

SANDRINGHAM.

The Prince of Wales and his Residence.

Where the Heir Apparent is at Home—A Peep into His Domestic Life.

Whenever the Prince of Wales can escape from the duties which devolve upon him—and surely at times there is no harder working man in all the Queen's dominions—he flies to Sandringham for repose and recreation, finding special pleasure in intercourse with soldiers, sailors, diplomats, artists, and leading the life of a country gentleman, keen after sport, unflinching in his benevolence, solicitous about the welfare of the dwellers on his land, and looking after the education of his children and the comfort of his house. This is not an exaggerated abstract of what the Prince does while he is at Sandringham, but a true and faithful record of what he has ever been in the district, and has learned in what way the Prince of Wales discharges his duties as a landlord. The interest he takes in agriculture and the improvement of stock has been rewarded by prizes which have been received at agricultural and cattle shows; and it has been found compatible with the preservation of an extraordinary quantity of game to have good crops and contented neighbors. But the Harms and Rabbits Bill perhaps has had not such full play within the limits of Sandringham as in other parts of Norfolk.

At Sandringham the Prince and Princess of Wales lead the quiet, well-ordered, tranquil, yet busy life of an English gentleman and his wife, surrounded, nevertheless, by some of the state which is inseparable from their position. There is at the gate by the janitor a blue coat, ed, helmeted personage, familiar with the discipline of Scotland Yard, to look after negro men and women, and the broad paths and shrubberies between the Cottage and the Hall are under the eye of other members of the force. But the penalty which greatness pays for security is not very heavy, and ministers in London or on their travels in the three kingdoms are subjected to the degrading of being looked after by constables. The royal palaces filled with treasures of price and need protection as much as public museums, and their inmates, moreover, are especially exposed to the onslaughts, aggressions, and importunate attempts of the wide-ranging guerrilla of lunatic, weak minded folk to whom the members of royal families offer irresistible attractions. I remember one annoying old person who sent me by every mail to the Crimea in 1854 boxes of tracts and prophecies, with long letters, in which she described herself as "Prophetess to the Queen of England, the Prince Consort of England, and the Elect," and I own I was very much pleased when I read of her being taken care of before I returned; but the race is not extinct, and all sorts of mad people try from time to time to burst upon Windsor, Balmora, Sandringham, Osborne, or Abercrombie—yes, even in the valley of the Dece. But in these days there must be warders at the gate as there were in days of old.

Although many of the larger kinds of birds, which once gave peculiar interest to the Norfolk wates, such as the great bustard and the wild swan, have disappeared, the preservation of the country for sporting purposes is still maintained, and even if there be districts in which the partridges are pro rata more numerous, the soil of Norfolk and the disposition of the farms are generally exceedingly favorable to plenty of birds, and in no place do pheasants thrive better. The configuration of the coast and the wastes of mere and marsh and favorable to great gatherings of sea birds and wild fowl; and although the salmon is not heard of as it was in the days when the Corporation of Lynn made presents of fish to the neighboring lords, and the streams are not adapted for trout, there is an abundance of white fish, and the ponds and still deeps are full of pike. The Prince, however, is not an enthusiastic angler, and is quite content with the sport which is afforded to him by the East Norfolk hounds, by his own well stocked coverts, by the deer forests at Balmora.

The meets of the East Norfolk pack, now hunted by Mr. Fontaine, are generally accessible. Later in the season come the shooting parties—the hunters for pheasants, the hecatombs of rabbits, and the partridge drives; and there are, moreover, outlying excursions to the marshes for snipe, and to the ponds near Rabbingley for teal, widgeon, and duck. The experiment made by the Prince of importing grouse and turning them loose on the heath seems to have been successful for the limited area where available, and at present some dozen packs are said to be making themselves comfortable for the winter. They need all the shelter they can get, for the winds blow cold and strong from the Wash, and the snow lies deep at times, nor does the sky of East Norfolk glow with frequent sunshine all the year round. The mode of life at Sandringham is full of healthy enjoyment. House-time is half an hour earlier than that of Greenwich, so that the 9:30 breakfast is really at 9; the 2 o'clock is at 1:30; and the 8 o'clock at 7:30. There are farms to be visited, stock to be scrutinized and poked in the ribs, and sheep to be criticized for all days. The stables and kennels are full of interest, and there are delightful drives.

