INTRODUCTION

La paix revenue après six ans de participation intense à la plus grande crise des temps modernes, le Canada a dû répondre à un défi: vivre dans un monde très différent de ce qu'il avait connu auparavant. Les documents reproduits dans ce volume montrent l'évolution de la position du Canada sur le plan international ainsi que la politique extérieure élaborée principalement sous les auspices du ministère des Affaires extérieures et d'un petit groupe de fonctionnaires des autres ministères pour relever les défis de cette époque. Avant d'aborder cet ouvrage, le lecteur devrait se renseigner sur les activités du Ministère à qui l'on doit la majorité des 1 277 documents choisis parmi les 9 598 dossiers consultés.

Le jour de la fête du Dominion, en 1943, le Premier ministre William Lyon Mackenzie King affirma avec fierté que, «au cours de la présente guerre mondiale, de simple nation qu'il était, le Canada s'est élevé aux yeux de tous au rang de puissance mondiale.» La nécessité de faire face à la situation découlant de la guerre avait donné au Canada une place plus importante dans le concert des nations que celle qu'il aurait obtenue si les critères traditionnels avaient prévalu. Dans ce monde bouleversé, il s'était déclaré moyenne puissance et avait entrepris, dans le cadre de son principe de représentation proportionnelle,<sup>1</sup> de prouver qu'il ne s'agissait pas de vantardise sans fondement. Mais ce principe ne fut jamais accepté par les autres puissances, de sorte que le Canada a dû prendre position sur des questions qui ne le concernaient pas directement afin de garder son rang de moyenne puissance. Alors qu'à la Société des Nations il avait affirmé son indépendance par sa seule présence, aux Nations Unies, en revanche, la confirmation du statut qu'il s'était lui-même donné l'a obligé à prendre et de soutenir des initiatives proprement canadiennes en matière de politique. La politique d'isolement d'avant-guerre fut rejeté comme un anathème et en 1946, les grands espoirs entretenus pendant la guerre furent projetés sur la scène internationale.

D'une part, l'autorité en affaires internationales ne doit pas être confiée exclusivement aux grandes puissances. D'autre part, l'autorité ne peut être partagée également entre les trente États souverains ou plus dont se composent les Nations Unies, sans quoi il n'y aura plus d'autorité efficace. . . . Le Gouvernement est d'avis que la représentation efficace . . . ne doit ni être restreinte aux grandes puissances ni s'étendre nécessairement à tous les États. La représentation devra être déterminée sur une base proportionnelle d'après laquelle seront membres titulaires les pays, petits ou grands, qui sont le plus en mesure de contribuer à la réalisation de l'objectif particulier à atteindre.

INTRODUCTION

As Canada returned to peacetime existence after six years of extensive participation in the greatest crisis of modern times, she was confronted by the challenge of living in a world very different from that which she had known in the past. The documents contained in this volume portray Canada's changing international posture and the external policy developed primarily under the auspices of the Department of External Affairs and a small group of officials from other departments to meet the challenges of that time. Before using this volume the reader should develop some appreciation of the operations of the department responsible for the majority of the 1,277 documents selected from the 9,598 files that were examined.

On Dominion Day of 1943 Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie King proudly affirmed that in "the course of the present war we have seen Canada emerge from nationhood into a position generally recognized as that of a world power." The exigencies of responding to a wartime situation had given Canada a higher position in the world power structure than was justified by the yardstick of traditional prerequisites for recognition. In this changed world she had christened herself a Middle Power and set out within the context of her functional principle<sup>1</sup>, to prove that this was no idle boast. But her functional principle was never accepted by the other powers with the result that she found herself called upon to take positions, for the sake of maintaining her status as a Middle Power, on issues which did not directly involve her. Whereas in the League of Nations she had asserted her independence by her mere presence, in the United Nations confirmation of her self-proclaimed status required the development and pursuit of Canadian-bred policy initiatives. Pre-war isolation was rejected as an anathema and 1946 became the year for projecting her high hopes of wartime planning onto the international stage.

Of necessity, Canada became vitally concerned with establishing a better basis for international trade and commerce in a peaceful environment. In spite of this, one of the least understood elements of Canada's post-war internationalism has been her foreign economic policy. Yet more than anything else

On the one hand, authority in international affairs must not be concentrated exclusively in the largest powers. On the other hand, authority cannot be divided equally among all the thirty or more sovereign states that comprise the United Nations, or all effective authority will disappear. . . . In the view of the government, effective representation . . . should neither be restricted to the largest states nor necessarily extended to all states. Representation should be determined on a functional basis which will admit to full membership those countries, large or small, which have the greatest contribution to make to the particular object in question.

Par la force des choses, le Canada s'intéressait surtout à l'amélioration des bases du commerce international dans un monde en paix. En dépit de cela, l'un des éléments les moins compris de l'internationalisme d'après-guerre professé par le Canada a été sa politique étrangère économique. Pourtant, plus que toute autre chose, celle-ci a déterminé les décisions du Cabinet sur les questions internationales. Ni le ministère des Affaires extérieures ni celui du Commerce en étaient les instigateurs, mais bien le ministère des Finances, où chaque mesure était soigneusement calculée par le sous-ministre, M. W. C. Clark, en vue de développer la prospérité canadienne et non la charité. Le ministère des Finances possédait un groupe de spécialistes financiers dont la participation à la reconstruction économique internationale tendait, dans ce domaine, à confiner le ministère des Affaires extérieures dans le rôle de bureau de poste. Voilà pourquoi l'histoire des relations extérieures du Canada ne se trouve pas uniquement dans les dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures. Les questions de secours, de reconstruction, de taux de change et de balance des paiements étaient toutes liées au désir qu'avait le Canada de renforcer les organismes financiers internationaux récemment mis sur pied. Lors de la Conférence de paix de Paris en 1946, M. Brooke Claxton, le président de la délégation canadienne, a déclaré ce qui suit: «We believe that peace is not merely the absence of war but the positive establishment of prosperity. Trade between nations, like the well-being of the people within each nation, is a main pillar on which to build the structure of a lasting peace.»<sup>2</sup> Ceux qui géraient l'économie canadienne se rappelaient la crise consécutive à la Première guerre mondiale et l'aggravation de la situation causée par la politique américaine de tarifs douaniers très élevés. Pendant la Seconde guerre mondiale, la capacité de production du Canada s'était tellement développée que le pays était devenu le deuxième fournisseur mondial. Tout le monde savait ce qui se passerait sur le plan intérieur si le Canada ne pouvait maintenir cette productivité après la guerre grâce aux exportations. Étant donné la nature et l'étendue de sa contribution à l'effort de guerre, le Canada était devenu plus vulnérable aux fluctuations de la conjoncture économique internationale. C'est ainsi que le Canada fut un participant très actif aux conférences précédant la création du FMI, de UNRRA, de l'OAA, de l'OMS, de l'OPACI, de la BIRD et de l'OIC, qui n'eut pas de lendemain. Cela a incité d'autres ministères, comme celui du Travail, à mettre alors sur pied leurs propres directions chargées de traiter les problèmes d'intérêt international.

La réputation enviable que s'était faite le Canada en mettant des ressources considérables à la disposition de l'aide mutuelle, du secours militaire et des programmes de l'Administration des Nations Unies pour le secours et la reconstruction avait incité ses alliées d'Europe et d'Amérique latine à attendre une participation bilatérale accrue du Canada. Ils ont tenté d'obtenir, parfois de façon gênante, des garanties concernant l'accès continu aux vastes ressources physiques et aux maigres ressources financières du Canada. Car eux aussi avaient compris que derrière les grands discours sur la paix se cachait it determined the Cabinet's decision-making on international issues. The force behind this was neither External Affairs nor Trade and Commerce, but the Department of Finance where every move was carefully calculated by its Deputy Minister, W. C. Clark, to advance Canadian prosperity, not charity. The Department of Finance had a group of financial experts whose involvement with international economic reconstruction tended to relegate External Affairs to the role of a post office in these transactions. For this reason the record of Canadian external relations cannot be found solely within the files of the Department of External Affairs. Questions of relief, rehabilitation, exchange rates and balance of payments were all bound up with Canada's desire to strengthen the newly created international financial agencies. At the Paris Peace Conference in 1946 the Chairman of the Canadian delegation, Brooke Claxton, announced that: "We believe that peace is not merely the absence of war but the positive establishment of prosperity. Trade between nations, like the well-being of the people within each nation, is a main pillar on which to build the structure of a lasting peace."<sup>2</sup> Those who managed the Canadian economy remembered the slump that had followed the First World War and the aggravation caused by the American policy of high tariffs. During the Second World War Canada's productive capacity had so expanded as to make her the second largest supplier in the world. No one had to be told of the domestic consequences that would follow if Canada could not sustain that productivity through exports abroad after the war. By the nature and extent of her contribution to the war effort she had made herself more vulnerable to shifts in the international economic climate. For that very reason Canada was a most concerned participant in the conferences preceding the appearance of the IMF, UNRRA, FAO, WHO, PICAQ, IBRD, and the abortive ITO. This type of involvement led other departments, such as Labour, to establish at this time their own divisions for handling matters of international concern.

Canada's enviable record of putting vast resources at the disposal of Mutual Aid, Military Relief and the United Nation's Relief and Rehabilitation Administration programmes had led her European and Latin American allies to expect greater Canadian bilateral involvement. Sometimes in an embarrassing way, they sought assurances of continued access to Canada's vast material and slim financial resources. For they too realized that underneath all the jargon of peace on earth was an innate Canadian desire to advance her status and prosperity through increased contacts abroad. By the end of 1946 seven countries had established legations in Ottawa for which Canada could not reciprocate and a host of others were anxious to negotiate an exchange of diplomatic representatives. This phenomenon and its subsequent demands upon a limited number of skilled diplomats is reflected in the documents.

In responding to both its own needs and the changing world scene, the Department of External Affairs had its parameters and operations altered. For as long as the Prime Minister served as Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Cabinet Secretariat was in an embryonic stage, it was convenient for le désir intrinsèque qu'avait le Canada d'améliorer son statut et sa prospérité en augmentant les débouchés extérieurs. À la fin de 1946, sept pays avaient établi des légations à Ottawa, mais le Canada ne pouvait pas offrir de contrepartie, et beaucoup d'autres cherchaient à négocier un échange de représentants diplomatiques. Ce phénomène et les exigences que cela représenta ensuite pour un nombre limité de diplomates expérimentés apparaissent dans les documents.

Pour répondre à la fois à ses besoins et à un monde en changement, le ministère des Affaires étrangères a dû modifier ses paramètres et ses activités. Tant que le Premier ministre assumait le rôle de secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères et que le secrétariat du Cabinet fut à l'état embryonnaire, il était commode pour le Premier ministre d'utiliser le Ministère pendant la guerre comme réservoir de personnes compétentes pour des projets spéciaux. Dans la planification et l'exécution de ces programmes, le ministère des Affaires étrangères était devenu le ciment de la structure de la Fonction publique. Ainsi, les fonctionnaires qui auraient dû donner des conseils et des directives aux autres ministères traitant de questions de portée internationale furent littéralement submergés par des questions techniques portant sur les priorités dans la navigation aérienne, les prisonniers de guerre, les formalités frontalières, la censure et la guerre économique et psychologique. Tous ces projets étaient importants en eux-mêmes, mais ne faisaient pas partie des fonctions normales consistant à analyser les affaires étrangères pour ensuite recommander une politique et mettre à exécution la politique choisie dans le domaine diplomatique. À la fin de la guerre, on a découvert que le démantèlement de cet appareil et l'adaptation de la structure centralisée du Ministère aux conditions de 1946 n'étaient pas chose facile. Le fait que manifestement ni le titulaire du poste de sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères ni son successeur ne possédaient d'aptitude administrative pour effectuer une transformation efficace rendit la tâche d'autant plus difficile.

Pendant vingt des trente-sept années d'existence du Ministère, et continuellement depuis 1935, le Premier ministre King avait cumulé son portefeuille avec celui de secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères. Le 4 septembre 1946, le poste fut cédé à M. Louis St. Laurent, dont les opinions sur la situation mondiale et le rôle que devait jouer le Canada différaient largement de celles du Premier ministre, tout en étant plus proches de celles de ses principaux conseillers. Durant la guerre, il avait vu le Canada quitter sa place de spectateur-commentateur pour aller s'asseoir au banc des joueurs. Sous sa direction dans la lutte qui s'annonçait, le Canada essaierait de jouer son propre jeu en se présentant comme un arbitre international parmi les grandes puissances.

Simultanément, les trois plus hauts fonctionnaires du Ministère furent déplacés. M. Norman Robertson, qui occupait le poste de sous-secrétaire the Prime Minister to use the Department as a reservoir of skilled people for special wartime projects. In the planning and execution of these programmes, External Affairs had become the putty of the civil service structure. Thus officials who should have been giving advice and direction to other Departments whose work flowed into the international arena, found themselves submerged in technical questions of air priorities, prisoners of war, frontier formalities, censorship and economic psychological warfare. All these projects were important in themselves but outside the normal duties of analyzing foreign affairs, recommending policy thereon and carrying out the accepted policy in the diplomatic field. At the end of hostilities it was discovered that the dismantling of this wartime apparatus and adaptation of the basic centralized structure of the Department to the conditions prevailing in 1946 was no easy task. The fact that neither the incumbent Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs nor his successor possessed any demonstrable administrative capabilities for executing an efficient transformation made it all the more difficult.

For twenty of the Department's thirty-seven years, and continuously since 1935, Prime Minister King had concurrently been Secretary of State for External Affairs. On September 4, 1946, the position was relinquished to Louis St. Laurent whose views on the world situation and Canada's part therein were much different from the Prime Minister's and closer to that of his senior advisers. During the war he had watched Canada throw off the trappings of the spectator-commentator and take her seat on the players' bench. Under his leadership in the forthcoming fray, Canada would attempt to play her own game under the guise of an international referee among the great powers.

Simultaneous with this change occurred a triple shuffle of the Department's three top career officers. Mr. Norman Robertson, who had carried the burden of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs since Dr. Skelton's death in 1941, left for a well-earned rest as High Commissioner in Great Britain. No detail of the Department's varied operations during the war had been too small for his personal attention. Added to this burdensome method of centralized administration was the continual flow of demands of the Prime Minister who made few policy decisions without consulting him. The constant pressure of long hours of work had taken its toll and Robertson no longer possessed the energy required for leading Canada down untrodden paths. His replacement was Canada's Ambassador to the United States, Lester B. Pearson, who had already demonstrated how he thrived on challenges, activity and new responsibilities. With St. Laurent's blessing he would prove that Canada had an important role to play in the international arena. The post in Washington vacated by Pearson was filled by H. Hume Wrong who as Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs was known for his administrative talents and his chairmanship of the Working Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems. It was Wrong who had done so much to prepare Canada for her role in the United Nations.

d'État aux Affaires extérieures depuis la mort de M. Skelton en 1941, méritait bien un repos et le poste de haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne lui fut confié. Aucun détail des activités variées du Ministère durant la guerre, quelle qu'en soit l'importance, ne lui avait échappé. Outre cette administration centralisée très pesante, il devait faire face à un flot continu de demandes de la part du Premier ministre, qui prenait très peu de décisions concernant la politique à suivre sans le consulter. Payant la pression constante de longues heures de travail, M. Robertson n'avait plus l'énergie nécessaire pour guider le Canada dans des voies jusqu'alors inexplorées. Son successeur fut M. Lester B. Pearson, ambassadeur aux États-Unis, qui avait déjà démontré son enthousiasme devant les défis, l'activité et les nouvelles responsabilités. Avec l'appui de M. St. Laurent, il devait prouver que le Canada avait un rôle important à jouer sur la scène internationale. Le poste de Washington laissé vacant fut occupé par M. H. Hume Wrong qui, en tant que sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures, était connu pour ses qualités d'administrateur et l'exécution brillante des fonctions de président du Comité de travail sur les problèmes d'après-guerre. C'est lui qui avait tant fait pour préparer le Canada au rôle qu'il aurait à jouer aux Nations Unies. Malheureusement, il avait accordé très peu de temps à l'élaboration d'une structure administrative connexe. Ainsi, ce remaniement a rehaussé le côté politique du Ministère, mais a aussi consacré le retard qu'aurait toujours l'appareil administratif par rapport à ses besoins.

Sans planification administrative préalable, le système déjà surchargé fut incapable d'absorber sans à-coups ses nouvelles responsabilités, ce qui explique les trois ans d'expérimentation organisationnelle qui commencèrent

Unfortunately little of his time was devoted to designing an accompanying administrative structure. The triple shuffle enhanced the policy side of the Department but ensured that its administrative apparatus would always lag behind its needs.

Without the prerequisite administrative planning an already overworked structure was incapable of smoothly absorbing its new responsibilities. This accentuated deficiency accounts for the three-year period of organizational experimentation that began in 1946. In the past when the Department was much smaller there had been benefits from organizing its activities around the abilities of its senior officers and the reactive demands of international relations. This was no longer possible and in 1945-1946 the Department began a sometimes painful and always unsettling allocation of people and responsibilities within the divisional framework established in 1944. Because of the number of changes made, an organization chart of the headquarters of the Department has been included inside the front cover for the user's reference. The preparation of this organization chart has been a tedious process. The Historical Section of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Directorate of History in the Department of National Defence have retained reasonably complete personnel records. Unfortunately the same was not done in the Department of External Affairs where complete records have been kept on only the senior officers. Since this was a period of great mobility in the civil service and before comprehensive records were kept by the Public Service Commission, the whereabouts and movements of many junior officials are difficult to trace from the surviving and incomplete, and at times contradictory, telephone directories and quarterly en 1946. Par le passé, lorsque le Ministère était beaucoup plus petit, il avait été profitable d'organiser ses activités en fonction des aptitudes de ses hauts fonctionnaires et des exigences des relations internationales. Cela n'était plus possible et en 1945-1946, le Ministère commença à répartir, non sans difficulté, les personnes et les responsabilités au sein de la structure administrative créée en 1944. Étant donné le nombre de modifications apportées, un organigramme de l'administration centrale du ministère a été inclus au début du volume, sur la face interne de la couverture, pour la gouverne du lecteur. La préparation de cet organigramme n'a pas été tâche facile. La Section historique du ministère de l'Industrie et du Commerce et la Direction historique du ministère de la Défense nationale ont gardé des dossiers assez complets sur le personnel. Malheureusement, tel n'est pas le cas pour le ministère des Affaires extérieures, où il n'existe des dossiers complets que pour les hauts fonctionnaires. Puisqu'il s'agissait d'une période de grande mobilité au sein de la Fonction publique, avant que des dossiers complets soient gardés par la Commission de la Fonction publique, les déplacements et les lieux d'affectation d'un bon nombre de fonctionnaires subalternes sont difficiles à déterminer d'après les répertoires téléphoniques et les listes ministérielles trimestrielles qu'on a pu retrouver, incomplets et parfois même contradictoires. Ceci dit, l'organigramme et la liste des représentants à l'étranger qui se trouve à la fin du volume, sur la face interne de la couverture arrière, donnent une image aussi complète et aussi précise que possible.

L'étendue des nouvelles activités du Ministère est bien montrée dans le tableau 1. En un an, le nombre d'accords internationaux conclus avait presque doublé, son budget avait plus que doublé et sa représentation aux réunions et conférences internationales avait quadruplé. Pour ce faire, le personnel fut augmenté de vingt-deux pour-cent et l'on demanda encore plus d'années-hommes pour l'année suivante. Tous ces indices de croissance entraînaient des ajustements perturbateurs qui expliquent la plupart des lacunes de la documentation présentée dans ce volume, sans compter le vide inestimable causé par la perte de cinquante-neuf dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures qui auraient pu être très parlants. Malheureusement, les dossiers qu'ont conservés les autres ministères qui ont participé aux délibérations sur des questions internationales ne suffisaient que rarement à remplir ce vide.

Cet ouvrage contient plus de mémorandums de fonctionnaires moins importants que les volumes déjà parus. Cela, premièrement parce qu'ils jettent un peu de lumière sur les conseils, suivis ou non, qui ont été prodigués aux principaux acteurs. Ces mémorandums permettent d'apprécier les tensions, les suppositions et les erreurs auxquelles faisaient face les responsables, faute de leurs comptes rendus de la prise des décisions. En deuxième lieu, ils contiennent souvent le seul énoncé d'une politique mis sur papier par un fonctionnaire rédigeant en toute hâte un texte pour une délégation sur le départ et dont les membres venaient à peine d'apprendre leur nomination. Ainsi, departmental lists. Subject to these qualifications the departmental organization chart and the list of representatives abroad inside the back cover give as complete and as accurate a picture as possible.

The extent of the Department's expanded activities is illustrated in Table 1. Within the year the number of international agreements concluded had almost doubled, its budget had more than doubled, and its representation at international meetings and conferences had quadrupled. For these undertakings its staff was increased by twenty-two percent and demands were made for an even larger increase the following year. Each of these indices of growth caused unsettling adjustments that account for many of the shortcomings of the documentation presented in this volume, in addition to the indefinable gap left by the loss of fifty-nine potentially significant External Affairs files. Unfortunately the surviving records of other Departments involved in specific external operations seldom filled the vacuum.

More than the preceding volumes, this volume contains the memoranda of lesser officials. First because they throw light on the advice, whether followed or not, that was given to the principal actors. These memoranda allow for an appreciation of the stresses, assumptions and delusions under which the policy-makers laboured in the absence of their own record of decision-making. Secondly, they often contain the only statement on policy that was committed to paper by an official dashing off something for a departing delegation whose members had only recently learned of their appointment. Thus officers who only a few months before had received their initiation at the "University of the East Block" were liable to be asked for policy recommendations on subjects they knew little about and their superiors even less. One diarist at the time thus described his morning's work in the Department of External Affairs:

All morning a stream of interesting and informative telegrams and despatches from missions abroad comes pouring across my desk. I am tempted to read them all and to try to understand what is really happening, but if I do that I have not time to draft answers to the most immediate telegrams and despatches crying out for instructions. I must skim through everything with my mind concentrated on immediate practical implications. If I try to be objective and to comprehend all the issues I am lost. I draft telegrams and speeches under pressure, short-term considerations uppermost—"Will the Prime Minister sign this?"—"Are we not too short of personnel to be represented at this or that international meeting?" This is the way policy is made on a hand-to-mouth basis out of an overworked official by a tired politician with only half his mind on the subject.<sup>5</sup>

At the top, pyramids of memoranda and telegrams rose on the Under-Secretary's desk for weeks on end with only the most urgent being cleared off each day. A tradition of openness at the top meant that matters of immediate significance were settled orally among the senior echelon of officers. Paper work was too often tedious and superfluous. Robertson seldom committed his views to paper because he had easy access to the Prime Minister des fonctionnaires n'ayant que quelques mois d'expérience après leur initiation à «l'Université de l'Édifice de l'Est» devaient à l'occasion donner des recommandations de politique sur des sujets qu'ils connaissaient à peine et leurs supérieurs, encore moins. Un fonctionnaire de l'époque décrivait ainsi dans son journal ses tâches de la matinée au ministère des Affaires extérieures :

All morning a stream of interesting and informative telegrams and despatches from missions abroad comes pouring across my desk. I am tempted to read them all and to try to understand what is really happening, but if I do that I have not time to draft answers to the most immediate telegrams and despatches crying out for instructions. I must skim through everything with my mind concentrated on immediate practical implications. If I try to be objective and to comprehend all the issues I am lost. I draft telegrams and speeches under pressure, short-term considerations uppermost—'Will the Prime Minister sign this?'—'Are we not too short of personnel to be represented at this or that international meeting?' This is the way policy is made on a hand-to-mouth basis out of an overworked official by a tired politician with only half his mind on the subject.<sup>5</sup>

A l'échelon supérieur, des montagnes de mémorandums et de télégrammes s'empilaient sur le bureau du sous-secrétaire d'État pendant des semaines, et l'on ne traitait que les plus urgents tous les jours. Aux termes d'une longue tradition de franchise au sommet, les problèmes d'importance immédiate étaient réglés verbalement. La paperasse était trop souvent ennuyeuse et superflue. M. Robertson mettait rarement ses opinions sur papier étant donné qu'il pouvait régulièrement consulter le Premier ministre et qu'il ne quittait Ottawa habituellement qu'en sa présence. Au grand bonheur de l'historien, M. Pearson ne faisait ni l'un ni l'autre, d'où l'amélioration des dossiers. Cependant, il a rarement estimé nécessaire la rédaction de mémorandums raisonnés, semblables à ceux de M. Skelton, pour faire valoir ses opinions. Les mémorandums avaient normalement pour but d'indiquer les aspects techniques d'une politique, l'exposé des motifs étant communiqué verbalement. Vu le genre d'expansion du Ministère et l'intimité et l'entière compréhension qui caractérisaient les relations entre MM. Robertson, Pearson et Wrong, il n'est pas surprenant qu'aucun d'entre eux n'ait jamais pensé à faire une lettre officielle de directives pour son successeur. Comme l'a dit M. Wrong lors d'une conférence de presse, le 26 septembre 1946: "We follow a fairly consistent pattern at the various conferences we attend, but I don't see what is to be gained by attempting to reduce the matter to a simple code." Les hauts fonctionnaires se préoccupaient de l'histoire qu'ils faisaient, mais non des archives nécessaires aux historiens. La personne plutôt que le dossier constituait la principale source de renseignement. Ainsi, les manques dans les dossiers étaient moins fâcheux pour le fonctionnaire de l'époque qu'ils le sont maintenant pour l'historien.

Le fait que la plus grande partie de l'activité diplomatique du Canada était désormais consacrée aux conférences internationales a eu des conséand usually left Ottawa only in his company. Fortunately for the historian, Pearson did neither and the paper record improves as a result. Even so, there are few occasions when he found it necessary to write the argumentative type memoranda for which Dr. Skelton is remembered. Memoranda were usually for conveying the technical aspects of policy while the reasons for that policy were communicated orally. It was in keeping with the nature of the growth of the Department and the intimacy and complete understanding which characterized the relations of Robertson, Pearson and Wrong that none of them ever thought of preparing a formal letter of instructions for his successor. As Mr. Wrong remarked at a press conference on September 26, 1946: "We follow a fairly consistent pattern at the various conferences we attend, but I don't see what is to be gained by attempting to reduce the matter to a simple code." Senior officials were conscious of making history, not the records for history. The individual rather than the file was the main source of information. Thus gaps in the paper record were of less consequence to the official than to students thereafter.

The shift of the main portion of Canada's diplomatic activity to international conferences had profound consequences for the organization of the Department and its paper records. Unlike other delegations who actively publicized their policy objectives at these conferences, the Canadian delegates acting upon the instructions of the Prime Minister deliberately cut a low profile. Unobtrusively in committees and corridors they applied Canadian policy directives to specific issues. In most cases it was sufficient for them to record only the fact of achievement, defeat or compromise. The how and why were too often left for Departmental gossip or the confines of a private letter. Numerous references in the official files to these unofficial exchanges of letters are accompanied by the notation that they were not indexed and the editor's searches in private collections of papers were seldom productive.

The shift in the location of many international meetings from London, Paris and Geneva to Washington and New York also contributed to the incompleteness of the paper record by reducing the need for written instructions. When a Canadian delegate in New York wanted to discuss routine matters he had the telephone at his disposal while for more important issues he could easily return to Ottawa for an unrecorded meeting with the Prime Minister and a few officials. All of the major decisions on the international control of atomic energy, for example, were made in this fashion. In interviewing the officials of the time the historian soon discovers the difference between the written instructions prepared for a wide distribution and the really significant instructions that were transmitted orally. Once the major issues of policy were clarified and agreed upon by those who needed to know, there was never a thought given to the completeness of the file. Files were filled instead with subsequent telegraphic exchanges communicating merely technical and drafting details. Their profusion often overwhelmed the officials in Ottawa who had neither the time nor the auxiliary documents to comprehend the full significance of what was happening. Within the context quences profondes sur l'organisation du Ministère et ses archives. Par opposition aux autres délégations qui, à ces conférences, proclamaient activement leurs objectifs politiques, les délégués canadiens restaient délibérément dans l'ombre, conformément aux directives du Premier ministre. Dans les comités et les corridors, ils appliquaient discrètement les directives canadiennes aux problèmes particuliers. Dans la plupart des cas, ils ne mettaient sur papier que le résultat de leur intervention. Le pourquoi et le comment ont trop souvent été transmis de bouche à oreille dans le Ministère, ou par lettre privée. Dans les dossiers, les nombreuses références à ces échanges de lettres non officiels sont accompagnées d'une note indiquant que ces dernières n'ont pas été répertoriées; dès lors, les recherches faites par l'éditeur dans les collections privées ont rarement abouti.

D'autre part, le fait que beaucoup de réunions internationales qui se déroulaient auparavant à Londres, Paris et Genève, se soient tenues désormais à Washington et New York a aussi contribué à rendre incomplets les dossiers; on avait en effet moins besoin de directives écrites. Lorsqu'un délégué du Canada à New York voulait discuter de problèmes courants, il pouvait téléphoner, et pour les questions plus importantes, il pouvait facilement retourner à Ottawa pour une réunion sans compte rendu avec le Premier ministre et quelques fonctionnaires. Par exemple, toutes les principales décisions sur le contrôle international de l'énergie atomique ont été prises de cette façon. En interrogeant les fonctionnaires de l'époque, l'historien découvre en très peu de temps la différence entre les directives écrites, préparées pour une large diffusion, et les directives vraiment importantes qui étaient transmises verbalement. Lorsque les grands aspects de politique avaient été précisés et que les intéressés avaient donné leur accord, on ne s'attardait jamais à compléter le dossier. Par contre, celui-ci était rempli avec les échanges télégraphiques ultérieurs qui ne donnaient que des détails techniques ou rédactionnels. Leur abondance accablait d'ailleurs souvent les fonctionnaires à Ottawa qui n'avaient ni le temps ni les documents connexes pour comprendre complètement ce qui se passait. Dans le seul contexte de cet ouvrage, ces télégrammes sont incompréhensibles s'ils ne sont pas lus en conjonction avec les procès-verbaux, présentations et dossiers officiels des délibérations. L'ensemble constitue effectivement un compte rendu de l'élaboration de la politique canadienne, mais, faute d'espace, celui-ci ne peut être reproduit dans un seul volume. Il relève donc de l'historien de tracer une voie dans ce labyrinthe lorsque toute la documentation internationale sera mise à sa disposition. Il découvrira certainement qu'il existe des différences d'opinions ou des versions différentes de ce que le gouvernement voulait transmettre, de ce que l'ambassadeur a réellement communiqué et de ce que le gouvernement étranger croyait que l'ambassadeur du Canada avait communiqué.

La rédaction des documents de travail et des rapports finals sur les conférences internationales avait toujours été largement fonction du temps dont disposaient leurs auteurs. En 1946, les ordres du jour des conférences submergèrent le Ministère. Les dossiers regorgent de commentaires à moitié of this volume these despatches remain unintelligible unless read in conjunction with the official minutes, submissions and records of trade-offs. When taken in total they do provide the record of Canadian policy-making but such a record cannot be produced within the confines of a single volume. Ultimately it is the historian who must discover the way through this labyrinth when all international documentation is made available. Undoubtedly he will discover that there are differences of opinion or different versions of what the Government wanted communicated, what the Ambassador did communicate, and what the foreign government thought the Canadian Ambassador communicated.

The preparation of briefing papers and final reports on international conferences had always been very dependent upon the time available to the authors thereof. In 1946, conference agendas overwhelmed the Department. The files are replete with half-finished and draft commentaries that never reached the delegation in the form intended. The writing of the lengthy background sections of the briefing papers was assigned to junior officers who offered little indication of Canadian policy. In some instances this was because there simply was none but more often those senior officers responsible for policy initiatives carried them in their own heads. From the few available briefing papers, extracts dealing only with Canadian policy have been reproduced here. As for reports on international conferences, some of the more general reports of delegations to the various conferences held under the auspices of the United Nations have already been published. Only extracts from previously unpublished reports have been included in this volume. The standard format for the unpublished reports included an assessment of the leading personalities at the conference, a description of the issues under review, and an assessment of the impact of the results on the future of the organization. In this format the contents of the delegation report differed little from a good newspaper account. In vain one looks for some indication of how the delegation assessed the impact of the proceedings on Canadian policy objectives. These reports are more useful for understanding international rather than Canadian external relations as part of the wider scene. Although these conference briefings and reports can be located in various collections and files, the most comprehensive set is located in the Conference Report Series maintained by the Historical Division of the Department of External Affairs.

The dismantling of the war-oriented records management system and the designing of a new system would have caused little difficulty if it had not coincided with an enormous increase in the number of new subject files. During a similar period of expansion at the beginning of the war the Department's Records Section had found it impossible to maintain its yearly filing system. Therefore, in 1940, a new system was created and all subsequent documentation and new subject files were added to it. In time, these files collectively became known as the "40" series with, as adjuncts, rédigés et à l'étape de projet qui ne sont jamais parvenus à la délégation sous la forme prévue. La rédaction des longues sections des documents de travail portant sur l'historique était assignée à des fonctionnaires moins expérimentés qui donnaient très peu d'indications concernant la politique canadienne, soit parce qu'il n'y en avait aucune, ou, le plus souvent, parce que les hauts fonctionnaires responsables des initiatives en matière de politique ne les mettaient pas sur papier. Du petit nombre de documents de travail disponibles, nous avons tiré ici des extraits portant exclusivement sur la politique canadienne. Quant aux rapports sur les conférences internationales, quelques-uns des rapports généraux des délégations aux conférences tenues sous les auspices des Nations Unies ont déjà été publiés. Nous insérons dans le présent ouvrage seulement des extraits de rapports qui n'ont pas été publiés. La forme type des rapports non publiés comprenait une évaluation des personnalités marquantes présentes à la conférence, la description des problèmes à l'étude et une évaluation des répercussions des résultats sur l'avenir de l'organisation. Ainsi fait, le rapport de la délégation différait très peu d'un bon compte rendu de journal. C'est en vain que l'on cherche quelques indications sur la façon dont la délégation a évalué les retombées de la conférence sur les objectifs politiques canadiens. Ces rapports facilitent davantage la compréhension des relations internationales que celle des relations extérieures du Canada à l'échelle internationale. Bien que ces documents de travail et ces rapports existent dans divers dossiers et collections, l'ensemble le plus complet se trouve dans la Série des rapports des délégations aux conférences internationales gardée par la Direction historique du ministère des Affaires extérieures.

La suppression du système de gestion des dossiers utilisé pendant la guerre et la mise au point d'un nouveau dispositif n'auraient pas entraîné de grandes difficultés si cela n'avait coïncidé avec une augmentation considérable du nombre des nouveaux dossiers. Au cours d'une période d'expansion semblable survenue au début de la guerre, la section des archives du Ministère se trouvait dans l'impossibilité de maintenir son système annuel de classement. Ainsi, un nouveau système fut établi en 1940 et on y ajouta toute documentation subséquente et tous les nouveaux dossiers. Ce groupe de dossiers était alors connu sous le nom de série «40» avec, comme séries complémentaires, la série «s», secret, et «50,000», très secret. Ce système ne se prêtait pas à la nouvelle organisation en directions introduite au Ministère en 1944, mais la section des archives tint bon en espérant bénéficier d'un répit à la fin des hostilités. Ce ne fut pas le cas car, au contraire, elle eut encore plus de travail. Alors que par le passé un sujet pouvait être limité à un groupe de dossiers facilement identifiables, des sujets très vastes comme le désarmement et l'énergie atomique étaient dispersés dans beaucoup de classements. Les dépêches étant classées par sujet, les références aux séquences numériques avaient très peu de valeur; d'ailleurs, le renumérotage et la division ultérieurs des dossiers n'ont fait que compliquer la dispersion des séquences numériques. En 1948, le système centralisé unique a fait place à des sous-dépôts décentralisés dans chaque direction. L'utilisateur trouvera des the secret "s" series and the top secret "50,000" series. This system did not lend itself to the new divisional structure introduced into the Department in 1944 but the Records Section held on in expectation of a respite at the conclusion of hostilities. Instead of a respite, the Section acquired an even greater volume of work. Whereas in the past a single subject could be confined to an easily identifiable group of files, such broad subjects as disarmament and atomic energy were scattered throughout many groupings. Because despatches were filed by subject, references to numerical sequences had little value and subsequent renumbering and dividing of files further complicated the dispersion of the numerical sequence. By 1948 the single centralized system gave way to decentralized sub-registries for each division. In the interval covered by these documents the user will encounter the deficiencies produced by this overstrained system. A researcher may now use the Department of External Affairs' key word index to uncover the most appropriate files.

In addition to the tradition of oral communication that detracted from the files, individual officers in seeking to speed their own work and make it more effective, circumvented the less efficient central registry by maintaining working files of their own. Officials were more interested in making history than in the records of history. The number of undated or unsigned pages in the files gives evidence of this. Whether these pages represent the idle thoughts of a junior officer or approved policy is seldom evident. Since both British and American officials were in the habit of informally passing unidentifiable typed drafts of statements on Canadian policy to Canadian officials, even the origin of the document is sometimes in doubt. Unfortunately these documents have had to be omitted because of their anonymity. The diplomat who once knew has either forgotten or died.

Another major deficiency in the Records Section that has a bearing on this volume was its inability to develop a successful means of integrating post and Ottawa files for the preservation of as complete a record as possible. From the preponderance of Departmental paperwork in the files the reader might conclude that the Ambassador or High Commissioner played an insignificant role in the carrying out of policy directives. A complete set of records might confirm this but it would be speculative without the confirmation of post files. The working files of Canadian missions in London and Washington alone have been preserved with any regularity and these have been partially integrated with the other files or deposited as separate collections in the Public Archives of Canada. The few fragmentary documents from Paris and Tokyo that have found their way into the files only lead one to wonder about the rest. Ottawa was kept informed of the successful diplomatic initiatives but what has happened to the working papers of unsuccessful, diplomatically inspired initiatives, and inter-post correspondence? Canadian delegations to international conferences often deposited their working papers with the closest Canadian post. The value lacunes dues à ce système surchargé pour les périodes couvertes par ces documents. Le chercheur peut maintenant consulter le répertoire par mot-clé du ministère des Affaires extérieures pour recouvrer les dossiers les plus appropriés.

Face à l'inefficacité du dépôt central des dossiers, certains fonctionnaires, soucieux de l'efficacité de leur travail, ont gardé des dossiers individuels, une pratique qui, comme la communication verbale, ne pouvait que causer des lacunes dans les dossiers. En effet, les fonctionnaires se préoccupaient de l'histoire qu'ils faisaient, mais non des archives nécessaires aux historiens. À preuve le nombre de pages non datées ou non signées dans les dossiers. On peut rarement savoir si elles représentent les grandes idées d'un fonctionnaire subalterne ou la politique approuvée. Étant donné que les Britanniques et les Américains avaient l'habitude de transmettre aux fonctionnaires canadiens, sans protocole, des projets de déclaration non identifiables sur la politique canadienne, même l'origine des documents est parfois douteuse. Il a donc malheureusement fallu les exclure à cause de leur anonymat. Le diplomate qui en savait quelque chose a oublié ou est décédé.

Autre grande lacune de la section des archives, et qui influe sur notre ouvrage, fut son incapacité à trouver un bon moyen de regrouper les dossiers des missions et ceux d'Ottawa pour la conservation d'archives aussi complètes que possible. À voir la prépondérance de la paperasserie ministérielle dans les dossiers, le lecteur pourrait conclure que l'ambassadeur ou le haut commissaire joua un rôle insignifiant dans l'application des directives relatives à la politique. Un jeu complet de dossiers pourrait confirmer ce fait, mais la confirmation n'est pas possible sans les dossiers des missions. Seulement les dossiers des missions canadiennes à Londres et à Washington ont été conservés avec plus ou moins de régularité. Ils ont été partiellement intégrés aux autres dossiers ou déposés aux Archives publiques du Canada en tant que collections distinctes. Les dossiers des missions à Paris et à Tokyo auraient sans doute été très intéressants à en juger d'après les quelques documents fragmentaires qui ont survécu. Ottawa était tenu au fait des initiatives diplomatiques fructueuses, mais où sont passés les documents de travail antérieurs aux initiatives diplomatiques malheureuses, et la correspondance entre missions? Les délégations canadiennes aux conférences internationales déposaient souvent leurs documents de travail à la mission canadienne la plus proche. L'intérêt des dossiers de Canada House et de l'ambassade à Washington fait encore plus regretter la perte des dossiers du consulat général de New York.

L'éditeur de cet ouvrage ne prétend pas présenter ici une documentation complète sur les relations extérieures du Canada puisqu'une grande partie des matières premières nécessaires à la tâche de l'historien demeure sous clé dans des archives à l'étranger. Il faut espérer que ce volume pourra servir de point de départ à la découverte de cette documentation lorsque d'autres archives nationales et internationales suivront l'exemple du Canada et rendront leurs matériaux plus accessibles.

of the files from Canada House and the Embassy in Washington accentuates the loss of the files of the Consulate General in New York.

The editor of this volume makes no claims to presenting a complete documentary story of Canada's external relations for much of the raw material for the historian's task remains locked up in foreign archives. It is hoped that this volume can be used as a basis for discovering this documentation when other national and international archives follow Canada's more generous access policies.

Collections of documents emphasize the episodic nature of external relations. For those who wish a fuller presentation of the Department's operations the monthly External Affairs Bulletin is available in the Department's library. On policy issues the best chronology after January 29, 1946 is found in the Reports of the Weekly Meetings of the Heads of Divisions (DEA/8508-40). At each meeting the Heads reported on the main activities of their Divisions during the preceding week. These reports provide the best review of Canada's external relations.

In making his selection the editor has had access to all files and permission to include any document that did not violate the privacy of individuals or adversely affect national security by describing intelligence operations. In the final selection no document was excluded for either of these reasons. The six most obvious gaps in this record were deliberate choices made because of the type of documentation available in the files or elsewhere.

No policy-oriented or comprehensive descriptive documents could be located in External Affairs' voluminous files on the distribution abroad of information about Canada or the resumption of cultural exchange programmes. Without this kind of documentation the editor decided that there was little value in documenting the technicalities of distributing Canadian materials and culture aimed at dispelling the notion that Canada was for Mounties, wheat and pioneers. Scholars wishing to monitor these programmes are invited to immerse themselves in the appropriate files.

Regrettably it has not been possible with just the few documents included to gain a fuller appreciation of domestic concern with foreign affairs and its impact on such issues as the possible recognition of the Vatican and participation in the United Nations Economic, Scientific and Cultural Organization. From the file references contained in this volume, these avenues can be pursued in conjunction with existing records of private organizations and interested individuals, when these become available.

The absence of references to certain subjects, especially those dealing with technical matters or private individuals and business should not lead readers to the conclusion that the Government was not interested or involved in these transactions. Space alone has made it impossible to include the highly technical documentation on subjects such as radio frequencies or the registration of Canadian Bank securities in the United States.

Les collections de documents mettent l'accent sur la nature épisodique des relations extérieures. Pour ceux qui désirent une présentation plus complète des activités du Ministère, le Bulletin mensuel des Affaires extérieures est disponible à la bibliothèque du Ministère. Quant aux questions de politique, la meilleure chronologie pour la période commençant le 29 janvier 1946 se trouve dans les Rapports des réunions hebdomadaires des chefs de direction (DEA/8508-40) qui constituent la meilleure revue des relations extérieures du Canada. Chaque fois, en effet, les chefs exposaient les principales activités de leur direction la semaine précédente.

En faisant son choix, l'éditeur a eu accès à tous les dossiers et la permission d'inclure tout document qui ne viole pas l'intimité des personnes ou qui ne nuit pas à la sécurité nationale en décrivant des activités de renseignements, mais aucun document définitivement retenu n'a été exclu pour l'une ou l'autre de ces raisons. Les six omissions les plus évidentes dans cet ouvrage sont volontaires, étant donné le genre de documentation disponible dans les dossiers ou ailleurs.

Aucun document relatif à une politique ou donnant une description globale concernant la diffusion à l'étranger de renseignements sur le Canada ou sur la reprise des programmes d'échanges culturels n'a pu être trouvé dans les dossiers volumineux du Ministère. À défaut de quoi, l'éditeur a décidé que cela ne présentait pas grand intérêt de montrer de quelle façon on diffusait matériels et culture du Canada pour dissiper la croyance que le Canada était un pays défini par la Gendarmerie royale, le blé et les colons. Les spécialistes qui désirent se renseigner sur ces programmes peuvent venir se plonger dans les dossiers appropriés.

Malheureusement, il a été impossible avec les quelques documents retenus de mieux juger l'intérêt que portaient les Canadiens aux affaires étrangères et ses répercussions sur des questions comme la reconnaissance possible du Vatican et la participation à l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'éducation, la science et la culture. Ces champs peuvent être explorés en consultant les dossiers d'où proviennent les documents retenus en conjonction avec les archives d'organismes privés et des participants lorsqu'on pourra se les procurer.

L'absence de référence à certains sujets, en particulier ceux qui traitent de questions techniques, de personnes ou d'entreprises privées ne devrait pas faire croire au lecteur que le gouvernement ne s'intéressait ni ne participait à ces affaires. Seul le manque d'espace a rendu impossible l'inclusion de la documentation très technique sur des sujets comme les fréquences radio ou l'enregistrement des titres de banques canadiennes aux États-Unis.

La quatrième omission dans la documentation porte sur les relations avec certains pays qui étaient si amicales qu'en l'absence de conflits ou de changement dans les relations, les rapports des missions devinrent des guides de voyage ou des résumés de nouvelles locales. Ce genre de document est utile à l'étude de diplomates particuliers, de l'administration et des vues qui ont présidé aux recommandations de politique, mais dénué de contenu canadien,

The fourth gap in the documentation comprises relations with countries that were so amiable that, in the absence of conflict or a change in the status of the relationship, reports from the post became travelogues or condensations of local news. This type of report is helpful for the study of individual diplomats, administration and the perceptions upon which policy recommendations were made but, being devoid of Canadian content, they have little relevance for this collection. Consequently only samples of this kind of report have been included, such as the three fascinating documents revealing the trials and tribulations of one Canadian diplomat in Nanking.

The fifth deliberate omission in this volume pertains to Newfoundland. After this series began, the Department of External Affairs decided to mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the confederation of Newfoundland with Canada by undertaking the production of two volumes of documents on Canada's relations with Newfoundland in the pre-confederation period. Since both of these volumes cover the period of this volume, unnecessary duplication was avoided by excluding, except incidentally, documents relating to Newfoundland as readers would naturally wish to consult the more extensive collection.

The final category of omissions deals with documents associated with the signing of minor treaties. These include ratification procedures, submissions to Council, and the granting of full powers to sign agreements on behalf of Canada. Here the procedure is very repetitious and the texts of the treaties are readily available in the Treaty Series. Researchers wishing to follow through this aspect of treaty-making are referred to the Legal Precedents and Rulings File in the Legal Library of the Department of External Affairs.

Users of this volume are reminded of the change in attitude toward public information that occurred at this time. In pre-war years the Department and the Prime Minister did their best to cloud their activities in secrecy. The public received little more than the results of policy initiatives as recorded in the Treaty Series and Orders in Council. By 1946 and thanks to the inclinations of St. Laurent and Pearson some of the cloud cover was rolled back. Brief debates on foreign affairs in the House of Commons were permitted by the Prime Minister. The Standing Committee on External Affairs that emerged after the division of the old Standing Committee on Industrial and International Relations in the previous year was now allowed to examine the Department's operations and a selection of its policies. Weekly press briefings were inaugurated along with the publication of Statements and Speeches. There has been no attempt made to duplicate these sources in this volume but the reader is encouraged to use them in tandem.

The broader picture of Canada's external relations into which these documents must fit is found in a number of readily available sources. Of special note are the accounts written later by the actors themselves, such as Lester Pearson, Arnold Heeney, Escott Reid, Dana Wilgress, Maurice Pope, and the more numerous pieces about them. Of primary importance is the third volume of The Mackenzie King Record. In the absence of proper minutes of Cabinet meetings as opposed to records of decisions, and notes for the file il n'a pour ainsi dire pas sa place dans cette collection. Aussi, seuls des échantillons de ce genre d'écrit ont été inclus, par exemple, les trois documents passionnants qui relatent les aventures et les épreuves d'un diplomate canadien à Nanking.

La cinquième omission volontaire porte sur Terre-Neuve. Après le début de cette série, le ministère des Affaires extérieures décida de marquer le vingt-cinquième anniversaire de l'entrée de cette province dans la Confédération en publiant deux volumes de documents sur les relations du Canada avec Terre-Neuve avant son entrée dans la Confédération. Puisque ces volumes couvrent la période à l'étude, j'ai cru bon d'exclure ces documents, à de rares exceptions près, pour éliminer tout chevauchement, supposant que le lecteur consulterait naturellement la collection plus complète.

Enfin, la dernière omission concerne les documents associés à la signature de traités de moindre importance. Entre autres, cela comprend les procédures de ratification, les soumissions au Conseil et la délégation des pleins pouvoirs pour conclure des accords au nom du Canada. Les procédures sont toutes semblables et le texte des traités se trouve dans le Recueil des traités. Les personnes désireuses d'approfondir cet aspect de la signature des traités peuvent consulter le dossier Legal Precedents and Rulings qui se trouve à la bibliothèque juridique du Ministère.

Il ne faut pas oublier le changement d'attitude envers l'information du public qui survint à cette époque. Avant la guerre, le Ministère et le Premier ministre faisaient de leur mieux pour voiler leurs activités. La population ne recevait pas beaucoup plus que les résultats des initiatives politiques consignés dans le Recueil des traités et dans les décrets du Conseil. En 1946, un peu de lumière fut jetée sur ces activités grâce au caractère de MM. St. Laurent et Pearson. Le Premier ministre permit de brefs débats sur les affaires étrangères à la Chambre des communes. En outre, le Comité permanent des Affaires extérieures, créé à la suite de la division de l'ancien Comité permanent des relations industrielles et internationales l'année précédente, pouvait maintenant étudier les activités du Ministère et un certain nombre de ses politiques. On inaugura des séances d'information hebdomadaires pour la presse ainsi que la publication des Déclarations et Discours. Nous n'avons pas essayé de reproduire ces documents dans le présent ouvrage, mais le lecteur est invité à les consulter parallèlement.

On trouve le tableau plus large des relations extérieures du Canada, dans lequel ces documents doivent s'insérer, dans un certain nombre de sources à la portée de tous. Il faut mentionner les écrits ultérieurs des acteurs eux-mêmes, Lester Pearson, Arnold Heeney, Escott Reid, Dana Wilgress, Maurice Pope ainsi que les documents encore plus nombreux à leur sujet. Le troisième volume du Mackenzie King Record est d'une importance primordiale. Comme nous ne disposons que des décisions, à défaut de procès-verbaux complets des réunions du Cabinet, et des notes sur les entrevues du Premier ministre versées aux dossiers, les mémoires de Mackenzie King constituent un document indispensable à lire avec le présent ouvrage.

about the Prime Minister's interviews, King's diaries remain an indispensable source that must be read in conjunction with this volume. Also of special note are Lester B. Pearson's article "Canada Looks Down North." in the July 1946 issue of Foreign Affairs, the testimonies of officials of the Department of External Affairs before the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and the published speeches delivered before the General Assembly of the United Nations. In a Department that was not much given to philosophizing about its total objectives the reader should not be surprised at the lack of documentation thereon. The first public statement of this period on the long-term principles governing Canadian policy which comes closest to putting on paper Canada's approach to international problems was made by St. Laurent in the Duncan and John Gray Memorial Lecture at the University of Toronto on January 13, 1947. In this lecture the Minister described what was meant by Canada's policy of "constructive international action" within the context of "secondary power" manoeuvrability. "There is little point", said Mr. St. Laurent, "in a country of our stature recommending international action, if those who must carry the major burden of whatever action is taken are not in sympathy." Evaluations of the role revealed in the documents in this volume will have to be read in the context of this statement. Above all, the views of officials described in this volume will have to be read within the overall framework of the five general principles enunciated as a result of the 1946 experience:

- a) external policies must not destroy Canadian unity;
- b) external policy should be based on Canada's belief in political liberty;
- c) external policy should reflect respect for the rule of law;
- d) external policy should be based upon some conception of human values;
- e) external policy should be based upon a willingness to accept international responsibilities.

Those familiar with this series will notice the elimination from this volume of the customary list of documents containing a summary of each. This change has become necessary because of the enormous increase in the post-war documentation. When the editor had to choose between including the list or approximately two hundred important documents within the confines of a single manageable volume, he opted for the presentation of as complete a record as possible in the belief that, while users could make their own lists, they could not as readily acquire missing documents.

In addition to these reasons for the change in format, readers should be reminded that this volume was produced during a period of financial stringency. The publication of the manuscript has already been delayed for more than a year because of a lack of funds and further delays would have been necessary if a list of documents that is costly to prepare had been added to an already massive volume. It is hoped that the expanded index will somewhat alleviate the inconvenience created by this decision. Suggestions for an author

L'article de Lester B. Pearson, «Canada Looks Down North.», paru dans le numéro de juillet 1946 de Foreign Affairs, les témoignages de fonctionnaires du ministère des Affaires extérieures devant le Comité permanent des affaires extérieures de la Chambre des communes et les discours publiés qui ont été prononcés devant l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies méritent aussi une mention particulière. Dans un ministère qui n'est pas très enclin à théoriser sur ses objectifs globaux, le lecteur ne doit pas s'étonner du manque de documentation à ce sujet. La première déclaration publique de cette période sur les principes à long terme régissant la politique canadienne, qui ressemble le plus à un énoncé écrit de l'approche du Canada vis-à-vis des problèmes internationaux, a été faite par M. St. Laurent à la Conférence commémorative Duncan et John Gray, à l'Université de Toronto le 13 janvier 1947. Le Ministre a décrit ce que signifiait la politique canadienne de mesures internationales constructives dans le contexte de la maniabilité d'une puissance secondaire. M. St. Laurent a déclaré: «There is little point in a country of our stature recommending international action, if those who must carry the major burden of whatever action is taken are not in sympathy.» L'évaluation du rôle du Canada, qui paraît dans les documents inclus dans le présent ouvrage, doit être lue à la lumière de cette déclaration. Mais avant tout, il faut replacer les opinions des fonctionnaires données ici dans le cadre très large des cinq principes généraux formulés à la suite de l'expérience de 1946:

- a) la politique extérieure ne doit pas détruire l'unité canadienne;
- b) la politique extérieure doit reposer sur la croyance du Canada en la liberté politique;
- c) la politique extérieure doit refléter le respect de la suprématie de la loi;
- d) la politique extérieure doit être fondée sur une certaine conception des valeurs humaines;
- e) la politique extérieure doit reposer sur le désir d'accepter des responsabilités internationales.

Les personnes qui connaissent cette série de volumes remarqueront la suppression ici de la liste habituelle des documents avec des résumés de chaque document. Cette modification s'est révélée nécessaire étant donné l'augmentation faramineuse de la documentation d'après-guerre. Entre inclure la liste, ou environ 200 documents importants dans les limites d'un seul ouvrage maniable, l'éditeur a choisi de présenter un dossier aussi complet que possible en pensant que le lecteur pourrait plus facilement établir sa propre liste que se procurer des documents manquants.

En outre, on rappelle que ce volume a été produit en période de restrictions budgétaires. La publication du manuscrit a déjà été retardée plus d'un an par manque de fonds et il aurait fallu des retards supplémentaires si une liste des documents, très coûteuse à préparer, avait été ajoutée à un ouvrage déjà volumineux. Il est à espérer que l'index plus complet compensera un index have not been acted upon because, unlike the period covered by the preceding volumes, the decision-making process had become so diffuse as to make such an index meaningless. On the majority of issues the imprint of the Under-Secretary was in initialling the memorandum, draft, or telegram and occasional marginal notations that have in any case been reproduced along with the document.

Users of this volume will find their task easier if they keep in mind some of the basic editorial practices followed in reproducing the documents. When more than one copy or draft of the same document was available the editor, after whatever verification was possible, selected for reproduction the most authentic and complete text that appeared to have been used in briefings, negotiations and the final decision-making process. All documents appear in their original language. Normal variations in spelling have not been altered but typographical errors and mistakes in the spelling of proper names and places have been corrected. Additions to the original text have been set off by square brackets while omissions are indicated by suspension points (. . .). In the instances where only portions of a document are reproduced, the word "Extracts" appears in the caption. In the case of long documents such as commentaries or reports, the pages from which the extracts are taken are indicated at the end of each extract. Asterisks in the text refer the reader to footnotes found in the original document while editorial footnotes are numbered. A dagger (†) appearing at the end of a reference to a document (e.g., My ATOM 84†, Telegram 35 of July 8†) indicates that the document in question is not printed in this volume. Since the selection of documents for the volumes covering the 1944-1945 period had not been finalized when this volume was ready for publication, it was not possible to provide footnote references to these volumes when documents of this period are referred to in the documents printed herein.

In order to save space and avoid unnecessary repetitions, standard shortened forms of captions have been used in certain cases. Captions for documents originating in or addressed to officers within a Division of the Department of External Affairs identify the division while omitting the name of the Department. The officers of each Division are listed in the organization chart of the headquarters of the Department inside the front cover. Captions for documents originating with or addressed to the Canadian delegations to the first session of the General Assembly of the United Nations also use a shortened form throughout the volume (Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations) even though Canada was represented by different delegations at the two parts of the first session. The date of the document indicates to which part of the session the document belongs and a list of the members of the two delegations is appended for easy reference (see Appendix A). Members of Canadian delegations to other international meetings of 1946 are listed in the Annual Report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for 1946. It should be noted that Canadian delegations at conferences abroad used the services of the nearest Canadian post to send and receive telegrams; therepeu les désagréments entraînés par cette décision. On n'a pas donné suite aux suggestions en faveur d'un index des auteurs, car contrairement à la période couverte par les volumes antérieurs, la prise de décisions était devenue si diffuse que l'index n'aurait servi à rien. Sur la majorité des questions, le sous-secrétaire s'est contenté de parapher les mémorandums, projets ou télégrammes et, à l'occasion, de faire une inscription en marge qui a été reproduite avec le document concerné.

La tâche du lecteur sera plus facile s'il se rappelle quelques-unes des pratiques de base utilisées dans la reproduction des documents. Lorsqu'il existait plusieurs copies ou projets du même document, on a choisi de reproduire, après les vérifications nécessaires, le texte le plus authentique et le plus complet qui semble avoir été utilisé lors des séances d'information, des négociations et de la prise de décision finale. Tous les documents sont publiés dans la langue originale. Les variations normales d'orthographe n'ont pas été modifiées mais les erreurs typographiques et les erreurs d'orthographe des noms propres et des lieux ont été corrigées. Les additions au texte original ont été mises entre crochets et les omissions sont indiquées par des points de suspension (...). Dans les cas où seulement des parties d'un document sont reproduites, le mot «Extraits» figure dans l'en-tête. Lorsqu'il s'agit de longs documents comme des commentaires ou des rapports, les pages d'où sont tirés les extraits sont indiquées à la fin de chacun. Les astérisques dans le texte renvoient le lecteur aux notes du document original, tandis que les notes rédactionnelles sont numérotées. Un dague (†) à la fin d'une référence à un document (par exemple, My ATOM 84†, Telegram 35 of July 8†) indique que le document n'est pas reproduit dans ce volume. La sélection des documents pour les volumes consacrés à la période 1944-1945 n'étant pas achevée au moment de la publication de ce volume, le lecteur ne trouvera pas de renvois à ces volumes lorsque des documents de cette période sont mentionnés dans les documents reproduits ici.

Pour gagner de l'espace et éliminer toute répétition inutile, on a utilisé dans certains cas des titres normalisés plus courts. On a identifié la direction sans citer le nom du Ministère dans les en-têtes des documents qui proviennent d'une direction du ministère des Affaires extérieures ou y sont adressés. On trouvera dans l'organigramme de l'administration centrale du Ministère au début du volume une liste des personnes faisant partie des différentes directions. Les en-têtes des documents en provenance ou à destination des délégations du Canada à la première session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies sont raccourcis ainsi, délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, bien que le Canada ait été représenté par des délégations différentes aux deux parties de la première session. La date du document devrait suffire pour indiquer la partie de la session en question et on a annexé la liste des membres des deux délégations pour consultation (voir Appendice A). Les membres des délégations canadiennes qui ont participé aux autres réunions internationales de 1946 sont indiqués dans le Rapport annuel du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures de 1946. On doit noter que les délégations fore, captions for these telegrams contain the title of the senior representative at the post (e.g., Ambassador in France). Delegation telegrams were identified by abbreviations of the name of the delegation, conference, or organization involved (e.g., ATOM, ASDEL) followed by the number of the message. These identifying abbreviations, usually found in the first line of the text of the document are explained in Appendix B.

The key to the location of a document, a location symbol followed by a volume or file number or both, is found in the upper right-hand corner of each document. The location symbols for personal papers are made up from the initials of the person (e.g., W.L.M.K., C.D.H.) while those for departmental files use initials based on the English spelling of the Department's name (e.g., DEA, DND). A full explanation of the symbols is found in the list "Location of Documents". Enclosures are from the same source as the main document unless otherwise indicated.

There are a number of individuals whom the editor wishes particularly to acknowledge for their assistance on various aspects of the work. Foremost is the Director of the Historical Division, Arthur Blanchette, who put at the editor's disposal a number of means for overcoming difficulties in production. In initially selecting the documents from the files he is indebted to the work of his research assistant, Douglas Waldie, whose perception of the task made it so much easier. On his second research assistant, Michel Rossignol, fell much of the burden of preparing the documents for the printer. His linguistic skills and meticulous attention to detail were invaluable assets. In addition there have been the staffs at the Department of National Defence, the Privy Council Office and the Public Archives who guided me through indexes to the files required and individuals who kindly granted me access to the fourteen collections of private papers under their jurisdiction and who gave their permission for the publication of the documents selected. Finally I remain grateful for the pioneering work done by my predecessors in this series, who made themselves available for consultation. While acknowledging the assistance provided by the above, I remain fully responsible for the selecting and editing of each document.

canadiennes aux conférences à l'étranger utilisaient les services de la mission canadienne la plus proche pour envoyer et recevoir des télégrammes; en conséquence, les en-têtes de ces derniers renferment le titre du plus haut représentant de la mission (par exemple, ambassadeur en France). Les télégrammes envoyés par une délégation étaient identifiés par l'abréviation du nom de la délégation, de la conférence ou de l'organisme en question (par exemple, ATOM, ASDEL) suivie du numéro du message. Ces abréviations, qui se trouvent ordinairement dans la première ligne du texte du document, sont expliquées dans l'Appendice B.

On trouvera dans le coin supérieur droit de chaque document toutes les indications concernant l'endroit où il se trouve: symbole de provenance suivi du numéro du volume ou du dossier, ou les deux. Les symboles de provenance de documents personnels sont formés des initiales de la personne (par exemple, W.L.M.K., C.D.H.), tandis que ceux des dossiers ministériels comportent des initiales représentant la désignation anglaise du ministère (par exemple, DEA, DND). On trouvera dans la liste «Provenance des documents» une explication de tous les symboles. Les pièces jointes sont tirées de la même source que le document principal, sauf indication contraire.

Je désire remercier tout particulièrement un certain nombre de personnes pour l'aide qu'elles ont apportée à divers aspects du travail. En premier lieu, M. Arthur Blanchette, directeur de la Direction historique, qui a mis à ma disposition un certain nombre de moyens pour surmonter des difficultés de production. Ensuite, M. Douglas Waldie, mon adjoint à la recherche, dont la compréhension du travail a beaucoup facilité le choix initial des documents. M. Michel Rossignol, second adjoint à la recherche, s'est occupé de la majeure partie de la préparation des documents en vue de la publication. Ses aptitudes linguistiques et son attention méticuleuse pour le détail ont été des éléments précieux. De plus, je remercie les employés du ministère de la Défense nationale, du Bureau du Conseil privé et des Archives publiques qui m'ont aidé à trouver dans les index les dossiers nécessaires, ainsi que les personnes qui ont bien voulu me laisser consulter les quatorze collections de documents privés sous leur garde et qui ont consenti à la publication des documents choisis. En dernier lieu, je suis reconnaissant à mes prédécesseurs dans cette série du travail original qu'ils ont accompli et des consultations qu'ils ont bien voulu m'accorder. Tout en reconnaissant leur aide, je demeure toutefois entièrement responsable de la sélection et de la présentation de chacun des documents reproduits dans cet ouvrage.

La politique étrangère du Canada fut élaborée en grande partie dans cet édifice, l'Édifice de l'Est des Édifices du Parlement, où se trouvaient les bureaux du Premier ministre et du ministère des Affaires extérieures et où le Cabinet se réunissait.

Canadian foreign policy was developed in large part in this building, the East Block of the Parliament Buildings, which housed the offices of the Prime Minister and of the Department of External Affairs and in which the Cabinet held its meetings.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] May 8, 1946

ORGANIZATION OF THE UNDER-SECRETARY'S OFFICE

While you are away from Ottawa you may be able to consider, with greater detachment than is possible here, what can be done to reduce the extreme congestion in the direction of the Department. The appointment of a separate Secretary of State for External Affairs is necessary before a number of the most desirable changes can be made, but we have reached a position in which other changes not connected with such an appointment ought to be instituted.

Among the first essentials is a firm resolution on your own part, which must be backed by the efforts of your personal staff, to prevent the accumulation in your office of papers which are awaiting an opportunity that often cannot arise for you to examine them. I should like to see the whole apparatus of baskets filled with waiting papers swept away and the office adorned with no more paper than that which you require for the work immediately in hand. A mere resolution on your part will, of course, not achieve this end without changes in practice, which must, if they are to succeed, be applied consistently and even ruthlessly.

The first needed change in practice is that a great deal of paper that is now routed through your office should not be so routed. This means that there will have to be a much more rigorous selection from the reports reaching the Department of the material sent to you only for information. It also means that you should not attempt to follow a number of Departmental activities, except when they give rise to questions of some substance.

In order to enable you to find time to deal with matters which are the essential concern of the Under-Secretary, some change should be made to reduce constant interruptions. I find these the most trying aspect of work in Ottawa; it is usually difficult to concentrate on one matter for more than a few minutes, and interruptions often occur at the most inconvenient moment. This will mean the deflection of many visitors, including members of the department, to other officers, and it will also mean rendering yourself less accessible on the telephone. On the latter point I would suggest a stringent rule that when you are conferring with other people in your office or dictating your telephone should be shut off except in specially urgent matters, as the constant succession of telephone calls not only makes discussion or dictation difficult but wastes the time of those with you. The British practice of passing telephone calls to a senior official only through a private secretary who can act as a filter might be instituted here.

The administrative problems of the Department must also be filtered more thoroughly before they reach you for decision. The barriers between the Under-Secretary and individual members of the Department and Service should be made more formidable. When Matthews returns this situation will improve, but changes in system are needed to diffuse responsibility for promotions, transfers and so on, and to prevent your office being used as the repository of numerous individual claims and grievances.

Any changes in method will have to be rigorously applied, as otherwise we shall just slip back into the present confusion. It is thoroughly bad policy to permit a position to arise in which the permanent headship of the Department is a killing post. With the current and prospective extent of our activities, the only way in which the post can be made tolerable is for the holder to achieve a greater remoteness from the daily demands, pressures and worries which are inevitable in the conduct of the foreign policy of a country as large as Canada. This remoteness can only be established by delegation to others, so that there is an effective and constant separation between the matters really requiring the Under-Secretary's attention and those which can be conducted without contact with him. I am sure that one of the first objectives is to diminish to modest proportions the flow of paper which now engulfs him.

The general conclusion of this note is that the Under-Secretary must be more effectively sheltered from the approaches of all and sundry, whether these approaches are made in person, by telephone or in writing. A system which will relieve the pressure on his time so as to enable him to devote sufficient attention to central problems can only be developed over a considerable period and can never be complete. We have, I think, gone some distance towards the acceptance of a more reasonable order of priorities in departmental business, but there is still a long way to go. The appointment of a full-time Minister would be of substantial assistance here. In addition, however, the Department and establishments abroad are now large enough to require the interposition between the Under-Secretary and the Chiefs of Division of three or four senior officials, each of whom would supervise the activities of two or more divisions. When this can be done, most of the matters reaching the Under-Secretary should do so through a Deputy or Assistant Under-Secretary rather than direct from Divisional chiefs or other officers. Our personnel problems, of course, prevent the selection of suitable officers for all of these posts in the near future.

A step which might be possible almost at once is to appoint as personal assistant or private secretary to the Under-Secretary an officer of higher rank who would be in direct charge of the Under-Secretary's office and who would have some authority to regulate the flow of business reaching the Under-Secretary personally and to direct the other members of the office. In rank such an officer should perhaps be a First Secretary. He should have if possible a room to himself. He should see the incoming telegrams and should be present at many of the discussions in the Under-Secretary's office so that he could make a note of the outcome. The post should be regarded as about on a parity in importance with that of a chief of division.

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PRIVATE AND PERSONAL

[Ottawa,] June 13, 1946

In thinking about our conversation last night, it has seemed to me that the problem of filling the senior posts in the External Affairs Service really turns upon the arrangements decided upon for the ordering of the Department itself.

2. In respect of internal administration and establishment, our Department has grown to a size which probably requires the direction of a Departmental Minister. The total personnel in Ottawa and abroad is about 350, compared with 100 before the war. We now have 22 posts abroad as against 6 in 1939, and the total expenditures for which the Department is responsible to Parliament will be of the order of $5,000,000 this year. In numerical strength the Department is small in comparison with many departments in Ottawa, but it has a highly qualified and highly classified personnel, with proportionately, and perhaps absolutely, many more people in the upper salary brackets than any other department of Government. Problems of recruitment, promotion and transfer are important and delicate. They all involve a large degree of departmental initiative and Ministerial responsibility. In addition to these continuing questions, we now have to face, from pretty nearly every post abroad, the problem of securing suitable office and living accommodation for our representatives. In most cases, considerations of wisdom and economy argue in favour of the Government purchasing and furnishing the required properties. The responsibility for the innumerable administrative decisions arising out of this side of our business, is becoming pretty heavy and it will be increasingly difficult for a Prime Minister to give them the consideration they require before submission to Treasury Board or to Parliament, as the case may be.

3. On the other hand, considerations of general policy argue pretty strongly for continuing to combine the posts of Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs. The central link in the system of Commonwealth consultation is the provision for direct exchanges of views between the Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth countries, and major policy questions would continue to be handled in this way, regardless of whether we had a separate departmental Minister. Similarly, the established medium for direct personal consultations between the Governments of Commonwealth countries is the meeting of Prime Ministers, not a meeting between the Dominions Secretary and Ministers for External Affairs. These conventions imply that the Prime Minister would have to supervise, very closely, the general conduct of external relations, even though he were assisted by a separate departmental Minister.

4. More or less similar considerations affect the handling of our diplomatic relations with the United States, where the major questions of policy have been handled for the United States by the President rather than by the Secretary of State, though the latter is the responsible administrative head of his department and of the diplomatic service, and is responsible for implementing major policy decisions which may have been negotiated by the President. (Cf., the Ogdensburg Agreement leading to the establishment of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the Hyde Park Declaration governing financial cooperation between our two countries, and the Washington Declaration on Atomic Energy.) Regardless of whether you decided to appoint a departmental Minister, the general character of Canadian-United States relations would continue, I think, to be the inescapable responsibility of the Prime Minister and the President.

5. A third peculiarly Canadian consideration is that the people and Parliament expect you to take a direct and major part in Canadian participation in getting the United Nations established and in the negotiation of the treaties of peace. This is a practical political commitment, which played an important part in deciding the outcome of the last general election, and should be given a good deal of weight in determining to what extent you can delegate responsibilities in the foreign affairs field which now rest upon you as Prime Minister.

6. The problem, as I see it, is to find a practicable arrangement which takes into due account the desirability of such administrative devolution as is indicated in para. 2, and the necessity of the Prime Minister being in a position to fulfill the special responsibilities in the field of foreign affairs referred to in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5. It would probably be difficult to work out this kind of division of the field if a very senior Minister was appointed Secretary of State for External Affairs. If one of the abler, younger men were appointed to the post, these very limitations upon his responsibilities would facilitate the gradual development of a separate Ministerial Department of External Affairs without interfering, in any way, with the continuity of the main lines of Canadian policy. The load taken from your shoulders should be considerable, but it would not, in itself, be a full load for a first class man. A man becoming Secretary of State for External Affairs under these conditions should, therefore be available not only to carry a certain amount of Canadian representation at international conferences, but should also be able to carry a larger share of the general policy work of the Government than the head of a big administrative department could be expected to do.

SECRET AND PERSONAL

In present circumstances, our representation in Washington and London will probably depend on the decisions you take regarding the senior organization of the Department in Ottawa. If it should be decided to appoint a Minister, then I think Wrong or I could be assigned abroad, or both of us if it were thought desirable to bring Pearson back as Under-Secretary. Having in mind the job of work that has to be done in London during the next year or two, I am inclined to think that one of us three should be assigned there.

I have been thinking about the possibility of Wilgress for London, but feel that his best qualities are not those specially needed there now. He has shown himself in Moscow to be a wise and shrewd observer, and a first-class diplomatic reporter of conditions and attitudes of mind. In general, he is more effective on paper than in conversation. This would, I think, be a draw-back in London, where the urgent need is to have the general Canadian position in relation to the United Kingdom, the rest of the Commonwealth and the United States more clearly understood in policy making circles than it is now. On the other hand, if Pearson were to be sent to London and Wrong and I retained in Ottawa, then I think Wilgress should be considered as a possible replacement of Pearson in Washington.

(Some two or three months ago I wrote privately to Wilgress,† asking him what his personal preferences about future employment would be, on the assumption that a three-year term in Moscow was about as long as anybody could be expected to stay under present conditions. I have not a copy of his reply† with me, but my recollection is that his first choice would be that of Canadian representative to the United Nations, if such a post were necessary, and secondly he would like to succeed Odlum in China).

DIVISIONAL ORGANIZATION

For two reasons it is necessary to make some change in the organization of divisions. One reason is the reporting for duty here of additional officers of Counsellor rank—Kirkwood, Chance, possibly Macgillivray, and Magann—for temporary duty. All of these would normally become Chiefs of Division once they have learned more about the departmental machinery. The other and continuing reason is the change in the character of the work.

The Legal Division can be left as it is and so can the Economic Division, although I would hope that a Deputy or Assistant Under-Secretary could be found before long to take special responsibility in the economic field. The two Political Divisions which are geographical in character could be expanded to three, although there is no very convenient way of dividing the world into three parts. The Second Political Division is probably the largest in the department, but I do not think it would be easy to cut off the British Commonwealth from Europe by dividing it in two.

The First Political Division has no clearly defined field of work, but I believe that the idea of concentrating responsibility in one division for dealing with questions of international organization is a sound one. It may be best to expand this division on the assumption that at any one time a considerable proportion of its staff is likely to be serving on delegations at conferences. We have to draw on officers of the division for conference work altogether too heavily, with the result that what is left in Ottawa tends to become too small to carry on the necessary work.

Defence questions are going to consume a good deal of departmental energy and activity. Their consideration is now centred in the Under-Secretary's office. He attends meetings of the Chiefs of Staff from time to time and also attends the Cabinet Defence Committee, and this is a responsibility that he cannot normally delegate to another officer. Macdonnell is the other officer principally concerned with defence questions, arising out of his position as Secretary of the Canadian Section of the P.J.D.B. I suggest that you should discuss the whole problem of the handling of defence matters with Heeney. I do not see how they can be concentrated in a single division and yet it appears to me that they should receive more time and thought than is now given to them. When defence relations with the United Kingdom are under consideration they are handled in part by Reid and officers of his division, and I am a little concerned to ensure that we keep constantly in step.

If, as I expect, Beaudry is unable to return to duty, or will have to be absent for a long time, the opportunity is a good one to re-organize the Diplomatic Division. I think that there is a natural line of cleavage between the aspects of its functions which relate to ceremonials, protocol, hospitality and so on, and those concerned with passports, visas, travel and related questions. I am not sure where responsibility ought to be placed for immigration matters. Both Robertson and I have taken a hand in this and have used Riddell as the principal expert. This is because Riddell has a very extensive knowledge of the subject, on which he worked before he joined the department, and has full information on current refugee problems. He would like to continue to be involved in immigration matters. Chance might also be useful in this connection. The Under-Secretary is expected to act as the chairman of an inter-departmental committee on immigration, which ought to hold meetings about once a month. I have also regularly attended the infrequent meetings of the Cabinet Committee on this subject. It is a matter with which, like defence, the department will be increasingly concerned, especially until the Immigration Branch is strengthened.

The Information Division has a rather vague field and a somewhat misleading title. It nevertheless conducts a large amount of correspondence which does not fall within the area of any other division. It might be best to attach it directly to the Under-Secretary's office and to use its Chief as the principal assistant of the Under-Secretary, but I am not sure of this. I think that UNESCO will consume a good deal of departmental time and energy and it is important from your point of view that this should be directed by a fairly senior person of very sound judgment since activities of this nature touch many agencies in Canada with which we do not normally have much to do. I feel that you should give consideration to the problems of this division fairly soon. The question of C.I.S. I shall deal with in a separate note.

The Passport Office has already undergone some re-organization, but this has only just begun. A departmental committee under Wershof is revising passport regulations and procedures in order to fit the terms of the Citizenship Act. This is a matter of high urgency as everything must be approved in time to reach our Missions abroad before the Act comes into effect on January 1, 1947. That is a separate question, however, from the normal administration of the Passport Office and I think we should take action on the general lines of the recommendations made by Sivertz. If any satisfactory solution of the space problem comes into sight it ought to include the physical integration of the Passport Office with the department so as to permit closer supervision. Without this, however, I favour the appointment of a Chief of a Passport Division or Passport and Visa Division, who would have more time and greater responsibility for passport matters.

I am sure that the objective should be to interpose two or three senior officers between the Under-Secretary and Chiefs of Division, who would be responsible for supervising groups of divisions and would be the principal advisers of the Under-Secretary. I think it also important that the Minister should, on certain questions, deal directly with Chiefs of Division and not always through the Under-Secretary and I am sure Mr. St. Laurent would fall in with this. This would mean some saving in the Under-Secretary's time until we are in a position to strengthen the higher direction of the department.

PROPOSAL TO APPOINT CIVIL AIR ATTACHÉS
AT CANADIAN MISSIONS ABROAD

I do not think there is much to be said for this proposal at the present time. Present experience with civil air matters indicates that this work can be handled satisfactorily by a Foreign Service officer on the staff of our Missions, and so far as I know at no Mission is it a full-time job, or approximately so.

Even in Ottawa, this work is now handled very satisfactorily by one officer, Mr. Kidd, and he has some time for other work in the Division.

Moreover, the tendency of some Foreign Services to appoint specialized attachés for each newly recognized functional field of foreign work should, I think, not be adopted by Canada unless there are very special reasons to justify it in a particular case. The Service attachés are traditional exceptions of long standing and for them attaché status is often necessary for the appropriate local contacts and local standing. Similarly, exceptions may be useful in a few very important posts for Information Officers. But, in general, it is surely preferable to have Foreign Service officers of sufficient versatility and breadth of interest to handle the type of work envisaged in proposals for Civil Air Attachés, Labour Attachés, etc., etc. Civil air matters in particular are of such importance, or may become of such importance, in foreign relations that I should expect they would be one of the last fields to be devolved onto Special Attachés. Quite different considerations might apply with respect to the appointment, for example, of an agricultural economist as an Attaché at such posts as Moscow and Copenhagen: the qualifications needed for agricultural intelligence work are highly specialized, and the bearing on political foreign policy questions relatively remote.

To the extent, however, that civil aviation work in London, Washington, possibly Canberra, and perhaps some South American Mission, is becoming increasingly important, it may become necessary, in due course, to make some arrangements. It may, for example, become desirable that one of the Secretaries at London and Washington should have had experience at the civil air desk in the Department; and that one of the Secretaries at certain other Missions should spend a few days or weeks, either before his appointment or during leave in Canada, working with the officer in Ottawa handling civil aviation, to get a clear overall picture of Canadian air policy and the method of handling civil air matters among the various government departments and agencies in Ottawa.<sup>1</sup>

Secretary's office, with its Chief acting as the principal assistant to the Under-Secretary. Whether this would work would depend on the choice of an individual and on thinking over the probable field of operations of the Information Division it occurs to me that there are other difficulties. One of the most intricate matters with which the Department will have to deal, relates to the operations of UNESCO. It has already given rise to a considerable volume of correspondence with organizations in Canada with which we normally do not do business. These organizations are unfamiliar with the operations of government and are sure constantly to advance impracticable proposals.

I do not see any alternative to assuming central responsibilities in this Department. C.I.S. or, at any rate, Andrew,<sup>1</sup> personally, has longings to be the main Government Agency in UNESCO affairs, but I see a lot of trouble if that is done which would further complicate our already difficult relations with C.I.S. We are going to need to vest responsibility inside the Department in a good man who can be realistic, tactful and imaginative, otherwise you will find yourself in the unwelcome position of constantly having to say no to proposals which may have reached the stage of half-commitments.

In short, UNESCO makes it necessary for us to operate in the cultural relations field more comprehensively than we had hitherto contemplated and I am afraid that it will consume a great deal of time and energy. Côté will be able to give you a first-hand report of the difficulties in the temporary Advisory Committee.<sup>2</sup> As a sample, after I had told them, in opening the meeting, that I thought the Government would not appoint a delegation of more than 8 or 10 all told, and after Dr. Wallace<sup>3</sup> had agreed that this was necessary, the representative of the Canadian Arts Council made the suggestion that his organization alone should be represented at the Paris Conference by two delegates and some twenty advisers. The domestic organizations in these fields naturally tend to think of UNESCO as a means whereby they can establish far-reaching international contacts under the aegis of the Government and, in part, at its expense.

I have never been happy about the way in which UNESCO was created and I have long thought it would have been better either to merge these international activities in the operations of the United Nations itself or to wait for three or four years before trying to embark on the creation of a specialized agency.

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au sous-ministre de la Défense nationale (armée)

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of National Defence (Army)

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 14, 1946

1. I am very glad to learn from your letter of May 2nd† that your department has been considering a readjustment of the arrangements concerning the appointment, training, duties and administration of Canadian Military Attachés in order to bring our procedures in line with British and United States practice and to ensure that your department obtains full value from the appointments. We have also in this Department been giving some thought to the matter and I agree that the present is a suitable time to clarify the position of Military Attachés. It would also be useful if, at the same time, we could clarify the position of Naval and Air attachés.

2. It would perhaps be convenient if I were to comment in turn on the various points raised in your letter.

Appointment

3. I agree that it is for the Minister of National Defence, on recommendation of the Chief of the General Staff, to take responsibility for nominating Military Attachés from among officers with suitable qualifications and training. A continuance of the present practice under which this Department has an opportunity to comment informally on the proposed nominee before the name is put forward formally for approval by the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be agreeable to us.

4. I understand that United Kingdom practice is to appoint as Military Attachés young officers with Staff College training chosen for their abilities and possessing wide battle experience in the recent war and to promote them on a local basis to whatever rank may be desirable.

5. I am glad that you intend to ensure that each Military Attaché, before proceeding to his post, is given appropriate training including language training. We should be glad to make some arrangement whereby Service Attachés could be attached to this Department for instruction and for the purpose of getting background information.

Terms of Reference

6. During the war it was almost inevitable that the Service Attachés at our Missions should find themselves involved in certain tasks which are normally performed by the diplomatic staff of a Mission. We are very grateful for the assistance which the Service Attachés have, during the war, rendered to our Missions but we agree that the time has now come to define more precisely than hitherto the functions of Service Attachés.

7. As I understand it the purpose in sending a Military Attaché to one of our Missions is to give the Canadian Government a direct source of information concerning the organization, progress and value of the military forces and military resources of the country to which the Military Attaché is accredited. Any other duties of a social or ceremonial character which a Military Attaché might perform are of secondary importance.

8. Up to the present a Military Attaché on appointment has received a letter of appointment from this Department. He has not, so far as I know received a detailed set of general instructions from your department. While I think that a number of changes might usefully be made in the letter of appointment from this Department, what is essential, it seems to me, is that the letter of appointment be supplemented by a detailed set of instructions similar to the United Kingdom's "War Office Instructions for Military Attachés" and the similar United Kingdom instructions for Air and Naval Attachés.

9. Our experience in dealing with political and economic reports from our Missions abroad is that one essential factor in securing first-class reports is guidance and direction from Ottawa on the nature of the reports which are desired. Letters of appointment and printed "instructions" are useful but they require to be supplemented by requests for reports on specific subjects and by comments on reports received. We have found that the standard of work of an external affairs officer stationed abroad improves when he sees evidence that his work is being given careful, even critical, evaluation by the Department in Ottawa. My impression is that the success of the United Kingdom system depends in very large part on the efficiency and organization of the three Intelligence Directorates in London.

10. In the letter of appointment and in the supplementary "instructions", I think we would be wise to follow closely the United Kingdom practice under which the Service Attaché submits formal reports to his Ambassador on all subjects which are important and writes memoranda on less important matters. (The United Kingdom practice is to call these formal reports "despatches" but this term is somewhat confusing and we might perhaps agree to use the term, "report"). Under the United Kingdom system the Military Attaché's reports would be sent by the Ambassador, possibly with comment, to us and would be transmitted by us to the Chief of the General Staff with any comments which seem to us called for. To save time a copy of the report could also go direct from the Military Attaché to the Chief of the General Staff. The formal reports of a Service Attaché would be supplemented by memoranda which he would send direct to the Chief of the General Staff. Under United Kingdom rules the memoranda are written on “less important matters such as minor changes in the organization, tactics, equipment and training of the army as well as on technical and topographical matters” and on “all questions of pay, allowances, administration and interior economy of the appointment”.

11. It is, as you say, essential that a Military Attaché should keep himself fully informed on economic conditions and political happenings in the country where he is stationed. Without such knowledge he cannot properly carry out his duty of interpreting the military efficiency and readiness for war of the country, its preparation for industrial mobilization and the trend of its military thought. It is therefore important that a Military Attaché should keep in close touch with the political and economic officers of the Mission in order that there should be the maximum exchange of information and opinion on these subjects. But I suggest that there would be danger in giving Military Attachés a broad instruction to report to the Chief of the General Staff on economic conditions and political happenings even if this were limited to reports written from the military point of view. Isn't it rather that in his reports on military matters the Military Attaché should take into account the relevant economic and political factors?

Precedence

12. I believe that the general practice is for Service Attachés to rank immediately after the diplomatic Counsellor where there is one or after the First Secretary in Missions where there is no Counsellor.

Communications

13. The United Kingdom distinction which I mentioned above between reports and memoranda would seem to cover this point.

Accommodation and Staff

14. This is a matter for National Defence to decide. I would, however, point out that the only diplomatic officer who is provided with a car is the Ambassador or Minister. Counsellors, who rank before Service Attachés, have to provide their own cars. Perhaps also as long as there is a Military Mission in Washington, the Attaché there will not need a car.

15. I suggest that it would be useful if the whole question of the future organization of the work of Military, Naval and Air Attachés were discussed at an early meeting of the Chiefs of Staff Committee. I would be happy to take part in that discussion. In addition to discussing the questions raised in your letter of May 2nd I would be interested in having an indication of the posts to which the various Chiefs of Staff think that Attachés from their respective services might be sent. Perhaps the Chiefs of Staff Committee, following this discussion, might ask the Joint Intelligence Committee to draw up a revised letter of appointment and a detailed set of instructions for Service Attachés. It might prove possible to draw up a set of instructions which would be uniform for military, naval and air attachés.

16. I am informed by Canada House that the entire question of instructions and pay and allowances for United Kingdom naval, military and air attachés is under review at the present moment, and that the members of the interservice committee dealing with this matter, anticipate that revised regulations will be issued within three months.

I have the honour to enclose the new instructions to be issued by the Department of National Defence for Naval, Military and Air Attachés. These instructions have been agreed by the Chiefs of Staff and this Department. I also enclose a copy of the new letter of Appointment of Service Attachés† which has been similarly agreed. Attachés who already hold a Letter of Appointment will not, however, have one of the new letters issued to them.

The Department of National Defence will shortly issue copies of the new instructions to the various Service Attachés.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Instructions for Naval, Military and Air Attachés

SECTION I—GENERAL

1. Naval, Military and Air Attachés occupy a dual position and have a dual responsibility. They are representatives in a foreign country of their respective Services, and they form part of the Canadian Diplomatic Mission in the country concerned. They must at all times bear this dual nature of their duties in mind. While performing their duties on behalf of the Department of National Defence, they are nevertheless under the general supervision of the Canadian Chief of Mission as far as the manner of execution of their duties is concerned. The attaché is thus responsible to his own Chief of Staff for the acquisition of Naval, Military or Air information and, at the same time, to the Chief of the Mission to whom he will act as advisor on affairs concerning the corresponding service in the foreign country to which he is accredited.

2. Naval, Military and Air Attachés must act with the greatest circumspection in order to avoid any suspicion that they are endeavouring to secure secret information through illicit means. Attachés must have no relations whatever with persons acting or professing to act as spies or secret agents.

SECTION II—DUTIES IN RELATION TO THE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

3. Naval, Military and Air Attachés, except where other provision is made i.e. Washington and London, are the principal sources for the Canadian Government and for their own Service of information on the potential effectiveness for war of the corresponding service of the country to which they are accredited.

4. An Attaché will, therefore, cultivate as close relations as possible with the corresponding service and with any other persons or organizations which may assist him in acquiring information, subject to the instructions in para 2.

5. An Attaché will take every opportunity of visiting installations, training establishments, demonstrations, manoeuvres and exercises to ascertain for himself the standard of equipment and training which prevails in the corresponding service.

6. Should the foreign country have forces engaged in operations, an attaché must endeavour to visit such forces. Permission of the Chief of Mission will be obtained before application is made to the authorities of the foreign government for permission to make such visits.

7. An Attaché will extend his field of interest to include scientific experiments and inventions, and the development of new weapons and equipment.

8. It is essential that an attaché should keep himself fully informed on economic conditions and political developments in order to report adequately in his field. A comprehensive appreciation of the foreign country's readiness for war must take account of political stability and industrial strength. Close association with the officials of the Mission concerned with political and economic matters should therefore be maintained.

9. As the local representative of his own Service, an attaché is responsible for the service discipline of all members of his Service travelling in the foreign country. An attaché will assist all such visitors, in matters pertaining to his service, without encroaching upon the proper sphere of duty of Diplomatic, Consular or other officials.

10. An attaché is himself responsible in matters of service discipline to his Chief of Staff. He is responsible for the discipline of members of his staff who are employed by his own service.

SECTION III—DUTIES IN RELATION TO THE CHIEF OF MISSION

11. Naval, Military and Air Attachés are attached to the Canadian Mission in the foreign country as members of the Chief of Mission's Staff. In all matters, except those of a purely technical or Service nature, an attaché comes under the general supervision and guidance of the Chief of Mission. Anything which affects relations between Canada and the foreign country is the responsibility of the Chief of Mission.

12. An attaché is advisor to the Chief of Mission on all matters pertaining to the corresponding service in the country to which he is accredited. An attaché will, therefore, keep the Chief of Mission continually informed on the conditions obtaining in the corresponding service.

SECTION IV—REPORTS AND MEMORANDA

13. Attachés will submit the results of their observations in two ways: (a) reports and (b) memoranda.

14. Comprehensive despatches involving a general appreciation or concerning some major aspect of the armed forces of the foreign country will be known as reports. Reports will be submitted on the following occasions, and at such other times as the Director of Intelligence concerned or the attaché consider the matter to merit it:

(a) In conjunction with the annual report of the Chief of Mission. This should take the form of a full appreciation of the effectiveness for war of the corresponding service in the foreign country.

(b) As soon as feasible following publication of the annual estimates or statements on national defence. This report should be a careful analysis, drawing conclusions and making comparisons with previous estimates.

(c) At the conclusion of important manoeuvres, demonstrations or exercises.

15. Reports will be addressed to the Chief of Mission who may comment on them, before transmission to the Department of External Affairs. The Department of External Affairs in turn may append its comments before passing the report to the Chief of Staff concerned. A separate copy of such formal reports will be sent by an attaché under separate cover directly to the Director of Intelligence of his service.

16. Memoranda will be submitted on matters of more technical interest. These will be addressed to the Director of Intelligence of the Service concerned. Although memoranda are not addressed to the Chief of Mission, he will be informed of their contents if he so desires. An attaché will keep the Chief of Mission informed of the contents of memoranda which he considers will be of interest to him.

17. An attaché will receive separately a list of subjects to which he should direct his attention. Such lists cannot be exhaustive. In addition, specific briefs will be prepared at frequent intervals by the Director of Intelligence concerned, to which particular attention should be directed. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that reports from an attaché can only have their full value if they are related to current intelligence problems of his own Service. An attaché should, therefore, enquire frequently of his Director of Intelligence whether detailed information on certain subjects, which have come to his attention, is desired at the time, and he should be guided by the instructions received. Before making official visits to major establishments or to specific areas, an attaché should enquire of his Director of Intelligence what, if any, particular information is required at the time concerning the establishment or area. On all such matters of technical interest, an attaché will receive instructions directly from and will report directly to his own Director of Intelligence, subject to the procedure outlined in para 16. It will be of obvious advantage for an attaché to adopt the filing system used by his Director of Intelligence. The first essential of productive work by an attaché is close liaison with his own Service Headquarters through the Director of Intelligence. If the Director of Intelligence knows on what subject the attaché has the opportunity of acquiring information and the attaché knows on which subject information is most urgently wanted, the best possibility is given for the attaché's time and energy to be most fruitfully employed.

SECTION V—RELATIONS WITH AUTHORITIES OF THE COUNTRY TO WHICH ACCREDITED

18. An attaché will arrange in the manner locally prescribed to be presented to the Chief of Staff of his corresponding service as soon as possible after arrival. An attaché will not normally begin to perform his duties until he has been presented. It is well to make first calls very brief.

19. Thereafter, official communications with service authorities should follow carefully the channels prescribed by the foreign government. The Chief of Staff will usually designate as his representative the Director of Intelligence or a Foreign Liaison Officer to deal with all routine requests for information.

20. An attaché will adhere scrupulously to the correct manner of obtaining information and of making arrangements for visits. An application in advance for permission to visit Naval, Military or Air establishments will probably be required. In making plans for travelling, the designated representative of the Chief of Staff should be informed and courtesy calls made on local commanders.

21. An attaché should not ask for classified information unless instructed to do so by his Director of Intelligence because such a request may lead to a request for reciprocal information. For the same reason caution must be observed in asking permission to witness confidential practices or experiments and in accepting invitations to witness such practices or experiments. Detailed instructions will be issued to attachés on this point.

22. An attaché in the natural course will become acquainted with non-service government officials. Cordial relations should be cultivated with them as information on service matters is often gained from such officials. Before addressing official communications to non-service officials, however, the Chief of Mission's approval should be obtained.

23. The personal acquaintance of as many Naval, Military and Air officers as possible should be sought as a duty. From them, by informal contact, will come much of the background knowledge for an appreciation of the general views prevailing in the Armed Forces of the foreign country. In addition, personal knowledge of senior commanders and staff officers should lead to a sound judgment of their ability in time of war.

24. It is important for service attachés to move freely among the appropriate circles of the civilian population in the capital of the country to which they are accredited. It is important, however, always to remain impartial to any prevailing cliques or political, social and religious factions within the armed forces of the foreign country.

SECTION VI—RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN SERVICE ATTACHÉS

25. Canadian Naval, Military and Air attachés are meant to work together in very close liaison. In the larger capitals where there are attachés of all three Services, it is important that they keep each other continually informed of their main observations. Thus, in forming his general appreciation, each will have the advantage of contradictory or corroborative observations of the others. Reports involving general appreciations should be exchanged.

26. In smaller capitals, where only two or even one of the Services is represented by an attaché, the affairs of the Service or Services not represented will require careful attention. Unless instructions are issued to the contrary, the attaché of one Service will not be responsible for reporting on matters pertaining to either of the other two Services. During temporary absence of an attaché, one of his colleagues can often usefully maintain the flow of his routine business.

SECTION VII—RELATIONS WITH CANADIAN NON-SERVICE REPRESENTATIVES

27. An attaché should keep in the closest possible touch with Diplomatic and Commercial officers of the Mission Staff. It should be borne in mind that service attachés may be able to assist their colleagues by passing them information concerning their own fields which they have acquired in the course of their duties.

28. Regular but not too frequent visits should be paid, under the guidance of the Chief of Mission, to Canadian Consular, Commercial and Immigration officials outside the capital. Such visits should not be allowed to compromise the official concerned. They are of definite value in keeping touch with the country at large.

SECTION VIII—RELATIONS WITH CANADIAN SERVICE ATTACHÉS
IN NEIGHBOURING COUNTRIES

29. Subject to the Chief of Mission's approval in manner of execution, an attaché should seek the opportunity for an exchange of views with Canadian Attachés in neighbouring countries. It should be borne in mind that information about the Armed Forces of the country to which an attaché is accredited may be obtained outside the country itself. Specific items of importance as well as general view-points are often obtainable from the sidelines, as it were. Where visits are out of the question, a system of exchanging memoranda should be instituted.

SECTION IX—RELATIONS WITH FOREIGN SERVICE ATTACHÉS

30. An attaché should call on foreign attachés of the corresponding service as soon as convenient after taking up his duties. It is important to cultivate cordial relations with them and to be familiar with their views on the Armed Forces of the country in which the attachés are serving. The possibility of acquiring information about a foreign attaché's own Armed Forces should not be overlooked.

31. An attaché must exercise discretion in voicing his own opinions or in conveying official information. An attaché must be familiar at all times with Department of National Defence policy on releasing information to foreign governments and be guided by it. Some countries are completely in the confidence of the Canadian Government (e.g., United Kingdom and United States of America). Other countries will, in principle, be given no classified information whatsoever. There will also be intermediate cases where restricted or confidential information may be divulged but nothing secret. This policy is based upon Canadian foreign policy as it obtains from time to time. Attachés will be kept currently informed of regulations in this regard. Failing specific instructions, attachés must observe changing political relationships with this consideration in mind and be guided by the Chief of Mission and their own judgment.

32. An attaché will keep in mind that his first duty is to report worthwhile information to his own service. He will maintain a frank and cordial exchange of views and information with attachés of friendly countries, and indeed is obliged to make a special point of so doing. On the other hand, the responsibility of passing information to other countries is that of the Director of Intelligence concerned.

SECTION X—LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

33. An attaché will deal directly with his Director of Intelligence on all matters of administration pertaining to his staff and himself. It will be the duty of the Director of Intelligence to refer the matter to the Department or Branch of the Service immediately concerned.

I discussed the attached memorandum<sup>2</sup> on Service Attachés with Mr. Pearson yesterday. I pointed out that I thought it important that the Chairman of the J.I.C. should represent the views of this Department, that these views should not vary from those expressed by the Under-Secretary and the Chiefs of Staff Committee. Mr. Pearson agreed with this view and said that he agreed with the principle set out in the paper, namely that the prime reason for appointing Service Attachés was for intelligence. In regard to the specific posts, he did not think that there was any justification for a Naval Attaché in either the U.S.S.R. or China, and felt that we should express this view in the J.I.C. He took this view on intelligence grounds. In regard to Mexico he felt there was some justification for the appointment of an Air Attaché and said that he did not think the reasons put forward by Dr. Keenleyside were too remote from the realms of intelligence to spoil our general case.

If the J.I.C. does not agree with these views, I think we have no alternative but to have the Chairman put up a dissenting view on behalf of the Department. Mr. Pearson agreed with this.<sup>3</sup>

Part II, Paragraph 1, U.S.S.R.—While it is agreed that intelligence concerning the Naval Forces of the U.S.S.R. is required, it is considered doubtful whether a Naval Attaché in Moscow would produce the desired results.

Paragraph 2—Similarly in the case of China, it is doubtful whether information on the U.S.S.R. Naval Forces would be available in sufficient quantity to justify the appointment of a Naval Attaché.

Paragraph 7, Mexico—It is not considered that there is justification on intelligence grounds for the appointment of a Military Attaché. On the other hand, it is felt that there would be some justification for the appointment of an Air Attaché. We are informed that Mexico is steadily developing as a military and civil air power and that the armed forces are paying the greatest attention to developments in the air. Proportionately, a large part of its defense appropriations is being allotted to the development of air facilities and it is thought that the proportion will increase in the future. Most of the developments in the air are presently based on United States experience and United States material has largely been used. There is, however, a greater anti-American feeling in Mexico than in any other Latin-American country and it is thought that the authorities in Mexico would show great interest in Canadian training methods and organization and that, in turn, we would obtain useful information on the development of both civil and military air matters in Mexico.

APPOINTMENT OF NAVAL, MILITARY AND AIR ATTACHÉS

1. As directed by the Chiefs of Staff at their 360th meeting, the Joint Intelligence Committee has reviewed Service requirements and priorities for attaché representation abroad and submits for consideration by the Chiefs of Staff the attached document:

“Report on the Requirements for Service Attaché Posts”.

2. In determining the priorities between the Services, and between the various posts to which attachés should be appointed, the basic reasons underlying the establishment of Service Attachés abroad were taken into consideration and the report has, therefore, been divided into two parts:

Part I—General principles to be observed in the appointment of attachés.

Part II—Service requirements and priorities based on these principles.

3. In submitting their report the Committee strongly recommends: (a) the approval of the principles outlined in Part I; and (b) that the various appointments outlined in Part II be implemented as soon as possible and that the highest priority be given to the appointment of an Air Attaché to Moscow.

REPORT ON THE REQUIREMENTS FOR SERVICE ATTACHÉ POSTS

PART I—GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

1. We feel that the appointment of attachés should be considered in the light of overall intelligence policy. While recognizing that each Service will inevitably have its individual intelligence requirements, based upon the responsibility for briefing its Chief of Staff and Commanders, these requirements should always be related to Canadian intelligence policy generally.

2. We recognize that Canada cannot hope to compete with the United Kingdom and the United States in the maintenance of a world-wide network for intelligence purposes, nor would it be desirable to attempt to do so.

Canada's position, vis-à-vis the United States and the United Kingdom, is one in which Canada should make certain original contributions, however small, in the field of intelligence. This is already being done in one aspect of secret intelligence, and the proposals for a Joint Intelligence Bureau would ensure a similar contribution in the field of overt intelligence, namely topographical, meteorological and similar intelligence in regard to Canada itself. We consider it essential however that the Canadian intelligence contribution to the international pool be not limited to Canada itself.

A certain amount of original overt intelligence can be obtained through attachés stationed at the more important centres abroad. Original intelligence concerning foreign countries even if limited in quantity will strengthen the Canadian position, and ensure the receipt of maximum intelligence of all kinds from the United States and United Kingdom.

3. We wish to stress that the strengthening of the intelligence organization as a whole in Ottawa should proceed at the same time as the expansion of attaché appointments, and at no time should the number of attaché appointments outrun the capacity of the intelligence organizations in Ottawa. We feel that the work of attachés will be valueless unless the intelligence organizations in Ottawa are capable, by virtue of the numbers and quality of their personnel, of dealing with the product of the attachés' work, and of giving directions concerning the tasks in hand.

4. We have accordingly attempted to work out priorities for appointments on the basis of what we consider to be the most pressing overall needs of the intelligence organization as a whole including the individual Directorates of Intelligence.

5. We consider it of great importance that only suitable personnel, who are capable of obtaining intelligence results, should be appointed as attachés, and we recognize the importance of avoiding the appointment of officers by reason only of their seniority in the Service concerned. We also recognize the importance of training officers in intelligence work and consider that attaché appointments, and in particular junior appointments, should be considered in this light.

6. We also consider it essential to bear in mind that the total attaché representation at any post should bear a reasonable relationship to the size of the Mission concerned, and in general consider it undesirable to give the impression that the Canadian Government, in establishing a Mission, had in mind the establishment of a Service, rather than a diplomatic Mission. Where it is not possible or desirable for various reasons to appoint attachés from the three Services to certain Missions it should be borne in mind that a suitable attaché from one of the Services may gain useful experience in representing all three Services, particularly as the need for joint staff training is now universally recognized.

7. The posts and priorities which we recommend are set out in Part II of this paper together with the reasons for their establishment. In making these recommendations, however, we take the view that posts and priorities should be kept under constant review in the light of intelligence needs, and the availability and suitability of personnel.

8. We also consider that the Joint Intelligence Committee is the body best suited to recommend the posts to which attachés should be appointed in the light of the foregoing general considerations. We therefore recommend that the Joint Intelligence Committee be charged with the following tasks:

- (a) The constant review of the requirements for attaché representation abroad.
- (b) The determination of priorities for appointments between the various Services.

PART II

The following recommendations concerning the appointment of Service attachés to various posts are made subject to the availability of suitable personnel to fill the appointments.

1. U.S.S.R.

In view of the obvious importance of the U.S.S.R. from an intelligence point of view we consider that all three Services should be represented in Moscow. At the same time, we recognize that from an intelligence point of view more information can frequently be obtained by means of attachés stationed in countries adjacent to the U.S.S.R. In recognizing that there should be three attachés in Moscow, therefore, it is to some extent contingent on the opportunities which may arise in the future for stationing attachés in Poland, Czechoslovakia or Yugoslavia. A Military Attaché is already stationed in Moscow. While we realize that accommodation is difficult in Moscow, we nonetheless urge that steps should be taken immediately to appoint an Air Attaché. It is understood that a suitable candidate will be available in the near future. While we also recommend the appointment of a Naval Attaché, it is not considered that the appointment has as high a priority as those of the other two Services. We feel that the Naval requirements might be partially met by an appointment to another country on the periphery of the Soviet Union.

It should be noted that the Soviet Mission in Ottawa is considerably larger than the Canadian Mission in Moscow and includes three Military Attachés. We feel that this situation should be stressed when negotiating with Soviet authorities for the appointment of and accommodation for additional Canadian Service Attachés in Moscow.

2. CHINA

We consider that the attaché posts in China are of primary importance from the point of view of information that may be gathered concerning the Soviet Union although it is recognized that a study of the Chinese Army is of some importance. There is already a Military Attaché in Nanking and it is recommended that the post be retained.

We further recommend that no priority be established as between the Navy and Air Force and that Air and Naval Attachés be appointed. An appropriate candidate has been provisionally selected for the Air Force appointment.

3. FRANCE

Paris is at present the most important capital in Western Europe, and as such is an important centre for the gathering of intelligence concerning Western Europe generally and the Soviet Union. Army and Air Attachés already exist and we recommend that a Naval Attaché be appointed when available.

4. NORWAY

The terrain and climate of Norway are similar to those of Canada. From the point of view of technical experiments, and the problem of defence generally, therefore, much may be learned from close association with the Norwegian Services. This is particularly true of the Norwegian Air Force which is beginning to experiment with flying in Arctic conditions. We recommend therefore that an Air Attaché be appointed to Oslo.

In regard to the Navy and Army, we recognize that the Navy should have second priority, should it be desired to appoint a Naval Attaché. We consider, however, that our views in regard to the appointment of attachés in Oslo would change in the event of a Mission being opened in Stockholm and we recommend that should a Diplomatic Mission be opened there that the question of attaché representation in Scandinavia generally be reviewed.

5. GREECE

We consider that an attaché of one of the Services should be appointed to the Embassy in Greece. It is considered to be a good listening post for matters concerning the Services of the U.S.S.R. and in particular the Army. We therefore recommend that a Military Attaché be appointed to Greece.

In the event of Missions being opened in Turkey, Yugoslavia or Italy, we feel that the question of priorities should be reconsidered as the Navy and Air Force have considerable interests in the Central and Eastern Mediterranean.

6. BELGIUM

The appointment of a Military Attaché to Brussels is recommended, as a temporary measure, pending the opening of a Diplomatic Mission in Prague. We consider that Brussels is conveniently situated to obtain information on the views of the military circles of the small Western Powers, in particular, vis-à-vis the Soviet Union.

7. MEXICO

Mexico is steadily developing both as a military and civil air power and most of the active members of the Armed Forces are tending to concentrate their attention upon developments in the air. Mexico is spending proportionately a large part of its defence appropriation on air facilities and from present indications it would seem likely that this appropriation would increase.

We therefore consider that an Air Attaché should be appointed to Mexico.

8. SOUTH AMERICA

From a Naval point of view we consider it is important to appoint an attaché in either Brazil or the Argentine, in view of the comparatively small United Kingdom Naval Attaché representation, the general importance of South America as a whole and the U.S.S.R. efforts to gain influence there.

From an Air Force point of view, the Argentine is considered the most important of the South American countries.

We therefore recommend that an Air Attaché be appointed to Buenos Aires and a Naval Attaché to Rio de Janeiro.

9. The question of Military Attaché representation in one of the South and Central American countries is still under consideration.

10. U.S.A.

We recommend that the three attaché posts be maintained in Washington.

11. In the event of Diplomatic Missions being opened in Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Poland, Yugoslavia, Italy or Turkey, we recommend that the European attaché posts be reviewed.

Washington, February 27, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to my letters† of February 9th, 12th, 13th and 20th concerning the visit of the Canadian Trade Mission to Central America and Colombia, I wish to offer a few concluding comments.

Undoubtedly, the highlight of the trip was the realization of Canada's prestige in the countries we have visited. It is easy to exaggerate the significance of courtesies extended under such circumstances but there were innumerable occasions where our hosts went out of their way to express their friendliness and show their admiration for Canada. The welcome in Mexico, Costa Rica and Colombia was particularly warm and cordial. Perhaps, I should record here that when Mr. MacKinnon thanked the Foreign Minister of Colombia for the expeditiousness with which his government had waived aside technical difficulties in order to sign with minimum delay a commercial agreement with Canada, the Foreign Minister feelingly replied that his Government would have done it for no other people but Canadian. Another evidence of the favour with which the Canadian Mission was viewed was the amount of publicity it received in the local press. As far as we have been able to ascertain our visit was covered equally well by the newspapers supporting the government and the Opposition press. I am enclosing, herewith, a complete set of newspaper clippings† on our visit in Guatemala, which is a good illustration in point.

We should bear in mind the friendly welcome extended to the Mission (in Honduras and Colombia for example, all the expenses of the group were paid by the government) when officials from these countries visit Canada. It is highly important, for the sake of good relations with these countries, that we show the same interest in their visit that they have shown in ours.

Canada's prestige in Central America seems to be to a large extent founded on two main considerations: (a) Central American countries are solidly pro-allied and they look with admiration to the Dominion for its remarkable achievements during the war. They single out Canada as the nation in this hemisphere which, after the United States, has contributed most to final victory; (b) Central American countries bear with considerable uneasiness the overwhelming influence of the United States, economic or otherwise, and they welcome Canada for providing them with the opportunity of becoming less dependent upon the United States. I am afraid that now that the war is over, this second factor has a great importance in the minds of their leaders, when they think about Canada.

This is the starting point of our relations with these countries and it is a consideration worthwhile noting because it points out the direction our efforts should take in the next few years. It should be our job now to make Canada better known in Central America in order that she may be liked positively for her own sake, for what she has to offer, economically and culturally.

Closely linked with the above is the question of Canada's representation in Central America and Colombia. As already reported, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has told Guatemalan officials that he hoped that direct commercial representation will be established shortly between the two countries. It is likely that some time this year a Canadian Commercial Representative will be sent to Guatemala City and possibly to San José, Costa Rica. These two representatives would together have jurisdiction over the six Central American countries. As long as Trade and Commerce intends to send representatives to Central America, it would be wise to appoint them as Consular agents. The same reasons which justify our giving the status of Consul-General to the Trade and Commerce representative in Venezuela, apply even more forcefully in Central America in view of the fact that we do not intend to open, at least for some time, diplomatic missions there. Under these circumstances, it is doubly important that Canadian Commercial representatives in Central America be given an internationally recognized status, in order that they may not be hampered in carrying on a number of activities which it would be difficult or impossible for them to carry, in their capacity of trade commissioners.

The case of Colombia deserves special consideration. A number of Colombian officials, as expected, told us how anxious Colombia is to exchange diplomatic representatives with Canada and it took little effort to sense a feeling of disappointment on their part over the fact that this has not yet been done. The members of the Mission received, I think, the distinct impression that if we were to delay very much longer the establishment of a diplomatic mission in Bogota, we would be rendering a disservice to ourselves. Colombia thinks of itself as one of the leading nations of Latin America which has developed a more stable political life along democratic lines than most of her sister nations. It also has enormous national resources which it is hoped will make it one of the most important trading nations of Latin America. In addition, Canadian interests in Colombia are very wide as indicated by the presence of approximately 350 Canadians in the country.

We have been struck by the fact that practically every Central American country sent during the war a relatively large number of students to Canada. Parents with whom we had the chance to talk about this said frankly that they do not like the American educational methods and were attracted by the slightly more conservative character of our educational system and the presence in Canada of both French and English centers of learning. Undoubtedly, this is the best kind of publicity we can ever hope to get. The question can be raised as to whether Canada should do something to encourage this movement of students now that the war is over and that the reasons which prompted these students to come to Canada become less and less compelling.

If what we have in mind is to develop trade with these countries, a better form of publicity cannot be found because of its permanent value and the fact that it affects individuals who normally are called upon to assume a position of responsibility in their respective country.

If it is not feasible to grant a few scholarships to Central American students to attract them to Canada, it may at least be possible to give some publicity about educational facilities in Canada. The cooperation of Canadian colleges and universities may be sought to that effect. In any case, it is obvious that Canada has a distinct appeal for Central American students and we should not lose any opportunity to cultivate it.

It has been pointed out to me by several newspapermen in Central America that the information they normally receive about Canada consists mostly of a weekly news bulletin. This bulletin is highly appreciated and is reproduced in one form or another in the local press but the avidity for Canadian news is such that they would like to receive more of background information about Canadian life. Canadian art, science and literature are subjects which would be popular for the Central American public. I do not know whether it would be feasible to send more of this type of information through the channels which have already been established by Mr. A. Anderson.<sup>1</sup>

Similarly, I have been told many times by people in Central America who have visited Canada that Canadian films would be more than welcomed in their country. It may be possible to arrange for the distribution of such films by the Film Board Representative in Mexico City, until, at least, Canadian Consular agents can take over informational activities of this type.

While we were in Bogota, local newspapers reported rumours that the Canadian troops stationed in Jamaica may be called to take over certain public utilities services whose personnel had walked out as a result of the serious strike situation in the Island. It seemed to me that our friends in Colombia viewed this development with some disapproval. It is difficult to say of course whether this reaction is typical of other South American nations but I rather think that in Central America it would be similarly received in view of their over-sensitiveness about anything which has the appearance of outside interference in domestic matters and the fact that Jamaica is a colony seems to have little bearing in the matter. The use of Canadian troops for anything else than purely defense purposes runs the risk of being misinterpreted and Canada has much to lose by publicity of this kind. If the use of Canadian troops for such purpose is seriously contemplated (which I do not know) careful consideration should be given to the matter on account of its possible adverse repercussions.

Finally, I wish to mention the invaluable assistance extended to the Mission by the British representatives throughout Central America and Colombia. Mr. MacKinnon has already sent them telegrams expressing his gratitude for what they did to make his visit pleasant and fruitful and I do not know whether you think it would be in order to send them a word from the Department as well.

Yours sincerely,

PAUL TREMBLAY

OPENING OF NEW CANADIAN MISSIONS ABROAD

It is evident that we must return a definite answer as soon as possible to some of the requests which we have received for the exchange of diplomatic missions. The attached telegram No. 98 of June 10th† from the Dominions Office indicates that unless we make promptly a fairly encouraging and convincing reply to Venezuela we are incurring a real risk of harming Canadian interests in that country. The same situation prevails with respect to Colombia. We must however, in replying to individual countries consider the effect of our answers on our relations with a number of other countries. The following is a summary of the situation.

There are now in Ottawa diplomatic missions of six countries in which the Canadian Government has as yet been unable to establish Canadian missions. These are Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey. These countries, or nearly all of them, have a reasonable claim to priority over newcomers in the field. We have been approached in one way or another within the last year or two by eight Latin-American countries which wish to exchange diplomatic missions with us. These are Colombia, Venezuela, Uruguay, Ecuador, Bolivia, Panama, the Dominican Republic and Haiti, leaving only the five small Central American Republics and Paraguay as having shown to date no direct interest in exchanging diplomatic representation with Canada. In addition, in Europe we have accredited the Minister in Norway to Denmark but have not established an office in Copenhagen; we have received an Italian Representative who should, I think, after the conclusion of the Treaty of Peace be recognized as an Ambassador; and we have received requests for exchange of diplomatic representatives from Spain (clearly out of the question), Austria and Iceland. We have also been approached by Lebanon in the Middle East; we have stated publicly that we were ready to exchange High Commissioners with India in the early future; and it is becoming apparent that we shall have soon to open a United Nations office in New York.

In dealing with the more important requests for the opening of missions in Ottawa we have in one or two cases indicated our readiness to receive a Minister with the promise of early but not immediate reciprocity on our part. I think that we should clearly make the same offer to Venezuela which, in addition to this urgent appeal through the British Ambassador, has been pressing us through the Canadian Trade Commissioner, their Consul-General in Montreal and their Ambassador in Washington.

If we agree to deal with the more important requests in this manner, we should give as convincing evidence as possible of our difficulties in reciprocating at once. This might include a recital of the following facts:

1. that there are seven countries now represented by Ministers in Ottawa in which there are no Canadian missions;
2. that over a dozen other countries have expressed an interest in an early exchange of missions with Canada, and that a number of these requests must be considered together;
3. that between 1940 and the beginning of this year we established sixteen new Canadian missions abroad and reopened three in countries overrun by the Germans;
4. that participation in the United Nations, in other international organizations and in numerous conferences on special subjects has been a heavy added drain on our experienced personnel; and
5. that a number of Canadians who agreed temporarily to fill senior posts in the foreign service abroad and at home as a war duty have already returned or will shortly return to their previous occupations.

We should, I think, be sure that Colombia, Venezuela and Uruguay at least are treated in an identical manner and we should at the same time inform the Ambassador in Washington, the High Commissioner in London and our representatives in the Latin-American countries and in France of the line which they should take if they are approached on the matter by any representatives of countries in which we have no missions.

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État associé aux Affaires extérieures au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] October 8, 1946

This is just a brief note ad memoriam on my views on priorities, etc., over the establishment of new Canadian Missions.

I think that we can open in India by itself at any time without giving rise to complications with other countries. We can also, of course, open an office in Copenhagen under a Chargé d'Affaires at any time.

When we get beyond these two we run into difficulties. The claimants, on the ground of reciprocity, arranged in order of their opening Missions in Ottawa are: Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Poland, Sweden, Turkey and Switzerland. The first three had Vanier accredited to them during the period of exiled governments in London. I am inclined to think that we should open in Poland and Czechoslovakia at least at the same time as, or earlier than, in Sweden and Switzerland. We can probably let Yugoslavia and Turkey wait for awhile.

Italy is in a special position. The Italian Representative has the courtesy rank of Consul General. He expects to be given diplomatic status after the conclusion of peace. The appointment of an Ambassador in Rome, however, without the simultaneous appointment of a representative to the Vatican, would cause domestic controversy. From the Italian point of view I think there is a good deal to be said for our opening both Missions simultaneously. I also feel that it would be difficult for the Government to propose opening at the Vatican.

With regard to other ex-enemy countries, we may have to reinforce the Mission in Tokyo before so very long. This does not give rise to the same sort of problem. The European satellites will have to wait for quite a long time before we can seriously consider an exchange of Missions. Austria has already approached us on the subject.

That sort of programme is enough to last us for some time. We shall, however, continue to be pressed from Latin America by Colombia, Venezuela and Uruguay in particular and I think it would be hard to distinguish between them and impossible to distinguish between the first two.

There is on top of this, of course, the whole question of an expanded Consular Service, especially in the United States. Our diplomatic Missions are doing a lot of Consular work already, especially in European capitals and in Mexico and Cuba. I am inclined to defer the appointment of new Consulates for two or three years, except perhaps in countries in which there are Canadian Trade Commissioners but not diplomatic Missions. We have already given Consular rank to the Trade Commissioners in Venezuela and Portugal and in the latter case have appointed an officer of this Department as Vice-Consul.

Mémoire du chef, la direction diplomatique, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Diplomatic Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

With respect to the note of October 21st† from the Minister of The Netherlands who wishes to be authorized to establish in Montreal a "Second Commercial Secretary" to be officially attached to his Legation, I submit herewith a draft reply<sup>1</sup> for your consideration and signature.

I understand that the Netherlands Minister lately asked you whether a reply would be expected soon to his note under reference. The Diplomatic Division had already prepared the reply to his note; our draft reply was submitted, before being signed, to the Legal Division. Mr. Wershof expressed the opinion that the Netherlands request might afford a convenient opportunity for us to raise the general question of principle and obtain a ruling on it from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and then advise the foreign missions that we wish them to discontinue the maintenance of diplomatic officers outside Ottawa.

I attach Mr. Wershof's memo† with the file and its related papers.

The question may be summarized as follows:

(i) On September 26th Mr. Wrong consulted Mr. St. Laurent in writing on the position which we should take with respect to the office which the Commercial Counsellor of the Embassy of the U.S.S.R. has been maintaining in Vancouver<sup>2</sup>. Mr. Wrong suggested that we should invite the Soviet Embassy to close this office as the Canadian Government does not approve in principle the maintenance, outside of the Federal Capital, of branch offices or subordinate diplomatic officers officially attached to foreign diplomatic missions in Canada;

(ii) When Mr. Wrong submitted to Mr. St. Laurent the question of the Soviet Embassy commercial Office in Vancouver, he suggested that we should leave open for the present, the continued maintenance by other countries of their diplomatic offices in Montreal, and Mr. St. Laurent agreed to this.

(iii) These are the other diplomatic missions in Canada which maintain branch offices in Montreal:

(a) The Belgian Embassy have a Diplomatic Counsellor, Mr. Maurice Heyne, who is stationed in Montreal. Actually, I understand that his duties there are those of head of the Belgian Purchasing Mission and he only appears on the diplomatic list as a member of the Belgian Embassy, because of his personal rank in the Belgian Diplomatic Service.

(b) The French Embassy have a Commercial Attaché, Mr. Gérard Dubois, who is established in downtown Montreal.

(c) the whole Norwegian Legation, including the Minister's office and residence, is in Montreal. All the Secretaries and Attachés are there, with the exception of a Junior Attaché, who maintains an Office in Ottawa. This irregular arrangement has been accepted by our Department, although reluctantly, and to maintain the fiction that diplomatic missions should be in the Federal Capital, the Department always addresses its notes to the Norwegian Minister, to the Ottawa office of the Norwegian Legation.

After giving serious consideration to Mr. Wershof's suggestion (that the Secretary of State for External Affairs be asked for a general ruling, and that the foreign Heads of Missions be eventually advised, by a circular note, that they should refrain from maintaining diplomatic attachés outside Ottawa), the Diplomatic Division is of the opinion that the action proposed is unwarranted at the present time:

(a) a comparatively short time has elapsed since Mr. St. Laurent agreed to Mr. Wrong's suggestion that we should leave open for the moment the continued maintenance by countries (other than the U.S.S.R.) of their diplomatic offices in Montreal; no particular event seems to have taken place, meanwhile to warrant a change of policy in this respect and I can see no real motive that could justify our pressing the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take a definitive attitude at this particular moment;

(b) In as much as the majority of foreign missions (who do not maintain at present any officers outside Ottawa) are concerned, a circular to them would be somewhat "undiplomatic" and would serve no purpose;

(c) Such a circular could not be sent to the Dutch Minister, whose case is being treated separately, nor to the U.S.S.R. Chargé d'Affaires, with whom we have already been in communication, with respect to the Vancouver office of the U.S.S.R. Embassy;

(d) Such a circular, on the other hand, could scarcely apply to the Norwegian Minister, who has been allowed to reside himself, with almost all of his staff, in Montreal, for years, and who would very likely object to his very special position being assimilated to the general question of the maintenance of Attachés outside Ottawa.

It seems to me that the best course to follow for the time being is:

1. To put on record, in the Department's files, the Under-Secretary's dislike of the practice of foreign missions maintaining attachés outside of Ottawa.

2. To refuse in the future, any requests which we may receive on the part of the foreign Governments for permission to maintain part of their diplomatic staff in Montreal;

3. Refrain for the present from any action compelling those countries which have diplomatic offices in Montreal (France, Belgium, and Norway) to withdraw them.<sup>1</sup>

RE COMMERCIAL OFFICER IN SÃO PAULO, BRAZIL

Previous memos† have indicated the recommendation of Mr. Désy that the new Trade and Commerce officer (Mr. J. C. Depocas) appointed to São Paulo should be designated as Consul. This recommended designation is desired and expected by Mr. Depocas; it is endorsed by the Diplomatic Division, and also by Mr. Kirkwood.

The arguments in favour have been given by Mr. Désy as follows:

- (1) The translation of "Trade Commissioner" is ambiguous and equivocal.
  - (2) A "Trade Commissioner" would not enjoy a recognized status.
  - (3) A "Trade Commissioner" would not enjoy privileges or prerogatives or immunities of a Consul. He would be in an inferior position.
  - (4) São Paulo expects a Consul, and would not appreciate a Trade Commissioner. Goodwill is at stake.
  - (5) A designation as Consul would not adversely affect his work. It might however involve passport and visa duties.
- Other arguments that may be added are:

(6) Mr. Depocas, who has had several years in Italy as Assistant Trade Commissioner and nearly eight years in Argentina as Assistant Trade Commissioner and Assistant and Acting Commercial Secretary, is qualified to be Consul. He also feels that any other title would not give him (a) the prestige necessary for his work; (b) access to official circles or consular colleagues; (c) official status socially in São Paulo; (d) the immunities and privileges he has enjoyed in Argentina, and which have a pecuniary benefit.

Mr. Pearson approved all 3 recommendations. M. W[ERSHOF]

(7) A sense of inferiority of position would make for less enthusiastic work, and would have a bad psychological reaction on an able officer.

(8) We already have Trade Commissioners designated as Consuls in New York, Lisbon and Caracas.

(9) The origin of our diplomatic service was (a) to relieve British (U.K.) offices of Canadian work, (both diplomatic and consular), and (b) to assist Canadian Trade Commissioners to have more official access to foreign government departments. These objectives would be promoted in São Paulo by designating the Trade Commissioner as Consul.

In a memo of Mr. J. H. Cleveland to Mr. Beaudry of September 3, 1946† re Canadian Consuls to U.S.S.R. (file 2462-40C), he summarizes the duties of Canadian Consuls as follows:

“(a) To act as the liaison between the commercial communities of the two countries, promoting trade between them with the emphasis upon exports from his own country.

“(b) Protecting the interests of Canadian nationals abroad, e.g. registering births, issuing or renewing passports, assisting in difficulties with customs and police officials.

“(c) In ports looking after the interests of Canadian shipping and seamen.

“(d) Acting in a representative capacity—this includes the creation of goodwill between the two countries and an exchange of cultural information.

“(e) Reporting.

(i) Commercial: This is ordinarily done by Trade Commissioners and is an ancient function of Consuls; and

(ii) Political: This is more recent but has certainly become accepted in the British Consular Service.”

The Legal Division opposes the designation of Trade Commissioners as Consuls, primarily, it seems, over their implied passport and visa duties.

It does not seem that there should be more difficulty for a seasoned Trade Commissioner to learn the pratique of this than for new diplomatic secretaries, or for Embassy officers who must learn by communicated instructions.

If this objection is persisted in, however, the Consul in São Paulo need not at present assume those duties; but merely supply requisite forms to applicants and refer all passport and visa matters to the Embassy in Rio, as is at present done. This would at least be better than leaving such business to the local British Consul.

The consular duty of “political reporting” would not be essential, as this is done by the Embassy in Rio.

The consular duty of protecting Canadian interests in São Paulo, assisting in difficulties with customs and police officials, could be better done by a Consul than by a “Trade Commissioner”.

In general, the interests of Canada as a whole would be better served by a "Consul" in São Paulo than a Trade Commissioner.

Ottawa, December 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I think you are aware of our intention to open a new Trade Commissioner office at São Paulo. The territory of this office will be comprised of the State of São Paulo and all States south, plus an area known as Triangulo Mineiro at the western tip of the Province of Minas Geraes.

We have decided to assign to this new post Mr. Jean Charles Depocas. Mr. Depocas became Acting Commercial Secretary at Buenos Aires when Mr. J. A. Strong was transferred to New York. During the past few months he has been in Canada on home leave and has just completed a tour of the principal industrial centres. Mr. Depocas is prepared to leave any time after the middle of this month, but it does not appear likely that a passage will be available before January at the earliest. He will be accompanied by his wife, and children, Marie L. Y., aged fifteen years, and J. Jean Louis, aged thirteen years.

The question of Mr. Depocas' title and status at São Paulo presents some difficulty. We have been furnished with a copy of a memorandum to you from Mr. Jean Désy, † dated October 12, in which he expressed the fear that the title of Canadian Government Trade Commissioner would tend to dissociate the new office from the Embassy in the minds of Brazilians. It was suggested by Mr. Désy, in view of this and other considerations which he enumerated, that Mr. Depocas' title should be either that of Consul or Commercial Attaché. While we are agreeable to the designation of Mr. Depocas as Canadian Government Trade Commissioner, I believe it would assist Mr. Depocas in his duties and it would certainly be a considerable advantage to him personally if he were accorded commercial diplomatic, or consular status. To his designation as Commercial Attaché, there is, of course, the objection that he will not be located at the capital. That designation would be preferable from our point of view, but if you prefer to have him appointed as consul, I am quite agreeable.

Enclosed you will find two copies of Mr. Depocas' curriculum vitae. †

Yours faithfully,

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 291 of December 24 informing us of overtures made to you on three occasions by the Colombian Ambassador to Peru concerning the exchange of diplomatic missions between Canada and Colombia.

2. I note that in your reply to Dr. Fernández<sup>1</sup> you pointed out the difficulties which exist at present for Canada and that the Ambassador requested that you should write to convey information about his overtures to you. To complete your records, I am enclosing a copy of our despatch to the British Ambassador to Colombia which by an oversight, was not sent to you at that time. As you will notice in paragraph three of that despatch, reference is made to the statement of the Colombian Ambassador in Brazil that his colleague in Lima had been asked to discuss the question with you. I may add, that when

Mr. Désy conveyed to the Colombian Ambassador in Brazil our regrets at being unable to open a mission at the present time, he was informed that the President of Colombia was anxious to reach an agreement for an exchange of missions before his term of office expired in August of this year. We asked Mr. Désy to tell the Ambassador that this fact would be kept in mind, but added, for his own information, that it would seem highly dubious that our staff situation would improve sufficiently by that time to make possible the desired exchange.

3. There is no slackening of the interests of Latin American countries in promoting exchanges with Canada. Since our expression of regret at our inability to establish diplomatic relations with Bolivia, Colombia and Uruguay, we have had parallel requests from Ecuador and Panama to whom the same answer has been given. It is, I think, the feeling in the Department that when conditions make possible the establishment of diplomatic relations with other Latin American countries, those deserving of first consideration are Uruguay, Colombia and Venezuela.

Dear Mr. MacKinnon,

Thank you for sending me a translation and the original of the letter† which you received from the Minister of Foreign Affairs. As you suggested, I was particularly interested in the Minister's references in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of his letter to the intention of his Government "To accredit a diplomatic and consular representation in Canada sufficient in number and prestige to realize with the maximum benefit the desired economic and cultural interchange." We have been discussing, on several occasions, with Colombian diplomats the problem of an exchange of missions. They are undoubtedly most anxious to effect an exchange at the earliest possible moment and, under instructions, their Ambassadors have raised the question with our Ambassadors in Peru and Brazil, while the question was previously raised at their request with the British Ambassador in Colombia. On each occasion, the most recent being in January of this year, we have been obliged to express our deep regret at being unable to open the mission at the present time. At the same time, we pointed out to our own Ambassadors that we recognize Colombia's position as being important in Latin America and have rated it and Uruguay as being the two countries which should next receive consideration in Latin America. Up to the present, we have not had any recent overtures of the kind suggested by the Foreign Minister in his letter to you.

For your information, I should perhaps explain that the chief difficulty impeding our exchange of missions is the problem of meeting our prior commitments in Europe. During the war, we could accredit a single Minister to the Allied Governments then resident in London. With their return to their home countries, that became impossible. We have been able, as you know, to meet our obligations to France, Belgium, Holland, Greece and Norway. We have still to send missions to Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Poland, while three neutral countries, Sweden, Turkey and Switzerland have missions here and are naturally expecting reciprocal action on our part as soon as possible. Although we have added over forty officers, chosen from the Armed Services, to our departmental strength since April, 1944, we are still handicapped in providing junior personnel for existing missions with increased duties and for new missions as they are opened. There is also the question of securing the best possible type of representation to head these missions. At the present time we must find heads of missions or High Commissioners for the United Kingdom, South Africa, and Chile.

I have written at some length on this question because I appreciate your interest in the expansion of diplomatic representation abroad, and because of your visits and contacts in Latin America you are liable to be asked on more than one occasion the position of this Department.

Yours sincerely,

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

I had a call yesterday from Mr. Jesús Maria Troncoso, the Governor of the Reserve Bank of the Dominican Republic. He has been talking to the Bank of Canada and some of the Chartered Banks about revisions in the Dominican Banking and Currency Laws. Among other things, they are giving up the use of U.S. dollars and are issuing their own pesos which will be based on U.S. dollars.

He had been asked by his Government to discuss the question of an exchange of diplomatic representatives while he was in Ottawa. I explained to him that the difficulties of rapid expansion and the necessity to reciprocate with European countries who had been established in Ottawa for some time made it impossible to send a Minister to his country at present. He then asked whether we could receive a Dominican Minister without sending a Canadian to the Dominican Republic and I told him that I thought the Government would be unwilling to do this. I suggested that a Consul, or Consul General, in Ottawa would be able to deal quite satisfactorily with such business as might arise, pointing out that he would have the same access to this and other Departments as a Minister.

Mr. Troncoso was, I think, prepared to agree that, in point of fact, a Consul General would fill the bill. However, he was obviously under instructions to pursue the possibility of appointing a Minister as far as possible. His final suggestion was that the Dominican Ambassador in Washington might also be accredited to Canada and that the Canadian Minister in Havana might be accredited to the Dominican Republic. I pointed out that in the past we had been unwilling to enter into such arrangements, but indicated that the passage of time had somewhat altered the situation and said I would bring his suggestion to your attention for consideration. What I did not mention to him, but what must be considered, is the position of Haiti. In view of the rivalry between the two countries, it is practically essential that we treat them in the same way. Whether the accreditation of the Canadian Minister in Havana to both the Dominican Republic and Haiti would be acceptable to those two countries is something that will have to be explored.

Finally, Mr. Troncoso asked where these conversations could be continued. I did my best to suggest that no early resumption of the conversations was likely to prove fruitful, but agreed to his proposal that any further advances which the Dominican Government might wish to make could be taken up by their Embassy in Washington with ours.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I wish to refer to my letter of November 13th,† regarding the desire of the Egyptian Government to establish a Legation in Ottawa, and to inform you that the Egyptian Ambassador came to see me the other day. His Government fully appreciated the reasons why the Canadian Government could not contemplate an exchange of diplomatic missions at this time, and were grateful for the frank explanation of our position which had been given them. They were, however, still concerned about the representation of Egyptian interests in Canada, particularly at a time like this when problems of procurement, both food supplies and equipment, were worrying most governments. They felt their interests would be better served by the maintenance in Canada of a diplomatic mission which could supervise their purchasing activities and see that Egyptian enquiries were properly brought to the attention of the competent Canadian Departments of Government. Would we, in these special circumstances, agree to receive an Egyptian Minister if they expressly waived the question of reciprocity?

I explained to the Ambassador that the establishment of an Egyptian Legation in Ottawa automatically raised the question of our reciprocating, regardless of an understanding reached between our two Governments, and for this reason I felt that our Government would have to return a discouraging reply to his renewed request. I suggested, however, that his Government might consider the appointment of a Consul General to Canada, who would be able to do everything that a Minister could do for Egyptian trade and procurement interests. Such an appointment would not create for us any of the complications which might be anticipated from the establishment of an Egyptian Legation in Ottawa, and should meet at least the interim needs of the Government of Egypt. If, after some experience in the maintenance of a consular office in Canada, it appeared that the volume and the character of business between our two countries was such as to require more elaborate establishments, I had no doubt that the Canadian Government would view the exchange of diplomatic missions with sympathy. The Ambassador took up with alacrity this suggestion that a Consulate General might meet their needs, and undertook to recommend this course of action to his Government.

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose a copy of a letter† addressed by the Political Representative of Finland in London to the Foreign Office regarding the possi-

2. In Dominions Office telegram D. 3. In passing this communication to us the Dominions Office suggest that although it would not be possible for Consuls to be received on a full official basis they are enquiring whether the Canadian Government would raise any objections to receiving Finnish officials to perform consular duties as the United Kingdom Government have received a "political representative" to perform diplomatic duties here. I presume that the agreement by the Canadian Government to receive a representative of Italy with the personal rank of Consul-General would be analagous.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

The Icelandic Minister, Mr. Thor Thors, came to see me the other day to enquire about the possibility of interchanging diplomatic representation with Canada. I explained our problems to Mr. Thor Thors and he replied that he appreciated them because Iceland was faced with similar difficulties to the point where he had been instructed to suggest that he himself be accredited in Ottawa as well as in Washington. I said that, in principle, we did not favour this sort of double representation; that we had tried it out ourselves with no real success. Mr. Thor Thors said that he understood our point of view, but in view of the fact that Iceland was such a small country he wondered whether an exception could not be made in her case. He said that, in fact, because of the large number of Icelandic people in Canada, his job there would be probably more important than his job in Washington, and he jokingly added that if it would help, he thought it might be arranged for him to be "Icelandic Minister to Canada, accredited also to the United States".

I told the Minister that I would put the matter up to the Canadian authorities and let him have a reply as soon as possible. I should be grateful, therefore, if the Department could send me word on this soon.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

In your letter of May 20, you reported on an enquiry which the Icelandic Minister had made of you about the possibility of direct diplomatic relations being established between Iceland and Canada.

2. It seems to me that all we can do is to confirm the line which you have already taken with the Icelandic Minister. We are reluctant to accept a mission if we are not able to reciprocate, especially at the present time when we have not been able to send missions to the capitals of a considerable number of countries which are already represented here.

3. While there would be much to be said to making an exception for Iceland to our rule that we do not accept as representative here someone who is accredited to Washington, it would be dangerous for us to make such an exception since it would open the door to requests from other countries for similar treatment.

4. If you think it useful, you might make the suggestion to the Icelandic Minister which we have made to a number of other countries, and that is that if they wish representation in Ottawa they might establish a Consulate General here, pointing out that, in practice, we treat a Consul General in Ottawa from a country which had no diplomatic representation in very much the same way as if he were the head of a diplomatic mission.

Excellency,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your note No. 3189, dated October 21st, 1946,† in which you inform me that your Government desires to appoint a Commercial Officer in Canada, who would be entrusted with various duties of a commercial nature, and who would be subordinate to the Commercial Secretary at your Legation and would have rank of "Second Commercial Secretary".

There would be no objection, of course, on the part of the Canadian Government to such an officer being attached officially to your Legation, although, with respect to his title, I might point out that the designation of "Assistant Commercial Secretary" appears to be more usually applied to foreign officials holding positions such as you describe.

You also indicate that your Government is considering the possibility of stationing the official mentioned above in the City of Montreal, where he would discharge his duties from the office of the Netherlands Consulate General. In this respect, I may say that, though such arrangements have been accepted by the Canadian Government in the past with respect to some foreign diplomatic missions established in Canada, the Canadian authorities do not approve, in principle, the establishment in cities other than the federal capital of branch offices or subordinate officers attached officially to the diplomatic mission of their country. The Canadian authorities prefer that foreign governments should endeavour to maintain all their diplomatic establishments in Canada at Ottawa, where the Federal Government has its seat; it is, therefore, only exceptionally that we have allowed diplomatic missions to maintain an office in other cities of Canada.

I realize that in the United States, as you say, some diplomatic missions maintain a financial officer in New York City, but I understand that this arrangement has been authorized by the State Department with respect to financial officers only, and that to retain the principle that all diplomatic missions should be in Washington, these officers are shown in the United States Diplomatic List as being stationed in Washington.

The appointment of the official whom you have in mind in a consular capacity as a member of the Netherlands Consulate General in Montreal, would be agreeable to the Canadian authorities. However, I should be grateful if you would inform your Government that the Canadian Government would not consider favourably the establishment of diplomatic offices or officials attached to a diplomatic mission outside the City of Ottawa.

During the enquiry into Soviet activities in Canada, we began to give consideration to the status of an office opened in Vancouver by the Soviet Commercial Counsellor, in the summer of 1944, to facilitate the loading, repair and supply of Soviet ships carrying Mutual Aid stores from Canada to Vladivostok. So far as I know, no information came out during the enquiry pointing to the use of this office for improper activities. Formal permission was never given for its establishment as a branch of the Soviet Embassy and, as I recall the circumstances, it was regarded as a temporary arrangement only. The Soviet Ambassador discussed with me, at about the time this office was opened, the possibility of their establishing a Consulate in Vancouver, but he failed to follow this up.

We were recently surprised to learn that a property in Vancouver had been bought by the Soviet Government to accommodate the office and to furnish living quarters for some of the office staff. We heard of this first from local solicitors, but later received a formal request from the Soviet Embassy that the property should be exempted as diplomatic property from the payment of local taxes. In accordance with our regular practice with respect to property acquired by foreign governments outside the Ottawa district, we have informed the Soviet Embassy that we cannot accord tax exemption, and took this opportunity to express some doubt about the continued existence of the office. No reply has been received.

Two questions are thus raised:

(1) Should we ask the Soviet Government to close the office now that its functions (which were useful in wartime) have disappeared?

(2) Should we follow a common practice in other countries by asking all diplomatic missions which maintain "branch offices" outside Ottawa to concentrate themselves in Ottawa?

I gave Mr. Robertson the attached note about a fortnight ago, which summarizes reports from the R.C.M.P. and other Departments on the work of the Soviet office in Vancouver and on current traffic with the U.S.S.R. through that port. I am inclined to recommend that we should invite the Soviet Embassy to close the office, while leaving open, for the present, the continued maintenance by other countries of certain diplomatic officers in Montreal.<sup>1</sup> You may care to glance through the attached copy of a report of September 3rd† from the R.C.M.P. on the Vancouver office, before reaching a decision.

should request its closing. We have not yet had any reply from the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires to our note of August 20th,† concerning his request for exemption of the premises from local taxation. In the final paragraph of this note we took the opportunity of pointing out that the maintenance of the office was "an unusual arrangement which it would be difficult to justify on a permanent basis" and asked for information on the present status and functions of the office.

It would appear from the replies received from other departments that no Soviet ships have been in Vancouver since June 1st, and according to the R.C.M.P. none are expected. Only six Soviet ships have cleared from Vancouver this year, four in the first quarter and two in the second quarter. According to the R.C.M.P. all but one of these ships cleared to load at Seattle and Portland, taking very small consignments of Canadian goods. (It is a little difficult to reconcile this information, based on the reports from the R.C.M.P. and the National Harbours Board, with the statement of the Department of Trade and Commerce that Canadian exports to the U.S.S.R. in the first six months of this year were about fifteen and a half million dollars; much of this traffic, however, may have passed through U.S. ports). The position seems to be that the original reasons for opening the office in 1944 no longer possess any validity.

According to the R.C.M.P. the current staff consists only of two Russian officials and a Canadian Secretary of Russian origin. The same report expresses the belief that very little business is now transmitted by the office. The two Soviet officials still in Vancouver are: Lukianov, described as "Representative of the Commercial Counsellor" and Gavrillov, described as "Port Engineer". The former and the Canadian Secretary are said to take a considerable interest in the Vancouver Branch of the Canadian Soviet Friendship Council, and Lukianov, who is a Ukrainian, has been concerned with the affairs of the Ukrainian Canadian Association. The information about the personnel and activities of the office contains nothing, however, in any way sinister and it is quite likely that the decision to maintain the office and to purchase premises for it was taken when the Soviet authorities confidently expected to secure a loan from Canada to finance their orders here.

I am inclined to think that we should reach a decision on this particular matter as part of a general decision on the maintenance of miscellaneous diplomatic offices outside Ottawa. The trouble about asking for the closing of all these offices is that the housing conditions here are so difficult. According to the current Diplomatic List, there are now situated in Montreal: the Belgian Counsellor's Office, the French Commercial Attaché's Office and the Office of the Norwegian Minister and Civil Air Attaché. I think that this is not a complete list and it may be that we shall find that more representatives with some title such as "Civil Air Attaché" are stationed in Montreal in order to give them diplomatic immunities while they are actually serving as representatives of their governments on the Council of PICAQ. We can differentiate between the Soviet office in Vancouver and the other ones mentioned on the ground that the office was not established with our formal consent. We can also cite the action of the Soviet Government itself in closing certain offices maintained by Foreign Governments during the war outside Moscow, including two American Naval offices in Vladivostok and, I think, Leningrad.

Ottawa, December 7, 1946 [sic]

APPOINTMENT OF MR. V. G. SKOKOV
AS CONSUL OF THE U.S.S.R. IN OTTAWA

This question has been the subject of correspondence, during recent months, between the Embassy of the U.S.S.R. and the Department of External Affairs, ending with note No. 51, dated November 26th, from the Embassy of the U.S.S.R., enquiring about the reasons for the delay in recognizing of Mr. Skokov.

This delay resulted from the fact that the Canadian authorities wished to review the procedure for the appointment and recognition of foreign Consuls in Canada.

The Canadian Government observes that, according to general international practice, Consular officers appointed by a country abroad usually receive a Commission of Appointment signed by their head of state, or a Certificate of Appointment issued by their Minister of Foreign Affairs; the Commission is then presented to the Government of the country in which the Consular Officer will exercise his duties, and the receiving Government then issues to the Consul an exequatur.

It is customary, in cases where the arriving Consular Officer does not carry his Commission of Appointment, and this document has not been presented in advance to the Government of the country where he will act, for the latter country to be asked through diplomatic channels to grant to the arriving appointee provisional recognition pending the receipt of his Commission of Appointment.

The records of the Department of External Affairs indicate that in March 1942, when the Government of the U.S.S.R. intended to appoint a Consul General at Ottawa, they approached the Canadian Government through the Ambassador of the U.S.S.R. in London, to request specifically the Canadian Government's approval of the appointment, "pending the issuance of a Commission and the granting of an exequatur". This would seem to indicate that the normal international practice of issuing Commissions of Appointment to Consular Officers is also recognized and applied by the Government of the U.S.S.R.

The Government of the U.S.S.R. did not present to the Canadian Government Commissions of Appointment when Messrs. Vavilov, Koutzenko, Pavlov and Skokov were appointed in a consular capacity in Canada.

Although the Canadian Government did not insist on the usual formalities being complied with when Messrs. Vavilov, Koutzenko and Pavlov were appointed, it was only because these appointments were made during the war, at a time when pressure of duties and abnormal conditions could be regarded as justifying a departure from the normal practice.

With the return of peacetime conditions, however, the Canadian Government desires to maintain the customary practice and would therefore be grateful if the Government of the U.S.S.R. would comply with it, insofar as Mr. Skokov's appointment is concerned.

The Canadian Government also desires to have the status of Mr. Koutzenko, at present Consul of the U.S.S.R. in Halifax, regularised by the issuance of a Commission to him.

I saw the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires today with Mr. Measures and outlined our position about the appointment of consuls giving him the attached Aide-Mémoire.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Belokhovostikov rather half-heartedly attempted to make a distinction between a consul who ran his own office and a consular officer at an Embassy who had no independent powers and was under the direction of the Ambassador. In reply, I said that if they wanted to show him merely as a diplomatic officer, that would be quite satisfactory, but if they wanted to list him as discharging consular functions, he ought to obtain a Commission of Appointment in the usual way.

Pursuing the matter a little further, Mr. Belokhovostikov asked what we did about the consular officer at our Embassy in Moscow. He was told that we had no such consular officer and whenever we appointed a member of the diplomatic mission in a consular capacity we gave him a Commission of Appointment.

At the end of the interview, Mr. Belokhovostikov said that this problem would require some thinking over and he would communicate with the Department in due course. It was made clear that in the meantime we would do nothing further to obtain an exequatur.

The possibility of appointing Canadian consular officers in the USSR at some time in the future is being considered by this Department. In particular, it has been thought that such officers might be situated in such centres as Kiev and Leningrad.

I should appreciate receiving your comments with respect to the desirability from the point of view of your department of having Canadian consular representation in cities of the USSR outside Moscow. In this regard, it would be very helpful to have some information concerning the amount and nature of the commercial transactions between the Soviet Union and Canada at the present time and in the foreseeable future.

I am in receipt of your communication of December 11 marked "Secret", from which it is noted that your Department is considering the possibility of appointing Canadian Consular Officers in the U.S.S.R., and that you would like to have the views of this Department as to the desirability of having consular representation in the cities of Kiev and Leningrad.

In September 1944 the question of the appointment of a Commercial Attaché to our Embassy in Moscow was seriously considered in view of the then fast approaching end of hostilities. It was the opinion that the postwar years would present excellent opportunities for the development of the sale of Canadian products in the U.S.S.R. However, these expectations have not been realized and beyond reports from Mr. Wilgress, that there was a very definite lack of trade enquiries originating in the U.S.S.R. for Canadian goods, we are not in a position to know what enquiries may originate within the Soviet Union for Canadian goods because of the Soviets system of State purchasing. The situation would appear to have been further confirmed by the action of the U.S.S.R. authorities in immediately cancelling their orders for heavy machinery, machine tools and other equipment with the ending of Mutual Aid; materials and goods we had expected would find a continuing market in the U.S.S.R.

From time to time enquiries are received in the Department from Canadian firms and individuals concerning trade with Russia. Those enquiring do not appear to have a clear idea as to the conditions under which the U.S.S.R. trade. Under the present procedure this department has had to refer anyone wishing to sell or buy from the U.S.S.R. to the Commercial Counsellor of their Embassy in Ottawa.

During a period of forty-one [sic] years—1889 to 1940—the total of Canadian exports to the U.S.S.R. amounted to only $60,000,000, and our exports in recent years can only be described as emergency spot purchases on the part of the U.S.S.R. In the period mentioned the largest item of export was a shipment of $11,147,000 of wheat flour in 1925, although normally our trade in this product is negligible. In 1922 we exported railway coaches and parts to the value of over $2,000,000, but for other years there are no exports recorded. Some farm implements and machinery were exported in 1930 with a value of a little more than $2,000,000 and there was a reasonably substantial trade in these products in other years, but they completely disappeared after 1931-32. Our records show that aluminium was exported to a value of just under $1,000,000 in 1933, but from then on our exports were very low until the war years. A similar situation exists with wheat, binder twine, pig lead, zinc spelter, automobiles and structural steel. It, therefore, may be stated that there has been no well-established pattern of trade from Canada to the U.S.S.R. over a period of forty years, and with one exception no two successive years has any one Canadian commodity been exported to the U.S.S.R. in excess of $1,000,000 each year.

On the import side from 1889 to 1940 Canada imported only $10,000,000 worth of goods from the U.S.S.R. and the volume of exports from Canada to the U.S.S.R. has always greatly exceeded imports. The largest volume of imports in any one year was anthracite coal in 1931 when we imported it to the value of $1,860,000. There were smaller imports since 1929. In 1933-34 Canada imported crude petroleum to the value of $530,000. Furs showed the longest record of regular imports, but the highest value of any one year was in 1924 when Canada imported a value of $335,000. Other items of import, although of considerably less value to those already mentioned are fertilizers, soda compounds, nicotine sulphate, metal ores, salt, hides and skins.

Therefore, if trade with the Soviet Union is to be of any value, Canada would have to absorb a quantity of Soviet Union products in some relation to its exports. On the other hand it would appear to be the policy of the Soviet Union, as borne out by their attitude to purchases in Canada following the end of Mutual Aid, that under their five year plan, they will purchase only those requirements which are essential to the development of that plan. The goods so purchased will tend not to be those which would find a continuing market.

The conclusion to be reached would seem to indicate, that while there will be a certain amount of trade between the two countries it will not be such, that for some little time to come, it would warrant the establishment of trade officers in the U.S.S.R. for reasons other than to report on economic conditions and developments in the territory. In view of the fact that at the present time this situation appears to be so well taken care of by our Embassy officials, it is considered that insofar as this Department is concerned the matter may be allowed to rest.

Ottawa, July 24, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your telegram No. 1426 of June 21,† concerning diplomatic relations between Canada and Spain.

2. In spite of our efforts to discourage Count de Morales from visiting Ottawa to discuss the establishment of direct diplomatic relations between Canada and Spain, Count de Morales arrived in Ottawa to-day and called on the Chief of the Second Political Division.

3. He made an official approach on behalf of his Government for the exchange of diplomatic missions between Canada and Spain. In reply he was informed that the Spanish representative in London had raised this question with our High Commissioner in London in October of 1945 and that the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires had been informed orally by Mr. Massey that the Canadian Government was not prepared to receive a diplomatic mission from the present Spanish Government. The position of the Canadian Government remained unchanged.

4. Count de Morales then proposed that Canada establish a Consulate General in Spain. In reply he was informed that the reasons which made it impossible for us to establish direct diplomatic relations with Spain would also make it impossible for us to establish a Consulate General in Spain.

5. Count de Morales then said that the post of Consul General in Montreal was now vacant and that his Government would like to re-appoint him to this post, which he had held previously from September 1944 to July 1945. He asked whether this would be agreeable to the Canadian Government. Count de Morales was informed, in reply to this informal enquiry, that it was unlikely that any objection would be taken if a formal request were to be made by his Government for the issue of an exequatur to him in his old post of Consul General in Montreal. He asked how the formal request should be made, and he was informed that the appropriate channel would be through the Spanish Embassy in London to your office in London.

6. You may therefore expect a formal request from the Spanish Embassy in London for the issue of an exequatur to Count de Morales as Spanish Consul General in Montreal. When you receive this request, you may inform the Spanish Embassy that the Canadian Government has no objection to the appointment and that provisional recognition will be granted pending reception of his commission of appointment.

Washington, January 5, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have been wanting to write you again since my return from Los Angeles on the extension of our consular representation in the United States. I have, as you know, referred to this on more than one occasion, but I think that the importance of the subject justifies earnest and continued consideration. Furthermore, two recent communications from you (December 12th and December 20th) dealing with the appointment of a Canadian Vice-Consul at Portland, Maine, and the extension of our representation in South America, prompt some additional observations on my part.

I had not been in Los Angeles during my recent visit many hours before I was once again made aware of our dependence on British Consuls for the protection of Canadian interests. As you know, Los Angeles is quite a Mecca for Canadians, the number of whom has recently been increased by the advent of Canadian soldiers on leave, or after discharge. Some of these present troublesome cases, and two or three were brought to my attention a fortnight ago when I happened to be there. Of course, I know that there is a Canadian Trade Commissioner in Los Angeles who should look after these matters, but for two reasons that is not a satisfactory solution. In the first place, consular activities are an incidental part of his job, as his direct responsibility is to Trade and Commerce; and secondly, a Canadian when in difficulties, goes to a British Consul, whom he knows about, rather than to a Canadian Trade Commissioner, about whom he has never heard.

For many reasons I think it is a matter of first importance that we plan now consular representation in this country and that we should not, as we appear to be doing, allow it to develop according to circumstances. Surely the difficulties regarding personnel to which the Department repeatedly alludes do not prevent the working out of a carefully considered and practicable plan for Canadian consular representation in the United States, to take effect progressively as these difficulties are removed. If there is such a plan, I have not heard of it. For instance, what should be the priority in opening offices? Also, has consideration been given to the use of Canadians or ex-Canadians in American cities as honorary consuls, a device which is customary and which in our case it would be easy to adopt? It seems to have occurred to the Department when the consular issue was forced at Portland, Maine, by the closing of the British office. However, the problem cannot, I suggest, be solved by dealing with emergency cases in this way. If we are to appoint honorary consuls, as well as Consuls de carrière, steps should be taken at once to canvass the U.S. communities concerned for suitable personnel.

When I was in Los Angeles, Mr. Monty<sup>1</sup> told me about a report which he had made to the Commercial Intelligence Service on the future of his office and the extent and importance of Canadian interests in that area. I would be most interested to know whether a copy of that report, which is dated November 9th and which is enclosed herewith, was ever sent to the Department of External Affairs. Certainly no copy was sent to this Embassy until I requested one from Mr. Monty. This seems to me to illustrate how unsatisfactory it is to ask Trade Commissioners to do consular work when they have no direct contact with the Department which should be responsible for consular activities. If you read Mr. Monty's report, you will agree, I am sure, that it is one which might have appropriately been made to External Affairs as well as to Trade and Commerce. It also makes a strong case—to my mind, an unanswerable case—for concentrating all Canadian official activities in that area in one or two consular offices. Yet the Department of Trade and Commerce is apparently considering either the closing of the Los Angeles office or transferring it to San Francisco. Instead of closing it, we should be thinking of, in fact we should actually be, converting it into a consular office. I would be glad to know if this question has been discussed by the Commercial Intelligence Service with the Department in the light of recent communications from Mr. Monty. Also, I would be grateful for the report of any discussions between the two Departments on the post-war relationship between External Affairs and Trade and Commerce officers stationed abroad.

