judicious expenditure of the local revenues in their own interests. So little power have the people to controle their executives, or to bring them into subjection to their well understood wishes that the people have become mere "flies on the wheel." If you look back through the political history the Maritime provinces you will find that there have been but few legitimate changes of government since the advent of responsible government. The reason is obvious, the executive is too. strong. In New Brunswick fir. instance the executive with six votes on the floor of the assembly, requires only seventeen more to rewith six votes on the floor of the assem-bly, requires only soventeen more to re-tain power, while six scheemers if they can minipulate seventeen others can oust the government. Maritime union would remedy this by placing in the parliament of the united provinces of numbe of representative so great that the power of the electors would be increas-