The general idea of the arrangement of the house appears to have been an expansion of the original residence, a photograph of which lies before me. There is something at once stately, gracious, and home like in the salon; the roof which is of carved oak, the sides covered with pictures and innumerable objects of interest. This room, opening off the vestibule directly on the left of the hall door, occupies a large part of the ground floor on that side of the wing. The rooms on the right of the hall, provided with writing tables, easy chairs, and surrounded with well fitted book shelves, the contents of which, controlled and marshalled by Mr. Holzmann, comprise standard works in nearly a dozen departments of literature, tempts a visitor by the air of repose which a luxurious library generally suggests. The Equerry's room, which is next to the library, is provided with book shelves and writing tables, etc., and is a popular resort at such times as the Equerry may have the will and the way to encourage conversation. The books which fill the cases are well selected, and the library especially is rich in country histories and in foreign classics, French and German. Beyond the Equerry's room is a charming apartment; a peculiar cabinet is set on this room by the chairs, tables, blotting books, and furniture, stamped in gold on blue or green leather with the Prince of Wales's plumes and the letters E. A., which formed part of the furniture of the Serapis when she was fitted out for the royal visit to India. Of that voyage there are many souvenirs in this second library and in many parts of the house—the grand offerings of Indian princes and peoples; the spoils of the chase; magnificent tigers, pleasantly life-like to look upon in their stuffed semblance of action; peltries and skins; horns of an elope, etc.; drawings and sketches; caskets in gold and silver, in ivory; vessels in bird and kottli work; arms of all kinds—these not included in the unrivalled collection of the products of the Indian art manufacture presented to the Prince, which formed the most popular and most admired exhibit at the Hotel Bristol in Paris, where he was at the time, in addition to a score of the ordinary sort of begging letters, a petition from an old lady for a dot for her lovely daughter, aged eighteen, the child of an old officer who had left his wife in a mist dress; a request from a mechanic that the Prince would put on a swimming-dress and take a header into the Seine to test its merits—"et dans ce cas, monseigneur," added the inventor, "j'ai un petit sortant assure?" a demand for a loan of 10,000 francs to enable a student in natural history to go on an entomological excursion to South America; a proposal that he should join the application in an experimental vineyard in the Vosges; an entreaty that he would enable a working jeweler to redeem his lathe and tools. Needless to say, he is also assailed by the ignoble, malicious or silly people who write anonymously, and by the crack-brained "prophets" dwelling in the most remote and obscure parts of the world, who, with the writers of threatening letters, form a very considerable legion. From every capital and court in Europe there come also the most important and interesting correspondence by which the Prince of Wales adds daily to his knowledge of the secret forces which move and direct the policy of states. There are, moreover, the special business of the Daily Correspondent, and the regular affairs in the corps of which he is Colonel, which are closely investigated by the Prince. Divided in his affection for the two services, he naturally gives the greater share of his attention to that in which he holds rank, and in which he was reared and trained. A portion of his time is also devoted to the interests of the Masonic body, the increase and vitality of which, in England, owe much to his care and patronage; and the Royal College of Music, the generous institutions of which he is patron or chief, and innumerable charities and societies which he encourages and aids, make their several demands on the life of the busiest man in Europe, and their claims all-asserting.

There are very few men in England who can make as good a speech as the Prince of Wales. His voice is singularly far-reaching, clear, pleasant, and his delivery is simple and dignified. But it must not be supposed that the ease and fluency which characterize his public discourses were attained without trouble, or that the Prince is one of the "mob of gentlemen who 'speak' at ease," and have very little to say worth listening to. At first, when he had to address an audience—and it is fair to say that his speech-making whilst he was very young indeed—he spoke with some hesitation, and he gave his audience the idea of one who would be very glad when he could sit down; but by persistent practice, and by the certainty that he must look forward to constant calls upon him, and animated by a high sense of duty, the prince overcame the difficulties which beset most young orators, and in his case by the consciousness that every word he uttered would be eagerly weighed and recorded. He has acquired a command of language and a felicity of expression which commended his matter to the most critical, whilst it is at the same time judicious in substance and important in interest. No one can make a better case for a charitable institution than the Prince, and his appeals to the pockets of his hearers when he is presiding at a dinner to promote the work of some beneficent association, or to inaugurate a public institution, or to undertake an enterprise, are so successful that it is considered the fortune of an evening, from a financial point of view, is secured when the Prince of Wales has consented to take the chair. On occasions of national importance and interest, such as the opening of public institutions, the Prince's speeches, carefully prepared and excellently pronounced, are models of what such work should be, setting forth the objects in view, the history of the support or approval, in well-chosen and effective words. The Prince has had practice enough certainly, for since his marriage he has been associated with every movement in the kingdom, and has been called upon to open exhibitions, bridges and buildings, parks and museums, "inaugurate" statues, lay foundation stones, preside at commissions and banquets year after year, and has answered to the call with unflinching spirit, cheerfulness, and effect.—(William Howard Russell, in Harper's Magazine for April.)

Childhood's Memories
Come back laden with the joys and pleasures of that dream time of life when sweet anticipation enshrouded with bright hues the future as it stretched out before us. Only the pleasures hoped for us entered the heart then. But as we grow older, to one and another comes the awakening. If you should be troubled, not in the heart, but in feet, with corns, and they make life miserable, go to the nearest drug store and buy a bottle of Putnam's Corn Extractor, the "sure, safe, and painless corn cure," and you will be quickly relieved, and happiness will once again brighten your path. N. C. Putnam & Co., Kingston prop.

"trophy of arms" collected on the field of Gravelotti, which was visited by the Prince on his way to Germany, a little before the illness which kept the nation in suspense for so many weeks; the hoof of Edipus, the famous rooster; a casket presented by the Prince and tenants of Sandringham to the Emperor on his return from India; a paper vase given by the Emperor of Russia; and many relics, if so they may be called, and Egyptian and Hindoo antiquities, meet the eye in room after room.