The reply to any observations I make on this subject of consular representation is always the same. It is, to quote a sentence from your letter of December 12th, "Pressure of wartime activities has greatly expanded the work of the Department and we have been faced with a consequent scarcity of experienced personnel." I fully appreciate this difficulty, but we cannot keep urging it indefinitely as an excuse. I cannot really believe that it has been impossible for us to secure suitable men during the last twelve months for consular posts. I have, in fact, submitted in the last six months a number of names for this purpose, but nothing seems to have been done and in some cases my letters, or the letters of the applicants, written at my suggestion, have not even been acknowledged. It is hard for me to believe that with so many intelligent, educated officers and men coming back from overseas or being released from the Services in Canada, we cannot secure the consular personnel we would need. In this connection, your letter of December 20th rejects any analogy with the Trade Commissioner Service, on the ground that the qualifications for the head of a new diplomatic mission should be considerably higher than those for the head of a commercial office and that junior Trade Commissioners can be trained more quickly than Third Secretaries. I have some doubts about this myself, but in any case, I should think the qualifications of a Consul need not be much greater, nor his training more prolonged or complicated, than is the case with a Trade Commissioner. You also give your impression in this letter that External Affairs have recruited about twice as many men as Trade and Commerce have from the Armed Services. From the most recent list of Department of External Affairs postings, there seem to have been 18 Third Secretary appointments made by External Affairs within the last twelve months. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated in the House of Commons on December 11th that the Commercial Intelligence Services have recruited from the Services for service abroad, 30 new Assistant Trade Commissioners, who are now at work or will join the Trade Commissioner Service shortly. The comparison seems to be in favour of Trade and Commerce, and I think myself that it should be the reverse.

I realize, also, that the Department's hands are tied by the Civil Service regulations making it obligatory to give preference in appointments to ex-service men with overseas experience, a ruling which I think is entirely illogical and works out most unfairly; one which prevents us using an ex-officer in Washington for an administrative job who was ineligible for overseas service and did such good work for the Army here that he was decorated, while we are told to take an R.C.A.F. administrative officer who had never had operational or combat duty. However, that is another subject. In any event, this overseas preference regulation applies to Trade and Commerce as well as to us.

I will conclude by pointing out that at this Embassy at the present time there are five External Affairs officers and seven from Trade and Commerce; viz., Mr. Scott, Mr. Allen, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Paterson, Mr. Lewis, and two recently arrived Agricultural Products Trade Commissioners.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir,

I came away from Chicago more convinced than ever that we should convert our Trade Commissioner's Office there into a Consulate General and that the sooner this is done the better. There is, I think, a role of considerable importance to be played by the right kind of Canadian Consul General in that area. I greatly hope that steps can be taken to this end before long and that the existing Canadian Trade Commissioner's Office can be amalgamated with a Consulate General thereby increasing its effectiveness even within its present limits and opening up new areas of usefulness which would result from an appointment of this kind.<sup>1</sup>

Montreal, January 11, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Referring to our conversation of Tuesday last, January 8th, about Diplomatic Relations to be established between Canada and the Holy See, I will sum up the points that were discussed.

1. His Holiness Pope Pius XII has recently appointed His Excellency Most Reverend James Charles McGuigan, Archbishop of Toronto, to the Sacred College of Cardinals.

2. It is not only the outstanding personality of Archbishop McGuigan that is so honoured by the Pope, not only the Archdiocese of Toronto, or the English-speaking Catholics or, more widely, the Catholic Church of Canada, but it is Canada herself as a whole.

3. The fact of giving a second Cardinal to Canada is an act of great benevolence from the Holy See towards Canada. Many nations are so honoured, but, as you are well aware, many more are not represented in the Sacred College. For many years to come, considering the number of Catholics in Canada, roughly speaking 4,500,000, comparatively to other nations, we could not very well expect to have a second Cardinal.

4. Comparatively to the number of Catholics of other nations, big or small, Canada has the biggest share in the Sacred College: two for 4,500,000. There are five Cardinals in the United States for 25,000,000; six in France for about 37,000,000; eight in Italy for about the same number. We do not count as Italians those who are Citizens of Vatican City and are Heads of Departments or Prefects and Secretaries of Congregations for the administration of the Church. Even foreigners may be officials of Congregations as were, in recent years, Cardinals Gasket, Englishman, Van Rossum, Dutch, Lepicier, Billot and Tisserant, Frenchmen, Fruwirth, Austrian. One Secretary of State, Cardinal Merry del Val, under Pius X and Benedict XV, was Spaniard by his father and English by his mother.

5. The appointment of a second Cardinal for Canada is a recognition of the importance that Canada has won for herself amongst other nations in recent years. The American Magazine Time, in its edition of Jan. 7th, pp. 28-30, commenting on the appointment of the new Cardinals, says: "Canada's new place as a leading "middle power" was duly recognized by the selection of her first English-speaking Cardinal, Toronto's Archbishop James Charles McGuigan, to balance French-speaking Quebec's Rodrigue Cardinal Villeneuve."

The nomination of Card. McGuigan is also a recognition of the strength of the Catholic Church in Canada: 43%.

These two aspects are noted in Time when it says: "... Everywhere Cardinals were carefully placed for maximum spiritual and political effect."

That means that the Holy See has an eye wide open over Canada: importance of Canada as a nation, and importance of the Catholic Church in Canada.

6. This step taken by the Holy See in favour of Canada should not be ignored. The Holy See has its own language, not only by words, spoken or written, but sometimes more eloquent by deeds and facts. The recent action of the Holy See, giving a second Cardinal to Canada, is full of meaning. As I said in a Memorandum† on this matter of Diplomatic Relations between Canada and the Holy See, the Holy See will not take the initiative of negotiations with the Government of Canada, but because of the appointment of a second Cardinal for Canada, I am right in saying that the initiative of the Government for such negotiations with the Holy See is well invited.

7. Canada will never have a better opportunity in more favourable circumstances of making an excellent move to rank well with more than fifty nations for her own good and greatness. Cardinal McGuigan is highly esteemed amongst non-Catholics as well as amongst Catholics all over Canada. He was born in Prince Edward Island and all the Islanders are proud of him. As a priest he was engaged in ecclesiastical work in the Diocese of Edmonton, Alberta. He was appointed Archbishop of Regina, Sask. and from there was called to the See of Toronto.

The opposition that the Government might have expected from some non-Catholics to the establishment of Diplomatic Relations between Canada and the Holy See will be greatly reduced by the appointment of Cardinal McGuigan. I am sure that this nomination of Cardinal McGuigan and the establishment of Diplomatic Relations with the Holy See will do a great deal for the better understanding not only between Catholics of different language, but also between Catholics and non-Catholics, a better unity in Canada that is worth working for.

8. I also pointed out in our conversation that at the time of the Consistory there will be Diplomats from other Countries in Rome to receive the newly appointed Cardinals and to speak to the Holy See for their respective Countries, and the full Corps Diplomatique will be in St-Peter's Basilica to witness the elevation of thirty-two new Cardinals for nineteen different Countries. The place of Canada will be empty! when the Minister of China will be there, from a pagan nation. That will be unsavoury for us.

You have mentioned that there is no time before the Consistory to establish Relations with the Holy See and to send a Diplomat to Rome. But may I make a suggestion? There is still plenty of time to commission Ambassador Vanier of Paris to go to Rome and act officially for Canada in this most important circumstance. I am sure that such an initiative would be highly appreciated by the Holy See, by our two Cardinals in Rome and by all Canada.

This step would pave the way for successful negotiations between Canada and the Holy See for exchange of Diplomats in a near future.

Believe me etc.

PROPOSED SPECIAL DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION TO THE VATICAN

At the meeting of the Cabinet on January 24th, the Prime Minister mentioned a suggestion which had been made for the appointment of a special Canadian representative to attend the forthcoming public consistory at Rome for the elevation of the newly appointed Cardinals.

It was agreed that no action be taken at present for diplomatic representation to the Holy See.

In the course of conversation this morning, the Venezuelan Consul General, Mr. Pocaterra, spoke again about his Government's desire to establish direct diplomatic relations with Canada. I had promised him a letter which he could transmit to his Government, explaining the difficulties in the way of our taking early action, and I went over with him in conversation the points which such a letter would cover.

He said that his Government would welcome an arrangement under which we could designate one man as Minister to both Colombia and Venezuela, and possibly also to Ecuador. The three countries were very closely associated in a number of fields. Specifically, they had recently agreed on a joint programme for developing a single merchant marine for the three countries, and they are negotiating commercial treaties looking to the ultimate achievement of a customs union between them. A number of other countries had established a single diplomatic representative to all three, and had found the arrangement worked quite satisfactorily. Their capitals were now only an hour apart by air and if Chargés d'Affaires could be maintained in the capitals at which the Minister was not present, he thought questions of national susceptibility would be satisfied.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH VENEZUELA

Pressure for exchange of diplomatic missions with Venezuela, or at least for our consent to receive a Venezuelan representative in Ottawa, has reached a point at which it seems essential to make some reply to Venezuela. The difficulty has of course been in detaching the case of Venezuela from that of several other countries which wish to exchange representatives with Canada. I attach a memorandum of June 15 from Wrong,<sup>1</sup> which was not forwarded to you at the time it was drawn up; it outlines the various proposals for exchange of missions and makes certain suggestions as to dealing with them provisionally.

Since Wrong's memorandum was prepared a telegram of July 3 to you, of which I enclose a translation,† has come in from the Acting Foreign Minister of Venezuela; reminders have also been received from Dominions Office (tel. 108 of June 20)† and the High Commissioner's Office in London (tel. 1515 of July 8).†

The British Ambassador at Caracas, Sir George Ogilvie-Forbes, who has always shown a particularly friendly spirit towards Canada, reports that there is danger of Canadian economic interests in Venezuela being harmed if we are unable to meet the desire of the Venezuelan Government at least in part.

I attach for your consideration a reply to the Acting Foreign Minister's telegram to you, along the lines suggested by Wrong.<sup>2</sup> If you approve this, we can inform the Dominions Office and the Venezuelan Consul-General, who originally raised the question with us. You will note Wrong's view that Colombia and Uruguay must receive the same treatment as Venezuela.

treating for the establishment in Canada of a diplomatic mission from Venezuela, and assuring me of a welcome for a Canadian diplomatic mission from Venezuela.

I regret very much that it has not been possible to send an earlier reply to the proposal with which we have been honoured by the Government of Venezuela. The possibility of exchanging representatives with Venezuela has been very much in mind, but it has not been possible to reach a decision without also considering the whole question of expansion of Canadian representation abroad. There are at present seven countries represented by ministers in Ottawa in which it has not yet been possible to appoint Canadian representatives; twelve or more other countries have expressed an interest in an early exchange of missions with Canada, and a number of these proposals must be considered together. At the same time the Canadian Government has experienced great difficulty in finding suitable personnel for the manning of new missions. It may be mentioned that between 1940 and the beginning of 1946, it became necessary to establish 16 new Canadian missions abroad, besides reopening three in liberated territory. Participation in the United Nations, in other international organizations, and in numerous conferences on special subjects has been a further heavy drain on experienced personnel. Moreover, a number of Canadians who agreed temporarily to fill senior posts in the diplomatic service abroad or at home as a war duty have already returned or will soon return to their previous occupations.

In view of these circumstances, it would not be immediately possible for Canada to open a diplomatic mission in Venezuela; and until it has been possible to make some progress in making reciprocal appointments to a number at least of the countries presently maintaining missions in Ottawa, it would be much more convenient from the point of view of the Canadian Government if the opening of a Venezuelan mission to Canada might be delayed for a short time. The Canadian Government would then be in a better position to receive a mission from Venezuela, the appointment of which it would cordially welcome, and which the Canadian Government would wish to avail itself of an early opportunity to reciprocate.

I take the opportunity to assure Your Excellency of my highest consideration. W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada. Ends.

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, February 6, 1946

Dear General Vanier,

You will be interested in the most recent development in our enquiries and suggestions about the procedure for the various stages of the Peace Conference. As you know, the decisions reached by the Council of Foreign Ministers and by the meeting of Foreign Ministers in Moscow in December have never made quite clear the exact relations between the various stages of peace making.

When the French Government was invited to endorse the procedure proposed for the negotiation of the treaties, that Government questioned the provisions relating to the participation by the countries invited to the Peace Conference in the actual drafting of the documents. The French pointed out that the Conference would apparently only consider and make recommendations concerning the drafts of the treaties, and that decisions on those recommendations would be, in fact, taken by the countries responsible for the conclusion of the final drafts. They requested assurances that the work of the larger Conference would be fully taken into account, and that the tentative procedure should be interpreted in a generous manner.

Before making a reply to the French Government the United Kingdom Government put before the United States a preliminary statement of its views on procedure. Discussions at the Paris Conference should be as thorough as possible, and its results should be given serious consideration in relation to the final texts. Their definite proposal was that the final texts might be agreed upon by all the countries represented at the Paris Conference before that Conference dissolved. The answer to the French enquiry, however, as agreed upon between the United States and the United Kingdom, while giving an assurance of full consideration to the recommendations of the Paris Conference, did not go as far as the tentative United Kingdom proposal.

We, therefore, felt it desirable to seek a clarification of this point from the Dominions Office and in a telegram† expressed our view that substantial advantages would derive from a procedure which allowed for discussion between all parties concerned of the various points arising at the Conference; and that this would be a more effective procedure than later consideration by the Council of Foreign Ministers of whatever individual recommendations might arise from the Conference. Finally we enquired whether, in the view of the Dominions Office, the agreed reply to Paris, as mentioned above, left room for consideration of this point.

We have now been informed by the United Kingdom Government that they agree with our views that there would be great advantages in a procedure by which the final texts of the treaties were drawn up before the May Conference should dissolve. On the particular point of our enquiry they hold the view that the reply to the French Government does leave room for further consideration of such an arrangement. They add that informal discussion suggests that the United States authorities are sympathetic towards this suggestion.

It would be helpful if you would take some convenient opportunity of an informal conversation of this question with the French authorities. I feel that much would be gained by avoiding a break between the large Conference in Paris and the completion of the texts by the Great Powers. Purely formal recommendations on paper by the former would necessarily be less effective than discussion.

Yours sincerely,

[Ottawa,] March 19, 1946

MEMORANDUM ON PEACE TREATIES WITH ITALY
AND THE BALKAN SATELLITE STATES

The Canadian delegation to the Paris Peace Conference will in due course have to receive instructions from the Government. The following are some general considerations regarding Canada's relationship to some of the principal problems involved. The detailed commentary on the draft peace treaties, which has been prepared in the Department, is now pretty well advanced towards completion, although it will require review before it can be put into final form. The economic and financial aspects of the treaties have not yet been dealt with owing to pressure of work in the Economic Division. It is thought that when Mr. LePan returns to Ottawa he might be able to do some work on this aspect of the treaties. He is already well acquainted with the background of the subject.

It is obviously not possible to forecast with any certainty the circumstances in which the Peace Conference will meet in Paris. There are several alternative possibilities. The members of the Council of Foreign Ministers who are preparing the various drafts may reach pretty thorough agreement before the Conference meets. In that case it is possible that they will bring forward draft treaties on which they have reached agreement after arduous negotiations and which they will not wish to see changed in any essential points. Alternatively they may not be able to reach any agreement at all on the most important matters involved, in which case either the Conference may not meet at all, or it may become, like the Security Council in London, a forum for debate and dissension over fundamental issues involving the Great Powers. Perhaps the most probable development, if the Conference is to meet at all, is that hurried last moment agreement may be secured between the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, and the United States on the general solution of the major questions at issue. Such an agreement might well, however, leave over a number of questions still unsettled for discussion at the Conference.

The procedure to be followed at the Conference has not yet been laid down in any detail. No doubt there will be plenary sessions of the whole Conference, and the draft treaties will then be submitted to committees for detailed discussions. We have no information as to the order in which the treaties will be considered (although it seems likely that the Italian treaty will be begun first). After the treaties have been considered as drafts by the Conference, they will be submitted to the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers involved in the respective treaties for final consideration. It is not yet known whether this consideration will take place during the course of the Conference, or whether it will represent a separate stage and will take place after the Conference is over. Nor is it yet known at what stage it is intended that the ex-enemy powers shall be given a hearing. As the United Kingdom authorities have pointed out, this can hardly be done until substantial agreement has been arrived at among the victorious powers.

From the Canadian point of view the Italian treaty is by far the most important. We are definitely interested in the economic rehabilitation of Italy and her restoration to a place among the trading nations. We contributed to the fighting in Italy. We have contributed to military relief for the Italian people. We shall have a point of view to express and good grounds for expressing it. One general view will, no doubt, be that Italy must not be crippled by excessive reparations which will prevent the restoration of her economy and produce unstable political conditions.

While we have no detailed views on Italy's frontiers, we shall presumably support the general line agreed by the United Kingdom and the United States Governments with regard to Trieste and the Tyrol.

The problem of the future of Italy's colonies is one in which we are not directly involved but in which we cannot fail to take an active interest, first, because it is an outstanding issue of world politics, and secondly, because it may have very important effects on relations among Commonwealth countries, and on relations between the British Commonwealth and the United States, and, of course, on the whole problem of the relations of the western powers with the Soviet Union. It has been suggested that the Chiefs of Staff might be asked to prepare an appreciation for the use of the Canadian delegation to the Peace Conference of the effect on the security of Canada of the various alternative proposals for the disposal of the Italian Empire. In this connection it will be recalled that at the meeting of Commonwealth representatives to consider the future of the Italian colonies, which took place in London on the 15th February, 1946, Mr. Bevin said that he thought an appreciation should be prepared at once on the interests of the British Commonwealth and also of the United States in the Mediterranean area. He said that he would put this in hand at once in the Foreign Office, which would be assisted by the Dominions Office and the Colonial Office. This appreciation would include the strategic issues which were arising in connection with the Egyptian treaty. We have had no further word of progress made in preparing this appreciation, which would be of interest to the Chiefs of Staff in connection with their own military appreciation of the position as it affects Canada. Mr. Massey might perhaps be asked to make an enquiry of the Dominions Office as to the stage which has now been reached by the United Kingdom authorities in preparing their appreciation.

The South African Government have, of course, a particularly direct interest in the future of the Italian colonial empire. The attitude of South Africa is that Russia has not, in the words of General Smuts, "a vestige of a claim" to a foothold in Africa. The South African Government are nervous lest at a meeting of the Great Powers prior to the Paris Peace Conference, agreement should be reached over the disposal of the Italian colonies without South Africa having any voice in the decision. It would appear that as a matter of principle South Africa should be accorded a full opportunity to share in the decision as to the fate of the Italian colonies. If her claims for participation were ignored, this would represent a big power decision taken without consulting a power of middle size whose interests would be directly affected.

In any case the South African delegation to the Peace Conference, which will be headed by General Smuts, will, no doubt, appeal to Canada for support in questions affecting the future of the Italian colonial empire. The members of the South African delegation to the General Assembly have already spoken to members of our delegation about their anxieties and have expressed the hope that they will have Canadian support.

The Government of the United States have suggested the plan of collective trusteeship for the Italian colonies. This plan is opposed by the United Kingdom Government, although Mr. Bevin gave his reluctant support to it at the Council of Foreign Ministers in London. At a meeting of the Commonwealth representatives on February 15th in London the representatives of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa were all in agreement that an attempt should be made to persuade the United States Government to recede from the plan of a four power trusteeship. There is, therefore, a difference of view between the United States and most of the Commonwealth countries as to the best method of disposing of the Italian Empire. The Canadian position in this matter will, therefore, have to be closely considered.

So long as the Conference is dealing with Italian problems, the Canadian delegation may be in a position to make some solid and useful contributions to the discussions, and it should be possible to draft instructions for the delegation with regard to the peace treaty with Italy which would take into account genuine, if long term, Canadian interests. Our position with regard to the treaties with Roumania, Hungary and Bulgaria is different. We have little or no real Canadian interest, economic, strategic, or political, in these areas. We have only formally been at war with the countries concerned. We are totally lacking in experience in dealing with Balkan questions and in expert advisers who are acquainted, at first hand, with the complex issues involved.

Our position will not be rendered easier by the fact that it is impossible to feel much admiration or enthusiasm for the policies which the British, Americans and Russians have been pursuing in the Balkans since the termination of hostilities. So far as the Anglo-Saxon powers are concerned, they have placed great public emphasis on the necessity for maintaining democratic institutions and civil liberties in these countries. Yet it is common knowledge that democracy and civil liberties, as we understand them, have never existed in Roumania and Bulgaria. The case of Hungary is somewhat different. Hungary is one of the oldest parliamentary democracies. What has been lacking there (as in many western democracies) has been economic and social democracy. But in Bulgaria and Roumania rule by a small clique of politicians and army officers, rigged elections, police interference with individual liberty, brutality towards political opponents have been traditional. They have operated behind the facade of parliamentary democracy. It would indeed be optimistic to imagine that within a few months of a war in which all these countries have been involved, and in conditions of economic dislocation and semi-revolutionary disorder, it would be possible to install western democratic institutions which these peoples have never been able to develop in the most prosperous and stable periods in their history.

If ignorance is partly responsible for the blunders of Anglo-American policy in the Balkans, inconsistency and vacillation have also been prominent features. In this respect the Americans are more to blame than the British. Washington has blown hot and cold over Balkan questions. The events of August, 1945, in Bucharest are a good example of this dangerous and foolish policy. The American representative in Bucharest encouraged the harassed

King Michael and certain Roumanian politicians of the old Liberal and Peasant Parties to hope for more American support than would ever be forthcoming. Hence King Michael's attempt to rid himself of the Groza Government. But when it came to a showdown, neither the British nor the Americans could take any effective action to support the King's initiative. It is both cruel and unwise to encourage Roumanian and Bulgarian politicians to oppose the regimes in power in their respective countries unless they can be given substantial and consistent support.

The British have been more responsible in dealing with Balkan questions than the Americans, but the policies which they have pursued have hardly raised their prestige in Balkan countries. The fundamental need of these countries is political stability, a heightened standard of living, and a cessation of the interminable wars which have desolated the Balkan Peninsula ever since Turkish rule was withdrawn. It is quite probable that the best chance of achieving these objects is some sort of a Balkan federation. However, given existing conditions, such a federation could only come into existence under Russian auspices. A Balkan federation under Russian auspices would represent such an important increase of Soviet strength in an area so close to vital British interests that it can only be regarded with the greatest apprehension by any British Government. This is quite understandable, but it leaves the British open to the accusation that their interest in Balkan affairs is purely selfish and will not contribute to stability in this region. That is a very difficult accusation to rebut.

Soviet policy in the Balkans has been both ruthless and self-seeking. The Soviet Government have not been content to see friendly governments installed in Bucharest, Sofia and Belgrade. They have exercised pressure to keep the key posts in these governments for those who are serving the interests of Moscow before those of their native lands. The large Soviet armies in the Balkans are a standing threat to all parties who are not subservient to Soviet policy.

The Russians, however, have at least the advantage of knowing the Balkans. While their policies are determined by Soviet interests rather than by the interests of the countries concerned, there are occasions when these may coincide. One should not close one's mind to the possibility that the regime which has been set up in Bulgaria is more suited to the present condition of that country than a return to party government. The Russians are genuinely friendly to the Bulgarians, to whom they are attached by tradition, race and religion. Bulgaria has normally been under the influence either of Germany or of Russia. Her governments have never acted in accordance with western democratic practices. It may be that a strong authoritarian government, which includes many of those patriotic elements which contributed to ridding these countries of the Nazis, is more suited to Bulgaria and perhaps to Yugoslavia at the present time than parliamentary democracy on the western pattern. Certainly the efforts of the Soviet Union to improve relations between Bulgaria and Yugoslavia are to the mutual advantage of both countries.

On the other hand, Soviet policy in Roumania has shown complete disregard for the wishes and interests of the Roumanian population. Ruthless economic exploitation of Roumania has gone hand in hand with political oppression. A violent and unscrupulous puppet government has been installed in Bucharest. There are no traditional bonds of race or friendship to attach the Roumanians to the Soviet Union. On the Russian side there is oppression and contempt for the oppressed; on the Roumanian side there is a mixture of fear and cunning acquired in dealing with the conqueror under centuries of Turkish rule. In Hungary the situation is different again. The recent elections which returned the Small-Holders Party to power and the rebuff to the Hungarian Communist Party which those elections registered will, no doubt, cause dissatisfaction in Moscow. The Soviet Government are making vigorous and so far successful attempts to gain control of Hungary's national economy. It may be that before the Peace Conference meets pressure will be exerted in Budapest in order to change the composition of the Hungarian Government in a direction more favourable to the Soviet Union.

At the Paris Peace Conference it is unlikely that the future of the Balkan satellite states will be decided with primary reference to the interests of these countries themselves. Balkan questions are only one aspect of the clash of interests between the Soviet Union and the western powers which is going on all over the world. The Canadian delegation may find themselves in the position of giving support to any line of policy on which the United States and United Kingdom Governments are able to agree for the future of the Balkans. Without any direct interests of our own involved, we shall not wish to take any action which would embarrass the British and Americans in their handling of these difficult questions. The inter-connection between Balkan affairs and the whole position of the British in the Middle and Near East and the fact that the maintenance of that position is an essential bulwark against unlimited Soviet expansion may make it necessary for the Canadian delegation to give general support to British and American policies.

On the other hand, the Canadian delegation will not wish to gain the reputation of lining up mechanically with the United Kingdom and the United States on every Balkan issue involved without the exercise of independent judgment of our own, all the more so as British and American policies in the Balkans have not been particularly constructive. The Canadian delegation in Paris may, therefore, wish to hold a watching brief when Balkan questions are under discussion and to avoid taking a forward position in opposing Soviet policy in this area.

It is apparent that the Canadian delegation will have to steer a careful course at the Paris Conference. Our main interest will be in the Italian treaty, but we shall, no doubt, find ourselves concerned in all the major questions before the Conference, and unless prior agreement has been reached between the Soviet Union, the United States and the United Kingdom, we may well find ourselves part of an Anglo-Saxon team in a tussle of power politics extending over the Balkan Peninsula and the Mediterranean areas. The Balkan aspect is the one which interests us least directly, and when it is under discussion the Canadian delegation should play a discreet, minor, and, it is to be hoped, self-respecting role.<sup>1</sup>

MINUTE ON TELEGRAMS NO. D. 272 OF MARCH 23RD AND D. 145
AND D. 146 OF MARCH 16TH FROM DOMINIONS OFFICE—REVISION OF ITALIAN ARMISTICE

The attached telegrams D. 272 of March 23rd, † D. 145 and D. 146 of March 16th, † from the Dominions Office report the latest United Kingdom views on the United States proposals regarding the revision of the Italian armistice. The question arises as to whether it is desirable for us to make any comment to the United Kingdom Government at this stage.

Previous developments are summarized in a memorandum † on the top of the attached file.

The following apparently is the present position:

A) UNITED KINGDOM ATTITUDE

1. It is best to concentrate on the conclusion of the peace treaty at the earliest possible date;
2. To advance proposals for revising the armistice at the present time would encourage Soviet Government to delay consideration of the peace treaty.
3. According to the United States proposals the armistice terms would be revised by agreement with the Italian Government without consultation or concurrence of the other United Nations. The four Powers would act "in the interests of the other United Nations". This might vitiate the atmosphere of the Peace Conference.

Mr. Ritchie,

My monomania is an American Book—speedy reconversion—maintenance of full employment in the US—Bretton Woods—Export-Import Bank operations plus parallel policies here—with effective action to reduce tariffs etc. in creditor countries—will do more for political stability in Italy—and the marginal states than the wisest political arrangements produced in Paris. Those countries desperately need goods of all kinds—if we can supply them in cheap abundance and help Eastern Europe to get in shape to pay for what it wants we can out pull the USSR in the real tug of war.—In these days of scarcity—the ideological polls perhaps balance out—but this Babbitt believes—we can swing them over primarily by economic measures.

B) UNITED STATES ATTITUDE

1. The attitude of the United States Government as expressed by the United States Chargé d'Affaires to the Soviet Government is that the conclusion of a peace treaty with Italy cannot be expected before June.

2. That in view of the delay it is desirable that the Allies should support democratic elements in Italy in their efforts to establish a democratic state.

3. The abolition of obsolete restrictions which have already been relaxed in practice would not affect United Nations claims against Italy.

4. The United States proposals for a revision of Armistice terms are not to be regarded as a provisional peace.

C) U.S.S.R. ATTITUDE

1. The Soviet Government have taken the line that they are not opposed in principle to revision of armistice regime and favour measures which in one degree or another might relieve Italian position. However, they regard question as having lost pertinence in view of the forthcoming peace conference. They are however ready to consider United States proposals.

COMMENT

While it is obviously in the Canadian interest that every effort should be bent on the conclusion of the peace treaty with Italy as early as possible to encourage the rehabilitation of that country, it does not seem desirable or necessary for us to comment on the United States proposals for a revision of the Italian armistice terms. I have in mind the following considerations:

(a) that Canada was not a signatory of the armistice terms;

(b) the difference of view on the issue is mainly between the United Kingdom and United States Governments;

(c) in view of the slow progress made by the Deputies in drafting the peace treaty, it seems almost certain that the conclusion of the peace settlement with Italy will now be postponed. There seems good ground, therefore, for the attitude adopted by the United States Government. On the other hand, it is likely that if or when a revision of the Italian armistice terms is published, it will have an unsettling effect on Italy. It will confirm the impression that the Allies are being dilatory in making a peace settlement with Italy.<sup>1</sup>

I suspect that U.S. urgency is not as disinterested as it appears. This is an election year. The main point on which we might comment is that made in para 3 of D272. I don't want the U.K., however, to tell U.S. that Canada objects to revision without prior consultation, and therefore to be used as an argument for dropping the proposals. Let us, therefore, keep quiet.

THE PARIS CONFERENCE

There is still uncertainty over the date on which the Conference is to assemble.

The work of the Deputies on the preparation of the draft treaties has been proceeding very slowly and it now seems almost certain that agreed drafts will not be available by April 15th, the date formerly contemplated for the submission of the texts by the Deputies, for forwarding to the Governments which are to participate in the Paris Conference.

In recent weeks, Mr. Byrnes has been pressing Mr. Bevin to agree that a meeting of Foreign Ministers should be held as soon as possible with a view to accelerating the work of the Deputies. It was the United Kingdom view that it would be better not to proceed with plans for a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, until the difficulties existing in relations with the Soviet Union over Iran, had been diminished in the meeting of the Security Council.

As soon as difficulties had been eased in the Security Council, by the resolution adopted on April 4th, Mr. Bevin agreed to Mr. Byrnes taking the initiative in proposing a meeting in Paris on April 25th of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R. and France. All the four Governments have now agreed to this meeting.

It may be assumed that one of the main purposes of this meeting is to complete the preparation of the draft treaties. It is difficult, however, to foretell the effect the meeting of the Foreign Ministers will have on the timetable for the Conference. Both the United Kingdom and United States Governments have said publicly that they think the Paris Conference should open on May 1st, the date prescribed in the Communiqué issued after the meeting of Foreign Ministers in Moscow last December.

The Russians, on the other hand, hold the view that agreement must first be reached on the draft treaties. It is possible, however, they might agree on a date, on the understanding that the Conference will be given the uncompleted drafts of the deputies, and alternative drafts may be presented to the Conference on the principal controversial points. So far the French Government has favoured May 1st as the date for the Conference. However, the French elections are due to take place on June 2nd, and if the date is to be postponed much after May 1st, the French Government may urge a further postponement until after their elections.

As regards the timetable, therefore, it may be assumed that the Paris Conference will not take place on May 1st unless agreement is reached between the four Powers prior to their meeting on April 25th. This seems unlikely. On the other hand it is possible that the Conference may be convened sometime in May, notwithstanding the French elections.

Our Embassy in Paris has informed us that the officials in Paris responsible for the procedural arrangements have worked out a plan for presentation to the deputies in London. It is proposed that the Full Conference will be asked to designate four main Committees on—Political, Economic and Financial, Military and Territorial questions. These Committees will be further broken down into appropriate Sub-Committees. It is expected that since the Conference will be seeking to negotiate a set of peace treaties in precise and ratifiable form, most of the work will be done in these Committees, and there will be few plenary sessions, probably only at the beginning and at the end of the Conference.

According to the terms of the Moscow Agreement, the following countries will be represented:—Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom, United States of America, China, France, Australia, Belgium, Byelo-Russian Soviet Socialist Republic, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, India, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Union of South Africa, Yugoslavia and Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

It is expected that most delegations will be headed by their Foreign Ministers.

The French believe that the ex-enemy states may be invited to send delegations to Paris, headed by their Foreign Ministers, and they may be called upon to present their views in the course of the Conference.

It is possible that if agreement is not reached on all controversial points in the Council of Foreign Ministers before the Conference, the Ministers may continue their meeting during the Conference and after agreement is reached on controversial points, these points will then be referred to the Full Conference. In any case after the Full Conference has made its recommendations, the Council of Foreign Ministers will have to meet again, under the terms of the Moscow communiqué, to agree on the final treaties in the light of the recommendations of the Full Conference. It is hoped that the signature of the five treaties will take place in Paris at the conclusion of the Conference.

As the main work of the Conference will consist of drafting the treaty texts, it will be necessary for us to have a sufficient staff to enable us to participate effectively in the Committee work. I am told that the Foreign Office contemplate sending ten of their own officials, and in addition three or four economic and financial advisers, and one officer from each of the three services. Perhaps our own delegation on the advisory level might consist of seven or eight.

In anticipation of this Conference, work has been in hand in the Department in the preparation of a commentary intended to provide the Canadian delegation with the background of the problems with which it will be called upon to deal at the Conference. This commentary is limited to a statement of facts, which include historical background, material derived from Dominions office telegrams and also reports from our Missions abroad. Wherever recognized Canadian interests seem to be involved, these have been stated. It is hoped to have this commentary complete in the next week or two.

The role of the Canadian delegation, as also that of the delegations of the other 21 countries at the Conference, apart from the four sponsoring Powers, will be limited, under the terms of the Moscow communiqué, to examining and recommending alterations in the drafts prepared by the deputies of the Foreign Ministers. You will recall that the drafts produced by the Full Conference will still be subject to revision in the final drafting stage by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Because the principal frontier settlements will be based on a series of detailed decisions, the commentary provides the necessary information for the delegation. I am assuming, however, that the delegation's interests in the frontier settlements will be more general than particular, and directed towards the main objective of securing settlements of a durable character. Our direct interests are more clearly involved in such questions as the economic and financial provisions of the Italian peace treaty and the disposal of the Italian Colonial Empire. Here again the commentary is intended to provide the necessary facts. Our attitude to these controversial issues, however, still remains to be set down for the guidance of the Canadian delegation. We are preparing some draft suggestions for your later consideration on some of the main points at issue.

APPRECIATION RE DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES

APPENDICES

- A. Excerpt from the Charter of the United Nations, referring to the trusteeship system. †
- B. Map of Northern Africa, including Mediterranean Area. †

AIM

1. The object of this paper is to examine the possible effect on the security of Canada of the various proposals to be discussed at the Peace Conference in Paris for dealing with the former Italian Colonies, and to stress the military significance of their disposition.

PROPOSALS

2. The colonies concerned are Libya (Tripolitania and Cyrenaica), Eritrea, Italian Somaliland, the Dodecanese Islands, the Pelagian Islands, and Pantelleria—see Appendix B. The various possible courses of action comprise:

(a) the return of the colonies to Italy; their incorporation in the domain of adjacent small states, e.g., Eritrea to Ethiopia, Dodecanese to Greece; or their recognition as independent states.

(b) their disposition under the terms of international trusteeship either:

(i) directly under the United Nations Organization, or

(ii) under one or more individual states which would act as administering authorities.

Terms of trusteeship are given in Appendix A. The colonies may be dealt with uniformly under one of the above proposals, or individually under two or more of them.

ASSUMPTIONS

(a) The United Nations Organization has yet to prove its ability to maintain peace, and no nation can at present rely solely on the efforts of that body to preserve its national security.

(b) The control of strategic areas, therefore, becomes a matter of prime importance in relation to the likely alignment of the great powers in a future war.

(c) With the defeat of the Axis the only possibility of world war in the near future lies in a conflict between Russia on the one hand, and Great Britain and/or the United States on the other, together with their respective allies.

STRATEGIC CONSIDERATIONS

4. In the past the Mediterranean and Red Seas have been a vital line of communications between Great Britain and its possessions in Asia; and a direct route between the former and its oil supplies in the Middle East. World War II, however, proved that this highway could not be rendered safe by sea-power alone; and strategic emphasis has tended to shift from the Mediterranean itself to the North African coastal region. Moreover, this area lies between Russia and the West and would therefore be of great importance to both sides in any future conflict. Any foothold Russia might obtain in North Africa would strengthen its position and could serve as a base from which it might threaten the whole area including the West African Atlantic seaboard. In this connection it is pointed out that by the terms of international trusteeship (Appendix A—Article 84) an administering authority has legal right to develop the military potential of a trust territory.

5. If an unfriendly power should secure control of North and West Africa the effect on the security of Canada would be twofold because:

(a) the American continent can be directly menaced from West Africa;

(b) any weakening of the strategic position of Great Britain or the United States has an indirect bearing on Canada's defence.

6. For convenience it is desirable to examine the strategic implications of these statements in two parts.

PART I

DIRECT IMPLICATIONS FOR CANADA

7. In the hands of an unfriendly power the West Coast of Africa can be used to:

(a) menace shipping on the South Atlantic, and in Canadian and United States coastal waters.

(b) bring United States and Canadian harbours, and industrial centres on the Atlantic seaboard, within foreseeable sustained air attacks, and possible guided missile attacks.

(c) increase the opportunity of ship-borne aircraft (launched from carriers and submarines) to develop spasmodic hit and run attacks on the American continent.

(d) materially increase the threat to the Panama Canal.

(e) increase the possibility of gaining and maintaining a foothold on the South American continent as a base for further operations.

8. Conversely, if the West Coast of Africa were accessible to or under the control of friendly powers the strategic advantages would be as follows:

(a) Reduction of the threat to Atlantic shipping, and protection of the sea routes to Africa and the East via the Cape of Good Hope; an important line of communication should the Mediterranean become untenable.

(b) Denial of the Straits of Gibraltar to enemy shipping from the Mediterranean.

(c) Increased ability to develop an economic shipping blockade.

(d) Maintenance of air bases and protection of air routes to the Middle East.

(e) Provision of bases for the mounting and development of operations against enemy-held territory in the Middle East or in Europe.

(f) Africa is more than ever essential as a counter-balance should Spain, Portugal, the West Coast of France, and Southern Europe be in unfriendly hands.

PART II

UNITED KINGDOM AND UNITED STATES INTERESTS IN MEDITERRANEAN AFRICA AND MIDDLE EAST

9. Until the United Nations organization proves itself, Canada cannot ignore the indirect protection afforded by Great Britain and the United States and therefore, anything that affects the vital interests of these two powers has a bearing on Canadian security.

10. Major U.K. and U.S. interests in the Mediterranean, Africa and Middle East are as follows:

(a) Oil resources (a requirement common to U.S. and U.K.). It has been estimated by the U.K. Ministry of Fuel and Power that in a further combined U.S./U.K. war effort, (1955-60) their annual oil supply without Middle East production would fall short of a total requirement of 365 million tons by 53 million tons.

(b) Protection of sea route through the Mediterranean, the loss of which, apart from strategic considerations, places an additional strain on shipping resources.

(c) Protection of air bases and communications to the Middle East, India and Far East for:

- (i) Reinforcement of all types of aircraft by air.
- (ii) Movement by air of troops and supplies.

(d) The Middle East is considered as possibly the most suitable area to base the U.K. Imperial Strategic Reserves.

11. To counteract the possible threat of extension by Russia in this area, it is of importance:

(a) to increase the depth of the defensive system as far as possible about the areas of greatest strategic interest;

(b) to exercise sufficient control over North Africa so that it can be held against a Russian land attack. This is important in order to effect:

- (i) provision of bases and sufficient room to mount offensive action, and to support forces, in Persian area;
- (ii) denial of the Suez Canal to Russia;
- (iii) protection of air bases in Africa from which efforts can be made to deny Middle East oil resources to Russia;
- (iv) protection of air routes across Africa;
- (v) defence in depth of areas of greatest strategic importance and for ultimate protection of West Africa;
- (vi) denial of the Mediterranean itself to Russia and conversely to permit its use by those opposing her.

ITALIAN COLONIES

12. Specific military implications of the colonies, apart from the general strategic considerations discussed above, are as follows:

Dodecanese

To protect the Mediterranean communications and to enable assistance to Greece and Turkey, bases are desirable in these islands, particularly in Rhodes.

Tripolitania

If Tripolitania is demilitarized and returned to Italy it is desirable to obtain the right to use and develop the airfield at Tripoli as a staging point on the route to the East.

Cyrenaica

Naval and air bases in the Benghazi area are of considerable importance in respect to security of Mediterranean communications.

Eritrea and Italian Somaliland

These possessions have little military value on the positive side but would offer a serious threat if allowed to develop as bases of an unfriendly power.

Pantellaria and Pelagians

Offer no positive advantage but could be definite nuisance in unfriendly hands.

CONCLUSION

13. For the purposes of this appreciation the disposition of Italian Colonies has been considered solely in terms of the strategic requirements of the great powers concerned; and no consideration has been given to the most equitable solution from the point of view of the colonies themselves.

14. While it is realized that in the interests of the United Nations Organization concessions may have to be made to Russia, it is considered that each such concession will weaken the strategic position of the United States and Great Britain by forcing them to take neutralizing measures. Moreover, the spread of Soviet influence and discord can of itself render more difficult the task of maintaining peace in this area.

15. It is of great strategic importance to Canada as well as to the United Kingdom and United States that the USSR be prevented from establishing bases astride the vital Mediterranean-Red Sea line of communications or on the African mainland, therefore:

(a) Of the various proposals for the disposition of the Italian Colonies, exclusive Trusteeship by the USSR (particularly in the case of Tripolitania) is least compatible with United Kingdom, United States and Canadian strategic interests.

(b) A UNO Trusteeship of these Colonies which includes Russia as an active participant may tend to the expansion of Russian influence in the Middle East to the detriment of world security; this solution should be looked upon with reserve, at least until the UNO has proved its effectiveness. A UNO Trusteeship would, however, be preferable to an exclusive Russian Trusteeship.

(c) Alternatives which are considered preferable to (a) and (b) would be:

(i) the return of the Colonies to Italy

(ii) recognition of the Colonies as independent states

(iii) incorporation of the Colonies with, or under the administering authority of adjacent small powers not likely to come under the domination of the USSR.

(d) The most desirable of the various proposals would be the designation of the United Kingdom and United States, either jointly or separately, as administering authorities. It is felt that every encouragement should be given to the United States to assume responsibility in this area since the United Kingdom could not hold it against Russia without United States assistance.

Procès-verbal d'une réunion
Minutes of a Meeting

[Ottawa,] April 19, 1946

Record of a meeting held in Room 275, East Block, on Wednesday, April 17th, to discuss the economic aspects of the proposed peace treaty with Italy.

Present were:

Mr. Glazebrook
Mr. Reid
Mr. Pierce
Mr. Ignatieff
Mr. Soward
Mr. Audette
Mr. LePan
Miss MacCallum
Mr. Warren.

Mr. Ritchie opened the meeting and explained that the members present would be called together from time to time in order to consider what position the Canadian delegation to the forthcoming Paris Conference might adopt regarding some of the main issues which it is envisaged may be under discussion at that time. Any recommendations as to policy reached by the group would then be submitted to the Under-Secretary for his comment.

As Mr. LePan was shortly leaving for England, it was agreed that the meeting should discuss the economic aspects of the peace treaty with Italy, on which Mr. LePan had prepared a paper<sup>1</sup> for inclusion in the Commentary for the guidance of the Canadian delegation.

It was pointed out that there were four main points on which it was necessary to ascertain Canadian policy before the time of the Paris Conference.

(1) What is to be the Canadian position regarding the incorporation of commercial and financial clauses in the Italian peace treaty, including the question of Italian shipping and Italian civil aviation?

(2) What is to be the Canadian position regarding the payment of reparations by Italy?

(3) What is to be the Canadian position regarding Italian indebtedness for Canadian military relief?

(4) What is to be the Canadian position with regard to the Allied Military Lire Account?

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL CLAUSES

Mr. LePan explained that there were four proposals which might be considered. Firstly, the suggestion advanced by the Department of Trade and Commerce that a clause might be included in the treaty which would oblige Italy, on invitation, to join such organizations as the proposed International Trade Organization, International Monetary Fund, International Bank, etc.

This plan was rejected by the meeting on the grounds that it would mean compelling Italy to join organizations of which certain of the powers, i.e., Russia, and in the case of the Bretton Woods institutions, Australia and New Zealand, were not members.

The British proposal which would oblige Italy to extend unilaterally to all the United Nations for a period of five years most-favoured-nation treatment as far as duties were concerned, was then considered. It was the feeling of the meeting that this suggestion was open to the criticism that import and exchange controls are more effective ways of discrimination than tariffs and that these weapons would still be available to Italy under this proposed system. The inclusion of a most-favoured-nation clause could also be criticized in that, in so far as Italy would be obliged to extend this treatment unilaterally, it would be contrary to the spirit of wide international cooperation in matters of trade and finance. Mr. Pierce expressed the view that the United Kingdom proposal was not as restrictive as it appeared since the agreement would only be valid for five years after which time Italian freedom of action would be restored.

It was observed that the Soviet Union might take the position that no commercial or financial clauses should be included in the treaty, and the meeting agreed that action of this nature by the U.S.S.R. should be resisted, as it would leave the way open for conclusion by the U.S.S.R. of bilateral agreements with Italy which would tend to bring that country within the Soviet sphere of influence.

The United States proposal for the inclusion in the peace treaty with Italy of a general clause requiring Italian participation in international action for the expansion of trade, reduction of trade barriers, elimination of restrictive business practices, and the solution of international problems in the field of raw materials, was felt by the meeting to most clearly coincide with Canadian interest in this question. It was agreed that a wide formula should be sought which would permit Italian participation in international organizations, if and when it is agreed by the interested United Nations that Italy should become a member, and in the meantime, guarantee Italian cooperation to the fullest possible extent in all international action in these fields. It was agreed that the exact wording of the American proposals should be studied in order to ascertain whether it would meet possible Russian objections to compelling the Italian Government to participate in organizations of which the U.S.S.R. is not a member.

SHIPPING AND CIVIL AVIATION

On the question of the inclusion in the peace treaty of clauses regarding shipping and civil aviation, it was pointed out that present British proposals envisage that the Italian Government would not be permitted to subsidize the production of shipping or aircraft industries and that, therefore, the importance of Italian shipping and civil aviation in the international field would be negligible if these proposals were incorporated in the treaty. The meeting was, however, of the opinion that in the case of civil aviation the Italians should be obliged under a similar wide formula to that adopted for the financial clauses to participate and cooperate in agreed international action. It was agreed that we should explore whatever means could be devised to make pre-war Italian restrictive practices impossible in the future; it was recognized, however, that in view of the fact that there is no international authority for shipping, it was impractical to suggest the inclusion in the treaty of a clause similar to that proposed for Italian civil aviation.

REPARATIONS

Mr. LePan briefly reviewed the proposals of the U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States with regard to reparations from Italy. The U.S.S.R., he stated, held the view that Italy should be compelled to pay reparations in kind to the value of at least $300,000,000, to be divided between the U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia, Albania and Greece.

It is understood that the United States position is that the Italian economy is not sufficiently strong to allow of the payment of reparations, and that any such payment of reparations would indirectly be a charge on Allied relief to Italy. For this reason it is believed that the United States authorities will take the position that no reparations should be exacted from Italy.

It is the opinion of the United Kingdom and France that the principle of Italy's obligation to pay reparations should be recognized, but that it is doubtful whether Italy can in fact pay reparations without such payments becoming a charge on Allied relief to Italy.

The view was expressed that the approach to the problem of the above mentioned powers was in some respects unrealistic in that it was not known at the present time whether or not Italy has in fact a capacity to pay reparations. It was felt that in spite of Italy's co-belligerency reparations in kind should, if it is found possible, be paid to countries such as Yugoslavia, Albania, Greece and Abyssinia, which have suffered directly from Italian invasion. Such payment, it was assumed, would only be possible if the great powers were willing to waive their claims to reparations in this category. In this connection it was pointed out that if Canadian claim to reparations from Italy was waived that we would lose our right to dispose of Italian assets held by the Canadian Custodian.

The meeting was agreed that the repayment of military relief supplied to the Italians should have priority over payment on reparations account, and it was agreed that the first charge on the Italian economy, as it was on the German economy, in accordance with the principles laid down in the Potsdam Declaration, should be the payment for essential imports.

From these discussions the meeting concluded that a formula should be sought along the lines of the Potsdam Agreement which would be linked with the Italian capacity to pay in a way which would not prevent the peaceful economic recovery of Italy. The conclusion of the meeting was that Canada should maintain its right in principle to exact reparations from Italy until it can be shown by an economic survey that Italy is not in a position to pay such reparations without their becoming a charge on Allied relief. If it is found after such a survey that Italy has an excess of plant and equipment, particularly in war potential and heavy metal industries, consideration might then be given to once-for-all deliveries to the countries which had suffered directly from Italian aggression. It was recognized that this would be dependent on the waiving of the claims of the great powers for reparations from Italy in this category. On the question of Italian current production the meeting was of the opinion that the first charge against the proceeds of such industries should be payment for essential imports. For the purpose of this formula military relief from the date of invasion should be considered an essential import. The meeting was inclined to agree that the repayment to Canada of military relief might be deferred until such time as the Italian balance of payments would permit of the liquidation of this debt without undue strain on the Italian economy. When payment for essential imports, including military relief, has been made, any surplus out of current production might then be applied to the payment of general reparations to those countries which would not waive their claims. The meeting agreed that Canada should maintain its right to dispose of Italian assets held by the Canadian Custodian.

MILITARY LIRE ACCOUNT

Mr. LePan explained that as a matter of grace the Canadian Government might make an amount of foreign exchange equal to the value of the Canadian Military Lire Account available to the Italian Government. This, it was felt, would be in line with the United States policy and would have the advantage of permitting on a small scale the re-establishment of trade with Italy before the granting of a loan, which presumably could not be negotiated until after the conclusion of the peace treaty. It was also pointed out that there would seem to be no objection to the scheme in equity since the bulk of Allied Military lire paid out to Canadian troops was issued after Italy had become a co-belligerent.

MEMORANDUM ON THE ECONOMIC ASPECTS
OF THE PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY

A study of the economic aspects of the proposed peace settlement with Italy has indicated that there are three main questions in which Canada has an appreciable interest. They are:

(i) What is to be the Canadian position regarding the incorporation of commercial and financial clauses in the Italian peace treaty, including the question of Italian shipping and Italian civil aviation?

(ii) What is to be the Canadian position regarding the payment of reparations by Italy?

(iii) What is to be the Canadian position regarding Italian indebtedness for Canadian military relief.

These issues, which it is envisaged, will be discussed at the forthcoming Paris Conference, have been considered in the light of the various proposals for their solution which have been advanced by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and the U.S.S.R., and the following is the position which, it is suggested, might be taken by the Canadian delegation in the deliberations at the Paris Conference.

(1) COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL CLAUSES

In the interests of multilateral international trade, the Canadian delegation should support the inclusion in the peace treaty with Italy of a clause which would secure Italian participation in international action for the expansion of trade, the reduction of trade barriers, the elimination of restrictive business practices, and the solution of international problems in the field of raw materials. This is in line with the general policy advocated by the United States Government in this field.

On the question of civil aviation, the Canadian delegation support the inclusion in the peace treaty of a wide formula similar to that proposed for the financial and commercial clauses, which would obligate Italy to cooperate and participate in agreed international action.

In view of the fact that at the present time there is no international authority for shipping, it seems unlikely that any clauses will be included in the peace treaty along the lines proposed above for civil aviation. However, the Canadian delegation should support any proposal which would make pre-war Italian restrictive shipping practices impossible in the future.

(2) REPARATIONS AND MILITARY RELIEF

The question of reparations from Italy and payment by Italy for military relief supplied by Canada, in co-operation with the United Kingdom and United States, are so inter-related that they are considered in this memorandum together. The proposals of the Great Powers with regard to reparations from Italy differ substantially. The U.S.S.R. has taken the position that reparations up to the value of $300,000,000 should be exacted from Italy to be shared by the U.S.S.R. with Yugoslavia, Albania and Greece. The United States, on the other hand, believe that it is not possible for Italy to pay reparations, unless such payments are to become a charge, in fact, on Allied relief. The Canadian delegation might be well advised to reserve its right in principle to reparations from Italy, until a survey of the Italian economy is made which would indicate whether or not Italy is in fact in a position to pay reparations, without such payments either becoming a charge on Allied relief, or permanently retarding the economic recovery of Italy.

If it is found after such a survey that Italy has a surplus of plant and equipment, particularly in war potential and heavy metal industries, consideration might then be given to some once-for-all deliveries to countries such as Yugoslavia, Albania, Greece, Abyssinia, which have suffered directly from Italian aggression. It is recognized that the payment of reparations in this category to these countries would be dependent on the waiving of the claims of the Great Powers to reparation in that form.

As regards current production, the Canadian delegation might support the Potsdam formula that the first charge should be made for the payment of essential imports. For the purpose of this formula, the Canadian position should be that military relief from the date of the Italian invasion should be considered an essential import. Consideration might, however, be given to deferring the repayment of Canadian military relief until such time as the Italian balance of payments indicates that this debt could be liquidated without undue strain on the Italian economy.

When payment for essential imports including military relief, has been met, any surplus of current production might then be applied to the payment of general reparations to those countries which have not agreed to waive their claims.

Canada should maintain its right to dispose of Italian assets held by the Canadian Custodian.

Apart from the question of claiming general reparations from Italy, the Canadian delegation should take the position that any pre-war Canadian property or legal rights and interests in Italy should be restored, in their condition at the outbreak of war. If such restoration is found impossible, full compensation should be made by the Italian Government in United States dollars or other acceptable currency.

PREPARATION FOR THE PARIS CONFERENCE

The possibility of a general conference of twenty-one countries taking place in the near future to deal with peace treaties with Italy and the minor European enemy states, as originally planned, seems to be receding in the face of the evident failure of the Foreign Ministers to compose their differences on the main outstanding issues. However, we have continued with our own preparations.

The commentary is almost completed and a copy will be given to you next week. A group consisting of Messrs. Ritchie, Glazebrook, Reid, Pierce, Soward, Audette, Warren, Miss MacCallum and myself have been meeting to consider what attitude the Canadian delegation might adopt on some of the issues which are of more direct concern to Canada. Attached is a memorandum which summarizes the conclusions reached in a discussion of LePan's paper on the economic and financial clauses in the peace treaty with Italy, which he prepared for the commentary.

At a meeting of the group last Wednesday the various proposals with regard to the disposal of the Italian Colonies were discussed. Miss MacCallum has prepared a paper† for the commentary which was the basis of discussion. The group thought that there was a strong note of unreality in its discussion in the light of the proceedings in the Council of Foreign Ministers in Paris. There was some doubt as to whether we could develop any useful views here when the proposals keep changing, and in any case our interest was of such a general nature. It was agreed, however, that the main conclusions of the discussion should be summarized in a brief paper, to which would be attached a military appreciation on the question prepared by the Chiefs of Staff.

It would be helpful if you would indicate what further studies you think it would be useful to make in relation to the peace treaties. At present we have the main facts summarized in the commentary, but few ideas on the subject.<sup>1</sup>

CANADIAN POLICY IN RELATION TO THE ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF THE PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY

Assuming it is agreed that it is in Canada's interest to contribute to a set of arrangements in the Italian settlement which would give maximum opportunity to Italy to be an independent, self-sustaining country, co-operating in free association with the countries of the west, there are certain things that Canada, acting with the United States and the countries of the Commonwealth, can do to further this aim. These include the following:

(a) the weight of the present and future international indebtedness of Italy arising from reparation and war debts should be reduced to a minimum. This would involve

(i) the foregoing of reparations on inter-governmental account. This would not, however, exempt Italy from settling individual debts, commercial and private, or restitution of Allied property in Italy or payment of compensation in default, possibly out of Italian external assets.

(ii) waiving or suggesting a moratorium on the payment of the Italian debt for relief supplies. Canada's share amounts to $28,000,000.

(b) Consideration might be given to the granting of export credits to Italy to meet the immediate Italian requirements for certain raw materials, including food. This however, raises the question of whether it is possible for Canada to consider at this time, for political considerations, giving outright export credits to Italy. In order to have any moral effect in Italy, some publicity presumably would be required in granting the credits. On the other hand the Department of Trade and Commerce suggested using for this purpose the Allied Military Lire account. Canadian expenditure of Allied Military lire amounted to $11,469,216. If the Italian Government is to be reimbursed with foreign exchange equivalent to this amount used by the Canadian troops in Italy, it has been suggested that perhaps $3,000,000 might be used to finance immediate Canadian exports to Italy. We could not assume, however, if this method were adopted that there would be much response on the part of the Italian Government to this gesture. Moreover, if either measure were adopted it would be necessary to ensure that such credits or loans should not be used directly or indirectly for the purpose of reparation payments to other countries.

I doubt whether there is much profit in our seeking to work out solutions. What is most likely to happen is that we shall be asked whether we can accept proposals (or choose between alternative proposals) prepared by the four Foreign Ministers. We need, in order to do this promptly, the data in the commentary and an affirmation of direct Canadian interests. The main value of the preparatory work may be for use before the Paris Conference (if it occurs) rather than at it.

(c) It would be necessary to support proposals for a settlement of the frontiers of Metropolitan Italy (the Colonial question is dealt with in a separate memorandum), which would leave the maximum essential natural resources to Italy consistent with the satisfaction of justifiable claims on ethnographic grounds of neighbouring United Nations. In this connection, the bauxite and coal deposits located in the disputed area of Istria are particularly relevant.

(d) The inclusion of terms in the peace treaty should be advocated to facilitate or at least enable Italy to enter into multilateral arrangements with the countries of the west, with regard to international trade, monetary policy, civil aviation, shipping, and in general to co-operate with the social and economic agencies of the United Nations.

If the above general propositions are acceptable, as being in accord with Canadian interests, and therefore to be advocated in the peace conference, it is proposed that an inter-Departmental meeting should be called to discuss these questions. It is proposed that among those present at the meeting should be the Deputy Ministers of Trade and Commerce, Finance, and the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Count Cossato, the Italian representative, called on me on July 6th to present the attached letter† addressed to the Prime Minister, together with the enclosure† which consists of a note sent by the Italian Foreign Minister to the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R., and France, regarding the Italo-Yugoslav frontier and Trieste.

Count Cossato asked whether it would be possible for the Prime Minister to grant him an interview before his departure to attend the Paris Conference. He said that he fully appreciated that the Prime Minister would not wish to enter into the details of the territorial settlement between Italy and Yugoslavia. He said he knew, however, Mr. King's interest in arriving at a just and permanent peace settlement, and he hoped, therefore, that the Prime Minister might feel able to say something on behalf of Italy, perhaps in private conversation with the British and American delegations. In particular, the Italian Government desired that their case over Trieste should be heard at the Peace Conference, together, of course, with the Yugoslav case, and that an Italian representative should be admitted to the Conference for this purpose. He hoped that Mr. King on the grounds of justice would support this proposal.

Count Cossato said that the peace terms, as they seem to be emerging from the Council of Foreign Ministers at Paris, would come as a blow to Italy. The Italian referendum on the monarchy had been conducted in a most orderly manner; the new Italian republic was just finding its feet; and the people of Italy were beginning to build for the future. He feared that a harsh peace treaty which ignored the part which Italy had played as a co-belligerent would come as a great shock to his people and might have an unsettling effect in Italy. The Communists would make propaganda to the effect that the United States and the United Kingdom had abandoned Italy. Not only was Trieste being taken from Italy, but large areas of Western Istria populated by Italians were being turned over to Yugoslavia. Italy was being asked to sign away her colonies. Italy was being asked to pay reparations to the Soviet Union. The Italian Communists would argue that these decisions proved that the Soviet Union would have been a better and more powerful friend upon which to rely than the western powers.

I said that the good sense of the Italian people could surely be relied upon not to fall a victim to propaganda of this kind.

Count Cossato said that he would like to be able to report to Rome as to whether the Prime Minister would be good enough to grant him an audience. I assured him that he would receive a reply on this point.

In Mr. Ritchie's absence Mr. Pero Cabric, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the Yugoslav Legation here, paid me a visit this afternoon and stayed for over an hour.

The purpose of his visit was to enquire "informally" as to the probable line which the Canadian delegation to the Paris Peace Conference would take on some of the more contentious Italo-Yugoslav frontier problems. In particular, as might be expected, he was anxious to find out our views on Trieste. He put forward the argument that Canada and Yugoslavia should present what he kept referring to as a "united democratic front". Canada should, he felt, support her wartime ally in her claims against Italy.

I naturally did not offer any comment on his observations nor did I indicate what line our views on Trieste were, or were likely to be. I made it plain that I was not competent to comment and that I could only tell him in broad terms that it was in Canada's general interest to seek a settlement in the Mediterranean Basin which would assure a long period of peace. Generally, I adopted the tactic of letting him talk himself out, only interrupting the flow of words to spur him on or to direct him into new paths of thought, though preferably away from the points upon which he was seeking clarification. His peroration took him back to the invasion of his country by the Goths, Visigoths and the Vandals, and went through the various centuries up to the present time.

He seemed to think that the Yugoslav Foreign Minister, Mr. Simic, would be certain to attend the Peace Conference, although he had obviously not been informed in this respect.

In passing I learned that Mr. Cabric was born in Zara Dalmatia, that his father was a University professor. He himself attended university in Graz and Vienna. He has a sister still living in Yugoslavia.

Mon Gouvernement m'a chargé de vous transmettre la communication suivante:

Le Conseil des Ministres des Affaires Étrangères a reçu la mission urgente et importante de préparer les traités de paix avec l'Italie, la Roumanie, la Bulgarie, la Hongrie et la Finlande aux fins de soumission aux Nations Unies. La procédure selon laquelle seront établis les traités de paix a été déterminée comme il suit dans le texte final de la Conférence des Ministres des Affaires Étrangères des États-Unis d'Amérique, du Royaume-Uni et de l'URSS, réunie à Moscou du 16 au 26 décembre 1945, texte aux dispositions duquel les Gouvernements français et chinois ont adhéré:

«1. Seuls prendront part à l'élaboration par le Conseil des Ministres des Affaires Étrangères des traités de paix avec l'Italie, la Roumanie, la Bulgarie, la Hongrie et la Finlande les membres du Conseil qui, aux termes de l'accord conclu à Berlin et instituant le Conseil des Ministres des Affaires Étrangères, sont signataires des conditions de reddition ou considérés comme tels, à moins que le Conseil ne décide conformément à l'accord de Berlin, d'inviter d'autres membres du Conseil à participer à cette élaboration pour des questions les intéressant directement. Il en résulte :

Le Gouvernement français, agissant au nom du Conseil des Ministres des Affaires Étrangères, a, conformément à la décision du Conseil en date du 4 juillet 1946, l'honneur d'inviter le Gouvernement canadien, désigné au paragraphe 2 du texte précité, comme devant participer à l'examen des traités de paix avec l'Italie, la Roumanie, la Bulgarie, la Hongrie et la Finlande, à envoyer une délégation pour le représenter à la Conférence qui s'ouvrira le 29 juillet 1946 à Paris, au Palais du Luxembourg. SECRET

MEMORANDUM ON THE PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY
CANADIAN INTEREST IN THE DISPOSAL OF THE ITALIAN COLONIES
INTRODUCTION

It seems unlikely that the Canadian delegation to the Paris Conference would disagree with any solution of the problem of the Italian colonies which may prove acceptable to the Great Powers. While Canada has a general interest in the peaceful settlement of this question our direct concern is less vital than that of countries more closely affected by the Mediterranean situation.

FINAL DECISION ON ITALIAN COLONIES DEFERRED

2. The Four Powers have not agreed yet on the disposition of the Italian colonies, but have indicated that the final decision which is to be reached before July, 1947, or referred at that time to the General Assembly of the United Nations, is to be based on one of four alternatives or on a combination of these: (a) independence, (b) assimilation by a neighbouring country, (c) individual trusteeships or (d) United Nations trusteeships. The decision is to take into account the wishes of the inhabitants and the views of interested powers. The former may be ascertained by commissions which the Deputies are authorized to send to any or all of the territories. British pledges to the Senussi are to be borne in mind. The Arab League has claimed the right to be represented on any international organization which may be sent to investigate the wishes of the inhabitants of Libya.

3. The United Kingdom Government takes the view that active belligerents should be consulted on the disposition of the Italian colonies before the General Assembly is consulted, and is, therefore, inclined to attach some importance to views which may be expressed by delegates attending the Paris Peace Conference. It will be proposed by the Four Powers at the Conference that Italy should be required in the treaty simply to renounce its colonies rather than to cede them to any designated group of powers. Meanwhile the Deputies are continuing to study the various proposals offered by the four Foreign Ministers during the May meeting of the Council in Paris.

PARIS MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS, MAY, 1946

4. These showed a marked divergence. The delegate of the U.S.S.R. suggested that each of the Italian colonies might be placed under a ten-year joint international trusteeship, exercised in each case by two states—one of the major Allies and Italy. In addition, the Soviet representative proposed that an advisory committee of five might be set up for each colony, composed of one representative of each of the three powers not exercising the trusteeship and two representatives of the local inhabitants. In this connection the Soviet delegate advanced the claim of the U.S.S.R. for the post of administrator in the case of the proposed trusteeship for Tripolitania.

5. The United States delegate continued to advocate a collective trusteeship for each of the Italian colonies under the United Nations. M. Bidault restated the French Government's view that Italian trusteeship for the colonies was the only practical solution of the problem. The Italian Prime Minister, meanwhile, told Mr. Bevin in confidence that his Government was prepared to surrender all colonies to the United Nations on the understanding that the latter would dispose of them after the wishes of the inhabitants had been consulted.

6. The British Foreign Minister advanced the view that Libya, comprising Cyrenaica and Tripolitania, should be treated as an independent state, and that representatives of the inhabitants should be consulted as to its constitution. An amplification of the British proposals indicated that a regime was envisaged in Libya similar to that of a Class A mandate under the League of Nations; i.e., one applied to a community whose existence as an independent nation could be provisionally recognized, subject to the rendering of administrative advice and assistance until the territory was able to stand alone. (Of this group Iraq was the most successfully administered. Here a formal mandate was never adopted. From 1922 onward Anglo-Iraqi relations were defined in a series of increasingly liberal treaties, the first of which stated that British advice and assistance would be provided without prejudice to Iraq's national sovereignty.) For Italian Somaliland, Mr. Bevin suggested union with British Somaliland, the Ogaden and the "reserved areas" of Ethiopia under a United Kingdom trusteeship. (In June, however, this proposal was withdrawn). He urged that no decision be made regarding Eritrea until the views of the Ethiopian Government had been ascertained.

7. In later phases of the May meetings both Mr. Bevin and M. Molotov offered new proposals. M. Molotov agreed with France that Italy should be appointed trustee for each of the colonies, but under a ten-year time limit in Libya. Mr. Bevin then said he would agree to an Italian trusteeship for Tripolitania provided the United Kingdom were made trustee for an enlarged Cyrenaica.

CANADIAN INTEREST

8. The primary Canadian interest in the disposal of the Italian colonies is in having the Great Powers concerned resolve their differences to the end that peace may be concluded. For this reason, as noted above, the Canadian delegation would be likely to support any solution agreed upon by the Four Powers.

9. The second Canadian interest with regard to the disposal of the Italian colonies concerns military strategy in the Mediterranean in relation to the defence of Canada. In this connection an appreciation, prepared by the Chiefs of Staff Committee, of Canadian strategic interest in the Mediterranean is attached.<sup>1</sup>

10. The basis of the conclusions of the Chiefs of Staff is that it is of great strategic importance to Canada that the U.S.S.R. be prevented from establishing bases astride the Mediterranean-Red Sea line of communication or on the African mainland. In their opinion the most desirable solution of the problem of the Italian colonies would be to designate the United Kingdom and the United States, either jointly or separately, as the administering authority. They oppose a United Nations collective trusteeship which would include Russia as an active participant, since this might tend to the expansion of Russian influence in the Middle East and in East Africa. For this reason they would prefer to a United Nations collective trusteeship either the return of the colonies to Italy or their recognition as independent states or their incorporation with adjacent small powers not likely to come under the domination of the U.S.S.R.

11. It should be noted, however, that the Chiefs of Staff, in preparing their appreciation, lacked precise information regarding the nature of a United Nations collective trusteeship, and it is, therefore, probable that they over-emphasized the degree of active participation which the Soviet Union would have in a system of collective trusteeship for the Italian colonies. Under collective trusteeship, the administrator of a colony would be appointed by the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations and would be responsible to it. He would in no sense be responsible to the local advisory committee on which the Soviet Union would have one of the seven seats. On the Trusteeship Council, to which he would be responsible, the Soviet Union would not be able to dictate policy since it would have no power of veto and would control only one or two of the eight or so votes. Objections to collective trusteeship are more likely to be sustained in other respects. It may prove difficult to finance development of territories for which no single power is individually responsible. Complications are not unlikely to result from the expression of divergent opinions on political, economic, social and educational questions within the territory by Councillors of different nationalities, each of whom will be subjected to pressure by local minority groups and possibly by outside interests as well. The consequence of the difficulties foreseen by various governments would be to retard achievement of the aims set forth in Article 76 of the Charter.

12. The third major Canadian interest in the disposal of the Italian colonies is concerned with questions of strategy which arise out of the relations between the Soviet world and the Western world. The Soviet Union in its propaganda about the Italian colonial question will do its best to pose as the defender of the rights of non-European peoples against Anglo-American imperialism. One of the present great sources of the strategic weakness of the Western world especially in the Middle East, arises out of the discontent of the non-European peoples, which makes it much easier for the Soviet Union to extend its influence in the areas concerned. In order to build up our defence against Soviet expansion, it is essential that the Western world take away the initiative from the Soviet world on colonial matters and press for an early realization of the ideal of independence for non-self-governing peoples. This policy is risky, but less risky than letting the Soviet Union get away with posing as a defender of the rights of non-European peoples and using anti-imperialism as a wedge to divide the United States from Great Britain, The Netherlands and France. It is, therefore, essential that the Western powers propose a settlement of the Italian colonial problem which would be more acceptable to the native population and to the Arab bloc than the proposals put forward by the Soviet Union.

13. The Arab League welcomed Mr. Bevin's suggestion that Libya's independence should be recognized. The Secretary of the League stated that if this were done there would be no objection on the part of Arab countries to the lease of a port or the use of other facilities in Libya by British forces whose withdrawal from Egypt has been requested. Mr. Bevin's plan, however, did more than provide for the continued protection of British lines of communication and the satisfaction of fundamental considerations on which the Chiefs of Staff Committee based its recommendations. It also offered a good prospect of strengthening the influence of the democratic nations in an area where the former denial of independence won for the Allies indifferent friends during the recent war and cost them many lives and possibly months of difficult fighting. It is to the interest of the Commonwealth as a whole that any plan which may be substituted for Libyan independence shall ensure to the inhabitants without further delay the self-governing institutions of which they have hitherto been deprived.

PRELIMINARY DRAFTING

[DES TRAITÉS DE PAIX/OF PEACE TREATIES]

Under the terms of the Moscow communiqué the treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Finland will, in the first instance, be drafted by the signatories of the surrender terms relating to those countries, that is to say:

(a) the terms of the peace treaty with Italy will be drafted by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States, the U.S.S.R. and France.

(b) the terms of the peace treaties with Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary by the Foreign Ministers of the U.S.S.R., the United States and the United Kingdom.

(c) the terms of peace treaties with Finland by the Foreign Ministers of the U.S.S.R. and the United Kingdom.

Canada was not a signatory to any of the Armistice Agreements. These armistices were regarded by the Canadian Government as military instruments imposed upon states by the Commanders of the Allied Forces, and at the time the Canadian Government took pains to reserve its position in relation to the negotiation and signature of the final peace treaties with enemy states. [p. 21]

SIGNATURE OF THE TREATIES

As regards the signature, it is provided "that the final texts of the respective treaties so drawn up will be signed by the States represented at the Conference which are at war with the enemy states in question".

Canada's position as regards the declaration of war in relation to the countries to be dealt with at the Peace Conference is as follows:

Canada declared war on Italy, June 10th, 1940.

Canada declared war on Roumania, 7th December, 1941.

Canada declared war on Hungary, 7th December, 1941.

Canada declared war on Finland, 7th December, 1941.

Canada is not in a state of war with Bulgaria although certain provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act were applied to commercial relations between Canada and Bulgaria as a result of Bulgarian association with the Axis. Canada, therefore, will probably not be a signatory to the Peace Treaty with Bulgaria, but will sign the treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and with Finland. [p. 23]

CANADIAN INTERESTS

[DANS LE RÈGLEMENT ITALIEN/IN ITALIAN SETTLEMENT]

In general, the Canadian Government has shared the interest of the United States and the United Kingdom in encouraging the growth of stable economic and political conditions in Italy, and in supporting governments which sought to maintain contact with the democracies of Western Europe and America. While, following the withdrawal of Canadian forces from the Italian peninsula, official contact between Canada and Italy has been for the most part indirect, the Canadian Government has nevertheless given support to proposals, such as the extension of UNRRA aid, which were designed to assist in restoring the Italian economy. Normal contacts such as postal communications and parcel post facilities were restored at as early a date as possible, and the Trading with the Enemy Regulations were withdrawn in so far as they affected Italy. Steps were also taken to make it possible for Italians in Canada to organize relief for the assistance of their friends and relatives in Italy. In this respect, the policy of the Canadian authorities was altered in favour of Italy many months before permission was given to establish funds for aid in other enemy states.

Permission was also given for the establishment in Ottawa of an Italian Mission which, though it has been denied diplomatic or consular status, has been authorized to perform the functions of a Consulate General. Approval has also recently been given to the establishment of a Canadian Trade Mission in Italy, although there is no immediate prospect of a Canadian diplomatic mission being sent there. Moreover, as mentioned above, we replied to the Italian Representative's note of June 20th, 1946, by extending "the cordial good wishes of the Government of Canada to the Republic of Italy"; and Prime Minister King's telegram of July 6th to Signor de Nicola congratulated him upon his election "as Provisional President of the Italian Republic". [pp. 34-35]

[RÉPARATIONS ITALIENNES/ITALIAN REPARATIONS]

On the question of compensation for damage to United Nations property in Italy M. Molotov suggested that Italy should pay only a certain percentage of the compensation in view of her inability to pay reparation in full.

M. Bidault and the United Kingdom and United States delegates adhered to the view that compensation should be in full. No agreement has been reached on this question.

(iv) Canadian Interests

(a) General

Canada has a number of specific interests in the economic clauses of the peace treaty and these have been outlined below. Far more important, however, is her general interest to see that the economic provisions of the peace treaty contribute to a set of economic arrangements which, while clipping the wings of Italian imperialism, still make possible a decent life for the Italian people in free association with the countries of the west. It follows that measures to prevent the readoption of discriminatory trade practices chime in with Canada's interest, and that, in so far as it is possible in the peace treaty to go beyond these negative provisions and take some positive steps to wed Italy to a multilateral system, this also would be desirable.

(b) Specific

(1) Relief. In addition to contributing fully and promptly to UNRRA, Canada has provided Italy with supplies worth more than $28,000,000 as part of a scheme of military relief. This scheme was financed jointly by the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, and was in operation from the first allied landings in Sicily until July, 1945. In theory Canadian expenditures for this purpose are recoverable from the Italian Government; but it may be doubted whether repayment can in fact be made. Indeed, the United States Administration has recently come to the conclusion that it would be wise to drop entirely the claim for military relief against Italy and has been informally urging the United Kingdom and the Canadian Governments to adopt the same attitude. Apparently it is the United States view that it will be awkward for them at the peace conference to urge other countries to waive their claims for general reparations from Italy if the United States is maintaining its claim for repayment of relief. The complete abandonment of claims for repayment of military relief would raise difficult complications. In the first place, there is no intention of dropping similar claims against the allies in Western Europe which have received military relief. Indeed, demands for payment have recently been presented to France, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg and Norway. Secondly, if the claim against Italy were dropped either before or during the peace conference, a valuable weapon would be sacrificed which otherwise might be used to combat the demand that general reparations should be exacted from Italy, a thesis which, in view of the present state of the Italian economy, seems both undesirable and impracticable.

(2) Private Claims. At present the private claims against Italy which have been registered with the Canadian Custodian amount to $5,630,720. This total, however, may have to be revised either up or down. On the one hand, it should be remembered that the Custodian has not advertised for claims, and if this is done the total may be considerably increased. On the other hand, some of the claims which have been submitted may prove, on examination, to be in excess of what is warranted by the facts; and in that case the total would be reduced.

The total of Italian assets held by the Canadian Custodian is a very similar figure. It now stands at $5,977,683. In one United Kingdom draft it has been proposed that a clause should be included in the peace treaty empowering those of the United Nations that wish to do so to utilize Italy's assets in their territories to meet pre-war Italian indebtedness to residents of the country concerned. There would appear to be no reason why this clause should not be broadened to allow each of the United Nations to use Italian assets in their possession to satisfy any private claims from their residents, whether these arose from transactions made before the war or from damage suffered during it. In this way Canada might be fortunate enough to discharge all the legitimate private claims which have been or may be registered out of the proceeds of the Italian external assets now held by the Canadian Custodian.

(3) Allied Military Lire Account. If the Italian assets now held in Canada do not prove adequate to satisfy all legitimate claims, the Custodian has suggested that the Allied Military Lire Account might be used for this purpose.

During the last stages of the campaign in Sicily and throughout the Italian campaign, Canadian troops were paid with Allied Military Lire issued on the authority of the United Kingdom and United States Governments. The equivalent in Canadian dollars of Allied Military Lire received by Canadian paymasters up to the 31st of December, 1945, was $11,469,216. In international law there is no obligation on the Canadian Government to consider this a debt owed to the Italian Government. The United Kingdom Government, whose account under this head is very large and now exceeds £32,000,000, has decided to maintain its rights and to refuse to make the equivalent foreign exchange available to the Italian Government. The United States had followed the opposite policy. Shortly before the last Presidential election, and perhaps with an eye to the votes of the large numbers of electors in the United States of Italian extraction, Mr. Roosevelt announced that it had been decided to reimburse the Italian Government with foreign exchange equivalent to the amount of Allied Military lire used by the American troops in Italy. The United Kingdom have indicated that they intend to press for inclusion in the peace treaty of a clause reaffirming the obligation imposed on Italy by Article 23 of the Armistice to furnish lire for the use of the Allied Forces in Italy. Even if this were done, of course, it would still be open to any of the United Nations to reimburse the Italian Government as a matter of grace if they wished to.

The Department of Trade and Commerce has suggested that part of the Allied Military Lire Account, say $3,000,000, might be used to finance Canadian exports to Italy, since it appears certain that by no means all of the funds now in this account will be needed to meet the private claims of Canadian nationals. By following this course, the Canadian Government would be assuming an obligation towards Italy which is not enjoined by international law. It has been argued, however, that such an act of grace would have great advantages for Canada as well as for Italy. The Italian Government would be enabled to obtain some of the goods which it urgently needs over and above the essential imports now being provided by UNRRA. Canada, for its part, would be given an opportunity to resume exporting to Italy even if only on a small scale. Since there is no immediate prospect of granting a credit to Italy, the use of the Allied Military Lire Account would seem to provide the only available method of reopening the Italian market to private Canadian exporters. It has also been pointed out that the Allied Military Lire Account is such a special case that using it to finance trade with Italy would not necessitate the immediate consideration of alternative methods of financing trade with Italy's neighbours. Moreover, there would seem to be no objection to the scheme in equity since the bulk of Allied Military Lire paid out to Canadian troops was issued after Italy had become a co-belligerent.

(4) Trade. Canadian trade with Italy is historically and potentially of far greater importance than Canadian trade with any other of the four countries with which peace treaties are to be negotiated at Paris. In 1930 Canada exported goods to Italy to the value of $15,360,000. During the succeeding years this figure dropped steadily. In 1939 the value of Canadian exports was only $2,231,000. The chief reason for this decline was the Italian policy of self-sufficiency and of import and exchange restrictions. It is the view, however, of the Department of Trade and Commerce that the immediate pre-war figures give no fair indication of the possibilities of permanent, long-term trade between the two countries.

The Chief exports during the period 1930-1939 were wheat, nickel, wood pulp, fish and fish products, copper and copper products, lead pigs, asbestos and asbestos sand. The Department of Trade and Commerce believe that in future there should be a steady and expanding market for all these goods. In addition, Canadian agricultural implement manufacturers consider that they should have an excellent opportunity of obtaining for Canada a substantial volume of business.

Canadian imports from Italy amounted in 1930 to $5,463,000. This figure had dropped by 1939 to $2,354,000. The chief imports during that period were lemons, citron rinds in brine, olives in brine, nuts, canned vegetables, olive oil, wines, raw hides and skins, leather and its manufactures, cheese, dyed or printed cotton fabrics, silk fabrics and warps, mercury, and tobacco pipes.

The restrictions which had been imposed by the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada during the war on private trade with Italy were removed in September 1945. As a result, United States exporters have shipped large quantities of electrical equipment, oil, cotton, wool and cellulose. This trade has been financed by the dollars equivalent to the Italian Lire issued as pay to the United States troops in Italy, and out of the dollar proceeds of remittances by Italian emigrants to their families and friends at home. Owing to the difficulties of finance, there has been no parallel resumption of private trade between Canada and Italy. The Italian Government is anxious that means should be found to reopen this trade as quickly as possible. Recently the Italian Commercial Counsellor in Ottawa has indicated that Italy is now in a position to make a start in exporting to Canada; he has mentioned particularly raw silk and marble. In return, Italy would like a large range of Canadian food-stuffs. A Canadian Trade Commissioner has now taken up his duties in Rome and is investigating the immediate possibilities for Canadian exports.

(5) Subsidiaries of Canadian Companies. Aluminium, Limited, of Montreal, fully owns the three following subsidiaries in Italy:

S.A. Mineraria Triestina (bauxite mining)

S.A. Prodotti Chimici Nazionali (alumina producing)

Societa dell' Alluminion Italiano (aluminium smelter).

The bauxite mines owned by the Italian Company first named above are chiefly situated in the disputed area of Istria which is now under the control of the Yugoslav Government.

(6) Military Surpluses. The United Kingdom has proposed that a clause should be included in the peace treaty whereby Italy would acknowledge her debt in respect of the value of surplus army stores left behind in Italy. This question is of negligible interest to Canada. The only Canadian military surpluses now left in Italy are approximately 700 vehicles. These have been turned over for disposal to the United Kingdom Ministry of Supply. [pp. 67-70]

CANADIAN INTEREST

[DANS LES RÉPARATIONS DE LA ROUMANIE/ IN REPARATIONS FROM ROUMANIA]

(a) General

Canada's general interest in the creation of a multilateral system of world trade would seem to indicate the desirability of any provisions in the peace treaty designed to establish the open door in Roumania and to prevent the Soviet Union from monopolizing the trade of the country. On the other hand, Canada's immediate interest in this question is slight since in the past its trade with Roumania has been negligible. For example, in 1938 imports from Roumania amounted to $87,000, while the value of Canadian exports was $59,000.

It may also be doubted whether any commercial clauses, however comprehensive and rigid, would be effective in practice in view of the obvious intention of the Soviet Union to treat Roumania as a client state, economically.

(b) Private Claims

At present claims which have been registered by Canadian nationals with the Canadian Custodian amount to $509,000. In addition, claims have been registered by refugees now resident in Canada to the value of $301,000. It should be remembered, however, on the one hand, that the Custodian has not advertised for claims and, on the other, that some of the claims which have already been registered may not be warranted. The total of Roumania's assets held by the Custodian is $521,000. [pp. 91-92]

CANADIAN INTEREST

[DANS LES RÉPARATIONS DE LA HONGRIE/IN REPARATIONS FROM HUNGARY]

(a) General

Canada's general interest in the creation of a multilateral system of world trade would seem to indicate the desirability of any provisions in the peace treaty designed to establish the open door in Hungary and to prevent the Soviet Union from monopolizing the trade of the country. On the other hand, Canada's immediate interest in this question is slight since in the past its trade with Hungary has been negligible. In 1938, for example, imports from Hungary amounted to $162,000, while the value of Canadian exports was only $7,000.

It may also be doubted whether any commercial clauses, however comprehensive and rigid, would be effective in practice in view of the obvious intention of the Soviet Union to treat Hungary as a client state, economically.

(b) Private Claims

At present the private claims which have been registered by Canadian nationals with the Canadian Custodian amount to $332,000. In addition, claims have been registered by refugees now resident in Canada to the value of $679,000. It should be remembered, however, on the one hand, that the Custodian has not advertised for claims and, on the other, that some of the claims which have already been registered may not be warranted. The total of Hungary's assets held by the Custodian is $1,053,000. [pp. 109-110]

CANADIAN INTEREST

[DANS LES RÉPARATIONS DE LA BULGARIE/IN REPARATIONS FROM BULGARIA]

(a) General

Canada's general interest in the creation of a multilateral system of world trade would seem to indicate the desirability of any provisions in the peace treaty designed to establish the open door in Bulgaria and to prevent the Soviet Union from monopolizing the trade of the country. On the other hand, Canada's immediate interest in this question is slight since in the past its trade with Bulgaria amounted to $15,000 while the value of Canadian exports was $33,000.

It may also be doubted whether any commercial clauses, however comprehensive and rigid, would be effective in practice in view of the obvious intention of the Soviet Union to treat Bulgaria as a client state, economically.

(b) Private Claims

At present the private claims, which have been registered by Canadian nationals with the Canadian Custodian amount to $192,000. It should be remembered, however, on the one hand, that the Custodian has not advertised for claims and, on the other, that some of the claims which have already been registered may not be warranted. The total of Bulgaria's assets held by the Custodian is $67,000. [p. 126]

CANADIAN INTEREST

[DANS LES RÉPARATIONS DE LA FINLANDE/IN REPARATIONS FROM FINLAND]

(a) General

Canada's general interest in the creation of a multilateral system of world trade would seem to indicate the desirability of any provisions in the peace treaty designed to establish the open door in Finland and to prevent the Soviet Union from monopolizing its trade.

(b) Specific(1) Trade

Canada's trade with Finland has always been restricted because many of the goods which Finland has for export compete with Canadian export surpluses. For example, Finland has considerable export surpluses of timber, wood pulp, cellulose and paper. In 1938 Canadian imports from Finland amounted to $98,000; the chief items which contributed to this total were cheese, wooden furniture, paper, engines and boilers, and farm implements. Exports from Canada to Finland in the same year amounted to $578,000; they consisted chiefly of wheat and flour, rubber tires and tubes, leather, and farm implements and machinery.

(2) Canadian Plants

In 1934 the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, through its United Kingdom subsidiary, the Mond Nickel Company, Limited, entered into a long term concession agreement with the Government of Finland, as a result of which it secured the right to mine nickel-bearing ore in the Petsamo district of northern Finland. By 1939 Petsamon Nikkeli O/Y, a Finnish company wholly owned by the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, through the Mond Nickel Company, Limited, had almost completed the building of a smelter for the production of nickel-copper matte. With the outbreak of war between Russia and Finland in that year, the project was suspended and all Canadian and British personnel were recalled. The Finnish Government then took steps to bring the project into production.

Since the mines and installations lie in that area of Finland ceded to the Soviet Union by the Armistice, they have now passed into the possession of the Soviet Government. A Protocol to the Armistice, however, was signed in Moscow on the 8th October, 1944, by the Canadian and United Kingdom Ambassadors and a representative of the Soviet Government whereby the Soviet Government undertook to pay $20,000,000 (United States currency) to the Canadian Government as full and final compensation to the International Nickel Company of Canada and its subsidiary, the Mond Nickel Company, Limited. The payments were to be made in twelve semi-annual instalments during the ensuing six years. The first three payments have already been received by the Canadian Government from the Soviet Government and have been transferred to the International Nickel Company of Canada. The assets of Petsamon Nikkeli O/Y in southern Finland are now being liquidated according to Finnish law.

(3) Private Claims

At present the private claims which have been registered by Canadian nationals with the Canadian Custodian amount to $7,782,000. It should be remembered, however, on the one hand, that the Custodian has not advertised for claims and, on the other, that some of the claims which have already been registered may not be warranted. The total of Finland's assets held by the Custodian is $287,000. [pp. 141-142]

PRESENT:

The Prime Minister
Mr. Claxton
Mr. Robertson
Mr. Heeney
General Vanier
Mr. Wilgress
Mr. Ritchie
Mr. Chapdelaine
Mr. Gibson
Mr. Rae

1. DELEGATION MEETINGS

It was agreed that a short meeting should be held every morning.

2. CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS JULY 29TH

It was reported that M. Bidault would speak at the formal opening this afternoon and that over the next two or three days the heads of various delegations would be invited to speak briefly.

3. PUBLICATION OF DRAFT TREATIES

It was reported that no agreement had yet been reached among the Four inviting powers for publication. The United States had indicated it had no objection to publication; the United Kingdom had taken no decision. There had been considerable leakage of the actual contents of the draft treaties.

4. POINTS TO BE RAISED AT MEETING OF BRITISH COMMONWEALTH DELEGATIONS

Mr. Robertson said that there were two principal matters to be considered:

(1) The status of the text of the draft treaties. The U.S.S.R. took the view that the drafts agreed upon among the Big Four were binding inter se. The United Kingdom felt they should be free to propose amendments themselves in Commission. (A situation comparable to discussion of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals at San Francisco). The United Kingdom delegation wanted to head off unpleasantness of the kind which had developed (from Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser).

(2) The status of rules of procedure. The question was whether the Conference should accept those proposals by the Big Four or should undertake to write its own rules of procedure.

5. Mr. Robertson did not see much objection to the Big Four proposals which involved a two-thirds vote rather than a simple majority in Commission. There had been criticism of this two-thirds rule in the press and from certain smaller countries. All decisions presumably were subject to an individual veto of any of the inviting countries.

6. The Prime Minister said he would think it reasonable to say that the Big Four were getting as close together as they possibly could in their own meetings and they would undoubtedly give reasons why they had reached a particular point. (The Big Four ought to be considered free to make any additional recommendations either as amendments or additions).

7. Mr. Robertson thought this a reasonable position but said that given the whole Soviet attitude it was one likely to lead to real misunderstandings and recriminations. The U.S.S.R.'s view was that the draft texts represented the result of many compromises in arriving at which they had abandoned some of their own demands. If for example the United Kingdom and the United States were to say for example, that they really thought Trieste should be Italian and not a free city it might break up the Conference completely.

8. Mr. Wilgress agreed that the U.S.S.R. would feel very strongly any attempt to break down the "compromise basis arrived at".

9. The Prime Minister said the United Kingdom delegation would themselves have to judge how far they should go and it was probably a part of their duty to defend the compromise basis themselves and to explain it to other nations.

10. Mr. Wilgress added that this very basis was apt to be criticized by people like Dr. Evatt.

11. General Vanier said the difficulty the Canadian Delegation was likely to encounter from beginning to end was that the draft treaties represented one indivisible pattern based on compromise. If the pattern were displaced the whole mechanism might be thrown out of joint. There might be more re-creations than anything else brought to Paris to discuss these treaties and in the end the Big Four would decide it was quite impossible to touch this indivisible pattern without a complete breakup of the Conference.

12. The Prime Minister said this was a factor in which judgment would have to be used in deciding. He doubted what the Canadian Delegation could add to arguments already considered regarding treaties with Finland, Hungary, Roumania and even Italy. Would the Canadian Delegation not be curiously self assertive if it allowed the Conference to break up because the Canadian Delegation's own views were not being met.

13. Mr. Robertson mentioned as such a case that of the South Tyrol as probably the one boundary frontier where Italy had the weakest case but the one which had not been modified.

14. There was some further discussion about Soviet interests in the Conference from which it appeared that discussions of political differences might be precipitated on questions of procedure quite apart from discussions on specific issues. The Prime Minister said that the U.S.S.R. ought themselves to see that the "rubber stamp idea" would create tremendous resentment. Mr. Claxton added that there would be similar resentment in the United States and Great Britain. General Vanier added his view that quite some days might be spent on questions of procedure and some very heated discussions might be anticipated before the substance of the treaties was reached at all.

Paris, August 13, 1946

Dear Mr. Hudd,

In reply to your letter of August 2nd,† Mr. Robertson has asked me to send on to you copies of the Minutes prepared by Mr. Cumming-Bruce on the first two general meetings of Commonwealth representatives at the Paris Peace Conference.

In sending on to you the attached documents it should perhaps be pointed out that these are not the agreed Minutes, but nevertheless provide a full and useful account of the discussions.

Yours very truly,

Voting

MR. ATTLEE invited comments on the draft rules.

MR. MACKENZIE KING expressed his readiness to accept the rules. The recommendations of the Conference had to be referred to the four Powers for final decisions. He did not, therefore, attach great importance to the method of voting on the questions raised. The public statement of those views was the main necessity. He added that the issues were not being now taken up for the first time, and that Dominion Governments had been kept fully informed of the proceedings of the Four Powers from the start. It was essential in his view that a settlement should now effectively be made.

DR. EVATT said that the Australian Delegation was very strongly opposed to the two-thirds majority rule. The Conference was merely a recommending body, not a deciding authority, so that there was no need for the two-thirds safeguard. The Soviet Delegation with its satellites mustered six votes. It seemed that there would be abstentions by some delegations. The two-thirds rule, therefore, in effect gave a veto to the Russian group. It would be extremely difficult to transmit any recommendations to the Four Powers and the Russians could argue that the absence of recommendations implied confirmation by the Conference of the draft texts.

MR. BEASLEY<sup>2</sup> enquired whether the United Kingdom Delegation were bound to support the draft rules of procedure, and in particular the two-thirds rule. If so, it seemed that the United Kingdom Government would hardly be able to support at the final stage proposals for amendment which they considered sound, and were disposed to favour, in the absence of any Conference recommendation. He very much hoped therefore that the United Kingdom Delegation would not bind themselves.

GENERAL THERON<sup>1</sup> said that, while the South African Government were in general opposed to extension of the veto, they would not be inclined to press their view on an occasion at which the proceedings would result in recommendations and not decisions.

SIR S. RUNGANADHAN<sup>2</sup> said that the Indian Delegation were inclined to agree with the views expressed by the Australian and New Zealand Delegations. It seemed that the Conference would record no positive results under the two-thirds majority rule.

MR. ATTLEE said that the object of the Conference was to obtain the views of the participating Governments. The practical question before them was to consider the best way in which those views could be presented. He observed that, on the one hand, a number of important questions had been left open, on which no agreement had been reached by the Four Powers; on the other hand, in the case of the sponsored texts, the Four Powers were committed to take into account the views expressed at the Conference. The United Kingdom Delegation retained their liberty of action at the final drafting stage.

DR. EVATT said that it came as a shock and surprise to him that the four Powers were committed to support the draft Treaties. It seemed that this commitment would render the Conference a farce. For instance, on matters in which British Commonwealth Governments were specially interested, such as the disposal of the Italian Colonies and the Trieste settlement, the votes of the Four Powers added to the five or six of the Russian group would effectively obstruct a two-thirds majority for proposals for amendment. It would probably, in practice, even be impossible to obtain a simple majority in favour of amendments on this basis. In effect, therefore, the future of the Italian Colonies would be settled either by the four Powers or by the United Nations. The Dominion and Indian Governments, who had made a great contribution to driving Italy from Africa would have no say. Moreover, the United Nations might in a year's time consist of some sixty nations forty of whom had contributed nothing to victory. He deplored such an alternative procedure from the point of view of its constituting a precedent for the Far-Eastern settlement. Dr. Evatt referred to the Dominions Office telegram of 3rd July,† in which Dominion Governments had been informed that the United Kingdom Government were proceeding on the assumption that they would be free at the Conference to support the views put forward there. Apparently the position had changed. The question of four-Power support was the whole crux.

In reply, to Dr. Evatt, MR. MACKENZIE KING compared the position of the four Powers to that of a Cabinet consulting their party and reconsidering their views in the light of the views expressed by their supporters.

MR. ATTLEE said that consideration should be given to the effect if the four Powers abstained from support for the texts on which agreement had been reached after such laborious negotiation. First, would it be possible to reach a settlement at all? And failure to obtain a settlement would be disastrous. Secondly, if the United Kingdom or United States Delegations withdrew their support from the agreed texts the Soviet Delegation might well regard themselves as free to back out of their commitments.

MR. EGELAND suggested that the position was analogous to that at San Francisco. DR. EVATT considered that the analogy broke down if the United Kingdom Government were not free to suggest those amendments that they regarded as reasonable.

DR. EVATT said that the fundamental question was whether the Dominion and Indian Governments were to participate on a basis of equality with other Governments in the making of the peace. He referred to the declaration made by the Australian, New Zealand and South African Governments during the first session of the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Canadian Government had supported their views. They had a right to participate and the Council's work should be purely preparatory. Their position was little better than that of enemy countries.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that British Commonwealth Governments were far from being in a rubber stamp position. They had been and remained in a position to exert their influence. They must consider the possible consequences. If the effect of an effort to obtain amendments was a breakdown of the settlement, they would be defeating their own object. A settlement of these Treaties was essential to pave the way for the real settlement, i.e. with Germany and Japan. It was preferable to accept an imperfect solution in order to make some progress.

MR. BEASLEY asked whether this procedure would be regarded as creating a precedent for the Far Eastern settlement, this would be totally unacceptable. [sic] The Soviet Government were succeeding in arrogating a position of more and more privilege.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that he fully appreciated the objections to the draft treaties and procedure, but it would be playing into Russian hands to postpone a settlement.

DR. EVATT, referring to Mr. Mackenzie King's statement that Dominion Governments were in a position to influence the settlement, distinguished equal participation from a position of influence. The Australian Government were not prepared to accept the latter only. They claimed a right of participation similar to that of the United Kingdom at any rate for the Pacific settlement. The pattern here would determine the pattern for the Far East which was vital for Australia. He asked why France should be given a status superior to that of British Commonwealth countries when her contribution to victory over Italy had been negligible. It appeared that Dominion Governments were in an inferior position to that of 1919.

MR. JORDAN observed that, as the United Kingdom Government would consult other British Commonwealth Governments in the final drafting stage, the views of those Governments would in fact exercise effective influence.

MR. MACKENZIE KING referring to the suggestion that the Conference proceedings might create a precedent for other settlements said that if he had shared that view, his opinions would have been different. But Dominion Governments could use this Conference as a forum to state their view to the contrary. They could place on record that, in agreeing to the procedure in this instance, it was entirely without prejudice to the procedure for their participation in the other settlements. At San Francisco it had similarly been necessary to accept undesirable provisions in order to obtain Soviet participation. Some sacrifice must be made in Paris in order that progress might be made.

DR. EVATT suggested that the Conference might make a declaration on the subject of procedure of the other settlements.

In reply to MR. MACKENZIE KING, Mr. Attlee stated that he would be glad to arrange meetings at which other British Commonwealth Delegations might be given background information regarding the reasons for which the United Kingdom Government had accepted the provisions of the draft texts on the Italian Colonies Trieste, reparations, etc.

1. MR. ATTLEE said that the United Kingdom Delegation had given further consideration to the question of their commitments in regard, first, to the proposed rules of procedure, and, secondly, to the texts of the draft treaties. As regards the proposed rules of procedure, the United Kingdom Delegation would recommend the proposed rules to the Conference. If, however, reasonable amendments were put forward, and commanded a substantial degree of support in the debate, the United Kingdom Delegation regarded themselves as free to vote for such amendments. It was understood that a similar line might be taken by one of the other Four Powers.

MR. MACKENZIE KING said that the Canadian Delegation wished to be free to support a proposal for amendment of the two-thirds majority rule.

DR. EVATT expressed his warm appreciation of the decision of the United Kingdom Delegation, which he regarded as very satisfactory. He added that, from discussion with certain foreign delegations, he understood that several of them shared his views regarding the two-thirds majority rule.

2. MR. ATTLEE explained the United Kingdom Delegation's commitments in regard to the texts of the draft treaties. The United Kingdom Delegation were bound to recommend and support the agreed proposals. He asked that these should be regarded as a whole. For instance, a concession by the Soviet Delegation on one issue had often been met by a concession on the part of other delegations on another issue. If the negotiations were reopened the result might be a worse agreement in the end. The present proposals, though obviously not perfect, were better than they might have been.

MAJOR-GENERAL THERON considered that the proposals represented a substantial success for the United Kingdom Delegation in some directions.

DR. EVATT expressed his objection to the proposed procedure for the disposal of the Italian Colonies on the lines of the views expressed by him at the meeting in the morning. It would in his view, be preferable for the ultimate authority for disposal, in the event of failure of the Four Powers to agree, to rest with the 21 active belligerents rather than the United Nations.

MR. ATTLEE agreed that the active belligerents had a right to have a special say. But we had to take what we could get, and he observed that in practice British Commonwealth Governments would under paragraph 2 of the proposed Declaration have an opportunity to state their views. In this respect, therefore, they would be in no way worse off than if an Article to the same effect had been included in the draft treaty with Italy.

MR. BEASLEY expressed the hope that no concession would be made on the Colonies issue in the interests of a more favourable settlement for Trieste. He emphasized the special interest of Australia in Mediterranean communications.

MR. ATTLEE explained the cogent practical need from the point of view of the United Kingdom for the earliest possible European settlement.

MR. MCNEIL<sup>1</sup> said that, while the United Kingdom Delegation must themselves stand by the text of the draft treaties as representing a compromise to which they had been a party, other British Commonwealth Governments were, of course, not similarly bound.

DR. EVATT said that while, as Mr. McNeil had stated, Dominion Delegations were not committed to the Four Power proposals, this freedom of action would seem to be of little value in practice if the Four Powers supported the texts, since very little additional support was required by the Russian bloc to prevent even a simple majority in favour of amendment.

MAJOR-GENERAL THERON said that the South African Government agreed in principle with the Australian Government's views on the subject of the procedure of disposal, and in view of their special interest in the territories would like to have an effective voice. But they would not be prepared to press their view to a point that would prejudice the Four Power agreements already reached. They regarded postponement for a year as a valuable achievement. He asked that, before any final decision on disposal was taken, the United Kingdom Government should consult the South African Government and take their views into account.

MR. ATTLEE assured Major-General Theron that this would be done.

MR. JORDAN said that the New Zealand Government considered that a final decision should be taken only after the freely expressed wishes of the populations of the territories had been ascertained. It was explained that a referendum would not be practicable in some of the territories, and the insistence of the United Kingdom Government on fulfilment of their pledges to the Senussi was recalled.

SIR J. BHOPE<sup>1</sup> said that the Indian Delegation were very sympathetic with the Australian Delegation's view. They recognized the difficulties of the United Kingdom Government, but were anxious to have an opportunity to express their views before a decision was reached.

MR. MACKENZIE KING recalled that at the recent Meeting of Prime Ministers in London there had been general agreement that the Foreign Secretary had taken special care to give full consideration to the views of Dominion Governments on the issues of the treaties. The United Kingdom Government had shown themselves ready to modify their policy to meet the wishes of other British Commonwealth Governments, who could rest confident that the Foreign Secretary would continue to be careful of their interests. He thought that the emphasis throughout should be on the results of any proposals for amendment put forward, and the need to view the settlement as a whole.

3. MR. CLAXTON asked whether any further light could be shed on the prospects of synchronizing the third stage under the Moscow Agreement of preparation of final texts with the second stage of the Conference. Such an arrangement would greatly enhance the reality of the Conference. In the decisive negotiations the Four Powers would be able to keep in touch with the views of the other Delegations and world public opinion would be able to be brought to bear on Russia on each issue as it was settled. This might improve the chances of concessions.

DR. EVATT doubted whether such an arrangement would resolve the difficulty of the relations between the Four Powers and other Governments that would be caused by joint Four Power support of the draft treaties. In some respects, the Conference might find itself hampered in proposing amendments. The Soviet Government might for instance refuse to make a concession on any issue until the recommendations could be considered as a whole. It would be necessary before putting forward such a proposal to be satisfied that the Four Powers would be ready to accept compromises on individual issues.

As an alternative, might not the Four Powers agree to abstain from voting at the Conference.

MR. MACKENZIE KING suggested that an arrangement resulting in continuous consultation between the Four Powers and the other delegations would be of considerable value in creating a mounting public opinion against Russia if they proved obstructive.

MR. JEBB<sup>1</sup> thought that there was force in this view. He considered it likely that the Soviet Delegation would stick to the letter of the Moscow Agreement which was open to the interpretation that Stage 3 would not begin until the "conclusion" of the Conference had been recorded. However, there was nothing in the Moscow Agreement to debar the Four Powers from meeting to consider the current proposals of the Conference. In any case, he saw no reason why the United Kingdom Delegation should not put forward a proposal in accordance with the Canadian Delegation's suggestion.

MR. ATTLEE said that he agreed in general with the views of the Canadian Delegation, but it would be advisable to see how the Conference developed.

DR. EVATT said that he was very much encouraged by the United Kingdom Delegation's Decision on the proposed rules of procedure, and he hoped that progress might be made on other aspects later.

Paris, September 1, 1946

SECRET. DELCA 46. The past week of the Conference has been marked by lengthy discussions in the Commissions arising out of amendments to the draft Treaties. In these discussions the Australian amendments, of which there are 70, have generally occupied first place. Their amendments constitute a frontal attack on the draft Treaties over a wide field. In general terms, the most important deal with:

(1) Reparations and the establishment of a Reparation and Restitution Commission;

(2) The inclusion of clauses relating to human rights in all the Treaties, and

(3) The establishment of Fact-Finding Commissions in connection with European boundary disputes.

The paragraphs which follow are intended to summarize the recent discussions and to indicate the attitude of the Canadian delegation on the questions under consideration.

2. In the Economic Commissions for Italy and for the Balkans, several sessions were devoted to consideration of the Australian proposal to set up a

Reparations and Restitution Commission to adjudicate claims for reparations in light of Italian capacity to pay and to supervise execution of reparations provisions of the Peace Treaties. The matter first came up for consideration in the Balkan Commission. We supported the Australian proposal in so far as it related to a Commission for supervising the execution of reparation provisions, particularly when more than one country receiving reparations was concerned. Our stand on this point was supported both by the United States and by France. The Australian delegate finally withdrew his proposal in the light of opposition from the Soviet bloc and Great Powers and referred to the support given parts of his proposal by the Canadian, United States and French delegations. He reserved the right to submit further amendments on this phase of the question at a later stage.

3. Subsequent debate took place with regard to the Australian proposals in the Economic Commission for Italy. As in Balkan Commission, the proposal was vehemently attacked by the Soviet delegation who tried to show that Australia was seeking to deprive the Soviet Union of her just claims for reparations. We took no part in the debate because the question of the Commission to supervise the execution of the reparations provisions was referred to by the Australian representative and he again reserved his rights to submit amendments on those parts of his proposals which had found support among other delegations. On the Australian amendments being put to a vote, they were defeated by 15 to 2 with 3 abstentions, Canada being among the abstainers.

4. The Economic Commission for Italy yesterday established a Sub-Committee of nine members (including Canada) to examine claims for reparations of countries other than the Soviet Union. During discussions on August 30th of Article 64, Wilgress moved that section A, dealing with Soviet reparations, should not be voted upon finally until Sub-Committee had studied claims of other countries. This produced a blast from Vyshinsky, who misrepresented our position as being opposed to Soviet Union's modest claim for reparations from Italy. He said Wilgress as Ambassador to Moscow through the war was in a position to know the extent of the Soviet Union sacrifices and charged obstruction whenever the question of Soviet interests came up. Wilgress made a moderate but firm reply expressing his admiration for sacrifice of Soviet people during the war. Final vote on proposal was 15 against, 5 in favour. It was felt important for us to prevent Article passing without comment in order to protect our position particularly on paragraph 3, and to be able to support Australian proposal for a Reparations Commission with executive functions. The Soviet position is clearly that Treaty clauses on reparations are sacrosanct. Any effort to get at the facts will be met with flat opposition from the Soviet Union in which the other 3 Great Powers will reluctantly concur. So far as we can tell, no Paris paper reported the incident except for a passing reference in Humanité. We may, however, anticipate further outbursts which may require reply on the spot. We believe that while avoiding provocative statements as far as possible we should be prepared always to state the Canadian interest on the general peace settlement and our attitude to the Conference.

5. In the Balkan Economic Commission a discussion is taking place on a South African amendment providing (in the case of the Roumanian Treaty) that the Roumanian Government should pay fair prices for commodities delivered as reparations. This was prompted by United Kingdom which had previously sought our sponsorship. It concerns the prices to be paid by the Roumanian Government for products delivered to the Soviet Union as reparations. Opening speeches were concerned with prices paid for all products and both the South African and United Kingdom delegates referred to the difficulties of the foreign oil companies in Roumania. Fortunately, debate was lifted to higher level by brief but effective speech by United States delegates who said that the question was really as to whether reparations should be borne exclusively by Roumanian nationals or not. This speech has made it much easier for us to vote for the proposal when the debate is concluded.

6. In the Political and Territorial Commissions for Italy, Roumania and Hungary progress has been slower. In the Roumanian Commission, Canada supported the Australian proposal that Hungary should be given a hearing which was finally upheld by 8 votes to 4 with Soviet bloc opposition. In the Hungarian Commission on August 30th, we took the initiative in requesting that both Hungary and Roumania be given a hearing and this was supported unanimously by the Commission. This meeting of the 2 Commissions in accordance with our proposal was held August 31st to hear the Hungarian delegation. Canadian delegation expressed the view that while we had no direct interest in question with Hungarian-Roumanian frontier, we considered that both sides should have opportunity to state their case.

7. In the Commission on Finland, very rapid progress has been made. Minor changes have been agreed to in the Preamble and Articles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 have already been adopted. The present discussion is related to Article 6 where the Australian Human Rights Amendment has been deferred. Indeed progress was so rapid in this Commission that the Australians found themselves unable to proceed yesterday because of lack of adequate preparation.

8. In the various political Commissions which have been meeting this past week one of the principal subjects of discussion has been the amendments proposed by the Australian delegation to the draft Treaties which have the object of ensuring the protection of human rights. My immediately following telegram† contains the texts of these amendments. In the case of the Italian Treaty, these amendments take the form of an addition to Articles 13 and 14 placing the responsibility on States to which territory has been transferred to ensure the protection of stated human rights and providing that such obligations shall be recognized as fundamental laws. An additional feature is the provision made in the Australian amendments for the establishment of a Court of Human Rights whose terms of reference are set forth in my immediately following telegram.

9. It is our feeling that the Australian amendments dealing with human rights are loosely drafted and unsatisfactory in their present form. It is also most improbable that they will have any practical effect. On the other hand, there may be a case for including something along these lines in the Treaties. It would, we believe, be difficult to vote against the principle contained in these amendments. Since the first of the Commissions concerned are likely to come to a final decision about them Monday or Tuesday, we may have to decide our attitude here. Our present view is to support principle of new paragraphs 4 and 5 (see my succeeding telegram). One real difficulty, which you will no doubt bear in mind, is the incompatibility of these texts with paragraph 7, Chapter 1 of Article 2 of the United Nations Charter. Your cabled views would be much appreciated.

10. The work of the Legal and Drafting Commission has not yet begun but should do so shortly. We have asked Secretariat to circularize all Commissions and delegates suggesting that as various sections of the Treaties are completed by the competent Commissions these should be passed to the Legal and Drafting Commission without waiting for the complete Treaties to come forward, although there would, of course, be a general review at the end.

4. ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR THE BALKANS AND FINLAND

The Commission had continued to consider the alternative drafts with regard to Article 24. Mr. Wilgress reported that the meeting was entirely devoted to consideration of the alternative Soviet and United States proposals on Paragraph 4 of Article 24 of the Roumanian Treaty concerning the compensation to be paid to United Nations nationals owning property which has been destroyed in Roumania. The discussion of these proposals will be continued at the meeting to-morrow.

The Soviet representative argued that the payment of reparations and the payment of compensation should be bracketed together and that the principles which had been followed in determining reparations to be paid by Roumania should also apply in determining the amount of compensation to be paid. The Soviet Union had agreed to abate its claims for reparations and to accept only a small part of the value which it might have properly claimed. He thought that other nations should do likewise in claiming compensation; it was for that reason that the Soviet Delegation proposed that United Nations nationals owning property which had been destroyed in Roumania should be compensated at only one-third of the value of the loss they had suffered. Speeches repeating this argument were also made by the representatives of Yugoslavia and Byelo-Russia.

At this point Mr. Wilgress intervened and, after referring to Canada's disinterestedness in this matter, made the following points:

(a) He felt sure that all countries represented on the Commission would wish to see the Soviet Union receive full satisfaction for its just reparation claims if that were possible. Unfortunately, it was not possible.

(b) An analogy had been drawn by the Soviet representative and by those who had supported him between the payment of reparations and the payment of compensation. This analogy was inexact and inadmissible. The essential difference was that the payment of reparations entailed the transfer of goods outside the boundaries of Roumania, while payment of compensation was a wholly internal transaction since compensation was to be paid to United Nations nationals in Lei. No one would claim that the payment of such compensation would not impose burdens on the Roumanian Government, but they were burdens which Roumania could bear since they did not involve a transfer of goods or funds abroad.

(c) If only partial satisfaction were given to United Nations nationals whose property had been damaged in Roumania, there would be inequity as between such nationals whose property had happened to be in the path of war and those whose property by accident had escaped. By Paragraph I of Article 24 Roumania was to undertake to restore all United Nations property which was still intact to its owners. They would, therefore, receive compensation in full whereas owners whose property had been damaged, according to the Soviet proposal, would only receive satisfaction up to a third of the value of the property.

This line of reasoning was supported by the United Kingdom but was attacked by the representative of the Ukraine who affected to ignore altogether the transfer problem.

1. Although circumstances have made it impossible for us to obtain ministerial consideration on short notice, the following is the Departmental view on this question.

2. We share in principle Field Marshal Smuts' objection to expulsion of populations and agree with the United States view that (a) the questions of Bratislava bridgehead and proposed population transfer should be settled together, preferably after consultation between the two Governments concerned, and (b) that forced transfer of Hungarian minority should be opposed unless the receiving country is agreeable and transfer is carried out gradually and under international supervision.

3. We should welcome agreement between countries concerned by which in return for reasonable expansion of Bratislava bridgehead Czechoslovakia would grant Hungary equivalent territory further east along communication frontier. Compromise along these lines should, we feel, be designed to decrease as far as possible the number of Hungarians involved if a population transfer were decided upon.

SECRET. DELCA 73 Following from Claxton, Begins: At a Commonwealth meeting yesterday, discussion took place on Trieste Statute. It appeared from this as if the United Kingdom delegation did not have it in mind to make any answer to the speeches made on Saturday by Mr. Molotov for the Soviet Union and by Mr. Kardelj for Yugoslavia yesterday. It also appeared as if United Kingdom delegates had not sufficiently realized importance of trying to arrive at an arrangement with the United States to reconcile differences between their two drafts.

2. At the meeting, I said that speeches by representatives of the Soviet Union and the countries closely associated with it should not be allowed to go unanswered in the hope that this might curtail debate and hasten the conclusion of the Conference. At another point, we referred to the desirability of trying to work out a common draft with the United States.

3. At this meeting, I did not feel that we could go further in the presence of officials who presumably had been responsible for the form of the British draft and the way in which it had been handled. Following the meeting, however, I telephoned Mr. Alexander to press the two points just mentioned. I said that the United Kingdom delegate had presented the United Kingdom draft on Saturday in a very quiet and objective manner. Mr. Molotov and Mr. Kardelj had made speeches of 68 and 69 minutes, respectively, (the longest at the Conference) in which they abused the British draft and used it as a means of attacking the whole British position. In comparing the position of the Council proposed under the British plan with the Council of West Indian Islands and in their other attacks, it seemed to me that they had made cases which would have a damaging effect on public opinion, not only in Communist countries, but also in others, possibly the United States. Mr. Alexander agreed with what I said and stated he would discuss with Mr. Bevin how the Soviet should be answered.

4. On the second point, I urged the necessity of trying to work out an acceptable arrangement with the United States, especially on the appointment and powers of the Council. I asked him to consider if it would not be possible to meet the Americans on this, as failure would lead to a division in the Conference and also in world opinion. Mr. Alexander said he appreciated this and that steps would be taken to see what could be done. He thanked me for taking these matters up with him.

5. I felt that this intervention was justified in view of our difficulty should there be a division between British and American stands on what may well become a crucial point in the whole Conference and, indeed, the whole settlement.

6. In this connection, I feel, and other members of our delegation agree, that the British delegation from Mr. Bevin down take far too little heed of the necessity of their securing continued American support, not only from the Government, but from American public opinion. Mr. Wallace's speech last week<sup>1</sup> was exceedingly unfortunate in giving a springboard to the Soviet bloc which they were quick to take advantage of, but I hope that it will bring home to the representatives of the United Kingdom the necessity above referred to of working closely with the United States and of handling themselves in a way which does everything possible to permit the people of the United States to support Government policy. One might wish, however, that United Kingdom spokesmen showed a greater appreciation of what their own position really is and on what it depends, as well as more skillful presentation of the fundamental questions on which the success of this Conference and, still more, the peace of the world depends.

7. In our position, there is not much more we can do than to watch the situation carefully, keep as close touch as we can with the various parties and when the opportunity presents itself, as I thought it did yesterday, do what we can to bring home a point of view which, while partly realized by one side or the other, is not too frequently acted upon in the manner and at the time necessary to bring about that unity of understanding and action which is the cardinal point of our own position.

8. I hope you concur in the action taken and if other ways occur to you in which we may act along these lines, you will not hesitate to suggest them. Ends.

DELCA No. 78. Following is text of statement delivered by Canadian delegate, the Honourable Brooke Claxton, before Italian Political and Territorial Commission today during debate on Italo-Yugoslav boundary and Statute of Trieste, Begins:

I should like to state briefly the attitude of the Canadian delegation towards these difficult frontier problems which have occupied so much of the time and attention of the Conference. Although we in Canada are geographically distant from the territorial problems of Europe, we cannot subscribe to the view which has been suggested at this Conference that the geographical remoteness of the non-European States represented here weakens their claim to make their voices heard in the decisions which are now being taken. In a profound sense, Canada, like other non-European belligerents, is directly involved in the task of peace-making. Canada has in the last thirty years fought throughout the whole duration, from the very beginning to the very end, of two terrible wars, both of which had their origins in the European Continent. With this experience behind us we cannot fail to be deeply conscious that our future peace, like that of every State represented at this Conference, is involved in the decisions which we reach here. The Canadian delegation has desired to avoid taking up the time of the Conference unnecessarily and thus delaying our decisions, hence we have refrained from participation in debate except on those occasions when we considered that we might have a positive contribution to make. We have not been actuated in our policies by any desire for material advantage. We have one interest and one only, the creation of a just and lasting peace in the areas of Europe affected by these treaties. We believe that only a peace which is founded on fairness and justice can prove lasting. For this reason the Canadian delegation have studied the frontier dispositions of the Peace Treaties with particular attention. We have sought to guide our decisions by principles of ethnic justice and economic practicability and at the same time to take account of the intangible human elements of history and national feeling. We have listened with sympathy to the eloquent speeches from the Yugoslav delegates on this Commission. The Yugoslav delegation are pleading for what they conceive to be the national interests of Yugoslavia, our very gallant ally, and the arguments which they have put forward have received most serious consideration, but we must try to keep steadily before us both the essential facts of the situation and the longterm results of the frontiers to be established. What then are these essential facts. The South African amendment proposes that there should be included in the Free Territory of Trieste a coastal strip of Istria lying to the south of the line recommended by the Council of Foreign Ministers as forming the boundary of the proposed Free Territory. The area in question is at present Italian territory. It must be recalled that what we are discussing at the present stage is how much Italian territory should be given to Yugoslavia and how much should be included in the Free Territory of Trieste. The report of the Commission of Experts set up by the Council of Foreign Ministers makes it clear that the area which the South African amendment proposes to add to the Free Territory of Trieste is inhabited by a population predominantly Italian. I quote from this report which bears the signature of the United Kingdom, United States, French and Soviet experts. In western and southern Istria the various ethnic elements are intermingled. The Italian element is located in the towns situated on or near the coast and also inhabits a considerable number of rural localities in western Istria. It constitutes the majority and in certain instances almost the whole population in many of the towns on or near the coast, while in certain towns in the interior of western and southern Istria it constitutes an important minority. The Croat and Slovene population dwells mainly in rural localities, which in a considerable number of places are situated around the towns inhabited by Italians. It will be recalled that the experts appointed by the Council of Foreign Ministers were requested to fix an ethnic line, leaving a minimum population under alien rule. The line now proposed by South Africa as the boundary of the Free Territory of Trieste is identical with the ethnic line proposed by the United Kingdom expert. It is worth noting that the line proposed by the American expert passed still further to the east and north, so that if the South African amendment had been based on the American line it would have included a still larger area of Istria in the Free Territory of Trieste. After weighing all the evidence, the Canadian delegation have come to the conclusion that the South African amendment constitutes the closest approach to a just solution of this difficult problem, and accordingly we intend to support it. We believe that it takes into account the essential fact of the ethnic composition of the majority of the population. We realize that a perfect ethnic frontier is impossible, but to put these predominantly Italian populations under Yugoslavia would create another minority problem in Europe. It has been urged by the Yugoslav representatives that the adoption of the line proposed in the South African amendment or indeed of the line agreed upon by the Council of Foreign Ministers would have disastrous consequences from the economic point of view owing to the inevitable connection of these coastal towns with their Yugoslav hinterland. If the Yugoslav Government and the Government of the Free Territory of Trieste work together, as it is to be hoped they will, in a spirit of friendly co-operation in matters of economic policy, I fail to see why the frontier between them should create a barrier destructive of the prosperity of the population of the coastal area. The whole conception of the Free Territory of Trieste can only be made to work if there is a loyal acceptance by all parties concerned of the decisions of this Conference and a willingness to co-operate in making them effective. There is one further point, nothing this Conference can do will alter the fundamental fact that Yugoslavia and Italy are neighbouring countries. Their past, present and future are linked together by their geographical position and by their possession of a common frontier. We in Canada know how fortunate we are in having a frontier which acts not to divide two peoples but to link their common interests, yet it would be a false rendering of history to say that there have never been difficulties between Canada and the United States arising out of our common frontier. There have been frictions and real conflicts of interests over the past century. The significant point, however, is that to deal with such disputes the two countries have worked out orderly and judicial processes through the International Joint Commission. The International Joint Commission is a permanent judicial organization composed of three members named by the Canadian Government and three by the United States Government. Since its establishment in 1909 the International Joint Commission has dealt with a variety of problems involving the mutual relations and interests of Canadians and Americans along their common frontier. Our Prime Minister, Mr. King, has said the creation of the International Joint Commission was an act of faith in human intelligence and goodwill on the part of the peoples of Canada and the United States. It has become a silent witness to the wisdom of their decision over a century ago not to arm against each other and to the power of non-violence. To our two countries it is the guardian of the most precious heritage we hold in common. The Canadian delegation is fully aware of the fact that the procedures which have been evoked to deal with our own frontier problems can hardly be automatically applied in areas of post-war Europe which are still so near the immediate consequences of the last great conflict. Such procedures presuppose the establishment of normal economic relations and of an atmosphere of mutual confidence between the neighbouring States. We are convinced, however, that whatever the final frontier settlement that may be reached, a durable peace in this area can only be secured through the establishment of judicial procedures for the settlement of frontier difficulties as they arise. Ends.

September 19

At the Military Commission this morning we finished with the military clauses of the Italian Treaty. In the afternoon there was a meeting of the Sub-commission on Hungary, at which I read my little speech, which was as follows:

“The Canadian Delegation has carefully studied the Czechoslovak amendment to the draft Peace Treaty with Hungary (1.Q.3), as well as the documents relating thereto, in the matter of the proposed extension of the area of the Bratislava bridgehead. What is involved is a small frontier rectification. In our view great weight must be attached to the arguments advanced by Czechoslovakia. It seems clear, however, that the method by, and extent to which, this proposal could be translated into a decision of the Political and Territorial Commission on Hungary as a whole, depend on certain other considerations which must be taken into account.

It is recalled, for example, that at the 9th Meeting of the Commission on 9th September, the Spokesman for the United States Delegation stated that the elimination of the villages of Raika and Bezenye from the territory described in the amendment would, in their opinion, help to meet the economic and ethnic objections raised by the Hungarian Delegation and yet, at the same time, substantially achieve the expressed aims of the Czechoslovak Government. It is also recalled that at the 8th Meeting of the Commission on the 6th of September, the Czechoslovak representative said that the boundaries proposed had been drawn so as to coincide with the limits of existing property holdings and that his Delegation were quite prepared to leave the final delineation of the territory to experts. We should be glad to know if the Czechoslovak Delegation would be prepared to consider the possibility of limiting the scope of their amendment in the sense suggested by the United States Delegation.

Another consideration which has occurred to the Canadian Delegation derives from the fact that in his statement in support of the amendment the Czechoslovak delegate particularly stressed the economic reasons which had moved his Government to seek an extension of the Bratislava bridgehead. “A matter of town planning” was an expression used on that occasion. Consequently the proposal savours more of a territorial accommodation than of the satisfaction of a strategical requirement. In these circumstances it would seem reasonable to expect that the Czechoslovak Government might well be prepared to grant the Hungarian Government a quid pro quo in the way of a transfer of an equal extent of territory to be found elsewhere along the common frontier between the two countries.

A still more serious consideration, however, has occurred to the Canadian Delegation, and this arises from the fact that the proposed amendment, if eventually adopted by the Commission, would bring several thousand Hungarian nationals, a proportion of whom are of the Magyar race, under Czechoslovak jurisdiction, and this at a time when the Commission is considering another Czechoslovak amendment (1.Q.5) which seeks an authorisation to transfer a maximum of 200,000 of its inhabitants of Magyar ethnic origin from its territory to that of Hungary.

We are aware that the Czechoslovak Delegation has so far taken the stand that it would be quite artificial to attempt to merge the substance of these two amendments. Nevertheless it seems clear that an amendment, the effect of which would be to bring Hungarian nationals of Magyar ethnic origin under Czechoslovakia, cannot be entirely unrelated to another proposal the object of which is to bring about the transfer of a very considerable number of Magyars from Czechoslovakia to Hungary.

We are all agreed that we are here trying to work out the detailed provisions of a treaty designed to bring about a durable peace. The difficulty, however, and it is no small one, is to agree as to the methods by which a real peace is to be achieved. While it is possible that after full examination somewhat drastic provisions may be written into the treaty, it is improbable that this will be done until such time as a majority of the delegates have been convinced that the measures proposed give good promise of being likely to achieve the object in view. Measures for transfers of territory and population imposed on a defeated nation are not likely to commend themselves to important sections of world opinion, unless it is established not only that these measures are justified but also that such transfers of population will be carried out as humanely as possible. It seems to us that their success must depend in part on their general acceptance. This would be much more certain in the present case if in some way the adherence of the Hungarian Government should be obtained.

In these reflections nothing could be farther from the minds of the Canadian Delegation than the thought that Hungary, a defeated nation, should be granted the status enjoyed by a victor nation. Since we feel, however, that without Hungarian acceptance the measures proposed might well fail to achieve the object in view, we should be glad of an expression of opinion from the Czechoslovak Delegation as to how this could be obtained."

Haydu threw it all back to me, after which I moved the adjournment. On my way home I called in at the Meurice where I saw Bonbright of the U.S. delegation and gave him a copy of my speech. He returned the compliment by giving me a copy of the speech Bedell Smith proposes to make tomorrow. It is cut on lines not dissimilar to my own, and tells the Czechs very plainly that they had better take a less intransigent stand and make a deal with the Hungarians. Bonbright added that this morning they had got in touch with the Hungarians so as to soften them up a bit. He told me his argument but I am too tired now to remember what he said. I feel a bit on the spot but of one thing I am determined, and that is a Canadian representative is not going to become directly involved in the delimitation of boundaries in the centre of Europe.

The scrappiness of the items in this journal for the last four or five days is due to the fact that I simply did not have time to dictate a daily entry. Miss Dawson has been good enough to fill the gaps by recording the various memos or reports that I was able to make.

With regard to the statement I read in the Hungarian Commission yesterday, I should like to remind myself that my principal purpose in making this declaration was to ensure that we would not become embroiled in a frontier squabble in the heart of Central Europe. Such a development would, I am sure, be most embarrassing and I am certain would be entirely contrary to Mr. King's wishes. There was no way, however, of avoiding service on the Sub-commission but once on I have thought it quite legitimate and certainly to our own interest to avoid our becoming arbitrators even in a mild way in that distant part of the world.

Hungarian Commission this afternoon, at which Bedell Smith made his statement, copy of which Bonbright had given me yesterday. It had been elaborated a little over-night. Towards the close of the meeting Vyshinsky spoke at considerable length, supporting, quite successfully I thought though the translation was bad, the Czechoslovakian point of view. We adjourned at 8.15.

Military Commission this morning, (22nd meeting) which I reported as follows:

"This morning the Military Commission began its study of the military clauses of the draft Peace Treaty with Bulgaria, during the course of which it rejected subparagraphs (c) Naval Strength, and (d) Air Strength, of the Greek amendment 1.J.21 to Article 9. Canada supported the Greeks in respect of subparagraph (c), but voted against them in regard to subparagraph (d).

While I have all my life firmly believed in the wisdom of the Duke of Wellington's injunction "never explain", I should think that it would only be fair on my part for the benefit of the historians of the future to say that I supported the Greeks on subparagraph (c) because the provision in Article 9 grants the Bulgarian Navy a strength several times greater than that which they had in 1938, which to my mind is absurd. I voted against the Greeks in regard to the Air Force because they wished to impose further limitations on the Bulgarian Air Force of the future, namely, that they might not be allowed to renew aircraft of the limited number they are to possess within a period of five years of their acquisition, and secondly that they might have only 140 flying personnel of the 5,200 personnel they are to have, which I also thought was absurd.”

September 21

Military Commission this morning. Report follows:

“At its 23rd meeting this morning, the Military Commission devoted itself to further consideration of the Greek amendment 1.J.21. The parts considered this morning had to do with the proposed demilitarization of the Greco-Bulgarian frontier. United Kingdom, United States and France supported this amendment in part, with the Soviet bloc very much against it.

As the discussion promised to be very lengthy the Chairman adjourned the meeting at 1.15 p.m. o'clock.”

. . . Back to Paris on the morning of the 25th, and a Hungarian Commission in the afternoon. This morning tried without success to see the Americans regarding our stand in the Sub-Commission this afternoon on the question of the Bridgehead and transfer of populations. I am rather puzzled as to just what we should do. I want to steer a course that is at least reasonable and at the same time avoid being deeply hooked in to these difficult questions of Central Europe. I believe that last week Mr. Byrnes observed that in his view this was no Peace Conference. It was, he said, merely a conference at which the representatives of the other Powers were being afforded an opportunity to make recommendations regarding the draft peace treaties to the Council of Foreign Ministers, who could take them or leave them as they pleased. If this is the position, which I believe it is, and not out of line with my ‘roast duck’ theory, then there is no reason to take things too seriously. It is of importance, however, (1) not to be made to look silly at any time, and (2) to avoid becoming too deeply involved in some of these tricky territorial and other problems in Central Europe.

Here is an extract from a letter which I wrote to Billy on the 21st, summing up my feelings with regard to the Conference proceedings up to that time:

“I would ask you to believe, however, that the pressure of work at this Conference has been very great and nearly every day is a case of going to work at about 9 in the morning and hardly having a moment to myself until well past a sensible man’s bedtime. And what makes matters worse is that our activities can hardly be rated higher than mere shadow-boxing, because the hard fact is that this is not a Peace Conference but rather one at which the lesser Powers are allowed to make recommendations to the Council of Foreign Ministers, who will take them or leave them according to their own sweet taste and fancy. This is a hard-boiled but true statement of the situation and it is not exhilarating. I sit on two Commissions and a Sub-committee, and apart from the work of trying to keep abreast of what is going on, there are occasions when one finds one's self struggling like the Devil in holy water to avoid one's self, and what is of more importance one's country, becoming involved in matters in which we have no direct concern."

September 28

Usual Military Commission this morning finishing up the greater part of the Bulgarian Treaty. This Commission had another meeting this afternoon, which Forget attended for me, as I was down for the Sub-commission for Hungary. This latter meeting was of some interest, though before dealing with it I should say we had a Commonwealth meeting at the George V at 2.30 which was quite fantastic. I went there with Mr. Claxton, Rae and Cadieux. As we entered the room I sensed a feeling of moral indignation and regret on the part of the British. Presiding was Mr. Alexander, supported by Jebb and Margoribanks. Apparently the feeling was that the little Dominions had been naughty in letting down the upright honourable and impeccable Old Country by not keeping the Bratislava Bridgehead question connected with the transfer of population. Claxton, who naturally enough is not familiar with all the details of the question, certainly had a good hold of the main idea and he lost no time in telling Mr. Alexander quite as bluntly as the situation called for that we had held the pass open for a full week, which had given the U.K. and the U.S. all the opportunity in the world to put pressure on the Czechoslovaks and the Hungarians to come together. If they had not done so that was entirely their fault. After the lapse of this week and more, we had been required to vote on the Bridgehead proposal, which we had done in a favourable sense and this in our belief that the Czechs had made out a convincing case for the need for a frontier rectification in this area. Old Alexander was frightfully stupid and brought in a religious question which, had Claxton not been there, would have brought forth a fairly sharp rejoinder from myself. On his part, Jebb was quite offensive in manner, while Margoribanks was ineffective.

They then turned on New Zealand, but McIntosh and Costello gave them back their full money's worth.

At the time I made up my mind to observe to them on the first occasion that presented itself that some of these Foreign Office people would benefit very much by a year's secondment to the Dominions Office, and before that a short course at some London school of deportment. These fellows are about thirty years behind the times.

We then proceeded to the Sub-commission, where we spent most of the afternoon revising Costello's report. Branov, the Chairman, began his high-pressure methods once more, so for the fun of it, and also of course on principle, I took a pass or two at him and was amused to see how quickly he back-watered. The Czechs were very sporting and handsomely lived up to their undertaking to limit the size of the Bridgehead extension they desired, and it was a pleasure to help them draft the section defining the boundaries of the reduced area in question.

They then announced, I am confident according to plan, that the way was now clear for them to endeavour to establish contact with the Hungarians. It was quickly agreed that the Secretariat should convoke both Delegations to a meeting in the Luxembourg on Sunday afternoon in the presence of one member of the Sub-Commission. Haydu having told me that they wanted me for this purpose, I shadow-boxed for a few minutes trying to have it carried out in the presence of the whole Commission but they easily shot me down on that one. They also said that while I was to be there as an observer they would ask me to preside. This knocked my proposed visit to Chartres the following day to glory.

I am inclined to agree that little hope can be entertained of agreement being reached, in the Sub-Committee of the Commission, concerning the proposed powers for the governor of Trieste, and that compromise, if any, between interests of U.S.S.R. on one hand and the United Kingdom, the United States and France on the other, may only be reached in Council of Foreign Ministers.

It would seem desirable that before negotiations reach that stage common ground be found between positions of United Kingdom, United States and France, or, as a minimum, those of the United Kingdom and the United States, to the end that bargaining position of western powers be strengthened in Council of Foreign Ministers.

Without detailed knowledge of present United Kingdom and United States drafts of statute relative to the powers of the governor, it is difficult to assess their respective merits. However, in a general way it would appear that Soviet criticism of wide powers for governor suggested by United Kingdom authorities, has been effective, and it would now seem advisable that the initiative in presenting the views of western powers be transferred to the delegate of the United States, and that, if possible, the U.K. draft be modified to more closely approximate United States proposals.

Although Canada is not represented on the sub-commission, a useful service might be performed off stage if the Canadian delegation were able to help reconcile views of U.S. and U.K. It is felt that United Kingdom authorities should, in the first instance, be prepared to modify their draft, and the Canadian delegation may see fit to make this suggestion in Commonwealth meetings. However, the basic contention of the United Kingdom authorities that national animosities and the unstable economy of the new territory will necessitate a high degree of control should be borne in mind, and it is suggested that the Canadian delegation take the line that the governor should be permitted to retain sufficient check and reserve powers to ensure continuity and stability of administration.

As regards the duration of the period of provisional government before the permanent statute comes into effect, it would be of interest to receive United Kingdom views. It seems probable that this question will also be capable of resolution only in the Council of Foreign Ministers, and that area of agreement can be found somewhere between Soviet proposal for early withdrawal of foreign troops and assumption of authority under the Permanent Statute, and tentative United States view that period of provisional government should last as long as five years. Negotiations on this point are certainly at too early a stage to suggest any compromise proposal and no initiative in this matter should be taken by Canadian delegation, pending clarification of views of United Kingdom and United States.

POLITICAL AND TERRITORIAL COMMISSION FOR ITALY

STATEMENT BY THE HONOURABLE BROOKE CLAXTON, DELEGATE FOR CANADA, ON ARTICLE 17 OF THE DRAFT TREATY

I would like to indicate briefly the attitude of the Canadian Delegation to the question of the Italian colonies in Africa, Libya, Eritrea and Italian Somaliland.

The disposition of these colonies proposed by the Council of Foreign Ministers in Article 17 of the draft treaty is that these possessions are to continue under their present administration and their final disposal is to be determined by the Governments of the U.S.S.R., U.K., U.S.A. and France, within one year of the coming in force of the treaty. This provision was supplemented by the draft declaration which has just been circulated which indicates that the Four Powers will dispose of the matter "in the light of the wishes and the welfare of the inhabitants and the interest of peace and security, taking into consideration the views of other interested governments". Failing such disposition the Four Powers undertake to dispose of the colonies in accordance with a recommendation of the general assembly of the United Nations. In either event it is that the wishes of the inhabitants will be given consideration.

While this disposition is probably far from ideal, it seems to us to be the best solution on which we can hope to have agreement at this time. Accordingly, unless our present attitude is changed by arguments advanced in the course of this debate, we propose to vote for the proposal contained in the draft treaty, as this has been amplified in the draft declaration of the Four Powers which has been put before us.

To this general attitude there is one qualification however. And that is with regard to Eritrea.

The Canadian Delegation, like other members of the Conference, heard the appeal made yesterday by the representatives of Ethiopia before this Commission. That appeal was made in moderate terms but it was supported by facts which spoke for themselves with an eloquence far greater than that of words. Our Ethiopian colleagues made a powerful case for the immediate transfer of Eritrea to Ethiopia. That case was based on ethnic, historical, economic and strategic grounds. We cannot forget that Ethiopia was one of the first nations to suffer the full force of aggression in consequence of the failure of the system of collective action which had been established precisely to prevent such an occurrence, and that, consequently, Ethiopia should be one of the first to receive redress.

While perhaps it might be desirable at this stage not to bring the matter to a vote, the Canadian Delegation warmly supports the claims the Ethiopian Delegation has put forward. Irrespective, however, of any vote, we express the hope which, I believe, is shared by the majority of nations represented here, that the Four Powers will transfer Eritrea to Ethiopia and thus redress an old wrong and unite in one nation the people of a proud and ancient race. I felt it desirable that I should speak in this way as representing one of the more fortunate countries which has been saved so largely from the ravages of war and acknowledge the sufferings and the claims of a far off people; we recognize that as there must be one peace for all so there should be one justice for all, for men of every race, color and creed in every part of the world.

à la Conférence de paix de Paris*

Statement by Alternate Delegate<sup>1</sup>, Delegation to the Paris Peace Conference

Paris, September 28, 1946

SPEECH ON CANADIAN AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 71 OF THE PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY

This is the only amendment to the Draft Peace Treaties proposed by the Canadian Delegation. I hope, therefore, the Commission<sup>2</sup> will understand if I utilize the full ten minutes allowed by the new Rules of Procedure.

The amendment proposed by the Canadian Delegation is a very simple one and provides merely for the extension from eighteen months to three years of the period during which Italy shall grant reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment to the United Nations. If we examine the first paragraph of Article 71, we see that it provides for the reciprocal granting of most-favoured-nation treatment in commercial matters between Italy and the various United Nations pending the conclusion of commercial treaties or agreements between Italy and these countries. In other words, the purpose of this paragraph is to prevent discrimination by Italy and to discourage discrimination against Italy during the interim period before that country is able to conclude commercial treaties or agreements of her own with the various United Nations.

Now, in the opinion of the Canadian Delegation, eighteen months is too short a period to enable Italy to undertake the complicated negotiations for commercial treaties or agreements and to conclude successfully these treaties or agreements. Italy requires a breathing spell in which to place her commercial relations on a sound basis. One of the chief problems which will be confronting that country will be to find the foreign currency with which she can purchase the food and raw materials essential to the Italian economy. It is important that Italy should be protected against discrimination by any of the United Nations in seeking to develop markets for her products. This is vital to the reconstruction and future well-being of the Italian economy.

If we assume that the Treaty with Italy will come into force during the middle of 1947, the interim period, as now envisaged in the first paragraph of Article 71, would extend only up to the end of 1948. In the opinion of the Canadian Delegation, it is hardly feasible for the Italian Government to negotiate within that time a series of commercial treaties or agreements providing the necessary protection for Italian commerce. We also do not think that the various international organisations which have been established for regulating monetary and commercial relations between countries will be functioning effectively by the end of 1948. A further period of another eighteen months is desirable in order that the interim period should bear a proper and realistic relationship to the inevitable post-war adjustment in international trade.

The Italian economy will require more than eighteen months to recover from the effects of the war. It will be very difficult for Italy to decide on her commercial policy, on the products of which she wishes most actively to promote the sale abroad, and on the various other considerations which have to be taken into account when concluding commercial treaties or agreements with other countries.

In the Treaty of Versailles, Germany was required unilaterally to grant most-favoured-nation treatment to the other signatories of the Treaty for a period of five years. This worked a hardship on Germany in that she was unable to develop an independent commercial foreign policy during the five years the requirement was in force. But that is not the case with the proposal we are now considering, because Article 71 provides that Italy shall grant most-favoured-nation treatment only to those of the United Nations which, in fact, reciprocally grant similar treatment in like matters to Italy. She will be able to pursue an independent commercial policy based on the reciprocal exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment while she is negotiating and concluding commercial treaties or agreements. All we are asking through our amendment is that this interim period should be sufficiently long for this purpose and we are suggesting not five years, as was the case in the Treaty of Versailles, but merely three years.

While an extension of the interim period will work in favour of Italy, it will also be to the advantage of the United Nations as a whole, rather than to the advantage of any one of the United Nations in particular, if during the interim period all countries are assured of non-discrimination in their commercial relations with Italy. Consequently, in urging the extension of the interim period from eighteen months to three years I am not advocating the special interests of Canada or of any of the other countries represented at this Conference. It is for this reason that I hope all of the members of this Commission, including the countries which drafted the Peace Treaty with Italy, will be able to support the amendment proposed by the Canadian Delegation.

This amendment is in full keeping with the undertakings to which most of us have subscribed. I have shown that the object of the first paragraph of Article 71 is to have Italy adhere to the principle of most-favoured-nation treatment in international commercial relations. The object of our amendment is simply to facilitate Italy to adhere [sic] to the principle in giving her plenty of time to conclude commercial treaties or agreements based on this principle.

It is too much to hope that the post-war adjustments of international trade to the new conditions prevailing can be accomplished speedily. It would be optimistic to think that world trade would be functioning smoothly on the new basis two years from now. We must allow ample time for these adjustments to take place. It is, therefore, not too much to expect Italy to require three years rather than eighteen months after the conclusion of the Peace Treaty, to be in a position to join the family of the United Nations with an independent commercial policy of her own.

In agreeing to Article 71 of the Draft Peace Treaty with Italy, the Council of Foreign Ministers have endeavoured to assure that Italy will adhere to the principles enunciated in the Atlantic Charter and to the measures which have subsequently been taken to give practical effect to these principles. It is essential, however, that we should give Italy every encouragement of participating [sic] in this joint effort for the economic advancement of the whole world by making sure that the period in which she can adjust her policy to the new conditions will not be too brief. The Canadian Delegation are of the view that the period set forth in the First Paragraph of Article 71 is too brief. This may have been due to over-optimism on the part of those who drafted the Treaty as to the period required for the post-war adjustments of world trade. I wish to express, therefore, the hope that the four major Powers who drafted the Article have now been able to reconsider the matter and that they will support the amendment proposed by the Canadian Delegation. I also hope that all the other members of this Commission will agree to the extension of the period for the granting of reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment between Italy and the United Nations and that this amendment will receive the unanimous endorsement of the Commission.

Paris, September 29, 1946

SECRET. DELCA 90. Your telegram No. 455 CADEL 41 concerning the Bratislava bridgehead and transfer of population.

1. Yesterday afternoon at meeting of Sub-Committee of Political and Territorial Commission on Hungary, the principle of an extension in favour of Czechoslovakia on the bridgehead area on the south bank of the Danube was accepted by four votes against the Australian abstention. It was agreed, furthermore, that the area would include three out of the five villages demanded. Rabka and Bezenye which include roughly half of the Magyar population in the area originally demanded are left to Hungary.

2. Our intention at first was to insist on the linking up of the problem of the bridgehead with the wider question of the proposed transfer of 200,000 Magyars as both involve transfers of population. This proved to be impossible to effect as three members of the Sub-Committee of five (New Zealand, Czechoslovakia and Ukraine) were opposed to this point of view. Therefore, Bratislava bridgehead had to be examined as a separate matter and on its merits.

3. In view of this attitude of the majority of the members of the Sub-Committee, we stated that we were not opposed in principle to an extension of the bridgehead area provided a quid pro quo was granted Hungary and satisfactory arrangements were made to protect the interests of the Magyar population to be ceded to Czechoslovakia. The Czechoslovak delegate was adamant as regards compensation and pointed out the case of the Franco-Italian border where rectifications had been made without compensation. We felt that we could not press this point. Besides, satisfactory guarantees were given concerning population. The number of people involved, in any case, is not high and the cession is authorized on the clear undertaking that they will:

- (a) Be granted full human rights within the Czechoslovak public, or
- (b) Be transferred voluntarily to Hungary, or
- (c) Come under the terms of any arrangements existing or which may be made between the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Hungary. This is clearly spelled out in the recommendation.

4. On its merits, the Czechoslovak case was very strong. The territory ceded would enable the Czechoslovak Government to carry out their plan for an extensive development of the port of Bratislava on both sides of the Danube and provide space for the extension of the city of Bratislava. We were quite convinced that the Czechoslovak Government were not seeking to dominate more Magyars or grab Hungarian villages.

5. United Kingdom, United States of America desire was to link up the two problems in order to give more bargaining power to Hungary as they hoped that a bilateral arrangement concerning the bridgehead and the transfer would be worked out by the two countries. More than a week went by (and during five meetings of the Sub-Committee we were able to postpone a decision) and the United Kingdom and United States of America had been unable to bring about this arrangement. We came to the conclusion that we could not oppose the Czechs as regards the bridgehead any longer merely to cover up what appears to us lack of initiative or failure on the part of the United Kingdom and United States of America delegations in their negotiations with Czechoslovakia and Hungary. We are confident that, in view of the terms of the recommendation made by the Sub-Committee concerning the bridgehead, if and when the Czech and Hungarian delegations come together, it will be open to them to discuss the matter of the transfer as a whole and to suggest an agreed solution which will be acceptable to all concerned.

6. The problem of transfer was discussed at a special Commonwealth meeting yesterday afternoon. It came out quite clearly that while our position together with that of Australia and of the United Kingdom were identical,

New Zealand was prepared to support the proposed Czechoslovak amendment. Mr. Alexander appealed very strongly for unity but the head of the New Zealand delegation was away and he could only obtain a promise that new instructions would be sought. As it is expected that at best India and France may abstain, Czechoslovakia may obtain a favourable vote in the Commission on Hungary. To avoid this possibility the United Kingdom delegates are considering putting forward a modified amendment reducing the number of Magyars to be transferred and providing for international supervision. The United Kingdom delegate in the Commission on Hungary is yet confident that a satisfactory bilateral arrangement can be worked out in the short time remaining before the end of the Conference. He feels that a sub-amendment along the lines indicated above may be the least unsatisfactory solution for the time being.

7. At the close of yesterday's meeting of the Sub-Committee, at the suggestion of the New Zealand delegate, the Czech delegation agreed to meet this afternoon the Hungarian delegation in the presence of a member of the Sub-Commission who will act as an arbitrator. General Pope was invited by the Czechoslovak delegate to attend the meeting as the representative of the Sub-Commission. This is the most hopeful sign as yet of the possibility of an agreed solution concerning the transfer.

CONFIDENTIAL. DELCA 92. Following for Prime Minister from Claxton, Begins: In proposing a toast to the Vaniers yesterday, I read your telegram† which was greatly appreciated and expressed regrets we all had that you were not there to convey to Pauline and George our congratulations and good wishes. I referred to the main elements in their lives, the home, the family, the church and their country.

2. The two of the most difficult matters at the Conference are the Czechoslovak claims against Hungary for the transfer of the Bratislava bridgehead and of some 200,000 Magyars to Hungary. We could not avoid being appointed to Sub-Commission dealing with this, and General Pope has represented us on the Sub-Commission. Our position has been difficult and you will be pleased to hear that on Saturday the Czechoslovaks agreed to a meeting with the Hungarians and suggested that Pope act as Chairman of the meeting. A first meeting was held yesterday and while it may not be possible to get the Czechoslovaks and Hungarians together, the fact that the Czechoslovaks should suggest Pope after our attitude indicates their appreciation of our fairness.

3. You will also be pleased to hear that the only Canadian amendment proposed, which was to extend from eighteen months to three years the period during which Italy and the United Nations were to give each other most favoured nation treatment, was carried after Wilgress speech Saturday night by a vote of twelve to eight, Council of Foreign Ministers voting against because this was an agreed Article. This represents one of the largest votes yet obtained on a contested amendment to an agreed Article and is very gratifying.

4. The outlook now is that the Conference should end about 15th October. It has been a strenuous time and my present hope is to be able to take a few days holiday here before returning by boat. It has been wonderful to have Helen here.

5. You will be interested to hear that people are still talking about your trips to Normandy and Dieppe. Only last week the Secretary of the Puy's Committee called to ask our help in arranging a gala fête to be held next February. He has a record of your whole speech at Puy's and is going to bring it to us. Ends.

Statement by Chairman, Delegation to the Paris Peace Conference

STATEMENT BY THE HONOURABLE BROOKE CLAXTON DELIVERED BEFORE
THE PLENARY CONFERENCE ON TUESDAY, 8TH OCTOBER, 1946

Mr. President, Fellow Delegates,

We who have been meeting here are the representatives of the twenty-one nations whose combined efforts won the victory which gave us the right to say what the peace shall be. We had a unity of purpose in war. Our problem is to maintain that same unity in peace. We in Canada believe that we have shown that unity in war and peace. Many of our people, twice in a single generation, have come a long way to help restore freedom. Many of them came to France. Many of them will rest forever in France.

Et cette Conférence a eu lieu en France, nation pour laquelle nous Canadiens nourrissons des sentiments particuliers depuis plus de trois siècles.

Je rends hommage à ce pays qui, par sa farouche résistance, a aidé puissamment les autres armées alliées à bouter l'ennemi hors de France.

Je voudrais également exprimer ma profonde reconnaissance pour la généreuse hospitalité et les facilités accordées aux délégués par les autorités françaises.

While Canada has an interest in all the peace settlements, our main concern has been in the Italian Treaty. Canada was actively concerned in the defeat of Fascist and Nazi forces in Italy, when our armed forces were the third largest in the long and bitter struggle up the whole length of Italy. Through our contributions to U.N.R.R.A. and to military relief, we have sought to start Italy on the path to economic reconstruction and recovery. As members of an interdependent world society, we hope to see the rise of a new democratic Italy—purged of totalitarian practices and policies—who will take her place in the comity of European nations. Only in this way can Italy undo the harm that Fascist aggression has caused to her neighbours and our allies.

What has been accomplished in these arduous weeks? The provisions that have been made for the protection of human rights—of those rights of racial and religious minorities which were trampled upon during the dark days of Fascism—recognize an essential principle to which we all adhere.

The territorial clauses of the settlement with Italy were the subject of particularly careful and thorough consideration. The most difficult of these problems was that of the frontier between Italy and Yugoslavia and between Yugoslavia and the Free Territory of Trieste. The compromise for which the large majority of the Commission eventually voted followed the lines laid down by the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Canadian Delegation supported the creation of the Free Territory of Trieste in the hope that it will possess genuine independence under the authority of the United Nations. This hope, however, is based upon the belief that in the last resort, Yugoslavia, which was in the forefront in the war against the axis forces, will find it possible to play a leading role in supporting a pacific and progressive solution of this most difficult aspect of the Italian settlement.

The approval given by the Commission to the settlement between Austria and Italy of the difficult problem of the minority in the Tyrol should contribute to stability in this area. The transfer of the Dodecanese Islands was a symbolic recognition of the basic resistance of Greece.

On the settlement of the Italian colonies, we feel that the disposition provided for in Article 17 of the Draft Treaty is the best solution possible at this time. We hope that the Council of Foreign Ministers will support the powerful case put forward by Ethiopia for the transfer of Eritrea to Ethiopia, the first victim of Italian aggression. This would be not only a good solution on ethnic, historical and economic grounds, but also an act of historic justice.

On the economic side, our aim throughout was to give Italy the opportunity of recovering from the disastrous effects of the war years and to make it possible for her to ensure her place in the world economy of which we are all a part. At the same time, we have not been unmindful of the legitimate claims of those countries which suffered so much at the hands of Italian Fascism and Imperialism. We are glad to support that part of the Australian proposals which provided for the setting up of a reparations commission to co-ordinate and supervise deliveries of reparations by Italy. We made no reparations claims and our interest in the reparations problem was to see that consideration was given to the interest of all the parties.

Since Italy's economic life depends on the recovery of Italian export trade with as many foreign markets as possible, we were prompted to move the Amendment to Article 71 of the Italian Treaty, which was given such generous support in the Commission.

We believe that peace is not merely the absence of war but the positive establishment of prosperity. Trade between nations, like the well-being of the people within each nation, is a main pillar on which to build the structure of a lasting peace.

The purpose of the Canadian Amendment is simply to increase from eighteen months to three years the period during which the United Nations and Italy should grant each other most-favoured-nation treatment. If it is good to avoid discrimination for eighteen months, we believe that it is still better to extend the period to three years. We hope that the Conference will support and the Council will accept this Canadian proposal.

While we have been working on the settlement in Paris, world opinion has been following our proceeding with an anxious and often a critical eye. The view has even been expressed that the Conference was merely a rubber-stamp for decisions already taken by the Council of Foreign Ministers. This critical attitude was in part due to the feeling that the peace for which all of us had been fighting and working for six long years was slow in coming. It was in part due to a misunderstanding of the nature of the Conference.

It cannot be too often said that this is not a Conference to draft peace treaties; it is a Conference called by the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers to consider treaties which they had prepared. They started their work nearly a year ago. On many questions their most vital interests were involved. They have asked the other seventeen nations, who fought at their side to win the war, to work at their side to make the peace.

We have been meeting here for ten weeks and no one can say that the time has been too long for the task in hand. We all recall one of the memorable nights, that of October 2nd, when no less than 57 separate votes were taken in the Italian Political and Territorial Commission, and the work was concluded in consequence of the sleepless labours of the Commission under the remarkable leadership of its chairman.

The draft peace treaty was born of negotiation or compromise between the Great Powers. It has been our part to make recommendations to the Council of Foreign Ministers. This procedure has given the middle and smaller powers an opportunity to express and debate their views on the terms of the draft treaties. It has given the ex-enemy countries the opportunity to be heard in the full Conference and the Commissions.

Of these Commissions, the Italian Commissions, including twenty of the twenty-one nations represented here, have been the most important. They have also been the forum where issues have been most fully debated. A great many useful things have been learnt about the procedure of making peace and these can be of value in the future.

We hope the experience gained at this Conference will not be wasted. For example every delegate here knows of one deficiency or another in the rules of procedure. These rules should be examined and amplified in the light of our experience. Suggestions might be made with regard to the machinery for preparing the drafts of the other peace treaties which have still to be evolved. We hope that before this Conference concludes, or soon after, nations wishing to do so should be encouraged to put forward suggestions for the procedure to be adopted in making the peace with Germany and Japan.

Of immediate concern, however, are the accomplishments of this Conference. Their full extent is probably not realized throughout the world.

In the course of the first plenary session of this Conference, over two hundred amendments were put forward by the participating nations. Many more have since been introduced in the Commissions. Compromise and concession, moderation and tolerance have again been called for. Yet while many of the amendments have been modified, withdrawn or even rejected, the Conference has accomplished something positive and concrete.

In the Commissions on the Italian treaty no less than forty-three amendments or amplifications have been adopted, of which seventeen touched upon political articles, twenty-three on economic articles and three on military articles. Many of the articles in the draft treaty and certain of the amendments have been unanimously agreed to. Twenty-four of these amendments have been supported by a two-thirds majority. Others have been approved by more than half the members of the Conference.

Although under its restricted terms of reference the Legal and Drafting Commission has been charged up to now with the examination of all or parts of only 31 articles, etc. of the draft treaty with Italy, it has recommended drafting changes in no less than 13 cases, 11 of them unanimously.

The question now arises: What is to be the effect of the work done by the hundreds of experienced and devoted people who have been striving for peace here in Paris during these past weeks? The measure of the success or failure of the Paris Conference is the extent to which the Council of Foreign Ministers acts upon the recommendations of the Conference. The Paris Conference has nearly finished its task. We shall soon be voting on the recommendations that have come to us from the Commissions. Our hope is that the views which the Commissions have worked out after weeks of effort will be accepted by the Conference as a whole and that they will be acted upon by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Our Prime Minister suggested at the outset that the Council should meet during the Conference to facilitate and expedite its work, and it is gratifying to see that that has been done.

We must not forget that none of these recommendations represent everything that any nation would have liked to see in the Peace Treaty. Though most of them were voted by a two-thirds majority, they already represent an effort to meet conflicting views. Moreover the Council of Foreign Ministers will have before them the minority point of view. The Council of Foreign Ministers who have been working so long together, will see the need for a settlement which will close the curtain on the long years of war and start the people of the world on the path to peace.

