draft agreement for United Kingdom mandated territories in Africa, Begins:

WHEREAS the territory known as Tanganyika/Cameroons under British Mandate and hereinafter referred to as British Cameroons/Togoland under British Mandate, and hereinafter referred to as British Togoland, has been administered in accordance with Article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations under a Mandate conferred on His Britannic Majesty,

AND WHEREAS Article 75 of the United Nations Charter signed at San Francisco on 26th June, 1945, provides for the establishment of an International Trusteeship System for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements,

AND WHEREAS under Article 77 of the said Charter the International Trusteeship System may be applied to territories now held under Mandate,

AND WHEREAS His Majesty has indicated his desire to place Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland under the said International Trusteeship System,

AND WHEREAS in accordance with Articles 75 and 77 of the said Charter the placing of a territory under the Trusteeship System is to be effected by means of a Trusteeship Agreement and by Articles 79, 83 and 85 of the said Charter, it is provided that the terms of trusteeship are to be agreed upon by the States directly concerned and approved by the United Nations. Now, therefore, the General Assembly of the United Nations, in accordance with Article 85 of the said Charter, having satisfied itself that the Agreement of the States directly concerned, including the mandatory power, has been obtained in accordance with Article 79 of the said Charter, hereby resolves to approve the following terms of the trusteeship for Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland.

Article 1.

The territory to which this Trusteeship Agreement applies comprises that part of East Africa/West Africa lying within the following boundaries (reference to be inserted to relevant international treaties defining boundaries).

Article 2.

His Majesty is hereby designated as Administering Authority for Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland, the responsibility for the administration of which will be undertaken by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Article 3.

The Administering Authority undertakes to administer Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland in such a manner as to achieve the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System laid down in Article 76 of the United Nations Charter, and to collaborate fully with the Trusteeship Council in the discharging of all the Council's functions as defined in Article 87 of the Charter and in the present Agreement.

Article 4.

The Administering Authority shall be responsible:

- (a) For the peace, order, good Government and defence of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland, and
- (b) For ensuring that it shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 5.

For the above mentioned purposes, and for all other purposes of the present Agreement as may be necessary, the Administering Authority:

- (a) Shall have full powers of legislation, administration and jurisdiction in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland (for the Cameroons and Togoland only, and shall administer it in accordance with its own laws as an integral part of its territory with such modifications as may be required by local conditions and subject to the provisions of the present Agreement).

(b) Shall be entitled, in order to effect improvements in the administration, to constitute Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland into a customs, fiscal or administrative union or federation with adjacent territories under its sovereignty or control, and to establish common services between such territories and Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland where such measures are not inconsistent with the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System.

(c) And shall be entitled to establish naval, military and air bases, to erect fortifications, to station and employ its own forces in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland, and to take all such other measures as are, in its opinion, necessary for the defence of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland and for ensuring that the territory plays its part in the maintenance of international peace and security, including use of volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the Administering Authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland.

Article 6.

The Administering Authority shall take measures to assure to the inhabitants of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland a progressively increasing share in the administrative and other services and in the Government of the territory (for Tanganyika only, both centre and local) and to develop existing means for the expression of local opinion with a view to the political development of the inhabitants of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland towards the attainment of the objective prescribed in Article 76(b) of the Charter.

Article 7.

The Administering Authority undertakes to apply in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland the provisions of any international conventions and recommendations drawn up by the specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 of the United Nations Charter, the application of which would, in the opinion of the Administering Authority, conduce to the achievement of the basic objective of the Trusteeship System.

Article 8.

In framing the laws relating to the holding or transfer of land, the Administering Authority shall take into consideration native laws and customs and shall respect the rights and safeguard the interests, both present and future, of the native population. No native land may be transferred, except between natives, save with the consent of the competent public authority. No real rights over native land in favour of non-natives may be created except with the same consent.

Article 9.

The Administering Authority shall, subject to the provisions of Article 10 of this Agreement, take all necessary steps to ensure equal treatment in social, economic and commercial matters for all members of the United Nations and their nationals, and to this end:

(a) Shall ensure the same rights to all nationals of members of the United Nations as to his own nationals in respect of entry into and residence in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland, freedom of transit and navigation, requisition of property, both movable and immovable, the protection of person and property and the exercise of professions and trades.

(b) Shall not discriminate on grounds of nationality against nationals of any member of the United Nations in matters relating to the grant of concessions for the development of the natural resources of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland and shall not grant concessions having the character of a general monopoly.

(c) Shall ensure equal treatment in the administration of justice to the nationals of all members of the United Nations. The rights conferred by this Article on nationals of members of the United Nations apply equally to companies and associations controlled by such nationals and organized in accordance with the law of any member of the United Nations.

Article 10.

Measures taken to give effect to Article 9 of this Agreement shall be subject always to the overriding duty of the Administering Authority to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland to carry out the other basic objectives of the Trusteeship System and to maintain peace, order and good Government. The Administering Authority shall, in particular, be free:

(a) To organize essential public services and works on such terms and conditions as he thinks just.

(b) To create monopolies of a purely fiscal character in order to provide Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland with the fiscal resources which seem best suited to local requirements or otherwise to serve the interest of the inhabitants of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland.

(c) To establish under conditions of proper public control such other monopolies or undertakings having in them an element of monopoly as appear to it to be in the interests of the economic advancement of the inhabitants of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland.

Article 11.

Nothing in this Agreement shall, of itself, entitle any member of the United Nations to claim for itself or for its nationals, companies or associations in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland the application of a more advantageous regime than that member itself grants in its own territory to Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland and its inhabitants.

Article 12.

The Administering Authority shall ensure in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland complete freedom of conscience and the free exercise of all forms of worship which are consistent with public order and morality. Subject to the provisions of Article 8 of this Agreement and the local law, missionaries who are nationals of members of the United Nations shall be free to reside in Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland, to possess property and to erect religious buildings throughout the territory. The provisions of this Article shall not, however, affect the right and duty of the Administering Authority to exercise such control as that Authority may consider necessary for the maintenance of peace, order and good Government and for the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland and to take all measures required for such controls.

Article 13.

The Administering Authority shall make to the General Assembly of the United Nations an annual report on the basis of a questionnaire drawn up by the Trusteeship Council in accordance with Article 88 of the Charter.

Article 14.

Nothing in the present Agreement shall affect the right of the Administering Authority to propose at any future date the designation of the whole or part of Tanganyika/British Cameroons/British Togoland as a strategic area in accordance with Articles 82 and 83 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 15.

The terms of this Trusteeship Agreement shall not be altered or amended except as provided in Article 79 and Articles 83 and 85, as the case may be, of the United Nations Charter.

Article 16.

If any dispute whatever should arise between the Administering Authority and another member of the United Nations relating to the interpretation or application of the provisions of this Agreement, such dispute, if it cannot be settled by negotiation or other means, shall be submitted to the International Court of Justice provided for in Chapter XIV of the United Nations Charter. Ends.

541.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 50

London, January 11, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Trusteeship.

My telegram of January 10th, Circular D. 49,† paragraph 2.

We think it most important to circulate draft agreement to other Governments (as explained in paragraph 3 of my telegram) before Foreign Secretary makes his announcement on January 14th, and we should, therefore, be most grateful if any comments by Dominion Governments on the draft text could reach us by evening of January 13th, G.M.T.<sup>1</sup>, at latest.

542.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 8

Ottawa, January 12, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your circular telegram D. 50, January 11th. Trusteeship.

In our view draft Agreement is generously framed and seems to us to reflect the purpose of the Charter. We are in agreement as to the advantages of your retaining the initiative in this matter. We think it important that a substantial number of mandatory powers should conclude similar agreements in order to facilitate the early establishment of the International Trusteeship system under the U.N.O.

543.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 273

London, January 30, 1946

ASDEL No. 39. Following from Massey, Begins: Trusteeship Committee.

1. There has been protracted discussion in the Trusteeship Committee over the interpretation of the phrase "States directly concerned" in Article 79 of the Charter. This discussion<sup>1</sup> has been further complicated by argument as to whether or not it is within the competence of the Trusteeship Committee to define the phrase.

<sup>1</sup> Greenwich Mean Time.

2. In order to abridge debate and to suggest practical steps whereby the trusteeship system can be quickly brought into operation, the Canadian delegation has proposed the following resolution:

“The Fourth Committee has considered the important implications involved in the words “States directly concerned” used in Article 79 of the Charter and recommends to the General Assembly that, pending the establishment of the Trusteeship Council, the Assembly should adopt the following resolution:

“Until the Trusteeship Council is established and defines the term “States directly concerned” used in Article 79 of the Charter, the following steps shall be taken.

“A member of the United Nations which desires to place territories under the trusteeship system shall notify the Secretary-General or the Executive Secretary of its intention and of the names of the States with which it intends to negotiate an agreement. (This notification shall be regarded as a “Declaration of Intention”). The Secretary-General or the Executive Secretary shall communicate this Declaration of Intention to all members of the United Nations. Any member which considered itself directly concerned and which has not been named in the Declaration of Intention, may so notify the Secretary-General who shall, in turn, notify the member which made the Declaration of Intention. It will be the responsibility of the latter member to consider such claims as it may receive and to report to the General Assembly on the action it has taken in this connection when it submits a trusteeship agreement for approval.”

3. This resolution, along with eight other amendments to the Preparatory Commission’s report, has now been remitted to a Sub-Committee of fifteen members, including Canada. This Committee is charged with the responsibility of threshing out the various amendments and drafting an agreed text for submission to the Assembly. Our resolution has the support of the United Kingdom and of the United States. We believe that it has been useful in focussing discussion and in suggesting a way out of the interminable arguments which seem to overhang the Committee.

4. The advantages of the proposal, in our view, are as follows:

(a) It gives a practical definition of the term “States directly concerned” in order to facilitate the speedy establishment of the Trusteeship Council.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la première partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, quatrième commission, pp. 15-36.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Fourth Committee, pp. 15-36.

(b) It is an interim measure only. When the Trusteeship Council is established, it must then itself define the words in question.

(c) It settles a procedure whereby all the United Nations are advised in good time of the proposed actions of other members in connection with trusteeship agreements.

(d) It gives full protection to those members who may consider themselves directly concerned, as well as to those members who wish to make a Declaration of Intention. Ends.

544.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 290

London, January 31, 1946

ASDEL No. 43. Following from Massey, Trusteeship.

1. At the first meeting yesterday of the Sub-Committee mentioned in paragraph 3 of our telegram Asdel No. 39, it was agreed that, in view of the short time available, the Sub-Committee would not attempt to define "states directly concerned". A gentlemen's agreement was also entered into that this subject would not be brought up either in the full Trusteeship Committee or on the floor of the Assembly. An amendment submitted by Iraq, on behalf of the Arab bloc, which listed some criteria designed to determine "states directly concerned" was withdrawn on the understanding that withdrawal would not prejudice consideration of this subject at future meetings of the Assembly. In any case, it was fairly clear that the Iraq amendment would have been defeated if it had been put to a vote.

2. The Soviet Delegate then said that, in his view, it would also be unwise to try to reach agreement on a provisional procedure for the negotiations of trusteeship agreements as had been suggested in our amendment. He argued that, if the Sub-Committee laid down one mode of procedure, it might, in effect, be adumbrating a definition of "states directly concerned". The two questions of definition and procedure were intimately linked and if the one question were to be left open, no decision should be taken on the other. This view seemed to us to be not unreasonable.

3. Several Delegates then expressed their support for the Soviet proposal and Dulles, for the United States, said that, although he at first had favoured the Canadian amendment, in view of the course events had taken he had changed his mind and now believed that the procedure for negotiating agreements should not be specified in the Committee's report.

4. We then decided to withdraw our amendment. We took this step with some regret, since it seemed to us that the procedure we had recommended would be sound and useful. On the other hand, the principal purpose of the amendment had been to head off interminable and inconclusive discussion about the definition of "states directly concerned" and since the Committee had decided against attempting a definition at this meeting of the Assembly, our main purpose had been achieved.

545.

DEA/5475-N-40

*Mémorandum de la première direction politique au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from First Political Division to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] February 11, 1946

With reference to your request for the file dealing with my attached memorandum of January 31st,† you will see that the proposal put forward by the Canadian members of the Trusteeship Committee of a procedure to deal with the question of associating "states directly concerned" as used in Article 79 of the Charter, in connection with trusteeship agreements was subsequently withdrawn, as reported in ASDEL 43 of January 31st.

I noted in my previous memorandum† that the proposal of the Canadian delegation was unobjectionable and suggested, therefore, that no comment be sent from here. Briefly the proposal was that a member of the United Nations desiring to place territories under the trusteeship system, should notify the Secretary General of its intention and the names of the States with which it intends to negotiate an agreement. The Secretary General would then communicate this "declaration of intention" to all members of the United Nations. It would then be the responsibility of any member-state, which considered itself "directly concerned" to notify the member making the "declaration of intention". This would be an interim measure until the Trusteeship Council is established, and a definition of the term "states directly concerned", as used in Article 79 of the Charter, is accepted.

You will observe that the Soviet delegate argued that by adopting this mode of procedure, even as an interim measure, it would in effect, anticipate the definition of "states directly concerned". Several members of the Committee apparently accepted the Soviet view and Canadian members of the Committee withdrew their proposed amendment. No action therefore appears to be required.<sup>1</sup>

G. I[GNATIEFF]

<sup>1</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

I agree. N. A. R[OBERTSON]

546.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 246

London, March 18, 1946

IMPORTANT. SECRET. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have been considering whether any formal action should be taken at April meeting of League of Nations Assembly to liquidate mandate system. Following possible courses have been examined:

- (a) Termination of mandate system.
- (b) Formal action for transfer to United Nations Organization of League functions in respect of mandates.
- (c) Any other course.

2. Course (a) appears undesirable because, if mandates were terminated before final arrangements have been made for future of mandated territories, doubts might be cast on juridical position of mandatory States. Objections to a League pronouncement that mandates will be terminated at some future date on stated conditions are that:

- (1) League would be imposing conditions which it could not enforce, since it would no longer exist at the future date.
- (2) A general formula covering all existing mandated territories would be virtually impossible to devise.

3. In course (b), we see following difficulties. Charter imposes no legal obligation on mandatory States to place mandated territories under trusteeship. Consequently, no action by League could have effect of applying trusteeship system to mandated territories. If more limited functions of Permanent Mandates Commission were vested in United Nations and if United Nations Organization accepted transfer of such functions, effect would be to have two systems of United Nations Organization supervision running concurrently. It might be possible to distinguish between obligations assumed by mandatory Powers in mandates and machinery for supervision, e.g., mandatory Powers might make declarations at Geneva that they would continue to be guided by general principles of mandates even after cessation of hitherto existing international machinery for dealing with them. There would, however, be practical difficulties even then, because mandates include provisions restricting adequate defence measures, and A and B mandates in particular impose rigid "open door" policy which is qualified in Article 76(d) of Charter. Such a declaration would also not be appropriate to a territory such as Transjordan, which is to become independent of Palestine. Further objections to transfer to United Nations Organization of League functions in respect of mandates are that it would open way to:

- (1) Claims that it conferred rights in mandated territories on States members of United Nations Organization but not members of League, and

(2) Dispute between France and Levant States about contradiction between continuance of mandate system and Article 78 of Charter.

4. In all the circumstances, course which would suit us best, if it had prospects of success, would be to achieve liquidation of League without any specific reference to mandate system. Since, however, other delegations may raise subject, question arises whether it is better:

(1) To take initiative by proposing a draft resolution of our own in order to forestall some embarrassing proposal by other states; or

(2) To be forearmed with such a draft resolution but to keep it in reserve and advance it only if it becomes necessary. On the whole, we feel that risk of embarrassing proposal being put forward by others is slight. Neither United States nor Soviet Government will be represented and, in any case, Soviet attitude might be rather adverse to any attempt to establish continuity between League and United Nations Organization. Belgian and Netherlands delegations to United Nations Organization Assembly gave some indications that they might advocate formal action by League Assembly for sake of legal "tidiness", but it is not clear that they had fully considered all implications.

5. Our provisional conclusion is, therefore, that United Kingdom delegation should not, repeat not, take initiative in this matter but, if it is raised by foreign delegations, should take line that future of mandated territories is not a matter for League (which is on point of liquidation) and has already been subject of declarations by mandatory Powers at United Nations Organization Assembly which passed a resolution about it. In these circumstances, it would be inappropriate for League to do more than pass a resolution on lines of following paragraph.

6. Resolution might be on following lines, Begins:

The Assembly has taken note of declaration in regard to the future of the mandated territories under their jurisdiction made at the first session of the United Nations General Assembly by States members of the League of Nations on whom mandates were conferred. The Assembly, accordingly, desires to place on record that it welcomes the resolutions on this subject adopted by United Nations. Ends.

7. We should be glad to learn at earliest possible moment whether other British Commonwealth Governments are in general agreement with course suggested in paragraph 5 of this telegram. If so, we should propose to approach informally Belgian, French and Netherlands Governments to ascertain whether it would commend itself also to them. In view of United States interest in Japanese mandated islands and trusteeship system generally, it might also be useful to ascertain informally that United States Government, for their part, would see no objection.

8. Fuller memorandum† on question is being communicated to your High Commissioner's office here.

547.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux DominionsSecretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 90

Ottawa, March 22, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Addressed London No. 90, repeated to Canberra No. 7, Wellington No. 5, Capetown No. 7.

Your telegram D. 246 of March 18th. Liquidation of mandate system.

1. We are in general agreement with observations in paragraphs 2 and 3 of your telegram. We hope, however, that difficulty concerning the Levant States mentioned at the end of paragraph 3 may have disappeared. In response to an enquiry French Ambassador on March 6th informed us that Syria and Lebanon were to be regarded as independent states for customs purposes. He added that the French Government considered that these mandates were terminated on March 28th, 1945 "the date on which, following the recommendation made by France to the other United Nations on March 20th, these two states were admitted as members of the United Nations." This presumably refers to the adhesion by Syria and Lebanon in Washington to the Declaration by United Nations as a preliminary to their attending the San Francisco Conference.

2. In view of this, would it not be possible for the League Assembly to confirm the termination of the Syria-Lebanon mandate? Attention might also be paid to the possibility of formally disposing of the provision of paragraph 2 of Article 5 of the mandate which provides for automatic reimposition of the Capitulations on its termination.

3. We concur in suggestions in paragraphs 5 and 6 of your telegram. An Assembly resolution on these lines should provide adequate authority for transfers of mandated territories to trusteeship as soon as individual agreements make this possible. Those mandates, however, which were not covered by declarations made at the United Nations Assembly (i.e., the South African and Japanese mandates) would seem to be excluded under this formula but nevertheless we have nothing better to suggest.

548.

DEA/5475-N-40

Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresActing High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 810

London, March 25, 1946

Your telegram No. 90 of March 22nd to Dominions Office, liquidation of League mandates.

1. A meeting of Commonwealth representatives is called for Thursday afternoon to discuss this subject. If you have further instructions concerning Canadian attitude, I should like to have them before Thursday.

549.

DEA/5475-N-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 714

Ottawa, March 27, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 810 of March 25, liquidation of League mandates.

1. You might ascertain at the meeting of Commonwealth representatives (a) what is planned with regard to Syria and the Lebanon (see paragraph 2 of our telegram No. 90 of March 22 to Dominions Office), and (b) whether the League Assembly will be asked to take note of the termination of the mandate for Transjordan.

2. The Class B mandates in Africa and most of the Pacific mandates appear to be adequately covered by the formula proposed in paragraph 6 of Circular D. 246 of March 18. If, however, an attempt is to be made to perpetuate the mandate for Southwest Africa as an alternative to annexation, it seems to us that something further will be needed, which might perhaps take the form of an endorsement by the League Assembly of paragraph 2 of Article 80 of the Charter. This would give the United Nations clear authority, also, to take over the islands under Japanese mandate when a trusteeship agreement for these has been concluded.

550.

DEA/5475-AT-40

*Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique à la délégation
à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

Memorandum from Second Political Division to Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL

October 19, 1946

SUBJECT: NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

(Supplementary Statement for Section IV/I of the Commentary)

The following notes are supplied to members of the Canadian delegation to correct and complete page 125 of the Commentary:

Under the heading "Canadian Attitude", in line 7 of paragraph 2, the words "and scattered Indian reservations in both Canada and the United States" should be struck out. The status of the Indian reservations is more precisely described in paragraph 4 on the same page.

In paragraph 5 reference is made to a memorandum on the status of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to be supplied to members of the Canadian delegation. The issue of whether Canada should submit reports to the United Nations on these territories was brought into focus by a decision of the United States Government last August to submit reports to the Secretary General on Alaska as well as on Puerto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, Hawaii, Guam and American Samoa. Although the recent vote in favour of statehood within the Union means that Alaska will not continue long to be regarded as a territory to which Chapter XI of the Charter applies, nevertheless the fact that one report on Alaska has been submitted makes it desirable that Canada should state clearly the position it intends to take with regard to the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Alaska is a non-contiguous territory which was purchased by the Government of the United States from Russia several decades after the establishment of the Union. The Yukon and Northwest Territories, on the contrary, by virtue of Article 146 of the British North America Act, have been an integral part of Canada since Confederation.

It is not thought that Chapter XI of the Charter was intended to apply to territories geographically within the borders of member states. This view is strengthened by the language of Article 74, which distinguishes between "metropolitan areas" and the territories to which Chapter XI is applicable. Thus the degree to which self-government has been developed in the Yukon and Northwest Territories is not the determining factor in the case. Since both territories are within the metropolitan area of Canada neither comes within the scope of Chapter XI of the Charter.<sup>1</sup>

E. P. M[ACCALLUM]

551.

DEA/5475-N-40

*Le secrétaire général, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale
des Nations Unies, à la deuxième direction politique*

Secretary-General, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Second Political Division

New York, October 26, 1946

Dear Mr. Riddell,

1. At the request of Mr. Boyd Shannon of the United Kingdom delegation, a meeting of officials of the delegations of Australia, New Zealand, Canada and United Kingdom was held at Essex House at 9:00 p.m. on October 24, in order to discuss the United Kingdom draft agreements on Trusteeship. Those present were Mr. Boyd Shannon (Dominions Office) Mr.

<sup>1</sup>Voir la déclaration du sénateur W. McL. Robertson dans Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, quatrième commission, vingtième réunion, le 14 novembre 1946, pp. 111-12.

<sup>1</sup>See statement by Senator W. McL. Robertson in United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Fourth Committee, Twentieth Meeting, November 14, 1946, pp. 111-12.

A. M. Poynton, Assistant Under-Secretary of the Colonial Office, Sir Frederick Puckle (India Office), Mr. A. B. Cohen (Colonial Office), Mr. K. H. Bailey and Mr. W. D. Forsyth of the Australian delegation, Mr. C. J. R. McKay and Mr. G. R. Laking of the New Zealand delegation and Senator Robertson and myself of the Canadian delegation.

2. At the outset Mr. Poynton indicated that, from conversations with officials of the United States delegation, it appeared they would "underwrite" the United Kingdom draft Trusteeship agreements on all the points but article 10(c) concerning monopolies. He then commenced a consideration of various articles of the agreements.

3. Mr. Gerig (United States delegation) had told Mr. Poynton that Mr. Gromyko had recently expressed the view that the five states mentioned in article 23 of the Charter were automatically "states directly concerned". In discussing this matter with Poynton, Gerig is reported by Poynton to have stated categorically that this was not the United States view. On this point it would appear that the United States and the United Kingdom Governments are at one.

4. Professor Bailey indicated that the Australian Government would be "unalterably opposed" to a change in article 2 as proposed by the United States on the ground that this would be reversal of the Charter. You will recall that the United States Government had proposed that the Administering Authority should discharge his responsibilities "on behalf of the United Nations". There was general agreement among the United Kingdom, Australian and New Zealand delegations to oppose any such proposal.

5. In connection with article 5(b), Mr. Poynton indicated that the United States delegation had agreed not to raise the question of the insertion of the words "subject to Trusteeship Council" but reserved its right to support this viewpoint should any other delegation raise it. Professor Bailey commented that the Administering Authority is entitled, by virtue of the Charter and at its sole discretion, to constitute such customs, fiscal or administrative unions it saw fit under the general supervision of the Trusteeship Council. Professor Bailey asserted that the principle of the Charter governing the administration of trust territories is one of "national administration under international supervision" and not "a mixture of national and international administration".

6. When the question of monopolies was discussed in connection with Article 10(c), it became apparent that the United States and the United Kingdom delegations, at the official level, were absolutely irreconcilable as to how monopolies might be granted. Mr. Poynton reported that the United States delegation agreed that monopolies might be justified, but that they should be established, not at the sole discretion of the Administering Authority, but under the control of the Trusteeship Council. The United Kingdom attitude, on the other hand, was that the granting in trust territories of monopolies to British or foreign capital was essential if it was to be attracted to these territories; that the monopolies are not in contravention with the I.T.O. principles but in strict accordance with article 76(d) and article 80 of the Charter. Mr. Poynton indicated that it was unlikely that the United States delegation would yield on this point and that his delegation's instructions are to fight the United States proposal vigorously. His main concern, of course, was that the United States delegation could command a large vote and he gave the impression that the United Kingdom delegation would fight this matter to the "last ditch" and "go down fighting"! At this point he asked what was the opinion of the various delegations.

7. Mr. McKay (New Zealand) indicated that his country had not included anything referring to monopolies in the agreement concerning Samoa partly because it is a "C" class mandate and partly because the inhabitants of their mandated territories, being an intelligent lot, would feel that this was an invitation to foreigners to exploit them in contradiction with the basic objectives of the trusteeship agreement which they would consider as their "Bill of Rights".

8. At this point, Mr. Côté asked Mr. Poynton if he could indicate why the United Kingdom government and others were submitting draft agreements to the General Assembly when the relevant Articles of the Charter refer to agreements already concluded which are required to be approved by the Assembly. Mr. Poynton stated that while Article 85 of the Charter seemed to indicate that the agreements would be concluded prior to approval by the Assembly, Article 79 seemed to indicate that the terms of trusteeship for each territory "should be agreed upon by the states directly concerned" and that this, he felt, did not mean that the agreement should, of necessity, be concluded. He admitted, however, that he was on weak ground. In pressing his point further, Mr. Côté developed the theme that the agreements, formally or informally concluded, must be concluded before the Assembly could approve of them. It was true that it was difficult to ascertain which are the states directly concerned, but if the United Kingdom government used, as a practical guide, the Principal Allied Powers and the states which the United Kingdom have recognized as directly interested, it seemed to him that the agreements could be concluded and any question of recognition could come up after the conclusion of these agreements in the Assembly. Unless the United States and the United Kingdom could resolve their differences, they would most certainly give the Soviet a magnificent opportunity for propaganda by splitting the "Anglo-Saxon bloc", defeating the United Kingdom proposal and "championing" the cause of the inhabitants of trust territories. To this Mr. Poynton indicated that Mr. Gerig had said it would be a "tragedy" if discussion were to come up on this point. However, it was apparent that neither the United Kingdom nor the United States delegations, at the official level, would give in on this point. Professor Bailey then urged that this matter be taken up on the highest political level between the two delegations.

9. Mr. Côté suggested that if the United States Government were in the same position as the United Kingdom Government it would undoubtedly take the same view as the United Kingdom Government was now taking and that he felt confident that if the matter were taken up by Mr. Bevin with Mr. Byrnes against the background which had been developed in the course of discussion, the actual advantages which the United States would be obtaining from the amendment of such a clause would be so small, in practice, that Mr. Byrnes might well agree to the British contention. Professor Bailey suggested, however, that a useful "face-saving compromise" might be to delete completely Articles 9, 10 and 11. In this manner, the United States would seem to gain its point while the United Kingdom could rely on the specific provisions of the Charter (Article 76(d)) which ensures equal economic treatment to all Members of the United Nations without prejudice to the objectives of the Trusteeship System.

10. It was agreed by Messrs. Poynton and Shannon that this matter should be taken up with London immediately.

11. At 9:00 p.m. on October 25th another Commonwealth meeting was held at Essex House with the same delegations, India and South Africa being represented. In addition to those mentioned in paragraph 1, Sir Maharaj Singh and Mr. Banerjee (India), Mr. Sole (South Africa), Mr. Ivor Thomas, M.P. (Colonies) and Mr. A. G. Bottomley, M.P. (Dominions Office) were also present.

12. Mr. Thomas stated that the United Kingdom Delegation, after ministerial consideration, was prepared to accept an amendment to Article 10(c) which would provide for "a prior report" to the Trusteeship Council before granting a monopoly. It was generally felt by the Commonwealth representatives that this was not very helpful. Mr. Bailey reviewed his argumentation of the previous evening and Mr. Poynton then "wondered whether all the detail of articles 9, 10 and 11 could be dropped" and a new article referring to Article 76 of the Charter inserted. In the course of discussion, Mr. Côté stated that his delegation's "reaction", without detailed consideration of the subject, was that it would be much better to rely on the Charter than to insert in the agreement a clause from the Mandates which is bound to raise such a biased discussion.

13. Sir Maharaj Singh stated that this was a "sound view", and all delegations were agreed that articles 9, 10 and 11 should be deleted and replaced by one making a brief reference to Article 76 of the Charter. Mr. Poynton phoned the Secretariat to see if the publication of the United Kingdom "agreements" could be suspended; the United Kingdom delegation would then consult the United States, the states directly concerned and London hoping to present an agreement which was acceptable to all.

14. Mr. Côté urged that in the Assembly any "amendments" to the agreements be resisted since the Assembly's sole function at this stage was the approval of the agreements. (Article 83). In the course of discussion this view became generally accepted.

15. After the Conference Mr. Côté spoke with Mr. Thomas and Mr. Poynton and they agreed that he might give advance notice of the United Kingdom delegation's intentions to Mr. Sandifer, Executive Officer to Mr. Austin, Chairman of the United States delegation. This he did in the course of an interview at the Pennsylvanian Hotel on Saturday morning October 26th. It is also intended that the Canadian delegation will use its good offices to put this point of view to the French delegation; unfortunately the terms of the French agreement (which also include an article similar to 10(c)) have been cleared with the United Kingdom government and have been published by the Secretariat.

16. I shall keep you informed of the discussions in connection with Trusteeship matters.

Yours sincerely,

E. A. CÔTÉ

552.

DEA/5475-N-40

Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum by Second Political Division<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa,] November 6, 1946

Mr. Côté's suggestion (see paragraph 8 of his letter of October 26) that the Principal Allied Powers should be regarded as states directly concerned in the trusteeship agreements is a reminder that certain material on the files of the Department which could not be included in the Commentary because of its secret nature is yet an essential part of the equipment of advisers to the Canadian Delegation. For example it would have been helpful for Mr. Côté had we provided him with as full a record as possible of the delicate and rather difficult negotiations carried on from May to October between the United Kingdom and United States Governments concerning the United States claim to be considered a state directly concerned in African trusteeship agreements.

The United States Government, which negotiated agreements with the mandatory powers in Africa during the '20s, claimed last spring to be a state directly concerned in the trusteeship agreements which are to supersede the mandates. It wanted, however, to establish its right to be consulted about the African agreements without opening the door to similar Soviet intervention in the case of the Pacific islands. The United States Government therefore suggested certain procedures which the United Kingdom Government was unable to accept since they would have involved a diminution of rights already accorded to France, Belgium and South Africa as states in any event concerned in the agreements.

Confronted with extensive and detailed United States suggestions for the amendment of the African trusteeship agreements, the Foreign Office entered into long negotiations with the State Department and accepted as many of the amendments as it could. Thus the substance of the United States claim was granted even though formal recognition of its right to be consulted or to sign the agreements was withheld because it was felt that if the door were opened to Soviet intervention on the same scale in Africa consequences would be entailed which the United Kingdom Government was not prepared to face.

<sup>1</sup>De M<sup>11</sup>* E. P. MacCallum à R. G. Riddell.

<sup>1</sup>From Miss E. P. MacCallum to R. G. Riddell.

Although it is a little late, I think Mr. Côté would find it useful to have a complete set of Dominions Office telegrams reporting the negotiations between the United Kingdom and United States Governments so that he may familiarize himself with the details of the various procedural expedients which have been considered by both Governments as a means of meeting the requirements of the Charter without inviting Soviet interference.

E. P. M[ACCALLUM]

553.

DEA/5475-N-40

*Déclaration du secrétaire général, la délégation
à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

Statement by Secretary-General, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[November 27, 1946]

INTERVENTION BY MR. E. A. CÔTÉ IN SUB-COMMITTEE 1 OF COMMITTEE IV
CONCERNING THE SOVIET PROPOSAL ON ARTICLE X

The Canadian delegation considers that Article X of the agreement proposed by the New Zealand Government for placing Western Samoa under the Trusteeship System is in accordance with the Charter and therefore it does not propose to ask the Mandatory Power to re-open negotiations on this point.

If we have read the Charter aright, all Members of the United Nations have undertaken by virtue of Article 43 and others to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance and facilities, including the rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

In the case of strategic areas coming under the jurisdiction of the Security Council under Article 82 (and we understand the New Zealand Government to say that Western Samoa or any part thereof is not a strategic area) the Security Council has vis-à-vis such strategic areas functions defined in Article 83 which are broadly similar to those of the General Assembly under Article 85. In the case of a trust territory which is not considered as a strategic area the General Assembly has functions defined in Article 85. In both cases the administering authority has imposed upon it a specific duty defined in Article 84. The administering authority, in both cases may make use of "volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council" undertaken by it "as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory".

The question seems to be the following: In the case of a trust territory under the supervision NOT of the Security Council but of the General Assembly, must the administering authority which wishes to have forces and facilities in the trust territory declare these portions of the trust territory on which forces or facilities may be located as strategic areas?

That, Mr. Chairman, seems to be the effect of the amendments proposed by our distinguished Soviet and Indian colleagues. And I suggest that, as outlined in the Secretariat's paper A/C.4/40, an attempt was made to introduce this concept into the Charter at San Francisco, and this attempt failed. Now [we] are asked to import this interpretation of the Charter, which was rejected by 26 votes to 2 at San Francisco, into a Trusteeship Agreement. The Canadian delegation, for its part, cannot subscribe to such an action. If we did subscribe to this interpretation it would inevitably lead (as was so aptly put by the delegate for France) to the conclusion that all trust territories should be declared strategic areas and the General Assembly's paramount role in Trusteeship matters would be reduced to naught, a situation which the Charter does not contemplate and indeed clearly rejects.

What then, Mr. Chairman, is the situation pending the implementation of Article 43, and following, of the Charter. The Canadian delegation believes, as pointed out by most delegations here, that the situation under the Charter is radically different from that prevailing under the Mandate System. The moment a Trusteeship Agreement is concluded, the administering authority has a new duty imposed upon it by Article 84 of the Charter. That duty is "to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security." This is a strict duty which is incumbent upon the administering authority and it was inserted quite deliberately in the Charter for the benefit of the inhabitants of the trust territories: henceforth they are NOT to be left unprotected and they must be developed progressively to play a part in the system of international peace and security. And how, Mr. Chairman, can this be accomplished? The Canadian delegation ventures to suggest that, among other means, the administering authority "may make use of volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council" and this, in accordance with Article 43. However, if the Security Council is unable, for any reason, to conclude the special agreements contemplated by Article 43, and if, therefore, the means provided in the second sentence of Article 84 are not at the disposal of the administering authority, the administering authority still has the specific duty to ensure that the territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. If the administering authority has this specific duty, it has a corresponding right to the means of discharging this duty.

What then are the means which are contemplated under Article X of the Western Samoa Agreement? The beginning of Article X is a recital of Article 84 of the Charter, and it goes on to say: "To this end the administering authority shall be entitled:

(1) to establish naval bases, etc." This does not signify that the administering authority shall do all things enumerated in this Article—the Article clearly establishes the powers which the administering authority has to discharge the onerous duty imposed upon it.

To sum up, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian delegation sincerely believes that if the Soviet and Indian proposals were accepted for the Western Samoa Agreement, and if this territory were to come within the orbit of the Security Council there may indeed be a danger of Western Samoa becoming a "block house on the road of empires", as was said yesterday. On the other hand, if Western Samoa remains indisputably under the constant supervision of the General Assembly and of the Trusteeship Council, and if the administering authority has the power to discharge the duties conferred upon it by the Charter, there is no danger of Western Samoa becoming a strategic pawn.

The second point we wish to make (and that is why, reluctantly, we cannot subscribe to the Chinese proposal after this debate) is that it must be made clear beyond all doubt that an administering authority must have the "facilities" at its disposal to discharge the duties it assumes for the benefit of the inhabitants of the trust territory.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian delegation supports Article X of the agreement for Western Samoa in its present form.<sup>1</sup>

PARTIE 6 / PART 6

DIVERS / MISCELLANEOUS

SECTION A

ADDITIONS AU RÈGLEMENT INTÉRIEUR DU CONSEIL DE SÉCURITÉ

ADDITIONAL RULES OF PROCEDURE OF SECURITY COUNCIL

554.

DEA/211-C

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 282

London, March 26, 1946

SECRET. Soviet Government's proposal for additional rules of procedure for Security Council. Following is summary of instructions sent to United Kingdom representative on Security Council.

(1) Paragraph 1 of Soviet proposal. We see no objection.

<sup>1</sup> Les amendements proposés par l'Union soviétique et l'Inde furent rejetés par la sous-commission. Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, quatrième commission, partie 2, onzième séance, 2 novembre 1946, p. 79. Le texte de l'amendement de l'Union soviétique est dans Ibid., annexe 4a, p. 236.

<sup>1</sup> The amendments proposed by the Soviet Union and India were rejected by the Subcommittee. See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Fourth Committee, Part 2, Eleventh Meeting, November 28, 1946, p. 79. The text of the Soviet Union's amendment is in Ibid., Annex 4a, p. 236.

(2) Paragraph 2 of Soviet proposal. We are disposed not, repeat not, to agree that a member of United Nations Organization, which is not, repeat not, a member of Security Council, should have right to make proposals or draft resolutions when participating in Security Council discussion, but we do not, repeat not, attach great importance to the point.

(3) Soviet draft Rule 31. In general, United Kingdom representative is strongly to resist any attempt by Soviet Government to widen scope of veto. We consider that Security Council should concentrate on defining what is meant by a "dispute" in order to end present uncertainty. We had already been considering possibility of countering what we regard as misuse of veto during London session of Security Council and are now instructing United Kingdom representative, after prior consultation with United States representative, to propose rules in my immediately following telegram. Soviet proposal, however, of draft rules inspired in opposite direction indicates that it may not be easy to reach agreement.

(4) Soviet draft Rule 32. On assumption that this is intended to apply to order in which draft resolutions are taken on a particular item of the agenda, we think that it might be best to leave Chairman to decide as to order.

(5) Soviet amendment to Rule 40. This seems to be aimed at expediting discussion of Albanian application for admission to United Nations Organization. United Kingdom representative is to vote against Soviet amendment. We should agree to addition of following words to draft Rule 40 in S. 6, Begins:

In these cases Security Council must take action in time to enable Assembly to take its vote and therefore if Assembly is already in session such questions should have a suitable priority. Ends.

555.

DEA/211-C

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 283

London, March 26, 1946

SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Following is text of 2 draft additional rules of procedure of Security Council referred to in paragraph (3), Begins:

(a) Definition of a "dispute".

In deciding under Chapter VI of the Charter whether a matter brought before the Security Council by a State is a dispute or a situation, the Security Council shall hold that a dispute arises:

(i) If the State or States bringing the matter before the Security Council and the State or States whose conduct is impugned agree that there is a dispute.

(ii) Whenever the State or States bringing the matter before the Council allege that the actions or intentions of another State are endangering or are likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security and the State or States which are the subject of these allegations contest some or all of the facts or the inferences to be drawn from the facts.

(iii) Further, if a State bringing a matter before the Council alleges that another State is violating the rights of a third State and latter supports the contention of the first State, then the third State shall also be deemed to be a party to the dispute.

(b) Submission of cases in writing.

Any State bringing a dispute or situation before the Security Council shall furnish a full written statement of the grounds of fact and law on which its case is based for circulation to members of the Council before the discussion is opened. Ends.

556.

DEA/211-C

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la British Security Co-ordination<sup>1</sup>

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to British Security Co-ordination<sup>1</sup>

TELEGRAM NDO 165

Ottawa, March 28, 1946

SECRET. Following for Ritchie<sup>2</sup> (U.N.O., New York) Begins: We received from the Dominions Office two telegrams containing United Kingdom views on Soviet Government's proposal for additional rules of procedure for Security Council. Copies of these telegrams are following by courier bag.

2. We are interested in having as soon as possible opportunity of examining these proposals and of considering our attitude to developments regarding the rules of procedure. For this purpose we should have (a) draft of supplementary rules prepared in Committee of experts and (b) the Soviet Government proposals on additional rules of procedure.

3. The United Kingdom's comment on paragraph 2 of the Soviet proposal reads as follows: "We are disposed not, repeat not, to agree that a member of United Nations Organization, which is not, repeat not, a member of Security Council, should have right to make proposals or draft resolutions

<sup>1</sup> British Security Co-ordination était l'organisation qui avait entre autres, coordonné les opérations des services de renseignements alliés pendant la guerre.

<sup>2</sup> M. Ritchie a assisté aux séances du Conseil de sécurité à New York du 25 mars au 14 mai comme observateur. M. Ritchie envoyait et recevait des messages par l'entremise du consulat général à New York qui utilisait la ligne directe de télétype entre Ottawa et la BSC, le consulat et la BSC étant dans le même édifice au Rockefeller Center à New York.

<sup>1</sup> British Security Co-ordination was the organization which inter alia co-ordinated the operations of the Allies' intelligence services during the war.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Ritchie attended the meetings of the Security Council in New York from March 25 to May 14 as an observer. Mr. Ritchie sent and received messages through the Consulate General in New York which used the direct teletype link between BSC and Ottawa, the Consulate and BSC being in the same building in Rockefeller Center in New York.

when participating in Security Council discussion, but we do not, repeat not, attach great importance to the point". In the light of our own special position, and of the stand we took at San Francisco, our view is that there should be no, repeat no, restriction on the right of these members to participate other than the restriction on the right to vote contained in the Charter.

557.

DEA/211-C

*Le chef, la première direction politique, au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, First Political Division, to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

New York, April 2, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am enclosing what I had hoped would be two complete sets of Security Council documents.<sup>1</sup> I have had great difficulty in obtaining these and I now find that they are not entirely complete and that French versions have been jumbled up with the English. However, this is the best that the Secretariat seem able to do, and as the set includes at least one copy of all the important documents (with one exception which I shall mention later), I am sending them by the next bag as I note from your telegram NDO 165, March 28th, that you wish to receive them as soon as possible.

The redraft of the Rules of Procedure as worked out by the Committee of Experts at four meetings held in London, appears to be the basic document on which the Committee has since been working.<sup>2</sup> It is No. S-Procedure-8, of February 1st. The Soviet Government's proposed amendments to that redraft will be found in S-Procedure-17 of March 22nd. Paragraph 2 of the latter document contains the Soviet proposal regarding the right of a State which is not a member of the United Nations to make proposals or draft resolutions when participating in the Security Council's discussions. You will see that the Soviet text is closely linked with Paragraph 1 of Article 35 of the Charter and makes no reference to States participating under Article 31, which is the case in which we are presumably principally interested.

In this general connection the statement on the Rules of Procedure of the Security Council submitted by the Secretariat (S-Procedure-12, Paragraphs 21 to 24) is of interest.<sup>3</sup> It deals with the general question of the participation

<sup>1</sup> A l'exception de S-procédure-17, ces documents ne sont pas dans les dossiers du ministère.

<sup>2</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Conseil de sécurité, Procès-verbaux officiels, première année, première série, supplément 1, annexe 1, section 4, pp. 3-6.

<sup>3</sup> Voir Ibid., supplément 2, annexe 1b, pp. 8-15.

<sup>1</sup> Except for S-Procedure-17, these documents are not in the departmental files.

<sup>2</sup> See United Nations, Security Council, Official Records, First Year, First Series, Supplement 1, Annex 1, Section 4, pp. 3-6.

<sup>3</sup> See Ibid., Supplement 2, Annex 1b, pp. 8-15.

of non-member States in the discussions of the Security Council. You will notice that it is stated in Paragraph 24 (ii), "There was however, a marked consensus of opinion that whatever the power by virtue of which a non-member had been invited, that non-member when admitted to the Council for the purpose of bringing a situation to its attention, should participate, in the proceedings to the same extent as a non-member admitted under Article 31".

It is further stated in Paragraph 24 (iii) "The view predominated that the words of Article 31 meant that the non-member should be subject to no restriction as to his participation in discussion other than that of taking no part in the vote". It therefore seems that the majority opinion in the Committee of Experts is in favour of our view of the matter.

I am seeing Mr. Johnson, the United States Representative on the Committee of Experts this afternoon and Mr. Lawford, the United Kingdom Representative, tomorrow, and I intend to take the opportunity of talking over this question with them and putting forward, informally, our point of view.

You will also be interested in studying the Soviet Government's proposals as contained in their Draft Rule 31 which would have the effect of widening the scope of the veto by restricting the rule that a party to a dispute should abstain from voting to disputes arising under Article 33 of the Charter. These proposals are, of course, being strongly opposed by the United Kingdom and presumably also by the United States Government representatives in the Committee of Experts.

I should also call your attention [to] the Secretariat's note on the Report of the Military Staff Committee "S-Procedure-14." I have not yet been able to obtain a copy for you of the Draft Statute and Draft Rules of Procedure of the Military Staff Committee as prepared by the Military Staff Committee. This is, as I think you will agree, when you have read it, a document somewhat dangerous in its implications. The main points open to criticism are well brought out in the Secretariat's S-Procedure-14. For instance, the provision in the Military Staff Committee's Provisional Draft Rules of Procedure, that members of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee should only be associated with the Military Staff Committee as a result of the unanimous approval of the Committee, may very well be an infringement of the rights under the Charter of non-member States.

Were such a proposal embodied in the final Rules of Procedure of the Military Staff Committee it might have an important bearing on Article 44 of the Charter as it presumably would permit any one of the powers represented on the Military Staff Committee to veto consultation at a military level with a Member of the Organization concerning the employment of contingents of that member's armed forces. Although it seems unlikely that such a situation would in practice [?].<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cette phrase était écrite à la main.

<sup>1</sup> This sentence was handwritten.

I have not yet had an opportunity of studying the report of the Military Staff Committee in detail, but I think that some of its provisions if accepted would have a restrictive effect on the rights of other members of the United Nations, to be consulted in connection with their military obligations under Article 43, Paragraph 3 (Military Agreements), under Article 45 and possibly under other Articles of the Charter. In this connection you will be interested in seeing the proposed amendment to the proposed Military Staff Committee Rules of Procedure put forward by the Australian Representative on the Committee of Experts, S-Procedure-24. The Australians are naturally principally concerned with the position of non-permanent members of the Security Council and their association with the Military Staff Committee. The proposed Australian redraft of Paragraph 4 (c) is certainly an improvement on the Military Staff Committee's text. I am not so sure about their redraft of Paragraph 4 (d), as this proposal for the association of non-permanent members of the Security Council with the work of the Security Staff Committee does not take into account the position of States like Canada which are not on the Security Council at all, but which will in due course have to be associated with the work of the Military Staff Committee if they are to discharge their responsibilities under the relevant Articles of the Charter.

Owing to the shortage of copies of the important documents I have not been able to send a copy of this letter or of the relevant documents to the Canadian Embassy in Washington. Perhaps it would be worthwhile for some of the more important papers to be copied for Mr. Pearson's information.

I should be glad to receive your comments and instructions as to the line which I might follow in informal conversations with officials of the United Kingdom and the United States Delegations on these matters.

I hope to be able to send to you the Military Staff Committee's report by the next courier bag.

Yours sincerely,

C. S. A. RITCHIE

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Document du Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies

Document of the Security Council of the United Nations

S/PROCEDURE/17

[New York,] March 22, 1946

RESTRICTED

COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS

AMENDMENTS TO THE REDRAFT OF THE PROVISIONAL RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR THE SECURITY COUNCIL PROPOSED BY THE SOVIET REPRESENTATIVE

1. Rule 19 to be transferred to Section XIII and to be included in Rule 31 as the second sentence. The beginning of this sentence should read as follows: "However, any recommendation by the General Assembly . . ." and further according to the text of Rule 19.

2. A new rule to be included in the Redraft as Rule 19 which should read as follows:

"Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council, if he makes use of the right given to him by paragraph 1 of Article 35 of the Charter, is invited to participate in debate of the Security Council on the question raised by him and may make proposals and draft resolutions relating to the consideration of this question".

3. Three new rules to be included in the Redraft after Rule 30. These rules should read as follows:

"RULE 31. Should the Security Council consider a dispute provided for by Article 33 of the Charter, a party to the dispute shall abstain from voting in accordance with paragraph 3 of Article 27 of the Charter.

Should the Security Council consider a situation provided for by Article 34 or any other dispute which does not fall under Article 33, all the members of the Security Council are entitled to participate in the voting.

The decision of whether the question under consideration by the Security Council is of procedural nature and also of whether the question under consideration is a dispute or a situation and whether this dispute is of the nature referred to in Article 33 of the Charter shall be regarded as accepted if it is voted for by seven members of the Security Council including the concurring votes of all the permanent members of the Security Council.

RULE 32. Proposals submitted to the Security Council shall be voted on in the order of their submission with exception of the proposals relating to the Agenda, which shall be considered first.

Any proposal shall be put to the vote by parts if a Member of the United Nations, which submitted the proposal requests so.

RULE 33. Amendments to the proposals submitted to the Security Council shall be voted on first. Amendments furthest removed in substance from the original proposal shall be voted on before other ones.

If an amendment adds to or deletes from an original proposal, the amendment shall be voted on first. If it is accepted by the Security Council, the amended original proposal shall then be voted on".

All the following rules to be appropriately renumbered [sic].

4. Rule 40 should be added with the following words to be put after the word "which": "immediately considers the application in order that if the Security Council is holding its session simultaneously with a session of the Assembly, the application could be submitted to this session of the General Assembly or—if the Security Council is not holding its session simultaneously with a session of the Assembly—to the next session of the Assembly. While considering the application the Security Council . . .".

558.

DEA/211-C

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la British Security Co-ordination

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to British Security Co-ordination

TELEGRAM NDO 198

Ottawa, April 6, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Ritchie, Begins: Soviet amendments to the Security Council's Rules of Procedure.

1. The new Rule proposed in paragraph 2 of the Soviet memorandum should, in our opinion, not be accepted. It would automatically give any Member state which brings a dispute or situation to the attention of the Security Council under Article 35 the right to temporary membership without vote in the Security Council. While, presumably, in most cases such a state would be granted temporary membership under Article 31 or Article 32, it is neither necessary nor wise to make this grant of temporary membership automatic. In place of the proposed Soviet Rule, we would suggest the following two Rules:

(1) "A Member of the United Nations which under the provisions of Article 35(1) brings a dispute or situation to the attention of the Security Council shall be invited by the Security Council to make an oral statement to the Security Council setting forth the reasons why it has considered it necessary to bring the dispute or situation to the attention of the Council. After making this oral statement, the State shall withdraw from the Council and the Council shall then decide whether it shall discuss the dispute or situation and if so, at the meeting in progress or at a subsequent meeting. If the Security Council decides to discuss the dispute or situation, it shall before proceeding further with the discussion decide whether the State which has brought the dispute or situation to its attention should be invited to participate without vote in the discussion of the question under the provisions of Articles 31 or 32".

(2) "Any State which under the provisions of Articles 31, 32 or 44 is invited to participate in a discussion by the Security Council shall, during that discussion, have all the rights of Members of the Security Council except that a state invited under the provisions of Articles 31 and 32 shall not have the right to vote".

2. We are of course vigorously opposed to the Soviet proposal that each Great Power should have the right to veto (a) a decision that a question is procedural and (b) a decision that a question is a dispute. The five Powers in their statement at San Francisco claimed that the Charter gave each of them the right to veto a decision that a question was procedural but this interpretation has not the force of a provision of the charter. The second Soviet proposal that each Great Power should have the right to veto a decision on whether a question is a dispute was not raised at San Francisco [and] is acceptable because acceptance of the proposal would appear to frustrate the clear intent of the proviso to Article 27(3) of the Charter under which a Great Power loses its veto if it is a party to a dispute. If it is impossible in any other way to budge the Soviet Union from their demand for a veto over a decision as to whether a matter is a dispute, the Security Council might consider referring the question to the International Court for an advisory opinion on the interpretation of the relevant Articles of the Charter.

3. The first sentence of the proposed Soviet Rule 32 does not seem to be objectionable.

4. The second sentence of Soviet Rule 32 and Soviet Rule 33 reproduce General Assembly Rules of Procedure 65, 66 and 67 in the chapter on the Conduct of Business. The Soviet proposal to include in the Security Council Rules these three Assembly Rules on the Conduct of Business appears to us to be wise. It raises the question whether it would be useful for the Security Council to adopt some of the other Assembly Rules on the Conduct of Business especially Rules 59 and 60. The adoption of these two Rules along with Rules 65, 66 and 67 would make it less likely that the Security Council would get involved in procedural snarls. In order to erect a constitutional barrier against a filibuster, it may also be desirable for the Security Council to adopt an equivalent of General Assembly Rules 62 and 63 on the closure of a debate. Since the Security Council is a small body, its closure Rules would not, however, need to be as strict as the General Assembly Rules. The language of the proposed Soviet Rules on the Conduct of Business seems to be the result of an English translation of a Russian Translation of the English text of the corresponding Assembly Rules. The language would be improved if the English text of the Assembly Rules were substituted.

5. The only comment which occurs to us on Rules 19 to 40 in S/Procedure/8 is that Rule 34 providing for a record in a single copy of a private meeting is silent on the question of who should have the right to consult this record. If Canada as a non-member took part in the meeting, the Canadian representative would, under the Rule as it stands, have the right for ten days to see the original draft of the record and suggest corrections. He is not, however, given the right to consult the record subsequently. It would be better from the point of view of Members of the United Nations which are not Members of the Security Council if a sentence were added to Rule 34 reading somewhat as follows: "The representatives of these States shall at all times have the right to consult this record at the Secretariat".

6. You may informally and in confidence, give the United Kingdom, the United States and Australian representatives a copy of the above comments. Ends.

SECTION B

RÉPUBLIQUES SOVIÉTIQUES/SOVIET REPUBLICS

559.

DEA/4060-40

*Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique au sous-secrétaire d'État
associé aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Second Political Division to Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] May 6, 1946

RE: SOVIET REPUBLICS ON U.N. WAR CRIMES COMMISSION

If this is a United Nations Commission it seems logical that Byelorussia and Ukraine should be represented since they are Members of the United Nations. It also seems logical that the other Soviet republics should not be represented until such time as they have been admitted to membership in the United Nations. Admission to the Commission should not be used as a backdoor by which to sneak in additional Soviet republics into the United Nations, now that there exists an internationally recognized procedure for acquiring membership in the United Nations.

I still think that the Soviet motive in asking for the admission of these republics is the desire to secure de jure recognition of their incorporation in the U.S.S.R. which the Western powers have hitherto refused to give. This, I think, was the original motive. Added to this is probably the desire not to be outvoted on the Commission and the calculation that if these republics are admitted it would be easier to secure their membership in the United Nations.

From the constitutional point of view I can see no difference between trial by the U.S.S.R. and trial by the republics. Either method could be used under the Soviet constitution, though so far political trials and trials of war criminals have been conducted only by the Union authorities. As for the argument that unless the republics are represented separately their interests are not fully taken into account we might ask whether the inclusion of Foreign Ministers of the Republics as alternates in the Soviet delegation would not ensure the protection of their interests—it being understood that the inclusion of these Ministers is a purely internal matter for the U.S.S.R. and does not imply the recognition of the status of these Ministers as representatives of the Republics as such. I am thinking of the precedent set by the U.S.S.R. in including Lavrentiev, Foreign Minister of the R.S.F.S.R.<sup>1</sup> in the Soviet delegations to San Francisco and to the General Assembly.

When the Soviet request for the inclusion of the seven republics was first made in 1943, the United Nations was still a rather nebulous concept. In particular, there was no agreed procedure by which a nation became a member except signature of the United Nations Declaration, presumably a matter for decision only by the nation wishing to become a Member. Since then the situation has been changed by the acceptance of the Charter as the constitution of the United Nations.

<sup>1</sup> Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic.

In view of the changed circumstances, the following arguments should be used to-day:

- (1) the Commission consists of Members of the United Nations;
- (2) Byelorussia and Ukraine are entitled to membership;
- (3) if the other republics want to be represented, they would be welcomed when they have become Members of the United Nations;
- (4) the procedure for acquiring this membership is laid down in the Charter.<sup>1</sup>

L. M[ALANIA]

I concur.

E. R[EID]

SECTION C

REPRÉSENTATION CANADIENNE

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

560.

DEA/211

Mémoire du chef, la première direction politique

Memorandum by Head, First Political Division

[Ottawa,] April 23, 1946

MEMORANDUM ON CANADIAN REPRESENTATION TO THE UNITED NATIONS

One of the objects of my recent visit to New York was to report as to the necessity for Canadian representation to the United Nations, and as to the form that such representation might take.

The Charter does not make any provision for states which are not members of the Security Council to be represented at the seat of the Organization, although it does provide that members of the Security Council should be represented "at all times at the seat of the Organization". So far no Department has been established in the United Nations to make suitable arrangements for the reception of Missions from states not members of the Security Council and, in fact, no such Missions have so far been established. Moreover, in the present disorganized and scattered condition of the Secretariat the Organization has no centre where the Head of such a Mission would have an opportunity to encounter his colleagues. All that the Canadian representative to the United Nations could do in existing circumstances would be to attend the meetings of the Security Council as an observer, to maintain informal contact with the delegations of members of the Security Council and to keep in touch with the United Nations Secretariat. It would, however, be desirable to have a Canadian representative in New York to perform these functions. Such a representative would have the following among his other duties:—(a) He would attend the meetings of the Security Council and report on the proceedings. He would supplement his official attendance at the meetings of the Council by maintaining close contact with the British, American and other delegations (although he would have difficulty in maintaining close contact with the Soviet delegation). In this way the Canadian Government should receive full reports of what is going on, not only in the Security Council but behind the scenes. There is obviously an opportunity for an important job of diplomatic reporting to be done in New York. The United Kingdom delegation is small and overworked and we do not seem to be getting through the Dominions Office very full reports of what is going on in the background of events in the Security Council. Moreover, questions will arise before the Security Council which affect Canadian interests more or less directly. The work of the Committee of experts on rules of procedure for the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee is a case in point. I was able to bring the Canadian views on certain aspects of these rules of procedure informally to the attention of the United States and United Kingdom delegations. There will be occasions on which more important and direct Canadian interests are affected by the work of the Security Council.

<sup>1</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

Mr. Hopkins—I think you might draft a brief reply on this basis. H. W[RONG]

(b) The Canadian representative would maintain contact with the Members of the Secretariat on specific questions as they arise. For example, when I was in New York I was able to arrange with the Secretariat that the Department of External Affairs should receive a regular supply of all documents issued by the United Nations. I was surprised to find that the Secretariat took the view that they were under no obligation to supply member Governments of the United Nations with documents except those which the Government in question specifically asked for.

Questions having to do with the employment of the staff of the Organization and the recruitment of Canadian personnel are now much to the fore, and I had a number of discussions concerning these matters with members of the Secretariat in New York.

The Canadian representative in New York would also be in charge of making adequate arrangements for Canadian delegations to the meetings of the Economic and Social Council and of the Assembly. He would be in a position to make arrangements regarding accommodation, etc., and also to ensure that the Department of External Affairs received full documentation in advance of these meetings.

The desirability of having a Canadian representative, at any rate from time to time, in New York, is much increased by the inadequacy of the existing Secretariat. Indeed, Sir Alexander Cadogan gave it as his view that it would be highly desirable for all the Governments of the Commonwealth to have representatives in New York. He thought this essential if they desired to keep in touch with the work of the Organization and gave as his particular reason the shortcomings of the Secretariat, particularly in the formative months immediately ahead before the Organization is properly on its feet.

While for these reasons it would be useful to have a Canadian representative in New York, it would probably be premature to set up a full-fledged Mission to the United Nations at this stage. In the first place the Head of the Mission might find himself in a somewhat embarrassing position. As Canada is not a member of the Security Council, he would be very much on the outskirts of events during the interval when neither the Assembly nor the Economic and Social Council are in session. In addition, there would be the difficult problem of finding accommodation for a Mission. The Head of the Mission would either have to live in New York and commute to the temporary headquarters, or else follow the example of Sir Alexander Cadogan and take a house on Long Island. On the other hand, it would be useful to have a senior member of the Department of External Affairs permanently in New York, perhaps assisted by a Third Secretary, and installed in modest office space. It is doubtful whether accommodation could be made available in the offices of the Consulate as they are already pressed for space. If such a representative were appointed, it would be essential that he should be independent of the Consulate. The Consul General has not been concerned in United Nations matters and it would be a mistake, both from his point of view and the point of view of the representative to the United Nations, to involve their very different functions under one jurisdiction. It is my impression from my talks with Mr. Scully<sup>1</sup> that he would agree with this view.

While it would be desirable to have a Canadian representative permanently in New York, it would not be essential, having in mind the shortage of senior personnel in the Department of External Affairs. The same purpose could perhaps be fairly adequately served by frequent visits, on the part of senior officers of the Department dealing with United Nations questions, to New York. These visits would obviously be timed to coincide with any important development in the affairs before the Security Council in which Canada is interested, but in any event not too long should be allowed to elapse between visits if the Department is to be kept in touch with developments. Such an itinerant Canadian representative could presumably continue to be accommodated in the Canadian Consulate.

---

<sup>1</sup> Le consul général à New York.

<sup>1</sup> Consul General in New York.

561.

DEA/211

*Mémoire du chef, la deuxième direction politique,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] April 25, 1946

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION TO THE UNITED NATIONS

(Mr. Ritchie's Memorandum of April 23, 1946)

1. If it were possible to find a man who possessed the peculiar combination of qualities necessary to fill the dual role of consul-general in New York and Canadian representative to the United Nations, the combination of the two posts might be the best solution to our problem. But the two jobs call for such different qualities that I doubt whether the man exists. The work of the Canadian consul-general in New York seems to be largely representational; he gives a large number of public speeches; he attends a large number of social functions; the people he mixes with are mainly financial and commercial. (His work is not therefore strictly comparable to the consular work done by the United States consul-general in Geneva before the war). The work of a Canadian representative to the United Nations would be mainly reporting and liaison.

2. Merely finding the man who could do both jobs would, of course, not in itself solve our problem. Since he would be able to devote only half his time to consular work, the consular staff of the office would have to be strengthened. He would need, on the United Nations side, one secretary of the status of Malania, or Côté, and probably a junior third secretary to do routine work.

3. This would involve a complete shake-up in the consulate-general. If that shake-up is not to be made I agree with Mr. Ritchie that the Canadian representative to the United Nations should be a first secretary or counsellor, that he should be assisted by a third secretary and that he should not come under the jurisdiction of the consul-general. He ought to have office space as near as possible to the Sperry Gyroscope plant rather than in New York which is 14 miles away. Perhaps the best solution would be what I understand is Cadogan's—to have his office and residence combined in a house on Long Island. If he cannot get office space near the Secretariat and has to get it in New York, then the advantages of sharing services with the consulate-general might outweigh the disadvantages of being in the same block of offices as the consulate-general.

4. I would give the establishment of adequate Canadian representation to the United Nations the highest priority—above India, Sweden etc. If any new post is to be established I think it should be that to the United Nations. The reporting we would get from a United Nations post would be worth many times the reporting from any other possible new post especially since we already get United Kingdom reports from these posts but not from New York. Our interests are more deeply involved in the success of the United Nations than in successful relations with any any one of the countries in which we are not now represented. We have an opportunity of exerting considerable influence on the development of the United Nations; our influence in many other spheres of international relations is pretty slight.

5. Probably also we would increase our chances of being elected to the Security Council if we publicize our serious interest in the United Nations by establishing a mission to it. We would also be more effective members of the Security Council if our representative in it could be advised by someone who had first hand knowledge of the work of the Council before our election.<sup>1</sup>

E. R[EID]

SECTION D

LÉGISLATION AU SUJET DE L'ARTICLE 41 DE LA CHARTE

LEGISLATION WITH RESPECT TO ARTICLE 41 OF CHARTER

562.

DEA/5475-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] November 13, 1946

RE: CANADIAN LEGISLATION TO GIVE EFFECT TO ARTICLE 41 OF THE UNITED NATIONS CHARTER

1. The United Kingdom Parliament in April 1946 passed the United Nations Act, 1946 which in effect authorized the United Kingdom Government to discharge its responsibilities under Article 41 of the Charter by the passing of appropriate Orders in Council. A copy of the Act is annexed.† Article 41 of the Charter states that the Security Council may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply measures not involving the use of armed force to give effect to its decisions. "These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations by rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic radio and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations".

<sup>1</sup>Une représentation permanente aux Nations Unies n'a été établie que le 1<sup>er</sup> janvier 1948 lorsque le Général A. G. L. McNaughton a été nommé délégué permanent aux Nations Unies.

<sup>1</sup>Permanent representation at the United Nations was established only on January 1, 1948 when General A. G. L. McNaughton was appointed Permanent Delegate to the United Nations.

2. The King, upon the advice of his Canadian Ministers, may sever diplomatic relations with any state. However, while it is within the Royal Prerogative to sever diplomatic relations, the Prerogative could not be regarded as extending to the interruption of economic relations with another state pursuant to a decision of the Security Council. It seems, therefore, that legislation would be required before measures of this nature could be properly taken, and that the Canadian Parliament is competent to enact such legislation. The Deputy Minister of Justice in May, 1946, concurred in this view.

3. Following World War I, the Canadian Parliament passed the "Treaty of Peace Act, 1919" which provided that the Governor in Council could make such Orders in Council and do such things as appeared to him to be necessary for carrying out the treaties of peace including the Covenant of the League of Nations, but no such Canadian legislation exists with respect to the Charter of the United Nations.

4. There is little likelihood of sanctions being imposed against any state by the Security Council in the near future. It seems, however, to be desirable that the Government should have power to give immediate effect to any action demanded by the Security Council under this article, since we are bound by the Charter to do so, and delay while awaiting the passage of special legislation by Parliament would be hard to explain in a time of crisis.

5. In July, 1946, Mr. N. A. Robertson raised in Cabinet the question of introducing a bill. He left a note on file stating "Cabinet have decided not to introduce legislation this session".

6. It seems to me that such a bill should be introduced. If you agree, I assume that you will raise the matter in Cabinet.<sup>1</sup>

L. B. PEARSON

SECTION E

PASSEPORTS ET FORMALITÉS FRONTALIÈRES

PASSPORTS AND FRONTIER FORMALITIES

563.

DEA/5475-AE-40

Mémorandum de la direction diplomatique<sup>2</sup> au chef, la direction diplomatique

Memorandum from Diplomatic Division<sup>2</sup> to Head, Diplomatic Division

[Ottawa,] October 22, 1946

There is a marked trend at the present time toward a relaxation of travel restrictions throughout the world. Proposals are coming from many different quarters running the complete gamut even as far as the complete abolition of all passport and visa requirements.

<sup>1</sup> Un Bill concernant l'Article 41 fut présenté à la Chambre des communes en 1947. La troisième lecture a eu lieu le 24 juin et l'assentiment royal fut donné le 27 juin 1947.

<sup>2</sup> De J. H. Cleveland.

<sup>1</sup> A Bill respecting Article 41 was presented to the House of Commons in 1947. Third Reading was on June 24 and Royal Assent was given on June 27, 1947.

<sup>2</sup> By J. H. Cleveland.

A careful study of the Canadian position would, I think, be desirable as soon as possible in order that the various government departments concerned and indeed the different members within each department may be fully informed and adhere to a single Canadian policy. The following departments are concerned:

External Affairs	—	Diplomatic Division Economic Division First Political Division Security Officer
Dept. of Mines & Resources	—	Immigration Branch
Dept. of Trade & Commerce	—	Deputy Minister Chief, Tourist Development
Dept. of Finance	—	Foreign Exchange Control Board
Dept. of National Revenue	—	Customs & Excise
R.C.M.P.

A communication† was received about two months ago from the Secretary General of the United Nations concerning a proposed meeting of experts to prepare the ground for the meeting of a world conference on the subject of passports and frontier formalities. The meeting was to be held before the end of 1946 and apparently had in view a general meeting on the subject sometime in 1947.

The United Kingdom and French Governments have just concluded an agreement providing for the reciprocal abolition of entry visas. We have been invited to join in the agreement but have not replied pending advice from the Director of Immigration. I think our reply will have to be that we do not wish to join in the agreement as it is premature from our point of view, but we cannot overlook the fact that Canadians who hold passports describing them as British subjects will undoubtedly be able to enter France without a visa under the terms of the agreement between the United Kingdom and France. France, I may say, has traditionally been anxious to relax border regulations.

During the first week of October, there was a meeting in London of the International Conference of National Tourist Organizations. Canada was represented by an Assistant Trade Commissioner on the staff of the High Commissioner in London. Canada was elected to a Committee to discuss the formation of a proposed International Tourist Organization to be a sub-Committee of UNESCO. The memorandum submitted to this Conference by the United Kingdom delegate indicates that the United Kingdom is bent on a policy of letting down the barriers. Such a policy would be in accord with Mr. Bevin's description of his foreign policy as "being able to go down to Victoria Station and buy a ticket for anywhere in the world and to hell with passports and visas".

As I recall, the head of one of our missions in South America reported a year ago that he had attended a meeting of representatives of a number of the South American Foreign Offices and they felt favourably inclined toward an easing of passport and visa restrictions. A recent unilateral announcement by the United States stated that Canadians might enter that country without passports for periods up to six months, which indicates, I think, that their general feeling in the matter is becoming more liberal.

Two subjects which cannot be kept separate from passports and visas are immigration and the provision of haven for refugees. Although Canada may in many respects agree with other countries regarding passport and visa questions, as soon as the problems of immigrants and refugees are introduced, Canada finds herself largely alone. The countries of Europe are not likely to be selected by would-be immigrants in such proportions as to have a marked effect upon their culture. The United States too already has a large population and what is more its frontiers have largely disappeared. Canada has a small native population, an internal language problem, and its frontier districts are still many. Under the circumstances, Canada may appear in the role of a dog in the manger unless the whole question is handled with great care.

From the point of view of the Department of Trade and Commerce, especially the tourist season, abolition of frontier formalities is no doubt desirable.

History repeats itself.

Prior to the war of 1914-18, I understand that passport and visa formalities were slight. During the war, largely for reasons of security, the restrictions became more and more severe. After the war with the advent of the League of Nations and high hopes for a world at peace, many endeavours were made to get rid of all border formalities. In fact, restrictions on visas were in some measure removed. Pressure was brought to bear time and again in order to develop a reciprocal arrangement among the nations so that there should be the utmost freedom of travel. There was little endeavour to prevent westerners from travelling to any country in the world except the bête noire of Russia. With the outbreak of war in 1939, restrictions once more became severe. Now the reaction is setting in.

There are many matters to be considered before a final policy can be decided upon. I feel that as much information as possible should be obtained at once from all Government departments interested. This information should be pooled and then an interdepartmental meeting held to make a final decision on policy.

564.

DEA/5475-AE-40

*Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique
au chef, la direction diplomatique*

Memorandum from Second Political Division to Head, Diplomatic Division

[Ottawa,] November 4, 1946

RELAXATION OF TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

(YOUR MEMORANDUM OF OCTOBER 22nd)<sup>1</sup>

1. The position of Canada as a country which is attractive to many would-be immigrants from Europe is very different from that of France and Great Britain, and we should be in no hurry to abolish the requirements for visas for all visitors and immigrants coming from Europe.

<sup>1</sup> Le document précédent.

<sup>1</sup> Preceding document.

2. The main consideration is that of immigration policy. If visa requirements were abolished altogether, or if it was made too easy for anyone to get a six-months visa, there would undoubtedly be a large number of intending immigrants who would either ask permission to remain in Canada at the end of their six months, or who would remain without permission. With the relaxation of wartime regulations, it will be increasingly difficult for the Immigration authorities to locate persons remaining in Canada illegally.

3. The second consideration is that of security. Canadian Immigration officials on the Continent are being instructed to take additional precautions to prevent the admission to Canada of persons with criminal records or who might act as foreign agents. With the abolition of visas, there would be less means of preventing the entry of suspect persons.

4. In this connection, the best we could do towards assisting travel from European countries to Canada would be to encourage our offices abroad to deal as expeditiously as possible, and without reference to Ottawa, with requests for temporary visas from persons wishing to travel to Canada for reasons of business or pleasure. The difficulty in these cases will be to distinguish between persons who sincerely intend to return to their own countries and persons seeking a temporary visa with a view to requesting permanent landing once they are here. I do not believe, however, that it is good policy to ask every intending casual visitor from Europe to satisfy all the requirements of the Immigration Act before being allowed to set foot in Canada.

5. Early consideration must also be given to alteration of the regulations concerning the granting of temporary visas to persons of "Asiatic race". Quite apart from the question of Asiatic immigration, the restrictions on even temporary visitors from countries such as India and China (and the Middle Eastern countries) are invidious and are resented by those countries who are also members of the United Nations. It might be argued that visitors from Asiatic countries should be admitted under exactly the same conditions as visitors from other countries, whatever our ultimate immigration policy towards Asiatic peoples may be.

G. L. M[AGANN]

565.

DEA/5475-AE-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] December 17, 1946

An invitation has been received from the Secretary-General of the United Nations to participate in a Meeting of Experts preparatory to a World Conference on Passports and Frontier Formalities. This meeting will convene on March 17th, 1947, at Geneva. The draft agenda is flagged at "A".†

The most important matters on the agenda are those concerning visa control. Last week we held a meeting at which there were present representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Immigration Branch, Department of National Health and Welfare and R.C.M.P. It was agreed that we should prepare a record of the views of the meeting and submit it to the other Departments for concurrence.

I should like to have your approval of the attached letters<sup>1</sup>, flagged at "B", which I propose to sign and send to each of the Departments concerned.<sup>2</sup> Government policy is involved in two matters and I realize that a decision cannot be obtained at once. However, it seems desirable to discuss these matters at an official level and make recommendations to Cabinet as soon as possible. These two matters are:

1. An endeavour should be made to ease passport and frontier restrictions. This applies not only to aliens visiting Canada, but also to Canadians travelling abroad. We have already been approached by the Ambassador of France with a proposal for the mutual abolition of visas on our respective national passports. A short paper on the subject is flagged at "C".†

2. Both Immigration Branch and R.C.M.P. seek to exercise control over visitors. They admit that at present, the control by requiring visas is only partially effective, but do not wish to lose the substance for the shadow. A far more effective and satisfactory control could be exercised under a Registration of Aliens Act. Other countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom and the Union of South Africa have such an Act. A proposed outline of the provisions of such an Act is flagged at "D".<sup>3</sup> Do you feel that such legislation can be or should be obtained? Personally I have doubts about its wisdom, especially in its application to United States residents in Canada. However, if you so desire, I can have a memorandum prepared for the information of the Cabinet outlining in more detail the purpose of such legislation.<sup>2</sup>

It is desirable to have formal Cabinet approval before the Meeting of Experts in March,<sup>2</sup> as it will influence the attitude of our delegates in suggesting the form of any agreements which may be drafted for submission to the subsequent World Conference.<sup>4</sup>

L. B. PEARSON

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document suivant.

<sup>2</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>3</sup> Voir la pièce jointe du document suivant.

<sup>4</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup> See following document.

<sup>2</sup> Marginal note:

<sup>3</sup> See enclosure to following document.

<sup>4</sup> The following note was written on the memorandum:

A general registration act with exemptions for British subjects and residents of U.S.A. might give occasion for the criticism that we are forming an Anglo-Saxon bloc or English speaking bloc against the rest of the world. Are not most of our visitors either British subjects or residents of U.S.A.? Do we need an act for a relatively small minority of our visitors?

L. S. ST. L[AURENT]

566.

DEA/5475-AE-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre du Commerce*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce

Ottawa, December 30, 1946

Further to my letter dated December 6th, 1946,† the meeting of experts preparatory to a World Conference on Passport and Frontier Formalities has now been postponed from January 14th, 1947, to March 17th, 1947. The following persons were present at a meeting held on Tuesday afternoon, December 10th, 1946, to discuss matters on the agenda for the meeting of experts:

Mr. W. H. Measures	—	Dept. of External Affairs, Chairman
Mr. G. G. Congdon	—	Immigration Branch, Dept. of Mines and Resources
Dr. C. P. Brown	—	Dept. of National Health and Welfare
Mr. Fisher	—	Dept. of Trade and Commerce
Mr. D. Leo Dolan	—	Chief, Tourist Development Branch
Insp. Parsons	—	R.C.M.P.
Mr. G. G. Crean	}	Dept. of External Affairs
Mr. B. G. Sivertz
Mr. A. E. H. P. Petrie
Mr. J. H. Cleveland

The representatives present at the above-mentioned meeting agreed to make the following recommendations to their respective departments:

1. It is recommended that Canadian delegates attend the meeting of experts to prepare for a World Conference on Passports and Frontier Formalities which is to be held in Geneva on March 17th, 1947.

2. It is further recommended that Canada should adopt a policy favouring the reciprocal abolition of visas by bilateral agreement under the auspices of the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

3. It is further recommended that it be the condition precedent to entering into any visa abolition agreements that assurance be obtained that there will be enacted a suitable amendment of the deportation provisions of the Immigration Act and also an Act providing for the registration of aliens in Canada.

It has already been decided that a representative of the Department of External Affairs will attend the meeting of Experts. It is for the consideration of the departments concerned to decide whether they desire to have delegates present at this meeting or not. It was the feeling of the representatives present at the meeting Tuesday afternoon that it would be desirable to have an immigration officer attend the meeting if possible but that the other departments would probably not need to be represented until the world conference which will take place at a later date.

I am enclosing a draft of proposed instructions† for the use of the delegates at the meeting in March insofar as the matters of travel documents, visas, police and health matters are concerned. If you agree, I should appreciate receiving the approval of your department in order that final instructions may be prepared and forwarded to the delegates as soon as possible.

The representatives present at Tuesday afternoon's meeting felt it was desirable to obtain a Canadian statute with respect to the registration of aliens in Canada. I am, therefore, enclosing for your information and comments a memorandum setting forth the main provisions which such an act should contain. The proposed Registration of Aliens Act can of course only be considered for purposes of interdepartmental discussion until Cabinet has indicated whether the introduction of such a measure will be approved or not.

[L. B. PEARSON]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire de la direction diplomatique<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum by Diplomatic Division<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] December 13, 1946

PROPOSED REGISTRATION OF ALIENS ACT

This act should contain the following provisions:

1. All aliens (with the exception of United States citizens) must register at the port of entry. They will be given an admission card which must be surrendered on departure. This provision will not, of course, apply to British subjects.
2. Representatives of foreign governments will be exempted from the provisions of this Act. At the port of entry only a pro forma will be completed and an application must be made to the Department of External Affairs within 30 days of entry for a diplomatic or other identity card.
3. Aliens must report at regular intervals (e.g. monthly) to the nearest post office, immigration or police office for endorsement of the card given them on entry.
4. The offices mentioned in (3) will inform Immigration Branch of all endorsements.
5. Persons who have been granted visas will be included in the registration.
6. Immigrants will be included in the registration but after they have been granted a permanent landing reporting will be on an annual basis only.
7. A penalty should be provided for non-compliance with the terms of the Act. Non-compliance will also be a ground for deportation from Canada.

<sup>1</sup> De J. H. Cleveland.

<sup>1</sup> By J. H. Cleveland.

8. Special provisions should be made for short term visitors crossing the United States border.

9. The Minister may, in his discretion, exempt certain persons or groups of persons from the provisions of this Act.

PARTIE 7/PART 7

INSTITUTIONS SPÉCIALISÉES SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

SECTION A

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE DU TRAVAIL

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

567.

CH/Vol. 2105

Mémoire du conseiller,<sup>1</sup> la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, au représentant,<sup>2</sup> la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Memorandum from Adviser,<sup>1</sup> Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Representative,<sup>2</sup> Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[London,] January 11, 1946

RELATIONS OF THE I.L.O. WITH THE UNITED NATIONS

When the Prime Minister and Mr. Robertson were in London in October, just before the Labour Conference in Paris, I discussed with Mr. Robertson the position the Canadian Delegation should take in the Constitutional Committee at Paris. He felt then that the Constitutional Committee should tread most carefully in matters relating to the United Nations and his own view was that it would probably be better to defer discussion of the question, as he feared that an insistent and outspoken demand from the I.L.O. Conference for immediate association with the United Nations might damage, rather than help, the I.L.O.'s position. In a brief conversation which Mr. Robertson and I had with Mr. King, the impression I got from Mr. King was that he too felt that it was better to avoid the issue.

During the Conference Mr. Robertson came to Paris and I had a further conversation with him about the efforts which some of the Delegations at the Conference were making to induce the U.S.S.R. to look more favourably on the I.L.O. As a result of this conversation the following statement was drafted, in consultation with Mr. Robertson and later approved by him in a telephone conversation after he had returned to London. This statement was embodied in the address of the First Delegate, Mr. Gray Turgeon, in the Plenary Session:

<sup>1</sup> Alfred Rive.

<sup>2</sup> Paul Martin.

It is the earnest hope of the Canadian Government that the International Labour Organization will become universal. We should not, however, despair if universality is not achieved immediately. It should be remembered that a number of the staunchest of the present Members of the Organization remained outside for some years. Their absence, no doubt, limited the effectiveness of the Organization, but at no time was its existence imperilled. Let us, therefore, carry on with the work of the Organization so far as we are able, confident that if it is well and truly done, our place with the United Nations will be assured by the work we achieve, and that eventually the nations outside the Organization may be convinced by the practical demonstration of the value of our work that their absence from our councils is their loss. Let us take our decision in all matters with regard only to their effect on the achievements of the Organization in its proper field, and not with the idea that we must secure more Members at any cost.

You will note also that the statement implies that the I.L.O. should not press its case for immediate tying-in with the United Nations in the statement—"Our place with the United Nations will be assured by the work we achieve."

Since the Conference I have had further discussions with a number of people both in the Secretariat of the I.L.O. and members of national Delegations. While opinion is divided, it is safe to say that the majority feel that it would be better, if possible, to avoid the issue of the association of the I.L.O. with the United Nations Organization at this time. The reasons officially given for this are that the I.L.O. has first to become an independent organization, that is to complete its severance from the League, and has to achieve the right to amend its own constitution. This means waiting until the Instrument of Amendment, approved by the Conference and now before Governments, has been ratified, and, presumably, until after the meeting of the League Assembly.

My impression is that the result of the decision of the United Nations to put the Headquarters in the Eastern United States has strengthened the views of those who think that the I.L.O. should not press its case before the United Nations at this time. They feel that, with the Headquarters at Montreal, they are favourably located to keep in touch in an informal way with what is going on in the Assemblies, Committee Meetings and Secretariat of the United Nations, and to bide their time.

I think I should add that many people seem to feel that the strongest argument against pressing the I.L.O. case at this time—one which cannot be used publicly—is that the Acting Director, Mr. Phelan, is understood to be very much out of favour with the Soviet Government, and that the first step to negotiations with the United Nations and eventually to securing Russian adherence to the I.L.O., must be the selection of a Director who is likely to have the confidence of the Soviet Union.

I have passed copies of this memorandum to Mr. Wilgress and Mr. Rasminsky, and I attach two extra copies in case you wish to pass one to Mr. St. Laurent.

568.

DL/8-2-3-29

Le directeur de l'information, le ministère du Travail, au sous-ministre du Travail

Director of Information, Department of Labour, to Deputy Minister of Labour

Ottawa, January 21, 1946

SUBJECT: CONFERENCE OF THE I.L.O. IN MONTREAL, 1946

As you are aware, the next I.L.O. Conference will be held in Montreal in September, 1946.

Decision was taken on the place of meeting at the Governing Body meeting following the Paris Conference. It was obvious that the Office, as well as most of the members of the Governing Body, wanted to hold the next meeting at Montreal: I think one consideration was the particular difficulties in regard to accommodation for this convention in Europe, while the fact that previous Conferences had been held in the U.S.A. rather ruled out that country.

Mr. Alfred Rive, as your alternate on the Governing Body spoke on the subject before the decision was taken. Mr. Rive had precise instructions from our own department, and following these instructions he told the Governing Body (in effect) that if the decision was to come to Montreal, Canada would be glad to welcome the meeting. Perhaps as a matter of convenience this was interpreted as an invitation from the Government of Canada—but there was no intention of issuing any such invitation in so far as External Affairs was concerned. Nevertheless, the Convention will be held in Montreal.

Even though the Canadian Government did not issue a formal invitation, and even though it is up to the Office to make arrangements for the meetings, the accommodation of those in attendance, and so forth, I suggest that the Government of Canada should play some part in making the arrangements, and should provide something in the way of entertainment.

I would suggest that it is not too early to move in this matter, and that appropriately the Labour Department might set up a committee to go into the question. I think the committee should include membership from External Affairs and possibly from the Tourists' Bureau. Perhaps also one member from the Canadian Information Service, to look after publicity, would not be out of the way. It does not occur to me at the moment that any other Dominion Government Department should be represented.

Whether such a committee should be made by Order-in-Council, or whether it could be set up simply on the motion of the Minister of Labour, is a matter to be decided. I should not think an Order-in-Council necessary.

The committee could first of all study what has been the custom in the matter of entertaining groups such as this when they meet in Canada; what has been the custom in regard to entertainment of the I.L.O. by host-governments; and by conferring with the International Labour Office, in what area should any assistance given by Canada properly lie.

While it would not really be a matter for the above-mentioned committee to deal with, I suggest that steps should be taken to ensure that the Minister of Labour would be elected chairman of the Conference: this is a usual practice in these matters, and was followed in Paris when the Minister of Labour for France was elected Conference Chairman.

I should be very glad to give any assistance in connection with the above, which may be possible.

V. C. PHELAN

569.

DL/8-2-3-29

Mémorandum du directeur des relations industrielles, le ministère du Travail, au sous-ministre du Travail

Memorandum from Director of Industrial Relations, Department of Labour, to Deputy Minister of Labour

Ottawa, February 2, 1946

With reference to the attached, I agree that the Department might take some action along the lines suggested by Mr. Phelan in his memorandum to you of January 21.

I realize that during the war years the Department had been too much immersed in other activities to pay much attention to I.L.O. affairs, but I think that probably the time has come when the Department of Labour should not allow the External Affairs Department to take the lead in all matters affecting our membership in the I.L.O. This would be a good opportunity to make a start in that direction, and I suggest that either yourself or one or two of the senior officers of the Department might confer with I.L.O. officers on the matters brought forward by Mr. Phelan. After this preliminary conference was held, we would be in a better position then to make the necessary plans.

Certainly I think we should give I.L.O. officers every assistance and support in making arrangements for the general conference next September, and otherwise add to our reputation as good hosts to foreign delegations.

It would also be proper, I think, that we should take steps to see that our own Minister is properly honoured by the Conference by election either as Conference Chairman or Honorary Chairman, the latter being suggested in the event that the Minister himself does not wish to be continuously in attendance.

M. M. MACLEAN

570.

DEA/74-Q-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures à la direction juridique

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Legal Division

[Ottawa,] August 17, 1946

In the absence of Mr. Renaud I am addressing this note to the Legal Division, but if he is to return in the near future, it might be forwarded to him. The attached communication from the Department of Labour<sup>1</sup> covers a proposal of the French Government for an important structural change in the I.L.O. The purpose of the change is to give equal voting power in the International Labour Conference and in the Governing Body to the three groups of Government, employers' and workers' representatives. At present the Government representatives have equal voting power with the employers and workers combined.

This is a drastic proposal, but perhaps not as drastic as it may appear at first sight. I doubt if there has ever been a case of any importance in which the employers and workers groups have voted together against the Government group. Both these groups normally vote solidly, whereas the Government group is frequently split and is likely to be still more frequently in the future. As I recall the I.L.O. Constitution, a majority of two-thirds is needed for important decisions, and I should think the adoption of the French scheme would be more likely to produce deadlock than to result in decisions which a majority of Governments were unwilling to accept.

It is, however, a matter on which our delegation to the Labour Conference should be instructed, and these instructions should have the endorsement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if not of the Cabinet as a whole. We should probably try to find out what some of the other Governments intend to do about this proposal. I am not, however, familiar with the recent discussions on the subject, and it may be that information on this last point is already available.

I think that in any case a note should be prepared for consideration, indicating the appropriate instructions to be given to the Canadian representatives.

H. W[RONG]

<sup>1</sup> Non trouvé.

<sup>1</sup> Not located.

571.

DEA/74-Q-40

Mémorandum de la direction juridiqueMemorandum by Legal Division

[Ottawa,] August 30, 1946

29TH INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

1. Telegrams have been received from the United Kingdom Government (Circular D.802 and 803 of August 28, 1946)† advising that they are strongly opposed to the French proposals of amendment to the Constitution of the International Labour Organization to be discussed at the forthcoming International Labour Conference, and asking for the views of the Canadian Government on the matter.

2. The French proposals are:

(a) that, as regards the General Conference of the Organization, States members should no longer be represented by four delegates, including two Government representatives, one employers' and one workers' representative, but by two delegates of each category, and further that one of the employers' delegates should be selected from among managers of nationalized or municipal undertakings where such undertakings exist; and

(b) that, as regards the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, which consists of 16 Government, 8 employers' and 8 workers' members, employers' and workers' members should have two votes each.

3. These proposals, as originally submitted by the Belgian Government, in a slightly modified form, have already been discussed by the International Labour Conference at its 27th Session held in Paris last year, and by a Delegation of the Conference which met in London in January, 1945.

The Belgian delegate, supported by the delegate of France, argued that the world had changed greatly since 1919, and representation at I.L.O. meetings should correspond to the economic structure of the country concerned. The solidarity of the Big Five was the only basis on which world peace could be maintained, and the I.L.O. must adapt itself to the changed circumstances in order to secure Big Five solidarity in support of its activities.

With the exception of the French Government representative and Mr. Joubaux, the French workers' delegate, who was absent, the Conference Delegation on Constitutional matters, to which the matter was referred for consideration, was unanimously against the proposals. They considered "that the modification of the system of representation in the Organisation on the basis of the proposals made at the Paris Session of the Conference would be seriously prejudicial to the unity and effectiveness of the Organisation without affording any guarantee of the active participation in the Organisation of all members of the United Nations or of all sections of the labour movement in all Member States. They would regard any change in the present proportions of representation as gravely impairing the authority of the Organisation by diminishing the influence of Governments in its deliberations and decisions, and they consider that it is no less true today than it was in 1919 that if the relative voting power of the Governments were to be reduced 'it might often happen that Conventions adopted by a two-thirds majority of the Conference would be rejected by the legislatures of the various States, which would have the effect of rendering the proceedings of the Conference nugatory and would quickly destroy its influence and prestige.' They also considered that such a change would weaken rather than strengthen the Organisation in its relations with other international institutions."

4. The main reasons for which the United Kingdom Government are opposed to the French proposals may be summed up as follows:

(a) The adoption of the French proposals would enable conventions and recommendations to be passed against the combined votes of all the Governments, which have the ultimate responsibility for their implementation.

(b) It would encourage the Conference to adopt conventions and recommendations of an impracticable nature, which would be rejected by national legislatures, with the result that the Conference will fall into disrepute.

(c) Government representatives might be outvoted on financial matters by parties which have no responsibility for raising the money or for accounting to the taxpayers who provided the funds.

5. As regards paragraph 4, point (a) of the present memorandum, it should be recalled that, under the I.L.O. Constitution, once a draft Convention is adopted by the Conference, States members are bound to submit its text to their legislature, and if the text is approved by the legislature, necessarily to execute and deposit the instrument of ratification.

It should also be recalled that the I.L.O. Constitution may be revised by a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast by the delegates present at the Conference and that the amendments take effect when ratified by the States whose representatives compose the Council of the League of Nations and by three-fourths of the Members.

6. As regards paragraph 4, point (c), it should be pointed out that the financial regulations as adopted by the Governing Body of the I.L.O. at its last session, subject to ratification by the Conference, provide that the annual budget of the Organisation shall be finally adopted by a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast by the delegates present at the Conference.

7. It may be feared that the selection of a second employers' and workers' delegate would lead to great difficulties in certain countries such as Canada, in view of the composite nature of the population, the mixed organisation of labour and the division into states or provinces.

Referring to this aspect of the matter, the Conference Delegation on Constitutional Questions states in its report:

Both Government and Worker as well as Employer members of the Delegation felt that the Belgian proposals in regard to the representation of socialised management in countries with mixed economies anticipated rather than reflected the trends of development in the world as a whole, and so far from recognising facts and setting the International Labour Organisation above conflicts of ideology, their adoption would involve espousing theories and provoking an ideological conflict which would create a profound division of opinion within the Organisation... If a separate delegate (were given) to socialised management... one of two results would inevitably follow: either Governments would in practice get an additional vote, in which case the equilibrium between the employers and workers which was the only basis on which they could be expected to negotiate with each other in the Conference would be destroyed; or they would not in practice get an additional vote, in which case their position in relation to the other two groups would be weakened.

The proposal that the number of Workers' delegates should be increased in order to allow representation for minority labour movements was regarded by the majority of the Delegations as based upon a misconception and calculated to place a premium on labour disunity throughout the world... It is not uncommon for there to be two or more organisations in a country representing workers or employers, and the rivalry between them is frequently acute and sometimes bitter. To establish a reward for minority trade union movements in the form of representation at the Conference would tend to encourage minority movements. This would be a great disservice to both labour and the community. There were further dangers. If national contending parties were brought into the I.L.O. on the basis of separate representation, the I.L.O. would become a forum for national battles on national problems, and domestic differences would be projected into the international sphere and hardened in a manner destructive of national unity and labour unity alike. The participation in committee work of rival workers' delegates from each country, each with his separate group of advisers, would impair the unity of the workers' group, thereby both weakening its voting strength in the Conference and increasing the difficulty of negotiating compromise solutions of controversial questions. The doubling of representation would also make the whole machinery of the Conference unwieldy.

8. It is suggested that the United Kingdom Government be advised that their views as expressed in their telegrams under reference are shared by the Canadian Government, and that the Canadian Government delegation will be instructed accordingly.<sup>1</sup>

P.-E. RENAUD

572.

DL/8-2-3-29

Le ministre du Commerce et de l'Industrie de l'Alberta au ministre du Travail

Minister of Trade and Industry of Alberta to Minister of Labour

Edmonton, September 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Mitchell,

ILO CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS—29TH SESSION OF THE I.L. CONFERENCE, MONTREAL, SEPTEMBER 19 TO OCTOBER 12

The Alberta Provincial Government has given consideration to the proposed amendment to Article 19 of the constitution of the above organization as you requested us to do in your letter of August 13, 1946, so that the views of this Province can be ascertained in the submission of the Delegation of the Dominion Government to the September Conference of the I.L.O.

<sup>1</sup> La proposition française fut retirée avant de passer à un vote.

<sup>1</sup> The French proposal was withdrawn before it came to a vote.

We are at a loss to understand why the Dominion Government should seek to bind the Provinces in an International Agreement in matters over which the Dominion Government has no jurisdiction under the British North America Act.

We would be most willing and ready to receive from the Dominion Government or other interested bodies any recommendations regarding matters pertaining to the moral, physical or intellectual well being of wage earners at any time, with a view to uniformly high standards for Labour. Our present legislation and regulations bear testimony to that. Never-the-less the constitutional responsibility of accepting or rejecting any such recommendations belongs to the Province and cannot be assigned to the Dominion Government.

While we have no objections whatever to you reporting, as a member state, to the I.L.O. our Provincial laws and practices relating to labour whether they are related to a Convention or a Recommendation of the I.L.O. or not, we do object to the ratification by the Dominion Government of I.L.O. Conventions that are within the exclusive jurisdiction of this Province before the Provincial Legislature has passed the appropriate legislation.

Particularly do we object to the Dominion ratifying a Convention on a matter lying within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Province if the later modification by the Province of any legislation so ratified by the Dominion could bring economic sanctions against the Dominion of Canada or the Province.

There is another aspect of this delegation of Dominion autonomy to international organizations given the power to invoke sanctions upon which the Government of Alberta holds very definite views which should be expressed at this time.

We deplore the trend whereby the Dominion Government is gradually sacrificing Canadian sovereignty to international organizations. If the Dominion Government has deprived itself of a measure of sovereignty by assigning it to international authorities it should not try to recoup its position by assuming in whole or in part jurisdiction over matters that were granted exclusively to the Provinces under the British North America Act.

We cannot agree to sacrifice the general high standards and welfare of the labouring class of this Province to any international organization.

Finally we again protest most vigorously the consistent and persistent efforts of the Dominion Government in endeavouring to encroach on the field of jurisdiction of the Provinces and appropriate piecemeal the powers of the provinces. Premier Manning has recommended more than once at the recent Dominion-Provincial Conference a comprehensive review of the powers of both the Dominion and the Provinces in order to enable both to discharge more effectively the responsibilities imposed upon them. We still feel this is the only way that the Dominion and the Provinces can best adjust the problems of modern days.

We understand that the Dominion Government has already ratified a certain number of Conventions passed by the I.L.O. If this is the case, we would appreciate receiving a copy of the Conventions so ratified.

Yours truly,

C. E. GERHART

573.

PCO/U-41-D

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au greffier du Conseil privé*

Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Clerk of the Privy Council

Ottawa, September 17, 1946

I have doubts about the need and the wisdom of our making this extra contribution to the I.L.O. I understand from Mr. Renaud that in putting it forward the I.L.O. stated that the United States Government and the French Government had made special contributions as the host countries toward the expenses incurred in holding the last two International Conferences in Philadelphia and Paris respectively. I think too that the Mexican Government, the Cuban Government and the Chilean Government made some special contributions when regional American labour conferences were held in their capitals during the past ten years. There is, therefore, precedent for the host country taking action of this sort.

Nevertheless there are some reasons against our following these precedents. First, the I.L.O. has had its temporary headquarters in Montreal for over five years and is holding the Conference at the seat of its current activities. The suggestion that the Conference should be held there came from the I.L.O. and not from the Canadian Government; whereas in most of the other cases cited I recall that there was competitive bidding between various countries to secure the holding of the Conference. Secondly, Canada already makes an unduly large contribution proportionately to the finances of the I.L.O. and, in particular, because the United States is under-assessed (at 108 units) in comparison with the Canadian assessment of 35 units. We are also one of a fairly short list of member countries which have supported the I.L.O. financially steadily since its inception, always paying our contribution in full and on time.

I am, therefore, inclined to think that the expenses of converting space in the University of Montreal so as to equip it for a conference hall is a charge that can appropriately be made from the general funds of the I.L.O. If they have not budgeted for this charge it is their own fault as it was settled long ago that the Conference would take place in Canada.

H. W[RONG]

574.

DL/8-2-3-29

Mémorandum du ministre du Travail au Cabinet
Memorandum from Minister of Labour to Cabinet

[Ottawa,] September 19, 1946

RE: PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 19(9) OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION DEALING WITH THE APPLICATION BY FEDERAL STATES OF CONVENTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS ADOPTED BY THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

1. The Constitution of the I.L.O. requires every member thereof to submit all Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference for consideration "to the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for enactment of legislation or other action".

In the case of a Convention the member State is, if it obtains the consent of the competent authority, further required to communicate the formal ratification of the Convention to the I.L.O. and to take such action as may be necessary to make its provisions effective.

On the other hand, a Recommendation is simply designed to place before the competent authority or authorities in the member countries a recommendation of principles on a subject matter which is considered incapable of being reduced to any universal and uniform mode of application by the different countries. Such recommendations leave the member States freedom to consider and apply them in the manner as suited to their conditions and do not involve ratification.

2. The practical difficulties involved in the ratification of Conventions by federal States whose power to enter into Conventions is subject to limitations, was recognized and met by the following provision in the Constitution as set forth in the Treaties of Peace in 1919 (see Section 19(9)):

In the case of a federal State, the power of which to enter into Conventions on labour matters is subject to limitations, it shall be the discretion of that Government to treat a draft Convention to which such limitations apply as a Recommendation only, and the provisions of this Article with respect to Recommendations shall apply in such case.

3. The Canadian Government practice, in the case of Conventions which are within provincial jurisdiction to give legislative effect to, has been to forward such Conventions to the Government of the Province for action or otherwise, and to report to the I.L.O. from time to time with respect to the action taken.

4. Unitary member States have been dissatisfied with this provision and have considered that a federal State should assume greater responsibilities, with a view to the ratification and implementation of Conventions which are within the legislative competence of its component provinces or states.

5. The matter was discussed at the 1945 Session of the I.L.O. but no recommendations were made, pending a conference which it suggested should be held between representatives of the I.L.O. and representatives of the federal member States. A Committee of the Governing Body was accordingly appointed to consider the matter and a meeting was held in Montreal in May last at which representatives of the federal member States were present by invitation, including Australia, Canada, India and the United States.

In the result, the Committee of the Governing Body dealing with the matter have submitted for discussion and consideration by the International Labour Conference opening in Montreal on September 19th, an Amendment to Article 19(9) which would require the federal member States to make effective arrangements to ensure that Conventions and Recommendations which are within provincial or local state competence to deal with are brought before the appropriate provincial authorities (i.e. legislative) within eighteen months; to arrange for periodical consultations between the Dominion and the Provinces to provide co-ordinated action with respect to Conventions and Recommendations; to report to the I.L.O. on the action taken; to report to the I.L.O., where Conventions are not ratified, on the law and practice in Canada in regard to the Convention; and, as requested, to report to the I.L.O. in regard to any Recommendation which is given effect to, or the law and practice on the subject of the Recommendation.

6. The text of the proposed Amendment, summarized above, is as follows:

In the case of a federal State, the provisions of this Article shall apply subject to the following modifications:

(a) In respect of Conventions and Recommendations which the federal Government regards as appropriate for federal action, the obligations of the federal State shall be the same as those of Members which are not federal States;

(b) In respect of Conventions and Recommendations which the federal Government regards as appropriate, in whole or in part, for action by the constituent States or Provinces rather than for federal action, the federal Government shall

(i) make, in accordance with its Constitution and the Constitutions of the States or provinces concerned effective arrangements for the reference of such Conventions and Recommendations not later than eighteen months from the closing of the session of the Conference to the appropriate authorities of the States or provinces for the enactment of legislation or other action;

(ii) arrange, subject to the concurrence of the State or provincial Governments concerned, for periodical consultations between the federal and the State or provincial authorities with a view to promoting within the federal State co-ordinated action to give effect to the provisions of such Conventions and Recommendations;

(iii) inform the Director of the International Labour Office of the measures taken in accordance with this Article to bring such Conventions and Recommendations before the appropriate authorities of its constituent States or provinces with particulars of the authorities regarded as appropriate and of the action taken by them;

(iv) In respect of each such Convention which it has not ratified, report to the Director of the International Labour Office, at appropriate intervals as requested by the Governing Body, the position of its law and practice in regard to the Convention, showing the extent to which effect has been given, or is proposed to be given, to any of the provisions of the Convention by legislation, administrative action, collective agreement, or otherwise;

(v) In respect of each such Recommendation, report to the Director of the International Labour Office, at appropriate intervals as requested by the Governing Body, the position of the law and practice of the various States or provinces in regard to the Recommendation, showing the extent to which effect has been given, or is proposed to be given, to the provisions of the Recommendation and such modifications of these provisions as have been found or may be found necessary in adopting or applying them.

7. Representatives of the United States at the meeting in Montreal in May last were favourably disposed towards the substance of the proposed Amendment, and representatives from Australia did not believe that the proposed Amendment would be objected to by Australia.

8. This Recommendation was referred to the Provincial Governments on August 13th and replies were received from all provinces approving acceptance except in the case of Prince Edward Island, which expressed no opinion, and Alberta. Alberta set out some objections which are apparently based on a misunderstanding of the effect of the change and indicated the difficulty of provinces committing themselves irrevocably to an international standard ratified by the Dominion.

9. RECOMMENDATION.

It is recommended that the Canadian Delegation to the 29th Session of the International Labour Conference, which opens in Montreal on September 19th, be instructed to agree to the proposals contained in the draft Amendment.<sup>1</sup> 575.

PCO/U-41-D

Le sous-ministre du Travail au secrétaire du Cabinet

Deputy Minister of Labour to Secretary to the Cabinet

Ottawa, September 20, 1946

Dear Mr. Heeney,

With reference to your letter of September 19† and the attached communication from Mr. Wrong.

At the time the Recommendation to Council was submitted we did not know that Mr. Wrong was not in favour and, as a matter of fact, my information was to the effect that he favoured the idea. After the Recommendation was signed I learned that Mr. Wrong held an unfavourable view. I spoke to my Minister about it and he was very strongly in favour of making the grant.

The reasons advanced are, briefly, as under:

1. As stated by Mr. Wrong there are many precedents for the host country taking action of this sort. The probabilities are that this will be the last occasion for a long period of time when Canada will act as the hosting Government;

<sup>1</sup> L'approbation du Cabinet fut donnée le 2 octobre 1946.

<sup>1</sup> Cabinet approval was given on October 2, 1946.

2. I am not too sure that Honourable Mr. Martin did not invite the I.L.O. to hold the conference in Ottawa. I was told that such is the case although I cannot quote time and place.

3. On the question of regular contributions being made by Canada, I do feel that the smaller countries are probably bearing too large a share but we have made moves to have this corrected.

4. During the two days I attended the meetings of the Governing Body at Montreal I found that Canada stood extremely high amongst the nations attending the conference. I would think it might be inadvisable to refuse this contribution under the circumstances.

5. In using Montreal University for the conference special desks and other facilities had to be erected and put in the conference hall and the expense was quite great. I should think if a request had been made by the I.L.O. that the necessary structural alterations be made by the Canadian Government the request might have been looked upon favourably. The contribution we have proposed is only about one-half the expense.

6. The cost of the conference has been budgeted. However, the structural alterations to Montreal University were not anticipated and one can understand why such is the case.

I am sure the Minister would like to see this Recommendation put through and I am still of the opinion that it should be agreed to for the reasons I have stated.<sup>1</sup>

Yours very truly,

A. MACNAMARA

576.

DEA/74-Q-40

Mémoire de la direction juridique au chef, la direction juridique

Memorandum from Legal Division to Head, Legal Division

[Ottawa,] October 1, 1946

CONSTITUTION

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

Mr. Renaud asked me to bring to the Department's attention his views on the proposed amendment to Article VII (3) of the Constitution which deals with the declaration of the Governing Body as to which are the members of the Organization of chief industrial importance.

<sup>1</sup> M. Wrong a retiré ses objections avant que le Cabinet ne donne son approbation.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Wrong withdrew his objections before the Cabinet gave its approval.

Mr. Renaud recommended that the Canadian delegation support the amendment but felt that there should be an appeal to the Conference from this declaration. This suggestion from Mr. Renaud did not at first receive the support of the Department of Labour but, according to a copy of a telegram which Mr. MacNamara sent to Mr. Renaud (attached) † dated the 26th September, the Department of Labour now suggests that this amendment be placed before the committee for consideration. Mr. Renaud also told me that the Legal Adviser of the International Labour Organization was anxious that his suggestion receive consideration.<sup>1</sup> 577.

H. F. D[AVIS]

DL/8-2-3-29

*Le secrétaire, la délégation à la Conférence internationale du Travail,<sup>2</sup>
au délégué,<sup>3</sup> la délégation à la Conférence internationale du Travail*

Secretary, Delegation to the International Labour Conference,<sup>2</sup> to Delegate,<sup>3</sup> Delegation to the International Labour Conference

[Montreal,] October 5, 1946

The attached speech was delivered by Mr. Renaud this afternoon in the Constitutional Committee. After Mr. Renaud spoke, Mexico and Australia withdrew their amendments in favour of the Canadian amendments, which was then unanimously adopted.

JOHN MAINWARING

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Discours du délégué suppléant,<sup>4</sup> la délégation à la Conférence internationale du Travail

Speech by Alternate Delegate,<sup>4</sup> Delegation to the International Labour Conference

ON ARTICLE 7(3)

Mr. Chairman,

I have the honour to move that a proviso be added to the Conference Delegation's proposal. The English and Spanish texts of the proviso will be found in document D.18, and the French Text as revised in document D.18A.

<sup>1</sup> Les notes suivantes étaient écrites sur ce mémorandum:

Mr. Wrong.

Herewith Report II (1) Constitutional questions with the suggested amendment flagged. Also copy of Renaud's amendment. H. F. D[AVIS] 3rd Oct.

I haven't seen the text of the amendment and so cannot form any opinion.

H. W[RONG]

<sup>2</sup> Vingt-neuvième session.

<sup>3</sup> A. MacNamara.

<sup>4</sup> P. E. Renaud.

<sup>1</sup> The following notes were written on the memorandum:

<sup>2</sup> Twenty-ninth session.

It is the Canadian Delegation's view that, under the existing Constitution, the Conference, and not the Governing Body, is the competent organ to determine the States Members which are of chief industrial importance.

This view, based on both legal and historical grounds, was presented to the Governing Body by the Canadian Government member, on the 31st January 1934. When the Canadian member resumed his seat, the Director acknowledged that the speaker had put forward arguments the force of which, he, the Director, fully recognised.

The Canadian delegate first observed,—and his observation remained unchallenged,—that no provision could be found in the Constitution authorizing the Governing Body to fix the list of States Members of chief industrial importance. That it was so, Mr. Oersted expressly conceded.

The Canadian delegate further pointed out that, under Article 7 of the Constitution, which lays down the composition of the Governing Body, the members of each group in the Governing Body were to be selected by their respective groups as constituted in the Conference,—that is, the Government members by the Government group, the Employers' members by the Employers' group, and the Workers' members by the Workers' group. The letter and spirit of Article 7 were unequivocally to the effect that each group, including the Government group, should determine its own representation. This was a natural consequence and condition of the tripartite character of the Organization.

After analysing the Constitution, the Canadian delegate went on to review the interpretation thereof as given by the highest authorities. He first recalled the advisory opinion of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, as set forth in a report to the Council dated 26th June 1922. This report was drawn up after extensive consultation. Among those consulted were Mr. Anzilotti, judge of the Permanent Court of International Justice, Mr. McKinnon Wood, Legal Adviser of the League Secretariat, Mr. Arthur Fontaine, chairman of the Governing Body, and Mr. Jouhaux. In his report the Secretary-General set out that "the first step in the procedure (for the renewal of the Governing Body) must be the recognition by the Conference of a list of the eight Members of chief industrial importance".

The Canadian delegate further recalled the interpretation given by the Council of the League of Nations. This was set forth in Viscount Ishii's report adopted by the Council on the 30th September 1922. This report emphatically stated that "the duty of drawing up the list of eight chief industrial countries was primarily the function of the International Labour Conference".

Examining the question from the historical angle, the Canadian representative reminded the Governing Body that the first list of eight States Members of chief industrial importance, which was submitted to the Washington Labour Conference of 1919 by the Organising Committee at a time when the Governing Body did not yet exist, was definitely fixed by the Conference itself. Commenting upon this observation, Mr. Jouhaux remarked: "The fact exists, and it can certainly be contended that the action of the Conference proves in a certain measure that it is the International Labour Conference which is competent to decide the question.”

The Canadian representative finally recalled that in 1922, when the first list of the eight States Members of chief industrial importance was revised, the Governing Body proposed an amendment to the Conference which, if adopted, would have had the effect of changing the basis of the list. The proposed amendment was rejected, and it was important to observe that, on this occasion, the Governing Body did not adopt the changes itself, but only recommended their adoption to the Conference.

This was the only occasion, at the time the Canadian delegate spoke, on which the Governing Body could have been said to have taken any action in the matter of the eight States Members of chief industrial importance, and, on this occasion, it has not assumed the power of revising alone the list of eight States.

In 1934, it is true, the Governing Body assumed that power. But, when the Legal Adviser of the Office was asked to justify that assumption, he referred, in a note on the legal situation dated 17 January 1934, to the resolution adopted by the International Labour Conference on 22nd June 1934 [sic], which states that, in the event of a named Government accepting membership of the Organisation, the Governing Body was authorized to arrange with that Government any question arising out of its membership. This resolution could be regarded as an ad hoc delegation of power to meet a quite exceptional case. That it is so, is confirmed by the Conference Delegation, which states in its Report, paragraph 27, that it is “upon a de facto basis” that the Governing Body in the subsequent cases, exercised the power of determining the members of chief industrial importance.

Should any doubt remain as to the paramount competence of the Conference to deal with the matter of the eight States, it should be removed by the examination of the amendments standing before us. It is obvious that their authors consider that the Conference, as sovereign organ of the Organisation, is absolutely free to decide that it belongs to itself as well as to the Governing Body, or to both, to determine the eight States Members of chief industrial importance.

But this Committee is not a court which has to decide what the law is. It is a constituent assembly which has to declare what the law should be. The Canadian Delegation, for reasons of convenience and in a spirit of cooperation is prepared to vote for the text of Article 7 paragraph 3 as proposed by the Conference Delegation on Constitutional Questions, subject, however, to a proviso, namely: that, “Any appeal from the declaration of the Governing Body as to which are the Members of chief industrial importance shall be decided by the Conference”, and on the understanding that “an appeal to the Conference shall not suspend the application of the declaration.

This proviso will have the effect of maintaining, mutatis mutandis, the right of appeal provided for in the existing paragraph 3 of Article 7, right of appeal which was exercised by India and Poland in 1920-1922. The second part of the Canadian Delegation's amendment, namely the words "but an appeal to the Conference shall not suspend the application of the declaration", is borrowed from a Report on the matter adopted by the Governing Body on the 31st January 1934.

The object of the Canadian amendment is first to prevent that the Governing Body be open to the criticism of constituting itself in a closed corporation pretending to exercise, without any control whatsoever the major privilege of deciding as to which are its permanent members, when, under the existing Article 7, it cannot decide upon such minor questions as the method of filling vacancies and of appointing substitutes but "subject to the approval of the Conference."

The object of the Canadian amendment is secondly to prevent that some forty Government delegates to the Conference be denied their birthright to decide on the permanent representation of their own group on the Governing Body, when the eight Employers and eight Workers sitting on the Governing Body lay claim to assume that right. Are Governments thus to abandon lightly a prerogative based on the very tripartite nature of the Organisation? Do not the Employers and Workers see that, by derogating to the firmly established principle that each group select its own representatives, they create a precedent which may one day be turned against them?

The object of the Canadian amendment is finally and above all to assure the respect of a principle inserted in paragraph 2 of Article 7 by the Peace Conference of 1919, and reaffirmed by the Council of the League of Nations and the International Labour Conference in 1922, and again by the Conference Delegation in 1946.

It will be remembered that when, at the Peace Conference of 1919, the original draft of the constitution of the International Labour Organisation was submitted to the Commission on International Labour Legislation, this draft laid down that five members of the Governing Body were to be selected by the Governments of the five Great Powers, which were mentioned by name. That clause gave rise to strong objection on the part of Mr. Vandervelde, of Belgium, who was anxious that Germany should one day be included among the so-called permanent members of the Governing Body and also to retain a seat for Belgium. The result of the incident was the inscription in the Constitution of the Organisation of the Principle that the perpetual privilege of sitting in the Governing Body shall belong to States Members of chief industrial importance.

In 1922 the Council of the League of Nations, which had been called upon to consider claims made to it by India and Poland, adopted a report accepting that criterion of industrial importance, and giving an authoritative interpretation thereof.

In the same year 1922, the Governing Body submitted an amendment to the 1922 International Labour Conference in which it was recommended that the five Great Powers then on the Council of the League, as well as the United States of America, should be substituted for the eight States of chief industrial importance. That amendment was opposed by the Canadian Delegation, then led by the Honourable Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice. The Canadian Delegation urged that no seat should be allocated forever to any State, irrespective of its industrial importance, and that the principle sanctioned by Article 7 of the Constitution that all countries, not only those ranking as Great Powers, should have an opportunity to fill the named seats, should be maintained. The Canadian Delegation was supported by the Indian Delegation. When the vote was taken, the amendment proposed by the Governing Body was overwhelmingly rejected by 62 votes to 8.