The amount of correspondence to be carried on at Sandringham, Marlborough House, Osborne Cottage, or wherever the Prince may be, is, as Sir Digton Probyn, Mr. Francis Knollys, and the Equerry in waiting for the time being, are all well, and in the most satisfactory manner. It is a favorite pastime for the Prince to write letters, and he is a favorite letter-writer to his inventors, and wonderful pains and trouble must be taken by his secretaries in sifting the wheat from the chaff, and in getting at the truth of the stories of the applicants for a benighted assurance. Once there came in by the Hotel Bristol in Paris, where he was at the time, in addition to a score of the ordinary sort of begging letters, a petition from an old lady for a dot for her lovely daughter, aged eighteen, the child of an old officer who had left his wife in a mist dress; a request from a mechanic that the Prince would put on a swimming-dress and take a header into the Seine to test its merits—"et dans ce cas, monseigneur," added the inventor, "j'ai un petit sortant assure?" a demand for a loan of 10,000 francs to enable a student in natural history to go on an entomological excursion to South America; a proposal that he should join the application in an experimental vineyard in the Vosges; an entreaty that he would enable a working jeweler to redeem his lathe and tools. COUNTY-COURTED.

(CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.)

Your sister is engaged to be married, is she not? I think I have noticed that she wears a ring on what young ladies call the engaged finger; and as Doctor Threipland asked the question in a careless, off-hand manner, his long fingers played with a thin silver coin that dangled at his watch chain.

They were in the old position—Morris lying on the sofa, and the Doctor beside him with his back to the light. But it was the flash of health, and not of fever, that was on the young man's face now, and he puffed at a wooden pipe as they talked—the very picture of indolent enjoyment.

Morris' illness had been sharp, and his convalescence slow and very trying, both to himself and County. He was quick and impatient by nature, and weakness fretted and made him irritable; sometimes he would think himself much better than he really was, and insist on doing things she knew would hurt him, and then at others he would be as persistently downhearted, declaring that he was no better and never would be better, and that nobody cared whether he was or not.

County petted and humored and controlled him, like a good nurse, but often her own heart was very heavy, and to the anxiety about his health was added the anxiety as to how they were to live without his salary. She had neglected her music lessons, too, that she might attend on him, and this of itself made a serious difference in their small income.

But still they had lived somehow, and Morris had never wanted for anything during his illness, whatever County herself might have done. With an ever-increasing respect, Doctor Threipland had noticed all her patience and love during those dark days; and he had noted, too, that her pale cheeks flushed and her languid eyes brightened when he came, and that Morris himself did not welcome him more warmly than County had learned to do.

The Doctor's visits seemed to bring sunshine into the shabby room. Morris' face would lose its weary, fretful look as soon as he entered, and forgetting his weakness and depression he would be entrapped into talking and laughing before he knew what he was doing; and then the weight of anxiety would be lifted from County's brow, and she, too, would be merry in a quiet way, and make quaint little remarks that the Doctor would find recurring to him days after wards.

But somehow she never thought of repeating County's sayings for the entertainment of others, although he often amused his patients with stories he had picked up on his rounds. County's esteem for the Doctor increased daily, and she was glad to think that the esteem was mutual; she knew from an occasional word or look that she had won his respect and appreciation. Doctor Threipland seemed to have quite forgotten the disagreeable incident at the beginning of their acquaintance. County had not forgotten it; but she had ceased to remember it against him, and, having redeemed her ring as soon as possible, had never told Morris how and why she had parted with it.

The Doctor had still continued his visits after Morris had quite recovered, and often dropped in of an evening to chat with him. County was usually at home when he called. Sometimes she joined in the conversation; but often she sat at her sewing, a little apart, putting in a word only now and then, to which the Doctor always listened with marked attention. It was pleasant to County to have her words hearkened to thus—all the pleasure because she was not accustomed to it, for Morris was in the habit of interrupting and contradicting her without ceremony. Sometimes when she raised her head from her work, she would find the Doctor's eyes fixed upon her; and then she would smile frankly at him as if he were Morris, and go on with her work again. This evening, however, she had gone to give a music lesson, and so Dr. Threipland had an opportunity of asking a question that had been often on his lips of late, although he told himself that the answer could not concern him in the least.

Morris laughed when he heard the question. 'She is rather engaged not to be married,' he said. 'It was I who gave her that ring and a lucky sixpence, which I think she has lost; and we purchased each other that we would never marry but live together all our lives.'

The Doctor scooped for a crooked pin that he saw on the carpet, and began carefully to straighten it. 'Oh, that's it, is it?' he said; and he whistled softly to himself. After a little, he jumped up quickly, saying he must be going.

'Won't you wait till County comes in?' asked Morris.

'No, my dear lad; I have some visits to pay to-night!—and seizing his hat, he went off in a great hurry.

Though more than ever convinced of the desirability of having a wife, Doctor Threipland had not yet been able to deof which lady of his acquaintance would most adorn the position that awaited her. His sister Mab, who often came to stay with him, had jestingly made out a list of the nicest girls they knew, and suggested that he should ask them in alphabetical order.

'I think I might do worse than begin with 'C,' he had answered.

'Why, there is not a lady among them whose name begins with 'C'.'

'No, probably not.'

And then Doctor Threipland had taken himself to task for the slip of the tongue, and for the slip of the mind that had given rise to it, and told himself that it would never do—that Miss Capel and neither rank, nor wealth, nor striking appearance, nor any of the brilliant social qualities that he desired in his wife. Not she was only a pure, true-hearted, quiet little girl, who never would stir in society but would make herself at home with her sweet womanly ways and who, if need were, would spend her life ungrudgingly for those she loved; besides, she was engaged.