This Conference has shown that far more important than the words we put on paper are the relations between those states on which power has imposed such grave responsibilities. The peace and prosperity of people everywhere depend on the ability of the Great Powers to translate into agreement the cries of the two billion people of every race and every colour and in every corner of the earth who desperately want an end to war and an end to the uncertainty which leads to war. They want work, food, shelter and a better chance for their children. They want a first instalment of that better world for which we hoped and worked and fought and which it is in our power to have.

Dear Maudie [Ferguson],

I have a terrific docket of letters from you to answer and a corresponding burden on my conscience. Also your esteemed sister from the Wild West was good enough to write. I understand Helen has been really doing wonders in writing you.

It has been marvelous having Helen here, making the whole difference in getting by with a life that was barely tolerable. I really never remember anything quite so exhausting and in many ways frustrating. We have had a very good Delegation which has pulled well together and worked hard, though modestly. I think it has added to the respect in which our country is held. After the closing of the Conference Tuesday night we had a party for all the staff: it was surprising to find that altogether we had been at one time or another 53 people on the Delegation. I have been here now since the 29th July. The Conference lasted 79 days and it had nearly 300 official sessions averaging about four hours each and at the end lasting as long as 30 hours of continuous meeting in one of the Commissions. It has all resulted in our making 179 recommendations to the Council of Foreign Ministers for changes in the Treaties. If they are adopted they will improve the Treaties. Many of the most important points, however, are still open. I imagine that it will be possible for the Council of Foreign Ministers to work out agreements of [sic] these during their meetings in New York.

Actually, when you get down to it, there is not an awful lot that anyone would like to see changed in the Draft Treaties. The Trieste frontier, the Military provisions and the reparations allowance might have been more favourable to Italy and improvements might be made in the provisions for the Danube and for the Italian colonies. When all is said, however, given the circumstances including the necessity for arriving at an agreement with the Soviet Union in order to bring the state of war and chaos to an end, the Treaties are not too bad, particularly if the recommendations we have made are adopted.

What has stung here is the atmosphere and the real division which has overshadowed the Conference. Someone described it as a "Sad Success". This is about true. The sad fact is that there is no one on our side having the capacity and the moral leadership to force or persuade the Slav block to take a less aggressive attitude. This means that there has been a hardening of the situation on the lines of difference. This has proceeded steadily since the end of the war in Europe. Nobody seems to have the capacity to stop it getting worse.

It may be that the issues are fundamental and intolerable, but I do not think so. I am still naïve enough to think that a great part of the difficulty is due to the language and to the fault of modern diplomacy. I was the President of the Legal and Drafting Commission which did not do very much or do it very well. One of the reasons was the Secretariat. In sixteen long sessions, handling hundreds of documents, we never had a Russian text until days after the matter had been decided. This was worse in our Commission because we got all our material from other Commissions, and consequently there was no time within which to do anything, still less the difficult task of translation from English or French to Russian. Looking back now I think I really should have resigned rather than work in such conditions.

Yours sincerely,

BROOKE CLAXTON

DESPATCH DELCA 72

Paris, November 6, 1946

Dear Sir,

COMMONWEALTH MEETINGS

51. You will already have received a number of cabled summaries and detailed minutes concerning the frequent informal consultations held by the Commonwealth delegations in Paris in the course of the Conference. The first of these meetings was held on the initiative of the United Kingdom delegation on August 21st while the Prime Minister was still in Paris. Their number increased with the heightened tempo of the Conference. The chief purpose of these meetings was to keep the various delegations advised [as] to the amendments being put forward and to exchange views on the range of detailed questions arising. In this way, too, the Commonwealth delegations were able to keep in closer touch with the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers and their Deputies and to obtain a first hand account of the attitude of the inviting powers to amendments in which each country was particularly interested. It is unnecessary to do more here than record one or two general observations. In the first place it is clear from an analysis of the actual votes cast that the Commonwealth countries voted together as frequently as did the members of the Soviet bloc. Deductions from this fact, however, might be misleading, since in fact similar results could be obtained by comparing the degree of similarity in the final voting of a number of other non-Slav states, e.g. The Netherlands, Greece and Belgium. The explanation is that the Commonwealth countries were, towards the end of the Conference, part of a much larger group of states which voted together on most clauses of the draft treaties. But in the earlier stages, there were apparent differences on a score of points, most of which were fully submerged in the common endeavour to secure a two-thirds majority on the important "open" issues. Differences of view were frequently due to the failure on the part of the United Kingdom representatives (or other delegations) to explain policies fully in advance, which others might have been willing to support. In view of Mr. Vyshinsky's charges that the Australians were merely a front for the United Kingdom delegation, it is of interest to note that the first the United Kingdom delegation saw of the 70 odd Australian amendments which became such a source of embarrassment to them was in the official Conference document prepared by the Secretariat. This same lack of team-work was seen in reverse in the filing of the United Kingdom claim regarding reparations from Italy which was done without previous word to the other Commonwealth countries, some of whom were equally interested. With the Chairman of the Italian Political Commission and the Legal and Drafting Commissions both present at these informal discussions, it was possible to discuss procedural points at some length in these meetings. When the Australian delegation was being bitterly attacked in all the Commissions by the U.S.S.R., Mr. Beasley of Australia asked that efforts should be made by the United Kingdom and certain other Commonwealth countries (he had a special word of praise for Canada's help) to ensure the Australian delegates a fair hearing in the Commissions.

52. Instances of pressure were, on the whole, rare. The United Kingdom delegation kept an anxious eye on the sub-committee on the Bratislava Bridgehead set up on September 9th, and in particular sought to curb the New Zealand delegate, Mr. Costello, who was pursuing an exclusively pro-Czech policy in this Commission which, in the view of the United Kingdom

(and the United States delegation), was highly dangerous. To bring the New Zealand delegate into line, the Acting Head of the United Kingdom delegation, Mr. A. V. Alexander, considered it necessary to appeal direct to the Prime Minister of New Zealand over the head of the Delegation at Paris. In this effort he was successful in bringing about a sudden reversal of the attitude of the New Zealand delegate in the sub-commission, although he was strongly criticized privately for his action by Mr. McIntosh. It also seemed to the Canadian delegation that there were occasions when the United Kingdom delegation did not see the importance of maintaining a close unity of view with the United States. An example of this was given in the discussions in mid-September concerning the Trieste statute when the Canadian delegation intervened behind the scenes to press for a reconciliation of the differences between the United Kingdom and the United States drafts on this subject. (See our telegram Delca No. 73 of September 17th) †.

53. Whenever he was present, Mr. Bevin had an electric effect on the whole of the United Kingdom delegation, and indeed, gave us all the impression of a sage and experienced negotiator in whom reliance could be placed. His absences from these sessions, however, were frequent, and at such times he was sorely missed. Mr. Alexander seemed to be guided entirely by his permanent officials, and occasionally appeared to be visibly surprised that other members of the Commonwealth should hold different views on certain issues than those held by the United Kingdom. At one time, he rather gave himself away by referring to a statement which the United Kingdom delegate was proposing to make in connection with the Declaration on the future of the Italian colonies, and enquiring whether there would be any objection to this statement being made by the United Kingdom spokesman on behalf of the other Commonwealth countries. The answers were categorical, and the subject was dropped amidst the raising of eyebrows in the Dominions Office corner. A further example of heavy handedness was at the last meeting which was held on October 8th on the eve of the Plenary voting when Mr. Alexander said it might be desirable to review the voting in the Commissions in order to obtain "Commonwealth unanimity" in the Plenary Conference. Of the other leaders, Field Marshal Smuts was the outstanding personality after the departure of Dr. Evatt. His position was less that of a national leader than of an elder statesman who was frequently more active in the policies of Empire than any of the United Kingdom representatives. The Australian delegation was much weakened with Dr. Evatt's departure to fight the elections, and after the first excitement caused by their spate of amendments had died down, Mr. Beasley and his colleagues seemed to be defending causes in which they had lost heart, or perhaps had never really accepted. New Zealand's ablest representative was Mr. McIntosh who did his best under difficult circumstances to bolster the two senior delegates, Mr. Mason and Mr. Jordan. The Indian delegates spoke seldom on these occasions, and reflected the tensions of the new Indian Government in their cautious approach to the problems discussed at the Commonwealth sessions and in the Conference as a whole.

FINAL PLENARY SESSIONS

The Canadian delegation was successful in obtaining a 12-8 vote on the agreed Article 71 of the Italian Treaty in favour of extending the period of most-favoured-nation treatment for 18 months as provided in the draft treaty to 3 years. Largely owing to the fight of the United States delegation the Conference recommended by a two-thirds majority the re-establishment of an international control of the Danube. The great weakness of this recommendation, however, is that it was bitterly opposed by those states most directly interested.

60. Indeed the weakness of nearly all the recommendations is that they were carried only in the face of determined and sustained opposition from the solid core of states which constituted the Slav bloc. By way of protest against the Conference decision on the Italo-Yugoslav frontier and Trieste, the Yugoslav delegation which had fought a bitter rear-guard action throughout the Conference and refused to accept the Conference decision, was not present at the last session. The majority decisions of the Conference had not changed their views in any degree, and their voluntary absence on October 15th was a mute challenge to the validity of the procedures of the Conference. While it is possible, therefore, that the recommendations regarding reparations and compensation will be adopted by the Council of Foreign Ministers, the rigid opposition of Yugoslavia, backed by the Soviet Union, to the proposals regarding the internationalization of Trieste makes their fate more problematical.

61. In a final speech made before the Plenary Conference (October 8th) the Canadian delegate suggested that the measure of the success or failure of the Paris Conference would be the extent to which the Council of Foreign Ministers acted upon the recommendations of the Conference. Since the Council of Foreign Ministers must reach agreement on the basis of unanimity, there is no likelihood that the recommendations of the Conference will be accepted without a further period of negotiation and compromise. The initiative remains in the hands of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the final stage in the conclusion of the five treaties will depend essentially on the relations between the drafting powers.

62. This report would be incomplete without a reference to the work of the Canadian delegation. The delegation's role at this Conference was a modest but constructive one. The delegation moved few amendments to the draft treaties, partly because the issues involved in concluding final treaties with the secondary ex-enemy states were of more indirect concern to Canada than to many of the other participant states, and partly because of our appreciation of the limited scope of the Conference itself. Like most non-European states, therefore, Canada did not play an active part in the detailed discussions on aspects of the European frontier settlement. General views, however, were stated on the principles on which the settlement should be based. Reference has already been made to the Prime Minister's first Plenary speech. On August 17th, the Canadian delegate intervened in the debate in the Plenary session to support Austria's claim to be heard on the question of the Austro-Italian frontier, pointing out that Austria was one of the first victims of Nazi aggression, and that the Conference had the obligation to ensure interested states a fair hearing. Similar considerations operated in our interventions in the Hungarian Commission on August 30th in favour of extending a hearing to the Hungarian delegation, and subsequently in the Hungarian Sub-Commission which dealt with the difficult questions of the Bratislava bridgehead and the transfer of the Magyar minority from Slovakia. The fact that General Pope was called upon by the Czechoslovak delegation and by the members of the Sub-Commission to act as Chairman of the joint meeting held by the Czechoslovak and Hungarian delegations on September 29th is, I believe, both a tribute to General Pope's personal qualities, and a recognition of the disinterested and impartial attitude the delegation maintained throughout on these difficult questions of European frontiers. This attitude was further set forth before the Italian Political Commission in connection with the debate on the Italo-Yugoslav boundary on September 18th, at which time the Canadian delegate, after setting forth the particular reasons for supporting the South African amendment, stressed that only if a genuine effort were made to implement the eventual decision of the Conference and to settle current difficulties by judicial procedures, could there be any lasting peace and prosperity in Europe. The chief Canadian interest was in the economic aspects of the treaties, and particularly the Italian Treaty. Mr. L. D. Wilgress and his assistants followed closely the intricate discussions in the two Economic Commissions and made a number of interventions in the Commission stage in support of proposals consistent with Canada's interest in multilateral trade and world prosperity. Apart from specific contributions in the public sessions, the delegation worked quietly but persistently in the background to reduce unnecessary divisions and to gain support for those general policies which seemed best calculated to improve the draft treaties.

You will have seen from recent Dominions Office telegrams† that the Council of Foreign Ministers has now decided upon a procedure for the early stages of the German settlement. The salient points seem to be the following:

(1) "Special Deputies" will meet in London on January 14th to hear the views of the smaller States on the German settlement;

(2) These Deputies will also discuss further procedure with regard to the preparation of a peace treaty;

(3) They will not, according to the terms of reference, hear the views of the smaller States on procedure; neither will they proceed to draft a treaty;

(4) The Control Council for Germany will prepare a report, which will be presented directly to the Council of Foreign Ministers at the next meeting;

(5) The Foreign Ministers will meet in Moscow in March. They will have before them the report of the Special Deputies on procedure and on views of smaller powers, and the Report of the Control Council. They will then proceed to draft a treaty.

These arrangements give us even less opportunity to participate in the early stages of the German settlement than we had in the case of Italy, and we shall have to take an early decision whether or not we shall press for some form of association in the peace making more in keeping with Canada's contribution to the war. It appears to me that there are three possible courses of action:

(1) We can accept the suggestion that we present our views to the Special Deputies in London on January 14th;<sup>1</sup>

(2) We can refuse to appear before the Special Deputies as we did when we were asked to present our views to the Foreign Ministers themselves on Italy. This is rather more difficult in the case of Germany since our interest in the German settlement is considerably greater;

(3) We can endeavour to have the terms of reference of the Special Deputies interpreted with some flexibility so that the Special Deputies will be able not only to "hear our views" but to discuss the settlement with us.

It would be useful also if they could discuss procedural questions with representatives of the smaller Powers. In this way it might be possible to iron out in private at the official level some of the procedural quarrels that will otherwise arise in public at a later stage. It might be possible also to suggest the association on a functional basis of representatives of smaller States in the actual drafting of the treaties. For example, Canada might have little concern in the sections of the treaty on eastern boundaries but would desire to discuss with the Foreign Ministers at an early stage the economic clauses or the clauses on central government.

It is my view that we should try the third course. It seems to me that some empirical and constructive approach to the question of our association in the drafting of the treaty, rather than a mere acceptance or rejection of the present proposals would have advantage.<sup>2</sup>

If you approve of this course of action, we could telegraph to the High Commissioner in London and the Ambassador in Washington at once, asking them to put these views before the United Kingdom and United States Governments respectively. If this approach produces only negative results, I think we should then refuse to appear before the Special Deputies.

A draft treaty with Austria will be prepared by the Special Deputies when they meet in London. I take it that our policy in regard to this treaty will be governed by developments in regard to our association in the German treaty.

TOP SECRET. We have been considering decisions taken by Council of Foreign Ministers concerning peace treaties with Germany as communicated in Dominions Office telegrams D. 1144, 1145, 1146 and 1147 of December 9th,† and D. 1164, 1165, and 1166 of December 13th.† These telegrams contained, amongst other things, statement of methods by which views of other countries which participated in war against Germany should be heard.

2. These arrangements give us even less opportunity to participate in the early stages of the German settlement than we had in the case of Italy. It seems to us, however, that some empirical and constructive approach to the question would be preferable to a mere refusal, on principle, to present our views to the Special Deputies in London. We have decided, therefore, to seek some form of association in preparation of treaties more in keeping with Canada's contribution to the war.

3. We would hope, therefore, that the terms of reference to the Special Deputies might be interpreted with some flexibility so that the Special Deputies will be able not only to hear our views but to discuss the settlement with us.

4. We think also that it would be useful if the Special Deputies would discuss with us, and representatives of other countries to be heard, not only the settlement with Germany but also the questions of procedure included in their terms of reference as shown in telegram D. 1165 of December 13th. In this way it might be possible to iron out in private at the official level some of the procedural difficulties that will otherwise arise in public at a later stage.

5. We would suggest, further, the association on a functional basis of representatives of smaller States in the actual drafting of the treaties. In this way

Canada might be enabled to discuss with the Foreign Ministers at an early stage clauses of the treaty with Germany which are of particular interest to us such as the economic clauses or the clauses on central government. On the other hand we should not particularly desire an opportunity to be associated in the drafting of clauses on such questions as the Eastern boundaries of Germany.

6. I would be grateful if you would present these views to the United States Government at your earliest convenience with the request that they consider whether or not Canada might be associated with the work of the Special Deputies along the lines suggested. In discussing question with United States authorities you may add, if you think it expedient to do so, that while we have no objection in principle to appearing before Special Deputies in London, we shall not be prepared to do so if we are not given the opportunity to join with them in the discussion of the problems involved. In other words, we shall not be prepared merely to appear, to present our views, and to withdraw.

7. The Canadian High Commissioner in London is being requested to make similar representations to the United Kingdom Government.

London, January 3, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following from the Prime Minister for the Prime Minister, Begins:

1. I have seen your telegram No. 265 in which is recorded the decision of the Canadian Government to withdraw the Canadian Army occupation force and the R.C.A.F. units engaged on occupational duties from Germany between April and the autumn of 1946.

2. I fully appreciate the reasons underlying this decision and am well aware how great will be the administrative problems resulting from your retention of forces in Europe after 1946.

3. At the same time, I would earnestly request you to reconsider this decision. The withdrawal of the Canadian forces will inevitably result in the retention of an extra number of forces from the United Kingdom. Full credit for the help we can expect to obtain from our minor Allies has already been allowed for in our planning.

4. I know that heavy demands are being made on you to demobilize, at the earliest date, every possible man from the Canadian forces. You will, I am sure, appreciate the demands that are being made on me for similar action in order to meet our tremendous task of reconstruction.

5. Your decision will also mean that we shall still have a number of men serving in Germany who will have as much as five years service when Canada will have withdrawn her last man from overseas.

6. It would seem hard that this country should be expected to bear the whole burden of occupational duties in Europe. This would, in effect, be on behalf of all of us in the British Commonwealth who have fought together in the war and are seeking in the same spirit of partnership to play our part in restoring Europe and the world in general. If I may state frankly, for your consideration, the programme which seems to us to meet our needs, it would be that you keep a Canadian division and elements of the Royal Canadian Air Force in Europe at least until after the spring of 1947. If you were then to withdraw your division in a phased six month programme, say one brigade in March 1947, the second in June 1947 and the third in September 1947, we should find the hardship caused by its withdrawal much less onerous than during 1946. Similarly, we would like to see at least two of the R.C.A.F. fighter squadrons remaining with us until March 1947.

7. I realize that this is very different from what you yourself have in mind and that it must present considerable difficulties for you, but I know that I can express my thoughts to you with complete intimacy and that you will reply in the same spirit. We are all in an extremely difficult situation and I am confident that you will do your best to help. Malcolm MacDonald has seen this telegram in draft and will be in a position to discuss the matter with you, if you wish, on his return in the middle of this week. Ends.

Ottawa, January 14, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following from Prime Minister for the Prime Minister, Begins: I have given careful consideration to your message No. 1 of January 3rd and we have reviewed our position in the light of your representations.

I think I fully appreciate your difficulties and would be glad were we in a position to lessen them. I feel, however, I should let you know at once that we shall not be able to modify the decisions about the withdrawal of the Canadian occupation forces communicated to you in my telegram No. 265 of December 8th. These decisions were reached by the full Cabinet after a close review of the problems involved in maintaining a Canadian force in Germany after March 31st next. I have explained, at some length, to your High Commissioner the considerations which have determined our policy in this matter. In our view they allow no alternative to the carrying out of the programme of which you have been advised, namely, that beginning in April next the Canadian Army occupation force should be progressively reduced on a schedule providing for its withdrawal with the object of completing movements from the Continent before the end of this summer, and of repatriating all Canadian Army personnel now overseas by the autumn of 1946. Ends.

I saw Mr. St. Laurent and his ministerial colleagues on the 22nd January. We had a full and frank talk about occupational forces.<sup>1</sup>

I am sending you a note† of our discussion by air mail. I am also sending you by the same bag a memorandum† which gives our estimate of the Naval, Army and Air Forces which we shall have to keep up in order to meet our present commitments. In addition, on the suggestion of Mr. St. Laurent, I am taking steps to find out what forces the Americans expect to have on occupational duties in Germany, Austria and Japan on the 30th June, 1946 and I will telegraph the information as soon as I have it.

I am sure that, when you have all the facts in front of you, you will realise that the withdrawal of the Canadian contribution in Europe would not only throw an undue burden on the United Kingdom but would also be inconsistent with the common purpose of the United Nations, who are pledged to the provision of security for the purpose of maintaining peace.

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, January 29, 1946

Dear General Pope,

It is our custom to write to the Chief of a Mission proceeding to a new post an informal letter, outlining some of the matters with which he will be especially concerned, and suggesting certain topics on which the Department is particularly interested to have reports. Of course, we realize that in the case of Germany there are many unknown factors which are bound to govern the functions of your Mission and, therefore, we have not tried to define the scope of your activities precisely.

We have thought it desirable, however, to draw up a set of preliminary instructions for the guidance of your Mission, which follow in this letter. You should feel free to add your own comments and suggestions and refer any further matters to the attention of the Department for supplementary instructions.

In a general way I think you will find Berlin a good observation post, not only for German affairs themselves, but also for the policies of the occupying Powers. It is no exaggeration to say that the German problem is central to the peace and prosperity of Europe as a whole.

Moreover, you will find in Berlin the meeting of Soviet and western influences in Europe, and the interplay of these forces, I need hardly say, far transcends their direct relation to the German problem. We shall look forward to receiving your reports with great interest.

We have tried in Section 3 below to outline Canadian interests in Germany. Our general interest in the pacification and reconstruction of Europe is obvious. So also are our interests in protecting Canadian nationals and their property in Germany. There is also a considerable Canadian interest in the German economic field. It is clear that, at least for a period of some years, German imports will be limited to certain essentials approved by the occupying Powers, and a first charge will be made against German exports for the payment of these approved imports. Canadian exports to Germany, therefore, will of necessity be very small and will probably be limited to supplies negotiated by one or other of the occupying Powers. However, the restrictions placed on German industrial production as the result of Allied policy will doubtless create opportunities for Canadian exports in replacement of German trade abroad. This is a development that should be watched, and I am hoping to have your Mission given adequate assistance in the economic field, through the appointment of suitable personnel.

Below, under various heads, are set out some of the information and suggestions regarding the functions of your Mission which I hope will be of help to you in the work of your Mission.

I. STATUS OF MISSION

The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and the Soviet Union negotiated an agreement in the European Advisory Commission (with which France was later associated) with regard to the organization of the Allied control machinery in Germany in the period during which Germany will be carrying out the basic requirements of unconditional surrender.

Under the terms of this agreement "supreme authority in Germany" is exercised, "on instructions from their respective Governments, by the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the United Kingdom, United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics" (and of France) "each in his own zone of occupation, and also jointly, in matters affecting Germany as a whole, in their capacity as members of the supreme organ of control" which was constituted under the terms of this agreement. This "supreme organ of control" is the Allied Control Council.

Provision was made under the terms of this agreement for the association of certain other Governments with the Allied Control Council by the inclusion of Article 8 which states that "the necessary consultation with the Governments of the United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by the appointment by such Governments of Military Missions (which may include civilian members) to the Control Council having access through the appropriate channels to the organs of control".

II. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE CANADIAN MILITARY MISSION IN GERMANY

Authority for establishing the Canadian Mission was given by Order-in-Council P.C. 8500 of October 12th, 1945, whereby "the Minister of National Defence, with the co-operation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is to organize a military mission with authority 'to protect and maintain Canadian interests in military and civil matters within Germany and to do such other things as may be referred to it by the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs in military and civil matters respectively'."

III. CANADIAN INTERESTS IN GERMANY

In connection with these terms of reference of the Mission, Canadian interests in Germany include the following:

(1) Canada, in common with other Allied countries, has a major interest in the pacification and recovery of Europe, in relation to which the German settlement is of supreme importance;

(2) The Canadian Government desires direct access to information on conditions inside Germany and with regard to Allied Policy in Germany which will be of value in formulating Canadian policy;

(3) Canadian economic interests, and particularly Canadian export trade should engage the attention of the Mission. The effect of the decline or elimination of German industries on world trade as a result of industrial disarmament imposed on Germany by the Allies needs to be borne in mind in relation to possible Canadian trade expansion;

(4) The Canadian Government desires direct access to information available in Germany relating to German interests in Canada;

(5) Canadian nationals either resident or temporarily located in Germany may require protection or assistance;

(6) Canadian property interests in Germany may require protection;

(7) As long as Canadian occupation forces remain in Germany, certain duties in connection therewith may devolve upon the Mission as may be indicated from time to time by the Minister of National Defence;

(8) The furtherance of other direct Canadian interests relating to the peace settlement with Germany will be indicated from time to time by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, such as the settlement of claims for losses inflicted on Canadians by the enemy, including reparations, punishment of war crimes committed against Canadians, etc.

IV. FUNCTIONS OF CANADIAN MILITARY MISSION

In relation to the interests defined in general terms under paragraph 3, the functions which the Canadian Military Mission will be expected to perform include the following:

A. REPORTING

(1) Political. It is important that the Canadian Government should be kept informed regarding the policies formulated in the Control Council, conditions within Germany, and questions relating to the European settlement generally. Political information of special interest includes the following:

- the general policies of the occupying Powers, collectively or individually;
- the German reactions to the policies of the occupying Powers;
- the rise of political parties in Germany;
- the development of centrifugal and centripetal political forces in Germany, including the establishment of a centralized German administration and tendencies in the opposite direction of local autonomy or separation;
- German frontier problems;
- the study of German public opinion.

(2) Economic and Social Conditions

- Prospects of Canadian trade and commerce;
- The German food situation;
- German industrial organization including cartels;
- German trade union movement;
- German currency and financial problems and foreign exchange position;

Social conditions, educational problems and de-Nazification;
Position of churches and religion.

(3) Military

Periodical reports on military matters considered to be of interest to the Minister of National Defence.

B. PROTECTION OF CANADIAN INTERESTS

(1) Canadian Nationals

One of the principal functions of the Canadian Military Mission will be the protection of Canadian nationals in Germany. This will include handling of applications from Canadians desiring repatriation to Canada or other assistance. Such applications include certain persons who were born in Germany, who later came to Canada where they secured naturalization, and who returned to Germany before the war. As certain of these applications involve persons who were not interned and who served the German war effort, full information should be obtained before such cases are referred to this Department for consideration. At present these cases are handled by Foreign Office representatives in the United Kingdom, United States and French zones of occupation. There are no Foreign Office representatives in the Soviet zone of occupation. The Mission should report to the Department when it is in a position to take over this work from the Foreign Office representatives and should also give as full an account as possible of the procedure being followed in the handling of such cases.

(2) Enquiries received from the Department of External Affairs with regard to relatives in Germany of Germans in Canada

At present such enquiries are referred to the Foreign Office representatives in the United Kingdom, United States or French zones of occupation but only if the person about whom the enquiry is being made is a British subject. The Mission should report on what it is able to do regarding such enquiries and recommend the rules that might be followed with a view to having a public statement issued in Canada covering not only personal enquiries of this nature but also the possibility of persons in Canada sending money or parcels to relatives and friends in Germany.

(3) Property of Canadian Nationals

At the present time the Department of External Affairs is receiving many claims from residents in Canada covering property losses in Europe. These claims may be divided into three categories:

- (a) claims for reparations against Germany resulting from war damage;
- (b) claims for restitution of specific identifiable property;
- (c) claims for damage against Allied countries.

In the cases of claims for reparations against Germany the claimant is instructed to file his claim with the Canadian Custodian. These claims, as far as the Mission is concerned, will be handled by the Custodian's representative, acting on advice from the Custodian (see Section (4) below—Investigation of Custodian Interests). In the second and third cases an affidavit in quadruplicate is required and should be forwarded to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs containing the following information:

- (i) the full name and change of name, if any, of the claimant;
- (ii) the former and present nationality of the claimant including the place, number and date of issue of his naturalization certificate, if any;
- (iii) a detailed description of the property, its value and a description of the claimant's title thereto;
- (iv) detailed circumstances of the claim;
- (v) the names of any persons connected with the transfer of the property if such transfer was unauthorized by the legitimate owner;
- (vi) any further information which would facilitate the discovery of the property or the determination of the claimant's right.

(4) Investigation of Custodian Interests

(i) The Custodian's representative will handle the investigation of claims for reparations against Germany resulting from war damage. Information will be supplied to him by the Custodian and he will be instructed on the action he is to take on individual cases.

(ii) The Custodian's representative will also be responsible for the following:

- (a) the investigation of all German interests and investments in Canada where evidence is available either in Germany or other European countries.
- (b) the investigation of all matters relating to Canadian securities physically situated in Germany both with respect to securities owned by enemies and securities plundered by the enemy from formerly occupied territories.
- (c) at least in the preliminary stages, if Canada accepts the proposed reparations agreement, attending at the sessions of the Committee of Experts in matters of enemy property Custodianship in Brussels.

C. MILITARY AND OTHER ACTIVITIES OF THE MISSION

Other activities of the Mission will include military liaison with the Canadian forces of occupation, military liaison with other military missions to the Allied Control Council and such other military functions as may be referred to the Mission by the Minister of National Defence.

V. COMMUNICATIONS

According to the terms of the Order in Council P.C. 8500 of October 12th the normal channel of communication will be "between the Ministry of National Defence and the Military Mission in military matters, and between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Military Mission in civil matters generally, and between the Secretary of State of Canada and the Military Mission in special matters relating to the Office of the Custodian of Enemy Property".

It is therefore the intention of the Canadian Government that the Head of the Mission will report to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on civil matters, to the Minister of National Defence on military matters, and that the Custodian's representative will report to the Secretary of State on questions relating to the work of the Custodian's office. Communications of interest or concern to other Departments should be addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for transmission to the other departments concerned.

Communications between Ottawa and Berlin will have to pass through London and appropriate arrangements should be made with the United Kingdom authorities in conjunction with the office of the High Commissioner in London for cable and diplomatic bag facilities. In connection with the transport of correspondence by diplomatic bag, it should be noted that communications not of an urgent nature should be marked for onward transmission from London by sea transport in view of the high cost of trans-Atlantic air mail at the present time.

In addition to the matters set out above, I hope that you will feel inclined to keep us informed of your general impression of life and conditions in Germany. Several of the Chiefs of Canadian Missions find it convenient to write informal descriptive letters to supplement formal despatches, especially when they relate to material which is perhaps difficult to incorporate in a more formal communication.

On our part, we shall endeavour to send you information which will be of use to your Mission. In particular any memoranda prepared in the Department which relate to the problem of the German peace settlement will be sent to you.

Finally, I should like to wish you well in your pioneer and difficult task of establishing the Canadian Military Mission in Germany. I know that you will have serious material problems to contend with for some little time and you will not find the Department lacking in sympathy and understanding of your problems.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany, to Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Berlin,] May 24, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I beg to refer to your letter of the 14th May,† with which was enclosed a memorandum† dealing with the issues raised by the French proposals to separate the Ruhr and the Rhineland from the rest of Germany, and as well the British counter-proposals thereto, with regard to which you have asked me to comment. I venture to comply, though at the outset I should like to observe that although in its broad lines the subject is one which is uppermost in the minds of those of us who are serving in Germany, the solution of this difficult problem is being sought elsewhere, and that in Berlin up-to-date information seems difficult to come by.

2. So far as my observation goes, my acquaintances in the several Missions here do not seem to be particularly well posted on the present position. In any event they express such divergent views that I am under the impression that they but reflect personal opinions or else the views popularly held in their respective countries. As regards the representatives of the Occupying Powers, there is but one group to which I can have recourse with any hope of success, but here again the results are usually meagre. Caution and reserve are undoubtedly excellent virtues in themselves, but to an inquirer it sometimes seems that they can be over-done. I often find myself wishing that I could once more tap the fruitful sources with which I formerly had contact in Washington. But to my muttons.

3. In the first place, and at this stage I propose to confine my remarks to points of detail, I would suggest that nothing short of crass ineptitude on the part of the Western Powers could possibly bring about a rise of Communism to the west of the Elbe. During the past 12 months the Soviet has over-played its hand. We are all familiar with the age-old dread in which the French have held the Germans. I suggest that this feeling was, and is, mild compared to the dread and horror in which the Germans hold the Russians. I have yet to discuss any question with a German, be it the future of his country or the prospect for this season's harvest, or even the price of eggs, that the question of Russia has not come up. The German has Russia on the brain and I have no doubt, with very good reason. When I first came to Berlin I was very conscious that I was defenceless from the east. This feeling has now passed for when one is living in a concentration camp one fence more or less makes little difference. But believe me, it is different with the German. Rapine and rape make bad missionaries. And if one looks farther afield than Prussia, it seems to me that the recent elections in Bavaria, in France, Belgium and Holland indicate that world opinion, our world at any rate, is swinging away from the extreme left.

4. I wonder if in the last analysis the statement that there would be little hope for the success of any solution of the western European problem unless it received the long-term support of the United States is fundamentally true. That at first sight it does so appear, I readily agree. That United States support would be invaluable is a proposition which of course commands assent. But does this desideratum fall within the limits of practical politics? As to this I have some doubt. Walter Lippman's idea of an Atlantic Community made a strong appeal to my mind a year or so ago. I have long since given up hope that it can be achieved. Rather do I incline to the view I held in Washington at the time of Dumbarton Oaks, and later in Ottawa before we went to San Francisco, that we should not set our sights too high but rather than to aim at universality which I feel is beyond our reach, we should set ourselves the more moderate and I think reasonable objective of regional arrangements. One step at a time is to my mind the only way by which real progress can be made. To attempt too much at once I fear leads only to disillusionment and worse. It has done so within our lifetime.

5. Nor can I bring myself to believe that our American friends can really be of practical help in the solution of Europe's political troubles. I shall not labour the point here as I expressed myself pretty fully on this subject in my Despatch No. 38 of 23rd of March.† I shall content myself by saying that twice in the last 30 years, and on each occasion very much against their will, the United States in their own interest intervened in a European war to the end that the United Kingdom might be sustained. I think it would equally be to their interest to do so again should we be afflicted with another.

6. Another thought that occurs to me is that the Anglo-Saxon mind is too prone to give undue weight to what the reaction of the German people might be to one or the other of the several courses of action that lie before us. It was British solicitude for Germany at Versailles which, as I believe, eventually brought us to the very edge of disaster in 1939. If carried too far it may do so once again for it provides the ardent German nationalist with an effective weapon to play upon our feelings and to whittle away whatever plan of control we may decide to impose. Moreover it seems to me to be another case of judging foreigners by the same standards we use to judge ourselves, than which, in the case of the Germans, there could be no greater error. All that we have lived through and read surely points to the great, I might almost allow myself to say the vital, necessity of making up our minds as to what we want to do and then of doing it with lasting determination. Hitler was able successfully to rail against the dictate of Versailles simply because he had good reason to feel that one or more of the chief architects of the peace of 1919 did not really have their hearts and minds in their work. Must we fall into the same error once more before we finally learn that considerations which mean much to us are without effect on minds so different to our own?

7. And lastly, as regards separate points of detail, let us not confuse our minds by the thought that anything we may do might tend to divide Europe into two camps. I submit in all earnestness that Europe is divided into two camps and that undue solicitude on our part can have no effect other than to accentuate the present line of cleavage. East of the line of the Elbe to the Adriatic, Europe is governed or at least dominated by men of a civilization, or barbarism if you will, entirely different to our own. When they were desperately trying to stave off defeat far inside their own frontiers they found time to make up their minds as to what they wanted and at the opportune moment they carried out their plan. Having done this they are taking advantage of the confusion in our ranks to spread their influence still farther afield. I have already argued that it would be folly on our part to allow them to do so, indeed I have suggested that they are unlikely to succeed, but the fact is that our indecision a year after the cessation of hostilities affords them an undeserved opportunity of making the attempt.

8. In business, I believe, boards of directors are frequently confronted with the necessity of coldly appreciating their financial position and when it is adverse, of cutting their losses and making a fresh start. I suggest that in the business of international politics the situation is often much the same. If milk has been spilt, why spilt it has been and there's an end of it, or should be. What is of importance is to save what may be left.

9. Again, those of us who have served our lives in the Army were taught as young men that no advance could be made except from a secure base. I suggest this truism holds good in other fields. If as I have recommended, and am recommending, that we adopt a firm and unequivocal attitude I do so only in respect of where we have, or can, establish a secure footing. Of little avail to try to force our views in respect of truly representative government in Rumania, for Rumania to the Western Allies is a very slippery slope. There we are bound to fail and I suggest we should have known in advance that in that part of the world we should only find discomfiture.

10. On the other hand, in Western Europe we are home. West of the Elbe the cards are all in our own hands and we should have the gumption to play them. Firmness and decision when the setting and time are opportune are of great virtue. The situation is favourable and the timing not too late so therefore let us by all that is reasonable be firm and decisive.

11. Holding these views, which I do with all the earnestness at my command, I find myself more than well disposed to favour the general idea, but not the detail, of the French proposals for Western Europe. I therefore find myself in full support of the second alternative which your memorandum informs me is being considered by the United Kingdom Government. By all means remove, not in perpetuity for nothing in this world is final so, therefore, for as long as the will of our peoples to do so endures, the Ruhr from German control and place it under direction of the Western Allies. By all means hand over the management of German heavy industry in that area to a socialized German corporation responsible to the Government of a German Province which of course would be under (Western) Allied Control. Not only would this action be essential from our point of view but it would be the best possible objective for the German people. It would not only do away with the Krupps, Thyssens and others of that kidney, but it would satisfy the aspirations of the Social Democrats whose advancement it is so much in our interest to ensure.

12. By all means eagerly let us embrace the idea of a Western bloc. It is our only security against Soviet expansion in this field. It may not be enough, but a little is better than nothing, which is what we at present have. Stalin has made himself as secure in the East as it was possible for him to do. Why in the name of reason should we not do the same in the West? That he might not like it I think we can safely disregard. Pusillanimity has never gained lasting moral or material gain. Our office of propaganda would be singularly inept if it was not able to convince the greater part of the world that our policy was designed solely to further the interest of security.

13. As to points of detail I am not competent to deal. All I know is that the Ruhr was formerly part of two provinces—Rhine and Westphalia. Let us now include it in Rhine Province for it is farther to the West. What its relationship to the Central Government would be, frankly I don't know. What I do know is that there is no central government in Germany and that so far as I can see there is unlikely to be one for some considerable time. For the time being a central government can be had only on Soviet terms and this we cannot have. I would first establish the new province under the British Commander-in-Chief. Thereafter I should invite the collaboration of the other two Western Occupying Powers with provision for the later inclusion of Belgium and Holland. There would be no customs barrier between the enlarged Rhine Province and the rest of Germany which chose to deal with it, though of course the nature of its production and its disposition would be for us to decide.

14. There is a danger that this control could be whittled away as the years pass by, but that is really to say that the will of the Western democracies to take the only means open to them to ensure their safety may weaken. This may well come about but I cannot see any means of holding our people firmly to the purpose they had during the war other than to formulate and firmly to adopt the not unreasonable policy I have endeavoured to propound.

15. I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Robertson in London.

Yours sincerely,

MAURICE POPE

MEMORANDUM RE PARIS CONFERENCE ON REPARATIONS

A copy of the proposed final Act† has been made available to the members of the Committee together with a copy of the report of the Canadian Delegation and a special memorandum† dealing with the complex problem of the transferring of percentages from one category to the other.

This memorandum is designed to bring to the attention of the Committee the particular points on which the Canadian Delegation had instructions, the manner in which they endeavoured to carry out those instructions and the Delegation's interpretation of the application of the final Act to Canada.

INSTRUCTIONS RECEIVED BY CANADIAN DELEGATION

These instructions and the action taken by the Canadian Delegation to carry them out are referred to in the Delegation's report, Section 16. The Canadian Delegation was instructed to:

1. Reserve Canada's position as to whether or not a reparations claim would be made.

Subsequently the Delegation was authorized to act on the assumption that a claim would be made and as a result Canada was allocated 3.5% of the Category A assets and 1.5% of the Category B assets.

2. Support the proposition that German external assets situated in neutral countries should be included in the assets available for reparations.

In this regard Part I, Article 6 C and 8 B and C and the Unanimous Resolutions Nos. 1 and 2 are designed to give effect to this proposition.

3. Reserve the right of Canada to retain assets under the control of the Custodian.

The Delegation indicated to the Conference that Canada would not be prepared to surrender any of the assets controlled by the Custodian and the Conference recognized the right of each of the nations represented to retain such assets although in theory, for the purpose of accounting, there is a pooling of such assets. Part I, Article 6, of the final Act deals with this problem.

4. Support the establishment of an Inter-Allied Reparations Agency.

It is obvious that in order that there should be an equitable distribution of assets available for reparations, the Agency had to be established and the establishment is provided for in Part II of the final Act.

5. Report on policy respecting advance deliveries of industrial equipment which might be of interest to the Department of Reconstruction.

Certain lists of assets have already been made available by the Control Council in Berlin and it is understood that these lists have been received by the Department of Reconstruction.

6. Press for the recognition of the principle that German exports should be used in the first instance to pay for essential and approved imports.

This problem was considered as outside the scope of the Reparations Conference, the principle having been recognized at Potsdam. The U.K. and the U.S. delegations went on record during the Conference as recognizing this principle.

7. Protect the interests of Canadian nationals in any industrial equipment declared to be surplus to Germany's peace-time economy and available for reparations.

Article 4 C (i) and Resolution 3 appear to the Canadian Delegation to amply protect Canada's position in this regard.

8. Bear in mind the need for considering the strategic, political and economic aspects of the peace settlement.

The Head of the Canadian Delegation made a statement to this effect during the course of the Conference indicating at the same time that in the interest of the reconstruction of Europe Canada might be prepared to follow the American lead in surrendering a proportion of her share of industrial and other capital equipment.

FINAL PROPOSED ACT

Points of General Interest

1. Entry into Force and Signature

Under Article 1 of Part IV of the Act it will come into effect as soon as it has been signed on behalf of the Governments collectively entitled to not less than 80% of the aggregate of shares in Category A. The U.K., the U.S. and France are collectively entitled to 72%.

In view of the fact that only the Governments who sign the final Act are entitled to take part in the establishment of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency, it would appear desirable that the Government should determine at the earliest possible moment whether or not it is going to accept the final Act.

The delegates representing Greece, Egypt and Denmark did not sign, the latter stating he had not received instructions to do so.

2. Effect of Non-acceptance

The effect of a Government not accepting the proposals, assuming that they are accepted by Governments whose aggregate shares in Category A equal 80%, is that the share of the Government failing to sign will be distributed among the signatory governments and it is not apparent how such a government could obtain reparations from any source other than the German assets which it may hold.

3. Shares of Reparations

Part I, Article 1, deals with this problem and the shares allocated to the various Governments represented at the Conference are set out in the Table of Shares in paragraph B.

The Conference recognized the desirability of reconstructing devastated areas of Europe as quickly as possible and the justice of using German industrial and other capital equipment to replace capital assets destroyed. It was, therefore, decided to establish two categories of assets, namely, Category A and Category B and in the latter category to include industrial and other capital equipment, merchant ships and inland water transport. Category A includes all other forms of German assets available for reparations such as—

- (a) German assets within each country's jurisdiction.
- (b) German assets in neutral countries.

- (c) Future deliveries from current German production.
- (d) Reciprocal deliveries from the U.S.S.R.

The Conference did not determine what total amount of reparations should be paid by Germany or the period over which payment should be made. Nor did it endeavour to ascertain or even estimate the total value of German assets available for reparations. On this latter point the attention of the Committee is drawn to Section 3 of the report of the Delegation which sets out the arrangements made with the U.S.S.R. under which it is entitled to 10% of the industrial and other capital equipment and an additional 15% of such assets as a reciprocal delivery for 15% of future deliveries to be made from the Soviet Zone of Occupation.

It will be noted that Canada's share under Category A is 3.50 and the share allocated to the rest of the Empire, with the exception of the U.K., is 3.80. Canada's percentage under this Category is  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the U.S. share and appears to be a favourable comparison.

4. Method of Determining Shares

The Yalta Conference agreed that Germany—

(a) Must pay in kind for the losses caused by her to the Allied Nations in the course of the war, and

(b) Reparations should be received in the first instance by those countries which have borne the main burden of the war and have organized victory over the enemy.

A Committee of Statisticians considered the statistical information filed by the countries represented at the Conference and endeavoured to set up, in chart form, a comparative statement as between the various countries of the claims made, classifying in one chart the statistical information that could be evaluated in monetary figures and in the other chart figures which could not be so evaluated.

This Committee distributed to the delegates the charts which they had prepared and the Inviting Powers placed before the Conference the Table of Shares, pointing out at the same time that it was impossible to relate directly the percentages allocated to the statistical charts because, in arriving at the percentages allocated, many factors, for example, political questions, had to be taken into account. An attempt was made at the meeting of the Heads of Delegations to force the Committee of Statisticians to appear and explain how the percentages were arrived at but this attempt was successfully opposed by the Inviting Powers.

It would seem that the two main elements determining the shares of reparations were the relationship of war damage and material loss to war effort and positive contribution to victory. There is no doubt that other factors were taken into consideration and it is interesting to compare the statistical information filed by the U.S. with that filed by Canada and the percentage share allocated to the U.S. and Canada respectively in Category A. Very roughly the items evaluated in monetary terms filed by the U.S. and Canada compare as twelve to one respectively and the items not evaluated in monetary terms filed by these two countries compare as six to one. If any average can be struck it would be approximately nine to one and it is interesting to note that the U.S. share in Category A is slightly less than this ratio. This also applies to the final figures allocated to the U.S. and Canada in Category B. On the basis of population, and it is not suggested that this factor was taken into consideration at all, it is interesting to note that Canada's percentage considerably exceeds that of the United States.

The reasons why the Delegation feel that Canada should accept a 1.50 share of Category B assets are as follows:

The American delegation indicated informally early in the Conference that they were authorized to give up a substantial part of their Category B share because it was realized that devastated Europe must be reconstructed to the benefit of all the countries and secondly because the United States, being a great industrial country, did not require, and in fact would not desire to move plant and equipment from Germany to the United States. No doubt there were some political considerations, as well as economic considerations behind their proposed gesture, although it should be kept in mind that they talked about obtaining compensation by an increase in their Category A share for what they might give up in Category B. This idea was, of course, not acceptable to the U.K. delegation and when the U.S. finally did give up 16.20% of their Category B they obtained no direct compensation in Category A although certain concessions were made to them with respect to their Custodian owned assets which are included in Category A and the same concession will apply to Canada.

The Canadian Delegation, having been instructed that "reparations cannot be considered in isolation from strategic, economic and political aspects of European settlement" and further that "you would be justified in giving general support to any movement designed to promote the restoration of Europe's economy and development of general economic stability", indicated to the delegates of the Inviting Powers that Canada would be prepared to surrender a part of its Category B share for the same reasons and on the same basis as the U.S. When the Table of Shares was presented to the Conference the U.S. surrendered 16.20% of its Category B share. The Canadian Delegation surrendered 2.0% of the Category B share allocated to Canada and the Union of South Africa surrendered .60%. The U.K. refused to accept any portion of the surrendered shares and the Conference distributed these percentages to the other participating countries.

It is interesting to note that the U.K., who have suffered considerable physical destruction of property, in addition to not accepting any portion of the surrendered shares, in the dying moments of the Conference surrendered .20% of the Category B allocated to the U.K. in a successful effort to get some of the other countries to remain in the Conference.

6. German External Assets in Neutral Countries

For several months diplomatic pressure has been brought to bear on various neutral countries in Europe in an attempt to make them disclose German property held in or through those countries. It was felt that if the Conference were to support the idea that such assets should be made available for reparations, this would considerably strengthen the position of the Allied negotiators.

There were delegates at the Conference who strongly opposed the use of "the big stick" to force the neutrals to disgorge but, on the other hand, many of the delegates felt that if these assets were not made available for reparations, Germany's financial interests and probably some of the top ranking Nazis who had been able to remove their assets from Germany and centralize them in neutral countries, would now be able to recover these assets and evade their responsibility to pay reparations with the rest of the German people.

Part I, Article 6 C and the Unanimous Resolution of the Conference, with particular reference to Resolutions 1 and 2, are an attempt to deal with this problem. It will be noted that the inference is that arrangements will be negotiated with the neutral countries by the three Inviting Powers and there is no indication that "the big stick" will be used.

7. Allocation of a Reparations Share to Non-repatriable Victims of German Action

This is of general interest to Canada in that Part I, Article 8 provides for the setting up of a special fund to aid in the rehabilitation of people coming within the categories indicated in this Article. The original proposal was made by the U.S. and its introduction raised one of the most controversial questions of the entire Conference. The principal criticism against providing such a fund for what appears to be a humanitarian effort was that certain agencies now operating in Europe to relieve the distress of displaced persons were using funds supplied by various United Nations to relieve the distress of Nazi sympathizers who, because of their collaboration with the Nazis in their own countries, were forced to flee on the collapse of Germany and, in some cases went to Germany. As a result, the original proposal was redrafted and sub-paragraph D of this Article clearly defines the type of people who are eligible for aid under the plan.

The Article also provides for the agency which is to administer the fund and further that any individual refugee who receives assistance will not be prejudiced in any claim he may have against the future German Government except to the amount of the assistance given. The fund is to be provided out of an allocation of $25,000,000 which it is hoped will be obtained from the proceeds of German assets in neutral countries and in addition all of the non-monetary gold found in Germany. The use of non-monetary gold for this purpose was considered poetic justice in view of the fact that part of the non-monetary gold consists of the gold removed from the mouths of victims of Nazi horror camps, their rings and other jewelry.

8. Equality of Treatment Regarding Compensation for War Damage

The U.S. and Canadian delegations played a large part in having a resolution passed dealing with this subject and it is referred to in Unanimous Resolution No. 3.

During the course of the Conference it came to the attention of the Canadian Delegation that a certain country had passed discriminatory legislation under which that country was not prepared to pay reparations to foreign owned corporations even though such corporations might be wholly owned by other corporations or nationals of a United Nation. It was, therefore, felt that as a matter of principle, the countries represented around the Conference table should agree to the principle that there should be no such discrimination. It was also appreciated that there might be special problems, particularly with respect to those countries which had passed special legislation, and in those cases special agreements may have to be made between the countries concerned.

9. Property in Germany Belonging to a United Nation or its Nationals

The question of protecting these property interests and the further question of restitution of property removed from occupied territories and now located in Germany, were discussed at some length and certain delegates suggested that these interests should be ignored on the theory that if a United Nation, its nationals or a corporation, invested moneys in Germany before the war, this investment was a straight business venture and, therefore, should be included in the reparations pool. This argument was not successful and as a result the proposed final Act contains a provision with particular reference to the allocation of industrial and other capital equipment designed to protect such property rights. The provision is to be found in Part I, Article 4 C (i).

If the Allied Control Council declares industrial equipment available for reparations and the claimant country has a substantial prewar financial interest in such equipment, then that country will be entitled to have the equipment allocated to it, if it so desires. If there are two or more claimants having a sufficient interest, then their peculiar requirements will be taken into consideration by IARA.

In the Annex, Resolution No. 3 deals at greater length with the problem of whether or not property in Germany belonging to a United Nation or its nationals should be a part of the pool of assets available for reparations. The Head of the Delegation did not feel that Canada should support this resolution although it appears to be of considerable interest to Canada. The general effect is that if the interest in a particular property, either wholly or in the form of shareholdings, is more than 48%, such property shall as far as possible be excluded from the pool and the Control Council shall determine whether or not a minority shareholding is of sufficient importance to justify the property not being considered to be available for reparations. This does not in any way affect the question of the destruction of the property if this is necessary for security reasons.

On the other hand, if there is a legitimate United Nations interest in any property allocated as reparations or destroyed, then the United Nation or its nationals, having such interest, are entitled to equitable compensation which will be a charge on the German economy and, if possible, will take the form of a shareholding in a German asset of the same kind which has not been allocated for reparations.

As stated above, the United Nation or its nationals may have an interest in certain assets now situated in Germany that were looted from occupied territories and these assets are specifically referred to in Part III, dealing with monetary gold which does not appear to be of any direct interest to Canada and in the Annex, Resolution No. 1.

Resolution No. 3 of the Annex, with particular reference to Clause (c), recommends that looted property be excluded from assets available for reparations.

Where such looted property is identifiable there will be restitution but where it is not identifiable the claim will be part of the general reparations claim of the country concerned. It was felt that certain exceptions should be made with respect to objects of an artistic, historic, scientific, educational or religious nature, excluding equipment of an industrial character. Such articles are, if possible, to be replaced by equivalent objects if they are not restored. The Resolution suggests that expert missions should be allowed by the Zone Commanders to search for and identify looted goods. The Agency will deal with all questions relating to restitution of property in the Western Zones of Germany where such questions are referred to the Agency by Zone Commanders.

10. Inter-Allied Reparations Agency

Part II of the proposed final Act deals with the establishment of the Agency commonly referred to as IARA, and where the various articles are of particular interest to particular departments, this interest is indicated in that section of the memorandum dealing with that department.

The Agency will be established in Brussels and each of the Signatory Governments will be entitled to one delegate and one alternate. It is the intention to establish the Agency as soon as possible in order that the disposition of industrial and other capital equipment may be proceeded with.

Each of the delegates will be entitled to one vote, except in the voting on the budget where the delegate's vote will be proportionate to the share of that budget payable by his Government. Provision is also made for arbitration.

It does not appear necessary to deal with each of the articles in this part since it is felt that the articles themselves are quite clear.

THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE REPARATIONS CONFERENCE IN PARIS

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 19th the Department of External Affairs submitted a report on the Conference on Reparations which was held in Paris from November 9th to December 21st, 1945, for the conclusion of a general agreement on reparations among those countries whose claims to reparations are to be met from the western zones of Germany and from German external assets.

This memorandum outlined the proceedings of the Conference and the participation of the Canadian Delegation headed by General Pope. The Cabinet was asked to approve the recommendations contained therein as follows:

(a) that authority be given to General Pope to sign the proposed "Final Act" of the Conference; and

(b) that on receipt of the recommendations of the Conference embodied in the Final Act and the report of the Canadian delegation, these documents should be considered by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations with a view to submission of further recommendations on the subject to the Cabinet.

Cabinet approval was given to these recommendations.

In consequence of the decision of the Cabinet at its meeting on December 19th referred to above, the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations had studied the recommendations of the Paris Conference on Reparations, and the report of the Canadian delegation and desires to report the following:

THE ALLOCATION OF REPARATIONS PERCENTAGE SHARES

(1) Under the percentages of reparations, as set out in the attached table of shares,† Canada has been allocated 3.5 per cent under Category A and 1.5 per cent under Category B.

(2) The allocation of 3.5 per cent to Canada under Category A represents a fair and equitable percentage of German assets. This includes a provision for the retention of German assets under the control of the Canadian Custodian, and a share in German assets held in neutral countries, as well as in all other types of assets not included in Category B.

(3) Under Category B, Canada has been allocated 1.5 per cent. This allocation takes into account the waiving of a portion of the Canadian share to German capital industrial equipment, as reported to the Cabinet in the memorandum from the Department of External Affairs of December 19th. The share within this Category is regarded by the Committee as sufficient, having in mind that the lists of material designated by the Allied Control Council as available for reparations, which have been communicated to the Canadian Government up to the present time, have contained very few items of interest to Canadian industry. This category of assets also includes German shipping and inland water transport. The percentage allocated to Canada under this head remains at 3.5, and would appear to be adequate to cover any shipping which it may be desired to transfer from German to Canadian registry in compensation for loss of shipping resulting from enemy action.

(4) The table of shares represents a scheme recommended by the Paris Conference for allocating a purely hypothetical quantity of German assets which may become available for reparations, and the proposed Final Act does not set any total quantity or valuation on reparations to be paid by Germany or define the period over which reparations deliveries are to be made. However, as provided under the Potsdam Agreement, German capital industrial equipment designated by the Allied Control Council as available for reparations (Category B) is to be removed from Germany within a period of two years from the date of the German surrender.

THE INTER-ALLIED REPARATIONS AGENCY

(5) In order that an equitable distribution of German assets available for reparations should be made as between the countries accepting the proposals of the Paris Conference, the Final Act provides that an Inter-Allied Reparations Agency is to be established in Brussels, and that each of the signatory governments is to be entitled to send one delegate and an alternate delegate to this Agency. The Agency will be responsible for putting into effect the terms of the proposed Reparations Agreement. In particular the Agency will carry out the distribution of German assets to signatory governments in proportion to the percentages allocated at the Paris Conference, and will record such allocations. In the event of a dispute arising out of an allocation, provision is made for arbitration.

THE SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS AGAINST GERMANY

(6) In order that there should be some finality in the settlement of reparations claims against Germany, it is proposed that the signatory governments should waive their rights, and the rights of their nationals, by accepting their share of reparations as allocated at the Paris Conference. It should be noted that this waiver only applies to claims arising out of the war.

OTHER PROVISIONS

(7) In view of the fact that the Potsdam Conference declared that the proceeds from current German exports are to be used in the first instance to pay for essential and approved imports, the Conference confirmed acceptance of this principle in its minutes, but since this is not directly a question of reparations, there is no specific provision on this point in the Final Act.

(8) It appears from the recommendations of the Conference that adequate provision has been made to protect the interests of Canadian nationals in German assets that may be declared available for reparations.

SIGNATURE

(9) The signature of the Final Act by the delegates at the Conference represents a recommendation on their part to their respective governments that the proposed Reparations Agreement should be accepted. When those countries, holding 80 per cent of the aggregate total of the shares allocated, sign the Reparations Agreement at the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Agreement will come into operation. In the event that a country does not sign the Agreement, its share of reparations as allocated at the Paris Conference will be distributed among the signatory countries. There appears to be no method whereby a non-signatory country may obtain reparations except out of external German assets within its own jurisdiction.

In the light of the foregoing the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations recommends:

(1) that the Canadian Government should accept the recommendations of the Paris Conference as contained in the Final Act, and that the necessary authority be given to the Canadian Ambassador in Paris to sign the Reparations Agreement on behalf of Canada;

(2) that at the appropriate time Canada should nominate a delegate to the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency in Brussels;

(3) that the Inter-Departmental Committee should continue to consider Reparations problems, should submit reports and recommendations to the Cabinet from time to time on matters arising out of the Reparations Agreement, and should coordinate the action of the several departments concerned in regard to the receipt of reparations from Germany and their distribution in Canada.<sup>1</sup>

1. I have been requested to inform you that the first meeting of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency is to take place in the Chamber of Deputies on afternoon of February 28th.

2. The agenda calls for establishment of Sub-Committees on:

- (a) Experts on foreign holdings.
- (b) Merchant shipping.
- (c) Arbitration with regard to restitution.
- (d) Budget of Agency.
- (e) Accounts.

There will be other Committees as well.

3. Please indicate the position of our delegation and, if it is not numerous enough to enable Canada to have representation on each Sub-Committee, state which of these Committees is of most importance to us.

4. I have asked our Paris Embassy to furnish me all available information but, in addition, would appreciate full documentation from you.

5. Generally, I desire pointing out that, as other countries concerned will probably have large, fully informed and experienced delegations at this first Conference, it is essential that I be placed in a position to deal adequately with Canada's case.

Reference your telegram No. 30, February 13th, Inter-Allied Reparations Agency:

1. Documentation which General Vanier has been asked to send you will, I think, give you sufficient background information. Following is supplementary information for your guidance.

2. Our principal interest at present relates to the procedure to be worked out in I.A.R.A. discussions to govern procurement and distribution of assets as between Governments who signed Reparations Agreement, on the basis of percentages allocated at Paris Conference. As regards German industrial plant and equipment included in Category B, Canada waived a portion of its percentage allocated in Paris in view of more urgent needs of countries devastated by war. Our interest in this field is selective and specific items from Germany will need to be related to determined needs in Canada. As regards other assets, however, it will need to be borne in mind that claims at present filed with the Custodian, even before advertisement, exceed the estimated value of German assets controlled by the Canadian Custodian.

3. You may be required, under the terms of the Reparations Agreement, to submit certain information.

(a) As regards items of German industrial plant and equipment available under Category B, article 4 (b) of the Reparations Agreement provides that signatory governments should endeavour to submit comprehensive programmes of requests. This is not possible at present owing to lack of information on availability of items. We have so far received three lists of items designated by the Control Council in Germany as available for advance deliveries. Description of items in these lists is not sufficiently informative to enable us to decide which items offered may be useful to Canadian economy. You should put the position to I.A.R.A. that our lack of information prevents us from preparing a comprehensive programme of requests and also makes it difficult for us to deal with lists already received.

It is understood that the United Kingdom and United States Governments have teams of investigators in Germany examining the items listed. They will, therefore, have more information available than ourselves and other governments. We have no investigators at present, but Geddes, economic adviser to the Canadian Military Mission, hopes to consult United Kingdom and United States authorities in London and Germany with a view to obtaining as much information as possible on the quantity, type and value of plant and equipment available for reparations and report to us on the situation.

(b) As regards German assets coming under Category A, you may be asked under Article 6 (b) of Agreement to give information regarding evaluation of Canadian controlled German assets. For this purpose you may use figure of $6,459,924, given at Paris Conference. Unless there is agreement between signatory governments on a standard basis of evaluation we propose to leave the estimate unchanged.

4. We have been considering various types of claims against Germany which should be espoused by Canadian Government. Departmental memorandum† on this subject will follow by mail. In this connection Massey-Harris' claims in France and Germany are cases in point. You may have opportunity to ascertain procedure followed by United Kingdom and United States in equivalent cases where bulk of investment is held by parent company in the United Kingdom or United States, while subsidiary is incorporated in Germany or another third country. Are such claims dealt with on basis of corporate or investment interest?

5. As regards question in your paragraph 2, representation on Committees, having in mind interests indicated above you should endeavour to be represented at least on following Committees;

- (a) foreign holdings;
- (b) any committee dealing with category B assets including merchant shipping;
- (c) arbitration regarding restitution (some of our claims are restitution problems).

6. As discussion proceeds you will no doubt inform us of any developments affecting Canadian interest and supplementary instructions will then be cabled.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 42 of March 6th,† Reparations.

After consulting Custodian we agree you should press for membership in Committee of Delegates on German External Assets. In support of claim to membership you might use following arguments:

1. Canada was one of the few countries at Paris Conference which surrendered a portion of its Category B share in favour of European countries devastated by the war. Of other countries taking similar action United Kingdom and United States are already assured membership on Committee and special provision in reparations agreement protects position of South Africa. It is, therefore, important that Canada should be represented on Committee to protect its position.

2. At present claims filed with the Custodian without advertisement greatly exceeds in magnitude the estimated value of German assets controlled by the Custodian.

3. If claim for membership is to be based on figures of holdings of German assets, it should be borne in mind that the Canadian figure may be considerably increased if an agreed standard of calculation is applied as between signatory countries. For instance some of the assets of German companies incorporated in Canada are held in the United States and their ultimate control for disposal purposes is yet to be determined. It seems to us essential that agreement be reached on a standard assessment of value in order to establish the principle of a fair division of German external assets among signatory governments.

For your information German external assets represent the main source from which we would hope to obtain compensation and you may find it useful in discussion with your colleagues to indicate informally, if this would help to obtain membership, that Canada would be prepared to forego membership on some other Committees if elected to this Committee. In the event of our failing of nomination, you should urge that Canada be represented on Committee when any problems affecting our position are under discussion.

A. INTRODUCTION

The first session of the Assembly of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency took place at Brussels from February 28th to March 7th. The Agency was established by the Final Act of the Paris Conference on Reparations. The Canadian Ambassador in Paris signed this Final Act on January 30th, 1946, for Canada.

The Canadian Delegation consisted of the following:

- Delegate: H. E. the Hon. W. F. A. Turgeon, Ambassador to Belgium, Alternate: Col. G. W. McPherson, Member Canadian Military Mission, Berlin, for matters concerning the Custodian of Enemy Property.
Secretary: Mr. T. LeM. Carter, Canadian Embassy, Brussels.
Col. R. Geddes, Economic Adviser to the Canadian Military Mission, Berlin, arrived in Brussels at the end of the session.
Col. Geddes and Col. McPherson plan to be in Brussels for the next session.

F. CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN THE AGENCY'S WORK

The interventions of the Canadian representative in the discussions have been noted above. As instructed in Telegram No. 31 of February 25, Colonel McPherson stated during the discussion on German industrial and other capital equipment, that the lack of information makes it difficult to deal with the lists already circulated. Canada was elected to the committees which are mentioned in this telegram, except for those on arbitration regarding restitution. These arbitration commissions will be ad hoc bodies to decide specific disputes, and none have yet been elected.

The subject of Canadian representation at the Assembly and on committees has been raised in several telegrams to the Department. Adequate presentation of the Canadian case on such matters as German industrial equipment, German patents, German external assets and merchant shipping requires the presence in Brussels of suitably briefed experts in these fields. Colonel McPherson and Colonel Geddes will be in Brussels during the next session and will be able to advise the Delegate in their respective fields. Patent and merchant shipping experts have been asked for. It is most desirable, however, that the departments concerned be asked to determine their attitudes on the aspects of reparations in which they are interested, and to make provision in advance for representation. Information about forthcoming meetings of committees and the probable agenda of Assembly sessions will be sent from Brussels as it becomes available. It is likely that reparations matters will take up about a third of the time of the Delegate, and about the same proportion of the time of one secretary in the Embassy, during the next few months.<sup>1</sup>

Dear General Pope,

I should like to refer to my letter of March 1st† which dealt briefly with the question of Canadian interest in procuring plant and equipment from Germany, which might become available on reparations account.

You will recall that, at that time, scrutiny of the lists of plant and equipment available for advance deliveries on reparations account had revealed little of value to Canadian industry, and interest had been expressed only in procuring a plant for the production of hydrogen peroxide and hydrazine hydrate.

The reason for this expression of interest was that Canadian Arsenals, Limited, (a Crown company), and certain research branches of the Services are contemplating the production of rocket fuel, component parts of which are hydrogen peroxide and hydrazine hydrate. It was with this requirement in mind that a bid was made on January 21st for the acquisition on Canadian reparations account of the Degussa Plant at Rheinfelden (reference No. 2008), which was described on a list received from the Allied Control Council, through the United States Embassy here, as a plant for the production of hydrogen peroxide. In indicating our desire to obtain this plant, the reservation was made that our interest was "conditional upon the securing also of a hydrazine hydrate plant of sixty ton capacity."

Since that time we have received information, through army channels, that two plants, the Chemische Fabrik Transche at Gertsoffen in the United States zone, and a plant at Leverkusen, were both used by the Germans during the war for the production of hydrazine hydrate. We are informed that these factories are scheduled to be dismantled and may, therefore, become available as reparations.

You will understand that our main concern is in obtaining a hydrazine hydrate plant, as hydrogen peroxide can easily be produced in Canada. Any information, therefore, as to whether the plants noted above are, in fact, to be declared available as reparations, would be appreciated, in order that an early bid may be placed through the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency.

We are also advised by the Department of Reconstruction that Canada has an interest in obtaining a plant for the production of "solventless cordite". The lists so far supplied by the Allied Control Council have not shown that such a plant is available. If, however, advance information is given to you as to the likelihood of equipment for the manufacture of this product being designated as available for reparations, we would like to have this information at an early date.

You will note on page five, paragraph one, of the Report of the Canadian Delegation on the First Session of the Assembly of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency,† a copy of which was sent to you from the Canadian Embassy, Brussels, that claims for reparations already placed with the Allied Control Council are to be considered null and void by I.A.R.A., and that new claims are to be registered with the Agency.

With this in mind action is being taken to prepare a consolidated list of Canadian requirements, as known at the present time, for the guidance of the Canadian delegation at I.A.R.A. This list will be made up of bids which have already been registered with the Allied Control Council, (i.e., hydrazine hydrate), and additional items of equipment which various departments of the Government have indicated they wish to receive from Germany.

You will recall that C.A.T.C., London, has been engaged in procuring items of equipment from Germany (commonly referred to as "booty"), which fall under the headings described in Article 5 of the terms of surrender imposed on Germany. "Booty" has been interpreted in several ways by various agencies and governments, however, we have now received through C.A.T.C. the present understanding of the term as employed by the Control Commission to Germany B.A.O.R.<sup>1</sup>, as follows:

Any property which was possessed by any former German government or any subject of that government coming under category of arms, munitions, and implements of war, which last are defined as articles or stores specially designed for offensive or defensive warfare or relative research and development facilities (including documents, material and training devices), provided such articles or stores are not convertible to normal peacetime uses without material change of construction shall be defined as booty.

We are informed that this definition of booty is still under consideration and may be modified by later discussions.

It appears that certain of the items which C.A.T.C. is endeavouring to procure on the continent for the various departments of Government, cannot be classified as "booty", and other means must, therefore, be sought to obtain this material. To this end the lists of German equipment requested by the various departments of Government are being revised here with a view to the possibility of some of this equipment becoming available through I.A.R.A.

When the revision is completed, these requirements, together with any items of interest to Canada appearing on the lists sent to us from the Allied Control Council, will be despatched to Mr. Turgeon. In the meantime, it is envisaged that C.A.T.C. will continue its efforts to obtain certain items under the "booty" system, where the only charges incurred will be those for crating and shipping.

We would appreciate receiving any advance information, which you may have, as to plant and equipment being declared available as reparations, in particular, any items which in Colonel Geddes' opinion would be useful to Canadian industry. On our side, we will keep you informed from time to time of developments in Canada affecting the question of reparations from Germany. In this connection I enclose one copy of the Minutes of the meeting of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations of March 25th, 1946.†

A copy of this letter has been sent to Mr. Turgeon.

Yours sincerely,

DESPATCH 642

Ottawa, April 11, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 506 of March 16th,† in which developments which had taken place up to that time, in connection with the Canadian claims to reparation from Germany, were briefly reviewed, and to inform you of discussions which have since taken place in the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations, with regard to the handling of Canadian claims arising out of the war with Germany.

2. You will recall that under the terms of the Paris Agreement on Reparations, Article 2A each of the signatory governments agreed that their respective shares of reparation, as determined by the present Agreement, shall be regarded by each of them as covering all its claims and those of its nationals against the former German Government and its agencies of a governmental or private nature, arising out of the war (which are not otherwise provided for), including costs of German occupation, credits acquired during occupation on clearing accounts and claims against the Reichskreditkassen.

3. The question of the satisfaction of claims by individuals and corporations against Germany arising out of the war is, therefore, seen to be an internal problem, and it is for each of the signatory governments to decide in what manner such claims are to be met. There appear to be two alternative procedures for paying approved claims. On the one hand, payment might be made on a priority or pro rata basis out of the proceeds of German reparation and on the other, claims might be met directly from the national revenue to which, of course, would be paid any proceeds from the reparation settlement.

4. Approximate figures which have been supplied by the Canadian Custodian's Office indicate that claims against Germany are far in excess of German assets held or controlled by the Canadian Custodian. It is not known at this stage whether proceeds from other forms of German reparation will tend to bring about a balance between claims registered and assets with which to meet them, but it is considered most unlikely, having regard to the small percentage share of reparation which was allocated to Canada at the Paris Conference and in view of the fact that the Custodian has not, as yet, advertised for war claims against Germany. In addition, it is clear that if the Government were to claim priority of claims on reparations over private claimants, on the basis of the budgetary cost of the war, there would be little possibility of meeting Canadian claims by individuals and corporations from the proceeds of German reparation.

5. These problems have been discussed by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations, and it has been agreed to have enquiries made where possible regarding the approach to this problem on the part of other Governments who were signatory to the Paris Agreement on Reparations. For the guidance of those concerned with the problem in Ottawa, it would be useful to know something of the manner in which the United Kingdom Government faced with similar problems propose to deal with them. More specifically, it would be appreciated if you could ascertain from the Government to which you are accredited, (a) whether it is envisaged that claims are to be met out of the proceeds of reparation from Germany or from the national revenue; (b) whether or not it is intended to give the Government claims to reparation from Germany priority over individual and corporate claims; and (c) whether any steps have been taken to advertise for claims against Germany arising out of the war.

6. The question of which categories of claimants should have their claims for reparation and for restitution espoused by the Canadian Government has been considered by a Sub-Committee of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations, and the following recommendations have been placed before the Committee:

WITH REGARD TO REPARATIONS

7. Claims of Individuals

The following categories of claimants should receive favourable consideration by the Canadian Government:

(a) All claimants now possessing Canadian nationality who possessed that nationality at the time their claims arose;

(b) All claimants now possessing Canadian nationality who at the time their claims arose were nationals of one of the United Nations, providing such claimants waive their right to claim through the United Nation in question;

(c) All claimants of dual nationality (one of which is Canadian) who possessed Canadian nationality at the time their claims arose, provided that none of their nationalities during the war were enemy or Axis and providing that such claimants waive the right to claim through the country of their other nationality.

Note. The claims of Canadian nationals who at the time their claims arose were nationals of an Axis or ex-Axis satellite state, should not have their claims espoused by the Canadian Government.

Company Claims

8. The Canadian Government should only espouse the claims of corporations incorporated by provincial or federal legislation, and whose "nationality" thus acquired was obtained in conditions which would allow the Government to espouse the claim as for a person.

Partnership Claims

9. In the special case of partnerships, in addition to the conditions pertaining to persons, the Canadian Government should espouse only that fraction of the claim which is represented by the relation to the total partnership of that part of the partnership which is Canadian.

WITH REGARD TO RESTITUTION

10. The following categories of claims should be assisted by the Canadian Government:

- (a) All Canadian citizens.
- (b) All aliens permanently resident in Canada, who have applied for Canadian citizenship.

11. It will be understood that Canada does not wish to proceed unilaterally to apply the principles outlined above to the advertisement for or the hearing of claims against Germany until something is known of what procedure is envisaged in this regard by other Governments signatory to the Paris Agreement. For this reason it will be appreciated if you would submit the principles noted above for consideration by the Government to which you are accredited in order to obtain their views.

12. It is our tentative opinion that these principles are in accordance with the common practice of international law, but consideration should nevertheless be given to certain reciprocal aspects in their application. It seems clear that a claim should not be espoused simultaneously by two Governments and it is our view, subject, of course, to the concurrence of other Governments concerned, that in cases where claims could be registered with one or two countries they should be espoused only by the country of the claimant's present nationality. By the same token, in the case of dual nationality, only one of the Governments concerned should deal with the claim.

WITH REGARD TO PRE-WAR DEBTS

13. It is the Canadian view that subject to inter-governmental agreement, German debts payable to nationals of the United Nations which originated before the war and became payable during the war or before the war should be classified as pre-war debts and should not be considered a matter of reparation but should be taken up at the time of the conclusion of the peace treaty with Germany. This would appear to be in accordance with Article 2C of the Final Act of the Paris Conference on Reparations, which states, in part:

Notwithstanding anything in the provisions of paragraph 2 above (see page 1) the present Agreement should not be considered as affecting the obligation of the appropriate authorities in Germany to secure at a future date the discharge of claims against Germany and German nationals arising out of contracts and other obligations entered into, and rights acquired, before the existence of a state of war between Germany and the Signatory Governments concerned, or before the occupation of its territory by Germany, whichever was earlier.

14. For your information, I attach one copy of the Minutes of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations of Monday, March 25th,† the report of the Sub-Committee of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations,† and a copy of the report of the Canadian delegation to the First Assembly of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency.

15. The United Kingdom Government is presumably confronted with similar problems, in dealing with the domestic aspect of the reparations problem, and it would be helpful to the authorities concerned with this question in Canada, to have any information you may be able to obtain regarding the manner in which the United Kingdom Government is dealing with the matter.

16. Similar despatches have been sent to Washington, Paris, Brussels, The Hague and Canberra.

I have etc.

Support should be given efforts to expedite allocation of plants from Germany by Allied Control Authority. This would appear necessary both in order to speed up receipt of industrial equipment in needy Agency countries and to the end that reparation removals should not be prolonged in Germany where industrial equipment is, no doubt, subject to heavy depreciation and where continued reparation removals would undoubtedly have an adverse psychological effect on the German population. In principle we agree with draft resolution prepared in Procedure Committee, reference your despatch No. 524 of September 26th.†

As regards procedure within Agency it would be useful if Canadian authorities could receive with each inventory a short summary containing general information as to set up, production, condition, evaluation and other relevant data suitable for publication along lines now being followed in British Board of Trade Journal. Such concise information is very desirable in order that industry may express interest with reasonable understanding and knowledge.

Having regard for difficulties in reaching all of Canadian industry we would appreciate as much time as possible in which to submit bids or expressions of interest.

Brussels, October 11, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose the resolution of October 8th of the Assembly of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency on the delay in carrying out reparations policy. In accordance with the decision of the Assembly, this resolution is being communicated to the Government of Canada for any further action which it may see fit to take.

The resolution is the most important action in the field of capital industrial equipment which the Agency has yet taken. It was passed by fifteen votes, three abstentions and one delegate absent. The United States, Egypt and South Africa abstained and Luxembourg was absent. The second paragraph of the preamble states that the present situation is inconsistent with the reparations policy enunciated at Yalta and Potsdam. In the resolution proper, the Assembly expresses its wish that the situation should be brought to the notice of the council of Foreign Ministers. It would have been more normal for the Assembly to have first approached the Allied Control Council, but previous communications to the Allied Control Council on procedures and inspection facilities have brought tardy, incomplete and sometimes curt replies. Moreover, it was thought desirable that the resolution should be before the Council of Foreign Ministers when it takes up German matters at its forthcoming meetings.

The United Kingdom Delegate is largely responsible for the resolution. As described in the report on the fifth session of the Assembly, which has been sent to you, he took the initiative several weeks ago. The French Delegate strongly supported him in his capacity of President of the Assembly. Monsieur Rueff urged that delegates should request their Governments to support the resolution by diplomatic approaches to the four occupying powers. A paragraph to this effect was inserted in the resolution at one stage, and later withdrawn. It is likely that three or four of the small European states will make diplomatic démarches. The United States Delegate stated that he was in sympathy with the terms of the resolution, but from a tactical point of view he could not support an appeal to the Council of Foreign Ministers at present.

This resolution was the only matter before the final meetings of the fifth session of the Assembly. A copy of the press communiqué on the session is enclosed.

This despatch is being referred to our missions in London, Paris and Berlin.

Résolution de l'Assemblée de l'Agence interalliée des réparations
Resolution of the Assembly of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency

Brussels, October 8, 1946

THE ASSEMBLY OF THE INTER-ALLIED REPARATIONS AGENCY

RECALLING the objects for which it was set up by the Paris Agreement of 14 January 1946,

DEPLORES the slow rate at which industrial capital equipment from Germany is being made available for distribution between its member Governments, a state of affairs inconsistent with the reparation policy enunciated in the Yalta Communiqué and the Potsdam Declaration of 2 August, 1945;

OBSERVING that the value of industrial capital equipment as reparation is in direct relation to the speed at which it can be dismantled, removed and incorporated into the economy of the recipient countries;

OBSERVING that the Potsdam Declaration stressed the need for speed in the delivery of industrial capital equipment (a) by providing that such deliveries should be completed as soon as possible and (b) by making special provision for advance deliveries of industrial capital equipment to begin prior to the fixing of the total amount to be removed from Germany;

RECORDING that 14 months after the Potsdam Declaration only an insignificant number of plants has been declared available for distribution among members of the Agency and that the Agency has received no official explanation of the reasons for the present delays or information regarding the prospect of future allocation of industrial capital equipment; that the serious state of affairs described above should be brought to the notice of the Council of Foreign Ministers at the earliest possible date with a view to a speedy remedy;

THEREFORE CONSIDERS

AND DECIDES to charge its President

(i) to request the Delegates of the United States, France and the United Kingdom, being the Delegates of the Governments of those Powers occupying Germany which are also signatories to the Paris Agreement of 14 January, 1946, and the Soviet Ambassador to Belgium, to bring this resolution urgently to the notice of their respective Governments and to inform their respective Governments that it is the wish of this Assembly that the matter be placed on the Agenda of the Council of Foreign Ministers at the earliest possible date;

(ii) to inform the President of the Allied Control Council in Berlin of the action taken by the Assembly.

Dear Sir,

I refer to your second and third Reports† dated November 29 and December 2 respectively. These reports were duly submitted to the office of the Custodian and have there been reviewed. I have just received from the Assistant Deputy Custodian a communication, copy of which is attached, in which he comments upon the reports under review. You will observe that he presumes that his memorandum will be considered by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations.

At an early meeting of the Inter-Departmental Committee, the question will be raised as to the necessity of Committee consideration of questions of a custodial nature<sup>2</sup> in which many members have no particular interest, and which are in any event, of a highly involved and technical nature. I propose to report the receipt of the Custodian's comments upon your reports, but I do not anticipate there being any very illuminating discussion. In accordance with this general thought, I am forwarding to you the enclosed document so that you may have the benefit of the Custodian's comments without further delay.

Yours sincerely,

le Comité interministériel des réparations*

Memorandum from Assistant Deputy Custodian to Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on Reparations

[Ottawa,] December 20, 1946

The Custodian's Office has studied Col. McPherson's Second and Third Reports, dated November 29th and December 2, 1946, respectively, in which he outlines further problems and arguments arising from meetings of the Committees of Experts and German External Assets. Similar to our previous observations, we offer the following comments, which we presume will be considered by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations before final instructions issue to the Canadian Delegation at Brussels. For the sake of clarity, it is felt that each report should be dealt with under separate headings.

(A) SECOND REPORT RE COMMITTEE ON GERMAN EXTERNAL ASSETS
DATED NOVEMBER 29, 1946

(1) Decedents' Estates

This office has carefully studied the United States proposal as contained in Article 1, Part II of their proposals dated November 12, 1946. We have also reviewed the various arguments put forward by the United States in support of their proposal, and observed the arguments advanced by other countries with respect to this proposal. We have also considered the United Kingdom revised proposals under this heading, dated December 3, 1946, which were obviously presented after the date of the report under consideration. I think it should be pointed out here that there are only a few estates in our records in which there is German enemy interest involved, and that regardless of what policy is eventually adopted by I.A.R.A., it will not affect Canada greatly one way or another. As far as this office is concerned, we see no objection to the Canadian Delegate supporting the revised United Kingdom proposal outlined in Article 1 of Part II of their proposal. We would support Paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article. With regard to Paragraph 3, we are not quite clear on the interpretation of the words "administered and distributed." For instance, what would happen in the case where an estate was administered prior to the date of vesting if part of the residue were payable to a German enemy, but had not been actually distributed to him? If the asset were in Canada, we would have automatically vested it on September 2, 1939.

There is no mention made in the United Kingdom proposal of the case of a German dying domiciled in Germany leaving assets in a I.A.R.A. country. In this connection, we definitely support the stand taken by the Canadian Delegate that if the asset of any such estate is found in Canada, it has vested in the Canadian Custodian, and does not form part of the German estate.

(2) Trusts and other Fiduciary Arrangements

This office agrees with the stand of the Canadian Delegate on the above problem as explained on Pages 4 and 5 of his report under this heading. It seems that the Canadian position would be well protected if Article 2, Part II of the United Kingdom revised proposals dated December 3, 1946, were adopted and the objections raised by Col. McPherson to the United States proposal seem to have been looked after in the United Kingdom proposal under this heading. The last sentence of Article 2 of the United Kingdom proposals, provides that "such release shall not be obligatory in cases where the trust or other fiduciary arrangement was established by a person resident in Germany, or a German enemy, or a person who subsequently became a German enemy."

Here again, if it is felt that an elaborate accounting system would be involved under this heading, as well as under the heading of "Decedents' Estates" described above, we feel that it should be left to the discretion of the Delegate as to whether or not he should insist upon an accounting.

(3) Rights of Non-Enemies

We agree with the stand taken by the Canadian Delegate on Part 2, Article 3 of the United States Proposal, and suggest that he continue to adopt the same stand in future discussions.

(B) THIRD REPORT—COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL ASSETS DATED DECEMBER 2, 1946

(1) Property located within the jurisdiction of one I.A.R.A. country and owned immediately by a corporation or other organization organized under the laws of another I.A.R.A. country

It is observed that Col. McPherson's Third Report is concerned entirely with this subject. This office has reviewed all his comments, including his observations as to the principles which are similar in both the United Kingdom and the United States proposals under this heading. We have reviewed all the arguments put forward by the United Kingdom in support of their proposals, as well as the arguments put forward by the United States in support of their proposals. We have also noted the observations made by other I.A.R.A. Delegations respecting these two proposals.

It is observed that the Canadian Delegate states he has been supporting the principles behind the United States proposals, and also suggests that important amendments be made. This office has once again carefully reviewed this problem in the light of this new information, and we recommend that the Canadian Delegate be advised to follow the instructions previously recommended by this office to the effect that the American proposal be supported by Canada. I might add that we have also studied the new United Kingdom proposal, which is contained in Part III of their proposals dated December 3, 1946, under Document I.A.R.A./Co.E.A./Doc. 12. We do not think it would be in Canada's interest to support the United Kingdom proposal, even in the revised form. This office is definitely of the opinion that consideration should not be given to the principle of voting power or control.

It is realized that the Canadian Delegate has been handicapped in his work which in recent months has been almost entirely concerned with intricate problems involving intercustodial conflicts. The disadvantage arises from the fact that he is not assisted by experts similar to the experts attached to the other I.A.R.A. Delegations. For this reason, the Custodian has decided to send Mr. K. J. Burbridge as Representative from this office to Brussels, in order to assist Col. McPherson at this particular time.

CANADIAN POLICY ON THE GERMAN SETTLEMENT

1. The problem of Germany is no longer—if it ever was—a problem of how to prevent future German aggression. It is a problem of how to get a settlement which will lessen the chances of war between the Soviet world and the Western world. Thus, the most significant test of any proposed settlement of Germany is its probable effect on the relations between the two worlds.

2. The ideal peace with Germany would be the one which was best calculated to result in a German state not so anti-Soviet as to arouse the fears of the U.S.S.R. or so pro-Soviet as to arouse the fears of the Western world. This means that what we want is a moderate and democratic government in a united and relatively prosperous Germany. Democracy and moderation are in part the result of the absence of terra irredenta and economic distress. The more embittered and impoverished Germany becomes the more likely it is to embrace extremist political doctrines.

3. It is probable that Russia desires a continuance of political and economic instability and insecurity in Germany. In order to combat that policy our aim should be the creation as rapidly as possible of a unified administration of Germany, the treatment of Germany as a political and economic unit, and the drastic reduction of all the armies of occupation. If Russia will not consent to this, then we should at least aim at a unified administration for the Western zones and every effort should be made by the Western powers to bring the standard of living in the Western zones well above that in the Soviet zone.

4. Our main interest is to prevent the extension of Russian influence to the Rhine. This would endanger our strategic interests. It would threaten our economic interests since it would further impoverish Great Britain by reducing still further the standards of living in Britain's European markets and by cutting Great Britain off from many of those markets. It would greatly increase international tension by intensifying Anglo-American fear of Russia.

5. If there is to be a unified administration of Germany and eventually a central German federal government, the Rhineland should remain part of Germany. This would tend to offset the influence in the federal German government of the Sovietized eastern section; it would also increase the chances of Germany becoming economically stable. If Germany is to be split between a Soviet-controlled zone and a western zone, the Rhineland should remain part of that western zone since without it the rest of the western zone would be difficult to maintain and the chances of it falling into the hands of Russia would be increased. The separation of the Rhineland is a sensible policy only on the assumption that the whole of the rest of Germany is going to be dominated by Russia.

6. Opposition to the separation of the Rhineland does not entail opposition to a special regime for heavy industry in the Rhineland, or the creation of a Rhineland state within the German federation. The most practicable policy yet put forward is that of the United Kingdom which is that the heavy industries in the Rhineland should be socialized with ownership vested in the Rhineland state and with control shared with Allied authorities. Socialization, especially if done without compensation or accompanied by a drastic capital levy, would have the added advantage that it would destroy the industrialist class of the Rhineland which with the Junkers (whose economic basis has been destroyed by Soviet land policy) have constituted the two chief enemies of liberalism in Germany.

7. The United States will probably propose that as part of the terms of peace Germany should include in its new constitution a bill of rights of the citizen which would make illegal all the principal crimes which the Nazi government perpetrated against the non-Nazi element in the German community; racial and religious discrimination and defamation; imprisonment and execution without trial; denial of the rights of democratic self-government; torture, beatings and other barbarous punishments. This would serve a useful purpose.

8. One of the reasons why Hitlerism became popular in Germany was that it gave to a large number of Germans what the liberal republic had been unable to give—relief from insecurity, poverty and humiliation. Next time the beneficiary of an unsuccessful liberal republic may be Stalinism. The peace settlement will in the long-run fail unless it offers to the German people the hope that in the not too distant future they will have a chance to find purpose, value and dignity in their lives.

PEACE TREATY WITH GERMANY

Record of a meeting held in the office of the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs at 11 o'clock, Tuesday, December 24th, to discuss Canadian interest in the German settlement.

The following were present:

Mr. L. B. Pearson, Chairman
Mr. L. D. Wilgress,
Mr. G. L. Magann,
Mr. R. G. Riddell,
Mr. S. D. Pierce,
Mr. M. H. Wershof,
Mr. J. H. Warren.

Mr. Pearson informed the meeting that the Council of Foreign Ministers had authorized special Deputies to meet in London to hear the views of states neighbouring on Germany, and other allied states which participated in the war, on the German settlement, and to discuss amongst themselves questions of procedure for the preparation of a Peace Treaty for Germany. The feeling was that in view of Canada's participation in the war, it would not be sufficient merely to present views to the Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers and then withdraw. Canada should rather play a more active role, and if possible make an effective contribution to the settlement. Telegrams† had been sent to Washington and London, indicating this view, and Mr. Wrong and Mr. Robertson had been requested to take up with the United States and United Kingdom governments the question of the form of Canadian participation in drawing up a German settlement.

Mr. Wrong had indicated that he would discuss this matter with Mr. Acheson, and had suggested that it might be well to make similar approaches to the governments of the other members of the Council of Foreign Ministers. It was the view of the meeting that this action should not be taken pending the result of representations being made in London and Washington.

The meeting considered the position in which the Canadian Government would be placed if a favourable reply to the request for active participation in the settlement was forthcoming. It was agreed that some concrete proposals should be prepared on the form of association which Canada and other states which had actively participated in the war against Germany might assume in drawing up the settlement. Mr. Riddell stated that in his view there were two positive steps which could be taken. Firstly, an endeavour could be made to discuss with the Deputies in London in January not only Canadian views on the German settlement in general, but also the whole question of procedure for drafting a settlement with Germany. Secondly, at a later stage and after the Council of Foreign Ministers had considered the report of the Deputies, Canada and the other interested countries might be associated on a functional basis in discussions in the working committees of the Council of Foreign Ministers on those aspects of the treaty for Germany of direct concern to them. Subjects of particular interest to Canada might be the economic clauses of the German treaty and those relating to the setting up of a central German government.

Mr. Wilgress agreed that these two steps seemed worthy of consideration, but pointed out that the Council of Foreign Ministers had now a working procedure for drawing up peace treaties and it was unlikely that Canadian representations would be favourably received. Another practical consideration was that if Canada were to be associated on a functional basis with the committees set up under the Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers to work out the details of directives passed down by the Foreign Ministers, it was unlikely that technically qualified Canadian personnel could be found or could be spared for such purpose.

The meeting then considered what the Canadian position would be if Canada declined to present views to the Deputies or to associate ourselves in any way with the settlement. In this connection Mr. Wilgress stated that our real contribution in Paris had been very small, although the votes which we had registered in favour of certain recommendations and proposals, had had their effect in the subsequent deliberations in the Council of Foreign Ministers. It was the feeling of the meeting that from a domestic point of view, the Government would be open to criticism either if it refused to participate in the settlement or if it participated under the present restrictive terms of reference.

It was finally agreed:

(a) That a small departmental committee should be set up to look into these questions.

(b) That a memorandum should be prepared for submission by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Prime Minister outlining briefly the problem with which we are faced as regards participation in the German settlement, and indicating what had already been done by way of representations in Washington and London. The Prime Minister might be asked to give his directions on this question and to express his view as to whether or not a detailed memorandum should be submitted to Cabinet for Government view.

(c) That if the Prime Minister concurred, a memorandum should be submitted to Cabinet outlining the main Canadian interests in the German settlement and suggesting the various procedures which might be adopted by the Canadian Government for association in drawing up the German treaty or alternatively in refusing to participate therein.

(d) That committee papers should be prepared outlining the committee's view on the best methods for Canadian association in discussions on German problems and on questions of substance in connection with the German settlement.

Washington, December 26, 1946

The Government of Canada has noted the instructions issued by the Council of Foreign Ministers to their Special Deputies for Germany "to hear the views of the Governments of neighbouring Allied States and of other Allied States who participated with their armed forces in the common struggle against Germany and wish to present their views on the German problems", and "to consider questions of procedure with regard to the preparation of a Peace Treaty for Germany". Note has also been taken of the similar instructions issued to the Special Deputies for Austria.

When the terms of the Peace Treaty with Italy were first discussed by the Council of Foreign Ministers, arrangements were made for the representatives of other Allied States which had been active belligerents to appear before the Council itself. The Canadian Government refrained from making such an appearance, on the ground that no useful purpose would be served by the appearance before the Council of a Canadian representative only to make a general statement of the views of the Canadian Government, without any opportunity for further participation at that stage.

The arrangements for the preparation of draft Treaties for Germany and Austria which have been approved by the Council of Foreign Ministers provide an even smaller opportunity for other interested Governments to participate in the early stages of the settlement than that which was provided in the early stages of the Italian settlement. In the view of the Government of Canada, however, some empirical and constructive approach to this difficult problem would be preferable to a mere refusal, on grounds of principle, to present the Canadian views to the Special Deputies. It has therefore been decided to seek some form of association in the preparation of the Treaties which would be more in keeping with Canada's contribution to the war. This object could be achieved, in some measure at any rate, by a flexible interpretation of the terms of reference to the Special Deputies, so that they would be able not only to hear a statement of the views of the Government of Canada, but also to discuss the settlement with Canadian representatives.

The Government of Canada is also of the opinion that it would be useful for the Special Deputies to discuss with Canadian representatives and with those of other countries which are to be heard not only the settlement with Germany and Austria, but also the questions of procedure which the Deputies are to include in their report to the Council of Foreign Ministers. If this were done, it might be possible, through reaching agreement on the official level, to avoid the public discussion at a later stage of some of the procedural difficulties of the type which consumed so much time at the Paris Conference.

The Government of Canada also desires to suggest that representatives of smaller States should be associated on a functional basis in the actual drafting of the Treaties. In this way, Canadian representatives might be enabled to discuss with the Council of Foreign Ministers at an early stage those clauses of the Treaty with Germany which are of particular interest to Canada, such as the economic clauses and the clauses on the central government of Germany. On the other hand, the Government of Canada would not particularly desire to be given an opportunity to be associated in the drafting of the clauses on such questions as the eastern boundaries of Germany.

The Government of Canada hopes that the Government of the United States will be able to give support to the views expressed above. In the light of the extent of the Canadian contribution to Allied victory over Germany, it is considered that these suggestions are modest in scope.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram No. 934 of April 11th,† Disbandment of No. 1 Canadian War Crimes Investigation Unit.

2. Owing to impending disbandment of this Unit and transfer of the remaining work to its United Kingdom counterpart, the question of representation of Canada on the United Nations War Crimes Commission arises.

3. Three alternatives offer themselves:

(a) That the United Kingdom representative sit on our behalf on the ground that our interests will be in their hands. His relationship with the War Crimes Advisory Committee, and ours also, will then need definition. Access to War Crimes information could be arranged with him.

(b) That some other member nation be asked to represent us. You will agree this is not a suitable course.

(c) That Canada send a delegate as before. The definition of the respective functions of the United Kingdom and Canadian delegates might prove delicate, and administrative redundancy might arise. If, however, the first alternative is rejected, it might perhaps be arranged that our delegate should sit purely as a political observer, the understanding with the United Kingdom Government being that we are reluctant to increase their burden any more than we can help.

4. Would appreciate your earliest instructions in this matter, together with your reply to my telegram No. 934. I note that Department of National Defence have approved the recommendations of General Murchie.<sup>1</sup>

SECRET. Your telegrams Nos. 934 of April 11th† and No. 958, April 16th.

Canadian Government after consideration has agreed to disabandonment [sic] of War Crimes Investigation Unit in London<sup>2</sup> and to transfer of further investigations and trials to United Kingdom Military authorities subject to the following:

(A) A Canadian representative should remain on the United Nations War Crimes Commission until it is dissolved.

(B) Canada should relinquish to the United Kingdom authorities complete jurisdiction over any pending cases in which there was a joint United Kingdom-Canadian interest.

(C) The Canadian representative on the Commission should retain the right to approve or disapprove the 'listing' with the Commission of persons accused of war crimes against Canadians only.

(D) Arrangements should be concluded with the United Kingdom authorities whereby before any United Kingdom trials were held in respect of Germans accused of atrocities against Canadians only a transcript of the evidence and any other necessary details would be transmitted to Ottawa for approval by the Canadian Government.

(E) It should be made clear to the United Kingdom authorities that the Canadian authorities so far as it lay within their power would co-operate fully in collecting evidence, providing witnesses etc., but that once a Canadian case had been approved for trial the trial itself would be entirely a United Kingdom trial.

Le haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne au secrétaire aux DominionsHigh Commissioner in Great Britain to Dominions Secretary

[London,] May 17, 1946

My dear Secretary of State,

You are aware that in pursuance of its war crimes policy, the Government of Canada set up a War Crimes Advisory Committee in Ottawa, and a War Crimes Investigation Unit overseas. This latter has been a military formation attached to Canadian Military Headquarters in London, and entrusted with the task of investigating and preparing the cases in which Canada has claimed a sole or joint interest. I have myself acted as the representative of Canada on the United Nations War Crimes Commission, and it may be assumed that, in the absence of any change in policy, my successor will do the same. Canada will continue to be represented.

For pressing reasons, however—not of policy, but of administration—the Government of Canada has found it necessary to undertake the disbandment of the War Crimes Investigation Unit. In consequence, it will be no longer in a position either to complete present investigations or to begin the preparation of fresh cases.

This decision has been prompted by several urgent considerations. The withdrawal of occupation forces from the Continent will very soon render the task of the Canadian field teams extremely difficult. Moreover, the personnel of these teams and of the Investigation Unit itself have already remained overseas after their right to demobilization and repatriation has long since accrued. Their replacement from Canada has proved a stubborn problem. Finally, the nature of the Canadian cases which remain to be heard or prepared is now such that only work over a prolonged period will suffice.

The Government of Canada will accordingly be most grateful for the assistance of the United Kingdom authorities in this highly important field of activity. Perhaps you have been informed already that the Judge Advocate General's Branch of the British Army has intimated informally its capacity and willingness to assume what remains of the work on the Canadian cases, and that to this end Brigadier Shepcott, Judge Advocate General's Branch, and Brigadier Suttie, Canadian Military Headquarters, have been in communication.

You will understand the desire of the Canadian Government, in the light of its unchanged policy towards war crimes, to suggest one or two conditions which it feels to be necessary, and I should like to state these briefly.

(a) Jurisdiction over pending cases in which Canada and the United Kingdom have a joint interest would be handed over completely to the United Kingdom authorities. Canada would relinquish all jurisdiction whatsoever, and would therefore be concerned in future with cases where the injured parties were Canadians only.

(b) The right of approval of the listing with the Commission of persons accused of war crimes against Canadians only would be retained and would be exercised in practice by the Canadian representative on the Commission.

(c) It would be desired that before any trials were held, a transcript of the evidence and of any other necessary details would be transmitted to Ottawa for approval by the Canadian Government.

The Canadian authorities would, so far as it lay within their power, cooperate to the full in collecting evidence, providing witnesses and other such matters, but the trial itself would be arranged and conducted by the United Kingdom authorities.

As I have said, the British Judge Advocate General has expressed his informal consent in order to allow the Canadian authorities to make practical decisions, and I should be grateful if you would inform me whether the United Kingdom Government is agreeable to the proposals advanced in this letter, and to the completion with the Judge Advocate General of concrete arrangements based upon these proposals.

Yours sincerely,

VINCENT MASSEY

REPATRIATION OF GERMAN P.S.O.W.

With reference to the prospective repatriation of German prisoners of war, it is suggested that the order in which they should be returned should be as follows:

- (1) White Other Ranks in base camps;
- (2) Grey and dark grey Other Ranks in base camps;
- (3) Black Other Ranks in base camps;

(4) It is requested by the War Office in telegram No. 25, January 3, † from the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom that "Where possible ardent Nazis should be grouped together and that these groups should be kept separate from other prisoners of war."

(5) Officers;

(6) Working prisoners of war, so far as possible, in the order of white, grey and black.

The principle of returning prisoners in this order of their ideology is, I understand, approved by the Army authorities and is the order desired by the War Office and the Department of External Affairs.

This order would also allow the immediate clearance and closing of a number of white and grey camps. It would facilitate the documentation of the prisoners of war which it is very important for the United Kingdom authorities to have, and, perhaps a secondary point, it would, in the view of PWC,<sup>1</sup> have a better psychological effect than the reverse order. It will be observed that it would not interfere in any way with the employment of the prisoners of war now working.

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Mr. Robertson,

You will remember that on December 19th the Cabinet considered the question of the return to the United Kingdom of German prisoners of war and, at the instance of the Minister of Labour, agreed that prisoners of war working in woods operations and on farms should be kept in this country until the spring, say April 1st. It was also thought to be desirable that those in the camps should be returned to Britain in the order "blacks", "greys", and "whites". In the latter connection Mr. MacDermot has drawn my attention to three recent telegrams from the High Commissioner in London (Nos. 25 and 26 of January 23rd,† and No. 27 of January 24th†) and has informed me that from the point of view of your department it would be preferable, apart from the working prisoners of war, to return first to the United Kingdom the "whites" to be followed in that order by the "greys" and the "blacks". This is apparently the order in which administrative arrangements have been made and accords with the wishes of U.K. authorities.

This morning I have spoken to the Minister of Labour and to the Minister of National Defence. Mr. Mitchell has no interest in the order of return, apart from his desire to retain personnel working in the woods and on farms. Mr. Abbott is also satisfied to have the order of return reversed so that present arrangements may go forward.

Since Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Abbott are the two Ministers responsible, I can see no objection to proceeding on the basis and in the order proposed, so long as the position of the working parties is not in any way affected.

I am sending copies of this letter to Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Abbott and Mr. MacDermot.

Yours sincerely,

RETENTION IN CANADA OF PRISONERS OF WAR FOR LABOUR PROJECTS

In view of the world food situation and the pressure presently being exerted by agricultural groups in Canada, it seems likely that Cabinet may soon be asked to decide whether prisoner of war labour should be retained in Canada until at least the end of the summer.

If this should be the case, there are a few considerations which this Department might wish to bring to Cabinet's attention:

1. The Canadian Government has undertaken to return all prisoners of war to the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom was informed that the transfer of working prisoners of war would begin about April 1st. If Canada were to decide to retain these 10,000-odd working prisoners, the agreement of the United Kingdom would have to be secured.

The United Kingdom originally asked that employed prisoners of war should be the first group to be transferred, and agreed, only after some deliberation, to accept the non-working prisoners first. Now that non-working prisoners have been evacuated, it might occasion the United Kingdom considerable dissatisfaction if Canada were to decide, without full consultation, to retain the working prisoners of war in this country.

2. The Delegation in Canada of the International Committee of the Red Cross, is proposing to discontinue its activities among prisoners of war in the late spring. If any large numbers of prisoners of war were to be kept in Canada beyond this time, either the I.C.R.C. would have to be asked to reconsider, or the prisoners of war would be left without the services and moral support of any neutral agency.

3. The agreement with the United Kingdom stipulates that officer prisoners of war will be evacuated from Canada only after the working prisoners have been moved. Unless the United Kingdom would consent to change the order of transfer, some 2,100 German officers would be left in Canada till autumn at least. The prisoner of war re-education programme of the Psychological Warfare Committee has virtually come to an end, but it would seem undesirable to cease re-education work in the officer camps, if these are to be kept open for many months, and forfeit whatever benefits have been derived from re-education efforts to date.

CONTINUED USE OF PRISONERS OF WAR IN CANADA

I. The Minister of Labour, after consultation between officials of the Department of Labour and the Department of National Defence, has presented the following report and recommendations:

The movement of prisoners of war is progressing satisfactorily and in the normal course of events all prisoners would be out of Canada by the end of June. It is suggested that the 9,000 in lumber camps, chiefly in Northern Ontario, be withdrawn progressively, movement to be completed by June 15th, thus giving lumber camp operators an opportunity to clear up their season's work.

At present some 1,100 prisoners are on individual farms—534 in Ontario, 450 in Alberta, 106 in Quebec and 5 in Manitoba. It is proposed that these be retained until the end of the 1946 farming season on the basis that there will be no new placements or replacements. The farmers would pay $1.75 per day effective May 1st, and prisoners of war would be allowed a credit of .50¢ per day.

In respect of sugar beet production, the Sugar Controller wishes that everything possible be done to sustain cultivation and harvesting of a tonnage equal to last year's production. Since no other labour is available, it is proposed that prisoners be retained for this purpose this year, to form a pool of 2,500 men—1,200 in Alberta, 700 in Manitoba and 600 in Ontario.

II. In this connection the following considerations have been brought forward by other departments.

(1) The Canadian Government has informed the U.K. government that all prisoners would be returned to the U.K. beginning April 1st. Any change would require consultation with the U.K.

(2) The International Red Cross delegation in Canada is proposing to discontinue activities among prisoners in the late spring; if prisoners are retained, this situation would have to be reconsidered.

(3) Relevant financial factors are:

(a) arrangements with the U.K. regarding payment by the U.K for prisoners of war in Canada;

(b) the advice of the Department of National Defence that retention of prisoners of war as recommended by the Department of Labour would demand retention of special army organization and would also involve a substantial overall cost to the government of Canada.

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Retention in Canada of prisoners of war for farm labour.

1. Cabinet after consideration feels it would be desirable to retain some 3500 prisoners of war in Canada till the end of the farming season.

2. This conclusion was reached in view of the world food situation and the shortage of farm labour in Canada, particularly in sugar beet production.

3. The remaining working prisoners of war will be transferred to the United Kingdom as arranged.

4. Please approach the appropriate United Kingdom authorities with a view to securing their agreement to this proposed measure. You might stress that, although this action constitutes an exception to the agreement for transfer of all prisoners of war from Canada to the United Kingdom, it is impelled by the imperative requirements of world food production.

5. I should appreciate an early reply.

London, April 29, 1946

Reference my telegram No. 977 of 24th April†, retention for agricultural work in Canada of 3,500 German prisoners.

Question has been considered by the Departments concerned and the position is as follows:

1. There is an extreme shortage of labour in this country, in particular for agricultural purposes, and the United Kingdom authorities had been reckoning on the availability for their own harvest this summer of all the German prisoners of war who have been held in Canada and were due to be repatriated to this country by the end of May.

2. A further difficulty is that these prisoners must be moved in troopships which would otherwise be returning empty to this country from North America after transporting Canadian troops and their wives from Europe. It is understood that these movements will be completed not later than early August, after which it will not be possible to transport these prisoners, since the military shipping remaining available is required and has [been] allocated for other urgent purposes.

3. In these circumstances, the United Kingdom authorities propose that these prisoners should remain in Canada until the last troopship sailing which, as already indicated, is on present information not likely to be later than early August. If these prisoners were transported to the United Kingdom by such a date, they would still be available for the lifting of crops in this country.

4. Please inform me as soon as possible whether this meets the Canadian request.

As you know, we have been having an argument recently with the United Kingdom Government about the return to the United Kingdom of some thousands of German prisoners of war who are being used as agricultural labourers in various parts of Canada. The United Kingdom wish them back in accordance with an arrangement made some months ago and we are trying to hold on to them because of the immediate need for their services for food production here.

It has occurred to me that we might kill two or three birds with one stone by agreeing to take demobilized Polish soldiers, man for man, in return for the German prisoners of war we would be returning to the United Kingdom. In this way we would be getting a supply of heavy labour of a type which I understand is in considerable demand; the movement, which might run to three or four thousand, would make an appreciable beginning on the very difficult task of disposing of the large forces of Polish soldiers in Western Europe who, for understandable reasons are unwilling to return to Poland; the fact that they would be coming in as agricultural labourers or lumber workers to take the place specifically of German prisoners of war who would be shipped back, would I think remove the matter from the field of public controversy.<sup>1</sup>

In the ordinary course most of the Poles, who are of the type from which a good part of our useful immigration has come, would probably settle here as useful citizens.

GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR; RETENTION IN CANADA

At the meeting of the Cabinet on September 17th, the Minister of Labour reported that representatives of the departments immediately concerned had met to consider the suggestion that suitable prisoners of war at present in Canada be permitted to remain in this country on a basis similar to that provided for a limited group of Polish soldiers.

The Minister of Labour said that, while the committee of officials had refrained from making any recommendation, it was felt that it would be unwise at this time to permit entry on a civilian basis of enemy prisoners of war when approved persons from Allied countries could not be brought in. In the circumstances, it was recommended that plans would have to proceed for the return of the remaining prisoners of war.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that arrangements for return of prisoners of war should proceed (although such as were willing to remain in employment in Canada might be sent back last).

GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR IN CANADA

At present there remain in Canada approximately 2,000 German prisoners of war who, according to present plans, will be transferred to the United Kingdom on December 22nd.

It has recently been suggested both in the Press and by various individuals that present government policy be altered to allow a select group of these prisoners of war to settle in Canada as potentially useful citizens in various industries such as, for instance, lumbering and agriculture.

A considerable number of these prisoners of war have expressed a strong wish to be allowed to remain in Canada and any of those retained would obviously have to be drawn from this group.

I think myself that there is much to be said for retaining a carefully selected group of these prisoners. The objections to this course which might have been raised earlier would, I think, not now appear. However, from the 2,000, only those, I suggest, should be selected who would become valuable Canadian citizens. For this purpose, two tests are essential:

- (1) political soundness; and
- (2) prospective utility to this country.

In this regard, I am informed by the Directorate of Military Intelligence that, within a few days of receiving a request to this effect, complete dossiers could be provided on up to 200 prisoners of war who are both politically sound and potentially useful. All of them have been either anti-Nazis or definitely non-Nazis. Many of them have been serving Canada in various useful occupations for some time, and previously ran some risk from the anger of their fellow prisoners in volunteering to work. As to economic usefulness to Canada, the dossiers prepared by the Directorate of Military Intelligence could be forwarded to the Department of Labour for checking. I understand that, among the prisoners remaining, there are a small percentage of specialized craftsmen and technicians, with skills which are not to be found in Canada, and which would be particularly valuable here at the present time. Even if we were not able to accept the, say, 200 screened prisoners as suggested above, I think that we would be well advised to retain the relatively few with these special skills. This could be done by Order-in-Council.

I have given a copy of this memorandum to Heeney so that the question may be put on the Cabinet Agenda and discussed at a meeting this week, if you so desire.

GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR; PERMISSION FOR SELECTED
PERSONNEL TO REMAIN IN CANADA

On December 3rd, Cabinet approved retention in Canada of up to 200 prisoners of war subject to the concurrence of the United Kingdom and provided they were politically sound and of economic utility to the country. At a meeting called on December 6th, to work out a time-table and suitable procedure for selection of these prisoners, attended by representatives of D.M.I., the Directorate of Administration (POW), the Department of Labour and the Department of External Affairs, it was agreed:

1. From among those prisoners of war who had volunteered, D.M.I. should draw up a list of those considered politically sound. D.M.I. estimated that this list could be completed by December 14th at the latest.

2. The Department of Labour [should] draw up another list based on a prisoner of war's potential employment value.

3. By arrangement between D.M.I. and the Department of Labour these two lists [should] be collated. If there were found to be names on the Department of Labour list which were judged to be dubious cases from the point of view of political soundness, these cases should be reviewed by D.M.I. It was recognized that the political reliability of the prisoners of war must be established by D.M.I. in each case.

It was also agreed that at least 500 and probably more would be found suitable both politically and from an employment point of view. The D.M.I. representative stated that there were 745 prisoners of war who were considered potentially suitable, though all of these might not want to remain in Canada. Of these, 738 had volunteered to remain.

In the light of the second point agreed to by the Cabinet, that should further investigation demonstrate that an additional number could qualify under the prescribed conditions, further consideration be given to increasing the total to be permitted to remain, it is recommended that Cabinet consideration be given to permitting the retention of all prisoners of war from the above prospective list who:

- (a) Volunteer to stay in Canada;
- (b) Are reported politically sound by D.M.I.
- (c) Are considered economically useful by the Department of Labour.

As movement orders are to be issued on December 10th, and the movement is to begin on December 18th, it is necessary that a decision be reached on this point not later than December 13th.

The Cabinet also stipulated that these prisoners of war be admitted on the same terms as the Poles. Since all the ex-Polish soldiers were brought to Canada for agricultural purposes and a number of German prisoners of war would be useful as craftsmen in certain other industries other than agriculture, it is suggested that prisoners of war be allowed to remain on projects designated by the Department of Labour in the contract to be signed by the prisoner of war.

In accordance with the Cabinet's recommendation, a telegram is being sent to the United Kingdom government requesting their concurrence in the retention of these prisoners of war.

It is further recommended that a press statement on retention of prisoners of war in Canada be issued by the Minister of Labour, and that enquiries from the press be referred to that department.

These proposals have the support of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

SECRET. Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: Proposed treaty with Austria.

You will no doubt have seen Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 551 of May 29th† which deals with United States proposal for treaty with Austria.

The following are our provisional comments. If the Prime Minister agrees they might be communicated to the Dominions Office.

We have, of course, repeatedly expressed our objections to the exclusive negotiation by the Big Powers of the peace settlements with ex-enemy states, and these arguments would apply to the peace settlement with Austria, whether it is formally described as a "peace treaty" or not.

Moreover, we are not very hopefully impressed by the United States proposal as a political expedient to circumvent Soviet obstruction. It seems to us doubtful whether any ingenuities in the form of the treaty would induce the Soviet Union to become party to it unless it suited her purposes to do so.

On the other hand, the Canadian Government share the general interest in the prompt settlement of peace terms with ex-enemy states, and we would not wish to hinder any arrangements with regard to Austria which, in the view of the United Kingdom and the United States, hold out the prospect of gaining the agreement of the four Powers principally concerned.

With regard to the proposals outlined in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of Dominions Office telegram under reference, we should require to have full discussions to study the terms of the treaty with Austria in order that Canadian interests in the settlement may be safeguarded. We consider that as an active belligerent in the war against Germany and Austria we, in common with the other active belligerents, should sign this treaty provided, of course, that its contents are acceptable to us. We are not favourably impressed by the United States suggestion that other countries (including Canada) should accede to the treaty subsequently or express their recognition of the resulting state of affairs by means of a separate protocol. This would, in our view constitute a most unfortunate precedent.

If the arrangements for the treaty are to be proceeded with, it is clear that the Canadian, as well as the United Kingdom, legal position will have to be regularized. The United Kingdom proposal for unilateral declarations by those states which regard Austria as having enemy status to the effect that they were prepared henceforth to regard her as no longer having that status, seem to us unobjectionable, although we have not yet had time to consider the legal implications.

RELEASE OF FRENCH AND BELGIAN ASSETS; DISCLOSURE OF NAMES

1. Negotiations have been proceeding with representatives of the French and Belgian Governments with a view to reaching an agreement regarding the release of French and Belgian assets now in Canada under the control of the Custodian of Enemy Property.

2. Draft proposals for the release of French assets have been prepared, for presentation to the French Government. The general effect of the proposals is to require persons resident in France, or who left France after a specified date (other than British subjects or Canadian citizens), to obtain a certificate of bona fides from the French Government before their assets will be released by the Custodian.

In particular, Clause 8 of the draft proposals reads as follows:

8. The Custodian will supply, for the information of the French authorities, a list of names in which French accounts are recorded, together with addresses in the cases where they are known to the Custodian. This information will be in addition to the general summary of accounts and broad classification of the nature of these accounts earlier supplied to the French Government, which will be supplemented from time to time.

3. Similar draft proposals, with a corresponding Clause 8, have been prepared for the Belgian Government.

4. You will recall that the matter of providing these governments with lists of names was raised when you were preparing to proceed to London for the first meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations. At that time, you felt that a final decision should be deferred until your return, when the matter could be discussed with your colleagues.

Both the French and Belgian Governments have been pressing for the conclusion of agreements for the release of these assets and are, of course, most anxious to obtain the lists of names. Since the negotiations have been proceeding for some time, I wonder whether you feel that the special matter of the disclosure of names could now be taken up with Cabinet.

5. Representations have been made by certain investment houses in Canada, which hold securities for French nationals, strongly objecting to the disclosure of names (supplied by them to the Custodian in compliance with the Trading With the Enemy Regulations) to the Government of France. It has been stated by these houses that some of their clients in France may not have declared their Canadian holdings to the French Government and may therefore be subject to confiscatory or other punitive measures. It has also been pointed out that some of their accounts have been standing in their books for more than forty years and that the beneficial owners, resident in France, placed their moneys here for security before the present war and before the fear of inflation was in the minds of French residents.

6. It is appreciated that consideration should be given to the representations outlined in paragraph 5 above. On the other hand, the date for the declaration of French assets held abroad has been extended by the French Government until March 31, 1946. Consequently, if the release agreement is concluded in the near future, sufficient time will be allowed under French law for the individuals concerned to make the necessary declarations.

7. On the positive side, there are a number of cogent reasons for providing the French and Belgian Governments with the desired lists of names. These are as follows:

(a) The most practical method whereby the Custodian can quickly release such assets, and obtain information as to the real enemy assets held by him, is by obtaining the full cooperation of the particular Government concerned. It would, therefore, seem reasonable to comply with requests on the part of such governments for the necessary lists of names.

(b) It would seem desirable, at a time when France is in need of Canadian dollars for purposes of trade, and is seeking commercial credits, to provide the French Government with the maximum assistance in mobilizing whatever French assets are available in Canada. If a list of names is not provided, it seems highly likely that certain French holders of assets in Canada will refrain from applying for their release rather than to ask the French Government for a certificate of bona fides. In such cases, the French assets may remain frozen indefinitely in Canada. Similar considerations apply to Belgium.

(c) Proposals containing a clause providing for the disclosure of a list of names have already been presented by the Canadian Government to the Netherlands Government in a formal Note. Moreover, in May, 1945, a provisional list of names, as of that date, was actually transmitted to the Netherlands Minister. A similar disclosure of names has been made to the Norwegian Government. It would be difficult to deny to the French and Belgian Governments information of a nature corresponding to that already given to the Netherlands and Norwegian Governments.

(d) The United Kingdom Government has adopted a policy of complete disclosure of information to the foreign governments concerned.

(e) There is no provision in the arrangements which the United States have concluded for the release of French assets, for providing a list of names. However, the agreement which the United States Government has concluded with the French Government for the avoidance of double taxation will result in the greater part of the desired information being available to the French in any event. (Moreover, Canada is now negotiating with France an agreement for the avoidance of double taxation, which, as presently drafted, would eventually provide the French with the greater part of the requested information).

8. This memorandum has been discussed with the Under-Secretary of State who has expressed his concurrence in the recommendation that Clause 8, as it presently appears in the draft proposals for the release of French and Belgian assets, be allowed to stand.

RE: PROPOSED RELEASING AGREEMENTS

The Meeting was held in Mr. Mathieu's office this morning to discuss the above proposals. Mr. Burbridge, Mr. Gardner, Mr. Robitaille, Mr. Wright and myself were present.

We began with a detailed examination of the provisions of the proposed Danish Agreement but it soon became evident that in the light of experience gained in the nine months since the signing of the French Agreement the Custodian would be well advised to reconsider whether he should be a party to any similar agreement with any other liberated country. So far as we are concerned, the proposed agreements were to outline the procedure to be followed in releasing technical enemy property. The difficulties and disappointments arising out of the French Agreement have become so pronounced and have posed so many troublesome administration problems for this office that it was finally agreed that, if possible, no further agreements should be concluded. Throughout the discussion reference was made to the procedure for release under Part III of our Circular Letter of the 13th January, 1941, copy attached marked "A".† That procedure was simple and direct. The material required was as follows:

- (1) Personal Declaration by beneficial owner.
- (2) Certification before a British or Canadian Consular official.
- (3) A statement of bona fides by a Bank, Trust Company or other reliable person.

That procedure had two principal features:

- (1) The entire release machinery at all times remained completely in the hands of the Custodian.
- (2) Applicants had to appear in person before the Consular official.

Under the French Agreement and the proposed agreements with other liberated countries two points stand out:

- (1) We are required to give a list of our accounts.
- (2) Claimants are required to produce a certificate from their Government, if they are resident nationals.

The giving of lists to the French Government has embarrassed this office as no other single event since the office was opened. At the time the Cabinet gave its approval to the giving of lists it was pointed out that similar lists had been given by Great Britain and the United States. It is uncertain how far the British have complied but our understanding is that the United States gave no lists, requiring merely certification; for example, by l'Office des Changes re French accounts. By giving lists we placed a weapon in the hands of these Foreign Governments to pursue their own nationals to apply for a release. Thus, we became mere agents of the Foreign Government to assist them in collecting taxes and obtaining Foreign Exchange from their nationals in spite of the fact that it is a well recognized principle of English law that taxing authorities have no jurisdiction outside their own particular district. In other words, the Government of any one of the provinces of Canada cannot levy against the property of one of its residents located in another province.

As to No. 2, our experience under the French Agreement is entirely unsatisfactory, as we are forced to the conclusion that these Foreign Governments, being interested in these agreements in only one thing, namely, the transfer of the foreign assets of their nationals to themselves, will, in order to obtain such assets, sign any certificate required. Questions of interpretation have also arisen under the French Agreement, which are most troublesome. We are, therefore, satisfied that had no agreement been negotiated with France, nor any contemplated with the other liberated countries, we would have released up to date more technical enemy property even to French nationals in France than we have so far released.

We were also satisfied that the release procedure provided for in Part III of our Circular Letter of the 13th January, 1941, is much more satisfactory and much more reliable from our stand point than any provided in any of these agreements. The original reasons advanced in the beginning of 1945 for having these agreements have either disappeared or have been found not to have existed.

It is realized that Part III of our Circular Letter of the 13th January, 1941, specifically refers to securities. This can easily be amended by adding a paragraph to the effect that the material required under this Part applies equally to all other types of property with the necessary changes and alterations.

It is also realized that in many districts there are no British or Canadian Consular officials. We have already overcome difficulties of this nature under this Part by accepting in such cases the best certification possible, in the circumstances, including Agents designated by the Consular officials. Foreign Agents of Canadian Banks might be ready to render assistance in this connection.

It must be borne in mind that the Custodian's principal concern is to have the claimant properly identified by having him appear personally before some responsible person.

Washington, February 19, 1946

Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: My WA-748 of February 12th† and related communications concerning proposed reply to the Netherlands note regarding payment for Military Relief supplies, including our telephone conversation on this subject late last week.

The United States and United Kingdom drafts have now been discussed by representatives of the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian Governments here.<sup>1</sup> In these discussions I made known the views expressed in your EX-229 of January 24th and indicated our general preference for the line taken in the United Kingdom note. On most points the United States representatives appreciated the reasoning which resulted in our dissatisfaction with their draft but indicated that on several points it would be difficult to secure a modification of that draft. At our meeting we developed an abbreviated and modified version of the United Kingdom note which each of us undertook to refer to our respective Governments suggesting to them that they construct around this incomplete draft a note which would be satisfactory to them. The notes so constructed would then be reported to the particular Government's representatives in Washington and each of us would then discuss our proposed note with representatives of the other two Governments in order to ensure that, in the absence of agreement on identical notes, one [sic] of the notes contained elements repugnant to the other two parties.

I should say that both the United States and United Kingdom representatives expressed some concern at the suggestion in your EX-229 that the Canadian note should emphasize a distinction between Canada on the one hand and the United States and United Kingdom on the other. The United States representatives maintained that the special paragraph which they had included as paragraph 2 of the original draft, and which they would retain in any note, was not intended to strengthen the United States position in relation to the United Kingdom and Canada, but to strengthen all three positions equally. I expressed some doubt that the Netherlands authorities would have read the language, contained in the Lend-Lease interpretation of April 30th, to mean that an understanding reached with the United States Government placed them under an obligation not only to the United States Government but also to the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments. I pointed out that while there had been a remark in that memorandum (see the quotation in the second paragraph on page 1 of my WA-748) which might have been taken to imply a reinforcement of the Netherlands obligation to all three countries, and not only to the United States, the concluding clause had related that obligation only to the United States dollar portion of the Bill. The State Department representatives said that while obviously emphasis had been placed on the United States dollar portion it had been intended that the memorandum of April 30th should reinforce the obligation to all three supplying countries. They went on to say that as the Canadians had been the principal champions of the joint collection arrangement, and had, in fact, virtually insisted on it, they felt confident that any language employed in our note drawing attention to the fact that Canada had been paying dollars to the Dutch would be carefully drafted to avoid any implication that the binding nature of the Dutch obligation to Canada derived from this fact and that accordingly their obligation to Canada was more binding than their obligation to the United States or United Kingdom. They recognized that this payment of Canadian dollars to the Dutch was relevant to the ability of the Dutch to pay but remarked that, as all three countries seemed agreed the Dutch could pay in any event, they did not feel that this feature required particular emphasis in the Canadian note. I am sure you will wish to take account of these observations by the United States authorities in drafting the Canadian note.

When a proposed Canadian note has been drafted I should be grateful if you would communicate the text to us in advance of transmittal to the Netherlands authorities in order that we might discuss it with the United States and United Kingdom representatives and avoid any misunderstanding. As indicated above the United States and United Kingdom will clear their texts with us before submitting notes to the Dutch.

In modifying the original draft United Kingdom note to take account of views expressed by the United States and ourselves some slight changes in language were made to imply gently that our recognition of the contribution made by The Netherlands and the hardships endured by them extended to similar contributions and services of other Allied countries in the war. Certain sentences were deleted as redundant in the sense that their substance had already been emphasized in the original notes of April 4th and that in any case they were not particularly relevant in replying to the Dutch representations. Some words were inserted, at the insistence of the United States, to indicate that account had been taken not only of the representations made in the Dutch note but also of other circumstances relevant to the ability of the Dutch to pay. In the penultimate sentence the words "that Government" were changed to "those supplying Governments" to remove any implication that one Government could unilaterally determine the currencies which it would accept. In the last sentence the word "however" was replaced by the words "of course" in order not to exaggerate the importance which should be attached by the Dutch in our willingness to hear representations in regard to individual items. The following is the abbreviated text on which there seems to be substantial agreement:

The —(supplying)—Government has carefully considered the representations made by the Netherlands Government in their note of 29th of October about payment for the cost of civilian supplies furnished to The Netherlands through the combined armies of the Allies. It recognizes the great services rendered to the Allied cause by the Netherlands Government and people in common with other Allied nations, and the great hardships endured by them during the course of the war. They recognize also the magnitude of the task with which The Netherlands and other Allied Governments are faced in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of their countries. The ——— Government after full consideration of the representations of the Netherlands Government in the relevant circumstances regrets that it is unable to agree that the claim to payment against the Netherlands Government in respect of the civilian supplies furnished under this arrangement should be waived or withdrawn. The ——— Government reminds the Netherlands Government that, as explained in its note of April 4th, although bills will be presented for the sake of convenience in terms of dollars, actual payment in respect of the sums due to each of the three supplying Governments will be requested in currencies acceptable to those supplying Governments. TELEGRAM WA-1087

Washington, March 7, 1946

Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: My WA-850 of February 19th concerning proposed reply to the Netherlands note regarding payment for military relief supplies.

At a regular meeting of the Tri-Partite Settlement Committee yesterday, each of the three sides informed the Committee of the intentions of his Government in respect of this note.

For our part, we advised the Committee (in line with the telephone conversation which I had with you last week) that the draft note which had been developed by the informal working party of the Tri-Partite Settlement Committee, and which had been reported to you in my WA-850, was generally acceptable to us. I indicated my understanding that the Canadian authorities would not include a special paragraph referring to the fact that, unlike the other countries, Canada had undertaken to pay the Dutch for goods and services received (your EX-229 of January 24th) if the United States and United Kingdom considered, as they had previously indicated on numerous occasions, that the insertion of such an argument applicable specifically only to Canada would involve a deviation from the joint collection arrangement and would imply that the binding nature of the Dutch obligation to Canada derived from the fact that Canada had undertaken to make certain payments and that accordingly their obligation to the United States and United Kingdom was somehow less binding. At yesterday's meeting the United States and United Kingdom expressed themselves strongly in favour of the omission of any such paragraph from the Canadian note and observed that if such special arguments were to be introduced they might equally well refer to the net troop pay arrangements, lend-lease and reciprocal aid arrangements, etc., but they could see no merit in resorting to such special arguments when the case could be established equally for all three countries on more general grounds. Incidentally, I should mention that in the fourth sentence of the draft text of the note reported in my WA-850 the words "in the relevant circumstances" should have read "and other relevant circumstances".

3. The United Kingdom representatives indicated that their Government would wish to submit a note also along the lines reported in WA-850.

4. The United States representatives informed the Committee that they could see no objection to the United Kingdom and Canada submitting notes in the form and language proposed in WA-850 but for their part they would wish to submit to the Dutch a note stating more explicitly that they were rejecting the Dutch request not only on the ground that the Dutch had an obligation to pay but also on the ground that "the representations contained in (the Dutch note) do not establish the inability of the Netherlands Government to pay". The following is the text of the draft which the United States representatives propose to submit to the Dutch, Begins:

I have the honor to refer to Your Excellency's Note No. 7984 of November 29th, 1945 concerning payment for the cost of civilian supplies furnished to the Netherlands Government and people through the Combined Military authorities of the United States, United Kingdom and Canada.

Since the inception of the program for the provision of civilian supplies through the Combined Military Authorities, this Government has frequently stated that payment for such supplies would be requested from the Government of The Netherlands. On August 19th, 1944, representatives of the Netherlands Government confirmed the understanding that these civilian supplies would be paid for currently and this understanding was again confirmed by representatives of the Netherlands Government on November 8th, 1944. The intention of the Government of the United States to request such payment was set forth in its note of April 4th, 1945. Payment for these supplies was made a specific provision of the Department of State's memorandum of April 30th, 1945, which interpreted certain sections of the agreement reached on that date between the Government of the United States and the Government of The Netherlands.

The Government of the United States has given careful consideration to the representations contained in your note of November 29th, 1945. The United States Government recognized the great services which the Netherlands Government and people in common with other Allied nations rendered to the Allied cause, and the great hardships endured by all the liberated countries during the course of the war. It recognizes also the magnitude of the task with which the Netherlands Government and other Allied Governments are faced in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of their countries. However, in the view of the Government of the United States, the representations contained in your note of November 29th, 1945, do not establish the inability of the Netherlands Government to pay the combined bills for the civilian relief program which the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada are presenting for payment.

In view of the above considerations, the United States Government regrets that it is unable to agree that the claim against the Netherlands Government should be waived or withdrawn.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.
Ends.

5. The suggestion at the meeting was that the notes might be presented to the appropriate Dutch authorities on March 15th if that date is agreeable to the three Governments. The United Kingdom will present its note at The Hague. The United States will present its note to the Netherlands Ambassador in Washington since all previous notes on this subject between the United States and the Dutch have been exchanged in Washington. I indicated that the Canadian authorities would probably make their presentation through The Hague since it was my understanding that our previous exchanges had taken place at The Hague.

6. In these circumstances, can you let us know by Monday, March 11th, whether the Canadian position is correctly stated in paragraph 2 above and that accordingly you propose to submit the note suggested in WA-850 without any formal reference to the special financial arrangements which Canada had with The Netherlands during the war. Can you inform us by the same date whether it will be feasible and agreeable for you to proceed with the presentation of this note in The Hague or in Ottawa on March 15th. Can you let us know also whether you see any objection to the draft note which the State Department proposes to submit to the Netherlands Ambassador here. Unless the State Department is informed by March 11th that some difficulties have arisen on these or related points, they will make arrangements to present the note to the Netherlands Ambassador on March 15th and will assume that you will be making your presentation on the same date.

7. Finally, I should probably draw your attention to the fact that the Dutch note to the United Kingdom was dated October 29th and the note to the United States was apparently dated November 29th. You will doubtless wish to check the date of the Dutch note to Canada, since it may not have been the same as either of the other two.

The Canadian Government has carefully considered the representations made by the Netherlands Government in their note of November 14th, 1945, about payment for the cost of civilian supplies furnished to The Netherlands through the combined armies of the Allies. SECRET. Following for Ritchie from Pierce, Begins: Italian indebtedness for military relief.

Following your call from Georgia I canvassed opinion in our Department and Finance on the informal suggestion from the United States authorities that military relief claims against Italy be waived to facilitate acceptance of the United States view that Italy should not pay reparations.

It is our opinion that the claim for civilian supplies is preferred and should be first charge against the Italian economy. There is precedent for this view in the Potsdam formula that made essential imports first charge against exports.

If we were to waive our claim for military relief against Italy, we would find it most awkward to maintain our claim against our Allies in Western Europe. We think it would be easier to differentiate between military relief and reparations than between Italy and, say, The Netherlands, whose request for relief from payment we have refused to recognize.

However, if during the peace talks it becomes evident that Italy is bankrupt and that reparations cannot be provided, it may be evident also that Italian resources make it impossible for Italy to pay for military relief. There might, under such circumstances, then be justification for waiving our military relief claims against Italy.

TELEGRAM WA-1450

Washington, April 2, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Your EX-794 of March 18th, Italian indebtedness for Military Relief.

State Department officials are most anxious that discussion of this subject be transferred from Washington to London and that discussion there among the United States, United Kingdom and Canada should commence as soon as possible in order that the present views of the three Governments might be examined in the light of the difficulties which the negotiators of the Italian Peace Treaty have encountered in connection with related discussions on reparations. The United Kingdom officials in Washington have agreed that these discussions might more profitably take place in London than here. I have been asked, therefore, to enquire again whether you would be willing to instruct the High Commissioner's office in London immediately to contact Jacques Reinstein through the United States Embassy in London and E. R. Copleston in the United Kingdom Treasury with a view to discussing the tentative United States proposal that consideration be given to the feasibility of cancelling Italian indebtedness under the Military Relief arrangement in order to facilitate the discussion of the Italian Peace Treaty.

There would seem to be several points on which the High Commissioner's office might request clarification from Reinstein at an early stage in any such discussions.

1. Is the United States or United Kingdom expecting to receive reparations from Italy (apart possibly from the proceeds of certain Italian assets in their custody)? It is my understanding of the general United States position that they are not claiming reparations and wish to dissuade others from entering such claims by demonstrating their conviction that the Italian economy cannot bear any substantial reparations or repayment burden. They feel that their position in withstanding the claims of others for reparations would be substantially strengthened if they could say not only that they are refraining from entering any claim for reparations on their own behalf but that they are even cancelling their claim for repayment of costs incurred by them in the provision of Military Relief supplies to Italy. I understand from Luthringer of the State Department that the United States negotiators feel they have been manoeuvred into such a position that they appear to be opposing the claims of the Greeks, Yugoslavs and Albanians while the U.S.S.R. appears to be championing the cause of those countries. They are, of course, anxious to extricate themselves from this position and also to make progress with the general discussion of the Peace Treaty.

2. Is it considered that the Italian economy is incapable of making payments for Military Relief even if the Military Relief claim were to be given a priority higher than any reparations claims (Saving message No. 11 of October 2nd from the Dominions Office to External Affairs indicated that the United Kingdom would expect the Military Relief claim to merit a prior charge on Italian ability to pay)? Conceivably, Reinstein might admit that the Italians would be able to pay for Military Relief supplies if those claims were given precedence over reparations claims and yet at the same time oppose the granting of such priority on the ground that even if such a priority were to be secured in the negotiations the pressing of the Military Relief claim would encourage the pressing of reparations claims in such a manner that they could not be withstood and on such a scale that they would exhaust the Italian economy beyond hope of recovery. A judgment on the possible implications of the establishment of a first priority for Military Relief charges, it would seem to me, can best be made in London where officials are in possession of the statistical facts required and are in a position to judge the probable reaction of other countries whose interests are affected.

3. If either the United Kingdom or Canada were to withhold their concurrence in the proposed cancellation, would the United States representatives nevertheless proceed to state in the Peace Treaty discussions that they intend to waive their claim against Italy? I should consider that the general Military Relief agreement and the specific understanding concerning joint collection and settlement would require the United States to secure the concurrence of both the United Kingdom and Canada before taking any such action, since such action by them would prejudice the claims of the other two countries against Italy and might prejudice the claims of all three countries against other Governments from which payment is expected. If this is your understanding of the position you will probably wish to have the High Commissioner's office inform Reinstein accordingly. As indicated in my WA-4593 of September 19th concerning a note which was to be presented to the Italian Government regarding its liability to pay for Military Relief supplies I had advised Mr. Luthringer of the State Department in writing of our expectation that consultation would take place on any settlement to be proposed in the Peace Treaty discussions concerning the United States or United Kingdom claims since "any decision of this nature would affect the ability of the Canadian Government to secure a settlement of its share of the joint claim and . . . our interests should be consulted before any action is taken which might compromise our claim". I have reminded the State Department officials of this statement of our understanding. You might consider it desirable that the officer concerned in the High Commissioner's office remind Reinstein of our position on this point.

4. Even if agreement were to be reached among the United States, United Kingdom and Canada would not the explicit (and possibly public) waiver of the claim against Italy at this particular time, when we are at long last presenting bills for payment by the Western European allies, have an adverse effect on the prospects of collecting from Western European countries, and might it not even have undesirable political consequences if the public in the Western European countries were to feel that Italy was receiving preferred treatment?

If the United States and/or the United Kingdom were to insist that an explicit cancellation of their claim against Italy must be made at this time in order to facilitate the Peace Treaty discussions but the Canadian authorities found themselves unwilling to waive their claim we should presumably have to consider what action should be taken to protect our position. The only source from which it would seem possible for us to secure repayment would appear to be Italian assets in Canada (to the extent that they are not exhausted by other claims), possibly the Canadian dollar equivalent of the lire provided for the maintenance of Canadian troops in Italy during the war, and possibly the Canadian dollar proceeds (if any) of Italian exports. You will doubtless wish to consider the possible nature of a Canadian settlement with Italy in the event that the United States and/or United Kingdom were to insist on waiving their Military Relief claims at this time for reasons of high policy. If your consideration were to indicate that Canada might make a "satisfactory" settlement with Italy despite any waiver by the United States or United Kingdom you might be less inclined to oppose such a waiver by them. Ends.

ATTENTION: MR. LEPAN

Dear Mr. LePan,

In a telephone conversation yesterday April 3rd, 1946, (Mr. LePan—Capt. Littlepage) you requested the latest available figures regarding Canadian Military Relief Supplies to Italy. The following figures cover shipments from the inception of Military Relief through July, 1945, and no further shipments are contemplated.

Wheat	$ 27,364,342.92
Fish, Mining Supplies, School Supplies and Newsprint Paper	806,202.75
	$ 28,170,545.67

This is the amount of our claim in Canadian Dollars against Italy. The ocean freight, which is paid by and credited to the carrying nation, is in addition and we are advised by our Washington Office that the total landed costs in Italy of the above supplies is $32,601,233.00 U.S. Funds.

The amount does not take into consideration (a) Issues from Military Stocks, (b) issues of Petroleum, Oil and Lubricants, (c) disposal of End stocks, (d) diversions or losses at sea, (e) diversions from U.K. stocks originally supplied as Mutual Aid and not yet reported by the U.K.

The original figure of around $50,000,000.00 which was previously supplied, was an estimate of supplies of all natures, based on best available figures at the time.

After the month of May, 1945, we refused to ship further supplies of Wheat and other Foodstuffs to Italy for the reason that it was felt that supplies of this nature, on and after June, 1945, should be wholly for Northwest Europe to the exclusion of Italy.

Yours faithfully,

This note states that, although as a matter of convenience such bills are being presented in terms of U.S. dollars, payment will be requested from the Norwegian Government in currencies acceptable to the supplying governments.

By December 31st, 1945, itemized bills totalling $567,183.02 (U.S. dollars) had been presented to the Norwegian Government (or agencies thereof) by agencies of the combined military authorities of the United States, the

The identifying numbers, dates of presentation and amounts of these bills are shown in the attached list.† It has now been determined that, to meet the Norwegian Government's obligation to each of the supplying governments for these bills, payment should be made as follows:

To the Government of the United States in U.S. dollars — 64 per cent.

To the Government of the United Kingdom in pounds sterling — 33 per cent.

To the Government of Canada in Canadian dollars — 3 per cent.

From time to time the Norwegian Government will be provided with similar statements of the currency percentages to be used in making payment for bills presented subsequent to December 31st, 1945. These percentages will be established with a view to providing the amounts of the specific currencies required to accomplish final financial settlement among the supplying governments for their respective shares in the programme.

Payment of the $18,716.85 (Canadian funds) found to be due to the Canadian Government should be forwarded to the Department of Finance, Ottawa, for the Receiver General of Canada. TELEGRAM WA-1683

Washington, April 19, 1946

SECRET. Military Relief Indebtedness. The United States authorities have been giving consideration recently to the relationship between the settlement of military relief indebtedness and their foreign lending plans. Secretary of the Treasury Vinson and Assistant Secretary of State Clayton have had several discussions on this subject during the past week and preliminary consideration has been given to it in the National Advisory Council. The view is being expressed on the United States side that they cannot hope to collect military relief payments (at least in the immediate future) without having to lend an almost equivalent amount to such paying countries. As requests being received from such countries for reconstruction loans already exceed by a substantial margin the present and prospective lending power of the Export-Import Bank, the United States authorities are considering whether the military relief indebtedness should not be funded or cancelled altogether in order to make it possible for liberated countries to devote the limited loans which they can secure from the United States entirely to meeting present reconstruction requirements. The development of a policy decision on this subject has become a matter of considerable urgency in view of the relevance of such a decision to the loan negotiations which are now proceeding with the French and certain other western European countries. Accordingly, Mr. Collado (Deputy on financial matters to Clayton), has asked us formally to discuss with him and other United States officials concerned the following points as early as possible next week:

(1) Would the Canadian authorities be prepared to join with the United States authorities in cancelling all military relief indebtedness, possibly in return for certain intangible benefits (e.g., agreement on general commercial policy, etc.)? Collado could not say with certainty that the National Advisory Council would decide to cancel the United States share, even if Canada and the United Kingdom were prepared to do likewise. He reports, however, that the majority opinion in all discussion to date on the United States side has favoured such a cancellation.

(2) If the proposal in the above paragraph proves unacceptable, would the Canadian authorities be prepared to join the United States in funding the indebtedness in such a manner that repayment could be spread over a period of, say, 30 years on terms which might be similar to those provided in the "3-C" Lend-Lease Agreements (i.e., 30 years with interest at 2½ per cent)?

(3) If the Canadian authorities are not prepared to join in either cancelling or funding this indebtedness, would they be prepared to release the United States authorities from such obligations as might exist requiring some degree of uniformity in treatment of military relief claims in order that the United States might either cancel or fund the United States share? Collado appreciates that the United States authorities are under an obligation not to prejudice the Canadian or United Kingdom claim by any settlement which the United States might make. He recognizes that the United States could scarcely proceed with a cancellation of their share without securing the consent of the United Kingdom and Canada, since such a cancellation would almost certainly jeopardize the other claims, even though the United States arrangement for cancellation were to include a specific statement that such cancellation should be regarded as affecting in no way the validity of the Canadian and United Kingdom claims. He expressed some doubt, however, that the United States would be bound to refrain from funding the indebtedness if the United Kingdom and Canada were to withhold their explicit approval of such action since, in his view, such a funding would cast no doubt on the validity of the other claims and would leave the United Kingdom and Canada free to arrange whatever settlements they could with the debtor country.

(4) In addition to the above points relating to the indebtedness of countries from which previously payment had been expected, the question of the time and manner of settlement with Italy would also require discussion. As indicated in previous communications from this Embassy, the original intention had been that this particular topic should be discussed in London in connection with the general discussions which were then proceeding concerning the Italian Peace Treaty. In view of the fact that the staffs concerned with the general peace treaty discussions have had to intensify preparations for the Paris meeting, the United States Embassy in London has suggested that this particular aspect of the subject might now better be discussed in Washington. We are, of course, familiar with your view in the form originally reported to us and in the form communicated to the High Commissioner's office in London, but for the purpose of discussing this subject next week we should be grateful to learn whether there has been any modification of your view as a result of anything that may have been reported from London in the interval. Incidentally, we have been somewhat confused by a remark in telegram No. 932 of April 11th† from the High Commissioner to the Secretary of State that "(the United Kingdom) recognize the United States argument that the waiver of the claims for military relief would strengthen the claims of others for reparations". Our understanding of the United States argument has been just the reverse of that stated in telegram No. 932. We had understood the United States position to be that while a waiver of the military relief claim might strengthen (or at least, not weaken still further) the Italian economy, it would weaken the claims of others for reparations on the ground that if the United States were to waive the military relief claim the United States representatives could then argue that other countries should follow that example and waive their claims for reparations.

In view of the urgency which the United States authorities attach to a decision on these matters, and in view of the desirability of making known our views to them at as early a stage as possible, in their consideration of the problem we should be grateful if you would provide us with your preliminary views on the above points as soon as possible next week in order that we might discuss them with Collado.

Collado intimated that the United States had not yet taken up these points with the United Kingdom but that he was proposing to get in touch with Makins of the United Kingdom Embassy within the next day or two. On this point Collado enquired whether we would prefer to have bilateral or tri-lateral discussions. We refrained from expressing any view at this stage, but if it appears that our view is closer to the United Kingdom than to the United States, it might be better to have trilateral discussions in order that the United States might not play off the United Kingdom against Canada and vice versa. However, as we did not wish to anticipate what your views would be on the United States proposals, we deferred making any suggestion as to the nature of the discussions which might take place until we could learn your general views. After we receive your views we shall, of course, enquire concerning the United Kingdom views at the same time as we discuss them with the United States.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

RE: U.S. ACTION ON MILITARY RELIEF INDEBTEDNESS

We have noted with some concern teletype No. 1683 of April 19th, regarding the views of the U.S. authorities on the collection of Military Relief payments and asking our Embassy to consult with the Department of State and other U.S. officials on several points early next week.

We note that the views of the American authorities are that these amounts owed by the countries which received Military Relief are so large that they cannot be paid without necessitating substantial loans either for that purpose or for other purposes which might otherwise be met by the funds required to discharge this indebtedness, and that consequently the U.S. authorities are considering whether this Military Relief indebtedness should not be funded or cancelled altogether.

The view of this Department, put very briefly, is that these claims should not be cancelled or waived, but that we should be prepared to consider any reasonable proposal for funding the indebtedness of any country which could demonstrate that immediate payment would cause it substantial difficulty.

We believe that cancellation of these obligations would be a serious and undesirable move at the present time. We have asked these countries to pay and indicated clearly that we expect all those who can pay at all to do so. If at the first sign of difficulty we agree to cancel these debts, it might well encourage these countries to expect that other debts contracted at this time for the purchase of supplies to feed their people, following Military Relief activities, or for reconstruction purposes, would in due course be cancelled or generously adjusted. We believe that this argument should apply and appeal to the United States just as much as to Canada.

In our own particular case, we are making quite substantial payments to Belgium and Holland, in one way or another, for supplies obtained by the Canadian Army from these countries, and one of the arguments which we have used, and expect to use, to justify these payments is that these countries were charged for the supplies which the Army provides to them. When these settlements in respect of goods and services for the Canadian Army were adjusted and arranged, it was expected on both sides that payment for Military Relief supplies would be made. Even in the case of Holland, which has formally requested waiver of these claims, there has been some recognition of the justification of Canada's maintaining this claim, when she has recognized the claim of Holland in respect of supplies and services furnished to the Canadian forces. This argument, of course, does not apply as much in the case of the United States as it does in the case of Canada, but it is one that we must recognize to a considerable degree in our own case at least.

A further argument on the question of cancellation, and one which I think would apply to the United States, though your Department will be better able to judge this, is that the funds for the purpose of Military Relief have been obtained from Parliament on the understanding that bills would be presented and claims would be maintained in respect of the supplies so furnished. It has been recognized, of course, that some of the countries, particularly Greece, Yugoslavia and Italy, would likely be unable to pay, but it has been expected right along that France, Belgium, Holland and Norway would be in a position to pay. In our own case, at least, it would probably be necessary to get specific authority from Parliament to cancel these obligations, and it would be very difficult to justify such cancellation publicly and on the arguments put forward in the teletype of April 19th, and, indeed, for that matter, even on the argument put forward by the Netherlands Government in their earlier note applying to their own case.

The amounts likely to be owing to Canada by these various countries, we understand, will be relatively modest, probably not exceeding thirty or forty million dollars in all, and perhaps not more than ten or fifteen million in any individual case, as far as we can tell at this time. These amounts of Canadian dollar payments do not seem large in relation to the foreign exchange assets of the countries concerned, nor in relation to the credits which Canada is making available to them. Consequently we would think it is not impossible for them to pay us even in cash at this time.

On the other hand, the amounts payable to the United States are likely to be quite large, and those payable to the United Kingdom also large. The latest information on our files on this matter is a note of the Secretariat of the Tripartite Settlement Committee, sent by our Embassy on February 1st, which shows an estimate of $603,000,000 payable to the U.S. and $311 million payable (in sterling) to the U.K., presumably covering the four Western European countries. These sums are substantial in relation to the immediate cash resources of these Western European countries.

In view of this situation, I think we should be prepared to consider any reasonable arrangement for funding the indebtedness represented by these claims, either on a combined basis or on a separate basis to be worked out by each of the supplying countries with each of the recipient countries concerned. Such funded obligations should, I believe, carry interest at a rate appropriate to the period over which repayments will be made. I think it would be well to have repayments commence almost immediately before these Western European countries have satisfied all their borrowing requirements, so that this claim would be recognized by some payment while it is still very much in the interests of these countries to maintain their credit and the financial goodwill of the three supplying governments.

I assume that it will be possible to arrange any funding that is decided upon in such a manner as to carry out the original intention of the parties in respect of the sharing of losses. This funding, particularly if it is applied to the countries which had not expected to be able to pay, may cause some difficulties in that connection, and it may be necessary to do some further work in the allocation of payments with this in mind.

This last point raises a further question to which attention ought to be given. If we are to agree that even the Western European countries cannot pay these bills immediately and that, therefore, we should fund the indebtedness, should we not fund also the indebtedness of the other recipient countries as well, rather than simply recognize their inability to pay? This may cause some difficulty, not only in the allocation of the obligations to the various supplying countries, but also in future through burdening Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia with heavy obligations which they cannot possibly meet and on which they will have to default repeatedly. In other words, it will exaggerate the difficulties of collecting from those who can pay and letting off with default those who cannot. In all the circumstances, I can see no satisfactory answer to this difficulty, however, if immediate payment is out of the question for the Western European countries.

Do you feel that any Ministerial or Cabinet action is necessary on this question before the official Canadian views are put forward in Washington? If so, perhaps it would be well to have this brought up at a Cabinet meeting this week.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

TELEGRAM WA-1715

Washington, April 23, 1946

SECRET. Our WA-1683 of April 19th, cancellation or funding of Military Relief indebtedness.

As intimated in my previous teletype Collado has now approached the United Kingdom with his problem. While the United Kingdom representatives here were not in a position to comment formally on the various proposals at the time, they indicated their expectation that London would be unlikely to favour cancellation of the indebtedness but might find the funding version of the proposal less repugnant.

Yesterday an informal group representing the United States, United Kingdom and Canada examined some calculations which had been made in the State Department of the effect which a cancellation would have on each of the three supplying Governments. The results of these calculations are reported in my immediately following teletype (WA-1716). As will be seen from the calculations made on assumptions A and B the United Kingdom could be the only country to receive any payment if a cancellation arrangement were to be adopted. The United Kingdom representatives asked the United States whether the United States Government would undertake to pay directly to the United Kingdom the amount by which the United States contribution to initial financing had fallen short of the United States share of the loss resulting from a cancellation. The State Department officials present at yesterday's meeting were not in a position to give any such assurance. The United Kingdom representatives are referring these calculations to London and are asking London for the United Kingdom Government's views. They are asking whether the results which might be expected on the basis of present calculations would be acceptable to the United Kingdom if the United States and Canada were to guarantee payment to the United Kingdom of their respective deficits. They are asking also whether the results would be acceptable to the United Kingdom if instead of being guaranteed payment by the United States and Canada, the United Kingdom would have to collect (either on its own or with the assistance of the United States and Canada) from Governments which had received supplies.

In considering the cancellation version of the United States proposal reported in my WA-1683, you will doubtless wish to take account of the position revealed in these calculations. Although the figures on which the calculations were based are subject to change there would seem little likelihood that any changes can be expected which will improve the relative position of Canada. If a comparison is being made between the position of Canada under any cancellation arrangement and the position as it would be if present plans for collection were to be carried through, it should be noted that although teletype WA-464† and despatch No. 259† had indicated that $30,400,000.00 would be collected by Canada, in fact the receipts due to Canada eventually probably would be less than that amount by some $11,000,000.00 representing trucks which had been contributed originally to Military Relief but which, it is understood, the Canadian authorities have now sold as surplus outside the Military Relief arrangement. In other words the receipts which might be expected if collections were made would (subject to such other adjustments as might be required to take account of other developments) probably be nearer $20,000,000.00 than $30,000,000.00. If all claims against the receiving countries were to be cancelled Canada would at least lose these possible receipts.

If the Canadian authorities are prepared to consider any form of cancellation we should be grateful to know whether in your view the payments to the United Kingdom, which would seem to be required on the basis of present statistics, should be made by Canada and the United States or whether a partial claim should be maintained against the receiving countries to finance such cross payments as might be required.

You will doubtless have appreciated that one of the factors contributing to the difficulty in which the United States Government now finds itself in pressing Military Relief claims arises from the fact that the Administration, principally to facilitate passage of the United Kingdom loan, had given Congress assurance that all future loans would be made through the Export-Import Bank and that such loans during the next year would not require lending facilities in excess of $3,250,000,000.00.

Whether in fact this commitment to Congress was necessary and whether if any commitment was to be made it could have been for a larger amount cannot of course be determined, but if the Administration is to keep this commitment it is felt by United States officials concerned, that it will not be possible for some countries (particularly France) to borrow from the United States sufficiently large amounts to meet their reconstruction and balance-of-payments requirements if they are asked at the same time to pay for Military Relief. (Presumably the same reasoning could be employed to demonstrate that UNRRA cannot make Military Relief payments and at the same time finance essential current relief and rehabilitation needs for those countries (principally Greece and Yugoslavia) whose limited supply budgets would have to be curtailed by amounts corresponding to the Military Relief payments which UNRRA would be required to make on behalf of those particular countries.)

If it is considered that the pressing of our several Military Relief claims would, in fact, impose on the Western European countries a foreign exchange burden which could not be met out of present foreign exchange holdings, current foreign exchange earnings, and available foreign loans without prejudicing the meeting of urgent reconstruction requirements and the restoration of a satisfactory international balance-of-payments, it might be desirable to consider a form of settlement which would combine current payment for some part of the Military Relief debt, deferred payment for some further part, and possibly cancellation of any remainder, if either the United Kingdom or Canada finds itself not prepared to participate in a complete cancellation arrangement. It may well be that the time has come for a combined (United States, United Kingdom, Canadian) formal examination of the balance-of-payments prospects and reconstruction needs of the various debtor countries under the Military Relief arrangement in order that satisfactory settlements (not necessarily uniform for all debtors or for all types of expendable and non-expendable goods) might be worked out and agreed upon, taking account of the extent to which the facilities of the Fund and Bank might be at the disposal of individual debtor countries.

In a subsequent teletype (WA-1717)† I am reporting certain estimates concerning the prospective Italian balance-of-payments. These estimates are relevant not only to the question of further financial assistance required by Italy but also to the question of the nature (and possibly the timing) of the Military Relief settlement with Italy.

Washington, April 23, 1946

SECRET. Our WA-1683 of April 19th and WA-1715 of April 23rd, cancellation or funding of Military Relief indebtedness. Certain calculations have been made here of the effect which a cancellation would have on each of the three supplying countries. In these calculations use has been made of the statistics reported to you in our WA-464 of January 26th† and our despatch No. 259 of February 1st.† It is to be emphasized that these figures are imperfect in the respects indicated in our earlier communications. Nevertheless they are the most satisfactory figures at present available. The only figure that has been improved since January is that for the UNRRA element in supplies shipped into the Balkans. As will be seen from the statistics presented in the present teletype, it is now estimated (by the Billing Sub-Committee of the CCAC) that UNRRA's debt to the three supplying countries for supplies taken over from Military Relief approximates 87.5 million dollars.

Three separate analyses of these statistics have been made to take account of the fact that any cancellation might be made on any one of three different assumptions:

A. On the assumption that no payments will be received from [sic] Military Relief supplies from any recipient of those supplies, and that resulting losses will be shared in accordance with the existing loss-sharing formula.

(In millions of dollars)

Contribution

United States	(66 %)	$1073.2
United Kingdom	(29 %)	468.4
Canada	(5 %)	76.0
Total	(100 %)	$1617.6

Distribution of losses

	First $400 million		All-over		Total
United States	(67 %) 268.0	(74 %) 901.0	(72 %) 1169.0
United Kingdom	(25 %) 100.0	(21 %) 255.7	(22 %) 355.7
Canada	(8 %) 32.0	(5 %) 60.9	(6 %) 92.9
Total	(100 %) $400.0	(100 %) $1217.6	(100 %) $1617.6

Payments	U.S.	U.K.	Canada	Total
Contribution	1073.2	468.4	76.0	1617.6
Share of loss	1169.0	355.7	92.9	1617.6
Receipts due:	-95.8	112.7	-16.9	0

In short, neither the United States nor Canada would receive payment from anyone and the United Kingdom would receive payment to the extent of only $112,700,000.00, an amount representing the excess of her initial financing over her share in the losses. In the event of a total cancellation of all claims against recipient countries, Canada, in addition to writing off amounts already spent, would be expected to pay the sterling equivalent of $16,900,000.00 United States to the United Kingdom.

