Grace Darling.

Twas a wild September evening. And the north wind fiercely blew, When the Forfurshire came drifting With a weary, hopeless crew. And upon the Longstone striking With that warning light in view.

Father," cried the lighthouse maiden. "Hear you not the drowning call? Heed not though the sea be raging, Launch our boat whate'er betall!" Seated in that boat—a maiden And an old man-that was all.

To the rock, through wind and tempest, Through the raging ocean's roar.' On that dread September morning Pulled that man and maiden o'er, Stormy sea and danger round them, Dying fellow-men before.

Sixty-three were in the steamer When she struck the fatal land, All the night the raging billows Every hope of succor banned, How could man avail to save them? One by one felt Death's stern hand

But the nine who clung despairing All that wild and dreadful night Heard a cry of help come ringing Little marvel that the maiden Seemed to them an angel bright.

Saved them all ! The thrilling story Ran through England far and wide, Whilst Grace Darling's fame and glory Were proclaimed on every side, She lived numbly in her lighthouse, Humbly in her lighthouse died.

Interesting Story.

-The London Friend.

Colonel Paul.

"My experience and observation go to prove tout 'taint the fellows that fought best who are most fierce and forward with their war-stories now. At least, it's so down here in Virginia. Twas such a dead-in-earnest conflict, and such a close tussle for life or death, and the ruin that it brought was so great, it's no wonder we shrink from vaporin' 'bout it now.

"Our own folks know all they want to, and more, on that subject, and ignorant or carious meddling with wounds aint pleasant nor healthy.

"Still, there are times when one can't help thinking over things that happened in those days, whether he will or no. Evenings like this, for instance. Since we've been out here on the porch, watching the sun go down on the hills over the river, and listening, you might almost believe, to the world settling itself to sleep, I've lived through in my thoughts the very saddest of the many heart-breaking stories that come to my notice in the four-years Horror. That's what it was from beginning to end, sir! Such horror and desolation and despair as you Northerners never dreamp; of.

"I reckon it must have been the smell of the locult blosoms, and the singing of the late bees among them, that started me to dreaming. Anyhow, it all comes back to me clear as a picture, seen with my bodily eyes.

"It's a pretty picture, too,-the old Carrington place, Locust Hill, over yonder,-just at this season of the year, when the white flowers were dropping like snow on the steps and the grass and gravel walks, and drifting in the breeze up to Mrs. Carrington's feet, as she sat in her rocking-chair out on the porch, pale and uneasy, looking into her boy's face.

"I'm not ashamed to own that my father was overseer on Mr. Carrington's plantation, and had been for twenty years. He was a man that respected himself, and consequently his fellowcitizens respected him.

"A kinder or more liberal gentleman than Mr. Carrington never lived, even in old Virginia. His wife was a mortal saint, sir. Loving and tender and soft-hearted as an angel. A beauty, too, to the last, even after her hair was white as picked cotton, and you could tell by her eyes that she had no heart

"I was raised with the Carrington boys. We went to the same school, and played together all the rest of the day. But when they entered college, I was put into the tobacco-crop, and learned all there was to know about cultivating and cutting and curing and pressing this staple of the South.

"In vacation we were just as good friends as ever-me and the Carrington fellers. There were four of them : James and David and Randolph and Paul. When the war broke out, the oldest was twenty-four, and the youngest-Paul-just thirteen. All of us went into the army within six months, except Paul, of course:

"There was no help for it, sir. If it was my last breath, I should be obleeged to say that. They had invaded the State, you see. That was our view of the situation, and we acted according to our light. Daniel and St. Paul couldn't have done no more, nor

"Well, it was in the spring of '64 that our regiment was in camp on the edge of the Carrington plantation for a couple of months. We'd been busy for the best part of the winter, and had some right smart fighting down the river. Just now, however, the Northerners were lying so low and keeping so dark that we had quite a play-time.