For all these reasons, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Delegation, jealous of the prerogative of the Government group and respectful of the Constitution, has the honour to move the adoption of the amendment submitted on its behalf.

This amendment being of the nature of a compromise between the Conference Delegation's proposal on the one hand, and the Australian and the Mexican proposals on the other, should meet with unanimous approval.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

ARTICLE 7 (3)

Text of the Constitution

Any question as to which are the Members of chief industrial importance shall be decided by the Council of the League of Nations.

Text of Amendment Proposed by Working Party

The Governing Body shall as occasion requires determine which are the Members of the Organization of chief industrial importance and shall make rules to ensure that all questions relating to the selection of the Members of chief industrial importance are impartially considered by a committee before being decided by the Governing Body.

SECTION B

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE DES RÉFUGIÉS

INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

578.

CH/Vol. 2103

*Mémoire du secrétaire adjoint, la délégation
à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

Memorandum from Assistant Secretary, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL

London, January 28, 1946

REFUGEES PROBLEM—UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On January 25th I had a telephone conversation with Mr. F. E. Cumming-Bruce of the Dominions Office about the U.K. proposal on refugees now before the General Assembly. Mr. Cumming-Bruce had suggested in a letter† several days before that a meeting of Commonwealth representatives on this issue might be useful. I told Mr. Cumming-Bruce that we would support a Commission on Refugees under the Economic and Social Council and failing that a specialized agency. I also outlined to him the situation described in Mr. Robertson's letter of January 14th to Mr. Rive.† I suggested that because Canada would not admit many refugees in the near future, we would not play a prominent part in the discussion of this matter in the General Assembly.

579.

DEA/5475-T-40

*Mémorandum de la deuxième direction politique au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Second Political Division to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa,] May 20, 1946

In the meetings of the Committee on Refugees, the U.K. delegation, in this respect under the leadership of Sir George Rendel, has held out very strongly for the establishment of a refugee organization as a Commission of the Assembly. As you know, we supported them on this question up to the first decisive vote, and thereupon took the line that, for the purposes of this conference at least, the issue was settled. The U.K., however, have continued the fight, through subcommittees and sub-subcommittees and in long repetitive debates on motions, amendments and subamendments, finally reserving their position when the vote was recorded against them. Rendel's explanation of this action is that the U.K. regards the refugee question as of so difficult a character that decision in the proposed refugee organization must be constantly subject to reversal by the superior authority of the United Nations.

The policy of the United States delegation seems to be genuinely in favour of a close working arrangement between the new organization and the Economic and Social Council, provided that the autonomous character of the organization as a specialized agency is maintained. They have, however, become so apprehensive lest the United Kingdom find some means of reversing or betraying the decision on relations with the United Nations that they are determined to define the relationship as narrowly as possible. The United States gets full Latin American and Eastern European support on this point, and I am not quite clear what the U.K. hopes to gain by prolonging the struggle.

Sir George Rendel recently suggested privately that if they could not get a Commission of the Assembly, the U.K. might prefer complete separation of the new organization from the United Nations. This suggestion was made on the assumption that the Eastern European group would not contribute to the assistance of refugees, that they would therefore be excluded from the new organization, and that they ought also to be excluded from the possibility of indirect interference through the Economic and Social Council. This new line may be opened in the discussions at New York.

My own view is that it is worth trying to keep the U.S.S.R. and its neighbours in the new organization even though they contribute nothing but obstruction, because, as members, they will find it more difficult to denounce the refugee body as hostile and dangerous.<sup>1</sup> The Russians may, of course, be unwilling to accept our minimum terms on such questions as the definition of refugees, but is not yet clear that they will refuse entirely to cooperate.

The attached copy of telegram No. 1178† to Ottawa gives a summary of the issues between the eastern and western groups of powers at the Conference.

R. G. RIDDELL

580.

DEA/5475-T-40

*Le représentant, la délégation à la deuxième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Representative, Delegation to the Second Session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

New York, June 20, 1946

Dear Norman [Robertson],

As outlined on the telephone this afternoon, I think you should know that Gray Turgeon is doing a wonderful job on the Refugee Committee. He has been chairman for part of the time and has told me of a most interesting development which occurred yesterday.

When considering the financial proposals, which were advanced with the intention of providing funds to deal with the refugees, Russia, the Ukraine and Yugoslavia indicated that they were not prepared to go into this question now, and, in fact, were in favour of not even participating in the discussions. At this point, Canada explained why we were supporting the measures in principle and pointed out that what Russia was doing was Canada's original position, but that Canada appreciated that the problem of considering the financial proposals and the appointment of a committee therefor were matters requiring current consideration.

The result was that Russia and the Ukraine participated (although they fought against the U.S. position), even though Yugoslavia abstained and, in fact, appealed to Russia and the Ukraine not to participate. In other words,

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal note:

I agree. N. A. R[OBERTSON]

Russia and the Ukraine went against the wishes of Yugoslavia. Following this, the U.S. congratulated us on having not only saved the day but done so in spite of the fact that it was necessary to prevail on Russia and the Ukraine to depart from their usual eastern bloc stand.

Yours sincerely,

BROOKE CLAXTON

581.

CH/Vol. 2103

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au représentant au Comité des finances de l'Organisation internationale des réfugiés du Conseil économique et social

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Representative to the Committee on the Finances of the International Refugee Organization of the Economic and Social Council

SECRET

Ottawa, July 8, 1946

Dear Mr. [R. G.] Turgeon,

We are most grateful to you for consenting to represent Canada at the meeting of the Committee of Experts on the Finances of the International Refugee Organization which is currently meeting in London. I have had some hesitation in asking you to accept this responsibility, because I know that it will cause you considerable personal inconvenience and also because you have already given so much time and attention to the question of refugees during the past four months. You have now, however, made yourself so thoroughly familiar with the subject, and have won, in so remarkable a degree, the confidence of your colleagues on the committees which you have already attended, that I felt justified in asking you to give this further service.

The discussions on the finances of the International Refugee Organization will necessarily be of a technical and detailed nature. It is not possible, at this stage, to give you specific instructions, since we have had little indication as to the course which the discussions will take. In general, you should endeavour to see that financial responsibility is distributed amongst member nations on as equitable a basis as possible and that an effort is made to secure contributions from as many countries as possible. You should also endeavour to have the new Organization established on a reasonable and economic basis. In this connection I think you should keep in mind the current tendency in United Nations organizations to adopt administrative establishments which are elaborate and costly to a degree not fully justified by the needs of the situation.

Such estimates as are at present available indicate that for the first year of its operations, the International Refugee Organization will require a budget of between two and three hundred million dollars. It is not, at the moment, clear what proportion of this total should be accepted by the Canadian Government as its contribution. In general, however, I think you may assume that, if a reasonable budget is established, the Canadian Government will assume responsibility for a contribution which represents an equitable share of the total, provided that responsibility is assumed by a substantial group of other nations on a similarly equitable basis.

In regard to the scale of contributions, it would seem that allotments for operational expenditures based on a percentage of national income, as in the case of UNRRA, would be more acceptable for Canada than a straight percentage of the total budget on the United Nations scale. If possible, you should prevent the adoption of plans by which the Canadian contribution would be proportionately larger than that of the Great Powers on the one hand or the very small ones on the other.

In connection with operational expenditures, you may, if you feel that the circumstances make it appropriate, put forward the following suggestion. The main responsibility of the International Refugee Organization might be regarded as a three or five-year task during which both repatriation and resettlement should take place to the greatest extent possible. In order to encourage these objectives, plans might be adopted by which member governments would be permitted to subtract from their contribution to operational expenditure a per capita sum for each refugee and displaced person accepted either for repatriation or resettlement. If the cost of maintaining a refugee in camp is correctly estimated at approximately $300 a year, the sum to be subtracted might therefore be somewhere in the neighbourhood of six to nine hundred dollars per head for each person received.

A plan of this nature, for the encouragement of resettlement and repatriation should greatly assist the new Organization in accomplishing its main task, that is, the re-establishment of persons now in refugee camps in places where they may begin life again under more normal circumstances. The plan also might enable Eastern European countries and the smaller countries of Latin America to make contributions which would not be available except in this form. The proposal should also go some distance to meet the objections of the Eastern European governments to the fact that, in the existing arrangements, no financial encouragement is being given to persons who accept repatriation. Finally, the plan would have the advantage of transferring to the governments of reception the financing and management of schemes for group resettlement.

I understand that it is the purpose of the meeting of the Committee of Experts on Finance to prepare draft financial regulations and that these regulations will be included in the draft constitution which subsequently will be forwarded to Governments of the United Nations for their consideration. In these circumstances, no country which is represented on the Committee of Experts will be committed by the decisions which are taken there. I think, however, that you would be well-advised to communicate with this Department by cable through Canada House in connection with any general financial proposals which are being considered at the meetings of the Committee and concerning which you will be expected to express an opinion.

Let me thank you again for the generous spirit [in] which you have concurred in our request that you represent Canada at these meetings.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

582.

CH/Vol. 2105

Le conseiller du représentant au Comité des finances de l'Organisation internationale des réfugiés du Conseil économique et social à la deuxième direction politique

Adviser to the Representative to the Committee on the Finances of the International Refugee Organization of the Economic and Social Council to Second Political Division

London, July 24, 1946

Dear Gerry [Riddell],

You are no doubt aware that I have had the privilege of assisting Mr. Turgeon during the last week at the meetings of the Committee on Finances at the IRO. The final report of the Committee,† together with an explanatory Memorandum prepared by myself,† has already been forwarded to the Department, and I trust that the two read together will give an adequate picture of what took place at the meetings.

I was immediately impressed by the friendly atmosphere which prevailed at the Conference. It provided a sharp contrast to the meetings of the earlier Committee in May. There was no suggestion at any stage of "obstructionism" and on the whole the representatives from the Soviet Union and Poland were most co-operative. It is no doubt true that the fact that all the recommendations of the Committee are provisional and are to be reconsidered by the Economic and Social Council had much to do with the forestalling of prolonged debates on the contentious points which arose, but I do feel that some significance can be attached to the fact that the Committee was able to complete its work in the allotted time and without undue difficulty.

In my view, the matters which will provoke the most discussion at the Economic and Social Council will be basis of contributions to the expenses of large scale resettlement and the basis upon which allowances in respect of war damage will be made in certain countries in establishing the operational scales.

At the beginning of the Committee's meetings, the Polish delegate challenged the legal and constitutional authority of the IRO to deal with large scale resettlements. There was not much substance in his legal argument and it was only through unfortunate tactics that he was enabled to proceed as far as he did with it. This argument may be raised again but it is more likely that the main difficulty with respect to large scale resettlements will come in fixing the basis of contribution to them. The Committee accepted the American proposal that countries of origin be only required to contribute a nominal amount of .05 per cent of the total budget for these operations, and initially the Eastern Europeans seemed to accept this proposal on a provisional basis. At a later date, however, they put their objections to it on record and maintained the position that contributions to such operations should be voluntary. France also adopted this view.

Although the Soviet Union first agreed to the scale of contributions established for part one of the operational budget, it subsequently reversed its position and put on the record its view that contributions to this part of the budget should also be voluntary.

The scales of contributions were mainly based on those used in the UNRRA administrative budget. The Committee had been specifically instructed to make adjustments in the light of damage arising from enemy occupation during the war and quite substantial reductions were made in the contributions of formerly occupied countries under this head. This work was done by the committee of experts who based their calculations upon the first report of the United Nations Committee on Contributions, and the scales are distinctly understood to be open to review in the light of the final report of that committee.

The United Kingdom sought to have a reduction made in its contribution on the basis of the damage which it had suffered during the war. We supported this proposal but it was voted down by the Committee and the United Kingdom delegation specifically reserved its right to raise this point again at the meeting of the Economic and Social Council. The Netherlands were also dissatisfied with the adjustments made, feeling that due regard had not been paid to the extent which its economy had suffered during the war. It seems to me that in finally reviewing the scales of contribution regard will not only have to be had to the data furnished by the Committee on Contributions and losses directly attributable to enemy occupation, but also to the elements of physical war damage, economic dislocation and financial impairment. The United States delegation objected to the inclusion of all these items in the recommendation to the Economic and Social Council on the ground that they were beyond calculation, but the general feeling of the Committee seemed to be that account would have to be taken of them and if it is, the net result will be a fairly substantial rise in the contribution assessed against Canada.

Mr. Turgeon and myself, in dealing with the estimated expenditures, both felt that they were based upon quite inadequate data. The key estimate is that the number of displaced persons in Europe in 1947 will be reduced from 830,000 to 320,000. This is the key figure because the main item of expenditure in the proposed budget is that which provides for the care and maintenance of displaced persons in camps and if, for any reason, this very optimistic estimate as to the reduction of personnel in camps during the year is not borne out by the facts, the IRO will quite probably not have sufficient money to carry out its functions. Having no independent data upon which to work we felt we had to accept these calculations but did it only with misgivings.

The estimate for salaries and other administrative costs appear to us to have been reduced to the absolute minimum consistent with the IRO carrying out its functions. All governments represented on the Committee were anxious to avoid the building-up of unnecessary administrative and supervisory establishments.

Before my arrival, Mr. Turgeon threw out for the consideration of the Committee the proposal contained in Mr. Robertson's letter to him of July 8th. This was to the effect that a credit should be accorded to countries to which displaced persons were repatriated or in which they were resettled. It met with some support within the Committee—the Polish delegate particularly approved of it—but it was not possible in the limited time to develop a full discussion upon it and it may be that it could be raised at the meeting of the Economic and Social Council.

Mr. Turgeon has remained the most popular figure in the Committee and even before his arrival, he was unanimously elected as Chairman. There is no doubt at all that the confidence which all the delegates had in him made it possible for him to keep the deliberations going at full speed and to complete the work in the required time. At the last session of the Committee, the delegates from Poland, France and the United States publicly recorded their appreciation of his efforts as Chairman and coupled with their remarks a tribute to the spirit of good will which Canada brings to all international gatherings.

Already there is some speculation as to who will be selected as the Director General of the new organization. The Polish delegate told me that if Mr. Turgeon accepted the position, the Eastern European countries would have no hesitation in joining its work. He claimed to have spoken of this matter with the Soviet representatives both at the present and previous meetings. The members of the American delegation also were anxious to have Mr. Turgeon accept the Director General post. They felt that Congress would hardly approve such a large appropriation of money unless an American or a Canadian were at the head of the organization. The State Department apparently would like to have one of these international organizations to which the United States contributes so much financial support headed by a non-American and they feel that in view of Mr. Turgeon's great success at these meetings that he would receive official support. Mr. Turgeon, at the moment, does not feel he could accept this position were it offered to him.

Yours sincerely,

D. G. BLAIR

583.

DEA/5475-T-40

Mémoire du ministère des Affaires extérieures au CabinetMemorandum from Department of External Affairs to Cabinet

[Ottawa,] August 12, 1946

ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

The Canadian delegations to the third meeting of the Economic and Social Council in New York on September 6th and the second meeting of the Assembly of the United Nations on September 25th will have to take a definite position with regard to the International Refugee Organization. A draft constitution for this Organization will be before both bodies successively, and when the constitution has passed the Assembly, it should be ready for immediate signature and subsequent ratification. Financial arrangements covering the first year of operation will also be under consideration.

At the series of international meetings at which the refugee question has been considered during the present year, Canadian delegations have constantly advocated that a solution of the problem could only be found through broad international co-operation in a refugee organization, and have exerted their influence to that end. The Canadian delegations to the forthcoming meetings of the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly should, therefore, presumably give approval to the draft constitution of the International Refugee Organization with such amendments as seem desirable after detailed study and in the light of the discussion at these meetings.

A Committee on the Finances of the International Refugee Organization, on which Canada was represented by Mr. Gray Turgeon and of which Mr. Turgeon was Chairman, has suggested a provisional budget for 1947 of $258,754,000. Of this amount $4,800,000 is for Administrative expenses, $193,954,000 for normal operational expenses (almost wholly for the maintenance of persons now in Displaced Persons Camps in Germany and Austria) and $60,000,000 for the re-settlement of approximately 100,000 refugees.

The scale of contributions provisionally adopted calls for Canadian contributions of 4.362% of Administrative expenses and of 4% of both parts of the Operational expenses. This may be compared with 24.614% of Administrative expenses and 43% of Operational expenses for the United States and 14.771% of the Administrative expenses and 15% of Operational expenses for the United Kingdom. The total figure for Canada under this scale of contributions would be $10,567,536. This budget will not become effective until the International Refugee Organization holds its first meeting after its constitution comes into force. In the meantime, however, the Canadian delegations in New York should know whether they may support financial plans which may eventually result in a Canadian contribution of the amount suggested.

Since the Canadian representatives are not expected to be able to make any substantial proposal for the reception in Canada of refugees and displaced persons, it is recommended they be authorized provisionally to accept a possible financial commitment of this size. If the International Refugee Organization comes into existence, it is likely that its annual expenditures will be of the general order of $200 or $250 millions for two or three years and will then decline fairly sharply.

584.

CH/Vol. 2105

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 1605

Ottawa, September 5, 1946

SECRET. Preliminary examination by the Department of Finance and others of the Report of the Committee on Finances of the International Refugee Organization has led to questioning about the size of the suggested Canadian contribution. Perhaps the main reason for our concern is the proposed relationship between the contributions of Canada and the United States. Under the proposals the ratio between the Canadian and the United States contributions would be 1 to 5.6 for administrative expenses and 1 to 10 for operational and resettlement expenses. On the basis of relative population the ratio between the two countries is about 1 to 12 and on the basis of relative national income it is 1 to 16 or 17. It would thus appear that Canada is being asked to bear a disproportionate share of the burden and this disparity is of considerable importance in view of the size of the total budget.

2. Since the amounts involved are large, and also since scales of contributions for other international organizations are now in process of settlement, we contemplate seeking revision of the proposed scale for the IRO when the Report is before the Economic and Social Council. Before doing so we desire to let both the United States and United Kingdom Governments know our views on this point. Would you therefore bring the substance of paragraph 1 to the attention of the United Kingdom authorities and say that we should be glad to receive their comments before the Economic and Social Council meets. You should consult Mr. Turgeon in advance. If he is strongly opposed to this course of action you might telegraph his views before carrying out these instructions.

585.

CH/Vol. 2105

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1864

London, September 9, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram 1605 of September 5, International Refugee Organization. Following from Turgeon to Robertson, Begins:

1. I see no objection to raising matter of contribution to IRO with United Kingdom and the United States Governments. It was clearly understood that the scale of contributions adopted by the committee on finances of the IRO was provisional and subject to the approval of the various governments. I think you might find it helpful to consider the following points in connection with this matter:

2. You will note from page thirty-five of the final report of the committee that the administrative scale was based on the provisional scale of contributions to the working capital fund of the United Nations and that it purports to take into account the present economic difficulties of some member countries. This scale has been worked out by United Nations Secretariat experts and is subject to revision by the United Nations committee on contributions and approval by the General Assembly. It was agreed that any changes made finally in this scale would be accepted in the IRO administrative scale.

3. The operational scale is based on the UNRRA administrative scale and in accordance with the instructions in your telegram 1315 of 15 July† we accepted this on a provisional basis. You will note on page thirty-eight of the report that in accordance with the committee's terms of reference an adjustment was made particularly in favour of countries occupied in the war. In paragraph twenty of the memorandum enclosed in despatch A.609 of 25 July† it was pointed out that some countries including the United Kingdom would press for a further adjustment in their favour on the broader basis of losses caused by economic dislocation, financial impairment and physical damage resulting from the war. If these further adjustments are made it may [be] expected that the Canadian assessment will be revised upwards.

4. In fixing the scales account was taken not only of relative national incomes and populations but also of relative per capita incomes and here the ratio between Canada and the United States is 412 to 589. You might find it helpful to consider the effect of this factor in seeking a revision.

5. I wish to draw your attention to paragraph 7 of the above mentioned memorandum which refers to the part that the occupying forces of the United States and the United Kingdom in Germany will play in the work of the IRO. This will represent a further contribution from these governments. This factor has not to my knowledge even been discussed in public but is liable to be raised if we object to the scale.

6. Canada should of course insist that the scale of contributions finally accepted should not be treated as a precedent for other International Organizations because of the temporary character of its work and the special circumstances surrounding its creation.

7. In paragraph sixteen of the above mentioned memorandum it was pointed out that in the view of UNRRA and IGC experts the budget adopted is hardly adequate and if it is further whittled down it will be difficult for the IRO to achieve its purpose.

8. I view with apprehension the present status of the IRO. I am informed by an official of the IGC that the United States Government is strongly objecting to both the size of the proposed budget and the scale of contributions. It seems to me that in view of the Soviet withdrawal from the IGC it will be difficult to persuade the eastern countries to continue their even limited support of IRO and I am afraid that if there is a bitter and protracted debate over finances the whole scheme will fall to the ground. It must be borne in mind that the IRO has been constituted because of the insistence of the U.K., the U.S.A., Canada and other western powers and despite the objections of the Eastern European countries.

586.

DEA/5475-T-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] September 11, 1946

IMMIGRATION POLICY; INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

At the meeting of the Cabinet on September 11th, the Secretary reported that instructions were required for the Canadian delegation to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations now meeting in New York with respect to Canadian participation in the proposed International Refugee Organization.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the Canadian delegation to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations be instructed:

- (a) to accord general support to the establishment of the proposed International Refugee Organization; but,
- (b) to reserve the Canadian position as to the scale and amount of financial contribution.

N. A. R[OBERTSON]

587.

DEA/5475-T-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre des Finances*

Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Finance

Ottawa, September 11, 1946

With reference to your letter of August 26th,<sup>1</sup> concerning the finances of the proposed International Refugee Organization, I enclose a copy of telegram No. 1605 of September 5th, to our Acting High Commissioner in London, and of teletype No. 2135 of September 7th to our Ambassador in Washington.†

2. You will note that we suggested that Mr. Hudd<sup>2</sup> should discuss the question with Mr. Turgeon in London before letting the United Kingdom Government know our views. Mr. Turgeon has outlined his views in the enclosed telegram No. 1864 of September 9th from Canada House. A copy of this telegram has been sent to our delegation to the Economic and Social Council.

3. Mr. Turgeon is obviously speaking in his capacity as Chairman of the Committee on Finances, when he expresses his fears that, if there is a bitter and protracted debate on finances, the whole scheme will fall to the ground. As the question of financial contributions to the United Nations will be discussed in the General Assembly, after the presentation of the Report of the Assembly Committee on Contributions, I am inclined to feel that we should not press the matter strongly in the Economic and Social Council discussions on the I.R.O. Otherwise there is danger of two long debates covering much the same ground.

4. You will remember that on pages 35 and 38 of their final report, the Committee on Finances of the I.R.O. recommended that the provisional scale of contributions for the administrative budget of the I.R.O. should be reconsidered in the light of the report of the Assembly Committee on Contributions, which will be submitted to the General Assembly, and that the provisional scale of contributions of the operational budget of the I.R.O. should be reconsidered in the light of this report and of further and more detailed information concerning the financial situation of some members of the United Nations, resulting from enemy occupation, large dislocation and displacement of their population at home and abroad and war damage. As I understand that the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions will generally be favourable to Canada, I would suggest that we might advise our delegation to take the line that detailed consideration of the scale of contributions to the I.R.O. be deferred until after the question of the scale of contributions to the United Nations has been discussed in the General Assembly. Our delegation

<sup>1</sup> Le document 584 contient l'essentiel de cette lettre.

<sup>2</sup> Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup> Document 584 contains the substance of this letter.

<sup>2</sup> Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain.

at the same time, as you suggest should insist on the necessity of establishing adequate budgetary control and accounting responsibility.

5. It has occurred to me that one suggestion which our delegation might make to the Economic and Social Council is that countries which agree to accept refugees and to assist them in becoming established, should be credited with a certain amount per head against their contribution to the Refugee Organization. I should be grateful for your views on this subject.

6. Our Embassy in Washington, has stated with regard to our teletype No. 2135, that they are not familiar with the background of the discussions on the finances of the Refugee Organization and prefer not to undertake detailed discussions with the State Department on the matter. They have also pointed out that most of the United States experts on the subject are now in New York for the meeting of the Economic and Social Council. We have therefore suggested to our delegation that they sound out the United States view in conversations with their delegates in New York.

7. I am also enclosing a copy of the memorandum on the Refugee Problem prepared in this Department,† which has been given to our delegation to the Economic and Social Council. The question of finances of the I.R.O. is discussed in paragraphs 11 to 21. This memorandum does not go in any great detail into the question of adjustment of the provisional scales of contributions.

8. As the proposals for the International Refugee Organization may come up for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at the end of this week, I should like to send our delegation some guidance on the attitude they should take on the question of finances of the I.R.O. They have already had a copy of your letter of August 26th which summarizes our general attitude. However, I should like your advice on whether we might suggest to the delegation that they follow the lines indicated in paragraph 4 above that detailed consideration of the scales of contributions be deferred until after the consideration by the Assembly of the report of its Committee on Contributions. I should also like to put forward the suggestion contained in paragraph 5 above, if you think it is practical.

H. H. WRONG

588.

DEA/5475-T-40

*Le sous-ministre des Finances au sous-secrétaire d'État associé
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Finance to Associate Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, September 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

In answer to your letter of September 11th regarding the financing of the International Refugee Organization, I am writing in the absence of Dr. Clark to say that we would agree that other aspects of the establishment of this organization are likely to be of primary importance in the discussion which will be taking place now, and we should, therefore, not press the debate on the basis of contribution if that seems likely to give an opening for those who wish to see the organization blocked. I think myself that Canada should do what it can to assist in finding a prompt and effective solution to these refugee problems, both for reasons of international policy and because a prompt solution is likely to be ultimately most economical, as the refugees will need to be supported for a shorter period.

We would, therefore, be prepared to agree with your suggestion that our delegation might take the line that detailed consideration of the scale of contributions to the I.R.O. might be postponed until after the question of contributions to the United Nations has been discussed in the General Assembly. However, this delay in settling the basis of contributions should not be allowed, if possible, to delay the establishment and functioning of the organization itself, and some working capital may be necessary if the organization is to commence operations. Consequently, I would suggest that the Canadian delegation, while taking the line you mentioned if that seems to be desirable in view of the discussion at the meetings, should also support any arrangement that might be put forward for the interim financing of the organization, pending decisions about the basis of contributions. It should be understood, of course, that this interim financing, whether it takes the form of a working capital fund or otherwise, should not be considered a precedent nor prejudice in any way the basis of contributions to be ultimately decided upon after the discussion on this general subject in the U.N.

On the whole, we would not favour in this Department the idea that is mentioned in your fifth paragraph, that is, countries agreeing to accept refugees should be credited with a certain amount of overhead against their contribution to the I.R.O. We do not believe that this financial offset will influence to any significant extent the immigration policy or the specific decisions of the various countries which may take refugees, while on the other hand this allowance would upset the budget of the I.R.O. and make even more difficult the problem of financing as a whole. Moreover, it would seem to us open to objection by the countries of origin and it might be misrepresented as a means by which the countries that were going to take refugees were endeavouring to escape a proper share of the costs of running the organization.

One other matter occurs to me: I have noted in the papers on this subject that the bulk of the cost appears to rise from supporting the refugees in camps in Europe. Is there no way in which arrangements can be made that these people can produce while in camps or pending their repatriation or re-establishment, and thus contribute, at least financially, to their own support? I do not know whether there are labour shortages in any parts of Europe now, particularly the parts where these people are held, but if there is an opportunity for them to earn something by doing useful work, it seems to me worth while exploring the possibilities in order to keep down the very heavy costs of supporting them.

Yours very truly,

R. B. BRYCE
For Deputy Minister

589.

I.A.M./Vol. 99

Mémorandum du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

Ottawa, October 12, 1946

REFUGEES

At the recent meetings of the Economic and Social Council a further revision of the draft Constitution and budget of the proposed International Refugee Organization was made and these documents will be presented to the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly for final approval. The budget was radically reduced from approximately 260 million dollars to approximately 150 million dollars. The new figures may prove to be much too low, and a supplementary budget may be required before the end of the first year's operations. A scale of contributions to the International Refugee Organization based on the scale adopted for the United Nations will also be prepared during the Assembly.

When the Constitution and financial arrangements have been approved by the Assembly, the Canadian delegation will have to consider the following additional questions concerning refugees:

(1) Signature of the Constitution. It is hoped that delegations will come to the Assembly prepared to sign, subject to later ratification, the agreement bringing the International Refugee Organization into existence. Signature of the Constitution would imply acceptance of financial responsibility. The scale of contributions has not yet been fixed, but the Canadian share of the first year's budget would probably be somewhere between six and seven million dollars. It is only safe to assume that contributions of an equal amount would be required for the next two or three years, and at a diminishing though substantial rate for a number of years thereafter.

(2) Interim Measures. A proposal will also be placed before the Assembly for the creation of an Interim Commission to make preparations for the establishment of the International Refugee Organization. A document in this connection will also be open to signature, and if the delegation is authorized to sign a general agreement bringing the I.R.O. into existence, it should, presumably, be authorized also to sign this secondary agreement on interim measures. No additional financial obligation will be incurred on account of the Interim Commission.

(3) Acceptance of Refugees. Delegations at the Assembly will be under considerable pressure to make known their intentions in regard to the acceptance of refugees, and proposals will probably be put forward for the admission of refugees on a quota basis by receiving countries. The delegation might find itself in an embarrassing position if, in a discussion on the eventual disposition of refugees, it could refer only to Canada's action in the past in admitting a few refugees or in revising the immigration regulations so as to admit the relations of residents in Canada. On the other hand, if it were possible to announce a practical plan for the resettlement of even a small number of refugees, the delegation might be able to influence in a very constructive way the consideration of the refugee question.

There is good reason to believe that new homes will have to be found for at least half a million refugees now in Displaced Persons Camps. The pressure on Canada to receive some of these people will certainly increase, and, if we are to take them in the end, there would be considerable advantage in making a selection of desirable people at an early stage. Three methods by which selected groups of refugees might be admitted to Canada are suggested in the following paragraphs.

(a) The Despatch of Immigration Inspection Teams to Displaced Persons Camps. It appears that several thousand persons admissible to Canada under recent revisions of the Immigration regulations are amongst the refugees in camps in Germany. There are at present no means by which these persons can be inspected to confirm their eligibility. A plan for the inspection and movement of these people has been given tentative consideration. According to this plan, the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees would locate in Displaced Persons Camps individuals whose relatives had applied for their admission to Canada, and would assemble them in appropriate centres. Teams of Canadian Immigration officers would then inspect the individuals concerned at these centres and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees would then arrange for the onward transportation of those selected for admission. The acceptance of this plan would have an immediate practical effect on the refugee problem without altering the existing Immigration regulations.

(b) The Selection of Groups of Workers with Required Skills. The recruitment of 4,000 agricultural workers amongst the members of the Polish Armed Forces might offer a precedent for similar movements. Immigration teams, such as those now in Italy, could select groups of workers in camps, such as those occupied by Baltic refugees, where persons were known to be located who could meet specific short-term labour needs in Canada. The movement of these people might be financed, in part at least, by an international agency, such as the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, or, later, the International Refugee Organization.

(c) Admission of Limited Numbers from Certain Racial Groups. Various organizations in Canada, and in particular the Central Mennonite Committee, the Canadian Ukrainian Committee and the Canadian Jewish Congress are prepared to sponsor and support the movement to Canada of groups of refugees in which they have a particular interest. Limited numbers of refugees might be admitted to Canada in co-operation with organizations of this nature, which have been pressing strongly for permission to do something on behalf of friends and relatives of their members.

590.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

[Ottawa,] October 15, 1946

. . .

9. MR. ST. LAURENT suggested that, in the matter of accepting refugees, it was proposed that the Canadian delegation might take the line that Canada had allowed 3,500, admitted during the war, to remain in the country, 4,000 Poles were being admitted under a scheme already in effect for agricultural labour; immigration regulations had recently been modified to permit entry of close relatives of persons already in Canada.

The modification of the regulations would open the way for admission of substantial numbers in addition to the war refugees and the Polish workers. Until some estimate could be made of the total involved, it would be difficult for the government to make any further commitments for the admission of others, particularly in view of the serious shortage of housing which existed at the present time. The problem would, however, be considered again by the government at a later date.

Meanwhile special arrangements would be made for the concentration at suitable points in Europe of persons applying for admission under the modified regulations to permit examination for eligibility and general acceleration of their movement.

10. THE CABINET, after discussion:

(1) agreed that should an international organization be established along the lines indicated in the revised draft constitution, Canada should participate therein and the Canadian delegation should be authorized to sign the constitution, subject to later ratification by Parliament; and

(2) noted with approval the proposals of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as to the attitude to be adopted by the Canadian delegation respecting admission of refugees to Canada.

. . .

591.

CH/Vol. 2112

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

DESPATCH A. 885

[London,] October 18, 1946

Sir,

With reference to my telegram no. 2050 of October 12th† regarding travel documents for refugees, I have the honour to enclose copy of the final agreement approved by the Conference arranged by the Intergovernmental Committee, together with copy of the Final Act of the Conference.<sup>1</sup>

2. You will observe in Article 1 that a travel document "shall be issued by the contracting governments to refugees who are the concern of the Intergovernmental Committee". This phrase, imposing as it does a definite obligation, was given very careful consideration by the group of experts responsible for the initial draft of the agreement, and Article 16 was expressly included to avoid any implication that the refugee would be entitled to receive greater privileges than the national of the issuing country. It may be noted at the same time that, although there is no specific reference to it in the text, ultimate appeal in cases of questionable eligibility can be made to the Intergovernmental organisation as the case may be.

3. Initial uncertainty in regard to the Canadian suggestion that the words "transit through" should be included in Article 16 gave way to appreciation of the necessity of such a precaution, especially in view of the mandatory nature of Article 11. The United Kingdom delegate in particular did not conceal his anxiety that this country might otherwise become a waiting-room for refugees whose final settlement arrangements in the country of destination had not been completed.

4. Within the meaning of Article 16 and Sub-Section 1 of Article 15, which override all other provisions, an alien refugee not having Canadian domicile and returning to Canada in possession of a valid travel document issued by the Canadian authorities would be exempt from an immigration visa as now required under paragraph 2 of P.C. 3016. Nothing in the agreement, however, appears to conflict with Canadian immigration statutory law applicable at the port of entry, and it seems that the travel document could be recognized as meeting the requirements of paragraph 4 of the same Order-in-Council.

5. To provide for the possible acceptance of the present accord by the Intergovernmental Committee's successor, a new Article 20 has been inserted. Phrased in deliberately vague terms, it is designed to apply to whatever type of organisation is ultimately adopted, whether it be an agency of the United Nations, an agency established under the auspices of the United Nations, or a separate and unaffiliated body.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1946, N° 47.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1946, No. 47.

6. As the bulk of the refugees and displaced persons are now in Germany and Austria, considerable attention was devoted to the possibility of extending all arrangements to the various zones of occupied territory. For legal and technical reasons, it was not found possible to make the appropriate reference in the main body of the agreement. You will note, however, that there is a recommendation in the Final Act, put forward originally by the United Kingdom delegate and warmly supported by France and the United States, which leaves the way open to negotiations between the three countries.

7. The Polish delegate endeavoured unsuccessfully to introduce an amendment to cover persons of Polish extraction whereby the consulate of the country of origin of the refugee would be consulted at the time of issue of the document. At the same time, he objected that the categories of refugees benefitting by the present agreement are not adequately defined and that insufficient attention is paid to the exclusion of war criminals and similar elements. The original explanation of Sir Herbert Emerson<sup>1</sup> outlined in my telegram under reference apparently had not met his requirements and he pointed out in private conversation with our representatives that there are minority views in the draft constitution of the International Refugee Organisation to be taken into consideration. In his opinion, Articles 1 and 2 of the present agreement should be deleted and the text in this way so confined to the character of the travel document as to avoid raising contentious refugee problems which are properly the sole responsibility of the United Nations. In the circumstances, Poland, and possibly Czechoslovakia, if only for reasons of sympathy, cannot be expected to sign the agreement.

8. It may be added in conclusion that while many of the delegates present were experts in their own particular field of immigration, several did not appear to be fully conversant with the international implications of the refugee question. As a result, they were inclined to approach the matter of a travel document from the technical point of view and perhaps at times without due consideration for the political issues involved.

I have etc.

[N. A. ROBERTSON]

<sup>1</sup> Le directeur, le Comité intergouvernemental sur les réfugiés.

<sup>1</sup> Director, Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees.

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au conseiller, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Adviser, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

SECRET

Ottawa, October 29, 1946

Dear Mr. Reid,

In regard to the question of refugees, it seems to me that the delegation to the Assembly will have adequate information in the relevant sections in the Commentary and in the report on the Third Session of the Economic and Social Council. The Chairman of the Delegation himself is familiar with the decisions which were taken in Cabinet as a result of discussions following the return of the delegation to the Economic and Social Council. It might, however, be useful if I were to recapitulate the situation as it now stands and forward one or two additional papers which may be of use to you. I should be grateful if you would draw these matters to the attention of the Chairman of the delegation.

When the question of refugees was considered in Cabinet on October 15th it was agreed that, should an international organization be established along the lines indicated in the revised Draft Constitution of the I.R.O., Canada should participate therein and the Canadian delegation should be authorized to sign the Constitution subject to later ratification by Parliament. As a consequence of this decision steps are now being taken by the Department to issue to the delegation the necessary authority for signing the document when it is approved by the Assembly. I understand that in the discussion which took place in Cabinet, it was felt that the decision to participate in the I.R.O. should be conditional upon a general acceptance of the Constitution by a number of responsible nations. In view, however, of the fact that the Constitution will not come into effect until it has been signed by fifteen nations, it would not appear that Canada could become a member of the Organization unless there were adequate support from other nations.

The question of subscribing to the Agreement for Interim Arrangements was also mentioned in the memorandum which the Secretary of State for External Affairs placed before Cabinet. No formal decision in this regard is recorded but I think it may be assumed that, if Canada is to sign the Constitution of the I.R.O. it will also sign the Agreement for Interim Arrangements and the necessary authority is also being secured for the delegation to act in this respect. You may wish to confirm with Mr. St. Laurent our understanding that it is the intention for the delegation to sign both documents.<sup>1</sup>

The attitude which the delegation should adopt towards proposals for the resettlement of refugees was also discussed in Cabinet. I understand that in this regard Mr. St. Laurent suggested that no further revision of the Immigration regulations in the interests of admitting refugees should now be contemplated, but that steps should be taken to facilitate the admission of refugees under existing regulations. We have, therefore, proceeded with plans for the immigration inspection of refugees in the occupied zones of Germany and, as you know, it is hoped that an announcement in this respect will be made within the next few days.

<sup>1</sup> Voir le Décret du Conseil P.C. 4630.

<sup>1</sup> See Order in Council P.C. 4630.

The budget of the International Refugee Organization will also be under consideration in the Assembly. In the memorandum to Cabinet a round figure of $150,000,000 was given as the approximate budget of the I.R.O. for the first year of its operations. The figure as eventually determined in the Economic and Social Council was, however, somewhat closer to $160,000,000 and there may be some further adjustments in the budget before it is finally passed by the Assembly. I think, therefore, it would be useful to keep before the delegation the size of the financial obligation which will be incurred by the International Refugee Organization, particularly in view of the fact that a budget of even $160,000,000 may prove to be inadequate.

As you know, the question of contributions was not considered at the Economic and Social Council. A scale of contributions will, therefore, have to be worked out during the Assembly, and in this connection I am attaching a copy of letters† containing the comments of the Deputy Minister of Finance on the provisional scale of contributions which was worked out by the Committee on Finances of the I.R.O. in July.

The financing of the I.R.O. was discussed in general terms at the Economic and Social Council, and a number of countries then showed a disposition to reduce their financial commitments to that Organization or to escape from them altogether. I think that the provisional budget of the I.R.O. was set at an artificially low figure in order that countries might not be discouraged from participating by the size of the contributions for which they would be asked in the first instance.

The Constitution of the I.R.O. will also be given its final revision by the Assembly before adoption. In this connection I am attaching a memorandum† which gives some account of the way in which a number of important revisions were written into the Constitution during the third session of the Economic and Social Council as a result of agreement amongst the United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. delegations. These revisions were adopted without examination in the Committee and at the time the Canadian delegation expressed misgiving in connection with two or three of the changes which were made. You will notice, however, that in the attached memorandum it is suggested that these points should be raised and discussed in the Assembly only if the Constitution undergoes a further general revision. In other words, if there is a general disposition on the part of the General Assembly to accept the Constitution as it now stands, it would seem preferable for the Canadian delegation to forego any discussion of the points mentioned. It would also be unfortunate if the delegation were to press our opposition on these points to the extent that the U.S.S.R. withdrew its acceptance of other points in the Constitution on which agreement has been reached.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

SECTION C

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE DU COMMERCE

INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

593.

PCO/U-40-3

Procès-verbal d'une réunion

Minutes of a Meeting

INTERNATIONAL MEETING ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT

A meeting of officials was held on April 5th, 1946, in Room 123, East Block to consider what should be done in the way of preparation for the international discussion. The following were present:

N. A. Robertson, in the chair
 Dr. W. C. Clark
 Dr. Barton
 David Sim
 M. W. Mackenzie
 Graham Towers
 H. B. McKinnon
 W. A. Mackintosh
 R. B. Bryce
 L. Rasminsky
 J. E. Coyne
 S. D. Pierce
 H. R. Kemp
 F. A. MacGregor
 D. Harvey
 J. Deutsch
 J. A. Chapdelaine
 M. G. Glassco

Mr. Robertson stated that the preliminary meeting of the participating countries was expected to be held in England starting September 1st, 1946. The number of participating countries had been increased by the addition of Norway, Chile, and Lebanon. The United Kingdom authorities had proposed a pre-preliminary conference of Commonwealth countries to start about six weeks before September 1st and the New Zealand government was most anxious to have Mr. Nash take part in these earlier discussions. The attendance of Mr. Nash at these Commonwealth talks was awkward because (1) the starting date had had to be moved forward to July 1st to accommodate him, and (2) courtesy would compel the presence at these meetings of United Kingdom ministers; this in its turn would affect the character of Canada's participating delegation. Furthermore, if the Commonwealth discussions were held at a ministerial level the wider preliminary discussions would probably follow on as ministerial discussions.

It was the feeling of the meeting that Canada should indicate at the outset that, even though New Zealand wished to be represented by a minister, these pre-preliminary discussions should really take place at the official level.

Mr. Sim felt that the Commonwealth talks would inevitably develop into very wide discussions, and in the eyes of other nations these talks would have the appearance of a caucus.

Mr. Kemp wondered whether it would be appropriate to consider how large a reduction in the United States tariff would be necessary to balance the advantages gained by a reduction of a given amount in the British preference. Mr. Robertson pointed out that since the United States under their existing legislation cannot put articles on the free list nor can they reduce their tariff by more than 50 per cent, it would follow that the United States could not expect to have preferences completely wiped out.

Mr. Towers suggested that Canada might be prepared to make broad multilateral tariff concessions, but since the United States was not able, without legislative action, to make very substantial concessions in return, it might be advisable or necessary to make a special Canada-United States supplementary agreement. Mr. McKinnon agreed with this view. Mr. Robertson felt that this question might better be brought up after a certain stage in the multilateral negotiations had been reached.

Mr. Sim was worried by the experience of Canadian exporters in their attempts to export goods to the United States. There were many procedural and administrative barriers to the easy flow of Canadian goods. Mr. Robertson felt it was important to have a full and complete dossier on the shortcomings of the United States tariff administration. Mr. Kemp believed that most of these shortcomings were legislative in character rather than administrative.

Mention was made of the preparatory work being done by the Department of Trade and Commerce in preparing lists of commodities on which Canada wished to secure concessions. In reply to a query by Mr. Bryce as to whether or not there was any indication as to the manner in which Canada might alter her economy, Mr. Robertson stated that if the United States did not go further in making concessions than they were now permitted by legislation to do, then it was not probable that Canada would make any radical changes in her economy. Dr. Mackintosh suggested that there must be many industries in Canada which could not adapt themselves to any appreciable tariff concession without a fairly drastic reorientation. Mr. McKinnon stated that to judge from the briefs which had been submitted to the Trade and Tariff committee practically all industries were willing to have a regime of free trade, provided they were given three years in which to make necessary changes in their industries. On the other hand reciprocal reduction in tariffs was felt to be of little value because of limitations on what the United States could offer along these lines.

Mr. McKinnon felt that the delegation to the preparatory talks should have as its chairman a "neutral" person and indicated that he could not really be so described.

It was decided that those present should consult together in order to establish six or seven small committees to collect material having reference to each of the committees which will probably be established at the preliminary international meeting.

M. G. GLASSCO

594.

DEA/8378-40

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] April 24, 1946

We have just had word from the Washington Embassy that the United States feel obliged to propose yet a further postponement for the proposed preliminary talks on commercial policy. As you know, we have been proceeding on a programme that these talks would commence in London about the beginning of September, and would be preceded by conversations on tariffs and preferences between Commonwealth countries. The United Kingdom has suggested that these talks might begin about July 1st.

The United States authorities feel that the slow Congressional progress of the United Kingdom Loan Agreement, which has to be disposed of before formal preparations for the commercial policy talks can be begun, now makes it necessary for them to revise the whole timetable on which they have been working. They fear that the publication required under Trade Agreements Act procedure of the very lengthy list of tariff items on which the United States would be prepared to negotiate reductions would throw the whole commercial policy programme into the November Congressional elections. They are now planning to publish these lists after the elections are out of the way. This will mean that the preliminary talks will not get started until March or April, 1947.

This is a serious and disappointing decision, which the United States appear to have reached without consulting any of the other countries affected. My feeling has been that we had a real opportunity immediately after the end of the war and during the first phase of reconversion for drastic and relatively painless tariff revision. The longer this operation is postponed, the more difficult it will be to carry out, because new special interests, in abeyance in the war years, are rapidly getting re-established.<sup>1</sup> 595.

DEA/8378-40

*Le sous-ministre du Commerce au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

In an endeavour to clarify our thinking in this Department on the general question of commodity policy in its relation to the United States Proposals for International Trade, Mr. Dennis Harvey, Director of our Import Division, has prepared the attached memorandum. This memorandum is, of course, intended solely as a basis for discussion and not for circulation outside a small group of government officials. It does suggest, however, the possibility of certain suggestions now being made which might influence the course of the trade discussions at the Preparatory Commission meeting.

I should like to arrange for a general discussion of the subject matter of the attached memorandum and it is hoped that you could attend a meeting in my office at 4 o'clock on Tuesday, May 28.

Yours faithfully,

M. W. MACKENZIE

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire du directeur, la direction des importations, le ministère du Commerce

Memorandum by Director, Import Division, Department of Trade and Commerce

CONFIDENTIAL

[n.d.]

INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

THE PRESENT POSITION:

Appraising the likely effects of postponement of the Trade and Tariff Conference until April, 1947, serious concern is felt that without some tangible progress towards an International Trade Organization, the general situation may deteriorate to a dangerous degree in the meanwhile.

<sup>1</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

The situation upon which it was hoped to establish a freer basis of multi-lateral trading under I.T.O. is in fact deteriorating. At the International Cotton Advisory Committee Conference foreign delegates showed that they were observing closely the policies adopted on certain issues by the two major proponents of the I.T.O.—U.S.A. policy on wool subsidy in the face of a world surplus; U.K. bulk purchasing monopoly on controlled Sterling Area low cost sources of supply; U.S.A. maintenance of export subsidy and at the same time abandonment of production control on cotton; U.K. selective release of sterling convertibility on coffee trading.

In the face of this experience and in recognition of where the control of joint purchasing organizations really rests, it is not to be expected that Latin American countries should show signs of relaxing their restrictive applications of exchange control, etc. The primary commodity producing countries recognize the "buyers' cartel" nature of these organizations. Recent measures such as the re-application of shipping space controls to restrict the use of Latin American leathers and imposition of O.P.A. ceilings at this late date on "basils" must smack so much of cracking the whip that it cannot be calculated to encourage a warm-hearted response to Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment among economically weaker powers. Within an I.T.O. no major power can resort to "veto" action without a reaction on the whole system.

On other accounts also, particularly in the area of Tariff discussions and in the area of promotion of imports, the U.S.A. may be suspected of giving lip service only to the principles which are advocated. Even in the field of Commodity Agreements and Commercial Policy it is significant that the U.S.A. is prepared to advocate an agreement on Cotton while meeting a Joint Organization for disposal of the wool surplus with domestic subsidy and expansion of production.

That time is against any success with I.T.O. at a later date is also obvious. Unfortunately it may now be anticipated that foreign government credit programmes will run for two years and be materially consumed before the benefit of Tariff adjustment can be obtained.

The U.S.A. no longer enjoys a position of leadership and prestige in politics or commerce to the extent that she did nine months ago, and in the interim tendencies towards Nationalism abroad do not appear to have weakened in any degree.

WEAKNESSES OF THE "PROPOSALS":

On re-examining the Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment there appears to be today a definite lack of appropriateness in many phases of their approach to the problems. One cannot expect anything better than lip service to set principles which are not economically feasible in view of political and other commitments.

It is obvious that there must be a basic conflict between the principles of Commercial Policy and specific national interests. An example is found in the problem of British Colonial Policy where the alternative exists between discriminative application of price support under bulk purchasing or extension of parliamentary grants in aid. At the International Cotton Advisory Committee Conference it was disclosed that every major producing country and others besides are, or have recently been, supporting domestic prices. The whole of the U.S. commodity parity price programme could be presented as being at odds with certain of the Proposals.

There is perhaps also another and more fundamental weakness in the Proposals. Comparably in some measure with certain earlier attempts towards international political organization, the Proposals purport to define a set of principles which are universally applicable regardless of the vast differences in the state of economic evolution of countries which, it would be expected, are to observe them. "Ethiopia" may well debark [sic] upon a course of expediting domestic industrialization by tariff, exchange control or any other convenient machinery. There are vast differences between the economic organization of various trade spheres, each of which within itself may contain a limited basis for building sound freer trading systems. The integration of Western Europe becomes more practicable by areas (e.g. separate customs unions) than on a wholesale basis.

Extensive study of Commodity Policy reveals similarly that the "wholesale" approach has definite weaknesses. There seems to be relatively few commodities in which a universally applicable commodity agreement would be feasible. There seems to be a vast number in which variously modified forms of agreements would greatly improve the stability of international trade. Regional agreements in certain spheres would seem to be desirable for the same purposes. The conceptions of short fixed term agreements as the cure and of war-expanded production as the basic cause of surpluses are unrealistic (e.g. sugar, since the Paris Convention in 1864).

Under any short term agreement scheme either on commodity or commercial policy, the advantage of independent action by one or two non-subscribers is altogether too great. (e.g. failure of Chadbourne Sugar Scheme, position of non-members of Joint Hides Committee, etc.). The premium on the "wholesale" approach goes to the non-subscriber.

A NEW POLICY OF APPROACH:

It appears essential to strike a note of realism and to search first for whatever broad bases of agreement may actually exist. It would be essential for this that there be a clear appreciation that these bases of agreement may differ between several groups of countries, colonies and protectorates which are at comparable levels of economic development. Similarly, bases of agreement may be substantially broader for instance between countries in the Western Hemisphere generally and again between countries in Northern Europe than between countries in East Asia and between countries in the Mediterranean. This condition is fundamental and to disregard it will be disastrous.

The more important causes of dissension and breakdown within the framework of the I.T.O. scheme centre principally upon trade in primary commodities. It is international trade in basic foodstuffs and industrial raw materials which provides the purchasing power essential to trade in manufactured goods.

It is also a fact that these primary commodities rank first in importance as providing basic purchasing power for all international commerce and as basic freight for international shipping, insurance, etc. They are, at the same time, the commodities which are most susceptible to surplus production, price collapse and manipulation.

In the mid 1930's, despite the exceedingly low prices for these commodities then obtaining, coffee ranked fifth in importance in international trade in foodstuffs and was exceeded in value only by wheat, sugar, pork products and butter. In the same period of course cotton ranked alone in its importance as the primary textile fibre.

It is essential for the sake of stability to agree wherever agreement can be reached, whether it be on extent of subsidies, on permanent intention of bulk purchasing, on methods of state trading, on exchange control applications, on tariff policy, on conservation of domestic productive capacity, on treatment of buffer or reserve stock holdings or on national price support programmes generally, etc.

It may appear retrogressive to acknowledge that in the field of Commercial and Commodity Policy the White Paper has set forth objective principles which subjectively are not susceptible of universal application but that is precisely what must be done to discover, by regions and by trades, what tolerances may have to be accepted as essential to any real acceptance of the set principles in the first place.

To commence with, the tabling of national intentions is required for the purpose of exploring the possibilities of agreement. In the field of commercial and commodity policy the most appropriate medium for such a development would be provided in immediate action to establish the I.T.O. Commodity Commission and to bring under its authority the various existing international committees and study groups concerned with inter-governmental agreements on primary commodities.

There are now in being commodity study groups in one form or another concerned with present or future agreements on wheat, coffee, cotton, rubber, tin, wool and potentially sugar and tea. Other commodities subject to varying forms of agreements immediately before the war included beef and lumber; also agreements were under investigation on copper, sisal and copra. In the future one can visualize pressure for agreements on a further list of which vegetable oils, hides, jute and other fibres, cocoa and coarse cereals might be cited.

Accordingly it is considered vitally important that the preparatory conference to be held under the auspices of the Social and Economic Council of the United Nations should take measures to establish the I.T.O. Commodity Commission without further ado. The Commission would then immediately call for proposals from member nations for exploratory conferences on specific commodity problems.

The means would then be provided for a realistic approach to the underlying issues which are basic to subsequent exploration of the possibilities of tariff agreements. In certain cases also the means of meeting dissension on commodity and commercial policy within the I.T.O. framework may be found within the orbits of the I.L.O., the F.A.O. and the World Bank which it must be appreciated are already in existence.

THE APPARENT NECESSITY FOR ACTION:

It may be disastrous to allow the preliminary conference under the Social and Economic Council to concern itself only with discussion of "principles".

A primary objective is now to avoid an early failure of a too inclusive attempt. Public appraisal of the increasing divergence between Western and Soviet viewpoints suggests the urgent necessity of providing an early expression of some unifying and regenerative influence. Unless some unifying influence on a realistic level can be brought forward in the trade field within a short period, time will be against any real success of I.T.O.

In view of the initial source of the Proposals, it seems that it will remain with some country other than U.S.A. or U.K. to suggest a new approach. It is believed that it will not be long before realistic proposals will be very welcome.

Initially the offer of tariff concessions was understood in Washington to present adequate attraction for compliance, on other accounts, with the proposals. They are beginning to be disabused on this score. On the score of commodity policy they are beginning to discover that their agricultural floor price plan is being exploited by other countries without any compensating commitments and that under such conditions they cannot put up the I.T.O. umbrella.

Canada is not now committed to the same extent as the U.S.A. and the U.K. to the existing proposals. Nor is Canada stigmatized with direction of joint purchasing arrangements of the Combined Boards, etc. Her position is perhaps uniquely favourable on many grounds for development of a new approach.

596.

PCO/U-40-3

Mémorandum

Memorandum

MEMORANDUM OF DISCUSSIONS REGARDING THE PROPOSED WORLD TRADE TALKS, CARRIED ON BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES OFFICIALS IN OTTAWA ON AUGUST 8-9, 1946

Four meetings in all were held on August 8th and 9th. Mr. R. Macdonnell, Department of External Affairs, took the chair. Mr. David Sim, Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise); Mr. H. B. McKinnon, Chairman of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation; Mr. Hubert Kemp and Mr. Dennis Harvey, Department of Trade and Commerce; Mr. John Deutsch, Department of Finance, and Miss D. Burwash, Department of External Affairs, attended all the meetings. Mr. E. A. Côté, Department of External Affairs; Mr. Brown, Department of National Revenue; Mr. Meredith Glassco, Privy Council Office; Mr. Whiteley and Mr. MacKeigan, Combines Investigation Commission, were at certain meetings of particular interest to them.

The United States officials who attended the discussions were Mr. Winthrop Brown, Mr. J. Leddy and Mr. D. D. Kennedy of the State Department; Mr. Homer Fox and Mr. Edward Dow, Jr., of the United States Embassy in Ottawa.

The talks had two chief purposes, first to discuss the timing, agenda and procedure of the Preparatory Committee meetings to be held in London on October 15th and of the tariff discussions tentatively scheduled for March 15th, 1947, and second to consider the draft charter for an International Trade Organization prepared by the United States Government.

A. DISCUSSION OF TIMING AND PROCEDURE FOR PREPARATORY COMMITTEE AND TARIFF TALKS

Mr. Winthrop Brown and others of the United States group indicated that copies of the draft charter for the International Trade Organization prepared by the United States had been made available on a confidential basis to all members of the Preparatory Committee. It had been put forward, not as an expression of the final views of the United States Government, but purely as a starting point for discussion. The United States Government was anxious to do everything possible to advance preparations for the talks and to expedite agreement among the drafting countries. Mr. Winthrop Brown himself was proceeding to Australia and New Zealand to discuss the draft and general plans, and other United States officials were visiting various of the "drafting countries".<sup>1</sup>

The preparation of the draft had raised questions of policy and timing on which the United States and the United Kingdom were not in complete agreement. The British felt that early publication of the draft would be premature, in that it would immediately call forth opposition and give that opposition a chance to crystallize. They had indicated that if the charter were published prior to the Preparatory Committee talks they would feel obliged to make a public statement reserving their position. The United States Government wished to avoid any appearance of forcing the draft charter down the throat of the Preparatory Committee, but felt in the first place that publication would have a valuable effect in stimulating general interest, especially in the United

<sup>1</sup> Des représentants du Canada et des États-Unis avaient discuté de ces propositions lors de réunions préliminaires officieuses tenues à Ottawa le 21 et 22 janvier 1946. Voir le procès-verbal de cette réunion dans les dossiers du ministère du Commerce, Archives publiques du Canada, ITC-71B2, boîte 13.

<sup>1</sup> Representatives of Canada and the United States had discussed these proposals during informal preliminary meetings held in Ottawa on January 21 and 22, 1946. See the minutes of this meeting in Department of Trade and Commerce files, Public Archives of Canada, ITC-71B2, box 13.

States where a good deal of pessimism is at present being evinced. Misconceptions of the State Department's position on a number of points are widespread, and the State Department feels that these could be largely cleared up if the draft charter were published. Secondly, they believe that publication would help greatly in speeding up preparations for the World Trade Conference. At the present time the draft charter had not been placed on the tentative draft agenda for the Preparatory Committee meetings, which contained reference only to the Proposals.

The Canadian officials were of the opinion:

1. That early publication of the draft charter (say at the end of September) would be advisable. Mr. J. J. Deutsch indicated that a similar problem had arisen at the time of the Bretton Woods discussion and that as it turned out the publication of the experts' plan had done nothing but good.

2. That it would be desirable to have the draft charter accepted as the basis for discussion at the Preparatory Committee meetings.

The United States delegates circulated a copy of the tentative draft agenda (attached) † which the Canadian officials were to examine with a view to suggesting any additions or revisions that might occur to them.

Turning to consideration of the date for the "drafting countries" meeting, Mr. Winthrop Brown explained that the notices of proposed tariff revisions which were a statutory requirement in the United States could not all be got out until November 15th. In view of this delay the United Kingdom had suggested that the meetings originally scheduled for March 15th, 1947, should not open until March 31st. No objection was raised by either the United States or the Canadian representatives to this change. The Preparatory Committee would decide on a date and site, and it was the understanding of the United States representatives that the French Government would offer to act as host.

A question was raised whether the list of countries to be asked to attend the World Trade Conference in the late fall of 1947 had yet been determined. It was agreed that this was a matter which would be decided at the Preparatory Committee meetings in October.

Finally, mention was made of the fact that Norway, Chile and Lebanon had recently been included in the drafting group. The United States proposed, in view of this fact, to suggest that they enter into tariff discussions on the same basis as the original group. The United Kingdom had no objection to this suggestion, and the Canadian officials indicated informally that the Canadian Government also would be prepared to agree to the suggestion.

B. CLAUSE BY CLAUSE CONSIDERATION OF THE DRAFT CHARTER FOR I.T.O.

In accordance with a prior agreement among the Canadian officials, the United States representative interested in each particular section was asked to lead the discussion on that section. Mr. Winthrop Brown accordingly took the lead in the more general discussion; Mr. John Leddy handled tariff questions arising under Chapter IV, General Commercial Policy, and Chapter VII, Organization; Mr. D. Kennedy matter relating to Chapters V and VI, Restrictive Business Practices, and International Commodity Arrangements.

Detailed consideration of the charter revealed that there was a very large measure of agreement on general principles. The Canadian officials indicated that they might have certain drafting changes to suggest and that there were some points, though comparatively few, in the draft charter that might give rise to administrative or economic difficulties. The chief points of interest which arose in the discussion are noted below.

Chapter I. Purpose

It was brought out by the United States representatives that Article 1:3, regarding assistance to under-industrialised regions, had been added to satisfy the demands expected from such countries. This Article and Article 60:1 were meant to take the place of the reference in the Proposals to "equal access to raw materials" and to the Industrial and Mineral Unit, which had been dropped from the charter. United States officials realized on reflection that they could not explain what "equal access to raw materials" meant.

Chapter II. Membership

No comment.

Chapter III. Employment Provision

Mr. Winthrop Brown indicated that this section had been added in an attempt to meet the Australian views on employment policy.

Chapter IV. General Commercial Policy

Article 8:2 having to do with the elimination of preferences was subjected to criticism. It appeared that the United Kingdom Government had indicated some objection to the reference to July 1st, 1939, which it was felt might give the charter retroactive effect. Mr. Sim and Mr. Deutsch pointed out that the word "eliminate" might raise unnecessary political difficulties since the Article did no more than start into action a gradual process of elimination.

The objection was noted by the United States representatives.

Article 10, transit rights: it was pointed out by the Canadian representatives that section 5 would clash with our direct shipment provision. This led to a brief discussion of shipping matters and the United States representatives reiterated their views, put forward in earlier talks, that shipping should be covered by a separate agreement and should not be dealt with by the I.T.O. It was noted in passing that nevertheless the United States were asking us to make a shipping concession.

Article 12:2a: the term "value for duty purposes" gave rise to discussion, but the feeling of the meeting seemed eventually to be that it would not be practicable to include in an instrument of this kind a general definition of value. It was concluded that the rationalising of customs valuations would have to be tackled as a separate question related to the problem of customs formalities.

Article 18:1b: Mr. McKinnon pointed out that taken with Article 8:2, it appeared that the charter froze the tariffs of 1946 and the preferences of 1939. In Canada this distinction might give rise to political difficulties, since we should be obliged to let stand the tariff concessions made to foreign countries during the war, but should have to wipe out the concessions in preferences to Commonwealth countries. It was agreed that consideration should be given to redrafting this Article and possibly to omitting the specific reference to dates here and in Article 8:2.

Article 20, Restrictions to Restore Equilibrium in the Balance of Payments: Mr. Winthrop Brown indicated that the United Kingdom had objected to the provision that such restrictions should be non-discriminatory. Mr. Deutsch commented that, given this escape clause, members would tend to impose quantitative restrictions on trade in anticipation of an adverse balance of payments position. Mr. Leddy and Mr. Winthrop Brown acknowledged that this was so and indicated that efforts to establish objective tests of an adverse balance had not been very successful.

Article 25, General Undertaking regarding Subsidies: Mr. Winthrop Brown explained the United States attitude towards the protection of infant industries, which was that quantitative restrictions and tariff protection should be frowned upon and members urged to resort to subsidies instead. The United Kingdom attitude was somewhat the same. The Canadian officials indicated that they would take a similar view. It was agreed, however, that no general rule could be applied here and that concessions would have to be made during the tariff talks.

Article 26, state trading: there was a general feeling that this most difficult article should be capable of improvement, and both sides undertook to do some thinking about it.

Article 29, escape clause: it was noted that the state invoking the escape clause cannot take discriminatory action, and must withdraw concessions made to all countries. A retaliating state, on the other hand, can apply discriminatory sanctions, and suspend concessions in the case of the escaping country alone.

Chapter V. Restrictive Business Practices

Article 34:2, Mr. Kennedy pointed out that the charter went further than the Proposals in that it named specific business practices which were considered as ipso facto restrictive. The United Kingdom had already objected to this Article. Mr. Deutsch pointed out that many arrangements already in existence would be condemned by the charter and enquired whether these would have to be abolished immediately. It was replied that members had a general obligation under Article 34 to consider whether existing arrangements were consistent with the spirit of the charter, but that a complaint had to be lodged before the abolition of any arrangement could be required. Mr. MacKeigan pointed out that English patent law would make Article 34:2f largely inoperative. Mr. Kennedy replied that in that case an obligation would rest upon the United Kingdom Government to change the law.

Chapter VI. Intergovernmental Commodity Arrangements

Mr. Kennedy, in his analysis of this part of the charter, emphasized that the United States was traditionally opposed to commodity arrangements and that the clauses in the charter were a somewhat reluctant acknowledgment of the necessity for them. Two points must be borne in mind regarding the United States attitude. In the first place, great weight was attached to the provision for representation of consuming nations in commodity discussions, and in the second place it was felt that commodity agreements should be kept to a minimum. Mr. Kennedy's answers to specific questions should be viewed in the light of these general principles.

Mr. Deutsch remarked that the criterion provided in the charter of need for a commodity agreement was a "burdensome surplus" or threat of a surplus. In this connection he pointed out:

1. That in present world conditions at least a deficit might be a cogent reason for a commodity arrangement.

2. That equitable commodity arrangements were easier to achieve in periods of scarcity when producers were often willing to accept less than the price their goods commanded in the open market in return for a guaranteed market during surplus periods.

Mr. Harvey in the same connection:

3. Observed that there were some commodities which, owing to the structure of their industry, appeared to be in permanent surplus and to require therefore a permanent commodity arrangement to regulate their marketing.

4. Enquired whether the "commodity study groups" provided for by the charter would be set up to study surpluses which were still very much in the future. Mr. Kennedy, in answer to these enquiries, replied:

1. That the charter did not provide specifically for the deficit situation, but did not rule out action on these grounds.

2. & 4. That there could not be permanent study groups in all commodities, but that the Commodity Commission would be expected to keep the situation under careful review.

3. That the United States did not accept the necessity for permanent commodity agreements, but expected rather that countries whose industrial structure suffered from the disequilibrium referred to should take corrective measures.

In answer to a question put by Mr. Deutsch, Mr. Kennedy indicated that commodity arrangements would not be discussed simultaneously with the tariff negotiations, since it would be difficult to arrange for a sufficient number of officials and representatives to handle both and since it would make the discussions impossibly complicated. A partial exception had been made in the case of wool, which was to be discussed at the Preparatory Committee meetings.

The Canadian officials were of the opinion that if this were the case some commodities, such as sugar, might have to be excluded from the tariff talks, since some participating countries might feel that the tariff concessions they would make were dependent upon assured markets and good supply.

It appeared in general from this part of the discussion that the United States officials admitted the need for commodity arrangements only very grudgingly and were inclined to interpret the Canadian officials' remarks as meaning that they were eager for numerous long-term commodity arrangements. It was pointed out to them that this was by no means the case.

Chapter VII. Organization

Mr. Leddy introduced this chapter by observing that the International Trade Organization would stand midway between organizations of a purely advisory type like the Food and Agriculture Organization and those like the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development which had extensive powers. The draft aimed at increasing the power of representatives of states and reducing that of the Secretariat.

Article 53, Voting. Mr. Leddy indicated that the United Kingdom preferred weighted voting on the lines of the Fund and the Bank. The United States was not unsympathetic, but considered that it would be difficult to establish criteria. The Canadian officials agreed that this would be extremely difficult and indicated that they were prepared to accept the principle of one nation, one vote.

Article 56, Interim Tariff Committee. Mr. Leddy explained that this Committee, which had not appeared in the Proposals, would consist originally of the drafting group, other countries being added as they made substantial tariff concessions. The prospect of membership would thus, it was hoped, offer an incentive to countries to carry out tariff reforms.

Article 57, Executive Board—membership. Mr. Leddy pointed out that the Proposals' arrangement for permanent seats on the Board had been dropped. He suggested that there would be pressure both to enlarge the Board and to give undue weight to the principle of geographical representation. The United States hoped to resist these pressures. The Canadian officials indicated that Canadian policy too would be strongly opposed to them.

The meetings were then concluded with the discussion of timing and procedure for the trade talks which has been described in Section A of the present memorandum.

597.

DTC/Vol. 4-581

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 818

London, September 3, 1946

IMPORTANT. SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 535,† commercial policy.

1. We have now heard that invitations have been issued for Preparatory Committee of the Economic and Social Council to meet on the 15th October as contemplated. Way is, therefore, clear to fix the date for the Commonwealth meeting which is to precede it. We think that ten days is the very least time which will be required for the Commonwealth meeting and we should, therefore, like to suggest that overseas representatives should be in London to start discussions on the 3rd October.

2. The United Kingdom delegation to the Commonwealth talks will be substantially the same as the delegation taking part in the Preparatory Committee meeting. It will be in the general charge of Mr. Marquand, the Secretary for Overseas Trade. Under him the Second Secretary (Overseas) of the Board of Trade (Mr. Helmore) will be the official head of the delegation with about seven other members representing the Departments chiefly concerned. (We may bring in specialists as the subject matter demands).

3. The agenda for the Commonwealth talks should clearly be based on what the Preparatory Committee will be discussing—there will, of course, be no actual tariff negotiating—and as the original directions to the Preparatory Committee in fact set out the main heads of the United States proposals (CMD 6709) though without actually mentioning them, it can be assumed that the agenda of the Committee will be those main heads. The United States authorities have recently sent us a tentative outline of an agenda. The first item on this is consideration of the United States procedural memorandum of looking to agreement on:

- (a) the objective of drafting the Charter of the I.T.O. of United Nations;
- (b) the objective of negotiating a Multilateral Trade Barrier Agreement (including selective tariff reductions, quotas, exchange restrictions, State Trading, etc.);
- (c) procedure preliminary to tariff negotiations and procedure at the negotiating meeting; and
- (d) the relationship between the meeting of the Preparatory Committee and the World Conference on Trade and Employment. (This would include discussion of the treatment to be accorded to the trade of countries outside the Multilateral Trade Agreement). The United States suggestions also include the establishment of Drafting Sub-Committees “to carry forward the work of drafting the I.T.O. Charter between the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee and the negotiating meeting”. The second main item on the suggested agenda is the examination of the principles to be incorporated in the Charter and the following headings are enumerated—employment, trade barriers, cartels, commodity agreements, organization. The United States of America would propose to suggest that the points set forth in the proposals be taken as a basis for starting discussions.

4. We are in agreement with the general lines of this suggested agenda but we have some doubts about the proposal for Drafting Sub-Committees to work between the Preparatory Committee meeting and the drafting countries' meeting.

5. We shall be glad to know, as soon as possible, that your Government will be able to send a delegation for Commonwealth talks on the 3rd October and the number and, if possible, names of delegates and supporting staff, in order that the necessary administrative arrangements can be made. We should also be glad to have any comments regarding the scope of the discussions.

598.

CH/Vol. 2117

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chargé d'affaires aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chargé d'Affaires in United States

DESPATCH 1074

Ottawa, September 7, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the International Trade Organization proposals. The interdepartmental group of officials charged with preparing Canadian participation in the I.T.O. has suggested that we ask you to explore in Washington the possibility of inviting the Argentine to participate in the March 1947 negotiations. While we appreciate that an invitation at this late date to the Argentine might be somewhat embarrassing, it is felt that the advantages might outweigh the difficulties.

It is considered that in general eligibility for I.T.O. membership should be determined on functional principles subject to the proviso that the Charter should not be seriously weakened merely to persuade reluctant nations to join. It is in general desirable that I.T.O. membership should be as wide as possible to establish the maximum base of multilateral trade. The political question of approval or disapproval of any given country's regime or policies in fields other than international commerce would seem to be irrelevant to the question of I.T.O. membership, subject of course to the provision to avoid conflict with any sanction proposed by the United Nations.

We realize that it is probably intended to invite the Argentine to the full I.T.O. Conference in the autumn of 1947, but the Argentine Government is somewhat touchy and it may be that Argentine participation would be more likely if she took part in the drafting conference. The Argentine is a very important international trader and particularly so to Canada since she is a major exporter of some of the same basic products and therefore interested to some extent in the same markets as ourselves.

Again, the application of the "principal supplier" doctrine by the United States would, in the absence of the Argentine, inevitably limit the scope of the March tariff reductions and postpone reductions on certain important items until at best some time in 1948. This delay might present many of the negotiating countries with a new set of complications.

Moreover, whatever the provisions finally decided on for obtaining from non-drafting members tariff and quota concessions comparable with those previously arrived at by the drafting countries, they are likely to involve delay. In the case of such an important international trader as the Argentine, this could be more serious than in the case of most other non-drafting countries.

Presumably the Argentine was omitted from the original list of drafting nations for political reasons. But we feel that the principles affecting, for example, election to primarily prestige positions in the United Nations are not applicable to the proposed I.T.O. and should not be allowed to override the principle of functional efficiency. And if the Argentine does not participate in the I.T.O. there is danger that the Organization will be seriously weakened as the Argentine would be forced to tempt member nations to various forms of state trading deals.

To sum up, we would have no political objections to Argentine participation, and see considerable practical advantages. We would therefore like to see the Argentine associated with the project at the earliest feasible stage. While the pressure of time itself might make impossible Argentine participation before the March meetings, it may be thought possible that they could be represented informally at the October talks by an observer. This might help them appreciably with their own preparations for the March meetings.

We would be grateful if you could explore this matter informally with the appropriate officials in Washington and let us know their reactions as soon as possible.

I have etc.

N. A. ROBERTSON
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

599.

DF/Vol. 3607

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 367

Ottawa, September 14, 1946

SECRET. Reference Circular D-833.† Voting procedure for proposed I.T.O.

We also have been giving some consideration to question of voting procedure and are inclined to feel (without however being committed to any definite view) that some system of weighting might be preferable to the one-state-one-vote principle. Unless there is some method of ensuring that major trading nations have a voice in the Conference and the Executive Board commensurate with their powers and responsibilities, the Organization is likely to be weak, without effective sanctions and with an excessive number of escape clauses.

2. The constitutions of Bretton Woods, various trade union organizations, including W.F.T.U., and the International Labour Organization all provide partial precedents; so does the charter of the United Nations, but the veto system is the least desirable of the various possible methods. If, therefore, a suitable method of ensuring weighted representation can be found, not only may there be more hope of getting a strong and effective Organization and Charter, but also the new precedent thus established might encourage a useful trend in international organizations generally.

3. We would not, however, be prepared to press these views at cost of jeopardizing wide agreement on the commercial provisions of the Charter.

4. We have no comments to make at this stage on the particular weighting formula you suggest. If, however, you have worked out the votes your formula would yield to Latin America and other countries, we would be grateful if you would send us the figures.

600.

PCO/U-40-3

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au greffier du Conseil privé

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Clerk of the Privy Council

SECRET

Ottawa, October 4, 1946

Enclosed, for your information is a copy of a memorandum on certain political and public relations aspects of the International Trade Organization project. This memorandum is intended to supplement the more specialized working papers on particular aspects of the United States draft Charter. It was, however, prepared after the delegation left for the Preparatory Conference in London, and thus does not have the blessing of the Interdepartmental Committee.

ARNOLD C. SMITH for the Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum du ministère des Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Department of External Affairs

SECRET

[n.d.] 1946

INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION PROJECT
SOME GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON THE U.S. DRAFT CHARTER

I. Apart from tariff reductions, the International Trade Organization Charter, as envisaged at present in the U.S. draft, is based on three main concepts:

(a) Regulations for international commerce. This is the hard core of the project. However the draft regulations are in large part phrased negatively—"Thou shalt not . . ." Even where positive constructive action is envisaged as in the Commodity Councils, the wording of the U.S. draft Charter is such as to imply that these Councils are regrettably necessary exceptions, the formation of which must be restricted as much as possible.

(b) Superimposed on this concept is the problem of "employment". This was included as a secondary objective in the U.S. proposals ("For the expansion of trade and employment"), apparently to assist in securing for the commercial proposals a good public reception. However the Economic and Social Council of the U.N. put employment as the first item on the terms of reference of the Preparatory Conference, with a draft I.T.O. Charter as the last item.

(c) Superimposed also is the whole question of developing relatively unindustrialized countries. This did not figure in the U.S. proposals, but was added as a "special consideration" by the Economic and Social Council. Relatively undigested references to this problem were then inserted, obviously as an after-thought, in the "Purposes", "Functions", and "Powers" clauses of the U.S. draft Charter.

II. It already seems likely that an all-out attack may be made on the I.T.O. project by Communist parties throughout the world. A few weeks ago Humanité in Paris damned the proposals on the grounds that they amounted in fact to a programme for expanding the field of dominance of Wall Street and "big business". Molotov took a very similar line in attacking the economic provisions advocated by the democratic powers for the Italian peace treaty, and Vyshinsky more recently took a similar line in Paris in connection with other draft treaties. While this attack is probably inevitable, the conception and wording of the I.T.O. Charter in the U.S. draft is such as to make the project unnecessarily vulnerable to criticism from all sections of the "left", and to embarrass many leaders of labour or left-wing parties who wish to support the project (e.g., in France, South America, and even to some extent in the U.K.).

III. The dangers inherent in the Communist attack, which should not be underestimated, can be largely avoided if sufficient care is taken to present the I.T.O. project in a constructive and forward-looking light, calculated to appeal to "progressive" circles with traditions of internationalism and of planning and with socialist or semi-socialist philosophy. Indeed, it is quite possible to present the project in such a way as to carry the attack into the critics' own camp.

IV. To do this, the whole project can and should be presented with the emphasis not negative, but positive. The draft Charter is in a real sense an attempt in the field of international commerce to create "one world", or to go as far in that direction as proves possible, by coordinating the commercial policies of as many countries as can be persuaded to cooperate. Multilateralism is a positive internationalist principle. The I.T.O. project can be presented above all as an attack on economic chauvinism; this phrase if judiciously used can perhaps be made to stick. The I.T.O. principles are in no sense incompatible with progressive methods of economic planning. They do mean a serious effort to avoid the dangers of economic warfare, and attempt to restrict the use of certain trade techniques of the type developed by Dr. Schacht for essentially totalitarian purposes: such techniques, as the history of the 1930's showed, constitute a dangerous threat to the integrity and independence of small countries.

V. These lines of thought will be relevant chiefly in public relations policy—for press releases and interviews, public speeches, speeches of delegates at open sessions of the various Conferences, for any general debates on the subject which may take place in the United Nations Assembly or the Economic and Social Council, etc. The importance of the main lines chosen for public presentation of the I.T.O. project should not be underestimated.

VI. It will probably also be desirable to rephrase the U.S. draft Charter in certain particulars to improve its chances of widespread public acceptance. Much of the verbiage of the U.S. draft, for example, has a strong flavour of the philosophy of private capitalism and laissez-faire. This flavour is quite unnecessary to the actual obligations suggested. And this sort of language unnecessarily begs a controversial question and thus tends needlessly to alienate potential supporters in various parts of the world. The actual commitments envisaged can be derived equally logically from the "progressive" internationalist principles suggested in Paragraph IV. The U.S. officials presumably had Congress very much in mind when drafting the proposed Charter; but it will probably be good tactics to modify the wording in such a way as to obtain a wider acceptance by public and political parties elsewhere both of the whole concept of the I.T.O. and of the actual commitments desired.

VII. Certain modifications in substance would also seem desirable by the same token. These modifications are, however, minor. For example, the U.S. draft implies that trade associations and cartels are prima facie harmful though no mention is made of large private firms with comparable monopoly powers, and naturally the right of a member Government to maintain state-owned monopolies or state control of industries is protected. This discrimination is illogical. Our Working Paper on "Business Restrictions" suggests that "undue" or "unreasonable" abuses by cartels should be prevented, rather than the forms of organization themselves. Another example is the U.S. draft's curious attempt to restrict international commodity agreements to cases of oversupply or under-supply, etc. Presumably the Canadian delegation will press for freedom of Governments to establish commodity agreements whenever this seems desirable, though with suitable safeguards to prevent abuses; one suitable check could be the need for approval by the I.T.O. Executive Board in each case. But it is unwise for the Charter to seek to prevent, in advance and in principle, the use of international commodity agreements for purposes of stability or for purposes of assisting backward peoples. It is unnecessary for the I.T.O. concept to appear out of sympathy with the ideals of, for example, Sir John Orr's World Food Board project whatever view may be taken of its practical details. Moreover, it may eventually be found desirable to use machinery under the I.T.O. Commodity Commission to accomplish some of the objectives now envisaged for the projected World Food Board.

VIII. The inclusion of the "Employment" aspect in the I.T.O. project may also involve certain problems from the public relations and political point of view. Though originally included in the objectives apparently to improve the public attractiveness of the scheme, it could conceivably have exactly opposite results. The "employment" aspect might, for example, distract attention from the international commerce aspect, and might facilitate irresponsible criticism and disruptive efforts on the grounds that the major problem and objective is being virtually disregarded. Again, some nations may press for "outs" on employment grounds which would have the effect of weakening the serious commercial provisions of the Charter.

IX. Our Working Paper on "Employment Provisions" of the U.S. draft Charter suggests certain lines along which these provisions may be greatly improved without affecting the real commitments envisaged. The main responsibility for dealing with a threat of widespread unemployment is to be passed back to the Economic and Social Council, which can make appropriate recommendations to all the various specialized agencies concerned: while the commercial provisions of the I.T.O. Charter are explicitly recognized to assist the "full-employment" objective by restricting national measures calculated to export unemployment, as well as by encouraging the expansion of international trade.

X. The "industrialization of undeveloped areas" concept is potentially perhaps the most important single aspect of the whole I.T.O. project. That the advanced democracies should assist the development of more backward areas of the globe is obviously desirable in principle on humanitarian grounds. Moreover this need is likely soon to be recognized also as a vital matter of strategy for the security of the democracies; unless we see to it that social and economic levels of the masses of people in South America, the Middle East, and Asia are raised, these areas will inevitably be an inviting and fertile field for agitation. Further, it is of supreme importance in the long term that the national evolution of India and China should be toward increasing cooperation with the western democracies rather than toward participation in a possibly hostile totalitarian block; to ensure this, western assistance in their economic development will probably be essential. And the timetable of history is probably such that "the long term" is not so long as that.

XI. The "industrialization" aspect was superimposed on the I.T.O. concept at a relatively early stage, and the few clauses (four or five in all) in the U.S. draft Charter referring to it appear to be merely hasty and undigested after-thoughts tacked on for appearance sake.

The problems involved are so vast that it will be essential to approach them with caution. Perhaps a good first step will be to have a fourth Commission—for the development of relatively unindustrialized areas—incorporated in the machinery of the I.T.O. It seems possible that the U.S. delegation intends to suggest or support some such amendment to their draft.

It will be a useful beginning if these "industrialization" problems are recognized as essentially international, and with international machinery set up to deal with them. It is important however that in the disposition of what is after all our know-how and our capital, the Western democracies retain freedom to determine the beneficiaries without being restricted by prior high-sounding internationalist principles (such as "take relief out of politics"). There must be no repetition of the anomalies of UNRRA.

XII. Apart from the problem of special measures to assist the industrial development of our potential friends, there will doubtless be demands from some of the less industrialized nations for exceptional treatment in the tariff clauses. It will no doubt be urged, with some plausibility, that the U.S.A. and Canada first developed strong industries behind high tariff walls, and only now seek a general acceptance of low tariffs—to the detriment of poorer nations still at an earlier stage of economic evolution. It may also be urged that rich capital-exporting countries should in the nature of things lower their tariffs more than poorer capital-importers, to encourage a satisfactory solution to balance-of-payment problems.

While all these factors will naturally play their part in the actual tariff-rate negotiations, it is doubtful if they should be allowed to create a series of "outs" to weaken the general commercial commitments of the Charter itself.

This factor may also—by way of "hypocrisy" charges—be used by those who wish to discredit the whole I.T.O. project. Probably the best answer will be to contrast the freedom from discrimination and untoward pressures inherent in the multilateral approach with the threat to sovereignty and the political and economic vassalage of small nations inherent in the most obvious practical alternative, the bilateral techniques practised by Hitler and other totalitarians.

XIII. With all its weaknesses, the I.T.O. project is an inspiring internationalist approach to world-trade problems, and the Charter represents perhaps the most ambitious and far-reaching project of international legislation yet attempted.

601.

DEA/8378-40

*Le sous-ministre du Commerce au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, October 15, 1946

I refer to your letter of October 10th† and the attached copy of a note from the High Commissioner for South Africa† in Ottawa respecting the concessions which Canada will request of each of the countries at the forthcoming international trade conference.

2. The only list of such concessions that has so far been transmitted to the government of which the concessions are requested is that submitted to the United States. I have pleasure in enclosing copy of this list,† which you might like to send, in confidence, to the South African High Commissioner. Perhaps in return the High Commissioner might obtain for us a copy of the list of requests submitted to the United States by the Union of South Africa.

3. With regard to our prospective requests of other Empire countries, our thinking has been governed by the terms of the proposals in this connection put forward by the United States and agreed to in principle by the United Kingdom. They are as follows.

- a) That no existing margin of preference be increased.
- b) That no new margins of preference will be created.

c) That all reductions in most-favoured-nation rates will automatically operate to reduce the margins of preference.

4. We question whether it will be desirable or expedient in these circumstances for the Empire countries to include in their requests from other Empire countries any item on which a preferential margin is now enjoyed. If further reductions in the tariff rates are made with respect to items now subject to preferential margins, corresponding reductions would have to be made in the rates applying to the United States and to all other non-Empire countries. If any rate to a non-Empire country were to be reduced, a corresponding reduction in the rate to Empire countries would, we believe, be incompatible with the provision that the reduction in most-favoured-nation rates should operate automatically to reduce margins of preference. It seems to follow that any concession which might be granted by any Empire country to any other Empire country on an item on which a preference is now enjoyed would be compatible with the proposals as they now stand only if the preferential margin is eliminated and a new most-favoured-nation rate is established lower than the existing preferential rate.

5. In view of the above considerations, our requests of South Africa will probably be very small. We hope to be able to indicate specifically what they will be soon. If the proposals are not implemented to an extent sufficient to bring the provisions mentioned in paragraph 3 above into full operation, Canada might be under the necessity of revising and extending its requests in the light of the changed circumstances. In particular, and without prejudice to the possible necessity of other requests, we might ask for treatment equal to that extended to the United Kingdom with respect to the items in the South African tariff in which Canada enjoys a preference over most-favoured-nation countries but is not extended treatment so favourable as that extended to the United Kingdom.

6. In addition to any specified tariff reductions, Canada would like to retain existing preferential advantages except insofar as they might be relinquished at the request of some non-Empire country and in return for appropriate compensatory concessions elsewhere.

7. Should the international conference not reach any general conclusion respecting the determination of value for duty, Canada might find it necessary to make some special requests of South Africa in this connection.

8. Canada would like to continue to enjoy free entry for the items now free of duty when imported from Canada and would like to share the advantages of any tariff reduction that may be granted to other countries, either within the Empire or elsewhere, so far as this is not inconsistent with the charter for the international trade organization which may be accepted by the conference.

M. W. MACKENZIE

Procès-verbal d'une réunion
Minutes of a Meeting

CONFIDENTIAL

London, November 2, 1946

NOTE ON A MEETING IN THE HIGH COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE ON 2ND NOVEMBER, 1946

Present:

Mr. N. A. Robertson (in the Chair)
Mr. Brooke Claxton
Mr. H. B. McKinnon
Mr. D. Sim
Mr. J. J. Deutsch
Mr. H. R. Kemp
Mr. D. V. LePan

1. Mr. Robertson explained that the meeting had been arranged to inform Mr. Claxton of what progress had been made in the Preparatory Committee on Trade and Employment.<sup>1</sup> He invited Mr. McKinnon as Head of the Delegation to outline the work of the conference.

2. GENERAL COMMENTS ON THE DELEGATIONS. Mr. McKinnon said that the preliminary stages of the conference had been disposed of quickly and harmoniously and that so far the conference had been animated by a desire to reach conclusions which would make the draft Charter submitted by the United States Delegation a satisfactory and effective instrument. The good atmosphere of the conference was perhaps partly to be explained by the absence of the Soviet Union (which was the only one of the eighteen countries invited which was not attending), but even more by the positive interest and goodwill of the delegations which were present.

(a) Australia. It had been expected that the Australian Delegation might be as pugnacious and as difficult to deal with as Dr. Evatt had been at Paris. In point of fact, however, the Australians had proved conciliatory and constructive. It was clear that Dr. H. C. Coombs, the head of the Australian Delegation, was doing his best to see that the Charter would be such that it could be accepted by the Australian Government. Mr. McKinnon expressed the view that Dr. Coombs had proved himself the most outstanding personality at the conference and this opinion was supported by the other members of the Canadian Delegation.

(b) India. The Indian Delegation, however, had been a stumbling-block. They had come with a great number of objections to the draft Charter and on many points it seemed impossible to meet their wishes without emasculating the Charter entirely. However, in the last few days their attitude had softened somewhat. A member of the United Kingdom Delegation had suggested in confidence to Mr. McKinnon that, although Mr. Nehru, who is the leader of the Indian Delegation, was proving difficult, the Indian Government would not necessarily support him in all of his objections. It was the belief of the United Kingdom Delegation that the authorities in Delhi might be rather more amenable.

<sup>1</sup>La Commission préparatoire de la Conférence internationale du Commerce et de l'Embauchage.

<sup>1</sup>Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Trade and Employment.

(c) United States. The United States Delegation had been remarkably tolerant and open-minded. Although their draft Charter had been taken as the basis for the work of the conference, they had not expounded it in a dogmatic way and had been willing to consider suggestions from all sides. Mr. Robertson said that he had been rather afraid before the conference opened that the United States Delegation might come in a crusading spirit as propagandists for free enterprise and that such an approach would make it impossible for the Labour or Social Democratic governments in Western Europe to accept the Charter. Mr. McKinnon said that there had been no hint of such a crusading spirit. In fact, he sometimes thought that Mr. Harry Hawkins, who was perhaps the chief sponsor of the Charter, was overly indulgent in considering amendments and amplifications which were inconsistent with its cardinal principles.

Conflicting evidence had reached the Canadian Delegation as to what effect Republican successes in the United States elections might have on the fate of the draft Charter. Mr. Clair Wilcox, Head of the United States Delegation, Mr. Hawkins, and Mr. Edminster had all expressed their confidence to Mr. McKinnon that the Republicans would support this United States initiative wholeheartedly. On the other hand, the Hon. William Johnson, in conversation with Mr. Sim, had been more skeptical. He thought that, should the Republicans be successful, the United States would continue to participate in the work of putting the Charter in final form but Washington would be so permeated by a different philosophy, by a different outlook on international trade, that the Charter would probably remain a dead letter.

(d) The French, Czechoslovak, Lebanese, Chilean and Peruvian Delegations had all raised many objections. But Mr. McKinnon thought that the essential reason for this was that they had not participated, as we had, in all the preparatory work which lay behind the draft Charter. Many of their objections were being withdrawn as the mists of ignorance were dispelled.

3. FULL EMPLOYMENT. The most notable feature of the conference, Mr. McKinnon said, had been the great emphasis laid on full employment. The importance of this subject had been urged by the Australians ever since the first conversations looking towards an international trade organization began more than three years ago, and they had been successful in securing a larger and larger place for it in successive drafts which had been prepared. It seemed that they would have a similar success at this conference. In 1943 during the talks on commercial policy in London the United States proposals contained no reference to full employment whatsoever. As a result of Australian pressure at that meeting a reference was included to full employment at the end of the document. During the discussions in 1944 this reference was expanded into a separate chapter. In 1945 this chapter was brought up to the very forefront of the Commercial Proposals. The present conference was now considering an entire convention on the subject of full employment which would be separate from the trade Charter. This draft convention would bind the signatories to collaborate in taking international action to avoid the creation and spread of unemployment. The Australian approach, Mr. McKinnon explained, might be put in this way: "All the rest of you, including the virtuous Canadians, take the view that full employment will follow from expanded international trade. We, on the other hand, take the view that, if the nations of the world manage to maintain full employment and create a rising standard of living, world trade will be expanded automatically and the task of breaking down trade barriers and restrictions will become comparatively unimportant." The Australians for this reason were diffident about accepting commitments which would deprive them of weapons on which they feel they must depend to maintain employment in Australia and prevent the export of unemployment from other countries. In particular, they claim that members of the International Trade Organization should be permitted to hail before some organ of the ITO any country which they believed to be exporting unemployment, and if need be as a last resort, discriminate against that country.

4. Mr. Robertson said that in his view it would be a mistake to write a separate convention on full employment. It would be better, he thought, to keep the obligations with respect to full employment and to trade barriers yoked together in the same document. A chapter on full employment would give the Charter more popular appeal. He was also afraid that, if two separate documents were prepared, some countries, Australia for example, might ratify the full employment convention without ratifying the trade Charter. He was also doubtful whether a separate convention on employment could be passed through the United States Congress. This doubt was confirmed by Mr. McKinnon, who said that Mr. Wilcox had told him privately that full employment provisions would have to be incorporated in the Charter to be acceptable to Congress.

5. UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES. The second most important alteration in the draft Charter which had been made in the present conference, Mr. McKinnon said, was a series of provisions to protect the position of underdeveloped countries which wish to become industrialized. This campaign had been led by the Indian Delegation. From their point of view the draft Charter appeared as an attempt by the United Kingdom, United States and Canada, all countries which had reached a high level of industrialization, to force their goods on markets abroad. Tariff protection had played a large part in building up these countries' industrial strength, in the Indian view; now they wished to perpetuate their own industrial superiority by denying to other countries the weapons they had used themselves. Parenthetically, Mr.

McKinnon remarked that it was very noticeable how often Canada was referred to in the course of the meetings as a rich, powerful and highly industrialized country and how often it was classed in the same category as the United Kingdom and the United States. The Indian Delegation claimed that India must arrogate to itself the right to use the devices which had brought wealth and industrial strength to other countries. They were almost prepared to argue that any industry in India is an infant industry and therefore deserving of protection. Mr. McKinnon reported that it had now become fairly generally recognized in the conference that these pleas by the Indian Delegation on behalf of under-developed countries would have to receive some satisfaction and, accordingly, Dr. Coombs had been asked to draft a new chapter in the Charter to deal with this question. The sincerity and earnestness with which he was devoting himself to the work of the conference could be gauged from the fact that he had produced a draft which went a long way towards meeting the wishes of the Indian Delegation but nevertheless allowed for many fewer let-outs and escape clauses and was much more in keeping with the tenor of the Charter.

6. WAR-TORN COUNTRIES. Some countries, notably France and Czechoslovakia, had been disposed to argue that their economies had been so devastated by the war that they should be classed with under-developed countries for the purposes of the Charter. Both these countries were anxious to prolong as far as possible the transitional period during which quantitative restrictions could be imposed. The Czechs for example had suggested that the transitional period might be as long as from thirty to fifty years. Perhaps this suggestion was not intended to be taken too seriously and was more in the nature of a bargaining counter; but it revealed in an extreme form the desire to use the transitional period for all it is worth.

7. Mr. McKinnon declared that the twin subjects of full employment and industrialization of under-developed countries were rapidly usurping the place of greatest importance in the conference and that the Charter was in grave danger of becoming so riddled with exceptions introduced to meet the objections of many countries on these two scores that the final document might well be almost useless.

8. Mr. Robertson thought that we should consider very carefully how far we should be prepared to see the Charter loosened and weakened. It was the same problem as had confronted the League of Nations: whether to form a loose but comprehensive organization which might prove ineffective or a tightly knit but narrow body which could probably act with greater unity of purpose. If it seemed impossible to secure wide adherence for the trade Charter without so watering it down that it would be of very little use in freeing the channels of trade, Mr. Robertson thought it might be wise to abandon the attempt and start instead from the other end of the scale. The United States, United Kingdom and Canada for example could probably conclude an effective and significant agreement along the lines of the present Charter, which other countries would most certainly want to join. If a tripartite Charter or convention of this sort were left open, it would soon attract many new adherents, he thought.

9. Enquiring about the Australian position, Mr. Claxton asked if what they were advocating was not simply a policy of autarky. Mr. McKinnon replied that he thought it was, although with a difference. Mr. Robertson said that, as he understood the Australians' point of view, they held that an underdeveloped country should be allowed to develop its infant industries behind a high protective wall and select for itself which industries could be maintained to the country's economic advantage. They claimed that the result of this process would be the same as the result of free international competition; in both cases an international division of labour would be created. It was a plausible argument but showed a great neglect of human nature and of political history. Mr. Claxton said that the vital objection to it in his view was that it left the way open for sky-high tariffs.

10. Mr. McKinnon reported that the United Kingdom officials generally and Mr. Helmore in particular were loyally supporting the United States Delegation in searching for formulae and devices which would protect the core of the Charter and yet give some satisfaction to countries which were seeking exceptions to enable them to maintain full employment. On the other hand, Mr. McKinnon was somewhat concerned by the attitude of the Labour Government on this question. He mentioned, for example, a confidential conversation which he had had with Lord Addison in which he had told the Dominions Secretary that the work of the conference was being focussed more and more on full employment; Lord Addison had replied that the whole trend of commercial policy must move more and more in that direction. Mr. Robertson thought that the attitude of the United Kingdom Government towards the linked topics of trade and employment, which in general was very similar to that of the United States Government, was, however, qualified by two factors:

(a) In the first place the phrase "full employment and a rising standard of living" falls with a welcome and perhaps seductive sound on the ears of the Labour Government; and

(b) the United Kingdom can never entirely forget that it is a colonial power responsible for the well-being of a number of territories which are underdeveloped industrially.

11. COMMODITY POLICY. Mr. Deutsch reported that it was intended in the draft Charter to block in commodity policy only in the most general outlines and for this reason the work of Committee IV, which was dealing with commodity policy, had gone comparatively smoothly. However, there was some difference of opinion, or at least of emphasis, among the members of the Committee. The Australian and Netherlands Delegations wished to include as many commodities as possible within the scope of this chapter of the draft Charter, while the United States Delegation wished to include as few commodities as possible. In general, our Delegation had been supporting the United States view but had urged that rather more flexibility should be introduced. With the exception of this one point of difference the Committee had rapidly reached substantial agreement. For example, the Committee had been convinced by the Canadian argument that commodity agreements would be useful in dealing with shortages as well as with surpluses. The Committee had also given some consideration to the question of buffer stocks. Although many members held that the creation of buffer stocks would involve grave administrative difficulties, they had not been ruled out as a proper sphere of activity for the ITO. There had been very general agreement that a single commodity regime should be established under the ITO and that the FAO should not be given authority to supervise commodity agreements for food-stuffs. The Canadian Delegation had not yet taken up an official position on this question.

12. COMMERCIAL POLICY. On commercial policy in the strict sense, Mr. McKinnon said that there was not yet much of substance to report. This was a highly detailed and technical field in which most of the key decisions would not be taken until next March when the tariff and preference negotiations were going forward. The M.F.N. article of the draft Charter had been considered by Committee II and it appeared as though agreement on this article would be reached early next week. Mr. McKinnon wished to bring to the Minister's attention a serious and special problem which confronted the Canadian Delegation alone. He recalled that during the war the Canadian Government had unilaterally reduced both British preferential rates and M.F.N. rates on a wide range of tariff items. According to the draft Charter, preferences could not be increased "above their level on July 1st, 1946". Unless Canada could restore the tariff and preference cuts which it had voluntarily made during the war, we would be in a poor bargaining position in the negotiations next spring. Mr. McKinnon thought this was an extremely serious problem, probably the most serious, which would have to be urgently considered as soon as he returned to Ottawa. In the meantime, the United States Delegation was showing considerable sympathy with the peculiar situation in which the Canadian authorities found themselves.

13. RESTRICTIVE BUSINESS PRACTICES. Mr. McGregor, who is representing Canada on Committee III, which deals with restrictive business practices, was not able to be present because of the meeting of a sub-committee; but Mr. McKinnon said that the work of this Committee had not been so smooth as had been reported. The draft Charter had gone beyond the Commercial Proposals and had listed specific monopolistic practices which would be outlawed by the ITO. It would likely prove difficult in the Committee to come to an agreement as to whether all of these practices should be proscribed.

14. ORGANIZATION OF THE ITO. Mr. Pierce said that the two most contentious issues on the agenda of Committee V, which is considering the organization of the ITO, were the questions of membership and of voting.

The Canadian Delegation had taken the position that membership of the Organization should be as wide as possible and should even include the ex-enemy countries, which might be represented by the respective Control Commissions if need be. On the question of voting, the draft Charter had provided that in the conference of the Organization each country should have one vote. The Canadian Delegation had been inclined to think that some system of weighted voting should be devised but had not been able to secure much support for this idea. The United Kingdom Delegation also would favour such a system. Unfortunately, however, they were bound by the general support which they had given on all points of importance to the United States Commercial Proposals in which the principle of one country—one vote had appeared. Apart from the United Kingdom, no country had spoken in favour of the principle of weighted voting. Mr. Robertson expressed anxiety over this development. He said that it led him to believe that many of the countries represented at the present conference were simply trifling. "If you intend," he said, "to transfer real power to the ITO, you must have functions related to responsibility. And that means weighted voting."

15. FUTURE TIMETABLE AND PROCEDURE. The Committee of the Heads of Delegations had decided that the report of the Preparatory Committee should be in two parts. Part A would simply be a narrative of meetings of the various committees and sub-committees. Part B would define the areas of agreement and of disagreement. In addition, an appendix would be compiled which would consist of the United States draft Charter plus agreed amendments. This appendix would provide the basis for the work of the Drafting Committee which it had been decided would be set up by the Preparatory Committee and would begin its sittings on the 1st January or shortly after that date, either in New York or Geneva. It had been agreed that the next meeting of the Preparatory Committee, which would be convened about 1st March, would be held in Geneva.

603.

DEA/8378-40

Discours du haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne

Speech by High Commissioner in Great Britain

REMARKS BY MR. N. A. ROBERTSON, . . . AT THE CLOSING PLENARY SESSION OF THE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT

LONDON, NOVEMBER 26

Mr. Chairman,

Now that the conference is coming to an end, I think it is possible to look back over the work of the past six weeks with considerable satisfaction. When the conference opened, many felt that if it succeeded only in conducting a preliminary reconnoitre of the steps which would have to be taken before an International Trade Organization could be set up, it would not have been a failure. The problems to be solved were so complex, and the economies of the various countries represented were so diverse, that it seemed unreasonable to expect much greater progress than that. In the upshot, those modest hopes have proved too timid. Not only have the main problems been explored, but a wide area of preliminary agreement has been reached between delegations. Our governments will now have before them agreed drafts of many articles of a trade charter, and we turn over to the Interim Drafting Committee a wealth of concrete proposals. Differences, of course, remain. But after the thorough discussions which have taken place here, it should be much easier to compose them when the Committee meets at Geneva.

This wide measure of agreement on the official level appears all the more gratifying when account is taken of the varying economic situations in which the countries represented here find themselves. Some of them have been devastated by the war; others have escaped unravaged. Some of them are mature industrial economies, anxious to find expanded markets for their manufactures; others are underdeveloped industrially, and wish to diversify and increase their industrial production. Some of them believe in wide schemes of Government ownership of industry; others put more reliance on the initiative of private enterprise. Out of this diversity might well have come merely confusion of tongues and confusion of counsels. That instead there has emerged such wide preliminary agreement is a tribute to the goodwill and hard work of the delegates. Even more, it is a confirmation of the fundamental attachment of the Governments represented here to the purposes for which this conference was called. Differences remain over emphasis and methods; but all are agreed that Governments must take concerted action to free the channels of trade and to maintain a high and stable level of employment.

During the past weeks members of all delegations have had to thread the mazes of a great number of intricate special subjects. To most of the public, perhaps we should remind ourselves, these mazes remain mysterious and occult. To the uninitiated, the problem, for example, of confining the use of quantitative restrictions to balance of payment grounds is as much a riddle as the quantum theory. So that it is wise, I think, occasionally to recall the consequences which would follow if the work begun here should end in failure, and on the other hand the brighter future we can look forward to if these efforts succeed.

During the inter-war period, many of the problems which have been discussed here were considered, although never so comprehensively, at international conferences. Those conferences were abortive. Economic dislocations and depressions set in, which had not a little to do with producing the morbid political and psychological culture in which the seeds of war could sprout. We must see to it that that melancholy course of events is not repeated.

If, on the other hand, we can create an institutional structure to outlaw those practices which have had such a harmful effect on world trade in the past, and to settle recurring commercial difficulties, we will have done much to rid the peoples of the world of the fear of insecurity, want and unemployment. All countries are affected by changes in the volume and pattern of world trade—my own country not least of all. We must see to it that such trade is expanded as much as possible. If goods can be made to pass freely and in good volume through the arteries of international trade, this lively current will ultimately have a tonic effect on the fortunes and well-being of individuals all over the world.

For the success which has been achieved already, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Delegation feel that you have been in no small measure responsible. Your long experience and unflinching tact have been constantly at the service of the conference, and have helped it over many difficulties. We are also indebted to the hospitality of the United Kingdom Government, which has done so much for the comfort and convenience of the delegates. We would like to pay a special tribute to the initiative of the United States Delegation in presenting to the conference such a carefully prepared draft charter for its consideration. I feel certain that no such rapid progress could have been made if the conference had not been able to take the United States draft as the basis for its discussions. It is usually held to be a parent's prerogative to dote on his children. But the United States Delegation have looked on unflinchingly while their offspring has been probed and punched. Parenthood can seldom before have reached such heights of tolerance and forbearance. It is a spectacle which has commanded our admiration. We only hope that as a result of this hardening process which has begun so early, the infant will grow up to a long and lusty life.

We have made a good start. But much still remains to be accomplished, and I am sure that there is no one here who is in danger of falling into complacency. The Canadian Delegation take the preliminary agreement which has been reached here as a good augury for final success when we continue our work next year.

604.

DEA/9100-A-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa,] December 27, 1946

INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION; FORTHCOMING MEETINGS; CABINET AND INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEES ON EXTERNAL TRADE POLICY

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 27th, it was agreed that the procedure recommended by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (see External Affairs memorandum, December 23rd, 1946) in the matter of a base date for tariff negotiations, restoration of 1939 tariff levels by proclamation and notification to other Commonwealth governments and the United Nations be approved.

It was also agreed that a Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy be established, to consist of the following Ministers:

Secretary of State for External Affairs (Chairman); Minister of Agriculture;
Minister of Trade and Commerce;
Minister of Finance; Minister of National Revenue;

the Cabinet Committee to establish a subordinate interdepartmental advisory committee of nominees of departments represented on the Cabinet Committee and a representative of the Bank of Canada.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Department of External Affairs

[Ottawa,] December 23, 1946

MEMORANDUM RE MULTILATERAL TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS
AT LONDON AND GENEVA

At the recent meeting in London of the Preparatory Committee on Trade and Employment, Canada undertook, along with the other Commonwealth countries, to inform immediately the U.N. Secretariat as to the base date in respect of which preferential margins will be made subject to negotiation. This undertaking cannot be honored, and preparations here for the negotiations cannot be put in hand, until a policy decision in the matter has been taken by the Canadian Government.

In its expressed willingness to consider substantial reductions in its customs duties in return for, inter alia, the substantial narrowing of margins of preference in those countries possessing preferential regimes, the United States has in mind the margins of preference as they stood immediately pre-war, i.e.—those of 1939. In most of the Commonwealth countries, the margins of today are those of 1939; in Canada, however, the operative margins throughout almost the entire Customs Tariff have been materially increased by reason of the reductions in duty unilaterally accorded to the United Kingdom under the provisions of the War Exchange Conservation Act. Under this Act, duties against United Kingdom imports were completely removed on many important items forming a schedule to the Act; on practically all other items in the tariff, the duties were reduced by discounts ranging from 25 to 50%. These greatly widened de facto preferential margins are still operative, no action having been taken by the Government to terminate the Act under which they were created. The termination clause in the Act reads as follows:

This Act shall be deemed to have come into force on the second day of December, one thousand nine hundred and forty, and to expire on the date of the issue of a proclamation under the WAR MEASURES ACT declaring that a state of war no longer exists or on such earlier date as may be fixed in a proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Apart from the fact that notification as to the base period must be given at once to all interested countries, the situation is one that must be clarified in order that those responsible for the complicated tariff negotiations now envisaged may know what is their bargaining position. If they are to proceed toward negotiating reductions of 1939 preferential margins in relation to the actual War Exchange Act duties applicable today to United Kingdom goods, it follows: that (1) they have no bargaining power in respect of the U.K. or other Commonwealth countries, and (2) the narrowing of the margins can be achieved only by reducing drastically the duties applicable to the United States and other most-favoured-nations. An extreme, but actual, illustration is that of a major Canadian industry whose protection against foreign competitors might, by the application of this formula, be reduced from a rate of 30 p.c. to one of 5 p.c., ad valorem.

From a strictly technical and purely negotiating point of view, it would be desirable that the war-time reductions in duties on U.K. goods be withdrawn by Order-in-Council, effective immediately. It is recognized, however, that such action would present extreme difficulties in respect of general policy toward the United Kingdom. It is suggested, therefore, that the Governor in Council do now by Order authorize the issuance of a proclamation as of June 30, 1947, providing for the termination of the relevant provisions of The War Exchange Conservation Act. Should it be the case that, at the approach of the above-mentioned date, the multilateral tariff negotiations are still not completed and the Government be of opinion that the reduced duties against U.K. imports should temporarily be continued in effect, another Order-in-Council could be passed deferring the date of issue of the proclamation.

Action along the lines of the above suggestion would automatically restore our bargaining position vis-à-vis all countries. It would, however, avoid the immediate re-imposition of the former higher rates against United Kingdom imports and permit time and scope for negotiations on an effective basis with both Commonwealth and other countries. Canada's new tariff relations with the United Kingdom could then be determined by the outcome of the forthcoming multilateral negotiations.

SECTION D

ORGANISATION POUR L'ÉDUCATION, LA SCIENCE ET LA CULTURE DES NATIONS UNIESUNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

605.

DEA/5582-H-40

*Mémoire du chef, la direction de l'information, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum from Head, Information Division, to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] January 30, 1946

At Mr. Claxton's request, I am sending him the attached memoranda on UNESCO and expect to supply him with at least one more.<sup>1</sup> He is giving some consideration to the possibility of raising the matter of the National Commission, as called for under the UNESCO Constitution,<sup>2</sup> at some stage of the Dominion-Provincial Conference, because if such a body is decided upon by the Federal Government it would presumably have to be set up in conjunction with the provincial governments so far as its educational aspect was concerned. The idea of a continuing Dominion-Provincial committee, serving the national purpose in this way, might appeal to the provinces now.

T. W. L. M[ACDERMOT]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire du chef, la direction de l'informationMemorandum by Head, Information Division

[Ottawa,] February 2, 1946 [sic]

NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR UNESCO

A National Commission, broadly representative of the educational, scientific and cultural interests of the nation, is an integral part of the UNESCO machinery in each country member. It would speak for these interests and advise the government from this point of view. Through its head office and secretary, the work of UNESCO could be transmitted to all parts of Canada by the government.

Such a body, however, has other useful possibilities.

<sup>1</sup> Seulement un des mémoires est reproduit ici.

<sup>2</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1945, N° 18.

<sup>1</sup> Only one of the memoranda is printed here.

<sup>2</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1945, No. 18.

At present, the Department of External Affairs, alone, receives a considerable number of inquiries and requests through its diplomatic offices abroad, and from other quarters, concerning cultural, scientific, and educational matters. These include:

- (a) offers of scholarships to Canadians by foreign governments
- (b) exchange of professors, lecturers, scientists, orchestral conductors, etc.
- (c) requests for Canadian music, written and recorded
- (d) requests for information about special instruction, courses, degrees available in Canada.

Increasing stress is laid by our representatives on the potential value to Canada, in cultural and in commercial terms, of developing these aspects of our national life. A particular example is the exchange of scholarships which bring foreigners to our shores under the most favourable conditions for studying the country and returning home with an understanding of its institutions, and with numerous personal friends and acquaintances for future contact. There are few more lasting ways of laying foundations for the development of Canadian trade, industry and applied science, and the extension of Canadian influence abroad.

The growth, in variety and volume, of this interest in Canadian intellectual and cultural possibilities is, of course, a direct outcome of the growth of Canada itself as a nation among nations. The fighting power, the industrial expansion, the financial initiative, the political contribution in international affairs, and the now considerable diplomatic service developed during the war, have created a world-wide interest in Canada. On most lines we are nationally equipped to respond to that interest and to satisfy it. On the intellectual and cultural side we are not.

There is no central office, far less a Government Department, through which our educational institutions, and our scientific and cultural organizations, can be collectively informed of the international interest in them, or through which they can reach other nations and governments. Independent effort, and private undertakings, are endeavouring to do something. But they have neither the resources nor the administrative means to deal with the matter on the scale it has now reached.

The Office of the National Commission could serve a most useful purpose, therefore. To it enquiries could be referred, and from it suggestions and projects approved by the universities, or the artists, or the adult educationalists, etc. of the country could be obtained for transmission abroad. It could facilitate special arrangements, conduct correspondence, compile information.

Apart from these immediately practical needs for a central office, there is also need for a medium through which the rather scattered intellectual and cultural life of Canada might be brought together. Its members, French and English speaking, provincially divided, and often too independent to be financially strong, would, by meeting and discussing common problems in the Commission, gradually acquire a national outlook shared by all, and could develop a technique for co-operation. In the early stages many problems would arise, for example, in the appointment of members of the Commission. But if the main purpose was made clear, and a tentative, experimental approach to creating a national body was followed, beneficial results might be expected to follow.

606.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 398

London, February 11, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. Preparatory Commission UNESCO.

Financial and staff arrangements will be discussed Tuesday morning. There is much confusion in the minds of many delegates as to proper source of income and expenditure and proper expenditures. Understand United States delegates insist on budget for administrative expenditures only and that while UNESCO should advise on the expenditure of funds from voluntary agencies or Governments they should not accept responsibility for collection of such funds or for accounting for them. I understand this is your view but would welcome draft statement for use if necessary.

Peruvian delegate this morning proposed that UNESCO should solicit funds by sale of special stamps in the schools of all countries.

607.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 375

Ottawa, February 11, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Your telegram 398 of February 11th, Preparatory Commission UNESCO.

In our view you should avoid, if possible, taking a prominent part in the discussions on financial and staff arrangements for UNESCO. As you know, our view accords in general with the United States attitude as described in your telegram under reference and it would seem that initiative might appropriately be left in the hands of the United States delegation.

2. However, should you find it necessary to support United States position you might take the line that Canada appreciates the pressing needs of Europe in the educational fields and the high aims of UNESCO. Several agencies are already active rendering assistance including UNRRA, and, pending a clearer definition of the relationship between these agencies, inter se, and to the United Nations Organization, it is desirable to avoid having Governments already committed to heavy financial contributions to existing agencies faced with an additional charge in relation to an organization still in its preparatory stage.

608.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 485

Ottawa, February 22, 1946

Your 425 of February 14th. † Preparatory Commission UNESCO.

It would appear from the enumeration of sections in Paragraph 4 that a somewhat elaborate administrative machinery for UNESCO is planned. We should be glad to have a report on the size of the staff anticipated and the type of work which each section proposes to do. It is our view that, particularly in its early stages, UNESCO should proceed gradually until its functions are quite clear and its relationships with other United Nations activities under the Economic and Social Council have been determined. While interest in UNESCO in this Country is keen in many quarters, the manner in which it will operate and the scope of its interests have an important bearing on our active participation in it. It is to be remembered that in educational matters, in any case, it must be clear from the outset that recommendations, even reports, criticisms and suggestions bearing on education which emanate from UNESCO, must not in any way, as far as Canada is concerned, be allowed to encroach on this provincial field.