B. On the assumption that $87.5 million will be paid by UNRRA for Balkan supplies but that no other Military Relief collections are made, and that resulting losses are shared in accordance with the existing loss-sharing formula.

(In millions of dollars)

Contributions	$1617.6
Receipts	87.5 — from UNRRA
Loss	$1530.1

Distribution of losses

	First $400 million		All-over		Total loss
U.S.	(67 %)	268.0	(74 %)	836.3	(72 %)	1104.3
U.K.	(25 %)	100.0	(21 %)	237.3	(22 %)	337.3
Canada	(8 %)	32.0	(5 %)	56.5	(6 %)	88.5
Total		$400.0		$1130.1		$1530.1
Payments		U.S.		U.K.		Canada
Contribution		1073.2		468.4		76.0
Share of loss		1104.3		337.3		88.5
Receipts due		—31.1		131.1		—12.5

Under this assumption also, neither the United States nor Canada would receive any payment, and the United Kingdom would receive payment only to the extent of $131,100,000.00. In the event of such a cancellation of claims against all recipients except UNRRA, Canada, in addition to writing off amounts already spent, would be expected to pay the United Kingdom the sterling equivalent of $12,500,000.00.

C. In the two series of calculations made above it has been assumed that the original loss sharing formula would be adhered to. It might be decided to discard the loss sharing formula, in which event each country would lose the amount which it had put into the financing of Military Relief (except for such recoveries as might be made from UNRRA if it were decided that the reasons which seemed to call for a cancellation of claims against western European countries were not similarly applicable to UNRRA).

In all the above calculations it has been assumed that any cancellation would be a complete cancellation. In fact, of course, it would be possible to make the cancellation only partial, and to require the countries which had previously been assumed to be prospective payers to make payments (immediately or over a period of time) in sufficient volume at least to render it unnecessary for Canada and the United States to pay the United Kingdom. The retention of such a partial claim might be on the fairly arbitrary basis of securing the agreed distribution of losses, or on the basis that while claims for expendable supplies could properly be waived, payment for non-expendables (e.g., transportation equipment, etc.) should be required. Some calculations are being made of the amount which would be paid by the western European countries if they were to be billed for non-expendable items only. Until these calculations are completed it will not be known whether the retention of the claim on this basis would yield even sufficient proceeds to avoid the necessity of payment being made by Canada and the United States to the United Kingdom.

All of these calculations have been made without any implication that either Canada or the United Kingdom is willing to participate in any cancellation of the Military Relief claim.

Dear Mr. Ritchie,

RE: F.W.D.H.A.R. TRACTORS, TRAILERS AND DOLLIES—CAP NOS. 28 AND 98

Under date of February nineteenth I wrote you regarding the above items, procured by Canada to meet a Military Relief requirement of S.H.A.E.F.<sup>1</sup>, being a quantity of 1,498 Tractors and Trailers, and 300 Dollies.

As previously advised, all the Tractors, Trailers and Dollies were called forward for shipment by the Theatre Commander and were actually shipped from Canada prior to the termination of Military Relief. In November, however, the Theatre Commander cancelled 1,160 of the Trucks originally called forward after they had been shipped from Canada and unloaded in the United Kingdom.

In August or September, while I was still in the United Kingdom, some 1,100 odd Trucks and Trailers were reported by the War Office to be in British Depots throughout England. However, when Mr. Karl C. Fraser was in the United Kingdom the latter part of March and early April of this year, the War Office was unable to locate any of the vehicles. It is, therefore, apparent that the Trucks have either been disposed of by the British without authority, or else they were delivered as Military Relief.

In view of the above facts, we propose to show the entire quantity of Trucks, Trailers and Dollies as part of Canada's contribution to Military Relief and it is suggested that you so inform the proper C.C.A.C. authorities accordingly.

In the event that the British are able to locate the vehicles in the United Kingdom and will deliver them to the London representative of the Canadian War Assets Corporation, we will authorize him to sell same and the proceeds can be credited to Military Relief and thereby reduce the loss but, in the event of failure to deliver the vehicles, then the entire value of these items should be shown in Canada's Military Relief commitment.

In order to assist the British in locating the Trucks, Trailers and Dollies, I am attaching hereto two copies of a list† showing T.C. Permit number, name of boat, port of loading, date of sailing, and port of consignment, with the quantities of vehicles carried in each boat. The fifty Tractors and Trailers on the Sam Lister were reported diverted to Rotterdam and turned over to the Dutch authorities as Military Relief. We assume that the ten Dollies accompanied these Trucks and Trailers. However, we have no specific advice on this point and have so far been unable to obtain any information as to delivery of the Dollies.

Yours faithfully,

A. MURRAY McCRIMMON

Washington, April 27, 1946

Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Military Relief. Treatment of Italian indebtedness. Luthringer, Chief of the Division of Financial Affairs in the State Department telephoned me yesterday to say that Reinstein had enquired urgently whether he could expect to receive by last night instructions which would permit him to announce in the Peace Treaty discussions that the United States was cancelling its Military Relief claim against Italy. Reinstein had expressed the view that if such an announcement could not be made immediately, the United States delegation would have to exclude from consideration in the development of their immediate tactics any expectation that a Military Relief cancellation could be used as an argument against the claims of others for reparations from Italy and would have to proceed with the development of other arguments to counteract reparations claims.

Luthringer remarked that from the report which he had received on conversations in London between Reinstein, Sir David Waley<sup>1</sup> and a representative of the Canadian High Commissioner he felt there was no hope that the United States delegation could assume, or announce, at least for the present, that the Military Relief claims against Italy were being cancelled. In these circumstances he thought it best to let Reinstein know that the immediate plans for the Italian Peace Treaty discussions should be made on the assumption that the fate of the Military Relief claims will continue to be uncertain at least for some little time and that accordingly other arguments would have to be used for the present in combating reparations claims. Luthringer proposed so to instruct Reinstein by telephone immediately unless we could inform him at once that the Canadian Government favoured an immediate and explicit cancellation of the claims against Italy. In the latter event he would take the matter up again with the United Kingdom authorities and if they also were found to be in a position to agree immediately to a cancellation of the Italian claim he could give Reinstein at once the instructions he referred. Unless, however, there had been a favourable change in the Canadian position since the discussions in London he thought there was no point in his pressing the United Kingdom for immediate agreement. In any case, on the advices received from London, as recent as Thursday, Luthringer was not particularly hopeful that the United Kingdom would agree immediately even if Canada as well as the United States favoured the proposal.

I told him that on the basis of telephone conversations which I had had with you within the preceding day or so there seemed to me no basis for expecting an immediate decision concerning the Canadian position on the claim against Italy and certainly no reason to expect that such a decision when taken would necessarily be favourable to cancellation. I pointed out to him that the recent United States enquiries concerning the possibility of general cancellation or funding obviously complicated further any decision concerning Italy. I remarked that if there was any prospect of a general cancellation it would clearly be desirable, from the point of view of our relations with the Western European countries to delay an announcement of the Italian cancellation until an announcement could be made of a general cancellation. I remarked that the word which I had received informally from Ottawa indicated, however, little likelihood of our favouring a general cancellation at this time. In the event that the Canadian authorities were to express a preference for the funding version of the general United States proposal, similarly it would seem desirable to defer any decision or announcement concerning Italy until the Western European countries could be advised that their indebtedness also was to be funded. I added that if the funding version were to be adopted it would be difficult to grant an outright cancellation of the claim against Italy since although the Western European countries would doubtless be pleased to learn that payments required from them were being funded rather than demanded immediately they might reasonably maintain that the ability of a country to pay under a funding arrangement depended not on the immediate balance-of-payments prospects of that country but upon the prospects over a period extending from now until some date possibly 30 years hence. Accordingly the Western European countries (and indeed we ourselves) might well feel that although there might be some basis for distinguishing between Italy and the Western European countries if immediate payment had been demanded it would seem rather speculative and even discriminatory to maintain such a distinction if payment is to be deferred and spread over a period of several years. In short there would seem to be less reason for distinguishing between Italy and the Western European countries if the fund proposal were to be adopted than there is now when we are thinking in terms of an immediate-payment arrangement. I said that I would of course be glad to telephone Ottawa immediately to ascertain whether any definite decision had been taken on Italy if Luthringer so desired. He said that in the circumstances it probably would be safest to instruct the United States delegation to present their case against reparations without making any allowance for the possibility of an explicit cancellation of the Military Relief claim against Italy. If it subsequently appears that no progress can be made in the Paris discussions unless the Military Relief claim is waived it might be possible by that time to issue new instructions if the United States, United Kingdom and Canada have agreed by then on the Military Relief settlement to be made with Italy. Accordingly Luthringer said he thought it unnecessary to ask Ottawa's views at this time but he expressed the hope that the Canadian authorities would continue their consideration of the possible necessity for making Italy a special case, both because of the specially grim financial prospects for Italy, and also because of the fact that the Italian claim may have to be disposed of at an early date if the negotiators of the reparations aspects of the Italian Treaty again reach an impasse.

In connection with the above report on my conversation with Luthringer you may have noticed in this morning's newspapers an Associated Press despatch of last night from Paris that the Foreign Ministers meeting in Paris had agreed that "Italy should pay reparations within her ability to pay", and that "The United States, which previously had opposed any reparations from Italy acceded to Russian demands for some payment with the provision that a Committee of experts should investigate the Italian economy to determine what amount the country could pay". Ends.

Washington, May 14, 1946

IMMEDIATE. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION TOMORROW MORNING. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Reference my teletypes WA-1715 and WA-1716 of April 23rd, your EX-1264 of May 10th,† and related telephone conversations concerning the United States proposal to cancel or fund military relief indebtedness.

As I indicated to you by telephone on Saturday, Assistant Secretary of State Clayton and Secretary of the Treasury Vinson had found unacceptable the proposal put forward by the United Kingdom on Friday that each of the three supplying Governments should collect from the northwest European countries a flat percentage of their respective claims to yield an amount sufficient at least to compensate the United Kingdom (and possibly Canada) for any amount expended in excess of its agreed share of the loss. Similarly the United States authorities considered themselves unable to assure the United Kingdom that payments amounting to at least 225 million dollars (i.e. the amount allowed for military relief in the United Kingdom balance-of-payments estimates discussed in the United States-United Kingdom loan negotiations) would be forthcoming either from the northwestern European countries or from the United States directly. Accordingly the State Department suggested that a meeting of representatives of the three supplying Governments should be held on Monday to discuss the matter further.

The meeting on Monday was attended by Mr. Luthringer, Deputy on financial affairs to Assistant Secretary of State Clayton, together with members of his staff and two officers of the United States Treasury; Jackling of the United Kingdom Embassy, Lee and Christelow of the United Kingdom Treasury delegation; Bryce, Murray and myself on the Canadian side. At the outset of the Monday afternoon meeting the State Department officials handed formally to the United Kingdom and Canadian representatives a memorandum, the text of which is reported in a following teletype, WA-2032. Mr. Luthringer in handing us this memorandum explained the circumstances, with which you are already familiar, which gave rise to the United States proposal. He remarked that the percentage division indicated was intended to apply specifically to the northwest European bills and need not necessarily apply to the expected payments for end stocks in Germany and Austria or to the expected payments from UNRRA for supplies transferred in the Balkans. The question of the appropriate division of these payments could be left for subsequent discussion, but there was some presumption that the percentages applied to the northwest European bills might well be regarded as applicable to these other payments.

Although the detailed calculations behind the suggested percentages were not discussed at the meeting I was given to understand by the officer who developed the percentages that they were based on the following calculations (in millions of dollars):

Receipts due	794.5	(i.e. 605 from northwest Europe; 102 from end stocks in Germany and Austria; and 87.5 from UNRRA).
 	<hr/>
Loss	823.1	(including, in addition to supplies shipped to Mediterranean area, some 237 assumed irrecoverable from northwest Europe as a result of loss of receipts, spoilage, pilferage, etc.)

Distribution of losses

	First $400 million		All-over		Total
United States	67 %	268.0	74 %	313.1	581.1
United Kingdom	25 %	100.0	21 %	88.8	188.8
Canada	8 %	32.0	5 %	21.2	53.2
	<hr/>	<hr/>	<hr/>	<hr/>	<hr/>
Total	100 %	400.0	100 %	423.1	823.1

Summary—

	United States	United Kingdom	Canada	Total
Contribution	1073.2	468.4	76.0	1617.6
Share of loss	581.1	188.8	53.2	823.1
	<hr/>	<hr/>	<hr/>	<hr/>
	62 %	35 %	3 %	100 %

You are of course already aware of the imperfections in the basic figures on which these, or any other calculations at this time, are based. Parenthetically I might remark that no allowance is made in the State Department calculations for the probable transfer of $8 million (Canadian) from the United Kingdom contribution column to the Canadian contribution column, which would on the basis of the present figures raise the Canadian percentage to 4 percent.

Needless to say the United Kingdom representatives were quite dissatisfied with the State Department memorandum and expressed in no uncertain terms their view that the United States proposal would leave the United Kingdom position unprotected, particularly in respect of amounts financed by the United Kingdom initially in excess of its agreed share in any loss. The United States representatives observed that the United States cancellation (or offsetting), by relieving the balance-of-payments position of the western European countries, might actually improve the prospect for collections by the United Kingdom and Canada. The United Kingdom representatives remarked that while such a development was possible they had to take account of the alternative possibility that the United States action might make it impossible for the United Kingdom to collect anything, (despite the statement which the United States will make concerning the continuing validity of other claims) in which case they would like to know whether the United States Government considered itself under any obligation to compensate the United Kingdom at least for excessive losses. The United States representatives expressed the view that it would be quite out of the question for the United States Government to secure an appropriation for such payments to the United Kingdom and indicated their understanding that this difficulty had been made clear in previous discussions when it had been decided that any necessary adjustments would have to be made out of receipts. There was then some discussion of the possibility that payments for end stocks and for supplies transferred to UNRRA might be available, and might be adequate, to cover the United Kingdom excess. This discussion came to no definite conclusion.

At this point Bryce enquired whether consideration might be given to an arrangement which would enable each of the three Governments to make whatever settlement it chose for its share, but which at the same time would give the United Kingdom a larger proportion of the better claims. Bryce will be communicating with you later concerning the details of the arrangement which he had in mind. In brief he thought it might be possible to deduct from the figure for the aggregate contribution of the three countries the amount representing end stocks plus supplies transferred to UNRRA, and to divide the residual amount (representing claims against Mediterranean and northwest European Governments) in accordance with the loss sharing formula. On the assumption that claims against agreed-loss areas (i.e. the Mediterranean Governments) will exceed $400 million, it follows that claims against the northwest European Governments would be divided among the United States, United Kingdom and Canada in the proportions 74:21:5. The claim of each of the three Governments against the occupation authorities and/or UNRRA would then be determined by deducting the amount representing each country's share of claims against northwest Europe and the Mediterranean area from each country's total contribution. The general effect of Bryce's informal suggestion would be to increase the United Kingdom share of claims against UNRRA and the occupation authorities (which presumably are the "better" claims from the United Kingdom point of view) and to reduce the United Kingdom share of claims against northwest Europe. At the same time this possible formula would enable the United States authorities to accomplish their laudable objectives in northwest Europe more fully since they would have at their disposal a larger part of the total claim for cancellation if they so chose. The effect on Canada would be to reduce our claim against UNRRA and the occupation authorities (which probably could be settled from our UNRRA contribution without involving us in the complications which would be likely to arise in settlement with the occupation authorities) and to increase our claim against the northwest European Governments. I should emphasize that Bryce's suggestion was made quite informally and merely as a possibility that might be explored by each of the three Governments. The United Kingdom representatives expressed the preliminary opinion that this sort of an arrangement might be preferable from their point of view to the arrangement proposed by the United States. Both the United Kingdom and United States will be examining the possibilities in such an arrangement in their further consideration of the problem.

It would seem to me that the United States memorandum might be considered in three stages:

1. Are we prepared to accept the proposal that, by joint agreement, each of us should now proceed unilaterally to arrange settlements with the north-west European Governments for our respective shares, on the understanding that those shares will be determined by combined agreement?

2. We might wish to consider then whether our respective shares (expressed as percentages of an aggregate claim of unknown amount) need be determined at this time, and in advance of our several settlements, or whether the determination of our respective percentage shares could be left until a later stage when more complete information is available. The United States, and indeed some of the recipient countries, will doubtless press for an immediate determination of the percentage shares.

3. If it is considered desirable and feasible to determine agreed percentage shares at this time we might wish to consider whether the formula suggested in the United States memorandum (modified to take account of the mutual aid transfer if agreement can be reached with the United Kingdom on a figure for this item) or the alternative arrangement suggested by Bryce, or possibly some other substitute arrangement, would be preferable from our point of view.

At the end of the meeting the United Kingdom representatives handed to Luthringer a formal memorandum which had been prepared for submission before the contents of the United States memorandum had become known. The United Kingdom representatives made it clear that the memorandum was not intended as a reply to the present United States memorandum, but rather as a statement of their views on the general proposal to cancel or fund which the State Department had made orally some time ago. The text of the United Kingdom Embassy's memorandum is reported in a following teletype, WA-2033.† From a conversation with Jackling of the United Kingdom Embassy after the meeting I gathered that their reason for submitting this memorandum even after the State Department's memorandum had become available was to have something on record to which they could refer in case the United States were to reach a settlement with any of the north-west European countries before London could provide a reply to the State Department memorandum. With the memorandum in their hands the State Department officials, in Mr. Jackling's view, could scarcely assume that the United Kingdom would accept automatically any unilateral settlement that might be worked out between the State Department and the French before a reply is made to the State Department's memorandum. It would seem to me that, since the opening sentence in the State Department memorandum makes the adoption of any unilateral settlement arrangement contingent on joint agreement to that effect, if the State Department were to proceed on its own without waiting for a reply we should be in a sufficiently strong position to criticize their action without having to submit any memorandum to that effect until we are in a position to reply to the present memorandum.

You will, of course, appreciate the need for some reply to this memorandum within the next few days if the general financial negotiations between the United States and France are to be completed satisfactorily some time before the end of the present month and if serious misunderstanding is to be avoided.

You are of course in the best position to judge what changes might be required in your proposed memorandum to the Mutual Aid Board to take account of the precise United States proposals and of the other possible arrangement discussed above. To my mind your memorandum seems to cover most adequately the principal question raised by the United States memorandum; i.e., whether we are prepared to accept the principle of separate settlement of our respective claims without recourse. So far as the figures in your EX-1264 are concerned I have checked them against our records here and find that they are in line with the figures being used in Washington. However in your first paragraph your language might be taken to imply that the new adjustment for end stocks involves an increase in the figure for the Canadian contribution. Since such end stocks were presumably already included in the original contribution of the three Governments and represent merely the residue after allowance for deliveries to other recipients no increase should be made in the figure for the Canadian contribution. Such end stocks involve an increase in receipts (but not in contributions) to the extent that they were taken over from a non-paying authority by a paying authority. Ends.

Washington, May 14, 1946

IMMEDIATE. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION TOMORROW MORNING. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: With reference to my teletype WA-2031 of today's date, the following is the text of the memorandum which Mr. Luthringer, Deputy on financial affairs to Assistant Secretary Clayton handed formally to the representatives of the United Kingdom and Canadian Embassies at the meeting on military relief indebtedness on Monday afternoon. Begins:

MEMORANDUM

The United States Government proposes that the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada jointly agree that each proceed unilaterally to arrange settlements with the northwestern European Governments for its share, to be determined by combined agreement, of the combined claims of the three Governments against the northwestern European Governments arising from the civilian relief supplies that were furnished through the combined military authorities of the three supplying Governments (Plan A).

The proposed arrangement would leave each of the supplying Governments free to adopt whatever policy it chose with respect to settlement of its share of the claims, with the stipulation that it should inform the recipient Governments that its settlement in no way impairs the validity of the recipient Governments' obligations to the other supplying Governments for the subject supplies. Once the shares of each supplying Government in the combined claims were agreed upon, each supplying Government would be under no obligation to make any subsequent adjustments, of whatever nature, for the benefit of either of the other two supplying Governments.

It is further proposed that the shares of each of the supplying Governments in the total of the bills to be submitted to each of the northwestern European Governments for such supplies be agreed upon as follows:

United States	—	62 percent;
United Kingdom	—	35 percent;
Canada	—	3 percent.

These percentages make allowance for the financial contribution of each of the supplying Governments as indicated by the most accurate information available. They are based on the assumptions that Italy and the Balkan countries concerned are non-paying countries, that UNRRA and the Governments occupying Germany and Austria will pay for the combined stocks of civilian supplies turned over to them, and that there will be additional losses of approximately $237 million due to lost receipts, diversions, and other leakages.

In advancing this proposal, the United States Government is motivated by the fact that it finds it impossible to arrange satisfactory settlements of the war accounts with the northwestern European Governments as long as it is required to deal with each of these European Governments on a combined basis.

Proposals for unilateral settlement have been under discussion with representatives of the British and Canadian Governments for several weeks and this Government is now in a position in which it must act quickly since it is about to complete the settlement of its war accounts with France.

An identical memorandum is being submitted to the British Government. Department of State, Washington, May 13th, 1946.
Ends.

Dear Dr. Clark,

I understand that Ritchie is sending you by wire a copy of the memorandum handed to us yesterday by the State Department, suggesting separate settlements of the amounts owing to the several supplying countries by recipients of Military Relief, and also an account of our meeting yesterday afternoon. I wish to add only a few comments on the meeting and a few words about the suggestion which I put forward myself when it appeared to me that the British and the Americans were heading into serious disagreement.

In substance, it now seems clear that the U.S. will cancel all its claims on European countries in respect of Military Relief, getting what concessions it can for them on other matters in settling various war claims. In part, its action in respect of France, which is the key situation, is motivated, as the State Department emphasizes, by the unexpectedly small amount it will be paying France for francs for American troops. This amount was much less than expected, because of similar factors to those which gave rise to our large holdings of guilders in Holland. I do not think it is wise to attempt to dissuade the U.S. from this policy of cancellation, and in any event they have made up their minds to proceed with it and will do so within the next few days. The points at issue now are the arrangements for determining the shares of the various countries in the claims on Europe, including those of the U.S. to be cancelled, and the means of liquidating the claims on UNRRA and the occupying forces for inventories turned over to them at the end of Military Relief operations, and the use of the amounts recovered or credited for such inventories in adjusting the accounts and claims under the Military Relief arrangement.

There are two main immediate problems. The first is to arrange some means of safeguarding the claims which Britain and Canada will retain on the Western European countries after American cancellation. The Americans are prepared to do what they can on this matter in the wording of their agreements with the French and others, but are not prepared to go so far as to maintain any token or partial claims for the purposes of making adjustments or refunds, as the British wanted them to do. Consequently, it seems to me inevitable that we must arrive at some scheme of separating the various claims in such a way that Britain and Canada can deal directly with the countries on which they have these claims. The Americans are not prepared to contemplate any joint collection arrangements, although joint accounting and billing will continue, of course.

The second main problem is to give the United Kingdom some protection or reimbursement for the excess of the amount she has contributed to the plan, over and above her share, based upon the loss-sharing formula. The British clearly feel that the U.S. are seriously at fault in proposing now to cancel their claims and collect nothing, when, in fact, it was the intention that such collections would be used to safeguard the countries which had over-procured. During the meeting yesterday neither the U.S. nor the British appeared to have any constructive proposals for dealing with this problem in a manner that the other could accept. The Americans stated that they could make no collections on behalf of other countries and probably would have no legal authority to turn over to Britain or Canada any amounts that they (the Americans) might collect, even if they were placed in a suspense account. As this was the method of readjustment contemplated in the plan up until recently, it seems incredible that the U.S. Treasury and the State Department, with all the lawyers that there are in Washington, should not have known or made clear this legal difficulty previously. The U.K., on its side, felt that it was most unreasonable for it to be left to reimburse itself for over-procurement out of the possibly questionable claims on Western European countries, following American cancellation. This was really the method which the U.S. proposed in its memorandum and is reflected in the high proportion of U.K. claims in the bills to be submitted to the European governments. The U.K. said they would have to go into this matter quite fully in Parliament if a solution along the lines proposed by the U.S. were followed, and there might be considerable criticism and resentment over the whole scheme.

In these circumstances and attempting to find a way out of what seemed to be a difficult and dangerous deadlock, I suggested what seemed to me an obvious means of adjusting the U.K. over-procurement and leaving her with a share of claims on Western European countries that accorded exactly with the agreed intentions in regard to the sharing of losses. This suggestion was, in its simplest terms, to apportion the proceeds of the claims on UNRRA and the occupation authorities in such a manner as to leave all the participants with totals of claims and probable losses that were in proportion to the agreed loss-sharing formula. The result of this would be that the U.K. would be entitled to a credit of $145,000,000 out of the, roughly, $190,000,000 claims on the occupation commanders and UNRRA; the U.S. would be entitled to $44,000,000; and we would be entitled to $1,000,000, as far as we can tell from the present incomplete figures. Under this arrangement I proposed that we share the claims on Western Europe in the expectation that the other claims on Europe would be losses, and that, therefore, the proportions applied to Western Europe would be the same ones as those in which we share losses over the total of $400,000,000, i.e., U.S. 74%, U.K. 21% and Canada 5%.

As compared to the U.S. proposal, this leaves Canada with a somewhat smaller share of the claims on UNRRA and the occupation authorities, and a somewhat larger share in the claims on France, Belgium and Holland. However, this does not appear a very serious price to pay for agreement between the major partners, as we can probably collect something from Western Europe and we might have had some difficulty collecting much in respect of the inventories turned over to the occupation authorities, because we are not involved in these directly, as are the U.K. and the U.S.

It was evident from the discussion yesterday that there will be some difficulty even in the U.K. and the U.S. managing to settle the claims and counter-claims between themselves by the use of the credits for inventories turned over to the occupation authorities. There was also some mention of the difficulties that might arise in connection with the credit due from UNRRA to the Military Relief plan. These are to be investigated further, however, by the U.S. and the British authorities, in the hope of finding a means of implementing the proposal in principle which was suggested.

In putting forward the suggestion described above, I pointed out that it would involve a somewhat larger total to be written off by the U.S. to Western European countries, and therefore a somewhat smaller amount for the U.K. and ourselves combined to collect. The U.S. representative did not seem particularly disturbed at this prospect. Of course, this result is achieved by the U.S. sacrificing a considerable share of its equity in the inventory settlement to the U.K. in exchange for a larger share of the claims on Western Europe which are to be cancelled.

As I understand the upshot of the meeting, it was that the U.S. was to consider the British note, the British were to consider the U.S. note, and we were to consider both of them in defining our own position. I believe that our interest lies mainly in having a clear-cut solution which will prejudice as little as possible our hope of collecting from Western Europe, and which will leave Western Europe in the best possible position to pay what is owing on this account. I think we should also seek to avoid so far as we can a serious disagreement between the two larger parties in the scheme, which may not only becloud the settlement with the European countries but may also give rise to considerable criticism of the whole arrangement.

There was considerable argument over the implicit understandings in the previous arrangements and the moral obligations of the U.S. and Canada to see that the British did not bear more than their share of the losses. I am leaving Ritchie to report on this, as he is the expert on the record. You will recall that we asked the U.S. more than a year ago whether they would undertake to make direct payments to us in the event that we procured more than our share of the supplies, and they said they were not able to give us such an undertaking. The main issue now is whether, although they were not able to make an undertaking of that nature, they should be obliged to make such adjustments nevertheless.

I do not think we need to decide at this time the policy that we should follow in dealing with the Western European countries. My own preference is for funding the amounts owed to us, over a medium period. The Western European countries will no doubt ask us to cancel, as the Americans are doing. I think we can answer that in the case of France we do not have the same off-setting consideration as the U.S. had in regard to troop pay, and in the case of Belgium and Holland, we can point out that we have been on a different basis to the Americans, with a clear understanding that we were to settle with them for supplies we obtained from them, and that they should be prepared to settle with us for our share of these supplies. Moreover, the U.S. supplied all these countries with civilian type goods as Lend-Lease, but neither the British nor ourselves provided civilian supplies to these countries as Mutual Aid.

You may wish to consider whether or not in funding this debt we would be prepared to do so on an interest-free basis, or with some sort of waiver of interest, such as those in the British loan agreements. I do not know that this sacrifice of interest is necessary, but it would soften somewhat the distinction between ourselves and the Americans in the policy being followed. British representatives yesterday made clear that they do not wish to fund the claims owed to them, as they wish to obtain what receipts they can in the period when they need them most. This is somewhat inconsistent with the practice they are following with France, where, as I understand it, the residual item in the balance of payments is being covered by the sale of sterling securities by France to Britain.

In the case of Holland, if we are going to collect this Military Relief obligation, we may expect them to resist very strongly anything but a nominal settlement for the excess guilders which we have accumulated. I spoke to the officials of the State Department concerned with the guilder problem which the U.S. faces, but I have not discussed it yet with Coe in the Treasury at any length, nor with the War Department. The State Department informs me that the War Department will press very strongly for full reimbursement to the U.S. in dollars for these guilders, and that any other result will involve them in difficulties with appropriations and Congress. The State Department, on the other hand, clearly feels that the claim for conversion of these guilders is a poor one and it is embarrassing, therefore, to maintain it. I suspect that they may ask the Dutch to convert the guilders in full as a condition for cancelling the Military Relief indebtedness of Holland. In the case of the U.S., the Military Relief indebtedness will substantially exceed the equivalent of their guilders, which is about $20,000,000.

I presume there will be some Ministerial discussions on this Military Relief question during the next few days, and that I shall be hearing from you directly or indirectly. I think at present all that is needed on our side is agreement to the segregation of the claims and the basis on which they are to be segregated. In fact, I do not see that we have much choice now in this issue anyway, because of the determination of the U.S., and the real issue at the moment, the formula for segregation, is one to be determined mainly between the U.S. and the U.K., who are the ones to gain or lose substantially in the choice of formula.

I am giving my extra copy of this letter to the Embassy here. Could you see that Mr. Pierce sees this letter or a copy of it.

Yours truly,

R. B. BRYCE

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION WITH A. E. RITCHIE,
CANADIAN EMBASSY, WASHINGTON, MAY 15, 1946

I referred to teletypes Nos. WA-2031, 2032, 2033† and 2034† of May 14th, and said that my calculations on the Bryce formula indicated we would receive nothing from end stocks and UNRRA; 3% of the N.W. Europe accounts; would bear our share of the irrecoverable loss and receive our share of the bad accounts against Italy and the Balkans. He said that there had been some change in the figures, an increase in the amounts recoverable from Western Europe, and the Bryce formula would divide the end stocks and UNRRA claims as follows: $145,000,000 to the United Kingdom, $45,000,000 to the United States and $1,000,000 to Canada.

I told him that I thought we should avoid declaring ourselves on the U.S. proposal contained in WA-2032 until the British had had a chance to consider it and comment on it. We were in the "happy" position of having supplied an amount proportionate to our share of the losses and that therefore, the United States proposal that we receive 3% of the amounts due was not out of line. The British however had over-supplied and might naturally seek a formula such as informally suggested by Bryce, giving them a larger proportion of the end stock and UNRRA claims. It seemed to me we might reserve our influence until the issue is more clearly joined between the United Kingdom and United States. I asked Ritchie if he could without embarrassment adopt a waiting attitude, indicating nothing more than that we thought a scheme of separate collection would be acceptable and that we would like to be able, before submitting it to the Mutual Aid Board, to attach a formula satisfactory to both the United States and the United Kingdom. Ritchie agreed.

[Ottawa,] May 17, 1946

Mr. A. E. Ritchie called me from Washington yesterday to say that the Americans had put forward two additional provisions to their proposal for separate collections of military relief accounts:

(1) If the United States authorities cancel the military relief indebtedness of any North West European country to the United States, the country concerned will be required to set up a reserve pool of 10% of the total amount of its military relief indebtedness to the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, in a form convertible into Canadian dollars or pounds sterling. If the United Kingdom or Canadian collections from North West European countries in general should fall short, Canada or the United Kingdom could then draw on the reserve.

(2) The United States would agree that what the United Kingdom owes the United States for end stocks delivered to the British occupation authorities might be used to adjust for losses which the British might sustain above the percentage agreed.

I told Ritchie that this provision of a reserve appeared to our advantage. The original United States proposal which would have granted us 3% of the accounts appeared reasonable from the Canadian point of view and anything added to it was just that much better. I felt that he could tell the United States authorities that Canadian officials considered that the proposal would in principle be acceptable to the Government but that, before placing it before the Mutual Aid Board or Cabinet, we might wait until the United Kingdom and the United States approached agreement.

Memorandum from Government of United States to Government of Canada

Washington, May 17, 1946

In identic memoranda to the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments dated May 14, 1946<sup>1</sup> the United States Government submitted a proposal regarding the financial settlement for certain civilian supplies. As a result of subsequent discussions between representatives of United States, United Kingdom, and Canadian Governments, the United States Government submits in the following paragraphs a revised proposal to replace the one set forth in the memoranda of May 14, 1946.

The United States Government proposes that the governments of the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada jointly agree that each proceed unilaterally to arrange settlements with the northwestern European governments for its share, to be determined by combined agreement, of the combined claims of the three governments against the northwestern European governments arising from the civilian relief supplies that were furnished through the combined military authorities of the three supplying governments (Plan A).

The proposed arrangement would leave each of the supplying governments free to adopt whatever policy it chose with respect to settlement of its share of the claims, with the stipulation that it should inform the recipient governments that its settlement in no way impairs the validity of each recipient government's obligations to the other supplying governments for the subject supplies.

In accomplishing settlements with the recipient governments the United States Government would be prepared, in the event of waiver, to stipulate that each recipient government establish a reserve amounting to 10 percent of the total combined bill against that government, this reserve to be used, to the extent necessary, to make additional payments to the British and Canadian Governments if settlements made by the British and Canadian Governments with the recipient governments proved insufficient to meet the amount due them under present loss-sharing agreements when all collections and losses have been finally determined by combined agreement. The United States Government is further prepared to stipulate as a condition of effecting settlement with the recipient governments that this reserve be currently set aside in funds convertible into sterling or Canadian dollars, or both, at rates to be agreed in a trust account in the name of each recipient government in its central bank. In addition, the United States would be willing to agree that amounts determined by combined agreement as an obligation by the United Kingdom Government to the United States Government for end stocks turned over to the United Kingdom zone commanders in Germany and Austria would be reduced to the extent necessary to compensate the United Kingdom Government for losses greater than those it agreed to bear under present loss-sharing arrangements. Once the shares of each supplying government in combined claims against all recipients were agreed upon no subsequent adjustments of whatever nature would be made other than those provided for in this paragraph.

It is further proposed that the shares of each of the applying governments in the total of the bills to be submitted to each of the northwestern European governments for such supplies be agreed upon as follows: United States—62 percent; United Kingdom—35 percent; Canada—3 percent.

In advancing this proposal, the United States Government is motivated by the fact that it finds it impossible to arrange satisfactory settlements of the war accounts with the northwestern European governments as long as it is required to deal with each of these European governments on a combined basis.

Proposals for unilateral settlement have been under discussion with representatives of the British and Canadian Governments for several weeks and this Government is now in a position in which it must act quickly since it is about to complete the settlement of its war accounts with France.

An identic memorandum is being submitted to the British Government.

Ottawa, May 21, 1946

FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. Your WA-2120 of May 18th,† military relief.

We have considered the revised United States memorandum and are prepared to accept the plan outlined. A formal reply can therefore be returned to the State Department indicating that the Government of Canada is prepared to accept the plan proposed in the memorandum of May 17th as subsequently revised, it being understood that the settlements unilaterally arranged by each supplying government will in no way impair the validity of each recipient government's obligations to the other supplying governments for the supplies in question. We also understand that settlement of the claims on UNRRA and for end stocks turned over to the occupation forces in Germany is to be arranged in such a way that the share of losses other than any resulting from claims on Northwest European Governments will be distributed in the proportions originally agreed upon.

Following from Ritchie, Begins: My WA-2161† and 2162† of May 22nd, Military Relief.

The memorandum reported in my WA-2161 was based on the guidance provided in your EX-1355 and was discussed with Bryce on his arrival in Washington. The 3rd and 4th paragraphs of that memorandum might require some comment. In the 3rd paragraph the words "agreed losses" were used in substitution for, or as an interpretation of, the words "losses other than any resulting from claims of Northwest European Governments" employed in your message. Despite the fact that settlements with the countries of Northwest Europe are to be arranged unilaterally it is nevertheless possible that certain losses might be incurred on shipments to Northwest Europe which might be shared if each and all of the three Governments agree to such a sharing. Among such losses which might be shared are the losses resulting from spoilage, pilferage, lost records, and other incidental losses representing amounts relating to Northwest European shipments but probably not collectible from Northwest European Governments. Conceivably there might be other losses on Northwest European shipments which the three countries might on consideration decide to include in the loss-sharing arrangement. In any event it seemed desirable from our point of view to leave the way open for the inclusion of such losses and not to rule out automatically for purposes of loss-sharing all losses "resulting from claims on Northwest European Governments." At the time this memorandum was presented to the State Department it was made clear orally that the agreement of the Canadian Government to the inclusion of any losses arising in Northwest Europe or elsewhere would have to be secured before such losses could be shared among the three Governments. In other words the language "agreed losses" can be as restrictive as the Canadian Government considers reasonable in the circumstances.

On the 4th paragraph of the memorandum it might be observed that the inclusion of some such paragraph seemed desirable to make known our expectation that consultation among the three supplying Governments will be continued, either through the Billing Sub-Committee of the CCAC, or through the Tri-Partite Settlement Committee, or in some other satisfactory manner.

In the informal conversation which followed the presentation of this memorandum the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian representatives who were present seemed agreed that even in respect of unilateral settlements it would be desirable for each of the three Governments to inform the Tri-Partite Settlement Committee of the arrangement made with any recipient Government in order that the other supplying Governments might be familiar with the nature of any such settlement in arranging their own settlements with the recipient Government. It was noted that if the United States Government were to waive its claim against a particular recipient Government it would be useful for the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments to have in their possession the terms of such a waiver (including any understanding concerning the continuing validity of the other countries' claims) in case that recipient country might represent to the United Kingdom and Canada that the United States action should be regarded as a precedent for similar action by them. If you agree, arrangements might be made to ensure that the Canadian member of the Tri-Partite Settlement Committee is kept informed concerning the nature of any settlements made by the Canadian Government with the various recipient Governments.

During the course of the same informal conversation the United Kingdom representatives observed that it might become necessary (largely as a result of the inability of the United States and United Kingdom Governments to maintain the field establishment necessary to assemble and submit bills) for the three Governments to agree shortly on the amounts of the aggregate bill against each recipient Government without waiting for all bills to be submitted and acknowledged. The present position is that bills in terms of quantities and prices submitted by the military authorities to the Northwest European Governments total something like 350-400 million dollars. No bills have been submitted to the Italian or Balkan Governments. Similarly no bills have been submitted formally to UNRRA for supplies transferred in the Balkans and no precise bill is likely to be forthcoming for some months. In other words, of the some $1,600,000,000.00 covered by the Military Relief arrangement less than one-quarter has been billed to date. In these circumstances the prospect mentioned informally by the United Kingdom representative might be kept in mind. If the three Governments were to agree on the amounts to be billed they might then attempt to get the individual Governments and authorities to accept the figures or to agree on some other figures which could then be used for settlement purposes. The United Kingdom representative expressed the view that the possibility of coming to a settlement with UNRRA required particularly urgent consideration since until such a settlement is made UNRRA will continue to earmark and immobilize that part of the limited funds allocated to Greece, Yugoslavia and Albania considered necessary to pay for such supplies with the result that the present UNRRA programs for these countries are suffering unduly to the extent that UNRRA may have over-estimated the amounts payable for Military Relief supplies transferred to UNRRA in all or some of those countries. These matters will be discussed further at future meetings of the Tri-Partite Settlement Committee.

Finally it might be stated that the State Department will shortly provide us with a communication explaining in greater detail the reserve to be established by each recipient Government when, and if, the United States waives its claims against a particular Government. This communication will be somewhat along the lines of the fairly detailed statement of this provision contained in the draft aide-mémoire† to the French which was reported in my WA-2103† and 2120.† The communication will indicate that the reserve would be less than ten percent to the extent that the waiver offered to the particular country by the United States represented less than 10 per cent of the combined bill. Some indication would be given also of the arrangement which might be made for rendering some part of the United States receipts distributable for purposes of adjusting losses if the United States were to fund or collect its total share of any country's obligation although at the time of our conversation yesterday the State Department officials had not decided what arrangement they might propose. Ends.

My Dear Mr. Ritchie,

I should like to refer to one provision of the identic memoranda from my government to the British and Canadian Governments which Mr. Luthringer handed to you and Mr. Jackling<sup>1</sup> on May 18, 1946.<sup>2</sup> The provision is as follows:

In accomplishing settlements with the recipient governments the United States Government would be prepared, in the event of waiver, to stipulate that each recipient government establish a reserve amounting to 10 percent of the total combined bills against that government with the understanding that this reserve would be used, to the extent necessary, to make additional payments to the British and Canadian Governments if settlements made by the British and Canadian Governments with the recipient governments proved insufficient to meet the amount due them under present loss-sharing agreements when all collections and losses have been finally determined by combined agreement.

I should like to state our interpretation of this provision and its application, based on our informal discussions with you.

The "10 percent of the total combined bill" would be set aside as a reserve only in case the settlement made by the United States involved a waiver, whether or not this waiver was accompanied by offsets. In the event that the United States waives an amount equal to or greater than 10 percent of the total combined claim against the country concerned, the reserve will be equivalent to 10 percent of the combined claim. If the United States waives an amount less than 10 percent of the combined claim, the total amount waived will be set aside as a reserve. In either case, the full amount of the reserve would be deducted entirely from the presently agreed United States share of 62 percent. No reserve would be established if the United States funded or collected its total share of the obligation but it is understood that receipts would in this case be available to compensate the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments for losses greater than those they agreed to bear under present loss-sharing arrangements.

The reserve would be established by the debtor government concerned at the time the waiver arrangement became effective and for additional bills at the time received. The reserve would be held in the name of the debtor government in its central bank in funds convertible into sterling or Canadian dollars or both, at rates to be agreed upon by the debtor government with the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments.

The reserve would be payable to the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments at the time, to the extent, and in such proportions of sterling and Canadian dollars as the United States, United Kingdom, and Canadian Governments may determine by combined agreement to be necessary in order to comply with the loss-sharing arrangements among the three supplying governments. Such remaining amounts of the reserve not so paid would revert to the free disposition of the debtor government upon combined notification by the United States, United Kingdom, and Canadian Governments.

To illustrate the application of the use to be made of the 10 percent reserve, let us assume that the United States waived its 62 percent share of a combined bill of $100 million for debtor country X. Country X, upon settlement with the United States involving a waiver of an amount equal to or greater than 10 percent of the combined bill, would be required to set aside as a reserve 10 percent of total bills already submitted and of additional bills as presented, or a limit of $10 million, and if this reserve were eventually used in whole or in part for payments to the United Kingdom and Canada, the United States share waived would be correspondingly reduced, i.e., to an amount not less than $52 million.

The $10 million reserve established by country X would be available for use in making payments to the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments to compensate them for agreed losses, whether arising from failure to obtain satisfactory settlement from country X or from other sources, greater than those that the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments agreed to bear under the loss-sharing arrangements.

A copy of the Aide-Mémoire† which my government sent to the French Government with respect to the waiver of the United States share of the Plan A obligation is enclosed.

I am sending a similar letter to Mr. Jackling.

Sincerely yours,

VICTOR M. LONGSTREET

Washington, October 17, 1946

Following for Arnold Smith from Murray, Military Relief.

At a meeting of the Tripartite Settlement Committee, held yesterday afternoon at the State Department, the British and Canadian representatives were handed a memorandum initialled by Mr. Clayton, proposing that the Canadian Government consider giving a final decision on the settlement of the bills for civilian supplies furnished to Italy and Greece (the text of this memorandum is being forwarded in my immediately following teletype).

The question of the cancellation of Italian indebtedness for military relief was previously brought up by the State Department in March (my WA-1450 of April 2nd—your EX-794 of March 18th), at which time the talks were transferred to London in order to tie in with the reparations aspect of the Italian Peace Treaty (your telegram No. 762 of April 3rd† to London and London's despatch No. A312 of April 16th† refer).

The United Kingdom treasury officials here stated that as a purely personal view they felt London would accept the fact that Italy and Greece could not possibly pay for the supplies received (the amount for the two countries is in the neighbourhood of 500 million dollars) and that they would, therefore, probably agree in principle to the United States memorandum. They have referred the matter to London and I don't expect they will have a reply before the next meeting of the Tripartite Settlement Committee, Wednesday, October 23rd. I said that in view of Mr. Claxton's statement on the Italian Treaty, I thought the Canadian Government would give more favourable consideration to the United States proposal than they had last March and April. I should be grateful for an early indication of our views on this memorandum.

The United States have now, as you know, concluded their overall war settlements with France and Belgium. The talks with the Dutch are practically concluded and they expect to sign their Agreement in ten days or two weeks, after which they will proceed to talk with the Norwegians. If the Italian and Greek bills are shortly disposed of in the manner proposed, the United States will have tidied up their military relief settlements with all countries except Yugoslavia. At the present time, for obvious reasons, they are not recommending that the Yugoslav obligation be forgiven.

In addition, the question of the disposition of the 105 million dollar Balkan stockpile remains to be settled. My WA-3398 of September 17th† referred to this problem.

I shall be sending you in more detail, tomorrow, what the British intend to do to try and obtain, for themselves, all of the receipts from the Balkan stockpile.

I am quoting below the text of the State Department memorandum referred to, Begins:

In view of the importance of preparing for early settlements of War Accounts with the Governments of Italy and Greece, the Government of the United States proposes to the Government of Canada that consideration be given to a final decision concerning the policy to be followed with respect to settlement of the bills for civilian supplies furnished these Governments on a combined basis through the military authorities of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada (Plan A) and on an agreed basis in Italy by the United States and the United Kingdom.

In all negotiations between the representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canadian Governments concerning the combined financial arrangements for settlement and distribution of collections for the civilian supplies furnished through the combined military authorities by the three supplying Governments to all recipients, the three supplying Governments have been proceeding on the understanding that the Governments of Italy and Greece would not be pressed for payment. In fact, the agreed upon shares of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada of the combined claims against the Northwest European Governments were calculated on the assumption that the combined bills presented to the Governments of Italy and Greece would not be paid.

Since the conditions on which the above combined decisions concerning non-payment by the Governments of Italy and Greece were based remain unchanged, and since the same conditions and considerations apply to the agreed program for Italy, the Government of the United States proposes that the three supplying Governments agree that the bills presented to these Governments for these supplies be formally cancelled.

An identic memorandum is being presented to the Government of the United Kingdom.

Ottawa, October 25, 1946

Dear Mr. Smith,

I have your letter of October 23rd,† enclosing the letter of October 8th from Mr. Pierre Dupuy to Mr. Pearson,† and relating to the disposal of surplus guilders.

I think it might be worthwhile your cabling Mr. Dupuy to inform him that Mr. Jockin of the Netherlands Government is expected here on Monday next to initiate discussions in regard to the settlement of claims arising out of supplies provided to the civilian population of The Netherlands by the civil affairs branches of the combined military organization. You might tell Mr. Dupuy that we very much appreciate having his letter before discussing this matter with Mr. Jockin, and we will bear in mind the possibility of getting from The Netherlands the right to use the 7,000,000 post-conversion surplus guilders already in our possession, for various purposes. Already in putting up to The Netherlands draft documents for future exchange settlements we have proposed that Canada should be free to use for any purpose in The Netherlands balances already on hand. We assume this would cover the new guilders but not the old ones, which are no longer legal tender.

We have not as yet endeavoured to crystallize our views on the settlement for these surplus guilders nor on the settlement for Military Relief claims. The Dutch will ask us to cancel or waive all claims in respect of both of these items. It will be difficult for us to do this for several reasons. One of the chief difficulties will be the settlements reached with the Americans and the British. We understand that the Americans are waiving their claims in respect of Military Relief, but proposing to collect dollars in a settlement for surplus guilders held by the American War Department. We understand that the British have returned all the surplus old guilders—a very large quantity in their case—without any reimbursement, but are insisting on their right to use the accumulation of new guilders which they have on hand. They are also asking the Dutch to pay the U.K. for the amount owing the U.K. in respect of civil affairs supplies, and apparently the Dutch have agreed to do this, although it may be buried in various offsetting transactions.

In regard to the guilder settlements, we would certainly hope to collect some repayment, although it may have to be a small proportion of the nominal value of these old guilders, unless we have some unsuspected bargaining strength. A complete write-off of these guilders might well lead to difficulties in Parliament and criticism over the action of the Government, first in acquiring them, and later in obtaining no payment for them.

As regards the settlement for Military Relief, we must have in mind the need for parallel settlements with Belgium and France and possibly, at least nominally, with Italy and Greece. The Department of Finance is exploring the possibilities of Canada requesting some benefit that will not be a burden on the present or future balance of payments of these countries.

We would welcome any views which our Legation in The Hague wishes to express on either of these settlements. It is expected that no decision will be reached next week while Jockin is here, and he will be expected simply to present the views of the Dutch on the matter and to hear our initial reactions to these proposals.

I might add that we would be interested to know whether you, or possibly Mr. Pearson himself, would like to be present at a meeting with Mr. Jockin early next week. We expect that the Deputy Minister of National Defence will meet with him on this matter, and possibly the Minister and Deputy Minister of Finance. I shall be in touch with you by telephone about this when I have more information.

Yours truly,

R. B. BRYCE

TELEGRAM WA-3841

Washington, October 26, 1946

Following for Arnold Smith from Murray, Begins: My WA-3716 of October 17th, proposed cancellation of Italian and Greek indebtedness for military relief supplies.

The meeting of the Tripartite Settlement Committee, which was to have been held this week, has been postponed at the request of the United Kingdom giving us more time to formulate our definite views on the United States memorandum.

The United Kingdom are now proceeding with the preparation of a memorandum stating their views on the disposition of the Balkan stockpile settlement, which were mentioned in my WA-3735.† They have had no word on London's reaction to the United States memorandum proposing cancellation, but if the United Kingdom views on the disposition of the UNRRA receipts from the Balkan stockpile are accepted concurrently with their suggestion that each supplying country proceed to make unilateral settlements, the United States memorandum should then present no special difficulties, as Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States would each be on their own. I can get no indication on the chances of the United States accepting the United Kingdom view, but I think we can delay the final formulation of our views on the United States proposal until we know the outcome of these particular talks. Incidentally, we will be receiving a similar memorandum from the United Kingdom.

In the meantime, you will be interested in the reaction of Longstreet and Breithut of the State Department to our view that we are not disposed to cancel this obligation. Both they and the United Kingdom agree that there is no binding legal or physically insurmountable objection to dividing up our claims on Italy, Yugoslavia and Greece and then proceeding, unilaterally, as we decided to do with the northwest European Governments this Spring. They do have, however, major and minor objections to such a proposal which can be summarized as follows:

(I) The percentages agreed upon this Spring for the claims against the northwest European Governments (62, 35 and 3) were "based on the assumption that Italy and the Balkan countries concerned are non-paying countries." If we change the basis of this assumption (and I agree that we would have to regard any receipts from the Italians such as property, lire, as payment), then the percentages on the northwest European countries would have to be revised.

(II) As you know, the United States have regarded the unilateral waiving of their claims against such countries as France and Belgium not as a loss but as collection in full of their claim. If they were to take a different attitude towards cancellation with Italy (this is mostly an academic point for the sake of argument) it would mean they would be eligible, under the loss sharing formula, for a larger share of the receipts from the Balkan stockpile, etc.

(III) The United States, like Canada and the United Kingdom, has done a very great deal to assist a country which was, after all, formerly a belligerent. If they continue as they propose to, cancelling these obligations and going ahead with further assistance while we maintain our claim, it exposes them (even though our claim is, in comparison, a miniature one) to the ever-present Congressional cry that Uncle Sam is, as usual, footing all the bills. This, I suggested, was a pretty thinly stretched argument as even if we do collect a few lire and the odd Italian ruin, these could scarcely, in view of our record of assistance to Italy, be regarded as a hardhearted bargain in which we succeeded owing to the generous United States assistance to Italy. I pointed out that our Government would probably soon be called upon to give a full accounting of its numerous wartime expenditures and that it seemed obvious that someone who had waived his claims, at the same time as he was asking for an appropriation to purchase property in Italy and Greece, would certainly expose himself to sharp cross-examination.

In March and September, 1945, in communications from A. E. Ritchie to officials of the State Department, it was very explicitly stated that we did not intend to press either Greece, Yugoslavia or Italy for payment. In a letter of March 10th, 1945, to Jacques Reinstein of the State Department, marked "Informal and Confidential" it was stated "the Canadian authorities are agreed also that Greece and Yugoslavia may be informed we do not intend to press a claim for payment against them. I understand that the Canadian authorities do not regard it as a matter of importance to them whether Greece and Yugoslavia receive formal or informal notification of our intentions." In a letter of September 12th, 1945, to G. F. Luthringer, Chief, Division of Financial Affairs, Department of State, it was stated that "I am instructed to inform you that the draft note attached to your letter is acceptable to the Canadian authorities and that the oral statement proposed in the penultimate paragraph of your letter is also satisfactory from our point of view." The paragraph of Luthringer's letter which was referred to is as follows:

"In view of Italy's present inability to make payments, it is suggested that the Italian Government be verbally advised at the time of presentation of the note that the supplying Governments for the present do not intend to press the Italian Government for payment but they will expect the claim to be taken up in connection with the Peace Treaty."

In other words, we certainly went along, in 1945, with the idea that we would not press Italy and Greece and, incidentally, Yugoslavia, for payment, and in the Spring of 1946 we agreed to the new percentages for the northwest European countries, assuming non-payment from Italy. This, of course, is not the same thing by any means as waiving a claim or cancelling a bill, but I think we must agree that it does point in that direction. The State Department officials agreed quite spontaneously that these statements of our views about not pressing for payment are in no way binding on us to now cancel our bills.

I should be grateful for any further views you may have in the light of the above comments. Ends.

Mémorandum du ministère des FinancesMemorandum by Department of Finance

Ottawa, November 1, 1946

RE: DISCUSSIONS WITH DUTCH OFFICIALS REGARDING SURPLUS GULDERS AND MILITARY RELIEF

On Monday, October 28th, Messrs. Jockin, Soutendijk and Hechtermans, representing the Dutch Government, visited Ottawa to discuss with officials of the Departments of Finance and National Defence (Army), questions arising out of the surplus guilders accumulated by the Canadian Army during the period in which it was located in The Netherlands, and also the question of settlement for Civil Affairs supplies which were provided to the Netherlands Government under the Military Relief programme carried out by the United States, United Kingdom and Canada.

At various times discussions were held between the Netherlands officials referred to above and Mr. Alex Ross, Deputy Minister of National Defence and Messrs. R. B. Bryce and S. Pollock of the Department of Finance. The following is a general summary of the main points discussed:

1. SURPLUS GULDERS

The senior Paymaster of the Canadian Army has on deposit in Amsterdam approximately 41 million pre-purge guilders, which are no longer legal tender and approximately 7 million new guilders, which are being used for current expenditures in Holland.

Mr. Jockin emphasized repeatedly in the discussions relating to the disposal of these guilders that the Dutch Government feels that the line taken in their note of November 2nd, 1945, is a proper one and that they should not be required to provide foreign exchange in settlement for any of the guilders. In his opinion all the guilders were obtained by Canadian troops in illegal activities in the Dutch black market over which the Dutch authorities had no control and for which they should not, therefore, be required to accept any responsibility. Mr. Ross argued that while it might not be possible to deny the fact that the guilders were acquired illegally, it should be recognized that the transactions were a two-way proposition, that the Dutch civilians received goods, admittedly at highly inflated prices, but which did have some real value and that the Dutch Government should be prepared to accept as much responsibility on account of the activities of Dutch civilians as the Canadian Government should be expected to assume on account of the activities of Canadian troops. Mr. Jockin denied both these propositions saying that the accumulation of the guilders was the end product of a vast number of transactions in which the Canadians received as large an amount of real goods and services as did the Dutch and that in so far as controlling the black market was concerned the unstable situation in Holland at the time had to be recognized as well as the fact that the Dutch Government had little control over Canadians. A considerable number of detailed arguments were advanced on both sides to support these cases, but on the whole no conclusions were reached.

Mr. Ross also thought that the Netherlands Government should be willing to extend to the Canadian Government facilities for exchanging the old guilders equivalent to those which it had given its own nationals at the time of the money purge. In this connection Mr. Jockin pointed out that before any of the funds of the Dutch civilian were unblocked, he had to prove that the guilders had been acquired legally. This he thought could not be proved in connection with the old guilders accumulated by the Canadian Army.

Mr. Ross pointed out that as soon as it became evident that excessive amounts of guilders were being accumulated the Canadian authorities had made determined efforts to stop the illegal traffic and he could not agree that the Dutch had made the maximum effort on their side to prevent the Dutch civilians from participating in the illegal transactions. He also stated that although various approaches might have been made by local officials to the Canadian Army with a view to limiting the black market activities, it had to be recognized that the Canadians were operating as part of a larger force and that so far as he knew no official approach had ever been made by the Dutch Government to the Senior Commander A.E.F.<sup>1</sup>, which might have led to real action on an army-wide scale to stop the accumulation of guilders. The Dutch officials were not prepared to agree that this was the case.

Switching to more general arguments, Mr. Jockin stated that it would be virtually impossible in the light of the method of accumulation of the guilders and the very difficult foreign exchange position of the Dutch economy to justify to his countrymen any settlement under which consideration was given to Canada on account of the pre-purge guilders. He also stated that the same situation would prevail in connection with the new guilders, but he seemed to be less adamant, and when it was pointed out that these new guilders were now being used for payment of dependents allowances to the Dutch wives of Canadian soldiers awaiting transfer to Canada and for other minor expenditures, he suggested that while he disapproved of this action in principle, in view of the limited amount of guilders which were being used in this manner the action might be condoned.

He argued that political feeling in Holland would make it absolutely impossible to compromise on the guilder question. Mr. Ross then pointed out that similar difficulties would have to be faced in Canada as these guilders represent an asset of the Department of National Defence and could not be written off without reference to Parliament. He said that his Minister would be in for serious criticism in the House if a complete write-off were attempted.

In this connection Mr. Bryce enquired whether the cost to the Canadian tax payers of writing-off all of the old guilders might be considered as an expenditure toward maintaining the morale of the troops during the difficult period in which they were awaiting repatriation to Canada. He suggested that had the troops not had some outlet for the expenditure of their energies and enthusiasm they would have got into considerably more trouble than they did and if the vast number of transactions in which they participated kept them happy, it acted as a useful safety valve so that a partial write-off might be justified on this account. This line of thought was not pursued to any conclusion.

A considerable amount of discussion was directed at attempting to determine the exact periods in which the guilders were actually accumulated. The object (unstated) from the Canadian point of view was to try to determine whether any portion might have been accumulated during the period between the date the old guilders were called in for new and the date the Dutch note was received stating that the Netherlands Government were unwilling to accept responsibility for settlement for these guilders. Information was available on the old guilders but not on the new and Mr. Ross undertook to obtain from the pay records a statement showing the accumulation month by month of the 7 million new guilders.

2. MILITARY RELIEF

Mr. Jockin expressed as his general attitude toward settlement for Military Relief, the opinion that the supplies had been provided to Holland during the period in which they were absolutely necessary if the Dutch population were to avoid starvation. He pointed out the tremendous cost to Holland of the German occupation and also emphasized the activities of the Dutch underground, the railway strike, etc., as a definite contribution to the allied victory. He suggested that it was not reasonable that we, who had experienced so little real suffering in economic and social terms during the war, should expect the Dutch Government to pay for the supplies provided at a time when, from a purely humanitarian point of view, assistance of this nature was absolutely essential. He also stated that it was absolutely impossible at the present time for the Dutch economy to provide foreign exchange to pay for the Civil Affairs supplies. He mentioned the severe restrictions now operative against Dutch civilians who require foreign exchange for current usage.

He also made direct reference to severe damage which was incurred in certain areas in which the troops had been located and for which the Dutch Government had assumed responsibility (e.g. Nijmegen Black Country).

Mr. Bryce then made certain comparisons between the arrangements made by the Dutch with the United Kingdom and the United States in settlement for similar situations which existed between those countries and The Netherlands. He said that he understood that in the case of the United States the Military Relief supplies had been given as lend-lease to Holland but that the Americans were being paid in full for the guilders they held. In the case of the United Kingdom the opposite was true. Although the United Kingdom had handed back 150 million old guilders to Holland, the British were claiming payment in full for the Military Relief supplies. Accordingly, as some concession had been made to each of those countries in connection with their settlements he thought it would be extremely difficult to justify a complete write-off on the Canadian account. Mr. Jockin pointed out that the situation was simpler in the case of the United States because it was part of an overall settlement which had made it possible to conceal payment for the guilders. In the case of the United Kingdom he thought that although settlement for the old guilders had been waived he thought it unlikely that the British would in the final analysis receive payment for the Military Relief supplies.

On one or two occasions throughout the discussion Mr. Soutendijk enquired whether we had some specific offer to suggest as a possible settlement of these questions, but Mr. Bryce thought that this should wait until after the question had been discussed with Mr. Ilsley.

The discussion ended with no particular conclusions having been reached, but with each side aware of the attitude of the other on these questions. Presumably after further examination we will determine what our policy is to be and what proposition, if any, we are prepared to make to The Netherlands.

Deputy Minister of Finance to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, November 2, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I am writing in connection with Teletype WA-3841 of October 26th regarding the proposed cancellation of Italian and Greek indebtedness for Military Relief supplies.<sup>1</sup>

We continue to feel in this Department that as a matter of principle there should not be a general cancellation of the indebtedness of Italy and Greece, and certainly not pending negotiations by ourselves and the British with the recipient countries in Western Europe. We do not expect to be paid by Italy, Greece or Yugoslavia, except perhaps some nominal payment in their local currencies which may be used for certain restricted purposes. We do not propose to press Italy, Greece or Yugoslavia for payment unless perhaps we ask them to make some nominal payment, as indicated above. However, we feel that any writing-off of these claims should be done only as a result of bilateral discussions between the supplying and recipient countries, such as those that have already gone on between the United States and the Western European countries.

There is, of course, a difference in regard to settlements with Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia in so far as the claims on these countries have been expressly assumed to be valueless in reckoning the sharing of the claims on other countries, and if now Canada should manage to collect something in one way or another, or if the United Kingdom should do so from, say, Italy, it would at least nominally alter the shares of the claims that should be maintained against the other recipient countries. Consequently if by some means anything is obtained from Italy, Greece or Yugoslavia, we should be prepared to re-examine the situation with the United States. However, I do not see why the United States should be greatly interested, inasmuch as she is apparently prepared to waive all her claims on all recipient countries, and it should hardly be a matter of great concern to her whether the division between one group and another is somewhat different from that assumed. What would seem of importance is that Canada and the United Kingdom, or either of them, should not collect so much from all recipient countries that their losses are clearly disproportionate to those of the United States when the United States' claims on Western Europe, which she has voluntarily waived, are regarded as settled in full, in accordance with paragraph (II) of WA-3841.

It seems to us at this stage possible that we may wish to ask Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia to pay us in one form or another some amounts in their own currencies in respect of these Military Relief claims, that we would use in such a way as not to constitute a burden, or at least any serious burden, on their balance of payments. We should want to do this, I would think, if we follow the same or a similar course of action in regard to the Western European recipient countries, because it would hardly seem fair to discriminate too sharply between one group and the other. Moreover, in the case of Italy we may wish to take this Military Relief claim into account in deciding whether or not to release to Italy the remainder of the Canadian dollar equivalent of the lire obtained for Canadian troops in Italy. Whether the withholding of this equivalent of the lire would constitute in any way a settlement of the Military Relief claim is hard to say, particularly as we are under no binding obligation in international law to make payment for the lire. However, in one way or another it is conceivable that we might get some small return or concession or offset out of the claims on Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia. If this is the case, it would raise complications, if not difficulties, in connection with the settlement of the whole Military Relief arrangement.

As an answer to the difficulties outlined in the paragraph immediately above, it might be worth our having in mind a stipulation that we would be prepared to re-open the sharing of the claims if Canada obtained from its claims on all recipient nations a return that reduced its losses to a figure below that which was assumed when the sharing of the claims on the Western European nations was determined. The effect of this would be that if we collected no more from Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia than the amount we waived in respect of Western Europe, we would not have to make any readjustment with the United States, but if we collected more from the first group than we waived in the case of the latter group, then it would be necessary for us to make some readjustment, presumably with the United States. Whether or not the United States would wish to pass on to the recipient countries any credit we gave to them out of our collections, I cannot guess at this time.

It seems to me unlikely that we shall be able to collect in full from the Western European countries, even in terms of their own currencies, and extremely unlikely that we shall collect enough from all countries together to require any readjustment with the United States if we followed the principle outlined above. It would therefore seem that we would have to proceed on the understanding that we would be prepared to make such a readjustment if it were necessary.

I would not suggest you put forward the ideas outlined above to the United States until there has been a chance for our two Departments to discuss them together and then perhaps they might be explored informally with the British, after which we might take them up with the Americans. In the meantime, however, I think it would be desirable for us to tell the Americans that we feel unable to agree to a formal and final cancellation of the claims on Italy, Yugoslavia and Greece. In telling them this, I think it would be well to indicate that our objections are really objections of principle, and particularly that we do not feel we can discriminate between one group of recipients and another, and we are not yet prepared to waive all claims against Western European countries.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

I have not had an opportunity to discuss this Dutch settlement with the Minister since he saw the Netherlands representatives, but perhaps now that Abbott is back from the West we should have some discussions about it. External Affairs rather exaggerated in paragraph 7 the degree to which we have crystallized our views. I told them I felt we were very likely to get very little, if anything, in respect of the old guilders, in regard to which we had a very poor legal and moral claim, and that if we were going to get anything out of the guilders, we might well concentrate our attention on the new ones. However, that should not be taken as indicating that I have come to that conclusion and certainly not that I have found out the Ministers' views on that matter.

I must say that I am perplexed about the Military Relief settlements and pessimistic about the guilder settlement. As indicated above, I think the best we can do on the guilders is to save some useful balance from the new guilders that we have accumulated since the "money purge". If we are to try to get anything out of the old guilders, we shall have to put pressure on the Dutch from some other direction, and it might, for example, require us to agree to give them more credit next year if we are to get any settlement out of them in respect of these old guilders. As far as I know, there was no written or verbal understanding regarding their liability to us for these old guilders, and there is no way that we could prove, so far as I know, that they were acquired by legal means. I shall not attempt to expand here on the moral claim, except to say that the Dutch certainly regard it as very poor, if not non-existent.

In regard to Military Relief, I would prefer to wait until the division of claims in Washington is further ahead, but I think we should look at this with some care and in some detail, in the hope of deriving from it as much as we reasonably can and should obtain from these countries.

Dear Mr. Bryce,

I have hardly come to grips with the Military Relief situation as yet, but I thought that you might like to have an interim report indicating the way the wind is blowing and the prospects for a satisfactory settlement. To begin with, I should sound a note of warning in case you are expecting this question to be resolved in the course of the next few days. It seems more likely to me that taking into consideration the very great divergency between the British and the American viewpoints—of which evidence is apparent in every verbal encounter that occurs—that the settlement is likely to be indefinitely delayed unless discussions are taken to a higher level, where major policy decisions can be made.

However, on the simpler question of arriving at firm figures I think that before this week is out we will have a fairly good idea of the relative contributions of the three countries concerned. Even in this line, judging by the results of the first meeting which was held yesterday afternoon, there is a tendency on the part of both the Americans and the British, but particularly the latter, to make a knock-down, drag-out battle out of every issue if it appears that in doing so they can improve their bargaining position, no matter how slightly. Yesterday, for instance, the question of taking into consideration charges beyond ships' tackle had reached a virtual deadlock, but, surprisingly enough, it was our arguments which finally resolved the issue, and I think you will be pleased to know that the charges beyond ships' tackle are tentatively to be waived, but with the individual countries retaining the right to bill the recipient countries, unilaterally, for any charges of this nature which they feel might have been incurred in the movement of the military relief supplies. I think that the intention in retaining this right of billing is not so much with a view to making collections thereon, but rather to have an effective weapon ready in case any of the Northwestern European countries come up with some counter charges which they wish to have applied against the main bills for Military Relief.

The Tripartite Settlement Committee has not yet discussed, formally, our request that the Canadian contribution be considered at current exchange values rather than at pre-July 5th rates. However, this subject has been broached, informally, to both the British and the American representatives and although it would appear that we may have some difficulty in putting across this idea, it would seem, on the surface, that we have a good chance of doing so. In any event, we have indicated that this is a question on which the Canadian Government is adamant and that it is one point in connection with which we feel fully convinced of the validity of our case.

Unfortunately, to date we have been running into interference in view of the fact that the discussions on the economic unification of the British and American zones in Germany have been going on concurrently with our discussions on Military Relief. Since a number of the British and American delegates are required to participate in both sets of discussions, we have, from time to time, had to give way to the higher priority problem. The result has been that we are not quite as far along as might be desired in either the Billing Committee or the Settlement Committee. It would appear, however, that the American figure for Military Relief contribution will be in the neighbourhood of $1,160 million (as compared with $1,073 million in their preliminary figures) and that the British contribution will be in the neighbourhood of $493 million (as compared with their former figure of $468 million dollars). Against these amounts we have tentatively raised the Canadian figure to $93 million (at current exchange rates). Using these figures, I have made a rapid calculation based on both the British and the American formulas and, surprisingly enough, it would appear that we are still in the happy position of being able to claim something over $4 million regardless of which view prevails. Of course, neither the British nor the Americans are aware of this fact and I think that they are a bit bewildered at our seeming neutrality to date. It is possible that they may have an idea of what our final aim is, but I do not think they realize that we are in the fortunate position of not really caring which formula is used for working out the final settlement provided that our contribution is included at the figure we are suggesting.

That is all I have to say for the time being except to add that I have been interviewed by Mr. Wrong, who has expressed the hope that we will be able to have this matter resolved without having to call on him. I suggested that I felt that you were also anxious to see the end of the question and that it was hoped that a satisfactory settlement could be achieved without having to call on "heavier artillery", but that for the time being at least that possibility seemed very remote.

Yours sincerely,

S. P[OLLOCK]

[Washington,] November 21, 1946

Dear Mr. Bryce,

Since speaking to you this morning I thought you might be interested in more detail than I was able to convey in our telephone conversation.

Yesterday afternoon Dick Murray and myself had a long conversation lasting approximately two hours, with Jackling, Christelow and Griffiths concerning our suggestion that the Canadian contribution to military relief be included at current exchange rates. The impression which they conveyed at the outset was one of absolute opposition to our suggestion, but as the discussion proceeded it seemed evident that this stand was taken with a view to strengthening their bargaining position because as subsequently turned out, they suggested that they would be prepared to bargain their support of our position as a quid pro quo for our support of their formula for dividing the UNRRA receipts.

Throughout the discussion however, both Murray and I insisted that the inclusion of Canadian contributions at parity was not a question on which any bargaining could take place. We indicated that the Canadian Government was absolutely convinced that the figure which should be used for our contributive share should be one that could be reconciled with the figures appearing in the Dominion accounts and that it would be difficult for us to support any settlement computed on any other basis. We also intimated that at the present time the acceptance of our position on this matter would permit us to remain absolutely neutral in any discussion which might ensue later between the Americans and the British. We did not say so in so many words, but we indicated that if through the active opposition of either the U.S. or U.K., the Canadian contribution were to be included at the pre-parity figure it might then be necessary to review the whole question with a view to ascertaining what type of settlement would be in the best interest of Canada, and on that basis our current position of neutrality, with a certain amount of sympathy for the British desire to receive compensation for their overprocurement, might have to be altered.

The discussions ran throughout the whole range of politics, accounting, economics and mathematics, with the British on the one hand attempting to show we were asking for an unreasonable concession and we on the other attempting to prove that our position was a reasonable one. I think, however, that Murray and myself must have seemed very convinced of the strength of our position, and as we were prepared to be as patient as they, the discussion finally reached the point where they enquired what would be the real effect of increasing our figures on Canada's share in the final settlement. We, of course, insisted that we did not have sufficient data on the totals of the British and American contributions to answer this question, (although as I indicated to you in my letter of November 20, we have made a rapid calculation which indicated that we would be able to claim something over $4 million.) Christelow then indicated that they might be willing to waive their opposition to us if it did not mean that in the final analysis Canada would be receiving too large a portion of the UNRRA funds. When I enquired what figures he would consider to be "too high", he said that any settlement in which Canada would retain the 3½ million UNRRA dollars already held there and possibly some small amount in excess of that amount would seem to be satisfactory to the U.K. However, through the alteration in our figures it should turn out that we were to receive some large sum, say between 8 and 9 million dollars, that the U.K. would have to register their objections [sic]. We then said that we thought that in fact, our share would be in the neighbourhood of the figure which they had indicated to be reasonable whereupon the U.K. representatives seemed to be quite satisfied and gave the impression that when the matter came before the meeting of the Tri-partite Settlement Committee they would not oppose us actively.

In between the various phases of the above discussions there was some mention made of the sale of the FWD Vehicles in the U.K. Griffiths for a time argued that since these vehicles had never actually been delivered as civil affairs supplies, they should fall outside the settlement and that Canadian expenditures thereon should be deleted from our contribution. On this basis any returns from the sale of the vehicles would accrue to Canada. We however, held that these vehicles had been delivered to military relief pool in the U.K. and that so far as Canada was concerned they were considered to be part of our contribution. Jackling agreed with us, saying that so far as he could see, there was no difference between these vehicles and the other end stocks in Europe. Since it was pointed out that the major portion of the $3 million which we expected to receive from the sale of FWD's, would probably go to the U.K. in any final settlement the question was dropped, and I think it unlikely that we will hear any more about it in the Committee Meetings unless the Americans bring it up, which seems very improbable.

I do not know whether the above outline is entirely clear, but in any event, as you have indicated that you are likely to be here on Monday or Tuesday of next week it will probably be possible to go over the whole question with you in detail. Possibly if you are here when the Settlement Committee meets again you may be able to find time to attend and present the Canadian case. However, it seems to me that barring any sudden and unforeseen change in the attitude of the British and the U.S. representatives on our request for inclusion of the Canadian contribution at parity, that we have only to sit on the sidelines and wait for the U.S. and U.K. to reach agreement and on this basis you may not feel disposed to attend.

Yours truly,

TELEGRAM WA-4410

MOST IMMEDIATE. Following for S. D. Pierce from Murray, Begins: Bryce and I will be meeting the British at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon to discuss military relief settlement and the United States proposal, now strongly concurred in by the United Kingdom, to formally cancel our claims against Italy and Greece.

We propose to say that we are ready to recommend, subject to the concurrence of our Ministers, that we take five per cent of the claims against North-western Europe. On the basis of the present figures, this would entitle us to 5.5 million from the other receipts. We could then keep the 3.5 million of the UNRRA money now being held in Canada plus 4/7ths of the $3,500,000 receipts which should accrue from the sale of the F.W.D.'s called forward as military relief supplies from Canada but which did not leave the United Kingdom. Pollock, Department of Finance, knows the background of this proposal, which arises out of our informal discussions, two weeks ago, with the United Kingdom officials in Washington.

We will also say that we cannot, at this time, agree to cancelling our claims against Greece and Italy since we feel that such action would seriously jeopardize our already slim chances of collection from the Northwestern European countries. If we were, in due course, persuaded of the desirability of cancelling these claims, we would prefer to base our action on the fact that UNRRA had found (and we had tacitly concurred in that finding) these countries to be unable to pay. Yugoslavia and Albania would be included in this category; this would mean that, on this basis, we should have to cancel our claims against all four countries at the same time.

I shall try to telephone you shortly after 2:30 this afternoon. Ends.

TELEGRAM EX-3177

Ottawa, December 17, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Following for Murray from Pollock, Begins: Military Relief Talks.

Following is text of a special delivery air mail letter sent to Mr. Bryce yesterday concerning the proposed meeting on Wednesday regarding special audit of Military Relief accounts of which we spoke in our phone conversation yesterday. Begins:

"I am enclosing a copy of 'Data on Canadian Military Relief'† prepared by Littlepage which provides an accurate accounting record from the Canadian point of view of the whole Military Relief operation.

When speaking to Dick Murray this morning concerning the proposed settlement, he stated that he thought you would be attending a meeting on Wednesday concerning a proposal that the Military Relief accounts be subjected to an outside audit and he enquired as to departmental views on this subject.

It has not been possible to discuss this matter with Dr. Clark but I was able to run over it briefly with Mr. Pierce and Herb Moran of External Affairs, and it is our general consensus of opinion that in view of the accuracy of the Canadian record that we would be in an extremely strong position should an impartial audit be held. In fact, Mr. Pierce thought that such an audit might go a long way toward answering any possible criticisms which might arise in future. Presumably, he was referring to Parliamentary criticism but the same thing would apply to possible investigation of the expenditures by the Auditor-General and in addition might prove a useful reply to North-west European countries if they were inclined to question the billings submitted to them for payment.

Furthermore, according to conversations I had with Mr. Connor<sup>1</sup> in Washington, it seems likely that the figures for contributions of both the U.K. and the U.S., but particularly the latter, might prove to be considerably in excess of the true values of the commodities they provided for Military Relief. I suggested to Dick that it might be very useful to discuss this question with Mr. Connor before the meeting in question.

The only conceivable objection which might be registered against an audit of this nature, aside from the cost of the audit, would be in that if it uncovered any serious accounting discrepancies it might delay the final settlement for many more months and possibly for years. You might consider this eventuality to be so undesirable that you would not be inclined to press for the principle of an outside audit. However, Mr. Pierce feels that if the facts are as indicated above the effect of the audit could only be to improve the Canadian position so that we should, at worst, adopt a neutral position in the event that either of the other countries concerned feel that the audit is essential.

I will try to clear this question with Dr. Clark to-morrow morning and let you have any further observations that he may make by teletype." Ends.

I was able to see Dr. Clark this morning. He stated that in the absence of more detailed information concerning the nature and scope of the proposed audit and the attitude of the U.S. and U.K. toward it the position stated in the letter would appear to be a satisfactory one. He added however that he thought that in the meeting the views expressed by Mr. Bryce or yourself should be largely tempered by those expressed by the U.K. or U.S. representatives. From an accounting point of view we are in a relatively strong position and since in terms of overall contributions the U.S. and the U.K. were the main contributors to the operation you should feel constrained not to oppose them actively if they present a strong case for or against a special audit.

Washington, December 17, 1946

My WA-4410, December 16th, Military Relief.

Bryce and Murray met Christelow, United Kingdom Treasury, and Jackling, British Embassy, to discuss what division of the 105 million dollar payment from UNRRA we would be prepared to recommend to our Governments. Bryce produced a new calculation of a possible civil affairs settlement which I shall forward in my immediately following plain language teletype. In this calculation, the N.W. Europe claims were apportioned on the basis of 62, 33, and 5%. The practical result of this is to give us 5.5 million; 3.5 million from UNRRA and 2.0 million from the F.W.D. trucks. Christelow and Jackling and, later, Seeman, found this quite acceptable, with one firm proviso; if the F.W.D. trucks are sold for sterling, the United Kingdom could not, repeat not, convert the sterling receipts into dollars. The British will not, for example, undertake to make any special increase in their fixed annual allotment of dollars to Iraq in order to facilitate the sale of some of these trucks to Iraq, for dollars. Bryce has informed MacCrimmon of the Mutual Aid Board of the United Kingdom position on the sale of these trucks, but he has not had time to inform Leonardow of the Amford Corporation of New York that it will be necessary for him to dispose of these trucks for either United States or Canadian dollars.

The setting out of these proposals (which are still only what we are prepared to recommend to our Governments) in an agreed memorandum remains very much dependent on the State Department officials clearing this proposed plan of settlement both with their own hierarchy and the numerous branches of the Government concerned with military relief.

The Tripartite Settlement Committee will be meeting Wednesday afternoon at 3, and we hope then to get some indication that progress towards acceptance of this settlement is being made in the State Department.

Proposed Cancellation of Combined Military Relief Claims on Greece and Italy:

On this point, all the British want is our concurrence in their proceeding to announce their intention to cancel their claims on Greece and Italy. Bryce indicated that we have no objection to the United Kingdom proceeding to announce their intention to cancel provided that we are not manoeuvred into taking the same action, since we have good and sufficient reasons to maintain our claim. Christelow and Jackling said they would not wish to have our refusal to cancel our claims result in the United States and United Kingdom shares of the Italian and Greek claims being entered as losses and our share entered as a receipt, or even partial receipt. We will be discussing this question with the State Department at tomorrow's meeting.

The Far Eastern Commission held its first meeting in Washington last week as the successor to the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. E. H.

Norman who represented Canada on the inspection trip to Japan of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission a few weeks ago, attended the inaugural meetings. The main difference between the old and the new commissions is that the Soviet Government is represented on the new body. Norman reports that the Soviet representative was not obstructive.

The F.E.C. is an interesting attempt to define policy towards occupied Japan by joint action among the most interested Allied governments. From our point of view it is far more satisfactory than the system adopted in Germany with power held by the U.S.S.R., U.S.A., U.K. and France alone. We should, I think, ensure that Canada is adequately represented on the Commission and some of its sub-committees (which number eleven in all) and should pull our weight in the discussions. It is too early to say how effective a body the Commission will be but we should do our part to see that it becomes an important and useful agency.

We have been represented on the Far Eastern Advisory Commission at its Washington meetings by Pearson who has been accompanied by a civil and a military adviser. The new body, however, will require for a time at least greater attention than Pearson can give to it without special assistance. I, therefore, think that Norman should be temporarily attached to the Embassy in Washington to act as Pearson's alternate on the Commission and to sit on some of the sub-committees. He is certainly the best man we can produce for this work and he is already well known to and highly respected by many of those associated with the work of the Commission. He is returning to Washington at the end of this week to attend next week's meetings. Before he leaves I should like to tell him that he can count on staying in Washington for several weeks at any rate.<sup>1</sup>

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION IN JAPAN

The attached teletype from Washington, WA-1981,† dated May 9, 1946, indicates that SCAP has concurred with the suggestion of the State Department that representation in Japan be accepted from Governments which are "neither neutral or participants". This would apply to Canada.

Approved by PM. J. A. G[IBSON] 7/3/46

You will recall that the United Kingdom and Australia have had representatives of the Foreign Offices and External Affairs attached to their respective military Missions and the suggestion had been made that the establishment of a Military Mission might be the most effective way to provide for our representation also. In your letter of April 16th to Mr. Pearson,† you pointed out the advantage of a civilian liaison mission and the anomaly of a United States' objection to a modest political and economic representation. It now seems clear that a civilian liaison Mission will be accepted and Mr. Pearson suggests that we indicate to the United States Government our wish to send the mission, name the head of the mission with his rank, indicate the position of other officers in the mission and the number of clerical staff, and state that housing (i.e. Canadian Legation in Tokyo) is available.

You will recall also that in our request to the United Kingdom Liaison Mission that they should assume responsibility for protection of Canadian interests in Japan as from April 15th, it was indicated that this would be on a provisional basis until a Canadian representative should be appointed.

In order to provide for the services which such a mission should render (see my memorandum to you of February 21, 1946),† it is suggested that we now request that a civilian liaison mission be established in Japan with the following representation:

1. Dr. E. H. Norman, Head of Mission
2. One or two Commercial Secretaries, to be nominated by the Department of Trade and Commerce
3. A Military Attaché
4. Clerical Staff

Dr. Norman's qualifications for heading the Mission are well known. While serving as adviser on SCAP staff and later as Canadian representative on the Far Eastern Commission, he gained the confidence of General MacArthur and other leaders in U.S. headquarters to a remarkable degree. This should make it possible for him to do effective work in the present situation and enable him to render valuable reports on broad political developments.

If a person with the qualifications of Lieut.-Colonel A. P. MacKenzie, now in command of the Canadian Army Japanese Language School in Vancouver, could be named as Military Attaché, he would not only be able to maintain suitable liaison with the U.S. Army forces in Japan, but would also fill the immediate requirement of External Affairs for further quasi-diplomatic representation. Colonel MacKenzie's familiarity with Japan and unusual knowledge of the Japanese language would enable him to supply both N.D.H.Q. and External Affairs with valuable reports on the rapidly changing situation in Japan, both from a military and political standpoint, and thereby greatly assist Dr. Norman in his work.

The Department of Fisheries are planning to send a representative to report on the fisheries situation in Japan as soon as suitable arrangements can be made. They would wish him to be attached to the Canadian Mission. If a Mission such as is proposed above were established it would be possible from time to time to attach to it experts whom we may desire to send to report on special phases of the economic situation.

There has been considerable delay since the possibility of having Canadian representation was first considered due to the unwillingness of the United States to receive civilians who were not attached to SCAP's staff. In the course of these negotiations, the Departments of Trade and Commerce, Reconstruction and Fisheries have all expressed their desire to have experts sent as soon as possible. It would, therefore, be desirable if early authorization could be given to make the request suggested by Mr. Pearson.

Ottawa, May 22, 1946

TOP SECRET. Following from Wrong, Begins: Reference Dominions Office telegrams D.508 and 509 of May 18.†

We assume that United States proposal for 25-year treaty on Disarmament and Demilitarization of Japan is before the meeting of Commonwealth Ministers, and therefore that Cabinet consideration here may be at any rate deferred. From preliminary examination the following comments arise:

1. In the United States drafts relating both to Japan and Germany the perpetuation for 25 years of the four-power pattern is questionable.
2. Long-term commitments by the United States along these lines should be welcomed.
3. The proposal bears on the responsibilities of the Far Eastern Commission and should at an early stage be considered by it if the Commission is to serve any serious purpose.
4. We have grave doubts whether Canada should seek to be included as a signatory. If, however, all the active belligerents against Japan and Germany were asked to become parties to the two proposed treaties, Canadian participation might be seriously considered.
5. The effect of the conclusion of such a treaty on the prospects of development of real collective responsibility for the preservation of peace through the United Nations must be borne in mind. At San Francisco it was understood that Article 107 of the Charter would apply only in transitional period, but this proposal would apparently extend its application until 1971.

Please discuss the question with Mr. Robertson and let us know if further immediate consideration here is desirable. We have not yet examined the proposal from the drafting point of view. Ends.

Washington, June 4, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to report on the work of the Far Eastern Commission and to suggest what future Canadian interests in the Commission may be. I shall attempt below to review briefly the activities of the Commission and its committees since it became the Far Eastern Commission in place of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission, and in passing, to comment on the attitude of the representatives of the eleven nations sitting in it.

2. It has become increasingly evident since the inauguration of the Far Eastern Commission in February of this year that the United States policy has been to shield the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers against Far Eastern Commission pressure, while at the same time assuring the Commission that, provided it does not encroach upon details of occupation administration, its decisions on broad policy would be welcomed by the United States Government. On the whole, however, the former consideration, namely to protect SCAP, overrides the second, and to such an extent that those members of the Commission who have been working most energetically to fashion policy directives for the Commission as a whole are now plainly growing discouraged.

3. A problem which continually plagues the work of the Commission is the legalistic manner in which distinction between policy and implementation is asserted by the United States representatives. If one insists that the Far Eastern Commission should have no interest whatever in the implementation of occupation policy, it will readily become apparent that practically no policy can be devised which could not in some measure be interpreted as implementation. Another consideration frequently confronting members of the Commission is that they must exercise the greatest care in drafting a policy document or a request for consultation so as not to graze, much less strike at the prestige of SCAP. Although members of the Commission have on various occasions expressed ungrudging admiration of SCAP, and with the possible exception of the Russians have no desire to obstruct him in his task, they are obviously growing somewhat impatient with the continual warning to keep ever before them the susceptibilities of the Supreme Commander, especially when these susceptibilities are, if possible, exaggerated in the fearful imaginations of United States representatives who must have perpetually impressed upon them by the War Department the dire results which would arise from thwarting his wishes.

19. Our own position has been in general not to oppose the United States on important matters, but at the same time to go along wherever possible with the majority of the Commission in matters where its own terms of reference seem to be obviously restricted by the United States fear of offending SCAP. In economic matters we have tended to follow the United Kingdom rather than the United States position.

20. The immediate prospects for the Commission are somewhat gloomy since it has been made unmistakably clear that the United States policy is to keep a tight rein upon it. As long as General MacArthur remains in Tokyo, the United States Government will defer to him on every vital question rather than to the majority opinion of the Far Eastern Commission. One should mention, however, that there appears to be an honest difference of opinion among United States representatives of the Commission, which is particularly noticeable on committee level. These representatives, mostly from the State Department, often show misgivings at the somewhat high-handed tactics of SCAP and are obviously gratified whenever the Commission is able to take a decision which produces some definite policy. There are even signs of late that the Chairman himself, the shield and buckler of SCAP against Commission pressure, is becoming restive in the embarrassing position in which he frequently finds himself when trying to explain SCAP's attitude toward the Commission. But on all important matters the War Department policy of curbing the Commission has won out over the State Department hope of the Commission discharging its responsibility.

21. These observations may be of some interest as throwing some light on the internal politics in Washington, but the fact remains that the Commission is being held very tightly in check by the United States so that it would appear that the War Department policy is in fact decisive. Thus a sense of frustration can be noted amongst the more forthright representatives, particularly those of New Zealand and Australia.

22. Despite these difficulties and frustrations, for the present we should do what we can to keep up our representation in the Commission, although necessarily on a reduced scale. In view of the imminent departure from the Embassy of Mr. Morrow who has been sitting in on the Reparations Committee, and Mr. Norman's appointment to Tokyo, and in the absence of additional staff in the Embassy, it is obvious that it will be impossible to keep our representation as full as it has been in recent months. While we would not have any intention of pulling out of the Commission altogether, we ought perhaps to cut our representation on some of the committees, notably Reparations, and Aliens in Japan, but participate as actively as need be on the Steering Committee and Commission levels. Our activity on this higher level will be greatly aided by constant guidance from Ottawa, particularly on economic matters where long range Canadian interests in Japan chiefly lie. As for estimating the prospects of Canadian trade with Japan, and in assessing overall United States policy for Japan, it is possible that our projected mission in Tokyo may be able to accomplish as much or more as representation in the Far Eastern Commission.

23. It might be premature to attempt now any final judgment on the prospects of the Far Eastern Commission, although as suggested above, the developments to date are rather discouraging. As with any international experiment, perhaps the greatest quality necessary for even modest success is patience, and certainly the Far Eastern Commission has shown that it has a considerable store of it. Participation in the organization has given as a useful by-product, considerable insight into the policies and tactics of other powers in their Far Eastern relations. The Commission itself is an interesting and I believe unique experiment in occupation policy, and there is on the credit side of the ledger at least the negative merit that the international machinery for dealing with Japan has not produced such confusion and tensions as in the case of Germany.

I have etc.

Ottawa, July 10, 1946

Dear General MacArthur,

I have been informed by the United States Department of State of your willingness, as Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers, to receive a Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan and of your agreement to the appointment of Mr. E. Herbert Norman as Head of the Mission.

Through his recent experience in Japan as Canadian representative on the Far Eastern Commission and as a member of your staff, Mr. Norman has had an opportunity to learn something of your problems and achievements. Thus, while the primary purpose of the Canadian Liaison Mission will be to represent Canadian interests, it is our hope that a renewal of Mr. Norman's cordial relations with yourself and with your staff may result in mutual benefits to the Governments of our respective countries.

In commending Mr. Norman to you, I should like to express my personal appreciation of the services you have rendered the cause of the Allied Powers through the able administration of your Command. May I also extend best wishes for your continued success in the arduous and highly important duties which you have been called upon to discharge.

Yours sincerely,

II. CANADIAN INTERESTS IN JAPAN

In accordance with my instructions among the first questions which I took up with GHQ related to the entry to Japan of representatives of Canadian insurance companies and of Aluminum Limited. Although we found little encouragement for the prospective entry of insurance representatives, in general it was apparent that it was SCAP's policy to discourage as much as possible the entry to Japan of representatives of any special foreign interests, economic or financial. I was assured unofficially, however, by Mr. LeCount of E.S.S., that if all other methods failed, if we attached one representative of Canadian insurance companies to our Mission in the capacity of a Financial Attaché or some other title, there should not be any serious objection or difficulty. In the meantime, as reported in telegrams, we have recommended that both life insurance and Aluminum, and other qualified and interested representatives of Canadian business firms, be included on the restitution teams which we understand will be invited by SCAP to visit Japan. There is some doubt whether these teams would have to be attached to their respective missions, but as the tendency is to require each mission to support its own nationals, in some cases even when working for SCAP, it is likely that they would have to [be] based on our Mission, which would present us with considerable difficulty in regard to proper billets, transportation and other facilities.

Although this seems to be the best method of meeting the question of getting representatives of legitimate Canadian interests to Japan, if the plans for forming a team and sending it to Japan remain unrealized for some time, we might seriously consider attaching for six months or so, one representative of Canadian life insurance, presumably the Sun Life agent, to Mr. Kenderdine's<sup>1</sup> staff here.

III. CANADIAN NATIONALS IN JAPAN

Since arriving in Japan I have seen and entertained all Canadian nationals living in the Tokyo-Yokohama area, while Mr. Kenderdine, on a recent trip to the Kansai, was able to visit those living in or near Kobe, Osaka and Kyoto. In time I hope to be able to see all Canadians living in Japan as I get time to leave Tokyo for any extensive trips. In Despatch No. 2 of August 30† I sent you a revised list of Canadians in Japan and their addresses, together with an appendix of Canadian officers and civilians working here in some connection with the occupation.

The largest group of Canadian nationals consists of the Franciscans, living in the outskirts of Tokyo, whose chief at present is Msgr. LeBlanc, and the Dominicans, mostly in or near Sendai, whose senior representative at present is Father Dionne. I have had three visits from Father Dionne; because of the comparative proximity, I have seen Msgr. LeBlanc quite often.

Father Robillard, the head of the Sulpiciens, residing in Fukuoka, visited the Legation recently. He was the first Canadian to express the need for a remittance of funds from Canada. I advised him to adopt the following procedure. The head of his Order in Montreal should request (I presume through the Department and the Embassy in Washington) a licence from the Treasury Department for the remittance of a specified amount of United States dollars to GHQ here, which in turn will notify and transmit the funds direct to the person initiating the request. Although Father Robillard did not expect to require funds for his school and church before the next two months or so, I offered to expedite the process if he wished by telegraphing the Department.

The Franciscans here in Tokyo have been experiencing great trouble in withdrawing sufficient funds from their bank account for their normal living and to complete the necessary repairs to their building. With GHQ's permission, I was able to accompany them to the Ministry of Finance where their full account was unfrozen, allowing them to draw on it as they required. This was possible by virtue of a SCAP directive of which Msgr. LeBlanc had not known, and which his bank had not seen fit to inform him, permitting aliens who were interned here during the war to have their bank accounts classified as "A" accounts against which they may draw freely on application.

The chief problem facing the Dominicans has been the recovery and repair of property belonging both to their Order and to the Good Shepherd sisters in Sendai. The history of the property is briefly that after the outbreak of war the Japanese Army compelled the Catholic Corporation in Sendai to sell the buildings and land at a ridiculously low price of approximately Y261,000. Shortly after the end of the war when Father Dionne attempted to recover the property he was told that it was now state property of the Japanese Government—a category which made recovery more difficult. In the meantime he negotiated with the prefectural authorities in Sendai who took the attitude that the original sale was free and that because of the inflated currency it should be repurchased at roughly Y680,000. During the war the property had deteriorated and many repairs were necessary. Father Dionne requested that the Japanese Government pay for repairs and that the cost be deducted from the price they were asking, a price which he was incidentally not prepared to pay. The negotiations became more and more complicated, so shortly after my arrival here, Father Dionne came to Tokyo to take the matter up with our Mission and the Civil Custodian's Office. Both he and I visited General Tansey, head of the Civil Custodian's Office, and just before Father Dionne returned to Sendai he had the satisfaction of learning that the property will be returned as soon as he completes filling the necessary documents. There will be no question of repurchase at all from the Japanese Government. The officers in General Tansey's Section advised him to go ahead with the repairs, paying for them out of the money which he still had from the original sale and then later on, when the repairs were completed, to wrestle with the question as to who should bear the ultimate cost of the renovation. Although they have not given a definite promise on this, there is a reasonable hope that the Japanese authorities would bear these expenses also. The only unsatisfactory feature in the case is that the Japanese had built a road across one of the properties. On this matter the Civil Custodian's Office said they had no jurisdiction and could not compel the Japanese to change the road and restore the property to its status quo ante.

Living conditions for Canadians in Japan are far from easy or pleasant. The Japanese Government has been held much more strictly to account in supplying extra rations that foreigners are entitled to buy from the Japanese stores. In many localities such supplies are unavailable, or very scarce, or of poor quality. As I reported last winter, there is a wide difference in conditions according to the locality. In some areas near rich agricultural districts, it is much better than in those near large destroyed urban areas. Every Canadian has received in the course of the last two months, two distributions of Canadian Red Cross supplies. In outlying areas this distribution was done by the British Consular Office and the supplies were originally brought in by naval or other auxiliary vessels; it is gratifying to us that these parcels are of Canadian origin and much appreciated. All British nationals have received the same distribution. These distributions will continue until the present supplies are used up.

There has been set up in Yokohama an International Relief Committee headed by Mr. C. H. Moss, who is vested by the United States Army with permission to sell basic supplies to bona fide Allied nationals. In this area so far the Committee has sold some flour and clothing and hopes in time to be able to extend their services to the more remote country districts.

I have received in the course of the last week of September three applications for new Canadian passports for return to Canada. Valid passports are required by the United States authorities for travel to the United States.

FAR EASTERN WAR CRIMES—TRIAL OF LESSER CRIMINALS

1. Further to my memorandum of January 7, 1946†, with respect to the trial of the major Far Eastern war criminals, I should like to put forward some recommendations with regard to the punishment of particular Japanese accused of atrocities against Canadians. These recommendations are concurred in by the War Crimes Advisory Committee and the Deputy Ministers of National Defence and Justice.

2. If the Canadian interest in the punishment of such persons is to be protected, it seems to me that these arrangements should be concluded as soon as possible. I am wondering, therefore, if you feel that the following recommendations could be taken up with Cabinet for its approval at its next meeting.

3. The United States proposals make provision for the trial of particular accused by the national military courts of states "in occupation of areas formerly dominated by Japan".

Since there is no Canadian occupation force in the Far East, it would not be possible under the United States proposals, or under the War Crimes Regulations (Canada), for particular accused to be tried in that area by Canadian military courts convened under the Canadian regulations. Again, it would appear to be impracticable to move Far Eastern war criminals to Canada (or to other areas in which Canadian military forces are functioning) for trial. Military courts for the trial of particular persons accused of atrocities against Canadians would, therefore, have to be convened either by the United States military authorities or by the United Kingdom military authorities in their respective areas of occupation in the Far East.

4. Evidence of Far Eastern war crimes against Canadian nationals and members of the Canadian armed forces is being collected by a War Crimes Unit functioning at National Defence Headquarters, Ottawa. The Unit reports that there is an accumulation of evidence of atrocities committed against Canadians, both in the areas occupied by United Kingdom forces (e.g. Hong Kong) and in areas now occupied by United States forces (e.g. prison camps in Japan proper). In a number of these cases, the accused has been or can be identified. If the Canadian interest is to be protected, arrangements will have to be made for their trial and punishment.

5. In view of the above, it is recommended as follows:

(1) That approval be given to negotiating with the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom arrangements whereby:

(a) provision will be made for the trial of persons accused of serious war crimes against Canadian nationals or members of the Canadian armed forces by military courts convened by the United States military authorities where the accused is within the jurisdiction of the United States occupation force in the Far East, and by the United Kingdom military authorities where the accused is within the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom occupation force in the Far East;

(b) military representatives, of a rank not less than that of Lieutenant-Colonel, from National Defence Headquarters, will be sent to Tokyo and Hong Kong to act in liaison with the United States and United Kingdom war crimes offices, respectively; such representatives to be vested with and to exercise the following powers and duties:

(i) to assist in the collection and collation of further evidence of atrocities against Canadians;

(ii) to assist in providing the United States or United Kingdom authorities with such available evidence from Canadian sources as may be considered of value to them;

(iii) to request the United States or United Kingdom military authorities to convene military courts under their respective regulations, for the trial of particular persons within their jurisdiction against whom, in the opinion of the appropriate Canadian military representative, a prima facie case of a war crime (within the limits of paragraph 4 hereunder) against a Canadian has been established;

(iv) to assist in the prosecution of Canadian cases if so authorized by the appropriate United States or United Kingdom authorities;

(v) to act in general liaison with United States and United Kingdom war crimes offices in the Far East.

(2) That the Canadian military representatives referred to immediately above be empowered to request from the United States or United Kingdom authorities trial of the following persons only:

(a) persons charged with or suspected of having committed a violation of the laws and usages of war; and

(b) whose alleged criminality has resulted in the death or permanent disability of a Canadian national or a member of the Canadian armed forces or whose offence is in other respects considered to be of a most serious nature.<sup>1</sup>

TELEGRAM EX-204

SECRET. Trial and punishment of particular Far Eastern War Criminals accused of atrocities against Canadians.<sup>1</sup>

Would you please ascertain from the appropriate United States authorities whether the United States Government would approve an arrangement whereby particular Far Eastern war criminals now in the area controlled by United States forces, accused by Canadian military authorities of serious war crimes against Canadians, would be tried and punished by United States military courts, Canadian military personnel participating, where requested by the United States authorities, in the prosecution. Under United States proposals, military courts can only be convened by states now in occupation of areas formerly dominated by Japan. Moreover, under War Crimes Regulations (Canada) Canadian military courts can only be convened by senior officers in command of forces and, since Canada has no occupation force in the Far East, no courts could be convened in that area. If the United States authorities agree, an officer of a rank not less than Lieutenant-Colonel could be sent to Tokyo to exercise the following powers and duties:

(1) To assist in the collection and collation of further evidence of atrocities against Canadians;

(2) To assist in providing the United States authorities with such available evidence from Canadian sources as may be considered of value to them;

(3) To request the United States military authorities to convene military courts under their respective regulations for the trial of particular persons within their jurisdiction against whom, in the opinion of the appropriate Canadian military representative, a prima facie case of a war crime against a Canadian has been established;

(4) To assist in the prosecution of Canadian cases if so authorized by the appropriate United States authority;

(5) To act in general liaison with United States War Crimes Offices in the Far East.

It would be understood, moreover, that the Canadian military representative referred to above would be empowered to request from the United States authorities the trial only of persons charged with, or suspected of, having committed a violation of the laws and usages of war, whose alleged crimality has resulted in the death or permanent disability of a Canadian national, or a member of the Canadian armed forces, or whose offence against Canadians is, in other respects, considered to be of a most serious nature.

The United States war crimes authorities in the Far East, under the proposed arrangement, would of course be entitled to determine whether or not a prima facie case has been established to their satisfaction in any particular instance and to decide whether or not a court should be convened. It is not expected that the number of requests for trial would be large.

A similar telegram is going forward to the Canadian High Commissioner in London with regard to Far Eastern war criminals under United Kingdom jurisdiction.

Could you please treat as most urgent and ascertain the United States reply as soon as possible. If the United States agree, you might also enquire as to the most expeditious means by which the Canadian representative could proceed to Tokyo.

Dear Sir,

FAR EASTERN WAR CRIMES

The Government policy is understood to be that persons to be charged are those "charged with or suspected of having committed a violation of the laws and usages of war; and whose alleged criminality has resulted in the death or permanent disability of a Canadian national, etc., or whose offence is in other respects considered to be of a most serious nature". It is also understood that arrangements to implement this policy by action are incomplete and under consideration by the Governments involved.

The persons on the attached lists† are suspected of having committed War Crimes within the limits of the policy declared and a request should be made to the Governments concerned to have them apprehended if not already in custody, or held in custody if already apprehended, until such time as arrangements may be made for their trials.

Washington, February 22, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Further my WA-892 of today's date†, trial and punishment of Far Eastern war criminals accused of atrocities against Canadians.

Contrary to the advice received this morning, I have now received formal memorandum from the State Department, dated February 22nd, text of which follows. Begins:

In its memorandum of January 24th, 1946,† the Canadian Embassy made certain proposals regarding the participation of Canadian military personnel in the prosecution of Far Eastern war criminals in the area now controlled by United States forces, accused by Canadian military authorities of serious war crimes against Canadians.

The appropriate military authorities and the Department of State are in agreement in approving the proposals of the Canadian Government provided that the Canadian Government can make an officer available to sit on the military tribunals. Such officer would be in addition to any Canadian personnel participating in investigations or prosecutions. Based on a recommendation from General MacArthur, it is suggested that, in addition to the officer just mentioned, the Canadian Government send to Tokyo two other officers and an enlisted clerk and an enlisted stenographer. It is recommended that each of the three officers be possessed of legal backgrounds, that one be a Lieutenant-Colonel or Colonel, to sit as a member of the tribunals, and that the other two be Majors, or of lesser rank to assist in the investigations and prosecutions of crime against Canadian nationals.

If the foregoing meets with the approval of the Canadian Government, it is suggested that the Canadian authorities get in touch with the appropriate War Department representatives to arrange details concerning transportation and other matters. Ends.

DESPATCH A.278

London, April 6, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my Despatch No. A.199 of March 21st† concerning War Criminals in the Far East, and to report an amendment to the letter from the Dominions Office attached thereto.†

2. It was then stated that the Canadian officer to be sent to Hong Kong to assist in the investigation and prosecution of cases of crimes against Canadians would be precluded from being himself the actual prosecutor in any case by the fact that under the Royal Warrant for the trial of War Criminals the Prosecutor must be subject to the Army Act of the United Kingdom.

3. It is now pointed out that this difficulty could be overcome by attaching the officer to an United Kingdom unit. This procedure under the provision of the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act, 1933, would automatically bring him under the Army Act and so enable him to act as prosecutor.

4. We are informed that if this course is agreeable to the Canadian Government, the necessary steps will be taken to attach the officer to an United Kingdom unit.

5. The above would also apply to the suggestion that a Canadian officer should be sent out to sit as a member on the courts trying Canadian cases.

DESPATCH 683

SECRET. URGENT

Sir,

1. I have the honour to refer to Dominions Office despatch W.F. 219/2/24. Secret, dated March 14, 1946,† enclosed with your despatch No. A.199 of March 21, 1946.†

2. The two points raised by the Dominions Office were:

(a) The eligibility of Canadian Officers to serve as Prosecutors in trials carried out under the Royal Warrant, and

(b) The provision of an additional Canadian officer to serve as a member of British Military Courts trying Canadian cases.

3. Regarding point (a), it has been suggested that Canadian Army officers, not being subject to the British Army Act, are not eligible to prosecute in any cases which are held under the Royal Warrant as published in Army Order 81 of 1945. The Royal Warrant and relevant Rules of Procedure have been examined by the appropriate officers of the Department of National Defence, and it is recommended that the Dominions Office be asked to reconsider their opinion in the light of the following:

(a) Up to now the Department of National Defence has always interpreted the requirements that the Prosecutor must himself be subject to Military Law generally regardless whether Canadian or British, and there have been instances on this side of the Atlantic where Canadian officers have prosecuted at Courts-Martial conducted under British Military Law. An instance of this is the trial recently conducted in Winnipeg, Manitoba, of 7260898 Sgt. [.....] R.A.M.C.

(b) The suggestion of the Dominions Office that a Canadian officer sit as a member of one of their Courts raises a point which can probably be used to strengthen our case regarding the employment of Canadian officers as prosecutors. Rule of Procedure 19(A) provides that "An officer is not eligible for serving on a Court-Martial if he is not subject to Military Law". If a Canadian officer cannot serve as a Prosecutor because he is not subject to British Military Law, it is difficult to see how a Canadian officer can qualify as a member of a Court. On the other hand, if the Rule is interpreted favourably in the case of a member of a Court, it should be interpreted equally favourably in the case of a Prosecutor.

(c) If the officers who have now left for Tokyo and Hong Kong are judged ineligible to prosecute, it is submitted that they are, in any event, entitled to take part in the trials as Counsel. In this connection, it is noted that the Royal Warrant specifically makes provision for Counsel within the terms of Rules of Procedure 88 and 93. All of the officers proceeding as above are Barristers-at-Law, and it seems clear that they come within the terms of these Rules.

(d) It is believed that there will be a number of accused who will be charged with joint offences against British, Australian and Canadian personnel, and in such cases, it would not be unreasonable to expect our officers to be chosen as prosecutors. In addition, it is appreciated that in cases where War Crimes have been committed against Canadian personnel alone, it is in the interests of the Canadian public opinion that the prosecutor be a Canadian.

4. Regarding point (b), it has been suggested that an additional Canadian officer be sent to Singapore and Hong Kong to sit as a member of British Courts trying Canadian cases. It is noted that this employment will be only part time and that the officer should not be of a rank higher than Lieut.-Colonel. The Dominions Office has itself suggested that this additional officer be not despatched until it is known when the trials in question may begin. It will, of course, be useless to send such an officer if he cannot sit as a member of the Court because he is not subject to British Military Law.

5. It will not be possible to consider Colonel Moss, M.C., who has been despatched to sit on United States Courts because, in the first place, he is of a rank higher than that requested by the British and, in fact, would be senior to the British Permanent Presidents and, secondly, because the United States authorities have indicated that they propose to use the services of Colonel Moss on a full time basis and not exclusively in cases involving crimes against Canadians.

6. It is suggested that the Dominions Office be advised that such an officer can be provided when required. In the meantime, Lieut.-Col. J. O. F. H. Orr, commanding the Canadian War Crimes Liaison Detachment, who will shortly proceed to Hong Kong and Singapore, has been asked to look over the situation on his arrival and to forward any constructive recommendations in this regard.

7. It would be appreciated if you would draw these observations to the attention of the Dominions Office as soon as possible.

Ottawa, June 21, 1946

CANADIAN WAR CRIMES LIAISON DETACHMENT—FAR EAST VISITING FORCES ACT

As you will probably be aware this Headquarters is now represented in both Tokyo and Hong Kong by a "Detachment" totalling 4 officers and 4 warrant officers. This personnel are carried on strength of Commandant NDHQ; of these one officer and one WO are stationed permanently in Hong Kong, one or more of the remainder travel to and fro and are liable to be in Hong Kong, Singapore, or elsewhere under the jurisdiction of Commander in Chief Allied Land Forces South East Asia from time to time.

2. In addition, and actually quite independently, Major J. T. Loranger has been made available to C in C ALFSEA as a member of Military Courts.

3. As far back as Mar 46 the Dominions Office in London raised some question as to the eligibility of our officers to prosecute in their trials and at a later date offered the solution that they should be attached under the provisions of the Visiting Forces Act. While not objecting to attachment in this manner, and this was an afterthought by the Dominions Office, we took the view that there was no legal bar to our officers acting as prosecutors; the Dominions Office were so advised through the Department of External Affairs and the High Commissioner in London. In this connection External letter No 683 of 20 April 46 to High Commissioner is relevant, as also a further letter now going forward.

4. The objection to Canadian officers serving as prosecutors appeared to be based on Rule of Procedure 24, wherein it is provided the prosecutor must be subject to Military Law. This requirement has always been interpreted in its wider sense in this country and on a number of occasions Canadian Officers have served both as members and prosecutors in court-martials convened under British Military or Air Force Law. In addition to this we argued that if ineligible to serve as prosecutors, our officers, all being qualified barristers, were entitled to serve as Counsel within Rules of Procedure 88 and 93, which it will be noted are specifically mentioned in the British Regulations for War Crimes Trials. We also argued from the fact that a member of a court must also be subject to Military Law, that if one officer can sit as a member, it is hard to see why another one cannot serve as a prosecutor. As stated below the War Office has since agreed that our officers may sit as members although this is based on para 5 of the British War Crimes Regulations which makes no mention of being "Subject to Military Law", and this argument may therefore lose its force.

5. The subject came to a head on 11 Jun with HQ Land Forces Hong Kong asking ALFSEA when Major Loranger might sit. We made our position quite clear in a message of 14 Jun. However, ALFSEA, on 15 Jun, asked the War Office to arrange attachment under the Visiting Forces Act. The War Office in their reply of 19 Jun have conceded that Major Loranger may sit as a member without being attached, but they still consider it necessary that prosecutors should be attached under the Visiting Forces Act. Copies of the a/m cables† are forwarded herewith and it should be noted no action has been asked of us up to the present.

6. The question has one awkward angle because at least one trial has taken place in Hong Kong, at which one of our officers prosecuted. We would be very unhappy to see this particular trial upset due to lack of necessary formalities. We do not, however, feel that you should raise this particular question with the War Office, but should have it in mind in your dealings with them. If an attachment becomes necessary, care should be taken to fix the date to cover this point and 29 April is the date our officers arrived in Hong Kong.

7. In view of the probability that action to effect an attachment under the Visiting Forces Act will be necessary, there is forwarded herewith a copy of a recent memorandum of the JAG† outlining the steps which would be necessary. It is considered doubtful whether the solution in para 1 (b) thereof could be adopted as the "Detachment" in the Far East has never been set up as a unit.

8. By the time this letter reaches you the War Office may have approached you, or ourselves, with some request for attachment of this personnel. In any event you are asked to make inquiries at the War Office and ascertain their views and requirements.

London, August 7, 1946

Dear Horne,

FAR EASTERN WAR CRIMES TRIALS

I am very sorry to have been so long in replying to your letter of the 27th June† about the status of Canadian officers in Far Eastern War Crimes trials, but I am afraid that it has taken some time to obtain a final opinion on the legal position.

I am glad to be able to let you know, however, that the conclusion has now been reached that there is no legal necessity for the attachment of Canadian officers to United Kingdom forces under the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act 1933, in order to enable them to act as prosecutors at military courts for the trial of war crimes (Army Order 81/1945) in Hong Kong.

The Army Council has declared the military forces of the United Kingdom and of Canada, which at any time are serving outside the Dominion of Canada, to be "serving together" under Section 4(4)(a) of the Visiting Forces Act. Canadian officers serving in Hong Kong, therefore, are to be treated as if they were members of the United Kingdom Forces of relative rank. They would thus be eligible to sit as members of or act as prosecutors at a Field General Court Martial under the Army Act, and consequently, pursuant to Regulation 3 of Army Order 81 of 1945 (a copy of which is enclosed),† at military courts for the trial of war criminals, although not subject to United Kingdom military law.

I understand that the War Office have already been in touch with your military authorities about the matter and have informed them of the position as it has now been determined.

Yours sincerely,

ERIC MACHTIG

WAR CRIMES TRIALS—JAPAN

It is proposed herein to review the situation in Japan as it affects us with a critical eye, and to suggest steps which might be taken to hasten the withdrawal and winding up of the War Crimes Liaison Detachment and the War Crimes Investigation Section.

2. The main point of criticism is the operational feature but I first touch on the administrative side which I feel will influence our decisions considerably.

3. Our overall participation in the trials in Japan was by invitation of the US State Department but this invitation was really concerned with the trials of Major War Criminals. The proposal to send a "team" to represent us and to assist in the trials of Lesser War Criminals arose out of our suggestion which was welcomed by the US authorities. On first arrival in Tokyo our personnel were found quarters by the US 8th Army and afforded all the amenities enjoyed by their own personnel. The living conditions were good, canteens, messes, Post Exchange, etc., were available. With the arrival of the British Commonwealth Occupation Force, our people, along with other foreigners, were ejected from their quarters and are now denied most of the other amenities aforesaid. They are quartered and fed under British arrangements; the British have little to offer, they live "hard" and our people find they can scarcely eat the food.

4. I myself doubt whether the above can be treated as a breach of contract or even as a breach of faith. The development is however, a great surprise to us and has made our people very uncomfortable. Lt-Col Orr is of the view that his Detachment are the unintended victims of high level decisions, to which they would have been exceptions, if they had been thought of at the time. He has not asked that any efforts be made to remedy the matter; he and his staff are content to bear it but they are all the more anxious to get the job over and leave. This matter is covered in detail on HQS 8959-9-4 Vol 2; see also folio 36 of this file which in a few words shows how bad conditions have become.

5. The provision of transport for duty purposes has been the source of much irritation; there is even the suggestion that some minor officials are being actively un-cooperative. Authority has been granted to ship them a vehicle which should ease the situation but it will be some weeks before it can get to them. This matter is dealt with on HQS 8959-9-4 FD 78; see also folios 25-27 on this file.

6. Turning now to the preparation of cases and conduct of trials, a good summary will be found at folios 14 and 15. We considered the matter on 7 Aug (folio 18) and decided that it was too early to make any move. The situation has not improved and is reviewed in folios 34, 35 and 37; I have also a personal letter which you read.

7. From recent correspondence it appears there are over 600 suspects held in Tokyo; new suspects arrive faster than cases are dealt with. There are actually a hundred cases ready for trial. In April they completed 10 trials, in May 5; other months figures are not available but one trial involving 13 defendants has just finished and lasted 9 weeks. Our own people are actively interested in about 75 individuals now in custody in Japan; they have filed charges against 25 of these, some will be joined with US charges, and some are still being prepared. On 5 Sep, nearly 5 months after their arrival, their first case came on for trial and that as a result of pressure as described in folio 37 & below.

8. The cause of all this is laid to cumbersome procedure, shortage of courts (there are only two sitting), shortage of defending officers, changing of personnel, and the latitude given to the defence. It may be inferred that some of those involved have only one interest, i.e. to get home, and that the rest, many of them civilians on high rates of pay, don't care how long it lasts.

9. To show that we are not alone in our criticism you are referred to a letter dated 8 Jul 46† from Lord Wright (The Chairman of United Nations War Crimes Commission) on his return from a visit to the Far East; the letter (folio 31) is addressed to the JAG of the US Army in Washington whose reply is at folio 32.†

10. In Tokyo we have two Warrant Officers, former P.Ws. who returned out of a sense of duty to give evidence. One, SM Shepherd, was advised his wife expected a multiple birth; compassionate return was proposed and Lt-Col Orr used this situation to force one of his cases to trial in order to use this man's evidence; we turned down the application (which involved some $600.00 extra expense for air travel) when we found that only one child was expected. This rather cut the ground from under Lt-Col Orr's feet and the US efforts to accommodate him stopped at once. It is easy to be wise after the event but in the long run we would probably have saved this money and more if we had authorized return by air, etc. Both of these WOs still want to get away and have both applied. Lt-Col Orr has suggested in the case of SM Manchester that he leave at latest by 15 Oct, even if his evidence has not been taken. We have already approved return of SM Shepherd by ship as soon as he can be spared.

11. The following action is now proposed:

(a) That Lt-Col Orr be instructed that both his WO witnesses be despatched by surface sailing earliest after 15 Oct or before that date, in his discretion.

(b) That through CAS<sup>1</sup> Washington we inform the US War Dept (War Crimes Office) of the above instructions and also ask them to procure us an estimate on when the Detachment can be expected to complete its work. We should point out that we propose to instruct our Detachment to work to this estimate and that we propose to withdraw them at the end of the estimated time.

(c) In conjunction with (b) offer the suggestion that our personnel be allowed some of the privileges previously enjoyed and that if it is not possible for them to be quartered and fed (on any reasonable basis of repayment) that they be afforded some relief of diet through use of their canteens, Post Exchange, etc.

(d) Discuss this action informally with Department of External Affairs and forward them copies of our action in due course.

12. One further point for consideration is whether the action proposed in (b) and (c) above would be more effective if handled through the Department of External Affairs.

DTC/Vol. 295, T10182

Procès-verbal d'une réunionMinutes of a Meeting

[Ottawa,] March 18, 1946

Record of an informal meeting held in Mr. Macdonnell's Office, Room 133, East Block, Friday, March 15th, 1946, to discuss the question of reparation from Japan.

Present were:

Mr. R. M. Macdonnell, Department of External Affairs
Mr. S. D. Pierce, Department of External Affairs
Mr. G. Harvey, Department of Trade and Commerce
Mr. A. Neal, Department of Trade and Commerce
Mr. H. S. Hall, Department of Trade and Commerce
Mr. K. Burbridge, Custodian's Office
Mr. G. Ignatieff, Department of External Affairs
Mr. J. Maybee, Department of External Affairs
Mr. J. H. Warren, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Macdonnell explained that the need for the meeting arose out of the desirability of giving some guidance to Mr. Pearson, Canadian delegate, and Mr. Norman, his alternate, to the Far Eastern Commission, with particular reference to the work of the Committee on Reparations set up under the Commission which is to meet in Washington on March 21st.

It was pointed out that as the shares of reparation from Japan would probably be allocated on the basis of contribution to the Pacific war, the Canadian portion would no doubt be relatively modest.

Mr. Burbridge of the Custodian's Office stated that the Canadian Government holds Japanese assets to the approximate value of three million dollars, and that claims filed with the Custodian against Japan without advertisement amount to approximately eleven million dollars. In this connection Mr. Burbridge observed that the total of eleven million dollars probably represented an inflated figure, since the majority of the claims registered were of the nature of statements of property and assets held in Japan, or in territories occupied by Japan, before the war, and may, therefore, bear little relation to actual damage sustained. It was the tentative view of the meeting that, having regard to the excess of claims over assets held by the Custodian, no steps should be taken at this stage to waive any part of the Canadian claim to reparation arising out of the war with Japan. In this connection the meeting was told that our delegate to the Far Eastern Commission had already been advised that the Government intends to retain any Japanese assets held by Canadian Custodian.

Mr. Macdonnell informed the meeting that the question of reparation from Japan had been taken up by the United Kingdom Government with the various members of the Commonwealth. The United Kingdom Government had suggested that discussion on the allocation of Japanese reparations as between different claimant countries should not, as in the case of reparation from Germany, be based on statistical estimates of respective war efforts and war losses. In the United Kingdom view a statistical comparison would be unreliable. As an alternative procedure the United Kingdom had proposed negotiation on a political basis. However, in the case of members of the Commonwealth some prior discussion might take place using a statistical basis of comparison (i.e. on the lines of data assembled for German reparations).

It was the opinion of the meeting that a reply should be made to the United Kingdom Government to the effect that, while the Canadian Government is inclined to agree that a statistical comparison is difficult with certain countries, and that to some extent the shares of various claimant nations might have to be decided on a broad political basis; the Canadian Government is, nevertheless, of the opinion that a statistical comparison would be useful not only as between members of the Commonwealth but with other interested countries, equally capable of furnishing reliable statistics, such as the United States, The Netherlands, and France.

The suggestion that a Commonwealth discussion should be undertaken before meeting the other countries was not favourably received by the meeting, as it was thought that such a Conference might give the undesirable impression that the Dominions were entering negotiations as a Commonwealth "bloc", and the opinion was expressed that the Far Eastern Commission was the most suitable place to pursue this matter.

It was the view of the meeting that some of the factors which should be taken into account in the preparation of a statistical summary of Canadian contribution to the war against Japan were as follows:

1. Mutual Aid to China, Australia, India.
2. Mutual Aid to U.S.S.R. after May 7th, 1945.
3. Cost of maintaining forces in the Far East and on the West Coast of Canada.
4. Commercial losses in the East attributable to the Pacific war.
5. Relief sent to Allied nationals in the Far East during the war.

It was agreed that the Bureau of Statistics should be asked to prepare a statistical summary of the Canadian war effort against Japan, along the lines used in the preparation of a similar study regarding the Canadian claim to reparation from Germany, taking into consideration the factors noted above.

Ottawa, March 23, 1946

SECRET. Your telegrams No. 53 and 54 of March 8th, 1946†, reparation from Japan.

We share your view that statistical comparison of war effort against Japan and losses experienced attributable to the Pacific war may, in certain cases, prove unreliable.

However, it is our view that, while to some extent undoubtedly agreement regarding the allocation of shares amongst certain of the interested Governments should be reached on broad political lines; consideration should nevertheless be given to using a statistical basis of comparison between the various members of the Commonwealth and other countries equally capable of producing reliable statistics.

For this reason the Canadian Government is inclined to doubt the value of any formal consultations restricted to the Commonwealth prior to entering negotiations with others. We feel that the appropriate body for considering this problem in its initial stages is the Far Eastern Commission where members of the Commonwealth concerned are represented, and there will, of course, be an opportunity for informal exchanges of views.

CONFIDENTIAL. Reference our teletype EX-757 of March 14th† and subsequent communications† regarding reparations from Japan.

Canadian interest in reparations from Japan has now been discussed by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations. The view of the Committee is that in drawing up any agreed reparation policy for Japan consideration should be given to the following points:

1. Payment for essential and approved imports should be a first charge of the Japanese economy. In particular, proceeds of Japanese exports from stocks and current production should be utilized for this purpose.

2. Remittances from Japanese abroad, which, prior to the war, were a considerable item in the Japanese balance of payments, should be applied to meeting the cost of necessary imports and should, therefore, not be available for distribution as reparation from Japan.

3. The indemnities paid for property owned in Allied Countries (e.g. Canada) to Japanese being repatriated should not be made available for reparations payments.

For your information, a statistical summary of Canadian war effort and losses attributable to the Pacific war is being prepared by the Bureau of Statistics. In addition to the budgetary cost of the war and loss of life in the forces, this summary will include such factors as

1. Mutual Aid to China, Australia, India.
2. Mutual Aid to U.S.S.R. after May 7th, 1945.
3. Commercial losses in the Far East due to the Pacific War.
4. Relief sent to Allied nationals in the Far East during the war.
5. Cost of the repatriation of Canadian nationals from the Far East.

A rough estimate of the Canadian position with regard to Japanese assets held by the Custodian and claims, arising out of the war with Japan, which have been registered with the Custodian without advertisement is as follows:

1. Japanese assets (2 to 4 million dollars).
2. Claims against Japan (Nine to eleven million dollars).

Further instructions on the subject of Japanese reparations will be sent to you from time to time as information is made available to this Department.

Your WA-2064† and enclosure† to your despatch No. 932 of May 2nd†. FEC Reparations Committee. Division of Shares.

1. With regard to the United Kingdom's suggestion that it would be advantageous to the Commonwealth countries to reach an understanding as to the shares each would aim at securing before the general discussions in the Reparations Committee begin, we would draw your attention to the previous U.K. proposals on this matter (repeated to you in our EX-789 and EX-790 of March 18th)†, and to our reply to them (repeated to you in our EX-864 of March 25).† In our reply we stated that consideration should be given to using a statistical basis of comparison between the various members of the Commonwealth and other countries equally capable of producing reliable statistics.

2. With reference to the division of shares between Allied Nations proposed by the United Kingdom in their document under reference, we would urge that when any such initial proposal for division of shares is brought before the Reparations Committee, the Canadian claim should be presented separately and not as a percentage of the British Commonwealth claim. This should be made clear at the informal Commonwealth discussions this week.

3. The "Tentative Estimates of Damage Suffered" in Appendix to U.K. document have been noted. In this connection the summary of the Canadian war effort and war losses in the Pacific, now being prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, will shortly be made available to you.

4. It should be borne in mind in all discussions of Japanese reparations that Canada's long term interest is in the peaceful economic recovery of Japan and that payments for essential imports should be the first charge on Japanese industries and production.

IMMEDIATE. Your WA-2090†, paragraph 3, Interim Removal Programme, items on ball bearings, iron and steel, thermo-electric power, soda ash, chlorine and caustic soda.

1. We incline to the United Kingdom view that a somewhat larger industrial capacity be retained by Japan especially in ball bearing industry since further removals will be possible under Final Reparations Programme. The limiting factor in the Interim Reparations Programme is that removals should not strip Japan of the minimum requirements of a viable economy. Our view is that since doubt has arisen on this point, the more liberal British estimates should be adopted. This is especially applicable to producers' goods industries serving other sectors of the economy.

2. Our interest in reconciling where possible divergences on British and American views, however, makes us unwilling to press the British case if a reasonable compromise can be achieved. The wider object of expediting the removals programme with the minimum of delay that the Japanese economy may be stabilized and that Japan's ability to trade may be at least partially restored should likewise be borne in mind.

3. We wish to reserve the privilege of nominating personnel to the reparations section of SCAP pending further information, although it now appears doubtful if we shall have strong interest in such nominations.

Memorandum from First Secretary, Embassy in United States, to Alternate Delegate<sup>1</sup>, Far Eastern Commission

[Washington,] May 27, 1946

The following may be of some help in preparing your memorandum on the FEC insofar as reparations are concerned.

The Reparations Committee of the Far Eastern Commission has accomplished a considerable amount since it commenced deliberations March 11th. Two meetings per week have been held and the Committee has accomplished three major tasks:

- (a) the consideration and approval of a policy in respect to restitution of looted objects;
- (b) consideration and approval of a reasonably extensive policy on interim removals; (in this regard the U.K. are bringing forward a suggested policy on additional industries, which should be dealt with in the near future).
- (c) a review of the future activities of the Reparations Committee. This was raised by the introduction of a proposal to have an Inter-Allied Reparations Committee or Board which would be more independent than the present Committee. The proposal is strongly opposed by the United Kingdom on the ground that the topics to be given this new body, such as division of shares and the question of overseas assets, are of basic importance and should be settled by the Commission and not by a subordinate body.

The representatives of the British Commonwealth at an informal meeting on May 25 came to the conclusion that the Reparations Committee could not proceed much farther until definite decisions had been reached on the subjects of division of shares, overseas assets, and war booty. It was agreed to recommend to the respective Commonwealth Governments that each member should now press for early consideration of these matters at the Commission level at least, and at a higher level if necessary.

The general instructions which the Canadian representative has received on the subject of reparations are not in any way at variance with the views of the United Kingdom. The main point that Canada wishes to have kept in mind is that Canada's long term interest is in the peaceful economic recovery of Japan, that payments for essential imports should be a first charge on Japanese industry and production, and that extraction of reparations should be carefully limited to prevent the possibility of it being necessary for the Allied nations to assist the Japanese financially or otherwise at a later date. The only special interest that Canada has is in connection with the Japanese fishing industry, and on this subject Canada's interests and those of the United States are similar, namely, to prevent exploitation of the available supplies of fish, which have been the subject of agreements between Canada and the United States for the purpose of conservation.

It is the opinion of the representative who has been attending all the meetings of the Reparations Committee that a great deal of time is wasted by such attendance, and that Canada's interest could amply be protected at the Steering Committee or Commission level.

Chief Economist, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Dear Sir,

Ottawa, June 11, 1946

On the subject of reparations from Japan, statistical data have been prepared as requested. In a letter of August 23, 1945, information was submitted relevant to the reparations claim against Germany and similar categories have been adopted here. As in the case of Germany, this letter ignores property losses. It is understood that the Department of External Affairs is obtaining this information directly from the Custodian of Enemy Property.

It should be noted that the present figures are not as accurate as the ones pertaining to Germany, the war effort against Japan having been of smaller scope and much more difficult to summarize in statistical terms.

(1) Budgetary cost of the war against Japan

(a) Armed Services, $548 millions.

Data were prepared in consultation with Department of National Defence and Department of Finance. Direct costs of war against Japan were included.

(b) Mutual Aid, $294 millions.

This is Mutual Aid to China, Australia, New Zealand and India. The latter was on British account and amounted to $161 millions of the above total. Nothing was added for Mutual Aid to U.S.S.R. because C.M.A.B. officers expressed the view it had little to do with Japanese war. Estimates were prepared by Dominion Bureau of Statistics using Mutual Aid accounts.

(c) Repatriation of Canadians from Japanese territories, $350 thousands.

This is a small item included at the request of Mr. Ignatieff, who provided it.

The total of the above three items, (1a), (1b) and (1c), is $842 millions in round figures.

(2) Estimated man-years served in war against Japan

(a) Number of man-years served in the forces against Japan, 147,825.

R.C.N.	4,940
Army	89,625
Air Force	53,260

Figures provided by Deputy Minister of National Defence to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, May 9, were on a basis which could not be reconciled with the financial estimates above. The figures for the Navy and Air Force have now been revised downward in consultation with the Services themselves.

(b) Number of man-years served in the production of munitions and war supplies for the war in the Pacific, 427,073.

Estimates made by Economic Research Branch, Department of Reconstruction and Supply. Seventy per cent of the total is finished munitions. The bulk of the remainder is essential materials (except foodstuffs). It was assumed that all munitions produced between V-E and V-J Days were for use in the Pacific Theatre. It was also assumed that shipments to Pacific War Zone countries after 1942 were for the troops operating against Japan. Some allowance was made for shipments to the United States and the United Kingdom which might have been destined for use in the Far East.

(c) Number of man-years served in the production of wartime food exports to Pacific War Zone above peacetime level, 116,373.

Estimates on same basis as in the case of Germany.

(3) Fatal military casualties, 964.

This includes fatal battle, deaths whilst P.W., presumed killed and missing. Wounded and injured are excluded.

Letter from National Defence to External Affairs of April 29, 1946.†

Additional information on shipping losses will be forwarded as soon as possible.

Yours faithfully,

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

WITH R. E. COLLINS,<sup>2</sup> JULY 9, 1946

Mr. Collins telephoned yesterday, July 8th, to report on a meeting of Committee No. 3 on Reparations<sup>3</sup> held that morning. The contents of his report are contained in WA-2735 of July 8th† from Washington. After this conversation, I conferred with Messrs. Menzies, Maybee, Pierce, Moran and Warren.

In our conversation this morning, Collins said that he thought the U.S.S.R. would probably veto the proposal of the U.K., which had been forwarded from Committee No. 1, namely, that the Far Eastern Commission devise a plan for the division of Japanese reparations among claimant countries on broad political lines. In case this were not done, he wished to have our opinion on three points for his guidance at the Steering Committee which was to meet at 10.00 a.m. today. I outlined our views as follows:

1. Should reparations be dealt with by an Inter-Allied Reparations Committee, or, as preferred by the United Kingdom, by the Far Eastern Commission itself?

I said we believed that a separate committee seemed to be required because of the amount of detailed work involved. The proposals of the U.S.S.R. and U.S.A. seem reasonable in that they make provision in the terms of reference for the Commission itself to review such questions as division of shares, overseas assets and the list of claimant countries which the United Kingdom had indicated should be considered only by the F.E.C. Canadian interest, however, in the matter is small and we would be satisfied with whichever body the majority wish to have made responsible.

2. Should the problem of reparations and division of shares be approached on broad political lines, as proposed by the United Kingdom, or through the consideration of statistical data to be provided by the claimant countries?

Our position has been indicated as favouring the statistical approach based on securing reliable and comparable data where these are available. This process seems to have been satisfactory in connection with German reparations. The United Kingdom have also recognized the need for such statistical data in discussing certain phases of the problem. If, however, the United Kingdom believe there are difficulties in applying this method to Japanese reparations, and if their argument seems sound, Canada should be willing to reconsider the matter. In any case it is not deemed of sufficient importance to us to insist on maintaining our position.

3. Should the proposed division of reparations now take account of Japanese assets outside of Japan?

We realize that our interest in external assets is small. The Custodian's office reports some $3,000,000 worth of Japanese assets in Canada against which there are claims of some $11,000,000. This amount is negligible when compared with the estimated total of Canadian reparation claims of some $842,000,000 plus two ships. We wish to maintain our position that the assets of Japan in Canada should be left for disposal by us in dealing with Canadian claims, as was the case with German reparations. This amount would be taken into account in the final settlement.

We have no objection to the F.E.C.'s considering the question at this time although it seems somewhat presumptuous to do so after having referred the matter to the conference of the Foreign Ministers in Paris.

1. You will recall that on July 7th we forwarded to you a copy of Teletype WA-2307 of June 3rd† from our Embassy in Washington in which it was indicated that we should raise inquiries regarding any industry in which you might be interested for the purpose of reparations. As was suggested in Mr. Mallory's<sup>1</sup> letter of June 22nd,† we forwarded to our Representative on the Far Eastern Commission the information that the Aluminum Company of Canada was interested in the possibility of securing under reparations or by purchase an aluminum sheet rolling mill and an aluminum foil mill from Japanese surplus plants. Our representative has since informed us that since the stage in the negotiations when claims for specific items of industrial equipment can be submitted has not yet been reached he had not submitted your suggestion as to an aluminum sheet rolling mill and an aluminum foil mill to the Reparations Committee.

2. We have noted that other countries have submitted fairly extensive lists of industries which their Governments desire to be made available for reparations allotment. While our interest in obtaining plants and industries from Japan as reparations is very small, it might increase our chance of obtaining these two aluminum plants when the time for bargaining comes if we submit a more extensive list. If you care to reconsider this problem we will be glad to forward any further information to our Representative on Far Eastern Commission. If we show an active interest in obtaining reparations from Japan our claim will no doubt be given more serious consideration.

1. You are instructed to inform the Reparations Committee that Canada is interested in the following items for allocation as reparations:

- A. Japanese equipment and methods connected with fisheries processes:
  1. The recovery of kelp and sea mosses particularly agars.
  2. Sea oyster culture.
  3. Utilization of fish skins.
  4. Utilization of whales.
  5. Pearl essence processes.
  6. Reduction of fish oils.
  7. Modern canning.
- B. Aluminum Sheet Rolling Mill.
- C. Aluminum Foil Mill.
- D. Electrolytic Caustic Soda Plant.

2. Your representative should make clear to the Committee that the Canadian Government, in presenting this list is doing so on the assumption that it will not be prevented from indicating an interest in further industrial equipment when more detailed information is available on the nature of the equipment to be allocated as reparations.

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION
JAPANESE REPARATIONS

1. POLICY DECISIONS.

Work in the Commission on Japanese Reparations has progressed very slowly since the last meeting of the Inter-Departmental Committee on May 31st.

(a) The Commission has issued a policy statement on the restitution of looted property. As this policy refers to objects removed from countries occupied by Japan during the war it does not concern Canada.

(b) The Commission has completed an interim reparations removal programme based on the Pauley report. This programme covers the following industries: army and navy arsenals, aircraft, light metals, machine tools, sulphuric acid, shipbuilding, ball and roller bearings, iron and steel, thermal electric power, soda ash, chlorine and caustic soda, and privately owned munition plants.

The Economic Committee of the Commission will probably complete its final report on a reparations removal programme for Japan within two months.

Since the Reparations Committee has failed to arrive at a percentage national share of reparations, the Interim Removal Programme as such will probably have to be abandoned.

2. DIVISION OF SHARES.

The Reparations Committee has been unable to agree to a procedure for presenting reparations claims or for dividing reparations to be made available. Statistical data on Canada's losses and expenditures in the Pacific war have been obtained from the Bureau of Statistics and supplied to our representative. In instructions to our delegate we have advocated a statistical approach to the problem of division of shares in so far as reliable and comparable data are available.

3. EXTERNAL ASSETS.

No progress has been made with this problem since the U.S.S.R. have stated that in their view the question of the disposal of Japanese owned assets located outside the four main islands of Japan was not within the jurisdiction of the Commission under its terms of reference. It was hoped that the Paris Conference of Foreign Ministers would make a ruling on the competence of the Commission in this matter, but this did not occur.

4. INTER-ALLIED REPARATIONS COMMITTEE.

Owing to differences of opinion between the United States, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. as to the status and function of the proposed committee no agreement has been reached. In instructions to our delegate we have approved in principle the establishment of an Inter-Allied Committee since the amount of detailed work involved in settling reparations problems would warrant a separate body. We have indicated, however, that as our interest is relatively small we would be satisfied with whatever body the majority of the Commission wishes to make responsible for Japanese Reparations.

5. All real progress on the main issues has been hindered by the uncertainty as to the Commission's competence to deal with external assets. It is doubtful if any work of importance will be done until this problem has been settled on a higher level.

6. REPARATIONS CONFERENCE.

In order to break the deadlock that has been reached in the Far Eastern Commission, the United States have now proposed a plan for a Reparations Conference to be convened on August 15th and to remain in continuous session until agreement has been reached on all the major problems. We took the same attitude with regard to this conference as we had toward the proposed Inter-Allied Committee, namely that we would be satisfied with whatever body the majority of the Commission wishes to make responsible for Japanese Reparations. Our delegate was notified that we would have great difficulty in arranging representation at a conference on the West Coast in August, and was instructed to oppose any move to have the conference located anywhere but Washington or vicinity. He was also instructed to support the United Kingdom position that reparations availabilities should be determined after agreement has been reached on a desirable level of Japanese industry.

7. The question therefore arises as to what instructions should be given to the Canadian representatives at this conference. It seems clear that representation will have to be provided from the staff of the Embassy in Washington.

(a) External Assets. Since any agreement reached in the proposed conference will be subject to ratification by the Far Eastern Commission, the question of whether either body is competent to deal with External Assets will certainly arise again. It is, therefore, suggested that our representative on the Commission urge that this matter be settled, if possible, before the conference is convened. Our representative on the Commission has been informed that this Government wishes to have formal recognition of Canada's right to hold and dispose of Japanese Assets under its jurisdiction. The appropriate occasion for raising this matter has not yet appeared. The United States member of the Reparations Committee, who was informed of Canadian views, indicated that they were not out of line with United States thinking on this matter.

(b) Reparations in Kind. Our representative on the Far Eastern Commission has already been instructed to maintain Canada's right to other forms of reparation from Japan, since claims registered at the Custodian's Office exceed Japanese assets held. The question therefore arises as to what type of Japanese reparation we should attempt to secure. Our representative has so far indicated only that we are interested in obtaining two aluminum plants (an aluminum sheet rolling mill and an aluminum foil mill) in which the Aluminum Company of Canada has expressed an interest. Although it is impossible to envisage the procedure that will be established for making bids for specific plants it will be advisable to brief our delegate on Canada's interest in obtaining these plants so that if required he will be able to state our case.

(c) Survey of Available Plant. The representative of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on the Sub-Committee on Industrial Equipment has stated that it is not possible to indicate fully Canada's interest in specific types of Japanese equipment for removal as reparations until more detailed information can be obtained as to what is available. Our representative has been instructed to inform the F.E.C. Reparations Committee to this effect. If it is decided that we should make every effort to secure the two aluminum plants a survey of the Japanese aluminum industry would be desirable. It is therefore suggested that our delegate be instructed to request that Canada be permitted to send one or two technical experts to Japan to make a survey of plants and industries likely to be made available for reparations. We would have no difficulty in getting an aluminum technical expert to go to Japan to conduct this survey. Information on other types of industry might be obtained on an exchange basis from other Commonwealth countries who are also permitted to send technical experts to Japan.

Dear Sir,

In reply to your letter of July 24th, on the subject of reparations from Japan, I note that no action has yet been taken to place the request of the Aluminum Co. of Canada for a sheet rolling mill and foil mill before the Far Eastern Commission. I also note the suggestion in your letter of July 31st,† that a more comprehensive list of industrial requirements might be submitted as a means of increasing our bargaining power for the two desired plants. Unfortunately, there is so little information available regarding the type of equipment which might be forthcoming under reparations from Japan, that it is almost impossible to increase our list with any degree of certainty.

Since we submitted a request for the two plants mentioned above, the Aluminum Co. of Canada have supplied a further requirement in the form of an electric caustic soda plant of approximately 12,000 ton capacity, with or without tanks or motors. This plant is required for immediate erection in Arvida, and would be used in connection with the extensive chemical programme now in progress there.

Another requirement which might be added in addition to any information supplied by the Fisheries Department, is a plant for the production of phthalic anhydride required by the Dominion Tar and Chemical Company. This requirement is also to be submitted under the German reparations programme.

I also enclose copy of a letter from Mr. Wm. G. Ashdown of Toronto,† which might possibly be used to further increase our list of requirements. However, before including this list, we would like to check further on Mr. Ashdown's bona fides.

With reference to the third paragraph of your letter of July 31st, I would advise that the background of the Aluminum Company's interest in obtaining these two rolling mills from Japan, and a rolling mill from Germany, stems from their enormous ingot capacity at Arvida, together with a very great shortage of fabricating equipment both in Canada and other countries. The large demands for aluminum sheet, foil, extrusions and such products as cooking utensils made from sheet, is needed for both rehabilitation, reconstruction and normal business. Most of the machinery manufacturing concerns in the United Kingdom, United States and other countries are quoting from 18 to 36 months' delivery on rolling equipment. Meanwhile, the pressure both from Europe and from the Orient is increasing steadily for aluminum and fabricated forms; hence the desire of the Aluminum Company to increase their fabricating capacity by any means.

With reference to paragraph four, we were aware that the Japanese aluminum fabrication plants might not be suitable for use in Canada, but it appeared politic to not bring out this fact in our claim due to possible opposition from British interests. Actually, we understand that the mills in question would probably be used in Burma. The Canadian export market in aluminum ingots would undoubtedly benefit by any increase in fabricating capacity in Burma, South Africa, Mexico, or almost any other country, as the Aluminum Company in Canada have adopted the policy of shipping ingot to most countries rather than fabricated forms for obvious reasons.

With reference to paragraph five, Canadian interests and the interests of rehabilitation and reconstruction throughout the world would undoubtedly be enhanced by any increase in fabricating capacity which could be arranged. This improvement would undoubtedly be reflected in the increased value of shares held by Canadians.

If, after examining the information contained in this letter you feel that the list of requirements accompanied by suitable requirement arguments should be increased further, we shall endeavour to do so, but would request that additional information be provided if possible, on available Japanese plants.

Yours faithfully,

M. W. MACKENZIE

CIRCULAR TELEGRAM D. 909

London, October 7, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. My telegrams Circular D. 1914 and Circular D. 1915 of 13th October, 1945, disposal of Japanese Fleet.

At Moscow Conference in December, 1945, M. Molotov raised question of Japanese Fleet and reported agreement of Soviet Government to United States proposal that larger naval vessels and submarines should be scrapped. (Some ships were, in fact, used in Bikini tests). It has since been agreed that remaining surface vessels should be divided equally between United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R. and China. Vessels available include 30 destroyers, 67 escort vessels, 9 transport ships, 4 minesweepers, 12 minelayers and other small craft. Discussions with United States State Department have made it clear that there is nothing to be gained by attempting to persuade Soviet Government to forego part of their share in favour of more equitable division among all naval Powers who have been active in naval war against Japan.

2. We are anxious to divide our share with interested Dominion Governments and Government of India and should be glad to know whether you have any requirements.

3. French Government last January put in a claim for share of Japanese Fleet and we are replying that we are prepared to offer them a portion of our share as was done in case of German Fleet. United States Government will also allocate a portion of their share to France. Small portion of United Kingdom share may also be offered to Netherlands Government.

4. Similar telegram is being sent to India.

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION: REPARATIONS CONFERENCE

Despite the efforts of the United States to bring this matter to a head, little progress has been made. We have declared our support for any solution which would permit the Conference to get under way and settle the points on which some agreement can be reached, leaving the matter of external assets for such further discussion and negotiation as may be advisable.

While the U.S.S.R. remain adamant in their refusal to recognize the jurisdiction of the Far Eastern Commission over Japanese external assets, there is some indication that they might be willing to accept a very small share of reparations from within Japan. If the matter of external assets is tacitly ignored for the time being, it is possible that some progress can be made with the question of allocation of shares along "broad political lines." Should it develop that the Soviet claim is sufficiently modest, there would then be a basis for further action.

The Interdepartmental Committee on Reparations decided last March that we should support the view that statistical data, where applicable, should be used as a basis for the allocation of reparation shares. It now appears that the United Kingdom, the United States and the U.S.S.R. are all in favour of discussing the allocation of shares along broad political lines. In view of this, the Interdepartmental Committee, at its meeting on November 4th decided that we should no longer press for the use of statistical data.

Our representative has asked us, if and when tentative allocations are proposed, whether we would have any serious objections if our portion were the smallest, say, one percent. The Interdepartmental Committee felt that our representative should not be authorized to state our willingness to accept any specific percentage share at this time, but that he should maximize the Canadian claim to the best of his ability.

Ottawa, November 29, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Reference Dominions Office telegrams to External, Nos. 139 of August 27th,† 169 of October 9th† and 193 of November 11th,† Reparations and Restitution Missions to Japan.

1. The United Kingdom have suggested that five-man teams from each Commonwealth Government should be coordinated so that widest coverage possible be obtained in survey of Japanese plant and equipment available for reparations. They have asked for names and occupations of members of Canadian team.

2. We replied November 19th as follows: "Canadian team will probably consist of three Restitution members, possibly one secretary and one industrial investigator who will probably be an expert in aluminum processing and fabrication. Name and qualifications of industrial expert will be forwarded when appointment has been tentatively accepted. We would be glad to participate in discussions on the coordination of Commonwealth teams as suggested in your telegram No. 139 of August 27."

3. The following information is supplied for background in case you are asked to send a representative to participate in discussions on this subject.

4. After Canadian Government received invitation to send Restitution Team to Japan, information was passed by Trade & Commerce to Canadian Manufacturers Association early in September, so that any industrial concerns interested would be able to put forward names of candidates for teams. To date Trade & Commerce have not been approached by any firm interested in obtaining plant or equipment from Japan other than Aluminium Limited, who wish to obtain aluminum sheet rolling and foil mills and caustic soda plant. Aluminium Limited have accepted tentative offer of place on Reparations Team for F. F. Ruthven, their expert on light metals processing and fabrication. One condition of appointment was that Ruthven should render report of his survey of Japanese industry to Canadian Government, whose property it would become.

5. It is unlikely that another technical expert to survey plant available for reparations will be appointed for the time being, owing to the lack of interest shown by Canadian industry in Japanese reparations. It is possible the situation may change when further information on plant and equipment available has been obtained.

6. Sun and Manufacturers Life Insurance Companies both wish to send representatives to Japan to clear up substantial restitution cases and probably one place on Restitution Team will be offered them.

7. The remaining three places will be held in reserve until situation with respect to reparations removals from Japan becomes clearer and extent of private Canadian restitution claims against Japan is known. We definitely expect to make up our team to full membership of five in due course.

8. If projected discussions take place, I suggest your representative make no commitments on our behalf until we know further the nature and extent of coordination of Commonwealth Teams proposed by the United Kingdom. We would be unwilling to substitute an expert in another field for the Aluminum man, whose services we hope to obtain, since Aluminium Limited will be paying his expenses.

SECRET. Your WA-4208 and WA-4209 of November 27th,† Far Eastern Commission, Reparations Conference.

1. We continue to hold the view that the United States scheme to evade the deadlock with the U.S.S.R. is likely to have unfortunate consequences on other political fronts, and that a settlement of the reparations question should, if at all possible, be achieved within the Far Eastern Commission. In so far as this question cannot apparently be settled to the satisfaction of all concerned unless some account is taken of Japanese external assets, and since the U.S.S.R. continue to maintain that the Far Eastern Commission is not competent under its terms of reference to deal with external assets, we feel that the question of the Commission's jurisdiction should be referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers, who drew up the Commission's terms of reference in December, 1945. You will recall that the question of external assets was referred to the Foreign Ministers in Paris last June, but no decision was returned.

2. We appreciate that the United States have, in prolonged negotiations, patiently endeavoured to reach a basis for agreement with the U.S.S.R.. We feel, however, that a fresh effort along the lines suggested would be worth while, particularly since Mr. Byrnes appears to appreciate the possible long range consequences of the present United States proposals. It would be preferable for the Commission to refer this matter to the Foreign Ministers now rather than for the U.S.S.R., as an injured party, to raise it in the Council at a later date.

3. We would appreciate your comment on this suggestion, either before or after you discuss it with other Commonwealth representatives and take it up informally and confidentially with State Department officials, so that if the suggestion is favourably regarded, a proposal to refer this matter to the Foreign Ministers could be put before the Commission at an early date. You will bear in mind that if such action is to be taken, it will be desirable that it should be done before the Foreign Ministers become preoccupied with the consideration of a peace treaty for Germany.

4. We agree with the United Kingdom that the most urgent aspect of the reparations problem is the stabilization of the Japanese economy at peacetime levels. We also feel that this can be largely achieved without a complete settlement of the reparations question. We suggest that the question of speeding work on this subject be raised at steering committee or commission level, so that methods may be worked out to reach policy decisions on this matter at the earliest possible date. Mr. Borton's<sup>1</sup> suggestion that the Commission might go into virtually continuous special session to deal with the subject is worth consideration.

5. If, when the work on the level of Japanese industry is complete, no satisfactory ruling on the question of external assets has yet been received from the Council of Foreign Ministers, we would consider the time to be riper for consideration of the United States proposal to draw up interim directives ordering the removal of reparations to needy countries. In this connection, we feel that the urgency of the case of each country which claims that the rehabilitation of its economy depends on the acquisition of reparations allotments from Japan should be studied on its merits, with special attention being given to the ability of the country concerned to remove, absorb and make use of Japanese plants and equipment without delay. For your information, we are inclined to agree with Mr. Vincent,<sup>2</sup> for instance, that China's internal transportation, power facilities and technical organization have not been sufficiently rehabilitated to make use of Japanese plants at this time, even if deliveries were made.

6. In the meantime, we would not be averse to the settlement of the whole problem by some practical face-saving device such as that suggested by the Australian representative on the Far Eastern Commission as outlined in your WA-4245† of December 2nd, or the New Zealand proposal for amending the terms of reference of the Conference as indicated in your WA-3869 of October 29th.†

Dear Mr. MacNamara,

With reference to previous correspondence† concerning financial arrangements for the movement of persons of Japanese origin from Canada to Japan, I am now enclosing herewith a copy of Teletype WA-611 of yesterday's date. You will note from this that, contrary to our understanding, no message has yet gone from Washington to the Supreme Commander with regard to the financial provisions.

The teletype which I am enclosing raises a number of points on which the United States' authorities would apparently like to have additional information. It would appear that one of the factors that is probably causing them some concern is that, under the arrangements we propose, repatriates from Canada will have a distinctly better arrangement than the persons who are being sent from the United States. However, this would be the case whether they were required to take all their assets with them at the time of departure or whether they were allowed to leave part of the value on deposit in Canada.

So far as the question raised in Paragraph 3 of the teletype is concerned, it would seem that Paragraphs 6(1) (b) and 6(2) of P.C. 7355 of December 15th provide a fairly adequate answer. I do not quite know why they have got so involved over the question of appreciation or depreciation of property left with the Custodian, since the Order clearly indicates that what the Custodian is to do is simply sell the property and transmit the proceeds. No question of advance valuation or of the issuance of a yen receipt based on such an advance valuation arises.

So far as Paragraph 4 is concerned, I assume there is some danger that yen receipts might be lost by accident or through gambling, as is suggested. In the case of loss through accident, presumably there could be some means of having the receipts numbered and duplicates issued under proper precautionary conditions. Loss by gambling would hardly seem to be a concern of ours. If it would help any, presumably we could, as suggested, cable ahead a statement of the amounts to the credit of each individual person, but I think it would still be desirable for the Japanese themselves to hold some statement in evidence of the assets they left behind.

I am a little surprised at the suggestion that one of the concerns of the United States' authorities is to prevent the Japanese having assets in Canada which would be available to them should they be permitted at any time to re-enter Canada or should their Canadian-born children be allowed to return. It would seem to be a question entirely for decision by the Canadian authorities at a later date whether or not any of the Japanese were to be allowed to return and it is a little difficult to see in what respect the United States authorities are affected. I can only assume that they feel that any concessions that are made by us with regard to the retention of title to assets in Canada will affect the provisions that they will have to make in the United States.

I am sending copies of the teletype to Mr. Turk of the Foreign Exchange Control Board and to Mr. Hodgkin of the Department of Finance. I shall appreciate it if you could give me your views as to the reply that should be sent to Washington.

Yours sincerely,

TELEGRAM WA-611

Washington, February 4, 1946

My WA-490, January 28th,† repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan, financial arrangements.

1. On receipt of telephone information this morning from State Department that the message to the Supreme Commander has not, repeat not, been despatched I arranged for a representative of the Embassy to see the State Department officials concerned to enquire the reason for the delay. A long meeting was held this afternoon with State Department officials in the Financial Section and it was learned that it was the State Department and not Treasury which has held up the despatch of the message.

2. State Department objection was that this procedure might contravene the policy which they are endeavouring to carry out that there will be no Japanese in Japan with any rights, property or financial, in foreign countries.

They therefore wondered whether our proposed procedure would be in essence an exception, and they would like information on the status of the property which the Japanese would leave in Canada. This divides itself into two problems:

- (a) Cash or liquid assets, and
- (b) Assets as yet undisposed of.

3. I would appreciate any information you can supply as to the actual procedure which will be followed in respect to both types of assets. For example, in respect to (b) will the title vest in the Custodian and, if so, how is the property to be valued. Taking as a practical case a farm, if it is valued and a yen non-negotiable receipt is issued, then the farm may either increase or decrease in value, with the result that the Canadian authorities may have a profit or may have to stand a loss.

4. The question of receipts generally was also discussed and the State Department officials seemed to be coming around to the view that, as receipts might be lost or gambled, would it not be better to merely cable the authorities in Japan a list of the individuals and the amount of credit in yen on which they could draw. This amount would, of course, be the same amount in each individual case, as would be shown if the negotiable receipts were issued. From this point the discussion developed that if the Japanese would gain no benefit in respect to their property left in Canada by reason of appreciation in value or change in the exchange rate should the whole amount to their credit not be cabled. They could then draw any amount they desired leaving the balance as a credit in Japan. This thought again arises from the desire of the American authorities to prevent Japanese in Japan having assets in Canada or the United States which would be available to them should they be permitted at any time to re-enter either of these countries, or should their American or Canadian-born children return.

5. From the discussion you will appreciate that this matter is far from being settled and it is difficult for me to press the matter as a final decision is necessary only in respect to the repatriates of Canada, because the repatriates from the United States can still only take a fixed amount of credit irrespective of how much property they own.

Ottawa, February 8, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Reference your WA-611 of February 4th concerning financial arrangements for the movement of persons of Japanese origin from Canada to Japan.

Immediately upon receipt of your teletype intimating that no communication had yet been sent to the Supreme Commander in Japan with regard to the proposed financial arrangements, the matter was discussed with the Deputy Minister of Labour and the following is the text of a letter from him of to-day's date:

"We have your letter of February 5th.