"The Carrington boys and a dozen other young officers passed pretty near half their time at the house. It wasn't strange that Paul caught the army fever. He was sixteen years old, and small of his age. Not exactly puny, but almost like a girl for slenderness and good looks, and the very core of his mother's heart. She had lost two girls between him and Randolph.

"She would not hear a word of his enlisting, and begged his brothers to put the notion out of his head. On the evening I speak of, he was even more in earnest than usual with her. He would drop on one knee by her and put his arm over the back of her chair. while he pleaded with her to let him co. It was always a pretty sight to see how much they thought of each

"'You see, mother,' he said, "if I enlist now, I can choose my company, and on into David's."

"David had risen fast. He was major now, and a splendid soldier. James was a captain, and Randolph was first

"If I wait a little longer, they can draft me.' he said, 'and send me to Nova Scotia if they choose. I reckon we shall have conquered up to there by that time.'

" The war may be over then,' said Mrs. Carrington, so solemn it might have been a prayer she was repeating. Surely the Lord's anger will be turned away and his outst etched arm be withdrawn before many months.'

"Paul was by no means pacified. He was brim-full of patriotism and fight. His brothers helped him on. Not that they wanted him to carry his point but they made a great pet of him and were proud of him. And I could see that his father was pleased though he did not say much until Mrs. Carrington packed Paul off to bed at ten o clock. Then he asked her if the best way to stop the boy's nons nee wouldn't be to let him go into camp and without his enlisting, try military duty for a few weeks.' I'm much mistaken if the experiment wouldn't cure

"Mrs. Carrington looked at him as if she couldn't believe he meant it. 'My dear,' she said, all in a quiver, even to her voice, 'Paul is our baby, Such a trail little fellow! Camp-fare and sleeping on the ground and all that

"Then the brothers spoke up and showed that no harm could come to toe child under their eye and declared

gust him with the service and send him home in a sensible mood. "'He'll find it's no fun to march up and down a half-mile beat, toting a heavy musket!' said I at last.

"I wished afterwards that I had held my tongue, for Mrs. Carrington looked surprised and hurt and said quietly, You against me, too, Dick !'

"'Don't be silly, Paulina!' said her husband, a little sharp 'Nobody's against you in this matter. You seem set upon keeping that boy a baby. It's a bad thing for him.

"What else passed between them I don't know, but about twelve o'clock the next day, there came Mr. Paul into camp, chirpy as a cricket, and ready to tackle the wnole Northern army.

"He had on a suit of gray, and a military cap with a feather stuck sideways in the band.

But in all his toggery he favored his mother so much when he laughed up at me, that it was all I could do to keep from picking him up bodily, as I would a baby, and carrying him home again. "In two days he was the camp favorite-'Col. Paul,' the boys called

"'I'll be a real colonel before the war is over!' he said, his eyes flashing. Won't mother be proud of me, then? She felt awfully when she kissed me good-by.' But he winked hard as he said it. 'It's strange that the wisest woman can't understand just how a fellow feels about his country,' he went on. But sae il forgive me waen I've distinguished myself, as I mean to do. This is something like life! I must be spared from duty, and go to see James Carrington overheard this, and when the boy had walked off, I said to him, 'He isn't discouraged yet, get a furlough for Sunday, next if I can that's evident.' "'He's game to the backbone!' said the captain, laughing, and showing by his manner that he felt proud of the young soldier. He's had four hours' drill in the hot sun to-day, and I reckon we'll put him on picket-duty tonight. It is best that he should have a full taste of what is before him.'

"At nine o'clock I met him, in high spirits, on his way to his post. I didn't quite like the night-watch for him. To be sure, our pickets hadn t had a surprise in two months, and we didn't know of a Federal soldier within twenty miles of us.

"'How long do you suppose you'll keep your eyes open ?' I asked, laugh-

"'All aight, if necessary,' he answered back, as stiff as a ramrod. 'But I'm to be relieved at twelve.'