We are also interested in the course of the discussion on National Commissions, their functions, form and composition. Has any progress been made in any Member State towards setting up a National Commission? Australian procedure is particularly relevant in this connection.

609.

DEA/5582-A-40

*Mémoire du chef, la direction de l'information, au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, Information Division, to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] April 20, 1946

The Prime Minister's notes would suggest that he is not very much in favour of bringing UNESCO before Parliament for agreement and later executive action by Council unless there develops a fairly vigorous Commons clamour on the subject.

If the matter remains as quiet as it is now, then the Constitution could be accepted by Council without Parliamentary reference—a procedure to which Mr. Hopkins tells me there is no legal objection.

I have B.F.'d the file for April 29.

T. W. L. M[ACDERMOT]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

Ottawa, March 27, 1946

FORMAL ACCEPTANCE BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

1. Under authority of Order-in-Council P.C. 6634 delegates from Canada attended the United Nations Educational and Cultural Conference in London in November last, when a Final Act, a Constitution, and an Instrument establishing a Preparatory Commission, were drafted for a specialized agency of the United Nations to be known as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (hereinafter referred to as UNESCO).

2. These documents were tabled in the House of Commons at the opening of the present Session and it is now recommended that the Cabinet give consideration to the participation of Canada in this Organization and the acceptance by Canada of the attached Constitution.† As is indicated in the Report submitted by the delegation to the Prime Minister, the Constitution was agreed upon by the 42 nations at the Conference. It will come into effect when 20 acceptances have been received. It has been advised that the United Kingdom has already formally accepted Membership.

3. The primary purpose of the Organization is to promote peace and international understanding by helping to restore the cultural and scientific life of Europe, and, at a longer range, by providing an international agency through which nations may interchange personnel and information, reports and studies, concerned with the educational, scientific and cultural life of each other, to their mutual advantage.

4. It is a provision of the Constitution of UNESCO, Article I, para. 3, that "with a view to preserving the independence, integrity and fruitful diversity of the cultural and educational systems of the State Members . . . the Organization is prohibited from intervening in matters which are essentially within domestic jurisdiction".

5. It was similarly made clear by the Canadian Delegates at the Conference, under instruction, that no constitutional or administrative arrangements established by the Organization should have any application to matters of an educational character in Canada, which belong solely to the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. The Articles of the Constitution relating to optional action within each Member State make full allowances for this proviso.

6. In addition to the general responsibility of all Member States to consult and collaborate by means of the Organization, the specific commitments under the Constitution of UNESCO may be summarized as:—

(a) The responsibility of sending a delegation of not more than five members to the General Conference of UNESCO after consultation by the Government with a National Commission, if established, or with educational, scientific and cultural bodies. It would also be necessary to nominate a delegate to the Executive Board on any occasion when Canada was elected to that Board,

(b) The obligation of each Member State to submit UNESCO recommendations or conventions to its competent authorities within one year from the close of the session of the General Conference at which they were adopted.

(c) The responsibility of each Member State to make such arrangements as suit its particular conditions for the purpose of associating its principal bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters with the work of the Organization, preferably by the formation of a National Commission broadly representative of the Government and such bodies. (Article VII).

(d) The obligation of each Member State to report periodically to the Organization on its laws, regulations and statistics relating to educational, scientific and cultural life and on any action taken on the submissions referred to under (b) above.

(e) No direct financial commitment is involved under the Constitution. The General Conference of the Organization is to approve and give financial effect to the Budget and apportionment of financial responsibility among the Member States, subject to arrangements yet to be made with the United Nations Organization.

7. Since the Organization of the Conference of Allied Ministers of Education, and particularly since the November Conference of UNESCO itself, the Government has received and continues to receive a number of communications from organizations and individuals from all parts of Canada (see attached list), urging Canadian participation in this Organization and drawing attention to the benefits that would accrue from such Membership. It would appear also that through such an Organization the Government could have some means, not now available, of dealing with cultural and scientific exchanges with other countries for which there has been increasing need as the international stature of this country has grown during recent years.

RECOMMENDATION:

That approval be given to acceptance by Canada of the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and to Canadian participation in the Preparatory Commission of the Organization established by an Instrument signed in London on the 16th day of November, 1945.

8. It is not thought that legislative action is required prior to acceptance. However, if the above recommendation is approved, direction is sought as to whether or not, before a formal submission recommending Canadian acceptance is made to Council, the Constitution should be submitted to Parliament for approval by way of Resolution which is the usual procedure.<sup>1</sup>

N. A. R[OBERTSON]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

LIST OF CANADIAN ASSOCIATIONS WHICH HAVE URGED ACTIVE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN THE WORK OF THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO)

The Canada Foundation
 The Canada and Newfoundland Education Association
 The Canadian Association for Adult Education
 Canadian Library Council
 Canadian Teachers Federation
 Canadian Committee on Intellectual Cooperation
 The United Nations Society in Canada
 Canadian Association of Scientific Workers
 Canadian Arts Council, Liaison Organization for the following groups:

The Royal Canadian Academy of Arts
 The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada
 The Sculptors Society of Canada
 The Canadian Society of Painters in Water Colour
 The Canadian Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers
 The Canadian Group of Painters
 The Canadian Society of Graphic Arts
 The Federation of Canadian Artists
 The Canadian Authors Association
 La Société des écrivains canadiens
 The Music Committee
 The Canadian Society of Landscape Architects and Town Planners
 The Dominion Drama Festival
 The Canadian Handicrafts Guild
 The Canadian Guild of Potters
 The Arts and Letters Club

British Columbia Federation for Education and Democracy
 British Columbia Music Teachers Association
 Labor Arts Guild of Vancouver

<sup>1</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup> The following note was written on the memorandum:

If necessary—better drop for present. If not, O.K. W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING]

University Women's Club, Vancouver
 Vancouver School Board
 Toronto Secondary School Masters' Wives Association
 Vancouver Art Gallery
 The Soroptimistic Group of Greater Vancouver
 The Dickens Fellowship, Vancouver
 The Vancouver Women's Music Group
 The Vancouver-New Westminster and District Trades & Labour Council
 Vancouver Labor Council
 Dock and Shipyard Workers' Union, Vancouver
 International Jewellery Workers' Union, Local No. 42
 U.A. Plumbers and Steam-fitters, Local No. 170
 Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees, Vancouver
 Vancouver District Metal and Chemical Workers' Union
 Hotel and Restaurant Employees' Union, Local No. 28
 Boiler-Makers and Iron Ship-Builders Union, Local No. 1

610.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 419

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
 au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne*

*Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
 to High Commissioner in Great Britain*

DESPATCH 879

Ottawa, May 20, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the meetings of the Committees of the Preparatory Commission of UNESCO called between May 24th and June 29th (UNESCO/Preparatory Commission/Executive Committee/10 March 18, 1946.).

It is hoped that Mr. Hudd<sup>1</sup> may be able to attend some of these meetings and that arrangements may be made for representation at the others. It might be possible, for example, to invite Dr. Malloch of the National Research Council to assist, particularly in connection with the Committee on Natural Sciences, and Mr. Moodie of Canadian Information Service might help with the work of the Committee on Media of Mass Communication.

It is realized, however, that it may be difficult to provide representation for all these meetings and I should be glad to know what arrangements can be made.

The observations that follow indicate the general principles that should govern our attitude towards the organization of UNESCO in its present stage. They are deliberately couched in somewhat cautionary or negative terms, principally as a corrective to what appears to be the present dominant tendency to expansion. It is assumed throughout that the first requisite is that whatever UNESCO undertakes to do, should be done efficiently. Only in this way can it inspire confidence in the judgment and capacity of its Secretariat.

<sup>1</sup> Le secrétaire par intérim, haut commissariat en Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup> Acting Secretary, High Commission in Great Britain.

In Canada, apart from a question concerning the purposes of UNESCO no attention has been given to the Constitution of UNESCO in the House of Commons. A very considerable amount of public discussion of the matter, however, has been taking place in the press, and amongst such bodies as the Canadian Arts Council, the Canada-Newfoundland Education Association, and the Canadian Association of Scientific Workers, and on various platforms, while further discussion is planned by other organizations during the next two or three months. The Government has also received a number of letters on the subject.

In general, this discussion and correspondence has been in favour of Canadian membership in UNESCO. But it is clear that the Provincial governments are watching developments closely. They are naturally much concerned with the educational implications of the Organization. It is important, therefore, that we should be kept fully informed of the discussions in the Preparatory Commission, the Executive Committee, and the Sub-Committees, not only that we may be in a position to answer questions submitted in the House of Commons and by letter, but that we may be able to form some judgment of the scope and practicability of UNESCO itself.

With regard to the aims of UNESCO adumbrated in documents already received, we appreciate the potential value of an organization through which the educational, scientific and cultural pursuits of member states can be co-ordinated and their fruits exchanged with mutual benefit. A centre through which the normal activities of nations in these fields might be made more easily accessible would be of great value. It would also serve the purpose, particularly important at this time, of using the resources of more fortunate nations to assist in the intellectual and cultural rehabilitation of communities seriously damaged by war in this respect.

It is possible, however, that in the enthusiasm that the opportunities offered by such an organization engender, desire may outrun performance. Plans, projects and programmes are easier to conceive than to finance and administer, and at this stage in the organization of UNESCO it will be for the advantage of UNESCO itself if a severely practical test be applied at every stage to the proposals raised in the Preparatory Commission.

Until the relationship of this specialized agency with the United Nations has been clearly defined and tested; until UNESCO itself has brought together and trained a staff; and until the capacity of the Organization to provide a reasonable range of essential services is proved; it is our view that the recommendations of the Preparatory Commission should lay the strongest emphasis on efficient organization and strictly limited immediate aims.

For example, such projects as those put forward for an international university, a text book of world history for universal use, and the establishment of institutes for special purposes urged by the Belgian government, would seem to be premature, not to say too ambitious, for consideration at this time.

The first restraining factor is that of finance. There is a danger that international planning will assume such proportions and call for such large expenditures that there may be a reaction against international responsibilities of all kinds. It is essential that the financial commitments of each specialized agency be viewed in the light of all others. Governments called upon to vote grants to a consolidated United Nations budget, or to a number of individual budgets, will narrowly scrutinize them in the light of what the return will be.

Budgetary considerations, therefore, should be a major factor at every stage of the deliberations of the Preparatory Commission. The aim throughout should be to keep the budget as small as possible without crippling the efficiency of the Organization, and to examine the work projected from the point of view of its actual and predictable value to the Canadian people.

In this connection it is desirable to have defined early in the proceedings and before any large numbers of staff commitments are made the administrative divisions of the Secretariat of UNESCO, and the precise purpose of each. It may be necessary to forego the establishment of some of those indicated until the financial resources of the Organization are settled.

From another point of view, certain functions suggested in the proposed terms of agreement with United Nations appear to overlap with those of the Information Department of the latter Organization. The preparation and distribution of information material may quickly become a costly and elaborate, and not always useful, operation, and UNESCO should be on its guard against entering this field unnecessarily or at points already attended to by other organizations.

A second restraining factor is the shortage of the trained and efficient personnel required for the administration of international organizations. Already demands are being made for staff by the Secretariat of the United Nations which cannot easily be met. In an organization like UNESCO where by its very nature less priority perhaps is given to practical and financial limitations than they must have, plans should be approved only if they can be effectively paid for and worked out.

The first statute of UNESCO, therefore, should be one of limitations for its own good and for its success in gaining support by participating governments.

Another consideration that will be of importance, particularly in this country, is the part the National Commission will play in the development of UNESCO. The Preparatory Commission might well examine in some detail the exact functions of these bodies, and their relationship with governments, and with UNESCO. While the ultimate decision on these points rests with the governments, it will be useful to have the views of other governments on this point. For Canada such a body would be without precedent, and its composition and functions are as yet not clearly perceived.

As a guiding principle, UNESCO may be regarded primarily as an organization to facilitate operations already under way in the educational, scientific and cultural field, or operations which governments and other bodies are now contemplating. The interchange of students, the diffusion of scientific and other knowledge, the development of art exhibitions and cultural exchange of all sorts, are all aspects of normal national life. Without embarking on any extensive new projects UNESCO could further such activities in many ways and in so doing discover the techniques of international co-operation in the intellectual and cultural field, on which it may build later.

I have etc.

H. H. WRONG
for the Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs

611.

DEA/5582-A-40

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1504

London, July 6, 1946

My despatch No. A. 486 of June 19th, UNESCO Constitution.

In the opening address at today's meeting of the P.C.,<sup>1</sup> Ellen Wilkinson<sup>2</sup> announced that 15 countries, including Brazil, China, Dominican Republic, France and Iran, have now accepted the UNESCO Constitution. She also urged that other member Governments should give very serious consideration to the possibility of taking this step at an early date. Please advise whether you can report any progress on this as far as Canada is concerned.

2. Huxley's report added little to what is already known. It is apparent, however, that the UNESCO Secretariat are in favour of a scheme of wide decentralization of UNESCO mainly through United Nations regional offices. As this will be the subject of discussion next week, I should be grateful if you would inform me whether you approve of the principle and, if so, to what extent you think it should be put into practice.

3. The draft Agreement between UNESCO and the United Nations, as signed in New York by Mudaliar and Seydoux, received unanimous approval, although, of course, it has still to be presented to the General Assembly in September and subsequently to the November UNESCO Conference in Paris.

4. I hope on Monday to take the opportunity of expressing the Canadian attitude to the general question of UNESCO policy as outlined in your recent despatches.

<sup>1</sup> Preparatory Commission.

<sup>2</sup> Présidente de la commission préparatoire de l'UNESCO.

<sup>3</sup> President of the Preparatory Commission of UNESCO.

612.

DEA/5582-A-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] July 8, 1946

ACCEPTANCE BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC
AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

1. Under authority of Order-in-Council P.C. 6634 delegates from Canada attended the United Nations Educational and Cultural Conference in London in November last, when a Final Act, a Constitution, and an Instrument Establishing a Preparatory Commission, were drafted for a specialized agency of the United Nations to be known as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

2. These documents were tabled in the House of Commons at the opening of the present Session. The Constitution was agreed upon by the 42 nations at the Conference. Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey signed this document for Canada.

3. UNESCO will come into being when the acceptances of 20 countries have been received. Fifteen nations including the other countries of the Commonwealth, have now accepted.

4. It has previously been recommended that a Resolution recommending acceptance of the UNESCO Constitution be submitted to the House during the present Session.

It is now understood that pressure of other Parliamentary business may make it desirable to defer the introduction of the UNESCO Resolution.

In favour of deferment it may reasonably be maintained that it is not absolutely essential to Canada's continued, if limited, participation in UNESCO activities to have the Resolution submitted in the House at this Session.

On the other hand, there are a number of arguments to favour acceptance at this Session:

(a) Repeated requests from UNESCO itself and from the United Kingdom Government that Canada should accept the UNESCO Constitution at the earliest opportunity.

(b) The General Conference of UNESCO is to meet in Paris on November 4th. It is assumed that 20 acceptances will have been received by that time and the Organization may formally come into existence. If Canada has not accepted the Constitution by that time she will not be a Member. The Legal Division of the Department is of the opinion that, in this case, Canada cannot attend the General Conference as of right. However, it is possible, even likely, that arrangements could be made to permit Canadian delegates to attend the Conference as non-voting observers.

(c) The pressure of a formidable number of organizations in Canada which have urged the Government to accept the UNESCO Constitution without delay.

R[OBERTSON]

613.

DEA/5582-A-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 1281

Ottawa, July 9, 1946

Your 1504 of July 6th—UNESCO Constitution.

1. Your para. 1. Due to pressure of Parliamentary business, it is not certain that Government will be able to effect acceptance of UNESCO Constitution at this Session.

2. There is no objection to the plan to establish regional UNESCO offices if these offices are restricted in number and function to practical essential requirements. Strong opposition should be asserted to any attempt to establish regional offices for purely political purposes of prestige, etc.

We should strongly support Article XII of the Draft Agreement between UNESCO and the United Nations providing that, so far as practicable, UNESCO regional offices be closely associated with such regional offices as the United Nations may establish.

We are seeking advice as to what regional offices the United Nations may plan to establish.

614.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1561

London, July 13, 1946

The largest single item on the agenda for the UNESCO Preparatory Commission was the discussion of the report on the work of the Programme Committees and further proposals of delegations, to which three days had been allocated. The first day and a half, however, was taken up with the question of general principles as enunciated by various countries, and little real progress was made. It was obvious that there was widespread support for some system of priorities, the necessity of which had previously been pointed out by the Canadian Delegation in my statement concerning the attitude of Canada towards UNESCO. To direct the discussion back to the subject of the above report, therefore, the Canadian Delegation suggested the following priorities:

(a) First—projects designed to advance the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the educational systems devastated by the war (b) Second—projects already under way or contemplated by governments and other bodies, which UNESCO might facilitate (c) Third—projects of immediate importance which UNESCO is not yet equipped to undertake but which it could bring to the attention of member governments or private institutions for their action in cooperation with UNESCO (d) Fourth—projects for which UNESCO itself may wish to assume full financial and administrative responsibility, the majority of these being set aside for the present and placed in the lowest category.

2. It was suggested at the same time that the meeting might proceed to discuss, either singly or by groups, the items put forward by the Secretariat in the light of the deliberations of the Programme Committees. This apparently induced the Commission to begin its examination of the report and proposals were individually graded in the following order of importance:—(a) First—those on which the Secretariat is authorized to begin preliminary work prior to November, 1946. It is understood that these projects have immediate urgency, but that work on them before November, 1946, does not necessarily constitute a permanent UNESCO commitment after that date. All projects are to be reviewed by the General Conference in November (b) Second—those to be placed before the November Conference as desirable for action during the first year of permanent UNESCO (c) Third—those to be placed before the November Conference with recommendation for their development in the second or later years of the existence of permanent UNESCO as seems desirable and feasible in the light of developing conditions.

3. Proposals involving assistance to war-devastated countries were automatically given the highest priority.

4. From the foregoing you will observe that the projects suggested by the Secretariat as a result of the deliberations of the Programme Committees have been virtually rubber-stamped and referred to the November Conference which will have to make the final selection as to the importance and timing of the various operations which might be undertaken by UNESCO.

615.

DEA/5582-A-40

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au ministre de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of National Health and Welfare

[Ottawa,] July 19, 1946

ACCEPTANCE OF UNESCO CONSTITUTION BY GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

In November, 1945, an Educational and Cultural Conference in Paris drafted a Constitution for a United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Mr. Massey signed this draft Constitution for Canada.

The UNESCO Constitution was tabled in Parliament at the beginning of the present Session. A copy of Treaty Series 1945, No. 18, containing the UNESCO Constitution is attached.†

The Constitution provides that the Organization shall come into being when the Acceptances of twenty member states shall have been received. Sixteen nations, including all other countries of the Commonwealth, have now accepted. A partial list of the countries that have accepted is attached.

The Canadian Government has received recommendations from the Governments of France and the United Kingdom and from the Preparatory Commission of UNESCO urging that Canada should accept the UNESCO Constitution at the earliest opportunity.

The pressure from organizations and individuals in Canada for speedy acceptance of the Constitution has become quite formidable. A list of societies that have urged full Canadian participation in UNESCO is attached. In addition to considerable news coverage, there have been some thirty or forty editorials in newspapers from all parts of Canada recommending Canadian participation. I am informed that the Toronto Globe and Mail intends to devote a full page to the subject sometime this month. A number of members of Parliament have expressed their interest in and sought information about UNESCO. The Provincial Ministers of Education have informed us that the Canada and Newfoundland Education Association will represent their views in regard to UNESCO. This Association has strongly urged acceptance of the Constitution.

In November, the General Conference of UNESCO will meet. It is almost certain that the required twenty acceptances will have been received by that time and the Organization can officially come into existence. If Canada has not accepted by that time she will not be able to attend the Conference as a voting member.<sup>1</sup>

H. W[rong]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1 / ENCLOSURE 1]

LIST OF COUNTRIES THAT HAVE ACCEPTED UNESCO CONSTITUTION

U.S.A.	China
France	Brazil
United Kingdom	Mexico
Australia	Denmark
South Africa	Iran
New Zealand	Dominican Republic
India

(Sixteen countries in all have now accepted. We are not at present informed of the identity of the three countries not mentioned in this list.)

<sup>1</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

Given to Miss Walls, P.C. office to be handed to Mr. Claxton when he comes to Council at 12.

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2 / ENCLOSURE 2]

LIST OF CANADIAN ASSOCIATIONS WHICH HAVE URGED ACTIVE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN THE WORK OF THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO)

The Canada Foundation
 The Canada and Newfoundland Education Association
 The Canadian Association for Adult Education
 Canadian Library Council
 Canadian Teachers' Federation
 Canadian Committee on Intellectual Cooperation
 The United Nations Society in Canada
 Canadian Association of Scientific Workers
 Canadian Arts Council, Liaison Organization for the following groups:

- The Royal Canadian Academy of Arts
- The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada
- The Sculptors Society of Canada
- The Canadian Society of Painters in Water Colour
- The Canadian Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers
- The Canadian Group of Painters
- The Canadian Society of Graphic Arts
- The Federation of Canadian Artists
- The Canadian Authors Association
- La Société des écrivains canadiens
- The Music Committee
- The Canadian Society of Landscape Architects and Town-Planners
- The Dominion Drama Festival
- The Canadian Handicrafts Guild
- The Canadian Guild of Potters
- The Arts and Letters Club

British Columbia Federation for Education and Democracy
 British Columbia Music Teachers Association
 Labor Arts Guild of Vancouver
 University Women's Club, Vancouver
 Vancouver School Board
 Toronto Secondary School Masters' Wives Association
 Vancouver Art Gallery
 The Soroptimistic Group of Greater Vancouver
 The Dickens Fellowship, Vancouver
 The Vancouver Women's Music Group
 The Vancouver-New Westminster and District Trade & Labour Council
 Vancouver Labor Council
 Dock and Shipyard Workers' Union, Vancouver
 International Jewellery Workers' Union, Local No. 42
 U.A. Plumbers and Steam-fitters, Local No. 170
 Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees, Vancouver
 Vancouver District Metal and Chemical Workers' Union
 Hotel and Restaurant Employees' Union, Local No. 28

Boiler-Makers and Iron Ship-Builders Union, Local No. 1
 The Canadian Council of Professional Engineers and Scientists, which is a Council of the Presidents of the undermentioned:

Agricultural Institute of Canada
 American Institute of Electrical Engineers, Canadian Section
 Canadian Assn. of Professional Physicists
 Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy
 Canadian Institute of Surveying
 Canadian Society of Forest Engineers
 The Chemical Institute of Canada
 Dominion Council of Federated Professional Employees
 Dominion Council of Professional Engineers
 Institute of Radio Engineers
 Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.
 Canadian Psychological Association
 Fédération nationale St-Jean-Baptiste
 The National Council of Canadian Universities
 Ontario Teachers Federation
 The Canadian Federation of Home and School
 Saskatchewan Teachers' Federation
 New Brunswick Teachers' Association

616.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
 au haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
 to Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain*

DESPATCH 1324

Ottawa, August 3, 1946

Sir,

I should like to refer to my Despatch No. 942 of May 28† acknowledging your Despatch No. A.411 of May 18† transmitting an invitation from the Deputy Executive Secretary of UNESCO to the Government of Canada to join in the UNESCO Month celebrations being held in Paris in connection with the First General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The Deputy Executive Secretary should now be informed that the Government of Canada will be glad to take part in such a program and that further details regarding the form of Canadian participation will be transmitted as soon as possible.

For your own information you might like to note that the extent of our participation will largely be determined by whether or not the UNESCO Constitution has been ratified by the Canadian Parliament. A resolution seeking the approval of Parliament has been placed on the Order Paper and it is possible that it may be introduced by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs some time next week, in which case approval might be secured by the end of the present Session. The House timetable is so crowded however that discussion of the resolution cannot be considered as certain. I shall be glad to advise you further as soon as any information is available on these matters.

I have etc.

H. H. WRONG
for the Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs

617.

CH/Vol. 2104

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 1441

Ottawa, August 7, 1946

Yesterday the House of Commons, without recorded vote, approved resolution for Canadian Membership in U.N.E.S.C.O. Similar action expected by the Senate shortly.

618.

DEA/5582-H-40

Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire-trésorier, l'Association canadienne de l'Éducation

Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary-Treasurer, Canadian Education Association

Ottawa, August 30, 1946

Dear Sir,

I am writing to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 24,† in which you describe the interest of the Canadian Education Association in the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and refer to the provisions of the Constitution of that body which relate to the establishment of a National Commission and consultation with educational, scientific and cultural bodies.

Since the passage of the resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament recommending the participation of Canada in UNESCO there has not been time for the development of plans by the Government for the establishment of a National Commission and for the method of selecting the Canadian delegates to the first Conference of UNESCO. These matters are now under active consideration and I can assure you that it is the intention of the Government to consult the Canadian Education Association before a final decision is reached.

The principal fields of activity in which UNESCO will begin its operations cannot be determined until after the first General Conference has met, at which time we should be in a better position to determine the most desirable composition of a Canadian National Commission. This will require further study, as it will not be an easy task to establish such a body in a form which will satisfy all Canadian organizations which are active in the very wide range of activities included within the scope of UNESCO. As an interim measure, it may therefore prove to be the best course for an ad hoc committee to be established with which the Government could consult on the selection of the representatives to the first General Conference of UNESCO. Such a committee might also be of assistance in making suggestions to the Government on the composition and organization of a Canadian National Commission when the time comes to establish this body on a regular basis. The Canadian Education Association will be consulted in any event.

I think it would be helpful if you were to let me know the name of the person whom the Directors of the Canadian Education Association have selected as suitable to act as a representative at the General Conference of UNESCO.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

619.

DEA/5582-F-40

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures à la direction de l'information<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Information Division<sup>1</sup>

[Ottawa,] September 20, 1946

I have not had time to study closely the report of the UNESCO Budgetary Committee but a cursory examination causes a good deal of alarm at the size of the expenditure contemplated. I think that the report should be sent to the Department of Finance. I am quite sure that we should have some difficulty in getting approval for a Canadian contribution of this size.

The question of the scale of contributions will, of course, come up but there is nothing much we can do about it until after the General Assembly. I believe we should not concur in any scale which assesses us at one-sixth or one-seventh of the U.S. contribution. The areas in which a reduction of estimates seems to be needed at the present time are: to some degree in the provision of personnel, but particularly under the headings of "Studies and Surveys”, “Publication and Production”, “Grants-in-Aid and Awards” and “Consultation and Field Services”. I observe that a line has been drawn through the classification of projects, implying, I suppose, that it is subject to considerable revision. I do not feel that it is essential at the first conference to go in for such questions as “Creation of a Foundation for Writers”, “Establishment of Scholarships for Poets”, “Prize for Children’s Books”, “Publication of Abstracts of Museo-graphical Publications” and a good many more plans of this nature.

<sup>1</sup> À L. A. D. Stephens

<sup>1</sup> To L. A. D. Stephens

These comments are not inspired by hostility to UNESCO itself but by a strong feeling that it will go further if it starts more slowly and builds up support for its activities by doing fewer selected jobs of considerable popular appeal and of utility to governments before it branches out into more exotic fields. I am afraid it will commit hari-kari if it begins on this scale and plan. A secretariat half the size, and a list of projects  $\frac{1}{4}$  as long would be much wiser.

H. W[RONG]

620.

DEA/5582-M-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d’État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au secrétaire d’État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] September 24, 1946

Less than two months will elapse before the first general Conference of UNESCO opens in Paris and we must push on with the preparations without delay. I attach a memorandum which, if you approve, might be circulated to members of the Cabinet on the steps which it seems necessary to take immediately. If you will let me know whether the proposals in this memorandum are acceptable, I shall institute whatever further steps are required.

I am afraid that we are going to have a good many headaches over our relationship with UNESCO, partly because its field of operations is very broad and interests large numbers of people outside governmental circles and partly because the plans, which are being developed by the interim secretariat of UNESCO and various preparatory committees, seem to me to contain a good deal of gas.

You may remember that you signed, last month, a letter addressed to the Canadian Education Association, in the course of which it was stated that consideration was being given to the appointment of an interim advisory board to consult with the government before the Conference took place. The list of names attached to the enclosure represents a departmental effort to establish a body of reasonable size which is, at the same time, fairly representative. It occurs to me that it might be desirable to add Mr. Vincent

Massey to this list and perhaps to ask him to act as Chairman,<sup>1</sup> but I thought it better to put this to you rather than to include the suggestion in the draft memorandum for Cabinet.

As I expect that there will be complaint over whatever course is adopted, it has seemed to me that Cabinet should take the decision even on the establishment of a short-lived interim body.

H. W[RONG]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet de mémorandum du ministère des Affaires extérieures au Cabinet

Draft Memorandum from Department of External Affairs to Cabinet

[Ottawa,] September 24, 1946

PROPOSED INFORMAL COMMITTEE ON UNESCO

The Canadian ratification of the Constitution of UNESCO has now been deposited in London and the first General Conference will open in Paris on November 19th. Some interdepartmental preparations for this Conference are now in progress but under the Constitution Member States are required to establish and maintain contact with non-official bodies in their countries which are concerned with educational, scientific and cultural questions. This obligation relates both to the appointment of the delegation and to consultation on matters arising in the operations of UNESCO.

2. Under Article IV of the UNESCO Constitution, Canada is obligated to appoint a delegation to this Conference "after consultation with the National Commission, if established, or with educational, scientific and cultural bodies". As a National Commission of UNESCO has not yet been established in Canada, it is necessary to find some other means of consultation with representative organizations in Canada with a view to appointment of a Canadian delegation to the November Conference.

3. A closely allied problem is raised by Article VII of the UNESCO Constitution:

(i) Each Member State shall make such arrangements as suit its particular conditions for the purpose of associating its principal bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters with the work of the Organization, preferably by the formation of a National Commission broadly representative of the Government and such bodies.

(ii) National Commissions or national co-operating bodies, where they exist, shall act in an advisory capacity to their respective delegations to the General Conference and to their Governments in matters relating to the Organization and shall function as agencies of liaison in all matters of interest to it.

In the second clause the words "shall act in an advisory capacity to their respective delegations" are intended to mean, not that the National Commissions or other bodies should go to the General Conference as advisers to the delegation on the spot, but that they should be consulted in the course of preparations for the General Conference and should be kept informed of what is going on.

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal note:

4. The appointment of a Canadian National Commission presents great difficulties and the appointment of any body of reasonable size (say 20 or 25 in all) is likely to give rise to complaint that various interests have been overlooked. So far as is known at the moment, the only country which has as yet appointed a National Commission is the United States, which has established by statute a Commission of 100 members, with a smaller steering group. It has been learned informally that the Australian and New Zealand Government do not contemplate taking steps for the present to set up National Commissions, and that probably Australia will not establish such a Commission at all. No information has yet been received on what is being done in the United Kingdom or in other countries. There has not been time to develop plans for a National Commission since Canadian participation in UNESCO was approved by Parliament last month. Furthermore, the chief activities which UNESCO will undertake at the beginning will not be known until after the first General Conference, at which there is likely to be considerable difference of opinion on the range of activities and order of priorities. It seems wise, therefore, to postpone any decision on the form of domestic organization until after the Conference.

5. Especially because the field of potential operations of UNESCO is very wide and will touch in Canada on matters within the competence of Provincial Governments as well as on activities of the Federal Government and of many non-official organizations, it is important that Canada should be represented by a competent delegation, the membership of which should be acceptable to public opinion. It is also necessary, if we are to abide by the terms of the Constitution, that non-official agencies should be consulted as soon as possible.

6. The recommendation is, therefore, made that a temporary advisory committee of mixed official and non-official composition should be established at once. The terms of reference of this Committee might be:

(i) To make recommendations on the composition of the Canadian delegation to the General Conference of UNESCO in November, and

(ii) To make recommendations on the means whereby the principal Canadian bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters may best be associated with the work of the Organization, by the formation of a Canadian National Commission or by other means.

7. A list of suggested members for this interim committee is attached hereto. If this recommendation is accepted, the committee should be summoned as soon as possible. Non-official members resident outside Ottawa should presumably be paid their expenses of attendance. A session of two or three days in length might suffice.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

AD HOC COMMITTEE TO ADVISE GOVERNMENT ON UNESCO MATTERS

- Dr. J. E. Robbins—Education Branch, Dominion Bureau of Statistics.
(Adviser to UNESCO delegation, November 1945)
- Charles E. Phillips—Secretary, Canadian Education Association (This Association is authorized to represent provincial Departments of Education)
- Senator L. M. Gouin<sup>1</sup>
- Dr. C. N. Crutchfield—Secretary, Canadian Teachers' Federation
- Dr. R. C. Wallace—Principal, Queen's University (Member of UNESCO delegation, November 1945)
- Dr. Marius Barbeau—National Museum of Canada
- Mr. H. O. McCurry—Director, National Gallery of Canada
- Dr. C. J. Mackenzie (or nominee)—President, National Research Council.
- Edmond Turcotte—Editor, recently Director of Public Relations of UNESCO Preparatory Commission (Member of UNESCO delegation, November 1945)
- Herman Voaden (or nominee)—President, Canadian Arts Council (The Arts Council represents 16 federated national artists organizations.)
- Miss Margaret Gill—Secretary, Canadian Library Association
- Walter B. Herbert—Director, The Canada Foundation
- G. C. Andrew—Director, Canadian Information Service
- 1 or 2 representatives—Department of External Affairs.

621.

DEA/5582-H-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au directeur, l'Université Queen's

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Principal, Queen's University

Ottawa, September 30, 1946

Dear Mr. Wallace,

Consideration is being given to the early appointment of the Canadian delegation to the first General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) which is to be held in Paris commencing on the 19th of November, 1946. In accordance with the UNESCO Constitution, which has been accepted by the Canadian Government, each State is to appoint its delegates "after consultation with the National Commission, if established, or with educational, scientific and cultural bodies."

In view of the fact that no National Commission for Canada has been established, the Canadian Government has decided to invite a representative group to serve as a temporary advisory body and would be pleased if you are able to serve as a member of this committee.

<sup>1</sup> Le nom du sénateur Gouin fut rayé et fut remplacé par le nom de Paul Émile Côté, un député fédéral. Cette suggestion n'a pas été acceptée.

<sup>1</sup> The name of Senator Gouin was crossed out and replaced by the name of Paul Émile Côté, a Member of Parliament. This suggestion was not accepted.

The main functions of this committee are:

(a) To advise the Government on the composition of the Canadian delegation to the General Conference, and,

(b) To make recommendations on the means whereby the principal Canadian bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters may best be associated with the work of the Organization, by the formation of a Canadian National Commission or by other means.

It is felt that the work of this committee might be completed in two days, and that, in view of the necessity for early action, the committee should meet in Ottawa on Monday, the 7th of October, 1946. It is intended that the first meeting will take place in Room 268, House of Commons at 10:30 a.m.

It would be appreciated if you could inform Mr. L. A. D. Stephens, Department of External Affairs, Ottawa, as soon as possible by telegram or telephone (telephone 9-5317) whether you are able to serve on this committee.

In the hope that you can accept, and in order to give you some additional information concerning UNESCO, I am enclosing copy of a Progress Report† which has been prepared by the UNESCO Secretariat, and a copy of the Final Act of the Conference for the Establishment of UNESCO.† I also attach a list of those who are being invited to serve on the committee.

The Government will meet your travelling expenses and cost of accommodation while in Ottawa. The Department will arrange to obtain the necessary accommodation for you when advice of acceptance is received.<sup>1</sup>

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

AD HOC COMMITTEE TO DISCUSS DELEGATION TO UNESCO GENERAL CONFERENCE, NOVEMBER 19TH

Dr. J. E. Robbins—Education Branch, Dominion Bureau of Statistics
Senator L. M. Gouin
Charles E. Phillips—Secretary, Canadian Education Association
Dr. C. N. Crutchfield—Secretary, Canadian Teachers' Federation
Marius Barbeau—National Museum of Canada.
Edmond Turcotte—Editor "Le Canada"
H. O. McCurry—Director, National Gallery
Miss Margaret Gill—Canadian Library Association
Dr. J. G. Malloch—National Research Council
Herman Voaden—President, Canadian Arts Council

<sup>1</sup> La copie de cette lettre dans les dossiers du ministère n'est pas signée. Les initiales de M. St. Laurent y sont apposées, mais ceci indique seulement qu'il a approuvé le texte.

<sup>1</sup> The copy of this letter in the departmental files is not signed. The copy is initialled by Mr. St. Laurent but this only indicates that he approved the text.

Walter Herbert—Director, Canada Foundation
 Dr. R. C. Wallace, Principal, Queen's University.
 G. C. Andrew, Director, Canadian Information Service
 Dr. H. A. Innis—President, Royal Society of Canada
 Dr. Augustin Frigon—General Manager, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.
 Ross McLean—Acting Commissioner, National Film Board
 Ernest A. Côté—Department of External Affairs
 L. A. D. Stephens—Department of External Affairs.

622.

DEA/5582-F-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
 au sous-ministre des Finances*

*Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 to Deputy Minister of Finance*

Ottawa, October 3, 1946

I enclose copy of despatch No. A.766 of September 11th,† from the Acting Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom enclosing a copy of a Report of the Budget Committee† on the proposed Provisional Budget of UNESCO submitted at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the UNESCO Preparatory Commission.

You will note that the total of the proposed budget amounts to $7,565,000. and that the Canadian contribution would be 4.807% or 4.362% of the total.

After you have had an opportunity to examine the attached documents, I should be obliged for your opinion on the proposed budget and the share of it which Canada is asked to bear. It would be appreciated if this could receive your early attention as it will be necessary in the near future to draw up instructions for the Canadian delegation to the UNESCO General Conference in November.

H. H. WRONG

623.

DEA/5582-H-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
 au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] October 19, 1946

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE UNESCO GENERAL ASSEMBLY

After a good deal of consideration and discussion with those concerned, I suggest that the following delegation might be sent to the UNESCO General Conference in Paris, opening on November 19th. The names recommended below are taken from the panel of 18, submitted by the Temporary Committee called together on October 7th and 8th to advise the Government on UNESCO matters:

Delegates

Chairman—Mr. Doré, if he goes to Brussels, otherwise General Vanier.
Dr. G. Fred McNally
Mr. Herman Voaden
Mr. Edmond Turcotte
Dr. Floyd Willoughby

Alternates

Miss Elizabeth W. Wood
Miss Margaret S. Gill
Dr. Larmour

Advisers

Mr. Paul Beaulieu, Second Secretary, Canadian Embassy, Paris.
Mr. L. A. D. Stephens, Department of External Affairs.

(Stephens is the official of this Department who has done most of the preparatory work for this Conference and is the natural choice for Secretaryship of the Delegation, if he can be spared from the Department. I think myself we should let him go, as he would be a most useful member and it would be good experience for him as an officer of the Department.)

The delegation mentioned above is smaller in number than that submitted in my memorandum to you of October 15th.† We have omitted Dr. Bruchési, as it was considered undesirable to send Members of Parliament or Provincial officials. We have made Dr. Willoughby a delegate and Dr. Larmour an Alternate, and have omitted Dr. J. E. Robbins from the list of advisers. Therefore, instead of the 12 on our original list, we now have 10 only. I think that this is possibly the minimum which we should send to Paris. Comments on the above list are attached.†

If you could possibly wire me Monday that the above names are acceptable, I would then have an Order in Council drafted. The matter is urgent as the delegation should sail within three weeks.

624.

DEA/5582-F-40

*Le sous-ministre des Finances au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Finance to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, October 23, 1946

Dear Sir,

I am writing in reference to Mr. Wrong's letter of October 3rd, enclosing despatch No. A.766 from Canada House, regarding the budget of UNESCO, and the further letter of October 8th† from your Department enclosing a copy of that budget. Mr. Pollock of this Department has had several conversations on this matter with Mr. Stephens of your Department, and yesterday Mr. Bryce discussed it with Mr. Stephens and Mr. Edmond Turcotte, who was on the Canadian delegation to UNESCO and has served for a time on the staff of UNESCO in charge of publicity work. We have had the benefit of seeing Mr. Turcotte's memorandum† on the Secretariat and its plans, and the Report of the Drafting Committee of Preparatory Commission (Document 58 of July 12, 1946). We have not, however, any other information or reports on UNESCO and its work and purposes, and, in particular, no confidential appraisals by your Department of its real value, functions and problems. In the absence of careful appraisals of this kind by those more directly in touch with the subject, it is difficult to form a proper judgment of what budget is really required and justified in present circumstances. However, it is necessary to deal with the matter now as best we can for the guidance of those who will represent Canada at the meeting in November.

In general, I feel that it is very difficult to justify a budget of $7,565,000 this year for UNESCO to use for the various types of work and projects set forth in Document 58, which, so far as I know, gives the only description of the real purposes for which the money will be used. Many of these projects are no doubt worthy ones in themselves. Some of them would, I think be appropriate for action by individual Governments; others would appear to me to be more appropriate for action by private philanthropic organizations or by non-governmental international organizations of those primarily interested. Some of them, I believe, would be appropriate projects for UNESCO to carry out in later years when personnel and expenditures are not so urgently required for other more immediate international purposes. How far irrevocable decisions have been taken in regard to the nature of the programs and purposes to which UNESCO is going to devote its main efforts, I do not know. If, however, the consideration of the budget is to have any real significance, it would not seem too late to raise the important question of just what purposes the funds and efforts of UNESCO will be directed toward during the next year or two. In my view, these efforts should be concentrated in 1947 upon assisting in the urgent task of rehabilitating and re-establishing educational and scientific life in the devastated areas and creating the essential skeleton of organization for dealing later with the less immediate and urgent problems which merit international action through an agency of this kind.<sup>1</sup> From what documents have been made available to this Department and the discussions with Mr. Stephens and Mr. Turcotte, it does not appear that this

---

<sup>1</sup>Note marginale:

Plan to raise $100,000,000 approved by rec[onstruction and] rehab[ilitation] committee at Gen[eral] Conf[erence] of UNESCO Nov[ember] 25/46—not to be part of UNESCO budget. T. W. L. M[ACDERMOT] concentration of effort on urgent tasks and the creation of the minimum necessary organization are likely to take place unless a strong effort is made at this Conference to accomplish that objective.

<sup>1</sup>Marginal note:

It would, therefore, be appropriate from the point of view of this Department to request the Canadian delegation to the Conference to press strongly for the concentration of the efforts and activities of UNESCO in 1947 on urgent immediate problems, such as those involved in assisting in the rehabilitation and restoration of education and science in the devastated areas. They should also, I think, press for deferment of work on most of the projects listed in Document 58, even under Resolutions No. 1 and No. 2. From the very brief description of these projects that is given, it is difficult, if not impossible, to regard most of them as at all urgent in face of the present problems facing the world in international affairs, and particularly in the countries that have suffered severely from the war. On our own side, we have very heavy financial demands in connection with international organizations, as well as in connection with action which Canada itself is taking in the international sphere, for example, in making available credits to other countries. Under these circumstances, we feel that any expenditure on international organizations can only be justified if it produces important immediate results, or if it is absolutely essential to create the nucleus of an organization at the present time that will be of real importance in the long run.

It is impossible for us under these circumstances to attempt to say just what figure would be appropriate for the budget of UNESCO for 1947. It would certainly seem likely to be substantially below the figure of $7,565,000 recommended by the Budgetary Committee, unless at the Conference it is considered possible and necessary to do much more work in the field of relief and rehabilitation in respect of education and scientific and cultural life in the devastated areas. I note that the delegate from Czechoslovakia suggested that a figure of $5,000,000 should be the maximum budget for 1947 and apparently got some support, though not enough to carry his point. I gather that the American delegation at this Conference is apt to press for at least the budget that has been recommended, and possibly a higher one.

In regard to the formula for apportioning the costs among various countries, I think the scale that is decided upon for the United Nations should be the basis for use in UNESCO itself, with one qualification. In the case of the United Nations it may be decided that it is important not to have the United States contribute more than a certain specified percentage, because that might be considered as helping to give the United States a disproportionate influence in the organization. I doubt if the same danger exists in the case of UNESCO, and therefore contributions could be based on the United Nations formula of ability to pay, without the qualification of a ceiling. However, it would probably be best to reserve our position on this division of the budget costs among countries until we see what is happening on this subject in the United Nations Assembly discussions.

We would expect the Canadian delegation to UNESCO to press for and to do their best to exercise a careful control over the details of the budget of the organization as well as over its general magnitude and nature, to which I have addressed my remarks above. It will be difficult to provide any sort of budgetary or fiscal expert from Canada for this purpose at the UNESCO Conference. It seems to me that UNESCO is a case where it would be particularly valuable to have the budget reviewed in the appropriate portion of the United Nations organization to ensure that the scales of salaries, etc., are appropriate, that proper financial control is being exercised, and that there is no undesirable duplication of activities between this and other international organizations.

I think our delegation should also be aware of the budgetary and financial implications in the selection of the senior officials of UNESCO. This organization in particular, I believe, will be a difficult one in which to combine idealism and imagination, on the one hand, with practicality and good judgment, on the other. If possible, the Director General should be, as Mr. Turcotte suggests, a man of high personal attainments, who is both a man of vision and imagination and also a sound administrator. It may be difficult to find one man possessing a balance of the qualities desirable, but at least the group of men at the top, taken together, should have the proper balance of these virtues. They should be the kind of men, I think, who will ensure that UNESCO confines its activities to projects and programs where it can really accomplish something and not dissipate its funds and efforts in ill-considered and ineffective projects of a worthy but impractical nature.

I noted in Mr. Turcotte's report that he draws a distinction between the "loose constructionists", who wish to bring in all sorts of projects and purposes under UNESCO, and the "strict constructionists", who wish to confine its activities to what can and should be properly done by an organization of this kind within its constitution. Mr. Turcotte himself believes a "strict construction" is the wiser course, and I would certainly think that the Canadian delegation as a whole should be asked to take that view, particularly at this time.

I realize it may be difficult to have the Canadian delegation carry at the Conference the points and policies outlined above. However, it seems to me that the instructions to the Canadian delegation should be definite and clear-cut on these points, so that we can make quite clear to our own Parliament, who may criticize the UNESCO program and expenditures, the views held and advanced by the Canadian delegation.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

625.

DEA-FAH/8-1-1946/1A

Extraits du Commentaire à l'usage de la délégation à la première session de la conférence général de l'UNESCO<sup>1</sup>

Extracts from the Commentary for the Use of the Delegation to the First Session of the General Conference of UNESCO<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER 1

SECTION 1

DISCUSSION OF GENERAL POLICY

1. The Government of Canada attaches great importance to the successful accomplishment of the formidable tasks which UNESCO has undertaken. The Government considers that UNESCO is potentially one of the most valuable agencies to be established by the United Nations.

2. Precisely because of this earnest desire for UNESCO's success, the Government is deeply concerned that the first General Conference of UNESCO should establish a firm, if modest, groundwork upon which the future edifice may be raised. If the Organization is to be viable and effective, it must proceed at the Conference and during its first year of existence in such a way as to command the respect and confidence of its Member States and their peoples.

3. To accomplish this aim the Organization must direct its energies and resources not only towards the pursuit of its important, long-term objectives but also, the more particularly, to the achievement from the outset of short-term, urgent projects, the value of which will be immediately apparent to the peoples of the world and to their governments.

4. The principle of concentration of UNESCO's activities must be maintained. If the Organization were to undertake in the near future all the projects which have been suggested for it, it seems probable that this dissipation of effort and funds must result in a consequent absence of full success in any one field. If, however, effort can be directed to a smaller number of pressing projects, the Organization may hope for very solid successes calculated to convince the most skeptical of UNESCO's practical value. On this basis of limited, demonstrable achievement UNESCO will be able to go forward, stage by stage, to confront the innumerable challenges that will arise.

<sup>1</sup> Le Commentaire contenait aussi des explications détaillées des questions qui seraient discutées dans les commissions des programmes suivants: (a) l'éducation, (b) les beaux-arts, (c) les sciences naturelles, (d) les sciences sociales, les humanités et la philosophie, (e) les bibliothèques, les archives, les publications et les musées, (f) les média de communications et les relations avec les autres organisations internationales. Des rapports sur les activités des ces commissions sont dans le rapport de la délégation (voir DEA-FAH/S-198-1).

<sup>1</sup> The Commentary also contained detailed explanations of issues which would be discussed in the following programme commissions: (a) education, (b) creative arts, (c) natural sciences, (d) social sciences, humanities and philosophy, (e) libraries, archives, publications and museums, (f) media of communications and relations with other international organizations. Reports on the activities of the commissions are in the delegation's report (see DEA-FAH/S-198-1).

5. It should be kept in mind at all times that UNESCO is but one of a growing body of organs of the United Nations. It has common frontiers with the fields more specifically granted to other agencies—the Food and Agriculture Organization, the Sub-Commission on Human Rights, the U.N. Department of Public Information, etc. Continuing coordination of activities must be sought to reduce to a minimum the real possibility of overlapping and duplication of effort.

6. Emphasis must be given to the facilitative nature of UNESCO's task. Wherever possible it should avoid becoming a direct operational agent and should endeavour to inspire, encourage and assist existing organizations, private and official, to execute the projects upon which it has determined. It is recognized that there are no existing organizations in some of the fields in which UNESCO must work and here UNESCO will clearly have to do the work itself until such time as new bodies can be developed to meet the need.

7. Certain further remarks on general policy are contained in the part of the commentary dealing with the budget.

. . .

CHAPTER 2

SECTION 1

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENTS

1. The election of the President and Vice-Presidents of the General Conference appears as Item 5 on the Provisional Agenda.

2. Rule 20 of the UNESCO draft rules of procedure states:

The General Conference shall elect a President and seven Vice-Presidents, who shall hold office until the close of the session at which they are elected. The Vice-Presidents shall be elected on the basis of ensuring the representative character of the General Committee in accordance with Rule 25.

3. It is quite a normal procedure to elect as President of a Conference the head of the delegation of the receiving country. Such a precedent was set for UNESCO when Miss Ellen Wilkinson was made President of the 1945 Educational and Cultural Conference and of the UNESCO Preparatory Commission. Advice would indicate that the French will put forward the name of their delegation leader, probably Léon Blum. The Canadian delegation could appropriately support such a nomination.

4. In the election of the Vice-Presidents the concern of the delegation should be to urge the necessity of representation for the fields of endeavour of UNESCO and for geographical, political or cultural groups. For example, all seven Vice-Presidents should not be scientists but should include scientists, educators, artists, etc. Probably one Vice-President each should be elected from the United States, United Kingdom and Chinese delegations. Of the others, one might be drawn from eastern Europe, one from Latin America, one from the mid-East and one from the Commonwealth.

SECTION 2

ELECTION OF THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

1. The composition and functions of the Executive Board are recited in Article V of the UNESCO Constitution.
2. Section 2 of this Article outlines the considerations which should guide the Conference in the election of this eighteen-man Board.
3. While the Canadian Government would not refuse election to this Board, no active effort should be made by the delegation to seek support for the nomination of Canada.

...

SECTION 9

ADMINISTRATIVE, FINANCIAL, LEGAL AND EXTERNAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION: BUDGETARY QUESTIONS

BUDGET FOR THE YEAR 1947

1. The proposed UNESCO budget was submitted to the Department of Finance for consideration. The general feeling was that it was difficult to justify a budget of $7,565,000 this year for UNESCO to carry out the various projects which have been suggested by the Preparatory Commission. Many of these projects, though intrinsically worthy, could be postponed till later years. The Canadian delegation should therefore urge that funds be expended upon the most pressing tasks facing the organization and highest priority should be given to the task of rehabilitation of the educational, scientific and cultural life of the devastated countries. It should further urge the deferment of many of the projects suggested by the Preparatory Commission.
2. Canada is faced with heavy financial demands in connection with many international organizations and with other action in the international sphere—extension of credits, etc. Therefore, it is felt that any expenditure on international organizations can be justified only if it produces important immediate results or if it is absolutely essential to create the nucleus of an organization at the present time that will be of real importance in the long run.
3. It is impossible under the circumstances to attempt to say just what figure would be appropriate for the budget of UNESCO for 1947. It would certainly seem likely to be substantially below the figure of $7,565,000 recommended by the Budget Committee, unless the Conference should consider it necessary to increase the work of relief and rehabilitation. It is noted that the representative of Czechoslovakia on the Preparatory Commission pressed for a budget of $5,000,000 and received some support. Subject to developments at the Conference, the Canadian delegation might support some such figure. The American delegation will probably urge a large budget and will be supported by France, Australia and some others.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF MEMBER STATES

4. In regard to the formula for apportioning the costs among various countries, the scale decided upon for the United Nations should be the basis for use in UNESCO, with one qualification. In the case of the United Nations it may be decided that it is important not to have the United States contribute more than a specified percentage, because that might be considered as helping to give the United States a disproportionate influence in the Organization. It is doubtful that this same danger exists in the same degree in the case of UNESCO and therefore contributions to UNESCO could be based on ability to pay without the qualification of a ceiling. However, it will be necessary to reserve the Canadian position on division of budget costs among countries until instructions are received, based on discussion in the U.N. Assembly.

FINANCIAL AND ACCOUNTING RULES

5. The Canadian delegation will be expected to press for and do its best to exercise careful control over the details of the budget as well as over its general nature and magnitude. It would be particularly valuable to have the UNESCO budget reviewed in the appropriate portion of the United Nations organization to ensure that the scales of salaries, etc. are appropriate, that proper financial control is being exercised and that there is no undesirable duplication of activities between this and other international organizations.

6. The delegation should also be aware of the budgetary and financial implications in the selection of the senior officials of UNESCO.

. . .

SECTION 12

ADMINISTRATIVE, FINANCIAL, LEGAL AND EXTERNAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION: NATIONAL COMMISSIONS

1. Article VII of the UNESCO Constitution reads as follows:

NATIONAL CO-OPERATING BODIES

1. Each Member State shall make such arrangements as suit its particular conditions for the purpose of associating its principal bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters with the work of the Organisation, preferably by the formation of a National Commission broadly representative of the Government and such bodies.

2. National Commissions or national co-operating bodies, where they exist, shall act in an advisory capacity to their respective delegations to the General Conference and to their Governments in matters relating to the Organisation and shall function as agencies of liaison in all matters of interest to it.

3. The Organisation may, on the request of a Member State, delegate, either temporarily or permanently, a member of its Secretariat to serve on the National Commission of that State, in order to assist in the development of its work.

2. The words, "such arrangements as suit its particular conditions" were introduced into this article particularly to ease the problem of states with federal constitutions. The fact that education in Canada falls to the jurisdiction of the Provinces must condition to some extent the manner of Canada's participation in the activities of UNESCO, particularly any activities undertaken in Canada. However, the arts, sciences, and a considerable field of educational endeavour (e.g. adult education) are beyond the jurisdiction of any single administration and constitutional consideration need not, perhaps, weigh heavily in regard to these fields.

3. In order to fulfill its obligations under the UNESCO Constitution to associate principal bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters with the work of UNESCO, the Government called together a temporary committee on October 7th and 8th to advise the Government on matters relating to UNESCO. The main purposes of this committee were:

(a) to advise the Government on the composition of the Canadian delegation to the General Conference of UNESCO; and

(b) to make recommendations on the means whereby the principal Canadian bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters may best be associated with the work of the Organization by the formation of a Canadian National Commission or by other means.

4. There had been neither adequate time nor experience in UNESCO matters to permit the Government, at the outset, to appoint a Canadian National Commission dealing with the very wide range of topics which come within the general field of UNESCO. It was felt that there was some obscurity in Article VII of the UNESCO Constitution. The Canadian Government does not interpret Article VII (2) to mean that the national co-operating body would attend the General Conference as advisers to the delegation. The advice and consultation is to be given at a prior stage and is to be used in the framing of instructions for the guidance of the delegation. The instruction of the delegation is, of course, a government responsibility. Similarly, the Government understands that the words, "which function as agencies of liaison in all matters of interest to it" (the Organization) do not mean that the National Commission or co-operating bodies are intended to act as liaison between the Government and UNESCO, but rather as liaison between the Government and the principal bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters.

5. The advisory Committee resolved, "that this committee is of the opinion that it is desirable to establish a National Commission of UNESCO in Canada." The committee considered that the objects of a National Commission in Canada would be:

(a) To advise the Government of Canada in matters relating to UNESCO and in all matters referred to the Commission by the Government of Canada;

(b) To act in a consultative capacity with regard to the appointment of the Canadian delegates to the General Conference of UNESCO;

(c) To advise the delegates of Canada to the General Conference of UNESCO with regard to the participation of Canada in the work of the Organization;

(d) To serve as an agency of liaison with the principal bodies in Canada which are interested in matters directly relating to the activities of UNESCO;

(e) Generally to promote the objectives of UNESCO in Canada.

6. After a very full discussion the advisory committee agreed that no final decision on the functions and constitution of a National Commission could be reached until after the General Conference of UNESCO had clearly determined the programme of the Organization. Accordingly the committee recommended that it be called again at an early date after the conclusion of the November Conference, and that those who had been delegates to the Conference should be invited to attend this second meeting of the committee.

* * *

CHAPTER 3

WORK OF THE DELEGATION

ASSIGNMENTS

1. As will be noted from the timetable to be found as Appendix A† to this Commentary, the General Conference is scheduled to go into commission meetings on November 23. With the approval of the Chairman of the delegation the delegates and alternate delegates will be assigned to these various commissions and sub-commissions according to their specialized or technical knowledge in particular fields. A list of these assignments will be announced by the Secretary of the delegation.

2. The adviser to the Canadian member of a commission or sub-commission will usually be a member of the Department of External Affairs.

3. The members of the delegation serving on each commission or sub-commission will be expected to consult together as often as required concerning the problems before the commission and to keep the delegation as a whole fully informed of the progress of their commission and of the problems likely to come up.

4. The adviser on each commission and sub-commission will be responsible for keeping a daily journal which will contain the main decisions of the commission or sub-commission, the votes cast for and against these decisions and a note of the position adopted by the Canadian delegation.

5. The adviser on each commission or sub-commission will be responsible for preparing a final analytical report on the work of each commission and sub-commission during the conference. These reports should be submitted, as soon as possible after each commission or sub-commission has completed its work, to the Secretary of the delegation for incorporation into the general confidential report of the delegation.

DELEGATION MEETINGS

6. It is proposed that the delegation should meet every weekday morning at 9:00 o'clock when policy decisions on questions expected to arise during the day can be made and such instructions as may be sent by the Department of External Affairs can be conveyed to the delegation. At such meetings it has been found useful for the members of the delegation to give a brief summary of the discussions of the commissions or sub-commissions on which they are sitting.

7. After the regular delegation meeting the members will probably spend the day at meetings of the Conference and afterwards will meet informally in the delegation lounge to discuss the work of the Conference. Often they will attend a reception or give a reception to other delegations in the evening.

INFORMATION SERVICES

8. There will be a Canadian Information Service officer attached to the delegation. His role will be two-fold. He will handle all press and radio commitments; he will also provide an information service for the delegation.

9. Press Summaries of the Canadian Information Service will be available as well as copies of various Canadian, American and British newspapers.

10. In order to keep Canadian newspapermen and others informed of our general policy and to provide them with some background material, it will be useful to arrange to hold daily press conferences at a regular morning hour, perhaps after the delegation meeting. The press conferences are usually given by the Chairman of the delegation or a deputy designated by him. The arrangement of these conferences will be the concern of the C.I.S. representative.

626.

DEA/5582-M-40

*Mémoire de la deuxième direction politique au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Second Political Division to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] November 26, 1946

RE: CANDIDATES FOR THE POST OF DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF UNESCO

1. The question of candidates for the position of Director-General of UNESCO has, according to the Canadian delegation in Paris, now reached a point where a decision might usefully be made as to whether we should give support to one of the candidates already put forward or should nominate a candidate.

2. The United States has officially proposed Attorney General Biddle and has approached both the New Zealand Government and ourselves for support. Mr. Archibald MacLeish expressed the view that "while Mr. Biddle lacked the broad intellectual qualifications of Huxley for the post, he was his superior in powers of organization and administration". Mr. Wrong endorses this judgment and is of the opinion that on the whole the Canadian delegation should support Mr. Biddle against Dr. Huxley unless suitable candidates from other countries appear. The Canadian delegation in Paris reports, however, that a few European countries are strongly opposed to Mr. Biddle on account of his attitude at the Nuremburg trials.

3. The British delegation to UNESCO has received instructions to support Dr. Huxley, however, the Canadian delegation is of the opinion that in spite of these instructions they are not as individuals thoroughly in favour of Dr. Huxley's candidature and may easily yield at any strong sign of opposition. The United Kingdom view is that Mr. Biddle cannot compare with Dr. Huxley as far as intellectual capacity and driving force are concerned. They admit, however, that Dr. Huxley has a number of short-comings, not the least of which are a lack of administrative talent and a somewhat mercurial temperament upon which members of his staff have commented at times. The United Kingdom also has no wish to have any difference of opinion with the United States representatives who are known to have misgivings about Dr. Huxley.

4. Although Mr. Biddle and Dr. Huxley are the only two names so far officially nominated, other lesser known men have been mentioned. Mr. MacLeish has been rumored as a last minute compromise candidate but such a nomination would appear to be out of order since he has been nominated by the United States to membership of the Executive Board. Another possible candidate is Howard H. Wilson, at present Deputy Executive Secretary of the UNESCO Secretariat. The delegation have asked us for instructions regarding this candidate (Telegram No. 743 UNESC No. 2 of November 25 attached) † but there is no information available here as to his qualifications. He was previously the United States Secretary of the joint Canadian-U.S. Committee on Education, until a year and a half ago was a member of the Faculty of Education at Harvard and subsequently joined the Carnegie Endowment.

5. With regard to a possible Canadian candidate, the French delegation have approached our delegation with the suggestion that a Canadian would be particularly acceptable for the purpose of avoiding a deadlock between the United States and the United Kingdom nominees. Dr. Omond Solandt, at present Director General of Defence Research, was tentatively suggested and our delegation has asked for immediate instructions (Telegram No. 745, UNESC No. 3 of November 26 attached). †

R. G. RIDDELL

627.

DEA/5582-M-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur en France

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in France

TELEGRAM 653

Ottawa, November 27, 1946

SECRET. ESCUN No. 3. Following for Canadian Delegation, Begins: Your UNESC No. 3 of November 26th.†

1. Dr. Solandt would certainly not be available for post as Director General in view of heavy responsibilities which he now has in Ottawa. We are unable at present to suggest any alternative Canadian candidate.

2. We are enquiring informally from Canadian delegation in New York how the United Kingdom Government rates Huxley as candidate, and will let you know results of these enquiries. Meanwhile, if vote on Director General is taken, you should use your own judgment, bearing in mind the great importance at this stage of UNESCO having a Director General with marked administrative talent. Ends.

628.

DEA/5582-F-40

L'ambassadeur en France au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in France to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 765

Paris, December 5, 1946

IMMEDIATE. CONFIDENTIAL. UNESC No. 6. UNESCO budget.

1. Proposed UNESCO budget is 7,565,000 dollars.

2. Proposed supplementary appropriation for cultural reconstruction and rehabilitation is 434,000 dollars.

3. A further supplementary appropriation to cover costs of Preparatory Commission and general Conference is 950,000 dollars.

4. Total amount sought is 8,949,000 dollars.

5. Canadian delegation is considering proposing that items for 434,000 dollars and 950,000 dollars be accepted as they stand but that budget be reduced by an amount equal to the sum of these two, i.e., 1,384,000 dollars. This would mean a Canadian proposal that the actual UNESCO budget be reduced from 7,565,000 dollars to 5,181,000 dollars.

6. Would this proposal have your approval or do you consider the proposed cut too drastic? Would appreciate reply as soon as possible.

7. Contributions of member States. It is tentatively suggested by UNESCO Secretariat that contributions be on United Nations scale, modified by arithmetic required because of fact that United Nations has more members than UNESCO. Do you consider this satisfactory?

8. UNESCO wishes to set up revolving fund (working capital) as soon as possible. Contributions would be refundable to member States. Scale of contributions to be same as for budget. It is proposed that revolving fund should equal 3,000,000 dollars. Assume Canada will be prepared to make appropriate contribution to this fund.

629.

DEA/5582-F-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur en France

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in France

TELEGRAM 687

Ottawa, December 9, 1946

IMMEDIATE. ESCUN No. 8. Your telegrams No. 765 December 5th and 768 December 6th† UNESCO budget. Reference para[graph] six telegram 765. We would strongly approve of the cut which we do not repeat not consider too drastic. Comment on para[graph] seven and eight and telegram 768 will be forwarded shortly.

630.

DEA/5582-F-40

*Le sous-ministre des Finances au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Finance to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, December 11, 1946

Dear Sir,

I have received teletypes numbered 765 and 768† (UNESC Nos. 6 and 8) concerning proposed UNESCO budget on which you are requesting departmental comment.

With reference to para 6 of teletype No. 765, I do not consider the proposed cut (outlined in para 5) to be too drastic and feel, therefore, that the proposal should be approved.

I do not, however, consider the suggestion of the UNESCO Secretariat that "contributions of Member States be on the United Nations scale, modified by arithmetic required because of the fact United Nations has more members than UNESCO," to be satisfactory. Although the United Nations scale has not yet been finally determined, it appears certain in the light of discussions now taking place in the General Assembly that a ceiling will be imposed on the United States' contribution. The imposition of this ceiling will have the direct effect of reducing the United States' share relative to those of other countries. Since UNESCO seems to be a case where payment of too large a share of the budget by any one nation should not create any serious problems, I do not feel that the reasons which dictate the necessity for a ceiling on contributions for the United Nations need apply—at least not for the first two or three years of UNESCO's existence.

However, although I would not recommend acceptance of the United Nations scale as a basis for apportioning the expenses of UNESCO, I do not see that similar objections could be registered against the scale recommended by the Committee on Contributions to the General Assembly in Document A-80 dated 11th October, 1946.<sup>1</sup> This latter document which recommends a scale of contributions purporting to reflect relative "capacity to contribute" sets the Canadian share at 3.1% as compared with a U.S. share of 49.80%. I feel that after modification to take into account the smaller number of members in UNESCO, this scale could be accepted as a suitable basis for UNESCO contributions.

Regarding the Revolving Fund, I feel that the sum contemplated is extremely large in relation to the proposed first budget of the organization and I would suggest that the efforts of the Canadian Delegation should be directed toward minimizing the overall size of this Fund. The scale of contributions to this Fund should be based on the same considerations as are referred to in the paragraph above.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

631.

DEA/5582-F-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au chef, la direction de l'information

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Head, Information Division

URGENT

[Ottawa,] December 11, 1946

The insistence of the Department of Finance in apportioning contributions to the UNESCO budget on straight capacity to pay may get us into difficulties. It is certainly inconsistent with our recognition at New York of the case for a ceiling on United States contributions.

It seems to me that a good deal depends on what the Assembly decides in New York. If the United States contribution to the U.N. budget is to be of the order of forty to forty-five percent, the principle of a ceiling is established which at the same time reflects very largely the ability of the United States to pay. Our concern, then, is to make sure that the per capita contribution of the United States citizen is not lower than that of the Canadian citizen.

<sup>1</sup>Le document A-80 n'est pas reproduit dans la série de documents officiels publiée par les Nations Unies. Cependant, le rapport d'une sous-commission qui a étudié le document A-80 se trouve dans Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, cinquième commission, annexe 6, pp. 318-22.

<sup>1</sup>Document A-80 is not printed in the series of official records published by the United Nations. However, the report of a sub-committee which studied document A-80 is in United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Fifth Committee, Annex 6, pp. 318-22.

Would you please get in touch with the Delegation by telephone this afternoon and see where matters stand with regard to the budget. I would hope that the United States has unwillingly agreed to a high enough figure to enable us to authorize its use for UNESCO as well. Please discuss the results of your talk to N[ew] Y[ork] with Finance and see whether they would agree to a revision.<sup>1</sup>

R. M[ACDONNELL]

632.

DEA/5582-F-40

Mémorandum du chef, la direction de l'information

Memorandum by Head, Information Division

[Ottawa,] December 12, 1946

UNESCO Conference closed on December 10th, so that it was impossible to forward a reply to telegrams No. 765 and 768† of December 5th and 6th respectively. It was the intention, however, to advise the delegation that the U.N. scale of contributions would be acceptable.

T. W. L. M[ACDERMOT]

633.

DEA/5582-F-40

Le président, la délégation à la première session de la conférence générale de l'UNESCO, au secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Chairman, Delegation to the First Session of the General Conference of UNESCO, to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH UNESC. 10

Paris, December 12, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to report on the adoption of a budget for 1947 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

2. This matter was dealt with by the Administrative and Financial Sub-Commission, on which Mr. Stephens represented the Delegation, in place of Mr. Doré who usually had to attend sessions of the Executive Board at the times the Sub-Commission was meeting.

3. You will remember that before the General Conference the advice received by the Department indicated that the United States, supported by Australia and a few other countries, would seek a "large" budget for UNESCO and would be opposed by some European countries and the United Kingdom. In the event, almost the reverse alignment appeared. The United States urged with great force and apparent conviction the substantial reduction of the draft budget. The United Kingdom, on the other hand, pressed to the last the adoption of a budget only very slightly less than that proposed by the Preparatory Commission.

<sup>1</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

I failed to reach Mr. Armstrong by telephone. Reported this to A[cting] Under-Sec[retary] Macdonnell. T. W. L. M[ACDERMOT] 11.xii.46

4. In the Sub-Commission the Canadian Delegation was prepared to introduce an amendment reducing drastically the draft budget but unfortunately did not receive approval from Ottawa in time to do so. As a result the Canadian Delegation contented itself with voicing its support of the lowest estimates put before the Sub-Commission.

5. The Sub-Commission was faced with three propositions: a motion by the United Kingdom, an amendment by Czechoslovakia and a further amendment by Australia.

6. The United Kingdom moved adoption of a budget amounting in total to $8,561,139. This total consisted of the actual budget for 1947 of $7,611,139, which was to include $434,000. recommended by the Preparatory Commission as a supplementary budget for purposes of cultural reconstruction and rehabilitation. In addition, $950,000., the estimated expenses of the Preparatory Commission, Czechoslovakia proposed a grand total of $6,950,000., composed of a budget of $6,000,000, plus $950,000 for past expenses. This is the figure eventually adopted by the Conference.

7. The Australian amendment sought adoption of a total of $6,650,000., composed of a budget of $5,700,000. and $950,000. for past expenses.

8. On the vote, the Australian amendment supported by the United States and Canada, was defeated by 10 to 8. Twelve countries were absent.

9. The Czechoslovak amendment was adopted by a vote of 10 to 9 (eleven countries absent) and the United Kingdom proposal, therefore, did not come to the vote.

10. When the decision of the Sub-Commission was reported to the General Conference, the United Kingdom again led the struggle to increase the budget. Mr. Hardman, leader of the U.K. Delegation, supported his motion in two dramatic speeches which unfortunately tended to cast aspersions on the goodwill of those who urged a smaller budget. The words "skinflint" and "cheese-paring" were among those employed by Mr. Hardman to characterize the attitude of those who had expressed opposition to the United Kingdom amendment. Before speaking, Mr. Hardman called upon the financial expert, Sir Cecil Kisch, for a few words of expert advice. Thereupon, Sir Cecil proceeded to assure the meeting that in all probability contributions to UNESCO would not have to be made in hard currency. Thereupon, Mr. Hardman made his speech.

11. The United States Delegation was discouraged by Mr. Hardman's general approach and was quite incensed by his manoeuvre in introducing Sir Cecil Kisch's irrelevant assurances at that particular point. Mr. Benton delivered a very strong plea for the smaller budget and asked that the Conference reject any suggestion that those urging a lower budget were in any way less interested in the successful accomplishment of the tasks of UNESCO. After Mr. Hardman's second speech, Mr. Archibald MacLeish, in a considerable state of emotion, expressed his deep concern and disappointment at the lamentable level to which the debate had descended.

12. It was the opinion of the Canadian Delegation that the technique used by the United Kingdom in pressing their view had only succeeded in alienating the vote of a number of countries that might otherwise have supported them.

13. The amendment of the United Kingdom was lost by a vote of 20 to 8 with two nations absent.

14. A compromise resolution from the French Delegation to raise the figure proposed by the Sub-Commission by $550,000. to a total of $7,500,000. (i.e. one million less than the U.K. figure) was defeated by a vote of 18 to 10, with two countries absent. It was our impression that the French Delegation had no strong interest in pressing this compromise.

15. The final figure of $6,950,000., as recommended by the Sub-Commission, was adopted by a vote of 26 (including the United Kingdom) to 0, with two countries absent and two abstaining.

16. I might add that the Commonwealth proved conclusively on this vote that it did not act as a bloc. India alone voted with the United Kingdom. Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Canada were opposed.

I have etc.

L. A. D. STEPHENS for the Chairman

SECTION E

ADMINISTRATION DES NATIONS UNIES POUR LE SECOURS ET LA RECONSTRUCTION

UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

634.

DF/Vol. 3396

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Washington, January 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have recently had one or two informal talks with Makins and Tyler Wood of the State Department (he looks after UNRRA matters there now) concerning the future of UNRRA. As you know, the operations of the Administration are due to cease in Europe at the end of 1946 unless a decision to the contrary is taken at the next Council meeting which opens on March 15th. Such a decision will of course depend primarily on the attitude of the United States. It is perfectly clear that the need for UNRRA's activities will not have disappeared by the end of this year. It is far from clear, however, whether the United States Congress will vote further funds which would make its extension possible. I do not know whether the Canadian Government has any views on this subject, but we should make up our mind before the March meeting. It is therefore not too soon to begin considering the matter now. As I see it from here, there are the following alternatives.

(1) Extension of UNRRA in its present form, for six months or a year. This will require a further vote by Congress of one-half percent or one percent. This seems highly unlikely in present circumstances. Spectacular achievements by UNRRA during the next three or four months, coupled possibly with new and popular appointments to the top posts, might make it possible, but this, in its turn, is unlikely. Wood, whose judgment on these matters is as good as anyone's, feels that it will not be possible to secure a further large appropriation from Congress for UNRRA in its present form, and that the very most that could be secured would be two or three hundred million dollars for straight "soup kitchen" relief on proof of special need to cover a period of two or three months.

(2) On the termination of UNRRA's European activities in 1946 whatever functions require to be continued should be transferred to the appropriate agencies of the United Nations Organization. This would mean that the displaced persons operations, which will increasingly tend to become refugee problems, might go to a United Nations specialist agency. Agricultural rehabilitation activities might be taken over, under a special arrangement, by F.A.O. Straight relief might be dealt with under the Economic and Social Council. Industrial rehabilitation might have to be assisted out of credits from the United States and any other Government which cares to supply them. This solution would be untidy, and would require special financial assistance from the United Nations—more particularly from the United States—for the United Nations agencies concerned. It would, however, have the merit of giving the United Nations responsibility for what is, after all, a United Nations' job. Some of the people in the State Department would support this alternative on the grounds that it would strengthen the United Nations Organization, and would avoid the necessity of going to Congress for a further contribution for UNRRA. Others in the State Department support the next alternative.

(3) Displaced persons operations to be taken over by a United Nations refugee agency; agricultural rehabilitation by F.A.O., with relief proper the responsibility of the United States' Government, which would set up a purely American relief agency which would coordinate the work of private United States relief and humanitarian organizations and secure funds from Congress for additional relief supplies, to be distributed by a U.S. agency formed from those members of UNRRA who would be willing to transfer to such an agency.

If alternative (3) were adopted, other countries would have to work out their own methods of contributing to European and Asiatic relief. In the case of Canada, it could be done, for instance, by food shipments to particular countries, such as Greece or Poland, to be distributed by those countries or through a Canadian agency, such as the Red Cross.

The whole subject bristles with complications and difficulties, but something will have to be done about it; especially as UNRRA itself is likely to end without much diminution of the needs which brought it into being. If some decision is not reached at the March Council meeting, the supplying and receiving governments will not know where they stand, while UNRRA itself will lose much of the efficiency it has now, in places, acquired because of the uncertainty of the immediate future, and the demoralizing effect of this on its personnel.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

635.

DEA/2295-R-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 168

Ottawa, January 21, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 13. Your No. 182.† Following for Wrong. Begins:

1. Canada's financial contribution and active interest in UNRRA makes it important that it support United Kingdom resolution.<sup>1</sup> We have already circularized our missions in Latin America to join with United States and United Kingdom in urging completion of first contribution and making additional contribution. I would not see any difficult constitutional questions in instructing Secretary-General to obtain UNRRA reports, if his instructions are to discuss matter with Director-General, explain position to him and arrange for coordination of information with a view ultimately to possible transfer of staff, since this would be in the interest of UNRRA.

2. Status of second Canadian contribution to UNRRA is as follows: Canadian Government has undertaken to make a second contribution of $77,000,000. To implement the undertaking, an amount of $25,000,000 was included in the estimate of expenditures under the War Expenditures and Demobilization Act approved at the last Session, for use between now and the end of the fiscal year. Should more than $25,000,000 be needed before March 31st, the Government could and would provide the supplies requested. It is not prepared, however, to make available a larger proportion of the Canadian contribution than the United States Government has appropriated of the second United States contribution. This amounts to some $43,000,000, since the United States have appropriated $750,000,000. The Department of Trade and Commerce, which is the procurement agency for UNRRA in Canada, has on hand the $25,000,000 mentioned above and is authorized to enter into commitments on behalf of UNRRA up to that amount and if need be, up to $43,000,000. It is unlikely that more than $25,000,000 will actually have to be disbursed before the end of the fiscal year.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la première partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, deuxième commission, annexe 1, pp. 23-24.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Second Committee, Annex 1, pp. 23-24.

3. Points which could be made are:

(a) disparity between needs of liberated areas and the assistance which UNRRA can give because of limitations of its purse; screened requirements of liberated areas for 1946 based on UNRRA standards which are very conservative have had to be cut to anywhere from 60% to 40% to fit in with the present UNRRA budget.

(b) Present expectations are that relief needs will last beyond the end of 1946 and to meet them, assistance will have to come not only from the relatively few who have contributed handsomely, but from many others; every penny counts and the larger the number of contributions, the better assistance can be provided to those who sorely need it.

4. Will cable figures on wheat for Greece later today.

636.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-458

Washington, January 26, 1946

Your EX-4281 of December 20th re second Canadian contribution to UNRRA.

1. Allen<sup>1</sup> has reported that procurement against the Canadian second contribution has reached a stage where it would be desirable for the Canadian Export Board to be given procurement authority beyond the $25 million set up to provide for Canadian supplies by the end of March of this year. The following tentative figures as of January 23rd are the best estimates available.

<sup>1</sup> S. V. Allen, secrétaire commercial, l'ambassade aux États-Unis.

<sup>1</sup> S. V. Allen, Commercial Secretary, Embassy in United States.

(a) Requisitions which have cleared UNRRA and have been mailed to Canada, total—$16,766,251

(b) Requisitions in process of clearing UNRRA not yet mimeographed or mailed, total—$10,921,823

(c) Over and above requisitions in these categories there are a large number of requisitions which will reach the central Procurement Co-ordination Division of UNRRA from the various Commodity Divisions within the next week or so, as a result of Canadian availabilities lined up by Allen and others concerned during the past week. These items conservatively might amount to between 15 and 20 million dollars.

2. At the present time there is considerable competition between the various divisions of UNRRA for Canadian funds which on the basis of programing may amount to as much as $110 million over and above the items in categories (a) and (b) above. This will, of course, have to be pared down initially to the full amount of the Canadian contribution, and I merely mention the figure because it indicates that there is a possibility of Canada again getting free fund orders assuming the Canadian contribution is used as speedily as now seems likely.

3. May I, therefore, suggest that apart from action to make our effective contribution proportionate to the United States, consideration should also be given to provision for the Export Board to accept requisitions up to the full amount of Canadian $69,300,000 and with provision for our corresponding contribution to the free funds pool.

4. Allen has informed me confidentially that Wadley of the Export Board has been somewhat pessimistic about the acceptance of further orders beyond the $25 million limit now imposed on him and it seems to me very desirable that we should dissipate any impression that UNRRA may have that they should withhold requisitions until Wadley has procurement authority beyond the present limit. As Allen is advising all UNRRA officers to allow their orders to go forward, we are anxious to ensure that the Export Board has no excuse for withholding action, and thus delaying Canadian procurement on UNRRA account.

5. In considering the above suggestion you may wish to know that present United States plans, according to Wood who is in charge of UNRRA matters in the State Department, envisage the initiation of Congressional action on the remaining $600 million of the United States second contribution early in February. Wood has not yet completed arrangements for initiating such action and recognizes that the rather full timetable confronting Congress in February may make it difficult to commence and complete action during that month. Nevertheless, it is his present view that the imminence of the next Council meeting and the rapid rate at which UNRRA is exhausting the presently available part of the United States contribution make the completion of action almost imperative by mid-March.

637.

DEA/2295-R-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-517

Ottawa, February 16, 1946

Your WA-458 of January 26 regarding second Canadian contribution to UNRRA. On receipt of the above, a request was made to Treasury Board for making available a larger share of the contribution, at least up to $43,000,000 immediately and for advice as to whether the amounts available under the war appropriation and the war expenditure and demobilization appropriation would permit a further increase before the end of the fiscal year, if it proved true as in the case of the first Canadian contribution that an early exhaustion of the Canadian contribution would have the effect of bringing to Canada large amounts of orders to be paid with UNRRA free funds—other reasons for the use of free funds in Canada are the relative availability of supplies and the straightforward arrangements for UNRRA purchasing.

However, since almost all of the UNRRA free funds will come out of the United States contribution, and since there is a strong drive to use that contribution for the disposal of surplus United States assets, the conditions existing in the case of the first contribution may not arise again and I would appreciate your advice on this point before another approach is made to the Treasury Board.

The Treasury Board have now replied that they have approved an increase in the amount for UNRRA from $25,000,000 to $43,000,000 for the present fiscal year (the amount proportionate to the appropriation under the United States contribution). Regarding the possibility of a further increase, the Board stated that when an application came their decision would be affected by the desirability of keeping the Canadian contribution in line with the United States contribution and on the availability of the necessary funds under the current appropriation.

638.

DTC/Vol. 263,34221

Mémorandum de l'agent exécutif principal, la Commission canadienne d'exportation, au contrôleur et secrétaire, le ministère du Commerce

Memorandum from Chief Executive Officer, Canadian Export Board, to Comptroller and Secretary, Department of Trade and Commerce

Ottawa, February 20, 1946

RE: UNRRA FINANCES

I am working under very considerable pressure due to the fact that I am unable to encumber any monies beyond the $43,000,000 which has already been allocated for the use of this Board in making purchases on behalf of UNRRA. It has been necessary for me to advise UNRRA officials in Washington that I will be unable to sign any further requisitions for the purchase of goods in Canada until such time as the balance of funds has been made available. In fact, in checking over the requisitions which I have already signed, I find that I have contracted to purchase over $48,000,000 worth of goods against a net credit of about $39,000,000 exclusive of free funds. I have advised UNRRA in Washington that it will be necessary for me to block certain of the requisitions which I have signed in order to keep myself within the limits of the funds available.

As an instance of the somewhat embarrassing situation which arises as a result of this limitation, I was yesterday advised by telephone from Washington that UNRRA's requisition for transformers valued at about $750,000 would have to be withdrawn from Canadian requirements and the order placed in the United States due to the fact that no funds were available in Canada for the purpose.

You will appreciate that I am not in a position to discuss with UNRRA officials in Washington as to the disposal of free funds which they may have in their possession and which we think they could use to their advantage here in Canada. I can only suggest that they supply free funds for these purposes but I cannot go to the point of asking them for free fund business as I know that their reply will be to the effect that they will discuss free fund business immediately the Canadian contribution has been completely expended.

ERNEST WADLEY

639.

DTC/Vol. 263,34221

Mémoire du contrôleur et secrétaire, le ministère du Commerce, à l'agent exécutif principal, la Commission canadienne d'exportation

Memorandum from Comptroller and Secretary, Department of Trade and Commerce, to Chief Executive Officer, Canadian Export Board

Ottawa, February 22, 1946

RE: UNRRA FINANCES

I have for acknowledgement your memorandum of February 20, and have carefully read your remarks concerning UNRRA finances. I am informed that External Affairs have made it quite clear to the officials at Washington that it is not the intention of the Canadian Government to pay more than half their contribution during the present fiscal year. The $43,000,000 commitment authority which we have is slightly in excess of half our total promised and you need have no embarrassment whatever in refusing further orders until the new fiscal year.

Your statement that you have contracted to purchase over $48,000,000 worth of goods is viewed with some concern and we will be very pleased if you will confirm that you have found it possible to block certain requisitions in order to bring your commitments within the $43,000,000 which have been allotted.

You will recall that 10% of our contribution is to be kept as free funds. This will necessitate your reducing your requisitions to approximately $38,700,000. I am very pleased to learn from you of the intention of UNRRA to supply $10,000,000 free funds for wheat and grain purchases.

FINLAY SIM

640.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-979

Washington, March 1, 1946

Your EX-517 of February 16th regarding second Canadian contribution to UNRRA.

Members of my staff have now had the opportunity of discussing with officials in UNRRA the problems created by the limitation to $43,000,000 of Canadian funds available (up to the end of March) for procurement in Canada. In issuing requisitions UNRRA has already had to disregard the limitation placed on Canadian funds at their disposal. As of February 23rd the records of the Procurement Co-ordination Division of UNRRA indicated that the total of non-convertible Canadian funds represented by the two full contributions would have been exhausted by requirements which had reached the requisition stage except for the equivalent of approximately $1,000,000 United States funds. The following rough computation made by UNRRA represents the position (all figures in equivalent United States funds).

(a) Total amount to be provided under the two full Canadian contributions for commodities and shipping services, i.e., allowing for non-supply functions such as share of administrative expenses—

$137,400,000.00

(b) Deduct: Canadian free funds (of which $2,000,000 at present allocated for shipping)

$12,600,000

Earmarked non-convertible for shipping and transportation

8,000,000

Earmarked for Balkan military relief Stockpile

1,350,000

21,950,000.00

Total

$21,950,000

Balance available from non-convertible Canadian funds for supplies to be provided from two full contributions—

$115,450,000.00

(c) Supplies already purchased in Canada from the first contribution plus orders now being processed by Canadian Export Board and requisitions cleared by UNRRA now en route to the Canadian Export Board total about $114,000,000.00.

Thus to all intents and purposes the two full Canadian contributions would be exhausted if action could be taken immediately on requisitions already cleared by the UNRRA Administration. (The balance of $115,450,000 available from non-convertible Canadian funds does not represent the total resources available to UNRRA in Canada because our free funds were returned to us in the case of the first contribution for procurement in Canada, and similar action will doubtless be taken on the free fund portion of approximately $5,000,000.00 of the second contribution in addition to the special provision for payment of ocean freights in free funds already made). Detailed breakdown of Item C is being prepared by the Administration for our information and will be communicated to you as soon as it is received.

In view of the situation reflected in the above figures, UNRRA has already placed new free fund orders in Canada, including a recent one for $10,000,000 to cover wheat and milling products to the end of June. When questioned about the feasibility of providing further free funds to bridge the gap between the $43,000,000 and the amount necessary to complete procurement of the orders already cleared, UNRRA officials indicated that at the most the free funds now available to them would amount to around $15,000,000 and probably were considerably less. They will, therefore, have to review the orders already cleared in order to limit them to the resources now available. This would entail screening on a priority basis of specific needs and consideration of relative availabilities in Canada and elsewhere, particularly in the United States. (This operation must be undertaken forthwith, and two officials of UNRRA are leaving Thursday for discussions with the Export Board in Ottawa).

While UNRRA has already indicated its willingness to place free fund orders in Canada, and would doubtless do so in isolated cases even in the present circumstances, we cannot expect UNRRA to place substantial free fund orders in the near future, and we may in fact be faced with a substantial reduction in the volume of orders which UNRRA is in process of placing in Canada.

In brief, the present position in respect of possible free fund business either now or in the future would seem to be roughly as follows. Unless the balance of the second Canadian contribution is made available fairly soon there is likely to be a significant reduction in the placing of orders in Canada. To the extent that such a reduction promises to be only temporary we presumably would not be concerned at the prospect. However, since there are types of requirements (particularly for foodstuffs) which must be satisfied immediately or not at all, and since some cancelled orders might be switched to sources of supply other than Canada, a substantial part of the reduction would probably be permanent. As such a permanent reduction would inevitably mean a reduction in the total volume of orders placed with Canadian suppliers over the entire period of UNRRA's operations, the margin between the reduced total volume on the one hand and the total amount of the two full contributions to be made by Canada on the other hand would accordingly be reduced. To the extent that this margin is reduced the volume of possible free fund business for Canada is correspondingly reduced. In short, the making of the full second contribution now would encourage UNRRA to procure maximum quantities from Canada and would ensure that Canada would receive the maximum volume of free fund payments out of the limited amount of free funds now available and the larger amount of free funds to become available when the United States completes action on the appropriation of the balance of its second contribution. This analysis of the position would seem to be valid not only arithmetically but also psychologically and politically, since there would be less objection to the placing of free fund orders in Canada in the subsequent period if UNRRA could say that the full amount of the two Canadian contributions had been exhausted.

In addition to the "commercial" considerations set forth above, there would seem to be a number of new factors of a more general nature of which account might well be taken in determining the desirability of making available at this time the full amount of the second Canadian contribution.

Of the new factors, probably the most significant is the action taken by the United Nations Assembly in urging the completion of the second contribution and in establishing a special Committee on UNRRA.

A further factor of which you will be fully conscious is the effect which action by Canada might have in facilitating action by the United States Congress, or perhaps I should say the effect which apparent inaction by Canada might have in delaying and making more difficult action by the United States Congress. It is recognized that the United States Congress does not always respond to examples set by Canada, and it is of course true that Canada cannot be expected to follow a course of action which could not be justified on other grounds merely to set a good example for the United States. Nevertheless you will appreciate that an unduly cautious attitude on the part of the Canadian authorities would provide an argument of which full use would be made by certain members of Congress and might create a rather significant stumbling block for the Administration in its attempt to secure action on the second instalment of the second contribution. On this question of possible action by Congress we find no doubt expressed in any quarter that Congress will eventually make the appropriation required to implement the authorization already given. There is, however, considerable uncertainty as to the time of such appropriation action. The State Department is hopeful that some action can be initiated at least by the time of the Atlantic City Council meeting on March 15th. In view of the present crowding in the Congressional calendars there will be considerable difficulty in getting early consideration of the UNRRA appropriation, and accordingly in order that the funds might be available at the earliest possible time the State Department is anxious that everything possible be done in advance to ensure a speedy passage of the necessary appropriation bill as soon as it can be introduced.

Action by the United Kingdom Government on its second contribution might be regarded as creating a new factor in the situation since the time when the Minister of Finance made a statement in the Canadian House of Commons relating action on the Canadian contribution to similar action by the United States and "other contributing nations". As you doubtless are aware, the United Kingdom Government has informed Parliament that it has undertaken to make available a second contribution to UNRRA which, when taken with the first contribution, would represent 2% of the national income of the United Kingdom in 1943. It is true that after March 31st when the wartime "Vote-of-Credit" arrangement lapses and peacetime procedures are restored any balance of the second United Kingdom contribution which has not been committed by United Kingdom Supply Departments will require specific consideration and action by the United Kingdom Parliament. United Kingdom Treasury representatives here inform us that this change from wartime to peacetime procedures should not be regarded as affecting, in any conceivable circumstances, the willingness or ability of the United Kingdom Government to carry out its undertaking to provide the remainder of the second contribution if and when the Administration may call for that contribution in the manner stipulated in UNRRA Council Resolution 80. In essence both the United Kingdom representatives here and the officials of UNRRA regard the full second contribution from the United Kingdom as available for utilization by UNRRA.

In conclusion it should be remarked that we have found some difficulty in explaining satisfactorily the reason for tying the availability of the Canadian contribution to United States appropriation action. If it had been decided by the Canadian authorities (and such a decision would probably have been impossible to administer) that expenditures under the Canadian contribution should be related to expenditures from the United States contribution the position could be explained more satisfactorily since we could have argued that our decision was based on our desire to avoid a situation at the termination of UNRRA in which the part of the Canadian contribution which had been utilized represented a larger proportion of the amount determined as appropriate for our total contribution than expenditures from the United States contribution represented of the total amount determined by the UNRRA Council to be appropriate for the United States contribution. We could point out that if such a situation were to exist at the end of UNRRA we should then have in effect over-contributed in relation to the United States. The same safeguard against a possible over-contribution is not, in our judgment, provided by the stipulation that Canadian appropriations for UNRRA should be related to United States appropriations since even if appropriations are kept in line expenditures might well proceed at different rates in the two countries. Since the condition attaching at present to the availability of the Canadian contribution does not seem to provide such a safeguard the only basis on which the imposition of such a condition can be explained would seem to be the existence of a doubt as to the likelihood of the United States implementing the authorization which Congress has already given to make a full second contribution. As mentioned above, we find no inclination here, (on the part of the United States officials, UNRRA officials or United Kingdom officials) to doubt that the United States Congress will eventually take the appropriation action necessary to implement this authorization. Accordingly we are finding some difficulty in giving a reason for the reluctance of the Canadian authorities to make available the full second contribution for use by UNRRA on the terms stated in Resolution 80.

641.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-1145

Washington, March 12, 1946

My WA-979 of March 1st concerning second half of Canada's second contribution to UNRRA.

At a meeting of the Committee on Supplies yesterday, a lengthy report on the operations of the Bureau of Supply was submitted, of which I am quoting the two most important paragraphs concerning the ability of the Administration to carry out its 1946 program, Begins:

The Administration believes that two immediate steps are essential to enable the Administration to carry out its 1946 program:

1. The supplying Governments must take most urgent steps toward making their appropriations on their second 1 percent as quickly as possible. The longer these appropriations are delayed, the greater is the danger of failure in carrying out the program of operations.

2. The contributing Governments should immediately review their prescribed procedures under which procurement for UNRRA is undertaken by them. This review should be made with a view to achieving a condition where UNRRA will not be required to tie up its funds far in advance of contracts and where the national agencies would undertake to carry on their own books the amounts required for advance procurement of bulk commodities and scarce supplies such as wheat, meat, fats, coal and POL (petroleum, oil, lubricants). Ends.

The Committee urgently requested the members of all supplying Governments to bring these paragraphs to the attention of their Governments with the minimum possible delay.

The second paragraph, dealing with the procurement difficulties created for UNRRA by the necessity of tying up funds far in advance of contracts, refers primarily to purchases in the United States. The Department of Agriculture in particular requires an extremely long advance commitment of UNRRA funds. The member for the United States and the Deputy Director General concerned with supplies both indicated that they expected this situation would be greatly improved in the near future.

642.

DEA/2295-R-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre du Commerce*

*Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce*

Ottawa, March 19, 1946

Dear Sir,

With reference to Washington teletype WA-979, copy of which was referred to you on March 5, regarding the second Canadian contribution to UNRRA, I enclose copy of a further teletype of March 12, No. WA-1145.

These teletypes show the urgency, if UNRRA is to accomplish the most good, of making the whole Canadian contribution available to it at the earliest possible date. UNRRA has committed the whole of the $43,000,000 made available to it to date for procurement of supplies in Canada and is anxious to place in Canada further orders.

Already some "free funds" commitments have been made in Canada, but UNRRA is not in as good a position to commit "free funds" if Canada is holding back part of its contribution. To all appearances, the appropriation of the whole Canadian contribution to UNRRA will give incentive and make it easier for UNRRA to place in Canada orders payable with its "free funds".

The success of the work of UNRRA as well as the Canadian interest in bringing "free funds" orders, both militate in favour of Canada making available its total contribution as soon as possible, which would mean the release of the additional $34,000,000. I understand that the Department of Finance is prepared to recommend to Treasury Board that this $34,000,000 be released in whole or in part, provided there is enough money available under the war appropriation.

This Department is prepared to concur in any recommendation which you would present to Treasury Board for release of the last part of the contribution; and if such action is taken, there would be a publicity advantage in action being taken in time to advise the Director General while the Fourth Session of the Council of UNRRA is in session.

Commitments on amounts under the second Canadian contribution of $77,000,000 Can. should not, however, go beyond a point which would not retain sufficient funds to pay the Canadian share of the administrative budget of UNRRA for 1946, which is expected to be $390,000 U.S. Moreover, although they are expected to be and in fact are used in Canada, funds amounting to one-tenth of the Canadian contribution of $77,000,000 should be available for transfer on request to UNRRA as Canada's share of the "free funds" pool of that organization. This $7,700,000 Can. includes the $390,000.00 U.S. contribution to the administrative budget which is expected to be approved by the responsible committees of UNRRA in the near future and will therefore become payable in the very near future.

Yours sincerely

N. A. ROBERTSON

643.

DEA/2295-R-40

Décret en Conseil

Order in Council

P.C. 1/1208

[Ottawa,] March 28, 1946

TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Board had under consideration a memorandum from the Honourable the Minister of Trade and Commerce reporting:

"That at the first session of the Council of UNRRA held in Atlantic City in November, 1943, the Government of Canada undertook to make a contribution to UNRRA of the value of $77,000,000;

That in 1944 the Parliament of Canada approved Canadian participation in, and a Canadian contribution to, UNRRA by the UNRRA Act, 8, George VI, Ch. 12 and by the War Appropriation (U.N.M.A.)<sup>1</sup> Act 1944, 8 Geo. VI, Ch. 15;

That at the third meeting of the UNRRA Council held in London, England, August 1945, Canada undertook to make a second contribution of $77,000,000;

That by P.C. 767 of March 7, 1946, the powers, duties and functions of the Canadian Mutual Aid Board, insofar as they relate to the procurement of commodities, services and the equipment required by UNRRA were transferred to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, effective November 1, 1945;

<sup>1</sup> United Nations Mutual Aid.

That by P.C. 2/7443 of December 21, 1945, $25,000,000 was made available to the Department of Trade and Commerce for UNRRA procurement as the first portion of the second contribution and that by P.C. 217/446 of February 8, 1946, commitment authority was given to the Department of Trade and Commerce, for an additional $18,000,000 for UNRRA procurement purposes;

That there now is an urgent need for additional supplies and funds to procure them, UNRRA having requested all contributing countries to pay their full contribution as soon as possible in order that these supplies may be purchased and sent forward immediately;

That it is expedient that the balance of Canada's second contribution to UNRRA be made available immediately and for this purpose it is advisable that an additional allotment of $52,000,000 be provided forthwith from the War Expenditure and Demobilization Appropriation 1945; and that it, together with any unspent balances (already provided) at the close of the business day, March 25, 1946, be transferred to the credit of UNRRA in the Bank of Canada for purchases in Canada, with the proviso that in accordance with the UNRRA Financial Plan an amount of $7,700,000 which is 10% of Canada's second contribution, may be converted into foreign exchange for use by UNRRA outside of Canada, if required.

The undersigned, therefore, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has the honour to recommend that:

1. That the balance of Canada's contributions to UNRRA be made available to UNRRA forthwith and for this purpose that an amount of $52,000,000 be allotted from the War Expenditure and Demobilization Appropriation 1945; and

2. That the Minister of Trade and Commerce be authorized to transfer to the credit of UNRRA in the Bank of Canada the aforementioned $52,000,000, together with any balance remaining unspent or not transferred to UNRRA from previous allotments for the purpose of making contributions to UNRRA, on condition that UNRRA agrees to transfer to the Government of Canada sufficient funds to cover commitments incurred on behalf of UNRRA and agrees to convert no more than $7,700,000 of the moneys so provided to it, into foreign exchange for use outside of Canada."

The Board, having approved the estimate of expenditure chargeable to the War Appropriation and the War Expenditure and Demobilization Appropriation, and the allotment of the necessary funds, concur in the above report and recommendation and submit the same for favourable consideration.

A. D. P. HEENEY
Clerk of the Privy Council

644.

DTC/Vol. 263

Le ministre du Commerce au directeur général, UNRRA
Minister of Trade and Commerce to Director General, UNRRA

Ottawa, March 29, 1946

Dear Sir,

As you are aware, the officials of your organization have urged the contributing countries to give serious consideration to fulfilling their commitments to UNRRA at the present time. I am happy to advise you that the Canadian Government, mindful of the great need which exists for immediate action, has been pleased to place to the credit of your organization the necessary funds to meet the whole of Canada's undertakings.

I am, therefore, pursuant to Order-in-Council No. 1/1208 of today's date, transferring to your account in the Bank of Canada $93,558,170.62, which will provide for the balance of our total commitments. A schedule showing the basis on which this amount has been determined is attached.

The services of the Canadian Government departments and agencies will still be made available to you for procurement in Canada. The same procedure and protection in the commitment and expenditure of funds which you have enjoyed, will continue as in the past.

It is our understanding that you will transfer to the Receiver General of Canada from your account in the Bank of Canada, such amounts as are required from time to time to cover the commitments entered into or to be entered into by the Government of Canada on your behalf, and that you will not transfer from your account in the Bank of Canada to other accounts or persons, without my agreement. It is estimated that we shall require $60,000,000 to cover the commitments we have made on your behalf and which are presently outstanding. We, therefore, request you transfer this amount to the Receiver General of Canada immediately.<sup>1</sup>

On our side, we are prepared to agree at any time to transfer from your account in the Bank of Canada, such amounts as are necessary to discharge our undertakings in accordance with the UNRRA financial plan, to make available a portion of our contribution in a form which can be used outside of Canada.

Yours very truly,

J. A. MACKINNON

---

<sup>1</sup> Ceci fut fait.

<sup>1</sup> This was done.

645.

L.B.P./Vol. 11

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au rédacteur en chef du Winnipeg Free Press
Ambassador in United States to Executive Editor of the Winnipeg Free Press

Washington, April 1, 1946

Dear George [Ferguson],

I found your letter of March 25th† awaiting me on my return from the UNRRA meeting at Atlantic City. It was a good meeting in the sense that there was a sense of reality and a facing of facts about it; straight talk without abuse, and a realization that unless something effective is done soon by all Governments, not only will we be facing famine conditions in the next few weeks in Europe and the Far East, but conditions not much better next year. Certain people here and in Canada may say what they will about a short-term emergency, but if the facts of the situation are as they were given to us at Atlantic City, the emergency is likely to be of pretty long duration. It will require far more effective action than the short-term voluntary measures now so popular with the Administration in Washington.

I wish I knew the answers to your questions about the future of UNRRA. There are four possibilities:

1. To continue UNRRA in more or less its present form through 1947. This would require a further 1% assessment. Such an assessment might be secured by some countries, but certainly not from Congress unless there is a complete change of sentiment in that body. Without further funds from Congress, however, UNRRA could not continue.

2. The transfer of certain UNRRA functions, such as industrial rehabilitation, agricultural rehabilitation, displaced persons, to other United Nations agencies, retaining for UNRRA for another year the limited job of food relief. This would also require further funds from Congress, but a smaller contribution might be enough and might possibly—though my State Department friends doubt this—be secured. The appointment of La Guardia may make it easier to get a further appropriation.

3. Same as 2 above, except that the retained food relief functions would be performed by a U.S. agency. UNRRA itself would come to an end, though its organization in the field might be taken over by the United States Government. Other UNRRA governments could then take on special relief jobs, if they so desired. For instance, Canada might wish to help by sending food to Greece, thereby relieving the United States agency of that area. This would be an awkward and inefficient way of doing business and has practically nothing to commend it except that by acting through a U.S. relief agency more funds could be secured from Congress to carry on the relief work now being done on a United Nations basis.

4. UNRRA to come to an end this year or in the spring of 1947, with all its continuing relief activities to be taken over by UNO. This would mean in fact that the UNO would take over also that part of the UNRRA organization in the field which was required, but any funds voted by Congress or Parliaments would be voted to UNO, and not to UNRRA as such. I think this last course is the one most likely to be followed unless La Guardia's appointment introduces such a change in sentiment in Congress that further funds for UNRRA on its present basis could be secured. If course 4 is adopted, displaced persons might be taken over by the Refugee Organization; food relief by an organization under the Economic and Social Council; rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance would have to be given by the International Bank or by governmental credits.

One thing is quite clear, however, that, though UNRRA itself may come to an end soon, the needs which brought it into being will continue for a year or two more; possibly longer. Therefore, anything you can do to publicize this continuing need would, I think, be very helpful. There is a UNO committee dealing with this question, the future of UNRRA, etc., but I am afraid it is not going to be a very effective agency unless it gets a good deal of prodding. Something, however, must be done, and soon, to make the governments on the Economic and Social Council aware of the problem and the necessity of creating some machinery to deal with it. To let UNRRA disappear without having prepared plans and machinery to take over its unfinished work would be disastrous. Yet the time is short for such preparation. Unfortunately, the Economic and Social Council, which should take responsibility for this, is taking a long time to get into action.

From my point of view, personally and officially, it is grand news that you are coming to Washington in September. That really does cheer me up, and these are days when a little cheering-up is needed. I feel certain that you will find enough to do here to keep you interested. You will always find a warm welcome at this feudal palace known as the Embassy. For some time now we have been needing advice as to what pictures to hang on its panelled walls!

With personal regards,

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

646.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-1531

Washington, April 6, 1946

Your EX-831 of March 21st† enquiring concerning expected reply to despatch No. 72† relating to private donations of money to UNRRA.

Our enquiries indicate that UNRRA can accept, and welcomes, cash donations. However, UNRRA has deliberately refrained from soliciting such donations in view of the fact that Congressmen or Parliamentarians might criticise the Administration if, at the same time as it is receiving substantial contributions from Governments indirectly contributed by the people, UNRRA were to exhort the people to contribute additional amounts directly. UNRRA feels that if private donations were to be solicited their chances of securing Governmental contributions might be adversely affected.

Despite the absence of any campaign UNRRA is receiving almost daily cash contributions from private citizens. In most cases, even though the donations originate outside the United States, the cash contributions are made directly to UNRRA Headquarters in Washington. The officials with whom we have spoken have indicated a preference for the making of such donations directly to UNRRA in Washington, since they claim that there is an advantage in having such contributions accumulate in a common pool here on which the Administration can draw for financing special projects outside the regular procurement which might be proceeding through Governmental channels. We have mentioned to them that in the case of contributions from Canadians there may be a foreign exchange problem involved in the converting of Canadian dollars into United States dollars which would make it desirable from our point of view to have the contribution converted into goods in Canada. We have added that the retention of such donations in Canada would not, in our view, lessen the Administration's control over the expenditure of such funds on special projects, except insofar as some goods might possibly not be available in Canada. We indicated that if, for foreign exchange reasons, it seemed necessary or desirable to retain such donations in Canada the Canadian authorities receiving the donations could probably advise the UNRRA Headquarters in Washington of each donation as it comes in and UNRRA Headquarters could direct the expenditure of such donations through the "request-to-supply" mechanism already established for UNRRA procurement in Canada.

In these circumstances it would seem necessary to have answers to the following questions before proceeding further with our enquiries:

(a) Does the present foreign exchange position render it desirable that private cash donations be retained for expenditure in Canada?

(b) If such is the case, would it be feasible for the Canadian Custodian of these donations to establish some arrangement for advising UNRRA of individual contributions as they are received? When we have this information we can give you a complete answer to your despatch within a day or so.

647.

DEA/2295-R-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-1111

Ottawa, April 20, 1946

Your WA-1531 of April 6 regarding private donations of money to UNRRA.

The following is the message received from the Foreign Exchange Control Board on this subject, which indicates that there would be no objections from a foreign exchange point of view to donations being transferred to UNRRA Washington:

“In the last paragraph of this message the Canadian Ambassador asks whether the present foreign exchange position renders it desirable that private cash donations to UNRRA be retained for expenditure in Canada. Under routine instructions the Canadian banks are now authorized to sell up to $100 in United States funds per applicant per month for the purpose of making benevolent remittances abroad. Remittances to UNRRA would fall within this category and it would appear that the limit of $100 is high enough to take care of the great majority of cash donations. Moreover, the Board has recently decided that favourable consideration should be given to applications for cash remittances in excess of $100 to countries to which Canada is extending credit. The reasons for permitting these remittances to UNRRA are just as strong as for permitting them to individual countries and the Board will accordingly be prepared to give favourable consideration to applications for United States funds to make cash donations to UNRRA in excess of the amount of $100 which the banks are authorized to approve.

In view particularly of the large amount of free funds which UNRRA has spent in Canada, there would appear to be no reason from a foreign exchange point of view why the use of such donations should be restricted to purchase in Canada.”

It may be, however, that since UNRRA expends certain free funds in Canada, they would prefer not to have the money transferred to them as, to the extent that contributions are made that way, they lose the 1% exchange when re-transferring the money to Canada. However, unless such voluntary contributions increase in number and size, the loss would be insignificant.

At the time when this matter was taken up with you, the thought existed that contributions of this nature would come in fairly large numbers, but this anticipation has not materialized. The whole question which I raised appears therefore to be very much of an academic one.

648.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au chef, la direction économique

Ambassador in United States to Head, Economic Division

Washington, June 8, 1946

Dear Mr. Pierce,

I am enclosing a memorandum from Mr. Cairns the Director of the Food Division of UNRRA to Mr. La Guardia concerning UNRRA's problem of financing food shipments. There is only a short time available before today's diplomatic bag closes and I will therefore have to wait until early next week to teletype our comments on the information contained in this memorandum.

The most important fact for Canada arising from UNRRA's present difficulties in financing their food requirements is that it may become necessary for UNRRA to ask that we cancel $6,000,000 worth of fish and $6,000,000 worth of meat which they have already contracted for in Canada.

This information was given to me on a purely personal basis by Mr. Cairns and I have his permission to forward this memorandum on an informal basis to Ottawa. Mr. Cairns discussed the possible Canadian cutbacks referred to with Mr. Karl Fraser of the Mutual Aid Board when he was in Washington this week.

I shall try to have all the necessary information on why UNRRA may have to request these cutbacks available to you before the next meeting of the Mutual Aid Board.

Yours sincerely,

J. R. MURRAY
For the Ambassador

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire du directeur, la division de l'Alimentation d'UNRRA, au directeur général, UNRRA

Memorandum from Director, Food Division of UNRRA, to Director General, UNRRA

May 30, 1946

THE PROBLEM OF FINANCING FOOD SHIPMENTS

INTRODUCTION

1. The Food Division has been a most consistent rebel against the Administration's conception of a program of operations because it has always held the view that at least one-half of UNRRA's funds, amounting in all to about $3.2 billion dollars, should have been reserved for the procurement of food. However, because of the scarcity of food and in order to get on with the job, the Food Division reluctantly acquiesced in a program of operations for the period ending 30th June 1946 based on the tentative assumption that only about one-third of the Administration's total funds would be spent on food. The Division then proceeded to buy, at the lowest possible prices, all the basic foods it could get, regardless of how quickly the $1.1 billion tentatively allotted to it was spent. As you will see from Table I attached,† we expect to ship by the end of June 1946 about $0.9 billion worth of food, leaving a balance of only about $200 million of the aforementioned tentative allotment. Moreover, in order to avoid losing allocations made to UNRRA, the Food Division has already committed the bulk of that balance for food to be shipped in the third quarter of 1946.

2. In order to capitalize on the fruits of Governor Lehman's and your crusade for more food for UNRRA the Food Division assumed that as a result of the recent discussions in Washington with the representatives of our Missions the allotment of funds to the Food Division would be increased to at least $1.6 billion. But largely because of commitments already made to procure supplies other than food, the Food Division's allotment was increased to only $1.2 billion. The Administration is, therefore, faced with the prospect of cancelling, in so far as possible, commitments already made to buy dairy products and meat in order to provide funds to buy as much as possible of the grains and fats which it expects shortly to be allocated to it. Moreover, unless steps are taken immediately greatly to increase the funds available to the Food Division, the allocations of grains, fats, and other basic foods already made, or about to be made to UNRRA will be gravely endangered. One of the disastrous consequences of this anomalous position will be the abandonment of the child feeding program which you proposed in your 29th April cable to all UNRRA receiving countries.

3. The situation with respect to the last half of 1946 revealed in the above paragraphs is grave, but the position in the first six or eight months of 1947 is less grave only in the sense that there is more time to prepare for it. Several UNRRA receiving countries will continue to need large imports of food at least until the 1947 harvests are available. It is manifestly impossible for the successor, if any, to UNRRA effectively to take over control prior to 1st January 1947. And unless financial and other arrangements are made at a very early date to provide for a continuation of food shipments after the turn of the year the position of the countries now dependent upon UNRRA will be gravely prejudiced, especially with respect to allocations, firm requests for which, backed by irrevocable financial arrangements, must be made at least three and in most cases six months in advance of the period of shipment.

REQUESTS FOR ALLOCATIONS

4. On 10th April 1946 UNRRA requested of the Combined Food Board allocations of food, from all sources of supply, for shipment during the six month period July-December 1946, valued at about $825 million. In response to the USDA's<sup>1</sup> request that we submit by 5th April our requirements of food from the United States in both the third and fourth quarters of 1946, we submitted requirements valued at about $600 million.

AVAILABLE SUPPLIES

5. During the series of meetings with representatives of UNRRA's Missions, the Food Division estimated the value of the foods already allocated by the CFB and expected to be allocated by the International Emergency

---

<sup>1</sup>United States Department of Agriculture.

Food Council to UNRRA for shipment to its receiving countries in July-December 1946 at $545 million, sub-divided as follows:

	Millions of dollars
Bread grains	209
Rice	52
Fats	64
Dairy Products	52
Meats	106
Fish	23
Other foods	40
Total	$546 mn.

AVAILABLE FUNDS

6. On the basis of the total UNRRA budget for each country which the Administration has decided to recommend for the consideration of the Central Committee, the representatives of the UNRRA Missions who took part in the recent series of meetings in Washington have informed the Food Division that the following sums will be available for the procurement of food to be shipped after 30th June 1946:

	Thousands of Dollars
Albania	662
Austria	13,485
Byelorussia	5,854
Czechoslovakia	13,515
Dodecanese Islands	391
Greece	21,760
Italy	65,378
Poland	50,053
Ukraine	30,088
Yugoslavia	11,325
China	111,373
Total	323,884

7. PRESENT DISTRIBUTION BY COMMODITIES OF $324 MILLION

	THIRD QUARTER 1946	FOURTH QUARTER 1946
	Millions of dollars
Bread Grains	57	0
Rice	15	37
Fats	12	0
Dairy Products	32	8
Meats	92	7
Fish	14	10
Other Foods	37	3
Totals	259	65

Note: The foregoing distribution is largely dictated by the commitments of funds already made for dairy products, meats, fish and other foods; after allotting $52 million for the rice we hope to get from China the balance of $74 million has been allotted to procure only a fraction of the grains and fats which the Food Division is confident will be allocated to UNRRA. Pending a determination of such commitments as may be revocable, it is impossible for the Food Division to respect the present food priorities indicated by the Missions within their present budgetary limitations—examples:

	MISSION'S SUGGESTIONS	FOOD DIVISION'S COMMITMENTS
	Millions of dollars
Bread Grains	163	0
Rice	52	0
Fats	43	9
Dairy Products	27	40
Meats	40	92
Fish	9	24

SUMMARY

8. To sum up, unless action is taken very quickly to increase the funds available for the procurement of food by UNRRA, (a) revocable contracts for basic foods such as milk and meat will have to be cancelled; (b) allocations to UNRRA will be adversely affected; (c) procurement activities in supplying countries may well be relaxed because of a drastic reduction in so-called "effective requirements", (d) food that should be shipped to UNRRA countries will go elsewhere; (e) UNRRA countries will be deprived of sorely-needed food by the end of the third quarter of this year; and (f) the case of these countries for an equitable share of the world's pool of food supplies in the last quarter of 1946 and in the first half of 1947 will be gravely prejudiced.