We are very much concerned that the completion of financial arrangements has not proceeded further than appears to be the case and to learn that the proposals which were formulated by the U.S. authorities and confirmed by us and which we understood had been submitted to the Supreme Allied Commander, have not gone forward. The questions raised by the U.S. authorities indicate a misconception of the situation. As you say, the questions raised in paragraph three of the teletype are answered by reference to paragraphs 6(1)(b) and 6(2) of P.C. 7355.

The only receipt which a Japanese obtains from the Custodian is simply a receipt for monies left with the Custodian by the Japanese prior to leaving Canada. The funds so left on deposit with the Custodian together with the proceeds of any other real or personal property, which has not been disposed of by such Japanese prior to departure from Canada, are simply held by the Custodian for the credit of the Japanese and for subsequent transfer through the purchase of suitable foreign exchange at a later date. The function of the Custodian is that simply of an official trustee under the authority conferred by P.C. 7355.

It follows that title to assets undisposed of would vest in the Custodian and he would then proceed to realize on the property as soon as possible at the best price possible and credit the net proceeds to the account of the repatriate. This amount would then be transferred to the repatriate in Japan by purchase of suitable foreign exchange presumably Japanese whenever the Custodian found it possible to complete arrangements to do so. Please note that the only yen receipts which it is proposed will issue at this time will be in respect of funds which the repatriate takes with him on repatriation. No 'yen' receipts will be issued and turned over to repatriates at time of repatriation in respect to funds to the credit of the repatriate with the Custodian which are left on deposit for later transfer.

With respect to paragraph four of the despatch, we fully agree with your comment that while it would certainly be of assistance to cable ahead a statement of the amount of the yen receipt to be issued, we are still of the opinion that this in itself would hardly be adequate and that the issue of a yen receipt in exchange for monies turned in is necessary and advisable and it will facilitate repatriation arrangements.

We do not believe that the possibility of loss of receipt is sufficient grounds for abandoning the procedure which has been proposed. It should not be too difficult to provide for the later issue of a duplicate receipt in such circumstances.

We see no reason why, however, funds standing to the credit of the repatriate with the Custodian realized by him from sale of assets and which are not taken by the repatriate with him could not be subsequently transferred by establishing by cable the credit in Japan which individuals could draw. The question of re-entry of Japanese into Canada would be a matter of later Government decision and is not a matter for present consideration.

It seems clear that until this matter of transfer of funds is settled, this Department is not in a position to fix sailing dates or requisition specific ships. It seems evident that in order to obtain a decision, it will be necessary, we suggest, for the Ambassador, Mr. Pearson, to take the matter up directly with the higher officers of the State Department and Treasury Department in order to obtain immediate confirmation of the arrangements which were put forward by the United States authorities and which have been confirmed by us and to obtain also, without delay, the approved form of yen receipt which we can arrange to issue. Would you, therefore, take the matter up directly with Mr. Pearson to this end to ensure that this will be done? Unless we can get immediate satisfactory action on this matter, our whole repatriation programme may fall through. I know you appreciate the importance of this matter.”

The comments in the above, as you will observe from certain references, are in general in accord with the views we expressed to the Department of Labour upon receipt of your teletype under reference. I have no doubt that the primary concern of the United States authorities in this matter is that the application here of provisions more generous to the Japanese than their own may prove an embarrassment to them. While this may be the case, it is also true that the policies applied in other respects in the two countries have not been completely similar, and the government here would be subject to even more severe criticism than is at present being received if the financial arrangements applicable to the persons going to Japan were made less generous than those that have been contemplated and announced. I explained in general the situation with regard to this matter in my EX-161 of January 17th. †

Whatever may be the reasons behind the position taken by the United States authorities on this question, it seems to me that certain of the points raised by them as set forth in your teletype WA-611 are not of serious moment. There is no question of appreciation or depreciation of property left with the Custodian since the receipts will not be expressed in dollar or yen terms. They will simply be for the article, object or piece of property concerned and the amount to the credit of the person will be simply the price realized on disposition. The question of loss of receipts or of dissipation through gambling does not seem to be a serious consideration. There could be cabled confirmation of receipts given, but it seems clear that there would be trouble if the Japanese were expected to sail without any evidence in their possession of cash or property left behind. The question of future re-entry into Canada for repatriates or their children and of allowing them to leave assets in the hope of future re-entry seems to be entirely a question for the Canadian government.

As Mr. MacNamara points out, the entire programme for movement, even of those Japanese who are anxious to go of their own volition, has to be completely held up until this question can be settled. In the circumstances I think it is important that this matter should be taken up at a high level, if possible by yourself, in order to explain the position of the Canadian government and the urgency of the question.

Repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan.

1. We have had a further discussion with officers of the Finance Division of the State Department and have been informed that they have submitted to the Treasury Department for approval and transmission to the Supreme Commander the following proposal:

(a) That Japanese be permitted to transfer to Japan all their assets without limit. Such transfer is to be arranged by surrender of their assets to the Canadian authorities, who will in turn deposit same in a special account in the name of the Supreme Commander, and will notify the American authorities of the amount standing to the credit of each individual expressed in yen at the rate of 15 yen to $1.00 (U.S.). The United States will then notify the Supreme Commander by telegram of the amount of credit to which each repatriate is entitled. If the Canadian authorities wish to give the Japanese a receipt expressed in yen they may do so, but it will be the telegraphic communication, not the receipt, which will entitle the Japanese to obtain funds on arrival in Japan.

(b) With respect to property retained in Canada, the State Department is adamant that no instrument should be given to the Japanese indicating that they have an interest in property in Canada. It is, therefore, suggested that any receipt which might be given to the Japanese for property left with the Custodian would state that property as described therein had been surrendered to the Custodian for liquidation. Any wording indicating that such property is held in trust for the individual Japanese would not, repeat not, be satisfactory. The State Department officials stressed their desire to have balances sent to Japan as soon as liquidation was effected. Transmission of such proceeds would follow the same procedure as described in (a) above, namely, deposit by the Canadian authorities and telegraphic confirmation to Japan. We discussed the possibility of a change in exchange rates between the present time and the time of subsequent transmittal of funds. No objection was raised to this provided that the funds are to be sent to the Japanese as soon as liquidation takes place and are not held until a request is received from the person entitled. This does not make it possible for the Canadian authorities to carry out their expressed intention of permitting the Japanese to leave assets in Canada without limit as to time, as provided for in Order-in-Council P.C. 7355 of December 15th, 1945.

2. I am pressing this matter and will report as soon as I hear about Treasury Department's reaction to the current proposal.

3. With respect to the transportation arrangements, I would appreciate a reply to my WA-621 of February 5th† so that this aspect may be completed.

THE CABINET COMMITTEE ON THE JAPANESE

The meeting of the Cabinet Committee on the Japanese problem was held this morning, as planned, to give consideration to the steps that should now be taken in the light of the Supreme Court decision.<sup>1</sup>

So far as the decision itself is concerned, Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Mac-Namara were of the opinion that the majority decision with regard to non-deportation of wives and children might become a very real obstacle in the way of any effective deportation proceedings. The position of the wives would present no difficulty, due to the fact that in all cases they were given the same opportunity as their husbands to indicate their wishes as to movement to Japan. In the case of the children, however, it was felt that many Japanese would use the decision as an opportunity to prevent their own deportation by refusing to take their children with them. Such a move would involve the consequence of breaking up families and of leaving it to the government to provide maintenance for the children in this country if deportation were carried through, or of allowing deportation to lapse. In the circumstances, it was agreed by the meeting that it would probably be useless to attempt to carry forward the movement of any other than voluntary repatriates as long as the decision remained as at present. This fact in itself was thought to constitute an important argument in favour of allowing an appeal to go forward to the Privy Council in the hope that this aspect of the decision might be reversed.

La question fut étudiée par la Cour suprême qui, en général, confirma la validité des Décrets en Conseil. Voir F. E. La Violette, The Canadian Japanese and World War II. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1948, p. 258 à 274.

<sup>1</sup> The Co-operative Committee on Japanese Canadians, a group which defended the rights of Japanese Canadians, had challenged the validity of three Orders in Council, P.C. 7355, 7356 and 7357 of December 15, 1945, which governed the repatriation of Japanese Canadians and the removal of their Canadian citizenship. The issue was studied by the Supreme Court which generally upheld the validity of the Orders in Council. See F. E. La Violette, The Canadian Japanese and World War II. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1948, pp. 258-274.

In the light of the above situation, it was felt that, while it would otherwise be desirable to avoid having an appeal carried to the Privy Council, nevertheless this probably could not be avoided unless the government were prepared to face the possibility that the entire deportation programme would be blocked. As an additional factor, it was felt that, while it might be possible to secure agreement from Mr. Brewin and the Toronto Committee,<sup>1</sup> that they would not proceed with their appeal if the government policy were modified in certain respects as they desired, nevertheless any such commitment would be no guarantee against having appeals carried by other committees throughout Canada or by Japanese individuals involved. In short, there appeared to be no reasonable possibility of carrying through a successful policy under the terms of the present judgment and, at the same time, no way of having that judgment altered other than by an appeal to the Privy Council.

After careful consideration, the Committee decided that it would recommend to Cabinet that an announcement should be made on behalf of the government to the following effect:

(a) That, in the light of the uncertainty created in the legal situation by the differing judgments of the Supreme Court, the government would facilitate the hearing of an appeal on the question by the Privy Council.

(b) That arrangements would be made at as early a date as possible for any Japanese who wished to do so, to leave Canada for Japan on a purely voluntary basis under the conditions already laid down by Order in Council. The other aspects of the deportation policy would be held in abeyance pending the decision on the appeal.

(c) That the appointment of the Commission to review the cases of Japanese persons would be deferred until the hearing of the appeal had been completed, and that before its establishment its terms of reference would be re-examined.

In addition, the Committee decided to recommend (not for announcement) that the Department of Labour should take immediate measures to encourage dispersal and settlement of the Japanese in Canada as rapidly as possible. For this purpose it was felt to be essential that the ban on the purchase of land by Japanese persons should be lifted. The Committee was of the view that it was highly desirable to have re-settlement on as permanent a basis as possible at an early date since the Orders in Council which enable the restriction and control of the Japanese persons in this country will lapse at December 31st next, with the termination of the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act.

While the sending of an appeal to London will mean that no hearing can probably be completed before June at the earliest, Mr. MacNamara was of the view that this would not, in reality, involve any delay in the settlement of the problem since he felt that it was likely to take some months yet before arrangements could be agreed on with the United States authorities and cleared with General MacArthur for the details of the movement. There have been unexpected difficulties with regard to the capacity of the Japanese to take funds from Canada to Japan. The United States authorities are being quite strict in this matter, although they have finally agreed that the Japanese should be able to take all their funds with them. (At first they were opposed to their being allowed to take more than a stipulated amount of very modest size.) If this arrangement seems satisfactory it still has to be cleared with General MacArthur, and there is every probability that there will be lengthy delays. In view of this it was felt that the time involved in an appeal might be an advantage rather than an embarrassment.

Ottawa, March 2, 1946

Reference your teletype WA-829 of February 19th, concerning financial arrangements for the movement of Japanese from Canada to Japan.

The latest United States proposal, as outlined in your teletype under reference, has now been discussed with the Department of Labour and representatives from the office of the Custodian and of the Comptroller of the Treasury. After discussion, it has been agreed, in view of the United States position, to drop the original intention of allowing the Japanese to leave sums on deposit in Canada without commitment as to early transmission. This will meet one of the major United States objections. It is felt, however, that certain modifications are necessary in the United States proposal, as outlined in your teletype, in order to enable the transfers to be handled in a practical manner. The following modified proposal has been prepared and the Deputy Minister of Labour has asked that it be brought forward for discussion at as early a date as possible with the United States authorities.

The text of the proposal is as follows:

“Other deportation and repatriation arrangements are suspended pending the finding of a satisfactory formula for handling the funds of Japanese repatriates and the delay is causing concern. With the object of obtaining an early decision which will give effect, so far as circumstances permit, to the terms of P.C. 7355, the following alternative proposal is submitted for immediate consideration of the United States authorities concerned:

A. that, at or immediately prior to departure, a yen receipt be issued to or for each person who is being deported to Japan in the terms of Section No. 7 of P.C. 7355 and for the amounts set out in Sub-Sections (a) and (b) of that Section only. The Canadian Government will deposit a sum equivalent to the total value of yen receipts issued at the rate of 15 yen to $1.00 (U.S.) in a special account in the name of the Supreme Commander and will notify the American authorities of the amount so deposited and provide them with details of those Japanese to whom yen receipts have been issued. While we consider it preferable that all yen receipts be cashed by any bank in Japan and forwarded by the paying bank to the Bank of Japan for ultimate redemption or disposition by the financial agent of the Supreme Commander, if that is not possible we agree that the United States notify the Supreme Commander by telegram of the amount granted to each repatriate in order to enable the Japanese to obtain funds on arrival in Japan. It is essential that evidence of actual receipt of such funds by the deported or repatriated Japanese to whom they are paid, be provided to the Canadian authorities. To this end it is suggested that the financial agent for the Supreme Commander obtain a receipt for all such monies so paid and either transmit a copy thereof to the Japanese Division, Department of Labour, Ottawa, or provide them with a statement or statements from time to time, confirming that the payments and the amounts thereof have actually been made to the individual Japanese concerned.

B. that all real or personal property of any kind whatsoever, including any money in the possession of or standing to the credit in Canada of any person who is being deported, be transferred for his account to the Custodian of Enemy Property. The Custodian of Enemy Property will sell such property as has been vested in him as soon as, in his opinion, it is reasonably practicable to do so, placing the net proceeds realized from such sale to the credit of such person. Immediately after such liquidation and realization and subject to:

1. deduction for reasonable handling charges;
  2. deduction, where possible, for amounts advanced under A. above,
- the Custodian of Enemy Property will deposit an amount equivalent to the sum then standing to the credit of each person who has been deported to Japan in a special account in the name of the Supreme Commander and will notify the American authorities of the amount standing to the credit of each individual expressed in yen at the rate of 15 yen to $1.00 (U.S.). It is understood that the United States will then notify the Supreme Commander by telegram of the amount of credit to which each repatriate is entitled. It is essential that evidence of actual receipt of such funds by the deported or repatriated Japanese to whom they are paid, be provided to the Canadian authorities. To this end it is suggested that the financial agent for the Supreme Commander obtain a receipt for all such monies so paid and either transmit a copy thereof to the Japanese Division, Department of Labour, Ottawa, or provide them with a statement or statements from time to time, confirming that the payments and the amounts thereof have actually been made to the individual Japanese concerned."

I am aware from your teletype WA-737 of February 12th† that this matter has been discussed with the Under-Secretary of State and I assume that this should lead to some expedition in the settlement of the problem. However, the entire question has now been under discussion for something over two months without yet getting as far as General MacArthur and, in the circumstances, the anxiety of the authorities here who are responsible for the solution of this problem is understandable. It would be appreciated if anything possible could be done by yourself personally or in any other effective manner to try to ensure that serious and early attention is given to this matter. No movement even of persons going voluntarily is possible until the financial arrangements are settled.

For your confidential information I may say that it is probable that an appeal will be carried to the Privy Council by the Co-operative Committee on Japanese Canadians from the decision as handed down by the Supreme Court. In the circumstances, this may mean that only those Japanese who are genuine volunteers may be moved in the near future—possibly along with certain Japanese nationals. The government is very anxious, however, to have any Japanese who wish to leave Canada do so at as early a date as can be arranged.

DEPORTATION OF PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE

At its meeting on March 6th, the Cabinet, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Labour, agreed:

(a) that, in the light of the uncertainty created in the legal situation by the differing judgments of the Supreme Court, the government facilitate the hearing of an appeal on the question by the Judicial Committee of the United Kingdom Privy Council;

(b) that, pending the outcome of the appeal, arrangements be made at as early a date as possible for any Japanese who wished to do so, to leave Canada for Japan on a purely voluntary basis;

(c) that the appointment of the Commission to review the cases of Japanese persons be deferred until the hearing of the appeal had been completed, and that before its establishment its terms of reference be reconsidered; and

(d) that an early announcement be made to the above effect.

It was further agreed that consideration be given to the steps to be taken by the government immediately to facilitate general re-settlement of loyal Japanese persons throughout the country and that, to assist in achieving re-settlement on a permanent basis the prohibition on the purchase of land by such persons be lifted.

TELEGRAM WA-1082

Washington, March 7, 1946

Financial arrangements for repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan. The following is the text of a memorandum received from the Department of State today. In a subsequent teletype I will transmit some comments on this memorandum arising out of the discussion held with State Department officers this morning at the time the note was delivered.

Memorandum

Reference is made to the request of the Canadian Embassy for information as to what arrangements in connection with the repatriation of Japanese assets from Canada would be in accordance with regulations in effect in Japan with respect to the importation of property by Japanese being repatriated to Japan.

Information available to the State and Treasury Departments indicates that under existing regulations in Japan, Japanese repatriates from Canada will be permitted to take into Japan their personal effects, such as clothing, household furniture and jewelry, Yen currency not in excess of 1000 Yen, Japanese bank deposit or postal savings books, Japanese securities, and evidences of property in Japan or of obligations of persons in Japan. Consequently, any such property permitted to leave Canada will be allowed entry into Japan.

Under present regulations in Japan, non-Yen currency, non-Japanese securities, checks, drafts and payment instructions expressed in non-Yen currencies, and other non-Japanese obligations and evidences of property outside Japan will be permitted entry and will be taken up by Japanese customs officials. Eventual disposition of such items has not yet been determined.

It is understood that the Canadian Government desires to permit Japanese repatriates to liquidate their property in Canada and to repatriate the proceeds. Subject to the approval of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, which has been requested by cable, it is proposed that the United States Government accept for the account of the Supreme Commander with the United States Treasury the dollar equivalent of the proceeds of the liquidation, and arrange for payment of the Yen equivalent upon arrival of Japanese repatriates in Japan. Proceeds of liquidation will be accepted from the Canadian Government in United States dollars in unlimited amounts. It is suggested that the Canadian Government transmit to the Department of State checks drawn to the order of the Treasurer of the United States, together with schedules specifying the names of Japanese repatriates on whose behalf the dollars are remitted and the amounts allocated to the respective repatriates. The Department of State will undertake to see that appropriate schedules are forwarded to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, who will instruct the Bank of Japan to make out-payments in Yen at the military rate of conversion in effect at the time the dollars are deposited in the Supreme Commander's account with the United States Treasury. Bank of Japan representatives will be available at port of debarkation in Japan to make Yen payments. In the event that the amount to which a repatriate is entitled exceeds the amount which he can withdraw in cash under Japanese currency regulations, there will be no objection to retention of the excess in blocked accounts in accordance with those regulations.

It is understood that the Canadian Government does not wish to force an immediate liquidation of property by Japanese, and wishes to provide that any property not liquidated before departure will be retained by the Canadian Enemy Property Custodian to be liquidated by him at his discretion, with the Japanese repatriate being given a receipt recording the fact that the Canadian Enemy Property Custodian has retained the described property. It would be the intention of the Canadian Government to remit the proceeds of liquidation as soon as the liquidation is completed. Subject to confirmation by the Supreme Commander, the United States Government has no objection to this procedure. The Japanese repatriates will be permitted to retain upon entry into Japan the receipts given them by the Canadian Government, and remittance of the proceeds will be acceptable at any time under conditions identical with those specified in the preceding paragraph.

It is understood that the Canadian authorities will examine repatriates before they leave Canada to make certain that they are not carrying out any items which are forbidden entry into Japan. The only items permitted to be carried out will be personal effects, Yen-currency, Yen-securities, Yen-obligations, evidences of property in Japan, and such receipts as the Canadian Government may wish to provide to Japanese to record arrangements described in the two preceding paragraphs.

The Department of State will notify the Canadian Embassy as soon as the procedures outlined above have been approved by the Supreme Commander.

This memorandum was prepared prior to the receipt of the Canadian Embassy's memorandum of March 5th, 1946.<sup>1</sup> With respect to the first sentence of paragraph A of that memorandum, it will be noted that the United States Government does not propose to place any restriction on the amount of remittances made by the Canadian Government on behalf of Japanese repatriates from Canada, either at the time of their repatriation or at a later date.

The Canadian Embassy's memorandum suggests that a sum equivalent to the total value of Yen receipts issued at the rate of 15 Yen to $1.00 (United States) be placed in a special account in the name of the Supreme Commander. The United States Government suggestion is that the Canadian Government remit United States dollars to the United States Treasury Department for deposit in the account of the Supreme Commander there, and that the Yen equivalent payable to the Japanese repatriate be computed on the basis of the military rate of conversion in effect at the time the dollars are deposited. If this arrangement is not satisfactory to the Canadian Government, it can, of course, be re-examined.

Note is taken of the desire of the Canadian Government to receive evidence that payments have been made to the designated Japanese in Japan. The Supreme Commander will be asked to obtain receipts or other evidence of payment from the Bank of Japan for forwarding to the Canadian Government. Department of State, Washington, March 7th, 1946.

Washington, March 8, 1946

Further to my WA-1082 of March 7th transmitting a memorandum received from the State Department on the subject of financial arrangements in the repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan, I wish to make the following comments on the memorandum.

1. The only new item in the proposal for handling this matter is the question of the exchange rate. You will note that the State and Treasury Departments suggest that the yen equivalent of monies or property surrendered by the Japanese be computed on the basis of the military rate of conversion in effect at the time that the dollars are deposited with the United States Treasury. It is appreciated by the American authorities that there may be a variation in the rates received by the early and late repatriates, but they are agreeable to this rather than to have a fixed rate for repatriates from Canada and another rate for all other financial transactions. From my knowledge of the discussions in Ottawa, this change in the proposal would not appear to raise any difficulty in principle. It does, however, raise the second question, namely, that of receipts.

2. Form of receipts. My representative undertook to ensure that the form of receipt to be used would be submitted to the United States Treasury officials before its issuance. As the Americans are not using a receipt, no precedent is available, but in discussing this matter they suggested that the wording should be as general as possible and cannot, of course, now be expressed in yen. Wording to the following effect is suggested and, if acceptable, would cover both liquid assets and property left with the Custodian, thereby avoiding the necessity for two types of receipts:

The Canadian Government acknowledges that ..... (name) ..... has surrendered property situated in Canada as described on the reverse hereof and agrees to remit the proceeds of such property immediately or upon liquidation, if such action is required, to Japan under arrangements made with, and approved by, the United States Government and the military authorities in Japan.

The credit so established in Japan will be expressed in yen and withdrawals from such credit by the person entitled thereto will be subject to Japanese currency regulations.

3. The question of pocket money for the trip was also discussed. You will note from the memorandum that, should the repatriates be in possession of any yen currency, such may be taken with them up to 1,000 yen, but this currency will not, repeat not, be accepted for expenses during the voyage. There is no objection to the repatriates taking Canadian or American dollars to an amount not exceeding $20.00 for trip expenses, but it must be understood that all such non-yen currency not expended will be seized on arrival in Japan. Until it is actually known what type of ships will be used to transport the repatriates, it is not known what facilities will be provided, nor, therefore, whether pocket money will be necessary. This point could probably best be covered by the appropriate officials on the West Coast when definite arrangements for shipping are being made.

4. The American authorities will inform me immediately an answer is received from the Supreme Commander and, in the interval, I would appreciate receiving any comments which you may wish to have transmitted to the American authorities.

Ottawa, March 18, 1946

Reference your teletype WA-1095 of March 8th, 1946 concerning financial arrangements for the movement of Japanese from Canada to Japan and particularly Item 2, representatives from the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury and of the Department of Labour have discussed the proposed form of receipt and it is their view that two forms will be required, as follows:

1.

The Government of Canada acknowledges that ..... (name) ..... has established a credit of ..... Japanese yen, which credit has been transferred to the United States Treasury by the action of the Canadian Government in placing to the credit of the account maintained with the United States Treasury in the name of the Supreme Commander of the Allied Forces in Japan of an equivalent amount of United States dollars converted from Japanese yen at the exchange rate of ..... yen to the United States dollar.

The credit represented by this instrument will be payable in Japan to the person entitled thereto, subject to the approval of the Supreme Commander and to Japanese currency regulations.

The Government of Canada acknowledges that.....(name)..... has surrendered property situated in Canada as described on the reverse hereof and agrees to remit the net proceeds of such property immediately or upon liquidation, if such action is required, to Japan under arrangements made with, and approved by, the United States Government and the military authorities in Japan; Provided that from the proceeds of such property there shall be retained such amounts as are required to repay advances made by the Government of Canada by way of repatriation grant.

Form 1 will be used first under one series of numbers to evidence the amount granted each repatriate under Section 7 of P.C. 7355. It will be used again under a different series of numbers after all assets of repatriates have been converted into cash by the Custodian of Enemy Property to facilitate transfer of the amount standing to the credit of each person deported to Japan, deposited in a special account in the name of the Supreme Commander. In this latter case it will be particularly useful for accounting purposes.

Form 2 will schedule all surrendered property situated in Canada, the net proceeds of which are to be remitted upon liquidation in accordance with our previous proposal. This form will be non-negotiable and will be so marked.

Both forms will be verified and signed for the Comptroller of the Treasury for Canada and place and date will be recorded as required.

The Deputy Minister of Labour has asked that the concurrence of the United States authorities to the use of these forms be obtained at as early a date as possible.

Note de l'ambassade aux États-Unis au département d'État des États-Unis

Note from Embassy in United States to Department of State of United States

No. 119

Washington, March 30, 1946

The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to a Memorandum of the Department of State dated March 7th in connection with the repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan and the transfer of their assets to Japan.

The Department of State's memorandum has been studied by the Canadian authorities and was the subject of a conference in Washington on March 28th between representatives of the United States Departments of State, Treasury and War and the Canadian Treasury and Labour Departments.

The following memorandum of the conference was prepared by the Canadian representatives, and Mr. Pearson would appreciate confirmation that it sets forth correctly the agreement reached at the conference.

MEMORANDUM OF CONFERENCE

Under existing regulations in Japan, Japanese deportees or repatriates from Canada will be permitted to take into Japan their personal effects, such as clothing, household furniture and jewelry, yen currency not in excess of 1000 yen, Japanese bank deposits or postal savings books, Japanese securities, and evidences of property in Japan or of obligations of persons in Japan. Consequently, any such property permitted to leave Canada will be allowed entry into Japan.

The Canadian Government desires to permit Japanese deportees or repatriates to liquidate their property in Canada and to repatriate the proceeds. Subject to the approval of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers which has been requested by cable, it is proposed that the United States Government accept for the account of the Supreme Commander with the United States Treasury the U.S. dollar equivalent of the proceeds of the liquidation and arrange for payment of the yen equivalent upon arrival of Japanese deportees or repatriates in Japan.

Proceeds of liquidation will be accepted from the Canadian Government in United States dollars in unlimited amounts. The Canadian Government will be informed as to the mechanics of the actual transfer of Canadian funds to the United States Government as soon as details have been worked out between Mr. D. H. Connor and the United States authorities.

It is understood that the Canadian Government will provide schedules specifying the names of Japanese deportees or repatriates on whose behalf the dollars are remitted and the amounts allocated to the respective deportees and repatriates. The United States Department of State would undertake to see that appropriate schedules are forwarded to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, who will instruct the Bank of Japan to make out-payments. Payment in Japan to the deportees and repatriates will be effected in accordance with the following procedure; where schedules and monies have been deposited by the Canadian Government with the appropriate United States authorities prior to the arrival of the repatriates in Japan, remittances will be effected at the rate of exchange in effect on the date of the arrival of the deportees or repatriates in Japan. If no rate of exchange has been established, the military rate of conversion then in effect will govern. The Bank of Japan representatives will be available at the port of debarkation in Japan to make yen payments; in the case of schedules and monies which are the proceeds of liquidation of assets left with the Canadian Enemy Property Custodian, and which are deposited with the appropriate United States authorities after the arrival of the deportees or repatriates in Japan, the United States authorities will undertake to see that the appropriate schedules are forwarded to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, who will instruct the Bank of Japan to make out-payments in yen at the rate of exchange in effect at the time the dollars are deposited in the Supreme Commander's account with the United States Government. If no rate of exchange has been established, the military rate of conversion at the date of such deposit will govern. In both cases, should the amount to which a deportee or repatriate is entitled exceed the amount which he can withdraw in cash under Japanese currency regulations, there will be no objection to retention of the excess in blocked accounts in accordance with those regulations.

It is understood that the Canadian Government does not wish to force an immediate liquidation of property by Japanese, and wishes to provide that any property not liquidated before departure will be retained by the Canadian Enemy Property Custodian to be liquidated by him at his discretion, with the Japanese deportee or repatriate given a receipt recording the fact that the Canadian Enemy Property Custodian has retained the described property.

It would be the intention of the Canadian Government to remit the proceeds of liquidation as soon as the liquidation is completed. Subject to confirmation by the Supreme Commander, the United States Government has no objection to this procedure. The Japanese deportees and repatriates will be permitted to retain upon entry to Japan, the receipts given them by the Canadian Government, and remittances of the proceeds will be acceptable at any time under conditions identical with those specified in the preceding paragraphs.

It is understood that the Canadian authorities will examine deportees and repatriates before they leave Canada to make certain that they are not carrying out any items which are forbidden entry into Japan. The only items permitted to be carried out will be personal effects, yen currency, yen securities, yen obligations, evidences of property in Japan, and such receipts as the Canadian Government may provide to Japanese to record arrangements described in the preceding paragraphs.

The Department of State will notify the Canadian Embassy as soon as the procedure outlined above has been approved by the Supreme Commander.

It is understood that the United States Government does not propose to place any restrictions on the amount of remittances made by the Canadian Government on behalf of the Japanese deportees and repatriates from Canada, either at the time of their repatriation or at a later date.

The Canadian Government is of the opinion that two forms of receipts are required and the wording of these receipts, which has been agreed to, follows:

The Government of Canada acknowledges that .....(name)..... has established a credit of ..... in Canadian dollars. This credit is being transferred to the United States Government for remittance of the yen equivalent to the person named herein.

The credit represented by this instrument will be payable in yen in Japan to the person named herein, whose signature appears below, subject to the approval of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers and to Japanese currency regulations.

The Government of Canada acknowledges that .....(name)..... has surrendered property situated in Canada as described on the reverse hereof and agrees to remit the yen equivalent of the net proceeds of such property immediately or upon liquidation, if such action is required, to Japan under arrangements made with, and approved by, the United States Government and the Military authorities in Japan; provided that from the proceeds of such property there shall be retained such amounts as are required to repay advances made by the Government of Canada by way of repatriation grant.

Form No. 1 will be used first under one series of numbers to evidence the amount granted each deportee or repatriate under Section 7 of Order-in-Council P.C. 7355, dated December 15, 1945, as well as to complete the transfer of all funds of individual deportees or repatriates whose assets are liquid at the time of departure. The original of this receipt will be delivered to the Japanese deportee or repatriate and will serve for identification purposes as well as for acknowledgment. The amounts therein shown will form the basis of the transfer of related funds to the account of the Supreme Commander. Form No. 1 will also be used under a different series of numbers after all assets of deportees and repatriates have been converted into cash by the Custodian of Enemy Property. Issuance of forms No. 1 Second Series will facilitate transfer of the amount then standing to the credit of each person deported or repatriated to Japan and the funds will be deposited in a special account in the name of the Supreme Commander in the same manner as funds resulting from the grant and liquid assets at the time of departure. As the deportees or repatriates will have departed from Canada when form No. 1 Second Series is issued, it is not the intention of the Canadian authorities to deliver the original to the deportees and repatriates respectively entitled thereto.

Form No. 2 will schedule all surrendered property situated in Canada, the net proceeds of which are to be remitted upon liquidation in accordance with our previous proposal.

Both forms will be non-negotiable and clearly so marked. They will be verified and signed for the Comptroller of the Treasury for Canada and place and date will be recorded as required. The signature of the Japanese being deported or repatriated will be obtained when the receipt is issued for the amount of the grant or for liquid assets at the time of departure. It is not intended to obtain the signature of a Japanese who has been deported or repatriated on the form for the amount placed to his credit after his departure.

It is further understood:

1. That payment will be made in Japan to Japanese deportees and repatriates on the basis of telegraphed advice to the Supreme Commander and that for purposes of the United States authorities neither Form No. 1 or Form No. 2 will have any force or effect beyond their usefulness for purposes of acknowledgment and identification.

2. That for any reason, should payment be not made within a reasonable time to the designated Japanese deportee or repatriate by the United States authorities in accordance with telegraphed advice to the Supreme Commander, the funds so unpaid will be returned to the Canadian Government.

3. That it is the desire of the Canadian Government to receive evidence that payments have been made to the designated Japanese in Japan. The Supreme Commander will be asked to obtain receipts or other evidences of payment from the Bank of Japan for forwarding to the Canadian Government.

Washington, April 8, 1946

My despatch No. 666 April 2nd,† repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan. The following is the text of the reply, dated April 5th, received today from the State Department to my note No. 119 of March 30th on the above subject, Begins:

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Canada and has the honour to confirm that the Canadian Embassy's note No. 119 dated March 30th, 1946, correctly sets forth the agreements reached at the Conference of March 28th between representatives of the United States Departments of State, Treasury and War and the Canadian Treasury and Labour Departments, concerning procedures for the transfer to Japan of the assets of Japanese deportees or repatriates from Canada.

An outline of procedures, almost identical with those agreed upon at the Conference on March 28th, had been sent to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers prior to that Conference, and his approval of that outline has now been received. It is believed that the Supreme Commander will have no objection to the minor changes made at the Conference. A copy of the Canadian Embassy's note will be sent to the Supreme Commander, and in the absence of any further comments from the Supreme Commander, the Canadian Embassy's note will be considered to constitute the agreed statement of procedures for carrying out the transfer of the assets in question.

It is understood that representatives of the United States Treasury and War Department will work out the mechanics for the mutual transfer of Canadian funds to the United States Government in consultation with Mr. D. H. Connor, representative of the Canadian Treasury in Washington. Ends.

The following is the text of a letter that has now been received from the Deputy Minister of Labour with regard to this matter:

"Would you be good enough to forward, as soon as possible, to the Canadian Embassy at Washington a requisition for shipping accommodation for the following Japanese for shipment from Vancouver to Japan, namely:

Males over 12 years of age	736
Females over 12 years of age	348
Boys 12 years of age and under	147
Girls 12 years of age and under	155

"The above persons comprise 222 family groups and 466 single unattached adults. There may be some minor additions or deductions, prior to sailing, in the above figures of which advice will be given to the U.S. shipping representatives at Seattle as these occur between now and the sailing date. All of the above persons are voluntary repatriates.

"It is requested that this requisition be placed immediately with the proper U.S. shipping authorities and that instructions go forward from the U.S. shipping authorities in Washington to their representative in Seattle with a view to completing arrangements at that end with Mr. T. B. Pickersgill, Commissioner of Japanese Placement, Department of Labour, 360 Homer Street, Vancouver, as soon as practicable."

Ottawa, April 25, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Reference your WA-1665 of April 18† and further correspondence† concerning the repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan.

The following is the text of a letter which has now been received from the Deputy Minister of Labour concerning this matter:

“Mr. Pickersgill reports that on getting in touch with Mr. Wagner, Seattle, he was referred in turn to one A. S. Stanford of the Passenger Section, War Shipping Administration, San Francisco, as the party who had control of passenger shipping on the West Coast. Mr. Stanford indicated to Mr. Pickersgill over the telephone that the only shipping immediately in sight was a vessel which would hold a maximum of between 600 and 700 passengers and would require conversion from troop transport accommodation to civilian accommodation and would probably take three weeks or more to reconvert for this purpose and that any additional shipping accommodation would be some weeks later.

We, of course, consider it very important that the shipping of voluntary repatriates be completed by the end of May, if possible, as delay beyond that date is quite likely to change the picture.

Mr. Stanford also suggested to Mr. Pickersgill that the repatriates would also have to have an additional inoculation for typhus. This was not required under our original shipping plans and would mean going through this whole procedure of inoculation again after the same has been completed.

We would, therefore, like you to have the Canadian Embassy representatives make immediate direct contact with the War Shipping Administration and endeavour to get a specific allocation of shipping now to complete repatriation of voluntary repatriates during the month of May.

Unless some direct pressure is put on in Washington for this purpose, we are likely to run into the same delays that we encountered in respect to the completion of financial arrangements.”

The government feels that it is particularly important that Japanese who are willing to return to Japan should leave at as early a date as possible. The delay in getting any movement whatever is proving a source of embarrassment, and further delays may lead to misunderstanding and difficulty. I should appreciate it, therefore, if you would have this matter taken up as soon as possible in order to secure immediate arrangements for the movement that is contemplated.

TELEGRAM WA-1834

Washington, April 30, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for Gordon Robertson from Morrow, Begins: My WA-1815 and WA-1827, April 30th,† repatriation of Japanese from Canada to Japan.

1. I was greatly disturbed when I received a report today of the meeting at the State Department Monday afternoon attended by Mr. MacNamara, Deputy Minister of Labour. As you know, we have been spending a considerable amount of time on the question of repatriating these Japanese and have now made what we believed to be satisfactory arrangements in respect to both the financial and transportation aspects. When Mr. MacNamara telephoned on Saturday to say that he would like to come to Washington to discuss the matter of transportation we had received your EX-1130 of April 25th and, in accordance with the second to last paragraph, had pressed for definite information on shipping dates and ships available by Monday. We explained this to Mr. MacNamara and arranged a meeting for him for Monday afternoon.

2. Before going to the meeting he was discussing the rates to be charged for the move, which we reported in our WA-1664 of April 18th,† and seemed to be of the opinion that they were rather high, but it was explained that even if they were, which we doubted, the desire to move all the repatriates at one time and as soon as possible, coupled with the absolute scarcity of shipping, should justify the charges quoted.

3. At the meeting, Mr. MacNamara again raised the question of the amount to be charged, and finally stated that he would like a few days to think over the possibility of cancelling the whole arrangement. This, as you may imagine, was a very distinct surprise to all present and was, I may say, well taken by the American authorities, who merely explained that if they did not know definitely by Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock our time, they could use the ships for other purposes and that no further shipping would be available until late July at the earliest—and then with no guarantee of any different rate per passenger.

4. Later today I received a further message from the State Department in which they kindly offered to increase the dormitory or reduced fare accommodation as much as possible provided that we could let them know Tuesday night if such was acceptable. This would be an increase of about 200 from that previously quoted. As Mr. MacNamara could not be reached in New York, we communicated with Mr. Brown of the Department of Labour who saw the Minister and obtained a firm ruling that we could take the ships—the only proviso being that any spare space would be cabin space rather than the cheaper accommodation. This will not amount to very much as the number of repatriates has been increased since the last figures which were provided by the Department of Labour.

5. The whole matter is now settled, but I am making these comments to indicate that such a decision as that stated by the Deputy Minister, while it may be well-founded in view of the circumstances in Canada, is certainly most embarrassing to us here, coming as it did in the presence of the State Department officers and without any prior warning, and may make it very difficult in future for us to obtain any concessions in the way of shipping from any part of the world. You are also aware that we are regularly instructed to obtain the maximum accommodation for Canadian authorized repatriates from Europe, which is a very difficult problem, and I feel that our effectiveness in respect to such movement may have been seriously impaired. Ends.

[Tokyo,] June 20, 1946

REPORT ON ARRIVAL OF JAPANESE REPATRIATES FROM CANADA
669 EX MARINE ANGEL, 1 BORN DURING VOYAGE

The ship arrived at Uraya, a port on the Tokyo Bay about 45 miles from Tokyo, at 1330 hours, Saturday, 15 June 1946. There is no wharfage at this port, ships load and unload by lighter. It was arranged to commence the unloading on Monday 17 June. However, after waiting all day and unloading some of the baggage, it was decided that the sea was still too rough to transfer women and children into the open landing boats. On Tuesday, 18 June, the ship was moved over behind the breakwater where the water was much smoother, but this entailed a correspondingly longer trip in the landing craft. The passengers all left the ship about a quarter to 11, and duly arrived at the reception centre, about a mile from the landing point. The delay of a day was a benefit, because on Monday the Japanese had no fuel to supply trucks, but on Tuesday, some gasoline was obtained and transportation by truck was supplied from the landing slip to the reception centre for the women, children and the very old.

The repatriation centre at Uraya consists of six large camps at various points around the peninsula, and a central reception point capable of handling and processing as many as 10,000 persons per day. The centre is under the command of Lt-Col King of the 8th Army, and all steps such as inoculation, delousing, customs examination, payment, discharge, bathing, etc. are carried out on a mass production assembly line system. Everything runs smoothly and there was no hitch in any of the arrangements. The whole operation is carried out by the Japanese civilian authorities under the control and supervision of the U.S. Army.

The Canadian repatriates were not required to go through all the stages imposed on returning troops, for example, their baggage was not examined by the customs, nor was any disinfecting resorted to. They were, however, each given a typhus and cholera inoculation on landing, and will be kept in the camps until tomorrow, when arrangements have been made to give them all railway tickets to their destinations. The railway station is about a mile from the camp and the baggage is now all in camp and will be transported to the railway station by truck.

The unloading of the baggage was a big task. The men among the repatriates worked three shifts until 6 o'clock yesterday morning getting it up. It was hardly possible to commence the payment until after the inoculation was over, but the Bank of Japan had a staff of four, and payment continued until about nine o'clock on the 18th, and at five o'clock on the 19th was thought to be all finished, but the Bank had to make a final check to be sure of this.

There was no sickness on the voyage except a considerable amount of sea sickness, one female passenger was a mental case and was handled as such.

A good many of the passengers were personally acquainted with me, and they said they wished to express their thanks to the Captain and crew of the ship for the kindness they had received.

While they all understood the arrangements about exchange, some of them were rather shocked to find that the official rate of  $13\frac{1}{2}$  yen per dollar was less than  $\frac{1}{3}$  of what the dollar is worth on the local markets. A loaf of rationed bread made of a mixture of barley, wheat, rice polishings, potatoes, ground silk worms, etc. costs 2 yen 10 sen per loaf (1 kilo). Rice of second quality costs from 2 yen 10 sen to 2 yen 30 sen per kilo. Fish costs from 2 to 5 yen per pound.

The majority of the younger people, especially those in their teens were obviously depressed and desirous of returning as soon as possible. So far they have seen nothing of the desolation of Japan, and it was probably their contact with Japanese food that accentuated this feeling. Most of them in the teen age group were unable to eat the food supplied.

It will be seen from the above that the arrangements made by the Canadian Government worked out smoothly, and so far no one has made any serious complaint.

The following points are submitted for consideration in case any other shipments are being sent:

(1) The baggage receives pretty severe handling from the Japanese workmen. I would impress on all passengers that they should pack their baggage as strongly as possible, and that each group should be supplied with two or three hammers and plenty of suitable nails for repairing any damaged boxes, etc. Sewing machines especially should be packed more securely than some of them on the last shipment.

(2) Owing to the food situation in Japan, I think they should bring as much food with them as possible.

(3) The list of repatriates should be sent so as to arrive here ahead of the shipment. The list which the Finance people should have had has not arrived yet, but they paid on the certificates.

(4) Some arrangement should be made to allow these people to send at least one message back to Canada on arrival here. At present, there is no method by which civilians in Japan can send mail to Canada, and I received a great many requests for information on this point. If this is considered proper, I have no doubt arrangements at this end could be made for one letter to be sent through this Detachment.

(5) Most of the children were born in Canada and have never been in Japan. I received a good many enquiries from teenagers as to their status. I would suggest that they be told exactly what the position is before they leave, because I was unable to give them information on this point, not knowing what changes, if any, may have been made in the law recently.

ATTENTION MR. GORDON ROBERTSON

We have already completed arrangements for the shipping of a third boatload of 1300 Japanese repatriates from Vancouver on the S.S. General Meigs (sailing date from Vancouver August 2nd) and have requested the Canadian Embassy, Washington, through you to clear this shipment with the U.S. State Department, Washington.

We have, at the present time, an additional 500 Japanese who desire to proceed to Japan under the same arrangements as soon as possible. Our administration at the coast are of the opinion that this number may be increased to at least 650.

Mr. T. B. Pickersgill, Commissioner of Japanese Placement at Vancouver, has been in touch with Mr. Stanford in charge of passenger accommodation, War Shipping Administration in San Francisco, who has assured him that accommodation for at least 450 repatriates and possibly 200 more can be provided on a ship sailing out of San Francisco on September 14th at a rate of $138.00 for adults with the standard reductions for children under 12 years of age. The rate for those in excess of the initial 450 on this boat will be $184.00 with the same standard reductions for children under 12.

In view of the fact that this boat will carry a large number of first-class passengers for Australia, Mr. Stanford advises that the Japanese repatriates will have to be loaded at San Francisco. Apart from this ship, Mr. Stanford has no other shipping space in sight for these additional repatriates.

It is proposed that the group to be moved down to San Francisco will go down by train in bond and will be moved directly from the train to the ship. Mr. Stanford requests that confirmation of these arrangements be advised to him within the course of the next few days.

Would you be good enough to ask the Canadian Embassy, Washington, to advise the U.S. State Department immediately of the above arrangements and ask for their concurrence therein to be received during the current week if possible?

Our Liaison Officer in Japan reports that the rate of exchange at which U.S. dollars are being exchanged in Japanese yen is very inequitable in its effect on these repatriates as this rate of 15 yen to the U.S. dollar contrasts with the unofficial rate which apparently provides a much higher number of yen to the dollar.

May this situation be discussed by the Canadian Embassy with U.S. authorities with a view to ascertaining whether any change in the fixed exchange rate is under immediate consideration.

ATTENTION: WAR CRIMES INVESTIGATION SECTION
JAPANESE REPATRIATES FROM CANADA. BAGGAGE OF SIEZO YONEMURA

For Department of Labour.

2. Reference unnumbered telegram† apparently dated 11 Dec regarding lost baggage. This wire is from the Department of National Defence, but no doubt had its origin in the Department of Labour.

3. A search has been made at Kurihama where the baggage was all stored for a short time, and this baggage is not there. It is likely that other friends going to the same district arranged to have the baggage sent to them. Inquiries are under way. Asajiro YOSHIOKA, the consignee mentioned, claims that he was told nothing about any of this baggage other than that he was the nominal consignee.

4. This man may consider himself very fortunate that he decided not to repatriate, and if he never recovers his baggage he will still be a great deal better off than those who have returned. In this connection I think that proper representation should be made to someone to protect any future repatriates from having the greater part of their money taken from them by either the American Government or the Japanese Government by way of the exchange and banking regulations, the plain fact of the matter being that the money with which the Japanese repatriate leaves Canada shrinks in transmission to a small fraction of its real value, then on top of this, all except 1,000 yen per head is placed in a frozen bank account by the Japanese Government, this latter expression meaning that while the depositor gets the bank book showing a credit, he cannot withdraw money except at a specified monthly rate, this specified monthly rate being considerably less than what is required to live on, and I am not sure whether they are allowed to draw it out in addition to any money they may be earning.

5. I occasionally come in contact with some of these repatriates, and also hear from them by letter. A great many of them are having a hard time to get enough food, others have been fortunate enough to get employment with the army of occupation, etc., but even their employment does not help much because they are only permitted to draw a certain part of their salary in cash, the rest is taken into frozen bank accounts again. As the Japanese have already had one experience with these so-called "frozen bank accounts" they now refrain from using banks any more than they can help.

6. While it may be said that what happens to the repatriate after he comes to this country is no concern of the Canadian Government, my understanding is that many of the minors are Canadian citizens and from what they say have every intention of maintaining this right in the future if the opportunity permits. Secondly, it would seem that at the present time Canadian funds are being used to subsidize either the U.S. or Japanese Governments. One fact is outstanding, namely that a greater part of the money that leaves Canada does not in effect benefit the repatriate.

7. While this is strictly not a military matter, I have been in somewhat close touch with the people, and know many of them personally in fact just received a letter from a former employee, telling of the difficulties in obtaining food, etc, and I think the information should be passed along.

MEMORANDUM ON RELIEF OF CANADIAN NATIONALS IN JAPAN

All Canadian nationals on the approved list who are still remaining in Japan are members of Catholic Missions. They are all residing in towns in which they intend to continue their religious duties. In those cases where the buildings were intact but occupied by the Japanese during the war, they are now again in possession. To my knowledge all have adequate housing facilities; in the case of Sendai (one orphanage) and Nagasaki (hospital) they are anxious to rebuild their former mission buildings.

The greatest problem facing these Canadians in Japan is securing adequate food, clothing and fuel. It has been the policy of the United States Army to insist that the Japanese Government give an additional ration to Allied nationals residing in Japan which, if it could be fully secured, would give each adult 2400 calories a day. In actual practice, however, the local Japanese supplies cannot provide the necessary foodstuffs. In some cases such provisions can only be purchased on the black market. Consequently it is desirable that those who may have to supplement their ordinary rations by purchases on the black market should possess a considerable amount of money. As most of the missionaries had their funds frozen during the war they are now able to draw on these funds for current expenses, but it is obvious that unless they can secure considerable amounts from their home mission, their present financial resources may prove inadequate. Since it might take some time before the flow of foreign exchange to Japan can be arranged, I requested the United States Army to make available to me, or any accredited Canadian representative, Japanese funds for distribution to Canadians in need of cash relief. This request was granted but only shortly before my departure. Accordingly, in the absence of any Canadian representative, those funds will not be available to Canadians.

However, I requested the Swiss Legation to furnish such relief as they were permitted (up to Y300 a month) in case of application by a Canadian. After March 1, however, the Swiss will drop all their foreign representing duties, and in the interim period, until the arrival of a Canadian representative, it may be necessary to request the British Foreign Office representatives in Tokyo to disburse cash relief to needy Canadians. Before my departure only one Canadian Brother, Omer Ruel of Sendai, requested relief. Since his request came before permission to draw upon yen provided by the United States Army was made available, I directed him with a note of recommendation to the Swiss Legation. The Swiss agreed to pay him the amount of Y300 until his departure in the early months of this year.

When the Swiss close up their foreign interest section they will turn over all files and lists of approved Canadians to the British representative in the absence of a Canadian official. Thus in the case of any Canadian applying for relief it can quickly be ascertained if he is a Canadian national.

It is recommended, however, that since no specific arrangements regarding relief were made with the British before my departure, a telegram be despatched requesting the competent authorities in Tokyo to disburse such relief as may be necessary until the arrival of a Canadian representative.

Sir,

I should be grateful if you would ask the British Embassy to transmit a message from us to the Foreign Office Representative in Tokyo relating to relief to Canadian civilians in Japan. (I might say that we recently asked Canada House to ask the Foreign Office for advice on the best method of sending communications from the Department of External Affairs to the Foreign Office Representative in Tokyo, and the Foreign Office suggested that our best course would be to work through the British Embassy in Washington). The Foreign Office said that its chief representative in Tokyo is Mr. D. F. MacDermot, the head of the political side of the United Kingdom Liaison Mission in Japan.

Mr. Norman of this Department, who recently returned from Japan, reports that the Canadian missionaries who have remained in Japan will probably need cash relief when their existing supply of money is used up. This money was blocked during the war by the Japanese Government but was made available to the Canadians after the Japanese surrender. During the period of hostilities the Canadians received cash relief from the Protecting Power.

Enclosed are three copies of a list of 59 Canadian missionaries remaining in Japan.† Apart from the missionaries, there are only two Canadian civilians in Japan and we have no reason to think that they will require assistance.

We would appreciate it if this list of Canadian missionaries could be sent to the Foreign Office Representative in Tokyo and if he could be asked to give them cash relief if and when they ask for it. The relief should be limited to money required for subsistence i.e., we do not authorize the payment of relief for the purpose of rebuilding damaged monasteries or for any purpose not directly connected with subsistence.

We assume that the accounts and vouchers for such relief will reach us eventually through the Foreign Office. In view of the fact that there is bound to be a long delay before the accounts and vouchers reach us, it would be appreciated if the Foreign Office Representative would, every two months, address to the Department of External Affairs a brief informal report on the relief situation.

We do not know when it may become possible for the Missionary Orders in Canada to send funds to their members in Japan through banking channels. As soon as that time comes the authorization for the granting of relief will lapse. We will at that time inform the Foreign Office Representative that the authorization is at an end.

I have etc.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, January 3, 1946

The attention of the Canadian authorities is repeatedly directed towards the problem of refugees not only by the natural concern Canadians may feel for the thousands of people made exiles by the war and its aftermath, but also by representations which come from two quarters. One of these consists of the international organizations charged with the care of refugees, and in particular the Displaced Persons Bureau of UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees. The other direction from which representations on behalf of refugees proceed is within Canada. It comprises the numerous foreign language organizations and residents of foreign origin who are seeking asylum for associates and relatives who for various reasons cannot return to their homes in Europe.

Concrete proposals for immigration to Canada have not yet been made on a significant scale in either case. The Displaced Persons Bureau of UNRRA is not yet in a position to indicate the number of people within its charge who cannot be returned to their place of origin. Neither has the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees raised the question of immigration with any insistence. This Committee is concerned with a problem that is still limited in extent, and that had its origin largely in the anti-Semitic persecutions of the pre-war years and of the early war period when escape from Europe was still possible. As soon, however, as a group of permanent exiles begins to emerge from the mass of displaced persons in Europe and transportation across the Atlantic becomes available for civilian passengers, the question of finding homes for refugees in the American hemisphere will almost certainly confront Canadian representatives on international humanitarian bodies. It is also probable that, when these circumstances prevail, members of the foreign language groups in Canada, who have so far concerned themselves largely with the problem of relief for displaced persons, will begin to ask permission to bring large numbers of their friends and relatives to Canada. Some representations have already been received to this effect.

It is difficult at this time to foresee the problem which will eventually be created by permanent refugees in Europe, but there are already clear indications that certain groups will have to be provided with new homes. Ukrainians and Poles are the most numerous of these, and each group may comprise several hundred thousand persons who will refuse to return to their place of origin in Eastern Europe. Amongst the Poles, former members of the Polish army in the west and servants of the former Polish Government in London will have a special claim to consideration. To these must be added an unknown number of Mennonites from the German colonies in the U.S.S.R. who escaped when these communities were disbanded and who are the concern of the strong Mennonite groups on the American continent. It is also possible that some of the Germans who are being forced to leave former German territories in Eastern Europe will seek refuge on this continent, and inquiries have already been received concerning the feasibility of allowing further groups of Sudeten Germans to join the Sudeten colonies recently established in Canada. There will also be groups of political refugees who fled from the totalitarian governments of central Europe in pre-war years and who have not yet found permanent homes. Finally, there will be a new group of political refugees created by the major political changes which are now taking place in South-eastern Europe. These will be Roumanians, Yugoslavs, Bulgarians and perhaps even Greeks, many of whom will have some claim on the sympathy of the western allies because of assistance given during the war, and who are unable to live under the jurisdiction of the new governments in their homelands.

As soon as any effort is made to provide new homes for these refugees, the further problem will emerge of distinguishing between the genuine political refugee and the political agitator who may have laid himself open to the charge of treachery by collaborating with the enemy during the war. Representations have already been received in Ottawa on behalf of a group of Ukrainian refugees including such Ukrainian nationalist leaders as Skoropadsky and Melnik, who operated from Germany and apparently under German auspices in the pre-war years. These men are regarded, with some justification, as traitors and war criminals by the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. There must be numerous other persons, amongst the thousands of Ukrainians, Poles, Yugoslavs and others who found themselves in Central Europe either on the outbreak of war or during the period of German domination of the continent, who have similarly compromised their status as refugees by co-operating with the enemy. Extending the right of asylum to include these people, especially if they desire to continue their political activities to their new homes, might have highly undesirable consequences.

At present, the Canadian Government has made only minor relaxations in its immigration regulations as a consequence of the problem of refugees. In the case of Poles, for example, it has been decided that any member of the Polish armed forces who was a resident of Canada or who is married to a Canadian may be admitted to Canada. Entry will also be given to members of the Polish diplomatic corps who have some special connections with this country, and those now here will not be forced to leave. Permanent landing has also been given to some 3,500 refugees who were admitted to Canada during the war, and this group includes a considerable number of Poles and German Jews. It is the policy of the Canadian Government, however, as stated by the Minister of Mines and Resources in the House of Commons, to defer the consideration of renewed immigration until conditions of employment amongst returned Canadian servicemen in the post-war period have been determined.<sup>1</sup>

*Rapport préliminaire du Comité interministériel sur la politique
d'immigration au Comité du Cabinet sur l'immigration*

Preliminary Report of Interdepartmental Committee on Immigration Policy to the Cabinet Committee on Immigration

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 4, 1946

1. The interdepartmental Committee appointed on March 21st by the Cabinet Committee on Immigration has made a brief review of some of the problems presented by the applications for permission to enter Canada which are now being made by thousands of prospective immigrants. Many of these applications have been received from British subjects in the United Kingdom who are eligible to come to Canada under existing regulations. These persons would now be able to enter Canada if shipping space could be secured and if other arrangements, such as permission to transfer funds, could be satisfactorily completed. Other applicants are people of continental origin who are either displaced persons or refugees or who are anxious to leave their homes because of the unsatisfactory nature of post-war conditions. A new element of importance amongst the prospective immigrants is the greatly increased group of people with technical or professional training, or with business experience, who would normally make a livelihood in commerce and industry rather than in agriculture. Many of these applicants wish to bring substantial funds with them to this continent, although restrictions on capital movements will make this difficult for some time to come.

2. The Committee is of the opinion that it would be desirable, in present circumstances, to permit somewhat increased movement of immigrants to Canada in the post-war period and that a policy governing the selection of desirable immigrants should be formulated as soon as possible. There are however, certain factors which will prevent any early large scale movement of people. It is still difficult for the ordinary traveller to obtain shipping space and it is improbable that any large number of immigrants could find passage across the Atlantic within the next eighteen months. The unsettled condition of the continent will also hinder the re-establishment in a short time, of an expanded immigration service capable of handling large numbers of applicants. It is the view of the Committee, therefore, that two immediate steps might be considered in the light of the current situation. The first is the adoption as a short-term measure, of revisions in the present immigration regulations, in order to provide for the admission to Canada of such approved persons as it seems possible to transport and receive within the next eighteen months. These suggested revisions, which are outlined in paragraph 4 below have been formulated with a view to admitting immigrants who could be both maintained and provided with housing by relatives in Canada. The revisions have also been formulated with a view to going some way to meet the pressing demands which are being made for the admission to Canada of persons who are refugees or displaced persons. The movement contemplated would not consist entirely of refugees; it would, however, permit the entry of a certain number of approved immigrants whose relatives in Canada are anxious to provide them with homes.

3. It is the opinion of the Committee further that, while this short-term immigration policy is in effect, the opportunity should be taken to make a thorough examination of the general question of immigration with a view to determining policy. It is not thought that a policy for the long-term period should be formulated without the most careful scrutiny of previous experience, both in Canada and in other countries. Consideration should also be given to the effect on immigration and emigration policies of recent changes in social and economic conditions.

4. The Committee therefore makes the following recommendations:

A. That the following changes be made in existing regulations:

1. That the occupational regulation (P.C. 695 of March 21, 1921 as amended) be further amended to provide for the admission of the following additional classes:

(a) The father or mother, the unmarried son or daughter, eighteen years of age or over, the unmarried brother or sister, the orphan nephew or niece under sixteen years of age, of any person legally admitted to and resident in Canada, who is in a position to receive and care for such relative.

The term "Orphan" as used in this clause means a child bereaved of both parents.

(b) A person entering Canada with sufficient capital to establish an essential industry.

B. An inquiry into immigration policy should be immediately authorized, to be made by some agency of Government especially commissioned for the purpose and provided with the necessary resources to undertake a thorough study. A report on this subject with suitable recommendations should be prepared within the next twelve months.

Some of the questions to which consideration might be given in the course of an inquiry of this nature would be:

(i) The quota system and the possible advantages of applying this method of selection in Canada, with particular reference to the problem of oriental immigration.

(ii) The long-term effect of immigration on population levels.

(iii) The extent to which large scale movements of population may be affected by world economic expansion.

(iv) The relation of immigration policy to employment policy.

(v) The basis of selecting immigrants in the past and the effect of these policies in practice. The methods of selection to be adopted.

(vi) The position under Canadian social security provisions of prospective immigrants and the feasibility of working out arrangements for the transfer from one country to the other of an individual's acquired social security benefits.

(vii) The character of the immigration service necessary for carrying out a revised policy.

[Ottawa,] April 12, 1946

The report from the Interdepartmental Committee on Immigration Policy, which Mr. Glen will be submitting to Cabinet shortly, recommends two or three immediate amendments in the Immigration Regulations, and suggests that the larger questions of policy require a good deal of study before considered proposals can be put up to the Government.

The report recommends that first degree relatives, i.e., fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters and children of persons already established in Canada, who are in a position to give them shelter and support, should be eligible for admission. This, I think, is a wise and humane provision, which might relieve a good many hard cases of actual suffering during the next year or two.

I doubt, however, whether it should be coupled with the next recommendation, which provides for the admission of persons "with sufficient capital to establish an essential industry". There is provision under the present law for dealing with such applicants by Order in Council if, on investigation, an economic case appears to be made out for their admission. I think it might be a mistake to amend the Immigration Regulations at this time to take care specifically of this class of possible immigrants, when so many needy and deserving people will have to be turned down.

IMMIGRATION POLICY

At the meeting of the Cabinet on May 9th, the Minister of Mines and Resources submitted a report of the Cabinet Committee.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Glen went on to point out that acceptance of the Committee's recommendations would involve the re-establishment of certain offices in Europe. It had also been suggested that the R.C.M. Police should investigate the records and backgrounds of applicants.

After discussion, the Cabinet approved the recommendations submitted by the Minister on behalf of the Cabinet Committee, with the exception of that relating to the entry of persons having sufficient capital to establish essential industries, and agreed that the regulations be amended accordingly, it being understood that review of long term immigration policy would be undertaken under the auspices of the Cabinet Committee, as recommended.

Ottawa, July 3, 1946

Sir,

I refer to your despatch No. A.237 of April 5† and subsequent correspondence† concerning a scheme suggested by Lieut.-Colonel R. Morris Wilson of UNRRA for the transfer of displaced persons from Europe to Canada.

<sup>1</sup> See statement of Minister of Mines and Resources on immigration policy in Canada, Debates, House of Commons, 1946, Vol. 2, pp. 1978-1979.

2. The Canadian Government has recently received many suggestions concerning the possibility of immigration to Canada of similar groups of displaced Europeans. However at the present date no final decision has yet been taken concerning Canadian policy towards the admission of refugees or displaced persons. The only information which can be given at this stage concerns the two recent changes in Canadian immigration regulations which were effected by Orders-in-Council P.C. 2070 and P.C. 2071 of May 28 (see my circular telegram of June 3 and my circular despatch of June 13).†

3. In replying to Colonel Wilson, you should emphasize that the Canadian Government regards the problem of the settlement of displaced persons as being so widespread that it can only be dealt with effectively by joint international action. With this end in view Canada has participated actively in recent discussions which have been called by the United Nations to consider the general question of refugees and displaced persons.

President, Initiative Group for the Emigration to Canada of Baltic-Germans from Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, to Government of Canada

Königstein, January 5, 1946

Dear Sirs,

As representatives of the Baltic-German group of the inhabitants of the former independent states Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania we apply to you with the request to permit our emigration to your country and our colonization there. In the years 1939-1940 we left on Germany's invitation our native country which had already been inhabited by our ancestors for 700 years and emigrated to Germany in order to contribute on our part to the peace among nations in the East of Europe.

Our people which is of German-Danish-Swedish-Norwegian-Finnish-Russian origin, living at the borders, has suffered much in the course of his long history through continuous wars amongst neighbouring Great Powers, but in spite of this we have preserved our culture and nationality.

Through great activity and vitality we succeeded to overcome all difficulties. We belonged to the richest of the Nordic-German nations.

In the years 1939-1940 about 120,000 Baltic-Germans emigrated to Germany. They had to transfer to the German state the right to dispose of their property, as fixtures, factories, estates and other values, for which they had to be indemnified advantageously in Germany. The German State on his part has made arrangements with the governments of the Baltic States and with Russia for the settlement of the accounts for the properties of the emigrants.

The properties left by us in the Baltic States, for which Germany is responsible, amounts to about 300,000,000 dollars. We want to transfer to your Government all our claims to Germany on the basis of this arrangement for the purpose to ensure the final settlement with Germany.

We trust that meantime it will be possible with your mediation to finance the emigration and the colonization in Canada through an English-American Bank.

We presume that about 80,000-90,000 Baltic-Germans will have survived this war and will be willing to emigrate.

Among us being representatives of all professions from the university professor and manufacturer to the workman and farmer, we think that our colonization and the building up of our new existence in Canada would be an extensive one embracing all branches of business.

The organization of the works with regard to the cultural and economical sections will be guided and promoted by ourselves in accordance with the needs of our people.

We beg to point out that all of us shall be responsible for the credits obtained in Canada for our colonization. The amounts obtained from Germany shall be credited to these accounts and shall serve as securities.

Our idea is that the colonization would be a closed one, i.e. round several small towns which should be erected 5,000-6,000 farms would be founded. For this purpose we need good, for agricultural purposes suitable soil, if possible near railways, waterways a.s.o.

The colonization should be organized with the help of Canadian firms and with our own forces. All shall be arranged in accordance with the demands of the present time by means of mutual help.

In the beginning the emigrants should be placed in great barracks if possible in the vicinity of the territory allotted for the colonization, where they should be nourished in community.

In case you should agree to this scheme we should like to hear on what help we could count on the part of your Government, particularly as to the allotment of ground, building of roads, traffic, electrification, for the colonization in towns: calculation of the amount of ground for the constructions in the small towns which should be erected, taxes and duties.

We are interested to become soon subjects of Canada and we beg to request, in case an emigration should be at all possible, to take us already in Germany under your protection and to give us corresponding passports which would serve as an authorization for the emigration.

In completion we beg to say that until the years 1939-1940 we have been subjects of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania and since 1940-1941 we have become subjects of Germany.

Ottawa, May 3, 1946

I have your letter of the 25th ultimo† enclosing copy of Despatch No. 43,† dated March 18th from the Consular Section of the Canadian Military Mission in Germany with a petition from representatives from the inhabitants of the former states of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania regarding immigration to Canada.

The proposal is that Canada admit from 80,000 to 90,000 Balts who were transferred to Germany in 1939, the Government to acquire for them 5000 to 6000 farms with equipment, providing all the requirements for an extensive self-contained colony, the immigrants to cede to the Government of Canada their right to reparations from Germany in the value of properties transferred to the German State in 1939-1940.

The Balt problem is so involved and presents so many difficulties that it would seem its solution can only be sought by international action. In our opinion, the plan submitted is altogether impractical. From a settlement point of view the creating in Canada of a compact colony of the magnitude proposed would be inimical to this country's development. Further, the heavy financial commitments that would have to be undertaken would, we believe, rule out any possibility of approval being granted.

The United Kingdom High Commissioner, on urgent instructions from his Government, left with me today the attached Aide-Mémoire concerning action desired to deal with the problem of displaced persons in Europe, and particularly of Jews. Towards the end of this document the hope is expressed that the Canadian Government will take the following steps:

(a) To co-operate fully in securing a satisfactory international agreement on the general problem of displaced persons;

(b) To make a declaration in this sense before the end of July including, if possible, an offer to accept a specified number of displaced persons.

I told Clutterbuck that it was obvious from the record with respect to (a) that we were co-operating fully, pointing out the position which the Canadian representatives had consistently taken at the General Assembly in London, the Sub-Committee on Refugees and the Economic and Social Council. I indicated that a further general statement of our intention to co-operate seemed hardly required in the circumstances, since I was sure we would continue to take the same line at the next meeting of the General Assembly and the further international discussions before then.

With respect to (b) I said that, while I could appreciate that a statement of readiness to accept a round number of refugees for permanent residence had a dramatic public effect, it seemed to me from past experience that such declarations often turned out in the long run to bring smaller results than changes in Immigration regulations. We had recently considerably widened the scope of our Immigration regulations largely with an eye to admitting to Canada displaced persons from Europe who had relatives here, and while it was hard to dramatize such a change it would undoubtedly involve, as transportation became available, the movement of thousands of individuals, many of whom come within the description of displaced persons. I added that, under our Immigration system, it was difficult, if not impossible, for us to announce that we would receive a specified number of refugees within a given time. In any event it seemed clearly out of the question for us to make any such announcement before the end of July, especially as you had just made public the decision to admit four thousand men from the Polish Forces. I suggested that he should draw the attention of his Government to the recent alteration in our Immigration regulations.

We shall have to give some reply in writing to this approach and we are proceeding to discuss the matter with the Immigration Branch. I am sending a copy of the enclosure and of this note to Mr. Glen, for his information.<sup>1</sup>

As the Canadian Government is aware, the United Kingdom Government has been engaged in discussion with United States representatives on the subject of the recent report of the Anglo-U.S. Committee which recommended inter alia the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews into Palestine.

It seems essential, if Arab opposition to any such plan for dealing with Jews who desire to leave Europe is to be overcome—

(1) that this particular proposal should be treated, not in isolation but as part of the main problem of dealing with displaced persons and refugees in Europe;

I think reply along lines of verbal one would be in order. St. L[AURENT]

(2) that it should be made clear that other contributions are being made towards the solution of that problem.

Further, on humanitarian grounds, in the interests of efficient administration in ex-enemy territories and on account of the political difficulties which arise from the presence of displaced persons in the occupied zones in Europe, it is most desirable that the numbers of displaced persons should be reduced as rapidly as possible.

It stands out accordingly that the first objective should be to create in Europe conditions which are such that a substantial number of the displaced persons can be resettled in circumstances enabling them to live free from discrimination and oppression. It is recognized, however, that whatever steps can be taken to this end, there will still remain a substantial number of persons for whom it will be necessary to provide outside Europe. The Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States intend to continue their efforts in the negotiations they are now conducting within the framework of the United Nations to promote the establishment of an international organisation which will be able to deal effectively with the whole problem. But creation of this machinery is bound to take time and meanwhile it is important to proceed at once with measures designed to aid the re-settlement of displaced persons, including Jews, overseas.

The main elements of the plan in mind are as follows:

(a) It is proposed in the first place that the strongest possible support should be given to the appeal which is to be made to the United Nations at the forthcoming general assembly calling upon all member Governments to consider what contribution they can make by receiving in territories under their control a proportion of the displaced persons in Europe, including the Jews.

(b) The United Kingdom Government has already accepted a substantial commitment in promoting the re-settlement of Polish troops unwilling to return to Poland, the number involved being about 228,000 apart from civilians.

(c) As regards the United States, under existing quotas over 150,000 European immigrants can be admitted for permanent residence each year. Entry is also available to substantial additional numbers in classes exempt from quota restrictions. The total of the quotas from European countries from which the majority of displaced persons originate and of the average number of non-quota immigrants from these same countries, is some 53,000 each year, and it is assumed that in the next few years the majority of the immigrants will be Jews and other displaced persons. In addition it is understood that the United States Administration are prepared to seek the approval of Congress for special legislation for the entry into the United States of 50,000 displaced persons including Jews.

(d) Pending the establishment of an international organisation for dealing with refugees, the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States will continue to explore through the agency of the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees the possibility of securing admission of displaced persons to other countries and will promote such settlement as far as practicable. Active consideration is already being given to a concrete proposal relating to Brazil and similar proposals relating to other South American countries are being explored.

It will clearly be of first importance for the success of this plan that other countries should also be prepared to make their contribution. In bringing this matter, therefore, to the notice of the Canadian Government, the United Kingdom Government would wish to stress the importance which it attaches, particularly from the point of view of dealing with the Palestine problem, to securing a satisfactory international agreement on the general problem of displaced persons, and to express the hope that in view of the great value which would be derived from co-operative action in this matter the Canadian Government will be willing to take similar positive steps and to adopt also a sympathetic attitude towards this question when it comes before the General Assembly of the United Nations. It would be of very great assistance if a declaration on the part of Canada in this sense could be made before the end of this month, especially if such a declaration could contain a definite offer to accept a specified number of displaced persons (including Jews). The United Kingdom Government greatly appreciates the recent action of the Canadian Government in agreeing to accept conditionally the admission of 4,000 Poles to Canada, but it very much hopes that some further contribution on the part of Canada towards the solution of the problem of displaced persons in Europe, including Jews, may be found practicable.

We are very definitely of the opinion that the steps already taken, i.e., the recent widening of our Immigration Regulations and the agreement to take 4000 Poles, should be considered as both a positive step and an indication of Canada's willingness to cooperate in finding a solution to the problem of displaced persons and that any further individual offer while possibly having a publicity value would not influence the securing of a satisfactory international agreement.

It is my view that Canada should now only take action with regard to displaced persons in conjunction with the other United Nations following international agreement on the general problem.

Yours sincerely,

The United Kingdom High Commissioner left with me the attached letter and draft announcement† which he has addressed to you on instructions from London and which conveys the welcome news that the United States and United Kingdom Governments have reached agreement on the means to give effect to the recommendations of the Anglo-United States Committee on Palestine. A full statement of the Agreement is included in the draft announcement. The basic provisions are the separation of Palestine into an Arab province and a Jewish province, a district of Jerusalem and a district of the Negeb, which is now almost uninhabited but may be susceptible to development. The United States will undertake considerable financial responsibilities for the economic development of the Arab province and the States of the Arab League. Palestine will have a variety of federal governments with a fairly wide measure of provincial self-government extended to both the Jewish and Arab provinces. Jewish immigrants to the number of 100,000 will be admitted as soon as possible to the Jewish province, the cost of transport and initial maintenance to be borne by the United States.

In a covering letter the hope is expressed that the Canadian Government will support the policy outlined in the statement, and will indicate publicly its readiness to do so. Our support of course is particularly required in connection with the general plans referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 for dealing with the problems of displaced persons. This approach is therefore a follow-up of the memorandum which I sent you two or three days ago, and in a sense it supersedes the earlier memorandum. You will notice certain changes made in pencil in paragraph 4 of the draft announcement. I pointed out to Sir Alexander<sup>1</sup> that the language proposed seemed to imply that Dominion Governments, including Canada, had not been doing their duty and were being specially singled out as the objects of an appeal to join in concerted action. He agreed with this view and is telegraphing London suggesting modifications which I proposed.

It is likely in any case that questions will be asked in the House following the announcement in London and even if these are not, it would seem reasonable that the Government should give some indication of support for the proposal. I am having a draft† prepared in the Department which I shall submit to you in a day or two. If an announcement is made here, it might be timed for Thursday or Friday of this week. I am also having prepared a brief background note on developments in Palestine during the last year or so, which I shall send to you shortly. Will you let me know if you wish to raise the matter in Cabinet so that I may inform the Cabinet secretariat?

Dear Acting Prime Minister,

As you know, the Anglo-U.S. Committee which was appointed to enquire into the problems of European Jewry and Palestine made its report to the United Kingdom and United States Governments at the end of April, and the recommendations contained in the report have since been under close examination by representatives of the two Governments.

Agreement has now been reached between the U.K. and U.S. Governments as to the best means of giving effect to the Committee's recommendations, and I have been asked to communicate to you, for your very secret information, the enclosed draft of a comprehensive statement† on this subject which, subject to the final approval of the two Governments, it is proposed should be made in the House of Commons, probably on Wednesday next, the 31st July. It is contemplated that President Truman would make a similar statement in Washington on behalf of the U.S. Government at the same time.

I have been asked, in communicating the draft statement to you, to express the earnest hope of my Government that they may rely upon the support of the Canadian Government in pursuing the policy outlined in the statement, and to add that they would greatly welcome any public intimation of support which the Canadian Government may feel able to give when the announcements in London and Washington have been made.

It would be appreciated if in the meantime the contents of the draft statement could be treated with the highest degree of secrecy.

Yours sincerely,

The question of Palestine will almost certainly be raised in the House before the end of the session, particularly if President Truman agrees to accept the recommendations of the Anglo-American Cabinet Committee which were provisionally accepted on behalf of the British Government by Mr. Herbert Morrison<sup>1</sup> in his speech in the House of Commons on July 31st. The delay in making clear the attitude of the United States Government has made it unnecessary as yet for us to reply to the memorandum given by Sir Alexander Clutterbuck on July 26th and to his letter to you of July 29th, asking for a public declaration of support from the Canadian Government. I think, however, that it might be well to make clear very shortly to the United Kingdom authorities our unwillingness to make a definite offer to accept a specified number of displaced persons. Both you and Mr. Glen have agreed with the line which I took verbally with the United Kingdom High Commissioner when he put the proposal to me. If we give him something in writing, it may discourage them in London from repeating this sort of pressure, and lead to a better understanding of the possibilities here. I am therefore having an answer prepared.<sup>2</sup>

With regard to the future of Palestine, we can wait to see what comes out of Washington before deciding what action we must take. I have had prepared in the Department a background memorandum, which includes a good deal of secret information, and I am attaching a copy of this.† It is, I think, a useful summary of the stages whereby the present difficult and dangerous situation has arisen.

Dear Mr. Glen,

I am enclosing a copy of an aide-mémoire which I have handed today to the United Kingdom High Commissioner in reply to his aide-mémoire of July 26th, concerning policy with respect to displaced persons. Our answer embodies the position adopted when the matter was discussed in the Cabinet Committee on immigration the other day. You will note that it commits the Canadian Government to nothing except to continue the policy which we have followed for some time of working for the establishment of effective international machinery to deal with the problems of displaced persons and refugees.

The main purpose of giving an answer to the United Kingdom proposals was to let them know well in advance of the meetings of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly that it was most unlikely that we would fall in with the idea of attempting a "solution" of the problems of refugees through persuading countries to agree in advance to accept definite quotas.

*Aide-mémoire du gouvernement du Canada

Aide-mémoire from Government of Canada to Government of Great Britain

[Ottawa,] August 19, 1946

Consideration has been given to the aide-mémoire of July 26, 1946, setting forth the views of the United Kingdom Government on the steps which should be taken to deal with the settlement of displaced persons, with particular reference to methods whereby Arab opposition to the admission of further Jews to Palestine might be overcome. Note has also been taken of the extended reference to this problem which was made by the Rt. Hon. Herbert Morrison in the House of Commons in London on July 31st in the course of his statement on Palestine.

In the aide-mémoire of July 26th, it was suggested that it would be of great assistance if a declaration on the part of Canada could be made immediately, setting forth the intention of the Canadian Government to take positive steps to secure a satisfactory international agreement on the general problem of displaced persons, especially if such a declaration were to contain a definite offer to accept in Canada a specified number of displaced persons, including Jews.

The opinion of the Canadian Government that a broad international plan must be worked out for dealing with the problems of refugees and displaced persons is a matter of public record. Already this year the creation of an effective international organization for these purposes has been strongly supported by the Canadian representatives in the General Assembly of the United Nations, in the UNRRA Council, in the Economic and Social Council, and in the special United Nations Committee on Refugees and Displaced Persons. It is the intention of the Canadian Government to continue to support the early establishment of the International Refugee Organisation. It is hardly necessary therefore for the Canadian Government to make now a further general statement on this subject.

The suggestion that the Canadian Government should at once declare its willingness to accept a specified number of displaced persons raises other issues. The long-established method of regulating immigration to Canada is by the definition of the categories of persons admissible for permanent residence, without the imposition of numerical limitations. This method cannot readily be adapted to provide for the admission of specified quotas. The Canadian Government, late in 1945, agreed to allow many hundreds of persons who had been granted temporary refuge in Canada during the war to apply for permanent residence. Recently changes were announced in the Canadian immigration regulations by which additional categories of relatives of Canadian residents were made admissible to Canada as immigrants; as transportation conditions improve, it is expected that a large number of people now on the Continent of Europe, including many in Displaced Persons Camps, will gain admission to Canada as the result of this alteration and of the simplification of the passport regulations which accompanied it. Finally, a few days ago announcement was made of the readiness of the Canadian Government to receive up to four thousand veterans of the Polish Army for agricultural work in Canada, on the understanding that all who made good would be permitted to remain permanently in Canada.

Whatever may be the immediate public effect of declarations of readiness by governments to receive substantial quotas of refugees, it is believed that in the long run, at any rate in so far as Canada is concerned, a more effective contribution can be made by the modification of existing immigration regulations. Experience does not seem to show that efforts to secure from a number of countries undertakings to admit specified numbers of persons will have very productive results, particularly in countries which do not already regulate immigration by quota. It may be recalled that at the Conference on Refugees convened by President Roosevelt at Evian in 1938 pressure on the participating Governments to announce their readiness to accept numerical quotas of refugees from Germany brought a response only from one small Latin American country. This solitary offer has since produced little in the way of results.

At the recent meetings of the Economic and Social Council in New York, the Director-General of UNRRA, in addressing the Council, made a somewhat similar suggestion. Mr. LaGuardia recommended strongly that the problem of refugees in UNRRA camps should be solved by the acceptance in various countries of specified numbers of these people. In the subsequent discussion of the problem in the Council, however, Mr. LaGuardia's suggestion was not advocated by any of the members.

In these circumstances, it is not likely that the Canadian authorities would feel able to support proposals in the Assembly or elsewhere based on the conception that the problem of refugees could or should be solved by a series of undertakings from various countries to receive specified numbers. The Canadian Government will continue to give its support for the establishment of an International Refugee Organization, and also to explore the possibilities of providing for the admission to Canada, within the general framework of existing regulations or a modification of those regulations, of additional numbers of persons for whom new homes must be found.

TOP SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose copy of an Aide-Mémoire submitted to the Canadian Government by the United Kingdom High Commissioner on July 26, 1946,<sup>1</sup> concerning the problem of displaced persons in Europe and in particular the question of the settlement of Jews. This approach by the United Kingdom Government on July 26 was prompted by the urgency of the situation which had developed in Palestine.

2. Towards the end of this document, the hope was expressed that the Canadian Government would take the following steps:

(a) to co-operate fully in securing a satisfactory international agreement on the general problem of displaced persons;

(b) to make a declaration in this sense before the end of July including, if possible, an offer to accept a specified number of displaced persons.

3. I also enclose copy of an Aide-Mémoire dated August 19, in reply to the United Kingdom's Aide-Mémoire, which was handed to the United Kingdom High Commissioner by the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs on August 19. In our reply it was pointed out that the Canadian Government had consistently supported the policy of dealing with the problem of refugees and displaced persons on a broad international basis. Canadian representatives at recent international conferences called to consider this question have repeatedly urged the creation of an effective international organization for this purpose. It was further stated that it was the intention of the Government to continue to support the early establishment of the International Refugee Organization.

4. Concerning the suggestion that Canada declare immediately its willingness to accept a specified number of displaced persons, it was pointed out that the long-established method of regulating immigration to Canada is by the definition of the categories of persons admissible for permanent residence, without the imposition of numerical limitations. In view of this, it was felt that in the long run Canada could make a more effective contribution to this problem by the modification of existing immigration regulations rather than by an immediate public declaration of willingness to accept a substantial quota of refugees.

5. In these circumstances it was stated that the Canadian authorities would probably not feel able to support proposals at the General Assembly and elsewhere based on the conception that the problem of refugees could or should be solved by a series of undertakings from various countries to receive specified numbers.

Sir,

The Assistant Director of the Department of Planning and Development of the Province of Ontario, who is conducting a survey and preparing a report for the government of that province on immigration and the opportunities there are in the province for the establishment of settlers from other countries, has informed me of her intention to call on me and discuss the viewpoint of my Government towards the immigration of its nationals and any regulations which may be in effect. The interview in question is supposed to take place in Ottawa some time between November 19th and November 21st.

Since this question may assume a political aspect, in view of the present situation with regard to 'displaced persons', I feel it my duty to inform you of the point of view of the Yugoslav Government, before getting in touch with the Assistant Director of the Department of Planning and Development, Mrs. E. W. Brownell.

The Yugoslav Government, as well as the country's national economists, are inclined to consider a subtraction of the working population to be harmful for the recovery of so badly devastated a country as Yugoslavia. You will be aware that of a population of sixteen million before the war, my country lost more than one million seven hundred thousand people, most of them young and efficient in national production. The Yugoslav Government is therefore anxious to get back to the country as many Yugoslav workers as can be obtained, even from countries where they have every reason to be satisfied and happy, and I can assure you that many of them are prepared to do what they can to fulfill their indebtedness to their country of birth, in order that they may make up for what they were unable to accomplish during and before the war.

On the other hand, there are people who, with reason, feel that they have done wrong to their motherland and others who prefer to come to a rich and flourishing country instead of taking up the burden of rebuilding their destroyed homes. As a matter of fact, there are many amongst the displaced persons who are responsible for crimes and mischief and I do not believe that they would be a gain to any country, wherever they may settle. Apart from that, there are a lot of idle people, of political rather than constructive mind, looking for an easy way of life. Consequently, I would not suggest that any action be taken to transfer those people to Canada, because they will be either harmful or useless for this country.

As the representative of Yugoslavia, I would not like the great service and reputation of the Yugoslav immigrants in this country to be obscured by a lot of people whose moral, political and material usefulness is doubtful.

Yugoslav Government concerning the re-settlement of displaced persons of Yugoslav nationality. In the discussion of this question which has taken place in various conferences of the United Nations during the present year, representatives of the Canadian Government have made clear the desire of Canada to facilitate, as much as possible, the voluntary repatriation of all displaced persons who are willing to return to their countries of origin. The Canadian Government has also indicated its wish that steps should be taken to prevent war criminals and traitors securing international assistance through refugee organizations. It is also the view of the Canadian Government that genuine refugees who do not wish to return to their countries of origin should not be compelled to do so, and should be assisted through international action to re-establish themselves in new homes.

As you know, both the United Kingdom and the United States have secured the services of a good many German scientists who have been transferred with their equipment to laboratories in those countries where they are able to carry forward research projects on which they had been engaged in Germany. A considerable number of German scientists have also gone to the U.S.S.R. on a similar footing. Canada has on a number of occasions been asked whether it would be interested in securing the services of any German scientists for research work. Up to now the line taken by the National Research Council has been that the possible political difficulties arising from the employment of such persons would probably outweigh the scientific advantages which might accrue from their work in Canada.

Dean Mackenzie told me today that he was no longer sure that this policy was wise. He felt that in certain special fields we might be losing the services and skills of men who might make a really important contribution to specialized forms of scientific research for which suitably qualified Canadian scientists are not available. He plans to discuss the whole question again with Mr. Howe, who may wish to raise the matter in Cabinet.

Ottawa, October 18, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your Despatch No. A-811 of 21st September, 1946,† and to previous communications concerning the employment of German scientists in Canada.

This matter has now been discussed in the Cabinet, and it has been agreed that it would be desirable to bring to Canada a few German scientists for work in which no qualified Canadian personnel are available. It is understood, of course, that the Immigration Authorities would carefully investigate each case from the political and security point of view, and it is envisaged that each scientist accepted should be personally known to a colleague in Canada.

We have been asked by the President of the National Research Council, at whose instigation the Cabinet decision was taken, to assist in obtaining the services of Dr. Kurt Starke of Heidelberg, Germany. Dr. Starke is an outstanding scientist and is personally known to Dr. L. G. Cook of the National Research Council. He is acceptable from a political and personal standpoint, and is to be located at McMaster University where he will work with Dr. H. G. Thode who is carrying on important work in the field of radio chemistry.

We are forwarding this request to the Immigration Section of the Department of Mines and Resources for action through their channels, and in the meantime would suggest that you take whatever steps are necessary through Major Macdonnell of C.A.T.C. to clear this man from Germany for service in Canada.

The question of bringing out industrial scientists for work in Canadian industry has been considered by officials of this Department and the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the view is held that the Cabinet decision would cover the immigration to Canada of certain scientists and technicians which have been requested by Canadian industry. Dean Mackenzie of the National Research Council has concurred in this interpretation.

It is anticipated that further requirements for German scientists will be made known in the near future, and you will so be advised. I would appreciate being kept informed of what progress you are making in these matters.

Dear Mr. Glen,

The Cabinet at its meeting of November 12, 1946 dealt with the following item of interest to you.

Immigration Policy; entry of German Scientists and Technicians

The Prime Minister referring to a memorandum† from the Director of Immigration stated that as a result of investigation by Canadian firms it had been ascertained that in order to establish new industries in Canada a number of German scientists and technicians would be required. Needs already known totalled fifteen technicians for Canadian companies; this number might be expected to increase both for technical and for educational purposes.

Since the men involved were German citizens, temporary admission would have to be authorized under Minister's permit, while permanent admission would require authority of the Governor in Council. Careful review from the point of view of security would be required before individual cases could be approved.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the decision of October 2nd which I reported to you in my letter of November 9th† be extended to permit the temporary admission to Canada of German scientists and technicians required for industrial and educational purposes; admission in each case to be recommended by the President of the National Research Council and the Director General of Defence Research.

The President of the National Research Council, Commissioner Wood R.C.M. Police and Dr. Solandt have been informed of this decision, and I am sending copies of this letter to Mr. Jackson and Mr. Jolliffe.

Dear Mr. Mitchell,

1. Before the Prime Minister left for England, the Under-Secretary submitted to him a memorandum<sup>1</sup> on the possibility of Canada agreeing to take demobilized Polish soldiers, man for man, in return for the German prisoners-of-war which we would be returning to the United Kingdom.

2. As you know, we have been having discussions recently with the United Kingdom about the return to the United Kingdom of some thousands of German prisoners-of-war who are being used as agricultural labourers in various parts of Canada. The United Kingdom wish to have them back in accordance with an arrangement made some months ago and we are trying to hold on to them because of the immediate need for their services for food production here.

3. It was therefore suggested to the Prime Minister that by agreeing to take demobilized Polish soldiers in return for the German prisoners-of-war we would be getting a supply of heavy labour of a type which is in considerable demand, and that the movement, which might run to three or four thousand, would make an appreciable beginning on the very difficult task of disposing of the large forces of Polish soldiers in Western Europe who, for understandable reasons, are unwilling to return to Poland. The fact that the Polish soldiers would be coming to Canada as agricultural labourers or lumber workers to take the place specifically of German prisoners-of-war who would be shipped back, would diminish or remove the danger of political controversy.

4. In the ordinary course most of the Poles who are of the type from which a good part of our useful immigration has come, would probably settle here as valuable citizens.

5. The Prime Minister has approved this proposal in principle, adding that it should be made a matter of Cabinet consideration.

6. I am therefore sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Heeney so that the matter may be put on the agenda for early consideration by the Cabinet.

WOODS AND AGRICULTURAL LABOUR; PROPOSAL FOR REPLACEMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR BY DEMOBILIZED POLISH SOLDIERS

Discussions have taken place recently with the United Kingdom government about the return to the United Kingdom of some thousands of German prisoners of war who are being used as agricultural labourers in various parts of Canada. The United Kingdom wish to have them returned on the last available troop ship which is expected to leave Canada early in August, and the Canadian government has agreed that this will be done despite the fact that their services are urgently required for food production here.

Before the Prime Minister left for England, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs submitted to him a memorandum on the possibility of Canada agreeing to take demobilized Polish soldiers, man for man, in return for the German prisoners of war being returned to the United Kingdom. It was pointed out that in this way we would obtain a supply of heavy labour of a type which is in considerable demand and that the movement, which might run to three or four thousand, would make an appreciable beginning on the very difficult task of disposing of the large forces of Polish soldiers in Western Europe who are unwilling to return to Poland. The fact that the Polish soldiers would be coming to Canada as agricultural labourers or woods workers to take the place specifically of German prisoners of war who would be shipped back, would diminish or remove the danger of political controversy.

The Prime Minister has approved this proposal in principle and has asked that it be placed before the Cabinet.

Officials of the Departments of External Affairs and Labour have discussed the possibility of requiring these Polish soldiers, as a condition of entry into Canada, to work under direction for a period of possibly two years. It has also been suggested that they might be formed into labour battalions which would be available to work wherever their services were required and that they should continue to be employed in this manner for possibly two years and not be permitted to drift into the larger centres of population where they would be in competition with local labour.

WOODS AND AGRICULTURAL LABOUR: REPLACEMENT OF PRISONERS-OF-WAR BY DEMOBILIZED POLISH SOLDIERS

The Cabinet on May 22nd, 1946, referred a proposal to replace German prisoners-of-war by demobilized Polish soldiers to the Ministers of Labour and Mines and Resources for consideration and report.

The Deputy Minister of Labour and the Director of Immigration have conferred on the matter and recommended as follows:

1. Approximately 4000 Prisoners-of-War will be used for agricultural pursuits this summer. Practically all of them will be used in the sugar beet fields of Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario. The only mode of transporting them back to England in sight consists of returning troop transports and these ships will not be available, if present schedules are followed, after the end of July or middle of August.

2. A difficult situation will be created when it becomes necessary to withdraw the 4000 Prisoners-of-War from agriculture and strenuous protests will result.

3. If the demobilized Polish soldiers can be carefully selected and dealt with somewhat along the lines indicated hereunder, it is recommended that the plan be proceeded with and that they be assigned to agriculture to take the place of the German Prisoners-of-War.

Briefly, the arrangements might be somewhat as follows:

(a) The number be limited to 4000; single men only who will agree to accept direction to agriculture or similar work for a period of three years and enter into an individual contract to this effect;

(b) One term of the contract would be that they would be sent back to Britain if they failed to carry out the agreement;

(c) A meticulously careful selection should be made on grounds of medical fitness; security (no Nazis or agents); and suitability for agricultural work, and in this connection it is proposed that three senior officials be sent to select them: one from the Mounted Police, to check up on security; a Medical Officer and an Agricultural Employment Officer who knows the type of men required;

(d) They would be given temporary status until the three year period was up and subject to good behavior during the three years they could then be given permanent status;

(e) Their placement on arrival in Canada would be made from clearance depots, one in Ontario, one in Manitoba and possibly one in Alberta, these clearance depots to be operated under the Farm Labour Plan which is operated in co-operation with the Provinces. This would have the effect of avoiding any differences of opinion with the Provinces.

The undersigned has no knowledge of the funds that would be available to these Polish soldiers on demobilization, but if they cannot pay their own transportation to Canada possibly the United Kingdom Government would make provision for their transport. This might be accomplished by the transports handling the Prisoners-of-War.

If the suggestions carry the approval of Cabinet, it is proposed that a telegram be despatched to the Prime Minister, asking him to make arrangements with the British Government specifically on the point of obtaining an agreement that the men could be sent back to Great Britain if they failed to carry out the contract and generally on the whole plan.

In order that the details might be developed a small Interdepartment Committee might be set up, consisting of the Deputy Minister of Labour, the Director of Immigration and Commissioner Wood of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The Minister of Labour and the Minister of Mines and Resources have approved this recommendation in principle.

Ottawa, May 30, 1946

Dear Mr. Mitchell,

At yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet the following items of particular interest to you were dealt with:

1. Agricultural and woods labour; demobilized Polish soldiers

You submitted, as the basis of your letter to me of May 24th, the plan concurred in by your colleague the Minister of Mines and Resources for the selection of 4,000 demobilized Polish soldiers to replace prisoners of war in agricultural and woods labour. A cabinet Document (No. 216), on this subject, had been circulated.

The Cabinet approved the plan recommended and agreed that negotiations with the U.K. government be undertaken through appropriate channel.

I have suggested to Mr. Wrong that he get in touch with Mr. MacNamara prior to sending a message to London and that since Mr. Robertson is familiar with the matter, he should participate in conversations with U.K. authorities.

As to the committee to be responsible for administration of the scheme, Raymond Ranger who is to be seconded to this Office in place of B. F. Wood could act as secretary and I will arrange that he get in touch with Mr. MacNamara in this connection so that the project may be pressed forward.

Yours sincerely,

A. D. P. HEENEY

SECRET. Poles. United Kingdom officials have arranged meeting for Monday with Robertson to discuss disposition of Polish Armed Forces. It would be helpful to know before that time whether you have come to any preliminary conclusions concerning proposed acceptance of Poles in place of German prisoners.

United Kingdom proposal that Canada might accept financial obligations towards Poles in Canada will also be raised, and we should be glad to have any comments you would like to make on this subject.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 1271 of May 31. Polish soldiers.

1. Cabinet on May 29 approved of a plan to exchange demobilized Polish soldiers on a head for head basis for German prisoners of war, and agreed that negotiations with the United Kingdom be undertaken. It would clearly be best if these negotiations were conducted in London.

2. The submission to Cabinet stated that about four thousand German prisoners of war will be used in agriculture this summer, practically all of them in the sugar-beet fields of Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario. The only method of transporting them back to England in sight consists of returning troop transports and, if present schedules are followed, these ships will not be available after the end of July or middle of August.

3. The arrangement proposed in the plan considered by Cabinet is as follows:

(1) The number of demobilized Polish soldiers be limited to 4000; single men only who will agree to accept direction to agriculture or similar work for a period of three years and enter into an individual contract to this effect.

(2) One term of the contract would be that they would be sent back to Britain if they failed to carry out the agreement.

(3) A meticulously careful selection should be made on grounds of medical fitness, security (no Nazis or agents), and suitability for agricultural work; three senior officials would be sent to select them: one from the Mounted Police to check up on security; a Medical Officer and an Agricultural Employment Officer who knows the type of men required.

(4) They would be given temporary status until the three year period was up and subject to good behavior during the three years they could then be given permanent status.

(5) Their placement on arrival in Canada would be made from clearance depots, one in Ontario, one in Manitoba and possibly one in Alberta, these clearance depots to be operated under the Farm Labour Plan which is operated in co-operation with the Provinces. This would have the effect of avoiding any differences of opinion with the Provinces.

4. It is suggested that if the Poles cannot pay their own transportation to Canada, possibly the United Kingdom will arrange for the transportation and pay the cost.

5. It will, of course, be necessary to secure the consent of the United Kingdom Government to the arrangement, and especially to the provision that the men could be sent back to the United Kingdom if they failed to carry out the agreement.

6. An inter-departmental committee is being set up, consisting of the Deputy Minister of Labour, the Director of Immigration, the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P., together with a representative of this Department and a Secretary from the Privy Council Office.

London, June 5, 1946

SECRET. Following from Wrong from Robertson, Begins: Your telegram No. 1094 of June 1st. At a meeting on June 3rd with representatives of the United Kingdom Government Departments concerned, I outlined the conditions set forth in your telegram under which our Government would consider receiving demobilized Polish personnel in replacement of returning German prisoners of war and explained why the various restrictive conditions were felt to be necessary by our authorities.

The United Kingdom representatives welcomed the proposed arrangement as the first substantial offer from any other country of help in placing the demobilized Polish forces. They were, at first, inclined to hesitate a bit at possibility that misfits would be deported to the United Kingdom, but on second thoughts were disposed to agree that the likelihood of any substantial group being landed on them was slight.

In ensuing discussion, following points emerged:

(1) United Kingdom recognize that our present willingness to take Polish personnel is linked with our loss of prisoner of war labour, but urge that this relationship be not unduly stressed in any publicity given these arrangements because of adverse effect it would have upon Polish morale. The best type of man will probably volunteer for labour service in Canada under conditions prescribed if early assurance could be given that satisfactory behaviour would lead to ultimate qualification for Canadian citizenship, but if emphasis were put on their role as relief for enemy prisoners of war we would be less likely to get satisfactory applicants.

(2) As regards wages and relations with employers generally, the United Kingdom representatives hoped that the status of Polish personnel employed in Canada would not be less favourable than that of those to be placed in employment in this country. I said I thought that they would receive prevailing wage rates, and that so long as they were, in effect, employed under a contract of indenture, the Departments of Government concerned would supervise their placement and employment and see to it that their special status was not exploited by their employers.

(3) I thought it important that persons selected for labour service in Canada under this scheme should come as individuals and not as members of military formations. In Canada they would be under civil, not military, control and there should be no suggestion of maintaining any Polish military discipline over men once they were landed in Canada.

(4) It was thought that a good many men with the qualifications we required could be found in the Polish Army in Italy, which was largely recruited from the Eastern Provinces of Poland and contains about 50,000 farmers and farm labourers as well as a number of lumbermen.

(5) From an administrative point of view, it would appear easier to recruit Polish personnel in the United Kingdom to which the Polish forces are being returned for demobilization into the Resettlement Corps. However, there are precedents for demobilization taking place in Italy, and I think it would be wise to have the necessary screening done there and the men shipped to Canada direct from the Mediterranean rather than via the United Kingdom. Otherwise, their movement to Canada would appear to be in direct competition with the movement of soldiers' dependents and civilian personnel from this country and could give rise to very serious complaints and criticism. Viewed from London, the transportation aspect of this scheme is very important. I put it to the meeting that the United Kingdom should itself provide, or get the United States to provide, special shipping for the moving of Polish personnel over and above what is now scheduled for moving soldiers and their dependents from the United Kingdom to Canada.

Further discussions with the United Kingdom authorities can be conducted by Canada House which would be glad to have your instructions on the points raised in this message. Ends.

London, July 10, 1946

SECRET. Your telegram No. 1279 of July 7th,† Polish immigrants. Thank you for your telegram, which arrived in time for the meeting. Representatives of Home Office, War Office, Treasury and Dominions Office, as well as Mr. LePan of this office, were present.

2. As I forecast in my telegram No. 1513 of July 8th,† representative of Home Office objected strongly to the Canadian stipulation that Poles who fail to carry out the proposed Agreement, should be sent back to United Kingdom. He argued that, by sending over a Commission of officials to select the Poles for immigration to Canada, we were skimming off the cream of the crop, and that it was unreasonable, after we had done that, to expect the United Kingdom to receive back any Poles who proved to be unsatisfactory. He did not think it was right for us to claim this double form of insurance. In particular, he declared that a cast iron guarantee to take back any immigrants whom we might reject over so long a period as three years, would involve the United Kingdom authorities in serious legal difficulties. Their Immigration regulations, for example, as they stood at present, would not allow them to accept criminals or immigrants with contagious diseases. On the other hand, they would be quite willing to accept immigrants who found the Canadian climate too rigorous, or who were unsuited to the work for which they had gone to Canada. More generally, they would try to find means of accepting unsatisfactory immigrants whom we wished to return to United Kingdom, but they could not guarantee to accept all such men without exception. He pleaded for the Canadian Government to consume some of the smoke which may arise from this arrangement.

3. He asked whether the Canadian Government would agree to some such formula as the following:

It is understood that the United Kingdom Government would be prepared to give sympathetic consideration to a request by the Canadian Government to take off their hands any individuals who are found, by experience, to be unsuitable for the purpose for which they were selected.

4. LePan said that he could not hold out any hope of the Canadian Government relaxing this stipulation to their offer. Immigration was a very contentious issue in Canada, and authority could be granted for the entrance of these four thousand Poles only if their admission were presented to the Canadian Parliament as an exception, and it could be made to appear as an exception only if it were hedged about with safeguards. Of these safeguards, the most important, in the view of Canadian Government, was the right to return unsatisfactory immigrants to the United Kingdom. The selection to be carried out by Canadian officials, it was true, was a form of insurance for the Canadian Government, but it was equally insurance for United Kingdom Government. As a consequence of the selection, we believed that it would be unlikely that there would be any appreciable number of Poles who would fail to fulfil the terms of the proposed Agreement. He also mentioned the other points made in your telegram of yesterday's date.†

5. However, we have undertaken to forward to you the formula suggested by the Home Office. In the meeting, LePan stood firmly on the letter of your instructions, and stressed the importance which you attach to this condition, but we feel that the difficulties referred to by the Home Office are genuine, and we would recommend that you consider sympathetically how far it is possible to go along the lines of the suggested formula in meeting them.

6. Representatives of the War Office raised no objections to the plan, and indeed thought it excellent. It would be quite possible to ship the men directly from Italy in accordance with our wishes. They did raise four points however:

(a) The movement of the Second Polish Corps from Italy to the United Kingdom has begun, and advance parties of units have already arrived in this country. If we wished to carry out the work of selection in Italy and ship those chosen from there, we should move with great haste. The Polish Corps will have been entirely withdrawn from Italy some time in September. The sooner the Canadian officials charged with the responsibility of screening applicants can be despatched, the better.

(b) They enquired whether it would be possible to hold out the hope that dependents of the Poles selected would ultimately be allowed to proceed to Canada. They realise that only single men would be eligible for immigration into Canada, but they were apprehensive that, if the dependents of these men—their parents, for example—could not at some later date be granted entry into Canada, few Poles would be prepared to opt for residence in Canada rather than in the United Kingdom. This point seems to us to be of substance. At the present time many Polish dependents are in United Kingdom, and even if permission were granted to dependents of those men chosen to proceed to Canada, shipping could not be found for them within perhaps a year. Because of recent changes in the Canadian immigration regulations, it seems to us that an indication that Canadian Government would be prepared to accept applications for immigration from these dependents would present no difficulty in principle, and we hope that such an indication may be given. This is a matter of some urgency, since, if your answer to this query is favourable, it should be included in the routine order which will be circulated through the Polish formations in Italy.

(c) They wondered how Polish immigrants going directly from Italy to Halifax would be provided with civilian clothes. Poles demobilized in this country, like United Kingdom servicemen, are given civilian clothes on discharge. They do not receive an allowance for this purpose as is the case with Canadian servicemen. The War Office felt that it would be impossible, administratively, to issue civilian clothes to Poles demobilized in Italy. Presumably they could be given instead, a cash clothing allowance with which to buy clothes in Canada.

(d) They are also doubtful whether one team of three officials will be sufficient to complete selection before the Polish Corps has left Italy.

7. Representatives of the Treasury raised, once again, the possibility of the Canadian Government paying the passage of Polish immigrants from Italy to Canada, and also of paying war gratuities. The War Office also suggested that we might pay clothing allowance if they are agreed upon. LePan promised to refer these suggestions to you, but did not hold out any hope of Canada accepting these responsibilities. It is clear that the Treasury will not make this issue a stumbling block if you insist that the United Kingdom be responsible for these payments.

8. I should be grateful for an early reply to this telegram since the War Office must issue a routine order to all Polish formations some weeks before our officials arrive in Italy to make the selection.

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Cabinet

[Ottawa,] July 11, 1946

On May 29, 1946, Cabinet approved of a plan recommended by the Minister of Labour and concurred in by the Minister of Mines and Resources whereby a maximum of 4,000 single, demobilized Polish soldiers would be selected and brought to this country to work in the sugar beet fields, under direction, for a period of 3 years, after which time and, subject to good behaviour, they could be given permanent status to reside in this country.

Cabinet further approved that a committee composed of the Deputy Minister of Labour, the Director of Immigration, and the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. would be responsible for the administration of the plan. The attached submission to council and contract† have been recommended by the Committee for approval.<sup>1</sup>

The submission to council contains three small changes in policy (viz. the reduction from 3 to 2 years, the decision not to concentrate on the sugar beet fields, but rather in agricultural employment, and the decision to accept 4,000 single men if possible and, if not, to make up any balance from suitably qualified married men).

There is also mentioned in the contract to be signed by both the demobilized Polish soldier as an employee, and the employer, a minimum monthly wage rate of $45.00.

The form of and authority for the order-in-council have been cleared with Justice by the Solicitor of the Department of Labour.

The undersigned the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Mines and Resources have the honour to report as follows:

That there exists in Canada an acute shortage of suitable labour for agricultural employment; and

That it is considered necessary to make provision at this time for the early acquisition of suitable labour for agricultural employment; and

That the Minister of Mines and Resources proposes to permit entry into Canada under the authority of the Immigration Act of 4,000 ex-members of the Polish Armed Forces who served with the Allied Forces engaged in hostilities against the Axis powers and who are presently located in the United Kingdom and Italy and are qualified for and willing to undertake agricultural employment in Canada; and

That it is considered desirable that provision be made for the selection and examination overseas of men for entry into Canada as aforesaid, to settle the conditions relative to their employment in agriculture in Canada, to provide for their placement in employment and for their supervision and welfare while so employed:

Now, therefore, the undersigned have the honour to recommend that Your Excellency in Council be pleased to approve the following Order:

1. The Minister of Labour is authorized

(a) by arrangement with the Departments concerned to send representatives of the Departments of Mines and Resources and Labour and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the United Kingdom and Italy to interview and examine persons of the above-mentioned description for the purpose of selecting 4,000 of such persons for agricultural employment in Canada and to pay the necessary transportation and living expenses of such representatives while so engaged;

(b) to make provision as he deems necessary for the placement in agricultural employment of persons so selected and admitted into Canada and for their continued supervision and welfare during the initial two-year period of employment following entry into Canada including inter alia provision for payment of their transportation expenses from the port of entry into Canada to the place of employment, living expenses en route and any necessary medical or hospital expenses, and for such purposes, may make use of the facilities of the Unemployment Insurance Commission or may enter into an agreement with any province or extend the provisions of any agreement with any province pertaining to farm labour;

(c) to pay the costs of return transportation to Great Britain and living expenses en route for any person admitted to Canada aforesaid, if required to leave Canada;

(d) to use staff presently employed by the Department of Labour or engage such additional staff as may be required by him, for the administration of this Order at such rate of remuneration as may be authorized by the Governor in Council and to establish such offices as may be required.

2. The Minister of Labour shall require every person as may be permitted entry into Canada by the Minister of Mines and Resources for agricultural employment as aforesaid, to complete a written undertaking in form contained in Schedule I hereto† or to like effect.

3. The Government of Canada declares that each person permitted entry into Canada as aforesaid will be granted permanent admission to Canada upon due fulfilment and observance by him of the terms and conditions of the undertaking given by him pursuant to Section 2 of this Order and if otherwise eligible to enter or remain in Canada under the Immigration Act.

4. Expenses incurred by the Minister of Labour in the administration of this Order shall be paid out of monies voted by Parliament for the Department of Labour.

Respectfully submitted,

Ottawa, July 24, 1946

SECRET. Your telegram No. 1530 of July 10, Polish immigrants. Order in Council P.C. 3112 of July 23 was passed yesterday authorizing the admission to Canada under the Immigration Act of 4,000 ex-members of the Polish armed forces who are qualified for, and willing to undertake, agricultural employment in Canada. These men will be admitted to Canada under two-year Farm Labour contracts. At the end of this period they will be eligible for permanent residence in Canada. This followed final Cabinet approval of this proposal on July 22.

2. Concerning the points raised in your telegram No. 1530, the decision of the Cabinet was as follows:

(1) The Government agreed that the stipulation regarding the return to the United Kingdom of Polish veterans who proved unsatisfactory should stand. In passing this on to the U.K. authorities it should be emphasized that the responsibility of the U.K. Government for accepting these Poles, if unsatisfactory, extends only during the two-year term of their contract.

(2) Concerning the number of Canadian officials to be sent abroad to interview these men, it was agreed that two teams of three officials (a medical officer, a Farm Labour employment officer and an R.C.M.P. security officer) should be sent to Italy at the earliest date. It is not expected that these teams will reach Italy for at least two weeks from this date. These men will travel by air and will be augmented if necessary.

(3) Concerning the admissibility of the dependents of the poles selected, it was emphasized that only single men will be interviewed and selected at this stage. After the two-year contract is finished, the Polish veterans selected will be eligible for permanent admission to Canada, and as permanent residents, their relatives will then be admissible to Canada in the same manner as the relatives of any other Canadian residents. (See our circular despatch of June 13 on immigration policy.) † During the two years of their contract dependents of these men will not (repeat not) be eligible for admission to Canada.

(4) Concerning clothing for these men, it was agreed that the Canadian Government would undertake to supply each of them with a kit of working clothes on their arrival in Canada. The costs of these clothes will be borne by the Canadian Government. They will consist of sufficient clothing for a farm worker. It was also agreed that it should be suggested to the U.K. Government that they might add to the gratuities of each of these men a sum equivalent to the value of the "walking out" clothing they would have been issued if they had been demobilized in the U.K.

(5) The Government decided against Canada assuming transportation costs for these men from Italy to Canada.

(6) The Canadian Government also declined to accept the burden of paying any war gratuities to these men unless the Polish veterans concerned came under the provisions of P.C. 7516 of January 22, 1946, as former residents of Canada.

3. As stated above, it is not expected that the teams will be in Italy to interview these men before at least a fortnight. It is hoped that application forms in Polish and English will be available for distribution to members of the Polish Second Corps before the teams arrive in Italy. In your telegram No. 1530 you say that the movement of this Corps to the United Kingdom has already begun and that it will be completed sometime in September. As our teams will not reach Italy until approximately August 10, we would appreciate receiving full details concerning the speed of the movement of this Corps. If there are an insufficient number of qualified single men in this Corps in Italy from whom 4,000 workers can be selected, it will be necessary for our teams to proceed to the U.K. to examine further applicants. This would mean that transport for these men would be required both from Italy and from the U.K. to Canada. In view of the U.K. Government's reluctance to have these men leave direct from the U.K. to Canada, it would be much preferable if all interviewing and selection could be accomplished in Italy before the Corps' repatriation.

4. You will note that we are assuming that the U.K. Government is undertaking responsibility for securing ship transport for these men from Italy (or the United Kingdom) to Canada. So far we have received no word on what arrangements are contemplated in this regard.

5. Our teams in Italy will require assistance in solving many administrative problems, such as stenographic help, interpreters, accommodation and rations for the teams, etc. We will send you a telegram shortly listing the problems on which these teams will require assistance and asking for the co-operation of the military authorities in Italy.

6. An airmail despatch† will be sent you tomorrow enclosing copies of (a) Order-in-Council P.C. 3112 of July 23, (b) the application form to be filled out by these Polish veterans before their interview, (c) an undertaking to be completed by the selected Polish veteran in the presence of the interviewing officer, stating that he is prepared to accept farm labour in Canada under the stated conditions, and (d) the Farm Labour contract to be completed between the employer (i.e., the Canadian farmer) and the Polish veteran concerned at some central distribution point in Canada where the workers have been assembled after their arrival here. This contract will be completed in the presence of a Labour Department official.

7. It is expected that an announcement on this subject will be made in the House today or tomorrow.

On the assumption that the conditions prescribed by the Canadian Government will be acceptable to the United Kingdom, we have also informed them of the plans which are being made in Canada to implement the scheme.

2. You enquire in paragraph 4 of your telegram what arrangements the United Kingdom Government has in mind for transporting the men to Canada. You are quite right in assuming that the United Kingdom Government is willing to undertake this responsibility. Whatever ships are needed will sail from Naples to any Canadian port which the Canadian Government may designate. The War Office intends to use troopships and will provide ship's staff, i.e., an Officer Commanding troops, a Medical Officer, etc. The ships will probably be Victory Ships acquired from the United States. We have learned from the War Office that the provision of shipping will cause no difficulty since plans have already been made to provide ships to bring the Poles from Italy to the United Kingdom; some of the shipping allocated for this purpose will simply be diverted to carry 4,000 of the Poles to Canada instead of to the United Kingdom; in any case, of course, there is no question of this shipping reducing the tonnage which has been promised to the Canadian Government for other purposes.

DESPATCH A.660

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my telegram No. 1663 of July 31st,† in which I reported that the United Kingdom authorities had accepted the conditions attached by the Canadian Government to their offer to admit 4,000 Polish ex-servicemen into Canada for agricultural work. In order to provide a record of the agreement which has been reached in this matter, I am forwarding with this despatch three copies of the correspondence which has been exchanged between Sir Charles Dixon of the Dominions Office and Mr. LePan of this Office.†

2. On the morning of July 31st it appeared that there was a strong possibility that the stipulations which the Canadian Government had attached to their offer might not be entirely acceptable to the United Kingdom inter-departmental meeting which was to consider the question that afternoon. I therefore went down to the Dominions Office to see the Permanent Under-Secretary, in order to make sure that the issue would be considered in the proper background and perspective. I reminded Sir Eric Machtig that the Canadian offer had come as the result of a personal appeal from Mr. Attlee to Mr. Mackenzie King at the time of the recent Prime Ministers' Meetings. I also drew attention to the fact that no other member of the Commonwealth had yet taken any action to lighten the responsibility of the United Kingdom Government, and I suggested that, if the Canadian offer were to be refused because the stipulations attached to it were difficult to accept in view of the present immigration regulations of the United Kingdom, the refusal would have a most unfortunate effect, not only in Canada (where a public announcement had already been made), but also in other parts of the Commonwealth where parallel offers might be in contemplation. Mr. LePan made similar representations to the War Office officials who were to participate in the inter-departmental meeting.

3. Partly, perhaps, as a result of these representations, it was decided to accept all the conditions which the Canadian Government had seen fit to attach to its offer. I feel that these negotiations have now passed the critical point, and should be comparatively smooth from now on. Even before the United Kingdom authorities had formally accepted the Canadian offer, the War Office had been most co-operative in making practical arrangements for the visit of the Canadian Interviewing Teams to Italy, and these plans are already far advanced, as you will have seen from my recent telegrams.

I have etc.

SECRET. My telegram No. 1709 of August 10th, Polish immigrants.

I have learned unofficially from the War Office that General Anders regards the scheme with favour and will support it. However, he had cabled from C.M.F. for further information on the following points:

(a) "Legal status and protection of volunteers from representations of the Warsaw Government." I understand from War Office that he wishes to be reassured that these Poles will not be held by the Canadian Government to be under the "protection" of the representative in Ottawa of the Warsaw Government.

(b) "Assurance of freedom of religion and freedom in private life to continue national culture and traditions."

(c) "That there is no objection to volunteers remaining members of the Polish Corps Ex-Soldiers Association, which has begun in London and is comparable to the British Legion."

(d) "The possibility of 6 priests [being] allowed to accompany the 4,000 immigrants for religious and cultural reasons." This enquiry makes me suspect that General Anders believes these Poles will be settled in more or less homogeneous communities and not scattered among a great number of farms.

(e) "The possibility of some married men being included owing to the difficulty of finding 4,000 unmarried persons. Best agriculturists come from eastern Poland and many are married with wives in Africa, India and Mexico."

(f) "Details of location of employment and possibility of friends remaining together. Will employment be by teams or as individuals."

2. It would be useful if the Canadian interviewing teams could be briefed on the above points before leaving Canada.

Ottawa, August 23, 1946

SECRET. Your telegram No. 1714 of August 12, Polish immigrants.

1. The views of the Canadian Government on the points raised by General Anders with the War Office are as follows:

(a) The status of the Polish veterans in Canada will be similar to that of any other aliens temporarily resident in Canada subject to the conditions of the undertaking signed by the Polish veterans in Italy and to the terms of the contracts entered into thereunder. The Canadian Government does not force any alien in Canada to accept the "protection" of the diplomatic representative in Ottawa of the state of which he is a citizen.

(b) The Polish veterans will enjoy the full measure of religious and cultural freedom that is the right of any resident of Canada (subject to the reservation mentioned in paragraph 2 below).

(c) The Canadian Government will not ask any of these Polish veterans to surrender his membership in his service organization. In this connection we would, however, appreciate having further information from you concerning the scope of the activities of the Polish Corps Ex-Soldiers Association.

(d) As these veterans will be placed in employment over widely scattered areas, the suggestion that six priests accompany the movement for religious and cultural reasons is not very practicable and cannot be accepted.

(e) It has been already decided not to consider including married men until it is definitely established that the quota of 4,000 cannot be filled with single men.

(f) The Polish veterans will be placed on farms as individuals, not teams. Consideration will be given to the possibility of placing friends on adjacent farms, but no formal commitment can be given in this regard.

2. With reference to paragraphs (b) and (c) above, the interviewing teams will warn these Polish veterans that they must not take part in political activities on behalf of or against any foreign state. They will not be asked to sign a statement to this effect but will be warned orally prior to signing the undertaking. We would appreciate having precise information about the action the United Kingdom Government is taking in this connection with regard to the Poles demobilized in the U.K.

3. Please transmit the information contained in this telegram immediately to our interviewing teams in Italy.

Excellency,

With reference to the preparations made by the Department of Labor and the Canadian Immigration Authorities to bring to Canada 4,000 Polish members of the so-called Anders Army, I have the honor to inform Your Excellency of the position of my government in regard to the settlement of Polish citizens in foreign countries.

The Polish Government is of the opinion that:

1. Polish citizens who during the war left their country and now are living abroad, Polish ex-soldiers who fought in the armies of the West, Polish citizens freed from concentration camps, and those who were taken by force to German labor camps are needed in Poland to take an active part in the work of reconstruction of their country.

2. Certain groups of Polish citizens who happen to be outside of Poland should not be regarded as a human reservoir upon which a foreign country could draw without the approval of the Polish Government.

3. Decision regarding immigration and settlement of Polish citizens in foreign countries can be made only on the basis of bilateral agreements with the Polish Government.

I avail etc.

Excellency,

By the end of August, I have noticed in several Canadian newspapers, a statement attributed to His Excellency, The Hon. James Allison Glen, Minister of Mines and Resources, reading as follows: ". . . there are 200,000 Polish soldiers who fought with our armies and who were fighting against Nazism . . . the soldiers cannot return to their home for the very reason that they have fought against Nazism and in effect, they are today stateless."

As I found the same statement in the official record of the House of Commons debates of Wednesday, August 28th, 1946, I have the honour to approach Your Excellency with the request to transmit to His Excellency, The Hon. J. A. Glen, the following remarks which I am bound to make on that subject.

The fight against Nazism was considered in Poland to be a duty to all Poles, no matter where they have been during the war. War against Nazi Wehrmacht, against Nazi police, Nazi officials, and Nazi laws was waged in German occupied Poland by Poles in underground movements in which the whole nation was involved. There have been Polish patriots who also gallantly fought against Nazism with the allied armies of the West, just as there are many thousands of Polish patriots who gallantly fought against Nazism with the allied armies of the East. They all are highly esteemed in Poland and would be whole-heartedly welcomed upon their return. Anti-Nazi fighting spirit is one of the most important and most obvious criterions of value of the citizens in contemporary Poland. If some of the 200,000 allegedly Polish soldiers feel that they cannot return home, it is not because they have fought against Nazism, but on the contrary, because they have fought as German soldiers, S.S.-men, Volkdeutsche, and various traitors with Nazism, against freedom and democracy, not only of Poland, but all the allied nations.

As I believe that a few facts about the Anders Army and also Polish displaced persons in Europe may be of interest to His Excellency, the Hon. J. A. Glen, I would be most grateful if Your Excellency could transmit to him a short memorandum concerning some members of the Anders Army, which I have the honour to enclose.

I avail etc.

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING SOME MEMBERS OF THE ANDERS ARMY

Many thousands of the allegedly Polish Veterans of the Anders Army are wearing Polish uniforms for a few months only. Most of them have been collaborating with the Germans as:

1. German Soldiers: Out of 68,693 Poles, who according to official British sources (Mr. Lawson M. P. Beamish) were either captured or surrendered in German uniforms, 53,630 joined the Anders Army in Italy. There may have been a certain percentage among them who were not able to escape from the German Army, but the majority was loyal to Hitler and for this very reason they don't care to go back to their country which they betrayed and abandoned.

2. The Polish "Blue" Police: Many Polish policemen collaborated with the German authorities during the war together with Polish S.S.-men, who worked as Gestapo agents. They all left Poland with the retreating German Army and can now be found in the ranks of the Army of Anders.

3. Swietokrzyska Army: Members of Polish armed units operated in the Góry Swietokrzyskie (Holy Cross Mountains) withdrew together with the Germans. Some of them joined the camps of Displaced Persons, others the Army of Anders.

4. S.S.-men: In the ranks of S.S.-men used by Germans in Poland, as guards and murderers in Jewish Ghettos, in jails, and in concentration camps, where not only Germans, but also Ukrainians, Lithuanians, and Latvians, who volunteered [into] German S.S. units (for instance the S.S. Division Galizien). They were welcomed in the Displaced Persons camps in Germany and in the Army of Anders in Italy.

5. Volkdeutsche: There have been in prewar Poland, Polish Nationals of German descent, who during the war repudiated their Polish nationality, accepted the German citizenship, and served the Germans as informers, interpreters in offices, as managers and foremen in factories and henchmen everywhere. They left Poland with the German troops, flying before the approaching liberating armies. As all of them spoke fluently Polish, they were easily admitted into camps of Polish Displaced Persons and from there they eagerly joined Anders Units knowing that they are thus escaping trial and punishment.

6. Various criminals: In Labor and Concentration Camps, the Gestapo authorities were helped by "Blockältesters" (Men in charge of blocks), "Capos" (Chiefs of working crews), and "Vorarbeiters" (Foremen.) All these men were beating, torturing, and killing the inmates of the camps. They are responsible for many deaths, not only of Poles and Jews, but of other allied nationals as well. Some of them died in camps, others are to be found in Displaced Persons camps, and in the Army of Anders.

All the above mentioned people were helping to prolong the war. They were helping the enemy, who killed not only Polish soldiers and civilians, but also soldiers of all Allied Armies.

SELECTION OF FOUR THOUSAND EX-MEMBERS OF THE POLISH ARMED FORCES
FOR AGRICULTURAL EMPLOYMENT IN CANADA

1. As you know, interviewing teams were sent to Italy in August to select four thousand single ex-members of the Polish armed forces for agricultural employment in Canada. The authority for this was given in Order-in-Council P.C. 3112 of July 23, 1946.

2. On September 9, the chief of the interviewing unit in Italy (the Canadian-Polish Movement Unit) informed us that fifteen percent of the applicants were men who had been conscripted into the German Army or German work camps after the fall of Poland. He asked whether the Canadian Government would be prepared to accept these men.

3. He was informed that under no consideration should any of these men be accepted.

4. This decision has caused a good deal of concern among the Second Polish Corps and in the United Kingdom War Office. The Polish Corps consider that the discrimination will lower the morale of their members and state that the loyalty and war service of all their members are equal whether or not they had been compelled to serve in the German Army and German work camps. The Second Polish Corps have asked that the question be put before the Canadian Government for consideration, and, pending this consideration, have stated that they could not submit further applicants for selection. The process of selection has therefore been temporarily suspended.

5. The War Office fears that the exclusion by Canada of Poles who fought for the Allies but who were originally in the German Army or German work camps may become a precedent in resettlement, with the result that a large percentage of the Corps who might be settled abroad would be left as a United Kingdom responsibility. The War Office also points out that our decision bars a large number of Poles who fought actively against Germany and who undertook the additional risk of deserting the German forces in order to do so.

6. The argument for our continuing to adhere to our previous decision to exclude Poles who were members of the German Army or German work camps is that it would remove the basis for a good deal of the propaganda in Canada against the whole scheme. On the other hand, it does make the task of the United Kingdom in securing resettlement for the remaining Poles that much more difficult.

7. Perhaps a compromise might be for us to agree not to bar from the scheme members of the Polish Army who established their bona fides by taking the risks of desertion from the German Army or German work camps and by taking part in action before the close of hostilities. This would mean that we would continue to bar two groups of Poles:

(1) Poles who served in the German Army and were taken prisoner by Allied Forces and then joined the Polish Corps and were in action against the Germans, and

(2) Poles who served in the German Army and were taken prisoner by Allied Forces after the termination of war in the European zone and then joined the Polish Corps.

This would be in accord with the terms of the Order-in-Council, which refers to, "4,000 single ex-members of the Polish Armed Forces who served with the Allied Forces engaged in hostilities against the Axis powers".

We have never returned a reply to the Polish Minister's note of September 11th, in which he took exception to an observation made by Mr. Glen in the House of Commons on August 28th. I think that a phrase employed by Mr. Glen was inaccurate and unfortunate and gave the Polish Minister a real cause for complaint. In his note, however, he sought to prove too much by including the ridiculous statement that the members of Anders army who were not ready to return to Poland fought on the German side because they were Nazi sympathizers. This may be true of a small minority, but it is undoubtedly grossly inaccurate and unfair as a general statement.

It is hard to answer this note in writing and both Robertson and I have felt that it should be dealt with verbally. Would you consider asking the Polish Minister to call on you? It would be useful if you could convey to him some expression of regret on Mr. Glen's part for the objectionable phrase he employed, while, at the same time, objecting to the language used in the Polish Minister's note, the contents of which, incidentally, he has made public in a statement circulated to the press. I attach a copy of his note. I find that it has not been sent to Mr. Glen. I also attach a copy of an earlier note, dated September 7th, stating the objections of his Government to our arrangements for bringing former Polish soldiers to Canada. This too has not been answered.<sup>1</sup>

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegrams Nos. 1924, September 18th,† and 1926 and 1932 of September 19th,† transmitting messages from the Canadian Polish Movement Unit. Please transmit the following message to the Movement Unit, Begins:

1. We have received from you two messages dealing with the same subject. The first is a message from Shakespeare to the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. which divides members of the Polish Corps into five classes. The second is a message from Hare to the Deputy Minister of Labour which divides the Polish Corps into seven categories. In order to avoid confusion, it is therefore necessary for us to state the position of the Canadian Government without specific reference to the five or seven categories.

2. The following are the instructions of the Canadian Government to the Canadian Polish Movement Unit: It is agreed that we should accept persons not only from that group of Poles who deserted from German units and fought against the Germans in the war, but also from those who took part in active hostilities against the Germans after having been taken prisoner by the Allied Forces while serving in the German Army. The criterion should be active participation in hostilities against the Axis. Under this, the only groups barred would be those who joined the Polish Corps after the end of hostilities. This decision required no amendment to Order-in-Council P.C. 3112 which authorized the admission of "4,000 single ex-members of the Polish Armed Forces who served with the Allied Forces engaged in hostilities against the Axis powers".

If you are unable to fill the total quota from the Polish Corps in Italy, an offer will be made to complete the quota from the Polish Corps in the United Kingdom. MOVEMENT OF 4,000 POLISH VETERANS
TO CANADA FOR AGRICULTURAL LABOUR

1. When Mr. Robertson and Mr. King were in London in May of this year, they offered to the United Kingdom authorities to take 4,000 Poles from the Polish Army in Italy and United Kingdom, as a Canadian contribution to help them with the problem of disposing of the Polish veterans who would not return to Poland. (It was also hoped that these Polish [veterans] would replace the 4,000 P.O.W. on Canadian farms who were to be repatriated this year.)

2. The scheme was finally authorized by Order-in-Council No. P.C. 3112, dated July 23rd, 1946. At the suggestion of the United Kingdom authorities, we agreed to try to take the whole 4,000 from the Anders' Army in Italy from where the men should be sent direct to Canada.

3. A selection team of members of the Department of Labour, Department of Immigration and R.C.M.P. proceeded to Italy in mid-August and have been working hard ever since. When it was found that they might not get the full 4,000 single Polish veterans with agricultural experience, as required, it was suggested that the quota might be completed in the United Kingdom. We raised this suggestion with Canada House who replied in their telegram 1850 of September 6th,† that the United Kingdom authorities would be quite agreeable to this, but wanted a definite proposal from us before taking any steps. So far we have not made a definite proposal.

4. At the meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on Polish soldiers, held October 12th, the latest news from the selection team in Italy, had not been received, and it was feared that only from 2,000 to 2,500 Poles would be selected in Italy. The question was discussed whether the balance should be obtained in the United Kingdom immediately. Mr. MacNamara, the Deputy Minister of Labour was very firmly of the opinion that the selection of the balance should be delayed until the spring when it would be easier to place the men on the farms.

5. The main reason for Mr. MacNamara's hesitation to select the balance now in the United Kingdom is that so far only 2,000 applications had been received from the farmers for Polish veterans. The Department of Labour has visions of being stuck with several thousand unemployed Poles in hostels all winter. They could possibly be placed in lumber camps but would then be most unwilling to return to farms at lower wages in the spring. Mr. MacNamara realized that we could not go back on our commitment to take 4,000 altogether, but was very strong on his wish to defer the movement of the balance of Poles until the spring.

6. It now appears that they will get 3,200 Poles from Italy who will come forward during November. This will leave over 800 to be selected in the United Kingdom.

7. We have never given any promise of a definite date when the men should be brought to Canada. Certainly, from our point of view, it will be much more convenient to take the balance in March or April. The United Kingdom authorities may feel that we are going back on our promise in leaving them to look after and feed 800 Polish veterans for the winter, until we choose to take them in the spring. However, Mr. Ranger, Assistant to the Deputy Minister of Labour will arrive in London on Saturday and will be able to explain to Mr. Robertson and to the United Kingdom authorities our difficulties here.

8. As Mr. MacNamara feels very strongly on the subject, I do not think we could get him to agree to take the additional 800 Poles now, without a battle. Unless you feel equally strongly that we should take them now, I think we should agree to the Department of Labour's suggestion and complete the operation in the spring.<sup>1</sup>

1. X-ray examination of Polish veterans, which was not possible in Italy, has disclosed a few cases of men with signs of Tuberculosis. Two cases of Syphilis, which may require lengthy treatment, have also been discovered.

2. Labour and Immigration Departments would like to return such cases to the United Kingdom.

3. It appears to me not unreasonable that we should be able to return men who for medical reasons are found unfit for agricultural employment. Could you please discuss this question with United Kingdom authorities, and advise me if they would agree to the return to the United Kingdom of such men. Their agreement is most desirable, as this question might have considerable bearing on possible future movement of Polish veterans to Canada.

Sir,

It has recently been called to my attention that the Polish Legation in Canada has issued a notice calling upon Polish citizens in this country to present themselves at the Polish Legation for registration. In this connection I am enclosing a copy of a statement which has been made by the Department of External Affairs indicating the position of the Canadian Government. It has been the expectation of the Canadian Government that, when the representatives in Canada of a foreign Government plan to carry out a registration such as that announced by the Polish Legation, the Department of External Affairs would, as a matter of courtesy, be informed and consulted. You will notice, however, that in the enclosed statement no question has been raised concerning the right of the Polish Legation in Ottawa to call upon Polish citizens in Canada to present themselves for registration. On the other hand it has been made clear that no resident of Canada may be compelled to register with a representative of any foreign Government if he does not wish to do so.

I would be grateful if, in acknowledging this Note, you would be good enough to assure me that, when a Canadian Diplomatic Mission has been established in Poland, the Canadian Government will be able, if it so wishes, to issue notices in the Polish press calling upon Canadian citizens in Poland to present themselves for registration at that Mission.

The attention of the Canadian authorities has been drawn to an announcement made by the Polish Legation in Ottawa concerning the registration of Polish citizens in Canada. The Department of External Affairs was not consulted by the Polish Legation concerning this registration, and the arrangements which the Polish Legation has made are not ones which normally would require the consent of the Canadian Government. Any foreign diplomatic mission is at liberty to call on citizens of the State which it represents to present themselves for registration at any time.

It should, however, be clearly understood that under Canadian law no one in this country need present himself for registration at the Polish Legation unless he wishes to do so. There is no law in Canada which compels anyone to comply with an order on the part of a foreign Government to register at its diplomatic or consular offices. This applies equally to the former members of the Polish armed forces who have recently come to Canada and to any other persons of Polish origin who are residents of Canada.

In regard to the former members of the Polish armed forces who have been admitted to Canada, it is the expectation of the Canadian authorities that these persons, when they have fulfilled the conditions of their entry to Canada, will remain in this country, and that in the course of time they will qualify for Canadian citizenship. Under the Canadian Citizenship Act recently passed by the Parliament of Canada, facilities have been provided by which anyone who has been admitted permanently to this country may, if he is qualified, become a Canadian citizen and secure all the rights and privileges which would belong to him were he a natural born Canadian.

Excellency,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your note of November 25th and of the statement of the same date, concerning registration of Polish citizens in Canada.

Thanking you for the courtesy of this communication, I am glad to find that the opinions of the Government of Canada, on that matter, do comply with the respective views of my government.

I also wish to express to Your Excellency, my satisfaction for the interest shown by the Department of External Affairs to this problem of registration. Being a technical matter of purely consular routine, this matter did not appear to me to be of particular interest to Your Excellency and that is the only reason why it has not been submitted for consideration to the Department of External Affairs. I can assure Your Excellency, however, that I shall be very happy to take always into account, the interest you are kind enough to show me in this instance and I shall not fail to approach Your Excellency, in the future, with requests for advice and assistance also in matters of that kind, should there arise any.

On behalf of my Government, I have the honour to assure Your Excellency that when a Canadian Diplomatic Mission has been established in Poland, the Canadian government will be able, if it so wishes, to issue notices in the Polish Press, calling upon Canadian citizens in Poland to present themselves for registration at that Mission.

Ottawa, November 26, 1946

Following for Robertson from Riddell, Begins: For your confidential information, following is account of interdepartmental meeting at which question of disposal of Polish veterans found from X-ray to have active tuberculosis was discussed today.

1. It now appears that out of nineteen hundred soldiers in first shipload there are seventy-five known cases of active tuberculosis and twenty-four questionable cases. These men will require at least six months' hospitalization. Presumably second boatload of twelve hundred will reveal another sixty cases.

2. MacNamara, Chairman of meeting, urged that the men should be returned to U.K. on the grounds that future plans to import Polish labour would be prejudiced if it was felt that we were accepting a lot of hospital cases. Dr. Brown, speaking for Dr. Cameron of Health and Welfare, urged strongly that we should treat these cases in Canada. He pointed out that U.K. hospitals have been overtaxed during the War and they had no facilities to spare. Mr. Hare, formerly head of selection unit in Italy, was against returning the men on the grounds that we had a moral responsibility to help the U.K. in dealing with the problem of Polish veterans. Hicks, as our representative, said that we had not yet had a reply from you to our telegram No. 1982, but suggested that we had not realized, when we asked the U.K. authorities if they would agree to the return of a few men, that the number involved would be so large. He supported Dr. Brown's view that it would be difficult to ask the U.K. authorities to accept so many.

3. There have also been found four V.D.S. cases, and thirty-nine cases who have shown positive serological blood tests. It was agreed that these could be treated by Army hospitals here.

4. As a result of discussion it was decided to find out what arrangements could be made for the treatment of the tubercular Poles in Canada, either through Veterans Affairs or the provincial authorities if it was decided to keep them in Canada. Final decision will also be guided by your reply to our formal telegram 1982 of November 19th, indicating the feeling of the U.K. authorities.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 1982 of November 19th.

1. Original discussions with United Kingdom in June last, in which I took part, contemplated possible return to United Kingdom of Polish veterans who had in fact proved themselves unsuitable for settlement in Canada. You will recall that the United Kingdom accepted this provision with some reluctance and in the expectation that the number liable to be returned to their charge would, in any case, be very small in view of our rigid initial selection. The possibility of our wishing to retain [sic] on medical grounds men who had been accepted by our examining authorities was never raised.

2. Preliminary and very tentative enquiries as to United Kingdom willingness to receive Polish veterans in Canada now found in need of hospitalization indicated that they would find it almost impossible to give such cases adequate medical treatment. Brigadier Melville and Brigadier Warner can speak with more authority than I can on the over-strained capacity of United Kingdom veterans' hospitals and medical facilities.

3. My own strong feeling is that the men in question, who after all were fit enough for prima facie qualification on examination in Italy, have a chance for complete recovery if hospitalized in Canada and a very much smaller chance if returned to this country where food is short and beds are scarce.

4. For our own good name in the matter, I should much prefer to see us take the thick with the thin in the 3,000 we have already received and stop there—than have us make the reception of an additional thousand dependent on the United Kingdom's willingness to take and treat the hundred unfortunates who were inadvertently included in the first party.

My immediately following telegram† contains text of letter dated December 9th to Pearson from MacNamara.†

You will see that MacNamara is now willing to have tubercular cases treated in Canada but wishes United Kingdom Government to be asked to bear the cost which will be between eighty thousand and ninety thousand dollars.

In absence of Mr. Pearson, Macdonnell discussed this question this morning with Mr. St. Laurent. Latter is concerned lest any relaxation of general immigration policy should be made more difficult by accepting responsibility for hospitalization of these Poles. He has, therefore, asked that you discuss the situation frankly with United Kingdom authorities. Mr. St. Laurent would take the line that there had been error on both sides, since the United Kingdom had not provided adequate facilities for complete medical examination and Canada had not insisted on X-Ray examination before accepting the Poles. If outcome of such discussions were a suggestion that Canada and the United Kingdom divide equally between them costs of hospitalizing tubercular cases, Mr. St. Laurent would probably be prepared to recommend such a solution to Cabinet. Ends.

POLISH VETERANS IN CANADA; MEDICAL TREATMENT

At the meeting of the Cabinet on December 18th, it was reported that, while the first group of Polish veterans brought to Canada for agricultural labour under the government plan were satisfactory, there were, despite examination overseas by Canadian doctors, some 74 active and 76 questionable cases of tuberculosis among the 3,000.

It was agreed that tuberculosis cases among the Polish veterans already in Canada be treated by the Department of Veterans Affairs and that the U.K. government be requested to share equally with the Canadian government the costs of such treatment.

It was also agreed that the Department of Labour assume the cost of such treatment if the U.K. government were unwilling to assume any share of the cost, and that categorical instructions be given that a thorough physical examination be conducted in the case of all remaining Polish veterans intended to be brought to Canada under the government scheme.

tion of a Commission to deal with the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters.

I have been glad to learn that the Foreign Ministers of the three Governments represented at the discussions in Moscow have reached agreement that their delegations, together with the delegations of Canada, France and China if this is acceptable to them, should jointly sponsor a resolution at the first General Assembly of the United Nations, providing for the establishment of a Commission to undertake the tasks which were outlined in the agreed declaration issued by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee and myself in Washington on November 15th, 1945.

The Government of Canada is prepared to join with the Governments of the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United Kingdom, as well as with the Governments of France and China if they so agree, in sponsoring the resolution of which the terms were set forth in your note. In accepting the invitation of the three Governments represented at the Moscow meeting, the Government of Canada has taken note of the statement made by the Secretary of State of the United States in a speech delivered in Washington on December 30th as follows:

The Security Council can give directions to the commission, and restrain publication of reports detrimental to peace and security, but such action can be taken only with the concurrence of all its permanent members. Failure of the Security Council to act cannot block the work of the commission.

Washington, January 18, 1946

Dear Norman [Robertson],

With reference to the meetings of our sub-committee<sup>1</sup> to draw up a new draft Memorandum of Agreement and Declaration of Trust for the Combined Policy Committee, I am attaching herewith a communication† from Roger

Makins on this subject, together with a re-draft of the documents in question.† As Makins states, the London changes are merely of a drafting character. Therefore, the only outstanding point at the moment is paragraph 6 of the re-draft of the Memorandum of Agreement, on which we have not yet heard from General Groves. Makins believes, and I am inclined to agree with him, that Groves will stick to his earlier wording, which implies something less than 100% co-operation on exchange of information, and that we will then have to submit alternative paragraphs to the Combined Policy Committee for their decision.

We will have one further meeting of the sub-committee next week and then turn our drafts over to Secretary of State Byrnes, who will no doubt call a meeting of the Combined Policy Committee when he returns.

All this gives the Government a couple of extra weeks in which to make up its mind on the fundamental question of participation in these Agreements and in the machinery they set up. As you know, I discussed this matter with the Prime Minister when I was in Ottawa and he was inclined to think that it would be difficult for us to withdraw now. Notwithstanding earlier doubts on the subject, I am inclined to agree with him. In any event, I think that it will be impossible for us to accept the draft Memorandum of Agreement without accepting the draft Declaration of Trust.

George Bateman is going to Ottawa on Monday and I am giving him a copy of these documents. He will take them up with Howe, and I hope will be able to return to Washington later in the week with a definite decision from the Government in respect of the policy questions involved.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, January 31, 1946

Dear Mike [Pearson],

There was an opportunity of bringing briefly before the Cabinet, yesterday, the general question of Canadian participation in the proposed tripartite agreements for the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust. You will remember that I spoke to you on the telephone about the re-drafted documents† which you sent up to Norman with your letter of January 18th, copies of them being made available to me by George Bateman when he was here.

Mr. Howe had previously been over the documents with Bateman and was satisfied that they represented a reasonably satisfactory basis for Canadian participation. As you know he has not been very happy about our recent relations with the U.K. people, particularly as a result of the withdrawal of Cockcroft<sup>1</sup> without any consultation with us. After speaking to Mr. Howe I felt justified in telling you, over the telephone, that for the purposes of the drafting committee you might take it that the re-drafts were satisfactory from the Canadian point of view.

The discussion at yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet was pretty peremptory. Mr. Howe stated that the revised documents would provide reasonable working arrangements. With respect to the Trust, it was clear that there was no financial responsibility on the Canadian government, though we would become full members with the United States and the United Kingdom. As a result, I was able to record the fact that the Cabinet approved Canadian participation in the Committee and the Trust, on the basis described by Mr. Howe and along the lines of the draft documents referred to.

This represents a step forward but I am rather concerned, nevertheless, for, apart from Mr. Howe, none of the Ministers (including the Prime Minister) has any clear understanding of what is involved. Certainly, before the documents are approved for signature there will have to be a further discussion in Cabinet. Meantime you at least have confirmation that the government are satisfied to have the drafts go forward to the Committee.

I confess that I am somewhat baffled myself by our position in the Trust. We are full members although I take it our voting strength is one out of six, as compared with the United Kingdom two and the United States three. We are excluded from liability for the provision of funds under Section 6 and I gather from George Bateman that the Trust is to acquire from Canada all unallocated materials for which, presumably, we are to be paid by the Trust.

I should be glad to learn what progress was made at the drafting committee meeting last week and when you now anticipate that the Combined Policy Committee will next meet. Mr. Howe is planning to leave Ottawa on or about February 15th for about a month so that if the meeting takes place in that period you will presumably be asked to represent him again. If final approval of the documents is likely to be asked in the interval, I should like to know, at once, so that we may make arrangements to have further Cabinet consideration given to the problem.

Yours sincerely,

A. D. P. HEENEY

TELEGRAM 358

London, February 7, 1946

TOP SECRET. ASDEL No. 67. Following from Wrong, Begins: Atomic Energy Commission.

1. From what we have been able to learn here, it does not appear that either the United Kingdom or the United States Government has as yet come to any very definite conclusions regarding arrangements for the establishment and composition of the Atomic Energy Commission. We have, however, gathered from informal talks with United Kingdom and United States officials some indication of their preliminary views on the subject.

2. It is not now proposed to have any organizational meeting of the Commission in London. The United States delegation consider that the earliest probable date for the first meeting of the Commission would be April 1st. The nomination of the American representative on the Commission will have to be confirmed by the Senate and this is, no doubt, one cause for this delay. The first meeting will probably be called on the initiative of the Secretary General. The Commission will hold its meetings at the Headquarters of the United Nations. The Americans are quite definite on this point.

3. With regard to representation, the United States authorities appear to be thinking of Dr. Conant of Harvard as their principal representative. He would combine scientific knowledge with considerable experience in public affairs. He would have a political adviser drawn from among the senior officials of the State Department.

4. The United Kingdom Government have not, as yet, come to a decision regarding their representative. It is quite likely that some States may name scientific experts as their representatives while others may prefer to be represented by a diplomat or a politician.

5. With regard to the relationship between the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission, it seems apparent that there will be very close coordination in all matters respecting security. Indeed, this is provided in Section 2 (b) of the resolution setting up the Commission. It is, moreover, difficult to imagine any important development in the field of atomic energy which does not have some security aspect. From our talks with American and United Kingdom officials here, it appears that a continuous relationship between these two bodies is contemplated. The Security Council would give guidance and direction to the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. For its parts the Atomic Energy Commission might be expected to put before the Security Council suggestions as to the nature of the tasks upon which it should embark.

6. The position of Canada in this connection may call for further consideration in view of the fact that Canada is the only country which is a member of the Atomic Energy Commission but not of the Security Council. This position will present certain difficulties. We should have no part in the decisions of the Security Council when these affect the nature of the work to be undertaken by the Atomic Energy Commission, nor should we be represented on the Security Council when the reports of the Atomic Energy Commission are under consideration, nor when the questions of their publication or transmission to the organizations of the United Nations and member States are being considered.

7. In the circumstances, it is for consideration whether Canada should not participate under Article 31 of the Charter in meetings of the Security Council whenever the subject of atomic energy is before the Council. We should have a strong case for making such a request in view of Canada's contribution to the development of atomic energy. Our special position in the matter has, of course, been recognized by our permanent membership in the Atomic Energy Commission. We could reasonably argue that this is a matter in which the interests of Canada are "specially affected". It may perhaps be anticipated that neither the United Kingdom nor the United States Governments would be opposed to participation by Canada. It will also be recalled that under the Charter the veto cannot function to prevent the participation of States whose interests are specially affected by questions under discussion in the Security Council.

8. No question relating to the work of the Commission is now on the agenda of the Security Council. It might happen, however, that the U.S.S.R. or some other member might raise the matter in the Council before the Commission assembles. If it is felt that we should seek participation, as suggested in paragraph 7, we may have to act without much notice and it might be well to prepare the ground by making known our views privately to several delegations before the Assembly rises. I hope, therefore, that consideration can be given to this suggestion as soon as possible. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: I have just received your EX-408† and EX-409† of today's date on the question whether we should participate in discussions at the Security Council on atomic questions. I think we should request such participation under Article 31 because otherwise we would be at a disadvantage on the Atomic Commission over its other members whose governments would also be represented on the Council. I do not see how anyone could object to such a request. The criterion for participation under Article 31 is that the interests of a member are specially affected. The fact that we were chosen unanimously for membership on the Atomic Commission is a recognition by the Assembly that this criterion applies to us. This would also be the case when atomic questions were being discussed by the Council. There should, therefore, be no objection to our participation in Council discussions of this question. I think the argument (though we could not use it publicly) for such participation is strengthened by our membership on the Combined Policy Committee. On the whole, therefore, I think we would be well advised to take the preparatory action suggested in the third sentence of paragraph 8 of Wrong's telegram. Ends.

Ottawa, February 9, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Thanks for your letter of February 8th,† enclosing copy of telegram No. 358 of February 7, from our High Commissioner in London, regarding the present state of plans for the establishment of an Atomic Energy Commission.

With reference to paragraphs 7 and 8, it would seem most unlikely that the Security Commission would fail to adopt the policies laid down by the Atomic Energy Commission. Should such an unlikely event occur, it seems to me that Canada could then invoke Article 31 of the Charter, and demand the right to attend meetings of the Security Council whenever the subject of atomic energy is before the Council. I see no purpose in making such a demand at this time. While Canada is in a special position at the moment, other countries would be able to make similar claims as the years go by, the net result being less satisfactory than that which obtains at the moment.

I regard it as important that Canada continue to work with the United States and the United Kingdom on policy matters having to do with atomic energy. This being so, our policies will be ably stated to the Security Council through our partners, both of whom are members.

Not having been elected to the Security Council, it seems to me that Canada should have a better reason than that now being advanced for claiming the right to attend the meetings.

I hope that my views will be helpful in enabling you to reply to the cable from our High Commissioner.

Yours sincerely,

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. ASDEL No. 26. Following for Wrong from Robertson, Begins: Your ASDEL No. 67 of February 7th. I have consulted the Prime Minister and he agrees that you should seek participation of Canada in meetings of Security Council under Article 31 of the Charter when the subject of atomic energy is before the Council.

This is clearly desirable, as otherwise we would be at a disadvantage in relation to other members on the Atomic Commission who are represented on the Council. I do not see how any real objection could be raised to such a request. The fact that the Assembly has given approval unanimously to our membership on the Atomic Commission is in a sense a recognition that the criterion of participation employed in Article 31 applies to us. London, February 15, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Following receipt of your telegram No. 364 of February 9th, concerning the Atomic Commission, we have consulted a number of delegations to sound them out on the desirability of Canada being invited to sit with the Security Council whenever matters relating to the Atomic Commission are under discussion. So far we have not encountered any opposition to this view. Sir Alexander Cadogan told me yesterday that the United Kingdom representative would propose the participation of Canada under Article 31 of the Charter when atomic questions came up for the first time, unless the United States member took the initiative in the matter. The Brazilian representative, who will continue to be Mr. de Freitas Valle, and who assumes the presidency of the Council on February 17th, cordially agreed that the Canadian representative should be present.

We have not spoken to Mr. Stettinius,<sup>1</sup> but we have discussed the whole question of the operation of the Atomic Commission with several members of the United States delegation. Mr. Achilles<sup>2</sup> has promised me that he will see that our views are made known both to those of his delegation who are concerned with the Security Council, and to the Department of State. Mr. Wilgress, before he leaves tomorrow, will mention the matter, if he can find an opportunity, to Mr. Gromyko.

I am satisfied that we should not put in a general request at this stage to the President of the Council, but should wait until some question relating to the work of the Commission appears on the Agenda. There has been talk of an initial meeting being held in London, but I feel sure that if this is done it will merely be to settle the date on which the Commission will begin to operate. The whole subject has so far been completely non-contentious although I doubt that this harmony will endure for very long.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Massey together with our exchange of telegrams on the subject so that if a meeting of the Commission should be called before the Security Council moves to the United States (which Mr. Stettinius is very anxious to bring about immediately) he will be in a position to follow the matter up.

Mr. Wilgress asked me to let you know about the curious dinner party he attended last Friday as Vyshinsky's guest, at the Soviet Embassy. The other guests were the Persian, Egyptian, Mexican, Lebanese, Syrian, Danish and Norwegian delegates. A Brazilian, though not Freitas Valle, was there, and Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar also attended. The best of relations seemed to exist between the Russians and the Persians, who were the guests of honour. Canada appeared to be second and Mexico third.

M. Vyshinsky proposed the toast, "To the great and small powers", upon which Manuilsky shouted from his end of the table, "Canada is both a great and a small power". Mr. Wilgress responded to the toast by drinking to friendly relations with the U.S.S.R. Thereupon, Al Khoury of Syria proposed a toast to Stalin, "who, as the recent sessions of the Security Council have shown, is a real friend of the small powers".

After the dinner, Mr. Wilgress mentioned to Vyshinsky our desire to participate in Security Council discussions whenever Atomic Energy was discussed. Vyshinsky was non-committal: "We will think about it", he said. Gromyko, with whom Mr. Wilgress also broached the subject took the same line, but added that first an important question had to be settled—that of voting procedure in the Atomic Energy Commission. Mr. Wilgress remarked that since the Commission was set up by the Assembly, he assumed that the Assembly's voting rules would apply. Gromyko replied, "But not when questions relating to security arise—in such questions the concurrence of the five permanent members is essential". The subject was not pursued any further. I think Mr. Wilgress said that he was under the impression that Gromyko's purpose in raising the question of voting was to see whether we would be prepared, in return for Soviet support for our position, to support the Soviets on voting.

Gromyko also made a point of telling Mr. Wilgress that he admired "Mike" Pearson and that the only reason the Russians could not support him for Secretary General was that the seat of the Organization was in North America and that it would look strange to have a North American for that post.

Thanks for your memorandum of March 20th† re atomic energy problems. We have discussed the subject matter of your memorandum, and I believe that you know my views.

This morning a conference was held in my office with the High Commissioner for the U.K., in the presence of Mackenzie, Sir James Chadwick,<sup>1</sup> Dr. Cockcroft and Mr. Stephen L. Holmes, in the course of which the relations between the Chalk River project and the U.K. were thoroughly discussed. There seemed to be little difference of opinion between us at the conclusion of the discussion.

In short, it was agreed that Canada would be in complete control of the Canadian project, just as the United Kingdom will be in complete control of the U.K. project. A free interchange of personnel between the two projects will be permitted by arrangement with the Directors of each project. It will be necessary for Canada to find a successor to Dr. Cockcroft,<sup>1</sup> who will probably leave Canada around the end of June. Consideration is being given to the appointment of a Canadian who has been in the United States and associated with atomic energy developments there for the past several years, as well as to a scientist in the United Kingdom who is highly recommended by Sir James Chadwick and Sir Stafford Cripps.<sup>2</sup> Whereas Dr. Cockcroft is in the employ of the U.K., it is understood that the new Director will be in the employ of the Canadian Government and not responsible to any other authority. This is the position which Mackenzie and I have been seeking for some time.

All those present expressed some concern about the United Nations Atomic Commission and its relation to existing projects. It is felt that extreme care must be taken, in the early stages at least, to make sure that information with regard to the projects is not widely disseminated to the United Nations Atomic Commission.

Those present felt that the new Combined Policy Agreement and the new Combined Development Trust Agreement would be signed ultimately, and that probably these agreements would be filed with the United Nations Atomic Commission. The chief difficulty at the moment seems to be that the members of the Combined Policy Committee have not devoted the necessary study to the atomic energy problems.

I have asked Mr. Gavsie<sup>3</sup> to send you a copy of his draft Bill to provide for domestic control of production, research and development of atomic energy.

Regarding an advisory panel for the Canadian member of the United Nations Atomic Commission, there seemed to be general agreement that this might consist of George Bateman as Alternate, and that the others be Mackenzie (scientific), Pearson (political), Solandt (military), and Heeny (External Affairs); this for consideration of the Prime Minister.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Reference meeting of Policy Committee. You have doubtless seen despatches [sic] from Canadian Ambassador numbered WA-1582, † WA-1583 † and WA-1614. †

From these you will see that our U.K. friends seem to be moving toward obtaining control both of the operation of the Eldorado mine and the output therefrom. Canada cannot agree to this and if there is no other alternative we would do well to refrain from holding a membership in the Trust.

Canada has no objection to allocation by the Trust of Eldorado production after Canadian needs for the product have been filled, but you will agree that Canada must be free to operate the mine in such manner as Canada will decide, having in mind transportation and other difficulties associated with its operation.

Provided a reservation to this effect can be inserted, I have no objection to Canada being a member of the Trust. While we would like to have the Trust buy our surplus material, the price for an agreement to do so is too high if to obtain it we must surrender all Canadian control of the output.

Hope you can guide Pearson in amending any draft agreement.

I will be at Royal York Hotel, Toronto, all day Monday, where you can telephone me should further consultation be desirable.

As I see the situation, Canada has no particular interest in division of material other than that produced in Canada. Ends.

Dear Mr. Howe,

At the meeting of the C.P.C. this afternoon little was accomplished except to emphasize the fundamental differences between the U.S. and the U.K. Last fall the President and the Prime Ministers issued a joint statement calling for full and effective cooperation in the field of atomic energy and authorizing the C.P.C. to draft plans for following this out. Several drafts were prepared and submitted to the respective Governments but at the last meeting of the C.P.C. Byrnes took the position that he was not in favour of an international agreement, which would have to be filed with the U.N. and which might be considered as sabotaging its efforts. In an effort to overcome this the British prepared a memorandum, copy of which you have, which they felt might be simply taken as a minute of the C.P.C.

At today's meeting it was generally recognized that the British proposal was only a subterfuge and that no such document as had been considered could be drafted without its constituting a new agreement which it would be necessary to file with the U.N.