"I made it convenient to happen his way a little after ten. He was tramping back and forth as steady as a clock, whistling softly the old prayer-meeting hvmn:

"Am I asoldier of the Cross, A follower of the Lamb?

And shall I blush to own His cause, And fear to speak His name ?'

"'Halt!' he said, clear and sharp, when I stepped into the road out of the shade of the bushes. 'Who goes there?'

"'A friend!' I said. " 'Advance and give the countersign! "It so happened that I hadn't the pass-word, and the young game-cock wouldn't let me come a step nearer, well as he knew me.

"'My orders are to guard this piece of road,' he said, grave and quiet as a man of fifty. 'I don't want to shoot you, Dick, so you'd better be off.'

"I gave the salute, begged his pardon, and took myself back to tell the story to his brothers.

"'We'll elieve him at eleven,' said the major. 'Tae little rascul will be fagged out by then. He's had a hard day of it.'

"That very night Kautz's cavalry, that always came and went like the wind, swept up that road so near our that roughing it would probably dis- camp that I cannot conceive why we did not hear them. They were on a raid up the river and couldn't stop to pester us; but they captured three of our sentinels and carried them off, and one of them was Colonel Paul.

"They picked him up five minutes before eleven. The boy said to me afterwards that, being leg-weary after all the drilling he had had that day, he had leaned against a stump, and must have nodded a little, for the first thing he knew he was captured and carried away on a trooper's saddle.

"His cap with the hawk's feather, was laying in the dusty road by his musket. We took that to his mother; and it made my heart ache to see how dazed she looked when we told her what had happened to Paul.

"I was taken prisoner at Spottsylvania Court House in May. We were kept awhile at Fortress Munroe, then at Point Lookout. On the first of September they took us to Fort Dele-

"'Twas fearfully hot that day and night! We lay in the hold like so many herrings, with hardly room to turn. About midnight I dropped asleep, and waking, almost smothered, within an hour, I fancied-what with the groans and swearing, the heat, the bad air, and the red light of the swinging lamp overhead—that we were in the region that isn't often named in polite society. It wasn't agreeable, sir.

"Well, we were'nt landed at Delleware until sunset the next day, and a detier set you never saw than we were when marched into the privates' quarters. I was skulking along, savage as a starving catermount, when somebody called out, "Dick Cosby !" and a slim boy in ragged gray clothes ran right into my arms.

"He had grown surprisingly. His face was thinner and paler than it used to be; his pants and sleeves were too short for his legs and arms, and his suit was much the worse of wear. But he had the clean, gentlemanly look notwithstanding. The Carrington blood told, sir, in spite of rags and wretchedness.

"He was very popular with our boys, and had got on the blind side of the men who had us in charge. To please him, I was put into his mess and bunked beside him at night.

'It's one of my greatest remember how much good my being there did him. After hearing about his mother and the rest of the folks, he became quite cheerful, and like him-

"One of our men who had been a college professor at home had books sent him by Yankee friends, and Colonel Paul-somehow he'd got that name even among the Northern guardtook to Latin and Greek and such studies in solid earnest.

"'My mother shan't have a dunce for a son when I get out of this!' he exclaimed, one day. 'I've only to make believe that I'm taking a university course, and must stay until the term's over, and it isn't so very hard to bear.' "Every week he wrote to his mother whether the letter could go or not. Sometimes the mail was sent South by flag-of-truce, and he wouldn't miss a chance. Three of his letters got through the lines and to his mother. The last of them reached Locust Hill on Chris'mas Day.