9. On the basis of the above facts I recommend for your urgent consideration: (a) that you should reply at once to Secretary Anderson's<sup>1</sup> letter of 24th May that (i) subject only to the appropriation by Congress of the outstanding $465 million, UNRRA will earmark, over and above the funds already submitted for food, exclusively for the procurement of food in the United States, to be shipped in the third quarter of 1946, the sum of $250 million, and (ii) as soon as the amount of food allocated to UNRRA from the United States approaches the amount of UNRRA money now held by the USDA together with the aforementioned $250 million, UNRRA will place additional funds at the disposal of the USDA;

(b) assuming that it will be possible to follow the course advocated in (a) immediately above, it is nevertheless necessary that you should instruct the appropriate officials of UNRRA to make an immediate determination of what funds already committed for non-food procurement are, in fact, irrevocably committed; otherwise some receiving countries face the possibility of having so little food in the last quarter of this year as to lead to starvation;

<sup>1</sup> C. P. Anderson, le secrétaire d'Agriculture des États-Unis.

<sup>1</sup> C. P. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

(c) that you should immediately instruct the staff of UNRRA that pending the completion of arrangements to finance food shipments during the third and fourth quarters of 1946, now estimated at $545 million, no funds shall be committed for the procurement of any non-food items unless it is specifically approved by you personally;

(d) that you should instruct, in the light of the findings in (b) above, the divisions of UNRRA concerned to cancel all of the procurement contracts determined to be revocable;

(e) that you should inform the United States Congress during the UNRRA hearings next week that appropriation of the outstanding balance of $465 million will be quite insufficient to provide for the minimum exports of food during the third and fourth quarters of 1946, allowing nothing for the procurement of other supplies such as transport, coal and petrol;

(f) that you should request the Government of each UNRRA receiving country to exert every possible effort to (i) secure the necessary credits to finance the procurement of non-food items for which UNRRA has irrevocably committed funds, thereby releasing money for the procurement of food by UNRRA, and (ii) place at UNRRA's disposal by letter of credit the supplementary funds required to procure, so nearly as available supplies will permit, the minimum food import requirements in both the third and fourth quarters of 1946; and

(g) that you should immediately notify the members of the UNRRA Council of your intention to place on the agenda of its August meeting the proposition that the subscription to UNRRA of an additional contribution of not lower than $750 million (i.e. about 0.5% of the national income of the contributing countries) to be spent exclusively on the procurement and shipment of food to the UNRRA receiving countries during the period ending 31st August 1947 is a prerequisite to putting these countries on their feet in a fit condition to do their work in the new world.

649.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-2406

Washington, June 11, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Following for Pierce from Murray, Begins: Reference our letter of June 8th concerning UNRRA food financing problems and possible cutbacks affecting UNRRA commitments in Canada.

The main reason for UNRRA's desire to withhold or cut back procurement in Canada and the United States of foods such as meat and fish is that they feel they would not be able to withstand criticism for failure to supply the more basic foods, cereals, and fats and oils; their extremely tight financial situation, coupled with comparatively large availabilities of cereals and fats and oils, have made these shifts in food procurement desirable.

In the United States, UNRRA has been able to reach an agreement with the Department of Agriculture, who in some mysterious way are going to finance the set asides (to the extent of approximately $50,000,000) which UNRRA had been scheduled to purchase. It is anticipated that countries who still urgently wish to acquire these supplies will have to make their own financial arrangements to purchase them either through the Export-Import Bank or otherwise. As far as Canada is concerned, UNRRA wish to have this contingency known to the officials concerned in Ottawa and they have no intention of proceeding with any cutbacks before knowing our views. As I said in my letter, Karl Fraser of the Mutual Aid Board discussed this problem with Mr. Cairns. In addition, I understand that Mr. Wadley of the Canadian Commercial Corporation has been informed of the possible cutback on fish which may amount to $6,200,000.00 and that he is expected to come to Washington to discuss this question, possibly accompanied by Dr. Finn.<sup>1</sup> UNRRA fully appreciates that, having encouraged the fishermen to the greatest possible efforts, it would be very embarrassing to the Canadian Government to have UNRRA'S fish commitments seriously cut back. UNRRA has made it clear that they will not go ahead with these proposals if the Canadian Commercial Corporation has entered into a definite commitment. I believe that any additional information you may wish for tomorrow's meeting of the Mutual Aid Board could be obtained from either Mr. Wadley or Mr. Fraser. Ends.

650.

DEA/2295-R-40

*Le sous-ministre du Commerce au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, June 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

Please refer to your letter of June 12† regarding the potential cutback of UNRRA requirements for meat and fish.

I have been in touch with the Department of Agriculture and the Deputy Minister of that Department is writing to you directly in regard to meat.

With respect to fish, the following was allocated to UNRRA, the first two items by the Combined Food Board, Washington, and the remainder by the Canadian Food Requirements Committee, on the recommendation of the Department of Fisheries, Ottawa, after consultation with officials of UNRRA and the trade.

<sup>1</sup> Le sous-ministre des Pêcheries.

<sup>1</sup> Deputy Minister of Fisheries.

QUANTITY	TYPE	SOURCE OF SUPPLY	APPOXIMATE TOTAL COST
30,000,000 lbs.	Canned Fish,	Approximately 22,000,000 lbs. West Coast
		Approximately 8,000,000 lbs. East Coast	$ 4,950,000.00
3,000,000 lbs.	Dried Salt Cod,	East Coast	480,000.00
65,000 bbls.	Pickled Fish,	East Coast	845,000.00
5,000 tons	Dried Salt Herring	West Coast	440,000.00
75,000 cases	Bloaters,	East Coast	150,000.00

UNRRA has been in touch with the Department of Fisheries with respect to the 30,000,000 lbs. canned fish, and UNRRA is perfectly willing to take this quantity if it cannot be allocated elsewhere. Therefore, on the advice of the Department of Fisheries, the Canadian Commercial Corporation is awarding contracts for the canned fish on the understanding that if all, or any portion of it cannot be allocated elsewhere UNRRA will accept delivery.

The 3,000,000 lbs of Dried Salt Cod can be cancelled without inflicting any hardship on the trade as this type of fish can be disposed of elsewhere. However, this is not the case with respect to the Pickled Fish, Dried Salt Herring and Bloaters. While requisitions for the latter two items have not yet been received by the Canadian Commercial Corporation, the supplying of these types of fish to UNRRA has been treated as a matter of prime importance, the Canadian industry having been encouraged to make special efforts to increase their production. For the same reason, the Corporation has already opened preliminary negotiations with the trade for this supply and, although no irrevocable commitments have been made, severe hardship to the trade and considerable embarrassment to the Canadian Government would result from any attempt to cancel these items. However, as in the case of the canned fish, it may be possible to place elsewhere some of the quantities of dry salted herring and pickled fish now allocated to UNRRA, and if this can be done, the UNRRA contracts will be reduced proportionately. It is therefore strongly urged that UNRRA request the Canadian Commercial Corporation to proceed with the purchase of these 3 items in accordance with the agreement which they reached with officials of the Department of Fisheries.

This matter has been discussed with officials of the Department of Fisheries and they concur in the foregoing.

As requested, I am returning the papers which accompanied your letter.

Yours very truly,
 M. W. MACKENZIE

651.

DEA/2295-AJ-40

L'ambassadeur en Chine au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresAmbassador in China to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 711

Nanking, June 25, 1946

Sir,

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON UNRRA FAR EAST COMMITTEE

I have the honour to submit herewith the first paragraph of a letter which has just come to hand from Miss Eleanor Hinder, one of the British Government representatives on UNRRA in the Far East. Miss Hinder and her associates in UNRRA are anxious to have Canadian representation.

2. The absence of Canada from the Far East Committee has caused rather widespread comment. Mr. Gilpatrick of the U.S. Embassy has been definitely outspoken as have been a number of others both within and outside of UNRRA. Mr. Pearson made a great impression, and partly because of his personality UNRRA has learned to expect important contributions from Canada.

3. I would support Miss Hinder's suggestion without hesitation, were I in a position to make a considered recommendation. For the moment I do not see any recommendation which I can make, and so I leave the problem with you.

4. The remaining paragraphs of Miss Hinder's letter did not touch upon UNRRA. Instead they were recommending to me certain of her friends with whom she wished me to become acquainted. The paragraph of Miss Hinder's letter to which I have referred to above is as follows:

I was so glad to have had the opportunity to have a talk with you while I was in Nanking. I hope you will let me repeat quite unofficially my hope that now that the Committee for the Far East is established in Nanking, you will raise with your Government the possibility of Canada being represented. I know very well the mediating role you have played so skilfully and successfully in China since you came. I have been the witness too of the very splendid contribution which Canada has made in the meetings of the UNRRA Council, particularly at the meeting of the Council held in London last year when Mr. Pearson was at his best. There are at least twelve, possibly more, months in which UNRRA will continue to operate in China and in which Canadian supplies will continue to be used. Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to have a Canadian representative to sit with the Committee for the Far East. If your Government accedes in principle, all it has to do is to communicate with the UNRRA Washington Headquarters and to nominate a Canadian member.

I have etc.

VICTOR W. ODLUM

652.

DEA/2295-Q-40

Le directeur général, UNRRA, au Premier ministre

Director General, UNRRA, to Prime Minister

PERSONAL

Washington, July 3, 1946

My dear Mr. Prime Minister,

It is none of my business, but seemingly I am always attending to somebody else's business, yet I am very much concerned over the coming Council Session of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration to be held in Geneva August 5th. I have just heard that there is a likelihood that Mike Pearson may not attend. It so happens that he is now the dean of the UNRRA delegates. He not only has a store of knowledge and information from the very beginning of UNRRA, but is always most helpful in deliberations.

At this Conference the future of UNRRA will have to be decided and, what is more important, the policy of relief for needy countries in 1947. I hope that the situation will be such that we may have the benefit of Mr. Pearson's helpful and sound advice.

With kind personal regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

F. H. LA GUARDIA

653.

DEA/2295-AJ-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis<sup>1</sup>*

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States<sup>1</sup>

Ottawa, July 30, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

General Odlum has sent us three despatches Nos. 626 of June 7th,† 645 of June 12th† and 711 of June 25th (copies attached) reporting on the work of the Far East Committee of UNRRA which has been meeting in Nanking and urging that consideration be given to Canadian representation on the Far East Committee.

You will be familiar with the extent to which Canadian goods allotted to UNRRA make up shipments of relief to China. In addition, there are quite a number of Canadians working on the staff of UNRRA in China.

<sup>1</sup> M. Pearson se rendait alors à Genève pour assister à la cinquième session du Conseil d'UNRRA.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Pearson was then on his way to Geneva to attend the fifth session of the Council of UNRRA.

Canadians have also taken an active part in voluntary relief work in China. I understand that the $5,000,000 aid given to China by the Canadian Red Cross and the Chinese War Relief Fund compares favourably on a per capita basis with contributions from other countries.

I should be glad to have your views on the advisability of our arranging for a member of our Nanking Embassy to sit on the Far East Committee of UNRRA. You may feel that you would prefer to withhold your comment until after the Geneva conference gets under way and you are able to see whether some international organization will be set up to continue UNRRA's work and the extent to which Canada will be expected to continue to provide relief supplies to China.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

654.

DEA/2295-R-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-3520

Washington, September 30, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for Dr. W. Clark, Department of Finance, from R. B. Bryce, Begins:

1. UNRRA has enquired whether Canadian Government would be prepared to provide supplies to UNRRA for a reimbursement subsequently by several Latin American countries who would make balance their contributions to UNRRA in this manner. These countries say budgetary difficulties prevent immediate payment remainder of contributions, but they are prepared to complete contributions over period of several years. Because UNRRA is ending next year, they cannot make use of such later contributions unless it is possible to discount now.

2. While it is quite unlikely that Canadian Government would be prepared as a matter of policy to enter into arrangements of this kind, we would like to know whether it would not be debarred on purely legal grounds. Only authority we know of under which action would be taken would be Export Credit Act and closest application to legal position here would be for Canada to make loan to Governments concerned to enable them to purchase supplies in Canada to transfer to UNRRA. We assume, however, that even this would be contrary to law.

3. Would suggest you provide copies of this to Johnson if back and failing him, to Mundell or Coyne and obtain their opinion on matter. Inform External Affairs as well and say UNRRA plan to write formally to Ambassador here. Ends.

655.

DEA/2295-R-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-2482

Ottawa, October 2, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for R. B. Bryce from W. C. Clark, [Begins:]

1. Have considered suggestion raised in your cypher teletype WA-3520. You may advise UNRRA that we have no legal authority which would enable us to enter into the financial arrangements suggested in your teletype designed to enable certain Latin American countries to extend their contributions to UNRRA over a period of years. We believe it would certainly be completely contrary to the spirit and probably to the letter of the export credit insurance act to use that legislation for discounting the notes of countries wishing time to meet their international obligations.

2. Have advised Mr. Wrong who agrees.

656.

DEA/9255-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures<sup>1</sup>*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

Ottawa, October 19, 1946

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

Relief needs in countries which have suffered from the war will be under consideration in the General Assembly. It is now clear that the decision to terminate UNRRA activities in Europe on December 31, 1946, and in the Far East on March 31, 1947, will not be reversed. The Council of UNRRA, at its last meeting, referred to the United Nations Assembly the problem of post-UNRRA relief needs, dividing this question into two parts:

- (a) The determination of relief needs after UNRRA comes to an end, and
- (b) Means for satisfying the needs so determined.

The Economic and Social Council has also adopted a resolution supporting the UNRRA Resolution, with the addition of an amendment put forward by the Canadian delegation as follows:

The Economic and Social Council "requests the Secretary-General to undertake immediately the collection and analysis of information relating to the subjects enumerated in paragraph 1 above with a view to the submission of this data to the agency or agencies to be established or designated by the General Assembly, and recommends that other international organizations and governments provide all possible assistance to the Secretary-General in the performance of this task."

<sup>1</sup>M. St. Laurent se rendait alors à New York pour participer à la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.

<sup>1</sup>Mr. St. Laurent was then on his way to New York to attend the second part of the first session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

We have under consideration in the Department the way in which the discussion of relief questions is likely to develop in the Assembly and also the attitude which should be adopted by the Canadian delegation towards these problems. I am attaching a draft telegram to the Canadian High Commissioner in London. This draft telegram contains, in paragraphs 2 to 6, an account of what we understand to be the intention of the United States delegation in regard to the discussion of relief needs in the Assembly. Paragraph 7 of the telegram gives some indication of the difficulties which we feel may arise as a result of the procedure which the United States delegation is considering. Paragraphs 8 and 9 give, in general terms, the attitude which we think the Canadian delegation should adopt during the discussion of these questions in the Assembly.

I would be grateful to know whether or not you approve of this telegram, either in its present form or with revisions. If you concur, we shall despatch the telegram at once to London for comment, and will send a similar telegram to Washington, also with a request for comment. It will then be possible, also, to regard paragraphs 8 and 9 of the draft telegram as a general statement of Canadian policy on relief problems.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Projet de télégramme du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne*

Draft Telegram from Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Great Britain

TELEGRAM

Ottawa, October 18, 1946

SECRET AND IMPORTANT. Reference International Relief questions after the termination of UNRRA.

1. As you know, the UNRRA Council in Geneva referred to the United Nations Assembly the problem of post-UNRRA relief needs, dividing the question into two parts:

(a) The determination of relief needs after UNRRA comes to an end, and

(b) Means for satisfying the needs so determined.

The recent session of the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution supporting the UNRRA Council resolution with the addition of an amendment put forward by the Canadian Delegation, requesting the Secretary General to undertake immediately the preparation of a factual analysis of needs.

2. We have learned in confidence that the United States delegation to the General Assembly intends to propose the establishment of a committee of the Assembly, to examine and report on relief needs in 1947—that is, needs plus inability to pay. This committee will, it is intended, be exclusively a fact-finding body, and will make no recommendations regarding methods for satisfying these needs. The preliminary fact-finding work prepared by the Secretariat and similar material available from other bodies (e.g. UNRRA) on relief needs in 1947, will be made available to this Assembly Committee. The United States authorities apparently hope that this committee of Government representatives will act as a committee of experts. The State Department wants a United States representative on this committee sufficiently authoritative to carry weight with Congress and United States' opinion.

3. The United States is apparently confident, on the basis of analyses prepared by its own experts, that any objective analysis will show (a) that the total relief needs in Europe will amount only to some $500,000,000, and (b) that only Italy, Austria, and possibly Greece, will need supplies for which they are unable to pay.

4. The United States hopes that no problem of relief for Asia will be raised to confuse the issue during this Assembly. The Chinese will presumably be persuaded not to make any claims now by a promise that their needs will be considered later. UNRRA's Far East activities are to continue until the end of March 1947.

5. Mr. Tyler Wood has informed Mr. Pearson that the State Department hopes that the figures found by the Assembly's fact-finding committee will not at once be made public, and that the report of this committee to the Assembly will be referred at once to some other committee of the Assembly, possibly the already existing ("Bloom") Committee on UNRRA. If this second committee gets the facts in time, it will report back to the Assembly with recommendations regarding methods of meeting the needs determined by the fact-finding committee. There would then be an Assembly debate on the whole topic. If the Committee's work is not finished before the Assembly ends it will carry on and make its report to the Secretary General for submission to governments.

6. The United States intention is that the Assembly will then refer the report of the second ("Bloom"?) Committee to a committee composed exclusively of nations which express their willingness to contribute to relief supplies in 1947. This committee, the United States intends, will not interfere in any way with the control by a supplying nation over the destination of such goods as it may supply. These goods will be distributed by the receiving government.

7. Comments:

(a) It is perhaps a gamble to assume that the fact-finding committee, especially as it is composed of government representatives, will report needs as restricted as the findings of the United States experts suggest. In any case, it may be expected that there will be a minority report stressing large relief needs by certain Slav countries. Similarly, the second Assembly committee may also bring in a majority and minority report.

(b) Figures from the fact-finding committee may leak out prematurely. With or without this leak, there may be an Assembly debate before the reference of the first committee's report to the proposed second committee.

(c) The State Department appears to entertain some hope that the fact-finding committee's work may not be ready in time for debate by the Assembly. If there is an Assembly debate before this report is completed, the United Nations can take the position that no decision can yet be reached.

(d) If the majority report of the fact-finding committee and consequently of the second committee, finds no relief needs (plus inability to pay) on the part of countries in the Soviet zone, the U.S.S.R. may be expected to stay out of the suppliers' committee. Even if the U.S.S.R. comes into the suppliers' committee, the United States will insist on retaining full control over the destination of its own supplies.

(e) Reports from Washington indicate that Congress will be at least reluctant to vote any free United States supplies to any country in the Soviet zone of Europe. Mr. Tyler Wood has told Mr. Pearson that if the fact-finding committee does in fact find relief needs and inability to pay on the part of Poland, the State Department would be prepared to ask Congress to vote funds for Poland. The State Department may, in fact, be counting on a refusal by Congress.

(f) It may not be possible in fact to exclude entirely from the debates relief claims in Asia. Though China may be persuaded to say nothing, India may assert need for relief goods from the dollar-countries.

(g) The United States probably intends to make relief shipments available to Austria and Italy—the former through army funds, the latter presumably by a special vote after Congress meets. The needs of Greece may have to be met chiefly by the United Kingdom. Canada may be asked to help in Greece and to some extent in Italy.

8. While it is proposed that the Canadian Delegation give general support to the main lines of United States tactics on relief problems at the General Assembly, we will bear in mind the desirability of simplifying the procedure wherever possible, so that if a general relief debate in the Assembly seems inevitable, at least two Assembly debates can be avoided.

9. Canada would attach importance to the establishment of the "Committee of Suppliers", which would presumably work along the lines of the Combined Boards and the International Emergency Food Council. It is in our view most desirable that some degree of international coordinating machinery be retained, both as a matter of general principle and for efficiency in making allocations.

657.

DEA/9255-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] October 22, 1946

I am enclosing herewith copy of a letter which I sent to Mr. St. Laurent on forthcoming discussions at the United Nations Assembly on relief and rehabilitation questions.<sup>1</sup> Attached to this letter is a draft telegram which outlines the policy on this matter which is likely to be adopted by the United States delegation at the Assembly and which, in its last two paragraphs, suggests that the Canadian delegation should give general support to that policy. Mr. St. Laurent has telephoned that he is in agreement with all of this draft telegram except paragraph 9, which he would like to discuss with you tomorrow. That paragraph emphasizes the desirability of retaining some form of international coordinating machinery in relief matters. Mr. St. Laurent is not so sure about this.

My feeling in making this particular recommendation was that, without some international coordinating machinery, the present trend toward making relief an adjunct of politics would be intensified. My view is that if relief is required in 1947 (and that is a matter yet to be determined), there should be some international supervision over the whole question, both in order to minimize political considerations and to ensure that a disproportionate share of the burden is not borne by any one country.

L. B. P[EARSON]

658.

CH/Vol. 2105

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures<sup>2</sup>

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs<sup>2</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa,] October 24, 1946

UNITED STATES RELIEF POLICY AT THE FORTHCOMING ASSEMBLY

1. The probable United States policy on relief matters at the United Nations Assembly, as indicated to us, is of importance to us. It seems

<sup>1</sup> Le document précédent.

<sup>2</sup> Ce mémorandum fut envoyé à la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies le 26 octobre 1946.

<sup>1</sup> Preceding document.

<sup>2</sup> This memorandum was sent to the Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations on October 26, 1946.

that the Americans will not agree to the further allocation or distribution of relief supplies by an international agency over which the United States might not have adequate control. This will avoid, it is hoped, the use of American funds by an international agency to finance the consolidation of regimes or policies with which the United States is not in sympathy. This policy also emphasizes that relief and rehabilitation should give way as smoothly and rapidly as possible to reconstruction, and that national governments should receive every encouragement to work toward self-supporting economies in their respective countries.

2. On the other hand, this policy may make the western nations vulnerable to attack on the propaganda front in Europe. The emphasis, in the winding up of relief, on the return to "normalcy" and to "regular business methods" can easily be misinterpreted as a lack of sympathy on the part of the western democracies with the real needs of European peoples. Any western denial of claims by certain countries that they are unable to pay, can and probably will be presented to the peoples of these countries as denial of, or indifference to, their shortages and hunger—which will no doubt be real enough. This policy may give effective propaganda weapons not only to the press of Soviet-dominated regimes but to the Communist press in Italy, Greece and Austria. It may also to some extent serve to discourage and demoralize the moderate elements in Europe.

3. Already a major line of Soviet propaganda in Europe, the Middle East, and South America, is that Western policy is inspired primarily by strictly commercial ambitions and a capitalist desire to "exploit". A second line, in Europe, is that the rich Western nations are incapable of appreciating, as Russia does, the real needs of poor peoples. A Western relief policy ostensibly based solely on narrow interpretations of "ability to pay" can easily be misinterpreted to support this campaign, the effectiveness of which should not be underestimated. Majority and minority reports of Assembly committees on relief will moreover give an opportunity to the U.S.S.R. delegation to pose as more generous and realistic than the West.

4. The United States decision to terminate UNRRA has been based, in part, on a feeling, held particularly in Congress, that certain aspects of UNRRA policy have involved the use of American surpluses for political purposes contrary to the interest of the western democracies; that considerations of relief have been subordinated in certain receiving countries to considerations of politics. The argument would run that sending UNRRA supplies to, for instance, the Ukraine and Byelo-Russia has inevitably facilitated in proportion the use of the Soviet national income for armaments and the use of Soviet manpower for the maintenance of large occupational troops in eastern Europe, and has thus assisted the consolidation of "undemocratic" regimes in this area. The delivery of UNRRA supplies to the Yugoslav Government, and possibly the Polish Government, may also be considered in this light.

5. To the extent that the decision of the U.S.A. to terminate UNRRA is in fact motivated by considerations such as these, (or by appreciation of the reluctance of Congress to vote funds, which may come to the same thing) reticence about the motives may tend to confuse public opinion both in North and South America and in Europe. In the public opinion field, this reticence may, it can be argued, lose the opportunity otherwise provided to stiffen moderate elements in Europe, and in fact may contribute to their gradual demoralisation.

6. On the other hand, any public declaration that the above considerations should determine relief policies would be an open avowal that relief is to be used by supplying countries as an agency of politics. Certainly no Canadian delegation could associate itself with such an avowal, no matter what advantages might seem to lie in bringing this matter out in the open.

7. If this is true, then the best policy would seem to be a strict adherence to the line that relief is outside politics; but it will be granted only to nations which demonstrate beyond doubt their need and their financial inability to look after themselves. Any receiving nation which uses the relief so granted for political ends does so on its own responsibility.

8. It may be true, as pointed out above, that this will give the U.S.S.R. material for propaganda. We will, however, have to accept that risk adopting counter-propaganda tactics, if necessary, to neutralise as far as possible its effects. The western democracies certainly do not have to remain on the defensive in so far as relief policies are concerned, both as to what they have done in the past and are prepared to do in the future when the need is demonstrated.

L. B. P[EARSON]

659.

DEA/9255-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Consul General in New York to Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 34

New York, October 27, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 22. Following for Mr. Pearson from Mr. St. Laurent, Begins: Your letter of October 19th, concerning international relief.

I have discussed this matter with the Prime Minister. Our feeling is that the Canadian Government will wish to take the same attitude towards relief problems as has been adopted with regard to the International Refugee Organization. That is to say, if an international solution can be found, Canada would not wish to shirk any responsibility from her membership in the United Nations. If, however, the United States tactics described in the draft telegram enclosed with your letter, were to result in a decision to leave the means and methods of satisfying 1947 relief needs entirely to individual Governments, this delegation is not authorized to make any advance commitment, even of a general nature. I should, accordingly, suggest that the last two paragraphs of your draft telegram might be revised as follows:

“8. The Canadian Government would be prepared to give an assurance, through its delegation to the United Nations, that Canada would be ready to bear her fair share of meeting 1947 relief needs if this is to be done by cooperative international action to discharge what would, in fact, be recognized as a responsibility of the United Nations. If the problem is to be left to individual Governments to handle as they see fit, the action to be taken by the Canadian Government would be a matter for decision after the position of the United Nations, with respect to its responsibility had been made clear.

9. The Canadian delegation is disposed to give general support to the main lines of United States tactics so far as they are directed towards the setting up by this Assembly of a Committee of Experts to examine relief needs. The establishment of a Committee composed of Nations who have been the principal suppliers in the past, which would presumably work along the lines of the Combined Boards and the International Emergency Food Council and would thus furnish international coordinating machinery, may be desirable. We would point out, however, that we are not in the same position as the United States Government (described in paragraph 7 (G) of your draft telegram.) The Canadian Government has no army funds which could be used for relief and has not yet decided to recommend to Parliament the voting of funds for relief purposes in addition to the votes that may be required for discharging Canada's obligations under the United Nations.” Ends.

660.

DEA/9255-40

*Le chargé d'affaires aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in United States to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-3899

Washington, October 31, 1946

IMPORTANT. My WA-3854,† October 28th, and previous teletypes concerning post-UNRRA relief.

Dallas Dort, State Department adviser on Relief and Rehabilitation, informed Murray, yesterday, that the State Department is now ready to enter into detailed talks with us on relief measures for 1947. Dort said that although this invitation was made as an informal request, nevertheless, it is a request, and they would like to start these talks, “preferably on a high level”, as soon as possible.

We indicated that, provided it is possible for Mr. Bryce to fit this into his already heavily overcrowded time-table, the preliminary talks might start some time during the first half of the coming week. At that time, the State Department is ready to give us all the information they have as well as what they plan to do and, of course, what they wish to have us do. They would hope that at a later date, when we had given full consideration to their suggestions, we would enter into final talks with them.

We have, for some little time now, been telling the State Department people that it is very unlikely that the Canadian Government would enter into bilateral relief arrangements which would involve definite and, perhaps, fairly considerable commitments by Canada. We have said that it is more likely that we would be prepared to shoulder our share of any obligation which was agreed upon on an international basis. Assuming this to be our position, we may soon find ourselves attacking the United States for bilateralism in relief while they continue to attack our bilateral trade deals.

I should be glad to know whether you consider that detailed talks with the United States are timely, and if so whom you wish to have take part in these preliminary talks and what dates would be satisfactory.

661.

DEA/9255-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-2752

Ottawa, November 2, 1946

SECRET. Following for Wrong from Pearson, Begins: Your teletype WA-3854,† Post-UNRRA relief talks.

I think we should treat with great caution any United States efforts to get us to commit ourselves to meeting any definite proportion of relief needs in 1947. It is one thing to participate in the United Nations relief effort; it is quite another to associate ourselves with the U.S. and U.K. exclusively in any arrangement; especially as U.S. relief policies now seem to be determined to a considerable extent by political considerations. It is to be hoped therefore that in any talks in Washington you will not make any commitments of any kind either in principle or in detail.

662.

DEA/9255-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

Ottawa, November 4, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

With reference to your teletype No. WA-3899 of October 31st and previous correspondence in regard to international relief, I am enclosing, for your information, a memorandum to the Canadian Delegation to the General Assembly concerning international relief questions after the termination of UNRRA.† This memorandum was based on the enclosures contained in my letter of October 19th,† and in particular on a draft telegram to the Canadian High Commissioner in London on relief questions.<sup>1</sup> The draft telegram was discussed by Mr. St. Laurent with Mr. King in New York, and the last two paragraphs of the memorandum are the result of Mr. St. Laurent's comments. You will notice that changes have been introduced in the early part of the memorandum in accordance with suggestions which we have received from you. We have also learned from the delegation in New York that the United States delegation is determined that Congressman Bloom's committee of the United Nations on UNRRA shall not, if possible, be asked to consider relief questions at any stage of the discussions.

The enclosed memorandum will now replace the draft telegram to the High Commission as a statement of Canadian policy on relief questions. I am grateful for the comments which we received from your Embassy in reply to my letter of October 19th. These have helped us materially in clarifying our understanding of the American position.

Yours sincerely,

R. G. RIDDELL
for the Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs.

663.

DEA/9255-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 107

New York, November 5, 1946

SECRET. ASDEL No. 72. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Post-UNRRA relief. Following our telephone conversation of yesterday afternoon, I have given Mr. St. Laurent the following memorandum, Begins:

Following our conversation at lunch today, I telephoned Mr. Pearson at 5.00 o'clock this afternoon. He is glad to learn that you approve heartily of the warning which he gave Mr. Wrong in his teletype to Washington.

He tells me that he has already sent to Mr. Wrong the text of the memorandum† to the Canadian delegation which was sent us in DELAS No. 51.† He also talked to Mr. Wrong over the telephone today and he is going to phone him again today to ask him to make it clear to Clayton that the Canadian Government is not in a position to go along with the United States in the kind of proposal which they are making for a tripartite arrangement. Mr. Wrong will make certain that Clayton is under no illusion about the Canadian position if the United States goes ahead with its present proposal for a tripartite commitment.

<sup>1</sup> Voir la pièce jointe, document 656.

<sup>1</sup> See enclosure, Document 656.

I pointed out to Mr. Pearson that we, no more than the United States, could provide funds for relief in 1947 until our legislature had met and approved the necessary appropriation.

I also passed on to him the idea that if relief funds for 1947 were to be met by co-operative international action under the auspices of the United Nations, it might be possible for the General Assembly to authorize an advance from the working capital fund to cover at least part of the relief needs until the Parliaments concerned had passed the necessary appropriations.

Finally, I said that after Mr. Wrong had got Clayton's reaction to our warning, we might be in a better position to decide on our future course of action. One possible course of action, which you might perhaps wish to consider after we have Clayton's reaction, would be for us to tell Clayton informally that we can see no way out of our own special difficulties, except by the establishment of a temporary International Relief Organization for 1947. The Convention establishing such an Organization could contain a provision that it would not come into effect until ratified by a certain number of States whose contributions totalled a certain percentage. Moreover, it should not be impossible to draw up the Convention establishing such an agency in such a way as to meet some of the United States desiderata. Thus each contributing State might be given the right, if it so desired, to distribute every item of goods purchased by its contributions. Each State might also be given the right to select the States to which the goods purchased by its contributions go. The United States would presumably wish to exercise these two rights. Other States might not wish to exercise them. Ends. Message ends.

664.

DEA/9255-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-2768

Ottawa, November 5, 1946

SECRET. Following for Wrong from Pearson, [Begins:] Your teletype WA-3899, post-UNRRA relief.

I agree that the talks with the United States authorities, to which you refer, should take place as soon as possible. For that purpose, I hope that you and Bryce, when he arrives, will be able to see Clayton and possibly dispel some illusions about our position on post-UNRRA relief which he still seems to entertain. This position is quite clearly outlined in the memorandum† to our delegation concerning this subject, a copy of which you have received, and there is little likelihood of the Government departing from that position. There is certainly no disposition here to enter into any bilateral or tripartite relief arrangements by which we will bear a fixed share of the cost. If the United States authorities, because of Congressional difficulties, can have nothing further to do with even informal international action in respect of relief matters, that is their concern. It would be equally difficult for us to participate in any other kind of arrangement. The alternative to accepting responsibility as part of a United Nations effort, is for Canada to do what it thinks best as the situation develops. In any event, it will be as difficult for us as for the United States to provide relief funds before the necessary legislative appropriation has been made, nor have we any Army funds for this purpose. I wonder whether Mr. Clayton might react sympathetically to a proposal for the establishment of some temporary international relief committee for 1947? The convention establishing such an organization might contain a provision that it would not come into effect until ratified by a certain number of states, whose contributions totalled a certain percentage. Furthermore, it should be possible to draw up such a convention in such a way to meet some of the United States desires. For instance, each contributing state might be given the right, if it so desired, to distribute every item of goods purchased by its contributions. Each state might also be given the right to select the states to which the goods purchased by the contribution go. The United States would presumably wish to exercise these two rights, though other states might not.

I have some doubt whether Clayton will react very favourably to a proposal such as the above, but you might try it out on him.

665.

DEA/9255-40

Mémorandum du directeur, la direction économique, le ministère des Finances

Memorandum by Director, Economic Division, Department of Finance

Washington, November 9, 1946

MEMORANDUM ON DISCUSSION TODAY WITH AMERICANS AND BRITISH REGARDING POST-UNRRA RELIEF

I discussed this subject first today, before lunch, with Hume Wrong and Murray at the Embassy and we went over the main lines of Canadian policy and the main problems as shown in the various messages now on our files. In general, we noted that the Canadian Government policy was that, all that we could say at this time would be that Canada would be ready to bear her fair share of meeting 1947 relief needs, "if this is to be done by international action to discharge what would in fact be recognized as a responsibility of the United Nations", while if the matter is to be dealt with by governments individually the question would have to be decided by the government later.

We agreed however, that we should find out what we could from the Americans of their intentions, and what they wished us to do, and should explain to them the position of our government, so far as it is yet determined, along the lines indicated above, and point out the difficulties that we should face, for example, in connection with appropriations and indicate that Canada's action would be helped if a number of other countries, as well as the U.S. and U.K., were willing to participate. We noted Pearson's suggestion of a temporary International Relief Committee for 1947, and thought this might be explained at some stage if it seemed likely that the Americans might be interested.

It was not possible to arrange a meeting with Clayton today due to his illness earlier in the week, and his very crowded agenda. Mr. Tyler Wood and Mr. Dallas Dort had asked however, if we could see them and it was agreed that Murray and I should do so at 2:30 this p.m. It was also arranged that we should see Mr. Roger Makins of the British Embassy later in the afternoon at Wrong's office.

The discussion at the State Department from 2:30 to 3:45 p.m. was most interesting and useful. The Americans first asked us what our present position was and I endeavoured to tell them, explaining the Government's attitude so far as it had been determined as indicated above, explaining that we did not have sufficient independent information to come to independent judgement regarding relief needs, but that broadly speaking we did not see any objection to the estimates of requirements for relief being prepared by the Americans so far as we know them. These figures were discussed later and included estimates of relief requirements (aside from the requirements that might be reasonably financed by loans) of—

$150 to 200 million for Italy
135 to 150 million for Austria
75 to 100 million for Poland and say, — 50 million for Greece.

I told them of our problems regarding appropriations and discussed with them the timetable that might be conceivable if our Government were prepared to go ahead. In answer to their questions I indicated that under some circumstances it might be possible for us to make some shipments very late in March out of further supplementary appropriations for the current fiscal year. I told them that we had no appropriations now from which we could finance any relief sums. I indicated that in general, our Government would favour dealing with this problem through some international organization or agency, rather than by independent action by the various governments, and that such international action would make it easier to get an appropriation from our Parliament.

After getting a preliminary idea of our situation the Americans then went on to tell us of their plans and hopes. They had come to the conclusion that not only should UNRRA terminate, but any future relief should be provided directly from the supplying financing governments to the receiving governments and be covered by a specific agreement between the two of them. They did not wish therefore, any international agency or organization involved and would be prepared explicitly to oppose any such agency being set up. They did wish very much however, to see other governments also providing relief and indeed, felt that funds could hardly be obtained from Congress unless it was possible to assure Congress that other governments were also taking action along this line. They wished to consult with other governments about the matter, to exchange information and to concert their efforts with others, and if possible, reach some sort of agreement on the size, nature and direction of the relief that would be granted by the various supplying countries. They hinted, at least, that they would plan to discuss this even with the USSR as a possible supplying country. They said they had already been talking to the British about it. They had also been talking to the British about the means of approaching still other potential supplying countries, particularly the Swedes, Swiss and Argentine, and they were anxious to see these in as well as other potential supplying countries, such as Australia and Brazil. They thought the best means of approach would probably be to have the countries in need take the initiative in approaching these other potential suppliers and then the U.S. and probably the U.K. could approach those third countries about the overtures that had been made to each of them by the countries requiring relief. I emphasized that from our point of view it would be advantageous to have as many countries in as possible from the supplying end and they quite agreed that the same would be true from their point of view. They feel that they are going to have a hard time getting funds from Congress for relief at all and that it would be simply impossible, particularly with the Republicans now in power in Congress, to get relief for distribution through an international agency. They believe they will have a harder time now than they had in getting appropriations for UNRRA and that they only hope to get anything at all by being able to assure Congress that the U.S. Government itself will be in complete control of the operation and then get direct assurance regarding the distribution and use of supplies from U.S. Embassies abroad who will observe the use made of the supplies provided. They apparently feel that there is some hope of getting support from those who favour direct relief arrangements, and from those who looked with disfavour upon UNRRA. In addition they feel that an agency like UNRRA would find it almost impossible to give relief only to countries which it is now thought need aid, i.e. the ex-enemies and Greece which is unpopular with all the other Eastern countries and possibly Poland. Moreover, there would hardly seem to be time to get a new organization established and operating quickly enough to have shipments made in the months of March, April and May when they are most urgently needed.

The U.S. would like to have the Canadian Government indicate its willingness to share the relief burden and provide supplies to countries needing them in action parallel to that of the U.S. They would like to discuss with us, as indicated above, the value and nature of the supplies we might contribute in relation to the needs of the various countries. They would hope that we could take action soon enough so as to help meet the urgent requirements in March, which would be the difficult period for them to meet if they have delays in Congress. I explained that as yet, of course, the Government had not considered the sort of questions which they had put up to us and quite apart from the view our Government might take on the substance of it they might be reluctant to take action on the matter before it is known if the U.S. Congress will approve an appropriation. Mr. Wood and Mr. Dort recognized our problems on this point and said that with Congress meeting early in January it might be possible for us to have some knowledge of Congress' reaction before the Canadian Parliament had finally to commit itself. They hoped that any actual waiting on Congress could be left for our Parliament, and that our Government could express its intentions of recommending this action to Parliament before Congress acted.

I asked the Americans if they would see any insuperable political difficulties in granting relief to Poland if Poland showed evidence of needing relief. They said this matter of policy was not yet settled but they did not believe there would be any insuperable objections. I noted that it was a happy coincidence that there was no evidence of real need on the part of Yugoslavia and they all laughed. Congress of course would find it very hard to approve relief to Yugoslavia now. I asked about Hungary and they thought some share for her would not be out of question if the reparations problem and related problems were straightened out and they had some hope that this might be possible. From remarks which they made in other connections about Czechoslovakia I gathered that there was no question of her being in need. It should be noted however, that from what these men said and from what I was subsequently told, Wood and Dort, particularly the former, are probably the men in the State Department most keen on dealing with this problem on a humanitarian basis and keeping politics out of relief. Makins later told me (see below) that the State Department seemed now to be planning to go to Congress for funds for relief for Italy, Austria and Greece, "and perhaps Poland if real need should develop there."

When I asked about procurement for these relief supplies the Americans said they hoped they could establish dollar accounts for those countries and let them do their own purchasing and arrange their own shipping. They admitted however, that while Italy, for example, might be able to do this it was quite possible that Greece and Austria at least, would need help in procurement and shipping. Murray enquired whether the U.S. would see grave objections to funds provided by U.S. being expended elsewhere. The Americans thought that under present circumstances their Government and Congress might not object to expenditure being made elsewhere.

Murray enquired as to the State Department's views on the UNRRA estimates of expenditure and the Americans said they considered they were not reliable at all. This question arose first in connection with the Yugoslav requirements and Dort said that UNRRA had simply taken figures which the Yugoslavs had prepared, using first round figures for imports which they then broke down into various items that looked reasonable to them.

I asked whether, in such cases as that of Greece, the Americans would insist upon any evidence of improved handling of economic affairs in the country as a condition of giving relief. They thought no condition would be attached except to see that the relief itself was properly distributed, but I asked what consumption standards they had in mind in deciding upon relief needs and they said that the scale they were using was based upon 2000 calories a day, at least for urban residents. This was lower than the UNRRA objective, although perhaps no lower than what UNRRA had actually been able to achieve in most of the countries they were assisting. It was not the minimum possible standards to support life, as witnesses the standards in Austria and Germany, but they felt it was low enough to set as a standard for the purpose we have in mind.

After leaving the State Department, Murray and I went directly to Hume Wrong's office where we met him and Roger Makins of the British Embassy. I described rather briefly and frankly our discussion at the State Department, understanding that the British were being informed of the State Department views on the matter. Makins commented on his views of the matter and filled in some of the details, particularly about questions which they had taken up explicitly. He said in particular, that the U.S. had suggested that the U.S., U.K. and Canada should agree to assume financial responsibility proportionate to that which they had assumed from UNRRA, but that he had, on instructions from his Government, told the State Department that the U.K. could not now afford to carry such a substantial portion of the burden. He had told them that the U.K. felt that it would be able to provide some wool and possibly some other commodities to countries such as Austria, including coal from Germany, if production permits,—that it might find them some items from U.K. surpluses and that it might extend to Austria, for example, a modest sterling credit, but that it could not undertake in advance to make a financial contribution in the way and in the proportion to that which the U.K. had made to UNRRA. I told him that I had deliberately avoided any discussion with the Americans at this stage about the relative magnitude of the share we would undertake in this matter, as I felt it was still necessary for us to decide upon the principle and upon the general nature of the arrangements. Makins went on to say that the approach which they had discussed with the Americans would be to suggest that Italy should approach the Argentine to get some help and that Greece and Austria should approach Switzerland and Sweden as well as the three of us. After this had been done the U.S. and U.K. could then approach Switzerland, Sweden and the Argentine referring to the requests that had been made to each side by the country in need. Makins said their ministers in Sweden and Switzerland had reported that those countries already felt they had done enough. At this stage I did not ask where Poland fitted in but after indicating that this seemed a practical arrangement I enquired why they were not thinking of Australia. Makins seemed to feel that Australia should not be expected to help, for some reason that was not altogether clear to me, but it may be because they feel that Australia could only help by buying dollars from the U.K. for sterling with which to purchase supplies. He said that Australia did not have supplies available for shipment to Europe at present, but they were shipping all the wheat they could to India. I said I thought we should not let these physical supply difficulties stand in the way of a reasonable sharing of the financial load and said that we for example might find very real physical difficulties in supplying wheat, but that I thought that should not be a reason for Canada not participating. He admitted that Australia was not, as far as he knew, carrying any relief responsibility in the Southeast Asia area. Wrong asked him about Egypt and Makins did not believe that much could be done with Egypt. There was a brief allusion by Wrong to Australia contributing from some of its sterling in London but this was not followed up. We enquired about the possibility of bringing in South Africa, but Makins said it had been difficult to get them to contribute even to UNRRA to which they had not made a second contribution and they were short of food supplies themselves. I pointed out their favorable financial position and suggested light-heartedly that they might make a contribution in gold, that being one of their major products of which they had an ample supply on hand.

Makins said that the U.K. now as well as the U.S. did not wish to meet this problem through an international agency but rather, somewhat along the lines proposed by the U.S. (doubtless with suitable modifications to reduce the U.K. share). He said Bevin, in the House of Commons, had indicated officially that the U.K. felt the proper machinery for relief should no longer include an international agency such as UNRRA.

Following this discussion it was agreed that Wrong would not ask to see Clayton immediately, as we now had a fairly good idea of each other's position in the matter and it was desirable for Canada to consider the whole question further. I said it would be hard to get any definite opinions, much less decisions out of our Minister at present, but that we might be able to get some initial reaction and find out what further questions they would like us to explore before we come to any decision on this matter. We did not consider it practical to put forward, at this particular stage, the suggestion which Pearson had raised of an Emergency Relief Committee for 1947 because it now appears as though neither the British nor Americans would be prepared to support any formal organization that would not be more than just a consultative body of supplying countries.

It was agreed that I would attempt to discuss this question with Clark and Pearson again next week and also endeavour to get preliminary views of Ilsley and Mr. St. Laurent who is expected to be back in Ottawa for a time next week from New York.

666.

DEA/9255-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 167

New York, November 13, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 113. Following for Mr. Pearson, Begins: Post-UNRRA relief.

1. I give below the summary of recent developments in the relief question which you may wish to discuss with Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Martin.

2. Mr. R. B. Bryce of the Department of Finance has had a number of conversations with Mr. Clayton and others in the State Department on this subject and reported to us last Saturday night (November 9th). At that time, the State Department was quite determined on opposing any international agency to meet relief needs in 1947. At this General Assembly they proposed to concentrate on securing the nomination of the "Committee of Experts" to examine relief needs which would report, not to the United Nations, but to individual Governments. They recognized that there would be relief needs in 1947 and proposed to approach Congress with the suggestion that the United States should make an appropriation to meet them, not, however, through any international agency. As a reinforcement of their position, they thought that it would be useful if they could say, when Congress was approached in January, that the Canadian Government was also requesting funds from Parliament for relief. They might, therefore, attempt to secure some kind of advance assurance that the Canadian Government would be prepared to request an appropriation at an early stage in the session.

3. Mr. La Guardia in his speech to Committee No. 2 on November 11th, strongly condemned this approach and offered instead a plan for a United Nations Emergency Food Fund of four to five hundred million dollars. A summary of his plan is given in the New York Times of November 12th. It seems inevitable that the U.S.S.R. will welcome the proposal and thus throw upon the United Nations the onus of appearing to refuse any recognition to the needs of deficit countries and to intend to use food supplies as a political weapon.

4. The plan would be fully consistent with the Canadian policy to date, provided the United States were willing to cooperate. Talks with members of the United States delegation here in New York, however, indicate that the United States Government would be most firmly opposed to the establishment of the suggested fund. Informal enquiries made of Mr. Tyler Wood of the State Department have elicited a similar and very decided answer. State Department policy is based upon the unshakeable conviction that Congress will never consent to vote relief for distribution by an international agency. It appears, therefore, that we may be called upon, possibly fairly soon, to indicate what the attitude of the Canadian Government would be towards the proposal outlined in paragraph two above. Ends.

667.

DEA/2295-AJ-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-4056

Washington, November 14, 1946

Canadian membership on the Committee of the Council of UNRRA for the Far East.

I am quoting below the text of an airgram received by the Department of State from their Consulate General at Shanghai, on the desirability of having Canada represented on the Far Eastern Council. Begins:

General Odlum, retiring Canadian Ambassador, is reported in recent press interview to have stated in response to direct enquiry, that question of Canadian membership on the UNRRA Committee for the Council of the Far East had never been raised and that Canada did not participate in the activities of the Committee because it had not been invited to do so. The membership of the Committee is established by Resolution of the UNRRA Council, and when the Committee was last reconstituted by Council action at the third session in London, Canada was not included.

This matter was specifically though informally raised with General Odlum by the UNRRA Liaison Officer of the Consulate General in Nanking last June. The latter observed that Canada had been very active in UNRRA activities elsewhere and that it, therefore, seemed desirable to propose Canadian membership in the Far Eastern Council at the August meeting of the UNRRA Council. General Odlum demurred on the ground that he already had more responsibilities than he could effectively carry, and the proposed action was, therefore, not initiated.

It is suggested that in view of the matter having been raised again, the Canadian Ambassador in Washington be consulted and that Canada's membership on the Far Eastern Council be approved by Central Committee Resolution prior to the scheduled CCFE<sup>1</sup> meeting on November 13th, if possible. Ends.

---

<sup>1</sup> Committee of the Council for the Far East.

I believe that General Odlum reported some time ago on requests which he had received to have Canada become a member of the Far Eastern Council, so that we could take a more active part in UNRRA activities in China. As UNRRA shipments will be going to China until late in 1947, the Far Eastern Council will, presumably, be active for quite some time. If we wish to seek this membership we should inform the Administration at an early date so that our application could be placed on the agenda of the Sixth UNRRA Council now scheduled to meet in Washington on December 10th. I should be grateful for your instructions. Teletype ends.

668.

DEA/2295-AJ-40

*Mémorandum de la troisième direction politique au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Third Political Division to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, November 16, 1946

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP ON THE COMMITTEE OF THE COUNCIL OF UNRRA FOR THE FAR EAST

Teletype No. WA-4056 of November 14 quotes the text of an airgram received by the Department of State from their Consulate General at Shanghai raising the question of Canadian representation on the Far Eastern Council in view of recent statements made to the press by General Odlum.

You may recall that we sent you on July 30 copies of three despatches from General Odlum urging that consideration be given to Canadian representation on the UNRRA Committee of the Council for the Far East. We asked for your views on the advisability of our arranging for a member of our Nanking Embassy to sit on the Council. We do not appear to have received a reply. For your convenience I attach a copy of our letter together with the enclosed despatches.

I think there is a good deal to be said, now that the matter has been raised by the United States Government, for our seeking membership. It would not be inconvenient for Dr. Patterson to attend meetings in Nanking. He already is a member of the Advisory Committee in China for the Canadian Red Cross and Chinese War Relief Fund so is quite familiar with the important part Canada has played in voluntary relief in China. Membership on the Committee should not involve us in any further commitments and would at least make our Chinese friends and others more aware of the magnitude of Canadian contributions both in relief supplies, money and personnel to UNRRA.

I attach a draft teletype to Washington<sup>1</sup> requesting them to inform the Administration of UNRRA that we would be glad to accept membership on the Council of UNRRA for the Far East.<sup>2</sup>

A. R. MENZIES

669.

DEA/9255-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 124

Ottawa, November 16, 1946

DELAS No. 81. Following for Reid from Riddell, Begins: Your ASDEL No. 113 of November 13th, Post-UNRRA relief.

1. This question has been discussed here by Pierce, Bryce and myself and we have agreed on the following views, in which Mr. Pearson concurs. Subject has not, however, been discussed with either Mr. St. Laurent or Mr. Martin.

2. In regard to paragraph 2 of your telegram under reference, we feel that Canada should withhold decision on United States proposals until question has been dealt with by the Assembly. In the meantime Delegation should continue to support view that matter is one which should be dealt with by appropriate international agency. This view is strengthened by report from Mr. Wrong that Acheson is not as completely opposed as Clayton to some form of international action.

3. If Mr. La Guardia's plan for a United Nations Emergency Fund is presented to the Assembly in the form of a resolution and opposed without compromise by United States and United Kingdom, question will then arise whether Delegation should join U.S.S.R. and Eastern European countries in supporting this resolution. It is our view that if United Kingdom and United States indicate that they will oppose resolution for establishment of a United Nations Emergency Food Fund or any equivalent organization, Canadian delegation should state that proposal is obviously impractical if two most important supplying countries are opposed to it, and that it will, therefore, abstain though in principle Canada is in favour of an international agency.

4. If United States proceed with their suggestion that discussion of relief needs should be referred to committee of Experts appointed by Assembly, question may arise of Canada being member of that Committee. It is our view that since Canada will be important supplying country it cannot refuse membership on this Committee of Experts even though findings of committee

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document 671.

<sup>2</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> See Document 671.

<sup>2</sup> Marginal note:

may be of little importance. Delegation should, therefore, accept membership even though it may be difficult to appoint a Canadian representative on Committee who is fully conversant with food and relief questions. Ends.

670.

DEA/9255-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-4058

Washington, November 17, 1946

SECRET. I had a brief but interesting conversation this afternoon with the Acting Secretary of State concerning relief problems in 1947. Mr. Acheson confirmed that the United States Government was strongly opposed to the adoption of Mr. La Guardia's proposals of earlier this week. He made the following points against the La Guardia scheme:

(1) The pledges given to Congress that the last UNRRA appropriation would be the final one and the impossibility of securing any funds from Congress for the distribution of relief by an international agency composed of both suppliers and consumers. (2) The fallacy that relief was not an inter-Governmental matter. He said that La Guardia put forward his plan as a means of fulfilling an international obligation to feed starving people. In fact, the problem was now essentially a question of balance of payments and what was required was to aid those countries financially which could not find by any other means the requisite foreign exchange for the purchase of essential supplies. (3) The impossibility of keeping China out of any scheme of the type advocated by La Guardia. He said that on the basis of these proposals China could advance enormous claims for relief supplies, whereas the Chinese situation was entirely different if one looked at it from the point of view of balance of payments. They could secure a five hundred million dollar loan from the earmarked funds here if they were "sensible" and agreed to spend their resources wisely.

He then outlined their own plans with which you are generally familiar. They were ready to seek an appropriation from Congress of perhaps 450 million dollars and proposed to discuss the whole question with Congressional leaders before the opening of the Session. They would tell them that the funds were needed primarily for Italy, Austria and Greece which had otherwise insoluble balance of payments problems during 1947. They would, however, seek to be left free both to assist other countries where need was established and to spend some at least of the appropriation for procurement outside the United States. I asked him about Poland. His view was that if the Poles would ship their coal westwards in return for foreign exchange instead of sending it eastwards they ought to be able to finance their deficits. Alternatively, they could manage if they sold their coal to the Russians for gold instead of giving it away. He did not exclude the possibility, however, of some aid for Poland.

I told him that our position was in many ways the reverse of theirs, in that it was a great deal easier for us to contribute to an international relief agency. I said that we were ready to meet our fair share of relief in 1947 if it were done by international action. We would be reluctant, however, to enter into any scheme of bilateral or tri-partite relief. I asked him whether he thought the United States would agree to join in setting up some sort of an international agency limited in membership to supplying countries. Rather to my surprise he answered that he saw no objection to this and felt that the United States would be perfectly ready to participate in a group consisting of countries such as Canada, Australia, Argentina, New Zealand and any others ready to assist—even Russia if she were prepared to be a contributor and not a claimant. He doubted whether the United Kingdom would be able to do much and appeared to envisage the possibility that the United Kingdom would not join such a group. The functions of this agency might be in general to seek to agree on what countries ought to be assisted, on the extent of assistance needed, and on whence the assistance could best come. He said that he would be glad to go into this matter further together with Mr. Clayton, who was at present in New York.

It occurs to me in the light of this conversation that you might consider a slight alteration in the instructions given to the Canadian delegation in New York on this subject. These instructions included the statement that Canada would be prepared to do her fair share in 1947 “if this is to be done by international action to discharge what would, in fact, be recognized as a responsibility of the United Nations”. It seems to me that it would be preferable if the last phrase were altered to read, “as an international responsibility”, since it is certain that the United States will not co-operate in any body including countries other than the suppliers.<sup>1</sup>

La Guardia is certainly far from popular in the State Department and Acheson said that they had done their best to dissuade him from putting forward his proposals in the form he adopted. He also remarked that his suggested sum of four hundred million dollars would be wholly inadequate if relief were to be conducted next year on the lines advocated by La Guardia and that probably not less than a billion dollars would be needed.

Acheson's emphasis on the balance of payments aspect of relief for 1947 was new to me. He appeared to regard the balance of payments position as the sole criterion which should be applied. This carried with it the inference that if a country could find foreign exchange by re-directing exports (such as Polish coal) or could secure loans by meeting reasonable conditions laid down by the lender (as in the case of China), no assistance would come from United States funds until the desired action has been taken. This would amount, of course, to a potent form of political pressure.

---

<sup>1</sup> La suggestion de M. Wrong fut accueillie favorablement mais il n'y a pas eu de suite à cause d'événements subséquents.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Wrong's suggestion was favourably received but not acted upon because of subsequent events.

671.

DEA/2295-AJ-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-2890

Ottawa, November 19, 1946

Your WA-4056. Canadian Membership on the Committee of the Council of UNRRA for the Far East.

2. As the United States has raised with you now the question of our membership on this Committee, and in view of the substantial contributions Canada is making toward UNRRA activities in the Far East, we consider it would be appropriate for you to take up with the UNRRA Administration the question of placing on the Agenda of the Sixth UNRRA Council Session scheduled for December 10 in Washington, the application of Canada for membership on the Committee of the Council of UNRRA for the Far East.

3. Kindly inform us when this matter has been approved by the UNRRA Council in order that we may advise our Embassy in Nanking to nominate an officer to attend future meetings.

672.

DEA/9255-40

*Le secrétaire général, la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations
Unies, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Secretary-General, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

New York, November 20, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

1. I thought you might like to have some information concerning the delegation meetings which were held on November 15th and 16th. They centred around the discussion on post-UNRRA relief.

2. Preliminary discussions were held in the delegation on November 15th on the draft speech prepared for Mr. Martin by Mr. Mackenzie, in the course of which Mr. R. D. Murray made an excellent exposition of the case for the bilateral relief arrangements proposed by the United States. Senator Haig agreed with the general tenor of the draft speech and with the conclusion:

Despite this situation, I can say that Canada stands ready to contribute its fair share of a concrete plan for meeting relief needs in 1947, if such a plan is adopted by this Assembly and is international in its form and scope.

At the end of this meeting it was decided, on the suggestion of Senator Haig, that Mr. Murray and Mr. Mackenzie should revise the statement.

3. When the matter was discussed with Mr. Martin after his return from Ottawa on November 15th, Mr. Martin at first agreed with the revised draft speech, but on second thought and in view of certain Cabinet discussions, he wondered whether it was in accordance with government policy. He, therefore, spoke with Mr. St. Laurent who told him that his understanding of the decision of Cabinet was that, if the General Assembly decided to solve the post-UNRRA relief problem by an international organization under the auspices of the United Nations, then the Government of Canada would be prepared to assume its fair share of the obligation; the delegation should, however, in no way press for the establishment of such an international organization. Mr. St. Laurent then agreed that the matter should be thrashed out at the delegation meeting in the morning.

4. At the delegation meeting Mr. St. Laurent stated his understanding of the Cabinet view as it is given above. Senator Haig entirely agreed with the position as summed up by the Chairman and said that we should remain silent on this issue. He thought that we were playing with "political dynamite" and that it would be much better to say nothing.

5. Some members of the delegation, however, argued that under bilateral arrangements, the Canadian taxpayer stood to lose more money than under an international relief organization sponsored by the United Nations. Others argued that it would be inappropriate for Canada, as the third largest contributor to UNRRA, to remain silent in this general debate on the relief question. Moreover, by stating our views at this point in the debate, we might pave the way for a compromise solution.

6. After these comments Mr. St. Laurent started examining the speech in detail and made certain changes, notably in the conclusion, which was finally drafted to read:

Despite the situation, if a concrete United Nations plan for meeting genuine relief needs in 1947 is adopted by this Assembly and is in fact international in its form and scope, Canada, to the extent that prevailing conditions permit, will participate in its implementation.

7. Some members of the delegation seemed to feel, on reviewing these discussions, that they had led to a split, on one point at least, in the Canadian delegation. Others considered that the meetings had afforded a real opportunity for the discussion of Cabinet's views and the formulation of a policy in accordance with them and had, in fact, marked a trend towards a more positive stand by the Canadian delegation in matters in which Canada is interested.

Yours sincerely,

E. A. CÔTÉ

673.

DEA/9255-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 162

Ottawa, November 25, 1946

SECRET. DELAS No. 105. Following for Martin from Pearson, Begins: Your teletype No. 242.† United States draft resolution on post-UNRRA relief. Confirming our telephone conversation, I should tell you that Tyler Wood phoned me this morning from Washington, emphasizing that this was as far as the United States delegation could possibly go in this matter and that they had only secured approval for this draft resolution from certain Congressional leaders with great difficulty. I have no reason to believe that he was misleading me in this matter. I am worried, as you are, about the position in which this places us. I think our stand on relief questions at the Assembly has been an intelligent and logical one up to the present, but I can see difficulties ahead. If we oppose this resolution and it is defeated, which I suppose is quite possible, will it not be difficult for us to refrain from voting for a relief resolution embodying La Guardia suggestions? This may be carried against the vote of the United States and the United Kingdom. As a result, there may be established a relief fund under United Nations auspices without the two largest contributors. We might, therefore, be expected to make a larger contribution to that fund than would otherwise be the case. The distribution of that fund, including our contribution to it, would also involve grave difficulties in the absence of the United States and the United Kingdom. Without those two countries, relief policies under the fund might be dominated by the U.S.S.R. and other receiving countries, and we could be put in a position where our contribution would be used by any Committee directing the fund almost exclusively for relief in Eastern European territories on the ground that Greece, Austria and Italy were being looked after by the United States and the United Kingdom. This would place us in an impossible situation and would, as you are in a better position than I to judge, be very badly received in this country. I should think that, at almost any cost, we ought to avoid such a development. If, of course, the United States resolution is carried, notwithstanding our vote, then the difficulty would not arise and we would be in a strong position, both at home and at the Assembly. Similarly, if the La Guardia proposal were defeated, in spite of our support, our position would not be so unsatisfactory. I do not know what are the chances of either of these results being obtained.

No doubt you have also carefully examined the present United States draft, with a view to seeing whether it could not, by a liberal interpretation, be brought within the scope of our instructions that relief must be international in form and scope. In any event, if the United States proposal is rejected, I hope, myself, that we will not have to vote for any resolution based on the La Guardia plan, which would be obviously quite unrealistic without United States and United Kingdom participation. Ends.

674.

DEA/9255-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] December 6, 1946

POST-UNRRA RELIEF

The instructions to our delegation in New York on relief are as follows:

The Canadian Government would be prepared to give an assurance through its delegation to the United Nations that Canada would be ready to bear her fair share of meeting 1947 relief needs, if this is to be done by co-operative international action to discharge what would, in fact, be recognized as a responsibility of the United Nations. If the problem is to be left to individual governments to handle as they see fit, the action to be taken by the Canadian Government would be a matter for decision after the position of the United Nations with respect to its responsibility has been made clear.

In accordance with the above instructions, we have been pressing, in New York, for some international agency to deal with relief needs as and when they are determined. The United States and the United Kingdom have, however, been strongly opposed to any international agency for relief, feeling that this should now be left to unilateral arrangements between supplying and receiving governments. While maintaining our position, we have accepted the fact that any resolution providing for an international agency would be ineffective and dangerous without the United States and the United Kingdom. Therefore, we could not support such a resolution. Another reason for this attitude was the fear that the U.S.S.R. and their friends might use this situation for propaganda purposes. Meanwhile, the United States has produced a resolution<sup>1</sup> which, while not setting up any international agency, recommends that relief activities found necessary should be cleared through the United Nations Secretary General, who would be kept informed of what individual countries were doing. This resolution has been attacked as inadequate, while there is no possibility of what is now called the La Guardia resolution,<sup>2</sup> providing for an international relief fund, being acceptable to the United States and the United Kingdom.

A message has just come from New York which indicates that the Americans could now go somewhat further and would be willing to accept an amendment to their resolution providing for the appointment of a technical

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, deuxième commission, Annexe 8d, p. 202.

<sup>2</sup> Voir ibid., Annexe 8, pp. 197-98.

<sup>1</sup> See United Nations, Official Records of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, Second Committee, Annex 8d, p. 202.

<sup>2</sup> See ibid., Annex 8, pp. 197-98.

committee of experts representing eight countries, who would investigate relief needs, and make recommendations for outside assistance in respect of those countries who will require help.

This does represent a considerable concession by the Americans and they are anxious for us to put forward the amendment, as our reputation in these matters stands very high in New York at the moment. Mr. Martin, who is handling this matter, feels that, if he is to do this, he will need your approval.

I think that this would be a useful initiative on our part. It does not mean that there will be an international relief agency, but it does emphasize the international character of the relief problem. If Mr. Martin puts this forward, I think he should take advantage of the opportunity to re-emphasize that, as long as relief obligations are to be determined unilaterally and not as part of an international obligation, Canada must maintain her reservation that acceptance of any such resolution does not mean acceptance of any commitment to contribute to relief. With such a statement, I think our position would be completely safeguarded, while we would be doing a useful service to the United Nations Assembly in moving and supporting the amendment in question. With this amendment, the United States resolution should, I think, be carried unanimously.

675.

DEA/9255-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 219

Ottawa, December 5, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. DELAS No. 136. Following for Hon. Paul Martin, from Pearson. Begins: The Prime Minister agrees, subject to Mr. St. Laurent's concurrence, that it would be appropriate for you to move the amendment to the United States resolution on post-UNRRA relief, which you described to me over the telephone. We assume that the resolution, as amended, would receive practically unanimous support. The Prime Minister feels that, though this may imply a certain additional moral commitment, yet the addition is a very small one as we have been emphasizing that we do not shirk our international obligations in this regard. The Prime Minister also feels that, in moving the amendment, a short statement, to the effect that we maintain our position in regard to making no commitments as to what we can do in relief matters unless they are handled through an international agency, would be desirable. Ends.

676.

DEA/9255-40

*Le consul général à New York au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

Consul General in New York to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 360

New York, December 8, 1946

ASDEL No. 243. Following for Alan Field, Director of Information Service,<sup>1</sup> West Block, Ottawa, from Frances Godsoe, Begins:

1. Following is text of a statement made by the Honourable Paul Martin yesterday morning in Committee II on the subject of post-UNRRA relief. First, I will outline partial statement made by Mr. La Guardia in which he challenged Mr. Martin to produce a compromise solution to the relief problem. The meeting was very dramatic particularly when Mr. Martin accepted the challenge and at the end of his speech produced an amendment which is being favourably commented on. The meeting was adjourned, before many delegates expressed an opinion, to be continued Monday.

2. Partial text of statement by Fiorello La Guardia:

"I have been working very closely with the Government of Canada for the past six years. They too, like Australia and New Zealand and other countries, have responded always to every call, but what is more, they do it graciously. I have never heard Canada brag about it, and mark you, a country with only 11 or 12 million people. In repeating what I said then, I will take any compromise offered by the delegate from Canada sight unseen. I will take my proposal and tear it up. No, I have not the powers of an X-ray, I will say to the delegate from Australia, to see what is in men's minds. But I can judge what is in their hearts when I talk to them, and there is a great desire around this table to come to an Agreement. We have two safeguarding clauses in the U.S.-U.K. and Brazilian proposal that help greatly. I hope the delegate from Canada will come forth with a suggestion so that we can have no doubt that somewhere, somehow, there will be an impartial assessment of needs with a suggestion of proportionate contribution. We know it is entirely advisory, it is not mandatory. We know, under our form of Government and most Parliamentary Governments, that it will require legislative action. That was brought out yesterday when it was suggested that the United States had already procured (wheat). That is impossible. The Government has no power to procure or purchase anything unless it is so authorized by Congress and no such authority exists at this time. It will take no longer, gentlemen, to get action from Congress with the plan I suggested than it will take with the plan that the U.S., the U.K. and Brazil have suggested. I am not concerned, gentlemen, with anything except when I step out or when I report to the Council that I can say, I fulfilled my mission. I can't do anything more than that and once more I appeal to the United Kingdom and United States if they will not at least listen with a receptive mind to a suggestion for any compromise coming from any source and I again appeal with all the sincerity that I can muster, with all the earnestness at my command, to the delegate from Canada if he please will not step into the breach and help in this situation."

<sup>1</sup>Le service d'information du bureau du séquestre des biens ennemis. Le secrétaire d'État, M. Martin, était le séquestre.

<sup>1</sup>Information Service of the Custodian of Enemy Property. The Secretary of State, Mr. Martin, was Custodian.

3. Following is text of statement made by Honourable Paul Martin:

"It has been suggested during the course of this debate that we have reached a serious impasse, that the future of international organization and international solidarity has been seriously imperilled. The fact is that we are all of us, 54 nations, meeting around this table this morning, as we have at various previous meetings, for the purpose of providing the most effective method, in our judgment, by which we can bring relief to those peoples and those countries who require relief and assistance. That fact in itself, the fact that we are discussing a method by which we can give effect to our programme of relief is, I think, a demonstration of the extent to which, following the last Great War, we have developed the process of international action and international approach. Consequently if those of us who have expressed our belief in international Organization to meet this particular problem are not fully satisfied none of us should draw the conclusion that failure, in that particular, means the breakdown of international solidarity. I repeat, we are meeting here today and have been meeting now for some days to discuss, with the supplying and with the receiving nations, a method or methods to deal with the great problem so eloquently portrayed for us by the Director of U.N.R.R.A.

4. I think another word should be said lest those who follow the procedure of the Assembly of the United Nations come to wrong conclusions as to our good faith to make international processes work. This Committee has assiduously in Sub-Committee, in plenary session, in informal talks by the members of this Committee, been diligently applying itself to the job of trying to arrive at a satisfactory settlement of a great issue.

5. It is not a question of not being willing to contribute assistance. No country around this table has said, acknowledging the necessity for relief, that it refused to provide relief. The United States, the main supplier and United Kingdom have not said that they would not provide relief. What they have said is that they believe at the present time the most effective way of dealing with relief is through the method which they have suggested in the combined proposal of the U.S., U.K. and Brazil. I think that whatever we do, and I hope we can now agree upon something, no one should say that this Committee has been frustrated or that it has not really achieved something very worthwhile in the field of international relations. We have heard from that vigorous and sincere man, Mr. La Guardia, the background of UNRRA, which is perhaps the most successful example of international collaboration that we have made for many, many years, an Organization whose members have been contributing over 99 percent of their commitments. This is a record the like of which should encourage all of us to believe that the process of internationalization is by no means lost or weakened. My country did not hesitate to express at the outset of this debate what it believed was the right method of providing Post-UNRRA relief. I stated our attitude in my first statement on the first day of this debate. I said that if a concrete U.N. plan for meeting genuine relief needs in 1947 is adopted by this Assembly and is in fact international in its form and scope, Canada, to the extent that prevailing conditions permit, will participate in its implementation. I repeat that that is again our position, we believe that international organization in the sense thus envisaged would be the desirable way, but we recognize I think all of us what the facts of the situation are. Denmark stated its attitude particularly in the Sub-Committee, in a very impressive and I think a memorable speech. I should say that Canada's position was somewhat the position taken by Denmark. Denmark following the consistent discussion that we have had in this Committee has come to the conclusion that there are certain facts that must be acknowledged, facts that are irrevocable seemingly. It has now indicated that it does not propose to pursue the original Resolution standing in its name. Now what are the facts. The facts are that the U.S. and the U.K. have, I think, in the best of faith—certainly all their acts have indicated that they do take the United Nations Organization seriously, come to the conclusion that the way to deal with this problem was other than that put forward by Denmark, initially by the Director of UNRRA, by Canada and some other countries. We take the view that no organization would be international in scope and in form in this particular matter if the United States and the United Kingdom withdrew their membership and action. Consequently, we are faced with the situation that since we all want to provide relief to those who stand in need of it, we must take into account the realities of the situation. It was for that reason that I urged upon my colleagues not to decide the matter by taking a vote. I felt, and I received support in that from Mr. La Guardia and some others, that in view of the particular attitude of the contributing nations to this particular problem a vote would not settle anything. It might do more harm than good. I was glad to hear that Mr. La Guardia, who has faced this problem, took the same view.

6. Now before I do try to meet the challenge put forward to my country by Mr. La Guardia I want to say one more thing which should be said in all fairness that regardless of attitude as to method, no one in my judgment can take issue at all with the good faith of the United States or of the United Kingdom, but I do think this should be borne in mind, because there has been countercharge and charge in this Committee. Further, no one can question the good faith of the former Mayor of New York who as Director of UNRRA has succeeded another great American, and who has made a great contribution to the cause of international collaboration. If, on occasion, during our deliberations here his point of view expressed in vigorous form has touched sensitive spots, I think it was only because we must recognize in him a man of great conviction and one whose conviction is expressed in a vigorous manner. I am sure all of us around this table are grateful for his contribution, grateful for what he has done as Director of UNRRA and grateful for helping to bring this question into proper perspective.

I repeat, the question is not whether needs shall be met but how they shall be met. The United States and the United Kingdom have unequivocally declared that they have recognized the nature of the needs and they do not propose to sit back. The only issue has been as to the method, and we are anxious—as the Mayor has said this morning—to arrive at unanimity in this Committee. Unanimity may not mean that we have got what each of us undoubtedly believes to be most desirable, but it does mean that after much discussion expressed in good faith we have arrived at a formula which will work and I trust that we will be able to achieve just that.

The Mayor has throughout the discussion thought that the words “when” and “where” were important and the United States delegate, Mr. Stevenson, in a very able speech yesterday indicated that the United States was prepared to accept those words. They have in fact been incorporated in the revised resolution, and because no one would want to enter into dollar diplomacy Mr. La Guardia pointed out how important it was that the relief assistance be free from political considerations. The United States, United Kingdom and Brazil have included in their proposal the phrase “free from racial, religious and political considerations” and if for no other reason I am sure the Director of UNRRA can feel that in the joint debate he has made a great contribution. Now he has put upon my country a responsibility. A few days ago speaking of what Canada had done in performance of its duty, he said he was prepared to accept a solution from Canada. He paid us the remarkable tribute of saying that he would do so blindly. Speaking in the name of Canada I can only say to him that we are very grateful to him for the estimation he has of our country. I may say to him that we reciprocate in our high opinion of him.

But we are now faced with a situation whereby those of us who believe in one method must recognize the impossibility of solving the problem in the way we advocated. Consequently, my Government, not without a great deal of consideration, has come to the conclusion, expressing the reservation which every Government of course in this matter must express, that it is prepared to support the Resolution now standing in the name of the United States, United Kingdom and Brazil. It suggests, however, an amendment to that Resolution which it strongly commends to the three sponsoring Powers, to the Director of UNRRA and to those who shared the views expressed by Denmark and Canada, as a compromise Agreement that is worthy of respect, that is effective, and that does indicate a means by which we can effectively deal with a problem that may be described as interim but one requiring urgent attention. With that in view, Sir, we suggest the following amendment:

1. Immediately preceding the paragraph numbered 1 insert the following two paragraphs:

“Establishes a special Technical Committee whose functions shall be;

(a) To study the minimum import requirements of the basic essentials of life, particularly food and supplies for agricultural production of countries which the Committee believes might require assistance in the prevention of suffering or economic retrogression which threatens the supply of these basic essentials.

(b) To survey the means available to each country concerned to finance such imports,

(c) To report concerning the amount of financial assistance which it believes may be required in the light of (a) and (b) “decides that the Committee shall consist of eight experts in the field of finance and foreign trade to be designated by the Governments of Brazil, Canada, China, France, Poland, United Kingdom, United States of America and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to serve in their individual capacities and not as representatives of the Governments by which they are designated; and urges each Government to select a person of outstanding competence to service on the Committee.”

2. In the paragraph numbered 1, strike out the words “all members of the United Nations and international Organizations concerned” and insert in their place the words “the Committee.”

3. Immediately preceding the paragraph numbered 2, insert a new paragraph reading as follows: “Directs the Committee to submit its report to the Secretary-General for submittal to member Governments as soon as possible but in any event not later than January 15th, 1947.”

Mr. Chairman, in suggesting this amendment to the United States, United Kingdom and Brazilian Resolution, we do so having in mind among other things the point of view expressed by Mr. La Guardia, the nature of the discussion, and the realities of the situation. We do urge upon all nations who have given this matter over these weeks their honest and complete attention, to resolve this problem as quickly as we can, so that we can start at once the job of providing relief for those nations and those peoples of the world who stand in urgent need of it.<sup>1</sup> Ends.

---

<sup>1</sup> Cet amendement fut accepté à l'unanimité (la Yougoslavie s'est abstenue) le 9 décembre lors de la dernière réunion de la deuxième commission.

<sup>1</sup> This amendment was unanimously accepted (Yugoslavia abstained) on December 9 at the last meeting of the Second Committee.

677.

DEA/2295-AJ-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-4408

Washington, December 14, 1946

Your EX-2890, November 19th. Canadian membership on the Committee of the Council of UNRRA for the Far East.

Despatch No. 2355, † December 14th, (going forward by today's bag) on the proceedings of the Sixth UNRRA Council, includes a paragraph on Canada's election by unanimous vote to the Far East Committee. The nominating resolution was moved by Dr. Li Choh-Ming, Deputy Director, Chinese National Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, and seconded by Sir Girja Bajpai, Indian Chargé d'Affaires. A copy of this despatch is being sent to Ottawa to go forward by air bag to Nanking, but, as Dr. Li Choh-Ming is returning to Shanghai by air, it might be advisable to inform our Embassy by cable of our election to this Committee and to suggest that they nominate an officer to attend the Committee meetings, which are held in Shanghai.

678.

DTC/Vol. 729

Extrait d'un Rapport<sup>1</sup>

Extract from a Report<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

December 23, 1946

SECOND PART OF THE FIRST SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
 FINAL REPORT OF [sic] THE SECOND COMMITTEE ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL

PART 1 WORK OF THE COMMITTEE

• • •

B. PARTICULAR ITEMS

• • •

2. The report from the Director-General of UNRRA on relief needs remaining after the termination of UNRRA

This was the most important and controversial subject dealt with by Committee 2. In all, ten meetings of the main committee and the drafting subcommittee number one were devoted to the matter. The existence of relief needs in 1947 was never seriously contested, nor was there any discussion of the amount likely to be required. Debate was almost entirely concerned with the method of dealing with such needs as might exist. The two extreme positions in this matter were clearly stated at the beginning. On the one hand, the United States proposed a system of bilateral relief arrangements with no more provision for international collaboration than an "invitation" to contributing governments to "consult informally" regarding their respective programmes (A/C2/64). On the other hand, three resolutions were introduced, by Mr. La Guardia (A/C2/38), by Denmark (A/C2/57) and by Brazil (A/C2/56), which called for substantial degrees of international control. La Guardia's plan for an Emergency Food Fund would have called for complete international allocation and control of relief supplies up to the point of their shipment by the receiving governments. The Danish proposal was a more detailed statement along the same lines; the Brazilian, though considerably modified, still called for an internationally administered pool of relief supplies. The Canadian policy in this question was influenced by the Government's unwillingness to approach Parliament for a special relief appropriation. In view of the very heavy tax burdens borne by the Canadian public and in view, also, of an expected post-war reaction against further international commitments, the Government wished to be able to represent any obligation to assist in meeting relief needs as one which sprang from Canadian support of the United Nations. For these reasons the Canadian delegation was instructed to support an international relief plan, and Mr. Paul Martin accordingly made a statement in favour of such a plan at the meeting of November 16th. Mr. Noel-Baker, in a speech delivered on November 18th, made a great effort to reconcile the two points of view, and emphasized the lengths to which the United States was prepared to go in meeting 1947 relief needs. His speech gave the impression that the United Kingdom would be obliged, by force of circumstances, to follow the United States' lead, but was reluctant to abandon international control. Several days later, however, a State Department press release contained the information that at a closed meeting on relief problems Mr. Bevin had advised Mr. Byrnes that Noel-Baker did not speak for the United Kingdom government. In this startlingly ruthless way the position of the United Kingdom was made clear and from then on there was no doubt that it was fully behind the United States policy.

<sup>1</sup> L'auteur de ce rapport n'est pas indiqué sur le document.

<sup>1</sup> The author of this report is not identified on the document.

It was obvious from the first that there was a majority in favour of an international relief plan. Nineteen delegations made statements in support of such a plan. The U.S.S.R. was not slow to seize this opportunity and came out in favour of a relief plan as much like UNRRA as possible. Only The Netherlands publicly supported the type of bilateral arrangement proposed by the United States and the United Kingdom. In these circumstances, it would have been possible, at any time before the full committee meeting on December 5th, to press the question to [a] vote with the assurance that the United States plan would have been voted down. In avoiding this outcome Committee 2 gave an interesting and valuable demonstration of the way in which international action can crystallize out of diverse and warring elements. At four points in the development of this process, the Canadian delegate (Mr. Paul Martin) gave it a decisive impetus. The first such opportunity came in the meeting of the drafting sub-committee on November 29th, when Mr. Martin made a statement emphasizing that any plan developed without the cooperation of the United States and the United Kingdom would not in actual fact be international and urging the Committee to develop a reasonable solution based on acceptance of this consideration. This was undoubtedly a bitter pill, partly because there were expectations that Canada, as the third major supplier, would lead the drive for an international relief plan. The general reaction was probably best expressed by Dr. Ording of Norway, who stated that such a policy would amount in fact to the acceptance of an "economic veto." The first evidence that the logic of facts would triumph came, nevertheless, at this same meeting, when the Greek delegate (Mr. Argyropoulos), aware that Greece would be cared for under any plan, urged the committee to accept the United States proposal as a basis of discussion, and when the Brazilian delegate withdrew his resolution in favour of a very mild amendment to the U.S. proposal (A/C2/73). The next point at which Canada intervened was in the meeting of the drafting sub-committee on December 2nd. Towards the end of this meeting it was clear that an impasse had developed, the United States delegate, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, having declared that his government would not be bound by any vote calling for international control either in assessment of needs or in allocation of supply. The United States at this point wished to push matters to a vote, as did the Soviet bloc, though for different reasons. Mr. Martin stepped in, however, and urged the sub-committee to report back to the main committee with a statement of the reasons why it had been unable to reach agreement. This proposal was seconded by the Chinese and, on being put to the vote, was adopted 9-6. At the full Committee of December 5th Dr. Ording delivered his report, which far from being a bare factual statement, was a very able presentation of the case for internationally managed relief. It was clear, however, that the rout had now begun. Mr. La Guardia put forward a much modified proposal calling for an international board with recommendatory powers only (A/C2/87) and the Danish delegate withdrew the Danish resolution. Moreover, La Guardia offered to take any plan put forward by Canada "sight unseen". In the interests of developing some kind of compromise solution, the United States delegation now suggested privately to Mr. Martin that he might introduce a modification of the joint U.S.-U.K.-Brazilian draft providing for a technical committee of experts to assess needs and report to member governments. This idea had been part of their original plan before the opening of the General Assembly. After Mr. Martin had consulted Mr. Pearson and received an assurance that the government was prepared to move from its original position and to ask parliament for a separate relief appropriation, he felt able to fall in with the United States suggestion. The third decisive intervention by the Canadian delegation was thus the introduction of amendments to this effect at the meeting of December 6th (A/C2/96). At the same meeting Dr. Ording of Norway indicated a retreat from his earlier position by putting forward as an amendment to the joint resolution a Norwegian proposal that all the workers of the world be urged to contribute one day's earnings to the satisfaction of relief needs (A/C2/95). The process of developing a unanimous resolution was by now almost complete. So far as the minor protagonists in the struggle were concerned, the urge towards acceptance of the U.S. position was certainly strengthened by a radio speech made by the Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson on December 8th, in which he declared that the United States would provide relief only to nations which could prove need and were not wasting their resources on large and unproductive armies (vide New York Herald Tribune, December 9 p. 1 col. 3). At the meeting of December 9th Dr. Rajchmann of Poland, with his usual acumen, put his finger on the crucial point regarding the "committee of experts" by asking whether it was expected to report once and then dissolve or whether it would continue in existence to assess needs throughout 1947. The United States' plan for this committee had, of course, always been that it should cease upon the midnight of January 15th and depart into the limbo of forgotten things. Mr. Stevenson of the United States delegation wanted to make this unequivocally clear. Mr. Martin felt, however, that such a declaration would seriously prejudice the chances of the joint resolution and intervened for the fourth time to persuade Mr. Stevenson to make a much milder statement to the effect that the committee would report once, but stay in existence to be called upon if need for it were shown. The U.S.S.R. now made a short statement indicating that the Russian Government would support the joint resolution, though considering that the plan proposed was not the best way of handling relief problems and putting the responsibility for its shortcomings squarely on the shoulders of the western powers. A vote was then taken on the joint resolution, which was adopted unanimously except for an abstention by the Yugoslav delegate. Before the General Assembly, too, the Yugoslav delegate protested against the resolution which was, however, accepted without vote (A/237).

In view of the importance of the debate on relief problems, it is perhaps worthwhile here to assess the gains and losses, both of the way in which the discussion was handled and of the final solution achieved. The advantages won were important. The arrangements for meeting 1947 relief needs are such that the western powers (particularly the United States) can retain complete control of supplies and can indirectly exert considerable political pressure by their allocation. This is a gain in terms of real politik and of the immediate situation both at home (once more in the United States) and abroad. The disadvantages are more from the long-term point of view and consist of ground probably lost in the war for men's minds. In the first place the U.S.S.R. has been given an excellent opportunity to pose as the champion of international action and will undoubtedly capitalize on this fact when and where the shoe begins to pinch. In the second place, many of the smaller, comparatively independent countries such as Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Belgium undoubtedly feel some resentment at this use of what Dr. Ordning called the "economic veto", and the bitter aftertaste will linger for some time. From the Canadian point of view, disappointment at our refusal to lead a revolt against the United States-United Kingdom position may well be counterbalanced by gratitude to us for producing a face-saving compromise which could in a pinch, be gracefully accepted by everyone.

. . .

CHAPITRE IX/CHAPTER IX
ORGANISATIONS ET CONFÉRENCES
INTERNATIONALES
INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AND CONFERENCES

PARTIE 1/PART 1

OFFICE INTERNATIONAL DES EXPOSITIONS
BUREAU OF INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITIONS

679.

DEA/12490-1-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur en France

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in France

DESPATCH 878

Ottawa, November 12, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch no. 672 of July 22nd† and my despatch no. 603 of August 15th† on the subject of the proposed revision of the convention regarding International Exhibitions of November 22nd, 1928.<sup>1</sup>

The proposed revision has now been considered by the appropriate officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce and it is considered the amendments proposed to articles 2, 3, 4 and 10 of the convention correct the weaknesses to which we have previously referred. As you are aware, we considered the interval of 6 years between universal exhibitions of the first category to be too long. We also considered that it was necessary to have clearer definitions of exhibitions of the first and second categories.

Without giving any commitment I think you may indicate that Canada would be prepared to consider reaffirmation of the convention revised as proposed by the International Bureau. You should point out, however, that Canada denounced the convention not only for reasons of deficiencies as we considered them in the text of the convention but also because the operation of the convention was not effective largely because of the fact that too few countries were adherents. Notably the United States was not an adherent to the convention.

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1934, N° 7.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1934, No. 7.

Before we shall be in a position to make a firm decision on the question of reaffirmation of the convention we shall wish to ascertain the attitude of the United Kingdom and the United States and whether or not there will be sufficient adherents to make its operation effective.

I have etc.

SYDNEY D. PIERCE
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

680.

DEA/12490-1-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

DESPATCH 1967

Ottawa, November 21, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 878 of November 12th to the Canadian Ambassador to France on the subject of reaffirmation by Canada of the convention regarding International Exhibitions of November 22, 1928, a copy of which is attached.†

2. Canada denounced this convention following the lead of the United Kingdom in July 1944 for the reasons stated in my despatch to which I have referred. You will note we are now satisfied with the amendments which the International Bureau proposes to the text of the convention, but before coming to any decision with regard to reaffirming the convention we wish to ascertain the attitude of the United States and the United Kingdom. Specifically, we would like to know whether or not the United States and the United Kingdom have decided to adhere or would be prepared to consider adhering to the revised convention. We feel that the convention will still not be effective without their adherence.

3. I would be grateful if you will endeavour to obtain this information for me from the appropriate United Kingdom authorities.

4. I am sending a similar despatch to the Canadian Ambassador to the United States.

I have etc.

SYDNEY D. PIERCE
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

681.

DEA/12490-1-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 2299

Washington, November 28, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 1450 of November 21st,<sup>1</sup> together with a copy of your despatch No. 878 of November 12th to the Canadian Ambassador to France, on the subject of re-affirmation by Canada of the convention regarding International Exhibitions of November 22nd, 1928.

2. This subject was discussed informally with the State Department by Mr. Wallace<sup>2</sup> who pointed out that while Canada was now satisfied with the amendments which the International Bureau proposes to the text, in the Canadian view the convention would not be effective without the adherence of the United States and the United Kingdom.

3. Mr. Wallace was informed that the State Department favoured the principle of an International Exhibitions Convention, but that the United States Government is not prepared to adhere to this revised convention. The principal reasons for this attitude are that the United States wish to keep down the number of their international commitments and would like to see the International Exhibitions Convention taken over by the United Nations' Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization.

4. It was mentioned, however, that in view of the fact that the United States is not a party to the existing International Exhibitions Convention, they are not in a position to make a recommendation that the United Nations' Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization should take over the work of the International Exhibitions Convention.

I have etc.

H. H. WRONG

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document précédent.

<sup>2</sup> W. D. Wallace, secrétaire commercial adjoint, l'ambassade aux États-Unis.

<sup>1</sup> See preceding document.

<sup>2</sup> W. D. Wallace, Assistant Commercial Secretary, Embassy in United States.

PARTIE 2/PART 2

FONDS MONÉTAIRE INTERNATIONAL ET BANQUE
INTERNATIONALE POUR LA RECONSTRUCTION
ET LE DÉVELOPPEMENTINTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

682.

DEA/6000-F-40

L'ambassadeur des États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador of United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

No. 439

Ottawa, January 28, 1946

Sir,

At the direction of my Government I have the honor to transmit the following communication:

The articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have come into force and the Government of the United States as the member having the largest quota in the fund and the largest number of shares in the bank has the honor of inviting your Government to arrange for your Governor of the fund and of the bank to attend the first meetings of the Boards of Governors. The meetings will be held at Wilmington Island near Savannah, Georgia, on March 8, 1946, for the purpose of establishing the two institutions.

It is the expectation of the Government of the United States that the business of the Boards of Governors can be concluded within a two week period and arrangements have been made for the accommodation of the Governors and those who accompany them for that period of time. Shortly after the conclusion of the meetings of the Boards of Governors it is expected that the executive directors of each institution will begin to function at or near the site selected for the principal office of the fund and the bank.

My Government intends to suggest the adoption of a resolution by the Board of Governors of each institution permitting the admission to membership during a limited period of time of those countries listed in Schedule A of each of the articles of agreement on the terms set forth in the articles of agreement. It is our hope that some or all of these Governments may be in a position to become members of the fund and the bank with sufficient speed to permit them to participate in the first meetings of the Boards of Governors and we are inviting them to have observers in attendance at these meetings.

The Government of the United States would appreciate it if you could advise us promptly as to the number of persons representing your Government who will attend the first meetings of the Boards of Governors, as well as the date and place of their arrival in the United States.

Accept etc.

RAY ATHERTON

683.

DEA/6000-H-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-807

Washington, February 16, 1946

My WA-704 of February 9th,† Bretton Woods.

1. Of the two memoranda† referred to in the first paragraph of my teletype it would appear from the letter of February 8th from Shillock of the U.S. Embassy to Mr. Robertson† (of which a copy was sent to us under compliment sheet of February 9th) that only the first one may have been communicated to you by the U.S. Embassy. The second memorandum, which had been attached to the routine note from the State Department to this Embassy† (and which according to that note had already been transmitted to the Governments concerned through the respective U.S. Missions abroad), dealt with exchange of information regarding arrangements for the meetings of the Boards of Governors of the Fund and the Bank. If, in fact, you have not received this memorandum we shall be glad to teletype its contents to you. If you have received this memorandum, you will note the request in the last sentence that the State Department be notified of the name of an individual with whom informal liaison may be maintained. We should be grateful to learn whether it is your intention that someone from this Embassy should perform this function, in which event we should appreciate the necessary information and guidance from you.

2. We have been asked informally by an official of the Export-Import Bank whether it is proposed by the Canadian authorities that paper of the Bretton Woods Institutions should be marketed in Canada and if so what arrangements are being made to open the Canadian money market to the Bretton Woods Institutions. We understand from this official that Secretary of the Treasury Vinson is most optimistic concerning completion of the arrangements necessary to ensure acceptance of such paper by the U.S. market. In particular, it is reported that changes required in federal and state regulations (including necessary changes in the fiduciary laws of New York State) can probably be completed within something like three months. This official remarked that there would be much merit, from the point of view of the attitude of other Governments to operations of the Bretton Woods Institutions, if the U.S. and Canadian Governments were to announce (simultaneously if possible) that arrangements were being made for the acceptance of the paper of these institutions in the money markets of the two countries.

684.

DEA/6000-H-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-619

Ottawa, February 28, 1946

Your WA-807 of February 16th, para. 2, acceptance of Bretton Woods paper.

There are no legal obstacles to the purchase of paper of Bretton Woods institutions by Canadian chartered banks, by individuals or, we think, by most business corporations.

Insurance companies, however, will probably not be able to make such investments except in the case of issues sponsored by the International Bank and guaranteed by a government. The government guarantee is the feature of importance so far as insurance companies are concerned. This aspect is being further investigated here.

The question as to whether banks and others who are legally entitled to do so would in fact be willing to buy the paper cannot be answered at the present time. Much would depend on the rate of return. We consider the only practical procedure is to await the setting up of the Fund and Bank. Officials of these organizations, presumably acting with or through Bank of Canada officials familiar with the market, could then take the necessary soundings.

Referring to the suggestion that the United States and Canadian Governments might announce (simultaneously if possible) that arrangements were being made for acceptance of the paper in the money markets of the two countries, we feel we should be very careful about the form of any such announcement. If it were the Government's decision to amend the Insurance Act, a statement to that effect would, of course, be appropriate, but an announcement that the Government had reason to believe that the paper would be purchased in considerable volume in Canada would be premature. Ends.

685.

DEA/6000-H-40

*Mémoire de l'adjoint du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] March 7, 1946

PERUVIAN APPROACH FOR VOTES AT SAVANNAH

Mr. Pardo de Zela of the Peruvian Embassy came to see me late yesterday afternoon.

He stated that the Ambassador had just received a telegram from his government, but had not succeeded in laying the matter before you. The Peruvian Government suggests that in exchange for the Canadian vote for a Peruvian in the election to an executive position in the Board of Governors of the Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Peruvians would undertake to vote for a Canadian to a position in either the Bank or the fund, as we preferred.

I informed him that it was not the policy of the Government to pledge votes or exchange pledges, but that I would put the matter before you.<sup>1</sup>

J. A. C[HAPDELAINE]

686.

DEA/6000-H-40

Mémorandum du gouverneur de la Banque du Canada

Memorandum by Governor of Bank of Canada

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 2, 1946

NOTES ON THE INAUGURAL MEETING OF THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA, MARCH 8-18, 1946<sup>2</sup>

The main questions at issue were the site of the Fund and the Bank, and the functions and remuneration of the Executive Directors and their Alternates.

As soon as we arrived at Savannah, we found out that the Americans were going to insist on Washington as the site, and on full-time Executive Directors who would not hold other positions. It soon became evident that the Americans would also press for full-time Alternates.

The United Kingdom were strongly against all these proposals. A number of Western European countries shared their views, but apparently did not wish to argue against the United States. So far as I am aware, the Latin American and Middle Eastern members—and China—did not seriously object to the U.S. point of view, and indeed in some cases welcomed the opportunity to have full-time Executive Directors and Alternates stationed at Washington.

<sup>1</sup>La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

<sup>1</sup>The following note was written on the memorandum:

Approved. W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING] 13.3.46

<sup>2</sup>Pour une esquisse de cette réunion voir J. K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund 1945-1965: Twenty Years of International Monetary Cooperation. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1969, Volume 1, pp. 121-36.

<sup>2</sup>For an outline of this meeting see J. K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund 1945-1965: Twenty Years of International Monetary Cooperation. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1969, Volume 1, pp. 121-36.

The Canadian attitude was expressed in private conversations with Vinson on two occasions, and with Clayton, Harry White and Collado on still another occasion. It was also expressed at Committee meetings.

Our opinions can be summarized as follows:

(a) On Site

We felt that an important commercial and financial centre was the appropriate site for the Fund and the Bank—if not New York, then Boston or Philadelphia. If a political capital were chosen instead of a more natural site, it would be suspected that the intention was to have the National Advisory Council and the American Executive Directors dominate the activities of the Fund and the Bank. This would have a particularly unfortunate effect in the Fund, the success of which will depend so much on full co-operation of members. Questions have already been raised in various Parliaments—including that of Canada—as to whether membership in the Fund involved any loss of sovereignty. That suspicion is bound to be heightened by the sight of the Fund nestled under the Capitol.

It must also be remembered that the staff of both Fund and Bank are expected to be international officers owing allegiance only to the new organizations. If they are located in Washington, it is much more likely that these individuals will associate mainly with people from their own countries stationed at the various Embassies and Legations, and will have much greater difficulty in developing the international attitude enjoined upon them by the Articles of Agreement.

It soon became apparent that Mr. Vinson could not listen to objections to Washington as a site without becoming extremely annoyed. This matter had been settled by President Truman and the National Advisory Council, and was not open for discussion. We did not carry on the argument for long, but reserved what strength we had for the discussion on Executive Directors and Alternates.

(b) Executive Directors and Alternates

Here we pursued the line that the Articles of Agreement set forth the powers of Executive Directors. They are obviously responsible for decisions on matters of policy, and they must make themselves available to the full extent necessary to fulfil their responsibilities. We did not believe, however, that an Executive Director need spend all his time working for the Fund or the Bank: nor did we believe that the Executive Directors should be prevented from holding any other position. In fact, we felt that it was much better that Executive Directors should hold positions of importance in their own countries so that they could bring to the Fund and the Bank the continually renewed experience derived from their administrative functions at home, with all that such experience implies in the form of first-hand practical contact with domestic affairs and with their own country's relationships with others.

We pointed out that the Executive Directors were not international officers in the sense that members of the staff of the Fund or Bank must be. True, they must concern themselves with the good of members as a whole—but they must pay regard to the views of their own governments. Moreover, Executive Directors will be changed—possibly quite frequently. For all these reasons, Executive Directors cannot be expected to participate in administrative work, nor could they, particularly in the case of the Fund, visit countries other than their own with any expectation that they could command confidences. We pointed out that the development of confidence in the Fund—in its wisdom and discretion—was very important. The management and staff needed to develop independence and prestige—without in any way diminishing the responsibility of the Executive Directors in matters of policy. We felt that there was much less likelihood of the organization growing along these lines if it appeared that a number of Executive Directors were in fact running things from day to day.

Finally, we felt that the creation in the two organizations of twenty-four Executive Directorships and twenty-four Alternate posts at substantial salaries was something in the nature of a scandal.

In our conversations with the Americans, we came repeatedly to the question of how all the Executive Directors and Alternates would occupy their time throughout the year. The invariable answer was that they would be kept busy “studying trends”. So far as could be seen, we did not succeed in shaking the opinion of the senior Americans, although there were some in the American group who thought the proposed setup was quite wrong. Finally—at the meeting with Clayton, White and Collado—I expressed very frankly the view that the Americans could force the adoption of these proposals, or indeed any others which they supported. Some countries would be indifferent; others would fear to argue because they had so many fish to fry in the United States. If, however, the big shareholder continually forced his views on others, the prospects for success of the Fund were poor. It would be wise for the Americans to give weight to the views of the minority, even if they did not share those views. Subsequently the Americans agreed to the compromise of Executive Director and Alternate between them being continuously available. This was apparently the best which could be secured.

The Americans came to Savannah after having discussed their programme on these matters with the President and the National Advisory Council, and after having named their Executive Directors on Fund and Bank. Probably they had discussed salaries with these individuals, and the Act of Congress had stipulated that the U.S. Government should not pay any part of their remuneration. Harry White, for example, had made up his mind to leave the Treasury, and was looking forward to his job as Executive Director. It is thought that Vinson was quite content that White should leave the Treasury. In other words, subject to minor compromises, the whole thing was a fait accompli.

(c) Remuneration of Executive Directors and Alternates

Once the decision had been taken that Executive Directors and Alternates might be full-time (for "might" read "should" so far as the U.S.A. is concerned) and that they should be men of high competence, it was obvious that substantial salaries would be proposed. Mr. Ilsley and Lord Keynes,<sup>1</sup> as well as the writer, argued against the salaries in the Committee and Sub-Committee on Remuneration, but in the end the American proposals of $17,000 tax free for Executive Directors, and $11,500 tax free for Alternates were adopted.

At the final session of the Boards of Governors of the Fund and Bank, Keynes announced that he had instructions from his Government to vote against these salaries. He pointed out that he was not complaining of the amounts involved in so far as they related to remuneration for any one individual, but that his Government felt that an unnecessarily elaborate organization, with an excessive overhead, was being set up. I thought that it was necessary at this meeting to define the Canadian position in the following terms:

Our views had been stated in the Committee by the Canadian Governor for the Fund and Bank, Mr. Ilsley. He had made it clear that his remarks were not directed to the worth of any individual performing full-time and important services for the Fund or Bank, but that he could only contemplate with dismay the creation of forty-eight high-salaries posts in these organizations, in addition to the administrative staff which would be necessary. In the end, Canada had reluctantly agreed to the compromise by which both Directors and Alternates could serve part-time provided that one or the other was continuously available. It was also agreed that Executive Directors or Alternates serving part-time should be paid proportionately. Thus some latitude was allowed for each country to act as it saw fit. Canada was therefore fairly close to being in a position to stick to her original opinions in so far as her own arrangements were concerned. In these circumstances, we had reached the conclusion that we had to give weight to the opinions of others who intended to follow a different course, and would not register a vote against the proposals.

Harry White followed with remarks of a rather unpleasant character directed against Lord Keynes. He suggested that, whether by design or not, Keynes remarks were directed to the sabotaging of the Fund and the Bank through placing the remuneration of Executive Directors and Alternates at a level which would make it impossible to command good men. Keynes was remarkably restrained, and did not reply.

G. F. T[OWERS]

<sup>1</sup> Membre du Conseil consultatif du Chancelier de l'Échiquier de Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup> Member of Chancellor of the Exchequer's Consultative Council in Great Britain.

687.

DEA/6000-K-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures<sup>1</sup>*

Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs<sup>1</sup>

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 22, 1946

Dear Norman [Robertson],

The Department of Finance has grown very concerned over Ritchie's<sup>2</sup> departure from the Washington Embassy. One of their immediate problems is that there is no one now to name in Washington to act as alternate to Rasminsky and Bryce on the boards of the Fund and the Bank. As these boards are supposed to be in continuous session—a phrase which should be used with greater caution than has been exhibited recently—it is necessary to have someone available in Washington on short notice.

They have not as yet discussed this matter directly with me but I have been kept informed by Pearson of discussions going on in Washington and between Bryce, Rasminsky, Clark and Towers. They have their eye on Parkinson now with the WPTB whom they probably would like to name both as alternate on the boards and Financial Attaché at the Embassy. I do not know him nor does Pearson but I gather that he is quite a good man. In any case, he is not available until September at earliest.

The latest idea was reported to me by Pearson this morning. This was that we should bring LePan back from London immediately—I gather within a matter of a week or so—and send him to Washington as Financial Attaché. I told Pearson to tell Bryce flatly that LePan was not available for this duty, pointing out that Canada House was losing both its head and its second man and that until a new regime was established there we could not remove LePan. I also think that LePan should do a tour of duty in Ottawa when we can release him from London which would I hope be by the end of this year.

As the immediate purpose of these negotiations is to permit Rasminsky and Bryce to leave Washington and as they act in Washington under the instructions of the financial authorities here, I think that we must insist to use a favourite phrase of yours that “they skin their own skunks” and not try to rob us when we are so desperately pressed.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

<sup>1</sup>M. Robertson était alors en Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>2</sup>A. E. Ritchie, le deuxième secrétaire, l'ambassade aux États-Unis.

<sup>1</sup>Mr. Robertson was then in Great Britain.

<sup>2</sup>A. E. Ritchie, Second Secretary, Embassy in United States.

688.

DEA/6000-K-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States to Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Washington, June 14, 1946

My Dear Hume [Wrong],

The International Monetary Fund has now taken to sending Tommy<sup>1</sup> copies of the minutes of all meetings and copies of odd papers which are circulated among the executive officers. In addition, they have instituted the practice of telephoning to the Embassy before each meeting of the Executive Directors to ask if Mr. Stone will be representing Mr. Rasminsky. It is, as you know, impossible for Mr. Stone to represent Mr. Rasminsky three or four times a week, and it is not only embarrassing, but I do not think it is good for the reputation of Canada generally for us to keep saying "No". Tommy is clearing with Lou<sup>2</sup> as to what he should do with the papers which are of no conceivable interest to anybody except an Executive Director of the Fund.

This all arises from the fact of Tommy having attended one meeting. You will remember that I told you that Lou thought that there would be a knock-down drag-out fight over personnel questions at this meeting and that he would be letting Gutt down if he was not represented. This particular meeting was, in fact, charged with explosive discussion for a little while, but it ended up as amicably as a church social.

I realize that the appointment of alternates for the Bank and the Fund is not the business of either the Embassy or External Affairs and that there is probably little that you could do about it. I think I should have it on record again, however, that it is quite impossible for any officers of the Embassy to devote more than the barest minimum of time to these matters. In these circumstances it is embarrassing, as I said above, that any idea should exist in the minds of the officials of the Fund that an officer of the Embassy is acting as an alternate of our Executive Director. If a suitable opportunity should present itself I think it would be useful if you would draw this to Lou Rasminsky's attention again.

Yours sincerely,

MIKE [PEARSON]

---

<sup>1</sup> Thomas A. Stone.

<sup>2</sup> Louis Rasminsky.

689.

DEA/6000-F-40

Le président suppléant, la Commission de contrôle du change étranger, au ministre des Finances

Alternate Chairman, Foreign Exchange Control Board, to Minister of Finance

Ottawa, June 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Ilsley,

As you are aware, the International Monetary Fund has received applications for membership from Syria, Lebanon, Turkey and Italy. The first three countries mentioned are members of the United Nations and their applications for membership do not appear to raise any important question of principle.

I am enclosing herewith a copy of the note by which Italy applied for membership.† You will recall that at the Savannah meeting the United States Governor stated that his Government supported the application from Italy as well as those from the other countries mentioned. On the other hand, the Greek Governor opposed the application on the ground that it was improper to consider an application from a former enemy country with which a treaty of peace has not yet been completed and he was supported in this attitude by the Yugoslav Governor. The application was referred, along with the others mentioned, to the Executive Directors for study and report to the Board at a later date.

While the final decision regarding the Italian application for membership rests with the Board of Governors, it may be the case that the Executive Directors will wish to make a recommendation in one sense or the other. The issue of Italian membership is primarily a political one and I would be grateful if you would instruct me in this matter.

Yours very truly,

L. RASMINSKY

690.

DEA/6000-K-40

Le président suppléant, la Commission de contrôle du change étranger, au sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures

*Alternate Chairman, Foreign Exchange Control Board, to Associate
Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, June 21, 1946

Dear Hume [Wrong],

I have your letter of the 18th† enclosing Mike Pearson's letter of the 14th regarding Tommy Stone's troubles. I can't say that I blame the Embassy and Tommy for being annoyed. Tommy kindly agreed to attend one meeting for me and then, when I went into default on my obligation, Tommy finds himself treated by the Fund like a defaulter. I have written the Secretary of the Fund to make it clear that the Fund has no claim against Tommy or the Embassy.

That will dispose of Tommy's headache, but not mine.<sup>1</sup>

Yours sincerely,

L. RASMINSKY

691.

DEA/6000-F-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre des Finances*

*Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Deputy Minister of Finance*

Ottawa, July 17, 1946

Dear Mr. Clark,

I should like to refer to your letter of July 2nd† concerning an application by Italy for membership in the International Monetary Fund.

I think that in the circumstances Mr. Rasminsky might be instructed to support Italy's application for membership in the International Monetary Fund, particularly as it would appear that the United States Government will be taking the initiative in this matter.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

692.

DEA/6000-H-40

*Le chargé d'affaires aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in United States to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-2913

Washington, July 23, 1946

SECRET. Following for Dr. W. C. Clark and Louis Rasminsky from Bryce, Begins: Re: International Monetary Fund.

<sup>1</sup>La question ne fut résolue que lorsque Joseph F. Parkinson fut nommé administrateur suppléant canadien du Fonds monétaire international et conseiller financier de l'ambassade aux États-Unis en novembre 1946.

<sup>1</sup>The issue was resolved only when Joseph F. Parkinson was appointed Canadian Alternate Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund and Financial Counsellor of the Embassy in United States in November 1946.

1. You have already seen and there is at my house a copy of the memorandum by the Legal Division of the Fund† on obligation to consult regarding any proposed changes in exchange rates prior to determination of initial par values.

2. As I told Rasminsky on phone last night this matter was again discussed at meeting all yesterday afternoon in general terms not all Canada, but Canada was naturally cited as an example on several occasions. I made several comments on legal situation along lines we discussed Sunday, that is that general obligations were to collaborate not to consult and that specific obligations were not clear or at all definite. There was very little, if any, support for this view from others. There were a few questions by others which indicated some uncertainty and some reluctance to accept a hard and fast interpretation. Even White was reluctant to agree that Board could make a definite interpretation of law but he wanted some action implying interpretation as indicated below.

3. I raised the point of policy discussed by us Sunday, that is, that Fund should avoid involvement in preliminary adjustments of rates and secondly that if consultation is to take place suitable procedure should be arranged insuring speed and secrecy. Some slight support for me on second point but not much on first. I raised question as to whether Directors would report proposed action to their Governments but there was no discussion of this and I did not press it as I did not wish to provoke any commitments on this matter.

4. White suggested memorandum be included in minutes with notation that Board agreed in general. No active objection to this proposal and I did not desire to have recorded my formal disagreement without consulting you. I did raise question and delay decision on matter.

5. Luthringer, United States alternate, then proposed motion as follows:

The Executive Board directs that the Fund request each member of the International Monetary Fund, in consideration of the provisions of Article I, Article IV, Section 4, paragraph (a), and Article IV, Section 5, paragraph (b) of the Articles of Agreement<sup>1</sup> to consult the Fund at least 48 hours in advance of making any change in the par value of the member's currency during the period before the member and the Fund have agreed upon an initial par value for the member's currency.

6. White suggested we consider this before next meeting. I suggested such action should not be taken without Gutt. White was prepared on this and said they planned to cable Gutt and get his approval. Matter was placed on agenda for Friday. I feel definitely that Rasminsky or I should be here unless we deliberately wish to absent ourselves as matter of policy which I would not recommend in view of atmosphere of meetings. Consequently I am planning to be here as I understand Rasminsky cannot get down.

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir J. K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund: 1945-1965. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1969, volume 3, pp. 185-214.

<sup>1</sup> See J. K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund: 1945-1965. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1969, Volume 3, pp. 185-214.

7. I have talked to Grafftey-Smith, Crena de Iongh and Coe about security dangers if all Governments to be informed proposed action and said this seems mad to me. They were all inclined to agree but not willing to do anything about it. Grafftey-Smith said that he thought they could arrange to have Gutt and United Kingdom and United States Directors and possibly one other as Committee of Board to consider these very secret matters but he doubts if White would agree and I do as well. Grafftey-Smith, of course assumes that British and Americans would and should be consulted; and it will be difficult to justify selections on other than grounds of trustworthiness.

8. I will call about further instructions in regard to action on resolutions. Rasminsky may wish to cable Gutt privately on views. Unless Gutt intervenes or objects I think motion almost certain to go through. We could modify wording for example to indicate at beginning there had been some uncertainty as to precise obligations of members during preliminary period and the preparedness of Fund for consultation. Do you wish me to press for such modification before meeting? If resolution is to go through, do you wish me to record our formal dissent from its approval? Do you wish me as well to record our formal dissent from the implied legal interpretation? I would be inclined to think we should record in minutes that we believe the legal obligations are not clearly defined, and that as a matter of policy the Fund should not intervene in adjustment of rates prior to agreement on initial parities. However, this is debatable and I would like to discuss it with you by phone. Ends.

693.

DF/Vol. 4283

Mémorandum de l'administrateur canadien du Fonds monétaire international<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum by Canadian Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund<sup>1</sup>

August 1, 1946

ESTABLISHMENT OF PAR VALUES AND RELATIONS OF MEMBERS WITH THE FUND

The question has arisen whether a Member is required to consult the Fund with reference to changing its exchange rates before the date when the Fund has reached agreement with that Member on the initial par value for that

<sup>1</sup> Voir J. K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund: 1945-1965. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1969, volume 1, p. 157.

<sup>1</sup> See J. K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund: 1945-1965. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1969, Volume 1, p. 157.

Member's currency. This involves the further question as to when par values of currencies may be said to exist for the purposes of the Agreement, and several other questions as to the relations between the Fund and its members.

1. TIME AND MANNER OF ESTABLISHMENT OF PAR VALUES OF CURRENCIES FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE AGREEMENT

The concept of the "par value" of a currency is fundamental to the whole Fund Agreement. Exchange rates involving any two currencies must be "based on parity", i.e., on the par values of the currencies involved (IV-3). All purchases and sales of gold must be based on par value (IV-2). The primary obligation of a member is to consult the Fund before making any change whatever in the par value of its currency (IV-5(b)). "All computations relating to currencies of members for the purpose of applying the provisions of this Agreement shall be on the basis of their par values" (IV-1(b)).

It would be expected that in a matter of such importance the Articles of Agreement would describe what was meant by "par value" of a currency for the purposes of the Agreement, and how the par value of any particular currency is to be ascertained, and when such a par value first comes into existence for the purposes of the Agreement. This is in fact the case—all three points are explicitly dealt with in the Articles of Agreement.

In the first place, it is apparent that the expression "par value" has a definite meaning for the purposes of the Agreement. Article IV-1(a) requires that "the par value of the currency of each member shall be expressed in terms of gold as a common denominator" or "in terms of the United States dollar of the weight and fineness in effect on July 1, 1944". There are some countries, members of the Fund, which do not express the par value of their currency in either of these ways; they must do so, by the Agreement, and until they do so the other provisions of the Agreement cannot be applied. Moreover even countries whose currencies do have a gold par value under domestic law may be required to establish a different gold par value for the purposes of the Agreement. For example, some members of the Fund have a currency with a statutory par value based on gold at $20.67 an ounce, but have for some years been enforcing or permitting exchange rates which reflect the $35.00 price of gold. By Article XX-4(a), each Member is required, after request by the Fund (which request has not yet been made) to communicate to the Fund "the par value of its currency based on the rates of exchange prevailing on" October 28, 1945.

The par value of a currency for the purposes of the Agreement therefore, may be, and in some cases will be, quite different from the pre-existing par value, if any, of the same currency under the domestic law of the country concerned.

How, then, is the par value of a particular currency for the purposes of the Agreement to be ascertained and established, so that not only the country concerned, but the Fund and the other members which wish to have transactions in that currency and quote exchange rates involving that currency may know what its par value is? This is dealt with very clearly in Article XX-4, paragraphs (a), (b) and (c). A definite procedure is laid down, which is to be set in motion by a positive act on the part of the Fund when the Fund is ready for such action. By paragraph (a), "When the Fund is of the opinion that it will shortly be in a position to begin exchange transactions, it shall so notify the members and shall request each member to communicate within thirty days the par value of its currency based on the rates of exchange prevailing on the sixtieth day before the entry into force of this Agreement."

What is the effect of such a communication? This is dealt with in paragraph (b) which provides that "The par value communicated by a member whose metropolitan territory has not been occupied by the enemy shall be the par value of that member's currency for the purposes of the Agreement unless within ninety days after the request referred to in (a) above" either the member or the Fund gives notice that such a par value is unsatisfactory, in which event "the Fund and the member shall, within a period determined by the Fund in the light of all relevant circumstances, agree upon a suitable par value for that currency." It is clear, therefore, that no par value exists "for the purposes of the Agreement" until the 90-day period has expired or until the member and the Fund reach agreement. In the absence of such agreement, indeed, "the member shall be deemed to have withdrawn from the Fund," in which case, clearly, no par value ever came into existence for the currency of that country.

As if to emphasize that par values come into existence only at a certain time and only after a certain procedure has been followed, paragraph (c) provides that the right of a member to buy from the Fund currencies of other members arises "When the par value of a member's currency has been established under (b) above either by the expiration of ninety days without notification or by agreement after notification."