Pearson suggested that another joint memorandum might be drawn up which would restate the desire for full and effective co-operation in the field of atomic energy under the auspices of the U.N. but point out that as it might be some time before the U.N. would be in a position to function and before adequate safeguards could be assured, the three Governments would continue to cooperate as they had in the past.

The real pressure behind the British desire to have a firm agreement and a definition of "full and effective cooperation" lies in the fact that they are designing a plant and need a good deal of information from the U.S. on engineering design, construction and operation. They state that since V-J Day there has been practically no interchange of information of any value and in the meantime they cannot proceed with the work they have undertaken.

There seems to be a great deal of uncertainty as to what the President and Prime Ministers meant by "full and effective cooperation". The British interpret it as meaning that they should receive the information they want from the U.S. while the U.S. claim that President Truman did not have in mind the construction of another plant by the U.K. It would appear that the only way in which the matter could be settled would be by an interchange of letters between the President and the Prime Ministers stating just what they had in mind and defining what is meant by "full and effective cooperation". It is quite obvious that the U.S. does not want to give the U.K. the information desired and I would consider it doubtful if any solution satisfactory to the U.K. will be found.

There was general agreement that the C.P.C. itself could not do anything further in the matter without more specific instructions and more specific information as to just what the President and the Prime Ministers had in mind.

The other major point taken up at the meeting dealt with the allocation of raw materials. The British on the one hand request that allocations, subsequent to V-J Day, should be in accordance with the financial commitment, that is, a fifty-fifty division. The Americans on the other hand ask for a firm allocation of 250 tons per month. Receipts from the Congo are estimated at 330 tons per month, which would leave a somewhat uncertain balance of 80 tons per month for the U.K., which estimates its requirements at 1500 tons a year or 125 tons per month. Recent reports from the Congo, which I have not yet had an opportunity of going into, seem to indicate a shorter life to the mine than was originally estimated, and if this proves to be the case, the British might find themselves with a plant calling for 1500 tons a year and only have a few hundred tons available.

As it was quite obvious that the matter could not be settled at the meeting this afternoon, a small subcommittee consisting of two representatives each from the U.S. and U.K. was appointed. Canada was asked to appoint a representative but as the question involves one of having to do with the purchase of materials with Trust funds to which we are not a contributor, we took the position that we should not appear in the matter officially. I was, however, asked to attend the meetings unofficially and this I agreed to do. I think there is a fairly strong possibility that if a solution is not found which is satisfactory to the British, they may withdraw from the Trust.

Yours sincerely,

G. C. BATEMAN

*Procès-verbal d'une réunion de la Commission consultative

Minutes of a Meeting of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa,] April 16, 1946

FIRST MEETING, APRIL 16, 1946

The following were present:

Mr. Heeney,
General McNaughton,
Dr. Mackenzie,
Mr. Solandt,
Mr. Ritchie,
Mr. Ignatieff.

Mr. Heeney stated that at the meeting of the Cabinet on March 27th, it was agreed that an Advisory Panel be constituted to consist of appropriate officials to advise the Government on various aspects of atomic energy problems. The Panel includes Mr. Heeney as convener, General McNaughton, as the Canadian representative on the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations, Dr. Mackenzie, President of the National Research Council, Mr. Solandt, Director-General of Research, Department of National Defence, Mr. Bateman, as representative of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, and members of the Department of External Affairs, including the Under-Secretary, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Wrong, and others as seem necessary. Mr. Ignatieff is to act as secretary. It was understood that the Chiefs of Staff and requisite scientific advisers would be asked to participate in meetings of the Panel when this was deemed appropriate.

2. Mr. Heeney then outlined developments in the subject of international control of atomic energy, as well as plans for domestic control in Canada. There was still no information regarding the date on which the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission was to meet. Mr. Ritchie reported that, according to information he was able to obtain in New York, there appeared to be no date fixed for the meeting of the Commission. There was still much uncertainty in the policies of the United States and United Kingdom Governments in relation to the Commission.

3. Mr. Heeney said that he had heard from Mr. Pearson from Washington with regard to the meeting on April 15th of the Combined Policy Committee. The discussion had related to the registration of the tripartite agreement under the terms of Article 102 of the Charter, and to the allocation of raw materials to the Trust. The discussion had apparently been unsatisfactory and no agreements had been reached.

4. There had been some preliminary study of the problem of the international control of atomic energy on the part of the United Kingdom and the United States Governments. In the case of the United Kingdom, there was the Chadwick Memorandum, which represented a statement of the United Kingdom ideas about the operations of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy. This Memorandum, basing itself on the Washington Declaration, proposed that specialized information about the practical industrial application of atomic energy should not be communicated to other Governments until effective and enforceable safeguards, acceptable to all nations, had been devised. It envisaged, therefore a gradual order of procedure toward international control, commencing with the exchange of basic scientific information. The Panel thought that this memorandum reflected a very cautious approach to the problem which would not be productive of results for a long time. On the other hand, the Acheson Committee of the State Department had now made public a report of its Board of Consultants under Mr. Lilienthal, which represented a bold and constructive approach to the whole problem of the international control of atomic energy. It was noted that the report had not been adopted as official United States policy, and at this stage was regarded only as a basis for discussion. Until the attitude of the United States Government had been officially expressed in relation to the report, the Panel agreed that it would not be desirable for the Canadian Government to express any official view on a matter which was the subject of domestic controversy in the United States. It was agreed, however, that the Canadian Embassy in Washington should be requested to furnish an analysis of United States opinion on the report.

5. General McNaughton said that he was impressed with the Lilienthal Report as the most constructive policy which had been suggested in dealing with the problem of the international control of atomic energy. As regards the technical details, he asked Dr. Mackenzie whether he agreed with the statement in the Report with regard to the denaturing of fissionable materials so that they could not readily lend themselves to the making of atomic explosives. The validity of this premise required confirmation. General McNaughton referred to the supplementary report presented on this question by General Groves and a group of United States scientists concerned with the Manhattan project. The opinion of this group confirmed that the denaturing process, by nature of the magnitude of the plant and processing involved, would be valuable in adding to the flexibility of controls, though it cannot by itself eliminate the danger of atomic warfare. Dr. Mackenzie stated that both on the basis of the qualifications of those who had expressed this opinion, and on the basis of his own experience, this supplementary report could be accepted.

6. As to the Canadian attitude to the Lilienthal Report, General McNaughton suggested that it should be accepted as the only positive step in the direction of effective international control that had been suggested to date, and that it should be welcomed, as the United States was obviously the only country in a position to take the initiative towards sharing the secrets of atomic energy production. The Panel agreed with this view, but felt that until the United States official attitude had been defined in relation to the Report, no official Canadian opinion on the Report should be expressed to the United States Government. However, the Report should be taken into consideration in defining the Canadian attitude to the international control of atomic energy, and once this had been done, the Canadian view should be communicated informally to both the United States and the United Kingdom Governments. This was agreed to.

7. The Panel thought that work should be put in hand to define the Canadian attitude to the problem under the direction of General McNaughton. Dr. Mackenzie stressed the importance of the Canadian supply position. Canada had not made any commitment in relation to the supply of raw material, with the exception of the existing contract with the United States Army for supplies from Eldorado. He did not think that Canada could be regarded as party to the Trust arrangements, although Mr. Bateman had been recently appointed by Mr. Howe as Canadian representative on the Combined Policy Committee. The recent United Kingdom proposal to the Combined Policy Committee that raw material should be shared in the proportion of 50% to the United States and 50% to the United Kingdom and Canada, should be resisted until the problem of the control of raw material is considered on the basis of long-term international control. It was agreed by the Panel that this should be the line of approach to recommend to the Government.

8. It was, therefore, agreed that a paper should be prepared in the Department of External Affairs, under the direction of General McNaughton, incorporating the general views of the Panel as expressed at the present meeting, and seeking to define the Canadian attitude to the problem of the international control of atomic energy. The paper would take into account the Lilienthal Report and the political problems of international control. On the scientific side, it was agreed that Dr. Mackenzie's acceptance of the Groves Supplementary Report on the denaturing of fissionable materials would be accepted. The Canadian supply position would also be stated with the assistance of Mr. Leslie Thomson of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

9. It was agreed that a brief statement along these lines should be prepared by Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Ignatieff and would be available for consideration of the Panel at its next meeting.

10. On the question of the domestic control of atomic energy in Canada, Mr. Heeney explained that a draft bill had been prepared in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, with the advice of the Department of Justice. The bill had been considered in draft form by Mr. Heeney and Mr. Wrong, and a revised draft was now in the course of preparation. The question was raised whether the bill had been considered in relation to the problem of the international control of atomic energy. The Panel expressed the view that they were satisfied that the bill provided the controls and the mechanisms necessary to enable Canada to fulfil its obligations under a system of international control of atomic energy. It was agreed that the draft bill would be available at the next meeting of the Advisory Panel.

11. Attention of the Panel was drawn to the final draft of the McMahon Bill which it was understood would be reported in the Senate this week. It was agreed that copies of the Bill would be available to all members of the Panel before the next meeting.

12. In conclusion, it was agreed that the next meeting of the Panel would take place on Friday, the 26th April, at 3 p.m. in Mr. Heeney's room. Mr. Bateman would be invited to attend from Washington.

London, April 17, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Pearson will have told you what happened at the meeting of the Atomic Energy Combined Policy Committee on April 15th. I am very gravely disturbed at the turn which the discussions took for I feel, that if we are to make any progress at all, we must agree on a working basis of cooperation between our three Governments at least to carry us over the period until we know the outcome of the work of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. I have, therefore, sent the immediately following telegram† to President Truman, urging that the Combined Policy Committee should make a further attempt to work out a satisfactory basis of cooperation and suggesting that as a last resort, the matter should be dealt with by the Heads of the three Governments, each issuing instructions for the exchange of technical information. I am sure that you will appreciate how important it is that the deadlock which seems to have developed in the Combined Policy Committee should be broken and I hope that I may count on your support in this matter. Dear Mr. Bateman,

Thanks for yours of April 15th, giving me the outcome of the last meeting of C.P.C. It would look as though the last agreement on this subject has been signed, and that the U.K. will get very little further information with which to design their proposed pile.

The U.K. have requested Canada to furnish complete plans and specifications of the Chalk River development, which we have declined to do when we found that we were bound to secrecy on the design and that we cannot guarantee our U.S. friends secrecy if the plans are sent to the U.K.

I am inclined to think that the Trust agreement will lapse, and if so, no harm will be done as far as we are concerned. I feel that we will always find a market for our uranium regardless of the Trust.

Do you think that we should build a plant to manufacture uranium metal for our own pile or should we continue to depend on the U.S. for this? I am told that we would have no difficulty in building a plant that will refine ore into metal, should this be desirable. Your advice will be appreciated.

Please regard this letter as confidential between ourselves.

Yours sincerely,

C. D. HOWE

CANADIAN POLICY ON THE UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The following memorandum makes an attempt to summarize the present position of Canada in relation to the international aspects of the problems connected with atomic energy. A copy of the resolution of the General Assembly setting up the Atomic Energy Commission is attached.† The plans simply for setting up the Commission are still quite indefinite, but it does not seem likely that the Commission will meet in the immediate future. Apart from other considerations there are two general explanations for the delay in setting up the Commission. In the first place, the drop in confidence in relations with the Soviet Union makes the present juncture unfavorable for embarking upon this new experiment in international cooperation. In the second place, the United States Government do not appear to have reached a decision as to their policy in the Atomic Energy Commission. Meanwhile, however, representatives on the Commission have been appointed by the United Kingdom, the United States, Brazil, Egypt, France, The Netherlands, Poland, Australia and Canada.

So far we have been able to obtain only a limited indication of the policies which the United Kingdom and the United States may be expected to advocate in the Commission. These seem likely to favour a cautious approach to the issues involved. In the course of informal talks with members of the United States delegation during the General Assembly in London in January, the Americans expressed the view that the first step might well be for the Commission to concern itself with the exchange of general scientific information and of scientists. This would be in accordance with paragraph 5 (a) of the terms of reference of the Commission. The United Kingdom Government, in a memorandum† prepared by Professor Chadwick and forwarded to the Department of External Affairs by the Office of the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom on March 28th, have adopted the same approach and have stated that in their view the attention of the Commission should be directed mainly towards the question of the exchange of basic scientific information and that "as the prospects of increased Russian cooperation have not improved since these questions were discussed in Washington last year, the whole subject must be treated with caution." Meanwhile, with regard to the long-term thinking of the United States and United Kingdom Governments in contra-distinction to the immediate policy of caution indicated above, we have had an opportunity to see two documents: the first, a summary [of] a secret report of the British Joint Planning Staff on the control of atomic energy with which the British Chiefs of Staff have expressed their agreement (this document was received in strict confidence through the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in London); and the second, the report on the international control of atomic energy, issued by a board of consultants to the Department of State. The British Chiefs of Staff plan is based on the principle that the elimination of atomic weapons might be achieved by a convention renouncing the use of atomic weapons and by the establishment of an international inspectorate and control. In the interim period it is proposed that the United States nominally as the agent of the United Nations should hold her stock of atomic weapons.

The Lilienthal Report issued by the State Department is a much more imaginative and constructive document. It rejects the negative concept of outlawing atomic energy and enforcing such a prohibition by inspection, and proposes instead the creation of an international agency to conduct all intrinsically dangerous operations in the nuclear field, with individual nations and their citizens free to conduct under licence, and a minimum of inspection, all non-dangerous operations. It is proposed that the international agency referred to as the Atomic Development Authority should function under the United Nations. It would have the authority to own and lease property, to carry on mining, manufacturing, research, licensing, inspecting, selling or any other necessary operation.

The plan is based upon the belief backed by authoritative scientific opinion that operations in the field of atomic energy can be divided into those which are "safe" and "dangerous", and that U 235 and plutonium can be denatured and kept denatured so as not to lend themselves to the making of atomic explosives but can still be used with no essential loss of effectiveness for the peaceful applications of atomic energy. It is possible both in the case of U 235 and plutonium to remove the denaturant, but to do so would require rather complex installations and scientific and engineering skill of an appreciable order for this development.

The proposals contained in this report have not yet been adopted by the United States Government as the basis of their policy in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. Moreover, the report itself makes it very clear that these are long-term proposals. In the words of the report, "the consideration of the steps of transition by which the special position of the United States may be relinquished involves quite other values. The sequence, the ordering, and the timing of these steps may be decisive for the acceptability of the international controls, but will not affect its operability, therefore, they present problems of negotiation between the nations within the United Nations Organization. In the course of agreeing upon a charter for the Atomic Development Authority such problems of negotiation, in our opinion, are separable from the nature of the objective of the negotiation." The report goes on to advocate that a limited category of information should be divulged in the early meetings of the United Nations Commission discussing these problems, but that this information should be "of a theoretical and descriptive nature and have in large part to do with the constructive applications of atomic energy. In our opinion, they are largely qualitative and they involve almost nothing of know-how." It is, therefore, clear that the adoption by the United States Government of this report would not necessarily involve any departure from the principle that the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission should proceed with caution and that its first step should be to consider the exchange of basic scientific information.

The Canadian Government have not as yet adopted any principles of policy for the direction of the Canadian representative on the Atomic Energy Commission. We have, however, raised informally with the United Kingdom and United States Governments the unique and somewhat anomalous position of Canada as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission, but not a member of the Security Council. This position would mean that Canada was excluded from consideration in the Security Council of matters arising out of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. The United Kingdom and United States Governments have both indicated that they would support the participation of Canada, under Article 31 of the Charter, in meetings of the Security Council when the subject of atomic energy is before the Council. Unless, therefore, unexpected opposition should arise on the part of the Soviet Union (which did not oppose Canada's inclusion in the Atomic Energy Commission), it may be assumed that Canada will be able to participate in discussions having to do with atomic energy in the Security Council. It will be recalled, however, that under the terms of Article 31 Canada would not have the right to vote.

Another aspect of Canada's relationship to the problem of atomic energy is involved in our participation, in common with the United States and the United Kingdom, in the Combined Policy Committee set up under the Quebec Agreement. Close cooperation between the three Governments, which was begun during the war, is a matter of public knowledge, and the declaration issued at Washington last November made it clear that this cooperation had not been terminated. On the other hand, the problem arises of reconciling this special relationship with the obligations assumed by the three Governments under the Charter of the United Nations. The proposal to constitute new agreements regulating the position of the three parties to the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust raises a special problem, because all Members of the United Nations are committed, under Article 102 of the Charter, to register all agreements with the United Nations Secretariat for publication. This is an embarrassment which Canada shares with the United States and the United Kingdom in relation to the special arrangements to which we are a party. The Combined Policy Committee is now considering a United Kingdom proposal to continue tripartite cooperation under the Quebec Agreement, subject to certain adaptations and additions. (Under Article 102 only agreements entered into after the United Nations Charter comes into force are subject to the provision for registration with the United Nations.) The United States representative on the Combined Policy Committee has, however, opposed the United Kingdom proposal on the ground that it would merely be a legal subterfuge, as it would, in fact, constitute a new agreement. The United States Government have further raised the question whether any new agreement is required and have emphasized the undesirability of taking any action which would seem to prejudice the United Nations Atomic Commission.

A further complication has arisen between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments in connection with the exchange of information. The United Kingdom Government take the view that the agreement signed on November 16th last between the President of the United States and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada providing for the continuance in the post-war period of full and effective cooperation involves an obligation on the United States to give the United Kingdom industrial information necessary for the construction of plants in the United Kingdom. The United States Government are inclined to take the attitude that the agreement did not involve the exchange of industrial know-how. This question is evidently one of crucial importance, and it has been taken up in a direct communication from Mr. Attlee to President Truman. Meanwhile, the United Kingdom Prime Minister has asked for Mr. King's support in this matter.

In addition to their difficulties over the exchange of information, the United Kingdom and the United States Governments are in disagreement over the allocation of supplies of raw material. The United Kingdom Government consider that the United States proposals on this subject give them virtually no assurance of receiving any of the required material. They have put up an alternative proposal to the effect that the raw material supplies received should be divided on a 50-50 basis between the United States, on the one hand, and the United Kingdom and Canada on the other.

Canada's position as a supplier is not directly affected in these negotiations as the material in question is produced outside Canada. The total Canadian output of uranium is covered by a contract with the United States Army, terminable in 1947.

Canada's relationship to the Combined Policy Committee and even more to the Combined Development Trust has all along been somewhat peculiar. Our membership in the Combined Policy Committee seems never to have been in doubt, and Mr. Howe was in fact appointed a member under the Quebec Agreement, but doubt has all along existed as to whether Mr. Bateman (the Canadian representative) was a full member of the Trust. There has, moreover, been considerable reluctance on the part of Canada to become a full member of the Combined Development Trust. The Canadian Government have not taken objection to the powers of the Trust to allocate Canadian uranium, but they have felt that these powers should be dependent on an undertaking that the Trust should purchase any Canadian uranium that was not sold direct either to the United States or the United Kingdom Governments. Moreover, the Canadian Government have been anxious to protect the full freedom of Canada to operate Eldorado Mine in such a manner as the Canadian Government may think suitable and not to have the operation of the mine brought under the direct control of the Trust.

These preoccupations were, however, apparently satisfactorily covered by re-drafts of the agreement between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada with respect to the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust, and on the basis of these re-drafts the Canadian Government decided on January 30th, 1946, that the draft agreements represented a satisfactory basis for governing Canada's relationships with the United States and the United Kingdom in these matters, and the Cabinet approved Canadian participation in the Committee and the Trust on that basis.

It will be seen that Canada's relationship to the problem of international control of atomic energy is a complex one. It is suggested that the Advisory Panel might begin its work by undertaking further study of certain aspects of the question with a view to clarification of the issues involved. The following are some of the questions which it seems necessary to study. Others will, no doubt, suggest themselves.

(1) Should the Canadian Government adopt as the principles to guide its long-term policy in this field proposals along the lines of those put forward in the report of the State Department Board of Consultants?

(2) When the Atomic Energy Commission is set up, will Canada support the view which will probably be advanced by the United Kingdom and the United States that the exchange of basic information should be the first stage in the Commission's work?

(3) Should Canada support or oppose in the Combined Policy Committee the conclusion of new Agreements with regard to the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust?

(4) On the grounds that such arrangements may delay the coming into force of a genuinely international system of control of raw materials, should Canada withdraw from membership on the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust?

(5) Should Canada support the United Kingdom (as requested by Mr. Attlee) in its case for obtaining from the United States further information on the know-how of industrial production?

Dear Mr. Acheson,

You will recall that at the last meeting of the Combined Policy Committee it was decided to ask for clarification of the interpretation of the Agreement of November 16th between the President, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Prime Minister of Canada concerning "full and effective co-operation in the field of atomic energy".

In the Ambassador's absence in Canada, I am instructed to say that Mr. Mackenzie King's understanding of the Agreement in this respect is indicated by the fact that the Canadian authorities, both during the war and in the postwar period, have provided the United States authorities with full information on all Canadian activities in this field. In particular, the United States authorities have had access to full information as to developments at Chalk River. In fact, a United States official is stationed there permanently and is in a position to secure a complete picture of the work going forward in the plant.

Yours very sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you that the United States Government being aware of the interest which Canada, as a nation having membership in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, has in the development and future significance of the atomic bomb, cordially extends an invitation to the Canadian Government to designate two observers to witness the atomic bomb tests (Operation Crossroads), which will be conducted in July and August on Bikini Atoll, Marshall's Group, subject to prior approval by the United States Congress of the expending of naval ships for this purpose. The test in its entirety is an undertaking of the United States Government and not a combined or international operation.

Believing that the press should be represented at the tests, the United States Government wishes to invite the designation by the Canadian Government of one member of the press of Canada to attend as an additional observer.

The observers will be transported to the scene of the tests aboard a United States naval vessel leaving San Francisco on June 12. Information of general interest to prospective observers will be found in a memorandum† attached hereto.

The United States Government hopes that the Canadian Government will find it possible to accept this invitation. If so, I should appreciate being informed at your earliest convenience the names of the two governmental observers and one press observer, together with information regarding the mode of travel to the United States, the date and port of arrival and an indication whether reservations will be desired on the special train leaving Washington for San Francisco on June 8.

Accept etc.

THE INTERNATIONAL ASPECTS OF ATOMIC ENERGY

In accordance with the decision of the Cabinet of March 27th, 1946, an Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy has now been constituted with appropriate representatives from the Departments of Reconstruction and Supply, External Affairs, National Defence, and the National Research Council. Two meetings have already been held in which the following persons have participated: Mr. Bateman (Department of Reconstruction and Supply), Mr. Pearson, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Wrong and Mr. Ritchie (Department of External Affairs), Dr. C. J. Mackenzie (National Research Council), Dr. O. M. Solandt (Department of National Defence), General A. G. L. McNaughton (Canadian representative, United Nations Atomic Energy Commission). Mr. A. D. P. Heeney was convenor of the meetings and Mr. G. Ignatieff (Department of External Affairs) acted as secretary.

The Advisory Panel now submit to the Cabinet for approval the attached memorandum containing the Panel's initial proposals concerning Canadian policy with regard to the international aspects of atomic energy.

MEMORANDUM ON THE INTERNATIONAL ASPECTS OF ATOMIC ENERGY

UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

A copy of the Resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations setting up the Atomic Energy Commission is attached (Annex A).† The date of the first meeting of the Commission is still unsettled. There appear to be two general explanations for the delay in setting up the Commission. In the first place, the drop in confidence in relations with the Soviet Union makes the present juncture unfavourable for embarking upon this new experiment in international cooperation. In the second place, the United States Government have not reached a decision as to their own policy in the Atomic Energy Commission. Meanwhile, however, representatives on the Commission have been appointed by all twelve member States.

The Canadian delegation to the General Assembly in London last January raised informally with United Kingdom and United States officials the unique and somewhat anomalous position of Canada as the only member of the Atomic Energy Commission which is not a member of the Security Council. This position would mean that Canada was excluded from consideration in the Security Council of matters arising out of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. Those with whom the matter was discussed indicated that their Governments would be ready to support the participation of Canada, under Article 31 of the Charter, in meetings of the Security Council when the subject of atomic energy is before the Council. Unless, therefore, unexpected opposition should arise on the part of the Soviet Union (which did not oppose Canada's inclusion in the Atomic Energy Commission), Canada should be able to participate in discussions having to do with atomic energy in the Security Council. It will be recalled, however, that under the terms of Article 31 Canada would not have the right to vote.

So far we have been able to obtain only a limited indication of the policies which the United Kingdom and the United States may be expected to advocate in the first sessions of the Commission. Both countries seem likely to favour a cautious approach to the issues involved. The United States authorities have indicated informally that in their view the first step might be for the Commission to concern itself with the exchange of basic scientific information and of scientists. This would be in accordance with paragraph 5 (a) of the terms of reference of the Commission. The United Kingdom Government favour the same procedure and take the view that "as the prospects of increased Russian cooperation have not improved since these questions were discussed in Washington last year, the whole subject must be treated with caution". (Memorandum forwarded to the Department of External Affairs by the High Commission for the United Kingdom on March 28th.) †

RECOMMENDATION 1—The Advisory Panel recommend that the Canadian representative on the Atomic Energy Commission should support the view which will probably be advanced by the United Kingdom and the United States that the exchange of basic scientific information and of scientists should constitute the first stage in the Commission's work.

LONG-TERM POLICY WITH REGARD TO THE INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

The Advisory Panel have had before it the report of the Board of Consultants of the United States State Department on the international control of atomic energy (the Lilienthal report). This report, of which a brief summary prepared by one of the members of the Board is attached as Annex B, † rejects the concept of outlawing atomic energy and enforcing such a prohibition by inspection, and proposes instead the creation of an international agency to conduct all intrinsically "dangerous" operations in the nuclear field, with individual nations and their citizens free to conduct under licence and a minimum of inspection all "non-dangerous" operations. It is proposed that an international agency, referred to as the Atomic Development Authority, should function under the United Nations. It would be empowered to own and lease property, and to carry on mining, manufacturing, research, licensing, inspecting, selling or any other necessary operation.

The plan is based upon the belief, backed by authoritative scientific opinion, that operations in the field of atomic energy can be divided into those which are "safe" and "dangerous", and that U 235 and plutonium can be denatured so as not to lend themselves to the making of atomic explosives, but can still be used with no essential loss of effectiveness for the peaceful applications of atomic energy. It is possible both in the case of U 235 and plutonium to remove the denaturant but to do so would require rather complex installations and scientific and engineering skill of an appreciable order. It should be added that in a supplementary report issued by a group of outstanding scientists under Major General L. R. Groves, acting in consultation with the State Department, it is pointed out that

For the various atomic explosives the denaturant has a different effect on the explosive properties of the materials. In some cases denaturing will not completely preclude making atomic weapons, but will reduce their effectiveness by a large factor. The effect of the denaturant is also different in the peaceful application of the materials. Further technical information will be required, as will also a much more complete experience of the peacetime uses of atomic energy and its economics, before precise estimates of the value of denaturing can be formulated. But it seems to us most probable that within the framework of the proposals advanced in the State Department report denaturing will play a helpful part.

The proposals contained in this report have not yet been adopted by the United States Government as the basis for their policy in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. Moreover, the report itself makes it very clear that these are long-term proposals. So far as immediate United States policy in the Atomic Energy Commission is concerned, the report advocates that a limited category of information should be divulged in the early meetings of the Commission, but that this information should be "of a theoretical and descriptive nature and have in large part to do with the constructive applications of atomic energy. In our opinion they are largely qualitative and they involve almost nothing of know-how".

RECOMMENDATION 2—The Advisory Panel were impressed with the Lilienthal report as the most constructive and imaginative approach yet made towards the long-term problems of the international control of atomic energy. It is recommended that if the United States Government were to put forward in the Atomic Energy Commission the Lilienthal report as a basis of discussion this should have the support of the Canadian representative.

RELATIONSHIP OF CANADA TO THE COMBINED POLICY COMMITTEE AND THE COMBINED DEVELOPMENT TRUST

A further aspect of Canada's relationship to the problem of atomic energy arises from our participation with the United States and the United Kingdom in the Combined Policy Committee set up under the Quebec Agreement. The tripartite declaration issued at Washington last November made it clear that the wartime cooperation between the three Governments has not been terminated. The question arises of reconciling this special relationship with the obligations assumed by the three Governments under the Charter of the United Nations. The proposal to enter into new Agreements regulating the position of the three parties to the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust raises a special problem, because all Members of the United Nations are committed under Article 102 of the Charter to register all agreements with the United Nations Secretariat for publication. The Combined Policy Committee is now considering a United Kingdom draft designed to continue tripartite cooperation under the Quebec Agreement, subject to certain adaptations and additions. The United States Government are, however, reluctant to conclude new Agreements at this time. This situation raises several questions from the Canadian point of view.

- (a) The relationship of the Combined Policy Committee and Combined Development Trust to the United Nations.

RECOMMENDATION 3—It was the view of the Panel that the present tripartite arrangements do not conflict with obligations assumed under the United Nations and would not prejudice progress towards international control under the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

- (b) Canadian membership on the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust.

On January 30th, 1946, the Cabinet decided that the draft Agreements between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada with respect to the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust would represent a satisfactory basis for governing Canada's relationships with the United States and the United Kingdom in these matters. Since that date these draft Agreements have been at any rate temporarily put on one side, and as stated above, the Combined Policy Committee is now considering a new United Kingdom draft.

RECOMMENDATION 4—It was the view of the Panel that Canada should not seek to withdraw from membership in the Committee and the Trust and should take no action which would have the effect of breaking up the present tripartite arrangements. While Canada should not actively advocate the conclusion of new Agreements, there would be no objection to a revision of the arrangements provided its terms did not prejudice Canadian interests. It was noted that an important Canadian interest related to raw material. (Canada's supply position is outlined under the heading below "Allocation of Raw Material".) Furthermore, Canada has a very important interest on general political grounds in the maintenance of United States and United Kingdom cooperation in this field until an international system of control has been established.

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

A further complication has arisen between the United Kingdom and the United States in connection with the exchange of information. The United Kingdom Government take the view that the secret Agreement signed on November 16th last (Annex C) † between the President of the United States and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada, providing for the continuance of full and effective cooperation, involves an obligation on the United States to give the United Kingdom industrial information necessary for the construction of plants in the United Kingdom. The United States Government take the attitude that the Agreement does not involve the exchange of industrial know-how. This question is evidently one of considerable significance. It is being dealt with by direct communication between the heads of the three Governments.

The Combined Policy Committee have been informed that the Canadian understanding of the Agreement is indicated by the fact that we have both during the war and in the post-war period provided the United States authorities with full information on all Canadian activities in the field. In particular, they have access to full information as to developments at Chalk River. In fact, a United States official is stationed there permanently and is in a position to secure a complete picture of the work going forward in the plant.

ALLOCATION OF RAW MATERIAL

In addition to their difficulties over the exchange of information, the United Kingdom and the United States Governments are in disagreement over the allocation of supplies of raw material. The United Kingdom Government consider that United States proposals on this subject give them virtually no assurance of receiving any of the required material. They have made an alternative proposal to the effect that the raw material supplies received should be divided on a 50-50 basis between the United States, on the one hand, and the United Kingdom and Canada, on the other.

Canada's position as a supplier is not directly affected in these negotiations as the material in question is produced outside Canada. In this connection, the total output of Eldorado is covered by a contract with the United States Army which calls for the delivery of a specified number of tons by 1947. The contract comes to an end when this delivery is effected, at which time the Canadian Government will be free, if it so desires, to make other arrangements. Canadian production of uranium oxide is less than 300 tons per annum. Canada's production, while it makes a useful contribution towards meeting total United States requirements, represents a comparatively modest percentage of the total demand of the United States and the United Kingdom. The United States requirements are at present estimated at 250 tons per month, in addition to supplies being received from Canada, together with 300 tons spot delivery.

It is difficult to obtain a clear and authoritative picture of the world production situation. It is estimated that the Belgian Congo might be expected to produce from 3,300 tons to 4,000 tons of uranium oxide in 1946, but this source may be exhausted, or much depleted, in the near future. There are also possibilities of important deposits being developed in South Africa in the future which may substantially change the supply position in favour of the United Kingdom. It is also reported that there are deposits of the raw material in South Australia, but no estimate is as yet forthcoming as to possible production figures.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE ON THE UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The Advisory Panel has agreed that the approval of the Government should be sought for the views expressed in the above memorandum. It is proposed to prepare draft instructions to General McNaughton, Canadian representative on the Atomic Energy Commission, on the basis of the views expressed in this memorandum if these views receive the approval of the Cabinet.

The following questions were considered at the meeting of the Cabinet held May 15th, 1946:

Control of atomic energy in Canada.

The latest revision of the draft bill for domestic control was submitted. On the previous day, the Cabinet had approved the terms of a resolution which now appears on the Order Paper.

Mr. Howe, in recommending approval in principle of the bill submitted, observed that appropriate amendments would have to be made so as to enable the operation of the Eldorado Mine and the Chalk River project to be carried on under the new Board. He also pointed out that certain other minor amendments would probably be required.

The Cabinet, after discussion, approved in principle the draft bill as submitted and agreed that it be printed for distribution subject to the amendments suggested by Mr. Howe.

Mr. Ignatieff is now engaged in settling with Justice and Reconstruction and Supply the terms of the revisions to be made. It is hoped that printing can go forward early next week.

The memorandum prepared under the auspices of the Advisory Panel was submitted and discussed.

The Cabinet approved the recommendations contained in the memorandum and agreed that instructions be prepared accordingly for the Canadian representative on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

Dear Mr. Howe,

In connection with the meeting of the U.N. Atomic Committee which starts on the 14th, there appears to be some differences of opinion as to the order of the topics to be taken up. The original proposal was that the Committee would begin with the consideration of ways and means of exchanging basic scientific information. I understand, however, that Baruch, the U.S. representative, might favour taking up first the question of a world survey of resources and raw materials. My personal opinion is that to do so would be a mistake. We might find that the U.S., the U.K. and Canada, who have control of most of the raw materials and who have most of the information regarding world resources, might be committed to give up a great deal of valuable information without getting very much in return, and then find that their attitude was not reciprocated by other countries. It would seem to me wise to deal first with the ways and means of exchanging basic scientific information and just what this would involve. This would serve as a test to see the extent to which other countries are willing to cooperate.

I do not know the extent to which you may have discussed this with General McNaughton but I thought I should give you my personal views.

Yours sincerely,

G. C. BATEMAN

I attach a draft of provisional instructions for the Canadian representative on the Atomic Energy Commission. This draft has been prepared by myself in consultation with Mr. Ritchie, and covers the main issues of substance which, according to our files, are likely to come before the Commission. I am preparing a separate note† on the provisional Agenda and our attitude on procedural matters.

In view of the meeting which has been arranged to take place in Mr. Howe's office on Tuesday, June 11th, to enable Mr. Howe and Mr. St. Laurent to discuss briefly the attitude of General McNaughton in the Commission, I presume that they would wish to see the draft of provisional instructions prior to the meeting. I have, therefore, prepared covering notes† for your signature if you approve the attached draft.<sup>1</sup>

DRAFT

PROVISIONAL INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE ON THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

INTRODUCTION

The policies pursued by Canada as a member of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission will necessarily be conditioned by our close association with the United States and United Kingdom Governments in atomic energy matters. The United States will call the tune in the Atomic Energy Commission. As the only possessor of atomic weapons, as the leader in the construction of production plants, and as the most powerful industrial nation in the world it is the policy pursued by the United States which will in the end be decisive. It is not suggested that we should slavishly follow United States policies. It is to be hoped that we may have constructive suggestions to make of our own, but we shall not wish to go further or faster than the United States and United Kingdom Governments are preparing to go in advocating international control.

2. So far we have been able to obtain only a limited indication of the policies which the United Kingdom and the United States may be expected to advocate in the first sessions of the Commission. Both countries seem likely to favour a cautious approach to the issues involved. The United States authorities have indicated informally that in their view the first step might be for the Commission to concern itself with the exchange of basic scientific information and of scientists. This would be in accordance with paragraph

5(a) of the terms of reference of the Commission. The United Kingdom Government favour a similar procedure and take the view that "as the prospects of increased Russian cooperation have not improved since these questions were discussed in Washington last year, the whole subject must be treated with caution". (Memorandum forwarded to the Department of External Affairs by the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom on March 28th).†

3. If the principle of rotating chairmanship is accepted, the first Chairman of the Commission may well be Dr. Evatt. This gives an added importance to the Australian attitude. It is impossible to forecast the attitude which Dr. Evatt will adopt. There has been a tendency, however, for the Australian representative on the Security Council, sometimes in association with his French colleague, to assume a middle position in disputes between the Slav members of the Council and the Anglo-Saxon powers. Australia has appeared to wish to be a mediator and to read lessons in good conduct to both parties. The results of this Australian attitude have not been happy. Australia has found herself on several occasions in the awkward position of proposing a compromise formula which in effect gave the Soviet and Polish representatives just what they wanted and enabled the wavering nations (France, Egypt, and China, in particular) to take refuge in a compromise which blurred the issue without, as it proved, bringing the question under discussion any nearer to a real solution. This was particularly evident during the discussions on Iran. The possibility is not to be excluded that Dr. Evatt will feel that it is his mission to bring the Russians together with the Americans and British over the subject of atomic energy. Such an initiative would be resented by the British and Americans as an irresponsible piece of meddling. It will be made use of by the Russians for their own purposes.

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF THE COMMISSION

4. The main task of the Commission at its first meeting will be to consider the resolution of the General Assembly of January 6th (see appendix)† and any reports and resolutions arising from this consideration. The terms of reference of the Commission are set out in four paragraphs of the Resolution as follows:

(a) For extending between all nations the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends;

(b) For control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes;

(c) For the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction;

(d) For effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions.

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

5. The first paragraph of the terms of reference deals with the exchange of basic scientific information. From information received from the United States and United Kingdom Governments it is to be assumed that one of the first substantive questions which will be considered by the Commission will be the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends. Canada as one of the three parties to the Washington Declaration has declared its willingness "as a first contribution to proceed with the exchange of fundamental scientific information; and the interchange of scientists and scientific literature for peaceful ends with any nation that will fully reciprocate".

6. It is not easy to define precisely the term "basic scientific information", and to decide where information relating to basic research ends and information about the operation of plant begins. Basic research into nuclear physics, however, involves a large amount of precise commercial data. Information of this kind is available to the three Governments which are parties to the Washington declaration including Canada, but especially to the United States. The Canadian representative in regard to this problem should be guided by the terms of the Washington declaration which make it clear that the exchange of information would be conditional on reciprocity on the part of the other nations in each case.

7. Exchange of printed information, however, may be of less use than the interchange of scientists working in this field. Moreover, agreement to exchange of scientists will provide a more convincing proof of the willingness to reciprocate. Canada as a country with well-developed laboratories and research facilities, has much to offer in this field. The question arises as to whether the research establishment at Chalk River may be regarded for this purpose as a research establishment to which access may be given to foreign scientists, if agreement is reached on the interchange of scientists. The Canadian representative in the discussion of this question should look for evidence of a willingness on the part of other countries to reciprocate. In any case he will not, of course, take the initiative in offering any facilities in this regard without further instruction from the Government, and until the position of the United States and United Kingdom representatives is clarified in this regard.

8. The exchange of information relating to atomic energy may include exchanges of information about geological deposits of uranium and other substances which may be used for the release of atomic energy. The Canadian position as a source of uranium will need to be carefully safeguarded. It will be recalled that at the present moment Canada's output of uranium is entirely committed to the United States Government by contract, and no information on materials should be disclosed without the prior agreement of that Government.

9. With regard to the general principle of exchange of information the Canadian representative should be guided by the recommendation of the Panel, concurred in by the Cabinet, that he should support the view which will probably be advanced by the United Kingdom and the United States that the exchange of basic scientific information and of scientists should constitute the first stage in the Commission's work.

INTERNATIONAL CONTROL

10. In addition to the exchange of information, the three remaining terms of reference deal with the international control of atomic energy and the safeguards necessary to ensure that it should be effective. The resolution also declares that the work of the Commission should proceed by separate stages, the successful completion of each of which will develop the necessary confidence of the world before the next stage is undertaken.

The necessity of proceeding in stages towards international control has been recognized not only in the Washington declaration but by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom. The Lilienthal report clearly envisages a gradual transition through negotiations in the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations towards an international Atomic Development Authority.

11. Meanwhile Canada, as well as the United States and United Kingdom, in view of its special position in relation to materials and special knowledge with regard to atomic energy and plant, has taken steps to establish and maintain conditions through domestic legislation to ensure the effective carrying out of any recommendations that may be made for the International control of atomic energy by the Commission. The Canadian representative should bear in mind the recommendation of the Advisory Panel, concurred in by the Cabinet, to the effect that the Panel were impressed with the Lilienthal report as being the most constructive and imaginative approach yet made towards the long-term policy with regard to international control of atomic energy. If the United States representative were to put forward the Lilienthal report as a basis of discussion in the Commission, this proposal should have the support of the Canadian representative.

12. Should any discussion, however, develop in the Commission of the form which the world atomic authority might take, the political implications of the problem should be borne in mind, particularly the possible effect of a world monopoly on the position of secondary powers, particularly if the Big Powers maintain the right of veto on security matters, and if they concentrate the location of atomic piles in their own respective territories. The general position should, however, be maintained that Canada desires the international control of atomic energy and that the Authority be set up for this purpose under the United Nations.

THE RELATION OF THE COMMISSION TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

13. The following points are of importance in this connection:

(a) The recommendations of the Atomic Energy Commission are to be implemented by the member states on the recommendation of the Security Council.

Thus any action arising out of the decision of the Commission depends in the first instance on their adoption by the Security Council and agreement in the Security Council to forward the recommendations of the Commission to member states. Such a decision is, of course, subject to the veto of each one of the five permanent members on the Security Council.

(b) The Atomic Energy Commission reports and makes recommendations to the Security Council and only to the Security Council. Reports, therefore, to other organs of the United Nations, such as the Assembly, are to be forwarded only at the discretion of the Security Council.

(c) The Security Council should issue directions to the Commission in matters affecting security. On these matters the Commission shall be accountable for its work to the Security Council. As it is difficult to envisage any important developments in the work of the Atomic Energy Commission which will not have a security aspect, the Security Council will have considerable power to exercise direction and control over the work of the Commission. It remains to be seen how in practice the Council will exercise these powers.

RELATIONSHIP OF CANADA TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

14. Canada as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission but not of the Security Council is in a somewhat anomalous position which would mean that we were excluded from considering in the Security Council matters arising out of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. Accordingly, the Canadian delegation to the General Assembly in London last January raised this question informally with United Kingdom and United States officials. Those with whom the matter was discussed indicated that their Governments would be ready to support the participation of Canada under Article 31 of the Charter in meetings of the Security Council when the subject of atomic energy was before the Council.

15. Unless, therefore, unexpected opposition should arise on the part of the Soviet Union, which did not oppose Canada's inclusion in the Atomic Energy Commission, it would seem that Canada will be able to participate in discussions having particularly to do with atomic energy in the Security Council. (It will be recalled that under the terms of Article 31 Canada would not have the right to vote). In any case Canada's participation in the Security Council when discussions having to do with atomic energy are on the agenda should be pressed by the representative, particularly through consultation with the United States and United Kingdom delegations.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE REPORTS OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

16. As already stated the Commission cannot of itself make recommendations to member governments, but on the contrary has to act through the Security Council. The Commission, therefore, would not be in a position to inaugurate a system of international control of atomic energy.

17. The question, therefore, arises how the recommendations of the Commission as approved by the Security Council are to be implemented in practice. Article 24 of the Charter gives the Security Council primary authority for the maintenance of international peace and security and under article 25 the members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out decisions of the Security Council. The San Francisco Conference, however, decided that the extent of the obligations assumed by the members under Article 25 was to be determined by reference to the specific obligations assumed by Members in other parts of the Charter. The Charter does not give the Security Council power to enforce the disarmament of Member states. The Security Council, therefore, does not appear to possess authority under the Charter to set up and enforce a system of international control of atomic energy, or to enforce the abolition of atomic weapons from national armaments.

18. It would appear, therefore, that action of the Security Council in implementing recommendations of the Atomic Energy Commission is limited to making recommendations to Member states. These recommendations might take different forms according to whether the recommendations of the Commission required several or joint action by member states for their implementation. In the former case, if the Atomic Energy Commission recommended a course requiring action by individual states, the Security Council could recommend to member states the implementation of the Security Council's recommendations. In the latter case, if joint action were required, the Security Council might recommend a multilateral convention for the signature of the Member states, such as, for example, the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons.

19. The representative should, in the course of the discussions in the Commission, seek to clarify the means which it is envisaged will be adopted to implement the reports and the recommendations of the Commission, and ensure that, as indicated above, Canada should participate in the discussions of the Security Council when that body is concerned with taking action to implement the reports or recommendations of the Commission.

PUBLICATION OF REPORTS OF THE COMMISSION

20. Under the terms of the Assembly resolution of the Atomic Energy Commission, the reports of the Commission shall be made public unless the Security Council, in the interests of peace and security, otherwise directs. Thus the Security Council may direct that publication should not take place. Publication, failing such direction, presumably would be automatic. The question may arise, however, whether the individual veto of the permanent members of the Security Council could block the publication of the reports of the Commission. It would seem that it could not—since the motion, under the wording of the Assembly resolution, should be that publication should not take place. If the question arises, the Canadian representative should support this construction, which was accepted as correct by representatives of the United States and United Kingdom in private discussion during the General Assembly last January.

21. This point is, of course, related to the questions considered above under the head "Relationship of Canada to the Security Council", and that immediately following "Implementation of the Reports of the Atomic Energy Commission". Here again the representative should seek to clarify the situation and press for Canada's participation in the Security Council when the question of the publication or transmission of reports of the Commission to member Governments is under discussion.

CONCLUSION

22. These instructions are necessarily provisional. As it is not possible at this stage to draw up instructions in detail and with precision, the foregoing is merely an outline of the general principles which will guide the Canadian representative at the first meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations. It is naturally understood that the representative will not take any step to commit the Canadian Government on any issue of importance without further reference to the Government.

23. It is hoped that in the light of the informal discussions with United Kingdom and United States officials before the opening of the first meeting of the Commission, it will be possible to concert the general line of approach of the Canadian representative with that of the United States and United Kingdom representatives.

UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION; INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE

At the meeting of the Cabinet on June 10th, the Secretary reported that members of the Advisory Panel and the Canadian delegation to the forthcoming meeting of the Commission at New York had, the previous day, met with the Acting Prime Minister, the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply for the purpose of considering the instructions to be given to General McNaughton.

Draft provisional instructions, prepared by External Affairs on the basis of the document on Canadian policy had received Cabinet approval on May 16th, subject to concurrence of the Cabinet.

Informal conversations were to take place with U.K. and U.S. representatives before the opening of the first meeting of the Commission. It was hoped that it would be possible to concert the general line of approach of the representatives of the three countries.

The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the provisional instructions given to General McNaughton with respect to the attendance of the Canadian delegation at the first meeting of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.<sup>1</sup>

At the General Assembly in London we consulted the U.S. and U.K. delegations informally over the position in which we should be placed when the Security Council was considering matters relating to the work of the Atomic Commission. Those whom we consulted readily agreed that Canada should be invited to participate in any discussions of this sort in accordance with Article 31 of the Charter. On the U.K. side I spoke to Cadogan among others. He saw the point readily and answered that he felt sure that the U.K. representative on the Security Council would propose the admission of Canada if we so desired. On the U.S. side we spoke to several members of the delegation, and Achilles told us that the delegation were in agreement with our suggestion and that a report to that effect was being sent to the State Department. We had expressed the view to both delegations that it would be appropriate for the U.S. delegation to take the initiative.

It now looks as though the first occasion on which matters relating to the Atomic Commission would come before the Security Council will be the approval of the Commission's rules of procedure. Under the resolution establishing the Atomic Commission it is laid down that the Security Council shall approve these rules. At present a committee of the Atomic Commission is working on the draft rules and may report very soon, possibly without the full concurrence of the Soviet representative.

We may, therefore, be faced with a situation in which the Security Council has before it rules of procedure approved by a majority of the Atomic Commission, and there is a possibility that they will lead to considerable debate in the Council and even the application of a veto by the Soviet member. Should we take steps now to remind the British and U.S. authorities of their agreement that Canada ought to be represented at such a discussion? Our presence at it would be likely to make no difference to the result but it would serve to establish at the first opportunity our right to participate as a member whose interests are especially affected in all actions of the Security Council relating to the Atomic Commission. I am inclined to think that we should not allow the occasion to pass without seeking to be represented even though the debate in the Council turns out to be a pure formality.

TOP SECRET. I talked yesterday in New York with General McNaughton and Ignatieff regarding the impasse which seems to be developing in the Atomic Energy Commission, as the United States and U.S.S.R. confront each other with their own plans and procedures, which they show no disposition to alter or compromise.<sup>1</sup> It appears that Baruch is almost as inflexible as Gromyko himself, and there is not any evidence that the State Department has much influence over him and his associates. I made a suggestion to General McNaughton which may possibly be of some value in breaking through the developing jam. Would it be possible to accept at once the U.S.S.R. proposal to outlaw the use of atomic energy for destructive purposes, and even sign a Convention immediately for that purpose, pending the working out of the more far-reaching measures to control, inspection, etc., embodied in the United States plan? This would meet the Russians up to a point and certainly could do no harm, though, of course, without further measures outlawry would be of no value. The second Russian proposal, the immediate destruction of existing atomic weapons, could not of course be accepted in the same way, but it could be pointed out to the Russians that once atomic warfare was outlawed they had, on the basis of their own argument, nothing to fear and that the situation would be the same as the prohibition of gas warfare while retaining gas weapons. As the Russians themselves do not include international sanctions in their own plan, but seem to rely on good faith and national punishment, they could not logically argue that the above proposal for prohibition without immediate destruction of bombs was valueless. If it were put forward and accepted, it would make it

Mr. Pearson in his message WA-2613 of June 27th and General McNaughton in his Atom No. 25 of June 26th† deal with the suggestion that the proposal made by the U.S.S.R. representative on the Atomic Energy Commission to outlaw the use of atomic energy for destructive purposes should be taken up at once. It would appear from General McNaughton's message that Dr. Evatt may be actively exploring this suggestion with some other delegations. Mr. Pearson endorsed the proposal, but I must confess to grave doubts about its utility.

Presumably a convention on the lines suggested would be a very short document of only two or three main articles. The most important article would be to the effect that the contracting parties thereby renounced the employment for military purposes of bombs and other weapons making use of atomic fission. There would have to be some safeguarding clause which at the least would permit the use of atomic weapons against a state violating the prohibition. Otherwise the United States would be placed in the position of breaking a pledge if it were to be first attacked with atomic bombs and retaliated in kind. Such an agreement would leave the initiative in using atomic bombs to a violator of the treaty and would deprive the United States of most of the influence of the possession of the atomic bomb as a deterrent. Signature would doubtless result in a fairly strong demand for the destruction of the existing stock of bombs.

What advantages are there? All I can see is an effort to find for purposes of immediate negotiation some slight compromise with the position taken by the Russians. From the point of view of American security the Russian proposals reverse the American order of priority. Should we support any plan embodying such a reversal? I am pretty certain that we should not do so and

Ottawa, July 5, 1946

Dear Tommy [Stone],

I have received your letter of July 1st† about your surprising discussion with Dean Acheson on atomic matters. The delegation in New York is already aware that Baruch is in a position independent of the State Department and I think that we need not give them any confirmation of this based on your letter.

In the Department we had already taken the view that it would be a mistake to "outlaw" atomic warfare at once and we had some discussion of this with Mike<sup>2</sup> when he was in Ottawa last week. The only possible advantage of any substance that I can see would be a temporary one in meeting the Russians on this point. It might make it easier to carry forward the negotiations for effective international control. The history, however, of recent negotiations with the Russians does not lead me to give much weight to an argument of this sort.

In addition to Dean's objections that such a step now would grossly deceive the public, we see here a substantial number of other difficulties. For instance if atomic war were outlawed by a sort of single clause renunciation on the model of the Kellogg Treaty, we would I think provide a field for vigorous propaganda that the U.S. should not only destroy its stock of bombs and stop making them but also disclose the processes for the production of plutonium on a substantial scale. Such propaganda would appeal not only to Communists and fellow travellers but to a large public as well. It would, therefore, be likely to precipitate an intense domestic controversy in the United States which would deflect attention from the real work in hand. I gather, in any event, that Baruch is inflexible on this point.

The revelation of the state of affairs in the State Department is certainly distressing and confusing. The Baruch proposals, however, are certainly not out of line with those which are associated with Dean's own name, and the present isolation of the State Department in atomic matters may not matter much.

ATOM No. 45. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins: Following is the text of the organization of Committees of the Atomic Energy Commission, which I proposed to Dr. Evatt in response to his request, as indicated in paragraph 4 of my Atom No. 41,† Begins:

The Canadian delegation propose the following five Committees; each Committee to have power to establish sub-Committees as may be deemed necessary:

1. A Committee of the Whole, to review progress and define further tasks.

2. A Steering Committee for the purpose of coordinating reports and studies made by other Committees and sub-Committees; and to resolve any particular problems which may be referred to it.

3. A Constitutional Committee, to prepare recommendations for a draft International Agreement establishing an International Authority "for control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes". In particular, the Committee would need to examine the following:

(a) Rights and obligations of signatory States in relation to the Authority.

(b) The relation of the Authority to the United Nations and its organs (the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, the International Court of Justice, and the Secretariat).

(c) The relation of the Authority to non-signatory States, whether members of the United Nations or not.

(d) The relation of the Authority to National Atomic Energy Control Bodies.

(e) Provisions "for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction".

(f) Transitional provisions.

(g) Provisions for signature, ratification and amendment.

4. A Committee on Control and Development, with terms of reference to prepare recommendations relating to:

(a) A survey of world sources of fissionable materials.

(b) The measures of control (by inspection, management and license, or ownership) which may be required, and their methods of operation, with particular reference to:

(i) Raw materials;

(ii) Production of fissionable materials;

(iii) Manufacture of atomic weapons;

(iv) Research on military applications of atomic energy.

(c) The means of promoting the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, with particular reference to:

(i) "The exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends";

(ii) Exchange of scientists;

(iii) Research and development;

(iv) Supply of fissionable and radioactive materials for research and for medical and other beneficial applications;

(v) Public information.

5. A Committee on Enforcement, to prepare recommendations on:

(a) Responsibilities and powers of the International Authority.

(b) Procedures to investigate and determine infringements of the International Agreement.

(c) Penalties.

Ends. Message ends.

Dear Mr. President,

I am informed that Dr. Evatt, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, has requested that consideration of the Commission's Rules of Procedure be placed on the agenda of the Security Council for consideration at its meeting on July 10th.

In this connection I am authorized by my Government to state that Canada, as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission under the terms of the reso-

Dear Dr. Evatt,

I understand that at your request as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission the agenda of the meeting of the Security Council called for the 10th July, 1946, will include consideration of the Rules of Procedure of the Atomic Energy Commission.

This is a matter in which my Government considers that the interests of Canada are specially affected and consequently that Canada should participate in the discussion of this question in the Security Council, as provided for by Article 31 of the United Nations Charter.

I have written to the President of the Security Council in this sense, and I enclose a copy of this letter for your information.

It occurs to me that this is a matter which might appropriately be raised in the Security Council by the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and if you agree I should much appreciate your taking this action.<sup>4</sup>

New York, July 15, 1946

Dear Mr. Wrong,

In your letter of June 27† you gave us authority to seek participation under Article 31 of the Charter when matters relating to the Atomic Energy Commission come up for discussion.

We have already reported quite fully in our messages Atom 53 and 54 of July 10† and 55 of July 11† on the proceedings in the Security Council last Wednesday when Gromyko attempted to veto our admission, but was overruled by the Chairman.<sup>1</sup>

In this letter I should like to add a few comments of an interpretative nature and to suggest possible developments in the future in connection with this matter.

As you know, we decided to make formal application to participate, by sending a note to the President of the Security Council. At the same time we asked Evatt, as Chairman of the Commission, to raise the question in the Council, when recommending the rules of the Atomic Commission.

We had, of course, also been careful to obtain previous assurance from the United States and United Kingdom Delegations that we would have their support.

Evatt regarded our claim as an important one to establish, not only on its merits, but also in the interests of the position of the non-permanent members of the Security Council in relation to the permanent members.

He prepared his tactics very carefully, as I am told by Ralph Harry<sup>2</sup> with whom I discussed the whole episode. Evatt had apparently anticipated that Gromyko would try to exercise his veto, claiming that the admission of non-members under Article 31 of the Security Council, was a decision of substance requiring the unanimity of the permanent members. Evatt also felt sure that the President, Dr. Najera, would uphold the opposite view and would rule accordingly.

As it transpired, Evatt had planned his tactics admirably for the occasion. He put Gromyko in the position of either having to move that the decision of the President be over-ruled, for which he could not obtain the necessary majority, or to accept the President's ruling, which Gromyko did most reluctantly giving notice that he reserved the right to raise the question again.

It is important to note that Gromyko in claiming that the decision of the Security Council on the question of admitting Canada under Article 31, was one of substance, said that there were two questions of substance to be decided: (a) whether the interests of Canada were specially affected in relation to the rules of procedure of the Atomic Commission and, (b), supposing that they were affected, how long was the Security Council to consider the Canadian interest would remain affected by this question? Was it to be as long as Canada remained a member of the Atomic Commission?

We shall probably be faced with another attempt at veto by Gromyko, on the next occasion that we seek to participate in discussion of the Security Council, when the business of the Atomic Commission is on the agenda. It would seem likely that if this were to happen under the presidency of Dr. Van Kleffens, we may confidently expect a favourable ruling. It was Van Kleffens who seconded Evatt's motion for our admission and one of his staff spoke to me personally after the meeting and expressed pleasure that we had taken the initiative to uphold the interests of countries which can only be non-permanent members of the Security Council.

However, after Van Kleffens has completed his month's tenure of office as President, he will presumably be succeeded by the Polish Representative. The Polish Delegation in the Atomic Commission, I may say, has shown itself entirely subservient to the Soviet Representative and seems to vote or abstain from voting at Gromyko's bidding. I feel, therefore, rather concerned that the position might become reversed if our case comes before the Security Council under Polish presidency.

Gromyko's effort to exercise the veto against us has undoubtedly served to stimulate those who would question the irresponsible use of the veto by the Russians. Evatt's remarks at the meeting last Wednesday when replying to Dr. Najera's statement on the close of his tenure of office, were interpreted as indicating his intention to take up the whole issue in the Assembly.

Another aspect of the veto question, that which relates to the enforcement of any international measures of control which might be recommended by the Atomic Commission, will help to keep attention directed to the veto issue. I attach two copies of a memorandum† prepared by the Baruch Delegation, dated July 12, dealing with the relations between the Atomic Authority and the organs of the United Nations. This paper suggests that the Big Five should renounce their veto on atomic questions, and agree to treat the punishment of violators as a procedural matter, except in the case of serious offences, constituting a threat to the peace which would fall under the provisions of Chapter VII (including Article 51) of the Charter.

This paper will no doubt be placed on the agenda of the Legal Committee which was set up by the Working Committee last Friday.

I feel sure that discussions on this aspect of the veto will be carried over into the General Assembly when it meets the end of September. For this reason, I would suggest that whoever represents us in the discussion in the Legal Committee of the Atomic Commission should be carried over to our Delegation to the General Assembly.

I am also enclosing a clipping† from the New York Times of July 14, of an article by Hamilton which contains an interesting general comment on the veto question.

Yours sincerely,

G. IGNATIEFF

TELEGRAM CG-420

CONFIDENTIAL. ATOM No. 66. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: As we were pressed by Secretariat to furnish suggestions for a list of subjects falling within the scope of the functions of Committee No. 2 in order that a working schedule for that Committee could be prepared by the Secretariat, as indicated in paragraph 4 of our message Atom No. 62 dated July 17th,† this matter was given careful consideration and it was thought desirable to draft a topical outline with a sequence which would suggest a transition of thought from Soviet proposal to outlaw use of atomic energy in warfare to specific controls proposed by the United States and A.D.A. In this way, the emphasis would be placed on possible areas of agreement rather than fixed attitudes of disagreement which were revealed in Sub-Committee No. 1.

2. Before putting forth suggestions to Secretariat on this subject, it was thought desirable that matter should be discussed with United States delegation informally and with this in mind a brief paper was prepared in which it was suggested that discussion in the Committee should be so planned as to demonstrate to the Soviet representative that some measures of control are necessary to ensure the observance of international convention for outlawing of atomic weapons and prohibition of their manufacture which he has proposed.

3. The members of the United States delegation, consisting of Dr. Tolman, Davis, Gordon and Lindsay, warmly welcomed our suggestion as they had not yet submitted any topical outline themselves and frankly admitted their concern that a stalemate might result from discussion of question of whether or not the A.D.A. should be established as proposed by Mexican representative for the next meeting of Committee No. 2. They gladly fell in with our arguments and together we drafted a topical outline as follows:

1. Consideration of measures to prevent use of atomic energy in warfare.
  - (a) Formal measures, such as an International Agreement outlawing use of atomic weapons.
  - (b) Technical measures to insure observance of such an Agreement.
2. Consideration of measures to prevent production of atomic weapons.
  - (a) Formal measure, such as an International Agreement outlawing production of atomic weapons.
  - (b) Technical measure to insure observance of such an Agreement in relation to the following:
    - (1) Plants.
    - (2) Raw materials.
    - (3) Discrimination between dangerous and non-dangerous activities.
    - (4) Research.
3. Consideration of instruments to administer controls.
  - (a) Through existing United Nations Organs.
  - (b) Through special International Organization.
  - (c) Through national agencies.
4. Consideration of measures of enforcement.

4. It was agreed that this topical outline would be passed on, as a joint contribution, to Dr. Herring<sup>1</sup> and that if he agreed he would use it as a basis for the schedule which he has been charged by the Committee to prepare, filling in under each head references to proposals as contained in statements and observations made in the Commission, Working Committee and Sub-Committee No. 1.

5. United States delegation learned from Herring that, apart from Soviet delegation who had merely repeated their previous proposals, no other delegations had submitted proposals and Herring was glad to hear about topical outline referred to above.

6. The United States delegation also propose to ask Mexican representative on Monday to withdraw his proposal that A.D.A. be first subject for discussion and that instead he should move that discussion should proceed on basis of above topical outline.

7. In all, we spent five hours on Saturday in Conference with members of the United States delegation and they welcomed the idea of further co-operative efforts of this kind on an informal basis, and expressed hope that other delegations might co-operate in the same way. Ends.

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa,] August 28, 1946

SEVENTH MEETING, AUGUST 14, 1946

The following were present:

Mr. Wrong
General McNaughton
Dean Mackenzie
Mr. Bateman
Dr. Lawrence<sup>1</sup>
Dr. Solandt
Mr. Ignatieff
Mr. Jarvis<sup>2</sup>
Mr. Starnes (Secretary)

1. General McNaughton gave an account of the Atomic Energy Commission to date with particular reference to the part played by the Canadian Delegation. He was anxious to have guidance from the Panel on the line which should be taken by the Canadian delegation during the period of his Chairmanship. So far the Canadian line had been to explore every possibility in an endeavour to prevent the Commission from reaching a stalemate. Presumably our principal aim should be to continue to attempt to reconcile the almost opposite views of the Russian and the U.S. delegations. If a deadlock occurred between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. which would amount to a public recognition that they could not work together, it would be better that such a situation should arise either in the General Assembly or at the Peace Conference and not in the Commission. The best course would be to attempt to draft proposals in a form in which the Russians could concur if they were ever to admit the need for an effective international authority. Mr. Ignatieff added to what General McNaughton had said by remarking on the obviously fundamental differences between the Russian viewpoint and our own. Gromyko, for instance, had stated that atomic energy should be considered as any other problem affecting world security ignoring the fact that the very creation of the Atomic Energy Commission proved that the problem is of a very special nature. There seemed little hope of compromise and the problem resolved itself into a question of whether the Russians would accept the U.S. proposals for control.

2. A discussion followed on the various points which might arise during the period of Canadian Chairmanship. It was pointed out that we would be expected to give leadership in the Atomic Energy Commission and it was difficult to know what to say and in what ways we could prevent a deadlock taking place. It was suggested the following points might be developed in this connection:

(1) That it might be advisable to stress that atomic energy is not a weapon which can be dealt with by conventions; that it is not just another weapon of war, and that the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission make this clear.

(2) That we might seek to place the problem on a functional rather than a political basis.

It was agreed that this latter point was a sound line to take as it had already had the prior approval of the Government. A question was raised as to whether any discussion of bacteriological warfare had been had in the Commission, whether the question would arise in subsequent discussions, and if not, should we raise the question? It was agreed that it would not serve any useful purpose to raise this question as it might well inject unnecessarily additional problems for debate.

3. In discussing the further staff requirements of the Canadian delegation, General McNaughton said that it would be very useful to have Mr. Jarvis in New York. It might also be useful if the delegation were able to borrow Mr. Bateman when questions of raw materials were under discussion. It was also pointed out that he might require some further technical advice on the legal side when the Charter was under discussion. It was agreed that it would be relatively easy to arrange for short visits by persons in Ottawa including Dr. Solandt and other members of other Government Departments.

4. Concerning the control of raw materials, some clear definition of the term "raw materials" was sought. It was agreed that while there seemed to be no precise understanding of this term, it might be said to be "the material once it is raised from the mine." Some concern was expressed over the continued and rapid rate of loss of a scarce material which is at present taking place in the process of producing atomic explosives from uranium. Only a small fraction was used up and the rest, stock-piled under U.S. ownership. In this connection General McNaughton thought most of the points raised had been fully covered in his letter to Mr. Bateman† the terms of which had been agreed to by both Dr. Mackenzie and Mr. Bateman. The general terms of this letter would, it was thought, coincide with United States views, though at times it has not been clear whether the United States delegation has been working for international government or for an international uranium cartel. It was obvious that Canada must submit to a good deal of international control in this field but we do not necessarily have to agree that rates of production at the mine should be fixed by some international authority. The Canadian delegation had been asked informally by the United States if, as a major producing nation, Canada would be prepared to undertake preparatory work in the Atomic Energy Commission on studies concerning control of the production of uranium. It was agreed that our studies on the control of raw materials should be prepared in New York rather than in Ottawa.

5. Concerning the extent of the need for international control of the production of fissionable products, Mr. Wrong thought that the scientists might ascertain what control is necessary without distinguishing, so far as they were concerned, between national and international control. It was agreed that it might be useful to stress the difference between control of material as opposed to the control of plants.

6. Concerning Canadian policy with respect to production and export, the point was raised of how the rates of delivery of uranium to the Atomic Development Authority by the producing countries and in particular, by Canada, should be determined. It was the opinion of the Panel that, having in mind the position of our own resources and the effective functioning of the A.D.A., that we ought to be able to retain control of our own rate of production.

7. It was Mr. Bateman's understanding that the plan for establishing an Atomic Development Authority was to go into effect by stages. Mr. Ignatieff remarked that the United States delegation are reported to have a plan for establishing the A.D.A. so that it would come into operation in stages. They have not so far, been able to produce this paper and it will presumably not be forthcoming for some time.

8. With regard to Canada's position as a leading producer of uranium, it was pointed out that it was now technically possible to use thorium for bombs; uranium 235 being no longer required for the actual production of the bomb, but only as a primer to start the production of plutonium.<sup>1</sup> This obviously would change the importance of thorium as a source for the production of plutonium. As world resources of thorium are rather large this might conceivably change Canada's position as a large producer of the essential raw material used in Atomic explosives. In this connection Dr. Mackenzie pointed out that with the establishment of an Atomic Development Authority the abolition of the Atomic Bomb would come about; and the "demand" would be reduced to the peace time uses to which fissionable products could be put. This raised the point of what in fact constituted "demand" for uranium. Mr. Wrong said that presumably it was the production of that quantity of uranium in a given period which was considered necessary for peaceful uses throughout the world.

9. Consideration was given to the question of curtailing our own mining operations and whether we should start stock-piling ourselves, or whether we should make a new contract with the United States. General Groves had made it plain that the United States had no plans in this connection and that for the moment they were not in a position to discuss the drawing up of a new contract. While it was agreed that it would be desirable to put Eldorado on a minimum production basis, it was pointed out that this would constitute a major operation. It was suggested that it might be possible to curtail production and concentrate on development work in the mine without any reduction in the personnel. In any event, it was agreed that we should not be particularly worried if production ceased. Mr. Bateman pointed out that curtailment of production was already in process at Eldorado.

10. The establishment of the Canadian Board was discussed and in connection with our policy with respect to production and export, it was pointed out that when the domestic Bill on Atomic Energy became operative, specific regulations governing export would have to be drawn up following the establishment of the Board. A contract with the United States was probably out of the question but the possibility of making a contract with the United Kingdom should not be ruled out. It was agreed that any agreement even of a partial nature made with the United Kingdom would probably have to be on a tripartite basis. It was agreed by the Panel that one of the first tasks to be taken up by the Board should be a survey of the Canadian position in order to determine our best course.

11. Dr. Solandt raised a point in connection with scientific and technical intelligence on atomic energy. At the moment he pointed out that the collation of such material in Canada was on an ad hoc basis. So far as he knew all information from the Manhattan project was being sent to Chalk River. Information from Eldorado was going direct to Mr. Howe and information from United Kingdom sources was being directed through military channels. He was of the opinion that this might be consolidated in one government agency. He suggested that perhaps the Board might be the appropriate body. If this were so, however, it raised the question of whether a strictly civilian body should deal with military intelligence. The other suggestion might be that D.G.D.R. might be responsible for collating and filing all this information. It was agreed by the Panel that D.G.D.R. would be the appropriate branch to undertake this task on an interim basis.

New York, September 21, 1946

Dear Sir,

1. The present suspension in the work of the Atomic Commission arising out of the delay of the Soviet Government to approve the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee, prompts this review of the main issues before the Commission, and consideration of some of the possible courses which might be followed in an endeavour to give effect to the terms of the Resolution of the General Assembly of January 24th, 1946.

2. From the beginning of the Commission's work it has been evident that the main problem before the Commission is to try to reconcile the U.S. and Soviet positions.

3. The United States, at present holding a preferred position in relation to the development of atomic energy and its military applications, has made it clear that it is prepared to surrender its monopoly in return for an effective international system of control which would ensure that the atomic bomb would not be used by some ill-disposed nation in a surprise attack.

4. On the other hand, the Soviet Union which, as far as it is known, is not in a position at present to manufacture atomic weapons (at least on any significant scale) has been desirous as an immediate objective of entirely eliminating this extraordinarily destructive weapon from national armaments. Accordingly, as the first stage in negotiations in the Atomic Commission, the Soviet representative proposed a convention which would obligate all parties to outlaw the use and manufacture of atomic weapons. This convention would, in effect, only involve action on the part of the United States, which would be further obligated to destroy existing stocks of atom bombs within three months.

5. In the first two months the discussions in the Commission and its committees were devoted to examination of the United States and Soviet proposals, and although some further light was shed on the United States and Soviet positions respectively by supplementary statements on the part of their representatives, no progress was made toward agreement. The most important points of difference may be summarized as follows:

(a) The Soviet insistence on the acceptance on the part of the United States of their proposed convention to outlaw the use and manufacture of atomic weapons as the first step. The U.S. position has been to insist upon the simultaneous establishment of a system of safeguards which would ensure that all countries should have a sense of security that no atomic weapons will be made.

(b) The U.S. proposal that these safeguards should be operated through an Atomic Development Authority with wide powers, including freedom of access to countries accepting the authority of the A.D.A. The Soviet position, stressing the principle of national sovereignty, has rejected the conception of such an international authority having jurisdiction over internal or national affairs. The Soviet proposals provide for domestic legislation as a means of carrying out the terms of their proposed international convention.

(c) The U.S. proposal that the powers of the A.D.A. should include those of inspection especially associated with the close control of raw materials. The Soviet position in this respect has also been to reject inspection by any international authority on the principle that it is inconsistent with national sovereignty.

(d) The United States proposal that in the event of violation of any international agreement on atomic energy there should be no veto in so far as it may relate to this particular problem on the part of any of the signatories. The Soviet position has been that this would be contrary to the agreed rule of unanimity on the part of the permanent members of the Security Council and would undermine a basic principle of the United Nations Charter. The Soviet proposals provide for any enforcement action to be under the existing jurisdiction of the Security Council and operating under the rule of unanimity of the permanent members.

(e) The United States proposal that there should be the tightest possible control of materials and processes; the operation of all dangerous activities to be under "the management, supervision and control of the Authority". The Soviet position has been to reject any international control over their resources and industrial activities.

6. Consideration of these main issues, particularly in Committee No. 2, revealed that further discussion could not be expected to promote agreement, but rather would result in a sharpening of the major political differences between the United States and Soviet positions. It was therefore agreed to follow the proposal of the French representative and ask the Scientific and Technical Committee to consider the problem of control and to report on the question of whether an effective control of atomic energy were possible, together with an indication of the methods by which the Scientific Committee believes this could be achieved.

7. This Committee, after eighteen meetings, completed a report which carried the opinion of all the scientific representatives, including the Soviet representatives, Professors Skobeltzyn and Alexandrov. However, the Soviet representatives were not empowered to give their formal agreement to the report without explicit consent of their Government, which apparently was made contingent upon the approval of the report in Moscow by Soviet experts.

8. The agreement in the Scientific and Technical Committee was made possible by complete exclusion of all political considerations. However, by examining the detail of each process in the normal peaceful applications of atomic energy, as far as they are now known, the Scientific and Technical Committee were able to agree on an indication at each stage of the possible dangers that might arise through diversion, clandestine activity or seizure, whereby atomic energy could be used for other than peaceful purposes.

9. Before the completion of my term as Chairman of the Atomic Commission, I thought it desirable to canvass the views of the heads of other delegations regarding the next stage in the Commission's work.

10. After preliminary consultation with the United States delegation, I suggested that Committee No. 2 should develop the problem of control to a further stage following, as far as possible, the method of informal meeting and discussion which had proved so successful in the Scientific and Technical Committee. This would necessitate the setting up of a working sub-committee of Committee No. 2 which would be able to devote its time to continuous detailed examination of the problem of control on the basis of the Scientific and Technical report. The terms of reference of such a working sub-committee, I suggested, might be worded as follows: "To examine the report on the specific safeguards at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes required to prevent that possibility of misuse indicated in the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee".

11. The objectives which I have in mind in advocating this approach may be briefly summarized as follows:

(a) To enable the Commission to proceed by the method of agreement and to avoid the assertion and counter-assertion of the U.S. and Soviet points of view respectively, based primarily on political considerations;

(b) To enable an examination of the facts to be made, leading to a better understanding of the technical problems of international control, and to the assessment of the feasibility and effectiveness of various alternatives;

(c) To give an opportunity for nations, other than those represented on the Commission, to inform themselves of the problem of the international control of atomic energy;

(d) The informal method of discussion would give an opportunity for all members, especially the Soviet representatives, to become better acquainted with the motives and attitudes of their colleagues; and

(e) To demonstrate that the Atomic Commission was doing everything possible to reach agreement on this difficult problem through the method of co-operation.

12. The possibility of making any progress by way of agreement in the Commission, seems to me to depend on whether or not the Soviet Government accepts the Scientific report as a basis of further work, by authorizing its representatives on the Commission to approve the report.

13. If that agreement is forthcoming it would obviously relate only to the scientific and technical facts contained in the report and would not necessarily influence the over-all Soviet position regarding the political issues involved.

14. It is my view that the importance of Soviet agreement to the Technical report lies primarily in the psychological consideration that we would then have, as a starting point of discussion, an agreement as to a statement of basic scientific facts, from which to explore the possibilities of further agreements in relation to the measures of control which might be effective, taking into account the various possibilities of diversion, clandestine activities and seizure indicated in the Scientific and Technical report.

15. My informal discussions with the heads of delegations to the Commission reveal that there is a general consensus of opinion in favour of developing discussion along these lines in Committee No. 2, adopting as far as possible the method of informal discussion in closed meetings which proved so successful in the Scientific and Technical Committee.

16. Although political and non-technical considerations would have to be taken into account, it is suggested that there should be no attempt to reach decisions at this stage on the controversial political questions and this working group would submit to Committee No. 2 a report, which it is hoped would present clearly the problems of control, and from which the political decisions required would emerge. Committee No. 2 might then undertake to formulate a series of propositions which could either go to the Security Council, or afford the basis for a discussion of an international draft treaty.

17. It is difficult at this stage to project an assessment of the prospects before the Commission beyond the immediate future. It would appear, however, that failing agreement to develop discussion on the basis of the Scientific report, the Commission would have to return to discussion of the political aspects of the problem.

18. In paragraph 5, I have outlined the main political issues which divide the United States and Soviet positions. It is doubtful whether all these differences are susceptible of resolution through discussion in the Atomic Commission.

19. Moreover, there is the difficult problem of the stages which will govern the transition from the present position of United States monopoly to a system of international control. This matter has so far not been raised in the Commission, apart from the general references contained in the original Baruch statement. The relevant passage reads as follows:

When an adequate system for control of atomic energy, including the renunciation of the bomb as a weapon, has been agreed upon and put into effective operation and condign punishments set up for violations of the rules of control which are to be stigmatized as international crimes, we propose that:

1. Manufacture of atomic bombs shall stop,
2. Existing bombs shall be disposed of pursuant to the terms of the treaty, and
3. The Authority shall be in possession of full information as to the know-how for the production of atomic energy.

It is understood from the U.S. delegation that at the appropriate time they intend to put forward the specific proposals regarding the stages which will govern the transition to a system of international control, but this extremely important question may well have to be the subject of direct diplomatic negotiation between the United States and Soviet Governments.

20. It has sometimes been suggested that a compromise solution might be submitted by a third party as a basis of discussion in the Commission. Such a proposal would almost certainly invite rejection by both sides, unless the ground were thoroughly prepared beforehand through direct diplomatic negotiation.

21. The position maintained by the Canadian delegation throughout has been to endeavour in every way possible to further the work of the Commission. We have avoided introducing proposals or arguments which would tend to exacerbate the division between the United States and Soviet positions. Moreover, in view of the community of interests between Canada and the United States, every effort has been made to maintain the most cordial and close relations with the United States delegation and to develop a spirit of mutual confidence between the two delegations.

22. We have also constantly kept in mind the very serious consequences that might follow in the event of the failure of the present international negotiations. For this reason, we have not only maintained the closest possible consultation at all stages with the United States, but also with the United Kingdom delegation, as representative of the two countries with which we shared partnership in the development of atomic energy during the war.

Yours very sincerely,

A. G. L. McNAUGHTON

P.S. Since writing the above I understand that the Chairman of the Scientific Committee has called a meeting of the Committee for the afternoon of Thursday, 26th September, and that he has indicated that formal approval of the report will be requested from all delegations. I understand that this action was taken at the instance of the U.S. delegation.

Dear Mr. Howe,

On September 18, 1946 Dr. W. B. Lewis assumed the position of Director of the Atomic Energy Division of the National Research Council, and Dr. Cockcroft formally resigned as Director. This, I take it, formally terminates the partnership arrangement made in 1943 as between the United Kingdom and Canada for carrying out work in atomic energy.

As you know, Dr. Lewis is now a member of the National Research Council, and the project at Chalk River will be carried out as a definitely Canadian effort. While we will have the closest liaison and informal cooperation with Dr. Cockcroft and the atomic energy work in England there will from now on be no question of partnership in any official sense, and all reports, information and intelligence that pass from Canada to England should, I feel, go through our normal channels and not through the British High Commissioner's Office as formerly.

Yours sincerely,

C. J. MACKENZIE

ATOM No. 131. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins:
Following from McNaughton, Begins:

1. As indicated in my message ATOM No. 128, I attended a meeting with the United Kingdom delegation and the United States delegation to discuss plans for tomorrow's meeting of Committee No. 2 and the further work of that Committee. Baruch, Hancock, Tolman, Gordon and Lindsay were there from the United States delegation, and Cadogan, Thompson and Mann from the United Kingdom delegation.

2. With few preliminary remarks, Hancock asked me to outline our suggestions for the procedure to be followed. I made the proposal that Committee No. 2 establish a working group, representative of all delegations and with authority to draw, as may seem advantageous to the particular discussion in hand, on appropriate experts in any field related to atomic energy; this working group to render its findings in the form of reports to Committee No. 2 for consideration and decision; and that the terms of reference of this Sub-Committee be as follows: "to examine and report on the specific safeguards required at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, to prevent the possibilities of misuse indicated in the Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee".

3. I pointed out that the intended discussions should be exploratory and should progress through three phases; the first involving measures to prevent diversion of materials from use for peaceful purposes; the second phase, measures to prevent clandestine operations; and a final phase, to discuss measures to prevent seizure of installations. Since many of the delegates to the Atomic Energy Commission are also delegates to the Security Council, it is important that the members of the proposed working group be left to the discretion of the delegations themselves and that the discussions proceed informally without voting, so that the greatest possible freedom of discussion might result, as had been the case in the Scientific and Technical Committee. I found that all, repeat all, present were in accord.

4. Cadogan and Hancock agreed that my suggestion obviated the necessity of political decisions at this time, and that if the discussion progressed from our present agreement on the Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee, through the various phases I indicated, we might contrive to reach the critical political stages when the general international situation was more propitious.

5. As a result of our discussion, my proposal was accepted and it was agreed that I should notify the Chairman of Committee No. 2 that I intended to speak on item 5 of the agenda, which is "a consideration of the further work of Committee No. 2 arising out of the Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee", and that I would propose a resolution thereon.

6. Incidentally, I learned that Wallace<sup>1</sup> had not been reconciled with the United States delegation, as indicated in my message ATOM No. 129,† and that it was thought that he intended to make a statement giving his views on how the United States delegation should have proceeded and introducing a new issue between himself and the United States delegation on the question of continued manufacture of bombs. I gather that Wallace's view is that manufacture of bombs should have ceased pending negotiation of an agreement. Apart from this, the United States delegation claim that Wallace's new suggestions are precisely the same as those made in the Baruch proposals, although Wallace is not prepared to agree. Ends. Message ends.

TELEGRAM CG-684

New York, October 8, 1946

SECRET. ATOM No. 141. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins:

1. The seventh meeting of Committee No. 2 took place the morning of Tuesday, October 8th. There were two items on the agenda:

(a) Consideration of the Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee, and

(b) Consideration of the further work of Committee No. 2 arising out of the Report.

2. Under (a), Professor Kramers, the Chairman of the Scientific and Technical Committee, read a reply to the question raised by the Mexican representative, Nervo, regarding the possibility of devising some less dangerous reactors which could be the subject of national operation and less stringent international control, leaving the dangerous reactors to international operation within an international zone. A copy of the reply as given in the Committee will be sent forward by bag.

3. When the Chairman asked whether there were any further questions arising out of the Report, the Australian representative said that he had himself thought of at least fifty questions that could be asked, and suggested that the important thing was to settle the method of a working programme for the Commission and then relate the questions to the discussion in hand. Gromyko then made some remarks to the same effect, suggesting that the important decision now related to how the Committee should proceed further in its work on the basis of the Report. He reminded the Committee that a resolution on this subject had been presented by the Canadian representative. He suggested that other members of the Commission might have suggestions to make in this regard.

4. Taking up Gromyko's remarks, I made a statement amplifying the proposals I had put forward at the sixth meeting of Committee No. 2 on Wednesday, October 2nd, and including a second paragraph in my resolution which would incorporate the method of procedure which had been developed in discussions with the United Kingdom and United States delegations in conversation with Ignatieff. The full text of my statement follows in my immediately following telegram.

5. My proposals were fully endorsed by the United States representative, Hancock, who added the observation, however, that in the present stage of the work there was a lack of knowledge regarding possible developments in regard to the peaceful applications of atomic energy and that developments in atomic energy were in a fluid condition. For this reason, he suggested it was not possible to be specific in the safeguards which might be applied and that an international authority would have to be given powers to adjust controls according to changing developments. He said that in fact the present peaceful uses were mainly working hypotheses devised by scientists and, therefore, controls and safeguards would necessarily be of a conjectural character. His remarks were obviously intended to indicate the limiting factor in pursuing discussion along the lines we had proposed. He added, however, that the detailed examination of safeguards we had proposed would, he hoped, demonstrate that international control was absolutely indispensable.

6. Gromyko, who followed, said that the Canadian resolution was in two parts, the first dealt with the immediate objectives and terms of reference of the Committee, the latter part, as revised, with the question of procedure. He said that he was prepared to agree to the first part of the Canadian resolution. As to the second, he thought that it was not necessary to specify precisely the procedure which the Committee might adopt. He expressed no specific objection to the procedure, but that it might be left open to decision as discussion developed in the Committee to avoid unnecessary procedural complications. As to the precise questions which the Committee might next discuss, he said that the Canadian representative had made certain suggestions in his statement and he thought that each delegation might also submit suggestions, keeping them to a few essential points.

7. Cadogan spoke in support of the Canadian resolution and said that he hoped the Committee would make a decision on the resolution, adopting also the method of work proposed.

8. The representative of Mexico also spoke in support of the resolution and said that the Canadian plan was not only necessary, but he could not see how the Committee could advance its work in any other way. He also thought that it was desirable that the scientists should participate in discussions in the Committee, rather than have isolated questions referred to the Scientific and Technical Committee which would delay proceedings.

9. After the representative of Brazil had spoken in support of the resolution, the Chairman suggested that there appeared to be unanimous agreement on the first part of the Canadian resolution. As to the second part, there appeared to be agreement as to the procedure but doubt as to whether there was need to specify procedure within the terms of the resolution.

10. Gromyko then said that he had no objection to the scientists participating in informal meetings, but wished to avoid an excessively restrictive wording in the terms of the resolution. He said that the head of each delegation should be left to decide who should attend meetings of various Committees. He also did not want a new Sub-Committee set up and preferred that Committee No. 2 should hold informal meetings with scientific advisers participating in discussion.

11. Accordingly, he suggested rewording of the second part of the Canadian resolution which, with slight verbal changes, was adopted unanimously. The revised resolution, therefore, reads as follows:

That Committee No. 2 proceed to examine and report on the safeguards required at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes to prevent the possibilities of misuse indicated in the Report of the Scientific and Technical Committee.

That for this purpose the Committee may hold informal meetings as it may decide, at which scientific representatives may take part in the discussion.

12. Gromyko then said that as regards the agenda for the next meeting of the Committee the statement of the Canadian representative contained certain suggestions which he thought should be turned over to the Secretariat who might prepare a list of topics after consulting other delegations. This was agreed.

13. As regards the next meeting, it was agreed that the Committee would hold an informal meeting next Monday, October 14th, at 3:30 p.m.

14. The unanimity with which our proposal was adopted indicates that there is a general meeting of minds on the need to develop exploratory discussions along the lines we have suggested, with a view to indicating the degree and form of international control which countries would be required to accept to ensure that atomic energy is not used for other than peaceful purposes. The meeting was marked by a friendly and cooperative attitude on the part of Gromyko. The basic issues that divide the United States and Soviet positions, however, lurk in the background, and I have the impression that Cadogan and some members of the United States delegation have the feeling that progress along the road which has now been opened up may at any time be abruptly cut short. Ends. Message ends.

TELEGRAM CG-685

New York, October 8, 1946

ATOM No. 142. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins: Reference my message ATOM No. 141. Following is text referred to. Text begins:

Since the last meeting of Committee No. 2 I have had occasion to discuss informally with some of my colleagues in this Committee the resolution which I proposed last Wednesday, and in consequence, I think it might be helpful to the discussion today if I were to make a few remarks at this time in amplification of the resolution which stands in the name of the Canadian delegation.<sup>1</sup> This resolution, you will observe, deals only with the suggested terms of reference which this Committee might adopt in its discussions arising from the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee, which we received last week.

In my statement I also made reference to a certain method of procedure, which I felt would be the most appropriate for advancing our work in dealing with the problem as formulated in the resolution I proposed. I suggested that we should proceed by the method of informal discussions.

It has been suggested to me that it might be helpful if the method of work which I propose be included in the terms of the resolution.

I would therefore propose to substitute the resolution which I submitted last Wednesday with the following resolution:

That Committee No. 2 proceed to examine and report on the safeguards required at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes to prevent the possibilities of misuse indicated in the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee.

That for this purpose, Committee No. 2 establish an informal working group, composed of two members of each delegation, one of whom shall be a scientific or technical representative, and with authority to consult other experts in any field related to atomic energy.

That this informal working group report its conclusions to Committee No. 2.

You will observe that the paragraphs I have added merely incorporate my suggestions regarding the organization and procedure of the Committee and would not affect its terms of reference. As regards the first paragraph, I have dropped the word "specific" for on further consideration I think that we are not in a position at this stage to expect to do more than clarify in our minds the forms which safeguards might take.

It also occurs to me that in considering the further work of this Committee, it might be helpful if I were to elaborate a little on the manner in which we might undertake, as my resolution suggests, "to examine and report on the safeguards required at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes to prevent the possibilities of misuse indicated in the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee".

The work might conveniently be divided into certain distinct phases. The Scientific report has indicated three distinct kinds of possible misuse, namely, diversion of materials, clandestine operations, and seizures of material or facilities.

I would suggest that measures to prevent these possibilities of misuse be considered separately in relation to each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, beginning with the mines.

<sup>2</sup> See United Nations, Atomic Energy Commission, Special Supplement, Report to the Security Council, Annex 7, pp. 138-140.

Thus in the first phase the discussion might lead to a report on various possible measures to prevent the diversion of materials from each activity in atomic energy for peaceful purposes considered in turn.

Proceeding to the second phase, the Committee might discuss possible safeguards to prevent the clandestine operation of mines and other activities leading to the manufacture of atomic weapons. In dealing with this problem it would, of course, need to take into account the extent to which the safeguards to prevent diversion of material would in themselves be effective in preventing clandestine operations.

As a third phase the Committee might discuss the problem of seizure and report on the possible measures of safeguard.

I have sketched these suggestions regarding a plan of work only as a rough outline. If this approach were agreeable to the Committee these suggestions would, of course, need to be elaborated in some detail.

To sum up, the plan which I propose is based upon the principle that we need to explore the facts and consider their implications before we can reach any useful conclusions. As I suggested, the working group might first examine the various possible measures of controlling their technical detail. We would then be in a position to discuss which of these are practicable and necessary to ensure that atomic energy is used for peaceful purposes only.

In other words, in this working group I would hope that we might so clarify the forms of control that might appropriately be applied to atomic energy, that we would then be able to discuss more profitably the content of an international agreement. Text ends. Ends. Message ends.

PERSONAL AND TOP SECRET

Dear Mike [Pearson],

Last night we had a discussion in Mr. St. Laurent's sitting room on recent developments in the Atomic Energy Commission with particular reference to issues arising out of Molotov's speech. There were present McNaughton, Wilgress, Macdonnell, Ignatieff and myself. At the beginning of the meeting Ignatieff gave us copies of the top secret teletype† which he sent you on October 30 reporting on the informal meeting of that day in the offices of the United States delegation on the Atomic Energy Commission.

From what McNaughton said it looks as if Baruch may very shortly, perhaps in a few weeks, pull his original proposals down from the shelf and force a vote on them in their original form.

The Soviet Union would of course reject them again out of hand. The probable result would be a breakdown of efforts to control atomic energy and a very great increase in international tension.

It may well be that the break in the Atomic Energy Commission is going to come before the end of the year. If it is to come we must surely, however, make every effort to ensure that the issue on which the breakdown comes is one carefully chosen by us as being best calculated to put the Soviet Union in the wrong. If a break is to come, it should be on a vote on proposals for control worked out in the Commission itself and not on proposals which few, if any, countries could accept in their original form without detailed study and negotiation.

McNaughton is pessimistic about the possibility of doing anything to head Baruch off. Baruch reports direct to the President; he tells the State Department nothing and refuses to have anything to do with anyone there but Byrnes personally when he is available.

Mr. St. Laurent encouraged McNaughton last night to go on with the plan which he has been following both of attempting to postpone a breakdown and of trying to work out a system for the effective control of atomic energy which goes no further than is shown by a careful international enquiry to be essential. Mr. St. Laurent urged the necessity, if a breakdown should come, of the western powers being in a position to demonstrate that they had explored thoroughly every possible avenue of agreement with the Soviet Union and that the proposal finally rejected by the Soviet Union was one which would commend itself to most other governments as practicable and capable of achievement, and went as short a distance as possible in the direction of world government.<sup>1</sup>

Yours sincerely,

ESCOTT REID

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

[Ottawa,] November 28, 1946

My dear Prime Minister,

I have received a telegram from my Government instructing me to inform you that Mr. Bevin recently raised with Mr. Byrnes, in the course of conversation in New York, the question of co-operation with the U.S. Government in the field of atomic energy.

Mr. Bevin pointed out to Mr. Byrnes that although it had been agreed by the President that there should be full and effective co-operation with the U.K. in regard to atomic energy developments, in practice this understanding had not been given effect, and it seemed that the Act recently passed by Congress might be a further obstacle in the way of such co-operation. Mr. Byrnes, in reply, said that he did not think that the U.S. Government had departed in any way from their undertakings to the U.K., and added inter alia that the document signed at Washington between the President, yourself and Mr. Attlee could apparently be interpreted in two ways, and that it would clearly be difficult for the U.S., without exposing themselves to a charge of hypocrisy, to enter into an arrangement for the exchange of information with the U.K. at a time when they were working for a system of control by the United Nations.

Mr. Bevin reported this conversation to Mr. Attlee and, in reply to his request for guidance on the points raised by Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Attlee has now sent him a message, a copy of which is enclosed for your personal information.† It is contemplated that Mr. Bevin should now have a further talk with Mr. Byrnes, in order that the latter may not be left with the impression that we accept his arguments, and that thereafter it should be arranged for Lord Inverchapel<sup>1</sup> to pursue the matter at his discretion with the U.S. authorities.

Mr. Attlee is anxious that you should know of these developments. In this connection it will be seen that one of the points made by Mr. Byrnes in his talk with Mr. Bevin was that the United States and Canada are opposed to the building of a pile in the U.K., and I have been asked to draw attention to this and to the relevant paragraph in Mr. Attlee's message.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, November 29, 1946

With reference to Clutterbuck's top secret and personal letter to the Prime Minister dated November 28th and the enclosed copy of Mr. Attlee's message to Mr. Bevin dated November 26th,† the following observations occurred to me:

1. The tone of these papers appears to be quite contradictory to the reports which we heard at the Panel the other day to the effect that the British were now pretty well decided not to push forward with development in the United Kingdom and that they contemplated sharing in a Canadian effort.

(Incidentally, Dr. Solandt told me this afternoon that he had heard that the government's atomic programme in Britain was going very badly indeed, that the scientists were pretty much fed up with the complicated civil service controls and that very little progress had been made. He also pointed to the fact that the U.K. budget for the next two years in this field had been limited to £500,000 which I gather is quite inadequate for the construction and operating of anything effective.)

2. As to the United States "and Canada" being opposed to the idea that a plant be built in the British Isles, I know of no evidence to our having expressed ourselves in this sense though Dean Mackenzie has certainly done so privately on several occasions. Of course, Mr. Howe may have said something of the kind to the Americans and we know that he is extremely skeptical as to the feasibility of the U.K. plans, at least on anything like their stated timetable.

3. My own feeling is that the British are correct in saying that they have at the least "a strong moral claim" and I should have thought that they are not stretching the plain meaning of the phrase "full and effective co-operation" in interpreting the Attlee-Truman-King document of November, 1945.

On the other hand, when Attlee pressed these arguments with the President last June, we felt that there was little or nothing to be gained by what Norman<sup>1</sup> called the exegetical approach. I still think that they will get nowhere on this tack though I have sympathy with their irritation with the American attitude.

4. You will have noticed in paragraph 5 of the Attlee message that the U.K. feel that development in Canada would be "a wholly inadequate substitute" because output would be "predominantly" under Canadian control. Mr. Howe certainly gave me the impression that when Sir John Anderson<sup>2</sup> was here it was precisely such a scheme that he had in mind.

5. It is not altogether unreasonable for the U.S. authorities to be reluctant to make new arrangements with respect to the committee and the trust while the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission is engaged in discussions of international control. On the other hand this does not meet the U.K. argument that they have in any event at the least a strong moral claim to assistance in going ahead with their plans.

Before very long we should know if there is any prospect of the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission's labour proving fruitful. It will then be up to them, I should think, to bring up the revision of the tripartite arrangements contemplated in November, 1945.

Mr. Howe should be asked for his comments. My own feeling is that we should reply to the British in much the same way we did last summer; namely, expressing our general understanding of the continuing nature of the agreement to co-operate but at the same time our doubt as to the advantage of pressing the argument at this time. We should also deny (assuming that we can truthfully do so) that we are opposed to the building of a pile in the United Kingdom.

UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION, CANADIAN POLICY

1. Attached is a progress report from the Canadian delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission. This was the subject of discussion at the 9th meeting of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy (of which I am chairman) on November 22, when it was submitted and explained by General McNaughton. The report was examined in detail by the Panel and it was agreed that in the first instance it should be sent forward to you and to Mr. St. Laurent.

2. In view of the fact that the last occasion when atomic energy matters were under discussion in Cabinet was in May of this year, you may wish to consider what, if any, further distribution might be given this document. Mr. Howe attended the meeting and will receive a copy in the ordinary course as will Mr. St. Laurent.

3. I am also attaching a paper containing certain recommendations made by the Panel. Would you wish to have these considered by the Cabinet or can the delegation be instructed to go ahead on this basis, subject to Mr. St. Laurent's concurrence? Mr. Howe is satisfied with them.

*Rapport de la délégation à la Commission de l'énergie atomique
des Nations Unies*

Report by Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations

November 29, 1946

1. Canada was represented on the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations which met for the first time in New York on June 14th, 1946, by General A. G. L. McNaughton, C.H., C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., accompanied by Dr. G. C. Lawrence, as scientific advisor, and Mr. G. Ignatieff of the Department of External Affairs.

2. The Canadian delegation has been guided throughout by the views expressed by the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy in its memorandum to the Cabinet of May 7th, 1946.

3. Discussion in the Atomic Energy Commission opened with an address by the United States delegate, Mr. Baruch, in which he put forward a program for the international control of atomic energy closely resembling that of the Lilienthal Report. The International Atomic Development Authority proposed by Mr. Baruch, however, was wider in its conception of forms of international control. The Lilienthal Report placed its main emphasis on international ownership. Acting upon endorsement of the memorandum of May 7th by the Cabinet, and after direct consultation with the Department of External Affairs, the Canadian representative indicated that Canada supported the principles upon which these proposals were based.

4. The Soviet plan, presented on June 19th, differed fundamentally from that of the United States. It proposed the immediate outlawry of atomic weapons, and that all stocks of atomic energy weapons be destroyed within a period of three months. The proposal differed diametrically from the Baruch plan. Moreover, the Convention put forward by the U.S.S.R. was essentially the draft of a Disarmament Agreement relating only to atomic weapons. No method was suggested for the enforcement of the Agreement, other than the declaration to be made by the signatory States that violation would constitute "a most serious international crime against humanity". The discussions which ensued occupied the attention of the Commission until July 31st.

5. Disagreement on the important principles became apparent between countries which, like the United States, favoured a system of effective international control through an International Authority with adequate powers and functions of inspection and control, and the U.S.S.R. which was opposed to international inspection and control, in principle, as a violation of national sovereignty and considered that the Security Council should be the body under the Charter to undertake any action to enforce a general agreement not to manufacture nor use atomic energy for military purposes. The Soviet representative would not accept any proposal which would undermine, in any degree, the principle of unanimity of the permanent members on all questions relating to the maintenance of peace and security. Thus discussion on the political issues came to an end with Mr. Gromyko's statement in Committee No. 2 on July 24th, 1946, that "The American proposals, in their present form, could not be accepted by the Soviet Union, either as a whole or in their separate parts".

6. It is worth noting that the Soviet representative attempted to use the veto in the Security Council when Canada wished to participate in the discussion of the Rules of Procedure of the Atomic Energy Commission in accordance with Article 31 of the Charter. It was argued, however, by other members of the Council that the admission of members of the United Nations when their interests are specially affected under Article 31 was a procedural matter and it was so ruled by the President. Although the Soviet representative recorded his objection, the precedent was thereby established that Canada may participate in discussions in the Security Council when the affairs of the Atomic Energy Commission are on its agenda.

7. Some members of the Commission, including the Canadian delegation, felt that if the discussion could be turned away from broad questions of principle to a consideration in more precise form of the kinds of international obligation which countries would be asked to assume if an effective system of international control were established, this might facilitate progress in the Commission.

8. Accordingly, on July 31st, 1946, Committee No. 2 asked the Scientific and Technical Committee "to report on the question of whether an effective control of atomic energy were possible and together with an indication of the methods in which the Scientific Committee believes this could be achieved". The Scientific and Technical Committee submitted its report on October 2nd, 1946, and agreed unanimously that "We do not find any basis in the available scientific facts for supposing that effective control is not technologically feasible". The Scientific and Technical Committee, however, was not able to give an indication of the methods whereby the effective control of atomic energy could be achieved, as the Soviet representatives on this Committee regarded this as a political matter beyond the competence of scientists to discuss.

9. The preparation of the scientific and technical report coincided with General McNaughton's Chairmanship for August 14th to September 14th, 1946. The activities of the other Committees were suspended pending the completion of the report.

10. Responsibility for suggesting the next step in the work of the Commission naturally fell upon the Chairman. After consulting privately with all the delegations of the Commission, including that of the Soviet Union, the Canadian representative concluded that the next step in the Commission's work should be to endeavour to provide an answer to the question which had been left unanswered by the Scientific and Technical Committee, namely, the methods by which effective international control might be achieved and that this work should be undertaken by Committee No. 2.

11. The Canadian proposal which was accepted unanimously, was framed as follows:

That Committee No. 2 proceed to examine and report on the safeguards required at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, to prevent the possibilities of misuse indicated in the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee; that the Committee may hold informal meetings as it may decide, at which scientific representatives may take part in the discussions.

12. The informal discussions which followed proved of considerable value in clarifying both the form and degree of control which needs to be applied. The discussion was divided for convenience into three phases: The safeguards to prevent diversion of material being considered first; safeguards to prevent clandestine activities, second; and safeguards to prevent the seizure of materials and facilities, last.

13. In the discussions on raw materials, the Canadian delegation was able to make a useful contribution by having Mr. C. S. Parsons, Chief of the Bureau of Mines, and Mr. A. H. Ross of the Eldorado Refinery, describe the characteristics of the processes of the mining and refining of uranium, and lead the discussion of appropriate safeguards. The discussions in the informal conversations (and private talks with the United States delegation) have had the effect of directing thought away from the conception of international ownership or management of mines to that of inspection. In the case of the refineries, the concentrated condition of the material at this stage makes it desirable, in the view of the United States delegation, that the safeguards should take the form of management rather than inspection.

14. The United States delegation has been dissatisfied with the slow progress and has wished to clarify the Soviet position. Accordingly, the Atomic Commission was called in plenary session, at two days' notice, by the Chairman, (Khalifa—Egypt), the day before the Chair passed by rotation to the representative of France. At this meeting on November 13th, 1946, the Chairman proposed that the Commission should report its proceedings, findings, and recommendations to the Security Council by December 31st. Preparatory to this, Committee No. 2 should report to the Commission in plenary session by December 21st. This proposal was adopted, though the Soviet representative reserved the position of his Government, and the French and Netherlands representatives explained that they accepted the proposal on the understanding that the report would only record the progress that had been made to date, and would not affect the discussions in the Commission. At the first meeting after assuming Chairmanship, the representative of France reaffirmed that this was his interpretation of the decision that had been taken.

15. It is difficult to assess with any degree of assurance what the next stage may be. Developments in the Commission may be affected by the clarification of the Soviet attitude in relation to the problem of the international control of atomic energy during the debate on the Soviet proposals for disarmament put forward by Mr. Molotov in the plenary session of the General Assembly on October 29th, 1946. Concurrently with Mr. Molotov's suggestion that the General Assembly consider the question of general reduction of armaments, and as a primary objective, the banning of the manufacture and use of atomic energy for military purposes, Stalin is recorded as having expressed the view in the press in reply to questions put to him by a representative of the press that "A strong international control (of atomic energy) is needed".

16. There would appear to be no grounds, however, for expecting any significant change in the Soviet attitude, and the Soviet representative in the Assembly may merely reiterate the proposals put forward by the Soviet representatives in the Atomic Energy Commission. The Commission may, therefore be expected to reaffirm the resolution passed by the General Assembly in London, and call upon the Commission to carry out its terms of reference "with the utmost despatch".

17. The next stage in the Commission's work, would seem to depend on the successful completion of discussions on the various methods of safeguard and control, relating to clandestine activities and the possibility of seizures as well as the diversion of material. Conclusions resulting from these discussions will probably point to the need for international inspection and control, and an International Authority through which these would operate. It would seem logical therefore that in the next stage the Commission should consider the functions and powers of an International Authority and the relation of such an Authority to the organs of United Nations. Thus the ground would be prepared for the drafting of the terms of an International Treaty specifying the obligations which would be required of signatory states, the functions and powers of the International Authority through which control would operate and the relation of that Authority to the United Nations.

18. There is in addition the question of benefits which members would derive from a system of international control of atomic energy. First, the degree of security afforded by a system of international control will need to be examined. Also, the benefits which flow from the various peaceful uses of atomic energy, which are in process of being developed, will have to be considered. The location of facilities and the allocation of materials are of fundamental importance to both aspects of the problem. Canada, as a country possessing raw material and a research plant for developing peaceful applications of atomic energy, will need to consider carefully the position which may result from the establishment of an international control system as envisaged in the Baruch proposals.

19. The immediate objective of the Commission will probably be to continue its work of clarifying all phases of the problems relating to the international control of atomic energy in an endeavour to carry out the terms of reference contained in the resolution of the General Assembly of January 24th, 1946. A better understanding of the benefits as well as obligations which would be involved in an international agreement for the international control of atomic energy seems to be essential for this purpose. This process will inevitably take time, and may be of little use unless a general political understanding is achieved with the Soviet Union.

20. The work of the Atomic Energy Commission must, therefore, be considered in terms of general relations between the Soviet Union and the Western World as the Commission is merely one (though perhaps one of the most important) of a large number of points of contact. A breakdown in these negotiations might well precipitate a crisis in the entire structure of the United Nations. Even if the ultimate success of negotiations were in doubt (a conclusion which at present is premature) it seems imperative that the division between the Soviet Union and the Western World should not come as a result of a breakdown of negotiations in the Atomic Energy Commission.

21. The Canadian delegation has made every effort to avoid bringing to a head the basic differences between the Soviet representative and the other delegations (and in particular that of the United States) in the Commission. On the contrary, every endeavour has been made to maintain an orderly procedure in the negotiations and to maintain a spirit of cordial relationships. This course has been followed not only to advance the work of the Commission itself, but also in the hope that ultimately an agreement between the Soviet Union and the Western World on the questions arising from the discovery of atomic energy may be achieved on a political plane, if or when the Soviet Government believes it advantageous to surrender a sufficient degree of freedom of action in this field in the interests of security or for the wider benefits that may be derived from the peaceful applications of this new source of energy.

22. However, should discussions in the Commission reach a stalemate, it is probable that the United States Government will undertake direct negotiations with the U.S.S.R. through the usual diplomatic channels. Although the main responsibility for such negotiations would naturally be assumed by the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom may also be expected to participate, for in the event of a failure to establish a system of international control over atomic energy, the present tripartite arrangements will presumably be maintained, though consideration will no doubt have to be given to whatever modifications seem necessary to the three partners.

New York, December 5, 1946

TOP SECRET. ATOM No. 186. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins: Reference my ATOM No. 185 of December 3rd.† At request of the United States delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission, Ignatieff and I had a talk with Hancock and Lindsay regarding the proposals which it has been indicated Mr. Baruch would put before the Atomic Energy Commission at the meeting which is called for tomorrow afternoon.

2. Mr. Hancock gave me a copy of the statement, text of which is contained in my immediately following telegram.† Hancock told us that a copy had been shown to Gromyko and Alexandrov at lunch today, December 4th, that Gromyko had read it carefully and according to Hancock had made the comment that, so far as he could see, there was no substantial difference in the United States and Soviet positions, if it were accepted that both the planning and execution of an agreement relating to atomic energy, as well as disarmament, would be vested within the framework of the Security Council and subject to its decisions. Gromyko did not demur in any way at the proposal that this paper be submitted to the Atomic Energy Commission tomorrow and was told that there would be no question of a vote on it at that time.

3. Hancock said that the paper would be introduced personally by Mr. Baruch. Hancock agreed that the procedure, which no doubt would be followed, would be to refer the paper for detailed study to Committee No. 2.

4. As regards the background of the paper, Hancock said that Mr. Byrnes personally was of the opinion that the position of the Soviet Union should be clarified as regards both inspection and control, that it was not satisfactory to permit the Soviet representatives to get away with generalizations on these important questions and he had, therefore, agreed with Mr. Baruch that the maximum clarification should be sought in the report to be submitted to the Security Council at the end of the year.

5. Hancock observed that the conciliatory remarks of Gromyko at Luncheon were characteristic of the present development in Soviet attitude. He suggested that this was a result of recognition on the part of the Soviet that they were likely to have serious unrest in their own country unless they made more consumer goods available; to make consumer goods available it was obviously necessary to restrict armaments.

6. I observed on my part that, while any move by the Soviet representatives to meet us half way should be welcomed, it should not blind us to the fact that agreement on generalizations might lead to misunderstanding if language were not used precisely. We referred in this regard to paragraph 3 of the United States Resolution, and particularly to the second sentence thereof, which had obviously enabled the Soviet Government to argue that they were in agreement with the United States in proposing to invest in the Security Council the powers for "the working out of proposal to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and other limitation or regulation of armaments."

7. I pointed out that it had always been understood that, as regards atomic energy, the proposals would be worked out in the Atomic Energy Commission and after translation into the form of a multilateral Convention would be referred directly to Governments. I urged that extreme care be taken to ensure that no opportunities for ambiguity should be left in any final text of a Resolution submitted for adoption in the Assembly. In this connection I pointed out that, if the situation in Russia had changed as Mr. Hancock had indicated, time was now on our side and there was no need for precipitate action.

8. At the conclusion of our talk, I left with the United States delegation several copies of a composite draft text of a Resolution on disarmament<sup>1</sup> prepared by the advisers of the Canadian delegation to the Assembly, on which the United States delegation passed very favourable comment.

9. You will observe that the United States paper, as presented, lacks the drastic character which we had been led to expect. The fact that in its present form it has only just been made available, may indicate that it was revised to meet the counsels of moderation, which we know had been expressed by others as well as by ourselves. Ends. Message ends.

My dear High Commissioner,

I wish to acknowledge the receipt of your top secret and personal letter of November 28th, to which was attached a message from Mr. Attlee to Mr. Bevin, dated November 26th, dealing with the question of co-operation between the United Kingdom and United States Governments in the field of atomic energy.

In connection with the point made by Mr. Byrnes in his talk with Mr. Bevin that Canada is opposed to the building of a pile in the United Kingdom, I can assure you that the Canadian Government has expressed no opinion to the United States Government on this matter.

I would be grateful if you would convey to Mr. Attlee my appreciation of his courtesy in keeping me informed of these developments.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, December 9, 1946

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I have your letter of December 2nd,† enclosing copy of a letter dated November 28th, from the United Kingdom High Commissioner to the Prime Minister, with a copy of message from Mr. Attlee to Mr. Bevin, concerning cooperation of the United Kingdom Government with the United States Government in the field of atomic energy.

I find on enquiry that the United Kingdom intend to build an experimental pile as first planned, and that the message received referred to a diffusion pile, which is an alternative method for obtaining the same product. It was the latter pile that will not be proceeded with at the present.

Regarding Canada's position, we had understood that the United Kingdom would join with us in developing the pile at Chalk River, and that this would continue to be a joint undertaking. I have no doubt that the United States were given the same understanding, when agreement was reached that the Canadian project would proceed. We were both disturbed when the announcement came that the United Kingdom would proceed independently, particularly as it meant the withdrawal from Canada of a large portion of the top staff at the Canadian project. There was the further feeling that the United Kingdom had been using experimental work in Canada not as a basis for a Canadian development but in reality for a United Kingdom pile on which a large part of the design work was carried out at Chalk River.

However, Canada has accepted the situation and as far as we are concerned, we are giving every cooperation to the project in the United Kingdom. We have, however, made it clear that the Canadian pile will in future be a wholly Canadian project under Canadian direction.

The United States have felt, and probably continue to feel, that there is danger to that country in having an atomic energy pile in a locality that cannot easily be defended. Their experience with security has not been good as far as the United Kingdom is concerned. I know that the military side at least is dubious about transmitting to the United Kingdom processes that the United States regard as secret. As a matter of fact, the United States will not give us information on matters that they feel we should work out by ourselves. We have not complained about the flow of information from the United States to Canada, but we are well aware that information could have flowed in greater volume to the benefit of our project.

The United Kingdom undoubtedly have as much information as we have, which should be sufficient to enable them to get on with their project, although the time element would be assisted by receipt of more complete information.

It seems to me that Canada should not be involved in this argument.

TELEGRAM 389

New York, December 12, 1946

1. At Mr. Baruch's request I went to see him at his home this afternoon, Tuesday, December 11th. On arrival he said he wished to tell me that he proposed to ask the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission to call an open meeting of the Commission so that the proposals which he had put forward at the plenary meeting on 5th December could be put to the vote. He said that Parodi had agreed to give his support. He was also certain that Brazil, Egypt and Australia would give him their full support. He said that the Resolution in its present form would meet, what he called, the Canadian objection to the ownership of mines by the International Authority. (I reminded Mr. Baruch that the Canadian view on this matter was based on grounds of practicability and I thought that everyone in the Commission was now of the same mind.) I said also that Canada had consistently given support in principle to the plan which he had originally put forward. I said I had no doubt that our interests and those of the United States were closely similar; that we both desired to establish a lasting peace in the world and that, for this, control of atomic energy held a key place. I said we did not agree with some of the details of his proposals and I felt that some of the other members of the Commission would also wish to further examine the implications. I said that it was most important to carry the judgment of the Commission in any action which might be proposed.

2. I reminded Mr. Baruch of the discussion on atomic energy in the Assembly which had arisen in relation to disarmament. I questioned whether the time was opportune to duplicate this discussion in another place before agreement, or at least a conclusion, had been reached in the Assembly. In this connection, I referred to the proposals made and pressed by the Canadian delegation which, throughout, had defended both the Atomic Energy Commission and the essential points in the United States position.

3. Mr. Baruch expressed appreciation of our action in the Assembly which, in contrast to Sir Hartley Shawcross, he said, had been very helpful but he still thought the Assembly should be invited to leave atomic energy to the Atomic Energy Commission and that now was the time for a decision. As he put it, "for all men to stand up and be counted". He said that from the discussion in the Assembly no one could really understand the Soviet's intentions and that at this time it was most important to force a clarification of their position.

4. Mr. Baruch recalled the association of our Prime Minister and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom with the Washington Declaration from which, through the Moscow Agreement, was derived the text of the Terms of Reference to the Atomic Energy Commission as contained in the Assembly Resolution of 24th January, 1946.

5. He said that the plan which he had put forward went no further than the Terms of Reference given to the Commission by the Assembly and that he was sure that what he had proposed would commend itself to Mr. King. He had felt the same as regards the attitude of the United Kingdom when Cadogan had been their representative on the Commission but now he was disturbed over the attitude expressed by Shawcross. He referred several times to this and he is obviously very disturbed by Shawcross' proposal in the Assembly Tuesday night that all armaments, as well as armed forces, should be subject to the verification of an International Supervisory Commission. If this were implemented it might involve disclosure of atomic energy information by the United States without the compensating safeguards provided under the Baruch Plan.

6. At this point we were joined by Eberstadt and Lindsay who had come from the Assembly discussion on disarmament in the Sub-Committee of Committee No. 1.

7. Eberstadt spoke appreciatively of the amendments to the Disarmament Resolution proposed by the Canadian delegation to the Assembly. He said that he attached particular importance to our proposed amendment to paragraph 2 as it now stands and he hoped we would accept a proposal that it should appear in the early part of the paragraph rather than at the end. Eberstadt also asked for our support to a general protecting clause to the effect that nothing in the Assembly Resolution should restrict or limit the Assembly Resolution of 24th January setting up the Commission. I assured him that I entirely shared his view.

8. Eberstadt and Lindsay went into the adjoining room to draft a report to Byrnes on the events in the Assembly Committee on Disarmament this afternoon. Baruch said that he would send this himself direct to Byrnes. I made no comment.

9. As I was leaving, Baruch pressed me for assurances that I would give him support in the Atomic Energy Commission. I said I had reported fully to my Government and that I had no doubt I would be given instructions in due course.

1. Accompanied by Ignatieff, I had a long talk this afternoon with Baruch, Swope and Eberstadt.

2. Once again they endeavoured to prevail upon me to give support in the vote on the proposals which they propose should take place at Tuesday's meeting.

3. They told me that they now had six assured votes, including the United Kingdom. Cadogan apparently, on his return, has agreed to second the adoption of the Baruch proposals subject to the following amendments:<sup>1</sup>

(1) Part III, paragraph 3(a), second sub-paragraph; after the words "vested in the authority" add a new sentence "Atomic research for peaceful purposes by national agencies shall be subject to appropriate safeguards established by the International Authority.”

(2) Part III, paragraph 3(e), second sub-paragraph; delete “the permanent members of the Security Council” to end of paragraph, and substitute “a violator of the terms of the Treaty shall not be protected from the consequences of his wrongdoing by the exercise of any power of veto.”

4. These proposals of Cadogan have been accepted by Baruch, and on this understanding we gather that Baruch has been given assurance that Cadogan will second his motion.

5. Baruch explained that the findings and recommendations contained in his proposals were not intended to be exclusive and pointed out that the Resolution which accompanied his proposals stated that “resolved, that Part II of the said report shall contain, among others, the following findings of the Commission.” He also explained that he did not intend that the wording given in his proposals should necessarily be adopted in the final version of the report. He said that his text would be open to drafting changes when the report was being prepared. However, he would insist that the report should at least include the principles contained in the United States Resolution. He said that if these principles were accepted by the Security Council, the way would be opened for the drafting of a multilateral Convention on Atomic Energy as the next step. He did not want to go into too much detail at this stage as this might give rise to prolonged debate in the Security Council. He thought that some of the principles could be examined profitably in detail while in the course of preparation of the draft Convention in the Commission.

6. He urged us most strongly, on this understanding, to give him support next Tuesday. I said that I could not commit myself before consulting my Government. However, I feel that in the circumstances, the wise course would be to give support in principle to the principles put forward by the United States delegation, reserving the right to make amendments in the course of the preparation of the report.

7. In the light of these developments, I propose to make a statement next Tuesday,<sup>1</sup> the substance of which will be given in my immediately following telegram,† and on which I would like to have your comments and general approval. Ends. Message ends.

[Washington,] December 17, 1946

With regard to the attached messages from New York,<sup>1</sup> I have discussed the position in the Atomic Commission by telephone with Messrs. Ignatieff and Reid and later with Mr. Pearson. I said that there was no chance of securing new instructions for Mr. Baruch by making representations at the State Department and that I did not think that the distribution of the text of General McNaughton's speech (which had been delayed in transmission to Washington) would now serve any useful purpose. I pointed out that the issue as presented to the Commission was procedural and that the best tactics were to try to meet it by procedural methods, such as proposing reference to a drafting committee. This would involve consultation with other delegations before the Commission meets again on Friday. It would be advisable, if possible, to get another delegation to move an appropriate resolution, and I suggested that The Netherlands would be suitable as Dr. Van Kleffens had expressed doubt this morning about the acceptance now finally of Mr. Baruch's proposals.

Mr. Pearson was in agreement with the position I had adopted. If it were necessary to vote on the Baruch proposals as they stood, he thought that the Canadian Delegation should abstain on the ground that while they accepted them in principle they felt that it was not yet time to bring them to a final vote in the Commission. On the other hand, he agreed that the issue, which seems to be forced by Mr. Baruch's desire to get a decision by New Year's, might well be put off for a while.

In the view of our delegation I gather that Mr. Baruch, who can probably secure a majority vote in the Commission with Russia, Poland and France at any rate voting in the negative, is taking a line which plays into Russian hands. Although as presented to the Commission the issue is a technical one, they consider it in fact an issue of grave substance, the decision on which may determine whether the work accomplished is worth anything. If Baruch's proposals are carried by a majority only, the issue is only transferred to the Security Council and is in no sense solved.

I am attaching two telegrams, 451 and 452,† received during the night from New York, on atomic energy matters. Last evening I had a long talk with Reid, and I found him and the delegation in a somewhat tense condition. He was inclined to emphasize that they were on the eve of a very important crisis which, if the United States delegation forced a vote Friday, might result in a split between Canada on the one hand and the U.S.A. and the U.K. on the other. They are, however, attempting to persuade the United States not to take any such forcing action, and are hopeful that they may succeed. I agree that, if the Americans act stupidly in this matter and force a vote on the Baruch resolution, paragraph by paragraph, we might well abstain, while accepting the proposal, generally, in principle.

Meanwhile, telegram No. 451 asks for your revisions on a passage from a proposed statement to be given Friday on that part of the Baruch proposal which deals with sanctions. My own view is that this enters unnecessarily into the jurisprudence of the Charter, and lays down an interpretation of the relation of that Charter to the imposition of sanctions "collectively" outside the Charter which will cause a good deal of questioning. However, I am hesitant to interfere with what is going on in New York, because the people on the spot ought to be the best judges, and also because they are so pressed and exhausted that interference might throw them into complete confusion. On the whole, I think the best thing for me to do, if you agree, would be to talk to Reid on the telephone and express my doubts; that is, if you agree with them.

1. Discussion by the Atomic Energy Commission of the Baruch Resolution.
2. My immediately following teletype† gives the text of Section (e) of Recommendation 3 in Part III of the United States Resolution which is now under discussion in the Atomic Energy Commission.

3. On Tuesday, December 17th, General McNaughton referred, as you will have noticed from the text of his address, to the statement on sanctions which you had made in the First Committee of the Assembly.<sup>1</sup>

4. References to sanctions in the United States Resolution may prove to be the only insuperable obstacle to securing by December 31st a unanimous report by the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council.

5. From informal conversations which we had after Tuesday's meeting with members of the Commission and with newspapermen it is apparent that the implications of your statement on sanctions are not, repeat not, generally understood.

6. It would, therefore, I think, be useful if General McNaughton were to try to clarify the problem at the next meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission which takes place on Friday, December 20th.

7. I have prepared a draft of a statement on sanctions which he might make. This has been very hurriedly prepared. General McNaughton would be most grateful if you could find time to send us your revision of this statement.

8. I have tried to put this in as simple language as possible in view of the many misunderstandings about the problem, both within the Commission and by the general public. I am hoping that, as a result of the meeting of the Commission on Friday, it will become apparent that, if the Section on sanctions is deleted from the interim report which the Commission is to make to the Security Council by December 31st, we may be able to get a unanimous report. Otherwise, there is danger that we will split with the Soviet Union on a point which is, as you have said, of no real importance.

9. I understand that the State Department does not take as serious a view as we do of the results of a split vote in the Atomic Energy Commission on the report which it is to make to the Security Council before the end of the year. Senator Austin will be taking charge of the United States delegation to the Security Council about January 8th and the State Department feels that by methods of conciliation in the Security Council, agreement could be reached there. Wilgress, however, feels very strongly and has so told Austin, that if a break should occur in the Atomic Energy Commission, it would be extremely difficult to repair it in the Security Council.

10. We are going through the United States Resolution clause by clause in order to find out the precise points at which—

(a) It conflicts with the General Assembly's Resolution on Disarmament;

(b) It includes "Findings" or "Recommendations" which are better expressed in the parallel Findings and Recommendations of the charter of the Atomic Energy Commission;

(c) Passages in the United States Resolution are susceptible of a number of different constructions, one of which may be dangerous to the aims which we all have in view.

11. From a number of telephone conversations this morning it has become apparent that the United States delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission is beginning to realize that they have put themselves in a very embarrassing position from which they may find it difficult to extricate themselves. They have been this morning pressing us to have informal discussions with them. We are holding them off until we have completed our scrutiny of their Resolution. However, in fairness to them we should like to be able to give them the results of our scrutiny tomorrow (Thursday) morning or afternoon.

12. Consequently, we would appreciate it if you could, at your earliest convenience, let us have your revisions of the passage on sanctions which reads as follows:

(1) This Section, as drafted, deals both with violations by individuals and with violations by nations. These problems require separate treatment.

(2) The Legal Committee of the First Session of the General Assembly has already given consideration to the problem of the creation of new crimes under International Law and of the machinery which should be set up for the punishment of individuals who commit these crimes. This is an extremely difficult and highly technical problem involving as it does not only international legislation but national legislation. It will probably involve making certain new crimes extraditable offences. It may involve the setting up of an International Criminal Court for the trial of persons alleged to have committed these new international crimes.

(3) The second paragraph of Section (e) states that "The judicial or other processes for determination of violations of the Treaty and of punishment therefor, should be swift and certain." No one would disagree with this statement of the objective. There could also be no possible objection to the sentence which follows and which provides that "serious violations of the Treaty should be reported immediately by the Authority to the nations party to the Treaty and to the Security Council."

(4) The next sentence, however, raises some difficulties. It reads as follows as amended by the United States on December 17th:

“In dealing with such violations, a violator of the terms of the Treaty should not be protected from the consequences of his wrongdoing by the exercise of any power of veto.” This sentence is obscure.

(5) Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations states that “nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self defence if an armed attack occurs against a member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security.” This clearly means that a permanent member of the Security Council cannot protect himself from the consequences of certain types of wrongdoing by the exercise of his veto in the Security Council. All he can protect himself against by his veto is the application of sanctions by the Security Council. His veto does not protect him, and could not possibly protect him from condign punishment inflicted on him by the members of the United Nations individually or collectively.

(6) Article 51 would appear therefore to cover the situation which would arise if a permanent member of the Security Council made an armed attack against another member of the United Nations. However, this Article, by itself, does not cover acts of aggression or threats of aggression which do not constitute armed attack. One such act might be the illicit manufacture of atomic bombs in violation of the international Treaties or Conventions on the Control of Atomic Energy.

(7) However, paragraph 4 of Article 2 of the Charter reads as follows:

“All members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.”

(8) The first of the purposes of the United Nations is:

“To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace. . .”

(9) The undertaking in paragraph 4 of Article 2 of the Charter is an undertaking by all the members of the United Nations, by the permanent members of the Security Council as well as by the other fifty members of the United Nations.

(10) If a permanent member of the Security Council violates its solemn undertaking under paragraph 4 of Article 2, it has violated the most important provision of the Charter of the United Nations. Any such violation would release all the other members of the United Nations from their obligation under the Charter not to threaten or use force against that delinquent State.

They would, however, continue to remain bound by their obligation in the Charter to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace.

(11) Let us therefore consider what would actually happen if the International Atomic Authority, set up by Treaties or Conventions with full powers of inspection and report, were to report that a permanent member of the Security Council was manufacturing atomic bombs in violation of the Treaty. The report of the International Atomic Authority would go direct to the members of the United Nations and to the Security Council. The members of the United Nations might take coercive action immediately or they might wait until the matter has been discussed by the Security Council. If they chose the latter course the permanent member which was illicitly manufacturing atomic bombs would, of course, veto the imposition of sanctions against himself. The meeting of the Security Council would be adjourned and the members of the Security Council, other than the culprit State, could then meet immediately as the Supreme War Council of an ad hoc coalition against the culprit State. This Supreme War Council would have at its disposal the machinery of the Military Staff Committee from which the members of the culprit State would either have seceded or have been ejected. They could also, if they so desired, and it might be desirable, call a special session of the Assembly which could, under the Rules of Procedure of the Assembly meet fifteen days after the call. The culprit State would have no veto in the Assembly so that the Assembly could immediately constitute itself the legislative body of the world coalition.

(12) Thus, under present circumstances, little would be gained by trying to persuade each of the permanent members of the Security Council to give up its veto over the imposition of military sanctions against a State found to be committing serious violations of the Convention or Conventions on atomic energy.

(13) This does not mean that in future it might not be desirable to deprive the permanent members of the Council of their present right to veto the imposition of sanctions. If, as we all hope, we meet with success in the task on which the United Nations is now engaged—general disarmament and the prohibition of methods of mass destruction—we may, and I hope we shall, reach a point at which the forces immediately at the disposal of the Security Council will so outnumber the forces at the disposal of any State, large or small, that the mere threat by the Security Council to use its forces against that State would be sufficient to bring it to terms. Under such circumstances, a proposal to deprive the permanent members of the Security Council of their present veto over the imposition of military sanctions would become realistic.

(14) Nor does what I have said mean that the International Atomic Authority should not be given power, under the Convention or Conventions establishing it, to impose certain sanctions against States which violate the Conventions—and impose these sanctions by the normal two-thirds vote.

These sanctions might include withdrawal of licences, cutting off of raw materials, closing down of power plants in the territory of the offending State and so on." Text Ends.

Ottawa, December 19, 1946

I have gone over the Atomic Energy telegram No. 451 (Atom No. 207) with Mr. Warren and Mr. Halstead. The following points seem to emerge:

(1) The Delegation is afraid that the reference to the Veto (page 4, para. 4) will prevent agreement being reached.

(2) The Delegation therefore says that this clause isn't really necessary because under Art. 51 and Art. 2, section 4, members of the United Nations are bound to take action in common against an aggressor or a violator of treaty obligation.

(3) This interpretation seems to us to be an expansion in the meaning of the Charter which will not be accepted without argument. It assumes that nations which, because of violations of the Charter, are freed from obligations not to take action, nevertheless remain bound to unite against the violation or aggression. It also assumes that they will in fact agree, as United Nations, on an immediate course of action.

I have had another talk with Reid regarding the two atomic telegrams, 451 and 452.† I pointed out to him the difficulties which we felt we might get into if we laboured the argument which he makes in paragraphs 10 and 11 of 451. I said that I thought these paragraphs really should be omitted, or at least drastically modified along the lines which you indicated to me over the telephone. Reid feels now that it may not be necessary to make a statement, as the United States are at last becoming impressed by the impossibility of their present position. If, however, any statement is required, paragraph 10 will be modified to make it less categorical, and paragraph 11 will be omitted.

TELEGRAM 457

New York, December 19, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ATOM No. 210. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following for St. Laurent from Reid, Begins:

1. My teletype ATOM No. 207 of December 18th. Discussion by the Atomic Energy Commission of the Baruch Resolution. My immediately following teletype† contains the text of the "Observations" of the Canadian delegation on the United States Resolution (Baruch proposals), the text of which was sent to you in ATOM No. 187.† This is a complete statement with the exception of the statement on sanctions which was teletyped to you yesterday, ATOM No. 207.

2. The representatives of the United States delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission will be calling on us at 4:30 this afternoon and we shall hand them in confidence, and as a draft, the part of our observations which is given in my immediately following teletype.† If we have received clearance from you by 4:30 we shall hand them in confidence the passages on sanctions.

3. It now looks as if the United States delegation will capitulate and that they will accept tomorrow (Friday) the face-saving amendment to their Resolution which General McNaughton moved on Tuesday.

4. If they do not, it would look as if we ought to follow the following tactics, which I went over yesterday afternoon by telephone with Pearson: a very conciliatory brief statement by General McNaughton at the Commission's meeting tomorrow stating that he has studied the United States Resolution with care in order to find out the precise points at which (A, B, and C from paragraph 10 of ATOM 207) the apprehensions which he had expressed on Tuesday had been justified; that he therefore urged the United States to accept his amendment of Tuesday. If this fails (but I think that the chances are most unlikely that it will) it would then be necessary for us to circulate to the Commission immediately our observations on the United States Resolution. Ends. Message ends.

New York, December 19, 1946

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. ATOM No. 212. Following from Escott Reid, Begins:

1. Dr. Mann, the Scientific Adviser to the United Kingdom delegation, called this morning about 11:30 to see Ignatieff and, in Ignatieff's absence at a Committee meeting, was referred to me.

2. He had been sent to tell us that the United Kingdom delegation will inform Eberstadt of the United States delegation at 2:30 this (Thursday) afternoon that the United Kingdom will support in tomorrow's (Friday's) meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission the two Canadian amendments to the United States Resolution under which the words "the draft of the" are inserted in the two operative parts of the Resolution. The United Kingdom delegation will also inform Eberstadt this afternoon that they intend tomorrow to move the deletion of the eight words at the end of paragraph 2 of section (e) of Recommendation 3, so that the last sentence of this paragraph would read as follows:

"In dealing with such violations, a violator of the terms of the Treaty should not, repeat not, be protected from the consequences of his wrong-doing".

3. The United Kingdom delegation is considering an improved version of our amendment which they may move. It would replace the two operative parts of the Resolution by words along the following lines:

"Instructs Committee No. 2 to include the United States Resolutions in their draft report which they will discuss in detail before transmitting a comprehensive report to the Commission".

4. Mann also told me with considerable bitterness of feeling, and in the strictest confidence, that the United States delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission had called a meeting of seven members of the Commission (United Kingdom, China, Brazil, Mexico, Australia, Egypt and United States) on Tuesday morning, December 17th, before the meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission. The meeting lasted for half an hour. Eberstadt for the United States, insisted that those present, who constituted a majority of the Commission, should refuse to accept any amendments to the United States Resolution and that that Resolution should be voted through at the meeting of the Commission that morning. When the Mexican representative, who is now Chairman of the Commission, stated that he would have to maintain a position of impartiality, Eberstadt said that while he could pretend to be impartial, it must be understood that "what we want is a vote".

5. Dr. Mann also heard that it was as the result of a cable to Dr. Evatt, presumably from Baruch, that the Australian delegation received instructions to vote for the United States Resolution.

6. From what Mann said, I should think it is doubtful whether the United Kingdom has for many centuries had the whip applied to it in this way by another Power.

7. I told Mann, in confidence, that Eberstadt was calling on us at 4:30 this afternoon and that we would be handing him a nine-page single-space memorandum containing our "observations" on the United States Resolution, and would be letting him know that we do not, repeat not, intend to recede from the amendments which we had moved on Tuesday.

8. I also suggested to Mann that, in the unlikely event that the United States did not capitulate before Friday's meeting, it might be wise for us to consider whether one of us (United Kingdom or Canada) ought not to move a procedural motion deferring a vote on the United States Resolution. I said that it would appear to me that there would, by to-morrow morning's meeting, be five certain votes in favour of such a procedural Resolution (Canada, Netherlands, France, U.S.S.R., Poland), and four, and possibly five, certain votes against (United States, Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, and possibly Australia). The United Kingdom and China might, therefore, hold the balance but, if the United Kingdom were to support a procedural Resolution for deferment of the vote, it would probably swing China and Australia, so that if it were necessary to press the procedural motion to a vote it would then be passed by a satisfactory vote of eight to four.

9. Almost immediately after Mann left, Mr. Pearson telephoned me to state that you felt that Canada should not become too involved in the argument, that the last part of the section on sanctions in the United States Resolution was not necessary. This is the part which begins "In dealing with such violations". Pearson went over the speech with me by telephone and agreed, subject to further consideration, that if we considered it necessary we might use an amended version of the statement at Friday's meeting.

10. The amended version would differ as follows from the text transmitted to you under ATOM<sup>1</sup> of today:

(1) Add at the end of paragraph 2, "In view of the complexities of the problem, it might be wise, at this stage of the work of the Commission, to do no more than establish the principle that individuals should be punished for violations of the Conventions. The first sentence of this section (with the omission of the words "and upon nations") would appear to cover adequately, so far as the present interim report is concerned, the problem of violations by individuals".

---

(2) Change the last sentence of paragraph 5 to read, "His veto does not protect him and could not possibly protect him from condign punishment inflicted on him by his fellow members of the United Nations".

(3) Delete paragraph 8.

(4) Amend the second sentence of paragraph 10 to read, "Any such violation would be likely to make other members of the United Nations feel that they are released from their obligation under the Charter, not to threaten or use force against that delinquent State".

(5) Substitute for the succeeding two paragraphs, which are both numbered "11" in our copy of the teletype (the first of these paragraphs begins "They would however"; the second paragraph begins "Let us therefore consider"), the following paragraph:

"The mere existence of the veto in the Security Council would make no practical difference. If there came about a situation where it was generally felt that it was necessary to take armed measures against a Great Power which was threatening the peace of the world, those armed measures would be taken—veto or no veto. There can be 'no question of the right of complying States, veto or no veto, to take immediate action in defence of the rule of law'. (The quotation is from the address delivered by Mr. Byrnes, the Secretary of State of the United States, before the General Assembly on December 13th)".

(6) We would then move immediately to paragraph 12, which begins, "Thus under present circumstances".

(7) The second sentence of the next paragraph would be reworded as follows:

"If the United Nations succeeds in the task on which it is now engaged—general disarmament, the prohibition of methods of mass destruction, and the implementation of Article 43—the forces at the disposal of the Security Council will be so overwhelmingly superior to the forces of any State, large or small, that the mere threat by the Security Council to use those forces against that State would be sufficient to bring it to terms".

11. I shall telephone Mr. Pearson to-morrow (Friday) morning at 9:15 a.m. to find out whether you or he have any further improvements to suggest and whether we have your permission to use the amended statement at the meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission on Friday, at 10:30 a.m. if, in our judgment, it would be useful.<sup>1</sup> Ends.

1. My immediately preceding telegram† contains the text of my statement to the Atomic Energy Commission on Friday, 20th December, and of the Resolution passed by the Commission by a vote of ten in favour, with Lange (Poland) abstaining and Gromyko not taking part in the vote.<sup>1</sup>

2. Before the meeting Gromyko told Wilgress that he had no instructions and did not expect to receive any for some days. In consequence, he could take no part in the day's proceedings. At the beginning of the meeting Gromyko, speaking in a most conciliatory manner asked for a postponement of six or seven days as he was unable to speak on the substance of the United States Resolution and wanted more time to compare it with the General Assembly Resolution of the 14th of December on disarmament.

3. I spoke immediately afterwards and Baruch accepted my amendment stating that he interpreted it as acceptance of "the principles embodied in" his Resolution. Cadogan, Hasluck and Alberto (Brazil) also supported it. Parodi commended the Resolution for its precise wording and gave our whole position the warmest support. He again clarified his position on the veto. He said that "minor sanctions" could be provided for within the terms of the Convention and might include restriction of the supply of material and the withdrawal of licences. He said the question of "major sanctions" could be dealt with either by stipulating that States breaking the terms of the Convention should be considered parties to a dispute, or by invoking Article 51 of the Charter.

4. Lange (Poland) said that any forcing of a vote which could not be unanimously accepted must have the effect, whatever the intentions of those who proposed it, of destroying the atmosphere of co-operation attained in the Assembly. He begged that we should not now throw this away improvisantly and create an atmosphere of disagreement. In what seemed to be an effort to get Gromyko's consent, he suggested an amendment to the Resolution which would merely refer the United States Resolution to Committee No. 2, omitting any suggestion of approval of the United States Resolution. I said I very much regretted that I could not accept this change and Lange then introduced a Resolution of his own referring the United States Resolution to Committee No. 2 for consideration.

5. I immediately announced (on the suggestion of Ignatieff) that I would be obliged with regret to abstain from voting on the Polish Resolution, and expressed the hope that Lange would likewise return this courtesy by abstaining from voting on the Canadian Resolution. Gromyko stated that he would not participate in the voting, including that on the Polish Resolution, as he interpreted it as approval of the United States Resolution.

6. Gromyko's motion to adjourn was defeated by ten votes to two (Poland and the U.S.S.R.). When Lange explained that his Resolution did not imply any approval of the United States Resolution, Gromyko voted in favour of it. It was rejected by nine votes to two, with Canada abstaining.

7. Lange then said that in order to demonstrate that spirit of conciliation shown by the Canadian delegation he would, for that reason only, abstain from voting on the Resolution, which enabled the Resolution, as amended by Canada, to be adopted with no contrary votes.

8. After the meeting, members of the United States delegation, including Baruch, Eberstadt, Hancock and Tolman expressed, not only their warm approval, but also their appreciation of the action taken by the Canadian delegation. Eberstadt, in particular, made the comment that the results of the meeting amply justified the work of the previous evening when I gave him the substance of the Resolution I was prepared to move. Warm support was expressed especially by Lange, Parodi, Kramers (Netherlands) and Briggs (Australia). Herring of the Secretariat phoned especially to express his appreciation of our efforts. Ends. IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. ATOM 222. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from Ignatieff, Begins:

1. Lindsay of the U.S.A. delegation got in touch with me Sunday night, December 22nd, and came to dinner with me. In a friendly and conciliatory atmosphere we discussed the events of last Friday in the Atomic Commission and the problem of dealing with the amendments of the U.S.A. Resolutions in the Working Committee.

2. As to the past he was frank in admitting that the Canadian amendment had helped the Commission out of a most difficult situation. He expressed himself personally and in confidence as having opposed the tactics that had been employed by Mr. Baruch.

3. The important points mentioned were:

(a) That in view of what he described as the weak leadership given by the executive side of the Government of the United States in recent months many had thought it necessary that Mr. Baruch as one of the few acknowledged leaders of the United States should assert this leadership, otherwise the prestige of the United States Government would suffer at home and abroad.

(b) That the decision on Friday at least recorded the fact that ten nations were anxious to get on with the job, and would not accept tactics of delay from the Soviet representatives.

(c) That as a result of the displeasure caused by the tactics of Eberstadt and Swope, Hancock's influence would probably come to the fore again.

4. The question of the interpretation of the Canadian amendment came up. I explained that our understanding of the amendment was that, the principles of which the findings and recommendations contained in the United States Resolution were based, would be included in the draft of the final report from the Commission to the Security Council, subject only to amendments in the interest of clarity and precision, except in those cases where these findings and recommendations were not, repeat not, in conformity with the Assembly Resolution on Disarmament.

5. I pointed out that any reference to the use of veto by the permanent members in the Security Council on atomic energy matters was a case where the United States Resolution would be found not to be in conformity with the Assembly Resolution.

6. Lindsay gave the impression that at least some members of the United States delegation accepted this view but this was an issue to which Mr. Baruch personally attached the greatest significance.

7. I suggested there were really two important principles involved:

(a) That any nation seriously or consistently violating the Convention should be subject to immediate and condign punishment. The implementation of that principle involved measures of collective force by the signatory States rather than the rule of unanimity in the Security Council, which in this context was academic (I referred to Mr. St. Laurent's statement in the Assembly).

(b) That no nation should be able to hinder or thwart the International Control and Inspection Authority in its day to day functions which might be expected to include the imposition of penalties for minor infringements of the Convention. This would obviously have to be worked out in some detail, taking into account the statements made by the Soviet representatives during the disarmament discussions in the Assembly that the veto would not apply in the various control organs set up under the terms of the Convention or Conventions.

8. Lindsay asked whether I would offer an amendment to the United States Resolution incorporating these ideas and pressed me several times asking to have it by Monday night December 23rd. He gave me to understand that Mr. Baruch might be persuaded to accept an amendment which would assert the principle of swift and condign punishment for nations violating the Convention and indicating that the implementation of this principle would require effective measures such as the immediate application of collective force within the framework of the United Nations.

9. Since dictating the above I have had another call from Lindsay. He indicated that sympathetic and detailed consideration was being given to the proposed Canadian amendments many of which he thought would not only be accepted but welcomed by the United States delegation.

10. He said that Hancock was arranging a cocktail party for representatives from each of the delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission this afternoon at 6:00 at the Union League Club, Soviet and Polish representatives to be included.

11. It is Hancock's intention to provide a cordial and conciliatory atmosphere for all delegates to discuss informally the question of amending the United States Resolutions. I naturally accepted the invitation and will go prepared for a general discussion but not for detailed consideration of amendments. Ends. Message ends.

SECRET. ATOM No. 227. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins: Following is the text of a statement which I made in the Working Committee yesterday afternoon after it had become clear that there was no hope whatever of persuading the United States delegation to refrain from pressing the question of the veto to a conclusion.

"The Canadian delegation had hoped that in drafting our report to the Security Council we would find language in this important section which would make it possible, particularly for all the permanent members of the Security Council, to be in agreement on this important issue. That has been our paramount consideration with regard to this matter. I note that the representative of one of the permanent members is not participating in the discussion (U.S.S.R.). Another has expressed reservations (France) and another has added some doubts as to the need for particular words (United Kingdom). The Canadian delegation takes an objective view. We want a satisfactory result. We are more concerned with this result than with the method and we will, therefore, conform to the views of the majority of the Committee on this text.

We have drawn attention in our memorandum to the need for consideration to be given to possible action under Article 51 or other provisions of the Charter and this idea is now reflected in the draft before us. Thus, if this text is approved when the matter goes before the Security Council, the Committee will have provided two suggestions regarding methods of dealing with the consequences of serious violations of the Treaty for consideration. If the first is not agreed upon in the Security Council, then we have the other one which, in our view, may offer a practical basis of finding a solution to the problem of enforcement."

2. A full report on the meeting follows in my next succeeding message. Ends. Message ends.

New York, December 28, 1946

SECRET. ATOM No. 228. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following for Pearson from Ignatieff, Begins:

1. As agreed with Mr. Pearson and General McNaughton by telephone conversation with Ottawa, I visited Eberstadt at his request at the offices of the United States delegation to discuss with him amendments to the United States Resolution contained in AEC/15 December 14th, 1946, in the light of the Canadian memorandum entitled "Observations of the Canadian Delegation on the Resolution Proposed by the United States" dated December 19th, 1946.†

2. I went over the United States paper paragraph by paragraph, concentrating on the more important of the changes suggested in the Canadian memorandum. Eberstadt agreed to a substantial number of useful changes in the language of the United States Resolution.

3. We were not, however, able to reach agreement on Recommendation 3 (E) which includes the sub-paragraphs relating to the veto question, on which I reported separately in my message ATOM No. 223, December 27th, 1946.†

4. At the conclusion of our discussion, Eberstadt said that he would incorporate the changes to which he had agreed in a revised draft of AEC/15 and this text, which is transmitted verbatim to you in my immediately following message,† served as a basis of discussion at a meeting of the Working Committee on December 27th.

5. The changes accepted by Eberstadt are indicated by the words which are underlined, with the consequent omissions from the United States text placed in brackets.

6. You will observe that a note was entered before the beginning of Recommendation 3 (E) to the effect that the sub-paragraph was discussed but not agreed upon.

7. A separate message† will report on the further changes that were agreed upon in the discussion of this paper in the Working Committee. Ends. Message ends.

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

Ottawa, December 30, 1946

12. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, referring to the discussion at the [Cabinet] meeting of December 27th, reported upon further developments in New York.

The Canadian Delegation were going to accept the Baruch proposals. They had attempted to have the U.S. representatives accept some modification in reference to the veto, with the object not of protecting the veto but of obtaining an agreed text which would achieve wider support.

The United States, however, were determined to hold to their original proposals in this respect. On the other hand, the U.S.S.R. took the attitude that the U.S. representatives, in this particular case, were attempting improperly to change the provisions of the Charter. For practical purposes it was a matter of indifference whether the veto was or was not referred to in the report to the Security Council.

13. THE PRIME MINISTER said that it was evident that the United States would not undertake to give up the atomic bomb or enter an international agreement if a violator were to be protected by the veto. As the Minister had pointed out, the United States had come to regard this as a test of Soviet good faith. In the circumstances, the Canadian Delegation had been instructed to support the U.S. position and vote accordingly on the report to the Security Council.<sup>1</sup>

14. THE CABINET, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report and the course to be followed by the Canadian Delegation.

London, January 14, 1946

My dear John [Baldwin],

This is by way of an interim reply to your letters of 27th December, 1945, and 3rd January 1946,† but, first may I extend to you the Season's Greetings and best wishes for 1946.

PORTUGAL

We are proceeding without any more formal request to approach the Portuguese Government for the privilege required in Portuguese territory by the Government of Canada,<sup>1</sup> and I have asked the Foreign Office to discuss with the Portuguese Government the best procedure for negotiating the Agreement. I anticipate no difficulty in securing the right to exercise all 5 freedoms in Portuguese territory, with reciprocal rights limited to Freedoms 1 to 4.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Voir les documents 1240, 1241 et 1242.

1e Liberté: La liberté de traverser un territoire sans atterrir;

2e Liberté: La liberté d'atterrir pour des raisons non commerciales;

3e Liberté: La liberté de débarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises embarqués sur le territoire de l'État dont l'aéronef possède la nationalité;

4e Liberté: La liberté d'embarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises à destination du territoire de l'État dont l'aéronef possède la nationalité;

<sup>1</sup> See Documents 1240, 1241 and 1242.

1st Freedom: The freedom to fly across a territory without landing;

2nd Freedom: The freedom to land for non-traffic purposes;

3rd Freedom: The freedom to put down passengers, mail and cargo taken on in the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;

4th Freedom: The freedom to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;

5th Freedom: The freedom to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of another State and the privilege to put down passengers, mail and cargo coming from any such territory.

As regards rights for R.C.A.F. aircraft, the Air Staff will be pleased to take up, on your behalf, any rights you require at the Azores to enable R.C.A.F. transport services to continue to operate so long as Canadian occupation forces are in Europe.

AMENDMENTS TO BERMUDA DOCUMENTS

Our copies contain the same errors as appear in yours, and we will make the necessary corrections, taking our exchange of letters as authority.

There is a further error in paragraph 8 of our copy of the Annex to the Bilateral Agreement. In the first sentence reference is made to "to capacity to which it is entitled under the preceding paragraph". This reference occurs in two places in the sentence. In both cases "paragraph" should be altered to read "paragraphs", since capacity under paragraph 5 as well as under paragraph 7 is involved. Here again I suggest we amend our respective copies.

EXCHANGE RESTRICTIONS

Lord Winster<sup>1</sup> has written to the Chancellor of the Exchequer representing the views of the Canadian Government, as expressed by Mr. Howe, and strongly recommending exemption from the restriction in the case of air passages. We will advise you by telegram when a reply is received.

WEST INDIES AGREEMENTS<sup>2</sup>

The Colonial Office have proposed to the Caribbean Colonies the same basis of qualified reciprocity as the Bermudian Government accepted, and we will let you have their reactions by telegram.

As regards stopping places, it would be preferable if they could be specified. Could you not specify all the possibles on the basis of "a route from Canada to the West Indian Islands and beyond via Bermuda, including all or any of the following stopping places ....."?

As regards the Form of the Annex, I suggest that we should open with a paragraph in which H.M.G.<sup>3</sup> on behalf of the various Colonies (to be named) accords to T.C.A., as the designated airline in Canada, the right to pick-up and set-down traffic in U.K. territories (except for cabotage traffic between the Islands South of Bermuda), on a route between Canada and the West Indian Islands and beyond via Bermuda, and calling at all or any of the following places. The capacity and frequencies of the services, and the tariffs to be charged, shall be agreed at the outset and on subsequent revision, between the Government of Canada and the Government of the U.K. on behalf of the Colonial Governments concerned.

This could be followed by a paragraph embodying the Provisions we agreed at Bermuda as regards reciprocity. Then continue with a paragraph

to the effect that in the event of any of the Governments concerned electing to exercise the rights of reciprocal operation in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph, the following provisions shall apply as regards services between Canada and the territory concerned. Then follow with those standard provisions which are appropriate.

If this suggestion accords with your views we will prepare a draft on these lines.

Mr. Howe's point about reciprocal operation from individual Colonies really need not give cause for concern. In the first place, the negligible capacity to which each individual Colony would be entitled on a 3rd and 4th Freedom basis places a series of independent Colonial operations beyond the realms of practical air line operation. In the second place, B.W.I.A.<sup>1</sup> is being developed as the chosen instrument for the British Caribbean area, and any reciprocal rights would be exercised by them as the designated airline of all the Colonies.

Turning to your letter of 3rd January about Iceland, we have not yet negotiated our Bilateral Agreement with the Icelandic Government. We would propose, therefore, to deal simultaneously with Canada and the U.K. (by separate Agreements), subject to the proviso that we should not pursue 5th Freedom rights on your behalf if Iceland will not grant them on a non-reciprocal basis. Again, we need no formal request to act as your agents unless the Icelandic Government asks for our credentials!

I look forward to our next meeting. I have the happiest recollections of our talks at Bermuda. What more proof is needed that complete frankness and a spirit of mutual accommodation will solve most international problems? I hope to have an opportunity to pay an early visit to Montreal to see P.I.C.A.O. at work, and, while in Canada I could not miss visiting your lovely city again.

You will probably have noticed that we have embarked on discussions with the Americans at Bermuda. Apparently the Americans came forward with the proposals whilst we were in Bermuda, and as they were anxious that conversation should be in progress when the Loan Bill is introduced into Congress, we have met their wishes. Hildred has taken my usual place in the team, and I can only hope that this Delegation will succeed where their predecessors have failed.

My warmest regards to Mr. Howe and Mr. Symington and to all the Canadian team.

Yours sincerely,

W. C. G. CRIBBETT

P.S. Do come to the next C.A.T.C.<sup>2</sup> meeting.

DESPATCH 144

Ottawa, February 7, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose herewith the Instrument of Ratification of the Convention on International Civil Aviation.†

The Convention was approved by Resolution of the House of Commons on November 26, 1945, and by Resolution of the Senate of Canada on December 5, 1945. The Instrument was executed on February 1, 1946, pursuant to Order in Council P.C. 214 of January 26, 1946, which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to execute the ratification and to provide for the deposit of the Instrument with the United States Government.

It would be much appreciated if you could arrange for the enclosed Instrument to be deposited with the United States Government, in accordance with the provisions of Article 91 of the aforesaid Convention.

*Memorandum from Privy Council Office to Minister

Ottawa, February 13, 1946

The attached memorandum represents my own preliminary reflections upon the effect of the new U.K.-U.S. agreement as far as Canada is concerned. I have prepared it in some haste because I wanted it to reach your hands before you left for the West Coast.

J. R. BALDWIN

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémoire du Bureau du Conseil privé Memorandum by Privy Council Office

Ottawa, February 13, 1946

The new U.K.-U.S. aviation agreement signed in Bermuda with its substantial modification of the previous U.K. policy has a direct bearing on Canadian aviation policy.

The new agreement provides for a reciprocal U.K.-U.S. exchange of the first five freedoms. While it establishes certain very broad principles regarding maintenance of equilibrium between capacity and traffic and protection of local traffic, there is no specific mechanism for regulation of capacity or frequencies; apparently the U.K. is relying on a clause giving it the right to register a complaint with PICAO if the U.S. misuses its privileges.

There are four important considerations for Canada.

1. The effect of this agreement upon present work of PICAO.
2. The advantages and disadvantages for Canada in adopting a similar policy.
3. The possibility of a Canadian grant of the fifth freedom on a limited basis only.
4. The desirability of revision of Canadian agreements with the U.S. and U.K.

I. On the first of these points, PICAO has been studying regulation of rates, capacity and frequencies in an attempt to find a satisfactory formula for the permanent convention. The lines along which it has been working, apparently with some success, provide for protection of fifth freedom traffic through a rate differential and adjustment of third and fourth freedom traffic on a regular basis. The regulatory features have been more stringent than those contained in the U.K.-U.S. agreement.

Should the U.K.-U.S. formula be taken over by PICAO with a view to incorporating it in the permanent convention, along with the five freedoms? Generally it would appear that PICAO would scarcely be able to get agreement on a formula more rigid than that now accepted by the two major nations, the U.K. and U.S. It is true that the lines along which PICAO has been working are preferable to the principles in the U.K.-U.S. agreement and there is always the slight possibility that some of the smaller countries such as Belgium and Canada will be sufficiently keen on a solution along the lines already under discussion in PICAO, and will keep the matter open. On balance, however, it is unlikely that the U.S. will accept a greater degree of control in PICAO than it has in the U.K. agreement. Moreover we can scarcely expect the U.K., having accepted the Bermuda deal, to strive for anything more advanced in PICAO now.

Under the circumstances the best thing might be to ask Mr. McKim to sound out some of the other Council members, particularly those who have been interested in achieving a satisfactory permanent convention, letting us know his opinion on the foregoing points. If it appears that we are confronted with the alternative of either leaving the permanent convention as it is or incorporating the new U.K.-U.S. approach then we will have to decide whether from the Canadian point of view this would be in our interest.

II. As for the respective advantages and disadvantages of granting fifth freedom rights in Canada, it is difficult to do more than guess at probable results. If we are to grant any fifth freedom rights in Canada presumably we would have to make them available to both the U.K. and U.S. at least. We might encounter the following competitive developments in respect of our own traffic position on certain routes.

(a) We might expect U.K. and U.S. competition on the route from the central and western portion of the U.S. to Europe via Chicago and Montreal. This would probably be the most serious result of any granting of fifth freedom rights in Canada.

(b) We might expect a limited amount of competition for traffic between Eastern Canada and the U.S. Atlantic seaboard and for traffic between Eastern Canada and the U.K. It is unlikely that the U.S. will fly many planes to Europe via Montreal. The U.K. has, however, indicated in the agreement with the U.S. that it intends to operate a route to Montreal and then to New York, New Orleans and Mexico; this might siphon off some Canadian traffic. In general, however, with the possible exception of direct service to Scandinavia it might be expected that most of the trans-Atlantic operations to New York will run directly without making a traffic stop at any Canadian centre and in consequence any loss to Canada would be slight. (Moreover, any siphoning off of Canada-U.S. traffic would be, under present arrangements, at the expense of a U.S. air line (Colonial) rather than at the expense of TCA).

(c) Some years hence if the Northwest Staging [Route] becomes a major artery to the Far East fifth freedom rights on this route might be important, particularly for the U.S., and we might suffer some loss of traffic. This, however, is at least five to ten years in the future and is scarcely an immediate problem.