He always fell back on County's supposed engagement as the one sure safety guard against a foolish love; but that did not prevent his heart giving a sudden leap of joy when he heard from Morris that she was free. If he saw her, then, he knew he could not hide what he felt; and he hurried away that he might have time to mount guard over himself before they met again.

It was quite true, however, that he had visits to pay; and one of them was to a young lady who was down on Mab's list—the handsomest of them all in his opinion, and not the least attractive in other respects.

Doctor Threipland was a special favorite of Miss Mowbray's, and being an independent young lady in every sense of the term, she was at no pains to verify his preference. While she was very ill, his manner had been simply perfect in his gentle kindness; but, now that she was almost well, the laughing and jesting that he had begun for her amusement had given place to something akin to open flirtation.

But tonight she found the Doctor very distant. It was true he smiled blandly at her lively sallies. He said 'Yes,' 'Well,' and 'H'm, h'm!' a dozen times during his visit; but she was too clever to be deceived by it, and knew he only did it mechanically from force of habit.

As Doctor Threipland was swinging along homeward, after visiting Miss Mowbray, he saw Miss Capel's next little figure coming toward him. They often met in the street, but always passed each other with a bow and a smile. County was surprised therefore when the Doctor stopped this evening.

'The park gates will be open for another hour,' he said, after shaking hands. 'Will you come and have a turn with me? I have something to say to you,' he added, when she hesitated.

The Doctor was surprised himself, for he knew now that all his prudence and self-control had gone, and that he was about to do the very thing he had made up his mind not to do.

'I cannot draw back in honor now,' he thought, trying to excuse himself and to look calm and cool, while every beat of his heart was flooding his handsome face with color.

County saw that he was agitated; but she had no suspicion of the cause or of what he was going to say. He led her in silence to a quiet walk where there was no one to observe them, and then he looked her full in face.

'Perhaps he is going to tell me about Miss Mowbray,' thought County, who often heard the Doctor's matrimonial prospects discussed by the friends of her pupils.

But when Doctor Threipland spoke, it was to ask her to be his wife. At first County was amazed; and then, oddly enough, she became indignant.

'Do you forget how you treated me once?' she demanded. 'Do you forget how you refused to come to see my only brother, who might have been dying for anything you knew or cared? We were strangers in strange city, we were friendless, and at the time we were almost penniless—need reasons all why I, a gentlewoman by birth and breeding, should be scorned and insulted by you—a gentleman.'

Her eyes glittered, her voice trembled. She lived again through those bitter moments in the Doctor's surgery; she saw again the cold, hard face, heard again the icy tones, and again her hot heart throbbed with indignant pain as the passionate cry went up, 'Oh! to humiliate that man as he has humiliated me this day!'

Doctor Threipland gazed at her in pain and wonder.

'I thought you had forgiven me long ago,' he said.

'It was my own fault, there was nothing to forgive; and if there had been, your great kindness to Morris would have atoned,' she answered, coupling back to the present with a little gasp.

'Then why recall it now?'

'Because I must. It is not that I have not forgiven you,' Doctor Threipland, but that I cannot love a man who could be so cruel to a woman!'

'There is no more to be said; we had better go back.'

They left the park, and walked home in silence. County could not speak; her heart was throbbing wildly, and all her ideas were in confusion.

'Will you not come in and see Morris?' she asked, when they reached her own door.

'I think not. Good-bye,' he answered gravely and coldly. He raised his hat, and would have walked on; but she gave him her hot hand. 'You are a little feverish this evening; take a cooling draught before you go to bed,' he said in his professional manner. 'Good-bye again.'

County took no cooling draught; but she cried that night as if her heart would break. For Doctor Threipland there was no such relief. He felt as if a sharp knife had been suddenly plunged into his heart; he knew that, for all his seeming success, he had been a failure, because he had missed the one thing that would have crowned it with happiness. There rose before his mental eye a vision of bright days of youth, when he had dreamed dreams, not of ambition and mere worldly success, but of noble deeds to be done in a noble spirit, without thought of gain, of men and women, succored, of pain conquered, of science advanced, and above all, of a crown of life to be striven for and gained at last, when life's work was done.

'If I had been true to the ideal of my boyhood, she could have loved me,' he thought, in bitterness of soul.

Doctor Threipland went his daily rounds as usual, with little sign as might be of the wound he had received. The kind words and the pleasant look were always ready; but some of his patients thought he was graver than of old, and feared that he was overworking himself. Miss Mowbray's eyes sought his in vain; she fired off every shot and shell from her magazine of arts, without a single reply. The Doctor might as well have been her brother for any flirtation she could draw him into now.

He came no more to Doubty Place, and the evenings seemed strangely long and dull to County when she found there was no hope of his dropping in as in the happy time that was gone forever; and sometimes she caught herself repeating—'Deep as love, Deep at first love and wild with all regret. Oh, death in life, the days that are no more!'

'I wonder why Threipland has not been here for so long?' Morris said to his sister one evening.

'Perhaps he is not well,' she answered hypocritically. 'You might go over and see him.'