The language of paragraphs (b) and (c) is so clear and precise that it is impossible for any par value for the purposes of the Agreement to exist, or be ascertained, or be acted upon, until the time and as a result of carrying out the procedure therein specified.

2. TIME WHEN OBLIGATION OF A MEMBER TO CONSULT THE FUND COMMENCES TO OPERATE

The first question is, what is the subject-matter of the consultation? It should be noted that there is no obligation on members in the Fund Agreement to consult with reference to exchange rates,—and no provision for the Fund either to agree or to disagree with a proposed change in exchange rates. Article IV-3 provides that exchange rates shall not differ from "parity" by more than certain margins, and "parity" is to be computed on the basis of the par values of the currencies involved—IV-1(b). Article IV-4(b) explicitly imposes an obligation on each member to observe the specified margins in its exchange rates. Once par values exist, the obligation with respect to exchange rates is absolute and unconditional, without consultation or agreement; it is not even subject to transitional-period exemptions under XIV-2, or to gradual application under VIII-3.

The obligation with respect to exchange rates, being based on par values, cannot arise until par values exist for both the currencies involved in any particular exchange rate. Thereafter, any change in the par value of either currency must automatically be accompanied by equivalent alterations in all exchange rates involving that currency. It is the change in the par value which requires consultation with the Fund, as set forth in Article IV-5(b), as follows: "A change in the par value of a member's currency may be made only on the proposal of the member and only after consultation with the Fund."

What is the "par value" here referred to? Obviously it can only be the "par value of that member's currency for the purpose of this Agreement" referred to in Article XX-4(b) and (c). This is further indicated by the language of paragraph (c) of Article IV-5, following immediately after (b) above-quoted, as follows: "When a change is proposed, the Fund shall first take into account the changes, if any, which have already taken place in the initial par value of the member's currency as determined under Article XX, Section 4."

It can scarcely be argued that the "change in the par value" referred to in paragraph (b) of this Section as requiring consultation, is any different from the "change in the par value" which paragraph (a) of the same Section says a member shall not propose except to correct a fundamental disequilibrium, or any different from the "change" which, when proposed, the Fund is to consider in accordance with paragraph (c) and subsequent paragraphs of the same Section.

It is clear that the procedure provided under IV-5 cannot be followed until the initial par value has in fact been determined under XX-4, and that consultation is not required until a change is contemplated in a par value which has been previously determined under XX-4. Indeed consultation, within the terms of the Agreement, is impossible until such a determination of par value has taken place.

3. IMPOSSIBILITY AND IMPRACTICABILITY OF ANY OTHER MEANING OF "PAR VALUE" OR OF ANY OTHER TIME FOR THE INITIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF PAR VALUE.

That the provisions of the Articles of Agreement do not admit of any doubt that par values do not exist before the time has elapsed and the procedure has been followed as provided in XX-4, may also be seen by considering the impossible situation which would exist today if any other view were adopted, such as the view that "par values" for all currencies existed on October 28, 1945, or on December 27, 1945, or at any time before the time specified in XX-4.

(1) Thus IV-2, entitled "Gold purchases based on par values" provides as follows: "The Fund shall prescribe a margin above and below par value for transactions in gold by members, and no member shall buy gold at a price above par value plus the prescribed margin, or sell gold at a price above par value minus the prescribed margin." If it be said that par values exist today, then the Fund is at fault for not having yet prescribed the margin for purchases and sales of gold. Moreover, every member which has bought or sold gold since the Agreement came into force is in default for not awaiting a prescription of the margin by the Fund—or else, which is even more absurd, it must be held that members are free to buy and sell gold at any price they please notwithstanding the "existence" of par values in terms of gold.

(2) Again, by IV-3 and IV-4(b) each member must regulate exchange rates involving its currency and the currency of any other member, on the basis of the par value of each currency involved and within stated margins (1% on either side of parity, for spot transactions). If par values already exist, it follows, for one thing, that every member which has permitted or enforced a spread between buying and selling rates of more than 2% is in default of its obligations; and a number of members have in fact had such a spread. But what is worse, if par values "exist", the situation is completely unworkable, for how is any country, even assuming it knows its own par value, expected to know or ascertain the par value of every other member? Is every member expected to exchange notices with every other member? When? Why was no provision made for this in the Articles of Agreement? Surely it is because no such procedure was intended, or is necessary, and because a special procedure of a much simpler and more authoritative character was provided in Article XX-4. Until that procedure is followed, it is impossible for any member to ascertain the par value, for the purposes of the Agreement, of the currency of any other member for the plain reason that no such par value exists.

(3) Article IV-3(ii) provides that the margin of variation from parity in the case of forward exchange transactions shall not exceed the margin for spot exchange transactions "by more than the Fund considers reasonable." Here the argument of case (1) above applies again. If par values exist, the Fund is in default for not prescribing what it considers reasonable margins for forward exchange transactions. And members are all in default for engaging in forward transactions at all, or the absurdity arises that any member, notwithstanding the existence of par values, can buy and sell forward exchange at any rates whatever because no limits have been prescribed.

4. SIGNIFICANCE OF THE DATE OF THE FUND'S REQUEST FOR COMMUNICATION OF PAR VALUES

The document as prepared by the Legal Division of the Fund, Executive Board Document No. 28, dated July 18, 1946, suggests on its first page that, whatever may be the case before the date of the Fund's request to be made under XX-4(a), the occurring of that event makes the obligation to consult conclusive. The same thought is expressed on page 6 of the Board Document. Examination of the provisions of the Articles of Agreement gives no support whatever to this view. There is nowhere any suggestion that the request by the Fund has any other effect than to set in motion a certain procedure, and require a "communication" by each member within thirty days.

The Board Document says (page 1) "it seems clear that a member may not change the value of its currency between the date when the communication of the par value is requested and the date when exchange transactions begin, without consulting the Fund." The only authority cited is XX-4(f) which makes no reference whatever to the time of such request.

Use of the phrase "the value of its currency" in this place and elsewhere in the Board Document, including its title, is no doubt a careless slip, for "par value" is the matter under consideration. To speak of a "change" in par value, however, begs the question whether any par value yet exists, and so assumes the very point which has to be proved for the purpose of the Board Document.

The Board Document is careless in its use of language in other respects as well. Thus on the first page it says that "Other provisions of Section 4 describe the procedure to be followed after such communication to adjust parities and begin transactions". Neither the word "adjust" nor the word "parities" occurs anywhere in the Section, separately or in combination. The phrase "changes in par values" does not occur until paragraph (d)(iii), which deals only with enemy-occupied territories; and the phrase occurs in all two times, which would scarcely justify the description "several references" used on page 1 of the Board Document.

5. THE SIGNIFICANCE OF PARAGRAPH (F) OF ARTICLE XX-4.

The Board Document relies almost entirely on an alleged implication in XX-4(f) for its thesis that the obligation of a member to consult the Fund exists before the determination of initial par values under XX-4(b) and (c).

It is to be noted that paragraph (f) itself does not purport to deal with the time or manner of establishment of par values or of subsequent changes in par values. It is concerned with the effect of certain changes on the position of a member of the Fund when a further proposed change, subsequent to the changes referred to, comes to be considered under IV-5(c). Article XX-4(f) reads in full as follows: "Changes in par values agreed with the Fund under this Section shall not be taken into account in determining whether a proposed change falls within (i), (ii) or (iii) of Article IV, Section 5(c)."

The Board Document says (page 1) that "Only those changes which are agreed with the Fund are excluded from the operation of Article IV, Section 5(c)" and that therefore "any change made during this period without agreement having been reached between the member and the Fund under Article XX, Section 4" is subject to IV-5(c) and requires consultation.

If, as is apparently the case, this statement is intended to be broader in its application than the case of changes in par values specifically covered in XX-4, namely the case referred to in XX-4(d)(iii), then it again assumes what has to be proved. It is clear that there cannot be a change in "the initial par value” of a member’s currency until there exists a par value, and if there is no par value in existence for the purposes of the Agreement, there is nothing to consult the Fund about.

The Board Document next deals with this question with reference to “the period of time between the establishment of the Executive Directors as a functioning body and the date when the Fund requests the communication of par values”. Under the heading “II. Specific Provisions” it concedes that the obligation to consult under IV-5 does not exist “during the period in question” if “par values within the meaning of this Section are not yet in effect. Accordingly the fundamental problem is to determine when a member’s currency first has a par value within the meaning of the Agreement.” (page 4).

For some reason, no such point was entertained on page 1 of the Board Document when dealing with the period subsequent to the Fund’s request for communication of par values; apparently it is only considered relevant—though a “fundamental problem”—for the earlier period.

The Board Document then argues that XX-4(b) can be read either way, that (a) and (f) indicate a pre-existence of par values, but that (c) “supports the contention that a member’s currency does not have a par value within the meaning of the Agreement until ninety days have elapsed from the date when the Fund requests the communication of par values, or until the Fund and the member have agreed on the par value.”

For reasons already outlined in the earlier sections of the present memorandum, paragraphs (b) and (c) clearly establish the time when par values “for the purposes of this Agreement” are first determined, and Article IV-5 expressly recognizes this when dealing with the obligation to consult.

The argument based on paragraph (a) of XX-4 is of no great importance. Even if some verbalistic interpretation would require the “existence” of some kind of metaphysical “par value” in order for it to be “communicated”, that does not constitute a par value “for the purposes of the Agreement” (to quote a significant phrase from paragraph (b) which the text of the Board Document ignores). Paragraphs (b) and (c) make it quite clear that paragraph (a) is merely procedural, and indeed they provide that there is not any par value for the purposes of the Agreement until a certain time, and that such a par value is only established by the expiration of 90 days after the Fund’s request, or by the reaching of an agreement between the Fund and the member concerned.

There remains to consider whether paragraph (f), on which the Board Document lays the most stress, introduces any ambiguity, and what effect should be given to it.

In the first place, as already noted, paragraph (f) does not deal with the time when par values come into existence, which is the subject-matter or part of the subject-matter of paragraphs (b) and (c). Paragraph (f) deals with something else entirely, and no argument drawn from it by a side-wind can override the clear words of (b) and (c).

In the second place, one of the two uses made of (f) by the Board Document rests entirely on a negative inference, always a process of doubtful validity. (The paragraph commences: "Changes in par values agreed with the Fund under this section. . ." The Board Document (page 1) seizes on this as implying that other changes, not made by agreement with the Fund under this Section, must also be contemplated by the Articles of Agreement, and contemplated as occurring during the period which the Board Document says is in question, and that if changes are possible, something must exist to be changed, and that therefore notwithstanding (b) and (c) par values must pre-exist the times specified in (b) and (c).)

In the third place, the Board Document suggests that the words "changes in par values agreed with the Fund under this Section" refer to the agreements between the Fund and members under (b) and (c), that is, that such agreements represent "changes" in pre-existing par values. The obvious answer is that (b) and (c) do not speak of "changes" at all. Paragraph (b) says that the par value based on October 1945 exchange rates communicated by a member in response to the Board's request, "shall be the par value of that member's currency for the purposes of this Agreement unless within ninety days after the request" the member or the Fund gives notice that it is unsatisfactory. Obviously, no one can tell what is going to be the par value until ninety days have elapsed. If notification of dissatisfaction is given before the ninety days are up, what happens? The par value is not "changed" because it does not yet exist. Paragraph (b) goes on to say that in such event the member and the Fund shall "agree upon a suitable par value." Similarly paragraph (c) speaks of the par value, not as being changed, but as being "established . . . by agreement." And Article IV-5(c) speaks of the "initial" par value as that which has been "determined under Article XX, Section 4."

In the fourth place, there is no need for paragraph (f) of XX-4 to qualify IV-5(c) so far as concerns par values established or determined under (b) and (c) of XX-4, and it therefore would be superfluous and without effect if it were to be so interpreted.

In the fifth place, there is a clear need for (f), and a clear application of it, with reference to enemy-occupied territories whose par values have been "changed" under (d) (iii) of XX-4. This, indeed, is the only place in XX-4, prior to (f), in which "changes . . . made by agreement with the Fund" are mentioned or provided for. Paragraph (f) refers to changes made "under this Section" and it is to this case therefore, by the ordinary rules of construction, that paragraph (f) must have reference, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Finally, there is the legislative history or drafting history of paragraph (f), which is dealt with at great length in the Board Document. As is correctly stated in the Board Document, the substance of paragraph (f) in an earlier draft appeared in sub-division (d) with reference only to members whose territories had been occupied by the enemy. Later it was removed and set up separately as paragraph (f). The Board Document says (page 6): "This change clearly indicates an intention that the currencies of all members should have par values before the procedures set forth in Article XX, Section 4 have been carried out in full. It speaks of changes in par values taking place under Article XX, Section 4. There could be no changes in par values under this Section unless each member is considered to have a par value for its currency before it becomes eligible to buy currencies from the Fund."

The last sentence quoted is, of course, faulty in logic. The reference to "each member" is entirely unnecessary as paragraph (f) is fully meaningful in reference simply to the members whose territories were occupied, whose par values may in fact be "changed" as provided in paragraph (d).

The Legal Division's account of the legislative history of paragraph (f) is based entirely on the written texts and, no doubt for this reason, it omits any reference to one of the main considerations present in the minds of the drafters. It will be recalled by those who took part in the drafting that the representative at Bretton Woods of a country whose territory was then occupied by the enemy objected to the earlier draft as likely to give the impression that his country's initial par value was only provisional, and that it could be changed more or less freely—though by agreement with the Fund—for an indefinite period without using up the usual latitude for changes in par value under IV-5(c), and that such an impression would have undesirable effects and repercussions which would render more difficult the task of restoring economic order and stability after the liberation. In response to his request, it was decided to tone down the impression to which he objected, and in this process the clause in question was removed from (d) and placed in a separate paragraph (f). There was no intention to introduce by such a back door any wider application of the clause than it previously had with reference to currencies whose par values were changed by agreement with the Fund under paragraph (d). This would, indeed, have been a major change of substance beyond the competence of the Drafting Committee to make. On the other hand, the clause could be set up as it now stands precisely because it could not have any other effect, i.e., though generally worded it would not operate (because of the clear effect of (b) and (c) of XX-4, as well as IV-5(c)), and would not be needed, in respect of currencies other than the currencies of countries referred to in (d).

The reason why (d) and (f) speak of "changes in par values" of such currencies is quite plain. These are the currencies of members which are to be permitted to buy other currencies from the Fund before the expiration of the time specified in paragraph (b) (as extended pursuant to (d)). In order to buy other currencies, to compute the respective amounts of each currency, par values must be used—IV-1(b). Accordingly, for these countries, and these alone, the par value communicated under paragraph (a) of XX-4 may become an operative par value, and may be changed and the changed par value may in turn become an operative par value, before the expiration of the 90 days or longer period allowed. In this way the initial par value for the purposes of IV-5(c) may come into existence and be used and then changed, so that it may not be finally settled for some considerable time, and perhaps only after a number of changes by agreement with the Fund. These are the “changes in par value agreed with the Fund under this Section” which are referred to in (f). For other countries there cannot be any such changes—either the communicated par value or the agreed par value becomes established once and for all as the initial par value before the member becomes eligible to buy currencies from the Fund; after such par value is established (and not before) Article IV-5 comes into operation. But for a country which was enemy-occupied, there may be any number of agreed changes in the operative par value, and it is necessary to provide, if not in (d) itself then in a separate paragraph such as (f), that such changes shall not be subsequently considered under IV-5(c) as having any bearing on the question whether a subsequent proposed change in par value comes under (i), (ii) or (iii) of IV-5(c).

6. THE EFFECT OF CERTAIN GENERAL PROVISIONS OF THE ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT

The Articles of Agreement set forth a number of general purposes or objectives of the Fund in Article I, and certain “undertakings” of members are expressed in broad general language in Article IV-4(a), which reads as follows: “Each member undertakes to collaborate with the Fund to promote exchange stability, to maintain orderly exchange arrangements with other members, and to avoid competitive exchange alterations.” This the Board Document takes to mean that a member would be ignoring its undertaking if it “altered the value of its currency without consulting the Fund regarding the advisability of such a step.”

Ordinarily, it would be thought that the specific provisions of Article IV-5 with regard to consultation on changes in par values (after they have been determined under XX-4) would govern such a matter. The collaboration envisaged in IV-4(a) is very broad, and covers a much wider field than exchange rates (specifically dealt with in IV-3 and IV-4(b)) and par values (IV-5). Specific obligations and procedures are set out in the Agreement for consultation with respect to par values, and the general language of IV-4(a) cannot be held to override the more specific provisions.

Collaboration in any event does not necessarily imply consultation on the initiative of the members. The subject matter of collaboration and the appropriate techniques must necessarily vary from time to time in accordance with the stage of organization of the Fund itself.

An important feature of “collaboration” is that it involves two parties. Collaboration between a member and the Fund depends on the ability of the Fund to take part, no less than on the willingness of the member. At present the Fund is in no position to collaborate, or to be “collaborated with”, with respect to proposed changes in exchange rates. The Fund has not yet determined whether “consultation” is to take place with the Managing Director only, or with a subcommittee of the Executive Directors, or with the whole Board. If the Executive Directors are to be consulted, the question at once arises whether they are to be free to communicate information so received to the Governments which appointed or elected them, or to the national supervisory committees which in some cases control their actions; and if such communication is to be forbidden, no decision has yet been taken as to how provision for secrecy and security is to be made effective.

This is a matter to which members are entitled to attach the greatest importance and it is unreasonable to expect them to disclose to the Executive Directors their plans regarding alterations in exchange rates before the Executive Directors are in a position to assure them that the fullest possible provision has been made to safeguard the security of the information.

The character of the collaboration which the Fund is entitled to expect of members, particularly collaboration which goes beyond the specific provisions of the Agreement, must depend upon its own arrangements for collaboration with members. The Fund is at present in an organizational stage and no matter how willing or anxious members may be to collaborate with it, they cannot be expected to lose sight of this fact. Article IV-4(a) can only be reasonably interpreted in the light of these considerations.

694.

DF/Vol. 4283

Mémorandum de la Banque du Canada<sup>1</sup>Memorandum by Bank of Canada<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] August 30, 1946

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

POSITION PRIOR TO ESTABLISHMENT OF INITIAL EXCHANGE RATES

Rasminsky telephoned today and reported a conversation with Gutt yesterday. Gutt said he had examined the various memoranda and believed the Canadian memorandum was absolutely correct as a matter of law. He said, however, that a number of Executive Directors were still a little disturbed, and were particularly anxious that the Fund should be consulted about any further changes of exchange rates after the date on which the request is made for communication of the October, 1945, rates. It was intended to send out that request very soon, and it had been suggested that it should be accompanied by a further letter saying that the Fund was now prepared to consider and deal with matters affecting changes in exchange rates and wished that members should consult the Fund before making any further changes.

<sup>1</sup> L'auteur de ce mémorandum est probablement J. E. Coyne, l'assistant administratif des gouverneurs, Banque du Canada.

<sup>1</sup> The author of this memorandum is probably J. E. Coyne, Executive Assistant to the Governors, Bank of Canada.

Rasminsky said that clearly there was no legal right on the part of the Fund to make such a request. At this stage the Fund should not attempt to push the obligation to consult any further than the Articles of Agreement provided. Moreover there was a real risk of being rebuffed by some members.

He also said that to send out such a request might appear as an assertion by the Fund that it had a legal right to do so, whereas that question had not been thoroughly discussed or decided by the Board.

Gutt said that the Legal Division had prepared a further memorandum as a result of the submission of the Canadian memorandum, but that he had not yet circulated it. The new memorandum confirms the original view of the Legal Division but on different grounds. It drops entirely any reliance on particular Articles of the Agreement, and bases its argument on the general provision for consultation and collaboration with a view to maintaining exchange stability.

Rasminsky said that if this document were circulated, and if the request mentioned above were sent out to member countries, it would seem to cast a cloud over the Canadian action, and he would have to ask for a recorded vote on a number of specific propositions and, in the event of an unfavourable decision, to appeal the matter to the Board of Governors under Article 18.

Gutt, of course, deplored the prospect of any such action and said it would lead to endless argument over what was really an academic issue. Rasminsky then agreed to consider whether it would be possible to drop the matter entirely if the Legal Division's second memorandum were not submitted and if the special letter by the Fund to members were not sent. In such event the understanding would be that Gutt would say he had discussed the matter with various directors and the consensus was that no further action should be taken, and that the resolutions would be regarded as withdrawn, as also would be the request for a second memorandum by the Legal Division.

I discussed this matter with the Governor and phoned Rasminsky later to say we agreed with his views. I suggested he be sure and have the text of the letter from the Fund requesting communication of initial rates settled before the other matter is completely disposed of. He said he thought that would be done within a day or two. He raised the point whether it would be enough for our purpose to have the special request by the Fund dropped and allow the Legal Division's memorandum to be set before a meeting of the Executive Directors. I said I thought not, because that implied a continuation of the procedure which had been started at previous meetings of the Board, and that it would be much better and cleaner to insist that no further steps whatever be taken, with the implied threat that if anybody else took any further step we, in turn, would then proceed to fight the matter all the way up to the Board of Governors. He agreed.

Rasminsky said White had argued that the proposal would not seriously interfere with the expression of views by governments because an Executive Director would be constantly discussing questions affecting balance of payments and exchange rates with his government and would know its views. I replied that I thought such a situation was quite impossible, as under such circumstances an Executive Director would, on occasion, either have to, in effect, give away information as to what was happening at meetings of the Board or refuse to discuss something which would itself indicate to the government that the exchange rate of a particular country was under consideration.

2. On the other hand an Executive Director should not be bound hand and foot by his government, and it would be desirable in practice for each of them to have some discretion with regard to communicating information to his government, especially as regards timing, so that he would not have to refer back to his government before each vote or expression of opinion. This, however, would be for each government to decide for itself.

3. The Board should make it clear to the Managing Director that he had authority to discuss exchange rates and other matters with member governments informally and on a confidential basis if desired, that is, that the Managing Director (and his staff) could undertake, when consulted informally by a member, not to pass on any information which he received to the Executive Directors. This, of course, would only apply prior to the formal submission by the member country concerned of a proposal for a change in exchange rates.

4. With respect to a formal proposal of a kind not requiring the Fund's concurrence but merely requiring formal notification or consultation, it should be recognized by the Executive Directors that any member country concerned would take a very narrow view of the time interval required to satisfy its obligations in this regard, unless perhaps the Managing Director could be given some authority in such a case, even though there were a formal proposal, to discuss matters with the member country before passing on the information to the Executive Directors.

5. In the case of a formal proposal for a change in exchange rates requiring concurrence or dissent by the Fund within 72 hours, it was our view that the intention was to give 72 hours' notice to the full Board of Executive Directors, or approximately that length of time. The technical requirements of the Agreement could probably be satisfied by notice to the Managing Director, but it would have to be expected that he would pass on the word to the Executive Directors immediately, or at any rate first thing the following morning.

6. In the case of a formal proposal not requiring action by the Fund within a specified time limit, or in the case of any other matter to be dealt with by the Executive Directors, the Board should give considerable latitude to the Managing Director to exercise his own discretion as to when to bring a matter before them and in what form. He should be free to agree to a request by a member government not to reveal such a matter to the Executive Directors until the member government gave the word.

7. When a matter such as a proposed change of exchange rates comes before them, it was our view that the Executive Directors should endeavour, as a working rule, to hear the application expounded by the member concerned, and to hear the views of the Managing Director and any information or recommendation which he might provide, and then to have some preliminary discussion in the Board meeting before, in most cases, feeling under any obligation to consult their governments. In particular, it should be clearly understood that no Executive Director would communicate with his government on such a matter before notifying the others of his intention to do so. We felt, however, that this was as far as the Board could go in the matter, and that no rigid rule could be laid down with respect to the time at which, or the circumstances in which, an Executive Director would be free to notify or consult his government.

8. It was also felt it would be useful for Rasminsky to point out to the Board the manner in which a member desiring to change its exchange rates more than the first ten per cent would probably proceed. Since the Fund could, if necessary, delay a decision for 72 hours, and since it would be impossible to guarantee complete secrecy, the member country concerned would have to either choose a period in which there were three consecutive holidays, or would have to declare a special holiday or holidays, at least as regards foreign exchange transactions and stock market transactions. In the latter event, the member would be in effect giving public notice to its own people and to the world at large that a change in exchange rates was being discussed with the Fund, although it would not say in what direction the change would be nor how great it would be.

9. I also remarked that it would considerably help any member in such a position if the Executive Directors endeavoured, wherever possible, to dispose of the matter in less than 72 hours. In all fairly clear cases which had been discussed in confidence with the Managing Director in advance, it should be possible to do this, and indeed in such cases Executive Directors might not feel it necessary to consult or inform their governments until after their decision had been made. Likewise in cases in which an actual 72-hour time limit was not imposed by the Articles of Agreement, it would nevertheless be desirable for the Executive Directors to endeavour to render a decision as promptly as in the previous case. It should be remembered that the basic information would be available in the Research Department, and that at least the possibility of a change in the rate would probably have been discussed with the Managing Director in advance of communication of a formal proposal.

695.

DEA/6000-H-40

Mémorandum du gouverneur de la Banque du Canada<sup>1</sup>Memorandum by Governor of the Bank of Canada<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 23, 1946

MEETINGS OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF INTERNATIONAL FUND AND INTERNATIONAL BANK, WASHINGTON, SEPTEMBER 27-OCTOBER 4

The meetings of the Fund<sup>2</sup> were mainly taken up with the formalities of agreeing to recommendations of the Managing Director and Executive Directors on by-laws, admission to membership of Italy, Lebanon, Syria and Turkey, revision of quotas for Paraguay and France, rules and regulations, election of officers and place of next meeting.

The only dissenting voice raised during these meetings was that of Yugoslavia, which objected to the admission of Italy. They lost the day.

A resolution concerning silver was buried in verbiage.

Behind the scenes, there had been some difficulty in regard to France's application for an increased quota. At Bretton Woods, the statistical method of arriving at quotas would have brought France out with something in the neighbourhood of $650 millions. France's political position at that time being by no means strong, she was whittled down to $450 millions. The United States was unwilling to agree to an increase of more than $75 millions, and one of the arguments which they used was that a larger increase would too seriously disturb the relative position of various countries decided upon at Bretton Woods. It might even have brought France ahead of China. This assumes that the Bretton Woods meetings established a hierarchy. One would hardly agree that changing conditions in various countries should not justify upward or downward revision of their respective quotas, but that no doubt is a matter for the future. France expressed her thanks for the increase in her quota, at the same time reserving her right to reopen the question at some future date. China noted that she was refraining from asking for an increase in her quota at this meeting, but gave no guarantee that similar restraint would be employed in the future.

Our main concern during the meetings was to reverse the recent decision of the Executive Directors that the Managing Director had no discretion in regard to withholding from Executive Directors information which he received in the course of informal discussions with members—particularly information

<sup>1</sup> M. Towers avait été le représentant suppléant aux réunions du Conseil des Gouverneurs.

<sup>2</sup> Les procès-verbaux de ces réunions sont reproduits dans First Annual Meeting of the Board of Governors: Report of the Executive Directors and Summary Proceedings, September 27 to October 3, 1946. Washington: Fonds monétaire international, 1946.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Towers had been the Alternate Representative at the meetings of the Board of Governors.

<sup>2</sup> For the proceedings of these meetings see First Annual Meeting of the Board of Governors: Report of the Executive Directors and Summary Proceedings, September 27 to October 3, 1946. Washington: International Monetary Fund, 1946.

in regard to members' thoughts on the subject of changes in rates. I saw Clayton the day after I arrived in Washington, and put before him the obvious and familiar arguments: that anything told to Executive Directors would reach their governments and become public property: that members would tell the Managing Director nothing if they knew that what Managing Director heard would be transmitted to Executive Directors: that the Fund would then receive information in regard to change of rates at the very last moment: that the intention to change a rate would be publicly known at the time of application and a government would have great difficulty in reversing its stand: that any chance for the Fund to exercise some moderating influence in advance, or to prepare material for the Board to consider at the time of formal application, would be gone.

Clayton simply said that the arguments which were put forward were completely unanswerable, and that he would work on his colleagues to get them to agree to the exercise of discretion by Managing Director. We subsequently saw White together, and White said that he had no objection to expunging from the record the adverse decision of the Executive Directors, but that the Managing Director would still know that representatives of various governments expected him to tell them everything. Clayton said that got us nowhere, and was not the intention of the U.S. Government. White then said that he would agree on the exercise of discretion provided the Managing Director said nothing to any member of his staff. Clayton said that was nonsense: the Managing Director and his staff were one person. It was finally agreed that the Managing Director should exercise discretion in the sense we had in mind, provided that if he imparted information in regard to a proposed change of rate to one Executive Director he would at the same time tell them all.

It was finally agreed with Clayton that at the next meeting of the Executive Directors, when the minute of the previous meeting came forward for confirmation, Rasminsky would say that he had been giving the minute fresh consideration—and that he understood others had been doing the same—and would move for unanimous agreement in expunging the minute from the records of the Board. Gutt would then make an appropriate statement indicating how he intended to carry on. This procedure was followed, but White's ill-considered intervention resulted in the previous minute standing, and the agreed arrangement being recorded as an amendment of the earlier decision of the Executive Board. This, of course, strengthens the position we had been defending.

Throughout the proceedings, we were in touch with the representatives of Belgium, Holland, France, U.K. and Czechoslovakia, all of whom shared our views. Dalton, who felt most strongly on the subject, spoke to Snyder on more than one occasion.

International Bank

The subject of main interest which I discussed outside of meetings was the practicability of the Bank selling substantial amounts of its debentures in the U.S. market.

I said to Meyer that I had not had any talks with investors or financial people in the United States, but that I had considerable doubts in regard to the ability of the Bank to sell substantial amounts of long term securities. I thought that institutional investors—on whom the Bank must rely—would picture the issuance of very large amounts of debentures, would fear that political and economic developments would make it impossible to collect loans made to a number of countries in U.S. dollars, and would then look to see what protection was afforded the debentures by the commitment of members of the Bank to pay up. They would not give much weight to the obligations of countries other than the United States and Canada, and would therefore hesitate to buy the securities. If these assumptions were wrong, I would be very glad. If they were right, would it not be a good thing for the Bank to let it be known that they did not expect to operate on a really large scale. As matters stood, I feared that some prospective borrowers had exaggerated notions about what the Bank could do. Prospective lenders might also have these exaggerated notions about what the Bank would try to do. Both sides, and the Bank itself, would be better off if the thinking got closer to what I believed to be the realities of the situation.

I added that I did not hold the views that the Bank could not make any issue in the U.S. market. If it allowed itself to be persuaded to put out short term obligations—say up to ten years—I had no doubt that a number of institutional investors would play along once for reasonable amounts. But that would not be a very satisfactory way of doing business.

If it turned out that my guesses were right, it might be necessary later on to consider a change in the limitation on guarantees and loans of the Bank—bringing it below the 100 per cent figure referred to in Article III, section 3.

Collado, in discussing ability of the Bank to borrow in the United States, was quite optimistic, referring to the co-operative attitude of the New York State Savings Bank, Giannini and others. He totted up prospects amounting to some hundreds of millions of dollars after appropriate changes were made in laws. But it was all very vague.

I happened to see Neville Ford of First Boston Corporation when in Washington. He is a member of Meyer's informal Advisory Committee of financial experts headed by Harold Stanley, and was in Washington to discuss these matters with Meyer. He told me that nothing conclusive had come from the discussions.

In conversation with Grigg, I expressed views similar to those which I gave to Meyer.

Collado felt that if the Bank was to get going at all, they could not restrict themselves in all cases to specific project loans: that they would have to do something for countries such as France, Holland, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Denmark based on a general programme of reconstruction. He had in mind such amounts as $200 millions for France, $50 millions Poland, $34/40 millions Denmark, and so forth. By coincidence, the amounts would be very similar to credits extended to a number of these countries by Canada. I think that Collado is right although the Bank will no doubt wish to obtain information which is as convincing as possible in regard to the machinery and materials for reconstruction which these countries wish to obtain from the proceeds of loans.

Meyer had one or two private conversations with Bryce and myself. He is embarrassingly enthusiastic about Canada, no doubt because of his contacts with those of our nationality who are associated with the Bank and the Fund.

G. F. TOWERS

696.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 334

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

[Ottawa,] December 7, 1946

With reference to the attached telegram, I should mention that, shortly before its arrival this morning, Mr. Atherton called to see me to tell me that he had been asked to approach, on a personal and confidential basis, Mr. Towers with a view to ascertaining whether he would be available to succeed Mr. Eugene Meyer as President of the Bank. Mr. Atherton was most anxious that there should be no leakage in this matter, as it was being handled in Washington on the very highest level, and neither the Americans on the Bank or in the Treasury knew anything about this approach. Apparently the President and the Secretary of State were very concerned to obtain the best possible successor to Mr. Meyer, and felt that Mr. Towers was the man.

I went to Mr. Towers' office later in the morning with Mr. Atherton, at the latter's request, when the United States Ambassador asked Mr. Towers if he would be available, and explained to him why they were anxious to have him. Mr. Towers said that he would think the matter over, and indicated to me later that he would like to have a word with you about it.

The British apparently would like to support Mr. Gordon for the post, on the assumption that Mr. Towers would not be willing to accept it. I have mentioned this to Mr. Towers. He was aware that they hoped to secure Mr. Gordon, but he is also quite aware of the fact that if he himself were willing to accept the post, he would have their support.

On the whole, it appears that both the United States and the United Kingdom consider Mr. Towers their first choice, and Mr. Gordon their second. This is quite a tribute to the calibre of the two men.

L. B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2347

London, December 6, 1946

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins:

1. Sir Wilfred Eady<sup>1</sup> has asked me as a matter of urgency to ascertain whether the Prime Minister and Mr. Ilsley would feel that Donald Gordon's name could be considered as possible President of the International Bank in place of Eugene Meyer.

2. The United Kingdom authorities are very concerned about the way the Bank organization has developed during the brief period of Meyer's Presidency, and even more worried about what might happen should his successor prove unequal to what they regard as a really pivotal post in the world economic set-up. They see no hope of a really strong American nomination such as Clayton or Acheson, and fear that a weak candidate such as Snyder may be put forward. In these circumstances they think the only way of getting the Bank properly on its feet is to find a really first class Canadian as President. Towers, they know, is unavailable but they hope that Donald Gordon might be willing to consider the post and might be acceptable to the United States.

3. Eady feels that the role and responsibilities of the International Bank have been greatly increased in recent months by developments in general American policy, and that the need for strong and trusted direction of its operations has increased accordingly. The ending of UNRRA, the decision against expanding the lending capacity of the Export-Import Bank, the political difficulties which will preclude the Administration from asking for Congressional approval of further direct foreign loans, all tend to make the position of the International Bank more difficult and more important than at first seemed likely. I gather that the British view is that Meyer's administration has largely lost the Bank the co-operation and support of the New York financial agencies which had been promised, and which is essential if guaranteed loans are to be marketed at reasonable rates. They feel that the ground lost can be regained, but only if a really first-class man is found to replace Meyer; and they hope very much that Gordon would be available and willing to tackle the job. Ends.

<sup>1</sup>Deuxième secrétaire conjoint, la Trésorerie de Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup>Joint Second Secretary, Treasury of Great Britain.

PARTIE 3/PART 3

CONFÉRENCE INTERNATIONALE DE L'ÉTAIN
INTERNATIONAL TIN CONFERENCE

697.

DEA/9173-40

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 1572

Ottawa, August 30, 1946

Reference Dominions Office telegrams D.777 and 778 of August 19.†
International Tin Conference.

1. Although Canada is not a member of the International Tin Committee and has not been invited to the Conference as an important consumer, the Minister of Reconstruction has informed us that in view of the high importance of tin imports to the Canadian economy he considers that Canada should participate in the Conference. The Department of Trade and Commerce shares this view and in general is anxious that we should participate in commodity discussions of this nature.

2. We recognize that there may be reasons why it would not now be possible to extend an invitation to Canada to participate as a member of the Conference, but in that case we would like at least to have a Canadian observer at the meetings. Please therefore approach the United Kingdom authorities informally with the suggestion that an invitation should be extended to Canada and if you encounter difficulties in this fall back on the proposal to send an observer. Since we would need some time to prepare for the meeting we should be glad to have an early reply.

698.

DEA/9173-40

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1897

London, September 13, 1946

Your telegram No. 1572 of August 30th.

1. United Kingdom authorities have given very careful consideration to our representations but explain that they would be faced with very great difficulties if the Canadian authorities were to press for representation at forthcoming Tin Conference.

2. In deciding which countries are to be invited, a line has to be drawn somewhere and in this case it was felt that a normal pre-war consumption level of 10,000 tons per annum provided the best criterion. If Canada were to be represented it would be necessary to invite three or four other countries with equivalent claims and United Kingdom authorities are very anxious that such an extension should be avoided.

3. They agree it is most important that the interests of Canada should receive every consideration and repeat that it will be of great help to be kept informed of Canadian views on questions as they come up for discussion by the Conference. At the same time, United Kingdom delegation will be able to keep us currently in touch with events through informal discussions as described in my telegram No. 1733 dated August 15th† and to discuss Canadian position further if some permanent organization is contemplated. In all these circumstances, United Kingdom authorities hope that Canadian requests for representation at the Conference will not be pressed.

PARTIE 4/PART 4

SOCIÉTÉ DES NATIONS

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

699.

DEA/65-T-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] March 30, 1946

I attach two copies of a memorandum which I am taking with me to Geneva dealing with questions that may arise at the forthcoming League Assembly. You may wish to send a copy to the Prime Minister. I am also circulating a copy to the First and Second Political Divisions and the Legal Division for information. If instructions have to be sought during the Assembly, it may facilitate matters if I am able to refer to the numbered sections in this memorandum. I think that no formal instructions to the delegation are required at this point unless objection is taken to some of my suggestions.

I shall have no secret means of my own of communicating between Geneva and Ottawa. For security reasons I do not want to take a book cypher with me and there is no suitable confidential code to use in its place. I have asked Canada House to enquire whether in case of need I can avail myself of the cypher facilities of the United Kingdom delegation or the British Consulate. Unless things go badly this need should not arise. I do not propose to report currently by telegram on what goes on except perhaps to send an occasional message en clair.

My own movements are as follows:

I leave Montreal on April 1st and should reach London on the 2nd or 3rd. I have an air reservation for Geneva on the 4th. The Assembly opens on the 8th and is due to end by the 18th. I think that I shall go to Paris over Easter (the 21st) and thence probably back to England, returning here before the end of the month. In Geneva the delegation's address will be the Hotel de la Paix. If secret communications have to be sent to me there, they should probably be transmitted through Canada House and the Foreign Office.

H. W[RONG]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] March 28, 1946

THE TWENTY-SECOND ASSEMBLY OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS

1. The documents setting forth the provisional agenda of the forthcoming League Assembly contain no indication of the more difficult problems which may arise. The central purpose of the Assembly is to authorize on behalf of the states members of the League of Nations the taking of the steps required to terminate the League's existence. The chief document to be considered is the agreement negotiated between the Supervisory Commission of the League and a committee of the United Nations which was approved by the United Nations Assembly in London. This main agreement deals with the transfer of the property and other material assets of the League of Nations to the United Nations. The League Assembly will also be asked to give effect to other resolutions of the United Nations Assembly concerning the assumption by the United Nations of certain non-technical functions of the League and of certain duties and responsibilities placed upon the League by numerous international conventions.

2. MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The current list of states members of the League includes all those which were members when the Council and Assembly last met in 1939 less a number of states which have resigned since then from the League on giving the two years' notice required by the Covenant. Forty-four states appear in the list, but of those the three Baltic Republics have lost their independent existence and the position of Albania is dubious. Not more than forty states will, therefore, be represented at Geneva, and it is probable that several of those still shown as states members (especially perhaps some which are heavily in default on their financial obligations) will fail to put in an appearance. Thirty-two of these forty-four states are members of the United Nations and their delegation voted in the United Nations Assembly in favour of the agreement referred to in the first paragraph. Of the remainder, five retained their neutrality throughout the war; these are Afghanistan, Ireland, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland. Three on the League list fought on the side of the Axis powers during the war; these are Bulgaria, Finland and Siam. Among the forty states which may be represented there are only nine of the twenty Latin American states, the rest having all resigned from the League. There are, however, no fewer than eighteen European states on the list—a contrast with the under-representation of Europe in the United Nations Assembly.

3. DELEGATIONS.

Little is known as yet about the composition of the delegations, except that the United Kingdom will be represented by a strong team including possibly Mr. Bevin and certainly Mr. Noel-Baker, Sir Hartley Shawcross, Mr. Glenvil Hall and perhaps Lord Cecil. The French are said to intend to send a delegation headed by a Cabinet Minister. Mr. Uden, former Swedish Foreign Minister, is expected to head the Swedish delegation. It is not unlikely that, among the neutrals, Sweden and Switzerland at any rate will desire to be strongly represented, so as to take the opportunity of sitting once more as equals in an international conference.

4. ARRANGEMENTS FOR LIQUIDATING THE LEAGUE.

It will be necessary for the Assembly to pass a large number of resolutions in order to give effect to the agreement with the United Nations and to take the necessary steps to terminate the activities and interests of the League which fall outside the scope of this agreement. Exact instructions on these matters do not seem to be required by the Canadian delegation. At the United Nations Assembly we supported the basic plan; and what is to be done in Geneva is to approve this plan on behalf of the other party to the agreement and to make provision for its execution. This will include the appointment of a Liquidating Committee to complete the task of winding up the affairs of the League as soon as possible. Decisions of the Assembly will require unanimous consent, but unless political difficulties arise, serious trouble in achieving unanimity is not anticipated.

The accumulated effect of the detailed decisions to terminate the functions and dispose of the possessions of the League of Nations will end the existence of the League de facto. Certain formal general resolutions will also be required to make clear in simple terms that the League has ceased to exist and that member states are released from their obligations under the Covenant. No drafts of these resolutions have been received. One resolution will be needed to dissolve the Permanent Court of International Justice. Another, and probably the final resolution of the League Assembly, should announce the dissolution of the League. It is believed that such a resolution (provided, of course, that it secures unanimous consent) is the only effective means whereby the Covenant can be formally terminated through its simultaneous multilateral denunciation by all members.

5. POSSIBLE POLITICAL PROBLEMS.

A state or group of states bent on making trouble will, however, have opportunities for doing so. It is not possible to seek guidance in advance on the position to be taken if such difficulties should arise. Some of the possibilities are as follows:

(a) The countries which may be represented include three Allied states within the Soviet sphere and also two ex-enemy states from that region. These are Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Finland and Bulgaria. If the Soviet Government is looking for another means of making trouble, it could, through the mouths of this group of clients, upset the plans for liquidation. It is also conceivable that the Soviet Government might attempt to make use of this last opportunity of reversing the condemnation passed upon it by the Assembly at the time of the first Soviet-Finnish war in December 1939, and of expunging the finding of the Council "that by its act the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has placed itself outside the League of Nations". The validity of the expulsion of the U.S.S.R. from the League has frequently been contested by international lawyers, not only by those from the Soviet Union.

(b) Another problem affecting the U.S.S.R. is more likely to arise: whether they are entitled to be credited on the books of the United Nations with their proportionate share of the material assets of the League which are to be transferred to the United Nations. At the General Assembly in London a member of the Soviet delegation intimated informally that his Government would expect to be so credited; the matter was not pursued then as it could only be decided by the League. States which have withdrawn from the League, and have thus by their own deliberate decision renounced their obligations and rights as League members, would seem to have no equitable claim to share in the distribution of League assets. Indeed, if their claim were to be admitted, it would be necessary to credit Germany, Japan, the Axis satellites and Spain with a substantial share of the assets. It could be argued, however, that a state expelled from the League (and the U.S.S.R. is the only one) is in a different position. If such a proposal comes up, it might be left to the discretion of the Canadian delegates whether in the prevailing circumstances they should support it.

(c) The position of the Baltic Republics may create some difficulty. Although the 1939 Governments of the three Republics still have certain agents abroad who claim to speak in their name, the Governments themselves have disappeared. Some of these representatives abroad have approached the League Secretariat with an intimation that they expect to be invited to represent the defunct regimes; no invitation, however, has been extended to them and it is unlikely that any serious issue can arise in this connection.

The three Soviet Socialist Republics which have taken the place of the independent Baltic states have asked that the share of these states in the value of the League assets should be credited to the U.S.S.R. The Baltic Republics would seem to be entitled to claim their share, but there may be difficulties over agreeing that the U.S.S.R. should get the benefit of the small financial advantages which accrued to the Baltic states before they were swallowed by Russia.

(d) The Albanian Government has not been invited to send a delegation. Albania was not stricken from the list of League members following the Italian occupation before the war, as this would have constituted recognition of an act of aggression. While the situation of Albania in some ways resembles that of the Baltic Republics, it differs in that an independent Albanian Government has now emerged which is not yet recognized by most of the League members. There would seem to be no very strong reason why the seating of an Albanian delegation should be resisted if one turns up with adequate credentials and demands admission.

(e) Little difficulty is expected from the possible presence in Geneva of delegations from the three ex-enemy states of Bulgaria, Finland and Siam. They are still all controlled by armistices or terms of surrender, and if they prove uncooperative it might be feasible to invoke the armistice conditions in order to compel compliance. If this were to happen, Bulgaria rather than Finland or Siam would probably be the trouble-maker.

(f) The Austrian Government has indicated to the United Kingdom that they would like an invitation. Their request has been turned down for good reasons, as Austria formally ceased to be a member of the League when her annexation to Germany was generally recognized.

6. MANDATES.

Special problems are presented in connection with the termination of the mandates system. These have been the subject of telegrams recently exchanged with London. While no item referring to mandates appears now on the agenda of the Assembly, it is to be expected that some action by the Assembly will be required. In the case of the African mandates (except Southwest Africa) and the Pacific mandates (except the Japanese mandates) the mandatory powers have all declared at the United Nations Assembly their intention of entering into trusteeship agreements to replace the mandates. In the cases of Syria, Lebanon and Transjordan the transition to independence has been or is about to be achieved. In the case of Palestine, the report of the Anglo-American Commission of Enquiry is awaited before its future status in relation to the United Nations can be determined. The continued refusal of the South African Government to consider placing Southwest Africa under trusteeship may cause very difficult political and legal problems, especially if their alleged intention is fulfilled of issuing a declaration that the South African Government will continue to observe the terms of the League Mandate after the disappearance of the League. Doubts over the future of Japanese mandates center mainly around the desire of certain elements in the War and Navy Departments in Washington to annex outright certain of the islands. These problems will not be settled at Geneva; indeed, they cannot be settled without the concurrence of the United States.

7. CONTINUATION OF TECHNICAL FUNCTIONS.

While August 1st, 1946, is set as the approximate date for the transfer of League assets to the United Nations, it will be necessary to make provision for the temporary continuation of certain technical functions until the United Nations is prepared to assume them. It is particularly important that the administrative work undertaken by the League Secretariat under the international conventions dealing with the control of narcotic drugs should not be interrupted until the United Nations is ready to take it over. It is also important that the group of pre-war refugees who remain the responsibility of the League High Commissioner for Refugees should not have his services withdrawn until the projected United Nations machinery for dealing with refugees is in being. The transfer of these and other continuing technical activities to the agencies of the United Nations ought to be completed by the end of the year. The League should by that time have completely disappeared or be in the ultimate stage of liquidation.

8. DISTRIBUTION OF LEAGUE ASSETS.

It is proposed that each League member should share in the assets of the League in accordance with the proportion that its contribution bears to the total contributions to the League during its entire existence. Any liquid assets remaining after all current obligations have been discharged would be distributed direct to member states. The material assets to be transferred to the United Nations (mainly the buildings and land at Geneva) are valued at about twelve million dollars. The agreement with the United Nations provides that each League member which is also a member of the United Nations should be credited with its share on the books of the United Nations. The United Nations Assembly would itself decide when and how these credits were to be applied. This is an equitable scheme, and the difficulties in its application are those of detail. First, there will doubtless be argument over the determination of the proportionate shares of League members. Secondly, the fact that numerous states are in arrears in their League contributions will lead to demands for special adjustments. Thirdly, provision must be made for crediting in some way with their shares the states which are members of the League but not of the United Nations.

9. FUNERAL ORATORY.

In accordance with the ancient and honoured custom whereby eulogies are delivered when men and institutions pass away, the closing ceremonies at Geneva are likely to be devoted to a succession of funeral speeches. It will doubtless be appropriate, even though unwelcome to him and his audience, that the head of the Canadian delegation should make a short speech on this occasion. Perhaps it can be left to him to determine what should be said, in not more than five minutes, with propriety and without political embarrassment.

700.

DEA/65-T-40

*La délégation à la Société des Nations au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to the League of Nations to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 11

Geneva, April 19, 1946

My telegram No. 10.†

1. Closing session yesterday went peacefully and without much inspiration, except for moving speech by Noel-Baker and Hambro's closing remarks. The League of Nations, therefore, ended its existence today.

2. Unanimous solutions were found by Sub-Committee on which I sat for two most ticklish questions—the possibility of giving Russia a share in the assets and the composition of the Board of Liquidation. The mandate question gave little trouble and was the subject of unanimous solution; Egypt abstained.

3. It was agreed that admission of Russia to share in the assets would raise intricate problems such as claims of Brazil, Chile, Austria, and other former members. Assembly merely adopted resolution recognizing the fundamental contributions of Russia to the Allied victory and welcoming Soviet collaboration in the United Nations.

4. Liquidation Board of nine, including safe majority of responsible persons, was appointed with instructions to wind up the affairs of the League as soon as possible.<sup>1</sup>

5. Lengthy final resolution providing for the dissolving of the League, appointment of Board of Liquidation, separation of International Labour

<sup>1</sup> En juillet 1947, la Commission de liquidation décida que la part du Canada dans les valeurs liquides était d'un crédit de 745,040.10 francs suisses et 3,116,503.54 francs suisses en valeurs matérielles.

<sup>1</sup> In July 1947, the Board of Liquidation decided that the Canadian share of the liquid assets was a credit of 745,040.10 Swiss Francs and 3,116,503.54 Swiss Francs in material assets.

Office, transfer to International Labour Office of Pensions Funds, Working Capital Fund and some other joint services, was then adopted on roll-call without abstentions.

6. There was no evidence of desire to make political difficulties throughout the proceedings. The discussions concerning Russia were clearly not inspired from Moscow.<sup>1</sup>

PARTIE 5/PART 5

UNION PANAMÉRICAINNE

PAN-AMERICAN UNION

701.

DEA/7305-A-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

SECRET

Ottawa, January 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

You will recall that from the time of the San Francisco Conference there have been occasional references to the possibility of Canada becoming a signatory to the inter-American defence treaty which, it was agreed at Chapultepec, should be entered into after the war by the American Republics. I enclose a copy of an informal letter that Mr. Hickerson sent me† and the attached proposals for a treaty which were sent out by the State Department in December.

We have given this some thought in the Department and have recently discussed it with the Chiefs of Staff and the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence as a problem related to the forthcoming revision of Canadian-United States defence plans. There is general agreement that at the present time the best course is to remain on the sidelines. The problem as we see it is almost entirely political. So far as our own defence is concerned, the advantages and liabilities accruing to Canada would probably be about the same, whether we were a signatory to an inter-American defence treaty or were content to concert our arrangements with the United States alone as is already planned.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Rapport des délégués canadiens à la vingt et unième assemblée de la Société des Nations dans Canada, Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Recueil des conférences, 1946, N° 2.

<sup>1</sup> See Report of the Canadian Delegation to the Twenty-first Assembly of the League of Nations in Canada, Department of External Affairs, Conference Series, 1946, No. 2.

In considering the political arguments, it seemed to us that a case for joining the negotiations could be made out if the United States were particularly anxious to see us come in, or if Canadian public opinion felt strongly that the cause of peace and security would be served thereby. Neither of these conditions appears to be present. Indeed, recent upheavals in Latin America have probably dampened enthusiasm for association with the affairs of the republics. While it might be argued that Canada could make a contribution to world security by broadening and strengthening a regional system in this hemisphere, we feel that it would be preferable to work out military staff agreements under the United Nations Charter first and then consider what regional supplements are required. We do not see any danger to the security of any American Nation in thus revising the Chapultepec timetable.

We think it would be particularly difficult to enter into regional treaty negotiations with the other American countries at the present time when there has been no exchange of views between British Commonwealth countries regarding the post-war defence arrangements. The question would at once be raised, both in Canada and elsewhere in the Commonwealth, why we could sign an inter-American treaty and could not do the same with a Commonwealth agreement.

It would not be easy to explain our reluctance to the State Department or to the public, since our principal reasons for hesitation are a belief that an inter-American treaty would be largely meaningless in terms of defence advantages and liabilities, and an unwillingness to complicate the problem of Commonwealth defence relationships. It has been suggested, however, in our discussion with the Defence Departments that we should ask you to tell the State Department that, for the present, we do not intend to ask for representation at the negotiations (and would not be disposed to accept an invitation) on the grounds that we would like to tackle first the question of military staff agreements under the Charter. Indeed, we wonder whether this course would not be preferable for all the American Nations. If the United Nations Organization is to be a success, there is an advantage in having the general security arrangements take precedence over regional plans which could be completed a good deal more intelligently when the outlines of the general agreements are known. You might put this point to the State Department and try to find out how firmly they believe in the importance of driving ahead with a hemisphere treaty before the larger plans are negotiated. Our attitude towards a hemisphere treaty might be rather different if it followed rather than preceded, the military agreements contemplated under Article 43 of the Charter.

Your sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

702.

DEA/7305-A-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Washington, January 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Your letter of January 7th dealing with the proposed inter-American defence arrangements to be negotiated at the forthcoming conference in Rio reached me an hour or so before Dean Acheson came to lunch with me at the Embassy. During our talk after lunch I had a very good opportunity to discuss with him informally some of the questions which you raised in your communication. He had already received a message from Mr. Atherton dealing with some of these questions. This message, in fact, had told him that we did not wish to attend the Rio Conference, or to become a party at this time to the treaty. Since Mr. Acheson seemed to know so much about our attitude, I thought it might be desirable to go a little further into the matter than I would otherwise have done on the basis of your communication. I told him, therefore, that Mr. Atherton may have been somewhat more positive in this matter than the situation justified. I explained this by pointing out some of the difficulties, to which you referred in your letter and which made the formulation of a Canadian policy not easy; and which made it necessary to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of any particular attitude. I mentioned particularly our feeling that the United Nations might well first work out its military staff arrangements before regional supplementary arrangements were concluded; also the fact that within the Commonwealth there were no military agreements as binding as that which the draft proposals (attached to your letter) seemed to envisage. Mr. Acheson quite understood our position, and thought that this position was well met by the draft proposals in question which, by referring to American States and not American Republics, made it possible for our accession to the treaty if and when that seemed to all concerned to be desirable; without making specific mention of Canada which might at this moment involve some of the difficulties to which I had alluded.

Remembering a conversation I had had on this subject with Senator Vandenberg some time ago during which he expressed a desire to ensure that the proposed treaty should make specific provision for Canada's accession, I asked Mr. Acheson whether Vandenberg had discussed the matter with the State Department. I was told that he had; that his interest in Canada's relationship to the treaty was well known to the Department, but that when some of the difficulties were pointed out to him, Senator Vandenberg agreed that, both from the Canadian and U.S. point of view, any specific mention of Canada might be undesirable at this time, though the treaty should be drafted in such a way as to make Canada's accession possible without too much difficulty if and when the proper time for it arrived.

In view of my talk with Mr. Acheson, I doubt whether it is necessary for me to take any further measures at this time.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

703.

DEA/2226-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis<sup>1</sup>*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States<sup>1</sup>

DESPATCH 1395

Ottawa, November 12, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

On November 4th the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, in a luncheon address before the Canadian Club of Winnipeg, referred to Canada's interest in the Pan-American Union. This was an expression of private views, and is in no way a statement of official views. This Department has not yet seen the text of Mr. Massey's remarks.

A portion of his address, as reported by Canadian Press despatches, may however be of interest to you, in case you have not otherwise seen such reports. Mr. Massey was reported as saying:

"It is argued that our membership in the Pan-American Union would enhance our status. In my view it would have precisely the opposite effect.

"Membership in the Union might embarrass us in several ways. It might well have a restrictive effect on our freedom of action. It must be remembered that before Pearl Harbour the chief aim of the Pan-American system was the preservation of neutrality among its members, and neutrality was maintained.

"Positive disadvantages would flow from our membership in the Pan-American Union. If we joined it we would find it necessary to take part in the activities of many American bodies. Some of these, dealing with the special problems with Latin American states, would be of little or no use to us.

"In the political conference of the union we would find many issues frequently sharply divide American Republics, issues with which we are little concerned . . . As a member of the Union we could not avoid taking sides.

"It would be a very odd thing if after opposing the establishment of a permanent secretariat for the British Commonwealth, we joined the Pan-

<sup>1</sup> Des dépêches semblables furent envoyées à toutes les missions en Amérique latine.

<sup>1</sup> Similar despatches were sent to all missions in Latin America.

American Union, an organization of foreign states which carries on its affairs through centralized machinery in Washington.

"We have always avoided strategic commitments abroad. If this is our policy, it would be very inconsistent to subscribe to a security pact so explicit as that signed in Mexico City last year.

"I would say the advantages of our participation are illusory and more than doubtful, and the risks and disadvantages considerable and concrete."

The views of Mr. Massey have received some comment in Canadian newspaper editorials, but apparently without making an extensive issue of the question.

The official attitude of the Canadian Government continues at present to be that of holding the question of membership in the Pan-American Union in abeyance.

I have, etc.

K. P. KIRKWOOD
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

704.

DEA/2226-40

L'ambassadeur au Brésil au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in Brazil to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 245

Rio de Janeiro, December 13, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

Replying to your despatch No. 294 of November 12th,<sup>1</sup> I desire to comment on the views expressed by the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, in an address before the Canadian Club of Winnipeg.

2. I do not know what Mr. Massey means when he says that our membership in the Pan-American Union would not enhance our status and, in fact, would have precisely the opposite effect. To suggest that joining any international organisation would detract from our status is difficult to understand.

3. Mr. Massey's second point was that membership in the Pan-American Union might embarrass us in several ways. It would certainly not embarrass us any more than our membership in the United Nations; and, in fact, our failure to join the Union is already somewhat embarrassing in our relations with the other American countries.

4. Mr. Massey says that it would be a positive disadvantage to have to take part in the activities of many American bodies. The answer to this is that we have already taken part in numerous technical organisations which are part of the Pan-American system.

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document précédent.

<sup>1</sup> See preceding document.

5. Mr. Massey says that we would be unable to avoid taking sides in issues which might divide the American Republics. He seems to ignore the fact that we are an American nation, and that we are concerned with the issues confronting the American Republics. We are sufficiently adult to take sides in issues that arise in the United Nations Organisation. Surely, it is our duty to have views on international affairs and to express them.

6. Mr. Massey says that it would be strange if, after opposing the establishment of a permanent secretariat for the British Commonwealth, we join an organisation of foreign states which carries on its affairs through centralised machinery in Washington. Our objection to the establishment of a secretariat for the British Commonwealth was that it would lead to the establishment of a joint foreign policy for all members of the British Commonwealth, and that that policy would be the policy of the United Kingdom. Joining the Pan-American Union would not involve any similar danger. Nobody would suggest that the foreign policies of the American Republics are formulated by "centralised machinery in Washington". So far as the American Republics have been able to agree on foreign policy, such agreement has been hammered out at international conferences.

7. Mr. Massey thinks that we might have to depart from our policy of no strategic commitments abroad if we join the Pan-American Union. It is true that there is talk of a regional security agreement; but such an agreement would come within the framework of the United Nations, and it would be quite logical for Canada, as a country of the American region, to subscribe to it.

8. I am sending copies of this despatch to our missions in Latin America and in Washington.

I have etc.

JEAN DÉSY

705.

DEA/2226-40

*L'ambassadeur au Mexique au secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

Ambassador in Mexico to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 586

Mexico, December 18, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your confidential despatch of November 12, 1946, No. 396,<sup>1</sup> in which you summarize the points made by the Right Honourable Vincent Massey at a luncheon address before the Canadian Club of Winnipeg, in which he argued vigorously against any proposal that Canada should become a member of the Pan-American Union.

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document 703.

<sup>1</sup> See Document 703.

I observe that in his address Mr. Massey was giving "an expression of private views" which was "in no way a statement of official views". For this reason, and because my own point of view has frequently been expressed and is undoubtedly on file in the Department, I do not intend to comment on the particular points made in Mr. Massey's address. I would not wish my silence, however, to be interpreted as accepting all, or indeed any of the points summarized in your despatch as being valid arguments against Canadian participation in the work of the Pan-American Union. There is, I think, an element of truth in some of the arguments advanced by Mr. Massey, but there are omitted in each case the weighty considerations that could be advanced on the other side.

I do not feel that there is any urgency about the development of a closer relationship between Canada and the Pan-American Union, and I realise, of course, the real importance of the attitude of the State Department in Washington towards this matter. The purpose of this despatch is merely to express my regret that Mr. Massey has placed the weight of his authority behind the point of view, which seems to me to be unwise.

I have etc.

H. L. KEENLEYSIDE

PARTIE 6/PART 6

CONSEIL CONSULTATIF CONJOINT
SUR LES QUESTIONS MARITIMES

UNITED MARITIME CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL

706.

DEA/8794-40

Mémoire du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

Ottawa, October 10, 1946

MEETING OF THE UNITED MARITIME CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL
IN WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 24TH-30TH

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

The United Maritime Consultative Council is to meet in Washington

(1) to consider a draft charter for an international shipping organization of an advisory and consultative character, and

(2) to make provision for an interim organization which will bridge the gap between the termination of the U.M.C.C. itself on October 31st and the establishment of whatever permanent organization may be decided upon.

It is proposed that if the charter meets with the approval of the Council it will be referred to the participating governments for acceptance.

This draft charter, a copy of which is attached,† was drawn up by a sub-committee of the U.M.C.C. pursuant to a request from the Secretary General of the United Nations that the Council study the advisability of setting up an international maritime organization functioning as a specialized agency and reporting to the Economic and Social Council under Article 57 of the United Nations Charter.

Since shipping matters are left outside the scope of the proposed International Trade Organization, it was felt advisable to consider filling the gap.

CONSIDERATIONS

1. The draft charter was drawn up by a sub-committee of the U.M.C.C. of which Canada was a member and has been examined by the Legal Division of the Department of External Affairs, which considers it a suitable basis for discussion.

2. The organization envisaged would be on a small scale as regards administrative framework and financial commitments, but would perform a useful function: first, by providing within the framework of the United Nations an expert body of reference for the consideration of such shipping problems as may be submitted to the United Nations; secondly, by ensuring that the greatest measure of responsibility for the solution of shipping problems rests upon those nations which are the major suppliers and users of shipping services (this consideration is in close agreement with the Canadian views regarding a functional approach to international problems); and thirdly, by assisting in the exchange of technical information and the solution of problems arising in that field, e.g. safety of life at sea, in which it is desirable to facilitate the development of standards on an international basis.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is accordingly recommended

(1) that the following persons be authorized to attend the meeting of the United Maritime Consultative Council to be held in Washington October 24th to 30th, 1946, in the capacities indicated:

Representatives—Mr. A. L. W. MacCallum, Canadian Shipping Board, Chairman of the Delegation.

—Mr. A. L. Lawes, Canadian Shipping Board.

—Mr. H. A. Scott, Commercial Counsellor,
Canadian Embassy, Washington.

Advisers —Mr. H. W. Dodwell, Canadian Shipping Board.

—Mr. J. F. Frederickson, Canadian Shipping Board

(2) that the Canadian representatives be authorized to support any resolutions or recommendations adopted by the above-mentioned Council relative to the establishment of an international advisory maritime organization and to the interim arrangements therefor, subject to final acceptance by the Government of Canada.

707.

DEA/8794-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa,] October 18, 1946

UNITED MARITIME CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL; WASHINGTON MEETINGS; CANADIAN DELEGATION

At the meeting of the Cabinet on October 17th, it was agreed that Canadian participation in the proposed meeting of the United Maritime Consultative Council be approved, representation to be arranged by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in consultation with the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and Transport.

It was also agreed that the Canadian delegation be instructed to consult the government before committing itself in support of proposals for the establishment of continuing international shipping machinery.

708.

DEA/8794-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au président, la délégation au Conseil consultatif conjoint sur les questions maritimesUnder-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Delegation to United Maritime Consultative Council

SECRET

Ottawa, October 21, 1946

Dear Mr. MacCallum,

This letter is to inform you that the Canadian Government have approved Canadian participation in the forthcoming meeting of the United Maritime Consultative Council, beginning in Washington on Thursday, October 24th. The delegation is to consist of yourself, as Chairman, and the following delegates:

Captain E. S. Brand, of the Department of Reconstruction;
Mr. A. L. Lawes, of the Canadian Shipping Board;
Mr. F. M. MacLennan, of the Department of Transport;
Mr. H. A. Scott, of the Canadian Embassy, Washington; and the following advisers:

Mr. H. W. Dodwell, of the Canadian Shipping Board; and Mr. J. F. Frederickson, of the Canadian Shipping Board.

The Government has decided that the Canadian Delegation be instructed to consult the Government before committing itself in support of proposals for the establishment of continuing international shipping machinery. This means that the delegation is not authorized to sign the draft constitution or even any draft agreement setting up any interim organization. The delegation is not authorized to sign such instruments even subject to ratification, as the Cabinet has decided that a new reference to Cabinet will be necessary before even conditional signature can be authorized.

In view of the necessity of referring back to Cabinet, it seems unlikely that authorization to sign the instruments will be given before the delegation leaves Washington.

You should, therefore, keep us fully informed, through our Embassy in Washington, of the course of the negotiations, and seek instructions as envisaged in the decision of the Government.

I am enclosing an official letter, † to be used as credentials for the delegation at the conference.

Yours sincerely,

[L. B. PEARSON]

709.

DEA/8794-40

*Le chargé d'affaires aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in United States to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-3812

Washington, October 24, 1946

SECRET. Referring to your EX-2663 of October 22nd † on United Maritime Consultative Council meeting in Washington, Scott ascertained from MacCallum this morning that the latter has just received your letter of October 21st, and now wishes, as Chairman of the Canadian delegation, to submit the following views to you:

Quote:

“On my arrival Washington this morning I received your letter of October 21st conveying Canadian Government instructions to me as Chairman of the Canadian delegation with respect to participation in the meeting of the United Maritime Consultative Council which opened in Washington this morning.

“The proposals before this meeting for a continuing Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization—a consultative and advisory body only—have been under consideration by the Canadian Shipping Board for some time and through the Minister of Trade and Commerce by the Canadian Government in Ottawa for the last four weeks. Prior to that time, the draft plan for the formation of the proposed Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization had been referred to the Department of External Affairs and, so far as I know, had been approved in principle, subject to minor points of detail.

“Since the draft plan of the proposed new organization was drawn up by a committee of the UMCC—a committee on which Canada was represented—and since the plan has been generally agreed in principle by practically all countries that are represented in UMCC, the sole object of the present Washington Conference is to secure general agreement to this plan for the new Intergovernmental Maritime Organization subject, of course, to approval and/or ratification by the Governments concerned.

"Your letter of instructions dated October 21st places the Canadian delegation in the position of observers rather than participants, in that your delegation has no powers to agree with the other Government delegations as to the principle of setting up the proposed new organization. I would reiterate that such organization is advisory and consultative and will be, in effect, an international shipping advisory adjunct of UNO.

"Under these circumstances, I would strongly urge that your delegation be empowered at least to agree in principle to the proposed organization. During the time this matter has been under consideration by Ottawa, I have not heard of any objection to the principle of setting up a suitable intergovernmental organization on the lines of the draft plan now before the Washington meeting. My understanding is that none of the Government delegations here will be expected to sign any agreement: they will, undoubtedly be requested to indicate if their Governments agree in principle to the formation of the new Organization subject always to final approval or ratification by the home Government." Unquote.

In the circumstances, as outlined above by MacCallum and in line with the instructions conveyed to us in paragraph four of your teletype of October 22nd, could you please indicate whether or not the Canadian delegation is empowered to agree in principle to the formation of an Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization on the lines of the draft plan of which you have a copy.

It would be appreciated if we could have your instructions not later than Saturday morning, October 26th.

710.

DEA/8794-40

*Le chargé d'affaires aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in United States to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-3820

Washington, October 24, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Since sending you our WA-3812 on United Maritime Consultative Council meeting, the Canadian delegation attended this afternoon's session which, after quickly disposing of the other minor items on the agenda, came to a general consideration of the draft plan, and the Chairman asked for an expression of opinion from each of the Governments represented. With the exception of New Zealand and Yugoslavia, both of which advised the meeting that they were awaiting instructions from their respective Governments, all delegations present indicated that their Governments favoured the plan in principle, although making reservation on points of detail.

When asked for Canada's attitude, the Chairman of the Canadian delegation made the following statement:

Quote:

"Just at this moment I cannot say that the Canadian Government approves of this plan for an Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization. I am awaiting a directive from Ottawa in this connection. All I can say at this juncture is that Canada sent a representative to the Working Party Meeting in London where the plan was drawn up, and the Canadian Shipping Board has recommended the plan in principle to the Canadian Government."

Unquote.

After receiving this statement, the Chairman of the meeting said the Council would like to have some indication of the Canadian Government's views on the principle of the proposals by tomorrow if possible. The same request was made to the New Zealand delegate.

Whereas in my immediately preceding teletype we asked for your instructions not later than Saturday morning, in view of this afternoon's developments we would be grateful for a definite directive tomorrow.

711.

DEA/8794-40

Le président, la délégation au Conseil consultatif conjoint sur les questions maritimes, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chairman, Delegation to United Maritime Consultative Council, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL

Montreal, November 6, 1946

Dear Sir,

In accordance with your letter of instructions dated October 21, Canada was represented at the second session of the United Maritime Consultative Council, held in Washington from October 24-30, 1946, by a delegation consisting of:

Mr. A. L. W. MacCallum	Chairman, Canadian Shipping Board (Chairman of Delegation)
Mr. A. L. Lawes	Representative in Washington, Canadian Shipping Board
Mr. H. A. Scott	Commercial Counsellor, Canadian Embassy, Washington
Mr. F. M. MacLennan	Assistant Deputy Minister of Transport
Captain E. S. Brand	Department of Reconstruction and Supply
Mr. J. F. Frederickson	Advisers
Mr. H. W. Dodwell

Seventeen other nations were represented at the session:

Australia, Brazil, Belgium, Chile, Denmark, France, Greece, India, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Sweden, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia.

You may recall that the United Maritime Consultative Council was established upon the termination of the United Maritime Authority on March 2, 1946, in order to maintain for the eight months' "transitional period", ending October 31, 1946, a simplified and limited control over international shipping to ensure the availability of vessel tonnage for UNRRA shipments and the essential import programmes of various European governments. The United Maritime Consultative Council at its first session held in Amsterdam from June 18 to 24, 1946, was asked by the United Nations, through the Secretary General, for its views on "the question of establishing a world-wide inter-governmental shipping organization to deal with technical matters". In considering this question the United Maritime Consultative Council made the following resolutions and quoted them in its reply to the Secretary General:

The Council took note of the view generally expressed that an inter-governmental body is likely to be required to provide for consultation on all matters suitable for inter-governmental discussion as regards shipping, and resolved to appoint a committee:

- (1) To consider in more detail the possible constitution, scope and procedure of such a body, and
- (2) To draw up a draft report of these subjects for further consideration by the Council.

The Committee appointed pursuant to these resolutions subsequently held meetings in London, which were attended by a Canadian representative, and prepared a draft Plan for an Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

Consideration of this draft Plan, together with the Committee's report upon it, was the main item of business on the agenda of the second session of the United Maritime Consultative Council, held in Washington October 24-30, 1946. The Plan provides for establishment of an Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, consisting of an Assembly of delegates of all member governments, a Council of sixteen governments elected by the Assembly, a Maritime Safety Committee of twelve member governments, and a small Secretariat. The proposed organization is purely consultative and advisory, without executive powers. Its purpose is to provide machinery in the international shipping field for cooperation among governments, encouragement of the removal of discriminatory practices, exchange of information, and consideration of maritime problems generally.

At the Conference almost all of the delegations favored the establishment of the proposed organization as a medium for inter-governmental consultation and cooperation, particularly in the technical field, provided that the scope of the organization would not involve interference in matters which could be settled by normal commercial processes in international shipping. The Swedish, Norwegian and Danish delegations were particularly insistent upon restricting the organization to a consultative role and limiting its scope to the technical field. After extensive discussion and numerous revisions of the original draft Plan, a version was worked out which was generally satisfactory to the various delegations. Some delegations, however, felt obliged to reserve the position of their governments upon some features of the proposed organization; the Indian, Brazilian and Chilean delegations, for example, submitted statements to the Conference which proposed certain revisions in both principle and detail.

At the conclusion of the Conference, the various delegates agreed to recommend the Plan in its final form of a draft Convention to their governments, as a basis for the establishment of the proposed organization as a permanent "specialized agency", under Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations, and also to recommend to their governments the creation forthwith of an interim organization based on the draft Convention, to be effective from the termination of the United Maritime Consultative Council on October 31, 1946, until the establishment of the permanent body. The Chairman of the Council was authorized to inform the Secretary General of the United Nations that these recommendations were being made to member governments. A Resolution was also passed that each member government be requested to:

(a) inform the United Kingdom Government, as soon as possible, whether it accepted the agreement for the interim organization;

(b) authorize the United States Government to forward to the Secretary General of the United Nations, not later than December 1, 1946, the Convention for a permanent organization;

(c) request the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations to convene a conference of all interested governments to adopt a constitution for the permanent organization.

The Canadian delegation considers that the proposed interim and permanent organizations would perform a useful and valuable function as a forum for discussion among governments of technical and certain general shipping problems, and is also of the opinion that the suggested procedure in establishing the permanent organization as a specialized agency of the United Nations is desirable. The proposed organization is strictly consultative and advisory. As a member, Canada would undoubtedly be entitled to a seat on both the Council and the Maritime Safety Committee. Because of Canada's substantial merchant fleet and her position in international trade, it is, in the opinion of the Canadian delegation, highly desirable that Canada participate.

I am enclosing herewith copies of the following documents:†
U.M.C.C.

- 2/39 Recommendations of the United Maritime Consultative Council to member 2/29 governments, to which is attached the draft Convention for an Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

- 2/38 Resolution of the United Maritime Consultative Council regarding transmission through the medium of the United States Government of its recommendations to the Secretary General of the United Nations by December 1, 1946.
- 2/40 Copy of a telegram to be despatched forthwith by the United Maritime Consultative Council to the Secretary General of the United Nations, stating that the United Maritime Consultative Council has agreed to recommend to member governments that an interim and a permanent organization be established.
- 2/35 Draft Agreement for Provisional Maritime Consultative Council.

The Canadian delegation, therefore, recommends:

(a) that the United States Government be informed before December 1, 1946, that Canada accepts the recommendations of the United Maritime Consultative Council (UMCC Paper 2/39);

(b) that appropriate action be taken to request the Economic and Social Council of United Nations to convene a conference of interested governments for adoption of a constitution for the proposed organization on the basis of the draft Convention (UMCC 2/29); and

(c) that the Government of the United Kingdom be informed of Canadian acceptance of the agreement for a provisional organization (UMCC 2/35).

I have sent a copy of this letter, together with the documents attached, to the Minister of Trade & Commerce, and to each member of the Canadian delegation, including Mr. Harry Scott, Commercial Counsellor to the Canadian Embassy in Washington, who has already submitted to you an interim report† upon the Conference. Approximately twenty sets of the documents of the Conference, including all minutes and papers, are being forwarded to the Department of External Affairs from Washington, and each member of the delegation will also receive copies.

Yours very truly,

A. L. W. MACCALLUM

712.

DEA/8794-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 2034

Ottawa, November 27, 1946

The United Maritime Consultative Council at its second and final session held at Washington October 23rd to 30th adopted inter alia the following resolutions:

(a) In view of the fact that United Maritime Consultative Council will cease to exist on October 31st 1946 a Provisional Maritime Consultative Council should be set up in accordance with the agreement (annexed to the resolution) for the establishment of a Provisional Maritime Consultative Council.

(b) Government members of the UMCC should adopt as soon as possible the agreement for a Provisional Maritime Consultative Council by notification to the government of the United Kingdom in accordance with Article V(1). thereof.

2. Please inform the United Kingdom government that Canada accepts the agreement for a Provisional Maritime Consultative Council in accordance with the recommendation of the UMCC.

3. You may also advise United Kingdom Government (a) that Canada accepts recommendation of UMCC for the establishment of a permanent Maritime Organization as described in the draft convention for an Inter-governmental Maritime Consultative Council adopted by the UMCC at the same session; (b) Canada will not repeat not however take action requesting Economic and Social Council to convene conference of all interested governments for the purpose of adopting a constitution for an Inter-governmental Maritime Consultative Organization which action was also recommended by UMCC. Reasons prompting this decision are that Canadian Government feels the initiative in this matter could more appropriately be taken by nations having leading interest; (c) that the United States government is being advised by concurrent telegram.

713.

CH/Vol. 2102

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 2035

Ottawa, November 27, 1946

SECRET. Please refer to my telegram 2034 and particularly to paragraph 3 (b).

For your personal information only, Cabinet has some misgiving in general concerning multiplication of International Organizations and in particular is doubtful if so large an Organization as that proposed is necessary for handling maritime matters.

CHAPITRE X/CHAPTER X

RELATIONS AU SEIN DU COMMONWEALTH COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

PARTIE 1/PART 1

GÉNÉRALITÉS/GENERAL

SECTION A

RÉUNION DES PREMIERS MINISTRES/MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

714.

CH/Vol. 2118

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 695

Ottawa, March 23, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Your telegram No. 621 of March 4th.† Press reports regarding meeting of Prime Ministers.

We are concerned over the possibility that the character and importance of the consultations to be held in London are being over-emphasized in the United Kingdom. We assume that this is due to three main causes. First the profound anxiety over Soviet policy together with the inevitable uncertainty about the continued firmness of the policy of the United States, produces a desire to play up the combined strength of the Commonwealth as a whole and to lay stress upon the capacity of Commonwealth Governments to take concerted action. Secondly, the Labour Government is anxious to give no ground for charges that it is not an effective guardian of Imperial interest. Thirdly, the waning faith in the capacity of the UNO to be an effective guardian of peace and security gives rise to renewed interest in the military power of the Commonwealth. Much the same sort of talk about the need for Commonwealth solidarity was evident in the early 1920s after the United States deserted Wilsonian policies and differences arose between France and the United Kingdom.

2. With respect to Commonwealth Defence, no general proposals for post-war co-operation have been made since Cranborne advanced his suggestions in June 1944 at the end of the Prime Ministers' meeting although a number of plans have been put forward for co-operation in particular tasks. In the language used occasionally by British Ministers and in papers which have been prepared by British Military advisers there are indications of a desire that some new Commonwealth organization should be created to plan and direct 'Imperial defence'. (This is a phrase that we should like to see dropped from the current vocabulary as it leads to unnecessary misunderstandings and irritations and has little value in relation to the strategic realities of to-day). Canadian responsibility for the defence of Canadian territory, together with our responsibility for defending in collaboration with the United States the approaches to the Northern part of this Continent, is, of course, a very important aspect of the defence of the British Commonwealth quite apart from our proven war potential in the event of general war. Canadian public opinion, however, in defence questions is not based on the conception of defending Imperial interests as such, a conception which carries with it the ideal of the acceptance of a share of responsibility for defence in areas as remote from Canada as the Persian Gulf and the Bay of Bengal. We are, of course, deeply concerned that the security and strength of the whole British Commonwealth should be maintained but we cannot conceive this as being effectively safeguarded by exclusive Commonwealth arrangements. The strategic interests of the Commonwealth are so diverse that their protection requires the co-ordination of defence before [sic] individual Commonwealth countries and foreign states. This is obvious in the case of the United Kingdom when one considers British defence interests in Western Europe. In some quarters in London there is difficulty in realizing that it is also obvious elsewhere.

3. With respect to questions of trade, we have no information that these matters will be brought up during the discussions between the Prime Ministers in London, nor would it seem appropriate that this should occur in view of the carefully prepared programme leading up to the general Conference on International Trade due late this year or early in 1947. You already know that the date now set for preliminary Commonwealth talks in the United Kingdom is about the middle of July, in preparation for the Conference of the drafting Countries now expected about September 1st.

4. While there is nothing in this telegram of which you are not already aware, it may be useful to you as a guide in dealing with enquiries concerning the consultations between Prime Ministers and related matters.

715.

CH/Vol. 2118

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

DESPATCH A.281

London, April 8, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to report on a few current aspects of Commonwealth relations in view of the forthcoming meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers.

2. In various telegrams to you on this subject I have described the considerable interest which has been taken in the proposed meeting, both in press and Parliament, and the confident expectation that matters of defence and trade would be the primary matters for consideration. I reported to you also that, as was expected, Mr. Attlee's announcement that it was impossible to arrange a single series of meetings was met with some expression of disappointment, particularly by the Opposition in Parliament. There has, however, been no recrimination on this subject, or attempt to blame one or other member of the Commonwealth. It is perhaps not surprising that interest in the forthcoming meetings has somewhat declined since this announcement, and there has been less tendency to count upon it as a major factor in the formulation of general post-war policy.

3. In your telegram No. 695 of 23rd March you analysed the reasons for the emphasis in the United Kingdom on the importance of these consultations. While I should agree with your analysis of the motives for the current interest in matters of Commonwealth defence, I think it is necessary to bear in mind, as I pointed out in my telegram No. 846†, that those in charge of policy in the present Government have not shown any disposition to encourage the belief that the Commonwealth Prime Ministers would, or should, formulate tightly-knit plans for "Imperial defence". There are many Empire-minded elements in the Labour Party, but partly through prejudice, partly through lack of interest, partly through anti-imperialist habits of thought, and partly because of internationalist idealism, the Labour Party do not think in terms of an Imperial orientation of policy as readily as do the Conservatives. Even those elements which have been showing great interest in an Imperial economic bloc do so largely because they conceive of it as a Socialist bloc opposed to the "reactionary capitalism" of the United States. In matters of defence, economics, and general political direction, they are as much interested in close association with the Social Democratic countries of Western Europe as with the other Commonwealth countries. The Labour Party are, as you point out, anxious to make it clear that they are effective guardians of Imperial interest. They have been under heavy pressure from the Opposition to hold an "Imperial Conference" at which the Commonwealth association could be placed on a firmer basis in many spheres. They would probably not oppose mutually agreeable plans for close co-ordination of Commonwealth defences and a general tidying-up of the alliance for the gratification of the British people, but this is not the sort of project which is apt to preoccupy their minds. It should not be forgotten, also, that Mr. Bevin, Mr. Attlee, Mr. Noel-Baker, and most of their colleagues belonged to the school of thought which placed its faith in international rather than Imperial institutions, and that these spokesmen are still looking forward to world federation rather than Imperial federation.

4. On the other hand there is a revived interest among the general public on this subject. The reasons for this revival are not hard to estimate. This country is conscious of its material weakness as compared with the other two Great Powers. One of these Powers, the Soviet Union, is proving hostile. While it is widely recognized here that the security of the British Empire depends upon friendly collaboration with the United States, there is—as the British reaction to Mr. Churchill's speech proved—great reticence about an association with the United States which might in fact mean a surrender of initiative to the stronger partner. The British want to stand on their own feet. One should not overlook the resurgent nationalism which is characteristic of this country in its post-war mood. It is a peculiarly internationalist or non-isolationist form of nationalism which is quite as strong among young Socialists as among young Tories. It is recognised that British strength must rest in the leadership of like-thinking peoples—on the “alliance potential”. Britain, it is thought, cannot, for varying reasons, be allied too closely with the U.S.S.R. or the U.S.A. Everyone wishes a close association with France, but France is in a parlous state and may even swing into the Soviet camp. All except the extreme Left want a close association with the Western European democracies, but no one seems to know just how this can be achieved. It is inevitable that in this mood attention should be turned to the most reliable allies, the other nations of the Commonwealth.

5. I should not wish to underestimate the economic factors in the present concern with the Empire and Commonwealth, although I do not propose to dwell on this aspect in this despatch. The acute problems faced by this country are responsible not only for the attention being paid to the resources of the Empire, but are also responsible for a good deal of the aversion to close association with the United States. If the Soviet Union is the potential antagonist in the sphere of defence, it is the United States which is the potential antagonist in the sphere of economics. In this connection it might be noted that the Canadian loan—which has been received with even more warmth than could have been expected—has helped considerably to remind people in this country that the wealthiest partner in the Commonwealth could not take part in those beguiling schemes for an Empire economic bloc which have fascinated sections of both the Labour and Conservative parties. Although it is widely assumed in the press that Imperial preference will be one subject of discussion at the forthcoming meeting of Prime Ministers, I believe that the United Kingdom Government shares the Canadian view that this subject should be left for the conference of experts being arranged for that specific purpose. If Field Marshal Smuts, Mr. Chifley, or Mr. Nash wish to take advantage of their stay in London to talk about economic matters with appropriate persons, that is, of course, another matter.

6. The following are, briefly, the principal suggestions for Imperial defence co-ordination which have appeared recently:

1. Use of facilities in less exposed parts of the Empire for training and establishing reserves. The lessons of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan are naturally not forgotten.

2. Sharing with the Dominions a wider responsibility for the upkeep of bases and protection of communications.

3. Closer association with the Dominions in defence planning. It is variously suggested that the Committee of Imperial Defence should be reconstituted on a truly imperial basis or that Dominions representatives should in some way be associated with it or with some new defence planning organisation, for which there are many suggestions.

4. Collaboration of a technical nature along the lines of the "Commonwealth Scientific Centre" mentioned in your despatch No. 400 of March 4th.†

7. It is perhaps natural that the talk now, as compared with that of several years ago, is more of trade and defence than of a common foreign policy. The argument over a common foreign policy has, I think, been settled. Those who tended to feel that the failure to agree on the desirability of a common policy was the responsibility of Canada cannot fail to be impressed by the fact that the most marked evidence of dissidence has come from Australia. Whatever Mr. Curtin once professed has been forgotten in the impression of what Dr. Evatt now proclaims. There is increasing realization here, I think, of the dangers for this country of a "common foreign policy", especially in the Foreign Office, where the idea that United Kingdom policy towards Indonesia, for example, might have to be adjusted to conform with the views of the Australian Government, is admittedly obnoxious. I understand that Dr. Evatt recently demanded that the British Ambassador in Madrid make violent protest against the execution of certain Spanish "democrats". The Foreign Office was aware of the fact that the particular cases mentioned by Dr. Evatt were the inventions of Left-wing propaganda. They were not disposed to have their Ambassador make a fool of himself by objecting to mythical executions. It is incidents of this kind which are leading to a greater appreciation, I think, of the more responsible attitude adopted by the Canadian Government as for example in the United Nations.

8. What I think can be accepted as an authoritative statement of the Government's views on the proposals for an Imperial Council once associated with Mr. Curtin's name may be found in the remarks of the Lord Chancellor in a debate in the House of Lords on 23rd January. The Lord Chancellor had been pressed to say something about co-operation with the Dominions.

He said:

My advice would be to go rather carefully before altering the existing machine. May I remind Your Lordships of what a very wise Empire statesman said, speaking in this building not very long ago.

Lord Jowitt then went on to quote those sections of your address at Westminster in 1944 in which you praised the present methods of consultation and warned against losing the substance by changing the form. These words of yours were referred to again in the House of Lords at a later date by Lord Tweedsmuir in a discussion on Commonwealth relations.

9. It might be noted at this point that one of the subjects which has been mentioned several times in recent parliamentary discussions on Commonwealth affairs is the position and status of the High Commissioners. In the debate in the Lords on the machinery of government on the 23rd January, to which I referred above, Lord Templewood made a strong plea for strengthening the position of the High Commissioners in the Dominions and enhancing their general status. He expressed the present opinion that the post of High Commissioner in Canada was not unequal to the post of Ambassador in Washington. The High Commissioners, Lord Templewood said, should have at their disposal a much more comprehensive machinery. They should not be considered as principally trade posts, for they were the posts of "our most important Ambassadors in the whole of the world". If these officers were strengthened, the United Kingdom could depend much more than hitherto had been the case upon the man on the spot. Looking to future developments in the British Commonwealth, Lord Templewood thought that the more that that took place, the better it would be for everybody concerned. In reply, the Lord Chancellor agreed with Lord Templewood that the High Commissioner fulfilled a most important function to-day. If that function could be stressed or underlined by any alteration in status he would be very glad to do it. Lord Jowitt referred to the fact that he had raised this question at the Imperial Conference in 1931, but at that time the matter was dropped at the request of the Dominion Prime Ministers. So far as the Government was concerned they would be very glad to look into the matter at any time, because they fully realized that these High Commissioners were playing, and had played, a most important part in the happy relationship which fortunately existed to-day between this country and the Dominions.

10. This question was again raised by Lord Tweedsmuir in a subsequent debate in the Lords on 27th February, in which he complained that while Britain had six representatives in Canada Norway had seventeen. He wished to add his voice to those voices that had been raised so often in the past to urge a raising of the status of High Commissioner to something approximating to that of an Ambassador. Lord Tweedsmuir's point was unfortunately misinterpreted by Lord Bennett, who did not like the idea of exchanging Ambassadors within the Commonwealth. I note that according to a Canadian press report in The Montreal Gazette of February 28th, a rather too literal interpretation of Lord Tweedsmuir's recommendation was said to have been commented upon adversely by "official circles" in Ottawa. Lord Tweedsmuir was personally concerned at this misinterpretation, and called upon a member of my staff to explain that by suggesting that the status of High Commissioner be raised to equal that of an Ambassador, he had not suggested that High Commissioners should in future be called Ambassadors.

11. The departure of Mr. Malcolm MacDonald, and the appointment of Sir Alexander Clutterbuck, as well as the appointment of Mr. E. J. Williams as High Commissioner in Australia, have been responsible for some comment on the position of High Commissioner. The long vacancy in the High Commissioner's office in Canberra was the subject of very critical comment in many quarters. Considerable anxiety was also expressed about the appointment to so important a post as Ottawa of a relatively unknown career civil servant. The Manchester Guardian protested openly about the latter appointment. The criticism of Sir Alexander Clutterbuck's appointment is, I think, unfair, but it does provide interesting evidence of the increasing recognition of the importance of the High Commissioner's post.

12. Some reference might appropriately be made to a new interest in the British Commonwealth on the part of younger elements in this country, and impatience of the outlook characteristic of the Royal Empire Society. A good deal of the inspiration for this interest comes from young men who have been associated with forces from other parts of the Commonwealth during the war, and are genuinely interested in the maintenance of closer relations, on a basis of mutual friendship and understanding. The statement on Commonwealth affairs in the House of Lords on 27th February by Lord Tweedsmuir is characteristic of the attitude of these younger men in that the emphasis was almost entirely on the increase of personal relations and wider understanding of each other's habits and ways of life. Their chief concern is not with Commonwealth machinery but with what they consider to be a deplorable lack of knowledge about the Commonwealth in this country. They have a tendency to assume that there is no such ignorance in other parts of the Commonwealth, although Mr. Alastair Buchan, in a recent article in The Spectator deplored the lack of interest on the part of the citizens of any one country of the Commonwealth in other parts of the Commonwealth except the United Kingdom. One subject in which these younger men are much interested is the prospect of wider interest on the part of the Dominions in the Colonies. This interest arises not from a desire to shift the burden—because people of this school of thought have a strong sense of mission with regard to dependent peoples—but rather from a sincere belief that the full development of these dependent peoples is a task beyond the capacities of the depleted resources and population of this country. Some recent endeavours have been made to create an organisation out of those who feel that the Empire has been the special hobby of the wrong people. While there is no lack of good intentions on the part of these people, I fear that this good cause will need a little more precision of thought on the part of some of its principal exponents.

13. In reporting to you in the past on British plans for India and Burma I have expressed some concern over confusing interpretations of "dominion status". While I do not think there has been any reasonable doubt of the intentions of the United Kingdom Government to allow India, and in due time Burma, to choose any international status they wish, official and non-official statements made this purpose seem cloudy and encouraged the belief that dominion status was not only a lesser form of independence but implied automatic association in plans for imperial defence or commerce. This situation has been greatly clarified by Mr. Attlee's wise and sensible statement in the House of Commons on March 15th to the effect that India might elect to remain in or out of the British Commonwealth, but if she elected to stay in it must be of her own free will because the British Commonwealth was not bound together by chains of external compulsion. What was perhaps even more impressive than Mr. Attlee's statement was the complete acceptance of the entire implication of that statement in all parts of the House. Indeed, the attitude of Conservative spokesmen has been the subject of many tributes in the Liberal and Left-wing press. The wisest part of Mr. Attlee's statement was that he did not talk about "dominion status"—a phrase which must be singularly unattractive to Indians—but about association with the Commonwealth and Empire. Whether India remains associated with the Commonwealth or not, her relations with the United Kingdom will be governed by a treaty. Although in this her position might resemble that of the one-time Dominion of Ireland, it is very unlike that of the classical dominions. These latter have themselves been evolving since the time when their position was defined as that of dominion status, although their association with the Commonwealth is none the less close. The old conception of the Empire as consisting of the Mother Country plus from four to six "dominions", India, and the Colonies, may be expected to give way to a conception of the Empire and Commonwealth as a congeries of associated British states, no two of which are in quite the same relation to the United Kingdom or each other.

14. There is one important feature of the current talk of Empire which should not be forgotten. Colonel Blimp is dead. (In Low's cartoons he regularly appears now crying "Gadski Tovarich" at Molotov's elbow). The war has not surprisingly brought about a much wider comprehension on the part of the people of this country of the status and stature of other parts of the Commonwealth. Old conceptions may linger in such conservative strongholds as the War Office, the Admiralty, the Royal Empire Society, and the Trades' Union Congress, but the implications of the Statute of Westminster are unquestioningly accepted in quarters which matter. Those men, like Anthony Eden, R. A. Butler, and Sir Arthur Salter, who are urging closer integration of defence completely understand the constitutional position of the other parts of the Commonwealth and are sensitive of their views. It is because they are conscious of the relative strength of Canada and Australia and the relative weakness of this country that persons of both major parties are saying that the time has come when the other self-governing parts of the Commonwealth must share the responsibility for Imperial defence. It may be argued, from the Canadian point of view, that these proposals would in fact mean subordination to a control and strategy which would inevitably have a London perspective, but it should be recognised that the proposers quite sincerely think that this would not necessarily be the case.

15. In meeting this view it is desirable, I think, to make it clear to the other Commonwealth Governments and their peoples that Canada is not refusing to co-operate in the defence of the Commonwealth, but is prepared to assume increased responsibility for an important sector of it. The proposed agenda for the Prime Ministers' meetings and Lord Addison's statement in the Lords that there were problems of defence of a regional character in which Dominion co-operation was essential suggest the line which the United Kingdom may be expected to take on the subject of defence collaboration. Many people here readily admit that the Empire cannot defend itself or keep its lines of communication open without foreign assistance. They point out, however, that their world-wide system of bases has got to be maintained, abandoned, or left in the inadequate state of Singapore in 1941. They admit that the Canadian and Australian Governments have no responsibility for policy towards these areas, but ask whether the Canadian Government consider it to be in the interests of Canada that these bases should change hands. This argument might be met on Canada's part by an offer to assume wider responsibility for the upkeep and garrisoning of Newfoundland, Bermuda and the West Indies. In view of the permanent establishment in the Western Atlantic islands of United States bases, their further guarantee by Canada should involve little additional provision. It might well be considered a legitimate co-operative enterprise for defence of the continent to be planned by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. (The major problem would, of course, be the divorce of military from civil responsibility. In Jamaica, for example, civil disturbances are not infrequent, and the use of Canadian troops to maintain order could not be wise when the Canadian Government would have no political responsibility). What is, of course, a much more important contribution to "Imperial defence" is the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force to protect the North Atlantic shipping route which is unquestionably the lifeline of Empire. During the past war the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth carried on for over two years without the Mediterranean route, but it is doubtful if they could have lasted a few months with the North Atlantic closed. For those who do not consider the defence of Empire communications a legitimate preoccupation of Canada, it may, of course, be argued that the protection of the North Atlantic is now recognized as a vital American interest. The development in Canada of facilities for producing in time of emergency food and armaments and for transporting these vital necessities to the United Kingdom is no mean contribution to "Imperial defence".

16. The view expressed in your telegram No. 695 that the strategic interests of the Commonwealth are so diverse that their protection requires the co-ordination of defence between individual Commonwealth countries and foreign states, can be made to seem a refusal on the part of Canada to share responsibility for the defence of the Empire, or it can be made to appear a serious contribution to the strategy of the Empire. I realize that there are elements of the population of Canada who would prefer that it seem to be the former. But presented in a positive rather than a negative fashion, it could not only remove the widespread suspicion in other Commonwealth countries of Canadian motives, but also help to wean others away from less sound theories of "Imperial defence". It is a point of view which, as I suggested in my telegram No. 876 of March 28th,† might well be supported by the present leaders of this country.

17. In conclusion, it can be safely said, I think, that Canada is in a very good position now to withstand criticism on the score of her attitude to the Commonwealth because her prestige is higher than it has ever been. The belief is very strong that both in her loan and her food policy Canada has shown a sympathetic understanding of the needs of the United Kingdom in particular and the suffering world in general—an understanding which is everywhere contrasted with what is believed to be the more selfish attitude of the United States. Because of these tangible evidences of brotherly love, Canada is forgiven for her alleged reluctance in the field of "Imperial defence". The proposed withdrawal of Canadian occupation forces from Germany has attracted little, if any, critical comment in the press—although it was not well received in official circles. It should be remembered also that the public in this country is much more conscious of the Canadian contribution to the war in Europe and the defence of Britain than of the views of the Canadian Government on "Imperial defence". Typical of this attitude is the comment of the Diplomatic Correspondent of The Scotsman, who, after describing what he says is your reluctance to come to join the other Prime Ministers in London because you did not wish to commit Canada to general agreements on the main questions likely to come up for discussion, concludes:

On the other hand, no Dominion has exceeded Canada in the generosity of economic help given to Great Britain . . . . In the circumstances the British Government could scarcely do less than accept the special position of Canada in regard to inter-Empire [sic] discussions.

(The Diplomatic Correspondent is being given some further and more accurate information concerning your London visit.)

18. I am enclosing the following supplementary documents:†

1. Copy of an article entitled "Issues for Empire Statesmen" by Anthony Eden, in The Yorkshire Post for March 9th (before the announcement of the form of the Prime Ministers' meetings).

2. Text of a question and answer in the House of Commons on 13th March in which Mr. Attlee described the present system of Commonwealth consultation.

19. Copies of this despatch have been sent to Dublin, Cape Town, Canberra, Wellington, Paris, Brussels, Moscow, Athens, Chungking, The Hague, Oslo, and Berlin.

I have etc.

VINCENT MASSEY

716.

DEA/65-G

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 148

Ottawa, April 18, 1946

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins:

1. I have been hoping that it would have been possible before this to have had a definite date fixed for my visit to London which it was thought could immediately precede the Conference of Paris. I shall have to combine, in one absence from Canada, my participation in the Prime Ministers' talks in London and my attendance at the Paris Conference. The delay in issuing invitations for that Conference will make it, I should think, very difficult to bring the two together before the end of May or the beginning of June. Assuming the Conference will not be delayed beyond June 1, I am tentatively planning to leave on the Queen Mary on May 12th which would bring me to London about May 18th. This timetable will preclude my being in England while Chifley is there, but it will, I hope, enable him to spend a day with me in Ottawa after he has concluded his conversations in London.

2. I have not felt it necessary to offer any comment on the suggestions of topics which might be discussed during the series of Prime Ministers' meetings, but I have been glad to note the consensus of opinion that no formal agenda is required or appropriate. I have been proceeding on the assumption that the meetings in London will provide a useful opportunity for an informal exchange of views on the main questions of mutual concern to our several Governments, but that the proceedings will not go beyond this. This latter is important as with Parliament in session here I am anxious to avoid bringing with me to London and Paris any larger number of officials than may be absolutely necessary. Ends.

717.

PCO/U-10-11

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 155

Ottawa, April 23, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET AND PERSONAL. Your telegram No. 76 of April 21st.† Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Thank you for your message. I fully appreciate your desire to have the Prime Ministers or their representatives in London together. We had all hoped that the exigencies of our various time-tables would have permitted such a meeting but after examining the position very carefully we had, I thought, agreed reluctantly that a meeting of Prime Ministers could not be arranged this year. In its stead we have had to be content with a series of conversations which may to some extent overlap.

Since the receipt of your last message I have once more asked myself whether I could so postpone or rearrange my commitments here as to be in London by the time you suggest. I am afraid however that it is quite impossible for me to do so. The Dominion-Provincial Conference, which is opening at the end of this week, is of critical importance for Canada, and the shape of the Budget that we shall have to bring down in the first weeks of May will be determined in large part by the outcome of that Conference. Discussion of Budget issues will be closely linked with the Parliamentary disposition of the United Kingdom loan Agreement and I feel that I should be here until they are satisfactorily settled. I should be very glad to be in London early in May, but I am afraid that, in the last analysis, I must take the responsibility for deciding whether or not I can be absent from Canada at that time.

As you know, I have been hoping to combine in one absence from Canada conversations with you and attendance at the Paris Conference. In view of the present uncertainty as to when that Conference will meet, I think it might be wise to defer finalizing plans for my visit to London. Perhaps after the Council of Foreign Ministers have met and discussed their problems and have agreed on a date on which the Paris Conference should meet, we could arrange a mutually convenient date for our meeting, which might conceivably follow instead of preceding the Paris Conference.

With regard to paragraph 2 of your telegram regarding the meeting of the Foreign Ministers in Paris, I realize that the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers will attempt to come to broad agreement on some of the outstanding questions before the Conference begins. As I shall not be able to be in London at that time, I should appreciate being kept fully informed as to developments at the preliminary meeting.

As to the course of events at the Paris Conference, it is my understanding and I have so informed Parliament, that all states invited to the Conference will have full opportunity to examine the draft treaties on their merits and to express their views and to put forward suggestions for amendments. In this way we would hope that the final treaties would reflect a real consensus of view of the countries participating. This procedure makes it all the more important that the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers should agree to give full weight in drafting the final text of the treaties to the views expressed by the other states represented in the Conference. If these countries' views were to be ignored, it might make it difficult for the governments concerned to secure the support of their parliaments and peoples for the final peace treaties.

In any event, there does not at this stage appear to be any alternative to the procedure already agreed between the Big Three at Potsdam. Certainly I know you will agree that it would not be possible or indeed desirable to lay down in advance a Commonwealth policy which the United Kingdom Foreign Secretary could advance at the meeting of the Council in Paris prior to the general Conference at which the countries of the Commonwealth will be separately represented. You will recall that a somewhat similar procedure was suggested at the time of the first meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London in September last, and that the procedure proposed did not work out very well. I see only new opportunities for misunderstandings if an attempt is made to revive this procedure now. Ends.

718.

CH/Vol. 2118

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 998

London, April 24, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: Machtig showed me today the Prime Minister's telegram of yesterday concerning his visit to London. He expressed great concern over the absence of Mr. King from the latter part of the consultations as now planned, and said Attlee, Bevin and Addison were all very anxious for Canadian representation. He had not had time to secure Attlee's views on Mr. King's telegram but he thought that he would welcome temporary Canadian representation by another Minister or even a senior official until the Prime Minister could come.

I said that I thought no temporary substitute could be sent to London at this stage, adding that the consultations had been arranged in a confusing and inconsistent manner and that the Prime Minister was sticking to the original understanding for a meeting before the Paris Conference.

I gather that their major but not sole concern here is over the effect on public opinion of a meeting attended by Smuts, Chifley, Nash and Evatt, with no Canadian present. Smuts advanced his departure for London because of the convocation of the Council of Foreign Ministers. It is mainly their own fault that things have gone this way, but nevertheless it is causing considerable embarrassment.

Two points made to me have substance. First the Council of Foreign Ministers may be protracted, lasting even as long as six weeks and we may not know until its close when, or even whether, there will be a Paris Conference. Secondly, in spite of the assurances given us by London and Washington, the Big Four are now unlikely to consent to any departure at the Paris Conference from the main decisions of the Foreign Ministers on the Peace Treaties. The deterioration of the general situation means that these decisions will be reached only after prolonged bargaining. The real Peace Conference may therefore be the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the countries invited later to Paris may only have a choice between signing and not signing the Peace Treaties. The present, therefore, may be the time to exert influence on the results. Ends.

719.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 324

Mémorandum du cabinet du Premier ministre<sup>1</sup>Memorandum by Office of the Prime Minister<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa,] April 25, 1946

NOTE ON PROPOSALS FOR A MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS
OF THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH, LONDON, 1946

A. GENERAL ARRANGEMENTS AND TIMING.

1. The earliest notice of the proposed meeting is in a memorandum from Mr. Wrong dated December 19, 1945.

The intention then was that a meeting of Prime Ministers might be held in conjunction with the proposed Commonwealth discussions on commercial questions. The probable time suggested was the latter part of March (1946).

Mr. Wrong noted the unlikelihood of all the Commonwealth Prime Ministers being able to be in London at that time.

2. Official intimation of the proposed meeting came in a telegram from Mr. Attlee on February 4, 1946 (No. 26)†.

Mr. Attlee thought the time had come when it would be of "great advantage" to arrange a meeting. He appreciated the difficulty of Mr. King being absent for any length of time from Canada, but added that in any event Mr. King might think it desirable to represent Canada at the meeting in Paris of the Peace Conference, which, in accordance with the Moscow Agreement, was due to be arranged for May.

Mr. Attlee's suggestion therefore was that they should try to arrange a meeting in London a week or ten days before the time fixed for the opening of the Paris Conference.

This message was sent also to Mr. Chifley and Field Marshall Smuts. Mr. Fraser was at the moment in London.

3. Mr. King's reply of February 10 (No. 26)† welcomed the suggestion that a meeting might be arranged in London in May, and expressed Mr. King's intention to arrange Parliamentary business so that he could attend both the London meeting and the Paris Conference.

4. Mr. Chifley's reply (of Feb. 8, repeated to Ottawa as No. 2)† said a visit to London would only be possible immediately after Easter when Commonwealth Parliament would be in recess. He did not intend to go to the Paris Conference; Dr. Evatt would be Commonwealth Representative at this latter meeting.

5. Field Marshal Smuts' reply (of Feb. 9, repeated from London as No. 377)† welcomed the proposed meeting before the Paris Conference.

<sup>1</sup> De J. A. Gibson. Des paragraphes furent ajoutés à ce mémorandum après le 25 avril.

<sup>1</sup> By J. A. Gibson. Paragraphs were added to this memorandum after April 25.

6. Mr. Attlee sent a further message (Feb. 13, No. 33)† suggesting April 29 for opening date, and that an attempt should be made to ensure the Peace Conference opening about ten days thereafter.

He also sent a draft of a statement intended to be made in Parliament in London on Feb. 18.†

7. Mr. King's message of Feb. 15 (No. 32)† stated that arrangements already made for the resumption of the Dominion-Provincial Conference in Ottawa on April 25 would prevent his being in London on April 29. He feared he could not change these plans to involve an absence from Canada earlier than the middle of May.

8. On receiving this message, Mr. Attlee postponed his proposed statement pending further consideration of dates. (Feb. 16, No. 36)†

9. In a further message (Feb. 20, No. 38)† Mr. Attlee asked if to meet Mr. Chifley's commitments to leave London not later than May 5, Mr. King could re-arrange his timetable to make April 29, or at any rate, May 1, possible.

10. Mr. King's reply (Feb. 21, No. 34)† pointed out that matters to be considered by the Dominion-Provincial Conference were "of first importance" to the federal as well as the nine provincial governments concerned; also that the the Budget could not be presented to Parliament until the results of the Conference were known.

Mr. King asked if it might not be arranged to have the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers held immediately after the Paris Conference.

11. Mr. Chifley next suggested (Feb. 23, repeated to Ottawa as No. 3)† a meeting in two stages, one as soon as possible after Easter, the second series of consultations at a later date.

12. To this Mr. Attlee agreed as the best that could be achieved: i.e., a preliminary meeting with Mr. Chifley and any other Prime Minister who could attend, shortly after Easter, and a subsequent meeting either before or after the Paris Conference as might prove convenient. (Feb. 25, Circ. D.154)†

13. Field Marshal Smuts telegraphed it would be practically impossible for him to attend before April 29, but he did not wish this to delay an earlier meeting of other Prime Ministers. (Mar. 5 repeated to Ottawa as No. 3)† (Note: in the event, he reached London on April 28).

14. On March 5 Mr. Attlee informed Mr. Chifley (Circ. D.197)† that the United Kingdom govt. would be ready to begin meetings with him on April 23.

15. Mr. Fraser informed Mr. Attlee on March 7 (repeated to Ottawa as No. 5)† that Mr. Nash expected to be available in London at the same time as Mr. Chifley.

16. Mr. Attlee again proposed a public announcement (March 11, Circ. D.214, D.215)† explaining that the first meetings would be with Mr. Chifley and Mr. Nash, with the Prime Ministers of Canada and South Africa joining in discussions as soon thereafter as they were free to do so.

17. Mr. King, commenting on this draft announcement expressed doubt whether the gathering could be called a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, and suggested that it be definitely stated that it had not been possible to arrange a meeting at which all Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth could be present simultaneously.

Mr. King added that he felt the idea of associating the time of the meeting with the Paris Conference should be adhered to. Unless this were done, it would necessitate either a long wait in London, or two separate visits to Europe which it would be most difficult to arrange. (March 11, No. 67) †

18. In a telegram of March 12 (repeated to Ottawa as No. 4) † F. M. Smuts used almost identical language.

Mr. Attlee thereupon postponed his announcement. (March 12, Circ. D.233) †

19. Mr. Chifley concurred in the altered form of announcement (March 13, repeated to Ottawa as No. 6) †, and so also did Mr. Fraser (March 13, repeated to Ottawa as No. 7) †

The announcement, in agreed terms, was therefore made in the House of Commons at Westminster on the afternoon of March 18.

20. There is no further reference to a time of arrival in London of the Prime Minister of Canada until April 11. Mr. Attlee's telegram of that date (Circ. D.348) † refers to a third week of the Conference, "when we hope Mr. Mackenzie King will have arrived". (On the time-table specified for the first and second week, the third week would begin on May 7). (See also Mr. Massey's tel. of April 12, No. 937) †

21. In a telegram to Mr. Attlee on April 18 (No. 148) Mr. King mentioned that he would have to combine in one absence from Canada his participation in the talks in London and his attendance at the Paris Conference. Assuming that the latter would not be delayed beyond the beginning of June, he had made travel arrangements which would bring him to London about May 18. (This would preclude Mr. King's being in London while Mr. Chifley was there, but Mr. King hoped he might see Mr. Chifley in Ottawa on the latter's return journey from London to Australia.)

22. Mr. Attlee's reply (April 21, No. 76) † suggested there could be no clearer idea of the date of the Paris Conference until after the Foreign Ministers had met in Paris (April 25). He added:

We should be very unhappy if the contingency of postponement of the Paris Peace Conference resulted in your missing personal contact with us, Field Marshal Smuts, and the representatives of Mr. Chifley and Mr. Fraser . . . . . It would be a great disappointment to us and to public opinion in this country if it were found impractical to hold some meetings . . . with all the Prime Ministers or their representatives present.

Mr. Attlee appealed for Mr. King's arrival by May 6 at the latest if at all possible.

23. Mr. King sent a reply on April 23 (No. 155),† indicating that after consideration with his colleagues whether he could postpone or rearrange commitments to make possible arrival in London by May 6, all were agreed it would be quite impossible for him to do so.

Mr. King also detailed the questions necessitating his being in Ottawa for some days (e.g. the Budget, United Kingdom Loan legislation). He thought it might be advisable to defer making final the plans for his visit to London; but once a date had been fixed for the Paris Conference, it ought to be possible to find a mutually convenient date for a meeting in London, which might perhaps follow instead of precede the Paris Conference.

J. A. G[IBSON]

24. In a message dated April 26† Mr. Attlee stated that the situation respecting meetings in London had been changed (a) by the fact that F. M. Smuts would be in London at the same time as Mr. Chifley and Mr. Nash, and (b) by the decision to hold a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in Paris. He added:

The result is that we must, we feel, discuss with the three countries who are represented here a number of questions* which are really of very direct interest to Canada. We can postpone these until the week beginning May 6th but hardly longer, as it looks as if it would be necessary to bring the present consultations to a close at the end of that week.

*questions referred to included: atomic energy general policy towards Germany
"clearly inappropriate" to discuss without Canada being present

Mr. Attlee thought it would be "very unfortunate" if the present discussions were to close in the middle of May without a Canadian representative having taken part; and he hoped Mr. King would be able to send someone to represent Canada at any rate in the discussions beginning May 6. (no difficulty about conferring with Mr. King after the Paris conference, but this would not meet difficulty of week of May 6).

25. Mr. King told Mr. Attlee, in a message dated May 1†, that the Cabinet, after consideration, had decided that no one of the Ministers who might take Mr. King's place could be spared. All things considered, Mr. King felt best course was to proceed on his original plan to leave (on May 12 (13) without waiting for date of Paris Conference to be fixed.

Mr. King added that he was glad to know that some of the Commonwealth representatives were likely still to be in London during the latter part of May, and he looked forward to joining in exchange of views with them on questions of mutual concern. If other questions emerged on which a preliminary indication of the Canadian point of view might be helpful, he hoped Mr. Attlee would feel free to continue to raise them through the usual channels.

26. In a communication of May 7† Mr. Attlee stated it was intended to adjourn the first series of talks on May 8, and to resume them after Mr. King's arrival (May 20 suggested).

At the same time, "papers" covering discussions thus far on Council of Foreign Ministers, Paris
 Peace Treaties with Italy and satellite states
 Ruhr and Western Frontier of Germany
 Atomic Energy

had been forwarded for Mr. King's information.

27. Mr. Attlee added that on certain questions, particularly those relating to defence, he would like to have the opportunity of separate discussions with Mr. King.

28. Mr. King's reply to Mr. Attlee's message of May 7 (dated May 10 and communicated through Earncliffe) stated that the records of proceedings so far received indicated a purpose and method of procedure completely different from anything he had been led to expect. Reviewing earlier exchanges of messages, Mr. King recalled that the agreed announcement of March 18 had specified that the proposal for a meeting of Prime Ministers (as such) had been abandoned, and instead arrangements had then been made to hold "a series of consultations".

Mr. King felt that the printed papers carried with them "in form and substance all the responsibilities that would fall on the shoulders of a Prime Minister at an Imperial Conference." (This would ordinarily involve an agreed agenda circulated in advance for study and discussion at home, plus ministerial representation in addition to Prime Minister, together with expert advisers).

Mr. King said frankly he was not in any position to assume an obligation of this kind on behalf of Canada. He had assured Parliament (as he noticed F. M. Smuts had assured the South African Parliament before leaving the Union) that he expected the discussions to be informal, exploratory, and confined to major matters of mutual interest, in which the representatives would be free to speak their minds without verbatim records being kept and without reports being given out to the press from day to day. He (Mr. King) would greatly hesitate to participate in proceedings of a more formal character.

Further, he had felt it necessary to let Parliament know, before his departure, exactly the extent to which he might be expected to speak for Canada on any matters which might, to appearances or in reality, commit Canada to any so-called Commonwealth policy either on defence, trade preferences, [or] international treaty obligations, May 9, 1946 Hansard, pp. 1392-1393. He thought it desirable to be equally explicit about the position he would have to maintain in any consultations in which he might be expected to participate.