"Well, sir! I'll hurry my story a little. Colonel Paul died, or diptheria, on Chris'mas Day. He was sick four

"The roughest prisoners were kind to him, and the Yankee surgeon did his best. But the Island is a bleak rock, and our barracks were bardly better than sheds. There was little chance for the boy from the beginning of the attack. I was thankful he did not fight harder with the disease. At sunrise he opened his eyes and smiled. 'It's Chris'mas morning, isn't it? he whispered. "They'll be thinkin' of us

WOLFVILLE, N. S., DEC. 26, 1884

With this issue we make our last appearance before the public for the present year. And in taking a retre. spective glance at the year just closing we find that although not characterized by any very startling events, it will probably occupy its full space in the pages of history

In England, the political situation has been peculiarly interesting and suggestive. The Irish question still seems as far from a satisfactory solution as ever, while the affairs in the Seudan have become, if anything, more complicated. Early in the year, and following closely on the massacre of the Egyptian forces under Hicks Pacha, came the defeat and almost annihilation of Baker Pasha's army of 3,500 men. A British force under General Graham defeated Osman Digma and captured his camp on March 12th, and seemed in a fair way of bringing the rebels to order, when it was suddenly ordered home and Gen. Gordon apparently left to his fate. Since then the reports from the Soudan have been very contradictory and unsatisfactory. At present an expedition under Gen. Wolsley is on the way there.

In July the House of Lords voted to postpone the consideration of Mr. Gladstone's franchise bill, which led to considerable agitation for the abolition of that body.

Across the channel, the French have had both war and plague. A continuation of the war in Tonquin and the commencement of another in China. While the cholera has been busy in the southern provinces, the victims being counted by thousands.

On this side of the Atlantio the great topic of interest has been the Presidential Election in the United States, which has been one of the most bitter political fights ever known, and resulted in the choice of a Democratic President and Vice President, being the first in twenty-four years. In Cincinatti a riot lasting three days, occasioned by dissatisfaction about a verdict in a murder case, was attended with large loss of life and property, forty-five persons being killed and one hundred and thirty-eight wounded.

The floods in February on the Ohio River were the worst ever known, causing much loss of property and consider-Greely Expedition, six in all. Of the decent live, journalism has been appreremainder of the party, seventeen died ciated, and, notwithstanding another of starvation, one was drowned, and one died three days after being rescued. This expedition reached a point farther north than ever before achieved by any exploring party, and a few days after their return the world was shocked by the report that the survivors sustained life by the last desperate resource of starving men, cannibalism.

Although the closing year has not been the chapter of horrors, as regards disasters, that 1883 was, it has probably furnished its average quota, Canada leading with the first railway accident on Jan. 2d when two trains collided on the Grand Trunk with a less of twentyfive men. On April 3d the Steamer "Daniel Steinman" was wrecked off Sambro, with a loss of 123 persons. July 30th Sable Island, the grave-yard of the Atlantic, added another to its victime the Steamer "Amsterdam" being wrecked with loss of three passengers. We haven't space to give an extended list of the usual railway, colliery, steamer, and dynamite accidents, of which there was the usual number—the excursion steamer alone has not furnished any considerable disaster this year.

Among the prominent men who have passed away may be noted the Duke of Albany; Charles Reade, the novelist; Wendell Phillips; Sir Edward Bartle Frere; Henry Fawcett, Post-Master General of England; and many others we have not space for.

In our own Province we have little change to chronicle. The history of Nova Scotia will have to be written by centuries as the ripple marks one year stop some day. A bridge that costs so leaves on the sands of time being scarce ly discernable. The resignation of the Local Government and the formation of a new one being the most startling political event. The Halifax Dry Dock scheme has been talked about, so it was forty years ago, so it probably will be forty years hence. Citylcouncils have talked it over, engineers have given estimates, meetings have been held, committees appointed and delegates sent out, newspaper men have written it up with wild enthusiasm, and have grown gray and died leaving the subject as a legacy to their successors who continue to write it up with a cheerful hope undaunted by the disappointments of

In our own county the past year has not been one of unalloyed prosperity. The season was the wettest ever known and many people had to take the advice of a county contemporary and not hoe their potatoes-with the result of an almost entire failure of the crop. Turnips and all other roots from the same cause were also a short crop. The fruit crop on the contrary was one of the best ever known, and considering the quantity fair prices were realized.