Morris went with alacrity. The Doctor received him warmly. They walked in the garden, where Miss Threipland joined them. She looked on Morris as an amusing boy, and was very kind to him; and Morris, whose heart always opened to kindness, talked as freely to her as if he had known her all his life. He told her all about County, and how she had been named 'Countess' by a mistake of his father, who was very absent-minded, and, when asked what the child was to be called, had answered, 'The Countess'—that being how the country people designated the titled lady whose namesake she was to have been. And he told her what a devoted sister County had been to him, and how, when he got a poor situation in London, she refused to be separated from him, and had appealed wealthy relatives by leaving them and supporting herself by giving music lessons, so that they might remain together. Indeed, during the hour Morris stayed, there was very little of their family history that he had not confided to Miss Threipland in her brother's hearing.

'Come again soon,' the Doctor said, when he was leaving; and then Morris remembered to ask him why they had not seen him in Doubty Place for so long.

'Oh, I am busy; come you and see me,' he answered.

County was watching for Morris when he returned. She was very anxious to hear about Doctor Threipland; but, except that he was quite well and had not been to see them because he was busy, her brother had nothing to tell her. He did not say much about Miss Threipland, either; and after that he was often at the Doctor's when County supposed him to be at the Conservative Club.

One day Miss Capel, going up the steps of a house to see one of her Sunday school children who was ill, met Doctor Threipland coming down. Her heart almost leaped into her mouth, and she wanted to turn and run away. She had not spoken to him since the evening on which she refused him—now more than a year back. She had often wished for an opportunity of saying something to soften her refusal; but now that the opportunity had at last presented itself, she had not courage to take advantage of it.

The Doctor came running down quickly, and was almost beside her before he saw her.

'What are you doing here?' he exclaimed abruptly. 'Go back at once! Don't you know that the child up yonder has diphtheria?'

'But you go to see her.'

'Yes; it is my duty; but it is not better to go back.'

young. I hear you have been there once already; you must not go again.'

County looked rebellious. What right had he to dictate to her? And if she did take the disease, what did it matter? What did anything matter now that she never saw him? The thought came unbidden, and she put it away from her angrily.

'You really must not come here again,' he said in a softer tone. 'You might carry infection to your pupils even if you should escape the disease yourself.'

'I will stay away if you think I ought,' she answered submissively.

He accompanied her a little way down the street, and then left her with a kindly though gravely spoken good-bye. It was evident that he bore her no resentment. She would have been better pleased if he had. Still it was something to have spoken to him once more.

About a week after that, County had gone a short distance by train to give a music lesson to a little girl. Just as they were about to begin, her pupil's mother came into the room.

'Oh, Miss Capel, can you tell me how Doctor Threipland is this morning?'

'Doctor Threipland?' repeated County, and her heart seemed to stand still. 'Did you not know he was ill? Have you not heard?'

'No; I have not heard nothing,' she forced her white lips to utter.

'Living so near, I made sure you would know. He sneaked the mucus, or whatever it is, out of a throat of a little girl who was dying of diphtheria, and he has been nearly dead since—it is supposed from blood poisoning. Such a horrible thing to do, wasn't it? Quite a poor child she is too—but her mother was in great distress about her, and it seems this was the only way to save her. I heard all about it from my charwoman. It will be very shocking if he loses his life by it, poor fellow—such a pleasant man as he is, and so clever!'

County never knew how she got through that music lesson. All the time her pupil was hammering over the scales and exercises she was saying to herself—'And this is the man I thought unworthy of my love!'

'And, when she had made her escape from the house and was in the train on her way home, she kept saying to herself that if he died, she would die too, for she could not live with the remorseful pain always aching at heart. And then she tried to pray for resignation, but always ended with the inward cry, 'Oh, spare him, spare him!'

Morris had been away for a week, and he was to be home that day; but she could not wait for him. She must know at once how Doctor Threipland was, and would go and make inquiries herself.

When she got out of the train, she walked rapidly till near the Doctor's house, and then her steps faltered. What if all was already over? What if she should find the blinds down? She walked on the other side of the way till nearly opposite to the surgery. She had hardly courage to look, so great was her dread. But when she did look, she saw that the blinds were up, the windows partly open, and nothing to mark that either illness or death was in the house. With a silent cry of thankfulness, she crossed the street, and her head throbbing as if it would burst, rang the surgery bell.

She had hardly done so when she hears a light step come running down a flight of stairs, and immediately after a lady opened the door.

'Miss Capel, I know,' she said; 'you must excuse ceremony! Andrew says you're the mirror as you crossed the street, and sent me to bring you in.'

'Then he is better?'

'Oh, yes, he is better and able to be on the sofa in the drawing-room! But he is weak still, and must not be contradicted; so come in.'

The relief was so great that County could hardly keep from sobbing as she followed Miss Threipland. The Doctor raised himself on his elbow when he heard her coming. His face was pale, and his eyes had a yearning expression in them.

Miss Threipland left County at the drawing room door. Perhaps she suspected that they would be better without her, or possibly she had caught sight of Morris, who just then crossed the street exactly as his sister had done.

Doctor Threipland held out his hand to County.

'Well, you have come at last!' he said and his tone told of past longing and present content, while his eyes seemed to devour her.

The next moment County was on her knees by the side of the sofa, with his hand in both hers, sobbing—

'Oh, Doctor Threipland, can you ever forgive me?'