(d) Lines operating from Latin America and the West Indies to the U.S. will want to come on to Canada and will want to have fifth freedom rights between Canada and the U.S. This situation might seriously affect the amount of traffic available to Canadian and U.S. lines on border routes if allowed to develop extensively. Presumably most of them will want to operate between major traffic centres in Canada and U.S. primarily New York, Chicago, Toronto and Montreal.

It should be borne in mind that in effect certain U.S. Lines already have fifth freedom rights from Canada to Latin America. For example, American Airlines operates to Toronto and Mexico City and may sell tickets in Toronto to anyone wishing to travel to Mexico. This is an argument we should keep in mind in re-negotiation with the U.S.

On the other hand certain advantages should accrue to Canada from fifth freedom rights elsewhere.

(a) Fifth freedom rights in the U.K. would be important to us if we should decide to operate on to the Continent of Europe. Unless there is some modification of present plans, however, this would be of little use to us for the next few years. Certainly if we grant fifth freedom rights we should review our plans in this connection with a view to getting full benefit from these rights in the U.K.

(b) On our Pacific service we would presumably have access to U.S. traffic on the West Coast and in Hawaii. This should be a substantial advantage. (In fact the advantage might be such as to justify our looking again at the joint arrangements with Australia and New Zealand to see whether it would be wise to continue on the pooled basis which we have accepted hitherto).

(c) Fifth freedom rights in the U.S. would be very useful on any route to the West Indies and Latin America. In fact they might be sufficiently important to justify concentrating more than we have done hitherto on plans for development of our southern service, extending its coverage and intensity if we can get fifth freedom rights in the U.S.

(d) It would be possible to use the matter of fifth freedom rights as reason for the review of the Canada-U.S. exchange of notes, and possible modification of policy. First, however, it would have to be clearly determined that there would be any advantages for Canada in modification.

Substantially, modification might be expected to take the line of agreement that on either all or at least the major Canada-U.S. routes competitive services would be allowed, subject, of course to rate control. (The net effect would be the same since if all routes were opened for competition in this fashion it is likely that competition would develop only on the more heavily travelled routes). In this event the U.S. would probably want to put services on between Toronto and Chicago, and between Toronto and New York and possibly between Toronto and Cleveland. We in return would probably want to put services on from Ottawa and Montreal to New York and possibly Washington, from Winnipeg to Chicago, would presumably wish to straighten our Toronto-Chicago run out to include Windsor and might wish to run from Vancouver to Seattle.

On balance this exchange appears relatively even. It should, however have the added merit for Canada of allowing the development of certain special operations of a particularly economical nature which would be advantageous, such as triangular operation between Toronto, New York, and Montreal, and possibly triangular operation between Winnipeg, Chicago and Toronto and between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle.

III. If we should decide to grant any fifth freedom rights would it have to be done on a full multilateral basis or could we grant them only to the U.K. and U.S.? If the general Bermuda formula is incorporated in the permanent convention it may be extremely difficult for us to avoid its acceptance, thus making a multilateral grant of the first five freedoms. On any other basis, however, it might be desirable for the present at least to limit any grant of the fifth freedom to the U.K. and U.S. (and possibly to any Latin American country to which we intend to operate). We could do this without being accused of discrimination because we could argue that any wider extension of services in our own particular sphere would inevitably mean disequilibrium between traffic and capacity.

Another possibility which should be seriously considered is that even if we grant general or limited fifth freedom rights we might make a special reservation in respect of traffic between Canada and the U.S., reserving this solely for carriage by Canada and U.S. airlines on the present basis of trans-frontier extensions of domestic services.

IV. As regards present agreements comment has already been made upon the question of revision of the exchange of notes with the U.S. We might also indicate to the U.K. that in our opinion the principles of the U.K.-U.S. agreement should be taken over and applied to the Canada-West Indies agreement. I am not certain that we need suggest a similar modification of the Canada-U.K. agreement at present although that may have to be done a little later.

SUMMARY

On balance it seems to me that if the Bermuda formula is accepted by PICAQ Canada will probably have to accept it and that in that event we should certainly seek revision of all our outstanding agreements including that with the U.S.

In the interim, we might gain sufficient advantages (1) out of fifth freedom rights in the U.S. on our Latin American and Pacific runs and (2) in revision of our agreement with the U.S., to justify a grant of the five freedoms to the U.S. and to the U.K. For the present I would be inclined to try to hold back on any fifth freedom agreements with any Latin American countries with the possible exception of Brazil and any other territory such as Cuba to which we may plan to operate. I would also be inclined for the present to reserve Canada-U.S. traffic from the operations of any grant of fifth freedom.

(It would be even more advantageous if for the present we could merely exchange fifth freedom rights with the U.S. and not with the U.K., but as suggested above it would be a pretty difficult thing to do.)

him your views as far as PICAQ is concerned. Personally, I do not see that anything can be gained by changing our position vis-à-vis U.S.A. or U.K. at this moment. Also I see no reason to make agreements with other countries at this time.

I suggest that it would be well to push Cribbett on the West Indies Agreement and try and get that completed. Also urge him to complete arrangements with Portugal. As far as Ireland is concerned, it seems to me that we should wait and see what deal is made between the U.K. and Ireland. Arrangements with other countries can wait until my return.

I think that there is no doubt that eventually we will have Fifth Freedom arrangements with everyone, but I hope that these will come through by multi-lateral agreements to be supervised by PICAQ. Until we find out whether the latter is possible I see no point in making a bilateral agreement other than those in hand. I hope that you will urge all concerned to get on with opening up Canadian-U.S.A. routes. You will note from past experience that it takes a long time to get approval from C.A.A.<sup>1</sup> and therefore no time should be lost in filing these applications.

You can get me at any time by telephone at the Empress Hotel, and I expect to be back in Ottawa around the 23rd March.

SECTION II

APPRECIATION OF THE RESULTS AND AN ACCOUNT OF THE MAIN CONTROVERSIAL ISSUES

The First Assembly was a successful shareholders' meeting. The Assembly expressed unqualified approval of the work of the Council and adopted an extensive programme of Council activities. There was a general recognition of the importance of the organization, a keen interest in its problems and a determination to establish a permanent organization as early as possible. An acknowledgment of the common objective and a cooperative spirit were evident in even the most controversial issues. There were no clashes of personality and no aftermath of bitterness such as marred the Chicago Conference and detracted from its substantial achievements.

The session was, however, disappointing, even disheartening, to those who looked to the Assembly for agreement on multilateral conventions, either on air transport to complete the task at which Chicago failed, or on air law or air navigation. Canadian representatives felt this the most keenly perhaps because at Chicago the Canadian delegation had almost succeeded in reconciling the opposing United States-United Kingdom positions on an air transport convention.

There were, nevertheless, factors that somewhat mitigated the disappointment. The Assembly affirmed the opinion that a multilateral convention constituted the only solution compatible with the character of the organization. Most of the member states tabled detailed constructive comments. There was useful discussion and the Council was charged with preparing a multilateral convention for circulation to all members to facilitate consideration by the next Assembly. From the views expressed it was apparent also that the problem had great complexity and that there were genuinely differing requirements of certain areas that had not yet received full consideration.

On technical matters relating to air navigation, it was recognized that civil aviation was still undeveloped in many countries. It would in consequence be a hardship to impose on those countries standards and practices which were appropriate for countries where greater progress had been made, particularly since the standards and practices were new and might shortly be modified in the light of experience.

On air law, there was no deflection from the objective of ultimate unification, but the wisdom of proceeding cautiously and the need for further study were generally acknowledged.

The main controversial issues were: (1) the multilateral convention on air transport; (2) the selection of the permanent home and (3) the filling of the 21st seat on the Council.

(1) MULTILATERAL CONVENTION ON AIR TRANSPORT

The issue problem of drafting a multilateral agreement, which promised to be the most serious of the Assembly, was unexpectedly quickly resolved when it became apparent that the United States opposed the reaching of any agreement during the Assembly meeting and that there was no strong support for immediate action forthcoming from any member except Canada. The United Kingdom which, from the events at Chicago, might have been expected to support the Canadian position, had recently concluded with the United States a bilateral agreement granting the Five Freedoms and had thus abandoned the position she had so strongly supported at Chicago. The United States-United Kingdom alignment was perhaps too formidable for those countries, chiefly in Europe, which one would have thought had much to gain from a multilateral convention. The Canadian delegation made clear their belief that postponement was dangerous: that the longer the member states followed the course of concluding bilateral agreements the less chance there was for securing the adoption of a multilateral agreement. Unsaid but implied in the Canadian argument was the fear that in the present state of aviation the United States, politically powerful and further advanced than any other in its civil aviation development, would have a clear field to apply their power and utilize their development to capture the major airways of the world. If others shared this fear, their actions gave little hint of it.

When Canada bowed to the inevitable, the meetings became a study group for serious and useful, though inconclusive, discussion that left for the uncertain future, any positive step to impose limitations on the struggle for supremacy in the air routes of the world.

Australia reiterated its preference for an internationally-owned airline and the United Kingdom in announcing for the first time its support of the Australian view furnished perhaps the biggest surprise of the meeting.

(2) SELECTION OF A PERMANENT HOME

The heaviest argument occurred not on the selection of the site itself but over the question whether selection should be made during the Assembly or deferred.

The case for deferment was pressed vigorously by the United Kingdom and France and supported by the European states. The main lines of the argument were that a European site was preferable to an American site, but if the decision were taken at the Assembly, the chance of a European site being selected would be prejudiced, since Europe, still suffering from the devastation of war was not in a position to compete with America in the provision of accommodation, housing and food. It was claimed that a European site was readily accessible to most of the members and would relieve those countries whose dollar deficiencies were greatest of a drain on their limited resources. A European site, since it was closer to the locus of the most complex problems of civil aviation, would induce a better appreciation of the problems and a readier solution. France made a strongly emotional plea for the devastated countries of Europe, urging the location of PICAQ in Europe on the grounds that international collaboration in the air had its beginnings in Paris, where ICAN<sup>1</sup> and CITEJA<sup>2</sup> have for the last twenty years furthered international cooperation. The United Nations had located in the new world and it was urged that the old world should be the home of PICAQ to offset, in part, this loss.

The case against deferment was made in the main by the United States and Canada and supported by all Latin American countries. Their argument, made primarily on practical grounds, was that the organization could not be fully effective until a permanent home had been selected because of the difficulties of providing facilities and of recruiting personnel. The French complaint that reaching a decision under existing conditions would show lack of consideration for war-shattered France was met by pointing out that the United States and Canada could not fairly be charged with want of sympathy for France and her problems of reconstruction. The voting on various resolutions in sub-commission and commission was close with almost a clear-cut cleavage between Europe and America.

Once it had been decided to select the site, it was comparatively plain sailing for Montreal, although a threat arose "in the corridors" from an attempt on the part of the Mexicans to have Mexico City nominated. This would have split the Montreal vote. However, the Mexican delegation's efforts to form a Latin American group were unsuccessful. Chile, Venezuela, Peru and perhaps others refused to unite in a common front, under Mexican leadership, in the face of United States opposition to the Mexican proposal. The final vote on the actual site was 27 for Montreal, 9 for Paris, 4 for Geneva and 1 for China. After the vote had been taken the French graciously acknowledged the appropriateness of Montreal and said that their stand had been taken on principle, as representing the policy that French delegations were expected to adopt at other international conferences. As for the nomination of China by China, some accepted the Chinese statement that China was put forward merely as the opening of an offensive to be waged in international meetings designed to bring ultimately an international organization to China, either permanently or for meetings. Others observed that the nomination of China permitted that country to avoid making a decision.

(3) FILLING OF THE TWENTY-FIRST SEAT ON THE COUNCIL

A see-saw struggle was waged over the question of filling the twenty-first seat on the Council. At Chicago the maximum size of the Council was set at twenty-one. Twenty of the seats were then filled and the twenty-first left open in the hope that the U.S.S.R. would join PICAQ and occupy the seat.

Here, as in the matter of selecting a permanent home, the serious differences arose not over the selection of the country but over the issue as to whether the Assembly should take action. All European members (save Spain and Portugal) and all Commonwealth countries urged that the door be left open to U.S.S.R. participation. The United States, all Latin American countries and Ireland held that the U.S.S.R. had had ample chance to show an interest in PICAQ and had not done so. There was, therefore, no purpose in keeping the door open for a guest that had refused many invitations and clearly did not intend to come. The United States said many countries had made substantial contributions to PICAQ and had thus earned the right to be elected to the Council. The Canadian view was that a Council of twenty was sufficiently large for a membership of forty-four and, since there were no strong practical reasons for filling the vacancy, it should be left open.

The United States delegation seemed impressed by the sincerity of the political arguments offered by the European countries, but one member confessed that the United States was committed to nominate Ireland for the vacancy and could not abandon the position taken. In sub-commission and commission it was decided to leave the seat unfilled, but the Assembly reversed these decisions by a vote of 20 to 18.

The selection of the new Council member was a formality. The rival candidates to Ireland were South Africa and Argentina who nominated themselves. Argentina, in fact, joined PICAQ just in time to nominate herself for membership in the Council but not in time to participate in any other activity. South Africa received one vote; Argentina six, including one has reason to suspect Spain, Chile, Colombia and Bolivia. The remainder were cast for Ireland.

The vote clearly recognized the value of the contribution that Ireland had made to PICAQ at the Dublin Regional Meeting and the very active interest displayed by the Irish delegation. Their position was not offset by the fact that Ireland has not seen fit generally to grant even the first of the Five Freedoms but has made the exercise of it conditional upon foreign aircraft landing in Shannon on every flight over Ireland.

Dear Mr. Howe,

NORTH ATLANTIC WEATHER SHIPS

Commander Edwards<sup>1</sup> writes that he agrees Canada should participate in the provision of these stations, but he advises that no funds are available in the current year's appropriation and that no financial obligations can be undertaken. He is willing to release Mr. McTaggart-Cowan<sup>2</sup> to accompany me to the London meetings starting September 17th for the technical discussions.

Representatives of thirteen North Atlantic States will draw up an agreement for ratification by their home governments and I think others may be in the same difficulty as Canada in finding funds immediately. The U.S.A. however are definitely prepared to operate four or more stations (their total share would be about six) and it is probable that the U.K. and France will operate at least one each. The possibilities for the remainder will be better known at the meeting in London and I note from news that reaches me from planning levels of D.N.D. Naval that the operation of one station might be

attractive to them in 1947 as part of their training program. Canada under this arrangement might even qualify for a financial contribution from other North Atlantic States through PICA0.

If substantially all states indicate their willingness to participate with ships or funds it would be embarrassing if Canada were not to go along.

From sheer difficulty of quickly finding finance, manpower and ships, the first year's activities may be small and of course only half our fiscal year remains. Before proceeding to the meeting I would like to feel I had your backing on the following lines:

1. If the U.S.A. and a few others will see things through the first year with no financing from non-operating states, we will refrain from any undertaking for this year.

2. If outside financing is demanded of, and agreed to, by substantially all other participants for less than the total thirteen stations and for the remaining months before March 1947, I would like authority to negotiate up to $100,000 for the current financial year. I think there is a good chance of it being less. Ratification would, of course, take place in Ottawa not London.

3. For next year indicate our willingness to participate in a thirteen ship scheme with a financial contribution based on our share of Atlantic flights and taking credit for the land based meteorological stations we now operate. This might be $200,000 to $400,000 a year.

Leave open the possibility of operating next year. Our Navy has so far declined but I have reason to believe that their refusal was based on the shortage of recruits for the permanent force, and lack of funds in this year's estimates. Both of these objections might be overcome if the target date was in the Summer of 1947, and we might reopen the question with the Navy if desirable after the London meeting.

What I am getting at is that I will try to evade any commitment before March next year but think it may be too embarrassing to stay out if most others are in, but in that case I will try to keep our share as small as possible and bring home something for ratification which you will be able to justify. The subject is unfortunately rather spectacular and Canada as a prominent operator might gain undesirable publicity if we alone stood apart. It would be hard for me to represent Canada at an international meeting with no statement except that we are of the opinion that Canada should participate in the provision of these stations but that no funds are available and that I must take particular care to see that no financial commitment is made on behalf of this Dominion—to use the words of Commander Edwards' letters.

In case it may help to serve as a reminder, I attach a note giving in brief the reasons why the weather stations are considered justified.

I will be most grateful for your advice.

Yours sincerely,

A. C. McKIM

NORTH ATLANTIC WEATHER SHIPS JUSTIFICATION IN BRIEF

1. Prior to the war, the North Atlantic was flown by flying boats with an optimum operating height of 10,000 feet and a normal height of about 2,000 against head winds. Marginal flying against head winds was thus done at altitudes where surface meteorological charts provided more or less adequate information and of course regularity was unsatisfactory, in fact it was completely unscheduled.

2. During the war ocean weather stations were operated by the British and subsequently by the U.S. government—twenty-three of such stations were in operation at one time. Bomber Command found it necessary to have a very highly organized upper air analysis section, on which Air Vice-Marshal Bennett places credit for much of his success. Here again service was irregular and deliveries were made in bunches of planes following favourable forecasts.

3. Our present Lancastrians, operating above 10,000 feet (17,000 is the Constellation flight level), have the benefits still of five ocean weather stations and have never gone through a winter without at least thirteen which is the scale contemplated. Already they have been warned of the reducing reliability of forecasts.

4. Future equipment will operate up to 30,000 feet and encounter winds commonly above 100 knots and known from time to time to be 300 knots. At these altitudes it is impossible to completely safe-guard an operation by fuel reserves and regularity is bound to suffer if forecasts are not reliable. Only an adequate system of ocean weather stations can give proper upper air forecasts.

5. The saving in fuel reserves carried and the increased regularity expected will show savings that justify the cost of the weather ships.

6. If Canada and other North Atlantic states are convinced of this, we should bear our fair share of the cost.

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to your letter of July 15th† extending an invitation to the Government of Canada on behalf of the other Governments concerned to accept membership on the South Pacific Air Transport Council. The invitation contained in your letter was duly conveyed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs at Ottawa, who informs me that in view of the extremely large number of international organizations which are developing in the field of civil aviation as well as in other fields it would be difficult for Canada at the moment to carry out the commitments which might be involved in full membership in the Council, in the way of sending experienced representatives to meetings.

Under the circumstances, the Canadian Government would not be in a position at this time to assume full membership, and they would not care to do so unless they could meet their responsibility fully. For the present, therefore, the Canadian Government would prefer to remain in a position where they might have the privilege from time to time of sending observers from the Offices of the Canadian High Commissioners to meetings of the Council.

The Canadian Government would much appreciate the opportunity to reconsider this decision as to their relationship to the South Pacific Air Transport Council when they are in a position to inaugurate the Trans-Canada Air Lines service in the Pacific. They would then be in a better position to determine whether they could make arrangements for full and active Canadian membership.

Dear Mr. McKim,

RE NORTH ATLANTIC WEATHER SHIPS

I have your letter of September 7th and regret the delay in replying, which is due in part to my absence from Ottawa.

I note that you and Mr. McTaggart-Cowan will represent Canada at the London meetings, starting September 17th, for technical discussions.

I have no quarrel with the suggestions contained in your letter, and it will be in order to take the stand that you indicate in your letter as reasonable. You must, however, bear in mind that we have made no provision for an expenditure for weather ships in the current fiscal year, and that it will be necessary to obtain specific Government approval before any such provision can be made for the next fiscal year.

As far as the financial commitment is concerned, I will endeavour to back up any decision you arrive at. I cannot, however, make any commitment for the Department of National Defence (Navy), and it will be necessary for you to be cautious about promising that Canada will place a naval ship in the service.

Frankly, I am alarmed at the size of the Government expenditure required to support the aids to air navigation, all of which is non-revenue producing. I see no indication that earnings of the airline will provide any return on this huge expenditure.

In the matter of weather, we seem to be going far beyond our immediate responsibilities and for that reason, if for no other, it seems to me that others, having a greater density of traffic, should bear the major cost of operating the weather ships.

I trust that you and Mr. McTaggart-Cowan will have a most interesting and helpful part in the discussions.

Yours sincerely,

Montreal, September 27, 1946

Dear Mr. Howe,

NORTH ATLANTIC WEATHER STATIONS

I have today returned from the London Conference and give the following preliminary report on the agreement reached, which I will confirm with an actual copy of the signed agreement.

All 13 nations participated and the complete project for the 13 weather stations was agreed. Ten States being prospective operators on the North Atlantic to contribute as follows:

	No. of Stations
U.S.A.	7
U.S.A. and Canada	1
U.K.	2
Norway and Sweden (with contribution by the U.K.)	1
Belgium and The Netherlands (with contribution from Ireland)	1
	<hr/>
Total	13

Stations operated by groups of States may be by arrangements which do not concern others. The exact wording of the agreement between Canada and the U.S. being as follows:

The United States of America to provide and operate the station. Canada to have the option to provide and to operate to the extent of fifty percent of the station or otherwise to contribute in a manner mutually acceptable to both Governments.

The agreement will come into force 1st July 1947 and meanwhile States are urged to operate voluntarily. It is almost certain that the U.S.A. will operate 4 and the U.K. 1 station this winter. Notices had been previously sent out by our Meteorology Department to T.C.A. that forecasts would be less reliable this winter and regularity and payload will consequently suffer until the full project operates.

I think you will agree we have negotiated a moderate share for Canada. Nothing is asked from this year's estimate. Next year we can operate a ship as our share of one-half station, or, if the Navy still cannot, we can pay in cash or, as I think may be acceptable, take over as an off-set the operation of more land-based facilities now operated by the U.S.A. I am to attend the Interdepartmental Meteorology meeting in Ottawa next month with the benefit of which I will submit a recommendation.

The signatures to the agreement become binding upon acceptance by home governments.

Yours sincerely,

A. C. McKIM

MULTILATERAL AGREEMENT ON COMMERCIAL AIR RIGHTS
CANADA'S POSITION IN PICA DISCUSSIONS

1. PICA Secretariat has now edited the papers and discussions of the 1946 Assembly* on the Multilateral Agreement. Work is now starting in a new Committee of PICA to prepare if possible a draft for the Assembly of April 7th, 1947.

2. I am chairman of this Committee but with reluctance as I am not hopeful of success. I expressed as a condition of acceptance that each member would undertake to give his best efforts personally to the work and would be honest with the others in expressing his personal point of view when he found himself persuaded by argument even when the national position he had been instructed to take differed from his own. I said that I fully expected us to be under pressure to accept with minimum change the form of the U.S.A.-U.K. Bermuda Agreement. I felt it had disadvantages as a basis for a Multilateral Agreement though it must receive serious consideration as it seemed acceptable to the two largest air operators.

3. There is no use persisting with Council's proposal to the 1946 Assembly for "permissive rate differentials" as a means of protecting regional lines against the inroads of through lines. In fact any formula with the same object seems unacceptable to the U.S.A., they having also declined suggestions made at Chicago involving limitation on load factor with escalation, etc.

Another fundamental of Council's proposal to the 1946 Assembly was the granting to an International Board and Council of powers of judgement. This too was objectionable to the U.S.A. and some others.

4. The Transport Agreement which was ratified by only sixteen States has now been renounced by the U.S.A. in my opinion because it requires contracting States not to allow the operation of an airline of a contracting State through its airspace if Council has judged it to be in default (Ch. XVIII of Convention).

5. This brings us to Bermuda** which is widely commended as the basis of the future Multilateral Agreement. I do not object to it as a bilateral agreement, but I believe it has factors which make it an unacceptable basis for what we have considered to be a true multilateral agreement. The clauses dealing with capacity are open to misinterpretation and in fact the British and U.S.A. authorities have already interpreted them differently in public pronouncements; the principles are very vague—for example, the interest of the air carriers of the other Government shall be taken into consideration so as not to affect unduly the service which the latter provides on all or part of the same routes.

Nobody seems to know what unduly means.

. . . shall retain as their primary objective the provision of capacity adequate to the traffic demands between the country of which such air carrier is a national and the country of ultimate destination of the traffic.

This seems a satisfactory statement that 3rd and 4th Freedom traffic is the primary basis, but it then states that the rights to 5th Freedom traffic— shall be subject to the general principle that capacity should be related—

(a) to traffic requirements between the country of origin and countries of destination;

(b) to the requirements of through airline operation; and

(c) to the traffic requirements of the area through which the airline passes after taking account of local and regional services.

---

**U.S.A.-U.K. Air Services Agreement of Feb. 11, 1946

Nobody seems to know exactly what this means nor how much of the local traffic could properly be picked up by a through-line "after taking account of local and regional services".

Lord Winster has said—

. . . the maintenance of a close relationship between capacity operated on the various routes of mutual interest and traffic offering can best be put into practical effect by providing for an ex post facto review on the basis of this principle. Machinery for close and continuing collaboration between the two governments will be established to this end.***

President Truman has said—

Under the Bermuda Agreement there will be no control of frequencies and no control of so-called Fifth Freedom rights on trunk routes operated primarily for through service. It gives to the airline operators the great opportunity of using their initiative and enterprise in developing air transportation over great areas of the world's surface.

Granting these to be political speeches it would indicate the possibility of several interpretations should say forty nations be involved instead of two.

PICAO's role in settlement of disputes under Bermuda is only advisory and would presumably have only moral effect on the offending state which would then be free to deal with its offending airlines as it pleased.

For "reasonably direct route" is substituted in Bermuda an Annex of specific routes and stopping points. Presumably every nation would have to negotiate bilaterally with every other on routes to be exchanged, thus the apparent liberality of granting five Freedoms to all the world might be completely nullified with all the evils of bilateralism involving possible economic and political pressures in the gaining of favourable rights.

In short—Bermuda translated from a Bilateral without substantial change would not be a Multilateral but a new form of the standard Bilateral now included in the Chicago Final Act.

6. Although the trend of future discussions may change our attitude, I put forward as the basic stand I should take in PICAO discussions the following:

that we consider a multilateral agreement should be a treaty binding on all governments and that it should be tied to the Chicago Convention by reference or as an amendment to it;

that five Freedoms should be granted only in conjunction with principles that are clearly understandable in offering protection against destructive competition by powerful through-lines or, better still, operative clauses that set forth the consequences of specific acts of such destructive competition;

that these principles or clauses should be subject to interpretation by a Board, by Council or other International Authority having powers of "judgement" rather than "advice" thus causing states to take action against the airline of an offending State; and that the rules must be the same for all and not include the possibility of bilateral exchanging of Freedoms within a framework calling itself a Multilateral Agreement.

Without a Multilateral Agreement having these provisions in some form or other, or a new solution which would adequately take their place, Canada should prefer to continue with bilateral agreements.

I would appreciate any advice enabling me to represent these matters better.

Ottawa, November 11, 1946

Dear Anson [McKim],

Thanks for your memo of October 31st re multilateral agreement on commercial air rights. I am glad to note that you are Chairman of the new committee that will make recommendations for the Assembly of April 7th, 1947.

I fully agree that any multilateral agreement must be definite in terms and capable of exact interpretation. Otherwise, frictions are bound to develop and the work of PICAQ will become increasingly difficult.

The U.S.A.-U.K. Bermuda Agreement is fast becoming the pattern for bilateral agreements. Canada and the U.S. will meet in Washington on December 2nd,<sup>1</sup> and I rather imagine that something like the Bermuda Agreement will evolve from that meeting. There is no great objection to the Bermuda Agreement as a basis for bilateral agreements, but I would dislike to be in the position of PICAQ if called upon to police a multilateral agreement in the same terms.

As far as Canada is concerned, I doubt if we would be in a stronger position under a multilateral agreement than is our position under a series of bilateral agreements reasonably uniform as to terms. Up to now we have had no great difficulty in working out the terms of bilateral agreements covering routes in which we are interested. Therefore, I will not feel too badly should it be found that a multilateral agreement is impossible. On the other hand, I agree with those who believe that everything possible should be done to obtain a satisfactory multilateral agreement.

There is no difference between us as to the objectives set out in your memorandum. I wish you every success in working them out.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C. D. HOWE

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-555

Washington, January 31, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Our WA-470 of January 26th† concerning discussion in the UNRRA Committee on Supplies relating to wheat, rice, fats, etc.

The sub-Committee referred to in that teletype had an all-day meeting yesterday at which the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian executive officers of the Combined Food Board were present in an advisory capacity. At that meeting the following recommendation was proposed:

“That the decision taken in mid-1945 to remove wheat and flour from formal International Allocation recommendations should be rescinded forthwith”.

As our discussion previous to the meeting made it clear that not only the receiving countries but also the United States would support this recommendation, and in fact that Canada (and possibly Australia and the United Kingdom although their positions were not made clear) would be virtually alone in opposing the proposed recommendation, we suggested the following as an alternative recommendation:

“That, the Administration having represented that the placing of wheat and flour under formal International Allocation would contribute to an improvement in the availability of supplies to UNRRA, the Governments concerned be urged to reconsider most urgently the decision taken in mid-1945 to remove wheat and flour from International Allocation”.

This alternative proposal was adopted as a recommendation by the sub-Committee. It is clear from the language of the recommendation and from the discussion at the meeting that the sub-Committee intended to express no judgment as to the probable results of the reinstatement of an International Allocation arrangement and that the recommendation was not to be taken as necessarily implying any particular outcome of the proposed reconsideration of the mid-1945 decision.

The recommendation, if adopted by the Committee on Supplies, does of course imply that member Governments concerned would be prepared to undertake such a re-examination or reconsideration. I should be grateful for guidance from you as to the position which we should take on this recommendation in further discussion either in the sub-Committee or in the Committee on Supplies.

A further recommendation relating to wheat was adopted by the sub-Committee in the following terms:

“That the exporting countries and the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board take into consideration in making allocations or in programming exports of wheat and flour, the extent to which the claimants for wheat and flour have followed the example set by UNRRA and made the maximum substitution practically possible of other cereals for wheat in both their import requirements and in the utilization of the indigenous grain resources.”

I should be grateful for guidance on this recommendation as well.

Poland, China, Yugoslavia and the U.S.S.R. proposed a further recommendation, relating to rice, fats and other foodstuffs as well as to wheat, which would have required the allocating agencies and the supplying Governments to give a first priority to UNRRA's requirements ahead of all other claimants (on the grounds that UNRRA's customers are Allied belligerent countries which suffered the greatest devastation during the war, that the requirements originally stated by the Governments had been drastically screened by UNRRA before submission to the Boards, and that UNRRA is an Organization of the United Nations). The precise language of the proposed recommendation was:

“That UNRRA's stated requirements, after screening the requests of the receiving UNRRA Governments, be accepted by the Combined Food Board as a final determination of the quantities to be allocated to UNRRA and that no reduction be made in these quantities except by the Heads of the Governments of the countries represented on the Combined Food Board after considering the views of both UNRRA and the C.F.B.”

In the sub-Committee this recommendation was voted down by the United States, United Kingdom, France, Australia and Canada, who proposed a form of words which would have drawn attention to the dire needs of the UNRRA countries and would have urged that the requirements be met to the maximum extent consistent with the essential needs of other United Nations and consistent with the requirements of Germany and Japan as defined in the Potsdam Declaration or in decisions of the Far Eastern Commission. Our alternative recommendation was of course unsatisfactory to the UNRRA receiving countries and the Polish representative indicated his intention to press his original recommendation before the Full Committee on Supplies.

The Polish representative proposed further that the inability of the receiving countries to secure adequate supplies through UNRRA be brought formally to the attention of the United Nations Organization in order that account might be taken there of the political implications in the situation and that effective recommendations to meet the situation might be developed.

The sub-Committee is to meet again on the afternoon of Friday, February 1st and the Full Committee on Supplies is to meet for formal consideration of these recommendations at 3 p.m., Tuesday, February 5th. I should be grateful to receive instructions concerning the first two recommendations, together with any observations concerning the other recommendations.

I should be grateful also to learn from you whether any action is in process to implement the willingness expressed in your EX-217 of January 24th† to forego rice (except for the Oriental population in Canada) provided similar action is taken in the United States. If no action is underway is it your desire that we report this willingness to the United States authorities? In this connection could you let us know to what extent steps which have already been taken to procure and distribute our 1946 allocation of rice would make it impossible for us to release rice in excess of the requirements for our Oriental population even if the United States were to indicate a willingness to do likewise.

Mr. Lewis<sup>1</sup> requests that the sense of this message be reported to Dr. Barton in the Department of Agriculture.

Winnipeg, February 3, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am attaching herewith the views of the Board in regard to teletype No. WA-555. In addition to the attached material I think I should make a few observations.

Since V-E Day Canada has met every commitment made in respect to export wheat. This is not true of other exporting countries. Under such circumstances, and also because of Canadian prices for wheat due to the export ceiling, there is a natural desire of all claimants, including UNRRA to secure larger and larger commitments in respect to Canadian wheat.

In effect the UNRRA receiving countries are asking for a No. 1 priority on their stated supplies of export wheat. As far as Canada is concerned we now have a No. 1 priority which is the minimum home requirements of the United Kingdom. This priority is a matter of government policy. The Board thoroughly agrees with this policy, and does not believe that the United Kingdom should be placed in the same category as Italy, Yugoslavia, China, etc. As long as we maintain our British preference, and we believe that it should be maintained, there is not much opportunity for UNRRA to gain additional supplies of the residual Canadian wheat at the expense of France, in the first instance, and Belgium, Norway, The Netherlands and London Food Council areas such as Malta, South Africa, Ceylon and India, in the second instance. Only by breaking down the British priority on Canadian wheat could UNRRA or other claiming countries secure larger immediate supplies. Our first priority is based upon minimum United Kingdom requirements. We are reliably informed that at the present time the United Kingdom is on the verge of bread rationing, and her situation cannot improve until the fall of 1946 at the earliest.

While I think Canada should co-operate in every way with other countries through the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board, it is fundamental that we do retain the final decision as to the destination of Canadian wheat exports. As I see it, the chief exporting countries have to retain control of their export wheat, but should co-ordinate their efforts in the light of the needs as set forth in the records of the Cereals Committee. It is obvious that UNRRA and certain other claiming countries would like to see a return of firm allocations of export wheat in the hope of diverting some of the present supplies from the United Kingdom, and to some extent from Belgium and The Netherlands to countries whose needs are in the hands of UNRRA. In the main, the objective would be to divert part of the flow of Canadian wheat from north-western Europe to southern Europe.

I might add that I am not at all satisfied with the requirement figures being submitted by UNRRA and some other importing countries. Neither am I satisfied that many countries now demanding wheat have carried out appropriate procurement policies within their own countries; certainly not to the extent the United Kingdom has. We now have a sub-committee of the Cereals Committee working over requirement figures, and I hope to have this sub-committee report at the next meeting of the Cereals Committee, which I believe will be held about Monday, February 11th.

These are observations which I think you should bear in mind.

Yours very truly,

G. McIVOR

Canadian Wheat Board to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Winnipeg, February 3, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

RE TELETYPE WA-555

The Board has given consideration to the three main questions raised in this teletype. These are:

1. The proposal to discontinue nearby programming and to institute firm international allocations of wheat over longer periods.

2. The further recommendation on maximum substitution and use of indigenous supplies.

3. The unapproved resolution of UNRRA receiving countries sponsored by Poland and slated for submission to the UNRRA Committee on supplies.

In regard to Question (1) we have the following observations to make:

(1) The particular references should be examined in the light of an over-all shortage of wheat available to meet stated import requirements. This over-all shortage for the six months' period ending June 30th, 1946, has been estimated at some five million long tons. Therefore, the basic position is that if one claimant is given additional wheat it must be at the expense of some other claimant or claimants.

(2) We firmly believe that there should be co-ordination of effort between the exporting countries in the supplying of wheat during this critical period and for that reason we are prepared to do everything possible to facilitate the work and the objectives of the Cereals Committee. If the correlating medium of the Cereals Committee is dispensed with, it seems clear that, for humanitarian reasons alone, the Canadian Wheat Board would have to establish liaison with the United States as the other principal wheat supplier. Similar contact with other suppliers would make distribution more equitable and effective and finally, the result would be a loose and rather inefficient system of exchanging information that wouldn't have any real inter-governmental authority. For this reason and others, we have become convinced that the Cereals Committee considered to have a necessary function in wartime has a continuing function in this distressing period of hunger in Europe and short supplies in the exporting countries.

(3) Any practical approach to the problem of distributing wheat supplies must take into account the fact that each exporting country has favoured customers for commercial, sentimental or other reasons. Canada has the United Kingdom; the United States has Italy and France; the Argentine has Spain, Portugal and certain South American countries; Australia has preferred markets in the Far East. These natural preferences are difficult to eliminate, especially under conditions of stress.

(4) At the present time approximately three-fifths of Canadian wheat for export is committed to the United Kingdom for minimum home requirements by announced Canadian government policy. This leaves two-fifths of Canadian monthly exports available for distribution among all other claimants. We are endeavouring to make a fair distribution of residual supplies, but under the circumstances it is only possible to programme a limited quantity of Canadian wheat to other urgent claimants such as France and UNRRA. Therefore, firm allocations of residual supplies of Canadian wheat over a longer period would have the effect of reducing the quantities going to various claimants. If UNRRA received more Canadian wheat it would have to be at the main expense of France in the first instance and Belgium, Netherlands, Norway, Czechoslovakia and the London Food Council areas such as Malta, South Africa, India, Ceylon, etc. in the second instance.

(5) The question of firm allocations of wheat cannot be evaluated without particular reference to the United States position. For reasons of internal transportation and farm holding tendencies, the United States has not demonstrated that they can deliver export wheat on the basis of extended allocations. The teletype states that the United States favours firm allocations. At the January meeting of the Cereals Committee a United States representative stated that the United States could not programme completely for the month of February. We believe that the facts of the United States position are such that that country cannot enter into firm allocations for an extended period with any reasonable hope of meeting such allocations.

Argentina, the next largest supplier, has not as yet agreed to be a party to firm allocations and has admitted some prior commitments. Argentina, on the other hand, will probably agree to work with other exporting countries in co-ordinating exports over and beyond present commitments and natural preferences.

The small Australian surplus of wheat is not a factor in the European situation and will be largely utilized on advice of the London Food Council.

(6) If we felt that this proposal would help the over-all problem we would support it. We believe, however, that firm international allocations over longer periods would not have the expected effect and would create more problems than they are designed to solve. Moreover, from Canada's standpoint, firm allocations covering the first half of 1946 would cause us to hold greater supplies of wheat in reserve against so many outstanding commitments.

(7) For the foregoing reasons we believe that the proposal of firm allocations of export wheat over longer periods through the Cereals Committee is not practical. At the same time we believe that the direction of wheat exports during the first half of 1946 can best be determined by the co-ordinated action of the four chief exporting countries in the light of existing commitments and in the light of claims and circumstances advanced by importing countries and UNRRA.

Proposal 2.

We agree with the recommendation in regard to maximum substitution and the maximum use of indigenous supplies. At the present time we do not agree that these conditions are fully met in the representations made for UNRRA supplied areas. The Cereals Committee is not satisfied with requirements figures submitted by some importing countries and UNRRA. A sub-committee of the Cereals Committee is now working on a further screening of requirement figures. The report of this sub-committee should be received and considered before further programming or allocating is done.

Proposal 3.

We do not agree that UNRRA's stated requirements should be accepted by the Combined Food Board as a final determination of the quantities to be allocated to UNRRA. We do not agree that UNRRA should receive a No. 1 priority and we believe that UNRRA's requirements should be screened to the same extent as the requirements of any importing country. We do not agree with the suggestion that no reduction be made in UNRRA quantities except by the heads of the governments of the countries represented on the Combined Food Board. This suggestion would end the Cereals Committee as an effective instrument of international policy. We agree with the alternative wording proposed on behalf of the United Kingdom, France, Australia and Canada.

In conclusion we must indicate that we are fully aware of UNRRA's problem and its importance. We are prepared to do all that we can do for UNRRA within the limits of our commitment to the United Kingdom and our responsibility to countries not receiving UNRRA supplies. It must be remembered, however, that we have been successful in moving Canadian wheat overseas early in the present crop year and when our large movement was under way last fall UNRRA was a relatively small claimant. The full UNRRA programme was not submitted to the Cereals Committee until late in December and by that time more than half of the Canadian exportable surplus of wheat for the crop year 1945-46 had already been exported. When we were advised of the full UNRRA programme we immediately recognized the new situation in our February and March programmes, and in our tentative programme for April. When stated requirements are further screened by the Cereals Committee, it may be possible for us to provide more wheat for UNRRA. However, with our commitments to the United Kingdom, other wheat exporting countries will have to be the chief source of supply for UNRRA's wheat requirements, especially if these requirements continue to be stated at a four million long ton level.

Yours very truly,

G. McIVOR

TELEGRAM WA-654

Washington, February 6, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Your teletype EX-383 of February 5th† and yesterday's from McIvor† on the cereal situation have been read with much interest. We had a meeting of the Committee on Supplies of UNRRA yesterday, in which we adopted the report of the Sub-Committee on Supply Problems dealing particularly with cereals and oils and fats (enclosed with despatch 295 of February 5th)†. There are figures in this report which, though possibly misleading without more explanation, do, if accurate as they stand, undoubtedly show to UNRRA's own satisfaction, and also to others', that UNRRA is not getting sufficient consideration by the Combined Food Board. It is felt here by UNRRA and also by certain American authorities, that in so far as wheat is concerned Canada is largely to blame because of the separate arrangements which we have made regarding the disposition of our wheat. This is a matter which undoubtedly will have to be given consideration by the Food Board. Normally, I think little exception could be taken to Canada's policy, especially in view of the way we have met our commitments, but because of the highly critical nature of the present cereals situation, now widely discussed here, I think myself that we should very seriously consider our attitude. United States officials are now taking a very dark view of the European food situation, and the fact that they are somewhat late in coming to their present conclusions does not alter the facts of that situation or the necessity for drastic remedies. There is a disposition here to think that the restoration of international allocations may be required, and though both Ritchie and I at the meeting yesterday warned against over-optimistic conclusions as to what may be expected if this is done, it seems probable that the proposal will be pushed by the United States notwithstanding their previous attitude. On the basis of the information which I have, which may not be adequate to come to valid conclusions, I think we should be very hesitant in opposing international allocation of wheat, especially in view of our previous opposition to its abandonment and especially if we are now in a minority of one. I appreciate the arguments put forward by McIvor in teletypes EX-366<sup>1</sup> and EX-367<sup>1</sup> but I do not think those arguments take sufficiently into consideration the desperate nature of the present situation. We would certainly be open to serious criticism if, in view of that situation, we continued to talk about favoured customers for commercial, sentimental or other reasons; to say that natural preferences are difficult to eliminate, especially under conditions of stress, and that agreement for co-ordinated action by the four chief exporting countries must be qualified by existing commitments. Surely we cannot be more insistent on maintaining those commitments than their chief beneficiary, the United Kingdom, which has already announced further sacrifices which will make it possible for more cereals to go to Europe, in parts of which admittedly the need is now much greater than in the United Kingdom.

2. My main concern in all this is that our record, which has been so good, should not be unnecessarily spoiled or that we should be put in a position of appearing to be less aware of the immediate dangers of the present situation than the United States or the United Kingdom. Mr. Attlee's telegram to the Prime Minister and Sir Ben Smith's broadcast last night certainly acquit the United Kingdom of unawareness while there are many evidences, including a long Cabinet meeting yesterday devoted to this subject and the issuance of a new policy statement by the President this afternoon which is reported in a separate message, which show that the United States authorities are coming around to a realistic appreciation of the position, and which, it is hoped, may result in some action here to meet that situation. It seems to me that not only a new and careful examination of our position is required, on the highest political levels, but that some statement probably should be made soon in Ottawa along the lines of those which are being made here and in London. In this connection, Dean Acheson's broadcast last Saturday night painted a very black picture, and I believe has had considerable effect here. Governor Lehman has addressed personal telegrams to the Heads of the United States, United Kingdom, Australian and Canadian Governments emphasizing UNRRA's food difficulties, which threaten to become insurmountable. Without substantial improvement, it seems clear that there will be widespread starvation in Europe and the Far East before summer. If that assumption is correct, surely it is the only basis on which policy can be formulated and the only natural preference which can be admitted is that of meeting the present desperate need. Ends.

WORLD FOOD PROBLEM

The main need is to find additional supplies of wheat for export.

The meeting felt strongly:

- (1) That Canada should not take any butter from the U.K., for psychological reasons
- (2) That Canada should generally match the U.S. programme for increasing food supplies for export;

It follows from (1) above that the ration of butter in Canada will have to be cut, probably from six to 4 ounces per person per week. In this connection there is a grave danger of a partial break-down of our rationing system but it was felt that this danger must be faced.

More specifically the following measures it was felt should be adopted:

- (1) To launch a vigorous nation-wide campaign for food conservation;
- (2) To adopt measures, with restaurants, retailers and wholesalers, to conserve supplies;
- (3) To make a reduction in the amounts of wheat and barley used in the production of potable alcohol and beer, at least comparable to that envisaged by the U.S.

It is important to have a decision from Cabinet on:

- (a) the extent of the programme for increasing supplies for export, and

(b) the selection of an agency responsible for organizing the campaign to arouse public support.

The achieving of an increase in the supplies of cereals available for export raised the following problems the answers to which could not at such short notice be given:

(a) If the wheat flour extraction rate is raised to 80 per cent (the proposed U.S. percentage) with resultant reduction in mill-feeds, it is most probable that the production of dairy products and beef and hogs will diminish. This raising of the extraction rate is much more serious for Canada than for the U.S. since:—

(i) Canada has heavier commitments per capita to export dairy products of all kinds (butter, cheese, eggs, milk, etc.)

(ii) Canada lacks obvious alternative dairy feeds such as corn.

(b) If an 80 per cent extraction of flour was decided on, the Government would probably have to subsidize the movement of oats and low-grade wheat to make up the deficiencies of mill-feeds.

(c) Assuming Canada could make immediately available increased quantities of wheat, can our internal transport and storage facilities succeed in getting the wheat to the seaboard.

Mr. Pearson, in his teletype, reported that the Americans were anxious to establish international allocation of wheat as a measure to assist in meeting the emergency. There are a number of considerations in this connection:

(i) Our wheat is selling at $1.55 (Can.) per bushel, and U.S. wheat at approximately $2.10 (U.S.) per bushel.

(ii) Allocation per se would not increase the total amount of supplies available for export.

(iii) The U.S. would probably not be able to fulfil its commitments; it is our wheat therefore which would be re-allocated to make good the U.S. deficiency.

It was felt, however, that the difficulties in international allocation were not insuperable and it was important that we should not find ourselves alone in opposition to the proposal.

In speaking to Resolution re food, Canadian representative in supporting resolution could include following comments:

"Canada's food position reflects developments in Canadian agriculture during the six years of the war. During the war Canada carried the responsibility of supplying unprecedented quantities of food in accordance with wartime needs.

During the war Canada's agricultural development followed two main lines:

(1) The maintenance of cereal production and the building up of unprecedented stocks of wheat as a wartime reserve.

(2) The expansion of the production of livestock and livestock products to the level of wartime needs.

By 1943 Canada's production of food products had reached a very high level and the distribution of food products abroad had reached capacity levels. Apart from some reduction in hog numbers (which has resulted in less grain being fed in Canada) the export of food products remains at practically capacity levels and will so remain during the period of the present crisis.

It will be appreciated that when a country is producing foodstuffs at a very high level and exporting food products at maximum capacity and has been doing this continuously for a period of nearly three years, the possibility of further increases in food exports is subject to definite limitation.

We are sure that most countries in Europe and some countries in Asia will bear witness to the part which Canadian wheat has played in bringing them through to the present time.

Commencing in the spring of 1944 the great wartime reserves of Canadian wheat started to move abroad to the limit of internal transportation and port capacities. Since that time Canada has exported an average of one million bushels of wheat (including flour) per working day. In the three crop years ending July 31st, 1946, Canada will have exported over one billion bushels of wheat or wheat in the form of flour, including her entire wartime reserve and the surplus from 1945 production. These shipments of Canadian wheat and flour for the three-year period were sufficient to provide a normal bread ration for 250,000,000 people for an entire year and provide substantial by-products for the maintenance of livestock.

We suggest that had it not been for the persistent export of Canadian wheat in recent times, the food crisis now at hand would have occurred much sooner and would have been of even more serious proportions.

In spite of all that Canada has done and is doing to provide food for importing countries, Canada is again examining the present position to see what further increase can be made in food shipments to overseas countries.

Canada will keep on shipping wheat at the average rate of approximately one million bushels per working day. In the first six months of the current crop year wheat exports have reached the figure of 204,000,000 bushels. As at February 1st, Canada had an exportable surplus of 140,000,000 bushels of wheat which will be shipped abroad before July 31st, 1946.

Every effort will be put forward to speed up the shipment of these wheat supplies with the object of making as much wheat as possible available at the earliest possible date. Internal transportation is being reviewed with this objective in mind.

Every effort is being made to speed up deliveries of remaining surpluses of wheat, oats and barley on farms in Canada.

Every effort is being made to explore the possibility of increasing the remaining wheat surplus position over and above 140,000,000 bushels. These efforts may increase this export supply by from five to ten million bushels.

Shipments of other food products are at virtually maximum levels, but the position of each product will be reviewed to see if quantities can even be slightly increased.

We must emphasize that the maximum production of foodstuffs in Canada and the maximum shipment of food products during the latter part of the war was an essential part of the war effort of the United Nations. Consequently, when the war ended, Canada was producing and shipping food products to the extent of her capacity to do so and has continued to maintain this position up to the present time and will maintain this position”.

[Ottawa,] February 13, 1946

(1) The attached note summarizes the points raised in Mr. Gardiner's meeting on Saturday with officials of departments concerned with the food policy. There is of course room for further exploration and argument about each of the methods suggested for increasing the quantity of wheat that can be shipped abroad from Canada this year. Some of them are probably alternatives, i.e., if the Government decided to raise the flour extraction ratio—thereby reducing the supply of mill feeds—it would probably be impracticable to release stocks of low-grade wheat now held for animal feeding for human consumption.

(2) To my mind the interdepartmental consideration given the general problem has been inadequate. I think people here have not realized what the social and political consequences of food shortage on the threatened scale might be; we are also inclined to rest, a bit complacently, on a very good record of past and present performance.

My own view is that the people of Canada will wish to make new efforts to help meet a world shortage and will expect the Government to give advice and direction as to the form those efforts could most effectively take. Specifically—if unfairly—they will judge our action by two or three fairly arbitrary criteria. If these criteria are in fact inapplicable to the Canadian case we should be in a position to explain clearly why this is so.

For better or worse our action will be measured alongside what appears to be American action; e.g., if the United States insists on an 80 per cent. extraction ratio as an emergency measure, and the United Kingdom raises its ratio to 85, it will be difficult for us to hold to a 72 per cent. ratio. Similarly, it will be hard to justify maintenance of normal grain supplies for the brewers and distillers in the face of world food needs and specific United States restrictions.

I feel too we must be prepared to raise our wheat target acreage for next year—not at the expense of coarse grain acreage—but by reducing summer fallow.

Until policy is determined on the questions raised in the attached note it will not be possible to reply to the messages you have received from Mr. Attlee and Governor Lehman or to issue any useful statement to the Canadian people.

[Ottawa,] February 13, 1946

WORLD FOOD CRISIS
MAXIMIZING CEREALS AVAILABILITY

A meeting was held of officials with Mr. Gardiner Saturday afternoon, February 9, to discuss this matter.

It was pointed out that Canada had made a spectacular effort to achieve maximum exports of cereals and other foods. This effort has delayed the crisis, but has not succeeded in preventing it. The record shipment of a billion bushels of wheat in the 3 crop years ending July 31, 1946 will exhaust all the Canadian reserves. The problem can only be solved by world action and care must be exercised to see that others, including the recipients of imported supplies, maximize their home utilization of food products. The steps that were discussed were:

(1) The grant of priorities on rail transportation of cereal shipments would permit adding some two million bushels a month to the exports on the Atlantic coast. No addition can be made on the Pacific coast. Exports of these two million bushels a month before the opening of navigation will only effect a speed-up of deliveries, but no increase in the total supplies shipped before the end of the crop year.

(2) Income tax concessions probably in the form of wheat certificates exchangeable for wheat or its price later would give an incentive to farmers who are holding wheat on their farms to make it available immediately. This would add a maximum of some ten million bushels to the total exportable supplies already calculated at 345,000,000 bushels for the present crop year. Only part of this increase could be shipped before the opening of navigation.

(3) The possibility of raising the extraction ratio of wheat will be discussed with the millers this week. Such action would reduce the amount of feeding stuffs available and would react adversely on the meat, egg and dairy products production.

(4) The millers will be asked to arrange that inventory supplies of wheat and flour in warehouses and in retail stores be kept to the minimum needed for satisfaction of the demand.

(5) Reduction in distilling for alcohol production would only produce a very small amount of wheat, since only 600,000 bushels a month are used for that purpose and 50% of the alcohol is for industrial use.

(6) A reduction in the use of barley for malting would provide alternative feed supplies which could make available some 4 or 5 million bushels of lower grade wheat for human consumption, which is being kept as a feed reserve.

(7) In addition to the 5,000,000 bushels of oats released for human consumption recently, a quantity of up to 12,000,000 bushels could be released for seeding in Europe.

(8) Rice is in many parts of the world a preferred alternative to wheat. The demand for rice is just as great and urgent as that for wheat at the present time. Canada has restricted its consumption of that product by its civilian population to the lowest total of all the war years, reserving the largest part of these supplies for the oriental population in Canada; she has many times offered to remove rice from the market altogether, if similar action is taken by countries in similar position.

(9) Since the emergency will last beyond the next few months because all reserves of cereals will be exhausted by the end of the present crop year, the point was raised of possibly increasing the acreage sown of wheat.

(10) A publicity campaign which could start with a statement by the Prime Minister would be needed to ensure the success of any of the steps taken above and that everybody makes the utmost effort to conserve supplies to maximize overseas shipments.

au Premier ministre*

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

PRIVATE

[Ottawa,] February 19, 1946

The attached memorandum is the report of the recommendations agreed to at the meeting of officials with Mr. Gardiner yesterday. I would like to add the following points:

1. The Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board have met in Washington last week and their report is that, statistically, the picture is not one of general starvation but of low caloric intake; I say statistically because breakdown in distribution of indigenous supplies will leave some groups, particularly in cities, with a very low and sometimes a starvation diet.

The statistical picture is not flush, but will take care of the bare needs of the population until the new crop; it will remain tight for at least one year.

2. I cannot emphasize enough that the most important item in the statistical picture is the United States commitment to export 225 million bushels in the first six months of this year. If they fail in this, then starvation in Europe this year will result and be widespread. It is therefore essential that whatever action we take does not have the effect of impeding the United States in the realization of their program. While the alternative suggested under item (2) to increasing the extraction ratio in Canada, i.e. reducing the supply of wheat to mills for domestic milling may be simpler and more productive of results, as far as Canada is concerned, these results must be weighed as against the effect in the United States—our program will release 2,500,000 bushels of wheat, the United States one 25,000,000. Although the United States have not consulted us before setting out their program, any more than they consulted their own millers, which would have been most sensible, I suggest that we take this matter up with them urgently, explain our position and see which effect they consider it will have on theirs before we reach a final decision. Their program goes into operation on March 1st and it might be possible for them to reconsider it.

3. It is also worth pointing out that while the European future is less dark, the Asiatic situation is no better than it was and starvation looms tragically in India particularly and in China and other areas to some considerable extent.

4. Under distilling, (item 5), no mention is made of reducing the amount of barley for malting purposes. It was felt that the results would be so small for the grief created, that no action need be taken; a brief statement could be made explaining that action has already been taken in regard to beer production.

5. Under the same item, it is worth pointing out that the 50% reduction in distilling does not deplete stocks but permits equal replacement of stocks released for consumption—its only effect is to prevent increase of stocks. There should therefore be no real cause for complaint on the part of the distilleries; nor on the part of the provinces whose revenues will not be affected because the competition between distillers should make them continue their competition for provincial sales at the present level.

6. The Items regarding rice in last week's report may be well worth including in the program, possibly in a slightly revised form. We did not withdraw rice from consumption in Canada because the United States refused to do so and even refused to let the two Canadian millers import rice for milling in bond for export only at the direction of the Combined Food Board.

7. I understand that Cabinet decided to leave wheat acreage at the present figure.

8. Finally, it was not felt that an extensive publicity program was warranted given the facts as they are. It would be difficult to have a campaign without being able to give glaring facts on the situation and low caloric intake does not have a striking appeal. Moreover it was pointed out that it would be most difficult to launch such a campaign unless a particular agency (the Wartime Prices and Trade Board is the natural choice) was assigned the task and given clear directives as to the methods of conservation which should be encouraged and which they could put forward; most of the suggestions in that line were considered objectionable. It was therefore recommended that no follow up be given to the appeal, which you would make when making known the steps taken by the Government to assist in reaching these objectives by careful attention to food conservation and the avoidance of waste.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, February 19, 1946

REPORT OF FOOD REQUIREMENTS COMMITTEE

The Food Requirements Committee, at the direction of the Cabinet, considered at a special meeting held on February 15th, Cabinet Document No. 156, the draft joint announcement on supply of food from Canada to the United Kingdom.<sup>1</sup>

The Committee confined its consideration of the document to the implications in respect to food only. It did not consider the implications in respect to general financial and economic policy.

This report of the Committee is predicated on the Committee's understanding that the specific quantities mentioned in the document do not constitute firm commitments by Canada but represent desirable objectives; and that the Ministry of Food is aware that some of the objectives, notably that for bacon and ham, may not be reached.

On the above assumption the Committee unanimously agreed that it would be beneficial to issue the announcement substantially in its present form with the changes suggested by the Minister of Agriculture and with the changes subsequently suggested in this report. It was agreed that a degree of optimism in setting the target figures was justified since the objectives would provide an incentive to the producer and an earnest of Canadian intention welcome to the Government and public of the United Kingdom.

The Committee agreed, however, that unless the production of bacon and ham is immediately stimulated not only are the objectives for 1947 and 1948 unrealistically high (possibly by from 100 to 200 million pounds, dependent on the degree of control retained over slaughter and consumption in Canada) but Canada will be threatened with the loss of her long-term market for bacon in the United Kingdom, since by falling seriously below the objectives we will force the United Kingdom to seek and develop other sources of supply.

The Committee agreed that the means through which the stimulus on production should be provided were an immediate price increase of $2.50 per 100 lbs. on Grade A bacon at seaboard. This would entail a proportionate increase in the ceiling price of fresh pork on the domestic market. To be effective, this increase must be an increase relative to the current price level of alternative products open to the agricultural producer. If such an increase were announced at a very early date it was felt that, given an adequate supply of feed grains, the objectives of 1947 and 1948 might not be out of reach, since the upswing anticipated in production would be continued into 1948.

The Committee was of the opinion that any increase granted in the price to the domestic producer should be added to the contract price. Should the Government act on the above lines, the price mentioned in the document should be changed accordingly.

The Committee's agreement on a price increase was reached solely on supply grounds. The representative of the W.P.T.B. warned that an increase in the bacon price would have a wide series of repercussions in the agricultural products price field. The representative of the Department of Agriculture felt that the critical position in bacon justified the increase, which could be defended because prices for other agricultural products were relatively more profitable.

With such an increase in price, the Committee was of the opinion that it would probably not be necessary, in order to approach the contract objectives, to retain rationing and slaughter control in 1947 and 1948. It would, however, be necessary to retain inspection control and export control. This would include a virtual prohibition of exports to other destinations than the United Kingdom, specifically to the United States. The Committee believed, however, that, apart from the proposed contracts, controls of quality and power to direct and regulate exports were needed to hold the United Kingdom market for Canada.

It was recognized that it might be necessary for the Agricultural Prices Support Board to use the procurement authority now vested in the Board.

It was agreed that the incentives now represented by hog bonuses and other subsidies would have to be retained through 1948.

In respect to these incentive payments, the Committee observed that the proposed contract does not recover for Canada that element in subsidy payments which represents the direct encouragement of exports. This observation relates not only to the contract prices for ham and bacon but also for cheese and evaporated milk.

The Committee considered that the cheese objective was well within reach but regarded it desirable that an arrangement be made with the United Kingdom authorities whereunder it would be agreed that Canada would retain approximately 50,000,000 pounds for domestic requirements and 10,000,000 pounds of cheese or the equivalent in dairy products for other export markets. It was felt that Canada should not be put in a position of being unable to export moderate quantities to other countries.

The Committee is not reporting on the implications of the cheese contract in respect to other dairy products since it understood that the Cabinet has the general question already under study.

Following for Major Boxer<sup>1</sup> from Oliver Master, Begins: I am authorized by Honourable Mr. MacKinnon, Minister of Trade and Commerce to send you the following message with reference to the two major questions to be dealt with at the meeting of the International Wheat Council on March second.<sup>2</sup> Message reads, quote The Canadian Government approves of the Amendments to the Memorandum of Agreement dated June 27, 1942, by the deletion of paragraphs 5, 6, 7, and 8 thereof.

The Canadian government approves that invitations be sent to the following countries to join the Council—Brazil, China, Denmark, France, Holland (Netherlands), India, Italy, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Yugoslavia.

The Canadian Government proposes that Norway be added to the list of countries to which invitations are to be sent. Unquote.

Mr. MacKinnon has further stated his wish that the position to be taken by the Canadian representative at the meeting is to be that of acquiescing in the proposals, rather than that of initiating them—with the exception that the suggestion that Norway be included among the countries to be invited is a matter on which Canada is prepared to take the initiative. India and Mr. Ahuja, Trade Commissioner for the Government of India in Canada. The meeting was presided [over] by Mr. MacKinnon, Minister of Trade and Commerce; Mr. Paul Martin was also present. Both Ministers left shortly after eleven o'clock to attend a Cabinet meeting. As you know, Mr. Gardiner is still out of town; Dr. Barton had to attend a meeting in Montreal that morning and in the absence of both, Mr. Shaw represented the Department of Agriculture. There were also officials from the Department of External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, Privy Council Office, Finance, Fisheries and the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

Sir Ramaswami gave a brief outline of the present food situation in India, and Sir Robert Hutchings supplemented it briefly. India has, all through the war, used up its food resources, although it distributed them very sparingly. Despite the loss of the imports from Burma, India agreed to produce jute for the United Nations, although it would have been safer for her to convert more land to the production of cereals. This year India's crops have failed disastrously, as a result first of floods and later of drought and she has no stocks to throw into the breach. Cereals, which are the only diet of a large part of the population, are rationed at twelve ounces per day, i.e. 1200 calories; and the Government monopolizes all supplies both imported and those which it extracts from producers, leaving them sufficient for their needs. The population which lives on rationed supplies amounts to some sixty million people; the rest of the population are more or less self-sufficient agriculturists.

India during the next three critical months, April, May and June, needs two million tons of cereals, i.e. sixty-six million bushels of wheat—in fact part of this should be rice and therefore her need is for some 1,700,000 tons of wheat. The Indian delegates stated that their need would be just as great after the emergency period, since no crop is expected in India until March 1947, at which time some rice will come forward. During the two years beginning now, India requires from abroad four and half million tons of cereals of which she would desire a large share to come from Canada, including particularly 500,000 tons of wheat as a working reserve which she would be prepared to keep in Canadian or Indian elevators depending on the general convenience.

Sir Ramaswami did not elaborate on the political conditions in India which he assumed were fairly well known, but he wishes that background to be kept firmly in mind; he also impressed upon the meeting the importance of Commonwealth solidarity—together in war and together in peace; if the Commonwealth can come to the assistance of one of its members, the effect in India can be of major importance; the alternative, even if disaster is averted through some other assistance, means an end to India in the Commonwealth; if no relief comes to India from Commonwealth or other sources, the extent of the disaster cannot be predicted; not only will famine mean wholesale disorders and a breakdown of civil government, but the famine will spread further with the impossibility of obtaining the meagre supplies which are at present received from small farmers: the famine this year is expected to be very much more widespread than that of 1943.

Sir Ramaswami stated that they had put their case before the London Food Council who had approved it and agreed to present it to the Combined Food Board. Their purpose in coming here was to request our support before the Combined Food Board and most sympathetic consideration to any diversion of supplies which we could undertake in the Canadian program set out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. They realized that little additional supplies could be found, but urged that if any were found, India's claim be recognized, that some supplies be diverted if possible and they indicated that their statement of needs for the next two years would make it worth Canada's while from a charitable and also from a business point of view to produce as much cereals as she could. Mr. MacKinnon assured Sir Ramaswami that we understood the need and would give most sympathetic consideration to his plea. The availability of other supplies was also canvassed and it is understood that both Mr. Finn, of the Fish Products Committee, and Mr. K. W. Taylor, Coordinator of Foods in the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, will be seeing the Indian delegates in Washington this week.

Mr. Gardiner could not be reached on Saturday, Sunday or today. It is expected that he is travelling back to Ottawa. In view of the fact that Sir Ben Smith is coming to Washington for the meeting of the Combined Food Board on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, it may be advisable for Mr. Gardiner to join Dr. Barton, who has already proceeded to Washington.

The question was raised at the meeting of the Combined Food Board in Washington yesterday whether similar appeals for cooperation in meeting the food crisis should go forward from Mr. Attlee and yourself. opinion that, at the present juncture, there was better prospect of the appeal being effective if it came only from the President.<sup>1</sup>

Pearson tells me that the question of inviting the Soviet Union to join the Combined Food Board is likely to arise out of the current discussions with the UNRRA Council, where the U.S.S.R. has made itself the spokesman for the claimant countries. It is not thought likely that the Soviet Union would accept membership on the Combined Food Board, because this would require it to make available to the other members of the Board full information about its own supply position in respect of commodities with which the Combined Food Board deals.

I told Pearson that I did not think the Canadian Government would have any political objection to the addition of the U.S.S.R. to the Board, which now consists of the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada, but I was a bit worried lest they accept the invitation and use their position within the Board to upset existing supply allocations. If, however, the United States and the United Kingdom were prepared to invite the Soviet Union to membership, I do not think Canada should object to this course, but should associate itself with the invitation, if one goes forward.<sup>2</sup>

In view of the decision not to proceed with the proposal to establish a national emergency food committee under a citizen of national prominence, for the purposes of the campaign, I do not think much more can be said in answer to Mrs. Rean's enquiry than is contained in the attached draft. However, I felt that before it was sent you should see it.

I should, perhaps, point out that there is a difference of opinion as to the value of a voluntary campaign and the organization for this purpose of a national committee. TELEGRAM EX-962

Ottawa, April 4, 1946

I quote for your information copy of the exchange of telegrams between Mr. LaGuardia and the Prime Minister on the subject of food supplies to UNRRA:

(Telegram from Mr. La Guardia to the Prime Minister) [April 2] "Wheat situation extremely critical. We actually shipped 318,000 tons in the month of March when 700,000 tons were needed. The bins of the receiving countries will be empty by the end of April, and with the present situation we would not be able to provide sufficient wheat for even minimum current needs. We must get more wheat from Canada. You can do it. I beg of you to allocate 25 million bushels of wheat to be delivered in approximately equal quantities April, May, June and July. When I accepted this difficult assignment, I felt I could depend upon Canada. You and I are too practical to be satisfied by extending our sympathy to millions of people who are in need of food. Please do not let me down. I just cannot continue unless I can get food. I want to keep these people alive. Not bury them. In the name of humanity, give this your personal and usual energetic attention. F. La Guardia, Director General UNRRA."

(Telegram to Mr. La Guardia from the Prime Minister) [April 3] "I have been carefully considering with my colleagues your telegram of yesterday regarding the extremely critical wheat situation. The plan under which we have been making allocation of our wheat supplies to the needy world is to make known to the Combined Food Board through the Cereals Committee the total quantity available and to undertake to supply the whole of that amount as rapidly as facilities will permit. For the first half of this year that was done prior to March fourteenth when the Combined Food Board met in Washington and reached agreement on distribution of available supplies. Canadian wheat is now being shipped as rapidly as it is possible to move it. Canada will continue to make every effort to maximize its exportable supplies of cereals and other foodstuffs during the critical months ahead. If, as we earnestly hope, our combined efforts do result in more wheat becoming available, you may be certain that it will be moved forward as rapidly as it is possible to have it moved. You will agree, I am sure, that confusion would result if individual supplying countries were to attempt to alter allocations agreed upon and already cleared through the established channels. In these circumstances I would suggest that application for additional amounts for UNRRA be made to the Combined Food Board. Like you I am deeply concerned with the urgent need for food by starving peoples in other parts of the world and with the practical means of meeting this need. You may rely on the government of Canada doing all in its power to assist you in the formidable task you have undertaken to provide food for those in need. W. L. Mackenzie King."

DESPATCH 610

Ottawa, April 8, 1946

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I refer to the present crisis in world food supplies and to the part which Canada will play in alleviating hardships due to the deficit.

2. Though the most acute and widespread shortage is that in cereals, primarily wheat and rice, its effects are intensified by the weak supply position in other foodstuffs, notably meat, oils and fats and sugar, and the crisis should be examined as a whole rather than regarded merely as affecting cereals. The current shortage of wheat in particular, however, is giving rise to numerous requests for additional shipments from Canada, the majority of which it is not possible for us to meet. It may, therefore, be useful for you to have at your disposal a statement of the facts regarding world wheat supplies and the Canadian plans for general food production.

3. The total requirements of bread grain and flour for the first six months of 1946, as stated to the Combined Food Board, are 19.6 million long tons. The expected short fall in rice will bring this requirement up to about 21 million long tons. Supplies available for export during the same period are estimated at 12 million long tons, practically all in Canada, the United States, the Argentine and Australia. About 80 to 85% of the available wheat and flour is in North America. There is thus an expected deficit of roughly 8 to 9 million long tons of bread grain and flour, or about 40% of requirements for the first six months of 1946.

4. It should be emphasized that the shortages in wheat and rice are not the result of a fall in production in the major exporting countries, but of a greatly increased demand arising from crop failures in areas such as the Balkans, the Mediterranean, India and South Africa which are normally more nearly self-sufficient, or are even surplus producers. The total amount of wheat and flour entering into world trade for the last six months of 1945 was about 12.5 million tons, as against a pre-war annual average (1935-1939) of about 15 million tons. It is obvious, therefore, that export shipments have been much increased. Attached you will find a copy of a report of March 11th from the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board which describes the position in greater detail (Enclosure No. 1) †.

5. With a deficit of these proportions it is evident that it will not be possible to meet the needs of all claimants, and that all allocations should be made after the most careful screening of requirements and should be of short duration in order to meet unforeseen contingencies immediately when they arise. In view of the efforts being made in all countries to maximize exports during the coming months, there will be no supplies held in reserve at the end of the present crop year. It is feared, therefore, that the present serious situation may be prolonged over the next year or two or even longer. It may be worth pointing out, too, that even if supplies were available in larger quantities, the technical job of moving them to the deficit countries would be almost impossible. The 21 million long tons required to meet the deficit of the next six months, exceeding as it does the average annual wheat trade of before the war, would place a burden upon transport facilities which they could not hope to meet.

6. Turning from the world wheat supplies to the position of Canadian wheat stocks, the facts are as follows. In the period August 1st, 1945, to January 31st, 1946, Canada exported 204 million bushels of wheat and wheat flour, leaving only 145 million bushels to meet requests arising during the second six months of the 1945-46 crop year. In fact all the available wheat will be shipped in the five months February to June.

7. For a summary of Canadian achievements in food production during the war, I refer you to Circular Despatch No. 389 of March 2nd,† to the copy of the speech given by the Honourable Paul Martin at the General Assembly of the United Nations on February 13th<sup>1</sup> included in that despatch, and to the copy of the Prime Minister's statement of March 17th† which you have already received.

8. The Prime Minister's statement also expresses our resolve to do everything possible to tide the deficit countries over the present crisis. All practicable steps are to be taken to maximize the quantities available for export and to maintain the very high level of wartime production. Though the bread cereals programme naturally excites the greatest concern at the present juncture, it should not be regarded in isolation, but should be considered as an integral part of a policy which will endeavour also to keep up production of meat and dairy goods, maintain the acreage of feed grains necessary to achieve this purpose, and at the same time husband the resources of the soil in the interests of maximum yields for the period of shortage expected during the next few years.

9. Our plans must take into account all these considerations and have three chief objectives:

(a) Maintenance of the highest possible levels of production in all food commodities, both during the present emergency and in the more prolonged period of shortage which must be expected;

(b) Economy in domestic use; and

(c) Maximizing of supplies available for export during the critical period up to June 1946.

10. In the interests of achieving the highest possible levels of all-round food production, the Government has recommended that wheat acreage be kept at the 1945 figure of 23 million acres, 6 million more than in 1943 and 4 million over the 1935-1939 average. A further large increase of wheat acreage will not be recommended, since it might affect adversely the production of coarse grains needed for livestock feed and cut into the area of summer fallow required to keep the soil at its maximum of fertility. (There is felt to be a strong possibility, moreover, that wheat acreage will increase without official Government encouragement, since the prices are attractive and the crop is one which appeals to the western farmers). A floor price at lakehead of $1 a bushel for No. 1 Northern wheat has been guaranteed to the Canadian producer for the next five years and an export price of $1.55 for the current season. In this connection, it may be pointed out that the Canadian Government, in fixing the export price of wheat at $1.55 per bushel, has shown that there is no disposition in this country to take advantage of others' needs by allowing Canadian wheat to sell at the inflated price it could undoubtedly command. For oats, which are as you know the principal feed grain raised in Canada, the 1945-1946 programme is to be continued and the Government will guarantee 45 cents per bushel lakehead for No. 2 C.W. oats. The food contracts recently concluded with the United Kingdom provide for the continued shipment at close to wartime levels of bacon, ham, cheese, evaporated milk, roller dried skim milk powder, eggs, beef and mutton, hog casings and sausage meat. Provision has been made for extending the majority of contracts into 1948, and in the case of bacon and ham into 1949. To encourage a continued high level of hog production, the return to the producer will be increased about $3 per hog by raising the seaboard price and retaining the Government premium, though at a reduced rate. For further details regarding the points touched on in this paragraph, I refer you to the recent statements in the House of Commons by the Honourable Mr. Gardiner and the Honourable Mr. MacKinnon (Hansard, Volume LXXXV, No. 4 pages 98-110, No. 8 pages 219-220, No. 9 pages 263-264).

11. To encourage economy in domestic use, the Government is undertaking a publicity campaign urging the Canadian people to avoid waste in all foods, particularly bread and wheat. There is to be a 10% reduction in the supply of wheat made available for domestic milling during 1945. It is expected that this measure will produce an extra 2½ million bushels of wheat for export before the end of the cereal crop year. The amount of wheat released to distillers is to be reduced by 50% of the 1945 deliveries. In addition to these new measures, announced by the Prime Minister on March 17th, there is of course to be an indefinite continuation of consumer rationing which at present applies to meat, butter, sugar and preserves.

12. In order to increase to the maximum the supplies of wheat made available for export, three chief steps have been taken. In the first place, farmers are to be encouraged to market any wheat they may be holding by the introduction of a special plan of income tax relief. Producers will be given the opportunity of making delivery between April 1st and June 30th, 1946, and taking cash settlement at their choice in 1946, 1947 or 1948, an arrangement which will enable them to spread their income for tax purposes in a way most advantageous to them. (Hansard, Volume LXXXV, No. 8, page 219). In the second place, it is proposed to keep constantly under review supplies of oats and No. 4 wheat, normally used for domestic feed purposes, with the purpose of making some available for export. Third, efforts will be made to hasten the movement of grain to seaboard by giving rail priorities to the shipment of wheat. It should also be pointed out in this connection that centralized purchasing and distribution through the Canadian Wheat Board make possible the most effective disposition of Canadian stocks.

13. Finally, in dealing with the cereals available for export, it has been found necessary to place supplies under a month-to-month allocation until at least the end of the current crop year. (The first priority has been given to the minimum requirements of the United Kingdom, and a second to those of the liberated European countries who were our allies during the war, to UNRRA, and to outside areas for the supplying of which the United Kingdom is responsible. As regards the remaining countries, particularly those of Central and South America, the policy of the Canadian Wheat Board is to ship only to the extent that these areas have taken Canadian wheat in recent years). For the next four months after the lake navigation season opens, almost all the Canadian wheat available at seaboard for shipment will go to meet United Kingdom requirements, as all supplies of wheat programmed for other countries will have been pre-shipped in the first three months of this year; there will then remain only some flour for shipment to countries other than the United Kingdom, including UNRRA.

14. As you know, various appeals and recommendations have recently appeared, suggesting the best method of dealing with the world food crisis. President Truman has established a Famine Emergency Committee under the honorary chairmanship of Mr. Hoover, to lead a drive in the United States to increase exportable supplies of food. Mr. Lehman, the retiring Director-General of UNRRA, has issued a statement containing six specific recommendations applicable to supplying countries: all-out production, intensified food conservation, control of consumption, increase of extraction rate and reduction in the use of cereals for beverages, examining of livestock feeding policies with a view to making all possible grain available for human food, and finally a modification of the structure of the Combined Food Board. Attached is a copy (Enclosure No. 2) of a speech by Mr. L. B. Pearson which reviews these recommendations point by point in the light of Canadian policy. It will already be obvious from the material contained in this despatch that our programme corresponds closely to the procedure recommended by Mr. Lehman. One difference which will probably occur to you is that the Canadian Government has taken no steps to raise the extraction rate of Canadian milled wheat. For a detailed account of the reasons which led to this decision, I refer you to the statement made in the Meeting of Heads of Divisions held on March 12th.† In brief they are that an increase of extraction rate would lower by one-quarter the supply of mill feed for livestock, that the change in methods would substantially slow up production, and that the high extraction flour is more perishable in hot climates than the standard type.

15. I hope that the foregoing statement will serve to set Canada's plans for alleviating the food shortage in their proper perspective and will help to explain why many urgent requirements for Canadian wheat cannot at present be fully satisfied and why demands originating in countries which have not heretofore been buyers cannot, for the most part, be met during the current crop year.

16. You will note that although certain of the material on which this despatch is based is confidential, much of it is not restricted, and I would suggest that you exercise your discretion as to the use to which it may be put. Copies of this despatch have gone to all our Missions abroad.

I have etc.

Discours du représentant au Conseil de l'UNRRA

Speech of Representative to Council of UNRRA

MR. PEARSON'S SPEECH IN THE COMMITTEE ON POLICY
OF THE COUNCIL OF UNRRA MARCH 21ST, 1946

CHAIRMAN (Through Interpreter): The Chair recognizes the member of the Council, representative of Canada, Mr. Ambassador Pearson. (Applause)

COUNCIL MEMBER FROM CANADA: Mr. Chairman, members of the Council: I do not propose to follow my friend, Dr. Rajchman, into the statistical calculation which he has so impressively made. For one reason, I am not brave enough to enter that field. For another, I am not qualified to do so.

In fact, I am not sure that statistical evidence could not be adduced to prove that I am an idiot in that field and in this case, it might not be a "statistical lie". (Laughter)

I do not propose either to talk about the resolution which Dr. Rajchman has just tabled and which is a very important one indeed, and which, on the face of it, I must say my delegation would have some difficulty in accepting.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that we will be given an opportunity to discuss that resolution at some further stage in this debate and that my silence on this occasion would not be interpreted later as agreement.

I want to speak for a few moments on the statement made yesterday by the Director General. No one who listened to that statement could fail to be deeply moved by Governor Lehman's appeal.

He has placed before us in terms of unmistakable urgency the needs of those countries which depend on UNRRA for aid, and he has reminded us of the heavy responsibilities which rest upon us if needless human suffering is to be avoided. His remarks, eloquent, sincere and straightforward, have called to our minds also the great debt of gratitude we owe him for his services to UNRRA. The address to which we listened yesterday is characteristic of Governor Lehman's whole record as Director General, for in it he combined a thorough knowledge of a technical problem with courageous and compelling advocacy of the means to solve it. I feel sure, Mr. Chairman, that the most sincere tribute which any of us can pay to Governor Lehman is to face squarely and honestly the situation he has laid before us.

At the conclusion of his speech, Mr. Lehman made seven specific recommendations for action to provide additional food for UNRRA. These recommendations, coming as they do from so authoritative a source and backed by the experience of the Administration during these past few months of growing shortages, compel our most serious attention. It is, therefore, my purpose to indicate the action that Canada has taken [and] proposes to take in connection with each of these recommendations.

The first is that all-out production be emphasized this year in the food production program of every nation. Since the outbreak of war in September 1939, Canadian farmers have been urged to grow more and more food. Year by year, goals which were moved farther and farther ahead were achieved and surpassed. At the end of 1945, and the war then being over, Federal and Provincial authorities of Canada met together and set new goals for 1946 at levels equal to the highest over-all production of the war years.

Even greater efforts are now to be made, for the Prime Minister of Canada this week urged farmers to strive for the greatest possible over-all production of foodstuffs. And because we in Canada believe, with the Director General, that the crisis will last beyond the coming months, the Government is urging farmers to make plans for the production of the maximum quantity of food during the next three or four years. This is, of course, in the circumstances, the right and proper thing to do. It is, however, for a country like Canada, which lives by foreign trade, the giving of a hostage to fortune. For there will come a time, no doubt, when our worries will be about surpluses rather than deficits. We have heard it stated at this Council session that the countries which have been the victims of war have the right to receive help now in the form of supplies.

That is true. I hope in the future when those countries achieve a happier position, as I know they will do, that their people will still demand the right to receive supplies from our country. (Laughter) We at that time will no doubt be talking about our right to export.

Mr. Lehman's second recommendation is that every country, supplying as well as receiving, should intensify food conservation measures. Our government, along with the government of the United States, has already put into effect a publicity campaign urging Canadians to avoid waste and consume less food. This will be supplemented by direct action to reduce inventories to the lowest possible levels, thus making more food available for immediate shipment abroad.

Thirdly, it is recommended that member governments take prompt and courageous measures of control to meet the peacetime needs for food, similar to those which were justified by the wartime emergencies. Voluntary efforts, said the Director General, are not enough, and with these views, we are in full agreement. We have followed our agreement by action. In Canada, meat rationing was reintroduced last October for the sole purpose of making meat available for shipment abroad. Consumers are entitled under the present ration to less meat than during wartime. Butter continues to be rationed, and for the time being, consumers get just half the amount to which they were entitled by wartime rationing. Sugar, of course, is still under strict ration. Equally important, the Government has been requisitioning at the source and directing overseas supplies of food such as bacon and cheese, leaving very limited amounts of these products for consumption at home.

Mr. Lehman's fourth recommendation dealt with the Combined Food Board, and I shall leave that for comment at the conclusion of my remarks.

The fifth recommendation has to do with food collection methods in receiving countries. While this does not directly concern Canada, it has a very direct bearing on the willingness of our people to take the action necessary in the present emergency. We will find it much more difficult to increase our food shipments abroad if we are not given every reasonable assurance that everything is done that can be done in the receiving countries to maximize their own production; to distribute that production equitably; and to prevent its diversion to ends other than human consumption. My own Government is doing everything humanly possible to get foodstuffs off the farms and into export channels. As an example, the Canadian Government this week announced steps which are expected to result in the export of several million additional bushels within a few months' time—that is of wheat.

I come now to the sixth recommendation, which is in two parts: first, that where possible, the extraction rates on grain should be increased; and secondly, that the use of cereals for beverage purposes should be cut drastically. I will deal with the second part first. No particular significance should be attached to that fact. (Laughter)

Beginning immediately, the amount of wheat released for distilling purposes in Canada is being reduced by fifty per cent. The proposal to increase the extraction rate was carefully considered by the Canadian Government. The Director General's recommendation about the extraction rate was modified by the words "where possible", and I think that it is well to bear in mind that in Canada the farmers are much more dependent upon the millfeeds derived from the production of flour than are the farmers of other countries, who have a greater variety of alternative feeds. It was found moreover that a more substantial and certain reduction in the use of wheat could be effected without an hour's delay by the simple method of reducing by governmental action deliveries of wheat to mills. That is a form of rationing of wheat.

In future, therefore, Canadian millers will be permitted to grind for home consumption an amount equal to only ninety per cent of the wheat used for this purpose in 1945. It would be absurd to call this a sacrifice, but it is a considerable additional contribution, and one which can be made effective at once.

This brings me to the seventh and final recommendation relating to livestock feeding in both supplying and receiving countries. This is a highly technical question and one which I am sure you will not expect me to discuss in detail. The Canadian Government's statement of this week, however, announced that every effort will be made to ship abroad oats and lower grades of wheat that are not absolutely essential for feed purposes.

All these measures will, I hope—indeed, I am sure—result in a substantial increase in cereal shipments to those parts of the world where they are so badly needed. Only from reduction of domestic consumption can we make that additional contribution, so we are in duty bound to take that way.

Our stocks of wheat which only a few short years ago seemed so enormous are now so reduced that by the end of July, the end of our crop year, our surplus for export will have completely disappeared; that surplus which, made available at controlled and relatively low prices, has already saved millions from starvation. The disappearance of these stocks also encouraged farmers to resume their normal cropping practices, and wheat acreage has risen by no less than 40% during the last two years. I believe it is fair to say, therefore, that Canada has drawn fully on her agricultural resources in order to contribute to the world supply of cereals for human consumption. The figures show it.

One billion bushels of wheat, or wheat in the form of flour shipped in the last 3 years; a million bushels every working day going forward now. During the period July-December 1945 Canada shipped more wheat than any other country.

I have left for the last the recommendation relating to the Combined Food Board, of which Canada is a member. Here the Director General makes three recommendations, first, that the membership of the Board be broadened; second, that the U.S.S.R. be invited to join the Board; and, third, that board allocations be made public. The reasons for the establishment of the Combined Food Board in its present form have always seemed good and sufficient ones to the Canadian Government, and this conviction has been shared, I believe, by the other two members of the board. I do not wish to make a lengthy statement about the operations of the Combined Food Board, but I should like to mention one or two points about which misunderstanding obviously exists. I do so in no defensive or apologetic way.

It should be borne in mind that the continuance of the Combined Food Board after the end of hostilities anticipated the development of current world food shortages. During the war the Board recommended action designed to manage food efficiently as a part of the Allied military effort. To this end, supplies available to the Allies were related to inland transportation, storage and port capacity, and ocean freight.

Even before the end of the war, however, the need for a common food forum in the immediate post-war period was evident. Indispensable relations had developed between the Board, on the one hand, and UNRRA, the military occupation authorities and some of the countries later liberated, on the other. In the absence of any other international body capable of grappling with the growing complexities of the food situation, it was inevitable that the Board should continue to function after the end of hostilities. The essentially temporary nature of this development has always been recognized. It is hoped that, as soon as practicable, newer international organizations will assume a much larger responsibility in respect of food than does the Board at the present time.

As soon as it became apparent that the role of the Board had changed with the advent of peace, steps were taken to adapt it to the new operations. The membership of commodity committees established by the Board was expanded as quickly as appeared practicable, and very wisely so. This expansion was designed to provide as broad a forum as possible for the interchange of information and discussion leading up to the recommended distribution of foodstuffs in short supply. The growth of committee membership is shown in the appendices to the report of the Board, circulated as Document No. 56 of this conference, and which will, I think exonerate the board from the criticism that it is a narrow group representing only three governments.

These measures have altered not only the structure of the Board and its constituent parts, but also its methods of operation. The expanded commodities committees became in many respects completely autonomous. Their activities were directed more towards the mobilization of world supplies and the determination of valid requirements than to considerations which previously had been dictated by war.

In spite of difficulties, a workable, if cumbersome, organization continues to exist. No one is completely satisfied with the organization or its results at the present time, least of all the members of the board. It should be noticed, however, that the widespread interest in the activities of the Board is a reflection of an equally widespread desire for more food. The available supply of food has been distributed over a wide area in order that the shortage may not bear too heavily on any one country. Without the Food Board as it now operates, the world scarcity of food might otherwise have been drastically concentrated in a few areas.

It may be as well to remember that fact when tempted to criticize the Board and its operations. There has been an appeal made that the Board and its committees should trust UNRRA and accept its screened requirements. Dr. Rajchman talked about screened requirements. It is quite true, of course, requirements that come from UNRRA have been screened. It is equally true UNRRA has no way of relating those requirements to the requirements of other countries and to the world supply position. Therefore,

I think it is quite reasonable that requirements be screened by UNRRA and all the authority of UNRRA should be some outside agency be related to other agencies and total supplies. [sic] I hope the question of "trust" can be left out of the discussion, but if it cannot, then it might be as well to point out that the Board deserves a little trust as well. It is no tyrannical group of bureaucrats imposing their will on helpless governments but honest and hardworking experts making recommendations which can be accepted or rejected by governments, which are designed to ensure that an inadequate supply which cannot be divided to satisfy everybody shall at least be divided to satisfy nobody. All the nations that come before the Board must have equal justification to complain. That I'm afraid is what equitable distribution means in the present circumstances. In this process, UNRRA is entitled to a fair, but no more than fair, priority. Its claims must be related to the claims of others. In this table of priority the claims of ex-enemy countries should be put at the very bottom of the list, and it is unfair to the Combined Food Board to suggest, as has been suggested, that this is not being done; that the Board is as interested in supplying our ex-enemies as our present friends. There is no foundation to that suspicion. It would be a scandal and a crime if a Jap, through any action of a United Nations agency, lived better than a citizen of China, or if a Bulgarian or Roumanian were permitted to have a better ration than a Greek or a Yugoslav.

The Director General suggested specifically that the U.S.S.R. be added to the Board, and presumably its committees. As far as I am concerned, I heartily approve the extension of membership of United Nations agencies to include all United Nations, especially the U.S.S.R. I am thinking of the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Bank, the International Fund, the Civil Aviation Organization, and many others. The U.S.S.R. is a great food producing country and the provision of complete information regarding its food production, food stocks and food shipments would, no doubt, be of great value to the work of the Food Board and its Committees, and make the work of those committees much easier. It would be most interesting to the Council to receive the reaction of the Soviet Member to this suggestion.

There is no need, Mr. Chairman, for me to say more. The need is so great, the problems of such gigantic magnitude, the implications of failure to meet them so terrifying, that only the most heroic efforts on all our parts will be of any real help. These efforts will require the laying aside of every consideration except that of human needs. That is the only consideration that guides our Director General and the Administration. It must be the consideration, the sole consideration, that guides the council and the governments we represent.

Food, Mr. Chairman, was a mighty weapon of war. Food must be a mighty weapon of peace. But it must never become a weapon of international politics. If it does, it will break in the hands of those who would debase it to that use.

To resolve the dangerous food crisis ahead, Mr. Chairman, we must all do more than we have ever done before; especially we who live in favoured lands. If we do not, we will soon learn that just as once this great nation could not live, half-slave and half-free, so today our "one world" cannot live half fed, half starved.

Mr. Pearson telephoned from Washington this afternoon to deliver a message to you from La Guardia, who had been in conference with President Truman during the day. Pearson gathered that the President had made further United States action for food relief conditional on assurances that Canada would take similar and simultaneous action. Specifically, the President would be prepared to make an order diverting 25 percent of the flour now going into domestic United States consumption if the Canadian Government would take the same action and if the United Kingdom Government would take some comparable step.

When Mr. Gardiner was in Washington last week, I believe he did say, in general terms, that we would be willing to match American and British efforts in making food available for overseas shipment. We have cut down the allowance of flour for domestic consumption by 10 percent, but the cut to 25 percent is obviously a much more serious step. If the Americans can take it, there is no doubt that we can too.

I am afraid if we defer deciding the question on which we are asked for our views by tomorrow, there may be a disposition in the White House to back out of this offer and blame inadequate American action on the absence of assurances that the other supplying countries were prepared to go along with them.<sup>1</sup>

President Truman signed this morning an Order reducing the milling of wheat for domestic use or consumption, to 75% of the quantity so milled in the corresponding month of 1945. The United States are not making this Order public pending consultation with us about the form of the announcement. I expect to receive later in the day a draft for comment of the announcement the United States propose to make.

I informed the Wartime Prices and Trade Board this morning of the action the United States is going to take, and they are examining urgently the corresponding measures which may be taken here in the light of the Government's decision to match United States measures for the relief of the world food shortage.<sup>1</sup>

Dear Mr. Robertson,

The Committee<sup>1</sup> nominated yesterday afternoon by Mr. Gardiner met this morning. I understand Mr. Gardiner has left the City and I am therefore handing to you the report of the Committee for further follow up and action.

With reference to the draft text of a statement to be discussed in Washington today, our Committee feels very strongly that no reference should be made to possible further Canadian action unless it is clear that an announcement of what these further plans are can be made almost immediately, (i.e. not later than Monday).

Our concern is that if a statement goes out that Canada will shortly be announcing further plans to make more Canadian wheat available there will be a tremendous degree of pressure and confusion among Canadian primary and secondary wheat users until the actual measures are made public.

Yours sincerely,

K. W. TAYLOR

MEMORANDUM RE PROPOSED FURTHER ECONOMIES
IN WHEAT CONSUMPTION IN CANADA

1. Significant differences in Canadian and United States wheat consumption are indicated by the Consumption Levels Enquiry of the Combined Food Board:

(a) Wheat products constitute 95% of Canadian cereal consumption, but only 80% of the United States'.

(b) Corn consumption in the United States is 24 lbs. per capita; in Canada it is 0.3 lbs.

(c) United States per capita cereal consumption in 1945 was 5% above 1935-39; in Canada it was 4% below 1935-39.

(d) The 10% cut in Canadian wheat consumption below 1945, already in effect, puts total cereal consumption 13½% below pre-war, and with no indigenous cereal alternatives other than oatmeal. The impending 25% cut in United States wheat consumption below 1945 would put its total cereal consumption 15½% below pre-war, and with generous available supplies of cereal alternatives in oatmeal, cornmeal and rice.

(e) United States per capita supplies of pulses are 15 lbs. as against 10 lbs. in Canada; vegetables 219 lbs. as against 104 lbs. in Canada.

Normally Canada is a heavier consumer of potatoes, but this year we have been abnormally short, while the United States has had record surpluses.

2. In the light of the above, we do not feel that Canada can be regarded as having any obligation, vis-à-vis the United States, to make any further mandatory cuts in domestic wheat consumption. We also feel that in Canada the administrative and economic objections to a compulsory cut greater than the present 10% are almost insuperable.

3. Canada might, however, make available 1,500,000 bushels of No. 4 wheat within the next six weeks, and possibly another 1,000,000 bushels in June-July. We might also make available 5,000,000 bushels of oats.

4. If we were to follow a line of reasonable prudence, neither of the above steps should be taken until the 1946 crop is assured, but the present emergency appears to justify assuming the risks suggested.

5. Either of the two proposals in paragraph 3 would provide additional supplies of cereals equivalent to what would be produced by an additional 10 per cent cut in domestic usage of wheat for human consumption for a period of six months; together they would provide the equivalent of an additional 20% cut for six months.

6. Canada might also express a willingness to cease all commercial exports of flour except on a basis of urgent need, provided the United States agreed to do the same. Canada's additional contribution under this proposal would approximate 250,000 barrels of flour a month (i.e. equivalent to about 1,000,000 bushels of wheat a month).

WORLD FOOD SITUATION; FURTHER MEASURES OF ASSISTANCE BY CANADA

At the meeting of the Cabinet on April 18th, approval was given to recommendations submitted regarding the provision of additional supplies of grain for export as follows:

(a) that Canada make available one and one-half million bushels of No. 4 wheat within the next six weeks from supplies immediately available and, if possible, a further one million bushels during June and July;

(b) that Canada make available five million bushels of oats from available supplies; and,

(c) that Canada offer to cease all commercial exports of flour, except on proof of need, as established by the Combined Food Board or some recognized joint committee, provided that the United States agreed to take the same action.

It was understood that a public statement to this effect would be made in the near future.

The Cabinet also considered a communication from the Working Committee of Combined Food Board and UNRRA officials, requesting that Canada take up with the countries concerned the diversion of certain grain shipments from Norway, The Netherlands and Switzerland to meet urgent UNRRA needs.

Officials of the departments concerned had suggested that responsibility for diversion of these shipments should rest with the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board, in consultation with the countries concerned and that Canada should not be asked to deal independently with these countries. It was suggested that the government might, however, agree to make any diversions approved by the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board.

The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that diversion of Canadian shipments be dealt with along the lines suggested.

Washington, April 19, 1946

Dear Mr. Clayton,

I have been asked to convey to the United States Government the view of my Government that our two Governments could make a further and immediately effective contribution in the present emergency by cancelling forthwith all commercial exports of flour except such exports as can be justified on the basis of urgent need. The Canadian Government believes that all importing countries should be required to establish the urgency of their need in respect of unshipped quantities already ordered as well as in respect of such quantities as those countries may request during the next critical months. In cases where the urgency of these needs cannot be satisfactorily established, it is proposed that flour on order should be diverted to those areas where needs are known to be great. On the basis of preliminary examination it is our view that substantial quantities of flour could be diverted from Western Hemisphere and other destinations to deficit areas if this procedure were adopted by the Governments of Canada and the United States.

The policy proposed would require the establishment of a joint United States-Canadian committee of review to pass on applications for the reinstatement of cancelled export permits and for the consideration of new applications for commercial flour exports. Such a committee would obviously have to work in very close association with the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board and might well be constituted as an ad hoc subcommittee of that body. My Government would be glad to receive the views of the United States Government on the above proposal, which it is suggested should be put into effect immediately.

I am sending a similar letter to the above to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Yours sincerely,

sents to agreed diversions of Canadian wheat, flour and bread grain substitutes from the United Kingdom to other destinations in which immediate needs are found to be acute.

I understand that at the last meeting of the Combined Food Board, at which the Minister of Agriculture was present, he expressly reserved the question of the price to be charged to recipients of Canadian wheat diverted from the United Kingdom. In view of the position taken by Mr. Gardiner, the question of the terms on which diverted wheat should be paid for will have to be left in abeyance until he has had an opportunity of discussing it with his Cabinet colleagues on his return to Ottawa next week.

In this general connection I should be glad to know whether there has been any agreement reached between the United Kingdom and the United States as to the terms on which the United Kingdom is to pay for the United States wheat which is to be provided in replacement for Canadian wheat now subject to diversion. [New York,] April 24, 1946

My dear Mr. Prime Minister,

I am asking your help, and through you the help of the fertilizer industry of your country, in our effort to assure the prompt allocation and delivery of fertilizer for the hungry countries of Europe and Asia. Little more can be done for Europe this spring because of the lateness of the season, but there is an excellent opportunity for increasing food production in Asia. Only by a very determined effort can full advantage be taken of this opportunity to increase food production for the coming winter.

My first specific request for help is on behalf of China. Rice production in China can still be increased greatly by prompt action in making fertilizers available. Each ton of fertilizer used on time should result in an increased production of three to four tons of rice.

China is requesting a minimum allocation of 500,000 metric tons of ammonium sulphate and 200,000 metric tons of superphosphate from the Combined Food Board for the fertilizer year 1 July, 1946 to 30 June, 1947. The Chinese Government is simultaneously appealing for an allocation out of the above stated totals of 100,000 metric tons of ammonium sulphate and 100,000 metric tons of superphosphate to be made available for shipment in June and July of this year to increase the yield of rice in Formosa and South and Central China, which will be harvested in October. It is estimated that this 200,000 tons of fertilizer will mean an increased production of approximately 500,000 tons of rice, which is enough to feed 10,000,000 people for a year.

Since the period of maximum utilization of these fertilizers in your country is over for this crop year it should be possible, if special efforts are made, to assure the supply of the 200,000 tons of fertilizers for use on the second rice crop. Every effort should also be made now toward utilization of every fertilizer producing facility to assure that the over-all requirements of China, as well as of the other famine-stricken areas of Asia and Europe receive sufficient quantities of fertilizers this fall and next spring to prevent a repetition of the disastrous famine conditions that face all of us now.

I will appreciate deeply your personal help toward achieving our goal for China now and hope for your assistance in assuring adequate or expanded production for fall and spring use.<sup>1</sup>

Sincerely yours,

Effective April 1st of this year your Department of National Revenue restricted the quantity of spirits which distillers could produce from grain or malt during the twelve months ending 31 March to fifty percent of the quantity produced during the twelve months ended 31 March 1946. Although that is quite a reduction, for which I am most appreciative, nevertheless it permits distilleries to produce two and one-half times more than their annual pre-war production. To be specific, prior to April 1st, Canadian distillers used 51,000,000 pounds of grain per month, of which 70 percent, or 35,000,000 pounds each month was wheat, so that distillers are now using 17,500,000 pounds of wheat each month. May I respectfully submit that here is a source where additional wheat and grain can be obtained for UNRRA's purposes. Many of the distillers in your country also have distilleries in the U.S., and we have reduced them to three days a month operation and supply. I am certain that Canadian distillers expect a reduction from what I have been hearing, as I have been associating with distillers the last few hours and expect a substantial contribution from them.

Will you kindly give this matter your attention. I am sure it will not be as painful to the distillers as it may appear.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Will Clayton telephoned me today from Washington about the wheat position. He had learned from Atherton that we had been disappointed in the negative and quite unhelpful attitude he had taken in his earlier talks with Strachey and Pearson. He had told Atherton that he would like to think over the position again, and would call me direct if he found he had anything to add to the views he had expressed in his earlier conversation with our Ambassador.

Clayton said he had been reviewing the American position with the Secretary of Agriculture, who had just returned to Washington after an absence of ten days. They were both concerned about their whole price policy, and realized why we were worried about the effect of an increase in the price of wheat on the general price structure. With the ending of O.P.A., the United States Administration had, at present, no power to control either domestic or export prices. If Congress restored O.P.A. authority, they would be in a position to consider a wheat agreement. Alternatively, he did not exclude the possibility of going to Congress for authority to make special arrangements about wheat. He asked if we were equally concerned about the course of their domestic price for wheat and their export price. I said that we had been used, over the years, to tariff-made disparities between domestic wheat prices in Canada and the United States and, moreover, recognized that, under present conditions, it was the generally higher level of prices in the United States which blurred the comparison between domestic wheat prices in the two countries. It was the uncontrolled American export price which was prying the lid off our export wheat price ceiling.

I said it was very difficult for us to justify and maintain our present export price of $1.55 alongside an American price to the same customers of $2.15. At the same time, we had to recognize that our present export price and the related return to farmers represented a relatively adequate incentive price. Any major change in this price would force radical readjustments right across the board, which would materially affect our general price control policy. The only way we could see of justifying to our producers the maintenance of present wheat prices lay in giving them some guarantee of a stable income over the next three or four years. This was the object of the draft bulk purchase agreement with the United Kingdom. I told Clayton that the maintenance of our export wheat price during the current year had represented, in effect, an export subsidy of $140,000,000, which was a very sizeable supplement to the assistance we had given Allied countries in the form of loans, export credits and UNRRA contributions. UNRRA contributions would probably be coming to an end, but this did not mean that the recipient countries could automatically put themselves on a pay as you go basis. He agreed, and said that Italy and Austria, in particular, would need substantial relief and assistance in 1947. I suggested the United States consider an agreed policy of subsidizing a staple export like wheat as a means of helping to bridge the gap between the real needs of the European countries and their immediate capacity to pay.

Clayton agreed that letting wheat prices ride without control would have the effect of stimulating uneconomic wheat production in all sorts of countries, which it was certainly not in our interest to encourage past the point of actually averting famine. He seemed to think the risk of world over-production in three or four years' time was a serious one, and agreed that it might be not only in the long-run interest of the exporting countries but a real aid to the general commercial policy programme if a staple of international commerce like wheat could move in quantity and at reasonable prices during this period of acute shortage.

In conclusion, he said he would go into the whole position again with Clinton Anderson and get in touch with us again as soon as Congress had decided what powers over prices were going to be entrusted to the Administration. Altogether, his opinion seemed to have moved a very considerable distance from the position he had taken in conversations in Washington last week.

Consideration at that time was also given to the operation of an agreement under conditions of scarcity, hence the provision for maximum, as well as minimum, export prices, and the provision for minimum, as well as maximum stocks. Notwithstanding, the current situation was not fully anticipated, a situation in which all limitations would have had to be suspended on production control, export quotas and minimum reserve stocks, thereby leaving the maximum export price provision the only one which might now have been operative. To the extent that an international wheat agreement is desirable now, a major reorientation of approach would be required, particularly in respect of the timing of its several provisions.

In contrast with the 1941-42 negotiations, there is the advantage of dealing now with known elements of the current situation. It is evident that the most urgent problem is that of immediate recognition by the exporting countries of an obligation not to charge "all the traffic will bear" in an acute sellers market if there is to be any hope for recognition by the importers of their obligation to support a minimum export price level as soon as the market situation is reversed. Secondly, there is the problem of the current disparity between national export price levels. The immediate choice is between following an unstable export market situation up and down and the securing of a long-run measure of international price stability or, alternatively, a series of bilateral contracts between exporting and importing countries seeking piecemeal a similar end.

If wheat export prices were unlikely to rise further during 1946-47, thereby avoiding additional incentives to surplus production, and if there were no economic and political pitfalls in the path of "an expanding world economy" much could be said for the first alternative. In the absence of such assurances, the argument shifts in favour of a multilateral approach to a measure of stability in prices, production and export markets. Many considerations may be adduced in favour of multilateral against bilateral action if the multilateral approach can be accomplished. It remains, therefore, to outline the form of international agreement which might become operative forthwith.

Preamble

A brief recital of the current situation and the need for some degree of price stability.

Article I—Membership

Right of all Governments to join on notification of acceptance of membership, on equal terms as net-importing or net-exporting countries.

Article II—Effective Date of Agreement

On acceptance of membership by at least three exporting countries and ten importing countries.

Article III—Duration of Agreement

Four years from effective date of agreement.

Article IV—Council

1. Each exporting country to have one vote and each importing country to have a uniform fractional vote, so as to equate the collective votes of the importing countries with the collective votes of the exporting countries. Simple majority of votes to govern except where otherwise specified.

2. Provision for Secretariat.

3. Finances. Provision for budget and division of expenses, based on size of votes.

Article V—Executive Committee

Appointment by Council.

N.B. So long as prices remain above minimum levels and non-price provisions are not operative, the Executive Committee could be continued such as at present. As soon as price equivalents, export quotas, etc., become a practical issue, then a continuous, salaried Committee will be required, preferably comprised of individuals experienced in grain business or in grain administration in their respective countries.

Article VI—Prices

1. Minimum and maximum f.o.b. prices plus carrying charges at average cost to be specified for each exporting country.

2. Such prices for one exporting country to remain fixed for duration of agreement.

3. F.o.b. equivalents of other exporting countries to be subject to adjustment as deemed necessary by the Executive Committee upon publication by the Committee.

N.B. F.o.b. equivalents need not now be equated exactly in relation to c.i.f. markets. Reasonably approximate relationships would suffice until minimum prices are reached. Then very careful adjustments would be required.

4. Member exporting countries to undertake to sell within the range to member importing countries for the duration of the agreement.

5. Member importing countries to undertake not to increase their purchases from non-member exporters beyond previous average imports from those exporters when minimum prices are reached.

6. Member exporting countries to undertake not to sell below minimum prices to any destination.

N.B. A four-year agreement maximum and minimum export prices would serve the joint purpose of assuring importing countries reasonable prices in relation to the present situation of relative scarcity and of assuring the exporting countries, as a justifiable quid pro quo, reasonable prices in relation to surplus conditions which may develop during the latter half of the agreement period.

Non-signatory importers should not receive the benefits of the maximum prices while giving no undertaking in respect of minimum prices, nor should signatory importers buy more from non-signatory exporters at low prices to the detriment of the signatory exporters.

The maintenance of minimum prices to all buyers by the signatory exporters would provide a salutary influence against the possible general disintegration of world wheat prices, and would minimize non-signatory importers from taking advantage of signatory importers, particularly in respect of flour trade.

Article VII — Additional Provisions

Additional provisions relating to production in exporting and importing countries, export quotas minimum and maximum stocks or other provisions to be brought into effect on such terms and at such times as may be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Council.

N.B. It is recognized that many or all of these provisions will be required sooner or later during the life of the agreement. The timing is at present uncertain, and the exact nature of the provisions can be more suitably determined in relation to the situation as it develops. Therefore, it should suffice now to give the Council authority, under a two-thirds majority to take action as and at the time required. Text ends. Teletype ends.

Washington, July 11, 1946

Following from Stone for Robertson, Begins: Herewith Wilson's report for Robertson, Mackenzie and McIvor on July 10th meeting of Executive Committee of International Wheat Council. Wilson's document, teletype WA-2752 of yesterday's date, was discussed at length. The principal suggestion coming from the American representatives was that proposed Article 7 relating to production, export quotas and reserve stocks was not sufficiently specific. For example, Wheeler<sup>1</sup> regarded it just as essential to reach agreement now with importing countries on their wheat production policies as it was to come to an agreement on prices. Otherwise, it would be difficult subsequently to avoid having the importing countries pursue policies of self-sufficiency in the lack of any present commitment. He also regarded it necessary from the viewpoint of acceptance by the American public to state something more definite regarding export quotas which he preferred to regard in general terms of management of export supplies, which he considers necessary whether wheat is in short or in long supply.

Recognizing that it would be difficult to get full American support for a price agreement only, Wilson agreed to re-draft his document expanding

Article 7 in order to recognize the principles involved in these other elements of the agreement, but still leaving the timing of their operation to a two-thirds decision of the Council. Wilson's revised document should be ready by Friday and will be forwarded by teletype. It was proposed that this document should be presented as a Canadian submission to the meeting of the enlarged Wheat Council to be held on Monday, July 15th.

The agenda for this meeting calls for a review of the developments to date within the Wheat Council for the benefit of the new members. It also calls for the appointment of a Preparatory Committee whose function would be to arrive at the precise terms of an agreement which could be reported back to the Council and become the basis of a submission to an International Wheat Conference to be called by the United States.

The new Governments represented on the Wheat Council will be invited to appoint a representative to the Preparatory Committee if they so desire and it is hoped that they will agree to meet as a Committee early next week in order that the draft Agreement may be drawn up during the week. It would then be referred to a second meeting of the Council to be held early in August with the various Governments having an opportunity in the interim to examine the terms of the draft Agreement.

It remains uncertain how soon the International Wheat Conference might be called, but Wilson's intention is to press for an early date. Ends.

TELEGRAM WA-2776

Washington, July 12, 1946

Following for Robertson, M. W. Mackenzie and George McIvor from Wilson, Begins: Following is the text of the first revise of the memorandum for the Executive Committee of the Wheat Council on the scope of a new International Wheat Agreement, the original text of which I sent to you in Embassy teletype No. WA-2752 of July 10th, Begins:

Item 4 of today's agenda calls for consideration of the appointment of a Preparatory Committee to review the draft convention and to submit a report to the thirteenth session of the Council. The Canadian member welcomes this proposal and suggests, for reasons set out in the following paragraphs, the urgency of the Preparatory Committee's taking up its work forthwith to revise the draft convention into such form that it could be recommended to Council and thereby to Governments through an International Wheat Conference as an agreement to become currently operative. In order to expedite the review of the draft convention, a specific plan for revisions is set out herewith which might serve as a basis for discussion by the Preparatory Committee.

The preamble of the draft convention contemplated a post-war surplus situation; consequently the provision therein for production control, export quotas, minimum and maximum reserve stocks. Consideration at that time was also given to the operation of an agreement under conditions of scarcity, hence the provision for maximum, as well as minimum, export prices, and the provision for minimum, as well as maximum stocks. Notwithstanding, the current situation was not fully anticipated, a situation in which all limitations would have had to be suspended on production control, export quotas and minimum reserve stocks, thereby leaving the maximum export price provision the only one which might now have been operative. To the extent that an International Wheat Agreement is desirable now, a major reorientation of approach would be required, particularly in respect of the timing of its several provisions.

In contrast with the 1941-1942 negotiations, there is the advantage of dealing now with known elements of the current situation. It is evident that the most urgent problem is that of immediate recognition by the exporting countries of an obligation not to charge "all the traffic will bear" in an acute sellers market if there is to be any hope for recognition by the importers of their obligation to support a minimum export price level as soon as the market situation is reversed. Secondly, there is the problem of the current disparity between national export price levels. The immediate choice is between following an unstable export market situation up and down and the securing of a long-run measure of international price stability or, alternatively, a series of bilateral contracts between exporting and importing countries seeking piecemeal a similar end.

If wheat export prices were unlikely to rise further during 1946-1947, thereby avoiding additional incentives to surplus production, and if there were no economic and political pitfalls in the path of "an expanding world economy" much could be said for following the market. In the absence of such assurances, the argument shifts in favour of a multilateral approach to a measure of stability in prices, production and export markets. Many considerations may be adduced in favour of multilateral against bilateral action if the multilateral approach can be accomplished. It remains, therefore, to outline the form of an international agreement which might become operative forthwith.

Preamble

A brief recital of the current situation and of the immediate and long-term need for some degree of price stability.

Article I—Membership

Right of all interested Governments to join on notification of acceptance of membership, on equal terms as net-importing or net-exporting countries.

Article II—Effective date of Agreement

Upon acceptance of membership by a sufficient number of exporting and importing countries, in each case, to represent two-thirds of the estimated volume of the total commercial international trade in wheat in the 1946-1947 crop year.

Article III—Duration of Agreement

Four years from the effective date of the agreement. Should, however, any of the Governments of Argentina, Australia, Canada or the United States fail to become signatories within six months after the effective date of the agreement, then any of the signatory Governments would be free to withdraw.

N.B. This proviso recognizes that some Governments may not be able to implement the agreement immediately. The effective date need not await signature by all interested Governments. However, should any of the four major exporting countries fail to sign within a reasonable period, the agreement could not permanently become effective.

Article IV—Council

1. Each signatory exporting country to appoint a member having one vote and each signatory importing country to appoint a member having a uniform fractional vote, so as to equate the collective votes of the importing countries with the collective votes of the exporting countries. Simple majority of votes to govern except where otherwise specified. (As an alternative, the exporting countries to have votes based on their traditional shares in the international trade in wheat).

2. Provision for secretariat.

3. Finances. Provision for budget and division of expenses, based on size of votes.

Article V—Executive Committee

1. An Executive Committee, responsible to the Council, to be appointed to maintain general oversight of the operation of the agreement and to examine in detail proposals regarding any changes in the operation of the agreement. The size of the Committee to be determined by the Council, and the individual members to be appointed to the Committee by their respective Governments.

2. A price (and quota) Committee to be charged with the administration of adjustments in price differentials (and of adjustments in export quotas). This Committee would require to be maintained in continuous operation as soon as prices reach minimum levels. The Committee would preferably be comprised of individuals named by the operating grain agencies in each of the countries represented on the Committee.

Article VI—Prices

1. Minimum and maximum f.o.b. prices plus carrying charges at average cost to be specified for each exporting country.

2. Such prices for one exporting country to remain fixed for duration of agreement.

3. F.o.b. equivalents of other exporting countries to be subject to adjustment as deemed necessary by the Executive Committee upon publication by the Committee.

N.B. F.o.b. equivalents need not now be equated exactly in relation to C.I.F. markets. Reasonable approximate relationships would suffice until minimum prices are reached. Then very careful adjustments would be required.

4. Member exporting countries to undertake to sell within the range to member importing countries for the duration of the agreement.

5. Member importing countries to undertake not to increase their purchases from non-member exporters beyond previous average imports from those exporters when minimum prices are reached.

6. Member exporting countries to undertake not to sell below minimum prices to any destination.

N.B. A four year agreement covering maximum and minimum export prices would serve the joint purpose of assuring importing countries reasonable prices in relation to the present situation of relative scarcity and of assuring the exporting countries, as a justifiable quid pro quo, reasonable prices in relation to surplus conditions which may develop during the latter half of the agreement period.

Non-signatory importers should not receive the benefits of the maximum prices while giving no undertaking in respect of minimum prices, nor should signatory importers buy more from non-signatory exporters at low prices to the detriment of the signatory exporters.

The maintenance of minimum prices to all buyers by the signatory exporters would provide a salutary influence against the possible general disintegration of world wheat prices, and would minimize non-signatory importers from taking advantage of signatory importers, particularly in respect of flour trade.

Article VII—Management of Export Supplies

Recognition of the principle of management of export supplies under both scarcity and surplus conditions. International programming of short supplies is now undertaken by the I.E.F.C. When the I.E.F.C. function is concluded there will then be the necessity of programming exports which are in long supply in order to accomplish an equitable sharing of the available international market.

The Council should decide, by two-thirds majority, when export quotas should become operative, and in setting the quotas should have regard to:

1. The basic percentages set out in the draft convention (Canada 40, Argentina 25, Australia 19, United States 16 percent).

2. Quotas to be agreed for any other exporting countries adhering to the agreement.

3. Periodic transfer to other signatory exporters of the export quota, or part thereof, unlikely to be shipped by any signatory exporter during its crop year.

Article VIII—Minimum and Maximum Reserve Stocks

Recognition in principle of the desirability on the part of the signatory exporters of reaching as soon as is practicable the minimum reserve stocks as specified in the draft convention and thereafter of maintaining their carry-over stocks within the range of the minimum and maximum reserve stocks.

The draft convention range in stocks was Argentina 35-130, Australia 25-80, Canada 80-275, United States 150-400 million bushels.

To attain the minimum levels would assist in assuring the importing countries of continuity in future supplies, and to preserve the maximum levels would assist in insuring the exporting countries against large world surpluses.

The Council should decide, by two-thirds majority, when the minimum and maximum stocks should become operative. If export quotas were operative, it would follow that the minimum stocks provision should be operative.

Article IX—Production

1. Recognition of the principle that signatory exporting countries should regulate the production or delivery from farms of wheat in order to maintain their total supplies at levels which, allowing for domestic use and exports, will maintain their carry-over stocks within the minimum and maximum range.

2. Recognition of the principle that importing countries should not pursue uneconomic policies respecting domestic production. Preferably the importing countries should not set domestic prices for wheat for each crop year above the prevailing C.I.F. equivalent prices of wheat imported from the signatory exporting countries, and within the minimum and maximum price range. Otherwise little purpose would be served by the current establishment of reasonable export prices to the importing countries if the latter in turn propose to become in the future as independent as possible of imported supplies of wheat.

Commitments under (1) and (2) to become effective upon the introduction of export quotas. This recognizes that under prevailing scarcity conditions all Governments must support maximum production policies. Modification of production policies will, however, be required as soon as export quotas become necessary. Ends.

Ottawa, August 5, 1946

Following for Stone from Bryce, Finance. It does not appear likely that I will get to Washington again until last week of August. Would you please pass on the following message to Peter Wright my alternate at Bank,<sup>1</sup> and to Gordon Munro of the U.K. Treasury in connection with discussions in next day or two regarding reaction to proposed FAO report recommending establishment of World Food Board with substantial finances and authority. Begins:

1. I have noted Meyer designated me as Chairman of a committee on FAO meeting but I will almost certainly not be able to get to Washington this week and therefore suggest I should be replaced on committee and that in view of importance Collado should take chair.

2. Hutton<sup>2</sup> telephoned me on subject Thursday and should see this report. I wish to express regrets to him that I cannot get there.

3. Munro showed me the proposed FAO report draft three and it is on this following comments are based. I discussed it here with Deutsch our expert in trade and commodity arrangements and with Sharp our expert on food and farm prices and related financial questions, and later discussed it again with Munro. We are of course not able to express official view of government but three of us here in Finance view proposed report as inadequate and dangerous, overlooking all difficult and practical questions confusing various purposes and functions yet because of commendable moral purposes and wording apt to stir up political interest and support of a type difficult to overcome and to meet with more practical and less dangerous schemes.

4. So far as we know other Canadian officials and ministers have not yet seen this report and no official Canadian view has been formulated. In view of importance of matter we shall probably seek to have it discussed between departments and an agreed Canadian Government policy or attitude formulated for expression at Copenhagen. We three in Finance, and we think

External would agree, believe this attitude should be that buffer stock arrangements which are heart of proposal should be considered first at ITO conference as part of trade and commodity agreements problems and that they can only be considered at first in respect of individual commodities. Secondly, we feel that international relief or subsidies which is another aspect of FAO proposals is job of UNRRA or whatever arrangements succeed UNRRA and not proper field for action by FAO and certainly should not be mixed up with buffer stocks and loans. Thirdly, loans by international agency for agricultural development are obviously part of responsibility of international bank which is making itself ready for action in this field. As a consequence, support should not be given to extending powers and finances of FAO to cover these fields or to set up a second FAO under another name to do so. When FAO has specific and practical advice or information to offer on any of these subjects other agencies directly concerned would probably welcome it. I feel advancing of proposals of this nature obviously not thought through dodging difficulties and clearly doomed to frustration is likely to discredit FAO and possibly other international organizations as well to whom greatest danger is public attitude that they are not really practical and to be taken seriously but merely forums for speech-making. It is possible however that other Canadian officials or ministers may take a quite different view and therefore this message must be regarded only as my personal views and as director of Bank.

5. In regard to attitude to be taken by the Bank I think the main problem is the diplomatic one of expressing our disapproval and disassociating ourselves without at the same time interfering in what is not our affair or appearing to be unsympathetic to real needs of many countries. I think the substance of our attitude might include following points:

(a) Bank has noted proposals but does not feel able to support them because many of them extend far beyond competence of Bank and those with which we are concerned include solutions to difficult problems of long standing to which Bank wishes to give considerable study before expressing views or taking action.

(b) The Bank of course expects to make loans for agricultural development or reconstruction in due course and when it is ready to consider specific programmes or projects it will welcome any detailed technical and practical information or advice which FAO is able to provide.

(c) In making loans for agricultural development or reconstruction the Bank must have regard to the same sort of circumstances and limitations on its power as in the case of other loans. It must in particular bear in mind these provisions in its own articles of agreement which require it to act prudently in the interests of all member countries and to have due regard to the prospects that the borrower will be in a position to meet its obligations under the loan. The Bank must also bear in mind that the chief source of funds for making loans will be from the sale of securities of the Bank or guaranteed by the Bank and consequently in order to obtain funds for the purposes for which it has been created the Bank must be able to convince investors it is making sensible loans which will enable the Bank itself to meet its own obligations. It can and presumably will incur risks, and charge a commission for doing so as required by its articles of agreement, but the Bank clearly cannot provide relief or subsidies.

(d) It would clearly be out of place for the Bank to be the agency providing the funds which it is suggested should be made available to enable countries of great nutritional need to purchase agricultural surpluses of other nations on special terms, and which it is observed, would not be recoverable. Any such operations would have to be clearly separate from and not associated with any operations in which the Bank was involved.

(e) Although the memorandum is not altogether clear on the point, it suggests that the funds required to finance "buffer stocks" would be obtained from other sources, either directly from member governments or "financed by borrowing on the market against its commodity assets". The Bank wishes to make clear that it has no specific authority to make or guarantee loans for buffer stocks and no general authority to make loans except to member governments or political sub-divisions thereof or business, industrial or agricultural enterprises in the territories of a member and where the member government itself is not the borrower it or its central bank must guarantee the loan.

(f) The Bank does not feel able to agree to take part in an executive international food and agricultural agency such as that proposed in very general terms. Any arrangements to participate in such an agency would have to be decided upon by the Board of Governors of the Bank but the Executive Directors are not prepared to recommend participation in an agency whose purposes include the provision of relief and other subsidies because this would be bound to lead to misunderstanding of the essential purposes and nature of the Bank's own operations.

(g) The Bank believes that in assisting in reconstruction and development of agriculture, industry and the economies of member countries generally it will be furthering the solution of "long term problems concerned with the production, distribution and consumption of food" and that its own actions will promote many of the worthy objectives sought by the Director General of FAO in this report. It believes however that the most effective means of accomplishing these objectives now is to be found in dealing with specific questions with the help of governments and existing agencies and not by seeking the establishment of more international agencies at this time before those already set up have had an opportunity to act effectively.

I agree that Hutton should take a brief statement to Copenhagen that he can make publicly on behalf of Bank in discussing this proposal as well as having instructions as to attitude he should adopt in discussion of those aspects of the report which directly concern the Bank. Message ends.

Le secrétaire général, le Comité économique d'urgence pour l'Europe, au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne

Secretary-General, Emergency Economic Committee for Europe, to High Commissioner in Great Britain

London, August 6, 1946

Sir,

In face of the very serious food situation in Europe and arising out of a Resolution adopted by the Emergency Conference on European Cereals Supplies held in London on 3-6 April 1946, a Standing Committee has been set up by the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe in co-operation with the European Regional Office of UNRRA to examine ways and means whereby any supplies of food which can be spared in any European country might be directed to other European countries faced with the immediate threat of starvation.

In a letter dated 6th May 1946, this Committee invited European Governments to undertake a special survey of any resources which might be made available at short notice to other countries in Europe where emergency conditions existed or developed.

The purpose of this letter is to make the suggestion that you might wish to consider inviting the voluntary relief organisations in your country to co-operate with the Standing Committee in meeting cases of special emergency in Europe.

The valuable work of voluntary relief organisations in Europe is well known and the Standing Committee fully appreciates that the organisations already have programmes set up and that their activities are in many cases determined by the intentions of their subscribers. Organisations might, however, be assisted by the guidance of the Standing Committee in determining the areas to which such of their resources as are not committed to some more specific object should be directed. In this respect the Committee could transmit to you for communication to the societies in your country information available to the Committee of emergency conditions arising or likely to arise. Similarly, the voluntary relief organisations could be informed of any foodstuffs reported to the Committee as available for acquisition which for one reason or another are not expected to be handled through UNRRA or other official procurement machinery.

Attached is a list† of supplies notified to the Committee up to the present which might be available and of interest to the societies. The Committee cannot of course guarantee that these quantities will in fact prove to be available. If any society in your country is disposed to acquire any of these supplies, I would be grateful if you could inform the Committee of your interest.

The Committee would be most grateful if you would bring the substance of this letter to the early attention of any voluntary relief organisations or their councils in your country which in your opinion might be in a position to assist the Standing Committee in its objectives as briefly described above, or would welcome the advice of the Committee.

I have etc.

[Ottawa,] August 22, 1946

ABOLITION OF THE TEN PER CENT REDUCTION (ON A 1945 BASIS)
OF SUPPLIES OF FLOUR FOR DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION

The 10% cut in supplies of flour for domestic consumption was ordered on April 1st, in accordance with the 9-point food conservation programme announced by the Prime Minister on March 17th. The United States had already announced a 9-point programme on February 6th.

On April 15th the United States Government indicated that further action on its part would depend upon "similar and simultaneous action" on the part of Canada and proposed a 25% cut in supplies of flour for domestic consumption.

Cabinet on April 16th agreed "that the United States Government be informed that the Canadian Government accepted the principle of comparable action to make larger supplies of foodstuffs available for export, it being understood that the nature of such action would in each case be determined between officials of the two countries." In a letter of April 17th Mr. Pearson informed Mr. Clayton of the United States State Department that the Canadian Government agreed to the synchronizing of measures affecting the export of food. Cabinet on April 18th agreed to release specified quantities of No. 4 wheat and oats for export and to propose to the United States that both countries stop commercial exports of flour except on a basis of proven need. On April 20th the United States Government announced a further 6-point conservation programme which included a 25% reduction in domestic flour supply. On May 2nd in Canada permits for commercial exports of flour were centralized under the Canadian Wheat Board.

In a joint release of May 20th issued following discussions with Herbert Morrison,<sup>1</sup> the Canadian and United Kingdom Governments agreed, among other things, "to continue to consult on measures of major importance that may be found necessary to meet the present world food shortage."

Chambre des communes, Grande-Bretagne.

<sup>1</sup>Lord President of the Council, Leader of the House of Commons, Great Britain.

Unilateral action without at least prior notification, let alone consultation, would appear to be contrary certainly to the spirit of our undertakings.

It should be noted that Canada, unlike the United States and United Kingdom, has not increased the flour extraction rate, although we are under some obligation to do so by an F.A.O. resolution of May 27th, which we accepted.

RECOMMENDATION

It would be highly desirable if action could be deferred until comments are received from the United Kingdom and United States authorities. If, however, it is essential that action be taken immediately, then I would suggest that every effort be made to take action of a temporary nature designed to deal with an unexpected demand. The restriction might, for example, be waived for as short a time as is practicable, subject to later review.

I attach a copy of a telegram which is being sent at once to London and Washington.<sup>1</sup>

TELEGRAM 1519

Ottawa, August 22, 1946

MOST IMMEDIATE. CONFIDENTIAL. Would you please convey urgently to the United Kingdom authorities the following:

1. It has become impossible for the Canadian Government to maintain rigidly the restriction introduced on April 1st, 1946, on the use of wheat for human consumption to a monthly usage for domestic distribution not exceeding 90% of the usage in the corresponding month of 1945.

2. There has been an unexpected and heavy drain on our supplies arising from the exceptionally large influx of United States tourists into Canada this summer. For this and other reasons current consumption has actually been running at about 12% above the corresponding period in 1945. It has been maintained by drawing heavily on inventories which are now close to exhaustion. Unless present restrictions are modified, bakers will be forced to restrict output to current flour receipts at the rate of 90% of 1945, which will mean an effective reduction of 20% below their current production. This would involve shortages of bread and serious difficulties for bakeries and would result in pressures for price increases. Many bakeries are threatened with closure unless their supplies can be increased. Complaints are being received daily by the Government and are difficult to deal with in the face of the expected large wheat crop and heavy movement of grain. We expect that we shall be forced to take some action in the immediate future. It may not be possible to avoid lifting the restriction completely, although we are exploring means of relieving the situation without taking this step.

3. We have similarly addressed the United States Government.

In continuation of the note which I sent you last night, the proposed lifting of the restriction on supplies of flour for domestic consumption, there have been one or two new developments of which you should be aware before the matter comes before Cabinet again.

In the first place we have received some indication that the United States Government is under pressure to modify their own restrictions. We are making urgent enquiries in Washington on this point. Their current restriction is to 85% of last year's supplies; the 25% reduction mentioned in my note of yesterday was never intended to be effective for more than a couple of months. If we act alone first and they follow suit shortly after, either by increasing domestic flour supplies or by lowering the extraction rate, it seems fairly clear that we shall be blamed for the change in their policy. If, therefore, we can synchronize our action with theirs we shall be in a much stronger position. The possibility of action on their part, however, remains problematical until we get reports from Washington.

Secondly, Donald Gordon says that he can deal with the immediate problems without the repeal of the current restrictions, provided that he knows that the restrictions will be lifted in the near future. He has so informed Mr. Abbott. What he would like, therefore, is a decision that the restrictions will be lifted at some time in the near future, to be set after we know more about the United States position.

Finally, I believe that if we do lift the restriction, our action should be publicly announced otherwise we might be accused of secretly departing from a declared policy.

I attach a copy of a letter to Mr. Donald Gordon informing him of action taken this morning—apparently quite independently of our own problems—by the Secretary of Agriculture in Washington to ease some of the restrictions imposed on domestic consumption of grains in the United States. While the steps announced by Mr. Anderson do not correspond with the action desired here by Mr. Gordon, it is obvious that they make it much easier for us to increase our deliveries of flour to bakers without the danger of international repercussions.

I have asked Mr. Pierce to pass on to you by telephone the information which I have just received from Mr. Stone in Washington, concerning action taken by the United States authorities to ease some of their restrictions on the domestic use of grains. Mr. Stone has reported that the Secretary of Agriculture has announced this morning that they are immediately reducing the extraction rate of wheat to 72%. In addition they are authorizing the brewing of 21% more beer and ale and the distilling of 20% more liquor. The deliveries of flour for domestic consumption are, however, to be maintained on the present basis of 85% of the deliveries in the corresponding month of 1945.

I may add that Mr. Stone yesterday informed the Department of State of our difficulties arising from acute local shortages of flour for baking and of the possibility that we might have to take immediate action to increase deliveries to bakers. He was told at the State Department that any corresponding action by the United States authorities was most unlikely and that the State Department would oppose any recommendation of this sort. The Secretary of Agriculture appears, therefore, to have acted without consultation with the Department of State, and possibly without any knowledge that the restrictions imposed in Canada might have to be eased.

I am informing Mr. St. Laurent of these developments and am sending copies of this letter to the Departments of Trade and Commerce, Finance and Agriculture, as well as to the Acting Secretary of the Cabinet.

Ottawa, October 7, 1946

Sir,

I refer to your despatch No. A.725 of August 23rd, 1946,† concerning a request from the Secretary-General of the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe that the Canadian voluntary relief societies be asked to co-operate with the Standing Committee of the Emergency Economic Committee in the purchase of surplus supplies of food in Europe to relieve emergency conditions. You enclosed a list of supplies available in Denmark and Sweden, which the Standing Committee thought might be of interest to the Canadian voluntary relief societies.

This matter was referred to the Deputy Minister of the Department of National War Services which is concerned with the coordination of the activities of voluntary relief societies and we have now received the following reply:

“As you are aware, the established policy of this Department has been that funds raised in Canada for relief purposes should be spent in Canada, and that the contributions of Canadian voluntary organizations should be limited to the sending of relief supplies which it may be within the economy of Canada to provide and within the economy of the benefitting countries to accept.

“There have been certain minor exceptions to that policy whereby the “Save the Children Fund” and certain Jewish agencies which have been supporting the welfare programme in Palestine for a number of years have been permitted to export funds which may, to some extent, have been used in purchasing available food supplies abroad.

“If I am correctly advised, Canada has no representative on nor interest in the Emergency Economic Committee, membership of which comprises eleven European countries and the United States. In any event, there would not, in our opinion, be any good reason why this supply of foodstuffs should be brought to the attention of Canadian voluntary organizations, the more so as some of the items listed are actually available in Canada at the present time to overseas relief societies, and, further, that the acquisition of these supplies by Canadian voluntary agencies would not contribute materially to the solution of the general problem.”<sup>1</sup>

In view of these considerations, I should be grateful if you would inform the Secretary-General of the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe that the Canadian Government does not feel that Canadian voluntary relief societies would be interested in the purchase of any of the surplus supplies in Europe, as he has suggested.

This may be a fair statement of policy from Nat[ional] War Services—but it certainly is not the view that the Wartime Prices and Trade Board has maintained.

If the possibilities of action were larger I should be inclined to ask Ottawa to reconsider—in actual circumstances however we might as well let things go forward.

Mr. L. I. Highby of that Department, and Mr. Glen Craig of the Department of Agriculture. My immediately following teletype reports the discussion which we had with these officials on wheat exports.

This message is to report information which Mr. Stillwell gave us about a decision which has been taken in the Office of Defense Transportation to divert 14 ships, presently carrying Canadian wheat from Fort William to eastern ports. These 14 ships will, for the balance of the season of open navigation, be directed to Duluth to move United States wheat east. Their normal procedure has been to carry coal from the east to Chicago. In Chicago they unload this coal and pick up coal suitable for use on the Canadian railroads which they carry to Fort William, and on the down trip from Fort William they carry Canadian wheat. An order is to be issued directing them to proceed empty from Fort William to Duluth in the future to pick up United States wheat.

Mr. Stillwell regretted the necessity of this action. He said, however, that the United States was faced with a serious shortage (in the neighbourhood of twenty million bushels) of wheat in the east for domestic consumption and that in order partially to meet this shortage the authorities here had no other recourse than the diversion of these 14 vessels. We estimated roughly that for the balance of the navigation season these vessels, had they continued carrying Canadian wheat, would have brought down somewhere in the neighbourhood of ten million bushels. Mr. Stillwell said that Mr. Clayton had asked him to inform us of this diversion before the order is issued which will be done, I gather, today or tomorrow. Ends.

IMPORTANT. Reference my immediately preceding teletype in respect of cereals.

At the informal meeting held in Stillwell's office, Department of State, this morning, attended by Paterson and myself, the question of integration of Canada-United States export programs was discussed. The two problems facing the United States authorities, and on which they requested our sympathetic understanding and assistance, are:

(a) Pressure is being brought to bear on the United States Government by United States commercial interests on the matter of present flour quotas and movement from the two countries. They feel that if they could say to the commercial interests that the Canadian export programs are prepared in collaboration with United States authorities, and that export licenses are being issued accordingly, they would be in a better position to assure the complainants that the Canadian mills are not exporting purely in the interest of their commercial future.

(b) There is a feeling in some quarters that, notwithstanding Canada's excellent record of export movement, Canadian interests are leaving the major impact on the United States for supplying relief areas that would normally not interest either country as commercial outlets. To be specific, it is felt that Canada should program during this present period of emergency less cereals for countries like Belgium and Holland, and more to such deficit areas as the United Kingdom zone in Germany, UNRRA and India. We countered this inferred criticism by stating our wheat and cereals position in general, and in particular by pointing out that the overall quantities we may have to divide among the many claimants, other than the United Kingdom, are relatively small. We suggested that perhaps agreement could be reached at a working level for the provision of quantities of wheat and other cereals from both countries to the commercially potential areas. We also pointed out that Canada's economy was much more dependent upon wheat and wheat exports than was the economy of the United States—that normally the United States did not export anything like the quantities that Canada exports and that, therefore, they were thus in a better position in this period of emergency, which coincided with an excellent United States crop, to care for a major share of what they choose to term the non-commercial areas. The United States officials said, however, that they were fearful that eventually they might have to yield to the very considerable pressure now being brought to divert greater amounts of cereals to countries offering better future markets. Were Canada to undertake to ship some wheat during the present crop year to high deficiency areas where the need is great, but the future commercial potential small, then authorities in this country would be in a better position to resist pressure. They mentioned the possibility, for example, of diverting United Kingdom destined wheat to the United Kingdom zone in Germany. We said we could express no views as to the possibility of doing this, except to say that we understood the amounts of wheat now going into the United Kingdom just filled the minimum requirements of that country and were any to be diverted it would presumably have to be replaced by wheat or flour procured elsewhere.

The United States officials expressed the gravest concern about the whole cereals picture, and hold the view that the situation next spring will be considerably worse than it has yet been. They asked us, therefore, to report this informal conversation to you and to ask for your views. They appreciate that with our large commitments to the United Kingdom there cannot be any great flexibility in the disposal of our relatively small surplus available for other destinations, but they maintained that anything we could do during the next ten months to help in supplying such needs as those of India, Germany, Italy, etc., would materially strengthen their position at home.

In anticipation of our meeting with Stillwell this morning, we had yesterday a long discussion with McNamara of the Canadian Wheat Board, who was in Washington. From this it appears that it is the settled policy of the Board to ship only to destinations which have already been set up. With minor exceptions, these countries all have long range commercial potentials for Canada. In the light of our discussions I feel that the announcement of this export program would be very badly received here. While the question of international allocation was not raised directly this morning, Linville started the discussion by stating it seemed to him and his colleagues that the essence of the present problem was just how far were purely commercial considerations to govern the allocation of cereals, particularly wheat, to the various countries in need of food.

[Ottawa,] October 11, 1946

UN-FAO: CANADIAN POLICY REGARDING A WORLD FOOD BOARD

The Interdepartmental Committee set up by Cabinet decision of September 26th, 1946<sup>1</sup> to consider and make recommendations as to the general instructions which should guide Canadian representatives at

- (a) the preparatory trade talks in London,
- (b) the general assembly of the United Nations, and
- (c) the preparatory commission on a World Food Board, on questions affecting international traffic in foodstuffs, at a meeting held on October 11th, 1946, agreed to submit its recommendations in the form of a report as follows:

1. The Report of Committee I of Commission C of the FAO Conference, on which Canada was represented, reads in part as follows:

1. Having examined the Proposals for a World Food Board and accepting the general objectives of the Proposals namely:

(a) developing and organizing production, distribution and utilization of the basic foods to provide diets on a health standard for the peoples of all countries;

(b) stabilizing agricultural prices at levels fair to producers and consumers alike, it is agreed that international machinery is necessary to achieve these objectives and it is recommended that a Preparatory Commission be established to carry the proposals further.

2. The terms of reference of the Preparatory Commission should cover the following matters: the Director-General's Proposals and any alternative proposals which may be submitted to it and to prepare concrete recommendations and propositions for international action for achieving the objectives as set out in paragraph 1.

2. Since Canada suggested the establishment of a committee to examine the Proposals for a World Food Board together with other proposals that might be offered, and accepted membership on the Preparatory Commission that resulted from these suggestions, it would seem incumbent upon us to do everything possible to ensure that all matters brought before the Commission are freely discussed and thoroughly examined. To this end it might be urged that Canadian representatives on the Commission should be free to discuss, on its merits, any matter brought to the attention of the Commission, subject to the qualifications set out below, and should arrive at conclusions or seek instruction only after all phases of a proposal have been dealt with. It is the feeling of the Committee that Canadian delegates to the Washington meetings should not be committed to the support or rejection of any particular proposals, other than those set out in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 below, in advance of their consideration by the Commission.

This suggestion in no way prejudices the right of Canada to make independent proposals. It is fully in keeping with the decision of the Copenhagen meeting that alternative proposals be submitted to the Commission. When such proposals are made it is of course to be expected that they will be endorsed by the countries submitting them.

3. COMMODITY AGREEMENTS

The objectives of the World Food Board and the International Wheat Council are similar in providing a long-term stability of international wheat prices and production, although the methods of accomplishing this objective are different.

Having in mind the Canadian government's policy respecting a world wheat agreement and the prospects of much earlier action through the IWC than through the FAO, the Canadian members of the FAO Commission should take a position in favour of the early completion of the IWC negotiations (if thought advisable by the proposing of an appropriate resolution) as a practical step toward the early attainment of the FAO objectives in respect of wheat.

In general, the Canadian members of the FAO Commission should do everything possible to avoid jeopardizing the success of the IWC negotiations.

4. INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION DISCUSSIONS

Apart from the attitude suggested in paragraph 3 above, and in view of the relatively early conclusion expected for the Preparatory Conference on Trade and Employment beginning on October 15th in London, it would be advisable for the Preparatory Commission on the World Food Board proposals to avoid reaching premature conclusions on matters related to intergovernmental commodity arrangements and allied issues of commercial policy, since any studies by the Preparatory Commission in this field would require to be closely coordinated with proposals for the establishment of the ITO and in particular of the Commodity Commission thereof.

Accordingly it would be desirable to provide for consultation between the Canadian delegations to London and Washington, on the return of the former.

5. INTERNATIONAL RELIEF

The question as to what measures, if any, should be taken to deal with international relief needs after the termination of UNRRA, was referred by resolution of the UNRRA Council to the United Nations, and will be considered at the forthcoming session of the General Assembly. The Canadian delegation should, therefore, seek to avoid any debate on this problem at the Preparatory Commission on the World Food Board proposals, pending action on this matter by the General Assembly. As post-UNRRA relief policy has not as yet been determined, the Canadian delegation to the Preparatory Commission should also avoid any expressions of opinion which might prove to be inconsistent with the policy ultimately adopted by the Canadian government in the light of the deliberations at the United Nations Assembly.

6. DELEGATION

Discussion of this matter brought out the fact that the opening meeting of the Commission is likely to be concerned with generalities, including the allocation of proposals and other matters to committees of experts. With this in mind it would seem unnecessary to name a large delegation to attend the first session of the Commission. The Government will be better able to determine which experts should be attached to the Canadian delegation after the various committees of the Preparatory Commission have been established.

Sir,

You will recall that on the 6th August you sent a letter<sup>2</sup> to the Acting High Commissioner enquiring whether the Canadian Government might wish to consider inviting voluntary relief organisations in Canada to co-operate with the Standing Committee which was set up as the result of a resolution adopted by the Emergency Conference on European Cereal Supplies in meeting cases of special emergency in Europe. You suggested that Canadian voluntary organisations might welcome the guidance of the Standing Committee in determining the areas to which such of their resources as are not committed to some more specific object should be directed. Further, you proposed that voluntary relief organisations might be informed of any foodstuffs reported to the Committee as available for acquisition which, for one reason or another, are not expected to be handled through U.N.R.R.A. or other official procurement machinery.

The information and enquiries in your letter were communicated to the Canadian Government, and I have now received a reply.

It is the view of my Government that Canadian voluntary relief societies would not be interested in the purchase of any of these surplus supplies in Europe as you have suggested. Some of the items listed on the first schedule of available supplies which you sent with your letter are actually available in Canada at the present time to overseas relief societies; and it is hardly likely that the acquisition of these supplies by Canadian voluntary agencies would contribute materially to the solution of the general problem.

In addition, it has been the established policy of the Canadian Government, and particularly of the Department of National War Services, which is concerned with the co-ordination of the activities of voluntary relief societies, that funds raised in Canada for relief purposes should be spent in Canada, and that the contributions of Canadian voluntary organisations should be limited to the sending of relief supplies which it may be within the economy of Canada to provide and within the economy of the benefitting countries to accept. This policy has been adhered to with very few exceptions, and the Canadian Government does not feel prepared to recommend to the Canadian voluntary relief societies a departure from it in this case.

Following for Oliver Master, and George H. McIvor, from Wilson, Begins: Mr. C. C. Farrington, Assistant Administrator, Production and Marketing Administration, United States Department of Agriculture, asked me to meet with him this morning to discuss Canadian and United States flour exports.

The position, as stated by Farrington, is that since last March the United States Department of Agriculture has set flour export quotas for all destinations, and, in respect of the commercial destinations, has also set quotas for the individual mills. Although the Canadian Government last April formally suggested to the United States Government that both countries set up quotas for the Latin American countries through the International Emergency Council in the interest of saving flour for the more necessitous areas, this offer was not taken up by the United States, but in the meantime the United States Department of Agriculture has evidently gone ahead on its own with flour export allocations. Commencing August 1st in Canada, we have authorized Class 2 flour sales subject to the granting of an export permit by the Canadian Wheat Board, but there have been only a few exceptions on our part from permitting the mills to sell to any destination in the quantities they have desired.

Meanwhile, the American mills have made increasing complaints through the Department of Agriculture here that they are being restricted on commercial sales to Latin American destinations, whereas our mills are selling without restriction.

Farrington actually took no exception to flour sales the Canadian millers are making in large volume to destinations such as China, the Philippines, Brazil and Greece, since he regarded these areas as necessitous ones and to which his Department would probably be forcing sales by their own mills. Since their mills were complaining particularly about their restricted quotas in the Latin American countries, he urged that we adopt a quota basis with both Canada and the United States taking percentage shares to be agreed upon in each market.

I stated to Farrington that, in my opinion, we would not be prepared to adopt a quota basis for these markets. This proposal had too much of an element of the two Governments interceding on behalf of the purely commercial interests of the American mills. I also stated that if the problem were one of conserving flour supplies for necessitous areas, and if it could be demonstrated that no<sup>1</sup> one of these Latin American countries was being over-supplied with flour from all sources combined, we would be prepared to suspend export permits simultaneously with the United States to any particular destination. Farrington was not altogether satisfied with my proposal nor did he accept it, stating rather that his Department would in all probability suspend the quota limitations on these markets which would simply mean free competition between the two countries for the business offering. It is possible that they will be making an announcement along these lines in the next few days. Ends.

"1. Lord Addison told me that, in Cabinet this morning, Sir Sholto Douglas,<sup>1</sup> reporting on the food situation in the British zone of Germany said that General Clay,<sup>2</sup> the American member of the Control Commission, had shown him a letter he had received from Washington in which it was stated that 'Canada was sitting on 1,500,000 tons of wheat'. The inference drawn was that it was idle for the United Kingdom to approach the United States for additional supplies of wheat for the British zone so long as Canada was holding substantial quantities off the market.

2. The United Kingdom authorities know our wheat supply position and know how little we have in the way of reserves but they think it would be helpful if a story such as this could be scotched by an authoritative statement from Ottawa about our supply position which could be communicated to the United States Government for the information of the persons responsible for supply requirements for the Allied zones in Germany." Ends.

I think that we should tell the State Department, probably Clayton, as emphatically as we can that we resent American official statements that Canada is sitting on 1,500,000 tons of wheat. I assume that, as General Clay showed the Washington letter to Sir Sholto Douglas, there is no reason why we should not bring this matter up. Message ends.

than tell the State Department emphatically that we resent statements such as that which General Clay showed to Sir Sholto Douglas. As you know, the development of economic policy in the British and American Zones of Germany is to be discussed here next week. General Clay and Ambassador Murphy<sup>1</sup> with a large group of assistants are coming from Germany, and Sir William Strang<sup>2</sup> and a high level British group will act for the United Kingdom. Food policy will be one of the major subjects of discussion, and possible sources of wheat imports will figure largely during these talks.

2. Hutton of the British Food Mission has told me this morning that he has encountered serious misconceptions about our wheat position in many quarters in Washington recently. He thinks that these arise from dislike of our export commitments for flour and from a feeling that we are deliberately underestimating the amounts of wheat available for export. He says that he has constantly defended the Canadian position and has told the Americans that if they feel that way about it, they should take up the matter seriously with us before despatching misleading statements to American representatives such as that quoted by General Clay to Sir Sholto Douglas.

3. I think that we ought promptly to provide the United States authorities with an authoritative statement on our supply position of the sort suggested by Robertson in his telegram from London, and this should include the position during the current crop year and for comparative purposes that during the preceding crop year. While we have figures here, Paterson and I consider that this statement should be prepared in Ottawa and should be annotated where necessary to ensure proper understanding by persons not very familiar with wheat export questions. If you concur in this, I could present the statement to the Department of State perhaps on Tuesday (Monday being a holiday here) and request that it be drawn to the attention of the United States representatives in the discussions on economic policy in the Western Zones of Germany.

4. Hutton remarked to me that he calculated that the United States themselves might have six million tons of wheat not yet committed except in their own minds, whereas at the outside Canada could be represented as having possibly five hundred thousand tons not formally committed. The irritation here, according to him, seems to originate in misgivings over our flour exports as mentioned above and also in a belief that we are understating our stock position in order to hold something in reserve for the United Kingdom above the 160 million bushels provided for in the Wheat Agreement. A statement from us should, therefore, make clear the facts especially on these two points. Ends.

STATEMENT BY G. S. H. BARTON . . . AT THE 8TH MEETING OF COMMITTEE II

(Section 3 Agenda, Methods and Techniques)
November 22, 1946

We, of the Canadian delegation, are pleased that the United Kingdom delegation not only agree with us that commodity agreements and such devices as buffer stocks are not mutually exclusive, but also that they have shown in their statement how they may be complementary when employed in combination as well as separately. Emerging from the very helpful paper presented by the United Kingdom member and the discussion which has followed, are a number of points to which we should like to direct attention.

The assumption that the administration of international commodity schemes should be under the general supervision of a Commodity Commission, such as is proposed should be established under the International Trade Organization, has been interpreted by some speakers as implying the abandonment of the proposal for a World Food Board. Since there is an item on the agenda having to do with machinery, we refer to it at this time only because others have done so, but it is not our intention to elaborate upon it except to comment that, in our view, some central executive and administrative machinery would appear to be necessary for purposes of general administration, and of co-ordination not only with respect to food and agriculture commodity schemes but also as they may relate to other commodity schemes which may be developed under I.T.O.; and to suggest that the general character of any central authority, whatever form it may take, must be such as will command the confidence of food and agriculture interests and assure their identity in it.

In taking exception to the assumption which we have mentioned and to certain other references in the United Kingdom paper the member from India stated that in the approach to the problem, food is not to be regarded as a mere trade commodity. While agreeing that food has special characteristics from a humanitarian viewpoint, we must point out to the delegate from India that in Canada and in other large food producing countries where farming is commercialized, food must of necessity be treated as a commercial commodity. A specialized wheat farmer, for example, must make a substantial cash outlay in the production of his crop even before harvesting has begun. It is only by selling the product at a remunerative price that he can remain in business. We should also like to point out that in all countries farmers are among the hardest working groups within the population. Farming is a long-term occupation and the farmer's average margin of profit is narrow with the result that he is never among those enjoying the highest standard of living. In Canada about one-third of our people obtain their livelihood directly from food production and income from farming accounts for a large part of our national income. Our economy is, therefore, basically dependent on the prosperity of our farmers.

If we understand the member from India correctly he suggested that Canadian farmers expand their production of food and that, by virtue of increased consumption in countries with low dietary standards, they may be assured of a greater outlet for such food at a price equivalent to cost of production. This increased production can be achieved only by internal adjustments in the economy of individual farms or by the bringing into use of additional land. Since any substantial increase in production must bring in the marginal producer and the use of marginal land, increased costs of production must be expected.

The prophecies of the Australian member may be fulfilled, but I have no knowledge of any large areas of land comparable with those brought under production in the last half century that are not considered submarginal and that can't be brought into production except at what is regarded as excessive cost.

It is a matter of grave concern to hear on the one hand, pleas for exporting nations to increase their production of food, and on the other hand, the statement made by the Indian delegate at the Plenary Session on October 29 when he said, "I think that it is essential that each country should be made self-sufficient and self-supporting to meet all its food requirements". Other delegates have also intimated that in their respective countries developments in the same direction are contemplated. While we recognize the necessity for under-developed countries to increase their food production, if the policy among nations is to be one of complete self sufficiency I trust that it will be apparent that any special appeal made to Canadian farmers to increase their output of food to meet a temporary condition on a cost of production basis, is not likely to provide much of an inducement. Moreover such a philosophy is hardly in keeping with the aspirations of international co-operation nor is it likely to attain the objectives to which we of FAO have all subscribed.

The Canadian delegation is not unmindful of the objectives behind the World Food Board proposals as they relate to the improvement of diets and health standards for the peoples of all countries. We believe, however, that if we are to have economic production in order that the greatest possible quantity of food may be made available at prices reasonable to the consumer, it is essential that we have areas of specialized production and that the specialized farmer be assured of some permanency in his market. We also believe that greater stability in prices is necessary to ensure an increased and more regular supply of food to deficit areas at reasonable prices and that the provision of reserve stocks is the only effective means of averting famine. We share the opinion that provision should be made for the distribution of surplus food to needy people. The means by which this might be achieved, however, need not necessarily be an integral part of the price stabilization mechanism but should be co-ordinated with it.

Where a condition of continuing burdensome surplus is apparent in surplus producing countries, steps might be taken to make the excess available through the central authority to areas in special need and where financial resources do not permit the purchase of the commodity at the established minimum price. To the extent that this might be done it would serve the double purpose of adjusting surplus and contributing relief. In other areas, where conditions are not sufficiently acute to call for actual relief but where diet improvement is desirable, similar action might be taken. In either case the question of financial responsibility arises. It is possible that the country or countries possessing the excessive surplus would be prepared and should be prepared to assume a definite part of the obligation but, whether on the basis of relief or as a contribution to diet improvement, there would seem to be good grounds for a general sharing of the financial responsibility.

With regard to buffer stocks, under the procedure outlined by the United Kingdom member, the producing countries, presumably the exporting countries, would be expected to assume the initial obligation to acquire through domestic accumulation what are termed surpluses, while at a later stage the importing countries would be obligated also to acquire surpluses.

We suggest that buffer stocks should be regarded as serving two purposes; a means of insuring reserve supplies for time of need and a means of relieving a temporary market condition when supplies are excessive. We submit that under conditions to be expected in the near future, the reserve purpose is naturally and logically the first one to satisfy. While reserves should be provided for all countries, the countries which are most likely to suffer because of their absence or shortage are the importing countries and, therefore, it would not seem unreasonable that the first obligation for reserve accumulation should rest with them. It may be, however, that some principle of common status should be established. Under this procedure no accumulation of supplies should be regarded as true surplus unless the quantity of necessary reserve supplies has been exceeded.

It is not unlikely that the continuous maintenance of necessary reserves by an importing country which is also a producing country, probably on a high cost level, may afford the necessary assurance to allow and perhaps encourage adjustment in the agricultural production of such country and thus contribute to the attainment of desirable reorientation in production.

The United States representative expressed concern that under conditions of surplus some importing countries might persist in adding to it by continuing to produce the commodity irrespective of economy of production and regardless of surplus conditions. The United Kingdom representative has proposed that the obligation of exporting countries to acquire surpluses would vary with the extent to which domestic prices exceeded the basic point of the price range. Here again it would not seem unreasonable that a similar obligation to share surplus should be imposed on importing countries that persist in producing a high priced commodity.

While strongly supporting the combination scheme approach for certain commodities, it seems doubtful that any single scheme will prove suitable for any large group of commodities. We would, therefore, urge that the utmost latitude be allowed in the range of scheme patterns. We concur in the suggestion, made by the member from The Netherlands, that comparatively simple schemes may accomplish a great deal in meeting the needs with respect to particular commodities. Commodity agreements without buffer stocks, long term contracts, special price support provision and what the United Kingdom member referred to as ad hoc arrangements, and even buffer stocks with only the minimum of agreement attachments necessary for their operation, may all have a place by themselves in distribution and stabilization.

Any international framework for production and marketing which the Commission may approve should provide, subject to the approval of the central administration authority, for the adaptation of schemes to particular commodities by commodity administrative units which are expected to assume the immediate responsibility of administration.

Presumably it will be necessary to refer this item of the agenda of Committee II to a working party for detailed study in the light of the representations made in the papers submitted and in the discussion. In view of both the technical and practical considerations involved in the various proposals put forward under this item, we should like to express the hope that after they have been sifted and before this Committee is expected to pass final judgment on the recommendations that may emerge, there will be opportunity to obtain, from the standpoint of commodity application, the reaction of commodity committees and the viewpoint of so-called practical people, such as representatives of the International Federation of Agricultural Producers, who share the desires of FAO.

Ottawa, November 26, 1946

I repeat below the text of my telegram to the Canadian Minister to The Netherlands in which I ask him to seek the support of the Netherlands authorities to the price proposals developed on Canadian initiative in the Preparatory Committee of the International Wheat Council.

I have sent similar telegrams to our Ambassadors in France and Belgium. As the support is required for December 7th, it is unlikely that we can provide them with the necessary documents and I have accordingly suggested that they might call on you if they require further information. Telegram Begins:

Preparatory Committee of the International Wheat Council, which has undertaken to revise the Draft Convention of the 1942 Wheat Agreement, is striving to obtain by December 7th the views of member governments on a proposed agreement on prices which could be recommended to an international conference on wheat which would be called by the United States if there were sufficient evidence of agreement amongst members. The representatives on the Committee of Australia, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States have agreed to recommend to the International Wheat Council basic minimum and maximum prices of $1.25 and $1.55 per bushel, but definite positions have not yet been expressed to the Committee by the nine other governments, including that of The Netherlands. For your information, Canadian initiative has played an important part in the development of the price proposals.