720.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 324

Mémorandum du cabinet du Premier ministre<sup>1</sup>Memorandum by Office of the Prime Minister<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa,] April 26, 1946

NOTE ON PROPOSALS FOR A MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS
OF THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH, LONDON, 1946

B. 2. COORDINATION OF COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE

(a) reported by High Commissioner, London, as a "principal subject" figuring in press reports following Attlee announcement (Mar. 4, Tel. 621) †

(b) subject had been mentioned in White Paper on Defence (Feb. 21, CMD 6743). One extract from Section viii reads:

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom acknowledging to the full the tremendous efforts put forward in the common cause by the whole Commonwealth and Empire, earnestly desire to continue in peace the full partnership established in war. It will be necessary to consider with the governments of His Majesty's Dominions and India the way in which the lessons of the war can be applied to promote consultation and collaboration in defence matters during peace.

(c) The Political Correspondent of the Sunday Times (London) on March 3 wrote that he understood ... particular attention is being given to devising an improvised (sic) system of consultation and co-ordination for defence. . . . (One method under consideration is) the establishment of an Organization, comparable with the Military Staffs Committee of the United Nations, with appropriate functions in relation to Imperial defence.

(d) Other press reports spoke of a co-ordinated plan for Imperial defence said to have been drawn up by Field Marshal Alanbrooke as a result of his recent tour (through the Mediterranean, India, Australia and New Zealand, but not to Canada, which he last visited in September 1944.)

(e) On this question (as on the related question of Commonwealth trade), Mr. Massey suggested that the public, on the basis of press speculation, might be "led into great expectations" of the Prime Ministers' meetings, and said it would be useful to have any guidance the Department might offer in case the subject attracted still more attention.

(f) The Department's reply is in Tel. 695 of March 23. It expresses concern over the possibility that the character and importance of the consultations in prospect for London were being over-emphasized in the United Kingdom.

It assumed this might be due to three main causes

i. profound anxiety over Soviet policy inevitable uncertainty about continued firmness of U.S. policy both producing desire to play up strength of

<sup>1</sup> De J. A. Gibson. Des paragraphes furent ajoutés à ce mémorandum après le 26 avril.

<sup>1</sup> By J. A. Gibson. Paragraphs were added to this memorandum after April 26.

Commonwealth as a whole and lay stress on capacity of Commonwealth governments to take concerted action

ii. Labour government anxious to give no ground for charges it was not an effective guardian of Imperial interests

iii. waning faith in capacity of United Nations Organization to be an effective guardian of peace and security had given rise to renewed interest in the military power of the Commonwealth.

(g) On question of Commonwealth defence, it was recalled that no general proposals for post-war co-operation had been made since Lord Cranborne's suggestion at end of Prime Ministers' meetings in London in June, 1944;

some plans had been put forward for co-operation in particular tasks (cf. defence research);

official language of U.K. Ministers and in documents which Dept. had seen indicated some desire to see created an organization to plan and direct "Imperial Defence" (suggested that phrase should be dropped from current vocabulary because of unnecessary misunderstanding and irritation, and because it had little value in relation to strategic realities today);

(h) Summary of other reactions contained in Department's reply:

quite apart from proven war capacity in event of general war, Canadian responsibility for defence of Canadian territory (together with responsibility for defending in collaboration with U.S. the approaches to northern part of this continent) was a very important aspect of the defence of the British Commonwealth;

Canadian opinion does not think in terms of defending Imperial interests as such (i.e. sharing responsibility for defending areas remote from Canada)

Canada was deeply concerned that security and strength of whole British Commonwealth should be maintained, but could not conceive this as being effectively safeguarded by exclusive Commonwealth arrangements;

The strategical interests of the Commonwealth were so diverse that their protection required the co-ordination of defence between individual Commonwealth countries and foreign states.

Note: Following an enquiry from the Acting High Commissioner in South Africa, a memorandum containing the substance of this reply was, on direction, communicated to Field Marshall Smuts for his personal information. (April 12, No. 46) †

(j) [sic] Suggested by Mr. Attlee (March 27, Circular D. 285) † defence questions affecting particularly U.K. Australia and New Zealand, especially U.S. request for bases in Pacific Islands defence co-operation in forms suitable for the different circumstances of the various members of the Commonwealth

On this latter question, Mr. Massey reported (March 29, Telegram 846) † that although the U.K. Government were under pressure from many sides

“to urge on other Commonwealth countries a tightly-knit system of Commonwealth defence”, Government spokesmen had “consistently fought shy on giving this conception positive support.”

(Attention was called to a debate in the House of Lords on March 28, in which close integration of defence planning for the Commonwealth had been urged. In reply, Lord Addison had said:

“... There are regional groups of problems in the consideration of which everyone is willing to co-operate. But it is very different from having a group of high-powered, superior persons at the top, who might be tempted to give orders to those nations. That would not work . . .”

(k) Field Marshall Smuts told Acting High Commissioner for Canada at Capetown (April 10, Telegram 33)† he thought U.K. sources might, in interval between his own and Mr. King’s arrival in London, try to influence him to modify his attitude so that when Mr. King arrived there would be a lack of uniformity between South African and Canadian ideas on Commonwealth defence.

He asked for a memorandum setting out points mentioned in paragraphs f, g, h, above. This was, on authorization from Ottawa, done.

(1) Attention was called (in Mr. Massey’s telegram No. 1026 of April 27)†, to a Times article on “Next Phase of Empire Defence”—reporting a purported plan which included

· dispersal of military and industrial resources throughout the Commonwealth; and redistribution of manpower for new planning and directive organizations

When Mr. Massey enquired at the Dominions Office as to the credence to be attached to this report, it was stated to be “unfortunate”; there was in fact no question of a prepared plan being put forward as a formal submission to Commonwealth Ministers. It would be open to Mr. King when he arrived to say whether he wished to discuss the particular subjects under reference.

(m) The subject of Commonwealth Defence does NOT figure in the provisional timetable circulated by Mr. Attlee (on May 10) for the meetings from May 20 through May 24.

3. COMMONWEALTH TRADE AND THE FUTURE OF EMPIRE PREFERENCE

(a) reported by High Commissioner, London, as a “principal subject” figuring in press reports following Attlee announcement (March 4, Telegram 621).†

(b) High Commissioner, London, was informed on March 23 (telegram No. 695) that Department had no information that these matters were to be brought up in London.

Such a course did not seem appropriate in view of carefully prepared program leading up to general conference on international trade. (late 1946 or early 1947). Preliminary Commonwealth talks in preparation for conference of drafting countries were scheduled for mid-July.

(c) Field Marshal Smuts suggested (April 3, H.C.L. telegram 882)† an exchange of views on trade barriers and Imperial preference

Mr. Attlee's comment (April 6, Circ. D. 326)† was that discussion of economic subjects at London meetings had not been contemplated because of later meetings on commercial policy.

(d) New Zealand Government stated (April 8, repeated to Ottawa as No. 12)† that they would welcome "a general exchange of views on trade barriers and Imperial preference."

(e) During the first series of talks ending on May 8, both F. M. Smuts and Mr. Nash had suggested it would be "useful" to have "a general talk about commercial policy and imperial preference". Mr. Attlee had explained that it was suggested that the technical issues involved should be the subject of expert meetings a little later; but it was the general feeling that a brief discussion of principles on the ministerial level would be helpful.

(f) In his message to Mr. Attlee of May 10, Mr. King mentioned that he did not expect any general discussion on commercial policy or imperial preference to be of much value without the presence of the Canadian Minister of Finance.

(g) In the timetable circulated on May 10, commercial policy questions are put down for Thursday, May 23, at 3:45 p.m.

4. PEACE TREATIES (see also Section 6)†

(a) Suggested by Mr. Attlee for third week of talks (April 11, Circ., D. 348)†

(for 1st week, see Sec. 1)

(for 2nd week, see Secs. 6, 8)†

(b) referred to again by Mr. Attlee in following extract (April 21, No. 76)†

... the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers in Paris may be impelled to reach what may in effect be conclusions, to which we shall be committed, about some of the major issues to be settled at the Paris Peace Conference, and this renders it particularly desirable that we should be in the closest touch with you here while the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers is still going on. . .

(this latter meeting began on April 25)

(c) Mr. King's reply to this point was as follows: (April 23, No. 155)<sup>1</sup>

(d) Commenting on this situation, Mr. Wrong telegraphed the Under-Secretary on April 24, (No. 998). Of representations made to him by Dominions Office, he remarked:

... in spite of the assurances given us by London and Washington, the Big Four are now unlikely to consent to any departure at the Paris Conference from the main decisions of the Foreign Ministers on the peace treaties. The deterioration of the general situation means that these decisions will be reached only after prolonged bargaining. The real Peace Conference may, therefore, be the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the countries invited later to Paris may only have a choice between signing and not signing the peace treaties. The present, therefore, may be the time to exert influence on the results.

<sup>1</sup> Voir les deux derniers paragraphes du document 717.

<sup>1</sup> See last two paragraphs of Document 717.

(e) Comment by Mr. Attlee in his message on April 26† (gray).

. . . there is of course no idea on our part that the Foreign Secretary should advance a "Commonwealth Policy". What we have in mind is that it is of the greatest value to the Foreign Secretary in putting forward United Kingdom views, to know how far these are in harmony with the general views of the other members of the Commonwealth. So far as we are concerned we fully agree with the view which you /Mr. King/ have expressed (in telegram No. 155 of April 23) that each country concerned must have a full opportunity at the Paris Conference of expressing its views, but we cannot disregard the probable line that other countries will take at the Council of Foreign Ministers.

(f) The subject was proposed for discussion also in Mr. Attlee's message of May 7 as the proceedings of the Council of Foreign Ministers at Paris, and the question of the peace treaties with Italy and satellite states.

(g) The subject appears, as described above, in the timetable circulated on May 10, with the addition of treaties with Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, for discussion on Monday, May 20, at 3:45 p.m.

721.

PCO/U-10-11

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1035

London, April 29, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. My telegram 1026, April 27th.† Conversations with Prime Ministers.

From informal conversations we gather that Dominions Office are concerned about question of keeping Canadian Government informed on matters discussed with other Commonwealth Ministers. They had not planned to send us the papers presented at the first series of discussions because it was assumed that all this ground could be covered during the meetings at which you would be present.

2. As the Dominions Office Staff which normally prepares reports for other Commonwealth Governments is so busily engaged on current conversations, it has not been possible for them to do special summaries for the Canadian Government.

3. This morning Holmes was shown the papers and minutes of the meetings to date and allowed to go through them at the Cabinet offices. His attention was particularly directed to the papers on defence with the suggestion that he might see for himself how they differed from the impression given by The Times. (My telegram No. 1026). He will be able to see the papers regularly, and I shall endeavour to keep you posted on the basis of this and other information. Hudd is also in frequent conversations with Machtig.

722.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 406

Le Premier ministre au haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne
Prime Minister to Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, May 10, 1946

My dear Mr. Holmes,

I would be grateful if you would send to Mr. Attlee the following message in reply to his message, contained in your letter to me of the 7th of May: †

As you are aware, I am most anxious to be as helpful and co-operative as possible in all matters which are of general concern to the governments of the countries of the British Commonwealth and, I might add, in particular, to your government and our own.

Your message of May 7th and the record of the proceedings which have so far taken place and which I have just seen for the first time, represent, however, a conception of the purpose and method of procedure so different from what I have been led to understand were the purpose and nature of the consultations to be had in London that I feel I should let you know at once how completely they differ from anything I have either understood or anticipated.

You will recall that, commenting on a draft announcement with respect to the proposed gathering of Prime Ministers in London, (my telegram No. 67 of March 11), † I expressed doubt whether the gathering could be called a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, and added that I felt the idea of associating the time of meeting with that of the Paris Peace Conference should be adhered to. I had not seen at the time I sent that message to you the message † which came to you almost simultaneously from Field Marshal Smuts and which was in almost identical language. It was thereupon decided that the proposed announcement respecting a meeting of Prime Ministers should be altered and both Mr. Chifley and Mr. Fraser agreed to the alteration. Thereafter an announcement in agreed terms was made in the House of Commons at Westminster on March 18th.

In this agreed announcement (your telegram Circ. D.234 of March 15) † it was made clear that the proposal for a meeting of Prime Ministers had been abandoned and that instead arrangements had then been made to hold "a series of consultations".

The records of proceedings which I have thus far received make it clear that these proceedings have not been in the nature of consultations, as that word is generally understood, and as I have interpreted it. In reality, they carry with them in form and substance all the responsibilities that would fall upon the shoulders of a Prime Minister at an Imperial Conference. Where an Imperial Conference is held, there is an agreed definite agenda circulated months in advance to permit study and discussion at home with one's own colleagues. At the Conference, certain colleagues as well as the Prime Minister himself, are expected to participate, and to be accompanied by expert advisers.

I must tell you quite frankly that I am not in any position to assume, on behalf of Canada, an obligation of this kind. As I have told you, it will not be possible for me to bring any of my colleagues with me on this occasion, nor can I take away from the administration of the public service the senior officers whose expert advice would be essential if I am to attempt, with others, a serious examination of the major questions mentioned in your message. Specifically, I would not expect any general discussion on defence matters, or on commercial policy or imperial preference to be of very much value without the presence of my Ministers of Defence and of Finance. Nor can I see much to be gained at a meeting of Prime Ministers from even a preliminary discussion of problems of the nationality of married women.

I have assured our Parliament, and I note that Field Marshal Smuts did the same in his Parliament before leaving South Africa, that I expect the discussions to be informal, exploratory and confined to major matters of mutual interest in respect of which it would be helpful for us to know how the Prime Ministers of the several Commonwealth countries were viewing them.

What, in a word, I have assumed would be the manner in which consultations would be carried on, and any results arrived at, and recorded, is something similar to the consultations held at Washington between President Truman, Mr. Byrnes, yourself and myself, at which we were free to speak our minds without verbatim records being kept and without reports being given out to the press from day to day. I am prepared to confer with yourself and other Prime Ministers, or their representatives, in a similar manner, but would greatly hesitate to participate at this time in proceedings of a more formal character.

As I have made very clear in the several messages I have sent to you, I am taking great risks in being absent from Canada at this time while Parliament is still confronted with a heavy legislative programme, and with the situation as it exists through some of the problems which face the Administration.

In my message of May 1st,† I indicated that I was planning to leave from New York on the Queen Mary on May 12 and expected to be in London on the 18th. I now learn that the ship is not sailing until the 14th, so that the estimated time of my arrival in London should be put forward accordingly. You may wish to have this in mind in arranging the time of our first meeting.

You will realize, I am sure, that I am most anxious to avoid adding in any way to your present anxieties. Conditions here, however, have rendered it necessary for me to let Parliament know, before I leave, exactly the extent to which I may be expected to speak for Canada on any matters which may, in appearance or in reality, commit Canada to any so-called Commonwealth policy either on defence, trade preferences, international treaty obligations, or the like. I feel it may avoid, after my arrival in London, embarrassment to all concerned were I, before leaving Canada, to be equally explicit towards yourself and the other Prime Ministers or their representatives as to the position I shall have to maintain in any consultations in which I may be expected to participate.

I need not add how much I am looking forward to seeing you and several of your colleagues again, and of having with you an opportunity to talk in the freest manner possible over some of the many problems with which we are becoming increasingly concerned. Message ends.

Yours sincerely,

W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING]

723.

DEA-FAH

Extrait du procès-verbal d'une réunion des Premiers ministres

Extract from Minutes of a Meeting of Prime Ministers

TOP SECRET

May 21, 1946

SIXTEENTH MEETING

* * *

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that he had been much impressed by Mr. Bevin's clear review. His own views were, in general, completely in accord with those expressed by Mr. Bevin.

He felt strongly that Germany must be maintained as a whole. If any other policy was followed grave problems would be sure to arise in the future. A policy of splitting the country up would be foredoomed to failure. Germany would remain an entity by the strength of her national sentiment. He did not think that the German people as a whole, as distinct from certain groups, would want war, if they had work.

He was in entire agreement as to the importance of getting German industrial production under way as soon as possible. Until that was done we should have continual demands for relief of one kind or another. Once Europe began to supply itself with its own needs and exchange of commodities between Germany and other countries began again, many difficult problems would find a natural solution.

Mr. Mackenzie King expressed his full concurrence with the view that there must be complete reciprocity between the zones; if, for example, the Russians were to have any voice in the affairs of the British zone, the United Kingdom must have an equal say in the affairs of the Russian zone. He said that the choice clearly lay between a world based on good will and one split into two groups, Communist Russia and the rest. A striking illustration of Russian methods had been afforded by the recent unearthing in Canada of underground activities on an unsuspected scale. Individuals in positions of confidence had been involved. Some of them may have been motivated by the highest ideals, although they had failed to realize the true character of the system they were supporting. If an impression should get abroad that the democracies were displaying impatience and lack of understanding in their relations with Russia, they might find among their own people sympathy of surprising magnitude with Russian ideals.

Reference had been made by Dr. Evatt at the previous meeting to the unfortunate fact that important decisions on the post-war settlements had been taken during the war without the participation of Commonwealth Governments and those of other lesser powers. Mr. Mackenzie King was also sorry that that had been necessary, and he thought that the United Kingdom Government shared this view. But he recognised that, at times, decisions had had to be taken in the light of pressing current situations. No doubt if the end of the war could have been foreseen different decisions might have been taken in one or two cases, but, as it was, we were bound by them. He was also very sympathetic with the view of Dr. Evatt that the Peace Conference regarding Italy and the Balkans should not be a mere formality; the participating Governments must have an effective opportunity to express their views. He suggested that British Commonwealth Governments probably attached no less importance to this issue than European countries concerned with the Peace Conference; the latter were so fully occupied with their own immediate problems of reconstruction that he did not think that they expected to be more fully consulted at this stage. In all the circumstances, he was inclined to the view that it would be a mistake to hasten the final settlements. Time was a healing influence. The apparent lack of success of the meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers was no doubt unfortunate. Nonetheless the delay had its advantages. For instance it had made it possible for the Prime Ministers of the British Commonwealth to meet United Kingdom Ministers. They could now speak with knowledge not only of the facts of the situation but also of the way in which Mr. Bevin was dealing with them. Mr. Bevin, for his part, would be aware of their views, and the United Kingdom Government's policy in the settlement would be influenced by the views of Commonwealth Governments.

At the same time, he sympathized with the views expressed by Mr. Nash as to the inconvenience of the indefinite dates for the Conference. It would have been preferable for the British Commonwealth consultations to have been held immediately before or after the Peace Conference or possibly, as sometimes at Geneva in the past during the session of the Conference.

Mr. Mackenzie King was doubtful as to the wisdom of trying to hold a Peace Conference without the prior general agreement of all the four Powers. If the Council of Foreign Ministers could not reach agreement, there was little prospect of agreement emerging from the wider Conference. He was becoming doubtful as to the efficiency of open conferences as a medium of international negotiation in its early stages. The reaction against the methods of the old secret diplomacy had, he thought, gone too far. It was difficult for Governments to recede from positions which had been publicly taken up. There were thus advantages in some degree of secrecy until general lines of agreement were apparent. A happy mean must be found.

Mr. Mackenzie King felt strongly that, if there should be an eventual breakdown of negotiations owing to Russia's attitude, negotiations should be so conducted that it should be manifestly Russia who was in the wrong. He believed that if at every meeting she raised difficulty after difficulty, other nations would become increasingly impatient and that that circumstance, in its turn, might influence Russia's own attitude. Admittedly there was the risk that delay would enable her to consolidate her position in occupied territories. Nevertheless he did not believe in haste. It was at this moment most difficult to distinguish which movements in current affairs were important. With the passage of time this would become clearer. He believed that the balance of advantage lay in caution. The settlement, when reached, would govern the world situation for years to come. If there was no settlement, the future was dark indeed. A policy of consistent, cautious and patient effort might in the end bring success.

724.

DEA-FAH

Extrait du procès-verbal d'une réunion des Premiers ministres

Extract from Minutes of a Meeting of Prime Ministers

TOP SECRET

May 22, 1946

SEVENTEENTH MEETING

. . .

NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

1. The meeting had before them memoranda by the South African Delegation (P.M.M. (46) 28) and by United Kingdom Ministers (P.M.M. (46) 30) on the nationality of married women.

FIELD-MARSHAL SMUTS said that forceful representations had been made to the Union Government to the effect that the nationality of a wife should not be affected without her consent either by the mere fact of marriage or by any change in her husband's nationality. The Union Government were disposed to agree that a British woman should retain her British nationality on marriage to an alien unless she explicitly declared her desire to acquire her husband's nationality; and that, similarly, a British woman should be allowed to retain her British nationality if her husband, having been a British subject at the time of the marriage, subsequently became an alien. The Union Government had, however, wished to ascertain the views of other members of the British Commonwealth on this question. In the memorandum by the United Kingdom Ministers (P.M.M. (46) 30) it had been pointed out that provision had already been made in the laws of the United Kingdom and of the Dominions other than South Africa to give effect to the principle that the naturalisation of the husband during marriage shall not involve a change in the nationality of the wife except with her consent. The nationality laws of these parts of the British Commonwealth also enabled a British woman, on marriage with an alien, to retain her British nationality in all cases where she did not acquire her husband's nationality under the law of his country. British nationality law would, however, be profoundly affected by a new Nationality Bill now under consideration by the Canadian Parliament; and the United Kingdom Government had already suggested to all Dominion Governments that a conference of experts should be held to consider what changes should be made in the nationality laws of the other self-governing parts of the Commonwealth, or what other action should be taken, to preserve the common status of British subjects, in the light of the new approach to the question of British nationality which was made in this Canadian Bill. The United Kingdom Ministers had therefore suggested that this conference of experts should now be invited to study, not only the issues raised by the Canadian Bill, but also the detailed questions which would arise if the principle of equality of the sexes were generally accepted by all countries of the Commonwealth as the basis of their law relating to the nationality of married women.

Field-Marshal Smuts said he recognised that this was a technical subject which called for detailed study by experts; and he supported the suggestion that it should be remitted for detailed investigation by the conference of experts on nationality law which had been proposed by the United Kingdom Government.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that the Canadian Government agreed that such a conference should be held and would be glad to nominate legal experts to take part in it. He also agreed that the questions which Field-Marshal Smuts had raised about the nationality of married women should be included among the subjects to be discussed at the conference. While he agreed with the substance of what was said about the new Canadian Bill in paragraph 10 of the memorandum by United Kingdom Ministers (P.M.M. (46) 30) he asked that, if reference were made to this in any public statement, it should take the following form:

In view of the fact that the Canadian Bill introduces certain new principles in nationality legislation, the United Kingdom Government has suggested the desirability of holding a meeting of legal experts to examine the possible modifications in the general status of British subjects that would result from it and which may make desirable corresponding changes in the legislation of the other countries of the Commonwealth.

LORD ADDISON said he readily accepted the amended version of this statement proposed by Mr. Mackenzie King.

DR. EVATT said that, as stated in paragraph 4 of P.M.M. (46)30, the Australian law already provided that a British woman marrying an alien should retain the rights and obligations of a British subject in Australia, even though she acquired by her marriage the nationality of her husband. The Australian Government desired, however, that such rights conceded by the laws of one part of the British Commonwealth should be recognised in other parts of the Commonwealth; and they therefore favoured discussion of this problem on a Commonwealth basis. They also desired similar discussion of the new situation created by the Canadian Bill—though they were themselves disposed in principle to favour the changes proposed by that Bill. All these matters raised, however, a number of complex legal issues, which required detailed examination by experts; and it would be inexpedient for Governments to express their final views until a conference of experts had been held and its report had been considered.

MR. NASH said that his Government favoured the view that the law relating to the nationality of married women should be based on the principle of equality of the sexes. At the same time they recognised that difficult legal issues were involved and he supported the proposal for the holding of a conference of experts to consider these problems relating to the nationality of married women, and also the wider issues raised by the Canadian Nationality Bill.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that the Canadian Government were anxious to bring their new Nationality Bill into operation on the 1st January, 1947, and on this account they would be glad if the proposed conference of experts could be held at an early date.

Further discussion showed that there was general agreement that the conference of experts should be held in London during the course of the next few weeks.

It was agreed that Lord Addison should discuss with the Lord Chancellor the detailed terms of reference for the proposed conference of experts on British nationality law and should thereafter take steps to convene the conference in London at the earliest date convenient to the representatives of the various Dominions.

SOUTH-WEST AFRICA

2. FIELD-MARSHAL SMUTS said he wished to take this opportunity of discussing with representatives of other parts of the Commonwealth the proposals of the South African Government for the future of South-West Africa.

South-West Africa was now held by the Union of South Africa under a "C"-class Mandate. It was, however, different from other territories in that class in that geographically it was part and parcel of South Africa. Indeed, it was only by historical accident that it did not form part of the Union. In the scramble for Africa, Germany had acquired this barren country in 1886 and built up a colony with immigrants from Germany. These German settlers caused the South African Government considerable trouble during the 1914-18 war.

At the Peace Conference after the last war President Wilson had been sympathetic to the idea that the territory should be annexed by South Africa. A statement had, however, been included in the Fourteen Points which precluded annexations of territory. A way out of this difficulty was found by the creation of the special "C"-class Mandates, which could be administered by the Mandatory Power as integral parts of its territory. South-West Africa had been administered accordingly ever since, but there was a strong feeling in South Africa that it should now be incorporated in the Union. South Africa had been troubled again before this war by a Nazi movement among the settlers in South-West Africa, and it had been necessary to send from the Union a strong police force to keep the peace in the territory.

The white population in South-West Africa, numbering some 31,000, had a local Parliament of their own. It had, however, no jurisdiction over the native population, as the Union had responsibility under the Mandate for native policy. The local Parliament had passed unanimously more than one resolution that the territory should be incorporated in the Union. The Union Government had consulted the native population; this numbered some 350,000, consisting in part of scattered and disintegrated tribes, with very little tribal organisation, but for the most part of more highly organised and virile Bantu tribes. These were governed practically on the principles of indirect rule with their own chiefs and councils. While it had been rather difficult to consult the scattered tribes, consultation with those who had their own council had been easier and it was possible to say that some 80 per cent of the native population had agreed that the territory should be incorporated in the Union.

Field-Marshal Smuts said that in San Francisco he had given notice that he would apply to the United Nations Organisation for their approval of incorporation. He recalled that the objective of the trusteeship system was the development of self-government. It seemed to him that this objective could be reached equally well by making a mandated territory independent and by making it, at its own request, part of a neighbouring independent territory. He proposed to raise the matter, therefore, at the Assembly in September next. He quite appreciated that there might be criticisms of the proposals in the Assembly, because other Powers holding Mandates were accepting trusteeship arrangements. There would be opposition from those who, for one reason or another, were not in sympathy with the policy of the Union Government and from those who objected in principle to the colonial system or imperialism. In these circumstances, the South African Government were anxious for such assurances of support as they could obtain and naturally they turned first to their friends in the Commonwealth. The argument was often put forward in South Africa that she derived status and strength from membership of the immensely powerful association of the Commonwealth. If now she received support from the other members of the Commonwealth, that would be striking evidence of the truth of the argument and would be of very great assistance in promoting the causes they all had at heart.

LORD ADDISON said that the United Kingdom Government had given much thought to this matter. They recognised the great force of the considerations to which Field-Marshal Smuts had referred and they were clear that geographically South-West Africa would naturally be associated with the Union.

Indeed Walvis Bay, its port, was already part of the Union. On the other hand, they were alive to the difficulties which were likely to arise in discussion of this matter at the United Nations Assembly. The chief concern of the United Kingdom Government had been whether incorporation would be supported by the inhabitants of the territory. They had concluded that, on the understanding that it was so supported, they would themselves give the South African Government their support. It seemed clear that the white population was heartily in support of incorporation. As to the natives, they understand that a section of the Herreros did not favour it but that a very large majority of the remainder were in favour.

Lord Addison said that the view of the United Kingdom Government had been reached after full consideration and detailed discussion as to the facts of the situation.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that, if he had been in Field-Marshal Smuts's place, he did not doubt that he would have taken the same view of the matter. He had not had an opportunity of discussing it with his colleagues but he thought that they would share his opinion. He assumed that it would not be advisable to make any declaration of the attitude of the other members of the Commonwealth before the matter was brought before the United Nations Assembly.

FIELD-MARSHAL SMUTS agreed with this. He thought that any prior expression of solidarity by countries of the Commonwealth would be very undesirable.

725.

DEA-FAH

Extrait du procès-verbal d'une réunion des Premiers ministres

Extract from Minutes of a Meeting of Prime Ministers

TOP SECRET

May 22, 1946

EIGHTEENTH MEETING

* * *

UNITED KINGDOM DEFENCE OBLIGATIONS

2. The meeting had before them a memorandum by Lord Addison (P.M.M. (46) 31) summarising the present military and financial commitments of the United Kingdom. The memorandum showed that, in order to carry out the military commitments essential to an effective foreign policy, the United Kingdom would need to maintain in 1947 forces varying between 1,194,000 in strength at the beginning of the year and 1,077,000 at the end. There would be no alternative to the maintenance of lengthy compulsory military service over the next five years. Total military expenditure in the current year was £1,200 million plus additional charges arising from the termination of the war of £576 million which would be largely non-recurrent. Of the figure of £1,200 million some £250 million would be incurred overseas. Particulars were also given of other inescapable overseas expenditure to a total of £195 million to indicate the strain imposed on the United Kingdom's balance of payments.

LORD ADDISON, in recalling the previous discussions on responsibilities for Commonwealth defence, said that United Kingdom Ministers desired to bring to the attention of the Dominions the heavy burden now being borne by the United Kingdom. This short factual statement had therefore been prepared to focus attention on the magnitude of her military and financial obligations.

MR. BEVIN said that in the past the United Kingdom had, to a great degree, assumed the responsibility of the provision of forces to maintain the security of the Commonwealth, and for that matter of much of the rest of the world also. She had been able to bear the cost of this largely out of the income derived from foreign investments. To-day the position had changed. Her income from foreign investments had been very greatly reduced and, in order to earn foreign exchange to make good the loss of revenue from foreign investments, she must increase her exports of manufactured goods. This in its turn involved a most serious strain on her man-power, for it had been estimated that it would entail an increase of approximately 500,000 in the labour force required for the export industries. The supply of civilian goods to the home market must also be severely curtailed for some years to come. There was also the problem of finding funds for the repayment of the American loan—if it was granted—over the next 50 years. Mr. Bevin thought that it would have a disastrous effect in the sphere of foreign affairs if the United Kingdom defaulted on her obligations under the loan.

In these difficult circumstances the question arose in the mind of United Kingdom Ministers whether some relief could not be obtained for part of her defence burden, in respect of both man-power and finance. He did not suggest that there should be contributions to a common pool, nor was he suggesting any modification of the present freedom of action of the different members of the Commonwealth. But there might perhaps be some redistribution of responsibilities so that each member assumed special obligations in respect of that part of the world in which it was chiefly interested. We could not afford to return to the position of 1939 when the United Kingdom had had forces of only 500,000 and there had been no really co-ordinated plan of action in a common war effort. Having regard to the very great difficulty of maintaining the British position in foreign affairs, it would be a great reassurance to him if he knew that each member of the Commonwealth had a certain force ready which at the direction of the responsible Government could in an emergency be speedily mobilised and concentrated to take the strain in a particular area.

Referring to the measures necessary to maintain the strength of the armed forces in the United Kingdom, Mr. Bevin pointed out that for the first time in her history she would have to resort to compulsory military service in peacetime. The adolescent life of the country would be gravely affected by this measure, at a time when it was the universal desire to improve the standard of life and of education.

The Dominions could assist the United Kingdom in meeting her heavy obligations by direct or indirect means, and an overall review of the Commonwealth defence obligations seemed desirable, so that the burden could be apportioned in an equitable manner.

DR. DALTON emphasised the magnitude of the financial commitments of the United Kingdom. Sterling balances to a very large total were held by many countries, both within the Empire and outside it. India's holdings accounted for approximately half the total; Egypt's holdings were also very large. As indicated in the memorandum military expenditure during the financial year 1946-47 would amount to £1,776 million, of which £1,200 million was recurrent. There were also other heavy commitments in overseas expenditure, such as the United Kingdom contribution to U.N.R.R.A., the expenditure in foreign exchange for Germany, expenditure in Greece and for Polish refugees, the relief and rehabilitation in Far Eastern colonies which had been overrun by the Japanese, and expenditure falling on the British Exchequer for peacetime developments in the Colonies.

MR. ATTLEE made four points. First he wished to take this opportunity of acknowledging the very generous financial assistance already provided by the Dominions and especially by Canada. Secondly, he pointed out that, with the development of the United Nations Organisation, the United Kingdom would be called upon to make a contribution to the military forces to be put at the disposal of that Organisation. This would place an added burden upon this country, which would have to be met. Thirdly, he emphasised the magnitude of the military tasks in Europe which were the responsibility of British forces; those would continue for some time. Lastly, the United Kingdom was faced with the provision of forces for the protection of world-wide lines of communication; while in the past the Royal Navy had been able to carry out this task, air and ground forces were now also necessary. With the development of weapons, the quality and number of men required had increased, involving a greater strain than ever before on our resources of both man-power and finance. The future, therefore, gave cause for grave concern.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that he had read the memorandum with great attention. He would have liked to be able to make a positive contribution to the discussion but, as he had warned United Kingdom Ministers before he came, it would be quite impossible for him to discuss in any detail questions of defence or finance. His Ministers for Defence and Finance were not with him. He would be happy to make sure that the memorandum was made known to his colleagues and carefully studied by them. The matter was indeed one which required careful study and he was not in a position to make any commitment at the present time. There were many considerations to be taken into account. Canada's own obligations were already very much greater than they had been before the war and the United Kingdom was not alone in having liabilities for the objects specified in the paper. It had also to be remembered that any contribution made to the military forces at the disposal of the United Nations Organisation must affect the decision on the extent of the Canadian contribution in the field of specific Commonwealth obligation. He added that the United States had vast resources. Had not the time come to ask them to assume greater security responsibilities in Europe?

DR. EVATT said that he found the memorandum a most impressive document. The figures it contained were to him most significant and he could quite understand the great anxiety which Mr. Attlee and his colleagues had on account of them. As in the case of the United Kingdom and Canada, Australia's expenditure on defence was already greatly increased, but Mr. Chifley had indicated at their earlier discussions that, in future, Australia must accept a permanent obligation greater than any that she had had before the war. It was worth taking out an insurance in peace-time against finding ourselves in the future as embarrassed as we had been in 1939. It had been the general view at the previous discussion that the problem could not be solved by the old method of a direct contribution by Dominion Governments to the cost of the United Kingdom services. Such a contribution to the Royal Navy had been suggested before the war. But this would be out of harmony with the temper of opinion in the Dominions. It seemed to him that each Dominion should rather assume obligations to provide forces under its own control for the defence of its territory and region. This was, in effect, a pooling of reserves. That was, indeed, the way that matters were developing in the Pacific. He added that greater decentralisation of control necessitated improved methods of military liaison. That matter had been discussed at an earlier meeting and he regarded it as very important. It was virtually true to say that there had been no Commonwealth plan for defence in 1939. We had had to improvise and in the result very effective arrangements had been worked out. He thought it would be most unfortunate if the foundations of this organisation were not kept in being. For instance, the Air Training Scheme had been a very important factor leading to victory. He would like a framework to be retained, which could be quickly revived if need be.

Dr. Evatt thought it worth mentioning that it had seemed to him more difficult in this war than in the previous war for officers from Dominion forces to rise to the most senior commands in the Empire, as General Monash had done. This might be due only to a difference in personal qualifications but it might also indicate some deficiency in the machinery for co-ordination of effort.

He noticed in the United Kingdom memorandum a reference to the fulfilment of commitments in the Netherlands East Indies. He hoped that British soldiers would not be kept there to maintain the Dutch position against the Indonesians. Quite apart from considerations of finance, he thought that politically this would be most unfortunate.

Finally, Dr. Evatt said that he would show this impressive document to Mr. Chifley who would study it most sympathetically with the desire to help in every way possible. Whatever could be done to lighten the burden on the United Kingdom should be done.

MR. NASH said that on the figures given it looked as though members of the Commonwealth other than the United Kingdom should bear some part of the cost at present being borne by her. But there were other factors which must also be taken into account and, as others had said, the subject required study. Dominion Governments, too, had their overseas expenditure: for instance, on the army of occupation in Japan and on contributions to U.N.R.R.A.

He suggested that it would be very useful if figures could be got out to show what was the cost in money and man-power of the defence of the whole Commonwealth. On that basis it would be possible to consider how the cost should be divided. Even if each Dominion were made responsible for the defence of its own region—and New Zealand would be willing to take their share in the Pacific—this would still leave the United Kingdom responsible for the lines of communication.

Mr. Nash feared that New Zealand's contribution could not in any event be large, compared to the very large figures of the United Kingdom. Her own expenditure for defence purposes had been in the neighbourhood of £1,000,000 before the war. It was this year of the order of £30,000,000.

FIELD-MARSHAL SMUTS said that he found the memorandum a very alarming document. At the end of the last war there was much talk of disarmament. We no longer thought disarmament possible, but it was melancholy to think that the responsibilities set out in this paper were the fruits of victory—and only the first fruits; what the future held in store no one could tell.

The members of the British Commonwealth had undertaken undefined obligations to the United Nations Organisation, but they had at least as great an obligation to the British group of nations as they had to the United Nations. If they were prepared to support the former, how much more should they be prepared to support their own group? Everything depended on maintaining strong and intact the influence of this group. In this dangerous world it was one of the great buttresses of world order. If it went, what would remain?

Field-Marshal Smuts said that he could not see what decisions could be taken at the moment in the light of this memorandum. They must take home the facts given in it and study them. Those facts would be a great shock to the people of the Dominions if they became known and would, he feared, lead to a greater sense of frustration than already existed. One thing, however, appeared to him quite clear—that the burden on one member of the group was well nigh intolerable. It was unfair to look to the British Isles, after the sacrifices made during the war, to continue to pay for the peace at the rate now indicated. The Dominions had been very proud of the record of the United Kingdom as well as of their own war efforts, but they had not perhaps thought of the burdens she bore. These matters had not been brought out, but they must now be considered very carefully.

Field-Marshal Smuts said that there were many difficulties with which Dominion statesmen had to reckon. For instance, any help given could not be in the form of "tribute." The United Kingdom would not expect that. There was in the Dominions a strong sense of nationalism. But there was also a strong national self-respect; they would realise a duty to carry part of this burden.

Field-Marshal Smuts said that the objective of every member of the Commonwealth must be the support of our group of nations as a great Power. The United Kingdom alone was no longer a great Power; it could not be so in the nature of things. Its power was now spread over the whole group and we must all adjust our view-points to this new situation. But it would require a great deal of education before people throughout the Empire would realise this fundamental change in the balance of power. Certainly the public in the Dominions, and he thought also the public in the United Kingdom, were not educated on these matters.

MR. MACKENZIE KING hoped that it would not be misunderstood if he took a somewhat reserved attitude on a paper of this importance. The question whether it would not be best to have a Commonwealth defence policy with allocation of specific liabilities was a recurrent one. Suggestions on this subject had been made as early as the Imperial Conference of 1923 and again in 1926. There had been strong Dominion opposition to the proposals, for while there were military and financial advantages in such a system, there were also political considerations which no Dominion Minister could afford to overlook. The best plan in the world was of no value if the people would not accept it.

Mr. Mackenzie King said that, in his view, the surest way to win the support of the Dominions was to trust them to accept the obligations which they believed to be natural and right. The experience of the war had proved the wisdom of this course. If there had been a highly centralised policy there might have been a very different response from the Dominions. But if every liberty was at stake, they could be trusted to respond wholeheartedly to the call.

Mr. Mackenzie King believed in the closest co-ordination and closest understanding which could be achieved, but he was not in favour of reversing the tendencies of the last 20 years.

DR. EVATT felt that none of the views expressed had been in any way inconsistent with the principles stated by Mr. Mackenzie King. He did not disagree with anything that the Prime Minister of Canada had said. There was, he thought, general agreement that there could not be a rigid plan, based on centralised methods.

DR. DALTON said that he much appreciated the response of Dominion representatives to the statement of the United Kingdom Government's obligations. He shared the view of Field-Marshal Smuts that, when the public knew the facts of the heavy burden that remained as an aftermath of the war on the Commonwealth as a whole, they would be shocked by them. It would, he said, be of great assistance if figures comparable to those of the paper under discussion could be made available in respect of each Dominion. Not only would these be of great interest for comparisons within the Commonwealth, but they would also give the outside world an adequate picture of the position.

MR. ATTLEE agreed that this would be very useful.

FIELD-MARSHAL SMUTS also agreed that such figures would be useful. He was not for a tighter organisation but he had a profound belief in the importance of educating public opinion, and he could vouch from his own reaction to the United Kingdom figures now circulated that the facts were little known.

LORD ADDISON said that there was unanimous support among British Commonwealth Governments for the political principles enunciated by Mr. Mackenzie King. These were of the first importance. There was much slipshod thought on the subject of Commonwealth relations and it was not generally realised that the Commonwealth was an association of independent States living and working according to common ideals. As Field-Marshal Smuts said, it was important that public opinion should be educated on these matters.

726.

DEA-FAH

Extrait du procès-verbal d'une réunion des Premiers ministres

Extract from Minutes of a Meeting of Prime Ministers

TOP SECRET

May 23, 1946

NINETEENTH MEETING

* * *

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONSULTATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

2. LORD ADDISON said that he would like to discover from Dominion Ministers whether they had any suggestions to make to improve the present arrangements for consultation between Commonwealth Governments. The arrangements in practice were founded on the resolutions of the Imperial Conferences of 1926 and 1930. The Conference of 1930 had summarised the main points of the system of communication and consultation in relation to foreign affairs as follows:

(1) Any of His Majesty's Governments conducting negotiations should inform the other Governments of His Majesty in case they should be interested and give them the opportunity of expressing their views if they think that their interests may be affected.

(2) Any of His Majesty's Governments on receiving such information should, if it desires to express any views, do so with reasonable promptitude.

(3) None of His Majesty's Governments can take any steps which might involve the other Governments of His Majesty in any active obligations without their definite assent.

In commenting on (1), the Conference had said:

The application of this is not confined to treaty negotiations. It cannot be doubted that the fullest possible interchange of information between His Majesty's Governments in relation to all aspects of foreign affairs is of the greatest value to all the Governments concerned.

Lord Addison said that a very large number of telegrams and despatches were now sent by the United Kingdom Government to Dominion Governments to keep them informed of developments in world affairs. In many cases the messages were confined to factual information. Others also gave the views or comments of the United Kingdom Government. In such cases the United Kingdom Government proceeded on the assumption that, if a Dominion Government wished to offer any comments of its own, it would not hesitate to do so. When no comment was made by a Government, they assumed that it did not wish to express any views on the subject.

Lord Addison said that in his opinion the system worked very well. But he would welcome their comments or suggestions for improvement of it.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that he thought that the system worked excellently. The Dominions Office kept Dominion Governments very fully informed, and the arrangements had worked with remarkable efficiency both during and since the war. The Canadian Government agreed with the statement of principles mentioned by Lord Addison. When, on receipt of information from another Commonwealth Government, they offered no comment, neither acceptance nor rejection of the points made in the communication was implied by the absence of comment. In such a case the position was merely that the Canadian Government had been informed. He suggested that it was necessary carefully to distinguish the two processes, first, of informing and, secondly, of consulting other Governments. Consultation placed an immediate responsibility on the Government consulted. But he observed that, in the case of messages addressed by the United Kingdom Government to all four Dominion Governments, it was not the invariable practice of the Canadian Government to send a reply even when comments were invited, since it often was apparent that the subject was of concern to others of the Dominion Governments addressed rather than to the Canadian Government.

Mr. Mackenzie King considered that the system of exchange of communications between Governments, supplemented by the contacts maintained by High Commissioners, was now of great efficiency. He had been a strong advocate of the method of consultation by written messages. This enabled the Minister concerned in each country to discuss the subject with his Government colleagues. Under the present system, therefore, there was, in effect, a continuous conference of the Cabinets of the Commonwealth capable of dealing with all questions by Governmental decisions. As he had explained, he hesitated to express opinions at Commonwealth meetings such as the present, because he could not consult his colleagues. It was, moreover, valuable to have the written record of the views expressed on each side which resulted from an exchange of messages. By this means, also, all British Commonwealth Governments could be kept informed; for where the subject of a communication was of interest to more than one Commonwealth Government, the Canadian Government usually communicated their reply to all the Governments concerned.

DR. EVATT doubted whether the summary of points made by the 1930 Imperial Conference now entirely covered the ground. He gave as an instance the development of Dominion responsibilities in international affairs. Far Eastern affairs were of vital concern to Australia, and the Australian Government wished to have immediate information of developments. As regards the general arrangements for consultation, during the war there had been occasions when under the stress of circumstances, decisions of great importance to Dominion Governments had been taken without any consultation with them, but that was not the case now. As to the principles, he considered that the proposed communiqué to be issued after the meeting summed up the position well. The alternative to the present system would be the establishment of some centralised machinery, but such a step might impose a strain on inter-governmental relations. It would lead to a very difficult situation if relations between British Commonwealth Governments became a matter of party politics in any country of the Commonwealth and he hoped that this situation would not arise. He thought that Lord Addison and his Department were to be complimented on their work; Dominion Governments were, he was sure, most grateful to them.

MR. NASH said that he endorsed the views expressed by Mr. Mackenzie King. He considered that the system worked very well in general, but he would like to make four points. First, he suggested that sometimes information might be supplied to Dominion Governments earlier. Secondly, he thought that there could usefully be an extension of the practice of repetition to other Commonwealth Governments of the messages addressed by one Dominion Government to another or to the United Kingdom Government. Thirdly, there might be scope for Dominion Governments on their side to improve their own arrangements for consultation with other Commonwealth Governments, and he referred to the negotiation of the Australia-New Zealand Agreement of 1944 as a case in point. In such cases Dominion Governments should, he suggested, see that other members of the Commonwealth were informed of the progress of events. Finally, he suggested that Dominion Governments might supply to the United Kingdom Government information received from their representatives in foreign capitals.

MR. ATTLEE said that reports of this kind received from Dominion Governments during the war had often been found most useful.

FIELD-MARSHAL SMUTS said that in his view the present system worked admirably. He did not see how it could be improved at present. Indeed Dominion Governments were kept so fully informed by the United Kingdom Government that it was sometimes difficult to absorb the information. He distinguished between the classes of messages. Telegrams imparting information were of great value as a background for Commonwealth co-operation; these did not necessarily call for acknowledgment. Another class required a response from Dominion Governments. The South African Government endeavoured to reply promptly and dealt in complete frankness with the other members of the Commonwealth. In addition to the telegrams exchanged between Governments, each Government was in constant touch with its High Commissioner, who supplied valuable supplementary information. This representation should, he suggested, be extended between all the Governments of the Commonwealth. When they all had High Commissioners in the capitals of the other members of the Commonwealth, then he thought that the present machinery for consultation could not be further improved.

Field-Marshal Smuts said that it was recognised that, during the war, certain decisions had had to be treated with special secrecy. Certainly, since the end of the war, the fullest information had been supplied in a most efficient manner, and he expressed his gratitude to Lord Addison and the Dominions Office.

He thought that few people realised how constant and close was the contact at present maintained between Commonwealth Governments and he suggested that it would be very useful if Mr. Attlee or Lord Addison could make a public statement on the subject, possibly in connection with the discussion at that meeting.

MR. ATTLEE and LORD ADDISON said that they would certainly consider this suggestion.

: * *

727.

CH/Vol. 2118

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1221

London, May 24, 1946

SECRET. Meeting of Prime Ministers. Following from Robertson. Begins: As you will have noted there has been next to nothing in the press about current meetings of Prime Ministers until the release last night of the final communiqué.

It was suggested by Attlee that in view of highly confidential nature of discussions when Bevin was present, only a brief statement be issued to the effect that such a discussion had taken place. Bevin indicated that he did not want a statement which suggested that agreed decisions had been reached on policy, because this made it difficult for him to explain to the other Foreign Ministers that he was speaking only for the United Kingdom. The Prime Minister said that from the Canadian point of view it was equally desirable that the nature of consultation be made clear. He explained the embarrassment he had been caused by the misrepresentation of the nature of the meetings in the British press. Attlee expressed agreement. He said that they found it very difficult to control these speculations in the press. He and Addison emphasised their disagreement with those who constantly put forward schemes for imperial organisation.

The press has not been very happy about the paucity of information. Francis Williams reports that he had persuaded The Times not to publish an editorial comparing unfavourably the information given to the press at the Council of Foreign Ministers in Paris with the complete silence when the heads of democratic countries meet in London.

728.

PCO/U-10-11

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1228

London, May 25, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following from Robertson, Begins: Prime Ministers' meetings.

At concluding meeting, Lord Addison raised question of arrangements for consultation among Commonwealth Governments. He thought existing system worked well, but would welcome comments or suggestions for improvement.

2. Recalling resolutions of Conference of 1930 regarding expressions of views, he said that of very large number of telegrams now sent from London to the four Governments, many were confined to factual information. Others also gave views or comments of United Kingdom Government. Latter provided on assumption that if a Dominion Government wished to offer any comments of its own, it would not hesitate to do so. In absence of comment, United Kingdom Government assumed the Dominion did not wish to express any views on the subject.

3. Prime Minister said Canadian Government agreed with principles mentioned by Addison. The arrangements made by Dominions Office had worked with remarkable efficiency during and since the war. Absence of comment on receipt of information from another Commonwealth Government implied neither acceptance nor rejection. Position merely was that Canadian Government had been informed.

4. Prime Minister suggested necessity of distinguishing two processes (a) informing, (b) consulting, other Governments. Consultation placed an immediate responsibility but it was not invariable practice to send a reply even when comments were invited, especially where it was apparent subject was of concern to Governments other than Canada.

5. Prime Minister also stressed usefulness of written communications as enabling Minister concerned in each country to discuss subjects with his Cabinet colleagues. In effect, there was at present a continuous conference of Cabinets of the Commonwealth capable of giving Governmental decisions. This explained his hesitation to express opinions at present meetings because he could not consult his colleagues. Exchange of messages (which were frequently repeated to all Governments concerned) were useful as a continuous record.

6. Evatt cited occasions during war when decisions of great importance to Dominion Governments had been taken without any consultation, though this was not the case now. Alternative to present system would be establishment of some centralized machinery, which might impose strain on inter-Governmental relations, situation which he hoped would not arise.

7. Nash, endorsing the Prime Minister's views, suggested earlier information, more consistent repetition of telegrams among all Commonwealth Governments and also transmission of information received from Dominion representatives in foreign capitals.

8. Smuts alluded to rounding out of exchanges by High Commissioners as final level of effective consultation. He suggested usefulness of Attlee or Addison making public statement on close and constant character of present arrangements because the public did not seem to understand what an efficient system obtained at present.

9. From our point of view, this discussion was highly satisfactory. Representatives of all Governments, including the United Kingdom, made perfectly clear their satisfaction with present methods and their opposition to the establishment of centralized machinery. This attitude was spelled out in the final communiqué, the text of which you have no doubt seen in the papers.

10. Evatt issued his own private communiqué along the same lines, a somewhat egregious step which should, nevertheless, be of educational value to those who persist in believing that Australia strongly favours an "Empire Council" but that Canada vetoes the project. Evatt has gone out of his way to praise the policy of the Attlee Government on the subject of Commonwealth consultation. His purpose, I think, is largely in order to spike the guns of the Tories whose defence of Australia's right to be consulted over Egypt he did not welcome. On several occasions during the meetings, he has expressed his displeasure at the treatment of Commonwealth consultation as a political issue in the United Kingdom. Ends.

729.

L.B./Vol. 3

*Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

DESPATCH A.439

London, June 3, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to review the meeting of Prime Ministers and other Ministers of the British Commonwealth which took place in London between 23rd April and 23rd May.

2. There were a total of nineteen meetings, which might be divided into three series:

(i) Meetings 1 to 5, from 23rd April to 26th April, attended by the Prime Minister and other United Kingdom Ministers, the Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs of Australia, and the Deputy Prime Minister of New Zealand. The Agenda was as follows:

- (a) Review of foreign policy,
- (b) Regional organisation in the South-West Pacific,
- (c) Strategic position in the British Commonwealth,
- (d) Military bases in the Pacific,
- (e) Egypt,
- (f) Organisation of Commonwealth defence,
- (g) Responsibilities for Commonwealth defence.

(ii) Meetings 6 to 14, from 28th April to 8th May, attended by the Prime Minister and other United Kingdom Ministers, the Prime Minister of Australia (until 11th May), the Minister of External Affairs of Australia, the Deputy Prime Minister of New Zealand, and the Prime Minister of South Africa. The Agenda was as follows:

- (a) Council of Foreign Ministers,
- (b) Disposal of Italian colonies,
- (c) Revision of the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty,
- (d) Trusteeship,
- (e) Palestine,
- (f) Policy towards Germany,
- (g) Disposal of the Polish Armed Forces,
- (h) Military bases in the Pacific,
- (i) Atomic energy,
- (j) Regional organisation in South-West Asia and the South Seas,
- (k) Procedure in the peace settlement,
- (l) India,
- (m) Draft peace treaty with Italy.

(iii) Meetings 15 to 19, from 20th May to 23rd May, attended by the Prime Minister and other United Kingdom Ministers, the Prime Minister of Canada, the Minister of External Affairs of Australia, the Deputy Prime Minister of New Zealand, and the Prime Minister of South Africa. The Agenda was as follows:

- (a) Council of Foreign Ministers, (Draft peace treaties with Italy and the Balkan countries),
- (b) Policy towards Germany,
- (c) Nationality of married women,
- (d) South-West Africa,
- (e) Atomic energy,
- (f) United Kingdom defence obligations,
- (g) Commercial policy,
- (h) Arrangements for consultation between governments.

3. The effort to arrange the meetings ran into numerous obstacles from the first, and the fact that they came off without any serious dislocation of Commonwealth relations, and with at least some advantages in improved understanding is in itself an achievement. This achievement is due, I think, to the atmosphere of mutual goodwill. The time-table went seriously astray at a number of points—primarily because of developments beyond the control of any of the Governments concerned. All the overseas representatives had counted on attending the meetings in Paris to settle the peace treaties with Italy and the satellite states. Mr. Nash had counted as well on attending the Commonwealth talks on commercial policy proposed for June. In view of his double cause for disappointment it is not surprising that his dissatisfaction was expressed somewhat more vigorously than that of the other representatives. It must be admitted, however, that some of the confusion was due to the in-expert handling of the preliminaries by the United Kingdom Government. The absence of a strong hand in the Dominions Office was notable. Some misunderstanding was probably caused also by the anxiety of the United Kingdom Government to represent these meetings as something more in the nature of a formal conference than was in fact the case. On occasions they succumbed to constant pressure from the Opposition which was tending to blame the Government for not producing a full-dress Imperial Conference.

4. It should be noted that the Government at no time sought to blame other Commonwealth Governments for the difficulties over time-table, and made an effort to explain in particular the validity of the reasons which kept the Canadian Prime Minister in Ottawa. On this subject there was little recrimination in the press, in spite of frequent expressions of disappointment. A few papers such as The Economist and The Sunday Times suggested that Mr. King was remaining at Ottawa in order to avoid Commonwealth commitments, but this view was never developed extensively. In some cases it was suggested that the Canadian Prime Minister was showing a quite understandable disinclination to be involved in an "Imperial Conference", and that if he felt this way that was his own concern and not a matter on which he should be criticized. There was, perhaps, insufficient appreciation of the fact that the failure to arrive at mutually agreeable dates was quite as much Mr. Chifley's responsibility as Mr. King's, in that he had an immovable deadline for the conclusion of his visit which was as much a handicap as Mr. King's inability to leave Ottawa before a certain date.

5. In some respects the holding of bi-lateral or tri-lateral conversations has advantages. There are subjects which are of concern only to two or three members of the Commonwealth, in particular matters pertaining to the South-West Pacific, on which progress can be made more rapidly in meetings of the interested parties. Certain difficulties and some misunderstandings did arise during the first series of meetings because of the problem of keeping the representatives of the other Commonwealth countries informed. It was not suggested that during the first series of meetings the High Commissioners from the countries not represented by their Ministers might attend either as participants or observers, although the United Kingdom Government would, I think, have been prepared to accept such a suggestion coming from the countries concerned. The High Commissioner for South Africa was unhappy about the failure to keep him posted at the first series of meetings, and after his intervention with Lord Addison copies of the documents were placed at his disposal. At the conclusion of the first week's meetings the suggestion was made informally by the Dominions Office that a member of my staff might go through the papers and minutes if we so wished. Henceforward Mr. Holmes made regular visits to the Cabinet Offices in order to see the papers and prepare the reports† which were sent to you by telegram. At the same time I kept in touch with the Under-Secretary of State at the Dominions Office concerning general matters of policy.

6. The following were from our point of view the principal subjects discussed. I do not propose to summarise the discussions on these subjects, but only to mention those aspects which concern Commonwealth relations.

(1) COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE

7. Although the subject of Commonwealth defence was not originally emphasized by the United Kingdom Government as one of the principal subjects of discussion, it was a matter which, as I reported to you earlier, occupied a good deal of attention in press speculations. There was, I think, some difference of opinion within the United Kingdom Government on this subject. The Chiefs of Staff were undoubtedly anxious to sound out the Commonwealth representatives on proposals which they had prepared. I have good reason to believe that some of the earlier press speculation on this subject emanated from the War Office. The Dominions Office and Mr. Attlee had a better appreciation of the political aspects of the subject, and sought to play down any suggestion that the Commonwealth representatives were to be presented with a cut and dried scheme for integration of the defence of the Empire. It should be remembered, of course, that although defence was not a subject which the Canadian Government wished to discuss, and which the Prime Minister made plain he was not prepared to discuss, nevertheless other Commonwealth Governments were anxious to cover at least certain aspects of the subject. For this reason most of the discussion on the subject took place during the first and second series of meetings, and the matter was broached only indirectly during the period of Canadian participation. In all, there were five memoranda presented by the United Kingdom on the subject (not including the specialised subject of military bases in the Pacific), and certain specialised papers by Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. The Chiefs of Staff submitted papers on the strategic position of the British Commonwealth and on the responsibility for Commonwealth defence. The Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs submitted a memorandum on the organisation for Commonwealth defence, and in the light of discussions on this paper a subsequent memorandum was presented by the Chiefs of Staff.

8. This is not the place to outline in detail the proposals made. It might be well to note, however, that although the proposals as they stand may not be acceptable to the Canadian Government, they do incorporate certain significant developments which distinguish them from proposals which have been made in the past. In the first place they recognise the fact that no centralised Imperial body for the direction of Commonwealth defence is practicable, and that any arrangements must make it possible for members of the Commonwealth to conclude their own arrangements with foreign countries—in particular with the United States. It is specifically recognised that in any future war the Commonwealth would have to rely on the active assistance of the United States, and that any Commonwealth defence system must therefore include machinery for co-operation with the United States. The memoranda go a long way also toward recognising the fact that Commonwealth defence can be organised only on a regional basis, and that the contribution of the member countries can best be made in their own respective regions. The papers do not recommend an Imperial Planning Staff in London, but simply the exchange of Military Missions between members of the Commonwealth in order that as much co-ordination as possible might be achieved. It is emphasized that the model for this type of co-ordination is the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington, and that there would be no question of the Staff Missions being in a position to commit their Governments. The Chiefs of Staff paper went a great deal further in recommending the dispersal of industries and manpower than the Government in this country is prepared to go. The Australians naturally seized with some delight upon the suggestion that United Kingdom Industry might be transferred to Australia, and it was necessary for Lord Addison to explain that the Chiefs of Staff were speaking for themselves only, and that there were serious economic and political considerations which the Government would have to consider before arriving at any such conclusion. Arrangement for defence liaison was the one subject on which the United Kingdom Prime Minister indicated that he would be glad to reach some kind of agreement with the Commonwealth representatives while they were in London. This none of them was prepared to do. Mr. Nash showed more sympathy than the other representatives. New Zealand and Australia are obviously interested in improving the co-ordination of their defence arrangements with the United Kingdom, although at the moment Australia seems more interested in emphasizing her right to direct imperial defence east of Suez. Field-Marshal Smuts, although probably personally sympathetic, made it clear that he would have to be very hesitant about going so far even as to exchange Service Missions.

9. During the concluding series of discussions a paper was presented outlining the serious position in which the United Kingdom finds itself because of its defence commitments abroad. Overseas obligations of the United Kingdom, even after settlement of immediate post-war expenditures, will be £250,000,000; the total annual military expenditure over £1,000,000,000. Compulsory military service for two years will be necessary, and over a million men will be required in the forces at the end of 1947. This drain on finance and manpower will seriously affect the ability of the country to rehabilitate its economy and develop its overseas trade. It was not suggested that the other countries of the Commonwealth should contribute to a common pool, but it was hoped that they might accept defined regional obligations which would reduce to some extent the obligations of the United Kingdom. The representatives of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa expressed surprise and concern over this situation. They said that they would bring the matter to the attention of their Governments, although they were not in a position to promise any action.

(II) CONSULTATION AND CO-OPERATION.

10. Although the machinery of Commonwealth consultation and co-operation was the subject of considerable interest in the press, only a short time at the concluding meeting was actually devoted to the subject by the Commonwealth Ministers. The reason was the remarkable degree of agreement among the representatives of the Commonwealth. The final communiqué, a copy of which is attached,† made it perfectly clear that members of the Commonwealth consider the flexible methods now practised to be preferable to any centralised machinery which it was believed would not facilitate, but might even hamper, the effective co-operation which is the essential characteristic of the British Commonwealth.

11. It should be emphasized that this expression of opinion did not represent simply the triumph of the Canadian point of view against opposition. The United Kingdom and other Commonwealth representatives made their satisfaction with the present system emphatically evident. Field-Marshal Smuts expressed the hope that something might be done in order to inform the public as to the efficiency of present methods in order to forestall the agitation which is constantly taking place for new machinery. Mr. Attlee and Lord Addison expressed their entire lack of sympathy with those who were constantly wishing to re-organise the Commonwealth. In his own personal communiqué Dr. Evatt underlined his support of the general view, thereby contributing to the education of those who continue to believe that Australia is devoted to the conception of a Commonwealth Council and that only Canada stands in the way of such a development. I am enclosing a copy of Dr. Evatt's communiqué. †

12. The whole question of Commonwealth consultation was, of course, dramatized during the course of the meetings by the controversy in this country as to whether the countries of the Commonwealth had been adequately consulted over the decision to withdraw forces from Egypt. As this controversy was to some extent outside the meetings themselves, I propose to deal with it in a separate despatch. † It might be noted, however, that during the course of the controversy two interesting statements were made by Mr. Attlee and one by Dr. Evatt on the machinery of consultation. In both cases the core of the argument was the view which has always been urged by the Canadian Government: that although one nation of the Commonwealth may inform the others concerning its policy, and listen to their opinions, that nation must have the right to decide for itself on its own responsibility what action it wishes to take. Dr. Evatt went somewhat further and defined various situations in connection with matters which were of direct concern to more than one member of the Commonwealth. A copy of his broadcast † in which this definition occurs is attached, along with a copy of Mr. Attlee's statement. †

13. Of course the argument over machinery dies hard in certain quarters. The perennial advocates, Mr. Lionel Curtis, Mr. H. V. Hodson, who is now editor of the Sunday Times, and Lord Beaverbrook express their disappointment. It is worthy of note, however, that the Labour Government has now committed itself publicly against centralised machinery. What is perhaps more important is that the controversy over the Egyptian issue has strengthened opinion in the Labour Party on this subject. The Daily Herald, which is perhaps representative of the bulk of Labour opinion in that it rarely expressed much interest one way or the other about Commonwealth relations, has taken up the cudgels against centralisation because it conceives of the arguments for better methods of consultation as being simply a "Tory imperialist" ramp to embarrass the Government. This may not be very sound reasoning, but its effect on Government policy would not be unwelcome. On the other hand, it would be unfair to suggest that the Conservative Party as such is going to campaign for new machinery. Mr. Eden accepted Mr. Attlee's definition of the principles of consultation. Whatever some of his back-benchers might say, he and Lord Cranborne, the Conservative leader in the House of Lords, can be counted on to prevent this matter from becoming a Party issue.

(III) FOREIGN POLICY.

14. In paragraph 7 of my despatch No. A.281 of 8th April I expressed the opinion that the argument over a common foreign policy had been settled. The meetings now concluded will, I think, reinforce this opinion. It follows from the views of the United Kingdom Government on consultation that they likewise subscribe to our views on the impracticability of a "common foreign policy".

15. Perhaps the most valuable part of the meetings just concluded was the review by Mr. Bevin of developments in Paris at the Council of Foreign Ministers, as well as his outline of British policy towards Germany. Mr. Bevin explained United Kingdom policy, and in the case of Germany put before the meetings alternative courses which the United Kingdom had in mind. He did not suggest at any time that he expected the Ministers assembled to vote on these matters or to express the considered views of their Governments. At one point, after he had reported on the Paris meeting, he expressed the wish that a statement to the press on what had taken place be very carefully worded so as not to suggest that the representatives of the Commonwealth had met to agree on policy. He said that such misunderstanding would embarrass him at meetings with the Foreign Ministers, where he had to make it clear that he was speaking for the United Kingdom alone. There is no doubt that Mr. Bevin would like to feel, in his discussions with other Great Powers, that he is expressing opinions which are generally in line with those held by other Commonwealth Governments, and as a result of these meetings he will have a right to feel that, at least with regard to the Peace Treaties and with regard to Germany, United Kingdom policy is generally in line with what the other Commonwealth countries think to be wise. It is only natural that Mr. Bevin will not want to take action which would be unlikely to find favour among those whom he would hope to be his allies. It is for the same reason that he follows the consistent policy of consulting with the United States in order to make sure that he is not far out of line with American wishes.

(IV) PROBLEMS OF THE SOUTH-WEST PACIFIC.

16. In certain special cases specific agreements were reached at the Prime Ministers' Meetings which did not, however, affect the general character of the meetings. The instances were connected with the United States request for the use of bases in the Pacific, and proposals for an Economic and Welfare Organisation in the South Pacific. In both cases these matters had been the subject of continued discussion and negotiation between the United Kingdom, Australian and New Zealand Governments, and it was the wish of the Governments concerned to make use of this opportunity to reach certain agreed conclusions.

(V) NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN.

17. The question of the nationality of married women was raised at the request of Field Marshal Smuts because of the agitation on this subject by women in the Union. It was quickly realised that this was a subject for discussion among experts. Accordingly, it was arranged that this matter would be considered by officials of the various countries who were meeting after the conclusion of the Prime Ministers meetings to consider the questions of British nationality consequent upon the passing of the new Canadian citizenship Act.

(VI) COMMERCIAL POLICY.

18. On no aspect of the recent meetings was there wider confusion in the press than on the subject of commercial policy, primarily because it suited the wishes of the Beaverbrook press, and even of certain more respectable organs, to create the impression that the Commonwealth Ministers were meeting to strengthen their devotion to the principles of Imperial Preference. The view of the Canadian Government that questions of Imperial Preference are at this point proper subjects for discussion only among experts, was shared by the United Kingdom Government and to some extent at least by the South African and Australian Governments. Mr. Nash, however, who is his Government's expert on these matters, was disappointed that the proposed Commonwealth discussions on commercial policy were not to take place in June as previously arranged, and he pressed for some discussion during the meetings of Prime Ministers. Field Marshal Smuts was also responsible for raising the issue, as he wished to know what in general was the policy of the Commonwealth Governments. It was made clear in the discussions that all Commonwealth Governments are agreed that Imperial Preferences might have to be reduced or removed in the interests of wider international trade, but that they would be surrendered only in exchange for appropriate tariff concessions on the part of the United States and other countries. Discussion of commercial policy occupied only part of the time at the concluding meeting.

19. In conclusion a word should be said about the press treatment of these meetings. This was the most unsatisfactory aspect of the whole affair, and one to which it would be wise to give consideration before any future meetings take place. Both before and during the Prime Ministers meetings the articles appearing in most of the United Kingdom press were ill-informed and misleading. For this situation the United Kingdom Government can be held responsible, I think, in a negative, rather than a positive, way. When complaints were made to the Dominions Office, or when a complaint was made by the Prime Minister during his first meeting in London, the reply was that the press was free, that much of it was opinionated, and that there was little that could be done about what was admittedly deplorable.

20. It is perfectly true that a good deal of the press exploited the meetings in accordance with their own views on Commonwealth policy. The Daily Express and The Daily Mail as usual made little attempt to report the facts with any degree of accuracy. Their most outrageous exploit was to announce, on the eve of the first series of meetings, that Mr. Walter Nash had proposed the establishment of an Imperial "Super Cabinet", a suggestion which was vehemently repudiated by Mr. Nash. What was more unfortunate was that the two very influential Sunday papers continued to publish what sounded like authoritative reports of plans for close Imperial defence, Imperial Councils, and radical changes in general, which were said to be under consideration. It so happens that the editorial policy of the Sunday Times in this respect is now largely directed by Mr. H. V. Hodson, and that of the Observer by Mr. David Astor, both of whom have strong views of the neo-Milnerian school. Lord Kemsley's papers likewise reflected the strong Empire-mindedness of Lord Kemsley, although it must be said that The Daily Telegraph preserved its higher standard of integrity in reporting the meetings. Even The Times, which customarily rejects the centralist theory, at least in its extreme form, allowed itself to be deluded by the talk of plans for Imperial defence.

21. This unfortunate reporting is deplorable because I realise that it created impressions in Canada which were a source of embarrassment to the Government. At the same time there are, I think, certain features of the present situation with regard to the United Kingdom press which should be borne in mind. In the first place it should not be forgotten that the press of this country is by no means as representative of Government opinion as it was a year ago. There is only one daily paper in the United Kingdom—The Daily Herald—which might be considered to reflect Government opinion, and the Herald was at no time guilty of the misdemeanours described above. Although it is true that The Times and The News Chronicle, and particularly their Diplomatic Correspondents, are frequently "inspired", one must always be careful in concluding that they are speaking for the Government. This is a very different situation from that which existed when there was a Conservative or Coalition Government, and the editors of most of the great papers were in close and sympathetic communication with members of the Government. It should also be remembered that the excessive pre-occupation of organs of the press with Commonwealth defence and machinery represents the pre-occupation of that small group in this country which is interested in the subject. The vast majority are not greatly interested in the Commonwealth except generally to think that it is a good thing and worth preserving.

22. A principal complaint which might be laid against the Government was that it did not give adequate guidance. Mr. Francis Williams, adviser on Public Relations, attended the meetings of Prime Ministers and held press conferences. The Dominions Office tended to blame Mr. Williams for some of the misunderstandings on the grounds that he was not sufficiently well acquainted with the issues to define them clearly. On the other hand, he is a man well disposed to our particular point of view, which he made a considerable effort at times to expound. His handling of press conferences was the subject of commendation by Canadian press correspondents in London, including Mr. B. T. Richardson, of the Winnipeg Free Press, who I think you will agree is well informed on the general Canadian attitude. Mr. Williams' position was not made too easy during the third series of meetings because of the decision to tell the press nothing except that discussions had taken place. It was unfortunate that although this decision was taken on the recommendation of Mr.

Bevin and Mr. Attlee because of the very confidential nature of the matters discussed, there was some tendency on the part of the press to assume that it was a change of policy connected with the arrival of the Canadian Prime Minister.

23. It should, I think, be kept in mind that if the press is not given adequate information on these meetings it will be driven to invention. While some of the errors in the press were due to deliberate policy, or were the result of prejudices, some of them were due to carelessness or ignorance. It is important that Commonwealth matters should be better understood, and this can be done, I think, if not only the United Kingdom authorities, but also the Canadian authorities, are willing to go out of their way to provide information and positive guidance.

24. I am sending copies of this despatch to Dublin, Canberra, Cape Town, Wellington, Paris, Moscow, Brussels, Athens, The Hague, Oslo, and Berlin.

I have etc.

FREDERIC HUDD

SECTION B

COMMUNICATIONS

730.

DEA/8085-40

Mémoire du secrétaire, le Comité interministériel sur la politique des télécommunications, au Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy, to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] January 24, 1946

COMMONWEALTH TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONFERENCE, 1945; FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

1. The Commonwealth Telecommunications Conference, held in London last summer unanimously recommended

(a) the public ownership of telecommunications services of all the Commonwealth governments;

(b) replacement of the Commonwealth Communications Council by a new body with wider functions representing all the governments of the Commonwealth; and

(c) financial arrangements involving a commitment by Commonwealth governments for the maintenance and use of the cable system.

2. The Cabinet, at their meetings of October 17th, 1945, considered the Conference report and on the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy, reaffirmed their willingness to nationalize external telecommunications services and agreed to subscribe to interim working arrangements for the transition period immediately ahead. They also deferred consideration of the financial aspects of the proposals until the results of the United States-Commonwealth talks at Bermuda were known.

3. The Agreement which emerged from the Bermuda Telecommunications Conference is forming the subject of a separate memorandum to the Cabinet. It may be said, however, that the outstanding differences between United States and Commonwealth interests were settled on a mutually satisfactory basis and if, as is to be expected, the Agreement is accepted by the various governments represented at the Conference, a substantial measure of co-operation between the two systems may be anticipated.

4. Prior to the Bermuda Conference all Commonwealth governments, except the Canadian, had accepted in full the recommendations of the London Conference and the removal of major uncertainties as to the future Commonwealth organization contributed materially to the successful outcome of the Bermuda talks. The only reservation made by Canada with regard to the reorganization plans had to do with the proposed financial arrangements. In the view of the Committee, government policy on this aspect should now be clarified so that the Canadian position may be made known to the other partner governments before proceeding to nationalization. A further question which might be clarified at the same time is the timing of the nationalization process in Canada.

5. Briefly, the financial arrangements recommended by the London Conference involve joint responsibility by all partner governments for the maintenance of the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board and the cable network. No charge would be made initially by the United Kingdom corporation to the various Commonwealth corporations for the use of the cable system. Instead the Commonwealth corporations would contribute their annual net revenues to a central fund from which would be met:

(a) the current annual expenses of the Board (the creation of which has already been accepted by Canada); and

(b) any deficiency in the net revenues derived from the external telecommunications of the United Kingdom up to an amount not exceeding the cost of cable maintenance and provision for renewals for the year.

6. While the Canadian corporation would contribute the full amount of its net revenues to the central fund in the first instance, the net cost of cable maintenance and renewals would be shared by the various corporations (excluding the United Kingdom) in proportion to the volume of originating traffic in each country. If revenues contributed by Canada exceeded her share of the expenses for the purposes described above the balance would be rebated,—thus preserving a very necessary incentive towards efficiency. It is anticipated that revenues would be more than sufficient to cover expenses but further recommendations will be made by the Commonwealth Board if a deficit should appear likely when the scheme goes into operation.

7. No useful estimate can be made at the present time of the net cost to Canada of participation in this scheme as available figures on past operations are quite unsatisfactory for this purpose. It should be borne in mind, however, that if Canada were not a participant in the central fund, charges would be made by the owners of the cables in respect of messages originating in Canada and transmitted over them. The Committee is satisfied that Canada will not be called upon to pay a disproportionate share of the net cost of maintaining the cable system, having in mind particularly the offer of the United Kingdom to pool its net revenue derived from telegraph and telephone services to Europe which amounted in 1939 to £400,000. Moreover, Canada through its representation on the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board, will naturally have every opportunity to scrutinize details of the scheme before they are put into operation.

8. The Canadian delegates to the London Conference proposed an alternative which would have limited Canada's commitment to the maintenance of cables terminating in Canada but after full discussion they were satisfied that this proposal was essentially unworkable if the flexibility, which is an important feature of the present system, is to be retained. They believe that the present proposals are at once fair and simple, have much the same effect from a financial point of view, and offer the most practical solution to the problem.

9. Nationalization of Canadian external telecommunications facilities involves acquisition of such facilities of the Canadian Marconi Company, a majority of the shares of which are owned by Cable and Wireless Limited of the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom government is now negotiating to acquire the parent company in the course of which there will be an opportunity to discuss the transfer of the Marconi shares to the Canadian government. In the light of these facts and the satisfactory relationships existing between the Canadian government and Canadian Marconi, there does not appear to be any necessity for immediate action by the Canadian government.

10. The Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy accordingly recommends

(a) that the general financial arrangements proposed in the London report be approved in principle subject to further examination as to details by the Department of Finance; and

(b) that any action to nationalize external telecommunication services in Canada be delayed pending the outcome of negotiations in the United Kingdom.

EVAN W. T. GILL

731.

DEA/8085-40

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité interministériel sur la politique des télécommunications, au Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy, to Cabinet

[Ottawa,] January 24, 1946

UNITED STATES-COMMONWEALTH TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONFERENCE 1945—AGREEMENT

1. The Cabinet, at their meeting of November 7th, 1945, instructed the Canadian delegation to the Bermuda Conference along the following lines:

(a) On rates questions

(i) that Canada's interest is in the attainment of a low world flat rate and that in order to further this objective, the Canadian government is prepared to agree to the narrowing and possible elimination of the Empire preference and simplification of the rate structure generally;

(ii) that the adoption by the United States and Commonwealth of a uniform press rate be supported, as a step towards a world rate, with provision by which newspaper organizations could, if they so wished, lease private wires or private time for their own purposes; and

(iii) that the adoption of a system of charging and accounting on the dollar sterling basis be supported.

(b) On the direct wireless circuits between the United States and Commonwealth points

(i) that, except in the cases of overriding political necessity, direct wireless circuits should be justified on a basis of terminal traffic and service needs and that the routing of transit traffic over such circuits should be resisted as far as possible.

2. A copy of the Agreement signed by the various delegations at the closing session of the Conference is appended hereto† and the following comments are submitted on matters directly affecting Canadian interests:

(a) general agreement was reached on a ceiling rate between the United States and British Commonwealth areas of 30¢ (U.S.) per word for ordinary messages and 20¢ (U.S.) per word for code, on the understanding that these arrangements should not involve any increase in existing rates;

(b) a ceiling of 6½¢ (U.S.) for press traffic between the United States and the countries of the British Commonwealth was agreed on the understanding that this would involve no increase in existing rates—the existing penny press rate within the British Commonwealth is to be retained and may be extended by agreement to press traffic between the countries of the British Commonwealth and any other country;

(c) no agreement was reached on the question of reducing the categories of telegrams or on the abolition of reduced rates for government messages (as a consequence the Canadian government will continue to enjoy the special half-rate now in effect);

(d) a general formula was accepted to govern the establishment or retention of direct wireless circuits based upon the volume of traffic and efficiency of service. Within the terms of this formula, agreement was reached as to which circuits, old or new, should be permitted. Furthermore, a general formula was accepted for controlling the type of traffic to be handled by direct wireless circuits so that the unrestricted use of these circuits would not seriously affect the cable system of the Commonwealth; and

(e) the duplex dollar (U.S.)-sterling basis for the tariffs and the settlement of accounts between the United States and the countries of the British Commonwealth was adopted in place of the gold franc system which has proved unsatisfactory in present conditions. Provision was also made for any necessary adjustments in the new system should the international monetary fund provided for in the Bretton Woods Agreement be established.

3. The agreement reached on "Exclusive Arrangements" is of sole concern to the United Kingdom and United States and no observations on this are required. It is of interest to note, however, that the Conference recorded their recognition of the important part played by cables in an integrated telecommunications network. The relevant section of the Agreement states:

. . .in view of the important strategic role which cables as well as radio play in a co-ordinated telecommunications system, research and development work in both cable and radio communication shall be fostered and promoted.

and

. . .inasmuch as the trans-Atlantic cables form an integral part of a world telecommunication system, uniform procedures and techniques shall be adopted in their operation.

4. This agreement has been examined by the Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy with respect to its terms and by the Legal Adviser of the Department of External Affairs with respect to the means of implementation. The terms of the Agreement are of primary importance to Canada in that they offer a satisfactory solution of the outstanding telecommunications problems between the United Kingdom and the United States which threatened to compromise the relations between these two countries. On the other hand, Canada does not stand to benefit greatly from the new rate structure since we are in the fortunate position that some 90% of our external traffic is already carried at rates below the proposed ceiling. A lower rate will, however, be effective on traffic to the British West Indies.

5. The Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy accordingly recommend that the Agreement be approved by the Canadian government and that a formal statement to this effect be signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and be transmitted to the United Kingdom government.<sup>1</sup>

EVAN W. T. GILL

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1950, N° 2.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1950, No. 2.

732.

DEA/6231-40

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] January 30, 1946

REQUEST BY UNITED KINGDOM GOVERNMENT FOR THE CO-OPERATION OF CANADA IN FINANCING THE MAINTENANCE OF THE COMMONWEALTH
COMMUNICATIONS COUNCIL

In Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 103 of January 28,† of which a copy is attached, the United Kingdom Government asked for our agreement in the various Commonwealth Governments financing from April 1, 1946, the upkeep of the Commonwealth Communications Council. This body and its predecessor were previously financed by Cable and Wireless Limited, but, in view of that company's impending nationalization, both the Company and the United Kingdom Government think it desirable that its maintenance from April 1, 1946 should be made from Government funds.

The United Kingdom Government estimates that the upkeep for 1946-1947 would be £30,000 of which it is prepared to contribute 70%. It suggests that the remaining 30% should be shared equally by Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, and Southern Rhodesia. This would involve for Canada an expenditure of £1,500.

In view of the fact that we agreed at the meeting of the Commonwealth Communications Council last July to support the proposed Commonwealth Telecommunications Board, which will eventually supersede the Commonwealth Communications Council, it appears reasonable that we should comply with this request. The Department of Transport has been consulted and approves of this recommendation. Since the Department of External Affairs usually includes in its estimates appropriations for Canadian contributions to Commonwealth and International Bodies, I think that the appropriation should be charged to this Department's estimates.

May we have your approval of this proposal in order that a reply may be prepared as soon as possible to this telegram, to which the United Kingdom Government asks an urgent answer.<sup>1</sup>

N. A. R[OBERTSON]

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal Note:

733.

DEA/8085-40

Le secrétaire du Cabinet au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Secretary to the Cabinet to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, February 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,<sup>1</sup>

The Cabinet, at their meeting of February 5th, considered and approved the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy as contained in their memorandum of January 24th, 1946, that the Bermuda Telecommunications Agreement be approved by the Canadian government and that a formal statement to this effect be signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and transmitted to the United Kingdom government.

Yours sincerely,

EVAN W. T. GILL

for the Secretary to the Cabinet 734.

DEA/7767-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne
Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in Great Britain

SECRET

Ottawa, March 4, 1946

Dear Mr. Massey,

I wish to refer to the policy taken by the Canadian Government in implementing the decisions made at the Commonwealth Telecommunications Conference in July 1945, at which you were the Chairman of the Canadian delegation.

As you may recall, on the 20th of October last we informed the United Kingdom that the Canadian Government decided:

1. To re-affirm their willingness to nationalize external telecommunications facilities and to accept the principle of a change to public ownership of telecommunications facilities.
2. To subscribe to the supplementary agreement between the partner governments as set out in the Annex to the Report to cover the interim period before the full scheme can go into effect.

<sup>1</sup>M. Robertson était alors le président du Comité interministériel sur la politique des télécommunications.

<sup>1</sup>Mr. Robertson was then the Chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy.

3. To give further consideration to the detailed recommendations of the report in the light of the conclusions reached at the Bermuda Conference.

As you know from our airmail letter to you of February 22,† the Canadian Government has given formal approval to the Bermuda Agreement. When the Bermuda Agreement was approved by the Cabinet, they were also asked to consider a memorandum prepared by our Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications Policy, asking for a decision on the principal recommendations of the London Conference, which had not been previously discussed. A copy of this memorandum is enclosed.<sup>1</sup>

After considerable discussion the Cabinet

(a) approved in principle the general financial arrangements proposed in the London report involving payment of the net (i.e. surplus) revenues of the Canadian corporation to the central fund, to meet Canada's share of

- (i) the cost of maintaining the central body, and
- (ii) the cost of using and maintaining the cable system, it being understood that this decision involved no commitment regarding payment of any overall deficit; and,

(b) agreed that any action to nationalize communication services in Canada be delayed pending the outcome of negotiations in the United Kingdom.

I should be grateful if you would inform the appropriate authorities in the United Kingdom of the action taken by the Government. We are not circularizing the other Commonwealth Governments on this question at the present time, since the Interim Agreement has still to be signed by all partner governments and the action contemplated on the main portion of your Report does not seem imminent. As I interpret the decision of the Cabinet, they are not prepared at this stage to commit the Canadian Government to assuming any share of the cost of maintaining the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board and the cables system in excess of the net revenues of Canadian corporation. This attitude does not conflict in any way with the proposed financial arrangements since the Conference Report noted that the means of meeting an overall deficit was to be left over for subsequent discussion by the new Commonwealth Telecommunications Board. Naturally, the Cabinet decision does not preclude Canadian participation in any examination of this problem which may take place or possible participation in arrangements that may be evolved by the Board.

We would welcome any further information that your staff may be able to secure on the development of United Kingdom policy in nationalization of Cable and Wireless. In view of the satisfactory relations that have always existed between Canadian Marconi and ourselves, we do not feel disposed to hasten negotiations for the nationalization of that company and the acquisition of cable terminals from Cable and Wireless. It is rather our intention to wait until the United Kingdom Government has completed its purchase of the assets of Cable and Wireless Limited, which will involve control of Canadian Marconi.

<sup>1</sup> Voir le document 730.

<sup>1</sup> See Document 730.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

735.

CH/Vol. 2114

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne*

*Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in Great Britain*

Ottawa, March 28, 1946

Dear Mr. Massey,

On February 7, 1946, an agreement was signed between the United States of America and the British Commonwealth and Empire concerning radio distance indicators, of which I enclose a copy.† The agreement was signed by four officials on behalf of the United States and by Sir Robert Watson-Watt on behalf of the British Commonwealth and Empire. We were not aware of the signature of this agreement until after it had taken place and discovered that no authority had ever been granted by the Canadian Government for such a signature. It is, of course, quite inconsistent with constitutional practice that any official should sign for the British Commonwealth and Empire a title which, as you are aware, has not been authorized for use in official documents. The reason for the curious method of heading the document and signing it appears to have been the fact that the officials concerned were technical experts, and the title of the document was based upon the fact that there has been in existence a Commonwealth and Empire Radio for Civil Aviation series of conferences. Our Embassy in Washington informs us that the author of the text on the United States side was a member of the Telecommunications Division, who referred to the documents of the Second Commonwealth and Empire Radio for Civil Aviation as a precedent. The text of the document was not checked by legal and protocol experts in the State Department, while it did not come to our attention until some time after signature.

The State Department is apparently willing to consider the agreement operative, but is equally ready to have a new text drawn up and signed in any form acceptable to all concerned. Although this agreement is not an important one it does provide an embarrassing precedent for the future. It is certainly not one which we could table in Parliament as binding for Canada and for which we could seek the approval of Council. In view of the circumstances, I would appreciate if you could take up as soon as possible with the appropriate officials the problem created by the wording and signature of this document. We would like you to point out that we are strongly of the opinion that the document should be re-drafted as soon as possible with provision for separate signatures on behalf of the various Governments, with the expression "British Commonwealth and Empire" deleted throughout. We suggest that agreement on the form of the document be reached in London through consultation with the various Governments affected. When this has been done, the revised text should be circulated for approval by the Governments and then submitted to the United States.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

736.

DEA/6327-40

Mémorandum du président, le Comité interministériel sur les télécommunications, au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Memorandum from Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications, to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

[Ottawa,] December 19, 1946

GENERAL

The telegram† from the Chairman of the Commonwealth Communications Council to Mr. W. A. Rush, Canadian Member, regarding the proposed meeting of the said Council to be convened in London some time during the month of February was referred to you by Mr. Baldwin. Pursuant to your instructions, the Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications met this morning to consider:

- a) whether Canada should participate in the proposed meeting;
- b) if (a) is answered in the affirmative, then who should act as Canadian representative or representatives.

SHOULD CANADA PARTICIPATE

It was unanimously agreed that Canada should be represented at the next meeting of the Commonwealth Communications Council, and the following are the principal arguments which prompted such decision:

a) Canada has formally accepted membership in, and has duly appointed a representative to, the Commonwealth Communications Council, and as this organization is the administrative body for Commonwealth telecommunications matters, it is considered that the Canadian member should attend all meetings.

b) Reports of the Moscow Telecommunications Conference indicate that the United States of America may sign the Telegraph Regulations. In such event, certain of the Commonwealth countries including Canada, who have not signed these Regulations, may find it desirable as a natural consequence of United States signature to also become signatories. This meeting will provide an opportunity for representatives from these various countries to discuss the problem generally, as a result of which the Canadian representative will be in a better position to make a recommendation to the appropriate authorities in this country;

c) One of the agenda items is the formation and method of operation of the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board, which will come into being when nationalization has been completed throughout the Commonwealth. As Canada will be a member of such Board, it seems desirable that we should have a voice in its structure and take advantage of this opportunity of presenting our views in that connection;

d) Although it is Canadian policy to delay any action on nationalization of cable and wireless until such time as the United Kingdom has completed its programme and has taken over the shares and assets of Cable and Wireless Limited, we will nevertheless be required to tie in to the overall nationalization programme at some point. Therefore it seems important that we obtain first hand information as to the procedure being adopted and the schedule being followed in the other countries of the Commonwealth. The United Kingdom Government will acquire 51% of the shares of the Canadian Marconi Company, and this meeting would appear to provide us with the opportunity of obtaining helpful information regarding the future plans of the United Kingdom;

e) The report which is to be rendered at this meeting by the Secretary of the Commonwealth Communications Council, who attended the Moscow Conference, will undoubtedly assist us in the preparations which we are making for the World Telecommunications Conference which is to be convened in 1947.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

You will recall that in a letter dated November 15th, 1943, which you directed to the Prime Minister, you recommended that the Controller of Radio, who was then Mr. W. A. Rush, be designated as the Canadian Member on the Commonwealth Communications Council. When Mr. Rush later retired from that appointment, the recommendation was approved that he continue as Canadian representative until March, 1947, when the situation would be reviewed.

The Committee agreed that Mr. Rush should attend the coming meeting of the Commonwealth Communications Council, not only because he is the duly authorized Canadian member, but also because his experience and background knowledge will undoubtedly be of considerable assistance.

In addition, it was the opinion of all the members present that it would be desirable to have also in attendance an individual who is still actively connected with the Canadian Government and who is completely up to date on Government policy in the matter of nationalization. As Transport is the Government Department most directly concerned and most familiar with our national and international telecommunications interests, it was considered that the second representative to the meeting should be selected from that Department.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE INTERESTS

It is obvious that our nationalization procedures will involve somewhat detailed financial arrangements in which the Department of Finance will be principally concerned. It was felt that it would be helpful if an individual from that Department who has had some contact with this subject could accompany the two Canadian representatives to the meeting, primarily to discuss with the United Kingdom authorities and the representatives of the other Commonwealth countries who will be present in London, the overall financial programme and obtain details which can be more satisfactorily handled by personal liaison than in official correspondence.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications respectfully recommends for your consideration

a) that Canada be represented at this meeting of the Commonwealth Communications Council;

b) that the delegation be composed of

i) the present Canadian member, Mr. W. A. Rush,

ii) a selected official from the Department of Transport;

c) that consideration be given to the desirability of having an appropriate official from the Department of Finance accompany these two representatives, not to attend the meetings officially, but to take advantage of this opportunity of liaising and holding discussions with representatives of all the Commonwealth countries who will be in attendance on the purely financial implications of nationalization.

H. M[ORAN]

SECTION C

DÉFENSE/DEFENCE

737.

DEA/8371-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au sous-ministre de la Défense nationale pour l'Air

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of National Defence for Air

Ottawa, January 17, 1946

I am enclosing a letter dated January 8th, from the United Kingdom High Commissioner, concerning the proposal that the Canadian Government should participate in forming a Route Squadron made up of Air Forces from the Commonwealth countries. I should be glad to have your views on this proposal.

N. A. ROBERTSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le haut commissaire de Grande-Bretagne au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner of Great Britain to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

1085/10

Ottawa, January 8, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With a view to extending the close co-operation between the Air Forces of the British Commonwealth, the United Kingdom authorities have been considering the possibility of forming a Route Squadron, composed of personnel from the Air Forces of the Commonwealth countries. I have been asked to enquire if the Canadian authorities would be prepared to participate in such a scheme.

It is felt that the formation of such a squadron would follow appropriately upon the establishment of the Central Flying School and Air Navigation School in the field of air transport, i.e. movement and supply by air of forces of all three arms and flight delivery of aircraft from production to any point in an emergency, it is considered particularly desirable that a common technique should be developed.

The purpose of the Squadron, which would be equipped with the latest and best types of transport aircraft would be:

(a) To provide for the Air Forces of all the Commonwealth countries aircrew with experience of flying difficulties in all parts of the world. These airmen would form a nucleus of highly trained aircrews whose skill and knowledge would be invaluable.

(b) To flight-test aircraft in all conditions of weather and climate and thus improve design and efficiency of British military aircraft.

(c) To provide air transport for personnel of military services travelling between various parts of the Commonwealth and attending various specialist courses which will be necessary to enable service personnel to keep abreast of scientific development.

Before giving further examination to this proposal the United Kingdom authorities would be glad to know whether it commends itself to the Canadian authorities and whether they would be willing to participate in such a joint undertaking and to bear a share of the cost. Questions of the location of the squadron, the routes to be operated and the share of cost to be borne by each country would be discussed at a later stage if it is agreed that the proposal should be further examined.<sup>1</sup>

Yours sincerely,

MALCOLM MACDONALD

<sup>1</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur cette lettre:

Mr. Robertson

This will need to be looked into very carefully before any commitment made.

W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING] 22-1-46

<sup>1</sup> The following note was written on the letter:

738.

DEA/8371-40

*Le sous-ministre de la Défense nationale pour l'Air
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of National Defence for Air
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, January 24, 1946

With reference to your communication dated 17th January, 1946, concerning Canadian participation in the formation of a route squadron made up of Commonwealth Air Forces.

Although the aims of the proposed organization are considered to be of great importance and would serve a definite need, it is not considered feasible at the present time for the R.C.A.F. to participate. With the multitudinous problems and considerations that must be met during the interim stage between war and peace, and the numerous extraneous commitments which have to be filled by the R.C.A.F., any activity of this nature is, unfortunately, impractical. There is no doubt, however, that at some future date, the R.C.A.F. will wish to have its own transport squadrons carry out flights to all portions of the world, and at that time could co-ordinate their effort with such an activity as has been suggested.

It would be appreciated if the above views could be transmitted to the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in Canada.

JAMES SHARPE
for the Deputy Minister

739.

DEA/7-DA

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité de défense du Cabinet, au Comité de défense du Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Cabinet Defence Committee

[Ottawa,] February 2, 1946

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN COMMONWEALTH ROUTE SQUADRON

1. The United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada has advised that his government have been considering the possibility of forming a "Route Squadron" comprised of personnel from the Air Forces of the Commonwealth countries. He has inquired if Canada would be prepared to participate in such a scheme.

2. In the view of the United Kingdom authorities, the formation of such a squadron would develop a uniform technique for the movement and supply by air of military forces, and flight delivery of aircraft from production to any point in an emergency. The purposes of the squadron, which would be equipped with the latest and best types of aircraft, would be:

- (a) to provide the Air Forces of all the Commonwealth countries with experience of flying difficulties in all parts of the world;
- (b) to flight-test aircraft in all conditions with a view to improving their design and efficiency; and
- (c) to provide air transport for military personnel travelling between Commonwealth countries.

3. The question of the location of the squadron, the routes to be operated and the share of cost to be borne by each country would be discussed at a later stage if it is agreed that the proposal should be further examined. In the meantime, the United Kingdom authorities wish to know whether we would be willing to participate in such a joint undertaking and whether we would be willing to bear a share of the cost.

4. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs referred the matter to the Department of National Defence for Air who have reported that:

The aims of the suggested organization are felt to be of great importance and would meet a definite need. However, with the many problems relating to the transition from war to peace conditions, it is not judged to be feasible at the present time for the R.C.A.F. to participate in such a joint undertaking. It is certain, however, that at some future date the R.C.A.F. will desire to have its own transport squadrons carry out flights to all parts of the world, and it is probable at that time the R.C.A.F. would co-ordinate their effort with the plan now suggested by the United Kingdom.

5. The views of the Cabinet Defence Committee have been sought before a reply is made to the United Kingdom High Commissioner.

E. W. T. GILL

740.

DEA/8371-40

*Le secrétaire, le Comité de défense du Cabinet, au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, February 20, 1946

May I draw your attention to the decisions taken on the following matters by the Cabinet Defence Committee at their 13th meeting, held on February 18th, which require action by your department:

1. Air Force; participation in Commonwealth Route Squadron

Your file on this subject is returned herewith. It was the feeling of the Cabinet Defence Committee that in notifying the United Kingdom authorities [that] Canada would not participate in this joint undertaking, no reference should be made to the possibility of some co-ordinated effort at a later date.

This would require deletion of the ultimate sentence in your draft reply to Mr. MacDonald.

2. Imperial Defence College courses; financial arrangements
3. Victory celebrations in the United Kingdom; Canadian participation

EVAN W. T. GILL

741.

DEA/8371-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire de Grande-Bretagne*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner of Great Britain

Ottawa, February 21, 1946

Dear Mr. MacDonald,

I am writing with reference to your letter of January 8th in which you informed us of the proposal under consideration in London for forming a Route Squadron composed of personnel from the air forces of the Commonwealth countries and enquired whether the Canadian authorities would be willing to participate in such a scheme.

The matter has now been carefully considered and it is recognized that the aims of the proposed organization are important and would meet a definite need. It is felt, however, that it is not feasible for the Royal Canadian Air Force to participate in a joint undertaking of this nature. The principal reason is the extent and nature of the problems relating to the transition of the R.C.A.F. from war to peace conditions and the character of the various commitments which must be met by the R.C.A.F.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

742.

DEA/7-DA

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au Comité de défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

[Ottawa,] March 5, 1946

PROPOSED INFORMAL COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE ON DEFENCE SCIENCE

1. The United Kingdom government have proposed that a short and "entirely informal" Commonwealth conference on defence science should be held in London between June 3rd and June 15th. An unofficial conference of Commonwealth scientists convened by the Royal Society has been called to meet in London on June 17th and it will be followed during the month of July by a Commonwealth scientific official conference. The invitations to participate in these two scientific conferences have already been accepted and the Canadian representatives have been tentatively chosen.

2. When these arrangements were under discussion in the middle of 1945, the United Kingdom government stated that questions of liaison between Commonwealth governments on secret defence science might be left for separate consideration, since they raised special issues. They have now proposed, however, that advantage should be taken of the presence of so many scientists from [sic] London this summer to arrange for discussions on defence research.

3. The detailed programme suggested in a letter from the United Kingdom High Commissioner, dated February 21st, is as follows:

“The United Kingdom authorities have been giving some consideration to the question of what subjects might be considered by the meeting. I have been asked to let you know that it is suggested that the first two items on the agenda should be:

(a) to consider how best to distribute the necessary programme of defence research throughout the British Commonwealth in such a way as to make the best possible use of available and potential facilities and staff in each country, and

(b) to consider what machinery may be required for the co-ordination and periodical review of such a programme.

The United Kingdom authorities are convinced from the future trend of defence research which has already become discernible that there is an immense task to carry out on the research and development required. They feel that the resources of the United Kingdom alone are not likely to be sufficient to cope with such a programme and that in any case the United Kingdom is not suitable, geographically or climatically, for a full investigation of many problems involved. Moreover, they feel that a dispersal of the research centres would be desirable to provide some measure of protection.

Apart from the subjects mentioned above, which would constitute the principal items on the agenda, the United Kingdom authorities would like to discuss the location of testing and research facilities for:

- (a) full scale development and testing of guided and propelled missiles and projectiles for all services,
- (b) testing supersonic pilotless aircraft,
- (c) testing facilities for weapons and equipment under various climatic conditions,
- (d) testing of shore and ship-based aircraft under full Arctic and full tropical conditions,
- (e) investigation of local under-water acoustic and magnetic conditions with special reference to techniques for submarine detection,

- (f) testing and development of vehicles and A.F.Vs,<sup>1</sup>
- (g) large scale testing facilities for concrete structures for use in attack and defence, and
- (h) chemical and biological warfare problems.

It has been arranged that the scientific conference and the meeting of the Royal Society should begin on June 17th. The United Kingdom authorities think that a fortnight should suffice for the informal conference on defence science and accordingly suggest that this should open on June 3rd.

The United Kingdom authorities would like to reach agreement on the subjects for the agenda by March 1st and, if this can be done, they would hope to be able to circulate papers before the end of March to the authorities concerned so that visiting delegations would have ample time to consider these subjects before leaving for the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom authorities would hope to be able to arrange visits to United Kingdom research establishments working on defence matters, if possible to coincide with similar visits proposed during the course of the official and Royal Society conferences, but they feel that advantage might be taken of any spare days for this purpose during the informal conference on defence science.

I should be glad if you would let me know as soon as possible whether the Canadian authorities are willing to take part in the proposed informal conference on defence science. If so, I should also be very glad to know whether they concur in the suggested agenda as set out in this letter and if they have any comments or additions to suggest; in that event it would be very helpful if they could be made available by March 1st. Perhaps you would also in due course be good enough to let me know whether the time-table suggested above would be acceptable and whether the suggested starting date of June 3rd for the informal conference on defence science would be convenient. The United Kingdom authorities would also appreciate information at as early a date as possible as to the composition of any Canadian delegation so that accommodation can be arranged."

4. There are obvious advantages in continuing the close scientific relationships on defence questions which have been developed during the war, both between Commonwealth countries and with the United States. There is, therefore, a strong case for accepting the United Kingdom proposal and arranging for Canadian representation by a small team. It is, however, most important that close cooperation in this respect inside the Commonwealth should neither prejudice the intimacy of our official scientific contacts with the United States nor give rise to any assumptions in the United Kingdom that we are accepting political commitments for Commonwealth defence at this stage. The emphasis placed by the United Kingdom government on the complete informality of the meeting may be a sufficient safeguard, but it might be well in replying to the invitation to draw particular attention to the plans now under way for fuller collaboration in peacetime between Canada and the United States on all defence questions.

---

<sup>1</sup> Armoured Fighting Vehicles.

5. It is also for consideration whether we should bring up at this stage the form which any conclusions reached by the conference might take. Some of the items on the suggested agenda have strong political implications, such as the distribution of defence research stations throughout the British Commonwealth and the location of testing and research facilities for various types of military equipment. If the conference were to make definite recommendations on these subjects which were acceptable on political grounds to all the governments of the Commonwealth except Canada, the Canadian government may find itself placed in an awkward position.

H. H. WRONG

743.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 237

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET

[Ottawa,] March 19, 1946

As you know there will be held in London next summer a series of meetings of Commonwealth scientists of which the most important will be an unofficial conference convened by the Royal Society. Canadian participation in this and in a smaller and later meeting of official scientists has already been approved. The United Kingdom Government suggested some weeks ago that the Royal Society's conference might be preceded by an informal and secret conference on defence research. They communicated more detailed suggestions for this meeting through Earnscliffe toward the end of last month and in particular they suggested that the first items on the agenda should read as follows:

(a) To consider how best to distribute the necessary programme of defence research throughout the British Commonwealth in such a way as to make the best possible use of available and potential facilities and staff in each country, and

(b) To consider what machinery may be required for the co-ordination and periodical review of such a programme.

The proposals were referred to the Chiefs of Staff and the National Research Council for their views and the opinion was expressed that an informal meeting on defence research might well be profitable, especially to avoid duplication of effort, provided that our participation did not imply acceptance of a single Commonwealth programme in this field and that our interests with respect to the United States were safeguarded.

The question was considered by the Defence Committee of the Cabinet on March 16th at which a draft reply was discussed proposing that the invitation be accepted provided that alterations were made in the items of the agenda quoted above. The Defence Committee approved this draft with minor changes and I attach a copy of the letter which has been sent to Mr. Stephen Holmes following this discussion. This contains a suggested redraft of the agenda so phrased as to remove the possible centralist implications of the United Kingdom proposal.<sup>1</sup>

H. W[RONG]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain

SECRET

Ottawa, March 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Holmes,

Consideration has now been given to the detailed information contained in your letter of February 21st† about the suggested informal conference of Commonwealth countries in London next June on the subject of defence research. It was not possible to send you an earlier answer as the proposal required interdepartmental consideration of a number of intricate technical questions.

The Canadian authorities are in full agreement with the United Kingdom authorities that there is an immense task to be carried out in the field of defence research and development, and they share their desire that the close relationships on these questions which have been developed during the war should be continued.

They find difficulty, however, in agreeing to the first two items of the agenda in the form in which they are expressed in your letter. As phrased, they appear to contemplate the adoption of a single programme of defence research for the British Commonwealth, directed and coordinated by central machinery yet to be established. It is felt here that an attempt so to formalize arrangements for secret defence research and development might result in inflexibility and prove to be less effective than a looser and less formal system of coordination and liaison.

Furthermore, it is of great importance to all the countries of the British Commonwealth, and of particular importance to Canada, that the most intimate possible relationship in this field should be maintained with the United States. As you are aware, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence is now developing a scheme for the closer coordination of defence planning between Canada and the United States; and the Canadian authorities attach special importance to the maintenance and extension of their direct contacts with the United States authorities in defence research and development.

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal note:

OK. W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING] 31-3-46

While agreeing, therefore, that an informal conference should take place in London between June 3rd and 19th and that there might usefully be discussed at this conference the location of testing and research facilities for the eight projects mentioned in your letter, the Canadian authorities propose that the first two items on the agenda should be reworded as follows:

(a) to consider the tasks which might be undertaken in defence research by British Commonwealth Governments in such a way as to make the best possible use of available and potential facilities and staff in each country;

(b) to consider the means whereby the programmes of defence research undertaken by British Commonwealth Governments might best be coordinated and periodically reviewed; and

(c) to exchange views on methods of co-operation in the field of defence research and development with the United States of America and other foreign governments.

It is felt here that the value of holding a conference of this nature at present is that it will provide an opportunity for the exchange of views and experience between technical experts, and that the aim should not be to present to Commonwealth Governments general recommendations for their consideration. Canadian experience, which we believe to be parallel to that of other countries of the Commonwealth, has shown that, especially in dealing with the United States, satisfactory contact in this field is best maintained by direct arrangements on specific proposals, sometimes concluded at the departmental level, rather than under an overall agreement negotiated between governments. An overall intergovernmental agreement on these matters, indeed, would of necessity involve far-reaching political implications, and its negotiation might in fact result in limiting the extent and utility of close liaison and cooperation in matters of defence science.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

744.

DEA/50255-40

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité de défense du Cabinet

Memorandum by Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

[Ottawa,] March 22, 1946

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE ON DEFENCE SCIENCE

Following is an extract from the minutes of the 14th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee held on March 16, 1946.

“THE COMMITTEE, after further discussion:

(a) agreed that Canada should be represented at the informal Commonwealth conference on defence science, and that the reply to the United Kingdom invitation be in the terms of the draft submitted, subject to minor changes emerging from the discussion;

(b) that the composition of the Canadian delegation be settled by the Minister of National Defence on the advice of the President, National Research Council, and the Director General of Defence Research; and

(c) that the Chiefs of Staff Committee prepare and submit for consideration recommendations as to the policy which should govern in matters of defence research arrangements with Commonwealth and other countries.”

745.

DEA/50046-B-40

*Le secrétaire, le Comité de défense du Cabinet, au sous-secrétaire d'État
associé aux Affaires extérieures*

*Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Associate Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, May 2, 1946

You will recall that Cabinet Defence Committee recently discussed the financial arrangements that should obtain in the postwar period for Canadian and U.K. Service personnel interchanged on courses. The Chiefs of Staff favoured a continuation of reciprocal arrangements that have been in effect during the war, and by which no charge was made for the courses, but each government was responsible for pay and allowances of their personnel attending such courses. Before promoting this plan with the U.K., you asked for further details as to how such a scheme would affect U.K. and Canada.

The C.A.S. now advises that, effective April 1st, 1946, the R.C.A.F. must pay for all courses that R.C.A.F. personnel undergo at R.A.F. schools. He considers this contrary to the views expressed at Cabinet Defence Committee, and suggests that the question be reopened with a view to making representations to the U.K.

I have consulted Navy and Army in this matter, and they both indicate that they expect to revert to the prewar arrangement and pay for courses. They are exploring the matter now with U.K. authorities.

I am not inclined to put the matter before Cabinet Defence Committee at this time, but I would welcome your observations so that I may make a report to the C.A.S.

EVAN W. T. GILL

746.

PCO/D-19-15

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1052

London, May 2, 1946

TOP SECRET. Defence of the Commonwealth.

2. Two papers have been submitted by United Kingdom on defence matters for consideration of Commonwealth Ministers. One is a Chiefs of Staff paper and the other is a paper by the Secretary of State for Dominions incorporating views of Chiefs of Staff. It was intended that these papers should be shown to you on your arrival in London. They have not yet been seen by Canadian Joint Staff Mission who are, nevertheless, endeavouring to secure copies. Following is a summary of principal features of these papers based on a brief reading.

1. Chiefs of Staff paper. This is based on designation of 4 "main support areas"—United Kingdom, the American Continent, Southern Africa, Australia and New Zealand. In addition, there are designated "other areas of strategic importance" in which British influence should be maintained in order to protect main support areas. These are western Europe, Iberian Peninsula, North-West Africa, Middle East, India, South-East Asia. (The designation of the Middle East as an area of strategic importance but not a main support area is interesting. During the course of discussions on other subjects with Commonwealth representatives, Bevin made it clear that problem was that there was no area in the Middle East which could be regarded as politically dependable for a base, and consideration was being given to the possibility of shifting emphasis to Kenya). The Chiefs of Staff recommended the following principles for Commonwealth defence.

(a) Each member of the Commonwealth should accept responsibility for the development and defence of their main support area and the strategic zone round it (For Canada this would presumably mean responsibility for the American Continent and, to some extent at least, North Atlantic communications.). In defining areas of strategic importance it was pointed out that the security of western Europe has been proved of direct interest to Canada.

(b) There should be acceptance of the principle of joint responsibility between parts of the Commonwealth concerned for protection of the lines of communication between the main support areas.

(c) Members should agree that it is in their strategic interest to assist, both politically and militarily, in maintaining the British position in those protective areas which directly affect the security of their territory and communications.

The memorandum stresses the desirabilities of co-operation in training and research. It is suggested, however, that the Dominions would maintain their own training facilities but that these should be of a kind which could be expanded in time of emergency for Commonwealth purposes. This principle would be applied to Commonwealth air training facilities. Individual members would agree to maintenance of bases in their regions and maintenance of stores and facilities. Emphasis is placed also on vulnerability of United Kingdom and desirability of dispersal of resources and population throughout the Commonwealth.

2. Dominions Secretary's memorandum. This memorandum pays more attention to political considerations and is primarily concerned with machinery for consultation and co-operation. The views expressed are as follows.

(a) A centralized system for Commonwealth defence is unlikely to be generally acceptable, and might restrict the freedom of action of individual members of the Commonwealth in making bilateral arrangements for co-operation with other countries. In any future major war, the Commonwealth must depend upon the active assistance of the United States, and any Commonwealth defence organization must include machinery for co-operation with the United States. Stress is also placed on regional co-operation with other countries such as France and The Netherlands.

(b) The Commonwealth should set up some looser system for co-ordination which should be based on the national defence organizations. As meetings of Prime Ministers cannot be held frequently, some arrangement is required by which decisions can be taken and implemented and preparatory work undertaken without holding a meeting of the Heads of Government. Nevertheless, such an arrangement must be based on the principle that responsibility for decisions rests with the various Governments.

(c) The essence of the proposal is that the United Kingdom should maintain Joint Staff Missions in each Dominion, and that the Dominions should maintain Joint Staff Missions in London and in any other Dominion capitals in which they consider they have sufficient interest. It is suggested that the Joint Staff Missions should be attached to the High Commissioners office and act as Service Advisers to the High Commissioners. It is emphasized that consultation will take place not only in London but also in any Commonwealth capital. It seems intended, for example, that the present Staff Missions in Melbourne should be developed as principal co-ordinating body in the South-West Pacific. It is hoped that the flexible system would remove fears of centralized control by the United Kingdom.

(d) It might not be possible to bring this system fully into operation immediately, but provided there is agreement upon the essentials as set out above, the necessary framework would be available on which a full organization could grow.

At discussions of these papers, Alanbrooke emphasized that the whole scheme is based on the principle of the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington, the British members of which make recommendations on matters of major policy to the Defence Committee which, if necessary, can refer them to the full Cabinet. By stressing the parallel of collaboration between two foreign countries, Alanbrooke argued that no encroachment on the sovereignty of the Dominions was intended. It was further hoped that each member would play the major part in his area.

In the discussions which followed, Nash indicated general acceptance provided there was assurance of adequate political consultation at all levels, and that it was agreed that the centre of the scheme need not be in London. He expressed some fears that the co-ordination of policies of 5 Governments would not be as easy as that of the United States and the United Kingdom.

The Australians, while not rejecting the scheme, did not seem disposed to accept it out of hand. Chifley and Evatt both raised many questions of detail. Chifley said he was anxious lest the proposal should involve centralized control of defence policy, which he was sure would be politically impracticable. Evatt was more worried lest consultation on military level would mean that agreements would be reached which would be difficult to change when they reached Ministers.

The United Kingdom Ministers were anxious to have the matter thrashed out here and some agreement reached before Ministers dispersed. Nash seemed anxious to take advantage of present opportunity, but Australians seemed disinclined to be rushed and stressed that the proposals would have to be considered by the Australian Government.

I understand that further consideration will be given to the subject this week in view of Smuts' arrival.

747.

DEA/65-C

*Mémoire du secrétaire, le Comité des chefs d'État-major,
au Comité de défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee, to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

Ottawa, May 8, 1946

EXTERNAL POLICY ON DEFENCE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

1. The Cabinet Defence Committee, at their meeting of March 16th, decided that the Chiefs of Staff Committee should prepare and submit recommendations as to the policy which should govern in matters of defence research arrangements with Commonwealth and other countries.

2. The Chiefs of Staff, at their meeting of May 7th, concurred with the attached recommendations of the Director General of Defence Research, and agreed to recommend this policy to the Cabinet Defence Committee.

J. W. C. BARCLAY
Acting Lieutenant-Commander

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Extrait du mémorandum du directeur général de recherches pour la défense

Extract from Memorandum by Director General of Defence Research

SECRET

[Ottawa, May n.d., 1946]

...

PART II

A SUGGESTED POLICY TO GUIDE EXTERNAL RELATIONS ON DEFENCE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

(Note: From the viewpoint of external relations, Service research and development are inseparable; hence this part, unlike the others, covers research and development and has important implications concerning production policy.)

13. From a small beginning before the war, Canada has developed Service research and development facilities of considerable scope which have made an important contribution to the technical and scientific progress of the Allied forces. In some fields of purely Service research Canada has taken the initiative in developing original ideas, in others she has been largely dependent upon the United Kingdom or the United States for the initiation and even the direction of research. It is in the interests of all three nations that Canada should gradually assume a greater degree of independence in this field. This does not mean that collaboration would be any less close than it has been, but rather the reverse. Canada would, in effect, become a fully participating partner in research with the other countries, but would limit her activities to those fields in which she has important original ideas or special interests, facilities, or resources. Work in these fields would be done on Canadian initiative and at Canadian expense but with the fullest exchange of ideas, men, and materials, with the UK and USA. This general principle might be elaborated as follows:

(a) Canada wishes to have free and full interchange of information on defence research and development with the United Kingdom and the United States.

(b) Canada intends to devote sufficient effort to defence research and development to produce results which will be of substantial value in this interchange.

(c) Canada wishes to co-operate with the United Kingdom and the United States in any way that may be considered mutually desirable. Consultations would be welcomed and are considered essential but Canada must maintain the initiative in originating her own defence research policy and programme.

(d) Canada is prepared to undertake full-scale research and development only on those items for which we have special facilities or interests and which are within our financial and other resources.

(e) Canada is particularly interested in extending co-operation for technical and operational testing, under Canadian climatic and topographical conditions, of equipment developed by the UK or the US, which are suitable for employment by UK - Canada - US Forces.