'County—dear County, what does this mean?' he asked, passing his hand softly over her bowed head.

'It means that I was a horrid, spiteful little wretch, and that you are the best and noblest man in the world?' she cried.

'And to think of your endangering your life to save that child!'

'My dear girl, there was not much danger; it was only croup, and it did me no harm.'

'They told me that it was diphtheria, and that you were dying of blood poisoning!'

'How people love to exaggerate! It was croup the child had, as I tell you, and it had nothing to do with my illness. I was simply laid up from over-fatigue and cold.'

'Well, I don't care; it is all the same,' said County; but she released the Doctor's hand, and rose from her knees feeling rather foolish.

Doctor Threipland passed his fingers through his wavy hair, and eyed her half-keenly, half-comically.

'County, do you think you could love me now?' he asked.

'I loved you all the time—that is why I was so angry. If it had been only friendship I could have laughed as soon as we were friends at the abominable way in which you treated me.'

'And you will promise never to throw it in my teeth that I wanted to County-Court you?'

'Wanted! I think you have done it,' she answered, as he drew her down beside him. 'I am sure I don't know what Morris will say; I promised never to leave him,' she said after a while.

'Here he comes to speak for himself,' answered the Doctor, as Morris and his sister came in together.

'Miss Threipland went straight up to County and kissed her.'

'My dear, as soon as Andrew sent me to you, I knew how it was between you; and, as I was afraid Morris might be lonely without you, I have promised to keep him company.'

'How are we going to get through our spring and summer work? We are all run down, tired out before it begins.' So many a farmer's family. We answer go to your druggist and pay five dollars for six bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This is just the medicine you need, and will pay compound interest on the investment.

Put Riel Down. There is only one way to stop Louis Riel, and that is to hang him the first time he is caught in red-handed rebellion. He is a rebel by trade and by inclination and is in his glory when stirring up trouble in the Northwest. He has already cost this country millions and kept back the settlement of the prairies. He will cost us many more millions if he is not suppressed in the most summary fashion. Rebellion has got to be put down if the confederation is to be preserved; any trifling with insurrection will only increase the audacity of those who take part in the next outbreak. If the halfbreeds have a grievance right them, but put the rebels down. The farmers, the railroad rivals of the Canada Pacific, and other influences adverse to Canada will make the most of this episode to damage the country and encourage the insurrection. If they see that Riel is suppressed, they will stop their plottings; otherwise they will do more damage than the Mahdi of the Prairies.—[Toronto World.]

A Princely Fortune. A man may possess the fortune of a prince but can never possess happiness without good health; to secure which the blood must be kept pure and every organ in proper action. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the blood and regulate all the organs.

The Consequences of their Crime. Dublin, March 24.—Joe Smith, who pointed out Mr. Burke on the day when the latter was assassinated to Phoenix park and subsequently turned informer, has just died. He has been in a dreadful state of health for months. He has suffered from a constant fear of being assassinated. Kavanagh, the driver of the car in which the assassins escaped, is in a lunatic asylum.

That slight cold you think so little of may prove the forerunner of a complaint that may be fatal. Avoid this result by taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the best of known remedies for colds, coughs, catarrhs, bronchitis, incipient consumption, and all other throat and lung diseases.

Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup—An agreeable, safe and effectual remedy to remove all kinds of worms.

A BANKER'S TESTIMONY.—For a Cough, Cold or any Bronchial affection, 'Pectoria,' in my opinion, is just the thing. I have used it in my family for Coughs and Colds for the past four years with the most unvaried success, and today my opinion of it is that I continue to think still more of that which I began thinking well of.

Geo. Kerr, Manager Ontario Bank, Pickering. Price 25 cents at all druggists.

Accidental. A. Chard, of Sterling, in a recent letter, states that he met with an accident some time ago, by which one of his knees was severely injured. A few applications of Hagar's Yellow Oil afforded immediate and complete relief.

All trees and shrubs are harder as they attain size. This is not owing to mere age of wood or ability to resist freezing, but ability to resist thawing and drying. Such trees, when quite small, are frequently ruptured the whole length of the body by thawing in a warm winter's day. A tender tree is harder for growing in an evergreen hedge, or in a group of evergreens.

The Cheapest and Best. On account of its purity and concentrated strength and great power over disease, Burdock Blood Bitters is the cheapest and best blood cleansing tonic known for all disordered conditions of the blood.

White Alex. Gendron, a student at the Victoria school of medicine, Montreal, was preparing a subject for the dissecting class about two weeks ago when he cut his finger. The poisonous blood of the subject penetrated into his veins, and as he neglected to use nitrate of silver, his hand became much swollen. He soon afterwards left for his home at St. Jacques, near St. Hyacinthe, where he received treatment. Since then his condition has grown worse, and no hopes are now entertained for his recovery.

sure To Conquer. The most troublesome cough is sure to yield if timely treated with Hagar's Pectoral Balm. Pleasant to take and safe for young or old.

James Duncanson of the gorge of Dan-wich township, died recently from suffocation. While sitting on the side of his bed he fainted and fell face downward on a feather pillow. In that way he was smothered. It was at first thought he had been poisoned and the stomach was sent to Dr. Ellis of Toronto for analysis, but the contents showed no trace of anything suspicious, though they showed a lack of nourishment.