The Committee agreed at meeting of November 12th to make a final appeal to those governments and I should appreciate it if you would make known to the Netherlands authorities that the Canadian authorities consider it highly important and urgent that an international wheat agreement be brought into operation as soon as possible to reduce the wide divergencies in export wheat prices. Please do what you can to have the Netherlands authorities support the proposals by indicating before December 7 through their delegates on the Preparatory Committee their willingness to participate on the basis of the price range mentioned above in paragraph 1.

During the Committee discussion it has been suggested as a reason for delay that a wheat agreement should await the progress of the International Trade Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization talks. It is our view, however, that the type of wheat agreement under consideration is one which furthers the broad objectives of the I.T.O. and the F.A.O. and can readily be brought under their aegis. On the other hand we believe that delay in reaching agreement will make it most difficult to reach effective agreement later.

For your information the position taken by the Netherlands delegate on the Committee (as set out in I.W.C. document "Communication to Governments from their Representatives on the Preparatory Committee", to which reference is made below) is as follows:

The Netherlands Delegate recalled his previous declaration that his Government was prepared to continue to take part in the negotiation of an international wheat agreement on the understanding that attention to the need for achieving stability in the prices of other agricultural products would be paid by the Preparatory Commission on World Food Board Proposals or the Preparatory Commission on the International Conference on Trade and Employment. He added that he personally felt that the proposed prices of 125 and 155 cents per bushel were reasonable.

In expressing the Canadian attitude you will no doubt find it useful to point out, as evidence that we have regard for the common interest, that the Canadian export price as of November 22nd was $2.32 basis No. 1 Northern in store Fort William to all destinations other than the United Kingdom. If the proposed agreement were made effective, this price would have to be cut back by 77 cents per bushel.

We are making similar approaches to the Governments of France, Belgium, China, Denmark and India.

I am airmailing you document 26204-14 of the International Wheat Council Preparatory Committee "Communication to Governments from their representatives on the Preparatory Committee†"; a memorandum by the Department of Trade and Commerce on the general position<sup>1</sup> and a copy of the preliminary draft of the substance of the provisions of the principal articles of the proposed international wheat agreement.†

I suggest, however, that you should not defer your representations until the arrival of the documents. If you require further background than that given in this telegram, will you please telephone the Canadian High Commissioner in London. Ends.

TELEGRAM EX-2986

Ottawa, November 27, 1946

IMMEDIATE. Here follows the text of the final statement on the Canadian wheat position which you may deliver to Mr. Clayton and use as you see fit. It is being referred to our Military Mission in Berlin, to our High Commissioner in London and will probably receive wide distribution to our offices abroad.

CANADIAN WHEAT POSITION

The Canadian authorities have learned with concern that, during the recent discussions of the problem of increasing the supply of food to Germany, it has been said that if Canada were more forthcoming in the way she dealt with her supplies of wheat the severity of the problem would be lessened. One reported statement was that Canada was sitting on 1,500,000 tons of wheat. Such statements are a serious reflection on Canada's reputation abroad. We believe that they would not have been made if the Canadian wheat position had been fully understood. We consider it necessary, therefore, to place the following facts before the United States authorities, and to request that they be made known to the officials concerned.

Canada's wheat crop for the 1946-47 crop year, according to the latest estimate of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, is 418,800,000 bushels. An earlier estimate, which may have been used in some calculations of Canadian exportable supplies, placed the crop at 441,000,000 bushels. The latest estimate fully bears out independent and usually reliable computations of probable deliveries from farms. Adding a carryover on July 31, 1946, of 70,000,000 bushels, total available supplies for the crop year are estimated at 488,800,000 bushels.

At best, estimates of domestic disappearance are subject to a considerable margin of error. It is reasonable to assume, however, that Canadians will consume at least as much wheat as in the previous crop year, if not more. Food use will be increased by the return from overseas of large numbers of the armed forces and their dependents. While animal population has shown a substantial drop and total feed consumption will probably be lower, it is expected that at least as much wheat will be fed this year as last because of the relative shortage of alternative cereal feeds. Moreover, a higher proportion than usual of this year's crop will be low-grade wheat. Finally, provision should be made for seeding a larger acreage to wheat in 1947. For purposes of these calculations, the total domestic disappearance in Canada in 1946-47 is placed at 175,000,000 bushels.

This leaves available for export and for carryover at the end of the season an estimated total of 314 million bushels. Of this total as large a quantity as possible will be moved abroad within the crop year. While the carryover on July 31, 1946, was one of the lowest for many years and certainly smaller than would be considered prudent under ordinary circumstances, the Canadian authorities do not contemplate adding to the carryover at the end of the current year as a matter of deliberate policy. If the carryover does increase, this will be due to factors beyond the control of government.

The chief factor now limiting exports is transportation. Throughout the autumn months the Canadian Wheat Board (which has full control of all wheat delivered by farmers), working closely with transportation authorities, has made a maximum effort to move wheat delivered from farms to the Head of the Great Lakes and to Vancouver and from the Lakehead east to Montreal. The movement of wheat down the Lakes has been hindered however by the competing and high priority claims of coal, ore and pulpwood—heretofore held back by strikes in certain of these industries and on Great Lakes' vessels. As an example, some 5,000,000 bushels of Canadian export wheat now lying at Buffalo cannot be moved to American seaboard ports because of the withholding of permits by the Office of Defense Transportation. Full use of the Great Lakes fleet is planned between now and the close of navigation in order to have a winter supply of wheat in the East for shipment during the winter months. There is every prospect that transportation difficulties will be encountered in the spring when navigation opens, but the principal limiting factor then will be the availability of wheat itself.

Therefore, in spite of every effort, it cannot be expected that more than 220 to 229 million bushels of wheat can be moved out of Canada within the crop year 1946-47. There will probably remain therefore as a carryover on July 31, 1947, in all positions, some 85 million bushels. Most of this carryover will be in commercial positions. Farmers are delivering freely and in expected quantities and there is no reason to believe that they will hold abnormally large quantities on farms at the end of the season. Arrangements are such that, from a price point of view, there is very little, if any advantage in holding wheat on farms unless the farmer is prepared to hold for several years.

These are the facts of the supply situation as they now appear. It may be that the crop has been underestimated. It may be that domestic requirements will prove to be lower than presently estimated because of the efforts that the Canadian Government, in common with the Governments of other United Nations, are making and will continue to make to economise the use of wheat. In this case, the quantities available for export and carryover will be correspondingly increased.

Canada has an excellent record in fulfilling her food commitments abroad and we believe that it is in the best interests of both supplying and procuring countries to make plans on the basis of realistic forecasts of the probable position as estimated above.

Canada's commitments against available exportable supplies in the 1946-47 crop year are as follows:

	Bushels
United Kingdom—Wheat and Flour	160,000,000
Flour exports to other areas as explained below	40,500,000
Wheat commitments to other areas, all subject to programming by the I.E.F.C.	27,000,000
Total	227,500,000

It will be seen that with total commitments of 227 million bushels against an exportable surplus ranging from 220 to 229 million bushels, we have anywhere from a deficit of 7 millions to a maximum surplus of 2 million bushels of uncommitted wheat at the present time. This margin is so small in view of the probable error in the estimate of exportable supplies, that it would be imprudent to make further commitments at the present time. We can make no new undertakings, therefore, until next spring when the position can be more definitely ascertained.

Included in the present commitments are 160,000,000 bushels to the United Kingdom under the United Kingdom-Canada wheat contract. This is the minimum quantity called for under that contract. The minimum import requirements of the United Kingdom as screened by the International Emergency Food Council, on the other hand, are 202,000,000 bushels, not including quantities required for other areas of British supply responsibility. If the IEFCE were to reallocate from the U.K. to other destinations part of the 160,000,000 bushels contracted from Canada, this would only serve to increase the U.K.'s substantial requirements from other sources and would make no contribution whatever to the over-all supply situation.

As to flour exports, these were the subject of discussion between Canada and the United States last April, at which time the Canadian Government offered to co-operate in the placing of quotas on commercial markets. The possible savings, however, from this and other measures covering flour exports which could be made effective at this time are not likely to be significant. Throughout the war and up to the present Canada has undertaken to meet the flour requirements of Newfoundland and the British West Indies, including British Guiana and British Honduras. Annual sales to these countries account for about 9,000,000 bushels of wheat in the form of flour. Within recent months Canada has sold substantial quantities of flour to China, Brazil, Norway, the Philippines, Greece and UNRRA, all of which are recognized as coming within the category of unquestioned need. These destinations account for an additional 27,500,000 bushels of wheat in the form of flour. In addition Canada is likely to ship on a strictly commercial basis some 4,000,000 bushels of wheat in the form of flour to other destinations in the Western Hemisphere and Africa, excluding Newfoundland and the British West Indies.

In sum, therefore, the proportion of flour sales by Canada which might be put in the category of "commercial", account for only about 10 per cent of the 40,500,000 bushels included in the foregoing table of commitments.

To conclude, the position is this. Total supplies of wheat in Canada are smaller than earlier thought likely. Whatever the exact supply situation may be present indications are that exports will be limited to between 220,000,000 to 229,000,000 bushels, including the wheat equivalent of flour. Of this quantity about 227,000,000 bushels have already been committed in conformity with the principles of the International Emergency Food Council, leaving anywhere from a deficit of 7,000,000 to a margin of 2,000,000 bushels. In this situation it is impossible to consider making any further commitments until next spring.

In short, Canada is not "sitting" on wheat or avoiding her full share of the general responsibility to meet a world shortage of cereals.

International Wheat Council. At meeting December 9th Preparatory Committee of International Wheat Council representatives of Australia, Canada,

China, Italy and the United States favoured recommending to the International Wheat Conference basic minimum and maximum prices for a period of four years of $1.25 to $1.55 per bushel, basis No. 1 Manitoba Northern, in store Fort William.

Representatives of Belgium, India, The Netherlands and the United Kingdom supported the British proposal that the above range be set for three years from August 1st, 1946, with a fourth year minimum of $1.00 if the agreement is to extend for four years.

The Danish representative said his Government would consider whatever range was generally acceptable.

Representatives of France, Brazil and Argentina reported their Governments were not yet prepared to support any price range. We expect, however, that the French Government will shortly instruct its representative to support the above range.

With 83% of current wheat exports and 71% of current imports represented by the countries whose representatives were prepared to support the price range, the Preparatory Committee reported to the International Wheat Council on December 11th that sufficient agreement had been reached on prices to warrant the calling of an International Wheat Conference with reasonable prospects of success in concluding a new International Wheat Agreement.

The inability of Argentina to agree at this stage was regretted but study is being given by the Secretariat to a partial agreement which could become operative if Argentina fails to adhere.

The Wheat Council on December 11th accepted the Preparatory Committee's report and agreed to meet on January 15th. For that meeting a complete draft agreement should be available for consideration as well as draft of a partial agreement.

Council also agreed on March 1st, 1947 as a tentative date for the convening of the International Wheat Conference. Final decision on place and date of conference will be made at January 15th meeting.

The Canadian delegation is highly pleased with the results achieved and say that the representations which our missions made to the other participating Governments contributed substantially.

The attached note by Mr. Malania raises the question of whether the Canadian Government should nominate candidates for the United Nations Secretariat and should screen applications from Canadian nationals. Mr. David Owen has given Mr. Pearson the impression that the United Nations favours the screening process and Mr. Owen regretted that no Canadian applications for high posts had been received from Ottawa.

I am disturbed to learn that Mr. Owen is taking this line. Certainly in the Executive Committee stage and I think in the Preparatory Commission stage there was general agreement on the undesirability of governments screening applications from their nationals and the representatives from the British and Western European countries were insistent that national governments should not screen applications from their nationals. The representatives of these countries also took the line that governments should not nominate nationals for posts.

It is clear that it is going to be much more difficult to establish a truly international Secretariat for the United Nations than for the League of Nations. Our hope in London was that we could protect the Secretary General against political pressure by the rules and regulations and recommendations adopted by the Assembly on the Secretariat. However, these rules are not going to be of much value to a Secretary General who refuses to act in accordance with their spirit.

I suggest that Mr. Ritchie be asked to inform Mr. Owen that we stand by the position which we took in San Francisco and London and which we considered was supported by the great majority of the Members of the United Nations, that we realize the difficulties which the Secretary General must encounter in recruiting his staff, but that we do not think the way out of these difficulties is to ask governments to make nominations.

The attached correspondence with Mr. Pearson regarding our policy with regard to appointments to the Secretariat of the United Nations raises a difficult problem.

It will be seen from Mr. Pearson's letter that officials of the U.N.O. rather welcome the nomination of candidates for posts by their Governments. Judging by our experience in London, it is likely that some pressure is being brought to bear on the Secretary General especially by the Latin Americans. In the elections to the International Court, for example, some Latin American and other delegations sent out circulars asking for support for their candidates and extolling their virtues.

There was also some feeling among certain members of our delegation that we were rather backward in pressing our claims. If it should be felt, when most of the Secretariat appointments have been made, that Canadians have not secured their fair share of them, especially of the higher posts, the Government may be criticized for not having done enough.

Before we do anything about it we should probably hear what Mr. Ritchie has found out in New York, but we should perhaps begin to think now of what our policy should be if in fact appointments are not being made on as virtuous a basis as we would wish. In particular, we might think of suitable candidates we could suggest to the Secretary General for the intermediate posts of Directors and Assistant Directors.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have received your letter of March 26th† regarding Canadian applications for the Secretariat of the United Nations. I note that such applications should be sent direct to UNO and not through any Canadian authority. I think that this is the proper procedure, and my only reservation in regard to it is that other countries do not seem to be following it.

I discussed this matter last week in Atlantic City with David Owen, and he told me that other members of UNO had begun to make nominations and forward applications. He gave me the impression that in such forwarding a screening process had been adopted. He also gave me the impression that UNO had no objections to this; in fact rather favoured it. I am afraid that the result will be that Canadian applications may not get the same consideration as those which are sent semi-officially from other countries. Owen, in fact, mentioned to me his regret that no Canadian applications for higher posts had been received from Ottawa.

I suggested to Mr. Robertson from Atlantic City that this matter was developing in an unsatisfactory way so far as Canada was concerned, and that Mr. Ritchie should take advantage of his presence in New York to discuss the matter with Mr. Owen. I understand that he has done so and I shall be interested to hear the result.

New York, April 8, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I had dinner last night with Mr. Biddle of the United States Bureau of the Budget. Mr. Biddle has been acting as the United States Representative on the Advisory Committee of Experts on Finance and Administration of the United Nations. Mr. Biddle has been also acting as Adviser to the Secretary General on personnel questions. My object in arranging this meeting was to talk over questions connected with Canadian personnel for the United Nations.

Mr. Biddle expressed much the same point of view as that of Mr. David Owen as to the usefulness of receiving from Member States of the United Nations information as to the qualified personnel available. He said that he appreciated fully the view that National Governments should not press their own own candidates on the United Nations, but he thought that any available information regarding personnel which Member Governments could supply would be very much appreciated.

He said that he was anxious to see a really good appointment as Director of Personnel for the Organization. When he returns to Washington in the near future, he would leave a United States Government official, Mr. Watson Thompson, as Acting Director of Personnel. He did not think that the Organization should hurry too much in making the definitive appointment. The great thing was to get the right man for the job. Mr. Biddle thought that it would be undesirable to have a United States National as Director of Personnel. On the other hand he considered it very necessary that the Director should be familiar with conditions of employment on the North American Continent. He thought that in every way a Canadian would be best for this position.

He went on to say that the Organization was very short of good financial experts and administrative personnel generally. They were thinking of making some appointments on a pro tem basis, and here again they would be glad to have any names which we could suggest. The appointments would not be at a very high level as far as position and salary were concerned.

Mr. Biddle said that he thought it would be helpful for Mr. Watson Thompson to talk over these problems with the Department of External Affairs, and he was going to suggest to him that he should pay a visit to Ottawa for that purpose.

I then asked whether he could give me some account of the position as regards the more routine types of appointment. Would he, for example, think it desirable that the Department of External Affairs and Government Departments of other Member States should have a supply of application forms for the United Nations for distribution to their own Nationals who were applying for positions in the Organization?

Mr. Biddle said that he thought the desirable position would be for the Department to refer all applicants to the Personnel Division, United Nations Secretariat. On the other hand, he thought that in individual cases it would be useful to have letters of recommendation from people in a position to know the qualifications of the applicants. Those letters could either be forwarded with the application or could be addressed separately to the Personnel Division. Even if the recommendations came from Cabinet Ministers or Government officials they would not regard these as recommendations by the Canadian Government, but would be treated as personal recommendations. The more the Secretariat knew about the qualifications of the applicants from authoritative sources, the better.

I think that Mr. Biddle and other responsible people in the Secretariat are rather worried about the situation with regard to the employment of personnel. In this field, as in others, no definite policy seems to have been laid down by the Secretary General. From what I can learn here, appointments to the lower ranks of the Secretariat seem to be made on a somewhat hit-or-miss basis.

Yours sincerely,

C. S. A. RITCHIE

Dear Sir,

Arrangements have now been completed for appointing a representative of the United Nations in Canada to be responsible for recruiting for the staff of the United Nations Secretariat.

This is to advise you that Mr. W. B. Herbert of the Canada Foundation, 56 Sparks Street, Ottawa, has been selected for this purpose. In brief, Mr. Herbert will be responsible for all correspondence, enquiries and applications in regard to appointments to the staff of the United Nations. Through the Departments of Government, and through the universities, technical and professional organizations, and other unofficial bodies he will make known the staff requirements of the United Nations with the terms of appointment, supply application forms and prepare them for transmission to the United Nations.

Any questions or enquiries relating to recruiting for this Organization in Canada, therefore, should be referred to Mr. Herbert, who will communicate with your Department at an early date. We appreciate very much any assistance you care to offer to him in carrying out his duties.

Washington, October 1, 1946

Dear General Stein,

I have your letter of the 23rd September,† concerning the prospects for Canadians now serving with UNRRA to secure employment with other international organizations.

You mentioned that you had not been able to ascertain how proportionate Canadian representation is assured on the staffs of international organizations. There is no method by which the Canadian Government has attempted to seek a guarantee from international organizations that they would employ such and such a percentage of Canadians in certain definite categories of positions. It is up to each international organization itself to work out its employment regulations and, as you can well imagine, the question of getting the best person for a particular job and, at the same time, trying to satisfy geographic representation is the most difficult problem they have to face. The inevitable tendency of the new international organizations is to have too high a percentage of American, British and Canadian employees, and one of their problems, therefore, is to search for properly qualified personnel from Latin American and European countries.

To help find such personnel, the United Nations, who will eventually have about 4,000 persons in their Secretariat, (the present number is 2,000) have sent Terry MacDermot, formerly of our Department, on a globe-circling mission to interview and classify applicants. I do not know the details of his itinerary, but as it might be of interest and value to UNRRA employees scattered throughout many countries, you may be able to get the details from the United Nations office in London.

I assume that UNRRA has been attempting to have other international organizations grant some preference in employment to former UNRRA employees, and although no formal agreement that I know of has been reached with these other organizations, I understand that, in fact, quite a number of UNRRA employees are obtaining positions with other international bodies. I cannot say that I agree with the principle which would give preference in employment or any sort of definite priority to those who had served with UNRRA. If that were done it would mean that 12,000 persons would be entitled to such preference, and that is twice the number which it is projected will be employed by all the international organizations now in existence. It would tend to exclude persons of equal qualifications who, during the last six years, have given their services to the military forces, war production agencies and other such activities. I feel that the individual should stand uniquely on his own qualifications and, to the extent that that is done, and the international organizations are free and able to select the best qualified persons, the more certain will be the success of those organizations. Applications to international organizations should be directed as follows:

* * *

I trust that this information is what you wanted and that it will be of assistance to some of your employees in obtaining positions with other international organizations.

Kindest personal regards.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

London, February 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I think it is desirable that there should be on record a statement of how the Delegation voted in the elections to the International Court of Justice yesterday. On the first ballot we supported candidates from Canada, the United Kingdom, the United States, U.S.S.R., France, China, Belgium, Brazil, Salvador and Yugoslavia, all of whom were elected on that ballot. In addition we supported the candidates from Venezuela, India, Norway, Poland and South Africa. We reluctantly decided not to vote for Bailey on the first ballot since it was argued strongly that this might affect Read's chances of election. I am glad to say that since Bailey only got eighteen votes on this ballot our lack of support for him was not in any way responsible for his defeat.

On the second ballot for the two unfilled places we supported the Indian and Australian candidates. Since no candidate in the Assembly secured a majority there still remained two places to be filled.

On the third ballot, since Europe was under-represented on the Court we gave our votes to the Norwegian and to Bailey and the Norwegian was elected. We stuck to Bailey for the fourth ballot but he lost to the Pole.

The result is that the Court includes only two judges from the British Commonwealth—McNair of the United Kingdom and Read. I think a third candidate would have been chosen if it had not been for a division of votes between Zafrullah of India and Bailey. For electoral purposes the British Commonwealth is undoubtedly regarded as a group, even for the choice of judges. There are four Latin Americans on the Court from Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Salvador, and they very nearly succeeded in electing an indifferent candidate from the Argentine as well. In addition to McNair there are six Europeans on the Court, from France, Belgium, U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia, Norway and Poland. The four remaining seats are filled by the Chinese, Canadian, United States and Egyptian candidates.

From the little I know of the candidates, it strikes me that a pretty competent group of judges has been chosen. They still have to determine the length of the term of each of the judges by drawing lots for those who will sit for the three and six year terms.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from the Prime Minister for the Minister of Justice, Begins: On thinking over our conversation at Laurier House just before your departure when we discussed possible candidates for the Secretary Generalship of the United Nations Organization, I am of the opinion that Malcolm MacDonald would in many ways be a stronger and more suitable candidate than those whose names have hitherto been canvassed. He has qualities of judgment and character which would fit him for this high post and his experience, which is already long for a man of his age, includes politics, public administration and diplomacy. It may be argued against him that he is a national of one of the Great Powers. While this is true, it is I think more than balanced by his sympathetic understanding of the necessity of associating the smaller countries wholeheartedly in the work of international coöperation. Certainly we in Canada would have no misgivings about his selection on this score.

I think you would be making a real contribution to the successful launching of the new Organization if you could persuade the other governments participating in the Assembly to consider very seriously MacDonald's qualifications for the post of Secretary General. Ends.

1. There has been very little discussion among the Big Five of the choice for Secretary General. We may well receive, however, an early request from Mr. Byrnes for information whether Pearson is available. He seems to be the preferred candidate of the United States and United Kingdom if agreement cannot be reached on a satisfactory European. Some members of the United States delegation have told me privately that the delegation would like to have Robertson but understands that he is not available. At present the most that can be said is that Pearson seems the least unlikely choice from a list, the selection of any of whom is unlikely.

2. The Soviet delegation is pushing for the choice of a Slav and their candidate is Simich, Yugoslav Ambassador in Washington. I gather that there is no chance of his being accepted. If they were to switch to a stronger candidate such as Benes he might be chosen.

3. There is no prospect of the choice of Malcolm MacDonald who would be opposed by the Government here. The Russians so far have expressed no view in private discussions on any candidate but Simich.

4. I think Pearson should be informed of the position. Please, therefore, repeat this telegram to him. Ends.

my own views, which you may wish to pass on to Wrong, would be as follows. I would wish further information before I could make a decision, particularly regarding the terms and conditions of the appointment, preservation of existing pension rights, etc., about which I know little. I would wish to know about salary, allowances, etc., and, even more important, whether the Secretary-General would be given adequate guarantees of independence and freedom from outside pressure, and whether the acceptance of the position is to be a disqualification for subsequent national official employment. I would also like to know more about the character of the Secretariat, whether its independence is guaranteed and whether there are adequate assurances of the preservation of its international character. I would be worried if there were stipulations regarding national approval for all appointments to it or if a substantial number of those appointments were to be made by the seconding of national officials. Finally, I would like to know whether the Secretariat will secure immunities and privileges that would be adequate for the discharge of its duties.

2. It seems to me that it would be difficult for anyone to decide whether or not to accept the post of Secretary-General unless he had information on the above points. Some of these matters are, I gather, being dealt with by the Assembly, so such information may possibly be available shortly. Other points have been included no doubt in the report of the Preparatory Commission, which I take it will soon be available.

3. I know you will send on by telegraph anything you may have or may secure which throws light on these questions. I hope, finally, that the question will be settled soon and that it will not be postponed until the second meeting of the first session. Ends.

My earlier message, WA-258, for transmission to Wrong, need not go in its original form in view of the report I have received. I realize also that some of the questions I asked in it cannot be answered. Nevertheless, in the unlikely eventuality of being confronted with an offer, I would certainly like to know whether Wrong and others in London feel that the independence and international character of the Secretariat is adequately guaranteed; whether appointments to it have to receive national approval and whether it can be assured of the immunities and privileges adequate for the discharge of its international functions. For your own personal and very confidential information, Acheson told me today that they had received reports from their delegation in London that the impression had been given them in the early days of the Assembly that I would not be available if the choice fell on me. TELEGRAM WA-497

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: I saw Secretary Byrnes this afternoon to get his views of the progress of the Assembly in London in general and the situation regarding the Secretary-Generalship in particular. The Secretary looked somewhat tired and was not as buoyant as usual, which is certainly understandable in the circumstances.

He was not pessimistic, however, about developments in London. He did not go into these in any great detail, but I have heard from another source, very confidentially, that in an off-the-record talk last Friday night with three or four correspondents here, he expressed the view that things were going well, that the Iran issue was not so serious as news despatches indicated; that the new Government of Iran might, in fact, settle it by direct negotiations with Russia and that the latter would thereupon withdraw its Greek and East Indies complaints. (The Secretary's well known optimism has let him down here). Byrnes had added that Stalin had been very frank with him in Moscow about Iran and had admitted that while the U.S.S.R. talked about a Democratic movement in Azerbaijan, what they really wanted was to ensure that no hostile Government in that part of the world was going to sabotage oil fields in which the Soviet Union had a vital interest. In this connection, Byrnes thought that the Russians had a legitimate right to demand peace and security in territory contiguous to its own borders.

2. On the Secretary-Generalship, Byrnes said that they had put forward my name for purely practical reasons. They felt that, as administrative problems in the early stages of organization would involve so many contacts with United States Federal and State authorities, the Head of the Secretariat should be someone familiar with American practices. At the first meeting of the Big Five, the United Kingdom and China supported the United States nomination. Paul Boncour put forward Bonnet, and Gromyko put forward Simich. Gromyko said that they had no objection to me personally, but they felt that the Secretary-General should be an Eastern European because the Organization was located in the United States, Byrnes said that he took the view that a North American should not be barred on these grounds, especially as the United States had not sought to have the Organization in this country. If this consideration was to be advanced continually by the U.S.S.R. and European countries, then perhaps the Organization should be located in Eastern Europe and a North American selected as Secretary-General. At a second meeting of the Big Five, France agreed to support my nomination, but Vyshinsky maintained the position adopted by Gromyko. He seemed a little worried, however, by Byrnes' suggestion that the whole question of site might have to be reopened and said that he would ask for further instructions from Moscow. Byrnes' view is that the Russians will stick to the position they have adopted and may now put Lie's name forward formally as one who would be suitable to everybody. If they do this, the Americans will accept him rather than force the Russians into the position of vetoing me. I told Byrnes that I thought that this was sensible and that the use of the veto in this matter should be avoided. If Lie is not put forward by the Russians, they may nominate Masaryk and Benes.

3. I think a solution of this problem will be found along the above lines and that we should take whatever steps possible to remove the impression that there is to be a battle to the end between a Canadian nominated by the United States and a U.S.S.R. nominee. We certainly do not want this question to result in a victory or a defeat for any country or person.

4. I could not avoid seeing the press on leaving Byrnes' office. For the record, I told them that I had been seeking for my Government from the Secretary his views as to how things were going in London in general and that, in particular, as my name had been associated in the press with the Secretary-Generalship, I was interested to learn from the Secretary how that matter stood. Off the record, I explained that the U.S.S.R. and other members of the Council thought that the Secretary-General should be a European and that, if they continued to feel strongly about this, agreement could probably be reached on some suitable European nominee.

5. I should have mentioned previously that after the Big Five discussed the Secretary-Generalship, Byrnes insisted that there should be an informal discussion of the matter with all members of the Security Council. This was done, as a result of which eight supported my nomination while three said that they favoured a European. Finally, I told Byrnes this afternoon that, as he knew, I was not seeking this post, and that if it would ease the situation for me to say I was not available, I would be happy to do so. He said that my position was understood; that the Canadian Delegation in London had never given the impression that I was a "candidate" but he hoped that I would let matters develop and would take no steps to withdraw my name from consideration. Ends.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

London, January 30, 1946

Dear Norman [Robertson],

There is little I can add to the telegrams which I have sent concerning the nomination of the Secretary General by the Security Council. There is no doubt whatever that Pearson was strongly pushed by the British and supported by the Americans as their first choice. The Russians, however, were unyielding in their insistence that the Secretary General should not come from "the Anglo-Saxon Bloc", with the headquarters in the United States and this Assembly in London. The French wanted a European and the Chinese probably tagged along with the majority.

The American desertion of Pearson was probably caused in part by the difficulties which arose at the very beginning when the election of the President of the Assembly was contested between Spaak and Lie. The British were very annoyed with the Americans at that time, as they claimed that the Americans had given some assurance weeks before to the Russians that they would support Lie while telling the British that they were completely uncommitted. If true, this is the result of a muddle and not of any double dealing. In any event the Americans voted for Lie and he was beaten. This made it harder for them to hold out against his selection as Secretary General, however unrelated the two posts are in fact.

Noel-Baker told me yesterday that he was very much disturbed over the prospect of Lie's selection. He said that he was all right in Norway, where he was quite a good Foreign Minister, but that he was not nearly quick enough or astute enough to tackle the work of Secretary General. He was trying when I saw him to get hold of Bevin in an effort to persuade him to support a last minute move to draft Eisenhower for a couple of years, with the hope that Pearson might have succeeded to the office. If such a move was made it was blocked by the Americans, who have always said that Eisenhower was not available.

I am satisfied that there was nothing which the Canadian Delegation could do to prevent this outcome. We had let it be known widely that Pearson was available and all those whom I consulted, with one exception, were strongly of the opinion that anything more on our part would be positively harmful. The exception was Hadow, whose judgement on this as well as on most other matters is notoriously unsound.

As I said in my telegram† this morning, I think in any case Pearson is well out of it. I doubt that the best man on earth would have much chance of enhancing his reputation during the initial years. The load placed on the Secretary General is terrific and the pressure for national representation acceptable to member governments is going to make the recruitment of a good working Secretariat a most difficult task. If the Organization really begins to work and if Lie proves himself to be a poor Secretary General, Pearson may well get another chance in five years, or even sooner.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

SECRET

London, February 7, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have picked up a little more information about the negotiations leading up to the selection of Lie as Secretary General. I gather that Pearson was supported strongly by the United Kingdom and the United States, that China also supported him and that Paul Boncour for France said that while he had no instructions he would agree with the view of the majority. The Russians then imposed their veto—not formally, but said that if a vote were taken they would vote against Pearson.

Gromyko came up to Massey and me a day or two ago at a party and said that he wished to take this opportunity of explaining why the Russians had been unable to accept Pearson; and he started by emphasizing that they had nothing whatever against either a Canadian Secretary General or Pearson personally, but that with the Headquarters in the United States they felt unable to agree that the Secretary General should come from another American country. He said that they would have taken the same attitude in the case of any candidate from any country of North or South America. He was very friendly in manner and I think that he gave a true explanation, for what it is worth.

Yours sincerely,

1. Electioneering is going strong, with elections to the Council probably on Saturday morning. There is said to be an understanding between Latin American and Arab groups for a joint slate.

2. At Commonwealth meeting this afternoon we were pressed not to stand for Economic and Social Council to clear way for election of Australia, India and New Zealand. Fraser refused to stand down but South Africa withdrew. There is prevalent a feeling that States elected to Security Council should not be elected to Economic and Social Council. We did not withdraw and at present have support of United States for two or three year term. We took line that our record and interest in international economic affairs and organization made us an obvious choice. This pressure to withdraw will probably continue, and if we are chosen for Security Council we may not get enough votes for Economic and Social Council. Our membership of Atomic Commission is also cited as a reason against election to Economic and Social Council.

3. Australian delegation has been instructed to press for their election to Security Council and say they cannot withdraw. Since only one Dominion can be chosen they may cut into our vote, but we should get through.

4. The "functional principle" may be accepted in theory, but in electoral practice it will mainly be honoured in the breach. The Commonwealth group is generally regarded, not only by foreign countries, but also by other Commonwealth members, as one bloc to be represented by rotation in the same class as the Latin American, Arab and other blocs.

5. There is serious talk, especially from United States delegation, of a Canadian Secretary-General, probably Pearson. We may soon have to consult you urgently on this. Ends.

TOP SECRET. 1. At last moment Government here due, I think, to pressure of press and public opinion, decided to be represented on Ministerial level at United Nations Assembly in London. Honourable Mr. Makin, Minister for Navy and Munitions and Acting Minister for External Affairs in Evatt's absence, left this morning by air for London.

2. I called on Evatt yesterday to pay my respects upon his return to Australia on January 7th following a trip abroad of four months.

3. During the conversation, he asked me to convey following message to Mr. King informally.

4. He would like Canada's support for Australia's election to the Security Council. He states that Article 23 of the Charter provides that, in election, due regard shall be paid to military and economic power and to geographical consideration of election.

5. He says that, outside of Big Five, Canada and Australia, in order named, made greatest contribution to the war and that both were entitled to election on this score. Then he says that from geographical considerations Australia was entitled to a seat.

6. He says that Canada's election is inevitable. He suggests that Canada should have two year term and Australia one year.

7. Anticipating argument of too great representation of the Commonwealth, he argues that our nations are in World Organization as independent sovereign States and that membership in the Commonwealth has nothing to do with the case. We would be on Council as nations, not as units of Commonwealth or representing same. To take any other stand would be to admit, theoretically, that Commonwealth must function as a unit.

8. He also says that if we ever admit any other contention, units of the Commonwealth will find themselves in position of rotating in representation on the Council, as grew up under the League of Nations and that this would restrict each Dominion to election to a seat on the Council every eighth year.

9. Evatt expressed the opinion that Britain would support either Persia or Egypt for election to the Council in preference to unit of the Commonwealth, other than Canada, for reasons not of world security but for maintenance of her position in the Middle East. This he looks upon as an unfair basis for support.

10. He did not ask for any commitment and I gave none. I told him I would be happy to convey his representations. Doctor Evatt added that he had discussed the matter on a quite informal basis with Mr. Pearson.

TELEGRAM 117

London, January 12, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 9. Following from Wrong, Begins:

1. You have doubtless received through the press the results of the elections to the Security Council. Voting on the first ballot (with 50 valid ballots) gave Brazil 47, Mexico and Egypt 45, Poland 39, Netherlands 37, Canada 33, Australia 28, with the remaining votes scattered among 11 States, none receiving more than 6. This meant that 11 delegations voted for both Canada and Australia. We would have secured the required 34 votes if one delegate had not spoiled his ballot by signing it, since he had voted for Canada. Under the rules, a vote between the two leading candidates for the sixth seat then took place. Australia secured 27 votes and Canada 23. Since Australia lacked the required majority, a further vote was held which gave Australia 28 votes and Canada 23. We then retired from the contest after a graceful speech from Mr. St. Laurent.

2. The election of Canada was supported by the five permanent members of the Security Council, Canada and Brazil being the only countries to appear on the original slates of them all. Our defeat was due to the unwillingness of Australia to withdraw, their grounds being the necessity of achieving equitable geographical distribution of the elected seats (our prospective membership of the Atomic Commission also seems to have had some effect). The Prime Minister of New Zealand this morning, before the first ballot was taken, succeeded in making two speeches in support of the election of Australia; this probably helped to swing over some smaller Latin American States and the Arab group, both of whom are most anxious to base all elections on regional considerations in order to ensure their own representation.

3. It is probably difficult to understand the result without feeling the prevailing atmosphere in the Assembly. The election of Mexico on the first ballot was undoubtedly responsible for the preference given to Australia on the second ballot because of objection to the presence on the Security Council at the same time of three North American countries.

4. On a vote for the two-year term, Brazil and Australia were first elected and later Poland defeated Netherlands by lot after a tied vote. While there might be a remote possibility of our replacing Mexico at the next elections, it seems more likely that we shall have to await the end of the Australian term.

5. It was, indeed, clear from our discussions with other delegations that if we had not withdrawn, we should eventually have been defeated in further balloting. Given these circumstances, the effect of our withdrawal was undoubtedly favourable. It helped to secure our election to the Economic and Social Council with 46 votes. The balloting for terms on this Council will take place on Monday morning.

6. I shall telegraph separately, tomorrow, about the elections to the Economic and Social Council and the position concerning the choice of the Secretary-General. Ends.

SECRET

London, January 13, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

The results of the elections to the Security Council were, I know, a shock to you all in Ottawa. I sent a telegram last night giving a summary explanation and there really is not a great deal more to say. The permanent members had agreed at meetings between themselves on their slate except on the allocation of the two-year term between Poland and The Netherlands. Their slate was elected easily except for the substitution of Australia for Canada.

As I mentioned in my telegram, when the Big Five got together here Canada and Brazil were the only two countries which appeared on the lists submitted by all of them. They all undoubtedly voted for us on the first ballot and we have been told that the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and the United States continued to vote for us in the separate contest with Australia. I am fairly certain that the French also did so but I do not know what the Chinese did.

There were two unpleasant meetings last week of the Commonwealth countries in Lord Addison's office which Messrs. St. Laurent and Massey and I attended. Colonel Hodgson who is temporarily heading the Australian Delegation told us that he had the most explicit instructions to push for Australian election. He was supported at great length by Mr. Fraser. While I think that it was unsound to base their claim on the necessity of representing the Southwest Pacific area—a claim which would really require the continuous presence on the Council of either Australia or New Zealand—there was certainly no desire on their part to keep Canada off the Council. They felt quite rightly that the criterion of contribution to the maintenance of peace and security justified the election of both countries. They concentrated their pressure on trying to get us to withdraw from the contest for the Economic and Social Council in order to clear the way for the election of New Zealand.

It was however apparent from the intense lobbying that was going on that there was no chance of electing more than one member of the Commonwealth to the Security Council and not more than four including the United Kingdom to the Economic and Social Council. When this became clear I sent a warning telegram to Ottawa last Thursday evening. The prevailing view is most definitely that election to the Security Council disqualifies the state concerned for simultaneous membership in the Economic and Social Council. Indeed The Netherlands and Australia withdrew from the contest for the latter Council immediately after the election to the Security Council.

We thought, however, that in spite of Australia's candidature we would just pull through in the elections. In fact we secured the required two-thirds vote of 34 on the first ballot, but the Nicaraguan delegate spoiled his ballot by signing his name and it was properly rejected under the rules. The rules then require a separate vote between the two highest contenders and that meant this unpleasant business of a contest between Canada and Australia. Before the first ballot, in the course of a discussion on nominations which had been raised by Mr. Manuilsky, Mr. Fraser found the occasion twice to speak in the Assembly in favour of Australia on the ground of equitable geographical distribution of the seats. This probably helped Australia a little on the first ballot but its major effect came later when the delegations had to choose between Canada and Australia. By this time, of course, Mexico had been safely elected, and especially the smaller states anxious to cling to regional grouping were unwilling to support Canada against another good candidate from outside North America.

I still thought that we would be chosen and the British and Americans both said that they were sure of the outcome. Mr. de Freitas-Valle, who is the unofficial whip of the Latin American group, told me that we could count on the support of his group but he was clearly wrong in this.

When the second ballot was taken, Australia secured 27 votes to our 23. We then adjourned for lunch and some of us did a little further lobbying. I think we picked up a few votes but we lost just as many, as the third ballot gave 28 for Australia while we remained at 23.

At this stage, with the contest between these two countries, there were undoubtedly some good reasons for preferring Australia to Canada and it was clear from our private discussions that if we did not withdraw at this point, more votes would have shifted to Australia. Mr. St. Laurent therefore went to the rostrum and gracefully withdrew. A final ballot had to be taken under the rules and it gave 46 votes for Australia to 3 unknowns who persisted in voting for Canada.

The Security Council is to meet on Monday and will doubtless soon begin to discuss the question of the Secretary-General. I have just explained the position to you on the telephone as your call came through when I was dictating this letter.

For purposes of record, I should state that the Canadian Delegation voted for Brazil, Canada, Egypt, Mexico, The Netherlands and Poland on the first ballot. When it came to the choice of those who would serve a two-year term we supported Brazil, The Netherlands and Poland. The great powers, however, had agreed to support us for a two-year term and this word had gone around the delegations, many of which after our defeat gave their support to Australia. There was a long contest between The Netherlands and Poland ending in a tie vote which was resolved under the rules by the chairman drawing lots, Poland was the winner. We supported Poland because we felt that Belgium was an obviously satisfactory successor at the end of one year to The Netherlands.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

CANADIAN VOTES FOR THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

We supported on the first ballot all those which were elected except Cuba and Lebanon. We voted for Uruguay in place of Cuba and for Turkey in place of Lebanon. When the contest was narrowed to New Zealand and Yugoslavia for the eighteenth seat we continued to give our support to New Zealand on each of the separate ballots.

Our slate for the 3 year term was Canada, China, France, Peru (chosen) and Norway and Czechoslovakia (not chosen). We then supported these two and U.S.S.R., U.K., India and Colombia for the two year term. Cuba was chosen in place of Colombia.

SECRET. ASDEL No. 12. Following from Wrong, Begins: My telegram ASDEL No. 10,† Economic and Social Council.

1. This morning we were safely chosen for a three year term together with China, Chile, Peru, France and Belgium. The two year terms went to the Soviet Union, United Kingdom, India, Norway, Czechoslovakia and Cuba. This left for the one year terms Greece, Yugoslavia, Ukraine, Lebanon, Colombia and the United States which will, of course, be re-elected by the next Assembly.

2. The deadlock between New Zealand and Yugoslavia for the 18th seat was resolved by the withdrawal of New Zealand. Mr. Fraser is understood to have received pledges of support for a full term for his country at the next election.

3. We are making enquiries about the nature of the representation which the leading countries contemplate on the Economic and Social Council, and shall telegraph later about our own position. We assume that we should have a Ministerial representative at the opening meetings. As the first session is likely to continue for some time, we shall have to make supplementary arrangements. Ends.

Dear Norman [Robertson],

Hume's<sup>1</sup> very interesting letter of January 13th to you on the elections to the Security Council prompts one or two observations on my part.

I was surprised to note in the last paragraph of his letter that we had not supported Australia for the Council on the first ballot. I can understand the reasons against giving such support (if we wished to get on ourselves), but I was of the impression that we had promised it.

The implications of the argument for geographical representation, an argument which Australia and New Zealand seem to have emphasized in London as much as they did in San Francisco, are important for us. If this argument is accepted, it leaves us in a difficult position. What regional grouping would include us? If North and Central America, we would take our turn for election among the six or seven small Central American States. If we are not in that group, we are presumably in no group, because the acceptance of the Australian-New Zealand argument would end the British Commonwealth group; something which may or may not be constitutionally desirable, but which, from the practical point of view of Canadian representation, has real disadvantages for us.

Our functional principle seems to have been thrown out of the window in London. In elections to the Security Council it has been subordinated to the geographical principle, while the acceptance of the view that election to the Security Council disqualifies a state for membership in the Economic and Social Council prevents, in large measure, its application to that latter body. In this connection it is interesting to note that in London these two ideas clashed. Though the geographical principle was accepted in large part by the election of Australia to the Security Council, it was rejected almost at once in elections to the Economic and Social Council, which were decided in part on the basis of the other idea that no state could be elected to both bodies.

I am afraid that the election pattern which is developing in UNO, in spite of our efforts at San Francisco and all our speeches on functional representation, will not be any better than that which prevailed in Geneva in the old days.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I greatly appreciate the information which you so kindly let me have concerning the recent voting at the Assembly of the United Nations. It was naturally a great disappointment to me that Canada should have lost out to Australia in the election to the Security Council. Canada's claim to middle power status and election to be based upon the functional principle might appear all right in theory at a time when she was an important factor in winning the war, but I was apprehensive of such claims being recognized in connection with election to the organs of the United Nations once our enemies had surrendered. In the case of UNRRA and one or two other commissions or organizations where Canadian contributions are essential for their success, the enunciation of the functional principle might assist in Canada's election, but I am very doubtful if it will help in any competitive election to the organs of the United Nations.

It was because of my fear that we were assuming on recognition which, while fully justified, would not be forthcoming, that I submitted my plan based on dividing the nations into categories for the purpose of the election of non-permanent members to the Security Council. It is probable that the Government either did not think the adoption of such a plan necessary or even feasible.

At San Francisco, unfortunately, Canada's place as regards elections to the Security Council was greatly weakened by the incorporation of the principle of "equitable geographical distribution" in Article 23, Section 1. It was probably difficult to foresee that with the United States an active member in the United Nations, "equitable geographical distribution" would place Canada, if anything, in an inferior position to that which we occupied as regards selection to the Council of the League of Nations. My experience at Geneva taught me that when the United States is represented on an international body, Canada's geographical situation for purposes of election to that body has a negative value, and that it is only when the United States is not a member that Canada's geographical situation has real importance.

It would appear that there is a very definite danger that the Commonwealth system of election to the Council of the League will be accepted by the United Nations in elections to the Security Council. This would mean that Canada will be in a less favourable position, in spite of her claims as regards election to the Security Council, than she was as regards election to the Council of the League. You will recall that in 1927 we were the first British Commonwealth country to be elected to the Council, and the system that the Dominions would each be elected to the Council in turn soon became established. The result was that Canada could only hope to be elected every 5th term. Eire, once she becomes a member of the United Nations, will very likely claim the right of election under the British Commonwealth scheme; as you will recall, her experience running as an independent country in 1926 for a seat on the Council proved a failure, as she received only 10 votes. Unless the Government should be content with this situation, Canada under these circumstances could not hope for anything more favourable from the United Nations than she had in the League. It would seem to me that Canada should announce early her candidature for the Mexican seat, on the basis of an important North American Country which had made a great contribution to the war, and is making a substantial contribution to world reconstruction.

Yours sincerely,

Washington, February 12, 1946

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I was interested to receive a copy of Dr. Riddell's letter to you dated January 23rd, and which concerned the election of non-permanent members to the Security Council. Dr. Riddell has touched on a difficulty to which I have already alluded; namely, Canada's position if members of the United Nations for purposes of election are divided into geographical blocs. In view of the fact that some bloc system is undoubtedly going to be adopted in spite of all efforts which may be made to the contrary, the alternative for us seems to be participation in a Commonwealth or a North and Central American grouping. One difficulty in the way of the former may be Australia and New Zealand's desire for representation of the South Pacific area. If this principle is accepted, then the British Commonwealth grouping disappears. Because of that possibility, we should, as Dr. Riddell suggests, consider whether we could replace Mexico on the Security Council. Possibly we might be able to establish a rotation between Canada, Mexico and the other Central American states taken together. There are two difficulties in this regard; one, we would be associating ourselves with a Latin American grouping which the Latin Americans, themselves and possibly others, might not desire; two, the smaller Central American republics might not like to be lumped together in a way which would weaken their boasted sovereign equality. Another danger is that, if our efforts to attach ourselves for purposes of election to a grouping of this kind should fail, it would be difficult for us later to return to a British Commonwealth grouping. As a result we might find ourselves without any affiliation and forced to rely entirely on our own claims for election on functional and national grounds to the Security Council and other such United Nations' agencies. In that case I am afraid we would be elected only on very rare occasions as apparently such claims are not going to loom very large as a qualification for election.

I think we should begin to give this whole matter very careful consideration. It may require informal approaches to the United States and Mexican governments and also to the other governments of the Commonwealth. There is, of course, no hurry in the matter, but we should know where we stand before it is too late to do anything to influence that standing.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Ottawa, February 26, 1946

Dear Dr. Riddell,

Many thanks for your letter of January 23rd on Canada's chance of being elected to the Security Council.

I agree with you that the reference in Article 23 of the Charter to equitable geographical distribution weakens our claim to election to a Council on which the United States has a permanent seat. However, the demand at San Francisco for the inclusion of a reference to this criterion was irresistible. The most we could do, and that only after strenuous efforts, was to have the geographical criterion made subordinate to the functional.

While Article 23 gives rise to a moral obligation on the part of the Members of the United Nations, this obligation is not enforceable and experience at the General Assembly in London has demonstrated that the two factors which are in actual fact paramount in the minds of most of the delegations, especially those of the smaller countries, when they are making up their minds on elections to the Councils, are equitable geographical distribution and the sharing of the honours. The latter consideration was so firmly established in London that no state (other than one of the Big Five) was elected to the Economic and Social Council if it had already been elected to the Security Council.

Perhaps in course of time it will be possible to get the Assembly to agree to certain fairly precise formulae for measuring the extent of the "contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization". It is, however, impossible to work out a formula until the Organization has been at work for some time.

We should certainly, as you suggest, try our best to prevent a situation from developing in which the other Members of the United Nations tacitly agree that only one non-permanent seat can go to a Commonwealth country.

There is much to be said for your view that Canada should stand for election to the Council in September of this year, in order to make our position clear. I would not, however, agree with you that we should soon announce our candidature for the Mexican seat since this would arouse the opposition of all the Latin American Republics which insist that two of them should always be on the Council.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, August 7, 1946

You may be interested in learning how the provision inserted under pressure from us in Article 23 of the Charter appears to be being carried out in practice. This provision required that due regard should be paid, in electing non-permanent members of the Security Council, to their contribution to the maintenance of peace and other purposes of the Organisation, and so on. We have already been lobbied by Colombia for our support for their election to the Council in September in place of Mexico, and now the Syrian Representative in Washington has approached our Embassy to ask our support for Syria in succession to Egypt. We are thus clearly slipping into a geographical basis of rotation, and I doubt that there is anything we can do to stop it. If we were to stand for the Council ourselves—and I am not recommending that we should do so—we would be regarded as seeking succession to Mexico and would doubtless fail of election.

SECRET. Reference Dominions Office telegram D. 800 of August 28th.†

Foreign Office might be interested to know that both Syria and Colombia have sought our support for election to the Security Council, and that Turkey has approached us concerning election to the Economic and Social Council. They have all been answered in terms similar to those used by the United Kingdom to Syria.

2. Our preliminary views on the elections to the Councils, which have not yet received Ministerial consideration, are as follows:

3. Security Council

It is very unlikely that Canada will be a candidate this year in spite of our strong claim to early election. We are, therefore, inclined to support Colombia to succeed Mexico and Belgium, if a candidate, to succeed The Netherlands. Syria's claim to election rests wholly on geographical grounds and cannot be justified by the principal criterion in Article 23. If a Middle Eastern state is to be chosen we should prefer Turkey but we do not believe that that region must always be represented on the Council.

4. Economic and Social Council

The United States should obviously be re-elected and we would support New Zealand. One Middle Eastern state (preferably Turkey, if not a candidate for the Security Council) might succeed Lebanon, and Mexico or Uruguay might succeed Colombia. We think the other two places should be filled from Eastern and Western Europe, possibly by the re-election of Yugoslavia and by the choice of one of The Netherlands, Denmark or Sweden.

3. We are concerned to learn that the trend of thought of the officials concerned in the United Kingdom seems to be towards the conclusion that states should not be re-elected to the Economic and Social Council with the exception of great powers.

4. In our opinion the discussions in committee at the San Francisco Conference demonstrated a general belief that if the Council were to discharge its duties effectively it would be necessary to have the states of major economic importance represented on it and this belief was reflected in the provision that retiring members should be eligible for immediate re-election.

5. The fact that five states have been accorded permanent membership on the Security Council is not in our view relevant to this issue. We should hope that over half the membership of the Economic and Social Council would always be drawn from the dozen or so states of chief economic importance, some of which would be steadily re-elected.

6. A recent appraisal of the relative economic importance of states is given in the United Kingdom suggestions for weighted voting in the International Trade Organizations suggested in DO telegram circular D.833 of September 7.† This scale puts the eight principal states in the following order: U.S.A., U.K., U.S.S.R., India, France, Netherlands, Canada, China.

ELECTIONS TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

1. At present the six non-permanent members of the Security Council are:

For two-year term: Australia

Brazil

Poland

For one-year term: Egypt

Mexico

Netherlands.

2. The United Nations Assembly in October will elect successors to Egypt, Mexico and The Netherlands. These states are not eligible for immediate re-election.

3. The Latin American Republics appear to have agreed on Colombia. The Arab states (Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Saudi-Arabia, and Iraq) have agreed on Syria and have secured the concurrence of Turkey and Iran. It is widely expected that Belgium will be the candidate of the Western European states for the succession to the seat of The Netherlands though there may be strong opposition to a state being a member at the same time of both the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council.

4. According to the Charter (Article 23:1), the primary consideration to be taken into account by the Assembly in elections to the Security Council is "the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization". The secondary consideration is "equitable geographical distribution".

5. In fact, however, at the elections in London in January scant attention was paid to the principle of functionalism and the two governing principles were the sharing of honours and equitable geographical distribution. The first principle means that a state (other than one of the Big Five) should not be a member at the same time of both the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. The second principle means that various groups of states are each entitled not only to a seat on the Security Council but to agree among themselves on which of them should have the seat. Of the six non-permanent seats five, in the minds of the adherents of these principles, are divided as follows:

- Western Europe (1)
- The Soviet zone of Europe (1)
- Latin America (2)
- Middle East (1)

The sixth seat was at London given to Australia and it is debatable whether this seat is considered as belonging to the British Commonwealth or to the area lying south of China and the Arab states and including the whole of Africa.

6. Regionalism, combined with the rotation of seats among the states members of the regional groups, will produce a weak Security Council. It has already resulted in Syria being chosen as the Middle Eastern candidate. Two years from now it may result in Colombia and Cuba being the Latin American members of the Security Council. These three states have little military or economic force to contribute to the preservation of peace. Their election cannot be justified under the terms of Article 23 of the Charter.

7. The present system also means that the non-permanent members of the Security Council are not in fact being elected by the Assembly but that the Assembly is merely ratifying the decisions of regional groups. Not all states are members of any recognized regional group and some states which might be useful members of the Security Council will, as a result, be disqualified from membership in the Council.

8. From Canada's point of view the situation is especially serious. Since the United States is always on the Security Council, Canada can make no claim for membership on the basis of equitable geographical distribution. Canada belongs, moreover, to no organized regional group. If Latin America always has two seats on the Security Council, Western Europe one seat, Eastern Europe one seat, and the Arab bloc one seat—only one seat is left over for Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India and for the other states which do not belong to one of the four regions. The argument will be made that that seat should go to a representative of the vast area lying south of China and of the Arab states and including the whole of Africa.

9. The United Kingdom Government has not yet decided which states it should support for election to the Security Council. We have learned, however, that the officials concerned are in favour of supporting Colombia and Belgium. The support of Belgium is conditional upon there not being a strong move to prevent a country from being a member of both Councils at the same time. The officials are inclined to accept the inevitability of a Middle Eastern representative. Iraq was their first choice but they have been informed that neither Iraq nor Turkey wishes to be a candidate. They have therefore decided to support Syria as Syria seems to be the chosen candidate of the other Arab states.

10. It is inevitable, in view of the large Latin American vote in the Assembly, that the Latin American republics can successfully insist on the election of a respectable Latin American state at each annual election. Colombia is respectable and there would be no point in opposing its election.

11. We would be serving neither our own immediate interests nor the interests of the United Nations if we were to give support to the view that membership in one Council disqualifies a state, other than one of the Big Five, from membership in the other Council. This would mean that Canada would be ineligible for membership in the Security Council until its term on the Economic and Social Council expires in January 1949 (i.e., Canada could not be elected until September 1948). By limiting the choice of candidates for the Councils it would weaken the Councils since they can do their most effective work only if they contain the states which have the greatest contribution to make to the solution of the problems with which they are dealing. Canada should therefore be prepared to oppose any movement which may develop in the Assembly to disqualify Belgium from membership on the Security Council because of its membership on the Economic and Social Council.

12. Syria, next to the Lebanon, is the weakest candidate which the Arab states could put up for membership on the Security Council. It is weak not only in military power but in the calibre of the representatives it sends to international meetings. A Syrian representative on the Security Council will help to impair further the already badly impaired prestige of the Security Council. Thus the present would be a propitious occasion on which to oppose the principle that the Middle East has not only a right to be permanently represented on the Council but a right to be represented by whichever Middle Eastern state it designates.

13. Canada might therefore take the line that, since no Middle Eastern state which fulfills the first criterion of Article 23 is a candidate for the Security Council, Canada does not intend to vote for a Middle Eastern state.

14. It might be useful if we were to indicate our willingness to support India's election to the Council if India wishes to be a candidate. India is potentially the strongest state in Asia outside of the Soviet Union and China. It now controls its own foreign policy. The new government needs first-hand experience in the difficulties of dealing with the Soviet Union and the process of its education might be speeded up if it were a member of the Security Council.

15. The other possibility is that Canada, itself, might stand for the Security Council.

16. One argument against our standing is that our chances of election are not good. However they are perhaps not much worse this year than next, since in 1947 the argument may be advanced that Australia's seat should go to a representative of the vast area lying south of China and of the Arab states and including the whole of Africa (i.e., to New Zealand, South Africa or India). Moreover, Syria is a weak opponent and a number of the Latin American republics might prefer Canada to Syria especially since Colombia is so sure of being elected that the Latin American republics will not need to make a deal with the Middle Eastern bloc to guarantee Colombia's election. With Mexico off the Council the geographical argument against Canada is less strong than it was in January of this year when the election of Canada would have given North America three seats on the Council.

17. Another argument against Canada standing for the Council is that we are not anxious to add to our already difficult problems of representation by having to find a representative to a body which is showing itself impotent to discharge its functions. However, though we might not be able to make a very effective contribution to the work of the Security Council, we could certainly make a greater contribution than Syria and by keeping Syria off we would be helping to stem the decline in the effectiveness of the Council.

18. One of the main arguments for our standing for the Council (even if we expect to be defeated) is that by so doing we would make clear our opposition to the acceptance of four undesirable conventions:

(1) The convention that the Assembly can properly disregard in elections to the Security Council the principle of functionalism set forth in Article 23 of the Charter;

(2) The convention that a state is ineligible for election to the Security Council if it is already a member of the Economic and Social Council;

(3) The convention that a number of regions of the world have a right to be represented on the Council by a state designated by them no matter what the qualifications of that state may be;

(4) The convention that only one member of the British Commonwealth, apart from the United Kingdom, should sit on the Security Council.

19. If we wait until September 1947 to stand for the Security Council and are elected, this would be regarded as confirming the fourth convention. If we admit this doctrine, we shall have either to be content with sitting for not more than two years out of every ten or to contest the right of New Zealand and South Africa to sit on the ground of the relative smallness of their contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security and maintain that the "Commonwealth seat" should rotate between Australia, Canada and India.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> La note suivante était écrite sur ce memorandum:

Mr. Reid

Before I received this, Mr. St. Laurent had brought up the question of our standing and expressed his firm opposition. There is no likelihood that he will change his views and I cannot myself recommend that we should stand. I should not like us to be twice defeated, that would be the probable outcome, and I think a defeat would strengthen the convention to which you rightly object. Nor should I like to see us elected in present conditions. I therefore think we are well out of it. As the Council doesn't operate under the present system, but has not had time to show its impotence conclusively, our chance may come later—or alternatively we may attend the funeral as spectator.

CONFIDENTIAL. Your WA-3399 of September 17†. Elections by the Assembly to the three Councils.

1. Security Council. We note your reference to Lebanon as being the choice of the Arab group. We had been informed that the Arab group had decided on Syria. Could you check whether the State Department officials you saw may have made a slip?

2. The next time you are discussing the matter with the State Department, you might try to get some further elucidation of their opinion that the pattern of geographical representation set in the present Security Council is a good one. You might, for instance, ask them whether they think that North America should be represented by two states on the Security Council in view of the fact that the original Council had on it Mexico and United States. Do they regard Mexico as Latin American or North American? What pattern of geographical representation does Australia fit into? Is it the geographical area which lies south of China and of the Arab states and includes the whole of Africa? Are they prepared to accept any nominee put forward by a regional group? Or are they concerned about the possibility that the Latin American states may follow the principle of rotation until finally the smallest Latin American states might reach their turn. In what region does Canada come? Their slate appears to give little weight (except for Belgium) to the criterion of contribution included in Article 23.

3. We are glad to note that their preliminary slate for the Security Council has Belgium down as successor to The Netherlands, since this demonstrates that the United States is prepared to oppose the dangerous view that a state, other than one of the Big Five, may not sit at the same time on the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.

4. Trusteeship Council. Some tentative views on the composition of the Trusteeship Council were set forth in paragraphs 25 to 29 of the memorandum on Non-Self-Governing Territories and Trusteeship which is included in Section 1 of Chapter V of the draft commentary (now in course of revision) prepared for the Canadian delegation to the Assembly, copy of which has been sent to you.

5. Since this memorandum was prepared we have given some further consideration to the recommendation of the Executive Committee of the Preparatory Commission that The Netherlands would be a useful member of the Trusteeship Council. The advantage of membership by The Netherlands during the first three years is that they would be able to bring the experience of the Mandates Commission of the League to bear on questions which will come up during the period of organization of the Trusteeship Council. Baron van Asbeck was a most useful member of the Trusteeship committees in London. On the other hand, the situation in the Netherlands Indies may make it desirable to support another Western European state in place of The Netherlands. In that case we should be inclined to prefer Denmark or Sweden, either as a substitute for The Netherlands or as a second Western European state if the choice of two such states proves feasible.

6. We are interested to note that the preliminary slate of the State Department does not include a Latin American republic. We had assumed that the Latin American republics would demand a seat on the Trusteeship Council. Perhaps the State Department has received indications that the Latin American republics are not interested in one of their number being elected to that Council.

7. It might be useful to have on the Council a representative of a people recently accorded independence, and Egypt, the Philippines or Iraq would come in this category. However, the Philippine representatives at the London meetings were not of a calibre to lead us to welcome Philippine representation on an important body such as the Trusteeship Council, and if it were a choice between the Philippines and Brazil we feel that Brazil would be a more adequate member. As between the Philippines, Egypt and Iraq, we would prefer Egypt or Iraq to the Philippines. India is another possibility, and you might sound out the State Department on this; there will be, however, a large representation of British Commonwealth countries on the Trusteeship Council in any event; and we should not like to see India defeated in an election so soon after the inauguration of the Interim Government.

8. Please make it clear in any discussions that the views expressed above and in our EX-2175 are tentative and have not yet been considered by Ministers here.

1. United Kingdom Cabinet have concluded that their Delegation should be instructed to support India's candidature for the Security Council. In advising the Indian Government of this decision, they are making it plain that they would not do so if they felt that India's election in place of Egypt would in any way prejudice the prospect of Canada's election at the next ensuing Assembly. In promising their support to India at the forthcoming election, they are asking the Indian Government, if defeated this time, to agree not to put their candidature forward next year, but to let it stand over for two years, as Canada did when defeated at the First Assembly.

2. My own view is that the election of India on this occasion will not prejudice our chances of election when Australia's term expires, but that if India is an unsuccessful candidate this year and is determined to stand again next year, we might probably have to face a repetition of the results of the voting in the First Assembly. I should not be surprised if Nehru were to reply that he could not give any assurance at this time as to what the policy of the Government of India would be in the matter next year. In this event, I should think our best course would be to do everything we can to see that India is elected to the Security Council at this Assembly, so that she will not be a candidate to confuse our own chances of election next year.

Regarding the attached memorandum on elections to the Council, I am not too happy about the situation in respect of the Security Council. I do not see how the Indian candidature can do anything but hurt Canada's chances in 1948, whether India is successful or unsuccessful on this occasion. If the former, it seems to me that it will be more difficult for Canada to replace Australia next year, because for a year there will already have been two Commonwealth members. If the latter, India may well repeat her candidature next year, with harmful results for us. The memorandum states that India is being supported by the United Kingdom as a replacement for Egypt. Circular D.960 of October 21st† from London however, states in paragraph 4 that India is being supported as a successor to The Netherlands. This seems to me to be entirely wrong. Has a copy of this Circular D.960 gone to our people in New York?

In the light of the above, you might wish to reconsider the section of your memorandum dealing with the Security Council.<sup>2</sup>

[n. d. 1946]

SUBJECT: ELECTIONS TO THE COUNCILS

(Supplement to Chapter I of the Commentary.<sup>2</sup>)

1. A copy of the memorandum on elections by the General Assembly to the three Councils of the United Nations was forwarded to the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom. On the basis of this memorandum discussions were held with the United Kingdom officials concerned and the following is a summary of their views as received in telegrams up to October 15.

2. Although the United Kingdom officials are in sympathy with the principles Canada wishes to defend on the general questions of elections to the Councils, they do not believe the United Kingdom Government would be prepared to make a strong stand in the Assembly if most members think otherwise.

SECURITY COUNCIL

3. The United Kingdom delegation on the decision of the Cabinet has been instructed to support the candidature of India for the Security Council. In promising this support to India at the forthcoming election the United Kingdom is asking the Indian Government if defeated at this time to agree not to put their candidature forward next year but to let it stand for two years in order not to prejudice the prospect of Canada's election at the following Assembly.

4. It may well be that the Indian Government will reply that no assurances can be given at this time as to what policy will be adopted in the matter next year. It would therefore appear to be in the Canadian interest to do everything possible to see that India is elected to the Security Council at this Assembly. She would then not be a candidate to confuse Canada's chances of election next year. Moreover, from the functional point of view, India would be very much more desirable than a Middle Eastern state (reference page 16 of the Commentary).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

5. Argentina has asked for United Kingdom support for election to the Economic and Social Council and the Board of Trade and Foreign Office, who wish to enlist Argentina in regular economic collaboration, see merit in the proposal. Because of expected United States intransigence the United Kingdom had not by October 12th decided to substitute Argentina for Uruguay. On the basis of our cherished "functional principle" it would seem that Canada could properly support Argentina in preference to Uruguay.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

6. If only four of the five administering authorities have concluded their trusteeship agreements by the time the election to the Trusteeship Council takes place a difficult situation may well arise since there would be only one member to be elected to the Council. The United Kingdom prefer The Netherlands but consider chances of its election hopeless against the position of the Soviet bloc and of Australia and New Zealand. Although a Scandinavian country would be highly acceptable, the United Kingdom believe that the Arab and the Latin American states will probably agree on one or two candidates. In this case, and if Yugoslavia is a candidate, the United Kingdom is apparently prepared to vote for one Latin American and one Asiatic state in order to prevent Yugoslavia's election.

7. It appears that the Arab bloc has agreed on Iraq as their candidate for the Trusteeship Council. India, however, has announced its candidature for this as well as the other two Councils.

TELEGRAM 99

New York, November 4, 1946

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. ASDEL No. 67. Following for Mr. Pearson from Mr. St. Laurent, Begins: Elections to the Security Council.

1. At the delegation meeting on Saturday morning, we gave careful consideration to the observations by Mr. Claxton on Belgium's candidacy and views on India's candidacy. We felt that the Canadian delegation could not properly ignore the claims of a North-Western European State for membership in the Security Council. The possible candidates from North-Western Europe are Belgium, Norway and Denmark. Norway and Denmark would, as members of the Council, be even more inclined than Belgium to sit on the fence in disputes between the Soviet Union and the Western Powers. One advantage of electing Belgium is that it would set a precedent that a State can be a member of both Councils at the same time. Belgium is the most important producer of the raw materials for atomic fission and no system for control of these materials would be effective without participation by Belgium. It is, therefore, desirable that Belgium become a member of the Atomic Energy Commission by election to the Council.

2. We are faced with the fact that India is a candidate for the Council whether or not we support her and that India will probably be defeated this year and be a candidate again next year. Nothing we can do can stop India standing for the Council this year.

3. Assistance by the other members of the Commonwealth to India in the election this year would tend to improve relations between India and the other members of the Commonwealth. Moreover, recognition of India's importance by electing it to the Council might serve to stabilize conditions in India.

4. My recommendation to the delegation, with which the delegation concurred, was, therefore, that we support for the Security Council Colombia, Belgium and India. Ends.<sup>1</sup>

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am enclosing, for your information, copy of a brief note which was prepared in the Department, concerning the policy which the delegation to the Assembly is planning to follow in regard to elections to the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. This note was originally prepared for the Prime Minister, who has given his approval to the course of action which it sets forth.

near future. The main problem involved has been the candidature of India for a seat on the Security Council. We have been particularly concerned lest India, by seeking election this year, would reduce Canada's chances of election next year, when Australia is to be replaced. We were informed by the Dominions Office on the 15th October that the United Kingdom delegation would support India as a successor to The Netherlands. In promising this support the United Kingdom asked the Indian Government, if defeated at this time, to agree not to seek election next year, in order to avoid prejudicing Canada's prospects at the next Assembly. The Government of India replied, however, that they could give no such assurances.

2. We are, therefore, faced with the fact that India is a candidate for the Council whether or not we support her and that India will probably be defeated this year and may be a candidate again next year. It is thought, however, that assistance by the other members of the Commonwealth to India in the election this year would tend to improve relations between India and the other Commonwealth countries, at this very important moment in India's relations with those countries.

3. The United Kingdom are in a difficult position in that they wish to support India but they also cannot refuse support to Syria as a candidate of the Arab group. However, the Canadian delegation in New York does not consider that the United Kingdom delegation would be very disappointed if Syria did not succeed and does not feel any obligation to support Syria as against Belgium. Belgium is the most important producer of the raw materials for atomic fission and it is therefore desirable that Belgium become a member of the Atomic Energy Commission by election to the Council.

4. In view of all these considerations, our delegation agreed to support India, as well as Belgium and Colombia for election to the Security Council. It is hoped that this course meets with your approval. It seems to me to have been the only thing to do in the circumstances.

5. With regard to the elections to the Economic and Social Council, it was agreed provisionally that support should be given to the following states; United States (for re-election), Poland, Mexico or Uruguay as the Latin American candidate, Turkey, The Netherlands, and New Zealand. The effect of the election of these states would be to reduce the number of eastern European representatives on the Economic and Social Council by one, and to increase the representatives from the British Commonwealth nations by one.

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for your information is text of tel. No. 221 of Nov. 20th from Canadian Consulate General New York to Sec[retary] of State for External Affairs, Ottawa, Begins: ASDEL No. 145. Following for Pearson from Reid, Begins: Election to Councils.

1. Only one ballot was necessary yesterday to elect three non-permanent members to the Security Council. On the first ballot, Colombia secured 51 votes out of 54, Syria 45 and Belgium 43. India was fourth with 13 votes. We voted for Colombia, Belgium and India. Norway received 4 votes, and 1 vote each was received by Canada, Cuba, Greece and Turkey. The Indians were very disappointed in the results since they had hoped to secure 25 votes on the first ballot. The small Indian vote indicates that the United Kingdom does not exert much influence in elections in the Assembly.

2. The election of Belgium to the Security Council while it is still a member of the Economic and Social Council establishes useful precedent that a State which is not one of the Big Five can be a member of both Councils simultaneously.

Economic and Social Council

On Monday afternoon, we were informed that Mexico and Argentine had withdrawn their candidates for the Economic and Social Council in favour of Venezuela and that Mexico in return has secured a promise of Latin American support for election to the Trusteeship Council.

4. Yesterday morning, before the first ballot on the Economic and Social Council was taken, the Polish delegate informed us that Poland had withdrawn in favour of Yugoslavia. This must clearly have been done under Soviet pressure.

5. The first ballot for the Economic and Social Council gave the following results, 54 votes being cast: United States 51. Venezuela 46. New Zealand 44. Lebanon 35. Netherlands 33. Turkey 30. Yugoslavia 27. Byelo-Russia 25. Poland 10. Argentina 5. Scattered 15. We voted for the United States, Venezuela, New Zealand, The Netherlands, Turkey and Poland. The United States, Venezuela and New Zealand were elected on the first ballot.

6. Before the second ballot was taken, Poland publicly announced that it was withdrawing in favour of Yugoslavia, but the President of the Assembly ruled the remarks out of order.

7. On the second ballot 53 votes were cast. Lebanon was elected with 41 votes and the other five candidates received: Turkey 32. Netherlands 30. Yugoslavia 27. Byelo-Russia 22. Poland 6. We voted for The Netherlands, Turkey and Poland, deliberately throwing our vote away on Poland so as not to harm the chances of the election of The Netherlands and Turkey.

8. The results of the third ballot were: Netherlands 29. Turkey 28. Byelo-Russia 25, Yugoslavia 22. We voted for The Netherlands and Byelo-Russia after having consulted with the Netherlands delegation on the tactics best calculated to ensure their success. We did not vote for Turkey since the election of Turkey on the third ballot would have made almost inevitable the election of a Slav State on the fourth ballot. We voted for Byelo-Russia, instead of Yugoslavia since we thought that Byelo-Russia was more likely to succeed, the Soviet delegation having informed us just before the vote in answer to an enquiry from us, that if both States could not be elected they would prefer Byelo-Russia on the ground that Yugoslavia had already been a member of the Council.

9. The fourth ballot gave substantially the same results as the third vote being: Turkey 29. Netherlands 28. Byelo-Russia 28. Yugoslavia 19. We voted for The Netherlands and Byelo-Russia.

10. Mr. Spaak then suggested that further voting be postponed until the next meeting of the Assembly and this suggestion was agreed to.

11. It would appear from the votes for both Councils that the alliance of the Latin American Republics, and the Arab States is working extremely smoothly.

12. Though The Netherlands are still optimistic, their chances do not appear to be good. Byelo-Russia may be elected on the fifth ballot and the sixth ballot would then be a test between Turkey and The Netherlands. If the Latin American Republics continue to deliver their votes to Turkey, as a result of the deal which they seem to have made with the Arabs to support both Turkey and Lebanon, either Turkey will be elected or a stalemate will result.

13. So far, the elections have strengthened the first, third and fourth of the undesirable conventions listed on Page 15 of our printed commentary.

14. Reston of the New York Times is very concerned over the way in which the elections have been operated and his article today reflects his concern. We are told that the Latin Americans deny his accusations, but their denial will not carry much conviction unless a substantial number of them vote for The Netherlands and Byelo-Russia in the next ballot. Ends.

[Ottawa,] December 5, 1945

Reports received from Wilgress (especially his telegram No. 3548 of December 3rd) † show that it is necessary to give consideration at once to the composition of the Canadian delegation to the first General Assembly of the United Nations. It is virtually certain that the Assembly will open during the first week of January and perhaps on January 1st. It is expected that it will adjourn after taking the steps necessary to get the Organization into operation and reconvene in the spring.

2. The first part of the session will be a highly important international occasion—more important than seemed likely a month ago. At it there will be elected members of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Court of International Justice and also the Secretary General. It will be called upon to consider recommendations from the Preparatory Commission on a wide range of questions of organization. It will establish certain committees to develop further plans for consideration at the second part of the Assembly. In addition, it is now very likely that the Washington proposal for a special Commission on atomic questions will be brought forward at this meeting of the Assembly. Finally, President Truman has publicly stated his belief that the United Nations Organization should at once assume many of the responsibilities hitherto undertaken by the three great powers. There will doubtless be an unusual gathering of foreign ministers and other high dignitaries at the opening meeting and also a great concentration of press and radio reporters and commentators.

3. In framing our delegation we should bear in mind (1) the possibility that Canada will be elected to the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council and that a strong delegation will increase our chances of election, (2) that Canada should certainly be represented on the special Commission on atomic questions, and (3) that Canada is likely to be asked to provide one of the important officers of the Assembly. We should also bear in mind that the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and perhaps the special Commission on atomic questions may begin their meetings while the Assembly is still sitting and are all likely to continue meeting during the interval between the first and second parts of the Assembly's session. We should, therefore, be in a position to be adequately represented on these bodies if we are elected to them.

4. It seems very desirable that the senior delegates should be members of the Government and it would be appropriate if you and Mr. St. Laurent as the signatories of the Charter were able to attend. If three Ministers could be present, including perhaps one especially interested in the economic and social side, so much the better. In addition, I would suggest that the practice inaugurated at San Francisco and followed at the Preparatory Commission should be continued and that the Leaders or leading members of Opposition parties should be invited to accompany the delegation. If the representation of the Senate is felt to be desirable, it is likely that there would be little difficulty over the designation of a single Senator to represent that Chamber.

5. We are limited by the Charter to five delegates and it may be unwise to seek to keep the Parliamentary representation within this figure. In that event I would suggest that only the members of the Government be named as delegates and that other Parliamentarians be designated alternate delegates. I think that there should in any event be not less than two French-speaking Canadians among the delegates and alternates.

6. Among senior officials several of those who were at San Francisco are ruled out by the demands of their present positions. This would exclude Pearson, Chipman, Désy and General Pope. I assume that you will wish one of Wrong or myself to go, and I think if possible Read should go from Ottawa as well. Wilgress might be asked to stay in London for the first part of the session although he should not be away from Moscow beyond the end of January. Dupuy would, I think, be a useful addition to the delegation. A military adviser is probably not necessary at this stage although one would be desirable if we are elected to the Security Council. I should be glad to see Dean Mackenzie included in the list as I feel we shall need his advice on atomic problems among others.

7. It is essential that we should have an expert on the economic and social side and Rasminsky, who has made a fine name for himself at San Francisco, would be the most useful man. I would strongly recommend the inclusion of Ritchie who is very familiar with the problems that will come up and did valuable work at San Francisco. It is intended that Escott Reid should stay in London for the meeting as he is more competent than any other Canadian on the whole range of problems of organization.

8. Someone should also go from Ottawa to work with Campbell Moodie as Press Officer of the delegation since it is apparent that there will be more duties in this field than Moodie alone could accomplish.

9. We are making enquiries in London about hotel accommodation and are also looking into the question of transportation by sea and air. The premises formerly occupied by the Legation to the Allied Governments in Berkeley Street will be available for office purposes although they are too small to meet all the needs of a delegation of the size which seems necessary.

10. To sum up the suggestions in this note on the composition of the delegation, the following list is appended:

Delegates: 2 or 3 Members of the Government.

Alternate delegates: Representatives of Opposition parties and possibly of the Senate.

(The senior officials on the delegation might be designated as delegates or alternate delegates to make up the figure of five delegates and an equal number of alternates.)

Officials: Either Robertson or Wrong, Read, Wilgress, Dupuy, Dean Macenzie, Escott Reid, Ritchie, Rasminsky and perhaps one or two juniors.

Secretaries of delegation: Carter (now a secretary of the delegation to the Preparatory Commission) and one other.

Press Officers: Campbell Moodie and one other from Ottawa.

This sounds formidable but when one considers the work to be done and the number of committees on which we shall be represented and the possibility of election to the Councils, I do not see how we can get along with a smaller group than between fifteen and twenty, plus a stenographic, cyphering and accounting staff. Wilgress has reported that he has been told in confidence that the U.S. delegation will be more than fifty with subordinate staff in addition.

London, December 24, 1945

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for Robertson from Wilgress, Begins: Preparatory Commission telegram No. 61.

1. Sorry to learn from your telegram of December 22nd† that Prime Minister is not likely to head Canadian delegation [to] the first part of the first session of General Assembly. His presence might help our chances of election to both

Security Council and Economic and Social Council. While we are reasonably certain of election to Security Council on account of our participation in development of Atomic energy, we cannot count with assurance on election to Economic and Social Council. There has developed an unfortunate tendency in the distribution of honours. The United Kingdom is proposing to support three Commonwealth countries for election to the Economic and Social Council. Australia is included to mitigate Australian disappointment in lack of United Kingdom support for election to Security Council. India is included on account of great contribution made by Mudaliar to the organization of the Economic and Social Council. Since the meeting at the Dominions Office on December 21st, the South African High Commissioner has received word from his Government that South Africa should put forward a claim for election to the Economic and Social Council.

2. I feel that in the jockeying for position, particularly by Australia, it may prove difficult to secure the election of four Commonwealth countries to the Economic and Social Council, particularly as the United Kingdom has proposed to support only one Soviet satellite and one Soviet Republic in addition to the Soviet Union. Further, the United Kingdom is suggesting only three Latin American countries for election to that Council. Hence, if Canada is elected to Security Council, we may only be able to secure election to Economic and Social Council at the expense of either Australia or India. Ends.

INSTRUCTION FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The attached paper dated December 27th contains general instructions for the guidance of the Canadian Delegation on a number of questions which will arise during the first part of the session of the Assembly. These instructions have been approved by the Canadian Government. Since they were prepared, further supplementary instructions have been issued on the following points:

SECTION 2. HEADQUARTERS OF THE ORGANIZATION.

The choice of a site in the Western United States is now most unlikely in view of the recommendations of the Preparatory Commission. The Canadian Government has suggested that the Committee now visiting the United States should inspect the proposed site at Grand Island in the Niagara River, as well as sites in the other areas referred to in the recommendation of the Preparatory Commission. The Canadian Government is not committed, however, to the support of any particular site in the Eastern United States.

SECTION 4. COMMISSION ON ATOMIC QUESTIONS

The Canadian Government on January 3rd agreed to join in sponsoring the resolution to establish this Commission in the form agreed to by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union at Moscow. In accepting the invitation to act as a joint sponsor of this resolution, the Canadian Government formally took note of a statement made by the Secretary of State of the United States in a speech delivered on December 30th as follows:

The Security Council can give directions to the Commission, and restrain publication of reports detrimental to peace and security, but such action can be taken only with the concurrence of all its permanent Members. Failure of the Security Council to act cannot block the work of the Commission.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Instructions pour la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
Instructions for the Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[Ottawa,] December 27, 1945

It is the intention that the first session of the General Assembly should be held in two parts. The first, opening in London on January 10th, will be primarily concerned with the establishment of the United Nations Organization and will have before it as the basic document for its consideration the report of the Preparatory Commission. The recommendations made in this report, the elections to various organs of the United Nations, the choice of a Secretary General, the selection of the site of the headquarters of the Organization and a host of related matters will compose most of the items on the agenda of this portion of the session. In addition, it is expected that consideration will be given to the establishment of a commission on atomic questions as proposed in the Washington Declaration of November 15th and to certain other resolutions (also relating mainly to questions of international organization) sponsored by various delegations. The last group will include a resolution concerning the meeting of an international conference to consider the setting up of an International Trade Organization and a similar resolution sponsoring the creation of an International Health Organization.

It is impossible to give detailed instructions in advance to the Canadian delegation on a large number of matters that will arise. These instructions are prepared before the report of the Preparatory Commission is available in its complete form. Furthermore, the attitude to be adopted on a number of contentious questions must depend on the situation which develops in the Assembly itself and in its committees. It is necessary, therefore, to leave a substantial margin of discretion to the Canadian delegation which will, of course, adopt the normal practice of referring to Ottawa questions of substantial importance which are not covered by these instructions. The sections which follow deal with questions of some substance on which the delegation will have to adopt a definite position. In certain cases specific instructions can be given in advance; in others it is possible to set forth the limits within which the delegation can operate at its discretion.

1. ELECTIONS

(a) Security Council.

Early in the session elections for the six non-permanent seats in the Security Council will take place in order to permit the Council to hold its first meetings and to organize its work. There are six places to be filled in accordance with the criteria laid down in Article 23 of the Charter. The delegation should use its best efforts to secure the election of Canada to one of these seats. The voting is by secret ballot and no promises have been made to support the election of any other Government. It is desirable from the Canadian point of view that a democratic state of Western Europe should be among those chosen, and the selection of either The Netherlands or Belgium should be supported. A state from eastern or southeastern Europe should also be elected, preferably Czechoslovakia with Poland or Yugoslavia as less desirable alternatives. The Latin American countries will press for two seats on the Security Council and the delegation should support the claims of Brazil and Mexico. The question of the sixth seat presents greater difficulties. There will be strong pressure for the choice of a Middle Eastern state, probably Egypt or Iran, and Australia also desires to secure election. The delegation may at first vote for Australia but if further ballots prove necessary they may change their vote as circumstances indicate.

Three states will be elected for two year terms and three for one year terms. The delegation should support the choice of Canada, a western European country and Brazil for the longer term.

(b) The Economic and Social Council.

Also early in the session elections will be held for the eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council. Six will be chosen for a three year term, six for a two year term, and six for a one year term. The delegation will do its best to ensure the election of Canada for at least a two year term, at the end of which under the Charter Canada would be eligible for re-election. It is desired to have a representative group of responsible states chosen for this Council. The United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, France and China should be among those selected. In addition, it is desirable that two or three western European countries selected from The Netherlands, Belgium, Norway and Denmark should, if possible, be included. From the British Commonwealth, in addition to Canada and the United Kingdom, it is unlikely that more than two states will be elected. These should include Australia and India rather than New Zealand or South Africa, although we would welcome the inclusion of the latter two states if possible. The Latin American countries will press for not fewer than three seats and possibly four. The Canadian choice must depend on the situation as it develops in London, and the delegation may support the election of three from among Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay, and Colombia. From eastern Europe two states might be selected from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Greece and one Middle Eastern state should be supported.

If some states neutral in the war are admitted to the United Nations before these elections take place, the delegation should use its discretion in giving its support to one of Sweden, Switzerland, or Ireland.

(c) International Court of Justice.

The election of the fifteen judges on the new Court will take place probably late in the session from the lists of persons nominated by national groups. The elections are a complicated process, likely to consume considerable time, as they require the concurrence of both the Security Council and the Assembly. The full list of candidates has not yet been received and in any event under the electoral system in force it would be unwise to instruct the delegation to support a specified list of fifteen names. The delegation should support the election of the Canadian nominee, and also of judges who are nationals of each of the major powers. They should use their best judgment, in consultation with other delegations in London, to bring about the choice of a representative group of highly qualified jurists.

(d) Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General is appointed by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council. If Canada is not elected to the Security Council, the delegation will not have much part to play in the choice. Since it seems to be fairly well settled that the headquarters of the Organization will be in the United States, it is in the interests of the Organization that the first Secretary-General should be a person very familiar with European problems. The name most commonly mentioned is M. Spaak of Belgium who possesses many of the required qualities, but it is thought that his selection may be opposed by the Soviet delegation. There has been some talk of the selection of a Canadian as Secretary-General, and this might be the outcome if agreement cannot be reached on a European candidate. The delegation should adopt a neutral attitude in this connection, and should report to Ottawa on any such suggestion.

2. HEADQUARTERS OF THE ORGANIZATION

The Preparatory Commission after long discussion has agreed that the headquarters should be in the United States, but the choice of an exact site is left to the General Assembly. It is not necessary for the Canadian delegation to take a leading part in advocating any particular site although it should do its best to see that the site selected has the requisite facilities. For reasons of convenience in maintaining close contact with the headquarters, a site in the north eastern part of the United States is preferable. If European countries strongly advocate a site in this region rather than on the west coast, the Canadian delegation should give them its support. In comparison with the distances to be travelled to reach the headquarters by representatives of other states, we cannot argue strongly on grounds of Canadian convenience for an eastern as opposed to a western site. It is, however, desirable that the site should be in a part of the United States in which racial discrimination is not marked, and that it should be readily accessible and capable of providing for the needs of the Organization by expansion of existing facilities rather than by the creation of entirely new facilities.

3. ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

Since the Security Council must take the initiative in proposing the admission of new members to the General Assembly, the importance of the attitude of the Canadian delegation will depend on whether Canada is elected to the Security Council. At San Francisco the Canadian representatives took the position that it was desirable to extend the Organization promptly, especially by the inclusion of neutrals, so that as many states as possible would be bound by the obligations of the Charter. The states which may be proposed for membership in London fall into three classes.

(a) States neutral in the war.

The Canadian delegation should support the admission of the following neutral states, if they desire their admission:

Sweden, Switzerland, Ireland, Iceland and Portugal. The admission of Spain will not become an issue so long as the present regime is in being, since it is known that the permanent members of the Security Council will oppose it. The remaining neutral state is Afghanistan which was a member of the League of Nations; the Canadian delegation may support its admission if this is recommended by the Security Council.

(b) Ex-enemy States.

There is no question of the admission at present of either Germany or Japan. Support for the early admission of Italy, however, was forecast in the Potsdam Declaration provided that a peace treaty with Italy had been concluded. As no peace treaties have yet been negotiated with any enemy states, it is unlikely that the question of their admission will arise at the first part of the Assembly's session. If it should arise, the Canadian delegation should take the position that it favours the admission to the Organization as soon as conditions permit of Italy, Austria, Hungary, Finland and Siam, and it should not oppose the admission of Rumania and Bulgaria if this is supported by the United States and the United Kingdom.

(c) Admission of Additional Soviet Republics.

While nothing is known of Soviet intentions there may be pressure from the Soviet Government for the admission of further republics in addition to the Ukraine and Byelo-Russia. It seems likely that in the first instance they would seek the admission of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. If such a demand is made and pressed to the point at which the Canadian delegation must adopt a definite position, instructions should be sought from Ottawa. The admission of further Soviet republics is to be discouraged until evidence is forthcoming of their capacity to act in fact as distinct international entities.

4. COMMISSION ON ATOMIC QUESTIONS.

The Canadian Government is committed to the establishment of a United Nations Commission with the general terms of reference set forth in the Washington Declaration of November 15th. The position to be adopted by the Canadian delegation is that the Commission should be appointed by the Assembly, that its membership should be closely related to that of the Security Council provided that Canadian membership is assured, and that since its recommendations would at times require action by the Security Council, the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and possibly other bodies, its reports should be referred to the appropriate organs for consideration. The delegation will be instructed as to whether it can join in sponsoring the recommendation agreed in Moscow by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union.

The delegation should watch all developments in this field with great care and should report fully to Ottawa.

5. REFUGEES.

The Preparatory Commission, overruling objections by the Soviet Government, has recommended the inclusion of an item relating to refugees in the agenda of the Assembly. The subject is also certain to arise early in the sessions of the Economic and Social Council. Consideration of it has both constitutional and political and humanitarian aspects.

(a) Constitutional aspects.

The United Kingdom delegation will press for the merging in the United Nations Organization of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees established at the Evian Conference of 1938 and will probably propose the establishment of a commission on refugees responsible to the Economic and Social Council. Since the Intergovernmental Committee was created as a separate entity mainly because the United States did not belong to the League of Nations, it is desirable that international official action with respect to refugees should now be brought under the umbrella of the United Nations. The Canadian delegation may support any reasonable proposal with this end in view.

(b) Political and Humanitarian Aspects.

The continuing problem of refugees relates to persons who are unable or unwilling to return to their homelands. (There is, however, a Jewish aspect which does not fit completely within this formula). The chief difficulties at the Assembly are likely to concern the treatment of refugees from Soviet territory, especially the Soviet and former Polish Ukraine and Baltic Republics. The Soviet delegation may be expected to press for the return of all such persons and to claim that a large number of those who are still "displaced persons" actively aided the Axis powers during the war. A similar problem arises with respect to a substantial number of Poles who are unwilling to return to Poland because of their distrust of the present Polish regime. In addition, questions may arise concerning the expulsion of persons of German stock from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and other eastern European countries.

The Canadian delegation should join in resisting any attempt to secure recognition, as a general principle, that displaced persons should be compelled to return to their homelands against their will. It is unlikely that during the early discussions by the United Nations Organizations of the problems of refugees, matters will be brought to a point at which overseas countries will be asked to state whether they will accept refugees for permanent settlement. In general the problems of refugees can only be solved by the development of stable political and economic conditions throughout the world, which in turn will allow overseas countries to plan their immigration policies.

In the case of Jewish refugees, the recently appointed Anglo-American Commission of Enquiry has not yet begun its task and the delegation should adopt the position that the report of this commission ought to be available before the question is considered by the United Nations Organization.

6. TRUSTEESHIP.

Canada, lacking colonial territories and being remote geographically from all territories which might be placed under trusteeship, has no direct interest to protect in connection with the establishment and operation of the trusteeship system provided for in the Charter.

At this part of the Assembly's session discussion is likely to center around the methods of bringing the trusteeship system into existence. The Soviet Government has resisted the wish of a substantial majority of the Preparatory Commission to recommend the establishment of a temporary Trusteeship Council to direct the inauguration of the trusteeship system. The Trusteeship Council provided for in the Charter cannot be elected until some territories have been placed in trust, and the provisions of the Charter are deficient in that they prescribe no methods for bringing the trusteeship system into operation.

The Canadian delegation should in general hold a watching brief in the committee of the Assembly dealing with trusteeship. It should concern itself with attempting to reconcile differences in accordance with the general principles laid down in the Charter with respect to the control of dependent peoples and in a manner satisfactory to the United States and United Kingdom.

7. QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

The Assembly will have before it a number of recommendations relating to the transfer of activities, assets, and functions under international instruments, of the League of Nations. It is intended that the arrangements approved by the United Nations Assembly should be considered at a final meeting of the League Assembly to be held after the first part of the session of the United Nations Assembly has ended. There are a great number of technical questions involved in the winding up of the League of Nations, and it is not possible to indicate more than the general line which the Canadian delegation should pursue.

(a) General Policy

Canada has been a member of the League of Nations in good standing from its inauguration to the present time. The general aim should be to provide for the winding up of the League in an orderly and dignified manner. Much of the practical experience on which the United Nations must build is derived from the League, and the United Nations should be regarded in the light of an heir and successor of the League rather than a new experiment in international collaboration. The United Nations should, therefore, be encouraged to take over as much as possible of the assets and functions of the League and as little as possible should be left for separate liquidation.

(b) Transfer of Technical Functions.

The Preparatory Commission has recommended that the United Nations should continue certain technical functions which have been carried on throughout the war by the League Secretariat. These include the serial publications and related activities concerned with international finance, economics and transportation, the service relating to epidemics, and the international regulation of the drug traffic. This transfer should be strongly supported by the Canadian delegation so as to avoid a break in continuity.

In connection with narcotic problems, provision should be made for the United Nations to replace the League of Nations in the functions performed by the League under various treaties and conventions, especially those relating to the Permanent Opium Board and the Drug Supervisory Body. A new body will be needed to take the place of the Opium Advisory Committee. It is desirable that this body should be a commission under the Economic and Social Council composed wholly or in the main of the national officials concerned with the support [sic] of the traffic in drugs. The functions of drug control are technical and administrative and they should be kept separate from other matters relating to health and social welfare.

It is desirable that at least some of the personnel of the League Secretariat concerned with these activities should be temporarily transferred to the United Nations Secretariat. This should, however, be done on a selective basis and in a manner which will permit the dropping of individuals who are not acceptable to the Secretary-General. It is particularly important that the section of the Secretariat dealing with narcotic problems should be carefully chosen and should include persons who have the confidence of the national narcotic administrations of the nations which have taken a leading part in establishing international regulations.

(c) International Labour Organization

The I.L.O. is taking steps to amend its constitution so as to provide for its separation from the League of Nations and to permit its attachment as a specialized agency to the United Nations. It is not possible at this stage to give instructions on the methods to be supported for financing the I.L.O. The I.L.O. buildings at Geneva are part of the material assets of the League and an agreement will have to be worked out to permit their continued use by the I.L.O. within the limits of such general arrangements as may be arrived at for the disposition of the material assets of the League.

8. FINANCING OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

In considering the methods to be adopted to finance the United Nations Organization, the Canadian delegation should pay particular attention to the methods whereby the scale of contributions is determined and to the machinery for budgetary control of expenditures. In general the proposals made by the Preparatory Commission appear to be satisfactory.

(a) Scale of Contributions.

This will not be settled in the first part of the session, since the plan is to appoint a small expert committee to prepare recommendations to be considered at the second part. An attempt may be made to limit the size of the contributions of the largest states on the ground that if one state were to bear more than one-quarter or one-third of the cost its influence would be likely to be too great. This attempt should on the whole be resisted unless the proportion which can be borne by a single state is set fairly high—perhaps at 40%. Otherwise medium states tend to carry more than their fair share of the cost, since the smallest states are likely to come off lightly in any event. In particular, with the general shortage of U.S. dollars and with the headquarters in the United States, it is desirable that the United States should bear their proportionate share.

In practice it is not possible to develop exact criteria for allocating expenses among member states. The first criterion must be capacity to pay, but this should not be fixed for the future in the light of the present extreme disorder in the world's economy.

(b) Interim Financing.

Provision will have to be made at once for interim funds to be made available to the Organization before the scale of contributions and budget are adopted. The proposal is that funds should be advanced by members to provide working capital until regular contributions are received, and that the scale of the Food and Agriculture Organization should be applied to fix the relative size of these advances. They would be in the nature of loans, and the amounts provided would be adjusted later on in accordance with the United Nations scale when adopted. It is desirable that at its birth the Organization should not suffer from want of current funds and the delegation may agree to a scheme on these lines.

9. RELATIONSHIP WITH SPECIALIZED AGENCIES.

Detailed instructions on this subject are not required especially since agreements with specialized agencies must under the Charter be negotiated by the Economic and Social Council. There are, however, some matters of general principle which are likely to arise at the Assembly.

In the first place the United Kingdom Government has been pressing for the close association with the United Nations of the I.L.O., F.A.O., and the new intergovernmental technical organizations now in course of establishment. It is in general desirable from many points of view that the relationship between the United Nations and these bodies should be clearly defined in order to avoid overlapping of activities, competition for personnel, unequal scales of remuneration, and rivalry in particular fields of activity. The pattern of association, however, cannot be uniform, although certain standard clauses may be included in all agreements with specialized agencies.

With regard to the financing of the specialized agencies, the arguments in favour of a single budget for the major international organizations are strong. Such a budget would have separate chapters for each specialized agency as well as for the Secretariat, the Court of International Justice and so on. The adoption of a central budget, however, raises the question of the degree of authority of the Assembly over the finances of the specialized agencies. The general line to be taken is that the "financial autonomy" of specialized agencies is not a real issue, since all of them are, like the United Nations itself, established by intergovernmental agreements, and it is primarily the responsibility of national governments to see that their delegations are instructed to approve fair financial provisions for all the international organizations to which they belong. This does not mean, however, that the delegation should press for complete centralization in the United Nations budget of the finances of all the specialized agencies. Some of them, indeed, will be self-financing through charges levied on their own operations; this group would include the International Monetary Fund and the International Development Bank. For others it may be appropriate, because of the nature of their operations, that contributions should be assessed on a special scale, thus necessitating a separate budget.

10. SECRETARIAT

At the San Francisco Conference and the Executive Committee and Preparatory Commission the Canadian delegations have taken a considerable part in developing the provisions of the Charter and the recommendations to come before the Assembly which deal with the character and organization of the Secretariat. The lines of policy are already well laid down and it is not necessary to issue further instructions. The general aim is to secure the establishment of a competent international Civil Service recruited on a wide geographical basis, with its officials freed entirely from control by their own governments and assured of reasonable tenure of employment and remuneration.

The question of salary scales should be watched with care. With the headquarters of the Organization in the United States, the basic comparison should be with the scales paid in the United States public service, allowance being made on the one hand for such exemptions from taxation as may be accorded and on the other for the increased expenditure brought about by expatriation and related considerations.

11. IMMUNITIES OF THE ORGANIZATION AND AGREEMENT WITH THE HOST STATE

To ensure adequate independence a satisfactory agreement must be concluded with the state in whose territories the headquarters are situated. This reference is inserted in these instructions to draw attention to the importance of the matter. A draft agreement has been prepared by the Preparatory Commission and its contents will require full consideration by legal experts. The problems affecting the immunities to be granted to the Organization itself, to the members of its staff, and to representatives of governments engaged on its business also require thorough examination. In general the aim should be to ensure that the immunities and privileges necessary for efficient operation are accorded, and no more than this. The growing complexity of international organization and also the increasing size of national diplomatic missions make it necessary to watch with care all claims for special privileges and immunities.

12. ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

It is the intention to bring before the Assembly a resolution favouring the holding of an international conference to consider the establishment of an International Trade Organization, in accordance with the proposals published by the United States Government earlier this month. The Canadian delegation should support the passage of this resolution.

13. ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTERNATIONAL HEALTH ORGANIZATION

Similarly a resolution will be introduced sponsoring an international conference to consider the creation of an International Health Organization. This resolution also should be supported by the Canadian delegation.

*****

These instructions deal only with questions certain or likely to come before the General Assembly. It is the intention that the Security Council should meet as soon as it has been elected. Indeed, the Secretary-General cannot be chosen until the Security Council has agreed upon a nominee for the post. If Canada is elected to the Security Council, therefore, Canadian representation on it will be essential during the sitting of the Assembly. The Minister of Justice should initially act as the Canadian representative with the Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs as his alternate. Since the election of Canada is not certain, instructions have not been prepared in advance for the guidance of the Canadian representative. In the event that Canada is elected, on matters requiring instructions from Ottawa advice should be sought by telegram.

Much the same considerations apply to the Economic and Social Council. This body may meet in the latter part of the Assembly's session and is likely thereafter to hold regular meetings every quarter. If Canada is elected, the delegation should use its discretion in dealing with matters coming before the initial sittings of the Council and should, when necessary, seek instructions from Ottawa.

Canadian membership on the proposed Commission on atomic questions appears to be reasonably well assured, but it is uncertain when this Commission will begin to deal with its terms of reference. Instructions, therefore, cannot be issued at present.

There are likely to be other committees and commissions which will continue to sit after the first part of the session of the Assembly. On some of these it will probably be desirable that Canada should be represented.

To ensure adequate representations on the Councils and other special bodies it may prove necessary to appoint additional advisers, for example, the work of the Atomic Commission may be such as to require the assistance of scientific and military experts. The delegation may thus find it necessary to recommend the provision of additional advisers.

1. The elections to the Councils may take place on Friday or Saturday. Our election to the Security Council seems likely. Intense lobbying for the Economic and Social Council is going on and the outcome is uncertain. There will be a meeting tomorrow afternoon with Bevin to discuss elections, Secretary-General, and related questions.

2. There seems to be no leading candidate for Secretary-General and I think it may be some time before the Security Council can agree on a nomination.

3. Controversy is expected over the Atomic Commission. Fraser may take lead in urging responsibility to the Assembly, but the prospects are that the resolution will be approved without important changes. Has your note agreeing to sponsor resolution been given to the press? There is no reason why it should not be published and it might be as well to have it on the public record.

4. Australian delegation is headed by Hodgson and the South African by Heaton Nicholls.

5. The last contingent from Canada arrived today and we are beginning delegation meetings tomorrow morning. Matters have gone smoothly inside the delegation. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Wrong from Robertson, Begins: Your ASDEL No. 13.

Two points occur to us for possible inclusion in Mr. St. Laurent's speech in the Plenary Session. We realize that you will have to decide how much emphasis to give them in atmosphere in which the Assembly is meeting.

1. If the United Kingdom delegation follows up the Foreign Secretary's suggestion of the establishment of some form of world Government as an ultimate goal for the United Nations Organization you might give general support to the United Kingdom position within the limits of the Prime Minister's statement made in the House of Commons on December 17th, 1945, in relation to the Washington declaration on atomic energy of November 15th.

2. You will recall that in this speech the Prime Minister also said that we should, by every means in our power, support and strengthen every agency of international cooperation and understanding which can help make the world community a reality. The opportunity for agreement and effective cooperation in the economic field offers the United Nations immediate scope for effective action. Especially in view of our election to the Economic and Social Council it would be appropriate for the Canadian delegation to emphasize the need for the United Nations Organization to give a lead in the task of world reconstruction. It is not known here whether the United States' proposal for an international conference on trade and employment, under United Nations auspices, has yet been placed on the Assembly agenda. If so it should be given warm support. If proposal is not yet formally put forward Mr. St. Laurent could appropriately welcome the initiative the United States has announced that it intends to take and promise our support for every effort to try to get international trade moving again in full volume and stability. Ends.

I attach a copy of a memorandum giving my general impressions on the recent Assembly meeting. Ritchie is preparing despatches to the heads of missions abroad forwarding this document and emphasizing that it is a personal venture of my own and not an expression of the opinion of the delegation, the Department, or the Canadian Government. Reid takes a more cheerful view than I do of the proceedings in the Security Council. The memorandum incorporates some paragraphs on the manifestations of Soviet policy which were suggested by Ritchie.

I would propose to give this some Departmental circulation next week and to send it to the Ministers who were on the delegation and to two or three others such as Mr. Claxton. I shall also send copies, unless you disagree, to Clark, Towers, Rasminsky and two or three others who are interested.

Ottawa, February 27, 1946

IMPRESSIONS OF THE FIRST GENERAL ASSEMBLY
OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. This memorandum contains some personal impressions of the meetings of the General Assembly and the Security Council which have just ended in London. It is not a record of the meetings but an attempt to describe the atmosphere which prevailed and the political factors which gave the proceedings the form that they took.

2. The main tasks set in advance for this session of the Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council were accomplished without serious friction and in a constructive manner. These tasks concerned the organization of the United Nations so as to bring all its organs into effective operation as soon as possible. For the most part the work to be done had been thoroughly prepared by the Executive Committee and the Preparatory Commission. In the main the recommendations of the Preparatory Commission were approved, and when changes were made after discussion in Assembly committees they were generally improvements on the proposals of the Preparatory Commission. Satisfactory provision has therefore now been made for the appointment and direction of the Secretariat, the initial financing of the United Nations, the legal status which it should enjoy and a large number of other matters. The Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the International Court of Justice have been established by the election of their members, and the Secretary-General has been installed in office. A decision has been taken on both the temporary and the permanent headquarters. While there remain further questions relating to organization still to be dealt with, which could not be settled at the initial stage, the great bulk of this work has been accomplished.

3. The constructive side of the work of the Assembly and the Councils was obscured by the protracted public battles which were fought over political issues regarded as having propaganda value. The proceedings of the Economic and Social Council received very little attention in the press, although under the able chairmanship of Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar it got away to a good start. Controversies always monopolize public attention at international gatherings. In London, therefore, the questions on which public attention was fixed were principally the proceedings in the Security Council on Iran, Greece, Indonesia and the Levant, and the proceedings in the Assembly and its committees concerning refugees, the World Federation of Trade Unions, trusteeship and the headquarters, together with the elections to the Councils and the Court.

4. The two outstanding personalities were Mr. Bevin, for his handling of the British case in the Security Council in particular, and M. Spaak for his effective chairmanship of the Assembly. The Soviet delegations, however, were the dominant influence, exerted in the main by the mouths of Mr. Vyshinsky in the Security Council and of Mr. Gromyko and Mr. Manuilsky, chief of the Ukrainian delegation, in the Assembly. Mr. Fraser of New Zealand played a very vigorous part throughout the conference, as did also Mr. Noel-Baker of the United Kingdom who spoke for his Government on many matters in the Assembly and its committees and in the Economic and Social Council.

5. The tactics of the Soviet delegations were to use the proceedings to the uttermost for purposes of propaganda, in an effort to depict themselves as the defenders of dependent peoples, small countries, and organized labour. They used every artifice to debate these issues and to force them to a vote. They are likely to continue these tactics at future meetings. They did not appear to mind being defeated, but they wished to make all delegations go on record on the proposals to which they attached importance. Their arguments often were addressed not so much to the delegates in front of them as to the outside world. They doubtless intend to make use, through their own channels of propaganda, of the position taken by various delegations. Another motive for their persistent tactics probably was that they had rigid instructions from Moscow and desired to satisfy their government that they had exhausted every device to execute them.

6. It is difficult to assess the degree of success which the Soviet delegation obtained by these tactics. So far as their effect in the meetings themselves is concerned, the Russian case was often weakened by faults of presentation which seemed to arise from their lack of understanding of western habits of thought. For example, Mr. Vyshinsky in his speeches in the Security Council both bored and bewildered his hearers by interminable quotations from newspaper clippings (sometimes from obscure journals) and from old speeches of obscure members of the British House of Commons. He appeared to consider these as constituting serious evidence for the case which he was arguing. Another characteristic was the frequent unscrupulousness of the manoeuvres of Soviet representatives. For example, Mr. Manuilsky, the astute Ukrainian chairman of the Political Committee, showed himself adept at manipulating procedure to give every possible advantage to his friends. Although other chairmen were not above reproach in this respect, there was an effrontery about Mr. Manuilsky's proceedings which irritated many of the delegates.

7. Thus one was left with the impression that the Soviet Government regarded this opening session chiefly as an opportunity for propaganda. The result was to strain severely the effective operation of the Charter at its first trial, and to make it apparent that talk of turning the United Nations into an agency of international government, by the delegation to it of a portion of the sovereignty of the members, is in present conditions wholly unrealistic.

8. An apparent purpose of the Soviet delegation, especially in the Security Council, was to blacken the reputation of the United Kingdom Government. Although at times they received more provocation from representatives of the United States, they rarely replied directly. Even in the protracted discussions on the World Federation of Trade Unions (which consumed more time than any other matter before the Assembly) Senator Connally, who spoke for the United States in the most vigorous fashion, was handled far more tenderly by the Soviet representatives than Mr. Noel-Baker, who spoke moderately and reasonably for the United Kingdom.

9. The causes for Soviet hostility to the United Kingdom are no doubt complex but one senses behind the particular motives the pressure of a vigorous and expanding power in contact at many vital points with the over-extended British Empire. It seems evident that the Soviet Government have abandoned any hope or desire of arriving at a modus vivendi with the United Kingdom Government by which each would keep their hands off the spheres of influence of the other. It may be that Iran was considered a test case, and that the support which Mr. Bevin gave to the Iranian Government was a turning point in Anglo-Soviet relations. It is not too much to say that for all practical purposes the Anglo-Soviet alliance is at the moment in abeyance.

Soviet opposition to the United Kingdom also extends to those western European governments which are on particularly close terms with the United Kingdom Government.

10. In the long drawn-out duel between Mr. Bevin and Mr. Vyshinsky in the Security Council, each side registered both successes and defeats. The Soviet delegation was successful in fighting most of the battles on grounds of their own choosing. After the end of the hearings regarding Iran, the Soviet delegation was always on the offensive, and not the least of their achievements was that they succeeded in pushing the Iranian question completely into the background and focusing attention on vulnerable points in the British position in various parts of the world. Curiously enough, the Soviet attack on the United Kingdom appeared least successful in the case of Greece, where in many ways they had a relatively strong case. Mr. Bevin's handling of the discussions on Iran and Greece was masterly. He gained and held the respect of most of the members of the Security Council, as well as the wider audience outside it, by his staunch defence of British motives and action. On the other hand, he was at his weakest in dealing with the Indonesian question.

11. The debates on Indonesia and on Syria and Lebanon in the Security Council and the discussions in the Trusteeship Committee seem to indicate that the Soviet Government have determined to take full advantage of the embarrassments in which the colonial powers find themselves involved in the Middle and Far East. The overstretched resources of the British and the weakness of the newly liberated French, Dutch and Belgian Governments make them peculiarly susceptible to pressures in the colonial sphere. In the background is the very real fear of the British, Western European, South African and Australian Governments of a tidal wave of racial and revolutionary anarchy which would plunge wide areas of Asia and Africa into confusion and disaster. This nervousness was quite apparent in all the discussions of colonial questions. It was also apparent that, from the Soviet point of view, there may be advantages to be derived from fishing in these troubled waters, the more so because it seems likely that colonial questions may be those on which there is the best chance of separating the British from the Americans.

12. One result of the proceedings was to emphasize and encourage the existence of blocs of states for voting purposes. The most consistent bloc was the Soviet group made up of the delegations of the Soviet Union, the Ukraine, Byelo-Russia, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Poland. The first three delegations always voted together except when the signals got crossed, and on nearly every issue Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia voted with them, although the Czechs showed at times slightly more independence than the Yugoslavs. The Poles on the whole were faithful supporters, but on one notable occasion in the Security Council the Polish representative declared, in opposition to the Soviet representative, that the presence of British troops in Greece did not in his view constitute a threat to peace and security. The Poles also sometimes used an independent line of argument even when they ended on the same side in the vote.

13. The Arab bloc was fairly consistent in sticking together on all issues. It was made up of the five delegations of Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Iraq and Saudi-Arabia. It was generally ready, under Egyptian leadership, to strike intricate bargains in order to attain its own ends. It was joined at times by Iran, which also operated on the fringe of the Soviet group.

14. The largest bloc was the Latin American group, but it broke up on many occasions. It was able to form a united front on electoral questions in order to ensure the representation of Latin America, and it was open knowledge that electoral bargains were struck between it and the Arab group. These two groups together, plus one other delegation, could command a majority. The Latin American bloc succeeded in the election of two members of the Security Council out of six, of four members of the Economic and Social Council out of eighteen, and of four judges of the International Court out of fifteen; they very nearly succeeded, indeed, in electing five judges. On political issues, however, the solidity of the Latin American group tended to disappear, and the bloc was often split in an unpredictable manner.

15. There was a tendency, which at present seems to be irresistible, to regard the six states-members from the British Commonwealth as another bloc of states, although on nearly all issues on which there was a close division of opinion the votes of the Commonwealth representatives were split. In the negotiations which preceded the elections of members of the Councils and of the Court the Commonwealth delegations, in contrast to the members of the Latin American, Soviet and Arab blocs, were unable to reach complete agreement on the candidates from their own number whom they would support. Nevertheless, we must realize that all the other members of the United Nations, however mistakenly, seem still to think of the Commonwealth as a bloc of states; and in the allocation of seats they consider that the Commonwealth group is represented properly by one elective member of the Security Council, three or at most four members of the Economic and Social Council (including the United Kingdom), and two or at most three judges of the Permanent Court. In fact the United Kingdom and Canadian candidates were the only ones from the Commonwealth to secure election to the Court, mainly because votes were divided between the Indian and Australian candidates with the result that both failed of election.

16. The Latin American, Soviet and Arab groups, with the addition in other peoples' minds at least of the Commonwealth group, were the clearly defined blocs of states possessing considerable voting strength. At future sessions, when the lessons of the London meeting have been digested, it is likely that the technique of electoral bargaining between the blocs will be more highly developed. The Latin American, Soviet and Arab groups all succeeded both in agreeing within themselves on their own candidates and in securing the support of one or more of the other groups by striking electoral bargains. In consequence, on present prospects, it is unlikely that Canada can expect election to the Security Council except as the successor to Australia at the election which will take place in September 1947, although there is something to be said for Canada's standing for election again next September, when three new members will be chosen to replace Mexico, Egypt, and The Netherlands. Furthermore Canada will be expected not to stand for re-election to the Economic and Social Council in September, 1948, and it is open to question whether Mr. Read can secure re-election to the International Court of Justice when the places of those with three-year terms come to be filled, also in September, 1948. In putting forward candidates within the blocs themselves recognition to some extent was accorded to the functional idea of representation, but the idea of rotation and of sharing the honours and the feeling that states (other than the Big Five) should not sit at the same time on both the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council were strongly evident.

17. The United States, France and China cannot be said to have blocs of states attached to them for voting purposes. The United States, however, can always count on a wide measure of support in Latin America, the British Commonwealth and Western Europe at any rate, and can usually rely as well on securing the votes of the Philippine and Liberian delegations. France in time might be regarded as the leader of the Western European group, but at present the four smaller countries of Western Europe which belong to the United Nations (The Netherlands, Belgium, Norway and Denmark) often look to the United Kingdom rather than to France for leadership whenever there is a difference of opinion between the British and the French. China sought to maintain her prestige as one of the five permanent members of the Security Council by the performance of balancing feats, with the result that on almost every occasion on which the Chinese representatives took part in discussions their purpose was to obscure real differences of opinion. In particular, the Chinese delegation, and also the French delegation, were obviously pained when they had to cast votes on issues on which the Soviet Union on the one hand and the United States and United Kingdom on the other hand took different sides. These two delegations, of all those of any influence at the conference, were the most frequent abstainers from voting.

18. One effect of the establishment of the United Nations seems to be to encourage the creation of blocs. These represent in some cases definite spheres of influence, notably the Soviet group, and in other cases little more than electoral arrangements. In large measure this is inevitable in the Assembly, and as the membership increases in size the tendency will grow stronger. This is a consequence of the equal voting power in the Assembly and its committees of all states large and small. When the Liberian vote can cancel out that of the Soviet Union, the Soviet delegation is almost bound to seek to secure its proper weight by attaching to itself as many other delegations as it can. This sort of development was not unforeseen during the discussions leading up to the signature of the Charter. It will be very apparent when the admission of new members becomes a live issue, which will probably be in September. For instance, the Soviet Government is likely to agree to the admission of a neutral state such as Switzerland, Sweden, Ireland and Portugal only if agreement is given to the simultaneous admission of an ex-enemy state of Eastern Europe such as Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. They already made an effort in London to strengthen their own group by securing the immediate admission of Albania.

19. To turn to the operations of the Security Council, perhaps the most vivid impression left on the mind of one who was present at most of its meetings as an observer is that it is unrealistic to talk of the Security Council as though it possessed in fact, in the language of Article 24 of the Charter, "primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security." The Security Council, indeed, has so far shown itself impotent to take positive action to settle disputes peacefully under Chapter VI of the Charter and, therefore, still more to enforce its decisions under Chapter VII. Unexpected responsibilities were thrown upon it by the presentation to it of the appeals from Iran and Syria and Lebanon, and by the Soviet thrusts directed against the United Kingdom's actions in Greece and Indonesia. The discussions concerning Iran and the situation in the Levant may have some beneficial effect; at least in these cases the parties who felt themselves to be aggrieved themselves brought the issues before the Council. The discussions concerning Greece and Indonesia were pure propaganda on the part of the Soviet Government against the United Kingdom, The Netherlands and the present Greek Government. From the beginning there was no expectation that the Council would or should take any action. Nevertheless, it became clear in the course of these proceedings that the Soviet Government would employ its veto power even to prevent the adoption by the Council of a form of words indicating that the Soviet charges were not fully justified. As every dispute of importance directly or indirectly involves one of the great powers, it is not too much to say that the present role of the Security Council is to be an additional means of publicly exposing differences between the great powers.

20. The extreme ineptitude of the first chairman of the Security Council helped to bring about this result. Firm guidance from the chair of the quality which M. Spaak gave to the Assembly could readily have set matters on a better course at the early meetings. For this reason alone one heard numerous expressions of regret that Canada had failed of election in place of Australia; if Canada had been chosen the inaugural sessions of the Council would have taken place under the capable chairmanship of the Brazilian delegate, Mr. de Freitas Valle.

21. In conclusion, it can be said that in dealing with matters without substantial political or propaganda importance the meetings in London showed that the machinery of the United Nations under the Charter could be operated with reasonable efficiency and despatch. When such matters came before the Assembly a majority opinion could be secured which, in spite of bloc pressures, represented a sensible decision hammered out by the normal democratic process of debate. When political issues came before the Security Council no such decisions could be reached, even though the discussion had shown that a substantial majority of the members were in favour of an agreed outcome. It would be unwise in present circumstances to attach serious importance to the Security Council as a guardian of world peace, or to consider the obligation under Article 43 to make special military agreements with the Security Council as much more than a formal duty. (I understand that the Military Staff Committee, which met in private, operated in a more constructive atmosphere and made good progress at its initial sessions; its recommendations, however, will have to be accepted by the Security Council). What took place in London has shown that the General Assembly and in particular the Security Council can be and are being used as instruments in the war of nerves, especially by the Soviet Government. It is debatable whether the advantages of open discussion of issues dividing the Great Powers outweigh the disadvantages caused by the public fixing of positions on delicate questions, with the consequence that the area of negotiation is reduced. The Security Council was not meant to be an agency for the prosecution of psychological warfare or an arena for gladiatorial contests between national champions. Without a great alteration, therefore, in the attitude towards each other of the great powers—and it should be emphasized that this alteration is required not only on the part of the Soviet Government—the first meetings of the Security Council and the Assembly leave open the question whether the establishment of the United Nations has in fact furthered its primary purpose—the maintenance of international peace and security.

Dear Norman [Robertson],

I wish to acknowledge with thanks your Despatch No. 268 of March 7th,† enclosing the most interesting and informative review of the recent UNO Assembly by Hume.<sup>1</sup> I was hoping to have the opportunity to comment on this before I leave for Atlantic City, but that is going to be quite impossible. The last week or so has been really too busy here; just like all of your weeks in Ottawa. Hume's memorandum certainly arouses thought, and not too optimistic thought, about the future of UNO. I agree with the conclusions of his last paragraph.

I wonder whether we should not begin now seriously to attempt to alter the Charter. It is quite clear that, while UNO cannot survive without a friendly and co-operative attitude on the part of the Great Powers to the Organization and to each other, nevertheless that does not alter the fact that the Charter itself has already been shown to require changes. Even the U.S.A. and the U.K. realize this, but I should think it would be much easier for them if the changes were pressed in the first instance by some of the smaller powers.

I would like to have a talk with you about this and other related things next time I am in Ottawa. I hope that will be soon.

Yours sincerely,

[Ottawa,] August 31, 1946

I had a talk with Mr. St. Laurent yesterday evening about the general line which should be taken at the Assembly. He expressed himself as being opposed to the Canadian delegation taking an active part in the discussion of issues which were unlikely to result in any decisions of importance. He felt that we should be actively and competently represented when budgetary and administrative matters were up but that we ought to leave it to others to wrangle over matters which were essentially in political dispute. He is also opposed to our standing for the Security Council as he thinks that we could do nothing to make it less impotent than it is now.

I think your draft resolution on Chapter VI of the Charter is one of the matters covered by the view he expressed and we, therefore, should not discuss it in advance. I return herewith your letter† to Ignatieff. I am confident that if an offer were made to have the Assembly go on record in this sense it would lead to a prolonged wrangle which would involve not only the substance of the resolution but also the competence of the Assembly.

Mr. St. Laurent's attitude is that we should keep quiet except when questions requiring practical decisions arise. I think that he would be quite ready to make a statement at the Assembly to this general effect. He is, however, very much concerned over the financial aspects arising in this connection and feels we should be thoroughly ready and prepared to be active on scales of contribution, budgetary control, etc.

DESPATCH 1652

Ottawa, September 30, 1946

Sir,

I enclose copies of a note dated September 24, 1946, to the Secretary General of the United Nations requesting that the following item be included in the agenda of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly: "Measures to economize the time of the General Assembly." The note contains an explanation of this proposal.

2. We are seriously concerned over the large number of international conferences which are now being held. The large number of these conferences and their excessive duration make it difficult for states to be adequately represented at each conference. We have found it difficult to make specific suggestions on how to reduce the number of conferences. We feel, however, that it would be a considerable step forward if measures could be taken to reduce their excessive duration.

3. We hope that the proposals which we have made in this note to the Secretary General will be favourably considered by the General Assembly, and that the General Assembly will agree to our proposal that it elect an ad hoc committee to make recommendations to it on specific measures which it might adopt to economize its time.<sup>1</sup>

4. I should be grateful if you would give copies of the enclosed note to the Government to which you are accredited and request the Government to give sympathetic consideration to our proposals.

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary General of the United Nations

Ottawa, September 24, 1946

Sir,

I have the honour to request that the following item be included in the Agenda of the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly:

“Measures to economize the time of the General Assembly”.

The large number of international conferences which are being held makes it difficult for states to provide adequate representation at each conference. This difficulty is increased if the conferences last for a long time. Moreover, unduly protracted international conferences diminish the prestige of the international organizations which are responsible for calling them.

During the present period, when new international organizations are being formed, it is difficult to reduce the number of conferences which must be held. It is therefore all the more important to ensure that the various conferences accomplish their tasks as expeditiously as possible. The General Assembly of the United Nations should set an example to all other conferences by the efficient and expeditious conduct of its business.

It is of paramount importance that the time of representatives in the General Assembly be economized to the greatest possible extent. The General Assembly can be successful in carrying out its important tasks only if delegations include Ministers responsible for the formulating and carrying out of policy. The chances of these Ministers being able to be present during the whole period of a session of the General Assembly will be greater if the sessions are not unduly prolonged.

The Canadian delegation will therefore propose under this item of the agenda that the General Assembly, as early as possible in its proceedings, elect an ad hoc committee of about fifteen states to consider and make recommendations to the General Assembly on measures it might adopt to economize its time.

6. It is the hope of the Canadian Government that all the members of the General Assembly will be able, by the time this committee is set up, to make specific suggestions to the committee. The following six specific suggestions have occurred to the Canadian Government:

(a) Each speaker in the opening debate in plenary session on the Secretary General's Report might be limited to ten minutes with the right to have his remarks extended in the verbatim record.

(b) A report of a main committee to the General Assembly should not be debated unless one-third of the members of the committee request a debate.

(c) The main committees should, at their first or second meetings, establish a number of sub-committees of ten to fifteen members to study various questions referred to them by the committee and to report back to it. In order that these sub-committees may meet simultaneously, each sub-committee should have its own chairman.

(d) The General Committee, in discussing matters related to the agenda of the General Assembly, should not debate the substance of a question but should confine itself to discussing whether or not it should recommend that an item be included in the agenda of the General Assembly.

(e) The General Committee should be required to submit its report to the General Assembly on the inclusion of an item in the agenda within, say, forty-eight hours of receiving a request that the item be included in the agenda. (The General Committee's report, being a recommendation, is debatable by the General Assembly but agreement might be reached that the debate be limited to two hours at most).

(f) In order to lessen the danger that committees waste their time on procedural debates, a number of improvements in the rules of procedure on the conduct of business might be made. Thus it might be desirable to insert a new rule on the order in which resolutions, as distinct from amendments, should be put to the vote. Changes in the existing rules of procedure might be required to implement some of the suggestions made above. It might also be useful if the Secretariat prepared for the guidance of chairmen of committees and sub-committees a commentary on the rules of procedure governing the conduct of business.

Accept, etc.

2. Since the Canadian Government has suggested that speeches in the opening debate of the Assembly should be limited to ten minutes, we have tried to limit Mr. St. Laurent's speech to ten minutes.

3. The introduction to the commentary is divided into three parts. The first two parts are a revision of the paper you have already seen on general considerations.<sup>1</sup> I have taken your suggestions into account in preparing this draft. The third part of the introduction is a discussion of tactics in the committees of the Assembly.<sup>2</sup>

PART THREE

TACTICS IN COMMITTEES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

25. Soviet delegations will sometimes deliberately snarl a committee in a confused procedural debate. Some Latin American delegations will do it because they seem to enjoy procedural debates. If a committee gets involved in a protracted procedural debate relating to a discussion of a question of substance, the Canadian representative can do a service to the committee and shorten the duration of the Assembly by rising to discuss the question of procedure and then launching into a discussion of the question of substance. If the intervention is well-timed and well-delivered, it may put an end to the procedural debate.

26. Some chairmen of committees will try, after a debate has gone on for some time, to rush through a series of votes in a few minutes at the close of a meeting of the committee. Chairmen from the Soviet bloc are particularly fond of doing this. The practice is also followed by incompetent chairmen who allow a meeting to get completely out of hand and then over-assert their authority at the very end of the meeting. If it looks as if the vote which the chairman is pressing for would go against the side favoured by Canada, a request might be made that the vote be postponed until the next meeting. At the close of a long meeting, it is usually possible to get such a request granted. If the Canadian representative feels that it would be unwise to ask for time for further discussion, he might suggest that the vote or votes be taken without further discussion as the first order of business at the next meeting. Failing all else, a simple motion to adjourn the meeting will very often be successful, especially if the usual time for adjournment has passed.

<sup>2</sup> La troisième partie ne faisait pas partie du document que les membres de la délégation ont reçu. Cependant, elle est reproduite ici parce que M. Reid a communiqué son contenu à la délégation.

27. Soviet delegations, when they feel that a decision is going to go against them, will very often follow the tactics described in the preceding paragraph. When, at the end of a meeting, they ask for postponement of the vote in order to give time for further consideration, it is usually wise to support the request underlining, however, the precedent that is being created since Soviet delegations, when the roles are reversed, will oppose requests for adjournment on the ground that the work of the committee is being held up.

28. One favourite device of Soviet delegations is to introduce at the very end of a conference one or two proposals which they hope will get through without adequate examination. They very often succeed. Sometimes, in the last-minute rush of a conference, they will introduce at a plenary meeting a slightly modified version of a proposal which has already been rejected in committee. Therefore all proposals introduced by the Soviet bloc in the last week of the Assembly should be carefully scrutinized and no departure from the rules of procedure on adequate notice, the necessity of examination by committees, etcetera, should be permitted.

29. Some Soviet delegates make a practice of trying to goad other delegates into losing their tempers. They then reply coldly and suavely. Though a loss of temper, or even a pretended loss of temper, is almost always unwise, this does not mean that a representative should always be restrained and unemotional. There are times when he can usefully be forceful, spirited, eloquent and blunt.

30. If a proposal supported by Canada is opposed by the Soviet states, the Canadian delegation should adjust its tactics to those followed by the Soviet delegations. This means not only that the delegation should start with asking for more than it hopes to get but also that it should stubbornly refuse to recede from its initial position. Any compromise which it eventually finds necessary to put forward should be put forward grudgingly and of necessity; emphasis should be laid on the extent of the change which Canada is willing to make in an effort to secure Soviet concurrence; it should be made clear that if the Soviet delegations do not agree to the compromise Canada will insist on its unmodified original proposal being put to the vote.

31. In controversies with Soviet delegations over the choice of persons for posts, it will very often be useful for the Canadian delegation to put forward as its original nominee some highly qualified person who is unlikely to receive Soviet support. Canada can later bring forward its real candidate as a compromise.

32. If the delegation is initiating a proposal either in written form or orally it is very often wise to put the proposal, to begin with, in a more extreme form than is likely to be generally acceptable. This will make it possible for the delegation to compromise without losing its objective.

33. It very often happens that a constructive oral suggestion should be withheld until a committee has just about reached a dead end.

34. If two British Commonwealth delegations have spoken one after another in favour of a proposal, a Canadian speech in favour of the proposal is likely to be more effective if it is withheld until later in the discussion.

35. If the Canadian representative on a committee has found himself in fairly constant opposition to the Soviet representative, it is useful for him to seize any convenient opportunity which does present itself to support constructive proposals made by representatives of the Soviet bloc. If the Soviet representative on a committee is an expert on a question under discussion, the Canadian representative might help to draw him out in committee discussions and treat his opinion with great deference. (This will usually be the case on the legal committee and on drafting committees).

36. A question may emerge suddenly at a committee meeting on which the Canadian representative will want to consult the delegation before committing Canada one way or the other. One way of stalling a vote is to say, after the discussion has gone on for some time, that the issue raised is important, the discussion has been most illuminating and that, in the light of the discussion, no doubt all the members of the committee will want to think the problem over and consult with their delegations. If this does not work, it may be necessary to give a forceful brief speech, arguing that the international deliberative process is brought into contempt if representatives come to a meeting, listen to important arguments, and then vote in accordance with their original instructions without giving themselves and their governments an opportunity to reconsider the question in the light of the weighty arguments advanced in committee.

37. Occasionally a junior member of the delegation may find himself the spokesman of the delegation at a committee or at a sub-committee. Soviet delegates are not averse to trying to take advantage of a junior representative. A representative should always remember, therefore that, regardless of how junior his rank may be in the Canadian delegation, he represents the Government and people of Canada—a country with some considerable claim to have its voice heard in international meetings. Without being pompous, he should be dignified and firm and at the same time deferential to the members of the committee who are senior to him in age or rank; the proper combination of deference, dignity and firmness will gain him the respect and sympathy of the committee.

Introduction to the Commentary Prepared for the Use of the Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

October 21, 1946

It has been thought wise to circulate to the delegates this introduction to the printed commentary. It contains material of a secret character which could not appropriately be included in the confidential commentary.

The introduction is divided into two parts. The first part discusses the use which the Soviet Union has made of the Assembly as a sounding board for propaganda and the counter-propaganda measures which the nations of the Western world might adopt. The second part contains some suggestions on how the nations of the Western world can, if they are forced to, build up the United Nations as an effective instrument for promoting stability, prosperity and equality in the world outside the Soviet Union and thus defend themselves against the present Soviet expansionist drive.

The introduction does not contain detailed comments on specific questions which may come up at the Assembly. These comments are contained in the printed commentary.

This document is the property of the Canadian Government. It is only for the personal information of the members of the Canadian delegation. In view of its secret character, special care should be taken to guard against the risk of its being read by anyone who is not a member of the delegation.

PART ONE

THE USE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOR PROPAGANDA PURPOSES

1. The U.S.S.R., at Dumbarton Oaks and San Francisco, resisted the conception that the Assembly should provide a forum for the free discussion of the affairs of the world. They wanted severe limitations put on the powers of the Assembly to discuss and to recommend. They did not succeed in their efforts, and their representatives immediately adjusted themselves to the new situation. The Soviet Government had not wanted the kind of Assembly set up by the Charter, but, since this was the kind of Assembly which had been set up, it decided to use it for all it was worth as an instrument of Soviet foreign policy.

2. Although there do not exist in the Soviet Union political institutions in which there is free and unfettered discussion, Soviet leaders are experienced in using such bodies for their own purposes. Communist representatives in national legislatures, in trade unions, in popular front organizations and in democratic parties, have been accustomed to using the meetings of these bodies as platforms for propaganda; they have perfected the technique by which a small, highly organized and able minority can secure key positions—and perhaps eventual control—of an organization by willingness to attend long and frequent meetings, by wearing the opposition down by tedious procedural debates, and by never admitting defeat. The Soviet Union is now treating the General Assembly of the United Nations as it treated these other bodies in the inter-war period.

3. The Assembly contains a well-organized, able and vociferous Communist minority, which uses the procedures of the Assembly to the utmost for purposes of propaganda in an effort to depict the Soviet Union as the defender of coloured peoples, dependent peoples, small countries, organized labour and (at times) ex-enemy peoples. At the London meeting of the Assembly, the Soviet bloc used every artifice to debate these issues and to force them to a vote. They did not appear to mind being defeated, but they wished to make all delegations go on record on the proposals to which they attached importance. Their arguments often were addressed not so much to the delegates in front of them as to the outside world. Through their own channels of propaganda, they have since made use of the position taken by the various delegations in London.

4. Having met with some success in London, the Soviet delegation is likely to adopt the same tactics at the next meeting of the Assembly. It will be presented there with numerous issues which are just to its taste—Spain, Palestine, trusteeship, India's complaint against South Africa, perhaps the whole disturbed Middle Eastern situation, perhaps China, perhaps the W.F.T.U. A series of propaganda victories for the Soviet Union at the October Assembly will serve to weaken further the United Nations. It will also weaken the ability of the democratic countries to resist the present Soviet expansionist drive.

5. The Soviet Union uses propaganda as a method of defence against possible anti-Soviet conspiracies by the outside world. This is a hangover from the real fears of the period when the Western powers were intervening in Russia or trying to establish a cordon sanitaire around it. The Western world should therefore patiently make every effort to remove Soviet fears and suspicions which are important contributing factors to its propaganda tactics. Nevertheless, it is important not only to the success of the United Nations itself but to the legitimate interests of the nations of the Western World, that the nations of the Western world should at the same time be prepared to engage in what is frankly a propaganda contest with the Soviet Union. If they do not, the Soviet Union will be able to pose as the principal defender of democratic rights and freedoms and will win a series of propaganda victories through deliberate misuse of language and confusing of issues. When there is no reply, or only a routine reply, to a barrage of Soviet casuistry, the impression is created in the minds of many people that there is no good answer to Soviet claims and charges. It is important to remove this impression so far as possible. Neither by letting the Soviet Union choose the ground for a contest nor by fighting only defensive actions can the Western world succeed in countering Soviet propaganda. The Western nations should choose favourable ground and, when required, should be prepared to take the counter-offensive in appealing to the people in their own countries and in the states bordering on the Soviet Union who would otherwise be beguiled by Soviet propaganda.

6. Soviet propaganda is often irresponsibly opportunistic. But it would be a mistake to oppose that kind of irresponsibility with an equally irresponsible policy of toughness for toughness' sake. There is no merit in opposing Soviet views merely because they come from the U.S.S.R. Such a policy would only aggravate the feeling of the Soviet states that they are being treated as suspects and outcasts. This feeling will be strongly held in any event and cannot be removed except by the most abject renunciation of all principles held by the Western nations. Nevertheless, only harm will be done by irritating Soviet susceptibilities unnecessarily. What is called for is positive argument based on facts (which the Soviet Union frequently distorts), on democratic principle and values, and on the purposes and principles enunciated in the Charter of the United Nations. Firmness, fairness and honesty are the tactics best calculated to meet the situation.

7. The effectiveness of aggressive Soviet propaganda campaign may induce a feeling in some quarters that we should retreat from the concept of the Assembly as a public forum by demanding, for example, more secrecy in debates and committee meetings. To give full play to such a tendency would be a dangerous betrayal of democratic principles, and would allow the Soviet Union to pose as the champion of freedom of speech and of the press. It would also be ineffective in its purpose, since Soviet delegations are adept at semi-official "leaks", and reports convenient to Soviet propaganda would inevitably circulate. Distortion of both Western and Soviet policies would thus be still easier than at present. Our policy should recognize that, while susceptibility to dangerous illusion is the Achilles' heel of democracy, yet in a widespread and accurate public understanding lies our greatest strength.

8. This does not mean that it is advisable to have all discussions at the Assembly conducted in public. Occasions do arise where there is a prospect of a subject being examined with some moderation by the Soviet group if the discussions are carried on in private while, if a public discussion takes place, that group will feel compelled to take rigid positions, with the usual extravagant declarations, from which they cannot easily retreat. It is probably a sound general rule that the sub-committees of the main committees of the Assembly should meet in private and that more sub-committees should be set up than has been the custom in the past.

9. If the democracies, through fear of controversy or diplomatic politeness or sheer weariness of debate or a mere desire to curb debate, ignore the maxim that "truth is great and will prevail" and keep silent or shun the issues, they ask for more trouble. This has been clearly demonstrated at the Paris Conference. There the Western delegates curbed their tongues in an effort to curtail debate. Far from curtailing debate, this self-denying ordinance gave the Soviet group unlimited opportunities for propaganda and misrepresentation which they availed themselves of to the full. It gave the delegates from the Soviet bloc the feeling that they could ride roughshod over the other delegates. The preponderance of the Slav group in debate made the others appear accommodating and timid when they rose briefly to make the formal statements that from time to time appeared necessary. It became evident at Paris that long-term controversies of the kind which now divide the Soviet world from the western world are not won by allowing the Soviet world to have a clear field.

10. The strategy which underlies the Soviet propaganda campaign appears to be based on a belief that anything which stimulates or aggravates disunity and discord between countries or within countries, in the non-Soviet world, is useful because it strengthens the relative world position of a zone rigidly co-ordinated by totalitarian control. In propaganda designed to aggravate disunity and discord, the U.S.S.R. makes peculiar use of such concepts as "democracy", "equality", "trade unions", "freedom" and "socialism". Similarly, great use is made of the words "fascist" and "imperialist". Campaigns on these lines are most successful if they make the Western powers appear to be reactionary.

11. The effectiveness of Soviet propaganda results partly from the Soviet skill in propaganda but mainly from the fact that the present governing classes of the Soviet Union are heirs of a great dynamic revolution which loosed constructive forces on the world in the way that the French Revolution did and the Italian fascist and German national socialist revolutions did not. The 1917 Revolution emphasized economic democracy, economic security, racial equality, freedom for national cultures, state planning; it rejected the theory of master races and the doctrine that minority races should be expelled from a state; it affirmed the wisdom and necessity of multinational states.

12. Towards some of these objectives—notably racial equality and freedom for national cultures—the Soviet Union has made real progress. In other cases slogans have been substituted for realities and an inspection of the facts behind the slogans reveals all the dismal apparatus of the totalitarian state. But even though the present governing classes of the Soviet Union may have betrayed the ideals of the 1917 Revolution, they can still rally support outside the borders of the Soviet Union by posing as defenders of those ideals. What is important in the short-run is not what the Soviet Union is but the picture of the Soviet Union in the minds of the discontented of the whole world.

13. The defence against Soviet propaganda is twofold—first, counter-propaganda and, secondly, the promotion of stability, prosperity and equality in the non-Soviet world. On the propaganda level, the Soviet challenge can best be met by drawing attention to the positive accomplishments of the democratic countries, rather than by analyzing the obvious weaknesses of the Soviet system.

14. Soviet propaganda should wherever possible be exposed. But Soviet spokesmen are skilled dialecticians and it is unwise to try to expose their propaganda unless one is certain of one's facts and is speaking from a carefully prepared brief. Refutations of Soviet propaganda are most effective if given with restraint and backed by detailed knowledge. (The commentary which has been prepared for the use of the Canadian delegation to the Assembly contains material which can be used as the basis of such briefs).

15. In a propaganda battle the best cards are in the hands of the democracies if they are prepared to use them. Such battles should not be sought, but if they are forced on us it is possible that a demonstration of effective counter-attack would lead before long to a diminution of Soviet propaganda pressure, which would allow the United Nations to get back to its more immediate practical business at hand. If this is too much to hope for, a firm and determined defence would at least assure that we hold our own in the propaganda battles which less frank methods would inevitably lose.

PART TWO

THE BUILDING UP OF THE UNITED NATIONS AS AN EFFECTIVE INSTRUMENT FOR PROMOTING STABILITY, PROSPERITY AND EQUALITY

16. It is not, of course, enough for the nations of the Western world to use the assembly only as a sounding board for propaganda. In the long run the best defence in the United Nations against Soviet propaganda is for the Western nations to use the Assembly and the other organs of the United Nations to the utmost as agencies for promoting political and social stability and economic prosperity and for realizing racial equality and self-government for dependent peoples. The more constructive work which the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and the specialized agencies can do, the greater are our chances of avoiding war with the Soviet Union or of winning that war should it break out.

17. From the gravity of the present international situation and the sickness of the United Nations certain conclusions emerge. The first is that for Canada and, indeed, for all Western nations considerations of immediate national advantage or of national prestige should not be allowed to obscure the importance of long-range issues. It should be the aim of the Western democracies to strengthen the authority and prestige of the United Nations (which offers among other things the most effective protection against the Soviet policy of expansion), even although such action might entail the giving up of short-run advantages by individual Western nations.

18. The second conclusion is that, since the United Nations is already weak because of the present strained relations between the great powers, every care should be taken to avoid a further weakening as a result of bad decisions on its organization and administration and bad interpretations of its constitution.

19. Thus it is important that in elections to the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, and other bodies of limited membership, states should, as far as possible, be chosen which have the greatest contribution to make towards the effective discharge of the functions with which each body is charged. Similarly, it is important that the chairmen of the committees and the sub-committees of the Assembly should be chosen, as far as possible, on the basis of their personal competence to conduct meetings expeditiously and well. Most of the constructive work of an international meeting is done in committees and sub-committees. They are the creative bodies on the success of which a conference depends and incompetent or unscrupulous chairmen snarl their work and lower the prestige and effectiveness of the United Nations.

20. The effectiveness of the United Nations also depends in large part on the effectiveness of the international secretariat. It is therefore important that the independence of the secretariat be maintained and strengthened and that there be strict adherence to Article 100 of the Charter on the independence of the secretariat and to Article 101:3, which makes the "necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity" a "paramount consideration" and makes "equitable geographical distribution" only an "important" consideration to which "due regard" should be paid.

21. Since the Charter is difficult of amendment, (and since, as a constitutional document, it is couched in broad and somewhat imprecise terms) special importance attaches to the principles to be applied in the interpretations of its provisions. A meaning, of course, cannot be assigned to any provision of the Charter which the language used is not capable of bearing. Regard will also have to be had to the context in which provisions appear. On the other hand, wherever the precise meaning of a provision is doubtful, it should be interpreted in the manner best calculated to strengthen the authority and prestige of the United Nations, to promote its purposes, and to fortify its juridical, as distinct from its political or security, character. It is important, in these precedent-setting days, that provisions which in form detract from the authority of the United Nations are given a restrictive interpretation and that provisions which in form add to the authority of the United Nations or of its organs or officers are broadly interpreted. It is, for example, important that the veto rights of the individual great powers are given a restrictive interpretation and that the reservation of domestic jurisdiction is not given too broad an interpretation. Conversely, the provisions relating to the powers of the General Assembly under Article 10, or to the rights and duties of the Secretary-General under Article 99, should be broadly interpreted. Provisions of a general character (e.g., Article 102, concerning the registration of treaties and agreements) should, of course, be assigned as extensive a meaning as the language is capable of bearing.

22. There is always a tendency in international bodies to avoid decision on controversial problems by establishing new committees or commissions for the purpose of study and report to a later session. This practice is often useful and indeed essential. It presents, however, in present conditions, special dangers. A novel feature of postwar international planning has been the conclusion of agreements to establish a wide range of new international organizations, at the same time retaining nearly all those in existence before the war except the League of Nations itself. Each of these international organizations in turn operates through a series of commissions and committees. Their multiplication has already confused even the best informed people and has bewildered the public in general. As the chances of eventual success of the United Nations must depend on continued public support and understanding, it is important that great care should be exercised in the reference to specially created bodies of problems on which the Assembly has not been able to reach agreement.

23. The United Nations, fifteen months after the signature of the Charter, is very much on trial and its interests would not be served by concealing the disappointment caused by its operations. Some of the specialized agencies which are related to the United Nations such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, the International Aviation Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and the World Health Organization, have indicated a broad promise of future usefulness. (Almost all these organizations have made progress without Soviet membership and with a minimum of fruitless debate). The Security Council, on the other hand, has lamentably failed so far in taking any constructive steps toward the discharge of the vital functions entrusted to it. In the minds of responsible people the question must now be present—although it has not yet been asked publicly by any national leader—whether it is worthwhile to continue the drama of frustration which the proceedings of the Security Council have presented from its first session in London in January onwards. It must be recognized that there is no chance of amending the Charter soon, and also that, even if it were possible to amend the Charter so as to constitute the Security Council on a more effective legal basis, in the present state of strained international relations between the great powers this would make little difference. The central difficulties in the operations of the Security Council—difficulties present also in the operations of the other organs of the United Nations—do not stem from constitutional defects in the Charter. They arise because the practice currently followed, not only by the Soviet Union and its satellites but also by other governments, is not in accord with the purposes and principles on which the Charter is based. For the effective operation of the United Nations, therefore, what is needed is a marked alteration in the climate of international relations.

24. No useful purpose would therefore be served by a frontal attack on the veto in this Assembly. The Assembly could, however, usefully review the way in which the veto has been used and attempt to curb the illegitimate use of the veto. The Canadian delegation, like many other delegations at San Francisco, swallowed the veto only after it had been sugar-coated by the assurances of the great powers that their special voting position would be used with a sense of responsibility and consideration for the interests of smaller states, and that therefore the veto would be used sparingly. The Canadian delegation also trusted that in due course the decisions of the Council might build up a kind of common law which would eventually be incorporated in the Charter itself, and that in this way more satisfactory procedures might come to be established.

25. The veto has not been used sparingly and the decisions of the Council have built up a bad common law, not a good common law. The Assembly cannot correct this development by legislation. The most it can do is to adopt in formal terms a statement of what the Assembly considers to be the legitimate use of the veto under the present terms of the Charter. It might also express the hope that in the near future the veto should be restricted, by amendment of the Charter, to the one question of the application of sanctions instead of extending, as it does now, to a whole host of questions, including peaceful settlement, the nomination of the Secretary-General and the admission of new members.

26. In the near future the most that can be done at meetings of the United Nations is to strive to make the machinery work as smoothly as possible by supporting action along the general lines suggested above without expecting quick results or seeking ideal solutions. If the General Assembly can be made to function with dignity and reasonable despatch, and if it and other organs of the United Nations can perform limited tasks recognized as useful by public opinion and by governments, that is all that can be reasonably expected.

ELECTIONS TO THE COUNCILS

. . . .

11. The Latin American states chosen for both Councils were agreed upon by the Latin group and supported by the Big Five. The same is true of the Arab representation. The great power slate for the Security Council was an agreed one and was adopted by the Assembly with the substitution of Australia for Canada. The great powers had reached complete agreement on the slate for the Economic and Social Council except that the Russians successfully supported Yugoslavia instead of New Zealand. Before agreement on the elections was reached among the regional groups and among the Big Five various bargains were made for future application of all of which we may not yet be aware. Some of these bargains are expected to be completed in the elections this autumn, and these are referred to below in discussing the candidates.

12. Regionalism, combined with rotation of seats among the states members of the regional groups, is particularly dangerous to the success of the U.N. as well as being contrary, so far as the Security Council is concerned, to the express provisions of the Charter. It has already resulted in Syria being chosen as the Middle Eastern candidate for the Security Council, and in Colombia being the Latin American candidate for the Mexican seat. Both are states which have little military or economic force to contribute to the preservation of peace. The application of this doctrine also means that the Assembly is merely ratifying the decisions of regional groups.

13. From Canada's point of view the situation is especially serious. Since the United States is always on the Security Council, Canada can make no claim for membership on the basis of equitable geographical distribution. Canada belongs moreover, to no organized regional group, for the Commonwealth does not constitute a "region". If Latin America always has two seats on the Security Council, Western Europe one seat, Eastern Europe one seat, and the Middle East one seat, only one seat is left over for Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India and for the other states which do not belong to one of the four regions. The argument will be made that that seat should go to a representative of the vast area lying south of China and of the Arab states, including South Eastern Asia, Africa, and Australasia.

14. Both on the ground of the general interest of the U.N. and on the ground of Canada's special interest, the developments which are taking place in elections to the Councils should be resisted; in particular, the general acceptance of the following four conventions would be undesirable:

(1) the convention that the Assembly can properly disregard in elections to the Security Council the principle of functionalism set forth in Article 23 of the Charter;

(2) the convention that a state is ineligible for election to the Security Council if it is already a member of the Economic and Social Council;

(3) the convention that a number of regions of the world have a right to be represented on the Council by a state designated by them no matter what the qualifications of that state may be; and

(4) the convention that only one member of the British Commonwealth, apart from the United Kingdom, should sit on the Security Council.

OCTOBER 1946 ELECTIONS

15. It is desirable to leave to the delegation at the Assembly a good deal of freedom of action in determining what states they should support for elections to the Councils. The succeeding paragraphs seek to indicate what would be a suitable result of the elections, in the light of available information.

Security Council

16. At present the six non-permanent members of the Security Council are:

For two-year term .....	Australia
	Brazil
	Poland
For one-year term .....	Egypt
	Mexico
	Netherlands

The Assembly will elect successors to Egypt, Mexico and The Netherlands. These states are not eligible for immediate re-election.

17. The Latin American Republics appear to have agreed on Colombia. The Arab states (Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, and Iraq) have agreed on Syria and have secured the concurrence of Turkey and Iran. It is widely expected that Belgium will be the candidate of the Western European states for the succession to the seat of The Netherlands, though there may be strong opposition to a state being a member at the same time of both the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council.

18. Colombia and Syria have asked us to support their election and have been told that, while the Canadian Government will give sympathetic consideration to their request, the Government does not commit itself in advance to support any particular state seeking election to an organ of the U.N.

19. The United Kingdom Government is understood to have decided to support the election of Colombia and Belgium unless new considerations arise before the election. Their support of Belgium is conditional upon there not being a strong move to prevent a country from being at the same time a member of both the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. The United Kingdom is inclined to accept the inevitability of a Middle Eastern representative; while they would have preferred Iraq or Turkey, they have decided to support Syria since it is the choice of the other Arab states. The preliminary slate of the State Department in Washington is exactly the same as that of the United Kingdom. The State Department disagrees with the view that the Middle East as a region should not necessarily be represented on the Security Council. They also would have preferred Turkey, but they have been informed that Turkey does not wish to stand for election. They are of the opinion that the pattern of geographical representation set by the original elections to the Security Council was a good one.

20. It is inevitable, in view of the large Latin American vote in the Assembly, that the Latin American Republics can successfully insist on the election of a respectable Latin American state at each annual election. Colombia is respectable enough, and there would be no point in opposing its election.

21. We would be serving neither our own immediate interests nor the interests of the U.N. if we were to give support to the view that membership in one Council disqualifies a state, other than one of the Big Five, from membership in the other Council. This would mean that Canada would be ineligible for membership in the Security Council until its term on the Economic and Social Council expires in January 1949 (i.e., Canada could not be elected until September 1948). By limiting the choice of candidates for the Councils it would weaken the Councils. The Canadian delegation might therefore oppose any movement which may develop in the Assembly to disqualify Belgium for membership on the Security Council because of its membership on the Economic and Social Council.

22. Syria, next to the Lebanon, is the weakest candidate which the Arab states could put up for membership on the Security Council. It is weak not only in military power but in the calibre of the representatives it sends to international meetings. Thus the present might be a propitious time on which to oppose the principle that the Middle East has not only a right to be permanently represented on the Council but a right to be represented by whichever Middle Eastern state it designates. Since no Middle Eastern state which fulfills the first criterion of Article 23 is a candidate for the Security Council, support might well be given to another candidate, such as India, if India is ready to stand. India is potentially the strongest state in Asia outside of the Soviet Union and China, and it now controls its own foreign policy.

Economic and Social Council.

23. In October 1946, six members will be elected to the Economic and Social Council. The memberships of the following will terminate but they would be eligible for immediate re-election:

North America .....	United States
Latin America .....	Colombia
Eastern Europe .....	Ukraine
	Yugoslavia
Western Europe .....	Greece
Middle East .....	Lebanon

The continuing members of the Economic and Social Council will be:

For two more years: Belgium, Canada, Chile, China, France, Peru;

For one more year: Cuba, Czechoslovakia, India, Norway, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom.

24. Turkey, Mexico, Egypt and the Lebanon have asked us to support their election and have been given the usual reply. The United States naturally expects to be re-elected, and there is no doubt that the United States ought to be and will be re-elected.

25. The successor to Colombia is likely to be either Uruguay or Mexico. Both the United Kingdom and the United States would prefer Uruguay to Mexico. The reason given by the United Kingdom is that Uruguay has a better understanding of European questions. We could support either, but Uruguay probably has somewhat the better claim since, unless it is elected, the predominantly agricultural states of South America will not be represented on the Council.

26. New Zealand tied with Yugoslavia in the elections which took place in January, 1946, and withdrew in order to break a deadlock. Both the United Kingdom and the United States intend to vote for New Zealand. The Soviet bloc may also support New Zealand, since it is believed that Mr. Fraser secured a promise to this effect last January. Canada could support New Zealand.

27. It is desirable that one member of the Soviet bloc be elected. The United Kingdom has agreed to support Byelorussia as successor to the Ukraine. The United States will probably support either Poland or Byelorussia. The Soviet Union will probably try to get Byelorussia elected and also one Soviet satellite—either Yugoslavia, Poland or Czechoslovakia—and the attempt may succeed. The United Kingdom is firmly opposed to the re-election of Yugoslavia. It would appear that the best Eastern European candidate for Canada to support would be Poland, but more information on the line-up is desirable before reaching a decision.

28. The election of:

United States
Uruguay or Mexico
New Zealand

Poland, Byelorussia, Czechoslovakia or Yugoslavia would leave two seats to be filled.

29. The Netherlands is one of the states of major economic importance. It probably ranks with Canada immediately after the United States, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R., India and France. Of these states The Netherlands is the only one which is not now a member of the Council. The United States is prepared to vote for The Netherlands or Denmark. The United Kingdom would like to see The Netherlands elected, but believes that the Soviet Union would be unlikely to support The Netherlands and might be prepared to compromise by supporting Denmark or Sweden. In view of the very strong claims of The Netherlands for election to the Council, we might support The Netherlands on the first ballots. If it is unable to secure the necessary two-thirds vote, we could switch to Denmark or Sweden.

30. In a Council of eighteen members it is not unreasonable that the Middle Eastern states should have one representative. The field is apparently fairly wide open since the Arab bloc have not yet agreed on a candidate. The United Kingdom and the United States will probably support Turkey, and Turkey would seem to be the best fitted of the Middle Eastern states. We could therefore support Turkey, with Egypt as an alternative choice.

31. The Canadian contention has been that over half of the eighteen members of the Council should always be drawn from the dozen or so states of chief economic importance, some of which should be steadily re-elected. Otherwise the Council will not be able to discharge its duties effectively. It is therefore desirable that the Assembly should as soon as possible establish the precedent of immediately re-electing a state which, though of major economic importance, is not one of the great powers. The October session of the Assembly does not, however, provide an opportunity for creating this precedent, as none of the retiring members except the United States is an important enough state to warrant re-election.

Trusteeship Council.

32. It is possible that a sufficient number of trusteeship agreements may be approved by the General Assembly to permit the creation of a Trusteeship Council composed not only of the minimum of six non-elected members required under Article 86 of the Charter but also additional members, including perhaps two members elected for three-year terms. If all trusteeship agreements now in preparation are approved, the Trusteeship Council will be composed as follows—including, as will be seen, the five great powers (which will have permanent seats) and providing a membership equally divided between trustee and non-trustee states:

Administering Authorities	Non-Administering
United Kingdom	United States
France	U.S.S.R.
Belgium	China
Australia	Two elected members
New Zealand

33. Should the election of temporary members be necessary, some thought should be given to the general balance of interests in the Trusteeship Council. The Permanent Mandates Commission of the League was composed, in the early thirties, as follows:

Nationals of mandatory powers .....	4
Nationals of colonial powers holding no League mandates .....	4
Nationals of states having no dependents .....	3
Total .....	11

34. In the Trusteeship Council the eight permanent seats would at first be divided as follows:

States administering trust territories (United Kingdom, France, Belgium, Australia, New Zealand) .....	5
Colonial powers not acting as United Nations trustees (United States) .....	1
Great powers presenting themselves as champions of inhabitants of trust territories (U.S.S.R. and China) .....	2

35. To establish a proper balance in the Trusteeship Council the claims of the second category should be considered. The Executive Committee of the Preparatory Commission recommended the election of The Netherlands (a state in the second category) for a three-year term because of its long experience in dealing with dependent territories. If The Netherlands were to name Baron van Asbeck as its representative on the Trusteeship Council the Council would also benefit by the presence during its formative years of a man who was an active member of the Permanent Mandates Commission and who has had valuable experience in the technique of examining the annual reports of mandatory powers. It cannot be assumed, however, that Baron van Asbeck would be named to the post, and it is possible that the situation in the Netherlands East Indies might make it desirable to support another Western European state in place of The Netherlands. The Canadian delegation might support the candidacy of Denmark or Sweden, either as a substitute for The Netherlands or as a second Western European member. This would give the Trusteeship Council at least one "neutral" voice. If the Latin American states should press for a seat on the Trusteeship Council, Brazil would probably have the most to contribute in the role of a second "neutral" member.