(f) Canada desires access to information on defence research fields in which she is not herself actively engaged. In this connection, she would wish to train a limited number of experts among her own personnel for this purpose, and to attach these to establishments in UK and USA where they could acquire the requisite knowledge and skill.

(g) Defence research arrangements with other countries would depend on considerations of security policy, in which Canada would act in closest consultation and association with the United Kingdom and the United States.

(h) In respect of other Commonwealth Countries than the United Kingdom, and with due regard to the aforementioned security policy, defence research arrangements would be entertained by Canada under conditions similar to those applicable to the United Kingdom.

(j) Other external defence arrangements may be expected to develop in accordance with the growth of comparable agencies and activities in the United Nations Organization.

748.

PCO/D-19-15

Mémoire du secrétaire, le Comité des chefs d'état-major, au secrétaire du Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee, to Secretary to the Cabinet

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, May 9, 1946

I pass you herewith for your Top Secret and personal information, the following papers and messages received by the Chiefs of Staff from the Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London.

(a) Memorandum CJSM (5-1) of 2 May 46, together with the following papers:

- (i) Strategic position of the British Commonwealth;
- (ii) Organization of zones of strategic responsibility;
- (iii) Responsibilities for Commonwealth defence.

(b) Message CJSM 80 of 6 May 46,† from the Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London, in reply to message CSC 1058 of 4 May 46;†

(c) Message CJSM 81 of 6 May 46† from the Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London, concerning the paper on organization of zones of strategic responsibility.

J. W. C. BARCLAY
Acting Lieutenant-Commander

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Le secrétaire, la mission interarmes de l'état-major canadien à Londres, au secrétaire, le Comité des chefs d'état-major

Secretary, Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London, to Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee

CJSM (5-1)

London, May 2, 1946

Reference is made to para 7 of CJSM 79.†

The Canadian Joint Staff Mission were given an opportunity to peruse the following papers:

- (a) Strategic Position of British Commonwealth
- (b) Organization of Zones of Strategic Responsibility
- (c) Responsibilities for Commonwealth Defence.

and enclosed herewith are the substances of these papers for the information of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff.

R. L. RAYMONT
Lieutenant-Colonel

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Extraits de mémoires de la mission interarmes de l'état-major canadien à Londres

Extracts from Papers by Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London

TOP SECRET

STRATEGIC POSITION OF THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH

1. This appreciation of the strategic position of the British Commonwealth is written in the light of its resources and the modern conditions of warfare and is concentrated on the preparations in peace and defence in war upon those areas and communications which are vital to the Commonwealth. The implication is that these are:

- (a) The U.K.
- (b) The American Continent
- (c) The White Dominions.

2. In considering the strategic position of the British Commonwealth, a conflict with Russia is the only situation in which it at present seems that the British Commonwealth might again become involved in a major war. In such a conflict it would be vital to obtain the early and wholehearted participation of the United States on the side of the Commonwealth. The consideration of the strategic position is therefore made having particular regard to the possibility of a war in which the British Commonwealth and the United States, with such allies as they could obtain, were confronted by Russia and her satellites.

3. If Russia be taken as the potential aggressor, the following must be considered:

(a) Main support areas on which the war effort of the Commonwealth must be based, and which it is therefore essential for the Commonwealth to hold, and the communications between them.

(b) Other areas of strategical importance in which it is desired to retain Commonwealth influence in order to protect the main support areas, and ensure that the Commonwealth does not start a future war in an unfavourable strategical position.

In considering the above, it must be borne in mind the relative position of the Commonwealth and Russia as regards man-power and war potential which will result from the maintenance or loss of the Commonwealth position in any particular area.

4. The term "main support areas" means those areas which contain concentrations of man-power, industrial potential or sources of food or raw material, such that they are essential to the war effort.

5. It is clear that the following will be the main support areas:

- (a) The United Kingdom.
- (b) The American continent, including South America.
- (c) Africa south of the Sahara, including East Africa.
- (d) Australia and New Zealand.

The position of the United Kingdom is peculiar in that it contains 63 per cent of the white man-power of the British Commonwealth and an even greater proportion of its industrial potential, but is at the same time in a highly vulnerable position geographically. Eventually it may be possible to build up the war potential of the Dominions to such an extent that the relative importance of the United Kingdom will be diminished, but short of mass emigration and the wholesale transfer of industry which at present appears impracticable, the contribution of the United Kingdom in war-making potential will remain so high that, in spite of its vulnerability, it must continue to be classified as a main support area.

6. The position of India also requires consideration. Uncertainty as to her political future makes it unwise, at the present time, to regard her as a main support area. The airfields in North-West India are of great importance, and have great offensive possibilities. India is, however, with the exception of the United Kingdom, more exposed to air attack than the other main support areas.

On the other hand, her geographical position, together with the proportion of the man-power of the Commonwealth which India is in a position to provide is so high and her industrial and supply capacity, which is already increasing, is potentially so great that it is considered that it will undoubtedly be of the greatest importance that India should remain in or closely allied to the Commonwealth and take her place as a main support area in the future.

India has not been included as a main support area in the present review, but it is considered essential that the country should be so developed and the political situation stabilised so as to allow her to take her place as a main support area at the earliest possible moment.

7. Communications between the main support areas will mainly be by sea through the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans. These are of vital importance. In particular, if the war potential of the United Kingdom is to remain available it is essential that her Atlantic sea communications are kept open.

The use of the sea and air communications through the Mediterranean may be of very great importance owing to the saving both of shipping and of time thereby achieved. Although, from the point of view of broad strategy, this route cannot be classified as vital in the same way as are the Atlantic communications, the extent to which freedom of action is and must remain dependent upon limitations of shipping makes it of very great value.

It must also be pointed out that the security of the alternative shipping route via the Cape, which serves either the Mediterranean or the Far East theatre, depends almost entirely on South African co-operation.

EFFECT OF WITHDRAWAL TO MAIN SUPPORT AREAS

8. It may be argued that preparations in peace should be concentrated upon the preservation of main support areas only and of the communications between them, and that outside these areas our commitments should be cut to the minimum. Such a policy might claim the double advantage, not only of reducing commitments, but also of placing between ourselves and the potential aggressor very considerable areas, thereby lessening the chance of conflict.

9. It is suggested, however, that it would be fallacy to suppose that, where territories of strategic importance are concerned, hiatus areas would exist for long between zones of Russian interest and those of Commonwealth interest. If commitments were cut and the predominant position of the Commonwealth in such areas lost thereby, these areas with the war-making potential they contain will, sooner or later, be dominated by Russia. If the Commonwealth moves out in peacetime, Russia will move in, pursuing her policy of extending her influence by all means short of major war to further strategic areas.

10. A policy of concentrating upon the defence of main support areas would result in adding to the Russian controlled area and therefore to the war-making potential at her disposal, the following:

- (a) All Europe less the United Kingdom

(b) North-West Africa

(c) The Middle East and North-East Africa.

11. These additions to Russian-controlled territories would have a far-reaching effort [sic] on the security of Commonwealth sea communications. The communications between the main support areas of the American continent and Southern Africa and Australia could still be maintained, though those in the Atlantic would be threatened from bases in North-West Africa. Communications to the United Kingdom, however, would be gravely threatened through the possession by the enemy of the entire Atlantic coast line from the North Cape to French Morocco. The Mediterranean communications would, of course, be cut.

Because of the great distances involved, air communications would be severely restricted in war and the ability to reinforce by air with the shorter range types would be lost.

Under the circumstances, it is doubtful whether the industrial potential of the United Kingdom could be sustained. The threat to its sea communications, coupled with the direct threat by air attack and long-range bombardment from the mainland of Europe, would introduce a grave risk that the United Kingdom would be reduced to a Malta-type existence, contributing little to the main war potential.

12. Should the U.S.S.R. dominate all the areas given in paragraph 10, she would gain immense additional resources in man-power. As well, she would approximately double her steel-making capacity and acquire substantial additional oil production.

13. It is therefore clear that a policy of withdrawal into the main support areas would produce the following results:

(a) It would render the position of the United Kingdom, if not untenable, at least one of the utmost gravity in which the industrial potential of this country would, to all intents and purposes, be lost. Both India and Southern Africa would be threatened.

(b) It would add considerably, perhaps even decisively, to the man-power and war potential at the disposal of Russia.

In addition, it would greatly reduce the possibility of carrying out offensive operations against areas of importance to the enemy, would add greatly to the depth of his defences and would correspondingly reduce the depth of Commonwealth defences, thereby depriving us of the time necessary to organize defence.

14. If a war with Russia should occur, the Commonwealth is certainly likely to have to give ground in some of these areas, but it should on no account weaken itself in peacetime by surrendering influence in areas of major strategic importance, in advance of a war.

AREAS OF STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE OTHER THAN THE MAIN SUPPORT AREAS

15. From the preceding section it is clear that, if preparations in peace are concentrated upon the main support areas only, the Commonwealth would be at a very grave disadvantage from the start of a conflict. It is therefore necessary to consider the extent to which the Commonwealth should maintain influence in additional areas which will enable it to:

(a) Ensure the security of the main support areas.

(b) Ensure that at the start of a conflict the Commonwealth has sufficient depth in front of its vital areas to allow the necessary time both to mobilize the Commonwealth forces and for the resources of the United States to be brought into play.

(c) Deny to the probable enemy the opportunity of developing in peace important additional resources and war potential.

(d) Attack areas of importance to the enemy at the outbreak of war.

16. In considering the strategic requirements forward of the main support areas, the main factor to be taken into account is the very great numerical superiority in land forces which the Russians would be likely to enjoy in the event of war.

In face of this two main factors will have to be relied upon:

(a) The maintenance of our lead in the scientific and technical fields.

(b) Commonwealth sea and air power.

These factors coupled with Russia's geographical position and economic self-sufficiency lead to the consideration that threat of attack by air or long-range weapons will be our one effective military deterrent to Russian aggression. It is therefore of the greatest importance that control should be retained of the necessary bases to render such attacks possible. Of the main support areas at present assured to the Commonwealth only the United Kingdom is so placed that it could constitute a base for this purpose, but it is obvious that the United Kingdom alone is clearly insufficient.

. . .

SUMMARY

24. Our strategic requirements in addition to the security of our main support areas and the communications between them may therefore be summarized as the establishment and maintenance of our position in:

Western Europe, including Scandinavia

The Iberian Peninsula and North-West Africa

The Middle East, particularly Egypt and Palestine

India and South-East Asia.

25. It is not suggested that in all the above areas a display of military force in peacetime is essential in order to prevent the spread of Russian influence. Our influence can be established and maintained in varying ways, by political action, and by our economic policy as well as by the presence of armed forces. In some cases political action may be all that is possible or required, in others, the actual presence of armed forces may be necessary.

It does not, therefore, follow that our strategical requirements as set out above result in the maintenance of large-scale forces which it is quite clear the country cannot afford to maintain in peacetime.

26. The requirements set out above are based solely upon strategical considerations. It is pointed out, however, that the political and economic considerations of the Commonwealth position, particularly in the Mediterranean and the Middle East, are as follows:

(a) From a political point of view our presence in the Mediterranean is vital to our position as a great Power. On it depends our influence on Spain, France, Italy, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey, and with that goes all that we stand for as the last bastion of social democracy.

(b) We have strong interests in Egypt and in Iraq, where the oil is now one of our greatest economic assets.

(c) It is essential to maintain the Mediterranean as a trade route and as a trade area, to utilize both and to maintain the principles of Western civilization in that area.

(d) It may be necessary to develop within the United Nations Organization a "Western Zone" including Scandinavia, the Low Countries and France. The ability to bring such an organization into existence will depend upon our retaining our position in the Mediterranean.

The above considerations show that as regards Western Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East, the political, economic and strategic requirements coincide.

CONCLUSIONS

27. It is concluded that:

(a) The main support areas upon which the war effort must be based will be the United Kingdom, the American Continent, Southern Africa and Australia. The security of these areas is essential. Every effort should be made to develop and stabilize India as an additional main support area.

(b) The sea and air communications between our main support areas in the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans are of vital importance. Communications through the Mediterranean, though not vital, are of great importance particularly in relation to economy of shipping.

(c) By concentrating in peace upon the main support areas only, the Commonwealth would place itself in an unfavourable strategic situation at the start of any future conflict. We must, therefore, establish and maintain our influence in other areas of strategic importance since it must be assumed that, if we do not, our influence will be supplanted by that of Russia, which must at present be considered as our most probable potential enemy.

(d) These additional areas are Western Europe including Scandinavia; the Iberian Peninsula and North-West Africa; the Middle East, particularly Egypt and Palestine; India and South-East Asia.

If these areas were to fall under Russian domination:

(i) the security of the United Kingdom would be directly threatened.

(ii) Our vital sea communications, particularly those in the Atlantic would not be secure.

(iii) we should lack the essential depth in front of our vital areas to allow the necessary time both for the Commonwealth to mobilize its own forces and for the resources of the United States to be brought into play.

(iv) We should have relinquished to Russia important sources of man-power and war potential.

(v) The Commonwealth would be deprived of bases outside the United Kingdom from which the threat of air action would be a deterrent to Russian aggression and from which we could, at the outset of a war, conduct offensive operations, which might indeed be the only effective means of defence open to us.

28. Our main strategic requirements are based principally upon facts of geography and the distribution of man-power and natural resources which do not change. It is considered therefore that the basic principles of our strategy set out above will not be radically altered by new developments in methods or weapons of warfare.

ORGANIZATION OF ZONES OF STRATEGIC RESPONSIBILITY

OBJECT

The object of this paper is to consider an organization of zones of strategic responsibility designed to simplify and co-ordinate the control of defence of areas of strategic importance to the British Commonwealth.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

2. It is considered that each Zone should consist of areas of strategic importance in which the interest of the three Services, and the interests of the civil organizations, so far as possible coincide. Zones should not be so large that a system of co-ordination within each could not operate effectively. Furthermore, it would be impossible to devise zones which would be strategically independent of each other, and some overlapping of interests is therefore inevitable.

3. The Middle East and the Mediterranean Areas form a strategic whole. Experience during the last war has shown the value of a unified system of control throughout this area. Therefore it is considered that a Middle East Zone on the lines of that already in existence will be required, unless the present policy with regard to the Middle East is radically altered.

4. As regards Australia and New Zealand, it is considered that these Dominions would not accept an arrangement whereby they were included in a British defence zone covering South-East Asia and the Pacific; nor will their resources allow them to accept overall responsibility on behalf of the Commonwealth for the Defence of British interests in S.E. Asia. It is considered that Australia and New Zealand must form either a single or two separate zones, which would include the adjacent territories to the north and east which are of primary strategic importance to them. It would be for the Dominions themselves to decide whether the area should be divided into two separate zones or combined to form a single zone.

5. As regards the area lying between the Middle East and the Australia/New Zealand zones, the creation of a single zone covering the whole area would have the advantage of ensuring that the strategic problems of India, S.E. Asia and the Western Pacific would be considered as a whole. Such an arrangement would however involve either the control of forces in India by a headquarters outside that country or establishing the zone headquarters in Delhi. The first alternative would be unlikely to be acceptable to the Indian Government; the second would also it is considered, be unsatisfactory since a headquarters in Delhi, necessarily deeply concerned with the internal situation in India and the defence of her land frontiers would be mentally and physically remote from the problems of the Western Pacific and to a lesser extent from those of S.E. Asia.

Therefore it is considered that the area between the Middle East and the Australia/New Zealand zone should be divided into an Indian zone and a South-East Asia zone.

6. The whole area under consideration would thus be divided into the following zones:

- (a) The Middle East
- (b) Indian
- (c) South-East Asia
- (d) Australia/New Zealand.

PRINCIPLES OF DEFENCE ORGANIZATION WITHIN ZONES

7. It is considered that within each zone there should be established

(a) An inter-service headquarters, or similar organization, for co-ordinating military matters within the zone between different services and, where necessary, between different commands.

(b) Machinery for co-ordinating civil and military requirements in each zone.

Both the above organizations would also be responsible for liaison with similar organizations in neighbouring zones.

8. The inter-service headquarters, would comprise the senior military authorities within the zone. The nature of this organization would depend on circumstances peculiar to each zone. It is not considered that responsibility for overall command need necessarily be vested in the organization; in certain zones this would not, in any case, be feasible.

9. The machinery for co-ordinating military and civil requirements in each zone should in our view take the form of a Defence Committee, consisting of the representatives of the civil administrations and the military authorities within the zone. The actual organization and composition of the Defence Committee in each zone would vary according to the nature of the civil administration and the organization of the military command.

The responsibility in respect of foreign territories in these zones can only be exercised within the framework of instructions from His Majesty's Government or of such defence agreements as might be concluded between His Majesty's Government and the foreign governments concerned.

10. The planning of our overall strategy and policy for the defence of the Commonwealth must, it is considered, be carried out in London and the Dominions capitals, since the overall picture in regard to resources, political information, intelligence and scientific developments will not be available to individual zones. The defence organization in each zone would perform a complementary function to the higher defence machinery in London and the Dominion capitals, and would be responsible for providing information and advice on which overall policy would be based, and for co-ordinating the measures, particularly administrative arrangements, necessary for the implementation of this policy.

RESPONSIBILITIES FOR COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE

INTRODUCTION

In this paper is examined in broad terms the measures necessary to implement the conclusions reached in the paper on the strategic position of the British Commonwealth, and the views on the allocation of strategic responsibility as between members of the Commonwealth who are carrying out these measures.

In the paper dealing with the strategic position of the British Commonwealth it was shown that the war record of the Commonwealth will depend upon four main support areas and on the lines of communication between them. These areas are the United Kingdom, the American Continent, Southern Africa, and Australia and New Zealand. This paper therefore examines the requirements of a main support area and the steps which the members of the Commonwealth should take to render their territory capable of acting as a main support area.

REQUIREMENTS OF A MAIN SUPPORT AREA

Industrial Facilities

The UK which is geographically the most vulnerable area in the Commonwealth possesses an unduly high proportion of the Commonwealth's industry and war potential. In a future war the position of the UK is likely to be even more difficult than in the last war and it may even be neutralized. The Commonwealth would then only be able to continue the fight if it had developed adequately the industrial potential of the remaining support areas. The development of heavy industry, and in particular the shipbuilding and aircraft industries, in the Dominions is therefore a task to which the Commonwealth should give the highest priority which economic conditions will allow. Each main support area would also require a main naval base with fully developed docking and repair facilities, both for ships and for naval aircraft.

Man-power

Each main support area requires in war an adequate reserve of man-power for the services, and sufficient skilled industrial workers to support the war effort. At present the United Kingdom contains 63% of the white man-power of the Commonwealth and Empire. On strategic grounds it is clearly desirable to spread this man-power more evenly throughout the Commonwealth by encouraging overseas settlement in the Dominions to the greatest possible extent. So far as economic conditions in the UK will allow it is considered therefore that emigration should be encouraged. The Dominions should as their contribution, encourage overseas settlement.

Accumulation of Materials and Supplies

The vulnerability of the United Kingdom makes it undesirable to hold there the main concentration of supplies and materials for the Commonwealth war effort. The Dominions might therefore assist by making available storage facilities into which may be fed reserve stocks of armaments and service equipment of all kinds. Facilities for the production in the Dominions of specialized war stores and equipment should also be developed, so that replacement of stocks could be carried out, thus avoiding the holding of large reserves of material which may quickly become obsolete. By this means up to date materials would be available to equip the forces in each support area, and so allow the necessary time for each Dominion to mobilize its industry for war. The possibility of stationing in the Dominions ships of the Royal Navy, in reserve, should be considered.

Training Facilities

Although in peacetime reasons of economy and man-power shortages will not allow the Commonwealth training facilities to be spread evenly between the main support areas, it would be desirable to see the Dominions maintain their own service training establishments, including those for combined operations, on such a basis that they could expand quickly and easily to receive and train UK man-power in the event of war.

In particular though it will not be possible in peacetime to keep alive the Empire Air Training Scheme by providing personnel for training from this country, air training throughout the Commonwealth should be developed along homogeneous lines and airfields, which could be rapidly developed should be maintained, if only on a care and maintenance basis. Without such a basic skeleton neither the R.A.F nor the Fleet Air Arm could hope in war to provide the training facilities required by their rapidly expanding forces. In addition, it is considered desirable to see certain training schools and facilities set up in the Dominions by the Royal Navy during the past war, maintained on care and maintenance.

Research and Development

Though there has been very close co-operation during the war in the field of scientific research between the Dominions and this country, it has, in general, been on little more than an ad hoc basis.

The necessity for formally correlating Commonwealth research in all matters concerning defence has now been accepted, and preliminary talks to see how far this can be achieved will shortly be taking place in this country.

Arrangements are in hand with the Dominions to make available for joint use areas suitable for carrying out development trials of such new weapons as cannot adequately be tested in the United Kingdom, i.e. atomic weapons, long-range rockets and weapons connected with bacteriological and chemical warfare.

Intelligence

It has been proposed that Joint Intelligence Bureaux, to be responsible for the collection, collation and where appropriate, the appreciation of intelligence of an inter-service significance such as topographical, economic, airfields and ports, and for the production of geographical handbooks on such subjects, be established in Australia, Canada and the United Kingdom. Such Bureaux would be the main production centres, while collecting centres would be established in South Africa, as well as in the Middle East and India. It is intended that there should be a free interchange of material and personnel between the Bureaux throughout the Commonwealth.

DEFENCE OF MAIN SUPPORT AREAS AND COMMUNICATIONS

Defence of Main Support Areas

The UK and the four great Dominions themselves form the main support areas for the Commonwealth war effort. The primary responsibility for the security of each of these areas and for the maintenance in peace of the necessary forces therefore falls naturally upon the member of the Commonwealth concerned.

It is considered that this responsibility should be extended to include responsibility for the strategic co-ordination of Commonwealth defence measures throughout the strategic zone of which each main support area is the heart.

Protection of Lines of Communication between Main Support Areas

Commonwealth Defence depends largely on the maintenance of safe communications. However highly developed a main support area may be, it will be of little value to the Commonwealth if its resources cannot be utilized when and where required.

In the past, the protection of sea communications devolved to a great extent on the UK, though as the last war proceeded, the Dominions made increasing contributions to this commitment.

The increasing vulnerability of the United Kingdom under the threat of new weapons makes it unlikely however that this country will be able in future to provide as large a portion of the effort as in the past.

It is therefore considered that the security of the main Commonwealth communications linking the main support area should be accepted as the joint responsibility of the members immediately concerned in each case.

To this end it is proposed that there should be discussion on a staff level, of the following problems:

(a) The maintenance of nucleus naval forces, including Naval aircraft, backed by adequate reserves.

(b) The maintenance of suitable air forces backed by adequate reserves organized with a view to expansion and reinforcement in War or emergency.

(c) The retention of repair and maintenance facilities for the above.

(d) The retention and development of air and naval operational bases.

(e) The maintenance of staging posts and terminal bases on air routes.

(f) The maintenance of reserves of ammunition, torpedoes, equipment and stores, etc.

(g) Areas in which the members of the Commonwealth would assume joint responsibility for sea communications, and delineation of command boundaries.

...

CONCLUSIONS

It is concluded that each member of the Commonwealth should:

(a) accept responsibility for the development and defence of their Main Support Area and the strategic zone around it.

(b) accept the principle of joint responsibility between members of the Commonwealth concerned for the protection of lines of communication between Main Support Areas.

(c) agree that it is in their strategic interest to assist both politically and militarily in maintaining the Commonwealth position in those protective areas which directly affect the security of their territory and communications.

749.

DEA/50255-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum by Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa,] May 24, 1946

DEFENCE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT; EXTERNAL POLICY

At the meeting of the Cabinet on May 22nd, the recommendation of the Cabinet Defence Committee, namely that part two of Dr. Solandt's paper be accepted as a statement of interim policy and taken as a guide to the delegation to the forthcoming Commonwealth Conference in London in June, was approved.

It was understood that the question of policy would be reviewed upon the return of the Canadian delegation.

H. W[RONG]

750.

DEA/7-CM-1

Procès-verbal d'une réunionMinutes of a Meeting

TOP SECRET

COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE

NOTE ON A MEETING HELD AT NO. 10 DOWNING STREET,
ON FRIDAY, 7TH JUNE, 1946

The Right Hon. C. R. Attlee, M.P., Prime Minister of the United Kingdom

The Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Prime Minister of Canada

The Right Hon. Viscount Addison,
Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs

General Sir Hastings Ismay,
Office of the Minister of Defence

MR. ATTLEE said that the existing organisation for military liaison between Canada and the United Kingdom consisted of the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in London on the one hand, and the military advisers to the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa on the other. He asked Mr. Mackenzie King for his views as to whether this organisation should continue.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that he favoured the continuation of this organisation, provided that it was clearly understood that the work of these Missions was primarily informatory and that there was no question of their entering into commitments. It would be better, he thought, that the arrangements should not be too formal.

LORD ADDISON intervened to say that this very point had been raised at their recent discussions with the other Dominions and that it had been agreed that the officers in question should be called "Liaison Officers" rather than a "Mission".

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that he would consult his Ministerial colleagues and the Chiefs of Staff in Canada before taking a definite decision as to whether the existing organisation for Anglo-Canadian military liaison should continue. In saying this he did not qualify his general inclination to favour its continuance as previously expressed.

He then referred to the work of the Canadian-U.S. Joint Defence Board. This Board had no executive authority, but referred all their conclusions to their respective Governments. During the war their conclusions had generally been accepted without much ado, but more recently, the Canadian Government had felt it right to ask for more time to consider the various proposals remitted to them. The United States Government were concerned about the possibility of attack via Canada, and were anxious to have certain rights and facilities in that country. Their requests were being considered. Meanwhile, everything went to show that collaboration between the U.K. and Canada on military matters would have to take into account the necessity for close collaboration between the U.S. and Canada.

751.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 405

Mémorandum du deuxième secrétaire, le haut commissariat en Grande-Bretagne, au secrétaire par intérim,<sup>1</sup> le haut commissariat en Grande-Bretagne

Memorandum from Second Secretary, High Commission in Great Britain, to Acting Secretary,<sup>1</sup> High Commission in Great Britain

SECRET

[n.d.]

COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE SCIENCE CONFERENCE

Dr. Solandt called on me in accordance with a suggestion made by Mr. Robertson to describe the Conference which has recently taken place among Commonwealth representatives on Defence Science. The technical aspects of this matter will, of course, be reported by Dr. Solandt to the Department of National Defence, and it was only the political aspects which we discussed. Dr. Solandt said that the Conference, as expected, had agreed to recommend to the Governments concerned the appointment of a Commonwealth Defence Advisory Council. This would be a purely advisory body with no executive powers which would co-ordinate information concerning the work of defence science in various parts of the Commonwealth. Dr. Solandt expressed the opinion that the Council would be more valuable for Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, than for Canada. However, he considered that it would be very useful for Canada, as it would assist in the planning of Canadian research to know what was going on in other parts of the Commonwealth. Dr. Solandt was obviously pleased with the political aspects of the Conference. There was no suggestion from the United Kingdom authorities of a desire to control or plan the work of the Commonwealth. They did not suggest maintaining their own establishments in Canada, for instance. Their aim in this matter was part of their general intention to disperse the scientific brains and capacities of the Commonwealth. Such an aim would, of course, be in keeping with the general principles enunciated in the Chiefs of Staff paper which was presented at the recent meeting of Prime Ministers.

<sup>1</sup> Frederic Hudd.

An interesting feature of the Conference was the presence of United States observers. Apparently this arrangement was made without the knowledge of the State Department. The suggestion that there be American observers originated out of the very friendly relations between the United States Military Attaché in London and the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff. The Military Attaché secured the approval of the United States War Department and some of the observers came from Washington. Presumably the State Department learned later what was happening through the Embassy. There is no evidence, however, that they made any complaint. United States observers, at their own suggestion, did not attend the meeting of the Central Committee but they did attend the meetings of the Sub-Committees which discussed the details of scientific research. Apparently the relations between the observers and the British Commonwealth representatives could scarcely have been more cordial. The members of the Conference agreed to recommend to their Governments that the fruits of all Commonwealth defence scientific research be made available to the United States without asking any counters or making any bargains. The United Kingdom representatives stated that the other members of the Commonwealth could do what they wished in this regard but that this was the established principle on which their Chiefs of Staff worked. They admitted that Americans did not follow the same principle entirely, but nevertheless the Chiefs of Staff were determined to continue this practice. It was their view that the Commonwealth would never fight the United States but that on the other hand would find it necessary to fight with the United States in another war and that therefore they had nothing to lose from this practice of sharing. I asked Dr. Solandt if there was any nervousness lest the Americans exploit British inventions for commercial purposes. He said that this question had been raised but that all Commonwealth representatives had agreed that the United States was possibly the most reliable country in the world with regard to the protection of patents.

As a matter of minor interest, Dr. Solandt stated that although the Canadian and South African representatives expressed their desire to cooperate with the United Kingdom in any projects that were suggested, they did not wish to be told by the United Kingdom what to do. The Australians and New Zealanders, however, expressed the desire that the United Kingdom Government tell the Australian Government what they would like Australian and New Zealand defence scientists to undertake. Dr. Solandt agreed with my suggestion that in the case of Australia this was a reflection of the differences which exist between the Australian Government in Canberra and the Australian Chiefs of Staff in Melbourne. He said that the Australian representatives were frank in saying that unless the United Kingdom Government put pressure on the Australian Government, nothing would be done. In this connection, it may be worth mentioning that when Dr. Evatt and Mr. Chifley were in London, they expressed their surprise to the United Kingdom authorities at the way in which the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff were allowed to express their opinions on political matters as they did in their memoranda. The Australians seemed to feel that Chiefs of Staff were rather dangerous people who must be kept in their place and not allowed to do more than they were specifically asked.

Dr. Solandt stated that it was unanimously felt in the Conference that the next meeting should not be held in the United Kingdom and that the obvious place was Canada as Canada alone had the facilities. Another reason was that there was a desire to continue co-operating with the Americans and that for this reason a meeting in Canada would be appropriate. The understanding apparently was that if Canada would have a Conference of this kind, the Canadian Government could feel free to invite as many Americans as it wished to play as active a part as they wished in the Conference. I suggested to Dr. Solandt that although a conference of this kind including the Americans would probably be more acceptable to Canadian public opinion, nevertheless it might not be acceptable to United States opinion in view of the alarm expressed in many quarters over Mr. Churchill's suggestions at Fulton of a Commonwealth-United States alliance. We agreed that this sort of co-operation is perhaps best carried on without too much advertising. In fact, the meeting in London attracted very little public attention and the proceedings were not reported in the Press.

J. W. H[OLMES]

752.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CIRCULAR TELEGRAM D. 866

London, September 21, 1946

IMPORTANT. TOP SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: It is intended to publish shortly before Parliament reassembles on the 8th October a White Paper<sup>1</sup> on our central organization for defence, which will announce certain changes in the existing organization, including the appointment of a Minister of Defence. A summary of the White Paper will be telegraphed to you for your information in the near future, but in the meantime I should be grateful if you would consider four paragraphs on Commonwealth collaboration which form part of the section of the White Paper called "Organization for Collective Defence". The text of these paragraphs is contained in my immediately following telegram. If you have any comments to make on these paragraphs, I should be glad to have them as soon as possible, and at the latest by the end of the month, since arrangements for printing must be made then. Ends.

<sup>1</sup> Central Organization for Defence: Proposals and Organization for Collective Defence.

753.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CIRCULAR TELEGRAM D. 867

London, September 21, 1946

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: White Paper on Central Organization for Defence. Following is text of paragraphs on Commonwealth collaboration, Begins:

Paragraph 36. Commonwealth collaboration. Methods of collaboration between the various members of the Commonwealth are governed by the principle enunciated in the Statute of Westminster. Even before 1923, the conception that there should be a central authority in London representative of all the self-governing members of the Commonwealth to review defence questions and prepare central plans which would be binding on the whole Commonwealth and Empire was never recognized as practicable, even if it were desirable. Admittedly, the Dominions have a close interest in problems that affect the Commonwealth and Empire as a whole, but each of them has a special and distinct outlook on world affairs dependent on its geographical position and its political and economic environment, and Dominion Governments must retain full liberty of action. Cooperation in Commonwealth defence has, therefore, always taken the practical form of promoting uniformity of organization, training and equipment of military forces, the closest possible touch between Staffs and the interchange of officers to promote a common doctrine and outlook in military affairs. Collaboration between the naval, land and air forces from different parts of the Commonwealth and Empire in war-time has thus been easy and effective.

Paragraph 37. Since 1923, the natural tendency of the different parts of the Commonwealth to view problems from their own individual standpoint has become more marked. During the recent war, no attempt was made to revive the Imperial War Cabinet of 1917-18, but this did not prevent the maintenance of a very close touch between the Governments of the Commonwealth, not only by telegraphic means, but by constant meetings between Ministers, officers and officials on all levels. In this way, it was possible to make common plans for military action for the coordination of munitions production and for the cooperation of scientists and technicians in research and development. This flexible system of handling problems of mutual concern has proved very effective and it was the object of study at the recent discussions in London in the spring of 1946. The attitude of the Assembled representatives of the Governments of the Commonwealth is illustrated by the communiqué issued at the conclusion of those discussions. Though this was concerned with consultation with the Dominions generally, it is fully applicable to our existing methods of consultation on defence questions. The following is an extract from that communiqué:

“At the conclusion of the meetings, the assembled representatives of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa place on record their appreciation of the value of this series of consultations which exemplify the system of free discussion and exchange of views that characterizes the relations of the countries of the British Commonwealth.

“The existing methods of consultation have proved their worth. They include a continuous exchange of information and comment between the different members of the Commonwealth. They are flexible and can be used to meet a variety of situations and needs, both those where the responsibility is on one member alone and where the responsibility may have to be shared.

“They are peculiarly appropriate to the charter of the British Commonwealth with its independent members who have shown by their sacrifices in the common cause their devotion to kindred ideals and their community of outlook. While all are willing to consider and adopt practicable proposals for developing the existing system, it is agreed that the methods now practised are preferable to any rigid centralized machinery. In their view, such centralized machinery would not facilitate and might even hamper the combination of autonomy and unity which is characteristic of the British Commonwealth and is one of their great achievements.”

Paragraph 38. The natural starting-point for future progress in Commonwealth defence has been the idea of regional association. Geography largely decides which problems most directly concern the separate members of the Commonwealth and it is the aim of the various Governments to recognize and take advantage of this fact by arranging that regional questions shall in the first place be studied in the appropriate regional centre. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have proposed that there should be established in the Capital of each of the Dominions United Kingdom liaison officers who could join with the Dominion Chiefs of Staff in studying regional security problems. Similarly, they have proposed that Dominion Governments should appoint liaison officers in London. It has been suggested that by this means regional studies can be directed by the Government most immediately concerned with the help of a team of joint advisers. The fruits of these studies can be made available in London and in the other Dominion Capitals and in this way that measure of coordination which is necessary can be secured. The exact method of organizing the interchange of Missions will depend upon the varying constitutional practices in the different parts of the Commonwealth.

Paragraph 39. These proposals received a favourable hearing at the discussions in London in the spring and His Majesty's Governments in the Dominions are studying them in detail. There is reason to suppose that in the main they will prove acceptable and that they will pave the way for machinery which, while giving full play to the independence of the member States of the Commonwealth, will be effective as a means of consultation and collaboration.

This regional method of organization will also fit well into any regional schemes evolved under the aegis of the United Nations in which other States will join with members of the Commonwealth in appropriate geographical areas. Ends. Message ends.

754.

I.A.M./Vol. 99

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité de défense du Cabinet, au Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Cabinet

SECRET

[Ottawa,] September 23, 1946

DEFENCE SCIENCE; REPORT OF INFORMAL COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

1. An informal Commonwealth Conference on Defence Science was held in London last June for the purpose of furthering collaboration in the field of defence science within the Commonwealth. The conclusions and recommendations emerging from these discussions are contained in the report of the Conference, and the various participating governments are asked to say whether or not they are in agreement with the policy stated.

2. Canada was represented at the Conference by Dr. O. M. Solandt, the Director General of Defence Research, assisted by Service and technical specialists. The United States accepted an invitation to attend, and their representative was present for most of the discussions.

3. The Conference attached great importance, from a security standpoint, to maintaining technical initiative, and considered that special arrangements for the general coordination of work should be set up to achieve this end.

They accordingly recommended:

(a) that a Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science should be formed for coordinating and liaison purposes, and that meetings of this Committee should be held annually; and

(b) that the Committee should be served by a permanent working party in the United Kingdom, consisting of representatives of all members of the Commonwealth, and a secretarial staff to administer its affairs.

4. The Conference also exchanged views on methods of cooperation in the field of defence research and development with the United States and other foreign governments, and they agreed that collaboration with the United States was of the utmost importance, though they recognized that for the present it must, for political reasons, remain on an informal basis. They accordingly recommended that all results of research in the Commonwealth should be made freely available to the United States without bargaining or restriction.

5. The Conference set up a series of sub-committees to study specific aspects of the subject, and in their reports Canada is asked:

(a) to consider what work she could usefully undertake on guided and propelled missiles, with special reference to low temperature testing facilities;

(b) to consider whether existing or proposed establishments for the testing of guided missiles and projectiles would be suitable for the testing of supersonic pilotless aircraft;

(c) to consider the continuation of investigations of biological warfare problems;

(d) to consider the continuation of present arrangements for de-icing work in Canada—great importance being attached to this subject; and

(e) that consideration should be given to the possibilities of using the area of the experimental station at Suffield for the testing of large concrete structures.

The Conference recommended that these reports be accepted as a basis for further discussion.

6. At the conclusion of the Conference, it was proposed that the first meeting of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee should be held in Canada in 1947, and the Canadian representative was asked to indicate whether this would be acceptable to his government.

7. The report has been considered by the Cabinet Defence Committee, in consultation with the Chiefs of Staff, and it has been agreed to recommend to the Cabinet:

(a) acceptance of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Informal Commonwealth Conference on Defence Science; and

(b) that no decision need be taken at this time on the question of holding the 1947 meeting of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee in Canada.

E. W. T. GILL

755.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Great Britain

TELEGRAM 1728

Ottawa, September 30, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Reference Dominions Office telegrams D. 866 and 867 of September 21st, White Paper on Central Organization for Defence.

We shall have some comments on Paragraph 38 of the draft paper, but we shall not be able to clear these for despatch before the middle of the week.

Will you please so inform the Dominions Office, expressing regret that we cannot offer our observations by the end of the month as requested.

756.

PCO/C-20-2

Extrait de lettre du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet au président, le Comité des chefs d'état-major

Extract of Letter from Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet to Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee

Ottawa, October 3, 1946

Dear Air Marshal Leckie,

Among the items dealt with by the Cabinet at their meeting of October 2nd, the following are of interest to the Chiefs of Staff Committee:

Defence Science; report of informal Commonwealth conference

The Minister of National Defence presented a report on the informal Commonwealth conference on defence science recently held in the United Kingdom.

The conference recommended that a Commonwealth Advisory Committee be established for co-ordinating and liaison purposes and that the Committee be served by a permanent working party composed of Commonwealth representatives. Canada was asked to consider undertaking investigation and research in a number of specialized fields.

The Cabinet approved the recommendations of the Cabinet Defence Committee that

(1) the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the informal Commonwealth Conference on Defence Science be accepted; and,

(2) that no decision be taken at present on the holding of the 1947 meeting of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee in Canada.

• • •

Yours sincerely,

J. R. BALDWIN

757.

DEA/7-CM-1

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary*

TELEGRAM 379

Ottawa, October 3, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Prime Minister from Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegrams D. 866 and D. 867 of September 21st, White Paper on Central Organization for Defence.

We should welcome complete revision of paragraph 38 of this Paper, which appears to us open to misinterpretation concerning both the place and planning of regional defence and the functions of liaison officers in Commonwealth capitals.

2. In the first place the paragraph might read as implying an intention to organize regional defence on a Commonwealth basis without the participation of other countries. In the case of Canada it is obvious that the defence of North America must, for the most part, be planned by the United States and Canada jointly, and your Chiefs of Staff are familiar with the plans now under discussion between ourselves and the United States. We think, therefore, that emphasis on the term "regional defence" is misleading as there will be great variety in the methods adopted by various Commonwealth Governments, involving close co-operation in some cases with foreign governments.

3. With regard to the proposed liaison officers, the description in this paragraph appears to contemplate functions of a representative character which would be on a distinctly higher level than was contemplated in paragraph 7 of Paper P.M.M. (46) 20,† from the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff submitted at the meeting of Prime Ministers earlier this year in London. In particular the paragraph appears to imply that the liaison officers in each capital would regularly sit with the Chiefs of Staff concerned for the purpose of regional planning so that the Governments of each Commonwealth country would be furnished with joint advice. We consider that our own Service representatives to be appointed in London and perhaps in other Commonwealth capitals should not be empowered to enter into commitments, although we would expect them to have access to the Chiefs of Staff in the capital in which they were stationed when instructed to take up particular matters. Their functions would be to act as a channel of information and liaison.

4. We are now giving consideration to draft instructions for the Canadian Service representatives in London which would be in line with the views set forth in the preceding paragraph.

758.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2005

London, October 3, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. Your telegram No. 1728 of September 30th, White Paper on Central Organization for Defence.

1. I communicated at once to Dominions Office regret at our inability to make desired comments, and I have received an immediate note from the Under-Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, informing me that, as forecast in telegram Circular D. 866 of September 21st, it was found necessary to fix 12:00 noon, October 2nd, as latest time for sending the White Paper to printer in order to ensure that it be published on Friday next before Parliament re-assembles, a matter to which great importance is attached here.

2. Matter was brought to the attention of the Prime Minister, so that he might consider whether in circumstances any alteration of timetable was possible, but he felt compelled to adhere to present arrangements for reason mentioned.

3. I am informed it is, therefore, unfortunately unavoidable that White Paper will appear in its present form, before opportunity is had of considering observations on paragraph 38 which your telegram indicates you desire to make.

4. Dominions Office express regret that timetable difficulties should have been so compelling and request me to explain circumstances.

759.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Great Britain

TELEGRAM 1746

Ottawa, October 3, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: Your telegram 2005 of October 3rd, concerning White Paper on Defence, was received just as we were despatching our comments on paragraph 38. I was only able to clear these this morning and I hope that they will still be able to make some changes. While the language of paragraph 39 to some degree qualifies the general statements in paragraph 38, I feel that we may encounter some difficulties in Washington unless our suggestions for revision are adopted, in addition to any problems arising from misunderstandings inside the Commonwealth on the functions of Service Liaison Missions. Ends.

760.

DEA/7-CM-1

Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 2017

London, October 4, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Wrong from Robertson, Begins: Your telegram No. 1746 of October 3rd, and your telegram No. 379 of October 3rd to Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs.

1. I spoke to Brook and Machtig this morning. The former had already seen Attlee, who is replying direct to the Prime Minister's message.<sup>1</sup> As you will see from his reply, the United Kingdom Government feel that they cannot at this hour withdraw their White Paper on the Central Organization for Defence. Its publication will herald an important and long-awaited Cabinet reshuffle, the announcement of which Attlee feels he cannot defer. Copies of the White Paper have already been communicated to the leaders of the Opposition, arrangements have been made for a preparatory press conference at four o'clock this afternoon, and everything is set for publication in tomorrow morning's newspapers. From the importance which the United Kingdom Government attach to the timing of this announcement, one might infer that it was not unrelated to the Blackpool Conservative Conference, and to Churchill's speech tomorrow night, with which it will share the Sunday papers.

2. I told Machtig, whom I saw later, that, apart from the two specific points in paragraph 38 to which your telegram took exception, the tone and apparent implications of the whole passage relating to Commonwealth cooperation in defence matters might be found misleading in Canada and would perhaps compel our Government to make it clear that it had not yet committed itself to any particular methods or machinery for furthering cooperation in defence questions, and that the measures outlined in the United Kingdom paper were simply proposals that commended themselves to the United Kingdom Government and were now being examined by the Canadian Government.

3. Machtig said that none of the other Commonwealth Governments had objected to the terms of the proposed United Kingdom statement, though Chifley had intimated that its publication might make it necessary for him to make a public statement of the Australian position along the lines of his statement in the Prime Ministers' meetings in May last.

4. I told Machtig that I thought that the whole business was an instructive illustration of the dangers that lay in the United Kingdom's propensity to keep issuing public statements about aspects of Commonwealth relationships that really did not need further explanation or embellishment. Their publication at this time of the conception of cooperation in defence matters which they would like to see established might well prejudice progress in practical working arrangements, in which our Government had always shown its readiness to cooperate.

5. Specifically it seemed to me to be a serious political mistake to attempt to inflate the functions and status of the liaison officers whom they wished to see appointed. Their tendency to play them up might compel other countries to play them down, to nobody's advantage. I reminded them that the attachment last spring of service advisers to the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada had been accepted as a perfectly normal office routine analogous to the appointment of Service Attachés to the American, French or Soviet Embassies. For all formal, diplomatic and public purposes the status of the several Military Attachés in relation to the Canadian Defence Departments was identical. Neither the United States Government nor our Government would feel any public purpose was served by publicizing the private fact that working relations between our Defence Departments and the American Service Attachés, and between American Service Departments and our Joint Staff in Washington, were on a much more intimate and confidential footing than the nominally similar relationship maintained with the service representatives of certain other countries. Public insistence on the closeness and intimacy of these liaisons might be the one sure way of making them difficult if not impossible. More or less similar considerations should be taken into account in considering how liaison in defence matters between Commonwealth countries could be improved.

<sup>1</sup> Le document suivant.

<sup>2</sup> Following document.

6. I also mentioned to Machtig our fear that the publication at this time of the United Kingdom Government's ideas about methods of Commonwealth liaison in defence matters might have a bearing on our Government's considerations of the timeliness of publishing the P.J.B.D.'s recommendation regarding the bases of Canadian-American cooperation in Continental defence. This was a major question of Governmental policy and one that I hoped would not be prejudiced by the premature publication of the United Kingdom Government's proposals.

7. Machtig said that he very much regretted that the text could not now be revised in the light of our observations and if they had been received a few days earlier he had no doubt that the text would have been amended accordingly. In the circumstances, he would do his best to have the Commonwealth aspect of the White Paper played down in this afternoon's press conference. The emphasis in United Kingdom press treatment would undoubtedly be on the Ministerial reorganization which the statement foreshadows, and he was hopeful that paragraph 38 would not receive as much attention or cause as much embarrassment as I thought it possibly might. Ends.

761.

DEA/7-CM-1

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 164

London, October 4, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. PERSONAL AND PRIVATE. Following for Prime Minister from Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegram No. 379 of October 3rd. As explained to your Acting High Commissioner on October 2nd, arrangements had already been made for publication on October 5th of the White Paper on Defence Organization. These arrangements for publication had been timed to fit in with the announcement of certain changes which I am making in my Cabinet. The White Paper had been formally laid before Parliament and the final text was being printed. In these circumstances, I am sure you will understand that I could not delay publication while amendments to paragraph 38 were discussed.

2. That paragraph is, in fact, no more than a factual statement of the proposals which the United Kingdom Government put before the meeting of Prime Ministers in the spring for study in detail. It does not purport to state decisions. I doubt, therefore, whether it need give rise to the misinterpretation which you fear. I shall, however, take special care to see that in explanations of the White Paper given here, both to the press on publication and thereafter in debate in Parliament, the position on both points made in your telegram is made quite clear. This should avoid any risk of misunderstanding. We will lay special emphasis on the final sentences of paragraphs 38 and 39, respectively.

3. I should much have preferred to have been able to agree to text with you, but I am sure that you will realize my difficulties. The other Dominions have not suggested amendments. Best wishes. Ends.

762.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 381

Ottawa, October 5, 1946

SECRET. PERSONAL AND PRIVATE. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegram No. 164 of October 4th.

I appreciate the circumstances which made it difficult for you, at this stage, to delay publication of your White Paper. It is unfortunate, nevertheless, that the arrangements made for publication did not permit a more adequate period for consultation on those passages which relate to Commonwealth defence. We have been giving anxious consideration to defence questions and it was not possible to comment constructively immediately after receipt of your telegrams of September 21st. You will recall that at our discussions in London it was understood that further consideration and consultation with colleagues and advisers would be needed before a definite decision could be taken on the nature and extent of continuing military liaison.

2. The criticisms made in my telegram No. 379 of October 3rd relate to points of substance to which we attach serious importance, particularly in view of our relationship with the United States in matters of regional defence. We feel, therefore, that, apart from any problems which may arise from misunderstandings within the Commonwealth on the functions of Service Liaison Missions, the matter may cause some difficulties in Washington. I shall, of course, make no public reference to the matter here unless public comment makes it necessary that I should make our position clear. All good wishes. Ends.

763.

DEA/7-DA

Mémoire du Comité des chefs d'état-major au Comité de défense du Cabinet

Memorandum from Chiefs of Staff Committee to Cabinet Defence Committee

[Ottawa,] October 10, 1946

SERVICE LIAISON ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE U.K.

1. In accordance with the direction given at your meeting of July 24th, we have considered the question of future Service liaison arrangements with the U.K. and our proposals are submitted hereunder:

ORGANIZATION

2. We propose that the Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London, which was constituted by Cabinet War Committee decision of January 8th, 1945, be superseded by a liaison staff composed of senior officers of the three Armed Services and Defence Research, who will act individually as liaison officers and advisers to the Canadian High Commissioner in the U.K. and collectively as a joint liaison staff. In this latter capacity, the senior officer will be responsible for advising the High Commissioner and for maintaining a link with the U.K. Chiefs of Staff Committee on matters of a joint service nature.

3. Draft instructions to organize the liaison staff along these lines are attached as Appendix "A",† and submitted for approval.

4. Attached as Appendix "B"† is the proposed establishment for each service and Defence Research. These establishments total 21 officers, made up of 5 Navy, 8 Army, 3 Air Force and 4 Defence Research, together with one officer drawn from each Service in rotation to act as secretary to the senior officer. For this staff appropriate administrative and stenographic personnel are provided.

5. In addition to the Naval liaison staff, the Navy have a commitment in the form of the depot ship, H.M.C.S. Niobe (establishment shown in Appendix "C"),† which will be required while H.M.C. ships are being built in the United Kingdom and comparatively large numbers of officers and men are employed in the U.K. either on loan or under training. In order to create as economical a plan as possible, the Navy desire that, for accommodation purposes, this staff be housed in the same building as the Joint Liaison Staff, so that the Naval advisers to the High Commissioner can also assume the duties of Commanding Officer, H.M.C.S. Niobe.

6. Similarly, the R.C.A.F. requires technical and operational officers to maintain contact with R.A.F. operational and technical establishments, in order that up-to-date information on R.A.F. procedures and developments is available to the R.C.A.F. in Canada for future planning, operations, training and technical requirements. Duplication of these R.A.F. facilities in Canada would require very extensive manpower and financial commitments. These officers will constitute the R.C.A.F. liaison group and, in order to achieve maximum economy, it is desired that, for accommodation purposes and unified direction, this group be housed in the same building as the Joint Liaison Staff. (For details of liaison group, see Appendix "D".) †

7. These personnel would, of course, be provided within presently authorized Service manpower ceilings, and no increases would be involved. Also, all duplication of functions with regard to administration, operation of motor transport and communications has been eliminated, one Service being designated to assume the responsibilities for all in each of these fields.

8. The provision of motor transport, on the scale shown—i.e. 14 passenger cars, is considered essential to enable the officers of these staffs to visit the many headquarters and technical formations within driving radius of London. This transport is provided primarily for this purpose and not for conveyance within London.

9. These establishments will of course be kept under periodic review with a view to reduction when and where possible.

ACCOMMODATION

10. A survey has been made by Canadian Joint Staff Mission in London to locate suitable accommodation. Adequate space, centrally situated, has been found at 31/32/33 Charles Street, Mayfair at a yearly rental of 8,000 pounds including rates. Subject to your approval of the organization outlined above we propose that action be taken to conclude the lease on the property and organize the Joint Liaison Staff at that location.

RECOMMENDATION

11. We therefore recommend for your approval that:

(a) the Canadian Joint Liaison Staff, London be organized on the basis outlined in this Memorandum and that instructions to this effect be issued along the lines of the attached draft;

(b) the liaison staff be established at a joint headquarters in central London and the Departments of National Defence be authorized to negotiate for the leasing of the Charles Street property for this purpose.

O. M. SOLANDT

H. E. REID
Vice-Admiral

CHARLES FOULKES
Lieutenant-General

W. A. CURTIS
Air Marshal for Chief of the Air Staff

764.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 191

London, November 9, 1946

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: Am sure that you would wish to know at once that we have come to the inescapable conclusion that it is necessary for us to have a permanent scheme of compulsory national service for men. You will, of course, be hearing full details in due course, but the main features of the scheme are:

(i) That it is to include every able-bodied man, regardless of class, trade or occupation.

(ii) That the term of embodied service is to be 1½ years, and that thereafter every man is liable to 5½ years' service in the auxiliary forces, i.e., a total of 7 years' service in all.

(iii) That it is to be introduced on 1st January, 1949, the date to which our present compulsory service scheme would remain in operation.

2. You will realize that the economic, industrial and financial implications of this decision are very grave. In the economic field, for example, it is quite clear that the maintenance of forces of the size we contemplate under the scheme will make heavy inroads on man-power which would otherwise be employed in helping to restore the economic life of the country. On present forecasts, it looks as if the gap between availability and requirements in men for all our purposes will be very wide indeed, and we can hardly see how it can be bridged. Similarly, in the financial field, we calculate that the maintenance of our forces under the scheme will cost about 750 million pounds a year. When compared with our average pre-war expenditure on defence, which was not much more than 100 million pounds a year, you will realize what this means.

3. You will remember that during the Conference of Dominion Prime Ministers last April and May, a paper was circulated (P.M.M. (46)31) summarizing the military commitments of the United Kingdom, and the economic and financial implications of the drastic measures that it had been necessary to take in order to fulfil them. It seemed clear from the discussion on this paper that you were much impressed by the burden which this country is bearing in the field of defence, and you agreed to consult your Ministers and technical advisers as to how you could help. We await your views on this point with the utmost interest.

4. You will remember also that a paper by the British Chiefs of Staff (P.M.M. (46)20) on the machinery for inter-Commonwealth collaboration in defence matters was discussed at considerable length during the Conference (see in particular, the Minutes of P.M.M. (46) 10th meeting of 2nd May). There was general acceptance of the broad principles at issue, and all the Dominions' Ministers who were present at this meeting agreed to discuss the matter with their Ministerial colleagues and technical advisers on their return to their respective countries. We have not yet heard anything further from you on this matter, and I need hardly say that we are most anxious to have your views.

5. I am sending a similar message to other Prime Ministers.

765.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2206

London, November 13, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 2203 of November 12th.†

1. I took advantage of Ismay's presence at the meeting in Machtig's office to bring up Lord Hankey's public criticisms in the press and in the House of Lords of the Government's Defence White Paper. I said that I thought it surprising that men with Hankey's intimate knowledge of how the pre-war machinery of the Commonwealth Defence consultation had actually worked, and who knew where it had failed to work, should be pressing publicly and with such vigor for the reestablishment of the pre-war Committee of Imperial Defence eo nomine. It was perhaps even more surprising that he should be lamenting the lack of provision in the Government's White Paper for regular meetings between the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs and the Commonwealth High Commissioners in London, as if such meetings had been, or could be, useful or appropriate occasions for concerting consideration of defence questions. More disturbing, because fundamentally more important was his insistence on always bringing discussion on United Kingdom defence policies under the rubric of "Imperial Defence", and his assumption that other countries of the Commonwealth were naturally determining their respective defence policies in the light of this general conception. I mentioned Lord Hankey and Lord Alanbrooke particularly, though the line of argument they have been putting forward publicly recently, has been repeated fairly frequently by less well-informed speakers in Parliament here, and has found a responsive echo in the Australian and New Zealand press.

2. I said that in my private opinion, continued harping on the "Imperial" aspects of defence policy in this country tended to defeat its own purposes, at least so far as cooperation in defence matters between Canada and the United Kingdom was concerned. In the course of the next few months our Government would probably have to face more difficult decisions on questions of defence policy than it had ever had to do in peace time, and that consideration of these major questions arising out of our North American position could only be made more difficult by the everlasting public emphasis in this country on the Imperial aspects of defence which were not central or even really relevant to the problems of defence policy with which our Government was confronted.

3. I thought that it would be a good thing if some measure of the tact and discretion which the United Kingdom authorities had learned to use in all public discussions on defence arrangements or understandings with the United States, was employed when Canadian interests and preoccupations were involved. Ismay agreed that the United Kingdom's best hope of maintaining the Combined United Kingdom-United States C.O.S. arrangements, to which they attach absolute importance, lay in their saying nothing whatever about them, least of all not boasting about the accretion of strength which could come from such understandings with the United States. I thought very similar considerations should be kept in mind in our case.

4. I am afraid I did most of the talking during a fairly lengthy meeting. Ismay insisted that I was preaching to the converted as far as he was concerned, but he protested that he was powerless to discourage the kind of public discussion that I thought was mischievous. He led tries to dissuade Hankey from criticising the Defence White Paper, but Hankey took a proprietary personal interest in pre-war defence set-up as he had left it, and kept a blind eye for its shortcomings in the pre-1939 period, and refused to recognize the extent to which wartime developments had made it obsolete. He felt that the Opposition would use any stick to beat the Government with, if they felt they could get votes and popular support by accusing the Government of being slack and unenterprising in seeking cooperation and assistance from the Commonwealth countries, they would do so without any qualms of conscience.

5. Machtig said that the Dominions Office recognized the reasonableness from the Canadian point of view of the line I had taken, but said that they were continually being assailed from the other side by Australia and New Zealand, and consequently found it very difficult to devise a general formula that would not create difficulties in their relations with one or other of the Commonwealth countries.

6. I made it clear at the beginning and end of the meeting that I was voicing private worries about recent public developments in the discussions of defence questions over here, and had not been instructed to make any communication to the United Kingdom Government along these lines. At the same time I was probably expressing what would be the general viewpoint of the Canadian Government on these questions. If this general line of argument carries your judgment, I shall continue to pursue it informally on what seem to be appropriate occasions. I do not think anything should be said publicly at this time about the general Canadian attitude toward defence questions, but I do feel strongly that there are some pretty serious misunderstandings about our position in the minds of people who are responsible for formulating general United Kingdom policy in these matters. Ends.

766.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au Premier ministre
Dominions Secretary to Prime Minister

SECRET AND PERSONAL

[London,] November 14, 1946

Dear Prime Minister,

I hope that you will not think it unbecoming if I take advantage of our friendship to send you a personal message with regard to the unfortunate events and misunderstandings connected with defence problems that have recently emerged.

We are as disconcerted as yourself at the Reuter's despatch about Laycock<sup>1</sup>, which contained not only misleading account of the purpose of his visit but also other information the publication of which is highly injurious. The same applies to the earlier Press report about standardization.

I have been greatly upset by these incidents and I would like you to know that we are instituting the most searching enquiries as to their origin. We regret them exceedingly.

I can well understand that the entirely accidental coincidence of these Press reports with the Prime Minister's telegram of the 9th November, No. 191, has made things more difficult. I can appreciate the point as to the misunderstanding of the wording of the concluding part of paragraph 3 to which exception is taken, but I would like to assure you that the sole purpose of the enquiry was to ascertain the extent to which your Government had been able to consider the papers put before the Prime Ministers' Meeting in May, with a view to being helped here by the knowledge of your reactions to those papers. There was nothing more in it than that. If there is any action that I can take at this end which will be helpful I should be glad to be advised.

Sincerely yours,

ADDISON

767.

DEA/7-CM-1

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne
Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in Great Britain

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

As you know, Mr. Barrington-Ward, the Editor of The Times, was in Ottawa for a few days a week or so ago. During that time he was given an official dinner by the Government, at which the Prime Minister presided, while there were many officials present also at the dinner given for him by Mr. Inglis. On both occasions Mr. Barrington-Ward was given a very warm welcome, but at the same time advantage was taken of his presence to let him know discreetly that a good deal of embarrassment and indeed, some anxiety was felt here over the revival in London of the old "Imperial defence" agitation. Indeed, in his after dinner talk at the Country Club, Mr. King, in a very friendly, but none the less significant way, referred to the dangers of this kind of talk. I do not think the point was lost on Mr. Barrington-Ward. In any event it was reinforced at Mr. Inglis' dinner the following day, when as it happens, Mr. King, Mr. Heeney, and I, all mentioned the matter to him in private talks we had with him after the dinner. I was the third in this succession and found Mr. Barrington-Ward impressed to the point of surprise with the fact that we all had brought up the same subject. He, of course, is an understanding person in these matters and I think will go back to London convinced of the undesirability of loose talk in London on such matters. In the talk I had with him I recall a suggestion I made that if The Times could drive home to its readers that the old concept of "Imperial Defence" was completely unrealistic in present circumstances, and that even the words should now be abandoned in favour of something like "international defence", it would be doing a great service.

<sup>1</sup> Major-général temporaire R. E. Laycock, chef des opérations combinées, Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup> Temporary Major-General R. E. Laycock, Chief of Combined Operations, Great Britain.

When Mr. Barrington-Ward went to Washington, he had a talk with Mr. Wrong, in which reference was made to his discussions here. It appears from the attached letter† from Mr. Wrong to me that our remarks here were reinforced in Washington.

Yours sincerely,

[L. B. PEARSON]

768.

DEA/7-CM-1

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 406

Ottawa, November 19, 1946

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for Lord Addison, Begins:

My dear Lord Addison: I thank you warmly for your characteristically kind personal message of November 14 received through the United Kingdom High Commissioner. I confess that much that has taken place in the last few weeks in connection with defence problems, as related more particularly to the organization of defence within the Commonwealth, has caused me a good deal of concern.

I thought that at the meeting of Prime Ministers in April and May last it had been agreed by all that, to use the words of Field Marshal Smuts, "we should be very cautious about setting up any new formal machinery"; that "all that was needed was Liaison Officers from the services to be appointed to the staffs of High Commissioners". Equally, to quote the words of the text of the final communiqué issued to the press on May 23rd, it was definitely agreed:

"While all are willing to consider and adopt practical proposals for developing the existing system, it is agreed that the methods now practised are preferable to any rigid centralized machinery. In their view such centralized machinery would not facilitate and might even hamper the combination of autonomy and unity which is characteristic of the British Commonwealth and is one of their greatest achievements."

I thought, too, it was agreed by all, that for very obvious reasons as little as possible in the way of publicity should be given to the defence developments within the Commonwealth, and that above all nothing should be said which again to use the words of Field Marshal Smuts, might create at the present juncture of international affairs, a wrong impression both in and out of the Commonwealth, as to a "ganging up" against any possible future antagonist, or as to any lack of confidence in the United Nations' organization.

Some recent speeches and public criticisms deriving special significance from the sources and occasions on which they were made contain doctrines which are wholly contrary to those formally agreed to at the Conference. Already they have given rise to controversy in our press. The emphasis which in these quarters has been placed on the machinery of Commonwealth Defence, which obviously presupposes rigidity of central control cannot prove other than prejudicial to effective co-operation in defence. The secret of our security lies in close co-operation of a completely flexible character. Each nation of the Commonwealth must be free to contribute in its own way not merely on the basis of a particular group of countries, but in co-operation with all the others and with the United States, towards a general system of security throughout the world. Both within and without the Commonwealth, emphasis on what is called "Imperial Defence", with all the machinery of Imperial Conferences, combined staffs and centralized policy, will only, I believe, serve to create antagonisms in quarters where every effort should be made to further the utmost that may be possible in the way of co-operation.

In reply to Attlee's telegram of the 9th instant<sup>1</sup> I have felt it necessary because of the record to make it clear that no commitments of the kind it seems to imply were made by Canada at the meeting of the Prime Ministers. I have no desire to add to the many anxieties with which he and you and other ministers of the government are faced. My sole aim, as you and he well know, is to occasion for all of us as little in the way of embarrassment now and later as may be possible.

Kindest personal regards.

W. L. MACKENZIE KING

Ends.

---

<sup>1</sup> Document 764.

769.

DEA/7-CM-1

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 2014

Ottawa, November 23, 1946

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Following is the reply from the Prime Minister to Mr. Attlee's telegram No. 191, Begins:

"No. 405.<sup>1</sup> Top Secret and Personal. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: I have read your telegram No. 191 of November 9th with much interest and some surprise.

The wording of the telegram would seem to imply that as the United Kingdom Government's decision to introduce a permanent scheme of compulsory national service for men will make heavy inroads on manpower and involve a considerably increased financial outlay, there is some obligation on the Canadian Government, as yet unfulfilled, to meet the burden of defence thus created. There is, in addition, the implication that arising out of discussions of Paper PMM(46) 31 at the Conference of Prime Ministers in April and May there has remained and is now some obligation on the part of Canada to help in meeting the military commitments of the United Kingdom and that the United Kingdom is awaiting the view of the Canadian Government on these points with the utmost interest.

Your reference in paragraph 3 to my reaction to Paper PMM(46) 31 is, I think, based on a misunderstanding of what took place last May. When this paper, summarizing the military commitments of the United Kingdom, was brought forward at the Prime Minister's meeting on May 22nd last, my position as stated in the Minutes of the meeting, was that I could make no commitments of any kind in regard to the matter it dealt with and that I would be required to take a somewhat reserved attitude with regard to it. I did not at that time say anything which could be interpreted as promising "help" because the question of "help" did not arise.

Immediately upon my return from the meeting of Prime Ministers, I reported fully to my colleagues on the subjects discussed, and on the matters requiring consideration by our technical advisers as well as by the Cabinet. The whole question of our defence responsibilities has since been receiving very close attention, especially as they relate to the Arctic regions. I shall, of course, be glad to communicate any decisions of interest to the United Kingdom Government in this regard just as soon as they are reached. Because of the number and magnitude of the considerations involved and possible political implications, it has not been possible thus far to reach final conclusions.

<sup>1</sup>Ce télégramme fut expédié le 19 novembre.

<sup>1</sup>This telegram was sent on November 19.

As to the other question which your telegram raises, machinery for intra-Commonwealth cooperation, I thought I had made clear while in London that our government would be prepared to appoint service liaison officers attached to our High Commissioner's office in London, and equally would be prepared to have liaison officers of the United Kingdom services attached to the United Kingdom High Commissioner's office in Canada. Already steps have been taken on our part to carry out what was then agreed upon. It is apparent, however, that the exact relationships and functions of these officials will have to be more clearly defined. I hope to be able to let you have very shortly our views on this matter.

I feel that I should add that unauthorized reports which have been coming out of London on "Imperial defence" matters have caused considerable embarrassment to us here and made the whole position more difficult." Ends.

I sent a copy of this reply to Clutterbuck, and he called on me yesterday to express his worry and disappointment concerning it. He thought that, after his talk with Mr. King and the personal message from Lord Addison, that misunderstandings has been removed. The Dominions Office had given what was practically an apology for the manner in which the telegram was drafted and had also thought that they had removed any suspicions from the Prime Minister's mind that there was a "plot" or that any sinister implications could be read into the telegram. Hence their disappointment over paragraph 2 of Mr. King's telegram. Clutterbuck thinks they will now have to return to the charge and deny that such implications could be read into the earlier telegram. I told Clutterbuck that it would be unfortunate if this exchange of telegrams continued, but he felt that there was now no alternative. He would do his best to see that the United Kingdom reply was short and not unfriendly, merely pointing out that no such implications were intended as those mentioned by the Prime Minister. In that case, I hope that the Prime Minister's answer to this will be merely an acceptance of the London explanation. However, no one can be sure. If you have an opportunity to put in a word against any further reply from London or, if this is inevitable, in favour of as soft a one as possible, it will be helpful. Message ends.

770.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 228

London, December 13, 1946

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: Thank you for your message in telegram No. 405 of the 19th November. I am glad to see that you hope to be able shortly to let us have your views as to the relationships and functions of the Service Liaison Officers whom you have attached to your High Commissioner's Office in London.

I shall also be interested to receive from you an account of any conclusions reached by the Canadian Government on Canada's defence responsibilities which you consider are likely to be of interest to us.

I am sorry if our correspondence on this subject has been the source of any difficulty or embarrassment to you. No one regrets more than we do the difficulty which is from time to time created in these matters by wholly unauthorized and misleading statements. In so far as these appear to derive from leakages of official information, we are having the most searching investigations made. But I am sure that you recognize the difficulty that always exists in tracing the source of such leakages. On the more general question of statements made here, I feel sure that you realize as well as I do the difficulty of preventing persons, whether in Parliament or outside, from making irresponsible statements, but I can only assure you that neither I nor any of my colleagues nor anyone holding a responsible position in the service here fails fully to appreciate the Canadian attitude in this matter or is lacking in an earnest desire to display the utmost consideration and understanding. Ends.

771.

DEA/7-CM-1

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 444

Ottawa, December 23, 1946

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins:

1. With reference to your telegram No. 228 of December 13th, the Cabinet have given further consideration to the question of Canadian Service representation in London and to the relationship and functions of the Liaison Officers to be attached to our High Commissioner's Office.

2. We have come to the conclusion that if our Liaison Officers are instructed in the terms set out in paragraph three of this message they will be in a position to perform effectively and to our mutual advantage the important functions contemplated without their appointment involving any of the serious difficulties to which Field Marshal Smuts and I drew attention at the meetings with Commonwealth Prime Ministers last spring.

3. Accordingly, the Cabinet have this week approved the following instructions to our Liaison Officers in London who will be known respectively as Liaison Officer (Navy), Liaison Officer (Army), Liaison Officer (Air Force), and Liaison Officer (Defence Research). Text of instructions begins:

The Canadian Joint Staff Mission in London which was constituted by Cabinet War Committee decision of January 8th, 1945, will terminate its activities and be superseded by a Liaison Officer from each of the Armed Services and from Defence Research who will be attached to the staff of the Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom.

These officers will be responsible for keeping the High Commissioner informed on matters concerning their respective Services; they will provide liaison, on matters of mutual interest, between their respective Services and the corresponding Services in the United Kingdom.

It will be incumbent upon the Liaison Officers to consult together in matters of joint interest to the Canadian Armed Forces with the object of submitting joint reports on such matters to the High Commissioner and to the Chiefs of Staff Committee, Ottawa. The principles and procedure to govern in the performance of such joint functions will be determined in consultation with the High Commissioner. Text ends.

4. Steps are being taken forthwith to appoint our four Liaison Officers to the Staff of Canada House on the above basis and we feel sure that the functions which they will be able to perform will do much to facilitate the traditional cooperation and co-ordination in defence matters between the Services of our two countries.

5. We have over the past few weeks given a good deal of attention to defence questions, particularly in relation to our joint plans with the United States and before long I expect to be in a position to let you know of the conclusions which are reached which are likely to be of interest to you. In this connection you may know that Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Bevin had a word together recently in New York.

6. The unauthorized publicity which has appeared in the press on both sides of the Atlantic, over recent weeks, has of course been embarrassing but I appreciate fully the difficulties involved in dealing effectively with this kind of thing.

May I conclude by thanking you for what you have said in your message concerning the Canadian attitude in these matters, and for your own consideration and understanding. Ends.

SECTION D

COMITÉS IMPÉRIAUX/IMPERIAL COMMITTEES

772.

DEA/8490-40

Le sous-ministre par intérim du Commerce au chef, la direction économique
Acting Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to Head, Economic Division

Ottawa, January 4, 1946

Dear Sir,

Further to our letter of December 19, we have now had an opportunity of reviewing our files relating to the activities of the Imperial Economic Committee and the Imperial Shipping Committee.

The Imperial Shipping Committee, first appointed in June 1920, made a considerable number of investigations at the request of the Canadian Government or of the Canadian representative on the Committee. The principal items of Canadian interest dealt with by the Committee were—

- (a) Canadian marine insurance rates,
- (b) Rates of freight on Canadian flour,
- (c) Certain aspects of the Canadian cattle trade,
- (d) Rates of freight on Canadian apples to the U.K.,
- (e) Questions relating to the shipment of grain through the Canadian ports of Halifax and Saint John,
- (f) Hudson's Bay marine insurance rates.

The results of investigations of Canadian problems by the Committee have been helpful. In the case of Hudson's Bay marine insurance rates, these were reduced and, as I recall, the extra insurance rates on hulls of vessels trading to Saint John were eliminated, i.e., Halifax and Saint John were put on a par with U.S. Atlantic ports in the matter of hull insurance rates.

It is our view that the Imperial Shipping Committee has rendered good service to the Commonwealth, and we would be in favour of its continuation, as it has accumulated much data and experience in shipping problems affecting the Commonwealth. Apart from the investigations which it made on Canada's specific initiative, it covered a wide field of other studies, many of which were of general interest to Canada.

With regard to the Imperial Economic Committee, it is difficult at the moment to judge to what extent there will be a renewed need for the services that this Committee is capable of providing, and whether such services, if continued, are likely to be of specific and substantial benefit to Canada. The changed conditions of world trade will make it necessary to consider carefully the duties that any reconstructed Imperial Economic Committee might best undertake. A good deal will depend upon the manner in which the functions of the F.A.O. are developed, as well as the functions of other international trade organizations, which are, or shortly will be, in process of being set up.

Our immediate view is that it would certainly be wise to refrain from scrapping the machinery provided by the Imperial Economic Committee until it is clear that there will be no real need for retaining it. We would accordingly recommend that the continuation of the Committee be sympathetically considered, if such is the desire of the other Empire countries, but that its operations should be kept at a minimum for a year or two until we are in a better position to judge whether, by reason of the scope and character of the United Nations organizations, there would be any explicit advantage in carrying on the Imperial Economic Committee.

Yours faithfully,

OLIVER MASTER

773.

DEA/8490-40

Le sous-ministre de l'Agriculture au chef, la direction économique
Deputy Minister of Agriculture to Head, Economic Division

Ottawa, February 20, 1946

Dear Mr. Pierce,

I regret that reply to yours of December 17th, with respect to the future of the Imperial Economic Committee, has been overlooked.

In the light of developments in the international field, and particularly the establishing of the Food and Agriculture Organization, I am doubtful that there is any special need for continuing the Imperial Economic Committee. Its work, in the latter stages particularly, was not too well defined and while some useful reports came to this Department from time to time I am inclined to think that similar information can readily be obtained through various other sources, both national and international. Many of the national services have been expanded and developed since the time the Imperial Economic Committee commenced work and naturally more information is available through them than used to be the case.

It would appear to me, therefore, that it would be difficult to justify continuing the Imperial Economic Committee from the standpoint of either necessity or the character of the work which it might be expected to undertake.

Yours very truly,

H. BARTON

774.

DEA/8490-40

Le haut commissaire par intérim en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire d'État
par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs

DESPATCH 1307

London, August 23, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 2235 of the 12th December, 1945, concerning the Imperial Economic Committee. I have now received a request from the Secretary of the Committee for assistance from Canadian Government in finding personnel.

2. You will recall that in my despatch No. 1840 of 18th September, 1945, I communicated to you proposals for the resumption of activities by the Imperial Economic Committee. At the same time these proposals were also transmitted to the other member governments. Replies accepting these proposals have now been received from nearly all the governments concerned and a start has been made in the recruitment of staff and the collection of material necessary for the Committee's work. Progress however largely depends on the recruitment of staff of suitable calibre to replace those who either have resigned to take up other employment or have been killed on war service; the extent to which this is necessary may be seen from the fact that only one of the five former Section Officers and not more than one or two of the former Grade A Assistants seem likely to become available.

3. You will appreciate that it is not easy at the present time to secure men who have been trained in the type of work which the Committee will have to undertake. The Finance Committee are therefore seeking the assistance of member governments in this matter and have requested me to enquire whether the Canadian Government would cooperate by making available, on at any rate a temporary basis, the services of any of their officers who by their experience might be qualified for the Committee's employment. The Secretary has represented to me that not only would this be consonant with the constitution of the Committee but also that the experience gained by such officers while serving for a time with the Committee should be valuable to them when they return to serve under their own government. I am attaching a brief note† which sets out the character of the employment under the Committee and the qualifications or experience desirable.

4. In paragraph 5 of my despatch No. 1840 of 18th September, 1945, I expressed the opinion that the activities of the Imperial Economic Committee would inevitably become more redundant as time went on, particularly in view of the creation of new agencies charged with comparable responsibilities. I can think of no grounds for modifying that opinion. I might add that I was the Canadian representative on the Imperial Economic Committee for a number of years, in my capacity as Chief Trade Commissioner in the United Kingdom, and my experience on the Committee does not lead me to expect that its continuance would be of value to Canada.

5. However, I gather from your despatch No. 2235 of 12th December, 1945, that a decision has been taken to continue participation in the work of the Imperial Economic Committee. In view of that decision, I should be grateful if you would inform me how it is proposed Canada should be represented. The Secretary has written to remind me that under its constitution the membership of the Imperial Economic Committee includes two members nominated by the Canadian Government. At the present time, according to the records of the Committee, I personally am one of the representatives of the Canadian Government, while the other Canadian seat is vacant.

6. Several times in the last few months I have been invited to attend meetings at which plans have been considered to resuscitate the Imperial Economic Committee. In each case because of shortage of staff in this office it proved impossible for me to be present or send a representative. So far as I can see, the pressure on the available staff here is not likely to be relieved in the near future. In the light of this continuing situation I should be obliged if you would give me some guidance as to the degree of importance which you attach to the work of the Imperial Economic Committee.

I have etc.

FREDERIC HUDD

775.

DEA/8490-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
par intérim en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

DESPATCH 1472

Ottawa, September 4, 1946

Sir,

I refer to your despatch No. 1307 of August 23rd, on the subject of the Imperial Economic Committee, in which you ask whether we could make personnel available for the Committee and the degree of importance we attach to its activities.

We are unable to supply personnel largely because of the heavy demands made on us for international conferences. Most of the Government Departments are understaffed in the type of men which the Committee would require.

In replying to the enquiry which you received, I feel you might well go further and point out with some vigour that the Imperial Economic Committee ought not to try to map out a substantial programme and to recruit a staff of any size until the new international organizations in the economic field have defined their position. It is more than probable that a range of the activities of the Economic and Social Council, a good deal of the work of F.A.O., and much of the field to be occupied by the I.T.O. will impinge on the work hitherto attempted by the Imperial Economic Committee.

Thus, while we have not attached a great deal of importance to the work of the Committee in the past, we expect that there will be less useful work for it to do in the future. You mention that in our despatch No. 2235 of December 12th, 1945, we had decided to continue participation in the Committee's work. This decision reflected our unwillingness to take the definite position that it should be discontinued, but it did not indicate that we placed any great store on its activities. Our general line now is that we are not yet ready to suggest its discontinuance but we shall certainly not "strive officiously to keep alive." We would like to be able to revert to the question of its continued utility in a year or two.

On the subject of our representation at meetings, we should prefer if at all possible to leave matters much as they now stand.

I have etc.

SYDNEY D. PIERCE
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

776.

DEA/5720-40

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité interministériel sur la politique pour la marine marchande

Memorandum by Secretary, Interdepartmental Committee on Merchant Shipping Policy

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] December 27, 1946

IMPERIAL SHIPPING COMMITTEE; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

The following is a copy of the telegram sent by the Department of External Affairs to the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom, in accordance with the decision of the Interdepartmental Committee on Merchant Shipping Policy at its meeting of December 19th, (Minutes, para. 4):

Ottawa, December 21, 1946.

1. Question of Canadian attitude toward revival of Imperial Shipping Committee was discussed by Interdepartmental Shipping Committee December 19, 1946.

2. Committee considers (a) that while I.S.C. has done good work in the past it is very doubtful whether in changed conditions it has either present or future usefulness for Canada; (b) that in the absence of evidence to contrary there seems danger of confusion and duplication of function between I.S.C., I.L.O., Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and even Caribbean Commission. We are aware that the last named have for some time had underway study of all forms of transportation in Caribbean area; (c) that in view of our doubts expressed above and evident interest of United Kingdom in revival of I.S.C. onus is upon United Kingdom to demonstrate general need and to outline future work envisaged for the resuscitated body having in mind activities of organizations mentioned above.

3. If you agree you might approach United Kingdom authorities and suggest that members be given opportunity to discuss the need for resuscitating I.S.C. before that action is finally taken. If on examination it is found that in fact, there is useful work in prospect and there is general Commonwealth support for continuance, we would be willing to consider further our continued participation.

4. If the Committee is to be continued (a) Sir Clement Jones would be acceptable to us as Chairman (b) we would not raise objection to £1,200 per annum or a little more for Chairman. We would be willing to canvass possibility of filling one or two of the vacant Committee seats.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS"

M. McCLUNG

SECTION E

NATIONALITÉ/NATIONALITY

777.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 244

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] April 19, 1946

RE PROPOSALS FOR A COMMONWEALTH MEETING ON NATIONALITY

Last fall, and again during the time Mr. Martin and Mr. Read were in London for the meeting of the United Nations assembly, the United Kingdom authorities raised the question as to the possibility of holding a meeting of Commonwealth representatives to give consideration to what they think are aspects of general Commonwealth interest in the new Canadian citizenship Bill.<sup>1</sup> The proposal of last fall was made to me verbally by Mr. Stephen Holmes. I tried to discourage it at that time, and I am attaching a copy of a note† that was prepared on our conversation giving the details. The original proposal for a conference has now been somewhat narrowed to a suggestion for a "meeting of legal experts". The essentials of this proposal are contained in the attached dispatch from London.† The idea is to hold the meeting after our Bill passes but before it goes into effect.

In general, the United Kingdom view is that the Canadian Bill represents a departure in principle from the existing scheme of nationality legislation in the countries of the Commonwealth. At present we, the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Newfoundland have legislation that provides virtually identical definitions of "British subject". (Ireland is an exception. Under her 1935 legislation an Irish citizen is not a British subject at all). The general scheme was agreed on in 1914 and common recognition of the status accorded by naturalization in any of the countries was then and has since been based on the community of definition. This basis has proved unsatisfactory, since it meant that there was practically no room for flexibility to suit the peculiar needs of any particular country. In another aspect, the scheme meant that the basic nationality status was that of "British subject", and any nationality definition associated with a particular country could only provide for a subordinate and relatively unimportant status. To avoid this difficulty a different method of approach has been adopted in the new Bill. Instead of having the old common definition of "British subject", we have defined "Canadian citizen" in terms that depend basically on the same factors but which involve certain departures that we thought desirable. We then say that "a Canadian citizen is a British subject", and, on the other hand, we recognize the status of British subject that is accorded by another country of the Commonwealth to one of its citizens, no matter how such status of British subject may be defined by that country. In short, it might be said that the old basis was one of identical definition, while we have adopted a basis that might be called mutual recognition of possibly disparate definitions.

<sup>1</sup> Le projet de loi sur la citoyenneté, Bill n° 20, fut présenté à la Chambre des communes pour première lecture le 22 octobre 1945. Le Bill fut modifié et présenté de nouveau à la Chambre au printemps 1946. Il passa en troisième lecture le 16 mai 1946. Voir loi dans Statuts du Canada, 10 George VI, chapitre 15.

<sup>1</sup> The new citizenship Bill, Bill No. 20, was presented to the House of Commons for first reading on October 22, 1945. The Bill was modified and again presented to the House in the Spring of 1946. Third reading was on May 16, 1946. For Act, see Statutes of Canada, 10 George VI, Chapter 15.

We have sent copies of our Bill to all countries of the Commonwealth (October 12, 1945 and March 23, 1946) and none but the United Kingdom has evinced any particular interest with regard to the question of the status of British subject. It is suggested in the attached dispatch that Australia may follow our example and on April 9 a press dispatch stated that the Australian Cabinet "approved the principles" embodied in our Bill. Mr. Hearne, the Irish High Commissioner, has expressed personal interest in the effect of the Bill on the status of Irish citizens, but there have been no representations from the Irish government. They, of course, have no interest in the status of "British subject".

The United Kingdom suggestion for discussion is based on the conclusions of the Imperial Conferences of 1930 and 1937. The relevant conclusions of the Conference of 1930 were as follows:

2. That, if any changes are desired in the existing requirements for the common status, provision should be made for the maintenance of the common status, and the changes should only be introduced (in accordance with present practice) after consultation and agreement among the several Members of the Commonwealth.

3. That it is for each Member of the Commonwealth to define for itself its own nationals, but that, so far as possible, those nationals should be persons possessing the common status, though it is recognized that local conditions or other special circumstances may from time to time necessitate divergences from this general principle.

4. That the possession of the common status in virtue of the law for the time being in force in any part of the Commonwealth should carry with it the recognition of that status by the law of every other part of the Commonwealth.

At the 1937 Conference the following were the relevant conclusions:

1. It is for each Member of the British Commonwealth to decide which persons have with it that definite connection—which would enable it to recognize them as members of its community. It is desirable, however, to secure as far as possible uniformity in principle...

... it is recommended that any member contemplating passing a law on the membership of its community, should submit the proposals to the other members of the Commonwealth so as to enable them to offer observations thereon, if they feel so inclined.

We have fully met the latter obligation. We sent an outline of our Bill to all countries of the Commonwealth on September 27, 1945, and copies of the Bill on October 12. We also sent copies of the Bill as revised for its recent introduction on March 23. The British, however, feel that paragraph 2 (above) of the 1930 conclusions requires "consultation and agreement" in this case, since our Bill affects "the existing requirements for the common status". In actual fact the change in the "requirements" under our Bill are very slight and in almost all cases represent a tightening of qualifications. We have pointed to these facts and to the fact that no other country has expressed a desire to hold a meeting. We have not argued the point, but if it seemed desirable as a matter of policy, we might perhaps take the view that the 1937 decisions supersede those of 1930, and that consultation is not strictly necessary.

Acceptance of the United Kingdom suggestion for a discussion might give rise to a number of difficulties. It is clearly impossible to hold a purely "legal" discussion on this matter. Even if our approach were unanimously accepted there would still be questions of political policy that would conflict with strict legal considerations in many instances. However, the prior question of the entire basis of approach to the nationality question is one of policy and not of law. There is, moreover, possible difficulty in the very fact of holding a conference. It would vitiate the psychological and political value of our proceeding to Canadian nationality through purely national action. Again, if there is disagreement, or attempt to secure amendments from us which we do not wish to make, there is the possibility of raising a domestic controversy on imperial issues—a controversy that has thus far been completely avoided.

On the other side is the 1930 report and also the fact that it is now public knowledge that the U.K. has suggested a Commonwealth discussion. The matter became public on April 9 when Prime Minister Chifley of Australia stated that his Cabinet had approved their being represented "at a British Commonwealth Conference to discuss proposed legislation on one nationality operating generally in British Commonwealth countries".

Apart from these basic problems in the proposal, there are a number of other points to consider:

1. The position of Ireland. The British apparently contemplate not having Ireland present. Certainly there could be no unanimity if Ireland were there, but it seems undesirable to leave Ireland out of the first technical discussion of a non-war question between members of the Commonwealth.

2. The place of meeting. If a meeting is to be held, New Zealand and South Africa would prefer it to be in London because of transportation considerations. Australia has also suggested that the meeting be held in London

“possibly in June, immediately after the Peace Conference in Paris”. The United Kingdom would probably prefer that, but would be willing to come to Ottawa. If London is the locus, a meeting after the consultations with Prime Ministers in May might be relatively obscure and not attract too much attention. A meeting in Ottawa would have the merit of avoiding the appearance of our going to London to have blessing given to the new Bill, but it would attract more attention and might rouse some domestic controversy over imperial and national issues.

3. The time of meeting. If we are to attend any meeting, it might be well to hold it soon, so as to clear the matter up as quickly as possible. The Bill has had a desirable domestic reaction, and should go into effect fairly soon.

4. Canadian representation. The meeting sought is a technical one and it would be undesirable to give it the emphasis of representation by a Cabinet minister. Our representatives would have to be aware of the political considerations that are involved in the new Bill, and at the same time fully conversant with the complex details of nationality legislation. Mr. Read would have made an ideal representative, but he is no longer available.

The immediate questions for decision are:

1. Whether we should agree to a meeting at all.
2. If we agree to a meeting—
  - (a) whether it should be in London after the Prime Ministers' meetings, or after the Paris discussions; or
  - (b) whether we should try to have it held in Ottawa, and if so, when.

The United Kingdom had hoped that we would let them have our answer before this, but other problems have been more immediately urgent. In view of the publicity that has been given to the proposal we should, however, try to send an answer at an early date.

N. A. R[OBERTSON]

778.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 244

Mé morandum<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum<sup>1</sup>

[London,] June 6, 1946

As I informed you yesterday, the meetings which have been held during the last week to discuss nationality problems have now concluded in a manner which is, I think, quite satisfactory from our point of view.

<sup>1</sup>De R. G. Robertson du cabinet du Premier ministre au Premier ministre. Le Premier ministre et le groupe qui l'avait accompagné à la réunion des Premiers ministres du Commonwealth fin mai, dont R. G. Robertson, étaient encore à Londres à cette date.

<sup>1</sup>From R. G. Robertson of the Office of the Prime Minister to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the group which had accompanied him to the Meeting of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers in May, including R. G. Robertson, were still in London at this time.

The first meeting, which was held on May 30th, was the most important of the series, and established the main conclusions that were arrived at. At that meeting Sir Alexander Maxwell, for the United Kingdom, said that they felt that the Canadian Bill represented an entirely new approach to the question of nationality within the Commonwealth and that, for that reason, it was very desirable to have its implications examined by the other countries which would have to give new consideration to their own nationality laws. He added that the Canadian basis of approach involved certain problems for the United Kingdom which did not mean that the approach was undesirable but which did suggest the necessity of having careful consideration given to the whole matter, so that the best possible adjustment could be made. He then called for comments of the representatives of the other countries.

Mr. N. A. Robertson explained the general background of our Bill and enlarged upon certain features of it, to which I gave further explanation at subsequent meetings, when specific questions were raised. After Mr. Robertson's statement, Professor Bailey, the new Solicitor General of Australia, spoke on their behalf and said that the Australian Government not merely approved, but was enthusiastic about the principles embodied in the Canadian Bill. He felt that the psychological approach in the Canadian measure, which gave primary emphasis to the local nationality, was sound and met many of the problems which Australia had in common with Canada. He thought that the Bill embodied no serious difficulties or dangers and demonstrated an approach that would be desirable for general adoption.

The New Zealand and South African representatives expressed views in accordance with those of Mr. Bailey, and Dr. Wessels, for South Africa, expressed the opinion that the general trend had to be in the direction of the principles embodied in the Canadian Citizenship Bill.

In the light of the above comments, Sir Alexander Maxwell said that it seemed clear that it would be desirable to have a full conference of experts at a later date to give thorough and detailed consideration to the way in which the principles of the Canadian Citizenship Bill could be adapted for general application by the other countries of the Commonwealth as well. He felt that the most useful approach would be for the matter to be considered carefully by the responsible officials of each Government and taken up with their Ministers, in order that a full exchange of views might take place, which could lead to an exhaustive examination at the later meetings and to definite conclusions. He recognised that no substantive amendments could be made in the Canadian legislation.

Mr. Robertson felt that on the basis proposed, in which the objective of the new meetings would be to secure the general adoption of the Canadian basis of legislation, there were no serious problems or difficulties involved in our agreeing to attend such a meeting, and said that he would report favourably on the matter. The other Commonwealth representatives were strongly in favour of having the meetings as suggested, some time in the Fall.

It was agreed that no publicity whatever should be given to the fact of the present meetings or to the intention to hold further discussions later this year.

I am attaching hereto a copy of the Minutes of the first meeting† in case you wish to examine them.

R. G. R[OBERTSON]

779.

DEA/8204-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Great Britain

TELEGRAM 1775

Ottawa, October 11, 1946

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Dominions Office Circular D. 862 of September 18th† concerning postponement of conference on nationality. You will recall that at the Prime Ministers' meeting last spring there was a discussion of the new Canadian Citizenship Act, as a result of which it was agreed that a meeting of Commonwealth countries should be held in London to give technical consideration to the possibility of general revision of citizenship legislation. The United Kingdom have now suggested January 1947 as an appropriate time for this meeting. Mr. Martin, who would like to attend, will not be able to be in London at that time and is anxious to have a further postponement, even though he might not be able to go later in 1947. Could you find out whether such a further postponement would arouse much opposition in London? If not, we will go ahead on that basis. If there is opposition, then we will have to consider possibility of alternative representation for Canada at the January meeting. Ends.

SECTION F

DIVERS/MISCELLANEOUS

780.

DEA/3796-A-40

*Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in Great Britain to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

London, April 11, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In your despatch No. 359 of February 25th† you authorised us to consider with the Foreign Office the establishment of regular channels of communication for the handling of consular matters in countries where Canada is not directly represented. We have attempted to analyse present procedures used by various departments in Canada House and to make some recommendations. I am attaching a copy of a draft memorandum which has been prepared for preliminary and informal discussion with the Consular Department of the Foreign Office. It represents only the tentative suggestions of members of the staff, and the Foreign Office understands that it is not an expression of the views of the Canadian Government at this stage. A copy has also been sent to the Canadian Immigration Officer for his consideration. There may be some further delay before we are able to send to you the results of our discussions with the Foreign Office on this matter, and in the meantime you may wish to see a copy of this preliminary draft.

I am attaching to the draft a paragraph concerning the question as to whether the Foreign Office representative should be expected to give the Canadian Government advice. For obvious reasons this was not included in the draft which has been sent to the Consular Department.

Yours sincerely,

VINCENT MASSEY

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Projet de mémorandum du haut commissariat en Grande-Bretagne

Draft Memorandum by High Commission in Great Britain

London, [n.d.] 1946

THE HANDLING OF GENERAL CONSULAR MATTERS IN COUNTRIES
WHERE CANADA IS NOT DIRECTLY REPRESENTED

Since the end of hostilities in Europe there has been a large increase in the number of matters of a general consular nature arising in countries where Canada has no direct representation. No doubt because of the development of special war-time practices and the interruption of pre-war methods there is at present considerable confusion as to the channels of communication. In some cases these problems are dealt with by direct communication from the Department of External Affairs to the British Mission on the spot. In other cases they are handled through Canada House, and in still other cases by direct communication from External Affairs to the Dominions Office. It is highly desirable that confusion be avoided by the establishment of regular rules of procedure. The chief purpose of these rules should be to speed up communications and to remove unnecessary work from both Canadian and United Kingdom authorities.

2. The following seem to be the principal alternatives to be considered:

(i) It might be established as a general rule that the Department of External Affairs should communicate direct with the British Missions on the spot, and the British Mission should be instructed to communicate direct with the Department of External Affairs.

(ii) All communications might be channelled through London, that is, External Affairs should send communications to Canada House for transmission to the Dominions Office or direct to the Foreign Office to be sent on to the British Mission on the spot.

(iii) Either of the above methods might be supplemented by the use, where possible, of Missions in Ottawa of countries in which Canada is not directly represented—for example, Sweden, Switzerland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Italy. (Such procedure has been suggested by Ottawa in despatch No. of [sic] for seeking information about persons believed to be ill-treated.)

3. For a number of reasons the first alternative seems to be the most practical. Transmission through London is unnecessarily slow because of the pressure of work in Canada House and in the Foreign Office. As far as Canada House is concerned, such an arrangement as No. (ii) would necessitate an increase in the staff. There are objections, furthermore, to the introduction of a third party in matters which are better solved by communication between two parties. It is believed that the Foreign Office themselves prefer direct communication. The use of No. (iii) method along with No. (i) is a matter on which the Department of External Affairs is better able to decide. It would serve to relieve the pressure on British officials. It may be doubted whether equally good results could be obtained by a Minister in Ottawa as by a British official on the spot. On the other hand, foreign representatives in Ottawa might be anxious to press the matter in order to be helpful to the Government to which they are accredited.

4. If direct communication from Ottawa to the Mission is adopted as the general rule it is possible that there might need to be certain exceptions which would require handling through Canada House. The following seem to be the principal exceptions:

(i) The Repatriation of Canadians from Europe. Channels for handling these matters have been developed during and since the war by the Special Section, and there seems to be no good reason for changing them at a time when the number of repatriates is greatly diminished.

(ii) Property Claims. Up to date claims by Canadians for properties in enemy and formerly-occupied Europe have been handled through Canada House. This special procedure has been adopted because of the necessity of working through the agencies set up by the United Kingdom Government in London to handle such matters. It has also been necessary because the channels for handling such matters have had to be evolved in consultation between Canada House and the United Kingdom Departments concerned. Now that these channels are more or less established, consideration might be given to the possibility of direct communication. If it is necessary to have a Canadian representative in London keeping in touch with United Kingdom authorities on these matters this responsibility might be transferred to the London Representative of the Custodian, whose Department in Ottawa is responsible for the registering of all claims. (It should be kept in mind that although property claims in Germany are now handled through the Canadian Military Mission in Germany there are an equal number of claims in Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and other countries which are still handled through Canada House).

(iii) Immigration and Naturalization. The Commissioner for European Emigration in London, because of his responsibility for all Europe, may wish to handle, or at least be kept informed, of all cases concerning immigration and naturalization arising in Europe.

5. There will always be cases in which some direct communication between United Kingdom and Canadian officials is necessary. This will be particularly the case when political considerations are involved. Although British Consuls or other representatives may be acting for His Majesty's Government in Canada it will be difficult to ask them to follow policies inconsistent with those which they would follow when they are acting on behalf of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom. Recently a case of a Canadian being held by the Polish Security Police was handled directly between Ottawa and Warsaw. In view of questions of high policy involved, however, it was considered necessary for the Foreign Office to intervene by personal communication with Canada House.

6. If direct communication between Ottawa and the Mission on the spot is agreed upon as a general rule, the question arises as to whether copies of all correspondence should be sent to both United Kingdom and Canadian representatives in London. At the present time United Kingdom policy in most of these cases seems to be to instruct their representatives to send copies to the Foreign Office. The Foreign Office in turn provides copies to Canada House. Copies of telegrams between Ottawa and the British Mission which pass through the Dominions Office come to Canada House. On the other hand, it is not the policy of the Department of External Affairs normally to send to Canada House copies of its communications to British Missions, and in few cases is there a complete file in Canada House on any of those cases handled directly. In this matter it would be proper for the Canadian Government to follow the wishes of the Foreign Office, whose representatives are handling these matters on our behalf. In view of the probability of personal discussions in London on any particular subject there would be advantages in having, either at Canada House or at the Foreign Office, but not necessarily in both places, a complete file of correspondence of all cases. The Foreign Office may, of course, wish to have a record of the work being handled by its agents. In any case, it would be desirable to ask the Foreign Office how many copies of varying kinds of documents it requires, so that in no case should the Foreign Office have to make copies of documents on our behalf.

PRESENT CHANNELS OF COMMUNICATION WITH UNITED KINGDOM DEPARTMENTS ON CONSULAR MATTERS:

7. Germany: In spite of the establishment of the Canadian Military Mission in Germany there are still several matters which are handled through Canada House, for example:

(i) Reports on property claims initiated through United Kingdom authorities before the establishment of the C.M.M. in Germany.

(ii) Final stages in the repatriation of Canadians.

(iii) Matters concerning distressed Canadians in the French and United States Zones. (It is expected that these will be transferred shortly to the C.M.M. Questions concerning the Russian Zone are being handled both through the Canadian Embassy in Moscow and through the C.M.M.)

8. Correspondence concerning property claims is addressed to Miss J. M. Wardale in the Dominions Office. Special Section correspond direct with United Kingdom Consular Representative in Germany. Other general matters concerning Germany may be handled by direct communication with the Control Office for Germany and Austria, Norfolk House, St. James's Square.

9. Austria, Bulgaria, Roumania: In view of the fact that the British Missions in these countries are still of a military nature, relations are handled by the War Office rather than the Foreign Office. Communications from Canada House on general matters, including property claims, go to the Dominions Office. Special Section, however, corresponds direct with the United Kingdom Consular Representative in Vienna. It is expected that Roumania will shortly become the responsibility of the Foreign Office in view of the recognition of the Roumanian Government.

10. Bulgaria, Finland, Siam, and other former neutral or allied States: Relations with these countries are handled through the Foreign Office. Communications, therefore, should be addressed to Mr. G. C. Allchin, Consular Section of the Foreign Office, or in the case of property claims to Mr. C. J. Edmonds, Consular Section, Foreign Office. It is believed to be the desire of the Foreign Office that communications should be with the Consular Section rather than the Political Division concerned, unless political policy is involved.

11. Japan: No consular matters with regard to Japan have come through this Office and the channels used by the Canadian Government are not known.

12. The Foreign Office request that three copies of all documents and also of an accompanying despatch or letter should be sent to them. The Dominions Office ask, however, for only one copy of each document, provided another copy is available in this office if required for reference in London. The single valid copy of any legal document, however, should be retained in Ottawa or in this Office, as neither the Foreign Office nor the Dominions Office wishes to be responsible for forwarding it unless it is needed on the spot.

13. Limited postal communications have been re-established with all European countries, including Germany. In view of the very great pressure on the United Kingdom Departments concerned, no request should be made to transmit documents unless there is some valid reason why they cannot be transmitted by ordinary post. Claimants are expected to communicate with their own attorneys in the country concerned, by post, and not through diplomatic bag. In some cases this will mean cutting off facilities for those who, at an earlier stage, were granted special privileges because of the absence of postal communications and the troubled situation on the Continent. It is not possible to establish definitive rules on this matter, but discretion should be used in making requests. For example, it might be assumed that documents have a better chance of reaching Czechoslovakia than Bulgaria, and the Foreign Office might be asked to transmit documents to the latter country which it should not be asked to send to the former. Only if there is some urgent reason should personal letters be sent by diplomatic channels. On the other hand, the Foreign Office is prepared to send along documents which will assist them in protecting the property of a British subject.

14. The question also arises as to the handling of consular matters of this kind which originate in applications direct to Canada House. Such applications come sometimes from Canadians in the United Kingdom and sometimes from Canadians in Canada who apply direct to the High Commissioner for assistance. If there is some urgency about these cases it may be necessary to act upon them without reference to Ottawa. It is desirable, on the other hand, that action should not be taken which is inconsistent with policy being followed by External Affairs. Furthermore, as a general principle it is desirable to use the standard channels at all times in order to avoid confusion.

CONSULAR MATTERS IN INDIA AND THE COLONIES

15. Canadian consular matters in parts of the British Empire where there is no direct Canadian representation are frequently handled through Canada House in direct communication with the India Office, the Burma Office, or the Colonial Office. In the case of the West Indies, and possibly elsewhere, the Department of External Affairs communicates at times with the Colonial Secretary. Consideration might be given to ways and means of establishing more expeditious means of communication, particularly with India and Palestine.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ ENCLOSURE 2]

Paragraphe omis du projet de mémorandum

Paragraph omitted from Draft Memorandum

The question as to whether a United Kingdom Mission should seek to give advice to the Canadian Government on matters which it is asked to handle is one which requires some consideration. Some time ago the United Kingdom

Ambassador in Venezuela was asked to take action by the Canadian Government. He indicated to the Foreign Office that he did not agree with Canadian policy in this matter, and wished to let the Canadian Government have his views. The Dominions Office refused to allow his advice to be passed on to the Canadian Government on the ground that it was not his place to express opinions as to Canadian policy. While it would obviously be undesirable that a United Kingdom official should give advice simply because Canadian policy was not advantageous to United Kingdom policy, nevertheless the advice of the British representative on the spot might frequently be helpful. This is obviously a matter on which general rules can scarcely be laid down. Advice of this kind might best be given informally by the Foreign Office to Canada House. It might also be agreed that the Department of External Affairs should specifically ask for the advice of the British representative if it considers this would be helpful.

781.

DEA/6133-40

Le deuxième secrétaire, le haut commissariat en Grande-Bretagne, au sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures

Second Secretary, High Commission in Great Britain, to Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

London, May 1, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

Recently I have been somewhat disturbed by the attention which has been paid in the press here to the significance of recent developments with regard to Commonwealth representation in the Pacific. In many of the editorials on Commonwealth relations which there have been in the past month or more, reference has been made to the appointment of an Australian to represent the Commonwealth, or at least part of it, in Japan. You were, I believe, rather unhappy at the time about possible implications, although we were not in a very good position to protest if other parts of the Commonwealth wished to choose an Australian to represent them.

The Australians are apparently welcoming this development as a triumph for Dr. Evatt's particular theory on Commonwealth policy: that is, that the Commonwealth might well be divided into regions in each of which the Commonwealth country with predominant interests should be the mouthpiece of the whole Commonwealth. This facile theory is very attractive at first glance, but quite impossible as a general principle. Sensibly applied in a limited way, and ad hoc, it might have some value. South Africa's primary interests in Africa, and Australia's and New Zealand's primary interest in the South-West Pacific need not be emphasized. The suggestion, however, that Canada should speak for the Commonwealth in the Western hemisphere, or that the United Kingdom should speak for the Commonwealth in Europe are quite as unacceptable as any suggestion that Dr. Evatt's principle should be carried to the extent that Australia would speak for all in Indonesia, or India, or China.

I have always suspected that Dr. Evatt's support of Canadian arguments against a common foreign policy was dangerous because it was based on entirely different motives from our own. He was concerned only with securing a louder voice for Australia whereas we, although we were perhaps rationalizing on the basis of our own political and geographical situation, have evolved a theory of Commonwealth relations which we think is as much in Australia's as Canada's interest. To secure his end Dr. Evatt would use any argument. He would even suggest that if Australia could largely determine Commonwealth policy in the Pacific he would be prepared to concede the United Kingdom the same priority to decide Commonwealth policy in Europe. However, in practice he has rarely been willing to concede Dominion status to the United Kingdom, and it seems doubtful if he would play fair. He is raising quite a fuss about Australia's right to an independent voice on the settlement in Trieste, for example, and it would be interesting to see what would happen if we claimed a right to interfere in United States-Australian relations.

It now looks, however, as if Dr. Evatt, far from being an ally in the discussions on a "common foreign policy" is going to be a very difficult adversary. I have this morning had a brief look at a document presented by the Australian Government at the current meetings here summarising Australian External Affairs policy in general. Its conclusion is somewhat alarming. After referring in glowing terms to the satisfactory nature of the present arrangements for Commonwealth representation in Japan, the document states that this new concept tends to reconcile full Dominion autonomy with full British Commonwealth co-operation. The machinery of the Commonwealth, it states, has now reached the stage where a common policy can be carried out through a chosen Dominion instrumentality in an area, or in relation to a subject matter, which is of primary concern to that Dominion. This principle is said to be capable of extension, and to suggest the possible integration of British Commonwealth policy at a higher level by a new procedure.

The implications of such a policy are, I should think, totally unacceptable to us. It goes without saying that this unitary conception of the Commonwealth is not made more attractive to us, and is probably less so, because some other country than the United Kingdom might on occasion speak for us all. If this view is pressed by Dr. Evatt, and I should think it very well might be, it could revive again this whole unhappy question. Dr. Evatt's suggestions have a specious attraction, and will carry a good deal of weight with many well-meaning people in this country because they come not from the United Kingdom but from one of the enfranchised nations. I do not know whether the Australians are aware of the fact that this theory is not likely to be received by us with any favour, or whether, if they did, they would be impressed by our objections. However, you might think it advisable to disabuse them as quickly as possible of any misconceptions which they might have. I have not discussed this matter with officials here, although I had an opportunity on several occasions to point out the objections to the policy when it was raised by private individuals. I cannot imagine that it is a policy which the United Kingdom Government could view with much favour, as they, in view of their world-wide interests, would be the principal sufferers.

It is always a little ticklish getting any information from the Dominions Office about relations between themselves and Australia. I gather, however, that there are a good many misgivings in the Dominions Office and more particularly in the Foreign Office about the present arrangements in Japan, according to which Mr. MacMahon Ball<sup>1</sup> speaks for the Commonwealth. The view taken here, quite informally, seems to be that Mr. Ball may be a fine academic type, but has much too little experience of diplomacy and negotiation. His first major act in Japan was apparently to send a telegram to Canberra saying that the Americans and the Russians seemed to be at opposite poles with regard to policy in Tokyo, and he assumed that it was his function to mediate between them. He also listed a number of points which were being discussed and asked for instructions with regard to only one of them. This message was passed on to the United Kingdom by Dr. Evatt, who said that it was his intention to instruct Mr. Ball to proceed as he had suggested. The Foreign Office, needless to say, reacted with considerable violence. A telegram was sent to Canberra rejecting Ball's suggestion and saying that at the outset, and until the position was clear, the United Kingdom would prefer that Mr. Ball request instructions in all cases. The telegram went on to say that the United Kingdom were disturbed by the suggestion that the role of the British representative might be to mediate between the Soviet and United States points of view in Japan. United Kingdom collaboration with the United States in other parts of the world (for example at this juncture in the Middle East, and at the forthcoming Council of Foreign Ministers) was of such outstanding importance that they were not prepared to be committed in advance to a general policy of mediation in Japan. This might well fail to achieve its purpose in Japan, and at the same time cause friction with the United States Government. The Australian Government was requested to point this out to Mr. Ball for his guidance, and emphasize the importance which the United Kingdom attached to it.

It is interesting in this connection to compare the attitude of the Australians towards United Kingdom views on United States bases in the Pacific. While the United Kingdom, for obvious reasons, want to use the advantages they hold in the Pacific for bargaining with the Americans on a world-wide scale, the Australians are not disposed to concern themselves with the implications of their policy outside their own sphere. I think their irresponsibility is going to do a great deal to win our point on Commonwealth foreign policy. It is certainly helping to win us support in the Foreign Office.

---

<sup>1</sup> Conseiller politique de l'Australie au Conseil allié au Japon.

<sup>1</sup> Political Adviser of Australia to Allied Council, Japan.

Yours sincerely,

J. W. HOLMES

782.

DEA/6133-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures au deuxième secrétaire, le haut commissariat en Grande-Bretagne

Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Second Secretary, High Commission in Great Britain

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 8, 1946

Dear Mr. Holmes,

This will acknowledge your interesting and admirable letter of May 1st dealing with the doctrine of Commonwealth relations which the Australians have been developing especially since the present arrangements in Japan came into effect. I have given copies of your letter to Mr. Robertson with the suggestion that he might seek to discuss it with the Prime Minister while en route to London, as Mr. King may find himself involved in discussions with Dr. Evatt soon after his arrival.

In this connection I think that Canada House has received a copy of despatch No. 244 of March 26th† from the High Commissioner in Australia which comments on the motives which prompted Dr. Evatt to speak in optimistic terms of Soviet policy in the Australian House of Representatives. You will note from this despatch that Mr. Davis suspects that Dr. Evatt sees himself cast in the role of mediator between the Soviet Union and the Western powers. Thus the proposals of Mr. MacMahon Ball from Tokyo, which you mention in your letter, not unlikely were favourably received by Dr. Evatt.

I am inclined to agree with your unsympathetic ascription of motives and to think that the elevation of the practice adopted in Tokyo to a new theory of Commonwealth relations is only another example of the Australian desire to have their cake and eat it. All the members of the Commonwealth—and ourselves and the United Kingdom not least—at times exhibit this desire but the Australian manifestations have recently been specially blatant.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

PARTIE 2/PART 2

PAYS DIVERS

INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES

SECTION A

GRANDE-BRETAGNE/GREAT BRITAIN

SOUS-SECTION i/SUB-SECTION i

AFFRÈTEMENT DE NAVIRES CANADIENSCHARTERING OF CANADIAN SHIPS

783.

DEA/4929-U-40

*Le haut commissaire de Grande-Bretagne au sous-secrétaire d'État
par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner of Great Britain to Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

915/290

Ottawa, June 14, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have been asked by the United Kingdom Government to take up with the Canadian authorities the question of the negotiation of an agreement with regard to the charter to the United Kingdom of vessels owned by Canada.

During the war, as you will be aware, the Ministry of War Transport had on bareboat charter a number of "Fort" ships. As a result of an agreement signed on the 17th August last<sup>1</sup> these ships were put at the disposal of the Ministry on Mutual Aid terms.

When Sir Cyril Hurcomb, Director-General of the Ministry of War Transport, was in Canada last October he obtained Mr. Howe's agreement that the United Kingdom Government should retain these "Fort" ships on bareboat charter for a period of two or three years. It was agreed that the terms should be discussed and that a new agreement should be drawn up. It was also agreed that hire at a rate of 10% per annum on a valuation of 500,000 Canadian dollars per ship should be paid in respect of all the "Fort" ships other than sixteen of them which had been operating on Admiralty service. These latter ships would be free of hire for so long as they remained on naval service.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1945, N° 9.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1945, No. 9.

Negotiations took place earlier this year between the representatives in Montreal of the Ministry of War Transport and the Park Steamship Company acting on behalf of the Canadian Government and in March the Ministry were informed that the Canadian Government wished the new agreement to be signed in Ottawa on behalf of the two Governments in the same way as the agreement of the 17th August, 1945, had been signed.

When Mr. Hynard (the M.W.T. representative in Montreal) returned to the United Kingdom in April, he took with him a new draft of the agreement which had been prepared by the Canadian authorities. There are certain points in the new draft which the Ministry of Transport do not feel able to accept and they have now prepared for consideration a redraft of which I enclose a copy.† The nature of the suggested alterations, and the reasons for them, are set out in the memorandum and a copy of which I also enclose†.

As the memorandum points out, the Canadian authorities have asked that the United Kingdom authorities should redeliver the oil burning "Forts" which they have on charter and take in exchange coal burning ships. I understand that the Ministry of Transport have pointed out to the Canadian authorities the difficulties in which this would involve the United Kingdom authorities but, in accordance with the Canadian Government's wishes, the Ministry are proceeding with the exchanges as fast as they can and expect to be able to complete the change by the 1st October, 1946. But they trust that the Canadian authorities will understand that it would not be possible to redeliver the oil burners at sixty days' notice, since most of the ships are in a position or have commitments, which make this impracticable.

I have also been asked to mention that, in agreement with Mr. Howe, the Ministry of Transport have entered into contracts for the subcharter of the "Forts" on bareboat terms for the period of the agreement. The United Kingdom authorities hope, therefore, that the agreement between the two Governments may be signed in the near future so that the contractual right of the United Kingdom authorities to the services of these ships is probably [sic] established.

I should be grateful if you could arrange for the enclosed memorandum and revised draft agreement to be considered by the appropriate Canadian authorities. If any elucidation of any particular points is required, I should be grateful if you would let me know as I am sure that the Ministry of Transport in London will be very glad to supply any further information desired. Alternatively if the Canadian authorities would prefer to have a discussion on the subject I should be very glad to assist in whatever way may be thought convenient.

Yours sincerely,

P. A. CLUTTERBUCK

784.

DEA/4929-U-40

*Le sous-ministre des Finances au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Finance to Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, July 29, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I regret that we did not reply directly to you when you sent us on June 28th the letter which your Department received from the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom regarding the charter to the United Kingdom of vessels owned by Canada. Mr. Bryce of this Department had spoken to Mr. Gavsie, of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, about the one point in which we were directly concerned, and he thought that that Department would take up the matter in consultation with you. I note, however, in the comments forwarded by you to Sir Alexander Clutterbuck on July 17th,† you have taken the line originally suggested by the Department of Reconstruction and Supply but with which we are unable to agree, and consequently I think it is necessary to make our position clear to you, as Mr. Bryce endeavoured to do to Mr. Gavsie on the telephone.

It is the view of this Department that the agreement on the settlement of war claims, dated March 6, 1946,<sup>1</sup> covers the amounts owing by the United Kingdom in respect of the charter of these vessels up to February 28th, and that the amounts owing to Park Steamship Company or the Crown in the right of Canada in respect of the period prior to March 1st of this year should be debited to the United Kingdom General Settlement Account, just as other amounts owing by the United Kingdom under that settlement are charged. I note that in your "Comments", presumably following the original views of the Department of Reconstruction, you have stated that the agreement refers to the settlement of war claims, and it was not intended that it should affect the charter for the ships under discussion. In fact, however, the agreement, as its text clearly indicates, covers all claims which arose "on or after September 3, 1939, and prior to March 1, 1946, in respect of supplies, service, facilities and accommodation delivered or furnished during that period". This wording seems clearly to cover an item for the hire of ships during that period. Presumably in saying that it referred only to war claims, you had in mind the preamble, where it speaks of all accounts arising out of the war. This, however, has not been taken to limit the more general wording of the first Article, which is the effective clause in the agreement. We believe it is fair to say that the claim for ship charters was intended to be included at the time the agreement was negotiated. A figure was included for this possible claim in reckoning as to whether or not we could be satisfied with the offer of $150,000,000 made by the United Kingdom.