ABOUT WALKING.

Recommendations Concerning the Gait, the Dress, the Place and the Time.

Every healthy person, man or woman, should be a good walker, able at any time to walk six to twelve miles a day at least, and double that when gradually brought up to it.

It is beautiful to see the knightly grace, the lover-like devotion, which some men show in their walks.

Words of Wisdom.

Prayer is the key of the evening, and the bolt of the morning.

The believer cannot be where Christ is not.—Dr. Charles Hodges.

Of all commentaries upon the Scriptures, good examples are the best and the liveliest.—Dr. Donno.

The generous never enjoy their possessions so much as when others are made partakers of them.—Sir W. Jones.

Blot out that which has come from the Bible, and you will destroy the best part of the intellectual life of the race.—Dr. H. J. Van Dyke, Jr.

The religious sentiment will not be expressed. Here it resembles not the fire in the flint, which is struck out by concussion, but the light of a lamp, which is itself radiant.—Dr. E. A. Park.

Usually the eyes of the Christian should be directed forward; it is foolish to try to live on past experience; it is a very dangerous, if not a fatal habit, to judge ourselves to be safe because of something that we felt or did twenty years ago.—Spurgeon.

Temperance puts coal on the fire, moral in the barrel, flour in the tub, money in the purse, credit in the country, contentment in the house, clothes on the children, vigor in the body, intelligence in the brain, and spirit in the whole constitution.—Benjamin Franklin.

Many a man put in the seed who never saw the harvest, just as many another brought home ripe sheaves on which he bestowed no labor save that of the sickle.

The worker for Christ, therefore, is to work in faith, expecting the divine hand to secure the result. He has abundant reason to believe that good is done of which he has no knowledge, and will have none until the great day.—J. W. Chambers.

The Speed of the Arab

The popular notion about the speed of the Arab courser is, I think, erroneous. Great speed is not his strong point; the chances are that on any ordinary race-course the best Arab in the world would be beaten by a second-rate English race-horse.

When I was at Thebes, the commandant showed me an English thoroughbred which, he said, had easily run away from every Arab he had ever tried him against. But what was far more remarkable about this horse was that once acclimated and accustomed to the hard life and hard fare of the Arab horses he quite equalled them in hardness and endurance, as has been proved in the many expeditions and tours of inspection among the tribes of the district.—London Herald.

The Cleveland Herald says the first and only auger ever manufactured that shops of the Cleveland Machine Company.

This auger bores a two inch square hole, the size used in ordinary frame buildings and barns, but they can be made on the same principle to bore square holes of any size.

Its application is ordinary and works on the same principle as round hole augers. Its end, instead of having a screw or bit, has a can motion which oscillates a cutter mounted on a steel rocking knife which cuts on both sides.

In order to prevent the splintering of wood the ends of the cutters are provided with small semi-circular shaped saws, which help in cutting out perfectly square corners. It is estimated that this new process will save the labor of three men who work with chisels, as one man can conveniently cut a two inch mortise in the same length of time he can bore a round hole.

Wheeler's Victim of Zymotic disease—a holocaust from failure of their digestive processes. For one infant or adult in the last stage from the perian fever, fifteen thousand have passed away from improper food and imperfect digestion.

The central idea of the cutters, Phillips and Callis was to secure digestion and assimilation by furnishing those elements of brain and nerve nutrition, without which nervous energy is impossible, in an easily assimilable form, when the digestive apparatus is too feeble to eliminate them from food.

Our Boys.

The years of adolescence are often of restlessness. The boy is, perhaps, overflowing with vivacity, and gay spirit leads him to do and say things which look idle and foolish to grave middle age.

As a rule, mothers do not get the older children enough. The sweet, soft words, the caresses which are lavished on the babies are not freely bestowed on the older children.

It is beautiful to see the knightly grace, the lover-like devotion, which some men show in their walks.

Home Education.

The following rules are worthy of being printed in letters of gold, and placed in a conspicuous place in every household.

First—From your children's earliest infancy inculcate the necessity of instant obedience.

Second—Unite firmness with gentleness. Let your children always understand that you mean what you say.

Third—Never promise them anything unless you are quite sure that you can give what you say.

Fourth—If you tell a child to do something, show him how to do it, and see that it is done.

Fifth—Always punish your child for willfully disobeying you, but never punish him in anger.

Sixth—Never let them know that they vex you, or make you less your self-control.

Seventh—If they give way to petulance or ill-temper, wait till they are calm; then gently reason with them on the impropriety of their conduct.

Eighth—Remember that a little present punishment when the occasion arises is much more effectual than the threat of a greater punishment should the fault be renewed.

Ninth—Never give your children anything because they cry for it.

Tenth—On no account allow them to do at one time what you have forbidden under the same circumstances at another.

Eleventh—Teach them that the only sure and easy way to appear good is to be good.

Twelfth—Accustom them to make their little recitals with perfect truth.

Thirteenth—Never allow tale bearing.

Fourteenth—Teach them self-denial, not self-indulgence.

Pastoral Precepts.

Pay your small accounts at once and forego any will accumulate to annoy or distress you.

Obtain cash for your work and pay cash for your goods.

Let not the wage of labor rest in your purse over night, and the poor when you owe will bless you as they gratefully eat of the bread your wealth has enabled them to buy.