The depression in business that extends all over the world, affects us here in a modified form and probably caused the recent failure of a well known shipbuilding and lumbering firm of this county-which failure can almost be looked on as a public misfortune. The firm had succeeded in building up a large business and employed a large number of men who but for them would have had to seek homes in the Land of the free. If this firm had had the enterprise and forethought of the usual Nova Scotia capitalist and invested their money in mortgages or Bank stock, they would probably have been solvent to-day.

While we readily admit there has been good excuse for the cry of hard times, we must recollect that if crops have been small and prices low, that the prices of all we consume are correspondingly low. Elour, sugar, tea, wollens, cottons, and all sorts of hardware are as low if not lower than they have been for years; and the opinion among business men seems to be that the lowest point has been reached and that 1885 will see a revival of trade all over the world.

Of the success of our own little paper we cannot complain. We have had to struggle with want of funds and inexperience, we have had some kicks and few coppers; but we have paper has been started in the Village within the last few months under more favorable auspices and with great flourish of trumpets, our subscriptson list and patronage in our job office has steadily increased.

We shall strive in the future to still further merit the confidence of the public. We have increased facilities for collecting local news and are continually gaining experience, and although we may not in the next year do much towards regulating the affairs of the Royal Family or change the fiscal policy of the Dominion, there will be subjects on which we can and will speak.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Weather-Oh, yes, the weather. Somtimes it is and sometimes it isn't, and then again it is. Snow or rain, one never knows which when retiring at night and is hardly certain the next morning on arising. Truly Nova Scotia is ahead of every place except Maine in weather, and we sometimes think Mark Twain was, to put it mildly, a little mistaken even about

The Gaspereau Bridge is finished at last, and like the human frame is just begun when it commences to crumble

We semetimes wonder where the contractors go to when they die. And the only conclusion we can arrive at is that they build a few bridges and railroads and then go to Parliament at Ottawa or Halifax much money to our county should be made to last a year or two anyway. But that one is finished, and now w can only be more careful and see that government jobbers do not make a farce of the work at Port Williams.

Mr. Government Engineer, keep your eyes open or you may wish you had before King's gets done with you. We are a long suffering people, but we mash the emergency's head," as A.
Ward once remarked.

We do hope our friend of the Nepaoa Canadian wasn't drunk when he wrote the item quoted in this issue, but he has got things sadly mixed as to names and places. We thank him all the same for his good intentions and well wishes and can assure him we value such from our old er contemporaries

We find that our little paper is meeting approval far above our most sanguine expectations, and we feel encouraged to go on trying to steadily improve.

King's is our native county and we are bound to look out for it even if we let the United States and the Egyptian war go to the dogs.

Our Neepawa friend's môtto is-"Canada first, last and all the time," and we feel like hanging out a similar shingle with our motto—"King's first, last and all the time."

We want to have a talk with our readers on Assessment as soon as we can get materials together, so look out for us when we do come out. Civil reform is much needed in this county and we do not care how soon it is commene-

