THE HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1888.

Legal Newspaper Decisions.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office...

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears...

3. The Courts have decided that a refusal to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office...

All matter intended for publication in the Herald should be in our office by noon on Tuesday of each week.

BRITISH POLITICS.

There can be very little doubt that the next session of the Imperial Parliament will be a lively and interesting one.

Mr. Gladstone is now on the continent, whether he has gone, doubtless, for the purpose of recruiting his physical health...

The passengers by this line can be landed in Chicago by the time the direct steamship lands there in New York...

From this it will be seen that these men anticipate a very extensive traffic by this new route...

EDITORIAL NOTES.

This most recently issued returns show the strength of the regular forces in the British army to be 211,000.

The writ has been issued for an election of a member for the House of Commons for Carleton County, Ont.

A scheme has been inaugurated in London, England, for the relief of some of the unemployed.

SUPREME COURT.

On Wednesday morning, the 11th inst., the Court gave judgment in the case of Jeddiah, Carvell and others v. Emanuel F. Pillman.

The case of George Alley vs. Harrison Loring was taken up. This is an action for damages received during a voyage of the steamer Monarch.

On Thursday afternoon the Grand Jury brought in a true bill against William Millman for the murder of Mary P. Tuplin.

As will be seen by reference to our telegraphic columns, Mr. Purcell, Grit M. P. for Glengarry, Ont., has not only been unseated for bribery and corruption at his election...

Through the development of the Canadian Pacific and other Railroads of the Dominion...

On Wednesday last, the 11th inst., the Hon. John Macdonald, Premier of the Dominion of Canada...

been forty-four years in public life. He continued to represent Kingston in the House of Assembly until 1878.

Mr. W. R. Anderson, of London, who was lately in Montreal in connection with the tenders for the carriage of the mails between Great Britain and Canada...

The service provided is a weekly one, conducted by steamers of 7,000 tons gross register and 12,000 to 15,000 cubic capacity.

THE Monarch Times, discussing the Grit outlook says: "The position of the opposition at Ottawa, on the eve of a session of parliament, is not an enviable one."

THE Annual Reports of the several departments of the City Government have been laid before us.

On Monday the boys, Dunn and Smith, were tried for stealing from the premises of Blake Bros.

say they visited the Jail, and found it "scrupulously clean, well ventilated, and comfortably warm."

Further on the same report says: "The exceptionally high rate of mortality from consumption which annually claims the lives of 1,882 persons in this city, as shown by the statistics, demands more than a mere passing notice."

Thus making a total of 142, equal to 18.22 per cent. of all the deaths of the period. It certainly should not be quietly taken for granted that all these deaths were inevitable, simply on the ground of the hereditary nature of the disease.

voice in representing the claim of our people for national self-government in the English Parliament. We have expressed ourselves in a constitutional manner and we have asked England to allow us that measure of freedom which she has allowed to you. We are perfectly willing to allow England to retain control of the army—yes, and the militia, too, if she so wish it. Home Rule will establish friendship between the English and Irish people; and will also establish peace between the two nations.

Further on the same report says: "The exceptionally high rate of mortality from consumption which annually claims the lives of 1,882 persons in this city, as shown by the statistics, demands more than a mere passing notice."

Thus making a total of 142, equal to 18.22 per cent. of all the deaths of the period. It certainly should not be quietly taken for granted that all these deaths were inevitable, simply on the ground of the hereditary nature of the disease.

St. Paul, Patron of Missionary... A REPORT BY HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANADA...

Laura Desmond's Choice. BY ANNE M. STEWART. PART II. CHAPTER VI.

PAINT HEAVEN NEVER FOR FAIR LADY. The evening of the day on which Ella had left her home, sighted from a manner of speaking, right...

And with these words Edward grasped the doctor's extended hand and bid him farewell.

'A fine fellow, whom any man might be proud to call his son; and I, well I suppose I am an old fool for giving in; at least my wife and son will think so, and as the worthy man knocked the sales from the fragrant cigar he had been enjoying when the artist called, and proposed to relight it, the two persons of whose opinion he stood most in awe then became the head of the family, enter of the room.

'Well, father, did I not touch off our artist's mother to perfection?' exclaimed young Lester; 'and how ended our conversation with Mr. Buzze?' Of course you negatived his proposals in toto.

'Of course I have done nothing of the kind,' said Lester, sinking back into the luxurious depth of his easy chair; and then he propped very energetically at his cigar, feeling half ashamed of the step he had taken.

'I am glad, my dear husband; so glad for poor Ella's sake, in spite of all I have said to the contrary,' said his wife.

'Then if you are, my dear, I am sorry to say I cannot agree with you,' said her son; 'his name alone—but hang it all, I see a way out of the difficulty about that confounded name, said Charles. 'He is going to Italy, he is not? Well then, granted he comes home master of his art, let him call his name just a little differently, and add an 'i' to the end of it; is it not a happy thought, Buzze? and he can pose as Signor Buzze, too, if he so minded.

'Doctor Lester, I must apologize for troubling you at the end of your day's fatigue, but I am going abroad, and I have something to say to you before I leave England; I shall be away for at least two years.

'A flush of pleasure passed over Lester's face; he had assumed her name, though without a census. With the air of a superior he haughtily signed for the young man to take a seat, dryly saying, 'what do you want with me, Mr. Buzze?'

'I am the determined foe to long engagements, Mr. Buzze,' said the doctor; 'were there no other objections but that one, I should hesitate to encourage you to hope for Ella's hand.'

But even as the doctor spoke his heart grew soft; the remarkably handsome countenance of the man whom he addressed wore such an expression of sadness as he took up his hat to go on his way, and such an air of refinement or unmistakable stamping him as superior, as far as exterior circumstances went, to that very son of his own, who two minutes since had spied worthy Mrs. Buzze at the surgery door; that impelled against his principle of no-lease oblige, there seemed within him two divergent passions at work—the one urging him to refuse, the other to yield.

'Yielding to the latter he said: 'You are on the eve of your departure for Italy. I will make no specific engagement, you must understand that, both for my daughter's sake as well as your own; but let me hear from you when you have been away some three months, and if things go well with you, and my daughter's inclinations remain unchanged, I will not forbid you to hope. I trust, however, to your honor that you will not keep up any clandestine correspondence with her meanwhile.'

'You have given me an incentive to work, in order to the utmost power of which I have long felt were trying dormant within me. Doctor Lester, I readily give you the promise you wish for. If I appear before you again in the light of a suitor for Ella's hand, it shall be on more equal terms than at present.'

'And with these words Edward grasped the doctor's extended hand and bid him farewell.

'A fine fellow, whom any man might be proud to call his son; and I, well I suppose I am an old fool for giving in; at least my wife and son will think so, and as the worthy man knocked the sales from the fragrant cigar he had been enjoying when the artist called, and proposed to relight it, the two persons of whose opinion he stood most in awe then became the head of the family, enter of the room.

'I have written to you and over again, but no sign has reached me as to whether you are living or dead. But Tom, let me be friends again. What do you want of me? Money, and—and—your society, sweetest.'

'That may hardly be, Tom, as Martha spoke, she let the hand which he had grasped lie passively in his own; 'I am not my own mistress; I must speak a stern truth, Tom. It is that when men desert their wives, women are forced to work.'

'I have not heard from you for ten years or more, and know not where to address letters.'

'Let it pass, but when you did know, I never heard from you.'