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1946, N° 10.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1946, No. 10.

Mr. Bryce spoke this morning to Mr. McNaughton of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply to ask if he could arrange to have the charges in respect of these ship charters prior to March 1st put through before the Dominion Government books are closed at the end of this month, as we would like, if possible, to get them into the books for the last fiscal year, where nearly all the adjustments under this agreement come. It would seem to me, however, from the state of the correspondence with the United Kingdom, that it will be difficult to settle on the text of the charter agreement before that time, and presumably, therefore, it may be necessary to hold this matter over until definite agreement is reached with the United Kingdom or at least the points of principle involved in the charter agreement are settled.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

785.

DEA/4929-U-40

Le haut commissaire de Grande-Bretagne au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

High Commissioner of Great Britain to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

915/290

[Ottawa,] August 28, 1946

Dear Mr. Howe,

As you know, correspondence has been proceeding through the Department of External Affairs with a view to the conclusion of an Agreement between our two Governments for the charter to the United Kingdom of certain vessels owned by Canada. The latest position is that in reply to my letter of the 14th June, I received from Mr. Wrong on the 17th July a note† setting out the comments of the Canadian authorities on the revised draft of the Agreement proposed by the United Kingdom Ministry of Transport. This note I passed on to London for consideration by the United Kingdom authorities concerned, and I have now received a telegram from my Government containing the text of a personal message to you from Mr. Barnes, the Minister of Transport. I enclose this message, and am sending a copy to Mr. Wrong for his information with reference to my previous correspondence with him on this subject.

Yours sincerely,

P. A. CLUTTERBUCK

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le ministre des Transports de Grande-Bretagne au ministre
de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements*

Minister of Transport of Great Britain to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

[London,] August 28, 1946

1. You will remember that on the 14th June, the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom submitted to the Department of External Affairs a redraft of the proposed Agreement between the two Governments relating to bareboat charter of "Fort" and "Park" ships. I have now received the note setting out the comments of the Canadian authorities which was forwarded to London by the High Commissioner. This note contains a proposal involving a fundamental alteration in regard to the period for which the ships may be retained on bareboat charter by the United Kingdom.

2. You will recall that in drafts of agreements which have been prepared from time to time it has been consistently envisaged that the charter would be for a period of two years, with charterer's option to exercise for a further period of twelve months, subject to giving due notice of intention to exercise option before expiration of first two years. Further, there was to be an additional period of twelve months beyond the period of two years or three years, as the case might be, during which ships might be re-delivered in instalments. The note now received proposes that thirty of the ships shall be re-delivered between 1st September, 1947, and 30th November, 1947, twenty in the following three months, a further twenty in the next three months, and the balance between 1st June, 1948, and 31st August, 1948. As period from which the charters are deemed to begin dates from 1st September, 1945, it is in effect now proposed to curtail the optional period of the charter by one year.

3. This programme of re-deliveries would be incompatible with my obligation under sub-charter of these ships to the United Kingdom ship owners under my disposal scheme. I have entered into the contract with United Kingdom ship owners for a minimum charter of two years certain. You will remember that in my telegram of 5th January† I consulted you before entering into these contracts and you were good enough to agree. In all cases sub-charter runs on beyond 31st March, 1948, and in some cases beyond 31st August, 1948, depending when ships were delivered.

4. I am sure you will understand my position as, apart from my memorandum contract with the United Kingdom ship owners, I have been planning my tonnage resources on the assumption we would have the option to retain this tonnage for the full period envisaged, and it would be impossible for me otherwise to fulfil my commitments.

5. I hope, therefore, that you can agree to let original proposal as to period of charter stand and will be most grateful to hear from you as early as possible.

786.

DEA/4929-U-40

*Le haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne au sous-secrétaire d'État
par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

915/290

Ottawa, September 27, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

In his letter to you of the 28th August the High Commissioner sent you a copy of a message which he had received from the United Kingdom Minister of Transport for Mr. Howe about the draft agreement for the charter to the United Kingdom of vessels owned by Canada.

Mr. Howe subsequently sent a further message to the Minister of Transport and Mr. Barnes has now sent a reply which has been communicated to Mr. Howe. I enclose a copy of these two messages for your information.

Yours sincerely,

J. J. S. GARNER

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au ministre des Transports de Grande-Bretagne

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Minister of Transport of Great Britain

[Ottawa,] September 9, 1946

I have received your message transmitted through office of High Commissioner on August 28th with reference to period of charter for Fort ships. The reason for my suggestion that the period of charter be shortened is due to shortage of shipping in Canada and our need to have some of the ships returned as early as possible. In addition, the previous draft was too indefinite as to the number of ships to be returned in Class "A" vessels. Am anxious to have the return of up to 35 ships as early as possible and to have a definite period for the remainder. Having regard to fact that you have made commitments to sub-charterers with respect to all the ships am prepared to agree that original proposal as to period of charter stand, provided you agree that Canadian Government shall have right to nominate up to 35 ships to be returned upon expiration of presently existing sub-charters. We of course would have to be given information with respect to existing sub-charters. Am extremely anxious to have this matter settled and would appreciate cabled reply.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

*Le ministre des Transports de Grande-Bretagne au ministre
de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements*

Minister of Transport of Great Britain to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

[London,] September 24, 1946

1. Thank you for your message about the period of charter for "Fort" ships. I appreciate your helpful decision and agree that we should provide for the re-delivery of up to 35 ships upon the expiry of the existing sub-charters. These will begin to run out during the summer of 1948, the earliest being about April. I understand your proposal to be that we agree forthwith upon a definite schedule of re-deliveries with approximate dates. This schedule would provide for some as you require to be re-delivered during the summer of 1948, re-delivery of the remainder to be spread over the period ending September, 1949. As I shall be very tight for tonnage on the estimates of requirements during 1948 I hope that it will be possible to defer the delivery of a good proportion of the ships till 1949.

2. Since we are agreed upon this principle, I feel sure we shall be able to settle the details of this matter without difficulty but they are somewhat complicated to arrange by exchange of telegrams. Hurcomb will be in Washington in late October for the U.M.C.C. Would it be convenient if he came up to Ottawa thereafter, that is early November? He could bring with him all the details of the sub-charters so that the schedule could be completed. I shall be glad to know that this suggestion will meet your wishes.

3. Some of the ships which have been exchanged against oil burners have not yet been sub-chartered. I am just offering these for sub-charter on the same terms, that is for a minimum period of two years. This will not affect our re-delivery arrangements, for the sub-charters will run out in good time for re-delivery within the schedule.

787.

DEA/4929-U-40

*L'avocat-conseil, le ministère de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements, au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

General Counsel, Department of Reconstruction and Supply, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, November 27, 1946

Dear Sir,

ATTENTION: MR. S. D. PIERCE

RE: AGREEMENT FOR CHARTER OF 92 "FORT" VESSELS TO UNITED KINGDOM

You will recall that Mr. Howe, in his letter of July 6, 1946 to Mr. Robertson,† suggested that if the United Kingdom authorities in Canada felt that a meeting would expedite this matter, our Deputy Minister would be glad to arrange for such a meeting.

Sir Cyril Hurcomb of the British Ministry of Transport was in Ottawa several weeks ago and discussed with officials of this Department and Park Steamship Company Limited the terms of the proposed agreement. The terms which have been agreed upon are set forth in the enclosed draft.<sup>1</sup>

You will note that the agreement refers only to 91 vessels rather than 92. I understand that one of the vessels, the "Fort Colville", is being used by the Admiralty and the Minister has agreed that this ship should be excluded. I should also point out that the underlining under part of paragraph 3 is of no special significance, and can be eliminated.

The Minister had requested me to forward this draft to you with the request that you arrange for execution thereof. I suggest that it might be well to indicate that this agreement shall be deemed to have been as of the 1st day of September, 1945.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES GAVSIE

788.

DEA/4929-U-40

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa,] December 27, 1946

SHIPPING: AGREEMENT FOR CHARTER OF VESSELS TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 27th, approval was given a recommendation to authorize an agreement with the United Kingdom government for the charter of ninety-one cargo vessels originally made available under Mutual Aid, an Order in Council to be passed accordingly.

SOUS-SECTION ii/SUB-SECTION ii

DÉFENSE/DEFENCE

789.

DEA/22-U

Mémorandum du ministre de la Justice

Memorandum by Minister of Justice

[London, January 22, 1946]

This 22nd January at 5 p.m. at Mr. Attlee's request Messrs Gardiner, Gibson, Martin and St. Laurent attended at 10 Downing Street. There were also present with Mr. Attlee, Lord Addison, General Ismay and one other officer. Mr. Attlee said he and his colleagues had been much disturbed at the

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités 1946, N° 44.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1946, No. 44.

Canadian decision to withdraw our Canadian forces at a relatively early date and wished us to know the extent of the obligations falling upon the U.K. as a result of the victories. He enumerated the forces used in the various occupation theatres, on the sea and in the air amounting in all to:

Army	1,130,000	men
Navy	375,000	"
Air Forces	563,000	"
	<hr/>
Total	2,068,000	men

He stated that could hardly be reduced below 1,900,000 within a year and required in addition a six months intake in training and the retention of between 500,000 and 600,000 in munition industries; a very heavy burden on the manpower so urgently required to restore U.K.'s exporting capacity.

I pointed out our difficulties resulting a/ from the fact that we had to keep CMHQ in England going as long as we had any men here and that it was a machine built up to take care of a comparatively large army and could not be substantially cut down to fit the force now operating, which meant a disproportionate overhead. I added we could not substitute a new system for the short time occupation forces might be required b/ from the fact that our men were under the impression they were not doing any very useful job since V.E. day and those who returned gave the public the impression there had not been anything useful to do c/ they had been away a long time and were entitled to be demobilized d/ we would have to recruit and train new men and thus have to keep our training camps operating e/ might have trouble in getting transport ships later on etc.

I suggested the only thing which might be useful would be to send the P.M. through the usual channels a full account of what were the obligations incumbent on the U.K. not for the continuation of the imperial commitments but as obligations to the United Nations.

I suggested it might also be useful to point out to us what were the corresponding obligations the U.S. were required to discharge and what forces would thus be required from them.

Mr. Attlee said that when the Commonwealth acted together we had in divisions numbers comparable to the other two great powers, but U.K. alone was quite out of proportion.

I told him the policy of one voice and one army for the Empire had a few supporters in Canada but they were the minority. It was a matter of party politics with us and the party led by Mr. King was opposed to it. That when we did act in line with U.K. and other Dominions it was because it was in the interest of Canada to take that line.

I also pointed out Mr. King's views were those expressed in London before both Houses of Parliament; that during war decisions were made by Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt and afterwards by them and Mr. Stalin, to be carried out by us all. But that such pattern could not continue in peace time.

That we could not have responsibilities arising out of commitments or decisions in which we had no part as a separate state. That was the reason for our amendment to Security Council provisions at San Francisco.

I pointed out that the San Francisco charter seemed to be founded on the understanding of the four great powers at Moscow in 1943 to continue their co-operation for the prosecution of the war to the end and for the organization and maintenance of peace and security and left with them the responsibility for joint action on behalf of the organization until the Security Council was prepared to take over. We realized there were duties to be performed but we had not been consulted as to the portion accepted by the U.K. which no doubt had become more onerous than it appeared to be when so accepted.

We gave no encouragement to the suggestion for a Commonwealth meeting, but stated that in these international jobs we felt we should be acting on our own even though our action was parallel with that of the U.K. and other Commonwealth units. We pointed out it would take a long time to have the Security Council in a position to do the work of maintaining order in liberated or conquered lands.

The big 5 would have to determine what was necessary, how much each of them was going to contribute, make arrangements with each member and have him get ratification of the arrangement and then train the forces he was to supply. That it should be pressed on as vigorously as possible so they might realize that UNO did not mean only peaches and cream but stern duties and contributions as well.

790.

DEA/1174-39C

Décret en ConseilOrder in Council

P.C. 624

Ottawa, February 21, 1946

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 15th February, 1946, from the Minister of National Defence for Air, representing that under financial arrangements made between Canada and the United Kingdom in connection with the operation of Royal Canadian Air Force Squadrons Overseas and reflected in the Agreement of April 20th, 1943, (Order in Council P.C. 2898 dated April 8th, 1943), Canada paid the United Kingdom for initial issues of aircraft and engines, and, when the Squadrons were re-armed with new type aircraft, received full credit for the aircraft and engines returned and paid for the new aircraft and engines obtained. On the other hand aircraft spares and engine spares were paid for on a consumption basis;

That since the types of aircraft in Royal Canadian Air Force Overseas Squadrons were, from necessity, in accordance with the operational dictates of the moment, they were not generally suitable for the Canadian post-war force. In any case, had it been desired to bring any of them back to Canada, it would have been necessary to buy a range of spares from Air Ministry. Accordingly, on the conclusion of hostilities, many aircraft and engines from Canadian Squadrons disbanded Overseas were returned to the Air Ministry for disposal, the matter of financial adjustment to be dealt with later. Some of the aircraft were of use to the Royal Air Force in their post-war arrangements and some had a sale value at prices greatly reduced from cost;

That when it was ascertained that the Air Ministry could provide operational aircraft, engines and spares of the type required in the post-war Royal Canadian Air Force of which there were none available from stocks in Canada, discussions took place between Royal Canadian Air Force Overseas Headquarters and the Air Ministry as a result of which the approval of Air Ministry and the British Treasury has been received to a proposal which will allow the procurement of certain aircraft, engines and spares of the types desired for the post-war Royal Canadian Air Force on an exchange basis for those aircraft turned in from the disbanded Squadrons. The basis of the proposal has been reviewed by the Deputy Minister of Finance and approved by him; and

That while Canada would be required to pay an estimated amount of $2,000,000.00 for the transportation and packing costs involved in the moving of these aircraft to the approximate number of 350, it is considered that the proposal presents a most attractive means whereby the Royal Canadian Air Force could obtain the requisite aircraft without the necessity of a major capital outlay.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Minister of National Defence for Air, advise that authority be granted:

(a) To indicate to the United Kingdom that the above proposal is acceptable to Canada;

(b) To bring to this country the requisite aircraft, engines and spares on an exchange basis for aircraft and engines returned to the Air Ministry from disbanded Canadian Squadrons Overseas at an estimated cost of $2,000,000.00 to cover the cost of transportation and packing, an item for which funds have been provided in amounts of $500,000.00 in the 1945-1946 Estimates and $1,500,000.00 in the 1946-1947 Estimates of the Department of National Defence for Air; and

(c) To use the aircraft so obtained for the equipping and/or re-equipping of Royal Canadian Air Force post-war Squadrons and training establishments.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Selon cette proposition, le Canada aurait obtenu 329 Spitfires Mk. XIV, XIX et 22 et 36 Austers plus 136 jeux de modification pour des Mosquitoes de fabrication canadienne. Peu après cependant, le Canada a demandé un crédit au lieu des Spitfires et a utilisé ce crédit pour l'achat de 85 nouveaux chasseurs à réaction du type Vampire de la Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup> According to this proposal, Canada would have obtained 329 Spitfires Mk. XIV, XIX and 22 and 36 Austers plus 136 modification sets for Canadian built Mosquitoes. Shortly afterwards however, Canada requested a credit instead of the Spitfires and used this credit for the purchase of 85 Vampire jet fighters from Great Britain.

791.

DEA/7-DA

*Le haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

950K/14

Ottawa, April 1, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

As you may be aware, a Ministry of Supply Mission under the leadership of Sir Graham Cunningham, visited Canada last December and January, and had some discussions with the Canadian authorities concerned about various matters in connection with the supply of material for defence purposes.

The Mission have now returned to the United Kingdom and have reported to the Minister of Supply. We have been asked to take up with the Canadian authorities certain matters in continuation of those discussions. These concern particularly the experimental establishment at Suffield, Alberta.

The United Kingdom authorities are anxious for confirmation that, as they greatly hope may be the case, the Canadian Government intend to retain this valuable establishment as a permanent postwar arrangement. They feel that, if so, the Canadian Government may in any case wish to be wholly responsible for its maintenance and they have asked me to explain that they would not themselves be able to share the maintenance expenses. For their part, the United Kingdom authorities are, of course, maintaining research and development establishments in Britain in the results of which all members of the Commonwealth are invited to share.

On connected matters the United Kingdom authorities have asked me to let you know that they would be very willing to extend an invitation to the Canadian Government to send representatives to the United Kingdom at an early date to take part in a general survey of policy as to postwar research and development on questions of chemical and biological warfare. As a result of such a visit, it is hoped that the Canadian authorities might decide on certain items of such a research and development programme as suitable for development in Canada. It is also hoped that it would be possible to coordinate any such work undertaken in Canada with the corresponding work to be undertaken in the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom Government would also be willing to lend a small number (say six or seven) of scientific and technical chemical and biological warfare staff. If the Canadian authorities agree, they suggest that this should be done on an interchange basis and that the Canadian Government might wish to send such technical staff of their own as can be made available to work at Porton. It is not suggested that this proposal should interfere in any way with the present arrangements whereby the Canadian Government send officers for training in experimental gun firing at Shoeburyness.

The United Kingdom authorities have further asked us to say that, whenever work requiring weapons or other stores of United Kingdom manufacture is being carried out at Suffield, they would be very willing to supply such stores free of charge.

I should be grateful if you would let me know what are the views of the Canadian authorities in this matter; if you wish to discuss the matter at any time I should be very happy to do so.

Yours sincerely,

STEPHEN L. HOLMES

792.

CH/Vol. 2021

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, April 18, 1946

Dear Mr. Holmes,

On April 1st you wrote me concerning research and development on questions of chemical and biological warfare.

At the present time my reply on one of the points raised in your letter will have to be in the nature of an interim one since the matter of policy for defence research is under Cabinet consideration. A decision has, however, been made to maintain the experimental station at Suffield as a Canadian establishment during peacetime. Also you will be glad to learn that we are in agreement concerning the exchange of scientific personnel in the field of chemical and biological warfare, referred to in paragraph 5 of your letter.<sup>1</sup>

With regard to paragraph 4 of your letter Dr. O. Maass, Director of Chemical Warfare and Smoke, and Dr. O. M. Solandt, Director General of Defence Research together with other Government scientists will be in London this summer attending the informal Commonwealth Conference on defence research and it is hoped that the general problem of chemical and biological warfare will be discussed at that time. While my reply on this point is rather tentative in view of Cabinet consideration of defence research yet the proposal in your letter of April 1st is in keeping with our present ideas on the development of defence research in Canada.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

<sup>1</sup> Voir la section C de la partie 1 de ce chapitre.

<sup>1</sup> See Section C of Part 1 of this chapter.

793.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire de Grande-Bretagne*

Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner of Great Britain

No. 68

Ottawa, August 31, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your note No. 44 of August 2nd,† concerning the recruitment of Royal Canadian Air Force personnel for service with the Royal Air Force.

This matter was referred to the Department of National Defence for Air which has now replied that the proposals contained in your note of August 2nd are satisfactory.

Wing Commander M. Lipton of the Division of the Air Member for Personnel, Department of National Defence for Air, has been nominated as the Officer with whom members of your staff should discuss more detailed arrangements.

I have etc.

H. H. WRONG
for the Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs

794.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 389

*Le ministre de la Défense nationale pour l'Air au secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Minister of National Defence for Air to Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

Ottawa, October 18, 1946

My dear Colleague,

At the meeting of Cabinet yesterday the Prime Minister raised objections to a Press Release issued by my Department announcing that applications for service in the R.A.F. would be received from Canadians, and pointed out that any such agreement should have the approval of Cabinet.

At that time I expressed the view that the negotiations had been conducted by External Affairs, to which statement I felt you rather took exception.

On going over my file in this matter, I find that the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom made certain proposals to your Department in Despatch No. 44, dated 2nd August, 1946,† and in a letter dated the 13th of August† my Deputy Minister was asked whether these proposals were satisfactory to this Department. In the reply from my Deputy Minister, dated 27th August,† he stated that "the proposals as modified are considered satisfactory", and in your letter to the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom, Despatch No. 78, dated 30th September,† you stated that "the terms of the proposed inter-governmental agreement are satisfactory to the Canadian Government. It is agreed that your note and this reply shall place on record the acceptance by our two Governments of the conditions as set forth in the Agreement."

While my Department expressed a willingness to co-operate, and took no objections to the terms of the proposal, we had no part in negotiating the Agreement that was entered into.

The reason that a Press Release was issued by my Department was because the Agreement contemplated the terms of service being brought to the notice of members and ex-members of the R.C.A.F.

I would point out that further negotiations are at present under way concerning the acceptance of applications of Canadian candidates to enter the Royal Air Force College at Cranwell, for five University graduates for permanent commissions, and twenty-four aircraft and administration apprentices. My Deputy Minister, in a letter to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, dated October 15th,† has indicated that there is no objection in principle to Canadians joining the R.A.F., and stating the willingness of the R.C.A.F. to co-operate. In view of the remarks of the Prime Minister, it would appear that these proposals should be brought to the attention of Cabinet before the United Kingdom proposal is accepted.

Yours sincerely,

COLIN GIBSON

795.

PCO/C-20-2

Extrait de lettre du secrétaire du Cabinet au président, le Comité des chefs d'état-major

Extract of Letter from Secretary to the Cabinet to Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee

SECRET

Ottawa, December 23, 1946

Dear Air Marshal Leckie,

The following items discussed by Cabinet on December 19 will, I believe, be of interest to you.

Canadian Service Representation in the United Kingdom; instructions

The Prime Minister submitted revised draft instructions to seven liaison officers attached to the High Commissioner's office in London. The functions of these Service representatives were to be confined to liaison and would not include participation in planning of any kind. It is appreciated, however, that a limited subordinate staff and a number of experts in the different lines in relation to which the United Kingdom was an important source of information to the Canadian Services, would be required.

Cabinet approved the revised instructions, it being understood that the Minister of National Defence would limit the personnel involved to the minimum number essential for effective liaison purposes. Copy of the draft instructions is attached.†

• • •

Sincerely yours,

A. D. P. HEENEY

SOUS-SECTION iii/SUB-SECTION iii

FINANCES/FINANCE

796.

DEA/154

*Le haut commissaire adjoint de Grande-Bretagne
au sous-ministre des Finances*

Deputy High Commissioner of Great Britain to Deputy Minister of Finance

915/442

Ottawa, January 25, 1946

Dear Dr. Clark,

I write in confirmation of our telephone conversation this morning and with reference to the recent interview which the High Commissioner and myself had with Mr. Ilsley on the subject of prospective dates for the forthcoming financial discussions to be held in Ottawa between representatives of the Canadian and United Kingdom Governments.

In accordance with the plan proposed by Mr. Ilsley a party will be leaving England, by air for Dorval, on Friday, February 1st.

The party will consist of Sir Wilfrid Eady<sup>1</sup>, Mr. C. F. Cobbold, Mr. A. T. K. Grant, Mr. Edgar Jones (Treasury), Mr. Bridge (Bank of England) and secretarial staff.

On arrival at Dorval Sir Wilfrid Eady and Mr. Cobbold will proceed direct to Washington to discuss certain outstanding questions there. The remainder of the party will proceed direct to Ottawa with the idea of being able to start in on preliminary statistical work with your Department on Monday, February 4th.

It is proposed that Sir Wilfrid Eady and Mr. Cobbold will arrive on about Friday, February 8th, with the idea of being available for the main discussions to begin on Monday, February 11th.

It is suggested that it would be appropriate to issue a statement for the press (simultaneously in London and Ottawa) some time next week before the arrival of the party in Canada.

<sup>1</sup> Deuxième secrétaire conjoint, la Trésorerie de Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup> Joint Second Secretary, Treasury of Great Britain.

I attach a proposed draft† of this which has been prepared by the Treasury and shall be glad to know whether you find it suitable. If so perhaps we could agree for a date when it could be simultaneously published, and in this connection I would suggest say Thursday of next week (January 31st).

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Norman Robertson for his information but, as I think we agreed in our conversation this morning, I am assuming that you are keeping the Department of External Affairs informed.

I am writing this letter to you as following up the discussion which we previously had with Mr. Ilsley.

Yours sincerely,

STEPHEN HOLMES

797.

DEA/154

*Le directeur, la direction économique, le ministère des Finances,
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Director, Economic Division, Department of Finance,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] February 2, 1946

The attached notes, as indicated at the beginning, are suggested only for some use in discussing the line to be taken with the United Kingdom Treasury and other officials in the meeting later this month.

Dr. Clark hopes to arrange a meeting some time in the first half of the week of February 4th to discuss this general subject, and I thought these notes—which I regret to say are only my own rather rough ideas at the time—might serve in part as a basis for such discussion.

I would very much appreciate any comments, criticisms or suggestions which you could give me before the meeting as to alternative or additional points for consideration or amendment.

R. B. BRYCE

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire du directeur, la direction économique, le ministère des Finances

Memorandum by Director, Economic Division, Department of Finance

[Ottawa,] January 31, 1946

PROPOSALS FOR DISCUSSION RE LOAN AND OTHER FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

The following proposals are put forward at this stage, not as firm recommendations, but as suggested basis for discussion out of which some recommendations might emerge for use in the negotiations with the U.K. They cover only the major items concerned, and do not attempt to go into details regarding the Army, Navy and Air Force settlements.

1. NEW LOAN

It is suggested that the new loan offered to the U.K. should be on the same terms as the U.S. loan in so far as interest, waiver and repayment provisions are concerned. It should also include an agreement on the part of the U.K. not to discriminate in trade, exchange control or the issue of import licences against Canada in favour of any other country, except in accordance with Article VII of the International Monetary Fund Agreement.<sup>1</sup> It is suggested that the other conditions of the U.S. agreement need not be included, i.e., those relating to sterling area exchange arrangements, other exchange arrangements, or accumulated sterling balances. We will get the benefit of the American stipulations in this regard, and as long as we are sure that the U.K. does not discriminate against Canada, we should be amply protected. This should enable us in some measure to escape the censure which the U.K.-U.S. agreement encountered because of the serious and detailed conditions that it imposed on the U.K.

It is suggested that the Canadian dollars provided to the U.K. under this credit should be freely available to the U.K. for any purpose except the acquisition of assets abroad, and may be transferred in settlement of current account balances to any country outside North, Central and South America. (Possibly South Africa and the U.S.S.R. might be included here, on the ground of their being leading gold producers.) Alternatively, we might make the funds usable for any purpose whatsoever, without restriction, and rely solely upon the safeguards in regard to the amount of the funds which can be used in any one year, suggested below.

The amount of the loan, it is suggested, should be either $1 billion to cover the estimated requirements of the U.K. alone (including Colonies), or $1½ billion to cover the requirements of the U.K. plus Australia, New Zealand and India, if it is considered desirable not to lend directly to the latter. As a safeguard, and to ensure that in fact the loan is used to finance the U.K. and sterling area requirements rather than other, it is suggested that the amount of the line of credit which can be utilized in the first year be $400 million, if it is for the U.K. only, in the second year $300 million, and in succeeding years $200 m., or some such series, while if it is to cover as well the requirements of Australia, New Zealand and India, the amounts might be $100 m. higher in the first three years. The selection of these amounts and the rate at which they could be released will, of course, depend upon a more detailed examination of the prospective U.K.-Canadian balance of payments and related figures. The question of whether or not we should plan to include the Australian, New Zealand and Indian requirements in the loan to the U.K. will be the subject of a separate memorandum.

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale:

<sup>1</sup> Marginal note:

W[oul]dn't an m.f.n. clause achieve the same result?

We will presumably wish to request the U.K. to meet part of its requirements in Canada in gold or its equivalent. I would suggest that we endeavour to keep this to the simplest possible provision. We might start by asking the U.K. to do essentially what we have asked Belgium, Holland and China to do. This might take the form of requesting the U.K. to sell us either quarterly or annually an amount of gold equal to 20% of the line of credit drawn upon during that period, and to use the proceeds of such gold sale for meeting its Canadian requirements. In practice we might agree later to accept sales of U.S. dollars in lieu of gold, but I think it would be desirable from the American angle to put the formal obligation in terms of gold rather than any other currency.

2. CONSOLIDATION OF OLD LOANS

It is necessary to deal with the amount outstanding of the 1942 loan, which is approximately $540 m., and the accumulated liability of the U.K. for its share in the Air Training Plans, in so far as this is not covered by deliveries in kind or other means, which is estimated now to be approximately $435 m., including about $10 m. in respect of the Third Plan, covering operations since April 1, 1945. We are apparently free from formal restriction on what we may ask of the U.K. in settlement of these obligations in so far as the U.S.-U.K. agreement is concerned, but the U.K. would no doubt feel that they would seriously prejudice their position in the U.S. if they agreed with us on a very favourable interest rate and repayment basis for these wartime obligations.

Inasmuch as these old loans are essentially war loans, not post-war loans, it is suggested that we should be prepared to consider carrying them for another 10 years at least on an interest-free basis, as long as some reasonable arrangements are made to ensure their repayment and not their indefinite postponement on this basis. I would suggest that the most effective and defensible repayment arrangements are already at hand in the character of the loans and the arrangements already made in respect of them.

In regard to the 1942 loan, I would suggest we consider continuing the present arrangement under which it is repaid automatically from the proceeds of sale ex-U.K. or redemption of the Canadian securities held by the U.K. and its residents. This arrangement is already resulting in fairly rapid repayment of the loan, and if continued for another 10 years, may almost complete repayment of it.

In the case of the Air Training liability, the bulk of the debt has arisen because the deliveries in kind by the U.K. from its own production or from Lend-Lease sources have fallen far short of the U.K. share of the costs. It is suggested that in effect we give the U.K. a much longer time to make these deliveries in kind to Canada, and that we agree that some fraction of Canada's requirements of defence and military supplies of all kinds from the U.K. in future years should be delivered in repayment of this obligation. The fraction to be selected would give some scope for negotiation and would control among other factors the rate at which the debt would be repaid. Alternatively it might be agreed that any deliveries of military and defence supplies and equipment in excess of some annual figure would be applied in reduction of this loan. This arrangement would prevent repayment of the loan being a burden on ordinary commercial trade. It would leave Canada with some incentive to obtain equipment and supplies for its armed services from U.K. sources. It would, to some degree, amount to assistance by Canada to the U.K. in maintaining strategically necessary industries in the U.K. in which Canada has a security interest. It might, it is true, conflict somewhat with the technical desirability of having Canadian equipment on U.S. rather than U.K. specifications and designs, but it seems likely that some reconciliation of designs and specifications will be desirable, if not inevitable, on broad security grounds.

The disposition of the amount of each of these old obligations remaining in 1956 could be deferred until that time, with a provision that if agreement on any other means of settlement cannot be reached, the amount would be added then to the amount of the new loan in course of repayment, subject to interest and waiver.

The alternative means of dealing with these old loans would appear to be simply to add them to the amount of the new loan and put them on the same terms as the new loan. It would seem unreasonable to exact more onerous terms on these loans provided in the first instance for war purposes than we are exacting on loans provided for post-war purposes. On the other hand, we should not perhaps lose sight of the theoretically possible alternative of granting the new loan on a completely interest-free basis, but repayable over a shorter period than the American loan, while asking sufficient interest on the old loans to compensate us for the extra generosity on the new. This would be taking advantage of the technicalities of the American agreement to escape the restriction that it was intended to apply in our case. It would, of course, give the U.K. some real incentive to buy in Canada rather than elsewhere, as the marginal debt so incurred would carry no interest. However, it would seem quite unlikely that the U.K. would be prepared to agree to such an arrangement, and it is doubtful whether we could adequately explain the arrangement to our own Parliament without getting into severe difficulties with the U.S.

3. ARMY, R.C.A.F. AND N. & S. SETTLEMENTS

The U.K. would like to be able to clear up and settle with finality all the outstanding claims and counter claims arising out of the war, as they did in the U.S. It is suspected that they hope in such a broad and final settlement to secure more generous treatment than they would if the individual items were dealt with separately over the balance of the fiscal year or next fiscal year.

I would suggest that because of the difficulties that will be encountered in reaching agreement upon the facts involved and disentangling and settling the accounting problems, we should not agree to such a lump sum final settlement during the month of February, but we should instead be prepared to agree upon all the outstanding questions of principle involved on such settlements and should then leave the amounts to be determined in accordance with such principles during the ensuing months. It is further suggested we should agree to make payments on account or payments subject to later adjustment in respect of all these major items before the books have closed for the current fiscal year. In the case of the U.K., this would apparently limit us to the date of March 31st. We should also be prepared, I would suggest, to adjust the amount of the new loan to reflect any divergence between the final result of the settlements and the result as anticipated in February.

The following list of items may be noted as an illustration of the range and complexity of the issues still to be settled:

1. Capitation rate for Army operations.
2. Canadian share of Army reserve stocks.
3. Canadian share of Air Force reserve stocks.
4. Settlement, if any, in respect of Ram Tanks.
5. Rebates in respect of Lend-Lease settlements with U.S.
6. Possible rental and operating charges for Longue Pointe Depot.
7. Adjustment of capitation rates for Belgian and Netherlands payments.
8. Settlements for transfers of Mutual Aid supplies.
9. Wind-up and settlement of Inspection Board.
10. Settlement of U.K. equity in D.M.S. funds.
11. Clean-up of U.K. Cash Receipts Account and Suspense Account.
12. Financing Indian locomotives purchases.
13. Agreement on settlement for lire, marks and other currencies for R.C.A.F.
14. Use of sterling from sale of Canadian surpluses in U.K.

In addition to the list of items noted above, on which some agreement in principle is needed, there are a substantial number of accounts to be cleared up and settled in respect of which there are no questions of principle outstanding that I know of. In addition, it is likely that the U.K. will have lists of items which they wish to include in the settlements. It has not yet been possible to get any list of items from the British which they would like to have on the agenda.

4. TRADE AND IMPORT QUESTIONS

It appears that the U.K. strategy is likely to be to keep the discussions so far as possible on financial matters and away from trade questions, perhaps hoping that the agreement already reached with the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce can be regarded as the main concession to be made in respect of immediate conditions, and that the other matters should wait over for discussion in connection with the I.T.O. nuclear group and conference discussions. It is suggested that the following, however, might be put forward as Canadian requests for U.K. agreement as conditions of the loan, either expressed as conditions or carried through to make the atmosphere appropriate:

(a) that U.K. will not discriminate against Canada in favour of any other country or group of countries in 1946 and later in commercial policy, including import licensing (or programming), or in bulk purchasing, or in other exchange control policies. This would be subject to an exception under Article VII of Bretton Woods, in the event that Canadian dollars were declared to be a scarce currency;

(b) that U.K. would agree not to restrict imports into the U.K. either for reasons of protection or to balance its international payments in the following classes of goods until 1951 (or, alternatively, as long as Canada is not charging interest on the debts accumulated during war, which would be at least until 1956 under the above proposals):

- (i) grains,
- (ii) non-ferrous metals (excluding precious metals)
- (iii) lumber (and possibly pulp).

This might appear at first sight an unreasonable restriction on their freedom of action in the pursuit of austerity where it is needed. It is suggested, however, that these three classes in which Canada has a very direct interest are such basic imports to the U.K. that they cannot in fact gain very much anyway by endeavouring to restrict their import and they have a real interest in securing supplies of them for their domestic requirements and export trade, at as low prices as possible. It seems unlikely that they would engage in much in the way of protection or austerity in these products in any event, and to ask them to agree not to do so may not be requiring a great deal in substance while at the same time securing something that would look like a real safeguard to Canadian trade in staple products.

(c) that the U.K. would agree that in any restriction of imports by licensing or quotas, whether for protective or balance of payments reasons, quotas or the number of licences issued will be provided up to an amount at least equal to 10% of the estimated U.K. consumption of the goods or the categories of the goods in question, and that Canada, under the non-discrimination clause, will have a fair opportunity to compete with other exporting countries for a share of this quantity.

The purpose of this provision would be to ensure that at least a token amount of imports is allowed in all categories the consumption of which is permitted in the U.K. If for reasons of real austerity the U.K. wishes completely to exclude both imports and consumption, they would be free to do so. They would also be free to decide that austerity required 90% of their consumption to be produced at home. On the other hand, they would be agreeing that no import trade would be completely throttled by restriction unless it were in a quota that the U.K. simply cannot afford to consume.

This condition should be limited in application either to the period extending until 1951 or the longer period suggested under (b) above.

(d) that the arrangements already made with the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce in respect of historic trade should be continued for as long a period as possible under the circumstances. It may not be possible to continue them beyond 1946, inasmuch as it would appear to be contrary to the U.K.'s undertakings not to discriminate in the issuance of import licenses. Perhaps, however, it could be continued in the form of an undertaking to grant import licences up to a level equal to 20% by value of pre-war imports in the categories in question.

It is suggested that the above trade considerations would represent a reasonable set of demands from Canada to the U.K., at this time, particularly if they are linked with the period during which the credit to be provided is being utilized. In effect they can then be defended as bearing upon the way in which the credit is to be utilized for purchasing in Canada. On the other hand, to our other borrowers we can point out that the U.K. has had to make very substantial concessions in its policies, which justify the lower interest rates given to it and not to others.

R. B. BRYCE

798.

DEA/154

*Mémorandum du chef, la direction économique, au sous-secrétaire d'État
aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, Economic Division, to Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa,] February 7, 1946

LOAN AND FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE U.K.

I understand that at the meeting you attended in Clark's office yesterday there was a discussion of the terms and conditions of the proposed credit to the U.K.; that it was agreed that the terms would be those of the U.K.-U.S. financial agreement but that it has not yet been decided what conditions we should seek to attach to the Canadian credit.

I suggest that we ask no more than the U.S. has obtained.

The U.K. emerged from months of gruelling negotiations with the U.S. with an agreement that was bitterly resented in the U.K. as a cruel bargain and accepted because there was no alternative. Are we to propose an arrangement, on terms equally severe, under which we reap not only benefit of the U.S. conditions but of a few more for good measure? Any more exodontistry on the U.S. gift horse and the poor beast will be toothless. The British hope that we will be more generous. They may have made it impossible for us to be so by their agreement with the U.S. but I would think they have cause to expect us to treat them with at least as much generosity as did the U.S.

The case for pulling a few more teeth is (a) that we need to assure ourselves of markets in the U.K. for our goods and services and (b) that we will have to overcome serious opposition in the House.

On (a), I doubt the effectiveness of conditions written into the loan. Our hope of continuing markets in the U.K. lies in the speedy rebuilding of U.K. export potential and in a return to multilateral trade. If these do not occur, conditions written into the loan won't protect us. Canadian dollars will be short and the U.K. will have the right to use restrictive devices under Article VII of the International Monetary Fund Agreement.

Further, by writing more conditions in the Canadian credit than there are in the U.S. credit, we prejudice the successful passage of the U.S.-U.K. agreement through Congress since it is likely that we will put our credit through before Congress is finished with the U.K.-U.S. Agreement.

We deprive ourselves, moreover, of the preferred position we enjoy vis-à-vis the U.K. This position enables us to obtain concessions from the U.K. in ad hoc negotiations that the U.S. cannot obtain. Max Mackenzie's recent success in the import licencing matter is good evidence. He obtained obvious discriminatory treatment in respect of the colonies and disguised discriminatory treatment in respect of the U.K. The motives that prompted the U.K. to so act were perhaps as much of political inspiration as of economic. The U.K. will give weight to their political interest in dealing with our joint economic problems, but we do not want to put them in a position in which they must openly avow it.

As to (b), the political aspect, surely we can defend in the House extending treatment to the U.K. as generous as that given by the U.S. The disposition of the House last session was clearly favourable to export credit. There was no important opposition to the extension of credit facilities to $750,000,000. If we can provide $750,000,000 for countries normally taking less than 10% of our exports, surely we can defend a credit of a billion dollars or more for the U.K. which took 39% of our exports during the three pre-war years. Surely, if there was no objection to a loan of $242,500,000 to France to whom we exported about $8,000,000 a year in the three pre-war years, we can defend lending four times as much to a country which took over forty times as much from us. Aside from trade considerations, the comparison of the war efforts of France and the U.K. would justify the loan of a billion to the U.K.

There will be opposition from some members but why embarrass the U.K. for no practical gain because of the prejudice or low I.Q. of a handful in the House?

It is anticipated that there will be opposition to lending [to] the U.K. because she has over a billion dollars in Canadian investments, but wouldn't the U.K.

be a worse risk if she were broke? We propose lending to the U.K. because she is not destitute, because she is still in business, because we want her to stay in business, retain her investments and to keep on trading with us.

S. D. P[IERCE]

799.

DEA/154

Procès-verbal de réunions

Minutes of Meetings

SECRET

ANGLO-CANADIAN LOAN NEGOTIATIONS

Monday, February 11, 1946

Morning

The first meeting of the group conducting the negotiations for a Canadian loan to Great Britain met in Room 123, East Block at 11:00 a.m., Monday, February 11, 1946. The British delegation was headed by Sir Wilfrid Eady accompanied by C. F. Cobbold, Deputy Governor of the Bank of England; Right Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, British High Commissioner for Canada and Messrs. Brand, Grant, Jones, Bell, Holmes, Monroe and Bridge.

Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada was an observer on the Canadian side. The Canadian chairman was the Right Hon. J. L. Ilesley and he was accompanied by Rt. Hon. St. Laurent, Minister of Justice and Mr. J. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture; Mr. G. Towers, Governor of the Bank of Canada; Mr. N. Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; Dr. W. Clark, Deputy Minister of Finance; Mr. M. Mackenzie, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and Messrs. Mackintosh, Coyne, Bryce, Kemp, Smith and Wheelock.

MR. ILSLEY welcomed the U.K. delegates. Mr. Malcolm MacDonald referred to the many real difficulties on both sides, but said that in his opinion the loan had three characteristics: it was a vital concern to the U.K., it was a vital concern to Canada and the world as a whole was vitally concerned with the outcome of the negotiations.

SIR WILFRID EADY then spoke at some length introducing the argument for the U.K. He said that the U.K. delegates came in the spirit of complete frankness and that any information which they had would be freely available to the Canadian side. The main object at stake was to restore the reconvertibility of sterling and that in this connection these negotiations might be regarded as a second step. The first step had been the prolonged negotiations in Washington and the third step would be British negotiations with the sterling area. These three steps were essential in clearing the position of the U.K. to take her full share in a freely expanding world trade.

The present British position is based on two facts. First, Britain's debts are war debts and have left behind them no productive assets. Second, Britain cannot meet her liabilities from her present resources. These two facts mean that Britain can only pay off her external indebtedness by an excess of exports.

The problem then is essentially that of a balance of payments on current account. The following figures are indicative of the position in May 1945 as compared with the year 1938:

	1938	1945
	In millions
Employment	20.	21.5
Armed forces	.6	5.2
War Industries	1.4	4 plus
Directly employed in export trade	1.3	.4

At the end of the war Britain had only 30 per cent of her pre-war employment in the export trade;  $\frac{1}{4}$  of her pre-war tonnage and  $\frac{1}{2}$  her pre-war income from overseas investments. It was not generally realized that Great Britain had expended \$6 billion in cash before the lend-lease programme, Mutual Aid and Canadian Government gifts became effective. Another table indicates the ratio of liquid reserves to quick liabilities:

	Liquid Reserves Millions	Quick Liabilities Millions
1938	£605	£473
April 1941	£3
Mid 1945	£450	£3,600

Another result of the war was the great increase in British indebtedness to the sterling area. It is set forth in the following table:

	June 1939	September 1945
	In Millions
Australia	£35	£ 81
New Zealand	£ 6	£ 70
S. Africa	£ 8	£ 36
Eire	£16	£ 182
India	£58	£1236
Egypt	£38	£ 470
Palestine	£ -	£ 120

All of this indebtedness is a charge on current production. Sir Wilfrid argued that the weight of these charges on current production must be equitable to be repaid. This equity was conceived to be a long term equity and he thought that it should not be extended for more than two generations. Great Britain would expect each sterling creditor to make some adjustment of the burden of indebtedness so that it becomes reasonable. With regard to the Indian balances, he said that they represent the sterling equivalent of rupees bought for British troops in India in accordance with a pre-war agreement. No one had foreseen the extent of the war effort in the Far East. He thought that the Indian Government could have contributed very little more (possibly £50 million a year) than they had in fact done. Negotiations with India would be complicated by the political relationship between the U.K. and Indian Governments. Sir Wilfrid said that in Egypt sterling balances were largely held by a small number of very wealthy men. In Egypt internal inflation was hopeless. Prices of the principle staples, wheat and cotton, were far too high. Negotiations would also be complicated because revision of the Anglo-Egyptian treaty is scheduled for this year. The question of ownership of the Suez Canal would also undoubtedly be raised.

SIR WILFRID then went on to discuss briefly the attitude of the U.K. toward the 1946 balance of payment picture. One of the most troublesome items was the expenditure of £300 million on government account overseas. Two-thirds of this, he said, would be military expenditure and the rest expenditures in Germany, contributions to UNRRA and so on. Britain has at present two million men overseas, many in the Far East, 250,000 in Germany and 45,000 in Greece. This expenditure raised difficult problems of prestige. He referred to Britain's great responsibility in the maintenance of law and order and pointed out that unless Britain was financially strong abroad, it would not be possible for her to be politically strong in her external relations. He referred briefly to the spirit of the British people at home, remarking that war weariness had been very noticeable during the present winter. He thought, however, that the weariness was accompanied by a grim, but optimistic determination to set their own house in order. In this regard he thought that the government had shown its hand in the three important respects. First, the Bank of England had been nationalized, second, the coal mines bill had been passed and third, they appeared determined to maintain their import policy in all its rigour. With respect to the coal mines bill he pointed out that before the war the coal mines had been a source of £100 million of foreign exchange annually, whereas now they were not producing enough to satisfy their home needs.

SIR WILFRID went on to speak briefly of the figures in the proposed balance of payments and said that they hoped to obtain equilibrium by 1949 and equilibrium plus in later years. He referred to the large existing liability of the U.K. Government in Canada and said that in making his request he spoke with a sense of full responsibility as an official of the U.K. Government.

He said that it was their desire to borrow as little as possible and at the same time, to borrow enough to meet their needs. He, therefore, requested, on behalf of the U.K. Government, a loan of $1,250,000,000 interest-free.

Monday, February 11, 1946—3:00 p.m.

The meeting opened with Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley in the chair.

MR. COBOLD, Deputy Governor of the Bank of England, continued from Sir Wilfrid Eady's morning remarks, a further elaboration of the working of the sterling area and the dollar pool. He said that all present would be familiar with the problems of financing purchases in North America and with the various devices by which these problems had been met. He thought, however, that he might show some further light on the problem of sterling area financing. The sterling area, he said, was a natural growth. It had developed over the last one hundred years as a result of the habits of international traders and the bankers in maintaining freely convertible balances in the U.K. There was nothing mystic or sinister about the dollar pool. It was merely a part of the mechanism of the international balance of payments, but during the war of course it had become necessary to control payments from the dollar pool very stringently so that maximum wartime use could be made of the limited dollar resources of the sterling area. This control, which had carried the voluntary support of members of the sterling area in wartime, would be difficult or impossible to maintain now that the unifying compulsion of war had ceased to be present. He regarded the sterling area as having both virtues and defects. Its principle virtue was that it had been a forced stability over a very wide area. One of its defects was that it had made too easy an accumulation of enormous U.K. indebtedness to various members of the area. The weight of debt was very heavy and there was extreme diversity in the nature of the debt. Not all of it was held by governments or central banks. In Australia and New Zealand it was government money by legislation. In India a large part of it was a counterpart of the note issue. In Eire almost all of it was in the form of private holdings. This was due to the fact that during the war trade between Eire and Great Britain had been almost entirely one-way trade. Apart from the balances, there were many current account debits to be met. Very heavy war expenditures were still going on in the Middle East and in the Far East. Britain too is very close to Europe and stability in the pound sterling meant that it was a focal point for general European stability. Two essential conditions, however, must be met. First, the liquid reserves of the sterling area must be sufficient, and second, there must be no extravagance on the receipts and payments side. During the war liquid reserves had, at times, been perilously low, but they are at the present time in a reasonably satisfactory condition.

MR. ILSLEY asked what would be the consequence if the American loan failed to pass Congress.

SIR WILFRID EADY said that the consequence would be disastrous. He summed them up as (1) collapse of the Bretton Woods agreement (2) reversion by the U.K. to a policy of "Schachtian bilateralism" and (3) starvation for the British people.

MR. ILSLEY pointed out that for Canada to make a loan along the lines of the one requested would have very serious consequences for Canada too if the American loan should fail to pass Congress. Under such circumstances there would be no consideration whatever on the U.K. side for whatever assistance Canada might be able to give. He had not thought, he said, of making the present agreement conditional upon the acceptance by Congress of the Anglo-American Agreement, but he had thought of postponing these discussions entirely until Congress had taken final action on the American loan.

MR. BRAND expressed the opinion that the proposed American loan would not be rejected by Congress. The American Government, he thought, regarded itself as committed to ensure its passage and had undertaken an extensive educational campaign to "sell" the loan to the American public. The only circumstances in which he envisaged its failure would be those in which Congress might attach conditions to the loan which would prove unacceptable to the British Government.

SIR WILFRID EADY added that there were certain conditions which might conceivably be attached to the loan by Congress which the British Government would not and indeed could not accept.

MR. ILSLEY then asked what would be the disadvantage for the U.K. if the loan at present under consideration should be limited to that required by the U.K. balance of payments position only and separate loans negotiated with other countries in the sterling area on commercial terms.

SIR WILFRID EADY promised that a detailed breakdown of the U.K. figures would be prepared for discussion at a later date.

MR. ILSLEY said that there were two difficulties in his mind which might be clarified by discussion. The first one was that the terms of the American loan prohibited the acceptance by the British Government of terms more favourable to the lender than those embodied in the American agreement. The second question which he thought would be politically difficult was raised by very large U.K. holdings in Canada.

SIR WILFRID EADY, speaking to the second question, thought that if it became necessary for the U.K. Government to liquidate their holdings of Canadian securities it could only be done by selling them in the highest market. This, he thought, would be New York. The consequence, he argued, would be merely to transfer the present British interest in Canadian enterprises to American owners.

MR. ILSLEY asked what would be the position of the Canadian Government if a loan agreement were made.

The negotiations continued on Tuesday morning, February 12th in Room 123 of the East Block at 11:00 o'clock.

MR. ILSLEY reverted to the question of U.K. security holdings in Canada saying that they proposed [sic] a grave political problem for the Canadian Government.

MR. COBBOLD said that he had prepared figures of British holdings of American securities as promised and gave them as follows:

The collateral for the R.F.C.<sup>1</sup> loan of $250,000,000 had a present market value of approximately $675,000,000. This meant that the excess of assets pledged against the R.F.C. loan was approximately $425,000,000. In addition the U.K. still holds in the United States $166,000,000 of more or less marketable securities and about $300,000,000 of what he described as "oddments". Thus the total value of British owned securities in the United States approximated $875,000,000.

<sup>1</sup> Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

In Canada the U.K. held Canadian dollar securities to the aggregate value of $770,000,000; Canadian sterling securities to the value of $480,000,000 and had a direct investment of from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000. The U.K. had repatriated in the early days of the war United States securities to the value of $800,000,000 United States dollars and Canadian securities to the value of $900,000,000 United States dollars. The total liquidation of overseas investments which had occurred during the war amounted to approximately four and a half billion dollars. The present value of the British overseas investment still held was hard to calculate, but the annual income from this investment was about $390,000,000 net or $675,000,000 gross. The $390,000,000 net included the figure of $44,000,000 net as income from securities held in Canada.

MR. ST. LAURENT said that he would like to consider the effect on the Canadian budget of British failure to repatriate their Canadian securities. The government, he pointed out, was already committed to an annual transfer payment of approximately $500,000,000. To this must be added the net payment to the U.K. of $44,000,000. It would be asked why interest should be paid by the Canadian Government on monies borrowed by the U.K. Government in addition to the assistance which Canada had given during the war and the further assistance contemplated in the present negotiations. He recalled that at the time of the $700,000,000 interest free loan, prices of U.K. held securities were unduly low and it was thought that it might be unfair to require the owners to part with them at the then current price. Market values have, however, risen substantially since that time and he had no doubt that the investors who retained their securities are now happy to have done so. However, now that the market is high it is difficult to avoid dealing with this problem. The easy way would be to wipe out the indebtedness, but this would involve requisitioning the securities and the Canadian Government was not anxious to be put in the position of forcing this move. He wondered if arrangements could be made to wait for U.K. investors to realize gradually on these securities and to use the proceeds of such realizations to reduce the amount of the indebtedness. Meanwhile, the U.K. Government might pay the equivalent of the interest on such holdings to U.K. investors in pounds sterling. When Canada wishes to make capital expenditures in the U.K. or in the sterling area, it would do so from the balance of the securities so held. Under the plan as he envisaged it, the U.K. would not have the $44,000,000 annual interest. The Canadian Government would have it as interest on the existing liability and would, in turn, be paying the interest on all U.K. liabilities in Canada. The difference between the existing liabilities and the realized or realizability value of the British holdings in Canada would be the amount of the Canadian loan to the U.K. It might be in the neighbourhood of $500,000,000.

MR. ST. LAURENT went on to say that if what the U.K. delegation were asking for was really a contribution and not a loan, in his opinion, the Canadian people would prefer that it be called a contribution and not a loan and that it be defended in these terms. During the war, in his opinion, Canada had gone the limit out of current taxation, paying 50 per cent of all war costs as it went along. There has been a large carry-over of continuing costs for future generations. Now that the war was over he was not sure that the Canadian people would be prepared to make additional contributions towards its cost.

THE PRIME MINISTER remarked that the political difficulties in the way of accepting the U.K. request should not be minimized.

SIR WILFRID EADY said that, although the fighting was over, the war was not over for the people of the U.K. Many direct war costs will still be borne in 1946 and subsequent years. He agreed that what was suggested yesterday would be a burden on the Canadian tax-payer. There was a continuing burden on the British tax-payer, not only as a tax-payer, but also as a consumer. He pointed out that any reduction in British overseas assets would decrease the purchasing power of the U.K. All old liabilities here are not of the same kind. The air training plan had not worked out as the British had thought that it would. They had hoped to examine that liability. They had never expected to pay interest on it. When they had said yesterday that the magnitude of their needs for new money pointed to the reasonableness of an interest-free loan, they had expected that difficulties might be raised, but they had never expected to have to discuss interest payments for liabilities accumulated during the war.

MR. ILSLEY stated that it had always been in his mind that after the war interest-free loans would bear interest. In defending in the House of Commons the financial provisions of the air training plan, he had always held it as a thought in the back of his mind that the British held a large block of securities in Canada. He had defended Mutual Aid on the ground that we were making a contribution to a common cause.

SIR WILFRID EADY said that what had happened was that the overseas payment position of the U.K. is infinitely worse than any one had foreseen. It was sharply worse, but only temporarily so. He was very much disturbed with the suggestion that the Canadian Government might regard it as necessary to charge interest on the liabilities which had arisen as a result of direct wartime expenditure.

MR. ILSLEY remarked that the United States had charged $650,000,000 to wind up Lend-Lease.

SIR WILFRID EADY pointed out that this charge was a governmental rather than a congressional arrangement. He thought that the American Government had been most generous and estimated that the U.K. had received new assets, including food, to a value of at least double the price charged for final settlement.

MR. ILSLEY observed that the possibility of government actions were limited by a thought of attacks which might be made upon their action. He did not anticipate that such attacks would come from the official opposition, but rather from the C.C.F. and certain members of the government party.

SIR WILFRID EADY asked what the U.K. might say to Australia, New Zealand and India if Canada was determined to charge interest on the old debts.

MR. ILSLEY inquired whether the U.K. is now paying interest to countries in the Middle East, to India and to Burma.

MR. COBBOLD answered that they were paying  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, the Treasury Board rate, on the great bulk of that debt.

MR. ILSLEY said that Canadian public opinion might hold that it was bad enough that sterling area countries did not give mutual aid, but that it was intolerable for them to pile up huge balances and then charge interest on them.

SIR WILFRID EADY said that he had no comprehensive answer. Australia had given about one-sixth of her national income as mutual aid to the support of United States troops. New Zealand had altered her whole industrial economy, not necessarily to her own advantage, and sold her goods to the U.K. very cheaply. Regarding South Africa, it was difficult to make a convincing case, but it must be remembered that South Africa went into the war by a majority of only three votes. A favourable case could not be made, he thought, for India.

U.K. capacity to pay would depend on

1. The structure of their current balance of payments and
2. Negotiations with the sterling area

MR. ILSLEY remarked that in the circumstances our assistance would seem to be a speculative assistance—a noble experiment.

SIR WILFRID EADY said that after consultation with his colleagues they had decided that it would not be possible to recommend to their Government that the proposed loan agreement be made conditional upon acceptance by Congress of the American agreement. However, he was quite willing to recommend that a consultative clause be embodied in the agreement. It should be on the record. They would agree to immediate bilateral consultation if the American loan should fail. Conditions would be so different that the bargain could not go on.

MR. ILSLEY asked if they would be prepared to have such a statement made in the House of Commons.

SIR WILFRID EADY said yes. He thought it would be proper to exchange letters agreeing that in such an eventuality it would be proper to review the whole position. Sir Wilfrid pointed out that many of the U.K. sterling area creditors are not politically sympathetic to the U.K. If Canada does not extend the maximum assistance possible, who could be expected to do it?

MR. MALCOLM MACDONALD remarked that the U.K. negotiators had gone to Washington hoping for a $5 billion interest-free loan which they regarded as a minimum request. Washington hopes had not been realized. Thus the first stage of the efforts to clear the U.K. position had been disappointing. If results of the second stage of negotiations were also disappointing it was inevitable that in the third stage the results would be even less satisfactory. At that point it might appear that the whole situation had reached a level so much lower than what was regarded as a workable minimum that the British Government would have to reconsider the whole matter. He thought that it was necessary at the present time for all to share in meeting the present difficulties. Two of the main costs to the U.K. were the austerity programme and the support of British military establishments abroad. He urged that Canada make a financial contribution to the rehabilitation of the world.

SIR WILFRID EADY agreed that essentially the British request was a request for the Canadian tax-payer to share in the burden of world rehabilitation. He added that whether the British had any right to make any such request he did not know.

DR. CLARK expressed the opinion that the real argument in support of the British request was the cost of any possible alternative.

MR. ILSLEY asked how many U.K. securities had been repatriated by the Governments of India and the sterling areas. He said that he recalled debates in which he had had to argue that Canadian repatriation was not feasible because of the effect of the example on India.

MR. COBBOLD stated that U.K. policy in this regard had not changed since 1942.

It was agreed that the meeting would adjourn and meet again on Wednesday morning at 11:00 o'clock.

800.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 403

Mémorandum de la délégation de Grande-BretagneMemorandum by Delegation of Great Britain

[Ottawa,] February 13, 1946

U.K.-CANADA FINANCIAL DISCUSSIONS

1. If the understanding of the United Kingdom delegation is correct, the suggestion made by Mr. St. Laurent at yesterday's meeting is as follows:

(a) The United Kingdom investment holding in Canada (amounting to approximately Canadian $1,500 million) should be valued and a loan equivalent to this value extended to the U.K. Assuming the value to be $1,500 million as estimated above, there would be offset against this loan the $560 million of the Old Loan outstanding, the $425 million for the Air Training schemes and the net balance on war and other remaining liabilities. After all these claims have been offset against the loan, any balance up to $1,500 million would be available to the United Kingdom as new money towards meeting their Canadian dollar requirements. This sum would clearly be inadequate and the method of financing further requirements would be for later discussion.

(b) On this loan of $1,500 million interest would be paid equivalent to the income received by the United Kingdom from their existing investments in Canada (estimated at approximately Canadian $55 millions per annum).

(c) The securities would be left in private ownership but provision would be made (as in the case of the Old Loan) for proceeds of any sales of the securities to be used in repayment of the loan.

2. The United Kingdom delegation fully appreciate the validity of Mr. St. Laurent's arguments about the internal political difficulty of any settlement which does not take account of U.K. investments in Canada and of the income deriving therefrom. At the same time they feel that there are most cogent reasons why the proposal would not be in the best interest of either country. These reasons fall under three main headings: first, the effect the proposal would have on U.K.-Canadian trade; second, its effect on parallel negotiations between the U.K. and other countries; and third (arising in large part from the second) its effect upon the common approach of the U.K. and Canada to post-war world-wide economic problems.

3. The triangle of U.S.A.-Canada-Sterling Area payments has for many years shown a chronic surplus of Canadian earnings in sterling against a deficit in U.S. dollars. In a perfect multilateral world this position might cause no preoccupations, but in the troubled world which we must foresee for many years to come neither Canada nor the United Kingdom can neglect it. Income on U.K. investments in Canada has helped in past years to narrow the gap in U.K.-Canada payments, and even on its present reduced scale it would still be valuable help in years to come. To hypothecate this income and dry up its source in the settlement of an exceptional position arising from the war must aggravate rather than alleviate future U.K.-Canadian problems and can only reduce the imports which the U.K. can take from Canada or alternatively increase Canada's accumulating sterling surplus.

4. Besides the current negotiations with Canada the U.K. have two main settlements to complete, one with the U.S.A. and one with the sterling creditors.

(a) U.S.A.

The U.K. have outstanding in the U.S. the following U.S. dollar securities:

	estimated current values	U.S.$ millions
Pledged against R.F.C. loan, current value (of which under 400 are marketable securities)	675
Less amount of loan outstanding	250
	<hr/>
Other marketable securities held in U.K.		425
Miscellaneous assets including trusts under U.S. law etc. largely unrealisable and of Problematical valuation, say		166
		290
		<hr/>
		881

Acceptance of Mr. St. Laurent's suggestion would give rise to immediate demand for hypothecation of all these securities and of the full interest deriving therefrom (whereas in the recent negotiations no demand was made beyond the original R.F.C. arrangements). Moreover, a proposal on these lines would represent terms more favourable to the lender than in the recent Washington agreement and would force the U.K. to re-open negotiations with the United States on a new and even more difficult basis.

(b) Sterling Creditors.

The United Kingdom's debt in sterling, arising almost entirely out of the war, amounts to some £3,600 millions. Any settlement of this debt which is to give a prospect of early progress towards world-wide economic prosperity must allow both for adjustment of the total balances and for a negligible or nil rate of interest. A settlement with Canada which not only required the U.K. to repay in full existing debt arising directly out of the war but also secured it against the U.K.'s remaining pre-war Canadian investments and loaded it with a heavy interest burden, would destroy any prospect of a reasonable settlement with the sterling creditors.

5. But the fundamental difficulties seen by the United Kingdom delegation in Mr. St. Laurent's suggestion are on a much wider plane. In the various discussions held in recent years between U.K. and Canadian representatives there has been a common view that an early return to greater freedom of trade between nations and to multilateral convertibility of currencies is not only an ideal but an essential pre-requisite of the expansion of world trade which we all desire. The proposal to valorise fully a wholly unproductive war debt, to set aside as security for this debt the remains of the U.K.'s commercial investments in Canada, and to charge the debt a heavy rate of interest, appears to be in direct contrast with this approach. If the United Kingdom were to be forced to shoulder burdens of this sort in respect of war debts (and the example of a settlement with Canada would inevitably react on settlements with the rest of the world), they could not in any honesty undertake at an early stage the risks and obligations involved in the policy which both the United Kingdom and Canada believe to be in the best interests of the world and therefore of every great trading nation. At the meetings during the last two days the U.K. delegation have endeavoured to explain the balance of payments difficulties which face the U.K. during the transitional period, the importance which they believe a stable sterling currency has for the world, and their sincere desire, if they can obtain sufficient help to tide over the next few years, to adopt forthwith policies which will expand and not restrict world trade.

6. The United Kingdom delegation, whilst they fully recognize the Government of Canada's preoccupations, firmly believe that both on its merits and in the lead it would give elsewhere, a settlement on the lines indicated by themselves would greatly advance the prospects of wise and practicable all-round settlements of debt arising directly and indirectly from the war, settlements which would be in the interest of every trading country, creditor no less than debtor. Indeed, they see in these negotiations with Canada, which has above all other countries shared the U.K.'s approach to these questions and shown a very full appreciation of the long-term interests involved to all concerned, the best and perhaps the last opportunity for establishing a precedent for dealing with the direct and indirect financial consequences of the war in such a way as not to prejudice the financial and commercial prospects of peace.

801.

PCO/C-20-2

*Extrait d'un mémorandum du secrétaire du Cabinet
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Extract from Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] February 15, 1946

The following items of particular concern to the Department of External Affairs were discussed at meetings of the Cabinet held on February 13th and 14th, and the following conclusions were reached:

. . .

5 Financial discussions with the United Kingdom; progress report

The Minister of Finance reported upon discussions with U.K. officials, the substance of which is known to you. In this connection the Prime Minister emphasized the necessity of finding some method of providing assistance which could be understood by the Canadian public as being of direct and prompt benefit to this country.

. . .

A. D. P. H[EENEY]

802.

DEA/154

Le chef, la délégation de Grande-Bretagne, au ministre des Finances

Head, Delegation of Great Britain, to Minister of Finance

Ottawa, February 16, 1946

Dear Mr. Ilsley,

As arranged with you, I enclose copies of an aide-mémoire covering the representations we made to you yesterday afternoon.

You will see that the note contemplated merging the outstanding balance of the old $700 million loan with the new credit. In our discussion it was represented that it would be much more satisfactory to leave the present arrangements in connection with that loan undisturbed, that is that it might continue as an interest-free loan, and that the proceeds of any sales or redemption of U.K.-owned Canadian securities should be devoted to its repayment. We should be very willing to agree to this, provided that the proceeds were net, that is after allowing for U.K. residents who hold Canadian securities to sell for the purpose of switching the proceeds into some other Canadian security.

I should of course make it clear that in recording this conversation we are not implying that you were in agreement with our general position on the treatment of the loan. You reserved your attitude and said you would have to consult your colleagues.

You also asked me whether in the event of the Government of Canada reaching an agreement on the lines we had proposed, we could suggest any action on our part which would (a) hold out prospects of immediate benefit to Canadian manufacturing, producing and commercial interests and (b) make it plain that we would follow up the decisive lead given by Canada and expect our other creditors to recognise their obligation to assist in the task of early improvement of financial and trading conditions.

On the first point we would of course examine any specific instances you or your colleagues had in mind. But meanwhile if you thought that it would help you if we could proceed with the plans about manufactured imports which were worked out between Mr. Mackenzie of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Board of Trade, an early expression of the views of Canadian Ministers would be helpful.

On the second I have no doubt that if the agreement were on the lines we suggested, the Chancellor of the Exchequer would make an opportunity immediately on the publication of the agreement to announce in Parliament the significance which the U.K. Government attached to the agreement, both in relation to the trade interests of Canada, and also to the pattern that the U.K. Government would expect to arrange in its negotiations with its sterling creditors. We should of course wish to consult you on the form of any statement made.

I hope that this will assure you of the wide significance, quite apart from its direct interest to U.K.-Canada trade, which we should attach to a satisfactory agreement with Canada at this stage, as a decisive instrument of policy for the immediate future.

Yours sincerely,

W. EADY

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Aide-mémoire de la délégation de Grande-Bretagne

Aide-mémoire by Delegation of Great Britain

We understand Ministers feel that they may not be able to meet the hope we have expressed that a new credit could be made free of interest, and that if there is to be any significant cancellation of the existing war indebtedness of the U.K. to Canada, they would expect account to be taken of the value of U.K. investments in Canada.

On the terms of a new credit the Government of Canada must be the final judges of what it is possible to offer. We should, however, be failing in our duty if we did not express strongly the view that if it is felt necessary to insist on the same terms as in the Washington Agreement, a great constructive opportunity will have been missed. The burden of interest in the entirely exceptional circumstances which give rise to the need for this credit would be out of tune with the underlying realities. No one who knows the whole position would seriously dispute this comment on the Washington agreement. The plain fact is that if a new loan has to be charged with 2% interest, opinion in the United Kingdom will be that Canada has felt obliged to follow the American pattern. Ministers know what was the public judgement in the U.K. on the terms of that Agreement. It was not that the terms were regarded as harsh in themselves, but that they were felt by everybody to be very different from what had been expected, which was a final act of partnership in war. None of the other victorious Allies will have to shoulder, as a result of victory, a new and vast burden of external debt. The debt the U.K. must redeem over the life of two generations, largely in payment to its partners in that victory.

We recognise the sincere effort to meet our difficulties represented by the ideas which Dr. Clark mentioned to us as having been discussed by Ministers. Nevertheless, if the suggestion about the U.K. investments in Canada is that they should be sold in order to finance our purchase of food, etc. in Canada over the next two years, we are certain that such a proposal would be rejected by public opinion of all kinds in the United Kingdom. Apart from the loss of essential income for our balance of payments that the sale would immediately cause, many of these investments have their roots deep in the history of Canada's industrial and political development. To force their liquidation because of the temporary financial difficulties of the United Kingdom caused by the war, would be to tear up established associations which have enduring significance for the long-term interests of both countries. We believe that both politically and commercially this would be very grave.

Further, we should be reintroducing, at the end of the war, the compulsory vesting and forcible sale of overseas securities. We should be reopening claims in the U.S.A., India and South Africa which we have successfully resisted so far. The immediate consequences to the prospects of the Washington Agreement might well be fatal. We could not in any circumstances recommend such a proposal for the consideration of our Government.

The settlement for which U.K. Ministers hoped, and one which would be consistent not only with the facts of the case which we have presented to you, but also, as we see it, with Canada's need, in the interests of her own trade, for an early contribution by the U.K. to economic confidence and the promotion of recovery in its widest sense, would be as follows:

The claims and counter-claims as at 28th February, 1946, should with the major exception below, be cancelled. The balance of the interest-free loan, although strictly a war debt and thus wholly unproductive, should in view of its special nature and origin, not be included in the general cancellation, but be carried forward and merged into a new credit.

$1,250 m. of new money would be provided and $500 m. (the balance of the existing loan) would be carried forward, the total being free of interest, and repayable in 50 equal annual instalments beginning 31st December, 1951.

Ministers have been frank in telling us of their difficulties and we fully appreciate them. Yet we earnestly beg you and your colleagues to consider again whether a settlement on these lines could not be presented to Canadian opinion as a constructive and far-sighted act of leadership and enlightened self-interest for Canada, and would not in fact be so envisaged in Canada and indeed in other parts of the world. Throughout the war the U.K. people have felt that they share with Canada the closest community of view on the economic and political problems of the peace. As we have already stated, we see in these discussions a real opportunity, and perhaps the last, for setting a basis for sanity in the final clean-up of the financial consequences of war.

In our previous conversations with you we have endeavoured to develop fully the vital importance of general settlements which will ensure stability to sterling, a factor of immediate and wide significance to the French, Dutch, Belgian and other European Governments as well as to the sterling area itself, and which will give the U.K. the necessary elbow room to move quickly towards the policies in which we believe. Canada's direct interest in a stable U.S. dollar-sterling rate and in convertibility of sterling is, from the nature of her trade, both deep and lasting, and her indirect interest, by way of the stability and convertibility of currencies allied to sterling, is little less. We do not wish to go over this ground again, beyond emphasising the importance of a quick rather than a gradual and laboured return to economic sanity, with all the risks which delay implies of falling back towards economic chaos or "totalitarian" developments in economic policy.

The difference between an interest-free credit and 2% interest (qualified by a waiver clause) can have little effect on Canadian economy since the interest payable will mean that in the long run the U.K. can buy that much less from Canada. For us it means much more; it is an addition to the already heavy annual debt payments we must make. But its importance is greater than its amount. We have very heavy defence and security expenditure overseas which we must continue to discharge if the peace is to be made safe. We have responsibilities towards Europe if we are to prevent the spread of economic disorder and the political dangers which follow it, dangers never more grave than at this time. Our policy in such matters can only be hesitant and incomplete if all the time we are haunted by anxieties over our overseas financial position.

803.

PCO/C-20-2

*Extrait d'un mémorandum du secrétaire du Cabinet
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Extract from Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa,] February 22, 1946

At a meeting of the Cabinet held yesterday, February 21st, the following conclusions, of particular interest to your department, were reached:

. . .

2 Financial arrangements with the United Kingdom

The Cabinet agreed that proposals on the following basis should be made to representatives of the U.K. government:

(a) an agreement between the two governments under which Canada would agree to provide a loan of new money to the United Kingdom in the amount of $1,250 million, on the same terms as the loan agreed with the U.S. government;

(b) an extension of the interest-free feature of the 1942 loan to the date upon which interest would begin to run under the new loan agreement, it being understood that, meantime repayments on principal would continue to be made from the sale and redemption of U.K. owned Canadian securities and that any interest on any unpaid balance would be agreed, at the time, at a reasonable rate in the conditions then existing; and,

(c) an understanding that, while the government could not, at this time, accept cancellation of remaining U.K. liabilities under the B.C.A.T.P. Agreements, they would be prepared to accept conversion of this debt into sterling and to review the position at a later date and accept eventual settlement thereof on a basis not less favourable than that accepted by other Allied sterling creditors of the United Kingdom.

A. D. P. H[EENEY]

804.

PCO/C-20-2

*Extrait d'un mémorandum du secrétaire du Cabinet
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Extract of Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa,] February 26, 1946

Of the items discussed at a meeting of the Cabinet held yesterday, the following items are of particular concern to your department:

1 Financial arrangements with the United Kingdom

The Minister of Finance reported that the proposals approved by the Cabinet at the meeting of February 21st had been discussed with the U.K. Treasury representatives the following day when it had been evident that a satisfactory agreement on that basis would not be possible.

The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed that the proposals approved at the meeting of February 21st be amended by deleting paragraph (c) thereof and substituting therefor cancellation of remaining U.K. liabilities under the Air Training Agreements on condition that agreement was reached between the two governments on the basis of paragraphs (a) and (b) thereof (involving a new $1,250 million loan on the U.S. terms and a five year extension of the balance of the 1942 loan without interest), it being understood that the United Kingdom would undertake cash settlement for the net amount owing upon post V-J Day purchases in Canada.

* * *

A. D. P. H[EENEY]

805.

DEA/154

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne<sup>1</sup>

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain<sup>1</sup>*

TELEGRAM 553

Ottawa, March 2, 1946

SECRET. United Kingdom-Canadian financial discussions.

1. The financial discussions with the United Kingdom delegation headed by Sir Wilfrid Eady, which have been under way during most of February, have now taken conclusive form and we are hopeful that agreement may shortly be reached.

<sup>1</sup> Des télégrammes semblables furent expédiés aux ambassades à Washington et à Paris.

<sup>1</sup> Similar telegrams were sent to the Embassies in Washington and Paris.

2. The negotiations have been complex, involving a variety of proposals related to four main constituent elements, and as the ground shifted almost daily I did not feel that I could give you much useful information about the progress of the talks. Following review of course of negotiations is for your own confidential information.

3. The main elements were the terms of the proposed new loan; the United Kingdom's indebtedness on the Air Training Plan of about $425,000,000; the 1942 interest-free loan of $700,000,000, now reduced to about $500,000,000; and a miscellany of claims and counter-claims arising out of the supply during the war of goods and services, the amount of which has not yet been definitely determined.

4. There was little difference of opinion as to the amount of the new loan. It was accepted early in the talks that the amount should be $1,250,000,000. This is the amount which the United Kingdom has requested to cover its requirements from us of Canadian dollars until 1951.

5. On the terms there was, however, a wide variance between the United Kingdom and Canadian views. The United Kingdom delegates pressed for an interest-free new loan on about the same grounds that they advanced in their negotiations with the United States. Though we recognized the inadequacy of the United States terms, we maintained that the United Kingdom-United States Agreement in preventing us from receiving better terms than the United States-United Kingdom terms, made it politically impossible for us to accept worse terms. We felt that the United States Agreement had set a general pattern from which it would be difficult to depart particularly since the United States interest rate which we are ready to give is about one-third less than the Canadian Government long-term borrowing rate.

6. We were concerned, too, about the United Kingdom holdings in Canada of about $1,500,000,000, for it was expected that questions would be raised in Parliament of the need for lending the United Kingdom while that country still possessed such substantial holdings in Canada. We explored the possibility of linking repatriation of these holdings with the amortization of the new loan and much of the earlier discussion centred on this aspect. We have, I think, now come to recognize that any such proposal would be unacceptable to the United Kingdom and perhaps that it might not be in our interest to press too hard for it.

7. A great many combinations were considered involving different treatment for the four constituent elements. Now, however, the United Kingdom is willing to accept an arrangement which represents from our point of view a great improvement over the earlier United Kingdom proposals. This is, in brief:—

(a) A new loan of $1,250,000,000 on the terms of the United Kingdom-United States Financial Agreement;

(b) The cancellation of the United Kingdom's indebtedness under the Air Training Plan;

(c) A continuation of the existing arrangements for the 1942 loan for a period of five years, with discussion at the end of the period on repayment of any balance outstanding and on the question of interest;

(d) Payment by the United Kingdom of $150,000,000 in cash in satisfaction as of 28th February 1946 of all claims and counterclaims between the two Governments.

We have at various times expressed our willingness to offer United States terms and to cancel the Air Training Plan indebtedness, although our approval was related to overall proposals that differed from the one now presented to us. We are examining the magnitude of the adjustment involved in (d), and estimate very roughly indeed that the payment proposed by the United Kingdom is within $50,000,000 of the net amount involved.

We have not yet agreed nor discussed to any extent the conditions of the new loan. I think it likely that we shall propose the inclusion of a clause that would accord Canada treatment as favourable as that accorded to any other country in respect to the application of exchange controls and restrictions on payments and transfers for current transactions and in respect to the administration of quantitative import restrictions.

806.

DEA/154

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa,] March 2, 1946

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

At the meeting of the Cabinet on March 2nd, the Minister of Finance reported the reply received from the United Kingdom government to the amended proposals which had been put to the United Kingdom Treasury Delegation as agreed at the Cabinet meeting of February 25th.

The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that the Minister of Finance be authorized to conclude an agreement with the United Kingdom government on the basis of the reply received from the United Kingdom delegation, unless, in the light of further information upon the items involved, he wishes to have further consideration given to the proposed cash settlement of outstanding liabilities between the two governments.

R[OBERTSON]

807.

DEA/154

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, March 8, 1946

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM: AGREEMENTS

At the meeting of the Cabinet on March 6th, approval was given to the two draft agreements<sup>1</sup> with the United Kingdom, submitted by the Minister of Finance, also the letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding suspension of certain conditions pending action by the United States Congress, and the agreed press statement, issued on March 7th. Appropriate Orders in Council were enacted authorizing signature of the agreements by Mr. Ilsley.

808.

DEA/1893-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne<sup>2</sup>Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Great Britain<sup>2</sup>

DESPATCH 520

Ottawa, March 23, 1946

SECRET

Sir,

I refer to the Financial Agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom, signed at Ottawa on March 6th, 1946, and related documents, which I forwarded with my despatch of March 8th.

The arrangements were generally welcomed in Canada and also in the United Kingdom. It had been forecast that the similarity of the terms and conditions of the Canadian and the United States credits would result in a reception in the United Kingdom having some of the chill if not all of the bitterness that was accorded the announcement of the United States-United Kingdom Agreement. In the event, the differences between the two arrangements appear to have been taken as sufficiently substantial not only to offset the distastefulness of the similarity but to elicit enthusiasm. Then, too, it was accepted more rapidly than had been anticipated that Canada was compelled for internal political reasons to apply the United States formula on exchange

<sup>1</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1946, Nos. 9 et 10.

<sup>2</sup> Des dépêches semblables furent expédiées à toutes les missions à l'étranger.

<sup>1</sup> See Canada, Treaty Series, 1946, Nos. 9 and 10.

<sup>2</sup> Similar despatches were sent to all missions abroad.

and import restrictions. If that prescription was bitter, the United States and not Canada was its author.

The Canadian credit differs importantly from the United States credit in the following respects:

The amount is adequate, meeting in full the United Kingdom request for Canadian dollars considered sufficient, with other resources, to meet the United Kingdom requirements till 1951. The British did not receive from the United States the amount which they requested and considered necessary to meet their needs of American dollars for the same period.

The Canadian loan is, moreover, larger when regard is taken of the difference in the Canadian and United States economies. As the Economist of March 9th puts it: "The free cash that Canada is to provide is rather more than one-quarter of that afforded by the United States loan yet Canada's national income is hardly one-twentieth of America's."

While the rate of interest of 2% which Canada is charging the United Kingdom is the same as the United States rate, the cost of Government borrowing is about  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{2}{3}$  of 1% higher in Canada than in the United States. Hence, the rate is less favourable to the lender than in the United States Agreement, and is considerably below the cost of domestic borrowing.

There are too, some differences in form which perhaps give the Canadian Agreement a better complexion than the United States'. The Canadian Agreement does not spell out the conditions in respect of British Exchange control and import restrictions. It was this perhaps that led one United Kingdom commentator to say that we had not imposed "far-reaching limitations on freedom of action in economic policy" though the Agreement does, in fact assure Canada of the benefits of the conditions which the United States imposed. Article 5 gives us the right to treatment as favourable as that accorded any other Government with which an agreement has been made. It has moreover been recognized by both Governments that if the United States loan is not approved by Congress, we shall have to discuss what changes need be made in the Agreement. As you know, Articles 5, 6 and 7 do not become operative until it is known that the United States Agreement will be approved by Congress.

On the other hand, if the Canadian loan is approved by Parliament before the United States loan is approved by Congress, the British will be free to draw on the Canadian credit. If Congress does not approve the American loan, it is likely that the Canadian credit will stand, though with new terms and conditions.

The Canadian Agreement states in specific terms the amount of debt owing to Canada by the United Kingdom which is to be cancelled. The total indebtedness was $500,000,000 outstanding on the interest-free loan of 1942 and $425,000,000 owing under the Commonwealth Air Training Plan. Of this total of $925,000,000, Canada wrote off, conditional upon the passing of the United States loan in Congress, about 46% or $425,000,000. This should considerably assist the United Kingdom in the second phase of its financial negotiations, that is, in its dealings with India, Egypt and other holders of sterling balances. The United States Agreement, on the other hand, obscures, perhaps for domestic political reasons, the cancellation of indebtedness. It is believed that a very substantial cancellation is, in fact, concealed in the settlement of United Kingdom indebtedness to the United States at $650,000,000. We know from British comment that the concession involved in this figure was so generous, that it led the British negotiators to agree to terms and conditions on the new money that would otherwise have been unacceptable. (You will have noted that in the War Claims Agreement, which we concluded with the United Kingdom, we are to accept $150,000,000 in cash in settlement of all claims and counter-claims. This does not represent any concession to the British since the amount is an approximation of the claims and counter-claims outstanding as at February 28th of this year).

The Canadian negotiations were comparatively short, lasting only three weeks, and were free from the newspaper crises that arose repeatedly during the lengthy negotiations in the United States. What negotiating difficulties there were in Ottawa were settled between the negotiators without publicity.

It is our earnest hope that the Agreement will not only assist in resolving mutual problems but will contribute to the realization of the common objective of an expanding world trade and thereby to the peace and security of all peoples.

I have etc.

S. D. PIERCE
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

809.

DEA/8548-A-40

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 89

London, May 31, 1946

Now that Financial Agreement Act has been passed by Parliament of Canada and has received Royal Assent, I desire to express to you, and through you to the Government and people of Canada, how deeply the Government and people of this country appreciate this mark of generosity and friendship. It is indeed an encouragement to us at this difficult time to know that we have the goodwill of Canada and that in peace, as in war, she is ready to give practical effect to it.

810.

DEA/154

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa,] December 19, 1946

U.K. HOLDINGS OF CANADIAN DOLLAR SECURITIES; DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF SALES AND REDEMPTIONS

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 19th, it was agreed:

(a) that U.K. residents who now held Canadian dollar securities should be allowed to accept new securities offered in exchange of the old securities in a reorganization, rather than being forced to accept a cash offer if one were made;

(b) that Canada allow Canadian dollar securities held by U.K. residents to be transferred to heirs on the occasion of settlement of estates;

(c) that Canada allow new direct investments to be offset against sales of market securities for the purpose of calculating the amount which should be applied on the 1942 loan; direct investments for this purpose to include the development of new enterprises or companies in Canada and the expansion of U.K. owned enterprises in Canada.

811.

DEA/864-A-39

Le président suppléant, la Commission de contrôle du change étranger, au chef, la direction économique

Alternate Chairman, Foreign Exchange Control Board, to Head, Economic Division

Ottawa, December 21, 1946

Dear Mr. Pierce,

Referring to our telephone conversation of yesterday, I am enclosing here-with a memorandum setting out the two main changes in exchange control procedures which have been made as a result of the new foreign exchange control regulations. It is important to note that the partial convertibility of sterling involved in the new regulations does not of itself result in any improvement in Canada's over-all foreign exchange position as the bulk of the sterling area purchases in Canada will for the time being continue to be financed out of the proceeds of the Canadian dollar credit. Its immediate significance is, therefore, mainly as an additional convenience to traders.

In addition to the two major changes outlined in the attached memorandum, there have been various minor changes which I do not think would be of particular interest to our missions abroad. These involve general increases in exemptions from completion of forms, etc. with a view to simplifying exchange control procedures for the public to the greatest extent possible consistent with the maintenance of effective control and a number of other changes of an administrative nature directed to the same end. If you feel that the details would be of any interest we shall, of course, be glad to supply them.

Yours very truly,

L. RASMINSKY

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum de la Commission de contrôle du change étranger

Memorandum by Foreign Exchange Control Board

[Ottawa,] December 21, 1946

MEMORANDUM RE NEW FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL REGULATIONS

1. The present distinction between the sterling area and the other countries is eliminated and the Regulations authorize the carrying on of trade between Canada and the rest of the world on the basis of payments in U.S. dollars, sterling or any foreign currency which may be freely converted into either of those currencies. At present trade with the sterling area is carried on solely on a sterling or Canadian dollar basis and with the rest of the world solely on a U.S. dollar basis. The general effect of this change will be to simplify the operation of exchange control for exporters and importers to the extent that payments may be accepted and made in any foreign currency for trade with other countries.

The basis for this change is that the United Kingdom is committed under the Anglo-American Financial Agreement to permit sterling arising from current transactions to be freely transferable between residents of other countries by July 1947, and is now commencing to take certain steps towards achieving this result. As of January 1, 1947, when the Foreign Exchange Control Act comes into force, the United Kingdom has agreed to make sterling transferable between Canada and the United States and Central and some South American countries. Initially, therefore, payments of sterling from and to Canada will be limited to transactions with those countries and with the sterling area but the list will be added to from time to time as the United Kingdom makes arrangements with other countries until complete transferability is achieved by July 1947.

The effect of sterling being transferable from Canada to the United States is that surplus sterling which Canada may acquire may be converted into U.S. dollars by sale in New York although during the period when the United Kingdom is financing its deficit with Canada from the Canadian credit, Canada is unlikely to have any substantial amount of sterling available for conversion into U.S. dollars in this manner. The fact of sterling being transferable from Canada to the United States means, however, sterling becomes the equivalent of U.S. dollars and it therefore becomes necessary to exercise control over sterling transactions by Canadian residents in the same manner as the control is exercised over U.S. dollar transactions. Similarly, it is necessary to exercise control over transfers of Canadian dollars from Canada to the sterling area in the same manner as to other countries and to exercise supervision over payments for imports from the sterling area and to ensure that payment is received for exports to the sterling area.

2. The Regulations make provision for trade and other payments between Canada and the sterling area and the various European countries to which Canada has extended export credits may be made in Canadian dollars as an alternative to payments in foreign exchange. At present such payments may be made in Canadian dollars only between Canada and the sterling area.

This change arises from the fact that Canadian exports to the countries concerned are being paid for to a large extent out of the Canadian export credits which are, of course, in Canadian dollars. Up to the present the purchases in Canada have been made principally through Government channels and have been handled under a special exchange control procedure. Most of the purchasing countries wish to permit purchases against the credit to be made through private commercial channels and the Export Credits Insurance Act has been amended to enable the use of the credits for this purpose. The change in the Foreign Exchange Control Regulations is designed to facilitate this private trade. The countries involved are France, Netherlands, Belgium, Norway and Czechoslovakia.

The countries concerned are designated in the Regulations as "special arrangement countries" and arrangements have been or will be made with them to undertake that their nationals will not acquire or dispose of Canadian dollars in the unofficial exchange market in the United States.

SOUS-SECTION iv/SUB-SECTION iv

CRISE ALIMENTAIRE/FOOD CRISIS

812.

DEA/215

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 27

London, February 4, 1946

IMPORTANT. SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following personal from Mr. Attlee for Mr. Mackenzie King, Begins: We are very gravely concerned over the critical world shortage of wheat and rice. The allocations drawn up during Sir Ben Smith's recent visit to Washington were based on the estimate that during the first half of 1946 world import requirements would exceed by about five and a half million tons the total export available from the four main exporting countries. That was a grim prospect, but since then the situation has become even worse owing to decreased estimates of exports and increased demands especially from India.

2. To bridge the gap it will be necessary to cut demands to an extent which will cause real suffering in many countries, and famine in some. Our own allocation here will fall short of our requirements by at least 215,000 tons. The consequences of this will be very serious for us. We shall have to reduce our stocks far below the safety level, and run the risk of interference with internal distribution of flour and bread if there is any irregularity in the arrival of imports. We shall have to increase our extraction rate from 80% to 85% and return to the darker bread which we accepted as a wartime necessity but hoped we had discarded with the end of hostilities. We shall also have to reduce our fats ration from 8 ounces to 7 ounces a week, which is lower than at any time during the war. This last is a direct consequence of the wheat shortage; India fears a recurrence of famine worse than the Bengal famine of 1943 and is unable to rely on the imports of wheat and rice which she needs. Consequently she will have to use for food in India ground nuts which she would otherwise have exported to us for fats manufacture.

3. The decision to increase our flour extraction rate, coupled with the decision taken at Washington to divert coarse grains from animal to human use, will substantially reduce our supplies of meat, bacon and eggs. Our plans for re-establishing our livestock herds will suffer a heavy setback and a considerable slaughter of pigs and poultry will be inevitable. Finally, we shall launch a vigorous publicity campaign to economize to the utmost all food and particularly bread.

These further sacrifices will be a severe strain on our people, who have been looking forward to some relaxation of the standards of austerity which they have cheerfully accepted throughout the war.

4. Moreover, when we look further ahead the outlook is little better. Even after the next harvest, European production will be far below pre-war figures and the demand from Far Eastern countries will not be reduced, and exportable world stocks will have been exhausted by our efforts to meet the crisis in 1946. It follows, therefore, that everything possible must be done, not only to economize in consumption, but also to increase world production of cereals. We, here, shall take immediate steps to encourage increased sowings this spring of crops to be harvested this summer. But the world must look mainly to the big producing countries for substantial increases in supplies.

5. I am sending a personal telegram to Mr. Truman and Mr. Chifley urging them to take all possible measures to increase the output of wheat. I know that both have already set on foot a number of measures with this object. I am asking Mr. Truman to consider, in particular, whether he can increase the flour extraction rate in the United States, the wheat acreage for the next harvest and restrict rice consumption. I should be grateful if you would consider whether Canada, who has done so much throughout these difficult years, could help still further by taking similar steps to increase the quantity available to meet the world's needs.

6. An increase in the extraction rate in all exporting countries would provide a major increase in supplies. Our own rate, as I have said, will have to be raised to 85% and all countries in Europe will have to adopt a figure of at least 80% and in many cases higher.

7. An increase in acreage would reduce the anxiety for next year. Carry-over stocks will be small and I can see no possible chance of farmers finding themselves left next year with an unsaleable surplus.

8. As to rice, the wheat and rice situations are, of course, inter-related. It is certain that there will be a grave rice shortage this summer. We have decided to continue our policy of not issuing rice for the civil population in this country and we are urging European countries to do the same. If you could make some contribution, it would be of great assistance.

9. The world will pass through a period of great strain and hardship before we see the next harvest. I fear that thousands may die of starvation and many more thousands may suffer severely from hunger. It is for these reasons that I make this earnest appeal for your continued help in mitigating the disasters which threaten the world. Ends.

813.

DEA/215

Le secrétaire aux Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 28

London, February 5, 1946

IMPORTANT. SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following personal from Mr. Attlee to Mr. Mackenzie King, Begins: I understand that, in connection with the planned programme of wheat shipments from Canada to Britain during the first half of this year, the Canadian Wheat Board have found it necessary to stipulate that any wheat not actually loaded by us by the end of a given month will be reallocated to other claimants.

2. I gather that, in practice, the Wheat Board has not so far imposed this condition in respect of cargoes for ships which actually arrive at a Canadian loading port before the end of the month. Even with this modified interpretation, however, the stipulation is causing us considerable difficulty and may seriously prejudice some of our wheat supplies during the next two or three critical months. As you know, we have substantially reduced our stock in this country and are working on very slender margins. Failure to receive even one or two cargoes would have disastrous results.

3. I should, therefore, be grateful for your personal interest in securing some modification of this condition about shipments for the purpose of giving us greater flexibility in the operation of tonnage. You will, I am sure, appreciate that in present conditions it is impossible to guarantee the arrival of ships by given dates after long ballast voyages, especially in winter months.

4. We are taking every possible step to see that sufficient ships are provided each month to load all the wheat that Canada can make available to us, and I hope you will be able to help us by agreeing that, so long as ships are definitely advised to the Wheat Board and are known to be en route to Canada for wheat, they should be assured of cargoes even though this may mean that some wheat technically allocated as part of one month's programme is not actually loaded and sailed from Canada until the early days of the following month.

5. We shall do all in our power to prevent vessels slipping back. Ends.

814.

PCO/D-10-1

Mémorandum du secrétaire du Cabinet au Cabinet
Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Cabinet

Ottawa, February 12, 1946

RE: CANADIAN FOOD EXPORTS; CONTINUING ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

DRAFT

SUPPLIES OF FOOD FROM CANADA TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

JOINT ANNOUNCEMENT OF UNDERSTANDINGS REACHED IN DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM AND OF CANADA AT THE MINISTRY OF FOOD, LONDON, JANUARY 1946

During their visit to London Mr. J. G. Gardiner, the Canadian Minister of Agriculture, and Mr. J. A. MacKinnon, the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce, together with officials of their Departments had discussions with Sir Ben Smith, the United Kingdom Minister of Food and officials of the Ministry of Food regarding British requirements and Canadian supplies of the major foodstuffs. The discussions took account of the recent announcement of the U.K. government policy in regard to home agricultural production and of the long-term prospects regarding supplies of the different foodstuffs.

2. This exchange of views has resulted in understandings on the matters set out below.

BACON AND HAM

3. The United Kingdom is prepared to purchase the maximum supplies which Canada can provide in 1946, 1947 and 1948. Canada has agreed to do its utmost to maintain these supplies at the highest possible level.

4. It was agreed that the present contract for the calendar year 1946 should be extended to cover the import of a minimum of 350 million lbs.

into the United Kingdom in 1947 and 400 million lbs. in 1948 at current contract prices in both years.

5. It was agreed to have further discussions before January 1947 to consider the possibility of assessing the prospective requirements of the United Kingdom for 1949 and of negotiating a contract for that year.

CHEESE

6. The present contract for the supply of 125 million lbs. of cheese to the U.K. each year expires on 31st March 1947. It was agreed:

(a) that the present contract for the season ending 31st March, 1947, should be extended to 31st March 1948 at the same prices. The contract should cover 125 million lbs.

(b) that for the season ending 31st March, 1949, the U.K. would take 100 million lbs. of cheese from Canada at prices to be fixed at a later date. (Elimination suggested)

(c) that the U.K. and Canadian representatives should review the arrangements before January 1947.

(Add "with a view to determining what could be arranged for 1948-49")

EVAPORATED MILK

7. It was agreed that a contract at current basic prices should be concluded to cover a minimum of 600,000 cases per annum for the two seasons ending 31st March 1947 and 1948.

ROLLER DRIED SKIM MILK POWDER

8. It was agreed that the U.K. should purchase 3,000 tons from the 1946 production of Roller Dried Skim Milk Powder.

EGGS

9. The United Kingdom desires to obtain increased quantities of Canadian shell eggs during the months from October to April inclusive. (Add "and more especially during the months from October to December inclusive"). Owing to difficulties in handling supplies in the United Kingdom during the summer months Canada was requested to cease shipments of shell eggs by 1st May each year diverting the summer surplus to the production of frozen melange and/or sugar dried eggs.

10. It was agreed that the current contract which expires on December 1st, 1946 should be extended to cover the supply to the United Kingdom of 1,750,000 cases of shell eggs and 5,000 tons of dried eggs in 1947 at the current basic prices for the shell eggs.

11. The United Kingdom has agreed to furnish to Canada by the autumn of 1946 (preferably by October) an indication of the requirements of eggs in shell and dried or frozen form during 1948.

MEAT

12. In order to maintain the wartime carcass meat ration the United Kingdom will require all the beef and mutton which Canada can spare in 1946 and so far as can be foreseen at present, in 1947 and probably 1948. It was agreed to continue discussions of the extension of the current contract to cover supplies for 1947.

13. The United Kingdom will be ready to purchase all the hog-casings which Canada can provide up to 1948. Offals and tongues will also be required and these will be the subject of further discussions.

14. The United Kingdom requested an increase in the export in carcass form of meat suitable for sausage manufacture.

APPLES

15. It was agreed to have further discussions before the end of May, when crop prospects in both countries would be better known, as to the quantities of apples which could be imported from Canada in 1946, in the fresh, dried and canned forms. In the import of fresh apples priority would have to be given to dessert over cooking apples and imports would be needed most in the months of October to April.

(Elimination of sentence "In the ..... to April" suggested).

OTHER PRODUCTS

16. The United Kingdom representatives gave the following information:

(i) The United Kingdom would be prepared to contract in March for the purchase of tomato puree in 1946. This would enable the necessary advance arrangements for the planning of output in Canada to be put into effect.

(ii) The United Kingdom hoped to import substantial quantities of raspberry, strawberry and greengage fruit pulp from Canada during 1946.

(iii) The subject of honey was under consideration with a view to the resumption of imports from Canada.

(iv) The United Kingdom would probably require certain supplies of dried apple pomace in 1946. The position regarding liquid apple pectin was under review and a statement as to possible requirements would be made in May. In any event requirements would probably be below prewar levels.

(v) The United Kingdom representatives undertook to consider the possibility of importing Canadian poultry.

Ministry of Food January 1946

NOTE: The amendments shown in brackets are as suggested by the Minister of Agriculture.

A. D. P. HEENEY

815.

DEA/215

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au secrétaire aux Dominions
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Dominions Secretary

TELEGRAM 30

Ottawa, February 15, 1946

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following personal from the Prime Minister for the Prime Minister, Begins: With reference to your telegram No. 28 of February 5th, I have had careful enquiries made first into the stipulation of the Canadian Wheat Board that wheat not loaded by the United Kingdom at the end of a given month would be re-allocated to other claimants and, secondly, into the practical effect of the stipulation.

I am informed that the stipulation was imposed because it was considered that in the face of the first priority we had given the wheat requirements of the United Kingdom over those of other countries, a seriously embarrassing position would be created for both the United Kingdom and Canada if the United Kingdom authorities did not move out their programme in a regular manner and if, in consequence, stocks of wheat were held in Canadian ports while many countries were pressing urgently for additional quantities of Canadian wheat. Failure of the United Kingdom to lift its requirements monthly would be taken as an indication that the United Kingdom need was not critical.

Moreover, in order to maximize Canadian wheat exports during the winter months, it was necessary for us to plan for the most effective use of transportation, port elevators and loading berths. This could not be done unless the United Kingdom programme was moved on schedule.

The Canadian Wheat Board had understood from its London representative that the United Kingdom wheat authorities fully appreciated the reasons for imposing the stipulation.

As to the practical effect of the stipulation I am informed that the Canadian Wheat Board has not cancelled any of the United Kingdom programme due to delay in arrival of your ocean tonnage.

In November, although sufficient tonnage did not arrive to lift the full United Kingdom programme, the Board did not cancel out the unshipped balance. In December once again sufficient tonnage did not arrive but the Board agreed that the unshipped December programme of nearly 70,000 tons would be carried into January. At the end of January, although the United Kingdom still had unshipped wheat at Atlantic and Pacific ports, the unshipped January programme was not cancelled.

You will, I know, appreciate that we have done what we could to meet British requirements and resolve existing difficulties even at times when it has not been possible for the British authorities to meet the shipping stipulation. I need not assure you of our intention to continue our co-operation wherever possible. I must, however, emphasize that in our common interest, Canadian wheat supplies for the United Kingdom should move out as scheduled. It is extremely difficult for us to hold stocks of wheat at seaboard for the United Kingdom when supplies are so urgently needed in other countries. Ends.

816.

DEA/1286-40

Le ministre de l'Agriculture au Premier ministre

Minister of Agriculture to Prime Minister

PERSONAL

Ottawa, February 20, 1946

Dear Mr. King,

I would judge from discussions yesterday that it is considered advisable not to hurry consideration of food agreements with Britain. I agree that they are more or less closely associated with the financial arrangements.

I would judge also that when and if agreements are reached it is desirable that the price should cover all that is involved in supplying hogs to Britain. If more must be paid to get pork products moving toward Britain, the United Kingdom Government rather than ours should pay. But these conclusions presuppose free movement of food without controls which are necessary because other markets are closed.

The fact is that in 1940 we closed the American boundary against the export of pork products and by 1942 when we closed it against exports of beef cattle we had closed it against the export of nearly all food products. This left the Canadian farmer only one market for his surpluses—the British market.

In my opinion, the question which must be decided before long-time agreements or policies can be reached is: are we, and if so when, going to permit Canadian food to move into the United States without Canadian restriction?

If we are going to do that immediately then United Kingdom agreements and subsidies will at once be both unnecessary and useless, to accomplish what we introduced them for during the war.

If we are going to do that two or three years hence, then in the meantime the United Kingdom market is absolutely essential to the marketing of our surpluses. In this case it will be helpful to have agreements to take our surpluses at reasonable prices.

If we are not going to open the American market for an unlimited period, then we require all the British market we can secure for an unlimited period.

If we do open the American market there is a question as to how long the Americans will leave it open. There is no indication that they would leave it open for anything but cattle and some doubt, with the number of Mexican cattle going in, as to whether they would leave it open.

This all mounts up, in my opinion, to the conclusion that we had better hold on to the British market for at least two years hence and the surest way of doing that is on an agreement basis.

The agreements presented are for the prices in the current contracts and for comparable quantities to those marketed under agreements during the war at about the 1942 level.

There is no doubt that the farmer believes that he should receive the present price plus the subsidies or that better the subsidies should be added to the price. His reason for that is that the subsidy is looked upon as part of the return given to remunerate him for the loss of the American market. He maintains that so long as he is deprived of that market he should have the subsidy, and that even if the American prices go down should have it for a time sufficiently long to remunerate him for lesser returns than were available earlier.

If, as Mr. St. Laurent suggests, these subsidies were added to the British price and paid on Canadian consumption, that would remunerate the Canadian farmer to the same extent as any other policy.

The only reason for taking that position would be to avoid increasing the cost of living in Canada by retaining price and wage control.

I think that if we were to do that we would be introducing into our trading policy an element of protection in a form much more reprehensible than any customs duties.

The proposal made yesterday was that we settle the question now that in all these agreements subsidies must be incorporated in the price to Britain but that on foods consumed in Canada the premium or subsidy would continue to be paid from the treasury.

Applying this policy to bacon, it means that we would purchase all bacon under the new contract at $25. a hundred. We would add another $2.50 a hundred to that which goes to Britain to make them pay the premium and we would deliver the trade in Canada on a basis of $25. a hundred. We are going to charge the British consumer $2.50 more for our bacon plus all the costs of getting it to his market than we charge our own consumer.

In my opinion, if the British Government went to their people with a story of that kind their people would say, tell Canada to keep her bacon.

In my opinion, we should say our bacon is worth $25. at St. John, whether consumed in Britain or in Canada, and then we should deal with the premium on its merits. I think this should be done at once on bacon whatever we do on other products.

My reason for this last statement is that pork prices are entirely out of hand in Ontario now. Dealers all over Ontario are paying higher prices for hogs than our British agreements or our ceiling prices permit of. If an attempt is made to stop them we at once raise an issue which I do not think this government can raise successfully at this time.

If the Ontario market is a better market than the British and we cannot get the hogs, and we are not getting them, we cannot deliver to Britain. If we cannot deliver to Britain and we cannot enforce the ceiling prices on pork, it is only a short time until we cannot enforce them on other commodities.

I think we must meet the question shortly, if not before the session then in it, as to whether we are going to keep the American market closed. If we are going to keep it closed then we must have a reasonable substitute. The only substitute is the British market.

On the long-time issue, I think we should retain the British market until there is much more reason for believing we will be permitted to hold a better place in the American market for food than we have had up to the present.

I am enclosing a statement† prepared by Dr. Barton on the bacon position.

I hope the argument that budgets must balance each twelve months rather than at the end of long epochs is not going to be the governing principle in finance as suggested by some other than the Finance Minister yesterday.

Yours sincerely,

JAMES G. GARDINER

817.

CH/Vol. 2099

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut commissaire
en Grande-Bretagne*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner
in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 915

Ottawa, May 3, 1946

SECRET. For your secret and confidential information only the following letter delivered to Sir Andrew Jones to-day, Begins:

We wish to refer at this time to the conversations that have taken place between Sir Ben Smith, the Honourable James A. MacKinnon and the Honourable James G. Gardiner on the subject of a long-term Wheat Contract between the United Kingdom and Canada. The latest proposal was made by Sir Ben Smith during a meeting at the Ministry of Food, London, England, on April 10th. This proposal was submitted to the Wheat Committee of the Cabinet here and we have been asked to say that it was not considered as a suitable basis for a contract, being too indefinite as to both price and quantity.

The Wheat Committee has instructed us to submit to you for the consideration of your Government a contract with the following basic provisions: Period—5 years, August 1, 1946 to July 31st, 1951. Price—(A) One dollar and fifty-five cents per bushel basis No. 1 Northern in store Fort William-Port Arthur or Vancouver, for the crop years 1946-47, 1947-48 and 1948-49. (B) Not less than one dollar per bushel on the same basis for 1949-50 and 1950-51, with the actual price to be determined a year in advance. Quantity—180 million bushels each crop year, including a stated percentage of flour, the latter figure to be negotiated.

We would be pleased if you would cable the above to your Government and advise us.

There would, of course, be many details to be negotiated apart from the basic provision and your Government may consider it necessary to send over experts to discuss these matters and the contract as a whole. Message ends. Ends.

818.

PCO/D-10-1

*Le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne*

*Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in Great Britain*

TELEGRAM 1142

Ottawa, June 7, 1946

TOP SECRET. Contracts with the United Kingdom Ministry of Food for cheese, bacon and eggs.

These contracts, the details of which are given below, received Cabinet approval on May 29th. Mr. Gardiner reported that by separate arrangement the United Kingdom Government had undertaken to bear the increased cost resulting from the additional subsidy.

(1) Cheese—The Canadian Government would undertake to supply 125 million pounds of cheese from current production during the period April 1, 1947 to March 31, 1948. The price delivered f.o.b. factory shipping point would be:

First grade—20 cents per pound
Second grade—19½ cents per pound
Third grade—19 cents per pound

(2) Bacon—The Canadian Government would undertake to supply not less than 350 million pounds of Canadian bacon and ham during the calendar year 1947. The price of Wiltshires Grade A, 45/80 pounds, would be $25 per 100 pounds, f.o.b. Canadian seaboard.

(3) Eggs—The Canadian Government would undertake to supply 1,750,000 cases of shell eggs and 7,500 long tons of sugar dried whole eggs for delivery in the calendar year 1947.

819.

DEA/8925-40

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET AND IMMEDIATE

[Ottawa,] June 17, 1946

I think the Government is drifting into a very difficult position in the discussions for the negotiation of a bulk wheat contract with the United Kingdom, which are now taking place in Ottawa. The initiative in these negotiations has been taken by our Government, which originally desired to conclude an agreement with the United Kingdom under which the latter would take 180,000,000 bushels of wheat each year for the next five years, at fixed prices negotiated in advance. I enclose a note showing the present status of the negotiations.

I feel very strongly that the conclusion of such a contract is not in the long-run interests either of Canada or the United Kingdom, and would be in direct conflict with the general policy of freer international trade to which the Government is committed. The officials who have been entrusted with the negotiations on our side share most of my misgivings, but feel they are under direct instructions from the Cabinet to press forward the negotiations. I cannot think that the Cabinet, in authorizing the negotiations, had the full implications of this decision put before it. It has been said that a long-term bulk purchase contract with the United Kingdom is the only alternative to a drastic increase in the price of wheat, which in itself would have a very serious effect on the maintenance of our present prices and wages policy. The situation is admittedly an extremely difficult one, but I think every effort should be made to find some third course which would not have the really disastrous consequences I foresee from either of these alternatives.

I shall try to do a proper note on the subject for tomorrow. In the meantime, I thought I had better put in this immediate word, as Strachey of the United Kingdom Ministry of Food is arriving in Ottawa tomorrow and, according to his broadcast from London last night, expects to return here next week, after the Combined Food Board meeting in Washington, to sign a concluded contract.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] June 17, 1946

SECRET

UNITED KINGDOM-CANADA WHEAT TALKS

The status of negotiations is as follows:

1. DURATION OF CONTRACT. Canada wants five years; United Kingdom four.

2. QUANTITY. Canada wants 140,000,000 bushels per year for five years; United Kingdom wants two years at 150,000,000 and two years at 120,000,000 per year. Canada has emphasized that a uniform quantity is essential and that we would prefer 120,000,000 bushels for five years rather than a varying quantity. In effect, the United Kingdom has a choice of a uniform quantity within the range of 120,000,000 to 145,000,000 bushels per year.

3. PRICE. Canada wants three years at $1.55 per bushel and two years at $1.00 per bushel minimum, with the actual price to be negotiated a year in advance. The United Kingdom agrees to $1.55 for the first two years but has offered $1.25 minimum for the third year, with the actual price to be negotiated in advance, and $1.00 minimum for the fourth year, with the actual price to be negotiated in advance.

4. OTHER CONDITIONS.

(a) Canada has agreed to allow the United Kingdom the right to resell. We feel that the quantities discussed would not enable the United Kingdom to resell other than small quantities.

(b) The United Kingdom has asked for a fall clause under which the contract price would be lowered proportionate to any sales made by Canada to other countries at less than the Canadian-United Kingdom contract price. We are unwilling to accept such a clause but have agreed that, if we sell wheat under contract at a price lower than the Canadian-United Kingdom contract price, the United Kingdom will get the benefit. As to spot sales, however, the Canadian position is that such sales may be made at any price without affecting the United Kingdom-Canada contract.

820.

DEA/8925-40

Le sous-ministre du Commerce au ministre du Commerce

Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to Minister of Trade and Commerce

[Ottawa,] June 19, 1946

RE: PROPOSED WHEAT CONTRACT WITH THE U.K.

As I am leaving to-day, I will not have an opportunity of discussing with you further the policy implications of the proposed wheat contract with the United Kingdom. Therefore, I am setting forth these notes, albeit incomplete, of some of the policy considerations that I see in the proposed contract. I do not want to thresh old straw and repeat all the arguments that have been advanced in memoranda that have been produced over the last few weeks, particularly the Wheat Board's memorandum entitled "Observations on Proposed United Kingdom Wheat Contract", dated April 26,† and another memorandum entitled "Complications and Problems of the United Kingdom Contract", dated June 18,† which Dr. Wilson will put before you on your return. My comments, therefore, are not intended as a complete review of the proposal, but I believe they cover some of the more important considerations insofar as the development of Canada's international trade is concerned.

1. I seriously question that a series of bilateral contracts such as proposed will ensure to the Canadian producer, particularly in the latter years of the contracts, a return for his wheat substantially higher than the price at which wheat is then being offered by other suppliers. To put it another way, the greater the disparity between the contract prices and world prices, that is on the face of it the greater the benefits to Canada, the less chance there is of contracts being carried through without important modification.

2. Embarking on a series of long-term contracts, knowing that we cannot contract for our total exportable surplus because of variations in the size of the annual crop, means that the Canadian Government is adopting a two-price basis in marketing its wheat. Under to-day's conditions of short supply we will undoubtedly have to discriminate in favour of certain countries and against others in deciding to whom contracts will be given.

3. Presumably, fulfilment of contracts would have to take priority over what might be called spot sales of wheat at current market prices, so that a good cash customer who had purchased Canadian wheat over many years, or a new market that we were cultivating, would be forced into making a long-term contract if it wanted to assure supply. Unless the buying country did so the hazard would be that its supplies would be cut off in a year of short supply, when its need was greatest.

4. Contract marketing of wheat obviously has an immediate and direct effect on the marketing of flour (in fact, the problems are so serious that they suggest the ultimate nationalization of the milling industry either in fact or by close government regulation). But more important is the fact that it affects the whole of our commercial policy and relationships with other countries. It is, I believe, a serious blow to the proposals for the elimination of discrimination and the expansion of world trade in which Canada has professed its faith and dependence.

5. By abandoning the open market Canada is committed to governmental price determination. There is reason to believe that other wheat producers will follow Canada's example, and that price determination by government negotiation will become the rule, not the exception. By abandoning the "open market", or even a market controlled between a floor and a ceiling, the government will be exposed to a full measure of political pulls and pressures in making its decisions.

6. I recognize that a chaotic condition would result from an immediate lifting of the present controls and that unless something is done to give the wheat farmer "stability" there will be an undeniable demand to "cash in" now on the present world shortage, with a consequent abandoning of the present stabilization policy. However, it is quite possible that the United States, in the interest of furthering its proposals for the expansion of world trade, would be willing to reduce its export price of wheat to a point that would make an international wheat agreement possible.

Without attempting to discuss the full merits of a wheat agreement, it does seem to me that there are four main objectives which could thereby be achieved. Furthermore, there probably never was a time more suitable for the conclusion of such an agreement than the present condition of world short supply. These four objectives can be stated as follows:

(a) A real measure of stability to the Western farmer, by giving importing countries, collectively, an opportunity now to share in world supplies at controlled prices for a period of years, followed by the importing countries underwriting a floor price in the latter years of the agreement;

(b) Complete avoidance of discrimination inherent in adopting a two-price structure, and in having now to select a small group of countries to whom we are prepared to sell our wheat;

(c) Provision of anonymous price determination in the open market within an agreed range, and thereby the avoidance of political price determination;

(d) The bringing of other exporters into line on prices and thereby avoiding the problems inherent in any major discrepancy between our price and theirs.

I feel sure that such a course should be earnestly explored before a decision is taken to sign the proposed contract.

I have not attempted in this memorandum to cover the important domestic considerations which I believe should be taken into account in making the decision to enter into the proposed agreement, because the formulation of views in these matters is primarily the concern of other Departments. It should be observed, however, that the proposals have most important consequences on problems of domestic price policy as well as on the foreign lending programme, both of which are closely related to the present plans for trade development.

M. W. MACKENZIE

821.

PCO/D-10-1

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-2518

Washington, June 19, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. For Robertson from Pearson, Begins: After our telephone conversation this afternoon I informed the State Department that the Canadian Government was considering with the United Kingdom Government a wheat contract along lines which you indicated to me and that there was every likelihood of an early conclusion of this negotiation. The Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Clayton, and Mr. Hickerson all expressed alarm and disappointment at this information. They had had no knowledge of the matter as apparently Mr. Wilcox had not yet delivered to them Sir John Magowan's note on the subject and which I referred to in WA-2501 of June 18th.† In any event, this note was more general in terms than the information I gave them. Clayton urged in strong terms that we hold up our signature until they have had an opportunity to talk the matter over with us. He felt that an announcement of an agreement of this kind at this time would seriously prejudice the British loan which now is about to reach the House of Representatives for final determination. I pointed out that this is a matter of more concern to the United Kingdom than to us and that no doubt they would take this aspect of the question up with Mr. Strachey. Mr. Clayton referred to the recent closing of the Liverpool Cotton Exchange which had antagonised the cotton bloc in Congress. If the wheat bloc were also to be antagonised, the effect on the loan would be deplorable.