Milton is one of the prettiest villages of Nova Scotia. It has many handsome residences and beautiful gardens. Its streets are wide and clean, and shaded by large trees which are the pride of the inhabitants and the admiration of strangers. The river running through the centre of the village and parallel with the streets on either side adds much to the beauty of the place, and gives it an Edbeauty of the place, and gives it an Ed-en appearance. For natural scenery it can be placed, beside Wolfville. But it is not so "esthetic" a village as Wolfville. Its people encourage industries; and the noise and racket of its eight mills do not disturb or annoy any of them. Its four schools have a large population; the head department is a real school-teacher nead department is a real school-teacher manufactory. The inhabitants are social and particularly courteous to strangers. When you meet them they do not look afraid you were going to their house to dinner; and at church you are welcomed and not stared at as if you were the street parade of a circus. As a fashion-able watering-place Milton is becoming noted. Visitors from the United States and different parts of Canada are there every summer; and each year the number increases. To spend one vacation there and not want to spend another is In July the steamers, Thetis and kind words. It has cheered us to know that our small effort in the cause of my host and J. H. Cook, M. P. P., and W. Ford Esq., I was taken to the principal places of attraction in the surrounding country; and was well intro-duced to Liverpool, the county's capital. To wake some morning again and find myself in Milton would make me feel happy—would bring back some of the old feeling I used to have when a boy, when mother would pronounce me sick when mother would pronounce me sick enough to stay home from school. But vacations do not last long, from child-hood we have noticed that, and soon good-bye has been said to Milton, and in a company with four others I am wheeling towards Annapolis, The first stop we made was at the Grimes' estate. Of "old" Mr "Grimes," and his "gray coat that buttoned down before," we have all heard. Poets have sung of him as "being dead and buried in the ground," but it is a mistake. The old gentleman is still alive and quite smart for a man of his years. He was putting up the clothesnis years. He was pulang up the clothes-line when we drove up and his wife was superintending. I told Mrs. Grimes I did not expect to find her husband enjoying such good health, as I had often read of his death and burial. She seemed to feel deeply what I said and cautioned me against depending too much on poetry. Poets, she reminded me, saw things as they should be, not as they are Mrs. Grimes is a jovial woman and real yellow. She wears a white cloth around her cheeks which I imagine is Grimes' in-vention to check the fluency of her talk. She did not recognize me at first but after a while she comprehended me well after a while she comprehended me well. We reached North Brookfield about dark and drove to the only house that would sell food and lodging, and ordered accom-modations for the night. The woman of the house was a Baptist and the man was a Granger. Their only son inclined to the father's belief. He talked of Granges and played buying flour cheap, living without merchants, and going to Grange picnics. The two girls did not believe in anything but playing map. After tea they invited me to, and I played as hard as I could until bed-time. I never think it is wished to the grant of Grange and the state of t it is wicked to play snap. There don't appear to be any more harm in it than in Whit Nations, Lotum, or Button; but any one who exchanges a good precious hour of day-light or condle-light for an hour's play in it, gets badly cheated. Some say you can gamble with it but I can't. When I settled with the landlord next morning he wouldn't al-low me a cent for my night's play.

The 'greatest of Christian moralists teaches that no man should give exclusive attention to his own interests, but That every man ought to promote the welfare of the many. The prompt his itself directly across one's natural selfishness and the strivings of compesition. To obey it, 'one must be possessed by a love which both expels and impels. An precept.

eleven children and a tract of land valued at ten daywand dollars. Before his death, he deeded to one of his sons forty acres and leased to him all the rest for thirty-two years.

After the funeral, the ten children, discovering that they must wait a long time before they could share in their / father's estate, consultéd a lawyer. Instead of advising them to begin a legal contest, which might be both expensive and tedious, he suggested that they should confer with the lucky brother.

The advice was heeded. The lawyer, his clients and the brother met to talk matters over. They had not conversed long before the lawyer and his clients were surprised. The brother produced the lease and ture it to shreds.

"I will take the forty acres deeded to me years ago," he said, "and you may divide the rest of the land among yourselves."

When the excitement caused by the unexpectedness as well as the generosity of the act had subsided, the lawyer took the brother aside and asked for an explanation.

"I am a Christian," said this brother, in deed, as well as in blood, "and I could not endure the thought of leaving my brothers and sisters with no share in our father's estate."

Love had expelled the selfishness which would grasp all, and had impelled the destruction of the lease.

The landlord of a village tavera stood at his door fondly gazing at his newly put up sign of the Golden Lamb, which speciman of zoology hang lazily over his door. "Good morning, friend Joshua," quoth a passing rustic, "what be you "I was thinking," said mine host, "as how the lamb is a picture of innocence." "Yes, friend Joshua, but that one of yours is a picture of gilt."