Instead of giving away money to the idle to keep them from starving assist them to an opportunity to earn a livelihood by honest toil.

Refuse not the beggar, but give him a loaf rather than cash.

Let your roof shelter the outcast and reach forth your hand to lift the fallen.

Watch by the gateway opening into the avenues of vice and lead the erring into the path of virtue and peace.

Let kind thoughts bloom like blossoms of spring in your mind, and kind words ripen like fruit of autumn, on your lips.

It was not the Author.

An Ottawa letter represents that the marquis of Lansdowne, the governor general, and his consort endeavor to make themselves popular with the Canadians, and all local celebrities are pretty sure of gratifying attentions from them.

Not long since the marquis saw in the local newspaper that a certain gentleman, whose name corresponded with that of a native author, was registered at an Ottawa hotel. Believing it to be the author, their excellencies invited him to dine. Dinner was announced for half-past seven; but at a quarter of eight a telephone message came: "Can't go; I'm stuck for a pair of evening boots."

"Come on; never mind that," was the reply. He did come, but he was not the author. "Good heavens! we've got the wrong man," whispered an aide. "But we must make the best of it now," was the host's reply. He was a boisterous commercial traveler, a driver of faint horses, arrayed in massive chains and elaborate rings.

A Good Guarantee.

B. B. Cochran, druggist, Lancaster, Pa., writes that he has guaranteed over 300 bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters for dyspepsia, bilious attacks and liver and kidney troubles. In no cases has it disappointed those who used it. In Canada it gives the same general satisfaction.

Forster's Mill.

M. J. Jones McDonald, of the 6th, is on the sick list.

J. W. Watson, of the 6th, left for Dakota on Tuesday last.

The sale at J. W. Yoe's, of the 4th con., on Friday last, was well attended.

We are pleased to state that Thomas Soverly, of the 4th, is recovering from his recent illness.

Miss Turnbull and Miss Cowan, of McKelley, are the guests of Mrs. McPhail.

Mrs. Robert Marshall, of Turnberry, was on a visit to the parental roof last week.

Richard Porter, of the 4th, is on a visit to Wingham and the surrounding country.

T. M. Elliott, of Dakota, is visiting his brother, William Elliott, of the 4th con.

James Cox, of the 6th con., sold his team of mares last week to Mr. Bateman, of the 6th, for $340.

David Cox, of the 6th, is going extensively into cattle raising, and has already made several purchases of stock.

Alexander Hamilton, of the cut line, sold his horse one day last week to John Fisher, of Goderich, for the sum of $125.

The number of fox hunters and trappers around here is somewhat large this season, and they all seem to be doing a good business in their line.

A meeting was held last week by the members of Bethany congregation to take steps to rebuild an edifice in the place of the one consumed by fire two weeks ago. We believe it is their intention to build a new one, which would be in the right direction. A basement would, we believe, not be an asset for the use of trustees, etc.

Where to Keep It.

Keep it in your family. The best use made of accidents and emergencies, for Burns, Scalds, Bruises, Sprains, Sore Throat, Croup, Rheumatism, Chills, and Pain or soreness of all kinds, is that marvelous healing remedy, Hagar's Yellow Oil.

How to Make Yourself Unhappy.

In the first place, if you want to be miserable, be selfish. Think all the time of your own things. Don't care for any one but yourself. Never think of enjoying the satisfaction of seeing others happy; but rather, if you see a smiling face, be jealous, let another than yourself enjoy what you have not. Envy every one who is happy in any respect; then yourself; think unkindly towards, and speak unkindly of them. Be constantly afraid lest some one would encroach upon your rights; be watchful against it, and if any one should come near your things, snap at him like a mad dog. Content yourself for everything that is your own, though it may not be worth a pin; for your "rights" are just as much concerned as if it were a pound of gold. Never yield a point. Be very sensitive, and take everything that is most desirable in plain clothes in the most serious manner. Be jealous of your friends; let them should not think enough of you, and if at any time they should seem to neglect you, put the worst construction you can upon their conduct.

Boys and Girls who are growing up.

They should (to ensure strong and healthy constitutions) be given regularly ROBINSON'S PHOSPHORIZED EXTRACTS, to keep up the waste, that is continually going on in the system during the growing period.

The Father.

The father is the appointed head of the family. He may rule by love, but it is his right and duty to rule, and to him, as the monarch of his little state, must be the final appeal. Hence he appears before his children invested with authority—the divinely appointed representative of law; and if he worthily sways the sceptre over his little realm, he develops in his children some of the most desirable traits of character. If love is one of the elements of family happiness, order is another; and it is his, in the last appeal, to support order.

If the sympathies and affections of children should be developed, so should their spirit of obedience to rightful authority. It is undoubtedly desirable to raise the mother's authority to the highest degree; and when the father is what he should be, and does what he should do, she stands invested in the eyes of her children, with a power equalling an indirect reverence for the father, who appears only to sustain the maternal rule, with direct obedience to her own gentleness.

T. N. DANCEY. Goderich, Oct. 18th, 1884 1884-5

WARREN LELAND,

Whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND's farm laborers brushed his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, a rapidly increasing swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made him almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND's direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to its use.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of High Living, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the efficacy of this knowledge, to send AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 5th and 6th Streets, New York.
